I. GENERALLY.

Cause of Action—Contravention of Canal Regulations.)—The declaration set out certain regulations for the proper use of the Welland canal, and alleged that defendant's vessel wrongfully, and in violation of the regulations, endeavoured to enter the lock, bout, which was force gainst the plaintiffs the lock and injured:—Held, bad, for the contravention of the regulations formed no cause of action, and no negligence on defendant's part was alleged. Jacques v. Nicholl, 25 U. C. R. 402.

Imperial Statute—Protection from 1ia-bility.]—The statute 14 Geo. 111. c. 78, s. 80, which is an extension of 6 Anne c. 31, ss. 6, 7, is in force in the Province of Ontario as part of the law of England, introduced by the Constitutional Act, 31 Geo. III. c. 31, but has no application to protect a party from legal liability as a consequence of negligence. Canada Southern R. W. Co. v. Phelps, 14 S. C. R. 132.

Joint Duty—Non-performance,]—Semble, that when the tort alleged is the non-performance of a joint duty, if that joint duty be not proved the plaintiff must fail in toto. Woods v. Municipality of Wentworth and Corporation of Hamilton, 6 C. P. 101.

Lawful Act—Consequences.]—Where the unavoidable consequence of a lawful act done by a person on his own land (such as the erection of a mill dam) is to injure his neighbour, an action lies for such injury; but not if such act per se would not be necessarily or probably injurious, but becomes so from a cause not under the control of either party. Negligence must then be proved to render a defendant liable. Peters v. Devinney, 6 C. P. 380.

of.1—In an action for damages caused by overflowage, it appeared that the defendant's boom in the property of the property of the heavy of the heavy

Time of Negligent Act—Setting out Fire.]—In the month of August the defendant set out fire on his own hand for the purpose of clearing it. This fire continued to very high wind, sparks were carried to the plaintiff's land, and set fire to some ties and posts stored thereon:—Held, that the question of the defendant's liability for negligence should be determined having regard to the circumstances existing in October, and not to those existing in August, Beaton v. Springer, 24 A. R. 207.

II. ABATEMENT OF ACTION.

Revivor—Suggestion of Death.]—Action against a conductor of a railway train for injuries received in attempting to board a train, and alleged to be caused by the negligence of the conductor in not bringing the train to a stand still. There was a nonsuit, which was set aside and a new trial ordered. Between the verdict and the judgment ordering a new trial, the plaintiff died, and a suggestion of his death was entered on the record—Held, that under Lord Campbell's Act, or the cauivalent statute in New Brunswick (C. S. N. B. c. 86), an entirely new cause of action arose on the death, and the original action was entirely gone, and could not be revived. There being no cause before the supreme court, the appeal was quashed without costs. White v. Parker, 16 S. C. R. 699.

An action for injury to the person now survives to the executor of the plaintiff, who can, in case of his death pendente lite, on entering a suggestion of the death, and obtaining an order of revivor, continue the action. Mason v. Toten of Peterborough, 20 A. R. 683.

After the commencement of an action for injury occasioned by negligence and improper conduct of defendant in the management of a vessel, defendant died:—Held, that the action could not be revived against his executor. Cameron v. Miltoy, 22 C. P. 331.

III. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Absence of Ordinary Care - Findings of Jury.] — Action against defendants as owners of a macadamized road, which it was alleged they allowed to get out of repair at its point of intersection with another road, whereby the plaintiff was thrown out of his waggon, and broke his leg. &c. It appeared that the plaintiff was driving a high load of empty barrels, in a rack unfastened to the waggon, and that on coming to this spot, where the road was lower on one side than the other by 18 inches, so as to carry on the incline of a cross road, and which had deeper ruts on the lower side than on the higher, the plaintiff got on the high side of the load to steady it: the load upset, and the plaintiff was thrown down and broke his leg. The jury, in answer to the questions submitted, found: (3) that it was not prudent for the plaintiff to have driven over the spot in question on the top of the load; (4) that the plaintiff, sitting as he did, contributed to the cause of the accident; (5) that it was imprudent not to fasten the rack, and the omission to do so contributed to the accident :- Held, that the answers to the third and fourth questions, though shewing some negligence on the plaintiff's part, did not amount to a finding of con-tributory negligence, so as to prevent his recovery; but that the answer to the fifth question was a finding of contributory negligence, which would bar the action, Bradley v. which would bar the action. Brown, 32 U. C. R. 463.

Warning.]—In an action for negligence against the owners of a steamboat, for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of one of the fenders having broken loose from the steamboat while leaving a wharf, and striking and injuring the plaintiff, who was standing on the wharf, where it anpeared that the plaintiff had received warning to stand clear of the fenders, and that a person with ordinary care might have escaped, the court set aside a verdict for plaintiff, and granted a new trial on payment of costs.
Gricee v., Ontario Steamboat Co., 4 C. P. 387.

Accident Assurance Company — Liability of,1—See Neill v. Travellers' Ins. Co., 31 C. P. 394, 7 A. R. 570, 12 S. C. R. 55.

Collision — Bridge.] — The persons in charge of a vessel are bound when approaching at night a drawbridge, lawfully erected, to keep the vessel under complete control, and are not entitled to assume that the draw of the bridge is open or will be opened in time to let the vessel through. Therefore, if a vessel is allowed to approach so close to the bridge that collision with it cannot be avoided when the draw is found to be closed, damages are not recoverable from the bridge owners. Gilmour v. Bay of Quinte Bridge Occ., 20 A. R. 281.

Drunkenness.]—When a waggon is left standing in the highway, the owner cannot defend himself by shewing that the person injured thereby was drunk. Ridley v. Lamb, 10 U. C. R. 354.

Jury — Perverse Verdict — New Trial.]—In an action against a railway company for killing the plaintiff's horses by collision at a crossing, the weight of evidence went strongly to shew that the plaintiff was intoxicated, and the accident caused by his own negligence and bad driving. The jury, however, tound in his favour. The Judge who tried the case being disantished with video, and there being reason to believe that it with the being disantished with the being disasten sympathy on the part of the jury of mistaken sympathy on the part of the jury of mistaken sympathy on the railway company, the court man as against a railway company, the court man as against a railway company, the court man as against a railway company to company the court in the first part of the part of th

Entry on Dangerous Premises.— Infont—Pleading, I—Declaration by the plaintiff, as administrative of J. M., that defending is a subsessed of a certain lot on the highway, on which developed the highway, on which he hegigently and wrongfully suffered to remain open, whereby said J. M. shign an infont under twelve years, and owing to his youth incapable of exercising and wring to his youth incapable of exercising and owing to his youth incapable of exercising and owing to his youth incapable of exercising and owing to his youth incapable of exercising and or his youth incapable of exercising on the beams across said cellar, fell in, and was killed. Plea, that the said J. M. improperly and unlawfully went upon said premises, and by his own unlawful conduct and negligence, and not through any default of defendant, slipped and fell in:—Held, on demurrer to the plea, declaration good, shewing sufficiently that the cellar was upon the highway; plea bad, as not denying the youth of J. M., or its alleged effect. McIntyre v. Buchanan, 14 U. C. R. 581.

—— Reversal of Finding—Damages.]—
The part of defendants' office devoted to the public was some sixteen and a half feet long from south to north, the entrance door being at the south, and the width was five feet seven inches. About four feet nine inches from the south, and on the east wall, was a desk or counter for writing messages, seven feet six inches long, and one foot seven inches wide. About five inches north of the counter, and in the centre of the apartment, there was a trap door leading to the cellar about two feet nine inches square. On the west side of the apartment was a partition about six feet high, separating the public office from the operator's department, the entrance to which was at the north end of the partition. In this partition there was an opening with a desk in it, where also messages were written and de-livered to the operator. D. came in quickly to send a message, spoke to the operator at this opening, and then went behind the counter as if to go into the operator's room, when, the trap door being open, he fell through into the cellar, and received injuries of which he died. There was evidence given to shew that de-ceased said it was his own fault, and that he ought not to have been where he was; that the office was a very light one, and that there was no difficulty in seeing the trap; but it also appeared that other persons on other oc-casions had nearly fallen into it. The Judge, who tried the case without a jury, and viewed the premises, found that the deceased was the premises, found that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, which precluded the plaintiff, his administratrix, from recovering:—Held, that defendants were liable; that the evidence of the open trap door in the part appropriated to the public was negligence for which defendants were chargeable; and that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased, Denny v. Montreal Telegraph Co., 42 U. C. R. 577. U. C. R. 577.

On appeal the court, without deciding that it would have disturbed the finding at the trial, held that no sufficient reason was shewn for reversing the decision below, which was the immediate subject of the appeal; but held, also, that the court should have assessed the damages, and entered the verdict which, in its opinion, should have been entered at the trial; and they accordingly assessed the damages, and varied the rule by directing a verdict to be entered for the amount, S. C., 3 A. R. 628.

Evidence—Onus—Jury,!—In an action to recover damages for negligence, tried with a jury, where contributory negligence is set up as a defence, the onus of proof of the two issues is respectively upon the plaintiff and the defendant, and though the Judge may rule negatively that there is no evidence to go to the jury on either issue, he cannot declare affirmatively that either is proved. The question of proof is for the jury. Weir v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 16 A. R. 190, was a non-jury case, and laid down no rule for the disposition of a case tried with a jury. Morrow v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 21 A. R. 149.

— Findings of Jury.]—On the trial of an action against a street railway company for damages in consequence of injuries received through the negligence of the company's servants, the jury answered four questions in a way that would justify a verdict for the plaintiff. To the fifth question, the control of the plaintiff of the cardinal plaintiff of the plaintiff

Machinery — Knowledge—Carclessness.]—In an action for damages by an employee for injuries sustained while operating an embossing and stamping press, it appeared that when the accident causing the injury occurred, the whole of the employee's hand was under the press, which was unnecessary, as only the hand as far as the second knuckle needed to be inserted for the purpose of the operation in which he was engaged. It was alleged that the press was working at undue speed, but it was proved that the speed had been increased to such extent at the instance of the employee himself, who was a skilled workman:—Held, that the injury occurred by a mere accident not due to any negligence of the employer, but solely to the heedlessness and thoughtlessness of the injured man himself, and the employer was not liable. Burlend v. Lee, 28 S. C. R. 348.

Infant.]—Semble, that the doctrine of contributory negligence is not applicable to a child of tender years. Gardner v. Grace, 1 F. & F. 359, approved of. Sangster v. T. Eaton Co., 25 O. R. 78. See S. C., 21 A. R. 624, 24 S. C. R. 768.

The doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply to an infant of tender age. Gardner v. Grace, 1 F. & F. 359, followed. Merritt v. Hepenstal, 25 S. C. R. 150.

Knowledge.]—Knowledge is not per se contributory negligence. Gordon v. City of Belleville, 15 O. R. 26.

Negligence of Driver of Carriage— Injury to Occupant.)—The doctrine that the occupant of a carriage is not identified as to negligence with the driver applies only where the occupant is a mere passenger having no control over the management of the carriage, Where, therefore, the hirer of a carriage allows one of his friends to drive and an accident results from the latter's negligence, the former cannot recover. Flood v. Village of London West, 23 A. R. 530.

Monsuit—Undisputed Facts—Inference.]
—In actions for negligence the power of the Judge to nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence is restricted to cases where it is plain and indisputable that the injury of which the plaintiff complains would not have occurred but for his own want of proper care. Where the facts, or the proper inference from the facts, are in dispute, the case must go to the jury. And where the defendants negligently left a hole in the floor of a room unguarded, and the plaintiff, going into the room, saw the danger and at first avoided it, but, on turning to go out again, lost sight of it, stepped into the hole, and was injured:—Held, these facts being undisputed, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether she was negligent or not. Serier v. Lowe, 32 O. R. 200.

Trespasser — Warning—Imprudence.]—A cow-boy aboard a ship on the eve of departure from the port of Montreal was injured by the falling of a derrick then in use which had been insecurely fastened. He was not at the time engaged in the performance of any duty, and, although he had been warned to "stand from under," he had not moved away from the dangerous position he was occupying:—Held, that the boy's imprudence was not merely contributory negligence, but constituted the principal and immediate cause of the accident, and that, under the circumstances, neither the master nor the owners of the ship could be held responsible for damages on account of the injuries he received. Roberts v. Havkins, 29 S. C. R. 218.

Volunteer — Common Fault—Division of Damagues.]—P, was proprietor of certain lumber mills and a bridge leading to them across the river Batiscan. The bridge being threatened with destruction by the spring floods, the mill foreman called for volunteers to attempt to save it by undertaking manifestly dangerous work a londing one of the piers with stone. Whate the work was in progress the bridge was carried away by the force of the waters and one of the volunteers was drowned. In an action by the wido for an action by the wido for an action by the wido for an action one in which both the mill owner and deceased were to blame, and that, being a case of common fault, the damages should be divided according to the jurisprudence of the Province of Quebec. Price v. Roy, 20 S. C. R. 304.

IV. DAMAGES.

1. Actions by Representatives of Persons Killed by Negligence.

Loss of Services—Cure of Children.]—
Held, affirming the decision in 1 A. R. I. which reversed the decision in 1 O, R. 545, that afflowing the decision in 1 O, R. 545,
that afflowing the decision in 1 of R. 545,
that afflowing the decision in 1 of R. 545, that afflowing the decision of the care and moral training of their mother,
16 S. C. R. 422.

Quantum of Damages.]—In actions under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 6 (C. S. C. c. 78) the court will interfere if the damages are clearly excessive; but it was held, under the circumstances of this case, that £3,000 was not exorbitant for the widow and three children of deceased. Semble, that the mother in this case could have no claim. Second v. Great Western R. W. Co., 15 U. C. R. 631.

New trial granted, where the jury gave £5,000, to be distributed £500 to the widow, and the rest in unequal sums among five infant children, the deceased having been a blacksmith, 35 years of age, the patentee of an invention for an improved plough, and of careful, industrious habits, &c. Morley v. Urcat Western R. W. Co., 16 U. C. R. 504.

Right to Deduct Insurance Moneys.]—The decensed had effected a policy of insurance on his life, which was in force at the time of his death. At the trial the jury was directed to deduct the amount of the policy from the verdict, which amount was afterwards added by a divisional court (8 O. R. 601). An appeal, the court being equally divided in opinion on this branch of the case, was dismissed with costs. Hicks v. Newport, &c., R. W. Co., 4 B. & 8. 403 n., commented on. Beckett v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 13 A. R. 174, 16 S. C. R. 713.

The right conferred by Lord Campbell's Act. adopted by R. S. O. 1887 c. 135, ss. 2 and 3, to recover damages in respect of death occasioned by wrongful act, neglect or default, is restricted to the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the plaintiff. Where the widow of deceased is plaintiff, and her husband had made provision for her by a policy on his own life in her favour, the amount of such policy is not to be deducted from the amount of damages previously assessed irrespective of such consideration. She is benefited only by the accelerated receipt of the amount of the policy, and that benefit, being represented by the interest of the money during the period of acceleration, may be compensated by deducting future premiums from the estimated future earnings of the deceased. Hicks v. Newport, &c., R. W. Co., 4 B. & S. 403 n., approved. Judgment in 15 A. R. 477 affirmed. Grand Trunk R. W. Co. of Canada v. Jennings, 13 App. Cas. 800, Solatium for Bereavement.] - In an solutium for Bereavement.] — In an action for damages brought for the death of a person by the consort and relations under art. 1056, C. C., which is a re-enactment and reproduction of C. S. L. C. c. 78, damages by way of solutium for the bereavement suffered canot be recovered. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co. v. Robinson, 14 S. C. R. 105.

Inappreciable Effect of Negligence-Findings of Jury—New Trial.]—See Kerry v. England, [1898] A. C. 742.

Measure of Damages -- Carriers-Delivery of Goods—Fall in Market Price.]—See Monteith v. Merchants Despatch Co., 1 O. R. 47, 9 A. R. 282.

— Carriers—Freight.]—The plaintiffs had undertaken to carry a cargo of stone in their schooner from C. to P., and had got as far as K., where she was injured by the neglicence of defendants' servants in towing her. The stone was forwarded by defendants to P. In an action brought by the plaintiffs for the in in action brought by the plainting for the injury:—Held, that they could not recover as damages any part of the freight, for they might adopt defendants' act, and recover the whole from the consignees. Stevenson v. Cattin, 25 U. C. R. 102.

- Collision-Injury to Vessel-Repair -Wages-Hire of Substitute.]-In an action for injury to plaintiff's vessel caused by collision with defendants' steamboat: — Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the cost of repairing his vessel, and for the permanent injury done to her, and the wages of his crew necessarily kept over during the repairs; but not the sum expended in hire of another vessel to take her place, in the or the profits which he would have earned by her employment. Semble, that in an action of trover for a vessel, the profits lost may be recovered. Brown v. Beatty, 35 U. C. R.

-- Harbour Company--- Loss of Vessel---Attempts to Rescue.]-In an action against a harbour company, charging that it was their duty to keep a sufficient light upon the end of one of their piers, as they had been in the habit of doing, to enable vessels to enter with safety, and that they had wrongfully removed such light without giving sufficient public notice, by reason of which the plaintiff's vessel while endeavouring to enter the said harbour had been lost:—Held, that in addition to the value of his vessel the plaintiff was entitled to recover a further sum expended by him in good faith, and with a reasonable expectation of success, in attempting to raise the vessel for the purpose of repairing her. Sween v. Port Burwell Harbour Co., 17 C. P. 574.

Quantum of Damages-Registrar Decds—Mortgage. |—A registrar, being applied to by the plaintiff for a certificate of the registries on a lot, gave one in which he omitted to mention a mortgage for $600 prior to that which the plaintiff purchased, supposing it from the certificate to be a first incumbrance. The first mortgagee obtained a decree for sale, and the plaintiff purchased the land at less than would satisfy the two mortgages, but he soon afterwards sold at a considerable advance, so that in the end he would receive all that he paid for his mortgage. In an action against the registrar for this omlssion in his certificate, the jury gave $500 damages :-Held, that the damages were modedamages:—Held, that the damages were moderate, the plaintiff having in fact sustained loss to the full amount of the first mortgage. Harrison v. Brega, 20 U. C. R. 324.

Right to Deduct Insurance Moneys.] -In an action by plaintiff to recover damages —In an action by plaintiff to recover damages for the destruction of his dwelling house and a quantity of chattel property caused by sparks emitted from defendant's steam tug through defendant's negligence:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to deduct from the amount of damages found to have been sustained by the plaintiff, an amount paid to the plaintiff by an insurance company under an insurance on the property. Received. an insurance on the property. Brown v. Mc-Rae, 17 O. R. 712.

Set-off of Damages — Action on Contract. I—In an action by the plaintiff, an architect, on the common counts, for services in preparing plans and superintending the erection of a house for defendant:-Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct from that the detendant was entitled to deduct from the amount which the plaintiff could other-wise claim any loss which defendant had sus-tained through the plaintiff's negligence, in certifying too much for contractors who after-wards failed, in consequence of which defend-ant was compelled to have the work done by Morrison, 27 C. P. 242.

V. DEATH BY NEGLIGENCE—ACTIONS BY REP-

Right to Recover—Loss of Illentinate Son, I—The plaintiff. as administratrix, sued the defendants, under 44 Viet, c. 22, s. 7 (O.), for the death of her illegitimate son, a brakes man on the defendants' railway, who was killed by being carried against a bridge not of the height required by that Act, while on one of their trains passing underneath it. The bridge belonged to another railway company, which had the right to cross the defendants' line in that way, and though the bridge had expired, they had not done so. The jury found that the defendants had been guilty of negligence in not raising, or procuring to be raised, the bridge:—Held, that, as the Act was intended to give no greater right to recover than Lord Campbell's Act, the plaintiff's relationship to the deceased was not such as to give her a right to recover. Gibson v. Midland R. W. Co., 2 O. R. 638.

— Loss of Son.]—The plaintiff's son, who land just come of age, was killed by accident in the defendant's machine shop, where he had been temporarily employed. For about two years previously he had, while attending school, worked on his father's farm, as farmers' sons usually do, without wages, and it was intended that he should study medicine, at an expense to his father of about $1,000, the course lasting three or four years, and in the vacations, while so engaged in acquiring his intended profession, it was expected that he would work at home as usual. In an action by his father as administrator to recover damages for the death of his son:—Held, that he could have no reasonable expectation of pecuniary or material benefit from the son's life, and a nonsuit was ordered to be entered. Mason v, Restram, 18 O. R. 1.

— Person Beneficially Entitled.]—An action for damages by reason of the death of a person can be maintained under R. S. O. 1887 c. 135, s. 7, by the person beneficially entitled, though brough within six calendar months from the death, unless there be at the time an executor or administrator of the deceased. Lampman v. Township of Gainsborough, 17 O. R. 191.

— Quebec Code—Lord Campbell's Act—Master and Servant — Contract — Econocration—Crown 1—Article 1056, C. C. embodies the action previously given by a statute of the Province of Canada re-enacting Lord Campbell's Act. Robinson v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., [1882] A. C. 481, distinguished. A workman may so contract with his employer as to exonerate the latter from liability for negligence, and such renunciation would be an answer to an action under Lord Campbell's Act. Griffiths v. Earl Pudley, 9 Q. B. D. 357, followed. In s. 50 of the Government Railways Act, R. S. C. c. 38, providing that "Her Majesty shall not be relieved from liability by any notice, condition, or declaration in the event of any damage arising from any negligence, omission, or default of any officer, employee, or servant of the minister," the words "notice, condition, or declaration" do not include a contract or agreement by which an employee has renounced his right to claim damages from the Crown for injury from negligence of his fellow servants. Grand Trunk R. W. Co v. Vogel.

11 S. C. R. 612, disapproved. An employee on the Intercolonial Railway Beeine a member of the Intercolonial Railway Relief and Assurance Association, to the funds of which the government contributed annually 85,000. In consequence of such contribution a rule of the association provided that the members renounced all claims against the Crown arising from injury or death in the course of their employment. The employee having been killed in discharge of his duty by negligence of a fellow-servant:—Held, reversing the judgment in 6 Ex. C. R. 276, that the rule of the association was an answer to an action by his widow under art. 1056, C. C., to recover compensation for his death, The Queen v. Grenier, 30 S. C. R. 42.

Ship—Collision—Maritime Court — Jurisdiction—Loss of Son.]—The appellant's child, a minor, was killed in a collision between two vessels by the negligence of the officers in charge of one of them ("The Garland"). Petition against "The Garland"—libelled under the Maritime Court Act at the port of Windsor—on behalf of the appellant claiming 82,000 damages suffered by her, owing to the death of her son and servant, caused by the negligence of the officers in charge of the said "Garland." The respondent intervened, and demurred on the ground that the petition did not set forth a cause of action against "The Garland" within the jurisdiction of the court——lield, that the maritime court of Ontario was the intervience of the collection of the court.

Garland within the jurisanction of the court:

—Held, that the maritime court of Outario has no jurisdiction apart from R. S. O. 1877
c. 128 (re-enacting in this Province Lord Campbell's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c, 93), in an action for personal injury resulting in death, and therefore the appellant had no locus standi, not having brought her action as the personal representative of the child. Held, also, that vice-admiralty courts in British possessions and the maritime court of Outario, have whatever jurisdiction the high court of admiralty has over "any claim for damages done by any ship, whether to person or to property," In re "The Garland," Monaghan v, Horn, 7 S. C. R. 409.

VI. IN CARE AND CONSTRUCTION OF BUILD-INGS.

Cornice Falling from Roof.]—The owner of a building, from which a cornice overhanging the sidewalk falls, because the nails fastening it to the building have become loosened by ordinary decay, and injures a passer-by, is liable in damages without proof of knowledge on his part of the dangerous condition of the cornice, the defect being one that could have been ascertained by him by reasonable inspection. Roberts v. Mitchell, 21 A. R. 433.

Lodging House—Dangerous Passage— Knowledge of Danger, 1—Defendant, the owner of a house, leased to plaintiff a room in it, the only mode of access to which, and to the other rooms in the same storey, was by a certain passage, in which there was an uncovered stovepipe hole. The plaintiff, having agreed with defendant to change into an adjoining room, was in the act of moving her furniture, when she slipped into this hole and was injured:—Held, that defendant was not liable, for in the absence of express contract he was under no legal obligation to keep the premises in repair. The plaintiff was aware of the existence of this hole when she took the room. Quarre, whether such knowledge, and her omission to cover it, was not evidence of contributory negligence which would have prevented her recovery. Humphrey v. Wait, 22 C. P. 580.

Snow Falling from Roof.]—There is no duty at common law upon owners or occupiers of bouses to remove snow from the roof, and no liability for accidents caused by its falling. Defendants, owning land in a city, leased it to H. upon certain conditions as to building, and he erected a house upon it under the directions of their architect. The lower storey was occupied by one S. as lessee of H., and the upper storey and garret by defendants. There was no evidence of any faulty or negligent construction of the house or roof, nor of any by-law passed by defendants to regulate the removal of snow. The plaintiff having been injured while passing along the street by snow falling from the roof:—Held, that defendants were not liable. Lavarus v. City of Toronto, 19 U. C. R. 9.

In an action for damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of ice and snow falling from the roof of defendant's house and injuring him while he was walking on the highway, evidence was given to shew that about half an hour before the accident happened the defendant was notified of the dangerous character of the roof, but took no precaution to guard against accidents, and a by-law of the municipality was proved requiring the citizens to keep their roofs clear of ice and snow:—Heid, that there was evidence to go to the jury of negligence in the defendant. A non-suit entered at the trial, was therefore set aside, and a new trial granted. Lazarus v. City of Toronto, 19 U. C. R. 9, commented on and distinguished. Landreville v. Gouin, 6 O. R. 455.

Steam—Escape of—Injury to Adjacent Building—Notice,]—The pipe from a condensor attached to a steam engine used in the manufacture of electricity passed through the floor of the premises and discharged the steam into a dock below, some twenty feet from an adjoining warehouse, into which the steam entered and damaged the contents. Notice was given to the electric company, but the injury continued, and an action was brought by the owners of the warehouse for damages:—Held, that the act causing the injury violated the rule of law which does not permit one, even on his own land, to do anything, lawful in itself, which necessarily injures another, and the persons injured are entitled to damages therefor, more especially as the injury continued after notice to the company, Chandler Electric Co. v. Fuller, 21 S. C. R. 337.

Wall—Dangerous Condition—Injury to Adjacent Building—Vis Major.]—Where a fire destroyed the defendant's house, leaving one of the walls standing in a dangerous condition, and the defendant, knowing the fact, neglected to secure or support the wall or take it down, and some days after the fire it was blown down by a high wind and damaged the plaintiff's house:—Held, that the defeudant could not shield himself under the plea of vis major, and was liable for the damages caused. Nordheimer v. Alexander, 19 S. C. R. 248.

Warehouse for Goods—Defect in Foundation.]—A person sending goods to be warehoused has a right to expect that the building in which they are placed shall be reasonably fit for the purpose, but he has no right to expect more than ordinary and average care in that respect, and it is only in the absence of such care on the warehouseman's part that he will be liable. The fact of the building having fallen from a defect in the foundation is not conclusive evidence against the warehouseman, for that might happen without any negligence on his part. Wilmot v. Jarvis, 12 U. C. R. 641.

Water Falling from Roof—Formation of Ice on Sidevalk.]—The defendants were the owners of a building on the street. A pipe, connected with the eave troughs, conducted the water from the roof down the side of the building, and by means of a spout discharged it upon the sidewalk, where in the winter it was formed into a ridge of ice, upon which the female plaintiff slipped and fell while walking on the street, and injured herself. The jury found that the defendants did not know of the accumulation of ice, and that they ought not reasonably to have known it:
—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Skelton v. Thompson, 3 O. R. 11.

Window Falling — Trustees — Executors.]—The owner of property abutting on a highway is under a positive duty to keep it from being a cause of danger to the public by reason of any defect, either in structure, repair, or use and management, which reasonable care can guard against. Dame A. T. sued J. F. and M. W. F. personally as well as in their quality of testamentary executors and trustees of the will of the late J. F., claiming $4,000 damages for the death of her husband, who was killed by a window falling which formed part of the general estate of the late J. F., but which had been specifically bequeathed to one G. F., and his children, for whom the said J. F. and M. W. F. were also trustees. The judgments of the courts below held the appellants liable in their capacity of executors of the general estate and trustees under the will:—Held, that the appellants were responsible for the damages resulting from their negligence in not keeping the building in repair as well personally as in their quality of trustees (d'héritiers fiduciaires) for the benefit of G. F.'s children; but were not liable as executors of the general estate. Where parties are before che court quá executors, and the same parties should also be summoned quá trustees, an amendment to that effect is sufficient, and a new writ of summons is not necessary. Ferriev. Trepannier, 24 S. C. R. S0.

VII. IN DRIVING HORSES.

Facts for Jury.]—In an action for damages for injury to a verandah on a street by runaway horses, the question of negligence is for the jury, but what facts may by them be considered is a question of law. Sandilands v. Bathgate, 9 L. J. 328,

Finding of Jary—Conflicting Evidence—New Trial.]—Action for negligence in driving a sleigh and horses against the plaintiff. It appeared that the driver, to get better sleighing, had turned off the road to follow a track along the ditch at one side; and that in coming up again the sleigh upset, and the horses running away overtook and ran against the plaintiff. The passengers in the sleigh which was upset acquitted the driver of any negligence; but another witness, who was near at the time, said he thought if more care had been used in coming up, the accident would not have happened. The jury having found for the plaintiff, a new trial was granted. Robinson v. Bletcher, 15 U. C. R. 159.

New Trial.]—In an action for negligent driving, when the fact of negligence goes fully to the jury and they find for defendant, and no misdirection is complained of, the court, unless it appear that the evidence is conclusive in favour of the plaintiff, will not grant a new trial. Kenny v. Cook, 4 U. C. R. 298.

Ordinary Care—Warning to Pedestrian—Nonsuit.]— Defendant's horse being balky, defendant struck it with a whip to start it, his servant boy being on it. The horse started off, and knocked down and injured the plaintiff in a lane along which the horse ran. The boy tried to stop the horse and called to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was nonsuited:—Held, that the nonsuit was right. Brown v. Heather, S. C. L. J. 86.

Passing Vehicle on Highway—Statutory Requirements—Question for Jury.]—In an action for damages occasioned by the defendant driving against the plaintiff's sleigh, which he had overtaken and was endeavouring to pass on the highway:—Held, that under ss. 2 and 3 of C. S. U. C. c. 56, it should be left to the jury to decide whether the damage was occasioned by the misconduct of defendant, or partly by the default of the plaintiff, as he, in this case, not being able to turn out, did not stop as required by the statute. Devliv v. Bain, 11 C. P. 523.

What Constitutes Negligence—Dropping Reins.—It is not negligence per se for the driver of a horse of a quiet disposition, standing in the street, to let go the reins while he alights from the vehicle to fasten a head-weight, there being at the time little traffic and no noise or disturbance to frighten the animal; and the owner of the horse is not responsible for damages caused by the horse in running away when frightened by a sudden noise just after the driver has alighted. Sullivan v. McWilliam, 20 A. R. 627.

See Ridley v. Lamb, 10 U. C. R. 354; Flood v. Village of London West, 23 A. R.

VIII. OF PARTICULAR PERSONS OR CORPORA-

Architect—Liability to Employer.]—Although an architect, employed by the owner for reward to superintend the construction of a house, may, as between the latter and the contractor, by the terms of their own agreement, be in the position of an arbitrator, and his decision as between them unimpeachable except for fraud or dishonesty, yet as between himself and his employer he is answerable for either negligence or unskilfulness in the performance of his duty as architect. Irving v. Morrison, 27 C. P. 242, approved. Badgley v. Dickson, 13 A. R. 494.

Bailee—Agistment—Reasonable Care.]—
The plaintiff's mare, while in charge of the defendant under a contract of summer agistment, was killed by falling through the plank covering of a well in the defendant's yard, the existence of which was known to the defendant but not to the plaintiff, and to which yard the mare, with other horses of the defendant, had access from a field in which they were at pasture:—Held, that the plaintiff had, on proof of these facts, given sufficient primā facie evidence of negligence to cast the onus on the defendant of shewing that reasonable care which an agister is bound to exercise; and a nonsuit was set aside. The test in such cases is not necessarily the care which the agister may exercise as to his own animals. It is, in general, not what any particular man does, but what men as a class would do with similar property as a class. Pearce v. Sheppard, 24 O. R. 167.

Bank—Not Giving Notice to Indorser.]— See Steinhoff v. Merchants Bank, 46 U. C. R. 25.

Bridge Company — Draw-bridge—Open Gates—Liability.]—Defendants were incorporated to build a draw-bridge over a river, and authorized to take tolls; and their charter empowered them to let and farm the tolls. They leased the tolls accordingly, and the lessee covenanted to open and closs the draw-bridge, and cause it to be properly attended to. The plaintiff's horses, while going down the lease of the properly attended to. The plaintiff's horses, while going down the properly attended to the p

Charterers of Tug — Fire—Reasonable Precentions—Acts of Owner.]—The plaintiff, owner of a scow, had, without authority, moored it permanently to the shore of a basin artificially created by the excavation of land adjacent to a navigable river, which formed the boundary at that point between Canada and the United States. The soil of the shore and basin had been patented to certain persons, the usual rights of access to the shore and of navigation being reserved. The defendants, licensees of the owners of the shore, with authority to take, and for the purpose of taking, sand from the shore by means of their own seow and a hired tug, of which the master was the owner, placed the tug and scow alongside the plaintiff's scow, by order of the foreman of the defendants' scow, to whose orders the master of the tug was bound to conform. The plaintiff's scow caught fire from sparks emanating from the smoke-stack of the tug, and was destroyed:—Held, affirming the decision in 24 O. R. 500, that the defendants were bound to omit no reasonable precautions to avoid injuring the plaintiff's property; and that they were liable for the negligence of the master of the tug in so placing it as to communicate fire to the plaintiff's seow, as in so doing he was obeying the orders of the defendants' foreman, and was under his direct and personal control. Cram v. Ryan, 25 O. R. 524.

Clerk of Municipality Omitting Names from Collector's Roll—Non-averment of Negligence.]—See Town of Peterborough v, Edwards, 31 C. P. 231.

Contractor — Supplying Machine — Defect.]—A contractor who, pursuant to the terms of a sub-contract, supplies to a sub-contractor a machine for use in the work, is not liable in damages to one of the sub-contractor's workmen for injuries sustained by reason of a patent defect in the machine, which has been accepted and used by the sub-contractor without objection. Smith v. Onderdonk, 25 A. R. 171.

Crown — Negligence of Servants.]—See Crown.

Deputy Clerk of Crown.]—Quære, as to the liability of a deputy clerk of the Crown for damages arising from neglect of his duties. Moore v. Simons. 1 C. L. J. 183.

Druggist—Making up Prescription—Physician.]—A physician wrote a prescription for the plaintiff and directed that it should be charged to him by the druggist who compounded it, which was done. His fee, including the charge for making up the prescription, was paid by the plaintiff. The druggist's clerk by mistake put prussic acid in the mixture, and the plaintiff in consequence suffered injury:—Held, that the druggist was liable to the plaintiff for negligence but the physician was not. Under the circumstances of the case no costs were awarded to or against any of the parties, Stretton v. Holmes, 19 O. R. 286.

Executors.]—See Ferrier v. Trépannier, 24 S. C. R. S6.

Harbour Company—Wreck of Vessel—Sand Bar—Notice.]—Action against a harbour company, the plaintiff's vessel having been wrecked upon a sand bar about 200 feet outside of the piers, and the cargo lost. It appeared that this sand bar was of a shifting nature, disappearing and forming at different times, but defendants, who had commenced to receive tolls, some weeks before the accident had begun to remove it, and had not gone on with the work. The jury having found that the loss was caused by defendants' negligence:—Held, that defendants were liable, and a verdict for the value of plaintiff's cargo was upheld. Webb v. Port Bruce Harbour Co., 19 U. C. R. 615, 623.

— Obstruction in Harbour.] — Remarks as to the duty of harbour companies to keep the harbour free from obstructions, and their liability for neglect. Berryman v. Port Burectl Harbour Co., 24 U. C. R. 34.

Husband and Wife.]—See Shaw v. Mc-Creary, 19 O. R. 39.

Innkeeper — Accident to Guest,] — The plaintiff went, as a customer, into the defendant's hotel, where he had been several times before. In passing through the building to go to the urinal he fell through an open trap door, which had been left unguarded, and received injuries:—Held, that he was entitled to damages from the defendant, Hasson v. Wood, 22 O. R. 66.

Neglect to Warn Guest of Fire in Building.]—See Hare v. Henderson, 43 U. C. R. 571.

Judgment Creditor—Securities Given up by Judgment Debtor for Collection—Pleading Liability.]—See Hall v. Moss, 25 U. C. R.

Lessees of Wharf - Accident-Invitation.]-A company, owing a steamboat making weekly trips between Boston and Halifax, occupied a wharf in the latter city, leased to agent. For the purpose of getting to and from the steamer there was a plank side-walk on one side, part way down the wharf, and persons using it usually turned at the end and passed to the middle of the wharf. Y, and his wife went to meet a passenger ex-A, and his wife went to meet a passenger expected to arrive by the steamer between seven and eight o'clock one evening in November. They went down the plank sidewalk, and instead of turning off at the end, there being no lights and the night being dark, they continued straight down the wharf, which narrowers is or rowed after some distance and formed a jog, on reaching which Y.'s wife tripped, and, as her husband tried to catch her, they both fell into the water. Forty-four days after Mrs. Y. died. The deceased had not had regular and continual medical treatment after the accident, and the doctors who gave evidence differed as to whether or not the immersion was the proximate cause of her death. The jury, when asked whether the deceased would have recovered, notwithstanding the accident, if she had had regular and continual attendance, replied, "very doubtful." A verdict was ance, replied, "very doubtful." A verdict was found for the plaintiff with $1,500 damages:
—Held, that Y, and his wife were lawfully upon the wharf at the time of the accident; that, in view of the established practice, they had a right to assume that they were invited by the company to go on the wharf and assist their friends in disembarking from the steamer; and that they had a right to expect that the means of approach to the steamer were safe for persons using ordinary care, and the company were under an obligation to see that company were under an obligation to see that they were safe. Held, further, that it having been proved that the wharf was only rented to the agent because the landlord preferred to deal with him personally, and that it was rented for the use of the company, whose officers had sole control of it, the company were in possession of it at the time of the ac-cident. Held, also, that the widence and were in possession of it at the time of the ac-cident. Held, also, that the evidence and finding of the jury having left it in doubt that the accident was the proximate cause of Mrs. X's death, the jury having not been properly instructed as to the liability of the company under the circumstances, and the damages being excessive under the evidence, the order for a new trial should be affirmed. Niagara Falls Park Commissioners— Fences — Highways — Visitors — Crown.]— There is no liability on the part of the commissioners for the park to the public using the highways in the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park by reason of the absence or insufficiency of a fence, railing, or barrier on the edge of the cliff, there being no statutory ob-Gibson v. Mayor of Preston, L. R. 5 Q. B. 218, Sanitary Commissioners of Gibraltar v. 218. Sanitary Commissioners of Gibraltar v. Orfila, 15 App. Cas. 400. Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, [1802] A. C. 345, Municipality of Picton v. Geldert, [1803] A. C. 524. Municipal Council of Sydnev v. Bourke, [1805] A. C. 433, followed. Nor are the commissioners liable for an accident happen. ing under the above circumstances to a person while resorting to the park, who, paying nothing for the privilege, is in the position of a bare licensee, to whom no duty would be owing, unless the accident occurred by reason of some unusual danger known to the commissome unusual danger known to the commissioners, and unknown to the pervon injured. Southeote v. Stanley, 1 H. & N. 247, Ivay v. Hedges, 9 Q. B. D. 80, Schmidt v. Town of Berlin, 26 O. R. 54, and Moore v. City of Toronto, in 59 n, followed. The commissioners, under the provisions of the statutes in that behalf, under any circumstances, act in the discharge of their various duties as "an emanation from the Crown" or as agent of emanation from the Crown" or as agent of the Crown, which is not liable for the acts of the subordinate servants of the commis-sioners. Graham v. Commissioners for Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, 28 O. R. 1.

Owner of Turkey — Highway.]—The owner of a turkeycock, which without negligence strays upon the highway contrary to a by-law of the municipality, is not liable for damages resulting from a horse taking fright and running away at the sight of the bird acting as turkeycocks usually do. Zumstein v. Shrumm, 22 A. R. 263.

Postmaster—Not Sending Letter.!—An action will lie against a postmaster for not sending a letter, but the plaintiff in his declaration must aver that the letter was his. Campbell v. McPherson, 6 O. S. 34.

A postmaster is liable to the party injured for loss caused by his negligence in the transmission of letters. Carey v. Laucless, 13 U. C. R. 285.

Stevedore—Injury to Servant of Another—Precautions.]—When two stevedores are independently engaged in loading the same steamer, and, owing to the negligence of the employes of the one, an employes of the other is injured, the former stevedore is liable in damages for such injury. The failure to observe a precaution usually taken in and about such work is evidence of negligence. Brown v. Leclerc, 22 S. C. R. 63.

Surveyor — Contract—Reasonable Skill.]
—A surveyor in making a survey is under no statutory obligation to perform the duty, but undertakes it as a matter of contract and is only liable for want of reasonable skill or gross negligence. Township of Stafford v. Bell, 6 A. R. 273.

Treasurer of Township — Keeping Moneys in House instead of Bank—Loss by Fire.]—See Corporation of Houghton v. Freetand, 26 Gr. 500. Trustees.]—See Ferrier v. Trépannier, 24 S. C. R. 86.

Valuator—Agent of Loan Company—Exercise Valuation — Fraud—Costs.]—In order to render the paid valuator of a loan company to the paid valuator of the defendants already taken might be used, in the event of his then being out of the pair sidiction, but ordered the defendants to pay the costs of the appeal; the new trial to be without costs in the court below. Canada Landed Credit Co. v. Thompson, S.A. K. 639.

Report—Payment, 1—The paid agent of a loan society, who professed to be skilled, and had a knowledge in the valuing of lands, was held liable to the society for a loss sustained by them by reason of a false report of such agent. Silverthorn v. Hunter, 5 A. R. 157, distinguished. Hamilton Provident and Loan Society v. Bell. 29 Gr. 293.

— Good Faith — Inspection.] — The defendant, a paid valuator, estimated the value of a certain property at $4,980, stating in the certificate of value that he held himself "responsible to you" (the plaintiffs) "for the correctness of this report and valuation." which was enclosed in a letter stating "the houses are unfinished, and my valuation of $4,1890 is on the supposition that they will be finished in a manner similar to those adjoining. A final inspection shound, I think, be made." The houses never were finished similarly to those adjoining, nor was the defendant ever called upon to make any final or other inspection, and at a subsequent sale the property, which had been taken possession of by the mortgagees and allowed to become greatly out of repair, realized only $1,890:—Held, under these circumstances, there being no mala fides imputable to the appraiser, that he was not answerable for the loss sustained by the lender. Scotlish American Investment Co. v. Hope, 26 Gr. 430.

Overvaluation—Fraud of Employer's Agent—Costs.]—A paid valuator is not liable to make good any loss sustained by the person employing him, by reason of his overvaluing the property, where he has been led into making such over-estimate by the improper conduct of the agent of the employer. On a balance of evidence, the court refused to order a paid valuator to make good a loss sustained by a party advancing money upon his certificate of valuation, the valuator swearing that he intended to certify the value at $2,000, whereas, by the fraud of the lender's agent, he was induced to certify at $3,000, notwithstanding the alleged agent denied the charge, and the plaintiff, who advanced the money, swore that but for such certificate, he would not have done so. But the court, in consequence of the negligent manner in which the valuator had discharged

Held, affirming the judgment in 26 Gr. 330, that the defendant was not liable for any loss sustained by the plaintiff. Held, also, that the circumstances of this case would not justify the court in reversing the finding of the Judge of first instance, that the valuation was made without fraud or intention to deceive. Silverthorn v. Hunter, 5 A. R. 157.

Professional Valuator - Excessive Valuation — Evidence—Misdirection.]—The defendant L., who was a professional valuator, was employed by plaintiff to personally investigate the security offered for a loan on real estate, and to check the valuation of a local valuator. The defendant visited the property and reported, in effect agreeing with the local valuator, that the property was worth considerably more than the amount proposed to be lent, and that the loan could be safely made for the sum proposed, for which report he charged and was paid a fee. The loan was effected, and default having occurred in its repayment, the property was offered for sale, when it was found impossible to sell for anything like the mortgage money. In an action for negligence in valuing the property the jury found for the plaintif. The Judge at the trial directed the jury that the fact that the defendant did not obthat the fact that the defendant did not obtain the opinion of other persons as to the value of land in the neighbourhood was evidence of negligence:—Held, that this was misdirection. It appeared from the evidence that the mortgagor had endeavoured to pro-cure a loan for a similar amount on the same cure a loan for a similar amount on the same property from a company in which the de-fendant L. was a director, and that the loan was not effected, having been abandoned by the mortgagor. The Judge at the trial, al-though he directed the jury that there was no evidence that the defendant had acted with its particular disherence was all the second intentional dishonesty, pressed upon their notice, with other observations, the inquiry; "Why was not the original transaction carried out?":—Held, that these observations tended to create a prejudice in the minds of tended to create a prejudice in the initial of the jury which was not warranted by the facts. The court of appeal held that there was no misdirection, but, for other reasons, refused to interfere with the order of the court below for a new trial. The supreme court of Canada quashed a further appeal. O'Sullivan v. Lake, 15 O. R. 544, 15 A. R. 711, 16 S. C. R. 636.

— Unpaid Services—Absence of Fraud—Untrue Certificate.]—The defendant, by a certificate signed by him as reeve of the township, stated he had personal knowledge of property belonging to one A. M., and occupied by him, which the defendant believed to be worth $2,000, and would readily sell at a forced cash sale for $1,600; that about fifteen acres were cleared and ready for and under cultivation, &c., setting forth further favourable particulars as to buildings on the land and the nature of the soil, all of which proved to be erroneous. In fact, the defendant had not any personal knowledge of the premises, which were almost worthless; and the particulars as given had been communicated to him by A. M. himself. The defendant was aware that the plaintiffs were about to advance money by way of ioan on the security of this property, and had called for his certificate, by which they said they would be guided in making such advance:

—Held, that the defendant was answarable for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs in consequence of having acted on his certificate, although no fraud was attributable to him, and his services were gratuitous. Govean v. Paton, 27 Gr. 48.

tion as to Value—Gross Negligence.]—In order to a party recovering damages against one who has been guilty of deceif, it is not necessary to shew that the person practising it has benefited thereby; but no action will lie for a false representation, unless the person making it knows it to be untrue, and makes it with the intention of inducing the party to whom it is made to act upon it and he does act upon it and sustains damage in consequence. In order to facilitate an intending borrower obtaining a loan of money the defendant, who was vell known to the plaintiff, the proposed lender, gave a certificate in the following words: "It beg to state that I know the farm belonging to Mr. James Wheelen, of Brudenell, situate opposite the church and in a thriving settlement. I consider it worth at least $1,200; and have reason to believe that it has cost him a much larger sum, and I am sure the investment of $400 will prove a safe one." At this time the property was not worth more than $400 r $500, and on a sale under execution at the suit of the plaintiff ir realized only $130:—Held, that in the absence of mala fides the defendant, being an unpaid valuator, was not liable to make good the loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of this erroneous valuation. French v. Skead, 24 Gr. 179.

See Moberly v. Brooks, 27 Gr. 270: Agricultural Investment Co. v. Federal Bank, 45 U. C. R. 214, 6 A. R. 192.

IX. PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE.

Ratepayer—Action against Contractor— Privity. —A contractor with a corporation to supply hydrants at certain points with water for public use, in the event of fires, is not liable for damages occasioned to the property of an individual ratepayer of the city by fire, owing to there not being a sufficient supply of water; there being no sufficient privity between such ratepayer and contractor. Cunningham v. Furniss, 4 C. P. 514.

Trespasser—Dangerous Machine—Injury to Child—Illurement—Knowledge of Defendant.]—Plaintiff, a child of five years of age, was injured by a horse-power used by the defendant to hoist grain into his warehouse. The machine was on a lot unfenced on one side, leased by him, adjoining his warehouse, about thirty feet from the highway, and was in charge of a man who was temporarily absent for a few minutes at the time of the accident. There was no evidence that the machine was being worked in such proximity to the highway as to endanger the safety of persons using the highway, or that it was so situated as to attract or allure children, nor was there any evidence of any knowledge in the defendant that children were in the habit of frequenting the place or of any intention on his part to injure:—Held, that as the plaintiff had no right to be where he received the injury he could not recover, Held, also, that the omission of the defendant to comply with the provisions of the Act requiring threshing and certain other machines to be guarded (4, 8, 0, 1887 c. 211) did not give a cause of action to the plaintiff. Finlay v. Miscamphell, 20 O. R. 29, followed. Smith v. Hages, 29 O. R. 283.

Volunteer—Dangerous Machine—Injury to Child.]—The plaintiff, a boy of eight, came upon the defendant's land, where the latter was mowing lany, and the defendant permitted him to get upon the mowing machine alone, and to drive the horses. By reason of one of the wheels striking into a furrow, the plaintiff was thrown out of his seat, and, falling on the knives of the machine, was injured. The trial Judge told the jury that if the defendant was not using reasonable care in allowing the plaintiff to be upon the machine, he was guilty of negligence:—Held, a proper direction; and a verdet for the plaintiff was allowed to stand. The question whether the plaintiff was not using the proper of the control of the property of the plaintiff was allowed to stand. The question whether the plaintiff was not material. Carroll v. Freeman, 23 O. R. 283.

Newshoy—Railway—Agreement as to Injuries—Employers of Newshoy.—Declaration, under C. S. U. C. c. 78, by the administrator of A., alleging that A. was lawfully on the platform at a station on defendants' railway, and defendants so negligently managed and drove an engine and carriages, loaded with timber, along the line near said station, that a piece of timber projecting from said carriage struck and killed the said A. Plea, that A. was a newsboy in the employ of C. & Co., vending papers on defendants trains, under an agreement between C. & Co. and defendants, which agreement provided that defendants should carry C. & Co., their newsboys and agents, on their trains, and should not be liable for any injury to the persons or property of said C. & Co., their newsboys or agents, whether occasioned by defendants' negligence or otherwise—Held, plea good, without alleging that A. was a party to or aware of the agreement, Alexander v, Toronto and Nipissing R. W. Co., 33 U. C. R. 474, 35 U. C. R. 433.

Acusboy—Street Railway.]—The deceased, a boy selling newspapers, got on a street railway car at the rear end, and passed through the car to the front platform, where the driver was standing. He stepped to one side behind the driver, and fell off or disappeared from the car, there being no step on that side, and was killed by the car running over him. He had said just before that he was going on some distance further in the car, and the conductor at the trial stated that he had reported the want of a step to the owners of the railway, but it had not been attended to. There was plenty of room in the car, but it was proved that passengers were always allowed to stand on the platform. It was not shewn that the deceased had either paid or been asked for his fare, but it appeared that the newsboys were allowed to enter the cars to sell newspapers without being charged:—Held, that the deceased was lawfully on the car, and being so was entitled to be carried safely, whether he was a passenger for reward or not, Held, also, that there was evidence for the jury of negligence on the part of defendants in the absence of the step, and no such contributory megligence on the part of dead of such contributory megligence on the part of the plaintiff's report, and the plaintiff's report of the ground that unless the deceased was upon the cars as a passenger, on a contract of carriage express or implied, and not as a mere licensee or volunteer, he had no right of action against the defendants for the absence of the step, which was no breach of duty to him, but must take the car as he found it; and that on the evidence he must be taken to have been a licensee only, Blackmore v. Toronto Stretc R. W. Co., 38 U. C. R. 172.

— Unsafe Premises.]—An employee of a company which had contracted to deliver coal at a school building went voluntarily to inspect the place where the coal was to be put on the evening preceding the day upon which arrangements had been made for the delivery, and was accidentally injured by falling into a furnace pit in the basement on his way to the coal bins. He did not apply to the school board or the caretaker in charge of the premises before making bis visit:—Held, affirming the judgment in 23 A. R. 597, that in thus voluntarily visiting the premises for his own purposes and without notice to the occupants, he assumed all risks of danger from the condition of the premises, and could not recover damages. Rogers v. Toronto Public School Board, 27 S. C. R. 448.

X. PLEADING.

Counterclaim.]—In an action for damages for negligence a counterclaim for libel was excluded. McLean v. Hamilton Street R. W. Co., 11 P. R. 193.

Declaration-Agent-Neglect to Insure.] -The plaintiff sued defendant, as the agent of an insurance company, alleging that the plaintiff had employed defendant to effect an insurance on his property, according to the rules of the company, but that defendant had so carelessly and negligently effected such in-surance, that a loss by fire having occurred, the plaintiff was prevented, by reason of such conduct of defendant in effecting the insur-ance, from recovering the amount thereof, and was put to trouble and expense in bringing an action therefor. Defendant pleaded an assignment of the policy by plaintiff to one G. before the fire. On demurrer to the plea, G. before the fire. On demurrer to the plea, defendant took exception to the declaration on the following grounds: 1. The amount and duration of the policy are not shewn. 2. No negligence by defendant is shewn. 3. That no reason is stated why the policy was bad, or that the defect was within defendant's undertaking. 4. No agency between plaintiff and defendant shewn, the latter being agent for the company, nor any reward or consideration averred for the undertaking. 5. That breach is larger than the promise:—Held, that the plea was clearly bad, for plaintiff, that the piea was clearly bad, for plaintiff, notwithstanding the assignment, was the proper person to sue. 2. That the declaration (set out above), being for a misfeasance, did not require an allegation of a consideration or reward to support the action; but the defendant, having undertaken to do, and having done an act gratuitously, was liable for his misfeasance in the performance of his un-dertaking. 3. That the defendant, after plead-ing over, could not object to the want of an allegation of the amount or duration of the insurance; and lastly, that defendant was entitled to judgment for the insufficiency of the count, because negligence generally, which was charged, is different from negligence to insure according to the rules of the company, which was what defendant was employed to do. Johnston v. Graham, 14 C. P. 9.

- Joint Tort Feasors—Recovery Some—Evidence.]—In an action againstagainst four, the declaration stated that the defendants were proprietors of a common stage coach for carrying passengers from T. to B.; that they received the plaintiff as a passenger for certain reward in that behalf; and by reason thereof it became and was the and by reason thereof it became and was the defendants, duty to use due care and diligence in conveying the plaintiff; yet they, not regarding their duty, did not use due diligence, &c., but by reason of the carelessness and improper conduct of defendants by their servant, in conveyance of the plaintiff, he was thrown off of the said coach and inhe was thrown off of the said coach and injured, &c.:—Held, that upon this declaration a verdict might be given against three of the defendants, and for the other. Held, also, that negligence and improper conduct were sufficiently shewn by the evidence. Gunn v. Dickson, 10 U. C. R. 461.

- Vicious Animal - Scienter.]-Declaration, that defendant was possessed of a wild, vicious, and mischievous horse, and it was unsafe and improper to permit the said was unsafe and improper to permit the said horse to go or run at large on any public high-way, yet defendant wrongfully and negligent-ty permitted and suffered the horse, so being vicious, &c., to go at large on the public high-way, where the plaintiff then lawfully was, whereby the horse ran at and jumped upon the plaintiff, and broke his leg:—Held, bad, for knowledge of the animal's vicious nature was not averred; and the allowing it to be at large on the highway was not a breach of any large on the highway was not a breach of any duty due from defendant to plaintiff. Chase v. McDonald, 25 C. P. 129. See Town of Peterborough v. Edwards, 31 C. P. 231.

Defence — "Not Guilty by Statute"— Contributory Negligence.] — Held, reversing the judgment in 18 O. R. 482, that evidence of contributory negligence is properly admissible under the defence of "not guilty by statute" without any special plea of contributute" without any special plea of contribu-tory negligence. Doan v. Michigan Central R. W. Co., 17 A. R. 481.

Plea — Not Guilty — Accident — Non-re-pair.]—In an action under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 6, by an administratrix for negligently causing the death of her husband, the declaration stated that the defendant was possessed of a close, and one A. was possessed of another close adjoining defendant's; that upon defendclose adjoining defendant's; that upon defendant's close a wall was standing, which was, to defendant's knowledge, in a dilapidated and dangerous state, and leaning toward the close of A., by reason whereof it became the duty of defendant to take reasonable precautions to prevent the wall from falling; but have been approximately the state of the control of the co that he wrongfully permitted the wall to remain in that state, and that afterwards, by reason of such neglect, the wall fell upon the close of A., and in falling killed deceased, who was then lawfully in said close. Defend-ant pleaded not guilty:—Held, that the de-claration disclosed a legal liability in defend-ant, and that the evidence warranted a ver-dict for the plaintiff. Semble, that under this issue defendant was at liberty to shew that the accident was caused either wholly or in part by the negligence of deceased, or of others for whom defendant was not responsible, and that a reasonable time for repairing the wall had not elapsed before the occurrence; and that supposing the state of the wall as alleged to be admitted in the pleadings, yet defendant might, in evidence, shew its actual condition as bearing upon the question of negligence. Kinney v. Morley, 2 C. P. 226.

Not Guilty-Duty.] - Semble, the plea of not guilty puts in issue the negligence only, and not the duty alleged. Sweeney v. Port Burwell Harbour Co., 17 C. P. 574.

Not Guilty—Railway—Property of Defendants.]—Where, in the inducement of the declaration, it was alleged that defendants were proprietors of the railway, not saying at the time of the negligence complained of:
—Held, that under plea of not guilty defend-—Held, that under pied of not gainly declar-ants might shew that at such time it was not their property. Van Natter v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 27 U. C. R. 581.

— Not Guilty — Special Contract.]— Under a plea of not guilty, in an action against a bailiff, by the sheriff, for allowing a negligent escape, defendant can only prove that he was not guilty of negligence; he cannot give in evidence any special contract for service. Ruttan v. Shea, 5 U. C. R. 210.

- Not Guilty - Wrongful Act.]-A declaration stated that the plaintiffs were in possession of a certain warehouse, and that defendant so carelessly and unskilfully dug an excavation or cellar on the adjoining close that said warehouse became injured, and the that said warenose became injures, and the wall of it sunk, and fell in, by reason whereof plaintiff's goods were destroyed, &c.:—
Held, that the plea of not guilty merely puts in issue the wrongful act alleged, which in substance was the excavating so near the plaintiff's close without using proper precau-tions that thereby the plaintiff's wall fell down; and that if defendant meant to assert a right to excavate up to the division line between the two closes he should have plead-ed it specially. Mitchell v. Harper, 4 C. P.

XI. PROOF OF NEGLIGENCE,

Absence of Direct Proof—Accident— Unexplained Cause — Nonsuit.] — Plaintiff, while standing on the platform at one of de-fendants' stations, had his eye injured by the explosion of a fog signal, which had been explosion of a fog signal, which had been placed on the track. The only evidence given was, that certain servants of defendants had these fog signals in their possession for lawful purposes, but that no one to the knowledge of several of the defendants' employees who of several of the defendants' employees who were called as witnesses for the plaintif, placed this one on the track, and that it was wholly unnecessary for defendants' purposes; and it appeared not impossible that it might have been obtained from defendants' servants by some third party, or might have been put there by a servant of defendants for a frolic:

—Held, that a nonsuit was properly directed. Jones v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 45 U. C. | by an explosion of a highly dangerous composition, caused as alleged by the nectionic

- Cause of Accident - Concurrent Findings of Courts Appealed from.]-In an action by an employee to recover damages for injuries sustained, there was some evidence of neglect on the part of the employers which, in the opinion of both courts below, might have been the cause of the accident through which the injuries were sustained, and both courts found that the accident was due to the fault of the defendants either in neglecting to cover a dangerous part of a revolving shaft temporarily with boards or to disconnect the shaft or stop the whole machinery while the plaintiff was required to work over or near the shaft:—Held, that, although the evidence on which the courts below based their findings of fact might appear weak, and there might be room for the inference that the primary cause of the injuries might have been the plaintiff's own imprudence, the supreme court of Canada would not, on appeal, reverse such concurrent findings of fact. George Mat-thews Co. v. Bouchard, 28 S. C. R. 580.

In an action against a gailway company for damages in consequence of plaintiff's property being destroyed by fire alleged to be caused by sparks from an engine of the company the jury found, though there was no direct evidence of how the fire occurred, that the company negligently permitted an accumulation of grass or rubbish on their road opposite plaintiff's property which, in case of emission of sparks or cinders, would be dangerous: that the fire originated from or by reason of a spark or cinder from an engine; and that the fire was communicated by the spark or cinder falling on the company's premises, and spreading to plaintiffs' property. A verdict against the company was sustained by the against the company was sustained by the court of appeal:—Held, affirming the judgment of the latter court, 25 A. R. 242, and following Sénésae v. Central Vermont R. W. Co., 26 S. C. R. 641, and George Matthews Co. v. Bouchard, 28 S. C. R. 580, that the jury having found that the accumulation of rubbish along the railway property caused the damage, of which there was some evi-dence, and the finding having been affirmed by the trial court and court of appeal, it should not be disturbed by a second appellate court. Grand Trunk R. W. Co. v. Rainville, court. Grand T 29 S. C. R. 201,

Cause of Accident—Conjecture.]—
The plaintiff's husband was accidentally killed whilst employed as engineer in charge of the defendants' engine and machinery. In an action by the widow for damages the evidence was altogether circumstantial and left the manner in which the accident occurred a matter of conjecture:—Held, that, in order to maintain the action, it was necessary to prove by direct evidence, or by weighty, precise, and consistent presumptions arising from the facts proved, that the accident was actually caused by the positive fault, imprudence, or neglect of the person sought to be charged with responsibility, and such proof being entirely wanting the action must be dismissed. Montreal Rolling Mills Co. v. Corcoran, 26, S. C. R. 505.

Where it appeared in an action for damages by the personal representative of a deceased workman in a factory for making detonating cartridges, whose death was caused by an explosion of a highly dangerous composition, caused as alleged by the negligence of the defendants, that the cause of the accident was either unknown or else that it could fairly be presumed to have been caused by the negligence of the person injured:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Dominion Cartridge Co. v. Cairns, 28 S. C. R. 361.

See Cobban v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 25 G. R. 732, 23 A. R. 115.

— Cause of Accident—Onus.]—In an action to recover damages for death caused by alleged negligence, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove not only that the defendant was guilty of actionable negligence, but also, either directly or by reasonable inference, that such negligence was the cause of the death. Where, therefore, a man employed on the defendants' tug was drowned, and it was shewn that wood was piled upon the tug's deck in such a way as to make it dangerous to pass along the deck, but it was also shewn that there was a safe passageway on a scow lashed to the tug, and there was no evidence whatever as to the cause of the accident, the action was dismissed. Young v. Owen Sound Dredge Co., 27 A. R. 639.

Duty.]—A workman in a cotton mill was killed by being caught in a revolving shaft and dashed against a beam. No one saw the accident and it could not be ascertained how it occurred. The negligence charged was the absence of a fence or guard, required by the Workmen's Compensation Act:—Held, reversing the decisions in 28 O. R. 73 and 25 A. R. 36, that, whether the omission of such statutable duty could or could not form the basis of an action at common law, the plaintiffs, the widow and children of the deceased, could not recover in the absence of evidence that the negligence charged was the cause of the accident, Canadian Coloured Cotton Co. v. Kertin, 29 S. C. R. 478.

Cause of Accident—Use of Dangerquantity of dynamite to accumulate in dangerous proximity to employees of a mining company, in a situation where opportunity for damage might occur either from the nature of the substance or through carelessuess or otherwise, is such negligence on the part of a mining company as will render it liable in damages for the death of an employee from an explosion of the dynamite, though the direct cause of such explosion may be unknown. Asbestos and Asbestic Co. v. Durand, 30 S. C. R. 285.

— Probable Cause of Accident.]—Evidence which merely supports a theory propounded as to the probable cause of injuries received through an unexplained accident is insufficient to support a verdict for damages where there is no direct fault or negligence proved against the defendant and the actual cause of the accident is purely a matter of speculation or conjecture. Canada Paint Co. v. Trainor, 28 S. C. R. 352.

Absence of Negligence—Finding of defendants in charge of another servant of the company, the driver having temporarily gone to the rear of the car, was proceeding westerly at a slow rate along a street in the city of T., on which they had the right of way, the plaintiff, whose carriage was waiting at the kerb stone, without observing the near approach of the car, got into and drove her carriage for a short distance in the same direction as the car, when she suddenly turned north, intending to cross, but in such close proximity to the car that, but for the promut action of the driver in charge in turning his horse off the track, the horse would have collided with the plaintiff's carriage; as it was, notwithstanding that the brake was applied to the car the whiffletree struck the wheel of the carriage, which was upset, and the plaintiff thrown to the ground, and her leg fractured. In an action for damages the jury found in favour of the plaintiff, which verdict a divisional court refused to disturb. The court of appeal, being of opinion that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants, reversed the judgment of the court below, and dismissed the action with costs, Follet v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 15 A. R. 346.

Finding of Jury — Refusal to Set aside)—W. was working on a vessel in port when a boom had to be taken out of the crutch in which it rested, and he pointed out to the master that this could not be done until the rigging supporting it, which had been removed, was replaced, which the master undertook to do. When the boom was taken out it fell on the deck and W. was injured. In an action against the owners for damages the jury found that the fall of the boom was owing to the rigging not being secured, but that this was not occasioned by the negligence of the owners or their servants:—Held, affirming the judgment in 30 N. S. Reps. 548, that the first part of the finding did not necessarily mean that the rigging had never been secured, or that if secured originally it had become insecure by negligence of defendants, and the jury having negatived negligence their finding should not be ignored. Williams v. Bartling, 29 S. C. R. 548.

Admissibility of Evidence, !—Action against the defendants for negligence in the construction and management of their steambout, by which sparks escaped from the funnel at a wharf, and the plaintiffs' lumber and mills there were burned. The alleged negligence consisted in leaving the screens of the steamer open; and on the part of the plaintiffs evidence was received, though objected to, that on other occasions, at different times and blaces, the screens were open and cinders had escaped. The engineer and firemen on the boat, being afterwards called for the defendants, swore that the screens were closed, and had never on any occasion been left open. The Judge ruled, at the close of the case, that the evidence objected to was admissible, particularly as touching the credit of defendants' witnesses:—Held, that such evidence was inadmissible either to support the plaintiffs case when it was tendered and received, or for the purpose for which it was afterwards admitted; and the jury having found for the plaintiffs, a new trial was granted without costs. Educards v. Ottava River Navigation Co., 39 U. C. R. 264.

Letter—Misdirection.]—After one trial, on which the jury had failed to agree, defendants' solicitor wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor to make him a proposition, "of course without prejudice, further than I will state in this letter." The defendants, he said, believed that the plaintiff was not injured at all; but if he would put himself under the charge of three medical men named, at Montreal, for six months, of which they would pay all expenses, and if these gentlemen, or any two of them, would say he was hurt, defendants would waive every other defence, although they thought they had good grounds for further defence, and would settle with him on such terms as might be agreed upon, or as the three medical men would name. This offer, he added, was made by defendants intending to use it, if refused, to shew their sincerity and the plaintiff's rejuctance to submit to a fair test. This was declined, but a few days later, and after a jury had been sworn in the case, an agreement was entered into of substantially the same character. By it the plaintiff, at defendants' expense, was to be placed for six months at Toronto under four medical men; and the defendants agreed that if they, or a majority of them, should agree that the plaintiff was injured at the time, by the by means and in the manner alleged by him, they would pay damages to be estimated as providwould pay damages to be estimated as provid-ed for. The medical men, however, failed to agree, and the case was again brought to trial. The defence was that the injury was either simulated or caused by the plaintiff's own negligence. The letter and agreement were admitted in evidence for the plaintiff, and the jury were told that if in doubt as to the plaintiff having contributed to his own injury, there wishes consider the lotters. plaintin naving contributes to its analysis, they might consider the letter as evidence against defendants on that point. They found for the plaintiff, saying that they did not think him guilty of any neglect:—Held, that the letter and agreement were admissible, to shew, on the plaintiff's part, that he was claiming in good faith as he had proved by submitting to the test proposed; and that the defendants might have used them to shew under what circumstances and at whose expense the plaintiff had been under treatment. Held, also, that it was no objection to their admission that they were matters arising since the action. Held, also, that though the letter was expressed in the beginning to be without prejudice, yet, as the defendants afterwards declared it to be their intention to use it as evidence to shew the plaintiff's want of good faith, the plaintiff was entitled to shew it and the subsequent agreement to recel any such imputation. Held, however, that the direction as to the effect of the letter was wrong, and was equivalent to admitting it as evidence of defendants' negligence; and that the verdict must therefore be set aside. Clark v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 29 U. C. R. 136.

Conflict of Evidence—Nonsuit.]—The deceased was a nassenger by defendants' railway for W. station, and was, as the conductor said, "netty drunk" when he got on the train. He went out of the car door at that station, and next morning was found about a hundred vards bevond it, about four feet from the rail, with his legs cut through at the knee-joints and his left foot crushed, of which injuries he died that afternoon. There was contradictory evidence as to whether the train stopped long enough at the station, for which there were only two passengers, to enable nersons to alight; but the other passenger said he got off leisurely, and the person to whom deceased had been talking on the car said he thought deceased had left the train, and that he told the conductor so after the train started. The conductor and baggage-master also got off there to see the station-master and returned to the cars. There was no further proof of the manner in which deceased met with the accident:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on defendants' part to go to the jury, and a nonsuit was ordered. Giles v. Great Western R. W. Co., 36 U. C. R. 360.

Dangerous Material — Infant.]—Plaintiff, a boy of twelve years of age, passing along the highway entered upon defendants' property, which adjoined it, and taking a for signal out of a box on a hand car standing there, struck the fog signal with a stone, when it exploded injuring him:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. McShane v. Toronto, Hamilton, and Buffalo R. W. Co., 31 O. R. 185.

Infant - Evidence-Trespass.]-Work on the construction of a railway was going on near the unused part of a public cemetery in connection with which were used detonating caps containing fulminate. M., a boy of fifteen years of age, in passing through the cemetery with some companions, found some of these caps lying about on the bank above the works, in front of a tool box used by one of the gangs of workmen, and put them in his pocket. Later on the same day he was scratching the fulminate end of one of them with a stick, when it exploded and in-jured his hand. On the trial of an action against the contractors for damages, there was no direct evidence as to how the caps came to be where they were found, but it was proved that when a blast was about to take place the workmen would hurriedly place any explosives they might have in their possession under their tool box, and then run away. It also was proved that caps of the same kind were kept in the tool box near which those in question were found by M., and were taken out and put back by the workmen as occasion might require:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence of circumstances leading to a different conclusion, the act of placing the caps where they were found could fairly be attributed to the workmen, who alone were shewn to have had the right to handle them; that it was incumbent on defendants to exercise a high degree of caution to prevent them falling into the hands of strangers; that the act of M. in exploding the cap as he did, did not necessarily import want of due caution, and if his negligence contributed to the accident the jury should have so found; and that whether or not M. was a trespasser was also a question for the jury, who did not pass upon it, Makins v. Piggott, 29 S. C. R. 188.

— Precaution.]—Persons dealing with dangerous material are obliged to take the utmost care to prevent injuries being caused through their use, by adopting all known devices to that end; and where there is evidence that there was a precaution which might have been taken by a company making use of electrical currents to prevent live wires causing accidents, and that this precaution was not adopted, the company were held responsible for damages. Citicans Light and Power Co. v. Leptire, 29 S. C. R. 1.

Defect in Engine—Want of Spark Arrester.]—On the trial of an action for damages for the destruction of a barn and its contents by fire, alleged to have been caused by negligence of the defendants in working a steam-engine used in running a hay press in front of the barn, the main issue was as to the sufficiency of a spark arrester on the engine, and the Judge directed the jury that "if there was no spark arrester in the engine, that in itself would be negligence for which the defendants would be liable;"—Held, that the Judge misdirected the jury in telling them that the want of a spark arrester was, in point of law, negligence, and such direction may have influenced them in giving their verdict; therefore an order for a new trial after a verdict for the planning should not be interfered with. Peers v. Elliott, 21 S. C. R. 19.

Evidence Equally Balanced — Nonsuit, 1—In an action for negligence, where the evidence is as consistent with the absence as with the existence of negligence, the case should not be left to the jury. Jackson v. Hyde, 28 U. C. R. 294. See, also, Deverdil, V. Grand Trank R. W. Co., 28 U. C. R. 517; Storey v. Vench, 22 C. P. 141; Blackmore v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 38 U. C. R. 172.

Obstruction in Highway—Nuisance.]
—A township council appointed by resolution two of the defendants, who were members of the council, a committee to rebuild a culvert under a highway within the municipality. These two defendants employed another defendant so overseer of the work and two other defendants to draw drain tiles, which were required for the work, to the place in question. The work was done by the day, and while it was being done the tiles in question, which were of a large size and of a light gray colour, were piled on the highway near the culvert. The plaintiffs' horse shied when passing the tiles and upset the vehicle, and the plaintiffs were injured:—Held, per Burton, J.A., that he act in which the defendants were engaged being in itself lawful they could be regarded only as servants of the council, and that the maximum respondent superior applied. Held, per Macleman, J.A., that leaving the tiles at the side of the highway was not negligence and did not constitute a nuisance, and that no action lay. In the result the judgment below was reversed. McDonald v. Dickenson, 24 A. R. 31.

Time — Nuisance.] — Allowing a broken down waggon to remain on the highway, clear of the track of a street railway-for nearly two hours, is not in itself sufficient evidence of negligence to support an action by a person who strikes against the waggon while passing in a street car. Such a broken down waggon does not become a nuisance or obstruction to the highway, until, having regard to the difficulty of removing it, it has been allowed to remain thereon for an unreasonable time. Howden v. Lake Simcoe Ice Co., 21 A. R. 414.

Opinion Evidence—Question for Jury.]—The defendant, having charge of the plaintiff's colt, took it to a blacksmith's shop to be shod for the first time, and having tied it there went out. The colt, pulling back, threw itself, and received injuries of which it died. The plaintiff sued defendant for negligence in so tying the colt instead of having it held while being shod; and several witnesses were of opinion that what defendant had done wa improper, while others thought he had adopt ed the proper plan:—Held, not a case in which there should be a nonsuit, on the ground that the evidence was consistent either should be a nonsuit, on the with the existence or non-existence of negligence; but that the question was for the jury. Cotton v. Wood, S.C. B. N. S. 568, and Jack-son v. Hyde, 2S. U. C. R. 294, distinguished, Henderson v. Barnes, 32 U. C. R. 176.

Positive Proof-Crown-Public Work.] -In an action by the Crown for damages arising out of an accident alleged to be due to the negligence of a contractor in the performance of his contract for the construction of a public work, before a contractor can be held liable the evidence must shew beyond reasonable doubt that the accident was the result of his negligence. The Queen v. Poupore, 6 Ex. C. R. 4.

A suppliant seeking relief under clause (c) of s. 16 of the Exchequer Court Act must establish that the injury complained of resulted from something negligently done or negligently omitted to be done on a public work by an officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment. Alliance Assurance Co. v. The Queen, 6 Ex. C. R. 76.

Noise—Highway.]—The mere fact that a horse, while being driven along the highway, has been frightened by the whistle of a steam engine, used by the defen-dants for the purpose of their lawfully operated waterworks, is not sufficient to make them responsible for damages resulting from the horse having run away. Some positive evidence of negligence in the use of the whistle must be given, or at least some eviwhiste must be given, or at least some evidence that its use might be expected to cause such an accident, so as to cause it to be a nuisance to the highway. Roe v. Village of Lucknow, 21 A. R. 1.

- Particular Act-Pleading.]-In an action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence, the plaintiff must allege and make affirmative proof of facts sufficient to shew the breach of a duty owed him by, and inconsistent with due diligence on the part of the defendant, and that the injuries were thereby occasioned; and where in such an action the jury have failed to find the defendants guilty of the particular act of negligence charged in the declaration as constituting the cause of the injuries, a verdict for the plaintiff cannot be sustained, and a new trial should be granted. Cowans v. Marshall, 28 S. C. R. 161.

Prima Facie Proof—Fall of Mirror-Injury to Child — Reasonable Care.] woman went with her child, two and a-half years old, to the defendants' shop to buy years old, to the defendants' shop to buy clothing for both. While there a mirror fixed to the wall, and in front of which the child was, fell and injured him.—Held, by the Queen's bench division, that it was a question for the jury whether the mirror fell without any active interference on the child's part; if so, that in itself was evidence of negligence; but if not, the question for the jury would be whether the defendants were placed that it could be overturned by a child; and if that question were answered in the affirmative, the child, having come upon the defendants' premises by their invitation and for their benefit would not be debarred from recovering by reason of his having directly brought the injury upon himselt.

Vol. III. p-151-2 Hughes v. Macfie, 2 H. & C. 744, Mangan v. Atterton, 4 H. & C. 388, and Bailey v. Neal, 5 Times L. R. 20, commented on and distinguished. Semble, that the doctrine of contributory negligence is not applicable to a child of tender years. Gardner v. Grace, 1 F. & F. 359, approved of. Semble, also, that if the mother was not taking reasonably proif the mother was not taking reasonably pro-per care of the child at the time of the ac-cident, her negligence in this respect would not prevent the recovery by the child. Held, by the court of appeal, that the fact that a child of tender years, while in a shop with its mother, by the invitation and for the benefit of the proprietors, is injured by an benefit of the proprietors, is injured by an unfastened mirror, standing against the wall, falling upon it, the cause of the fall being unknown, is, in itself, sufficient evidence of negligence to justify the case being submitted to a jury. Sangster v. T. Eaton Co., 25 O. R. 78, 21 A. R. 624. Affirmed by the supreme court of Canada, 24 S. C. R. 708.

Hire of Tug-Injury to-Presumption of Fault.]—See Collins Bay Rafting and Forwarding Co. v. Kaine, 29 S. C. R. 247.

Res Ipsa Loquitur.]-In an action against the owners of a steamboat for damage done to the plaintiffs' bridge, it appeared that the steamer was found drifting against the bridge one morning after a storm, and that the injury complained of was thus causthat the injury companied of was thus caus-ed:—Held, sufficient primā facie proof of negligence, and that it lay upon defendants to account for the accident. Cataraqui Bridge Co. v. Holcomb, 21 U. C. R. 273. Sec, also, Wilmot v. Jarvis, 12 U. C. R.

The plaintiff, while walking on a sidewalk, was knocked down and injured by a runaxay horse of the defendant. At the time of the accident the horse was harnessed to a sleigh, but no person or driver was in the sleigh, and all that was proved was that the horse was seen running away; that the sleigh horse was seen running away; that the sleigh upset, the occupants were thrown out, and that the horse ran on the sidewalk and the accident occurred:—Held, that this was sufficient to make out a prima facie case of negligence, and that the onus of disproving that case and explaining the cause of the runaway lay upon the defendant. Manzoni v. Douglas, 6 Q. B. D. 145, discussed. Crawford v. Upper, 16 A. R. 440.

Specific Findings of Jury—Setting aside—New Trial. |—Where the jury find negligence and then define the negligence to congugence and then define the negligence to consist in doing certain acts, the court, if there is some evidence of negligence in other respects, may in their discretion order a new trial, although there is no evidence to support the specific findings. Judgment in 26 O. it, 732 although the Ch. W. Con., 23 A. R. 115.

XII. PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY.

Accident — Bodily Injury — Subsequent Neglect.]—The plaintiff's wife died forty-four days after falling into the water from the defendants' wharf. She had not had regular and continual medical treatment after the accident, and the physicians who gave evidence at the trial differed as to whether or not the immersion was the cause of her death. The jury, when asked whether she would have recovered if she had had regular and continual attendance, answered "very doubtful." A verdict was found for the plaintiff for $1.500 damages, which the supreme court of Nova Scotia set aside, and ordered a new trial:—Held, that the evidence and finding of the jury having left it in doubt that the accident was the proximate cause of the death, the jury not having been properly instructed as to the liability of the company under the circumstances, and the damages being excessive, the order for a new trial should be affirmed. York v. Canada Atlantic S. S. Co., 22 S. C. R. 107.

Danger Voluntarily Incurred.—C. having driven his horses into a lumber yard adjoining a street on which blasting operations were being carried on, left them in charge of the owner of another team while he spoke to the proprietor of the yard. Mortly afterwards a blast went off, and stones thrown by the explosion fell on the rost of a shed in which C. was standing and frightened the horses, which began to run. C. at once ran out in front of them and endeavoured to stop them, but could not, and in the stone of the way he was injured. He brought an action against the municipality conducting the blasting operations to recover damages for such injury:—Held, by the court of appeal, that where a man, acting as a reasonable man would ordinarily do under the circumstances, voluntarily places himself in a position of danger in the hope of saving his property from probable injury to the fife or property of others, and sustains hur, the person whose negligent act has brought about the dangerous situation is responsible indiamages. Anderson v. Northern R. W. Co., 25 C. P. 301, distinguished and questioned, and the state of mind which instinctively impelled he did no more than any reasonable man would ordinate the manner in which the state of mind which instinctively impelled he did no more than any reasonable man would have done under the circumstances, Connell v. Toren of Prescott, 20 A. R. 40,

Drainage Award — Non-performance—
Injury to Land—Township Engineer.]— After the time fixed by an award under the Ditches and Watercourses Act, 1883 (46 Vict. c. 27), for the completion of certain drainage work by neighbouring landowners, the plaintiff, who was one of the parties interested in the award, in writing required the defendant, as township engineer, to inspect the work, with the object of having it completed according to the award, but, as the plaintiff alleged, the defendant neglected to inspect the work or cause it to be completed according to the award, and thereby the provisions of the award were not carried out, and the plaintiff in consequence suffered damage by reason of water remaining on his land:—Held, that the provision of s. 13 of the above Act as to the inspection by the engineer is imperative, and an action will lie for breach of his duty; but, even if the evidence had shewn such a breach, the damages claimed were not the proximate, necessary, or natural result thereof. The other provisions of s. 13 are merely permissive, and no action will lie for their non-performance; nor, were it otherwise, could it be held that the damages claimed were the proximate result of such non-performance. Those who, by the terms of the award, ought to have done the work, were the persons proximately responsible for the damages. O'Byrne v. Campbell, 15 O. 18, 325.

Obstructing Highway — Proximate Cause — Contributory Negligence—Dedication of Highway.]—The defendants premises abutted on a street in a city. The defendants placed a beam at the height of nine and ahalf feet from the ground along the north limit of the street, which was twenty-nine feet in width, and hung a gate therefrom, and put up another gate across said street about twenty feet further south, the two gates not being exactly opposite to each other, nor of the same width. A lane ran north from the There was an accumulation of rubbish with ice and snow under the beam, which raised up the front wheels, and the plaintiff, while driving along the street, was injured by being crushed between the beam and the load upon which he was seated. He said he knew of the beam, having driven there often, but that his attention was called from it by having to steer his way carefully between the two gates. This street had not been adopted two gates. This street and not been adopted as a highway by by-law:—Held, that, although by 46 Vict. c. 18, s. 545 (O.), the council is prohibited from laying out a road or street of less than sixty-six feet in width, they may consent to the owner of lands laythey may consent to the owner of lands laying one out less in width, and that, prior to the Act of 1873, the owner was not prohibited from laying out a road of any particular width; and that, as the street had been laid out and used as a public street for many years, having several large business establishments fronting upon it, or with a rear access to it, and public conveyances had used it for business purposes in all respects as a highway, it might in an action of this kind, between a person using it in the way of business, as it had so long been used, and one who was charged with obstructing it, be found to be a public highway. Held, also, that the beam was the proximate cause of the injury, not the ice and snow only, and that defendants were liable though the person who derenants were lattle though the person who allowed the rubbish to thus accumulate might be liable also. Held, also, that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Bliss v. Bocckh, S O. R. 451.

Sale of Shares by Pledgee—Neglect to Enforce Contract.]—The defendant, who was mortgagee of certain shares in a company, sold them by auction. The plaintiff, who was entitled to the shares subject to the defendentitled to the shares subject to the defend-ant's claim, knew of and ratified the sale. The purchaser refused upon various grounds to carry out the sale, and no attempt was made by the defendant to compel completion of the contract. Subsequently the shares fell very much in value:—Held, that there was no duty cast upon the defendant to take prono duty cast upon the defendant to take pro-ceedings against the purchaser to compel com-pletion, and that he was not liable to account for the shares at the price that would have been realized had the sale been completed. The plaintiff could have paid the defendant's claim and then have herself taken proceedings against the purchaser, and not having done so, was not entitled to complain. Daniels v. Noxon, 17 A. I. IN CRIMINAL MATTERS.

Criminal Code, 1892.]—New trial directed, upon an appeal under s. 744 of the criminal code. Regina v. Brennan, 27 O. R. 659.

Indictments for Misdemeanours— Convictions.]—An indictment cannot be removed from the assize after judgment pronounced, for the purpose of applying for a new trial. Regina v. Smith, 10 U. C. R. 99; Regina v. Crabbe, 11 U. C. R. 447.

After an acquittal for nuisance in obstructing a highway, the court refused a certiorari to remove the indictment with a view of applying for a new trial, or to stay the entry of judgment, so that a new indictment might be preferred and tried without prejudice. Regina v. Whittier, 12 U. C. R. 214.

After acquittal for nuisance a motion was made for a certiorari to remove the indictment, with a view to a new trial, no ground being shewn by affidivit; and the new trial was moved for on the same day, being the fourth day of term:—Held, that the certiorari, after the acquittal, could not issue as of course; but that, if it could, it would have been unnecessary to move for a new trial within the first four days of term. Regina v. Gioreski, 14 U. C. R. 591.

Defendant was convicted of an assault at the quarter sessions and fined, but during the same sessions he obtained a new trial on his own affidavit, and was acquitted at the following sessions:—Held, that the quarter sessions had authority to grant such new trial, and that this court could not interfere. Regina v. Fitzperald, 20 U. C. R. 546.

Defendant was convicted at the recorder's court, on contradictory evidence, for obstructing a highway, the result of the verdict being to shew that he and several others, whose houses and greenhouses had been standing for sixty years, were encroaching upon the street. A new trial having been refused, on appeal only the evidence was returned to the court of Queen's bench, with a copy of the rule nisi. The court, under these circumstances, considering the importance of the case, and that the grounds of the judgment below were not given to them, directed a new trial, contrary to the usual rule, which was affirmed, that such appeals will not be entertained upon the question of evidence. Regina v. McLean, 22 U. C. R. 443.

Defendant in a criminal case obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, but his term of imprisonment expired before judgment could be given after the argument, and the decision therefore became immaterial. Regina v. Patterson, 27 U. C. R. 142.

Where a conviction has been affirmed by a jury on an appeal to the quarter sessions, that court has no authority to grant a new trial. Re Yearke and Bingleman, 28 U. C. R. 551.

In no case of misdemeanour, after verdict of acquittal, will a new trial be granted, on the ground that the verdict is against evidence or the weight of evidence. In cases of non-feasance, such as non-repair of a highway, a new trial may be ordered on the ground of misdirection, improper reception or rejection of evidence; but in cases of misfeasance, such as obstruction of a highway, it is doubtful if a new trial should be granted in any case. Regina v. Port Perry and Port Whitby R. W. Co., 38 U. C. R. 431.

II. DAMAGES.

- 1. Excessive Damages.
- (a) Actions of Contract.

Accounts.] — Where plaintiff and defendant have had open accounts for a long period, and have taken no pains to come to an understanding in regard to the terms of their dealing, or to preserve the means of proving the necessary facts, and the jury find more or less upon conjecture what the court may think excessive damages, for the plaintiff—the court will very rarely on that ground grant a new trial. Corner v. McKinnon, 4 U. C. R. 350.

Where the amount is mere matter of computation and the verdict excessive, the court will direct a verdict for the plaintiff for the correct amount, or a new trial on payment of costs. Stephenson v. Ranney, 2 C. P. 196.

Bond to Convey Land.]—Action on a bond to convey land. The damages appearing to be excessive, and defendant being willing and able to make a deed to the plaintiff, who had so far not suffered from the want of it, and the delay not having been wholly the fault of defendant, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Sikes v. Wyld, 1 B. & S. 587, commented upon. Scott v. Reikie, 15 C. P. 290.

Breach of Promise of Marriage.]—
The jury gave $4,500, and the court refused to interfere. Woodman v. Blair, 30 C. P. 452.

Contract for Deed of Land.]—A new trial granted for excessive damages in an action for the non-execution and delivery of a deed, which was delivered four days after the trial, the verdict being founded on the value of the estate. Muirhead v. McDougall, 5 O. S. 642.

Covenant for Title.] — Semble, that where heavy damages are given in an action of covenant for good title, though the plaintiff knew the state of defendant's title, the court will grant a new trial. Emery v. Miller, Tay. 336.

In an action on defendants' covenant that he owned certain timber limits, and for a fraudulent representation of ownership, &c., which latter charge was not proved, the jury found a general verdict for $1,000, which upon the evidence was excessive; and on this ground a new trial was granted. Link v. Hunter, 27 U. C. R. 187.

Covenant to Repair.]—In an action by a lessor against the assignee of the lessee for not repairing, the plaintiff proved that the damages to the reversion by reason of defendants neglect to repair were $651, this estimate covering all injury up to the time of the trial. The jury gave $400. A new trial was refused. Perry v. Bank of Upper Canada, 16 C. P. 404.

Goods Furnished.]—The defendant, being employed by the plaintiffs as their locomotive and car superintendent, made use of their materials and men in doing work for a sewing machine manufactory in which he was a partner, and untruly entered such time and materials as employed in the plaintiffs service. The plaintiffs sued him on the common counts, claiming in their particulars for goods furnished, but not for work and labour. The articles thus furnished were charged by the plaintiffs at $500, which the jury gave, and allowed a doubtful credit of $180, though such goods could have been obtained at an establishment for the purpose for about $180; but much time had been expended in experiments and in making tools for the work, nor required in the plaintiffs' business:—Held, that the damages were not excessive. Northern R. W. Co. of Canada v. Lister, 27 U. C. R. 57.

Hiring — Wrongful Dismissal.] — See Guilford v. Anglo-French Steamship Co., 9 S. C. R. 303.

Insurance Policy.]—The damages, in an action on a fire policy, being, under the evidence stated in this case, excessive to the extent of $60, a new trial was ordered unless the plaintif would reduce his verdict by that sum. Chaplin v. Provincial Ins. Co., 23 G. P. 27S.

Warranty.]—Defendant sold plaintiff a stallion, warranting him to be a good coverer and fonl-getter. The horse turned out worthless as a fonl-getter, and the jury gave £150 damages. The court, although considering the damages too high, refused a new trial. Natrass v. Nightingale, 7 C. P. 296.

Warranty on Sale of Piano—Breach.]
—See McMullen v. Williams, 5 A. R. 518.

Work and Labour.]—Action for work and labour. New trial granted on payment of costs on the ground of excessive damages. Stock v. Great Western R. W. Co., 7 C. P. 526.

In an action for work and labour, the second trial being before a special jury struck by defendants, and the verdict being larger than before, the court declined to interfere for excessive damages. Stock v. Great Western R. W. Co., 9 C. P. 134.

See Shaver v. Great Western R. W. Co., 6 C. P. 321.

(b) Actions of Tort.

Diverting Stream. —Action for injury to plaintiff by diverting the course of a stream. The trial Judge thought the damages excessive, and the court discharged the rule on the plaintiff consenting to reduce the verdict to $300. MeLean v. Crosson, 33 U. C. R. 448.

Ejecting Passenger.]—Verdict for £50 against a railway company for putting the plaintiff off a train, though the inconvenience occasioned to him was trifling, and the conductor acted bonā fide, under an impression that the plaintiff had not paid his fare, and without harshness or violence. New trial granted for excessive damages. Hunteman v. Great Western R. W. Co., 20 U. C. R. 24.

Although $300 damages to a passenger who was turned off a train was considered excessive—it being the second verdict, the court would not interfere. Curtis v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 12 C. P. 89.

False Imprisonment.]—New trial granted for excessive damages in an action for false imprisonment. Armour v. Boswell, 6 O. S. 153.

Action for false imprisonment of a child on an unfounded charge of stealing fruit from plaintiff's garden. Verdict £62 10s. New trial refused. McDonald v. Cameron, 4. U. C. R. 1. A verdict of £1,000, in an action for false imprisonment, though in the opinion of the court excessive, was not set aside on that ground. Robertson v. Meyers, 7 U. C. R. 423.

In trespass against a magistrate evidence was given that the plaintiff had been guilty of the offence charged, but such evidence was offered and received only in mitigation of damages; 16 Vict. c. 180, s. 12, which in such a case limits the damages to 2d, and deprives the plaintiff of costs, was overlooked, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict for full damages; —Held, that there must be a new trial, without costs. Bross v. Huber, 15 U. C. R. 625.

In an action against two justices for imprisonment, charged in one count as a trespass, and in another as done maliciously, the jury found 8900 against one defendant, and 8400 against one defendant having used insuling expressions to the plaintiff during the examination:—Held, no misdirection to tell the jury that they were at liberty to give exemplary or vindictive damages; and that the verdict was not excessive. Cliesold v. Machell, 25 U. C. R. 80; S. C., in appeal, 26 U. C. R. 420.

Action for false imprisonment. The plaintiff, when arrested, was bailed to appear next morning, and the case was then dropped. The jury having given $500, the court refused to interfere, Campbell v. McDonell, 27 U. C. R. 343.

Flooding Land.] — Action for penning back water. Verdict for $400. New trial refused, though only about four acres were rendered worthless, and the damage extended over only a year, defendants' conduct having been unreasonable and the Judge not being dissatisfied with the verdict. Breathour v. Bolster, 23 U. C. R. 217.

Where in an action for overflowing land, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, though not to the extent of the verdict, the court named a sum ($100), on payment and acceptance of which the rule for a new trial should be discharged without costs. McGillivray v. Great Western R. W. Co., 25 U. C. R. 69.

Malicious Procedure.]—A writ of replevin having been issued by defendant against plaintiff, under which certain books of account were seized and given to defendant, the plaintiff some time afterwards brought an action for damages, contending that defendant had maliciously sued out the writ to injure him, claiming large damages. The jury found for the plaintiff 850:—Semble, that the verdict, under the circumstances, would have been set aside for excessive damages, if not otherwise. Crauford v. McLaren, 9 C. P. 215.

Where the damages are large, and to a great extent sentimental, this may well be considered in deciding whether there has been a substantial wrong caused by a clear misdirection. Winfield v. Kean, 1 O. R. 193.

Negligence.] — Where in an action for damages against a railway company for negligence, one of the parties to whom damages were awarded, who was an infant, died after verdict and before judgment, and the verdict was now moved against, on the ground of excessive damages:—Held, that the court to prevent injustice had power to grant a new trial, which was ordered unless the damages given to the deceased child were reduced to a sum commensurate with the expense caused to the mother's estate by its illness and maintenance. Sibbald v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., Tremayne v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 19 O. R. 164.

Evidence.] — See York v. Canada Atlantic S. S. Co., 22 S. C. R. 167; Sornberger v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 24 A. 263.

Trespass. |—In an action of trespass q. c. f., the court will interfere when the damages are manifestly excessive. The verdict here was for £75. The court was equally divided as to granting a new trial. Jeffers v. Markland, 5 O. S. 677.

In trespass, for entry under colour of distress, the jury gave £75 damages, and, although they seemed excessive, a new trial was refused. Chase v. Scripture, 14 U. C. R. 598.

In an action against a division court bailiff and two execution creditors for seizing goods, the court refused to interfere, on the ground of excessive damages, the excess being only $50. Lough v, Coleman, 29 U. C. R. 397.

In trespass for taking timber, the court refused to disturb the verdict on the ground that the damages were beyond the value of the logs taken. Flint v. Bird, 11 U. C. R. 444.

Where the trespass to plaintiff's land had been wilful and after full notice, the court refused to grant a third trial, though they considered the verdict for $563 much too high. Nicholson v, Page, 27 U. C. R. 505.

The court will not ordinarily interfere with the verdict unless the damages are manifestly extravagant, or unless some wrong element has been admitted in the computation of them, or there is reason to attribute partiality or other improper motive to the jury; and in case of such interference the court will impose equitable conditions on a defendant seeking relief. A new trial was granted when the verdict was for £400, in trespass for taking goods of much less value. Barday v. Adair, 7 C. P. 157. See also McDonald v. Cameron, 4 U. C. R. I.

In joint trespasses each defendant is liable for the damage occasioned to the plaintiff by the joint act, and the court will not interfere because as regards one the verdict may be excessive. Grantham v. Severs, 25 U. C. R. 469.

Where, in trespass against a sheriff for taking goods, the jury gave the full value of all seized, although the plaintiff had expressly claimed only a portion, declaring that the rest were not his, a new trial was granted. Roblin v. Moodie, 15 U. C. R. 185.

Where the damage consisted in cutting down some ten or twelve ornamental and shade trees growing on the highway opposite to the plaintiff's land, for which he was awarded $150:—Held, not excessive. Douglas v. Fox. 31 C. P. 140.

In an action of trespass to a certain lot of land and expulsion of the plaintiff therefrom, the plaintiff claimed $500, the jury assessed the damages at $1,500, and the trial Judge amended the statement of claim accordingly:

—Held, that the damages were excessive, and a new trial was granted. Robinson v. Hall,
1 O. R. 266.

Trover.]—M. having sold produce, and received notes in payment, refused to give up the property. In trover, the jury gave £25 damages over the actual value of the property, which they at the same time estimated too high:—Held, that defendant was not entitled to a new trial for the excess of value allowed, but it was granted, on the ground of the £25 damages, on payment of costs. Giordand v. Meade, 6 C. P. 353.

In trover, damages being laid in the declaration at 88,000, and the jury having found a verdict for $10,548:—Held, that this did not necessarily entitle defendant to a new trial for excessive damages, and that the planniff must get rid of the difficulty occasioned by the verdict exceeding the amount laid in the declaration. Wide v. Crow. 10 C. P. 406.

Traver for plaintiffs' grain destroyed by fire in defendants' elevator:—Held, under the circumstances stated in the report, that this was a case in which no more than the actual damages sustained should have been assessed; and the jury having awarded excessive damages, the court granted a new trial on payment of costs, unless the plaintiff would reduce the verdict to a sum named. Moffatt v. Grand Trank R. W. Co., 15 C. P. 392.

In trover and trespass for goods taken under an illegal distress, the value of the goods seized was proved to be about $450, but the jury gave a verdict for $700:—Held, that, upon the facts stated in the report of the case, the damages were not excessive. Watcott v. Stolicker, 16 C. P. 555.

See, also, post IX.

2. Inadequate or Trifling Damages.

The court refused to set aside an assessment of damages, upon the ground that the verdict was too low from a misapprehension of the jury. Perkins v. Scott, Tay. 405.

Damages assessed at a less sum than the evidence appeared to warrant. New assessment ordered, Leonard v. Pawling, 3 O. S. 17.

New trial refused for smallness of damages, on an affidavit that a material witness was absent from the Province at the time of trial. Hodgkinson v. Brown, 3 U. C. R. 461.

The court will not grant a new trial at the instance of the plaintiff on account of the smallness of the damages, except in very clear cases and under very peculiar circumstances. In this case, an action on a bond to convey land, it was refused. McDonald v. McDonald, 4 U. C. R. 133.

In an action on the case, the damages are generally in the discretion of the jury, and the bare fact of the verdict appearing small, or not easily to be reconciled with any particular hypothesis of calculation, is not ground for a new trial. Hyde v. Gooderham, 6 C. P. 539.

Where a disputed item, forming one distinct head of the plaintiff's demand, has been improperly disaflowed by the jury, the principle upon which the court refuses a new trial to the plaintiff for smallness of damages does not apply. Maddock v. Glass, 5 U. C. R. 229.

18 Eliz. c. 5 prohibits the compromise of a qui tam action without leave of the court. Where therefore a plaintiff agreed to discontinue such an action upon being paid his costs, and in a subsequent action for those costs recovered much less than he thought the jury should have given him, and applied to the court for a new trial, the court, from the nature of the transaction, refused any relief. Blecker v. Meyers, 6 U. C. R. 134.

Where the damages given were complained of as being too small, a new trial was granted with costs to abide the event, viz., the event of the plaintills recovering more than amount of the first verdict. Jones v. Me-Doccell, 12 U. R. 214; Craig v. Corcoras, 24 U. C. R. 406.

T. contracted to do certain work for plaintiffs at a price below its value, and did what at the contract price would come to £2,690, allowing certain deductions which the plaintiffs claimed to make for imperfect work. He then abandoned it and left the Province, having received from the plaintiffs £2,295. The plaintiffs contracted with others to finish the work at about £980 more than they would have had to pay T., and brought an action against T. and his sureties for breach of the agreement, claiming to recover this £980. The jury gave only £50, and the court refused a new trial. Union Road Co. v. Talbot, 15 U. C. R. 106.

Slander of the plaintiff as a physician with respect to his treatment of one H., deceased; verdict for 1s.:—Held, that the improper reception of evidence would be no ground for a new trial, for the plaintiff had, notwithstanding, obtained a verdict, and he did not move for smallness of damages. Rogers v. Munns, 25 U. C. R. 153.

Held, that, although a new trial would not have been granted for smallness of damages on the first two counts, yet, as there must be a new trial on the last two counts, and as no additional expense would be incurred thereby, justice would be done by granting a new trial on the whole record, without costs. Anderson v. Mattheus, 30 C. P. 166.

Although it is unusual to interfere with a verdict of a jury in an action of tort on the ground of inadequacy of the damages found, still such verdicts are subject to the supervision of the court, and if the amount awarded be so small that it is evident the jury must have overlooked some material element of damage in the plaintiffs case, a new trial will be granted. A practising physician, who had been badly if not permanently injured through the negligence of the defendants, and whose professional business had suffered to a considerable extent, was awarded $700 by the jury:—Held, that there must be a new trial on the ground of inadequacy of the damages, Church v, City of Ottanca, 25 O. R. 208. Affirmed, 22 A. R. 348.

See post IX.

3. Nominal or Trifling Damages.

Where a verdict would be conclusive as to the parties' rights, smallness of damages is no objection to setting it aside. Soper v. Marsh, 5 O. S. 68.

New trial refused to enable plaintiff to add to his verdict a trifling sum allowed as a setoff. Playter v. Taylor, 1 U. C. R. 159.

In an action of tort, when defendant has a verdict, and the damages suffered are but small, the court will only grant a new trial, where, as in this case, the ordinary rights of property seem to have been lost sight of. Sherwood v, Gibson, 5 U. C. R. 205.

In trespass q. c. f. the court refused to disturb a verdict for defendant, though the plaintiff was strictly entitled to nominal damages. Curtis v. Jarvis, 10 U. C. R. 466.

Where, on the evidence, nominal damages only would have been sufficient, the court refused to interfere with a verdict for defendants. Eaton v. Gore Bank, 27 U. C. R. 490.

The plaintiff declared that he was entitled to the water of a certain stream for working his mill, and complained that defendant, owning a mill higher up, had unlawfully deposited sawdust, bark, &c. in the stream, which was carried down, and choked up the plaintiff's mill pond and races, &c. Defendant, by his second plea, denied the plaintiff's right to the water, which the plaintiff sufficiently proved, but, there being no appreciable damage, the jury found a general verdict for defendant:—Held, that there must be a new trial, for the right being established, the sawdust, &c. was an injury to it, for which the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Mitchell v. Barry, 26 U. C. R. 416.

To an action on an agreement for the sale of land, defendants needed, on countable grounds, that the plaintiffs contracted with them only as agents for the owner of the land, and not as principals; and semble, that the evidence set out in the report of the case shewed that the plaintiffs knew they were acting only as agents. The jury, however, found against defendants, on this question, and the verdict being for $10 only, the court refused to interfere on motion for a nonsuit. Campbell V. Dennistoun, 23 C. P. 339.

The plaintiff contracted to sell land to A., who agreed to build a house upon it. A. put up the house, but plaintiff refused to open certain streets, as he had agreed to do, and the lot was in consequence inaccessible. A. then assigned to defendant, who moved the house to another lot, which he also had agreed to purchase from the plaintiff, and after such removal the plaintiff conveyed to defendant the latter lot, with all the buildings thereon:
—Held, notwithstanding the deed, that plaintiff might maintain trover for the house so removed; but the jury having given only nominal damages, the court under the circumstances refused to interfere. Cleaver v. Culleden, 15 U. C. R. 582.

Action was brought for the price of timber supplied; defended on the ground that the timber was not of the quality contracted for. The plaintiff having obtained a verdict, the defendant moved for a new trial, which was granted unless the plaintiff should consent to his verdict being reduced. Such consent heing filed, judgment was entered for the plaintiff for a reduced amount. A cross-action was brought for damages in not supplying timber up to the standard required by the contract. A verdict having been given for the defendant in that action, the plaintiff moved for a new trial, upon the ground that he was entitled to nominal damages at least. The court held that he was entitled to nominal damages, but refused a new trial:—Held, affirming the judgment in 31 N. B. Reps. 250, 255, that the objections to the verdicts for improper reception and rejection of evidence were properly overruled by the court below, and the new trial to recover nominal damages was properly refused. Scammell v. Clarke, 23 S. C. R. 307.

Trespass to land. The defendants denied the plaintiff title. At the trial the plaintiff gave no evidence of actual damage, but urged that an action was necessary to protect his title. The Judge charged the jury strongly against the plaintiff, and a verdict for the defendants was given:—Held, that there was no misdirection; and, as the plaintiff could at a new trial obtain no more than nominal damages, it was properly refused. Simonds v. Chesley, 20 S. C. R. 174.

See post IX.

See, also, McLeod v. Boulton, 2 U. C. R. 44; Kerry v. England, [1898] A. C. 742.

4. Verdict under £20.

Smallness of damages is no objection to a new trial, when the verdict is manifestly contrary to the evidence and the Judge's opinion, Brookfield v. Sigur, Tay. 200.

Nor when one distinct head of the plaintiff's demand has been improperly disallowed. Maddock v. Glass, 5 U. C. R. 229.

An injury to a watercourse is considered as an injury to a permanent right, and in such a case the court will grant the plaintiff a new trial, although the probable amount to be recovered by a verdict may not be large. Appelgarth v. Rhymal, Tay. 427.

In trespass q, c f, defendant pleaded liberum tenementum, and on the trial the jury gave £5 damages for plaintiff, zagainst the Judge's charge. The verdict being contrary to law:—Held, that the smallness of damages was no reason against a new trial, because the verdict if it stood would be conclusive on the parties as to their rights. Soper v. Marsh, 5 O. S. 68.

Where in trover the court thought the jury should have treated the transaction as being on the plaintiff's own shewing ipso facto fraudulent, they granted a new trial, though the verdict was only for £11 10s., with costs to abide the event. Knowlson v. Conger, 7 U. C. R. 455.

In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment in the division court, it appeared that the defendant, when he made the affidavit, was aware that the plaintiff was then actually in prison. For the defence it was shewn that the goods attached were eventually sold under executions against the plaintift, and therefore no substantial damage was suffered. The court, however, refused a new trial on this ground, the verdict being for only £18. Ouens v. Purcell, 11 U. C. R. 390.

When a verdict is under £20, and no permanent right is bound by it, the court will not be disposed to interfere unless it appear to be clearly perverse, or the trial Judge reports that he is dissatisfied. Phillips v. Hutchinson, 13 U. C. R. 136.

The court refused to disturb a verdict for $20 for trespass to land, as the pleadings would have to be amended, and a new trial could only be granted on payment of costs. Munn v, Galbraith, 13 C. P. 75.

A new trial ordered notwithstanding that the amount recovered was less than £20, a public right being involved. Prouse v. Glenny, 13 C. P. 560.

Trespass to land, and destroying fences, trees, and buildings. Pleas, not guilty, and that the fences and buildings were not the plaintiff's. The question being whether the plaintiff could maintain the action before actual entry:—Held, that as to the land itself and the trees he could recover, the defendants not having denied his property therein, and the damages being only $80 a new trial was refused. Jovett v. Haacke, 14 C. P. 447.

Held, that the uncertainty as to the amount of defendant's liability in an action for an interference with a water privilege, it being impossible to ascertain how much of the obstruction was caused by him and how much by others, formed no ground for disturbing a verdict, which was for $40. Austin v. Snyder, 21 U. C. R. 299.

The rule that a new trial will not be granted where the verdict is under £20, though against evidence, refers to the amount of the verdict, independent of any sum paid into court. Where, therefore, the verdict was for $84, exclusive of $100 paid into court, and a new trial could have been granted only on payment of costs, the court refused to interfere. Grimm v. Fischer, 25 U. C. R. 383,

III. DISCHARGING RULE OF ORDER FOR NON-PAYMENT OF COSTS.

[See R. G. of T. T. 1856, No. 45; Con. Rule (1897) 638.]

Where a new trial was granted on payment of costs by plaintiff, who served three appointments on defendant for taxation, and the costs were at last taxed without disbursements, which defendant would not receive, and plaintiff proceeded again to trial and obtained a verdict, the court refused to set it aside. Thompson v. Scuell, 4 O. S. 16.

Where a new trial was granted on payment of costs, and the costs were not paid, the rule to discharge the rule for a new trial and to enter judgment was absolute in the first instance. Drean v. Smith, T. T. 1 & 2 Vict.

Where the costs were taxed and demanded, but not paid, the court in the same term ordered a rule absolute for discharging the rule for a new trial, if the costs were not paid in a fortnight. Wynn v. Palmer, E. T. 3 Vict.

Where plaintiff obtained a rule to enter judgment for non-payment, the court, under special circumstances, gave defendant a week's further time. Reeves v. Myers, T. T. 4 & 5 Vict.

Where a new trial is granted on payment of costs, the purty to whom the indulgence is granted must attend promptly at the taxation and payment of costs; and if he suffer so long a time to elapse that plaintiff cannot proceed to trial at the next assizes without embarrassment, the cour will not, after plaintiff has obtained a rule to enter judgment, discharge the rule and allow defendant the benefit of his rule for a new trial. Johnson v. Sparrove, I U. E. R. 396.

Where a new trial is granted on payment of costs, the party obtaining it should proceed with the taxation and payment so as to enable the case to be tried on the next opportunity; but the omission to do so will not necessarily deprive him of the benefit of his rule; and in this case it was held that sufficient excuse was shewn. Grantham v. Povell, 1 P. R. 256.

Defendant obtained a new trial on payment of costs, and his attorney immediately afterwards wrote to the plaintiff's attorney begging to know what the costs were, that he might pay them. Plaintiff's attorney took no notice of this, but after some months moved in term to discharge the rule for a new trial, on an affidavit that the costs were unpaid; and, without giving any notice to defendant's attorney to attend taxation, on the same day entered judgment and took out a hab. fac., which was executed. The court, on application of the defendant's attorney, set aside the judgment and writ without costs, and directed the defendant to be restored to possession. Doe d. Arnold v. Auldjo, 6 U. C. R.

Where the costs, having been taxed, were tendered, but refused, as there was not then sufficient time to give the proper notice for the next assizes, which, however, defendant offered to waive:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the rule for a new trial rescinded; but, owing to defendant's delay, the application for that purpose was refused only on payment of costs. Rabidon v. Harkin, 2 P. R. 129.

Where a new trial is granted to a plaintiff on payment of costs, the payment is a condition precedent to the right to give notice of trial. In this case, where they were not so paid, the court set aside the verdict, but, under the circumstances, without costs. The attorney who is to receive the costs should, if requested, deliver his bill and receive payment without insisting on an official taxation. Stock v. Shewan, 8 C. P. 185.

A rule for a new trial on payment of costs was obtained by defendants in Hilary term. On the 23rd March the costs were taxed and an allocatur served on the agent of defendants attorney, but the costs were not paid, and the plaintiff, in consequence, was thrown over the assizes, which took place on the 23rd April. On motion to rescind the rule, it appeared that defendant lived some distance from his attorney, who wrote to him three letters, none of which he received, though he attended the post twice a week until the 21st April. On that day he paid the costs to his attorney, who did not see the plaintiff's attorney till the 28th May, and the latter then declined to receive them. The action was brought to try a question of boundary. Under these circumstances the court refused to rescind the rule, and gave defendant a mouth to pay the costs taxed and the costs of this application. VanEvery v. Drake, 2 P. R. 84.

When a plaintiff obtains a new trial on payment of costs he is not bound to pay them before the next assizes, because, even had the costs been paid, the plaintiff could not be compelled to go to trial at such assizes; but he must be always reach to pay the costs taken to be compelled to go to trial at such assizes; but he must be always reach to pay the costs taken to the cost of the cos

Defendant had obtained a rule a year previously for a new trial on payment of costs. He neglected to pay, and the plaintiff obtained a rule nisi to reseind the rule:—Held, that if defendant should pay the costs of the trial, as provided by the original rule, and of this application, within ten days, the rule nisi should be discharged, otherwise that the rule for new trial should be rescinded. Pacaud v. McEvan, 6 P. R. 20.

IV. EVIDENCE.

Sec, also, post XVII.

1. Discovery of New Evidence.

Application—What must be Shewn— Grounds for Granting.]—It must appear that the fresh evidence could not have been produced at the former trial. Haren v. Lyon, Tay, 370.

The court will not grant a new trial for the discovery of new evidence, unless in clear cases and where the grounds are strong and specific. It must be stated what evidence the newly discovered witness can give, and generally the witness himself must shew the court, on affidavit, what facts he can prove. Robinson v. Rapalje, 4 U. C. R. 289.

Sec, also, White v. Brown, 12 U. C. R. 477; Bates v. Chisholm, 7 C. P. 46; Corporation of Longueuit v. Cushman, 24 U. C. R. 602.

Action against the acceptor of a bill. Plea, that it was necepted for plaintiff's accommodation. Verdict for defendant. New trial refused on affidavits of new evidence discovered since the trial—the affidavits not having been filed until the second term after the rule nisi had been moved, and leaving it very doubtful whether the new evidence would certainly avail the plaintiff. Morton v. Thompson, 2 U. C. R. 1906.

A new trial will not be granted if the evidence was known before, though too late to make use of it at the trial, and though every reasonable effort was made to produce it after it was so discovered. Rove v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 16 C. P. 500.

The discovery of evidence to impeach the testimony of a witness examined at the trial is not a ground for a new trial. Regina v. Hamilton, 16 C. P. 340.

The intention to produce a witness in person whose evidence was taken under a commission and read to a jury is not a ground for a new trial. McDermott v. Ireson, 38 U. C. R. 1.

In ejectment a new trial was refused on the ground of the discovery of new evidence, when it was not shewn that the evidence could not have been procured before the trial; and when such evidence went to prove, not that defendant had any title, which was in no way shewn, but that a third person, with whom he had no privity, was entitled to a moiety of the land. White v. McKay, 43 U. C. R. 226.

Corroborative Evidence.]—The discovery of new corroborative evidence is no ground for a new trial. Faucett v. Mothersell, 14 C. P. 104; Hooper v. Christoe, 14 C. P. 117; Regina v. Meltroy. 15 C. P. 116; MeDermott v. Ireson, 38 U. C. R. 1

Held, that the discovery of new evidence which was merely corroborative of evidence given at the former trial was no ground for a new trial. Miller v. Confederation Life Ins. Co., 14 A. R. 218, 11 O. R. 120.

New trial on the ground of surprise and discovery of new evidence, refused, where the evidence was merely in corroboration. Howarth v. McGugan, 25 O. R. 396.

Allowing a new trial on the ground of the discovery of new evidence is a matter of legal discretion, and where the subject-matter of the action was of a trifling nature, and a divisional court ordered a new trial on affidavits shewing merely the discovery of further evidence corroborative of the evidence at the trial the order was set aside. Murray v. Canada Central R. W. Co., 7 A. R. 646, followed. Trumble v. Hortin, 22 A. R. 51.

Criminal Cause—Foundation for Evidence. — The chief witness for the Crown on an indictment for murder, swore that on the night when the crime was committed he heard cries, and afterwards saw the prisoner and his two sons coming from the direction of such cries. At the coroner's inquest, held six months before, this witness had declared himself unable to identify the persons seen by him. In affliadist filed on moving for a new trial, after conviction, it was alleged that this witness stated at the inquest, as the reason for being unable to identify the persons, that the night was dark and a wood pile intervened:— Held, that this formed no ground for interference: for, if true, the prisoner must have heard the statement made, so that it was no new evidence; and, as neither the witness nor the coroner was examined as to such statement at the trial, the proper foundation for evidence of it had not been laid. Regina v. Hamilton, 16 C. P. 340.

Diligence—Entries in Books.]—A cause had been carried down to trial in 1879, when it was postponed at the instance of defendants, and a trial took place in 1880, when a verdiet was rendered in favour of the plaintiffs, which the court refused to set aside. The detendants thereupon appealed to this court, and when the appeal came on to be heard (in 1882) an application was made by the otendants to be allowed to adduce evidence alleged to have been recently discovered, tending to relieve the defendants from ljability, which evidence, it appeared, consisted mainly of entries in the books of the defendants. The court, being of opinion that proper diligence had not been used by the defendants, as in such case they must have discovered the evidence at a much earlier date, refused the application with costs. Murray v. Canada Central R. W. Co., 7 A. R. 646.

Instances in which New Trial Granted. —A verdict having been rendered for plaintiff against defendant (a sheriff) for an amount exceeding his indemnity, correct on the evidence, but it appearing that the defence had been neglected by the mominal defendant, and affidavits having been filed impeaching the evidence at the discovery since the trial of evidence in the defendant's favour, the court granted a new trial upon payment of costs. Touensend v. Hamilton, 4 C. P. 444. See S. U., 5 C. P. 230.

The defendant, in dower, pleaded ne unques seizle que dower, and, after trial and verdict against him, remembered that a bond had been executed by himself and the demandant several years before, providing for the release of the dower in question, which bond had remained in the hands of a third party and had not been produced at the trial. The court granted a new trial on payment of costs, with leave to add a plea. Germain v. Shuert, 7 C. P. 86.

In an action for collision between two sailing vessels owned by the plaintiffs and defendant respectively, it appeared that both vessels were running to windward close-hauled, the plaintiff's vessel on the starboard, and the defendant's vessel on the port tack. Defendant's vessel, it was admitted, did what was best as soon as the plaintiffs' lights were seen, but the complaint was, that he should have seen them sooner. This he explained by alleging that there was a haze on the water, which the plaintiffs' witnesses denied. The jury having found for the defendant, a new trial was granted, on affidavits shewing the discovery of new evidence to prove that there was no haze at the time. Downey v. Patterson, St U. C. R. 513.

2. Examination of Witnesses and Rejection or Reception of Evidence — Rulings as to.

Close of Case—Defect in Evidence—Refusal to Reopen.]—Except in case of fraud the court will seldom interfere with the discretion of the Judge at nisi prius, in holding a plaintiff to the case which he has proved, after defects in his evidence have been pointed out. Armour v. Phillips, 4 U. C. R. 152. — Opening to Supply Fact.]—It is no ground for a new trial that the Judge refused to allow plaintiff, after he had closed his case, to supply the evidence of a fact he had omitted to prove. Benedict v. Boulton, 4 U. C. R. 96.

In ejectment brought on a mortgage, defendant objected to the want of registry, but closed his case without having proved that the title was a registered one when defendant got his deed. The Judge would not allow the defence to be reopened; and, as it appeared that the defendant was settling up a dishouset defence, the court refused to interfere. Blakely v. Garrett, 16 U. C. R. 261.

Contradicting Witness—Reception of Evidence—Corroboration.]— The court will not review the discretion of the Judge at the trial in receiving evidence to contradict a party's own witnesses as being adverse, nor in receiving evidence on the part of the defence after the close of the plaintiff's case, even though for the purpose of corroborating the defence. Herbert v. Mercantile Fire Ins. Co., 43 U. C. R. 384.

Omission to Call Witnesses.] — The fact of counsel having yielded to the advice of others and omitted to call witnesses is no ground for a new trial. Brown v. Sheppard, 13 U. C. R. 178.

Where a defendant abstains from calling eighence, but rests his defence on what appears from the plaintiff's evidence, such evidence being legally sufficient, the court will not interfere. Young v. Moodie, 6 C. P. 244.

Where the defendants having a witness in court did not call him, relying upon the weakness of the plaintiffs' evidence and desiring to have the last word to the jury, the court refused to set aside a verdict for the plaintiffs, though dissatisfied with it. Hurrell v. Simpson, 22 U. C. R. 65.

relying upon the Judge ruling in his favour, forbears to call witnesses in his defence, is not on that ground alone entitled to a new trial in case of an adverse verdict, but must also abide the result of the judgment of the court on that ruling. In this case, however, the Judge having reported his dissatisfaction with the evidence of the plaintiff's agent, and that defendants did not call their witnesses solely in deference to his opinion, and plaintiff having asserted that he could give stronger evidence, the court, considering it desirable on a further investigation, granted a new trial, but only on payment of costs. Davis v. Scottish Provincial Ins. Co., 16 C. P. 176.

Omission to Cross-examine.]—Held, under the facts stated in the report, that defendants, having abstained from cross-questioning the witness on the trial as to the position of the note sued upon and the facts of the case, were not entitled to a new trial for that purpose. Adams v. Toland, 12 C. P. 119.

Recall of Witness.]—At the trial the Judge having declined to allow a witness twice called in the progress of the suit to be recalled, or to wait for the possible arrival of another witness, the court refused to review the exercise of his discretion in so doing. Glezon v. Williams, 27 C. P. 93.

Refusal to Allow Questions.]—The erroneous exercise of discretion in refusing to allow questions on cross-examination, which are irrelevant to the issue, would be no ground for a new trial. Hickey v. Fitzgerald, 41 U. C. R. 303.

3. False or Mistaken Evidence.

When a witness, a surveyor, founded his evidence upon the assumption of a certain monument as the correct point to start from in running a line, and the jury gave their verdict accordingly, and such witness afterwards discovered he was in error as to the correctness of that boundary, and made affidavit of his mistake, the court granted a new trial. Doe A. Case v. McGill, 5 O. S. 56.

Slander, Verdict for plaintiff for £150, New trial refused on the ground that one of the principal witnesses for the plaintiff was, shortly after the trial, convicted at the same assizes for forgery, and sentenced to banishment. Eakins v. Evnas, 3 O. S. 385.

New trial granted, on payment of costs, where the evidence for plaintiff was not very satisfactory, and would have entirely failed but for one witness, who, it was sworn, was a man of bad character, and had stated after the trial that he had been hired to give evidence: defendant also swearing that all this witness had stated was false. Talbot v. McDougall, 3 O. S. 644.

The plaintiff having recovered a verdict for SCO for malicious prosecution, a new trial was moved for on affidavits shewing that the plaintiff and a person called by him, and whose evidence was material, had committed perjury in swearing that this witness was a married sister supported by him, while in fact she lived with him as his wife, and was known as such. The affidavit, however, did not shew that these facts were not known at the trial, and the evidence fully proved the plaintiff's case. The court refused to interfere. County Court—Nonsuit—Setting aside—Leave to Defendants to Give Evidence.]—At the trial of a case with a jury, the Judge of the county court, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, and without hearing any evidence on the part of the defendants, non-suited the plaintiff. In the following term the Judge set the nonsuit aside and entered judgment for the plaintiff, claiming a right under the circumstances to do so. On appeal, the court, while satisfied with the ruling of the Judge on the legal liability of the defendants, set the nonsuit aside and ordered a new trial upon the facts, so as to afford the defendants an opportunity of adducing evidence; but, under the circumstances, refused them any costs of the appeal. Rules 311, 312, 319, and 321, O. J. Act, discussed, Baker v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 11 A. R. 68.

Forged Indorsement—Expert Evidence.?—An action against the indorser of promissory notes, who alleged that his indorsement had been forged, was tried twice. On the first trial the jury disagreed, and on the second they found for the plaintiff. No expert evidence was offered at either trial, though the defence intended was fully known. The court refused a new trial, moved for on affidavits of an expert giving his opinion founded on a comparison and critical analysis of the defendant's handwriting, with the indorsements. Moser v. Naar, 45 U. C. R. 428.

Possession of Land—Carctaker.] — Held, that T. L., having in his pleadings set up that J. L. had been in possession for twenty-two years as his tenant, could not obtain a new trial on the ground that he could shew by evidence that she had been in as a caretaker for him. Hickey v. Stover, 13 O. R. 106.

See ante 1.

5. Improper Admission of Evidence.

[By 37 Viet. c. 7. s. 34, A. J. Act. 1874, con, rule (1897) 785, a new trial shall not be granted on the ground of misdirection, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless, in the opinion of the court to which application is made, some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial of the action; and if it appear to such court that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy the court may give final judgment as to part thereof, and direct a new trial as to the other part only.

Contradicting Irrelevant Evidence-Substantial Injury.]-I., the maker, and F the indorser, of a promissory note were sued upon it, and F. denied his indorsement. At the trial an indenture of conveyance of land from I. to F. was put in without objection, and I. testified that it was given to secure F. against his indorsement of certain notes of which the one sued on was a renewal. There was nothing in the indenture to shew that it was given for anything but the expressed consideration of $1,500, and it was not pretended that such consideration was paid:— Held, that it was competent for F. to shew what the indenture was given for, that it was not given to secure him against such indorsement; and therefore evidence of the existence of an indebtedness from I. to F. upon an open account was receivable to support the proof that it was given to secure such indebtedness. I. was asked whether F. did not say to him when he asked him to indorse one of the series of notes of which the one in question was a renewal, that he, F., never "backed anybody's notes:"—Held, that the question was irrelevant, and I.'s answer to it conclusive; and evidence contradicting such answer was inadmissible. Held, also, having regard to the whole case and the charge of the trial Judge adverting to the evidence so improperly received and to its importance, substantial injury and miscarriage were thereby occasioned, and there was suffi-cient ground for granting a new trial. Bank of Hamilton v. Isaacs, 16 O. R. 450.

Covenant—Breach — Special Damage— Pressing on Jury—Costs.]—In an action for breach of covenant by delaying the completion of a railway crossing which afforded the best road to the plaintiff's saw mill:—Held, that evidence the plaintiff is aw mill:—Held, that evidence the plaintiff is away mill:—Held, that evidence the plaintiff not having notified the defendants at the time of the fact of his suffering the loss of profit constituting the alleged damage. The plaintiff's counsel having persisted in pressing such evidence on the jury, against the opinion of the presiding Judge, the court granted a new trial without costs. Sharer v. Great Western R. W. Co., 6 C. P. 221.

Declaration—Repetition of Evidence—Interference,)—Held, in an action for collision, that evidence of declarations made by the capital of defendants vessel, as to the control of the contr

Defamation — Pleading — Justification—Rebuttal.] — In an action for a libel contained in a newspaper article respecting certain legistion, the innendo alleged by the liberal province at the time when such legislation was enacted, was that the article charged him with personal dishonesty. The defendants pleaded "not guilty," and that the article was a fair comment on a public matter. The defendants put in evidence, the plaintiff's counsel objecting, to prove the charge of personal dishonesty, and evidence in rebuttal was tendered by the plaintiff and rejected. Certain questions were put to the jury requiring them to find whether or not the words bore the construction claimed by the innuendo or were fair comment on the subject-matter of the article; the jury found generally for the defendants, and in answer to the trial Judge, who asked if they found that the publication bore the meaning ascribed to it by the plaintiff, the foreman said: "We did not consider that at all." On appeal from an order for a new trial:—Held, that the defendants not having pleaded the truth of the charge in justification, the evidence given to establish it should not have been received, but it having been received, evidence in rebuttal was improperly rejected; the general finding for the defendants was not sufficient in view of the fact that the jury stated that they had not considered the material question, namely, the charge of personal dishonesty. For these reasons a new trial was properly granted. Memitoba Free Press Tess V. Martin, 21 S. C. R. 318.

Effect on Jury—Illegal Evidence.]—Semble, that the supreme court is bound to uphold a verdiet if there is sufficient legal evidence to sustain it independently of evidence improperly received, and cannot take into consideration the effect on the jury of such illegal evidence. Confederation Life Association v. O'Donnell, 13 S. C. R. 218.

Judge's Charge.]—In an action on a bill of costs the question was, whether an agreement had been made by an attorney, the plaintiff, that the costs should not exceed a certain amount, which had been paid. The jury found the agreement to have been made, and gave a verdict for the defendant. A new trial was moved for on the ground that evidence had been received and a discussion allowed to take place at the trial as to the magnitude of the bill, and of the large amount of costs paid by defendant in the same suit to other attorneys, which influenced the jury in their finding:—Held, that this was not a sufficient ground for interference, the jury having been expressly told that the fact of the making of this agreement was the only question for their decision. O'Connor v. Mc-Mamee, 2 C. P. 237.

— Sufficiency of Other Evidence.]— Where improper evidence is received the court will grant a new trial, although there be other evidence of the same nature, unless they see that the improper evidence so received did not influence the jury. McBride v. Bailey, 6 C.
P. 9.

But not where there clearly appears to be sufficient evidence to support the verdict independently of the evidence improperly admitted. Appleton v. Lepper, 20 C. P. 138; Kyle v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 16 C. P. 76; Dundas v. Johnston, 24 U. C. R. 547.

Exception not Taken at Trial.]—No exception having been taken to the evidence at the trial:—Held, that it could not subsequently be urged in moving for a new trial. Campbell v. Beamish, S. U. C. R. 526.

Incompetent Witness.]—It is no ground that an incompetent witness has been examined, unless he was objected to at the trial. Doe d. Sullivan v. Read, 3 U. C. R. 239.

Letters Written without Prejudice.]
—Semble, that certain letters in this case should not have been received, even for the purpose of proving the identity of defendant, having been written without prejudice; but, as the other testimony was sufficient to warrant the verdict, the court refused to interfere. Burns v. Kerr, 13 U. C. R. 468.

Negligence—Evidence of Previous Similar Acts.] — Action against defendants for negligence in the construction and management of their steamboat, by which sparks escaped from the funnel at a wharf, and the plaintiff's lumber and mills there were burned. The alleged negligence consisted in leaving the screens of the steamer open; and on the part of the plaintiff's evidence was received, though objected to, that on other occasions, at different time and places, the screens were open, and cinders had escaped. The engineer and firemen on the boat, being afterwards called for defendants, swore that the screens were closed, and had never on any occasion been left open. The Judge ruled, at the close of the case, that the evidence objected to was admissible, particularly as touching the credit of the defendants' witnesses:—Held, that such evidence was inadmissible either to support the plaintiff's case when it was tendered and received, or for the purpose for which it was afterwards admitted; and the jury having found for the plaintiff's, a new trial was granted without costs. Educards v. Ottava River Navigation Co., 39 U. C. R. 264.

wish to succeed against the justice of the case, assents to the reception of parol evidence to prove the understanding on which a note was given, he cannot be allowed afterwards to argue in bane, the technical objection he has waived. Davis v. Mesherry, 7 U. C. R. 490.

— Misdirection.] — The improper reception of evidence to explain a written contract is ground for a new trial only when it leads to misdirection. Spring v. Cockburn, 19 C. P. 63.

Pleadings in Chancery — Evidence of Payment.]—C., in an answer in a suit in chancery, having stated the sum paid by blim and the facts:—Semble, that the pleadings in the suit, having been put in by defendants, were some evidence as against them of such payment: but, as a new trial would not have been granted for the reception of such evidence, even if inadmissible, the point was not determined. Cooley v. Smith, 40 U. C. R. 543.

Seduction.]—See Ferguson v. Veitch, 45 U. C. R. 160; Udy v. Stewart 10 O. R. 591.

Statement of Deceased — Admissibility —Increasing Verdict.]—Slander of the plaintiff as a physician, with respect to his treatment of one H., deceased, whom he had attended after her confinement. Plea, not support to the property of the p

No Substantial Injury.]—The plaintiff claimed to recover against the defendant, as administrator of his deceased brother W. G., two sums, one of $880, which she deged W. G. received sonesoit, and mother brother S. G., described sonesoit, and mother brother S. G., to see the sonesoit of the state of $1.000 his period to the other of $1.000 his period consideration of her remaining with him, taking care of and managing his house as long as he lived. It was objected that evidence was admitted of statements made by S. G. of the amount he intended leaving the plaintiff. The objection was first taken during the examination of a witness, C., after the plaintiff had been examined and cross-examined as to such statements without objection:—Held, that no substantial wrong or miscarriage was occasioned by the admission of C.'s evidence; and therefore under the O. J. Act, rule 311, it was not a ground for a new trial. Cook v. Grant, 32 C. P. 511.

See Scammell v. Clarke, 23 S. C. R. 307; Hesse v. St. John R. W. Co., 30 S. C. R. 218.

6. Improper Rejection of Evidence.

Chose in Action — Assignment—Action by Assignce—Set-off.]—Held, that to an action by an assignee of an account for the price of lumber and staves delivered by the assignor to the defendant under two certain contracts therefor, the defendant, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 116, ss. 7, 10, and the Judicature Act, ss. 12, 16, and rule 127, can set up as a defence a claim for damage for the non-delivery by the assignor to the defendant of certain other timber and staves specified in the contract, and for the inferior quality of those delivered. In this case the Judge having refused to receive evidence as to the non-delivery, a new trial was ordered. Exchange Bank v. Stinsson, 32 C. P. 158.

Counsel at Trial — Witness—No Substantial Injury.]—The senior counsel for the plaintiff at the trial, a partner of the attorney, offered himself as a witness for the plaintiff at corroborate the evidence of his partner, but was rejected, the Judge saying that he must choose between the positions of advocate and witness, and must cease to act as counsel if he desired to give evidence:—Held, that he was a competent witness, and could not properly be rejected; but a new trial was refused upon this ground, under 37 Vict. c. 7, s. 34, the court being of opinion that no substantial wrong or miscarriage had been occasioned thereby. Remarks upon the impropriety of such evidence, though strictly admissible. Davis v. Canada Farmers Mutual Ins. Co., 30 U. C. R. 452.

Effect of Rejection—Refusal of New Trial.]
—The testimony of a witness, since deceased, taken on a former trial, was rejected by the Judge at the trial herein:—Held, that it was improperly rejected, but other evidence to the same effect having been received, it could not be said that the result would have been varied by the admission, and a new trial was accordingly refused. Copeland v. Village of Blenkin, 9 O. R. 19.

Effect of Evidence — Refusal of New Trial.]—Held, in an action for assault, that libellous and abusive articles reflecting on the defendants, published on the day of, and preceding, the assault, in a newspaper of which the plaintiff was the proprietor, were admissible in evidence in mitigation of damages. But where the verdict was for $50 only, and though such evidence was rejected the jury were fully informed by defendants counsel that the assault was committed in consequence of these articles, and the court saw no reason to believe that defendants had been prejudiced by the ruling, a new trial was refused, but, under the circumstances, without costs in term to either party. Peren v. Glasco, 22 C. P. 521. Followed in Stirton v. Gummerr, 31 O. R. 227, and to DeraMatton.

Semble, that the evidence rejected in this case would not have affected the result, and that the better course, therefore, would have been, even if the court thought it admissible, to have refused a new trial for the rejection, under s, 34 of the A. J. Act, 1874. O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 A. R. 247.

Fraud—Evidence of Collateral Fraud.]—In an action on a bond against two sureties, the defendant R. set up the defence and gave evidence that his signature to the bond had been obtained by fraud. The evidence of his co-defendant C. was tendered for the purpose of shewing that C.'s signature to the bond had also been so obtained, which was rejected as imadmissible:—Held, that the evidence of C. was admissible as shewing a fraud practised on him, with respect to the same instrument by the same person, and at or about the same time as the alleged fraud on R., and because it was confirmatory of R.'s evidence; and a new trial was ordered. Waterloo Mutual Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 4 O. R. 295.

Insurance Policy — Condition—Unreasonableness — Objection — Refusal of New Trial.]—Held, that under 36 Vict. c. 44, s. 33 (O), the plaintiff might insist that a condition in an insurance policy was unjust or unreasonable without specially pleading it; but that the condition in this case was clearly not unjust or unreasonable; and the court, under the A. J. Act, 1874, s. 34, refused a new trial on the ground that the objection was not allowed at the trial. Morrow V. Waterloo County Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 39 U. C. R. 441.

Misapprehension—Notes of Evidence.]
—Where the Judge's notes at the trial did not shew the rejection, and he did not recollect it, a new trial was granted on the ground of misapprehension, on payment of costs.

Proudfool v. Trotter, M. T. 6 Vict.

Seduction — Character Evidence—Prejudice—Costs.] — In an action for seduction witnesses called for the defence testified to having had connection with the girl. The jury were told that these witnesses had a right to refuse to answer such questions:—Held, a misdirection. Held, also, that evidence of the girl's general bad character for chastity was improperly rejected. The defendant being called wholly denied the charge, and the jury having found for the plaintiff, though the verdict was not large, a new trial was granted without costs, on the ground that the defendant might have been prejudiced by the misdirection and rejection of evidence.

Title to Land—Evidence of Possession.]
—Trespass q. c. f. Pleas, that one E. W. was the owner of the locus in quo, and justifying by his authority and command. Upon the trial, the Judge having refused to admit evidence that E. W. had been in possession of the premises over twenty years, and that defendant had obtained title through him, a new trial was ordered without costs. Memillan v, Memillan v, I. C. P. 158.

V. JUDGE'S CHARGE.

1. Misdirection.

See note to IV. 5.

(a) Generally — When New Trial Granted for.

New trials will not be granted as of course upon the extreme right of the party applying, even for misdirection. Brown v. Street, 1 U. C. R. 124.

The court will not necessarily grant a new trial for misdirection, if satisfied that justice has been done notwithstanding. Connell v. Chency, 1 U. C. R. 307.

It is no misdirection that the Judge, in charging the jury, did not advance a particular argument, which the counsel thinks would have influenced the jury in his client's favour. Annable v. McDonell, S U. C. R. 382.

It is no ground for a new trial that the Judge expressed his opinion strongly upon the evidence in favour of either side. Dougherty v. Williams, 32 U. C. R. 215.

Where the court differed with the ruling at nist prins on one point, but considered the verdict for defendant well found on other grounds, they granted a new trial at the option of the plaintiff, on his paying the costs by a certain day. Doe d. Prince v. Girty, 9 U. C. R. 41.

Where the charge of the Judge is calculated to make an impression on the jury prejudical to a party, which the evidence and circumstances do not entirely warrant, the court will grant a new trial without costs, on the ground of misdirection. White v. Crawford, 2 C. P. 352.

In ejectment, the court refused to disturb the verdict for misdirection upon points not urged at the trial. Eades v. McGregor, S C. P. 260.

Where a party allows a verdict to be taken against him by suggestion of the Judge without insisting that the case should go to the jury, he cannot afterwards take exception for misdirection. Chisholm v. Morse, 11 C. P. 589.

A new trial for misdirection as to the measure of damages, was refused where the misdirection affected only a few dollars. Haine v, Davey, 4 A. & E. 892, distinguished. Young v, Laidlaue, 12 C. P. 612.

Where both sides have addressed the jury on the equities of the case, it is no ground for a new trial that the Judge refused to withhold these equities from the jury, Bank of Toronto v. McDougall, 15 C. P. 475.

An objection taken by either party to the case of the other, or to any part of the proceedings, and ruled upon, it is not to be deemed an objection to that ruling, so as to entitle the party to move for misdirection; for to enable him to do this he ought at the time expressly to object to the ruling in question, and request the Judge to note his objection thereto, and the terms to which it is subject, i. e., whether leave is reserved to move, &c. Cousine v. Merrill, 16 C. P. 114.

Misdirection can only be upon a point of law, not on a matter of fact. Where the law is clear it is no misdirection to leave the facts simply to the jury, for they are the judges of the evidence. Regina v. Fick, 16 C. P. 379.

In replevin for timber:—Held, that, even if there was misdirection, which the court did not think there was, as it did not appear that any substantial wrong or miscarriage was thereby occasioned, it would, under s. 34 of the A. J. Act, 1874, form no ground for a new trial. Reid v, McDonadd, 25 C. P. 147.

Observations on the duty of counsel when dissatisfied with the ruling of the Judge at nisi prius. Parsons v. Queen Ins. Co., 43 U. C. R. 271

Remarks as to what is misdirection on the part of a Judge at the trial. Lucus v. Township of Moore, 43 U. C. R. 334, 3 A. R. 602.

In considering an objection for misdirection, the question is not whether every expression in a charge is perfectly accurate, but whether there is any reason to believe that a verdict, which is warranted by the evidence, has been caused or induced by an erroneous enunciation of the law by the court. Wells v. Lindop, 15 A. R. 695.

When no objection is made at the trial to the Judge's charge, the ground of misdirection is untenable on a motion for a new trial. Wills v. Carman, 17 O. R. 223.

(b) Particular Instances.

Breach of Promise—Damages.]—In an action for breach of promise of marriage:—Held, that misdirection as to damages would form no evidence for a new trial, the jury having found against the cause of action. Morrison v. Shaw, 40 U. C. R. 403.

Fraud—Observations on Matter not in Issue.]—In an action for the winding-up of a partnership in the gold-mining business, the defence pleaded was that there never was a partnership formed between the plaintiff and the defendants, or if there was, that it had been put an end to by an oral agreement between the parties. The case was tried by a jury, and the result depended on the credibility to be attached to the respective witnesses on each side who gave evidence as to the agreement that had been entered into. No issue of fraud was raised by the defendants, but the trial Judge, in charging the jury, made strong observations in respect to fraudulent concealment of facts from the plaintiff, and submitted questions to the jury calling for findings in relation to such fraud. The plaintiff having obtained a verdict, which was sustained by the court in banc,:—Held, that there should be a new trial. Held, also, that the case was essentially an equity case and one in which a jury could advantageously have been dispensed with. Hardman v. Putnam, 18 S. C. R. 714.

Refusal to Charge — Accounts.]—
W., a trader, being in financial difficulties, assigned all his property to B., who undertook to arrange with W.'s creditors. W, subsequently assigned his property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, and the assignee and some of the creditors brought an action to have the transfer to B. set aside. On the trial, after the evidence on both sides was concluded, the plaintiffs' counsel asked the Judge to instruct the jury as to what constituted fraud under the Statute of Elizabeth, and he also urged that an account should be taken of the dealings between W, and B. The Judge refused to define fraud to the jury as requested, and the jury stated that they were unable to deal with the accounts:—Held, that the refusal of the Judge to charge the jury as requested amounted to misdirection, and there should be a new trial; that the case could not be properly decided without taking the accounts; and that it could be more properly dealt with as an equity case. Griffiths v. Boscovitz, 18 S. C. R. 718.

Justice of the Peace—Property Qualification — Opinion.] — In a qui tam action against defendant for acting as a justice of the peace without the necessary property qualification required by R. S. O. 1877 c. 71. s. 7, the defendant was called as a witness on his own behalf, and gave evidence as to the value of the property on which he qualified, and the Judge in charging the jury told them that, generally speaking, the owner of property had the best opinion of its value:—Held, that there was no misdirection: for the jury were not told that they were to be guided by such opinion, or that it was most likely to be correct. Crandell q. t. v. Nott, 30 C. P. GS.

Libel — Criminal Information—Justification—Observations on Evidence.]—The rule requiring any objections to the charge to be taken at the trial, applies in criminal as well as civil proceedings. The Judge at the trial of a criminal information for libel, told the jury that the defendant must prove all the charges which he had justified, that the evidence fell far short of doing so, and that in his opinion they should find the pleas of justification against the defendant.—Held, that this was not so much a direction on the law as a strong observation on the evidence, and therefore not open to the objection of misdirection. But if so open, there was no misdirection, for the defendant was bound to such proof, and the observation was justified by the evidence. Regina v. Wilkinson, 42 U. C. R. 492.

Refusal of Party to Ansier — Interence.]—In an action for libel it was alleged that the defendant had, as a correspondent at T. of a newspaper, furnished several items which included one reflecting on the plaintiff. In his examination for discovery to the plaintiff in his examination for discovery to the plaintiff. In his examination for discovery to the plaintiff in his examination of the plaintiff. In his examination for discovery to the plaintiff in his examination of the plaintiff in his examination with the did not think he had sent the one complained of; that he had since the publication an interview with the editor with reference thereto, but he refused to answer whether he had discussed the item complained of, for fear, as he said, of incriminating himself. At the trial he stated that he had since ascertained that there were other correspondents at T., and, on being pressed as to the item complained of, after some hesitation, said he did not furnish it. No other evidence was given connecting the defendant with the publication:—Held, that this did not constitute any evidence of publication to go to the jury. The trial Judge in his charge, after referring to the defendant's refusal to answer on his examination for discovery, and to his reason for refusing, told the jury that they might draw the inference as to what the true answer would have been trawn from his refusal to answer. Nunn v. Brandon, 24 O. R. 375.

Negligence — Street Railway—Financial Strength — Amount of Damages.] — By 60 Vict. c. 24, s. 370 (N.B.), "a new trial is not to be granted on the ground of misdirection, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the court some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial of the On the trial of an action against a action. street railway company for damages on acstreet railway company for damages on ac-count of personal injuries, the vice-president of the company, called on the plaintiff's be-half, was asked on direct examination the amount of bonds issued by the company, the counsel in opening to the jury having stated that the company was making large sums of money out of the road. On cross-examination the witness was questioned as to the disposithe witness was questioned as to the disper-tion of the proceeds of debentures, and on re-examination the plaintiff's counsel interrogat-ed him at length as to the selling price of the stock on the Montreal exchange, and proved that they sold at about 50 per cent. premium. The Judge in charging the jury directed them to assess the damages as "upon the extent of the injury plaintiff received independent of what these people may be, or whether they are rich or poor." The plaintiff obtained a ver-dict with heavy damages:—Held, that on dict with heavy damages:—Held, that on cross-examination of the witness by defend-ants' counsel the door was not open for re-examination as to the selling price of the stock; that in view of the amount of the verdict it was quite likely that the general observation of the Judge in his charge did not remove the effect on the jury of the evidence bearing on the financial ability of the company to respond well in damages. The injury which the plaintiff sued was the crushing for which the plaintiff sued was the crushing of his foot, and on the day of the accident the medical staff of the hospital where he had been taken held a consultation and were divided as to the necessity for amputation. Dr. W., who thought the limb might be saved, was, four days later, ap-pointed by the company, at the suggestion of the plaintiff's atterny, to expect to with pointed by the company, at the suggestion of the plaintiff's attorney, to co-operate with the plaintiff's physician. Eventually the foot was amputated and the plaintiff made a good recovery. On the trial the plaintiff's physiician swore to a conversation with Dr. W. four days after the first consultation, and three days before the amputation, when Dr. W. stated that if he could induce plaintiffs attorney to view it from a surgeon's standpoint, and not use it to work on the sympa-thies of the jury, he might consider more fully the question of amputation. The Judge in the question of amputation. The Judge in his charge referred to this conversation and told the jury that it seemed to him very im-portant if Dr. W. was using his position as one of the hospital staff to keep the limb on when it should have been taken off, and that he thought it very reprehensible :- Held, that, W. did not represent the company at the first consultation when he opposed amputation; as others of the staff took the same view, and there was no proof that amputation was delayed through his instrumentality; and as the jury would certainly consider the Judge's remarks as bearing on the contention made on the plaintiff's behalf that amputation should have taken place on the very day of the accident—it must have affected the amount of the verdict. To tell a jury to ask themselves "If I were plaintiff how much ought I to be paid if the company did me an injury?" is not a proper direction. I. W. Co., 30 S. C. R. 218. Hesse v. St. John R.

— Valuator—Duty in Valuing Land.]
—The defendant L., who was a professional valuator, was employed by plaintiff to personally investigate the security offered for a loan Vol. III. b—152—3 on real estate, and to check the valuation of a local valuator. The said defendant visited the property and reported, in effect agreeing with the local valuator, that the property was worth considerably more than the amount pro-posed to be lent, and that the loan could be safely made for the sum proposed, for which report he charged and was paid a fee. loan was effected, and default having occurred in its repayment, the property was offered for sale, when it was found impossible to sell for sale, when it was found impossible to sell for anything like the mortgage money. In an action for negligence in valuing the property the jury found for the plaintiff. The Judge at the trial directed the jury that the fact that the defendant did not obtain the opinion of other persons as to the value of land in neighbourhood was evidence of negligence: -Held, that this was misdirection. It appeared from the evidence that the mortgagor had endeavoured to procure a loan for a similar amount on the same property from a company in which the defendant L. was a director, and that the loan was not effected, having been abandoned by the mortgagor. The Judge at the trial, although he directed the jury that there was no evidence that the defendant had acted with intentional dishonesty, pressed upon their notice, with other observations, the inquiry: "Why was not the original transaction carried out?":—Held, that these observations tended to create a prejudice in the mind of the jury which was not warranted by the facts. A new trial was therefore directed. O'Sullivan v. Lake, 15 O. R. 544.

On appeal the court of appeal held that there was no misdirection in the charge of the trial Judge, but, under peculiar circumstances, refused to interfere with the order of the court below for a new trial. 8, C., 15 A, R, 711.

The supreme court quashed an appeal on the ground that the new trial had been granted as a matter of discretion, S. C., 16 S. C. R. 656.

Want of Spark Arrester.]—On the trial of an action for damages for the destruction of a barn and its contents by fire, alleged to have been caused by negligence of the defendants in working a steam engine used in running a hay press in front of said barn, the main issue was as to the sufficiency of a spark arrester on said engine, and the learned Judge directed the jury that "if there was no spark arrester in the engine, that in itself would be negligence for which the defendants would be liable:"—Held, that the Judge misdirected the jury in telling them that the want of a spark arrester was, in point of law, negligence, and such direction may have influenced them in giving their verdict for the plaintiff: therefore, an order for a new trial should not be interfered with. Peers v. Elliott, 21 S. C.

Notice of Action—True Copy.]—Where a witness, who proved the notice of action required by the statute to be given to a justice of the peace before action, had in his examination in chief sworn that he had served a true copy of the notice produced, but upon his cross-examination said it might differ a word or two, and the Judge had in consequence directed a verdict for defendant, the court granted a new trial. Gardner v. Barucell. Tax. 54.

Obstruction of River — Indictment— Observations on Evidence.]—Where defendants were indicted for obstructing a navigable river by the erection of a wharf, and there was no evidence that the part covered by the wharf had ever been navigated by vessels of any size, but it was shewn only that the prosecutor was prevented by it from landing there with his skiff, and the wharf was proved not to interfere with navigation:—Held, that the jury was rightly directed that on this evidence the only verdict which could be rendered was not guilty. Such a direction is not so much a direction on the law as a strong observation on the evidence, which may properly be made in a proper case without being open to the charge of misdirection. Regina v. Port Perry and Port Whitby R. W. Co., 38 U. C. R. 431.

Partnership—Dissolution—Balance Duc—Assumpsit.]—When on a dissolution of partnership one partner has admitted a balance due his co-partner, assumpsit will lie although there be no promise to pay; and where the balance did not appear conclusively, and the Judge left it to the jury more unfavourably for the plaintiff than he might have done, and there was a verdict for defendant, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. McNicol v. McEiven, 3 O. S. 485.

Promissory Note — Indorsement—Proof of Signature—Authority.]—Where in an action against the indorser of a note, there was strong evidence that defendant had admitted the indorsement to be his, or made by his authority, whether the signature was genuine or not, and it was doubtful whether the jury had not been led to believe that the sole question for them was, whether the signature was defendant's or not, and they found for defendant, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Bank of Upper Canada v. Rogers, 1 U. C. R. 23.

Replevin — Change of Possession — No Substantial Wrong.] — In replevin, it was proved that the goods were purchased by the plaintiff from B. and M., and it was left to the jury to say whether there had been an actual and continued change of possession from them to plaintiff: but the Judge refused to leave it to them to say whether there had been a "visible" change of possession, there being no such word in the statute, and it being, in his opinion, likely under the circumstances to mislead the jury:—Held, that even if there was misdirection, which the court did not think there was, as it did not appear that any substantial wrong or miscarriage was thereby occasioned, it would, under s. 34 of A. I. Act, 1874, form no ground for a new trial. Reid v. McDonald, 26 C. P. 147.

Slander—Privilege—Malice.]—In an action for slander where the defence was that if the defendant had spoken the words (which he denied), the occasion was a privileged one, there had been two trials, each resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial for misdirection by the Judge in (among other respects) not fully explaining to the jury that unless the plaintiff proved that the words were spoken with actual malice, he was not entitled to recover: —Held, affirming the judgment in 14 O. R. 275, that taking the charge as a whole, and without laying undue stress upon isolated expressions, the jury had substantially been told that the occasion was privileged; and that, unless they were satisfied that the fendant had abused the privilege and availed himself of it to make the statement maliciously, they should find for the defendant. Wells v. Lindop, 15 A. R. 695.

Trespass to Goods—Setting aside Attachment—Substantial Justice.!—On the second count, in trespass for seizing plaintiff's goods, the jury were told that if the attachment had been set aside, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; and the plaintiff objected that as the setting aside had been proved, it should not have been left as if open to doubt. The jury having found for defendants:—Held, that the charge was unobjectionable; and as on the evidence nominal damages only would have been sufficient, the court refused to interfere. Eaton v. Gore Bank, 27 U. C. R. 490.

Substantial Justice, |—The fifth count was in trespass to plaintiff's goods. The sixth count was for illegal distress. To the fifth count respiss to plaintiff s goods. The sixth count was for illegal distress. To the fifth count defendant pleaded, not guilty, that the goods were not plaintiff's, and that he seized and sold them to satisfy arrears of rent; and to the sixth count, the general issue by statute 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2. At the trial the plaintiff's evidence shewed that the seizure and sale referred to was for a distress for rent fendant's counsel contended that as only one seizure had been made the plaintiff must elect on which count he would go to the jury. The Judge refused to compel plaintiff to elect, but said he would direct the jury that the evi-dence applied more to the sixth count than to the fifth, after which the plaintiff's counsel, in addressing the jury, withdrew the sixth count from their consideration. The Judge charged that the evidence given applied to the sixth count, and that they should find for defendant on the fifth count, charging them as if both counts were before them for considera-tion. The jury found for plaintiff on the sixth count for $100, and a verdict for de-fendant on the fifth:—Held, that the plaintiff could not withdraw a particular count or issue from the consideration of the jury, without the consent of the defendant, so as to prevent them giving a verdict on such count, prevent them giving a verdict on such count, and the jury in this case should have been directed to find for defendant on the sixth count, and the case left to them on the evidence on the fifth count. But, as substantial justice was done by the finding, a rule for a new trial was refused on that ground, but granted to defendant, as he might have been misled by the ruling. Ruthven v. Stinson, 14 C. P. 181.

Trespass to Land—Nominal Damages—Refusal of New Trial.)—In an action for trespass to land, the jury found for plaintif, with only 1s. damages. The verdict was moved against for misdirection and smallness of damages, but the court, without deciding upon the correctness of the charge, held that if it had been unexceptionable and the verdict the same they would not have interfered; and, under s. 34 of the A. J. Act. 1874, they refused a new trial. Smith v. Murphy, 35 U. C. R. 509.

— Title—Admissions—Proof of Deed.]
—Where in trespass q. c. f. plaintiff proved admissions of defendant as to the title of the land, which should have been left to the jury, but the case rested upon the want of sufficient evidence to admit the testimony of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses to the deed under which plaintiff claimed, which the court decided against him—a new trial was granted, with costs to abide the event. Tytlen v, Butlen, 3 U. C. R. 10.

Trover—Title to Goods — Execution—Judgment,1—In an anction of trover or conversion against appellant, high sheriff of the county of Cumberland, N. S., to recover damages for an alleged conversion by the appellant of certain personal property found in the possession of the execution debtor, but claimed by the respondent, the pleas were a denial of the conversion, no property in plaintiff, and justification under a writ of execution against the execution debtor. The Judge at the trial told the jury that he "thought it was incumbent on the defendant to have gone further than merely producing and proving his execution, and that if a transfer had taken place to the plaintiff, and the articles taken and sold, defendant should have shewn the judgment on which the execution issued to enable him to sustain his defence:"—Held, that the sheriff was entitled under his pleas to have it left to the jury to say whether the plaintiff had shewn title or right of possession to the goods in question, and therefore there was misdirection. McLean v. Hannon, 3 S. C. R. 706.

Watercourse—Definition.]—In an action for diversion of an alleged watercourse, the defendants disputed that any water ran along the depression in question, except melted snow and rain water flowing over the surface merely:—Held, per Street, J., that, as the attention of the jury was not expressly called to the difference in effect between the occasional flow of surface water and the steady flow from a source, and as a passage read to the jury from the judgment in Beer v. Stroud, 19 O, R. 10, divorced from its context, might have misled the jury, there should be a new trial. Per Armour, C.J., that what the Judge told the jury could not be held to be a misdirection without reversing the decision in Beer v. Stroud; and the objection to the charge was too vague and indefinite. Arthur v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 25 O. R. 37. Affirmed by the court of appeal, 22 A. R. S0.

See post VIII., IX.

2. Nondirection.

Comment — Absence of Prejudice.] — Where the Judge consents with reluctance, from his connection with the plaintiff, a try a cause, and from a feeling of delicary merely gives the case to the jury without comment, the court, though the evidence may be early conficing, if they see that the plaintiff has been probably prejudiced by the case not having been left to the jury in as full a manner as it would otherwise have been, will grant a new trial. Boutton v. Cooper, 4 U. C. R. 278.

See Regina v. Fick, 16 C. P. 379.

Construction of Contract—Leaving to Jury.]—It is the duty of the Judge to construe a written contract, and of the jury to decide upon surrounding facts and circumstances, if any, to vary it. A new trial was ordered without costs, on the ground that the construction of the contract had been left too much to the jury. Ircson v. Mason, 12 C. P. 475.

Explanation of "Usury"—Failure to give.]—On the trial of an action on a promissory note, brought by a bank, and to which defendants pleaded usury, consisting in the plaintiff's making the note payable at a distance from the place of discount, and thereby securing an illegal rate of interest as commission:—Held, that the jury not having been directed that the note sued on, being the last of a series which had always been made payable as this one was, was not tainted with usury, because made payable at a distance from P., was not missirection, but nondirection at most. Bank of Montreal v. Scott, 17 C. P. 258.

Failure to Distinguish.]—Action on a marine policy. Recovery as for a total loss, the facts shewing only a partial loss, which, however, was not so distinctly left to the jury. New trial granted without costs. Davis v. St. Lawrence Inland Marine Assurance Co., 3 U. C. R. 18.

Grounds—Evidence.]—Want of direction is no ground for a new trial, unless the verdict is against evidence. Speace v. Hector, 24 U. C. R. 277; Regina v. Fick, 16 C. P. 379; Spring v. Cockburn, 19 C. P. 63.

Notice of Motion for Nondirection—dironnds—Particularity—Lawadment, —A notice of motion to a divisional court.

A notice of motion to a divisional court court of the property of the property

Omission from Charge—General Verdicul—In an action under the Workmen's Compensation Act and at common law for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff while engaged in digging a drain unon the defendant's farm, it did not appear that the plaintiff engaged with the defendant to do any particular work, but that he was first put by the defendant at mason work, and then at digging the drain:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the hiring of the plaintiff was as a servant in husbandry within the meaning of 55 Vict. c. 26 (O.), and whether the work he was engaged in was in the usual course of his employment as such, and also whether the danger was known to the defendant and unknown to the plaintiff or the converse. The jury were asked certain questions, one being whether the hiring was as a servant in husbandry, but they were told that they might give a general verdict, and they gave one for the plaintiff, answering none of the questions. The trial Judge in his charge gave them no instruction on this point and no direction as to what the law was:—Held, that they were not competent to find a general verdict, and there should be a new trial. Rcid v. Barnes, 25 O. R. 223.

Refusal to Submit Questions. —It is no ground for a new trial that the Judge refused to submit any particular question to the jury, but if the Judge refuses to charge the jury in respect to the subject-matter of any question which counsel desire to have submitted, it may be made the subject of a motion for a new trial for nondirection. Turner v. Burns, 24 O. R. 28.

Unfavourable Charge. — Held, if the Judge did not charge as strongly in defendants' favour as he ought to have done, that the proper objection would have been for nondirection. Spring v. Cockbarn, 19 C. P. 63.

See Annable v. McDonell, S U. C. R. 382.

VI. JURY.

1. Improper Constitution or Selection.

Bias of Juror. |—The fact that one of the jurors, before the trial, had expressed an opinion against the defendant, which the defendant was aware of, is no ground for a new trial. Brown v. Sheppard, 13 U. C. R. 178.

Neglect to Challenge.]—In an action against an insurance company, the fact that one of the jurors is a shareholder in the company, is no ground for a new trial. The plaintiff should exercise his right of challenge if he objects to the juror's presence. Richardson v. Canada West Farmers' Ins. Co., 17 C. P. 341.

Challenge — Cause — Right to Trial — Witer—Bias of Jurors—Venue.]—At the trial of an action the defendant's counsel chalenged a juryman for cause. On the trial Judge stating that he did not think any cause was shewn, and that the counsel had better challenge peremptorily, the counsel did not claim the right to try the sufficiency of any cause against the impartiality of the juryman, but accepted the opinion of the Judge, and the juryman remained on the jury—Held, that on a motion for a new trial an objection to the juryman could not be entertained. The action was tried at Brantford, and a new trial was moved for at a place other than Brantford, because the jury there were biassed against defendant:—Held, that this formed no ground for a new trial. Wood v. McPherson, 17 O. R. 163.

— Evasion — Waiver of Objection.]
—New trial refused where it was discovered on the second day of the trial that one of the jury peculiarly obnoxious to the plaintiff, and whom he intended to challeuge, had been sworn by answering to another name; but the plaintiff chose to go on not-withstanding. Ham v. Lasher, 24 U. C. R. 533, note.

— Peremptory Challenges—Xumber of -Mistrial—Proceeding with Trial.]—The defendants, having delivered separate defences and being separately represented at the trial, claimed to be entitled under the Jurors' Act. R. S. O. 1887 c. 52, s. 110, to four peremptory challenges each, which though objected to by the plaintiff, was conceded by the Judge, and the defendants challenged six jurors between them, and the trial proceeded, resulting in a verdict for the defendants:—Held, upon motion by the plaintiff, that there had been mistrial, and the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial. Under the above section the defendants were only entitled to four peremptory challenges between them, and, innsmuch as the plaintiff took the objection at the time, he had not waived his right to complain by proceeding with the trial. Empey v. Carscallen, 24 O. R. 658.

Juror not Sworn.] — The court will not grant a new trial because one of the jurors has not been sworn, where no injustice is done thereby. Goose v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 17 O. R. 721.

Sheriff—Action against—Return of Jury—Coroner.]—The court refused to set aside a verdict against a sheriff upon the ground that the coroner's jury who tried the cause was the same as that returned by the sheriff, Pagne v. McLean, Tay. 325.

It is no objection, on the part of a sheriff in an action against him, that the jury have been summoned by himself, and not by the corner. Ainstie v. Rapelje, 3 U. C. R. 275.

Special Jury — Improver Striking — Waiver, J—Where a special jury was improperly struck, but defendant's attorney was present and made no objection:—Held, no ground for a new trial. Shipman v. Bermingham, 5 O. S. 442.

— Neglect to Summon — Irregularity —Waiver.]—Where, on a venire to a coroner, a special jury was struck, but the coroneneglected to summon them, and the cause was tried by a common jury, the defendant objecting, but afterwards entering into his defence, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict:—Held, that the verdict was irregular, and that the defence made under protest did not operate as a waiver. MeMartin v. Powcell, E. T. 3 Vict.

— Notice—Insufficiency,] — Defendant made no defence, because the Judge would not try the cause by a special jury, the notice for striking such jury being insufficient, and the verdict exceeded £300. The court granted a new trial, defendant having made a strong affidavit of merits, and the amount of the verdict being ordered to be paid into court, to stand as a security for the plaintiff. Bell v. Flintoft, 3 U. C. R. 122.

Summoning Jury—Relative of Party.]—
The court will not grant a new trial upon an objection to the jury having been summoned by a relative of either party, when the objection was known before the trial to the opposite party and waived. Power v. Ruttan, 5 O. S. 132.

2. Improper Influence.

Address of Counsel — Assertions not Supported by Evidence.]—Where a party expecting that a cause would be referred was unprepared with proper evidence at the trial, the court, without expressly recognizing this as a ground, granted a new trial, as they considered that the case had not gone fairly to the jury, and that the latter had been influenced by the assertions of counsel not sustained in evidence. Gott v. Ferris, 15 C. P. 295.

— Disregard of Charge.]—On a trial of a case in which the verdict had been twice set aside as against the weight of evidence, the jury were urged by counsel to take the same course that former juries had done, and, in effect, to disregard the Judge's charge. A similar verdict having been again rendered, the chief justice concurred in directing a new trial on account of this appeal made to the jury, although he would otherwise have felt disposed to let the verdict stand. Case v. Benneay, 18 U. C. R. 476.

Reference to Former Verdiet.]—It is no ground for setting aside a verdiet that the counsel merely referred to the verdiet of a former trial, expressing a hope that the jury would give the same verdiet as had been given before, but desisting when the allusion was objected to, unless the Judge who tried the cause is satisfied that the matter was pressed unfairly and with the view of exercising an improper, influence on the jury. Moore v. Boyd, 15 C. P. 574.

Communication with Jury Room—Refreshments.]—Where, after a verdict for the plaintiff, it was shewn that after the jury retired to consider their verdict communications had been made to them by persons out of the jury room; that they had been furnished with provisions and spirituous liquors by persons who were known to be friendly to the plaintiff, and that there was reason to believe that they had received an improper bias, a new trial was granted, with costs to abide the event. Armour v. Boscell, 6 O, 8, 352.

Conversation with Juror.]—The defendant, in conversation with one of the jury panel, but rot one of the jury called to try the case, said he hoped the jury would give the defendant the benefit of any doubt:—Held, not sufficient to justify the court in interfering with the verdict. Vanmere v. Farewell, 12 O. R. 285.

Exposure of Body to Jury—Evidence— Surgeon.] — See Sornberger v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 24 A. R. 263.

— Misconduct of Juror.] — In an action to recover damages for alleged malpractice the plannitif is not entitled to shew to the jury the part of the body in question for the purpose of enabling them to judge as to its condition. Sornberger v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 24 A. R. 203, approved and distinguished. Attempting to dissuade a witness from giving evidence is such misconduct on the part of a juror as would justify the granting of a new trial. Laughlin v. Harcey, 24 A. R. 438.

Interrupting Judge's Charge.]—The defendants objected that by reason of frequent interruptions and reading of text books by plaintif's counsel during the delivery of the Judge's charge injustice was done defendants, and the jury improperly influenced thereby:—Iteld, that this was a matter for the Judge at the trial, and it would have to be a very strong case for the court to interfere, the

Newspaper Comment—Proceeding with Trial,1—During the trial of an action for libel the defendants published in their newspaper a sensational article with reference thereto. The plaintiffs' solicitor was aware that the article had come to the hands of one or more of the jury, but did not bring the matter to the notice of the court, or take any action with respect to it, and proceeded with the trial to its close, when the jury brought in verdicts for the defendants. Upon a motion for a new trial upon the ground of improper conduct towards and undue influence upon the jury—Held, that the objection was too late. Tiffany v. McNec, Mctealf v. McNec, 24 O. R. 551.

Offer Made at Trial—Refusal to Sanction.]—Where an offer was made by defendants' counsel at the trial, which it was said was to be carried into effect without reference to the verdict, and the jury being influenced by the statement gave less damages than they might otherwise have done; the court, upon the refusal of defendants to sanction that offer, set aside the verdict, but with costs to abide the event, as no wilful intention to mislead the jury was imputed to the statement. Watson v. Gas Light Co., 5 U. C. R. 244.

Refreshments—Conversations.] —Where the plaintiff during the trial had conversation with members of the jury upon the subject of his case, and his brother and also his solicitor had treated some of them to "drinks "during the recess of the court, the verdict in the plaintiff's favour was set aside, and a new trial ordered. Stewart v. Woolman, 26 O. R. 714.

View—Misconduct of Parties.]—See Simonds v. Chesley, 20 S. C. R. 174.

Refreshments — Waiver of Objection.]—The day before the trial defendants applied to the Judge at nisi prius to order a view of the land in question, which was refused, as it lay in another county. Several of the special jury summoned to try the cause were then, on the same day, taken by defendants in a special train to view the land. Notice that they would be so taken had been given by defendants, who offered to take any one representing the plaintiff, but the plaintiff declined to take any part in the proceeding. The jury were provided by defendants with refreshments, and accompanied by M., the defendants' arbitrator, who, however, said he had no discussion of the case with them. The plaintiff's counsel, before the trial began, called this fact to the attention of the Judge, and protested, reserving his right to object:—Held, that the proceeding was improper and irregular. But that the plaintiff having submitted his case to the jury with full knowledge of it was precluded from objecting. Widder v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 24 U. C. R. 520.

3. Improper or Mistaken Verdict.

Affidavits.] — The affidavits of jurymen cannot be received to shew that there was a mistake in their verdict, unless the mistake also appear in the Judge's notes. Malloch v. Morris, T. T. 1 & 2 Vict.

The court will not act upon affidavits stating conversations with one of the jury, after the trial, respecting the grounds of their verdict. Jones v. Duff, 5 U. C. R. 143.

Affidavits of jurors, as to what passed in the jury room, will not be heard. Doe d. Hagerman v. Strong, 8 U. C. R. 291.

Upon motion for a new trial upon an information for conspiracy tried at nisi prius upon a record from the Queen's bench:—
Held, that affidavits made by some of the jurors that the jury were not unanimous, but believed that the verdict of the majority was sufficient, could not be received as ground for a new trial. Regina v. Fellonces, 19 U. C. R. 48.

In an action for overflowing land, where a verdict had ben found for plaintiff, the court refused a rule nist for a new trial, upon the affidavit of two jurors that they had examined the premises since the trial, and were satisfied that the verdict was incorrect, Purdon v. Plapfar. 20 U. C. H. 282.

amined the premises since the trial, and were satisfied that the verdict was incorrect. Purdon v. Plapfar, 20 U. C. R. 282. See Jamicson v. Harker, 18 U. C. R. 590; Morse v. Thompson, 19 C. P. 94; Farquhar v. Robertson, 13 P. R. 156; United States Express Co. v. Donahue, ib., note.

Scaled Verdict — Assent to — Costs.]—
The trial of an action for slander having been concluded, the court adjourned at 6 p.m., both parties agreeing to a scaled verdict. A scaled envelope was left with the sheriff's officer for the Judge, with a paper enclosed, signed by all the jurors, directing that the defendant should "pay the sum of $1 damages and the costs of the suitt'—Held, that on this being opened in court by the Judge next morning, the jury should have been called together, as the plaintiff's counsel required, to assent to the verdict, and have it recorded; and it having been simply indorsed on the record as written, a new trial was ordered without costs. Held, also, that the jury had no power to give costs by their verdict. Campbell v. Linton, 27 U. C. R. 563.

— Dissent as to Amount.]—On the trial of a cause in a county court it was agreed that a sealed verdict should be handed by the jury to the constable in charge of them, and that they should disperse to meet at the opening of the court the following morning. When the court opened, all the jurors answered to their names; the sealed verdict was then opened and read to them, "Verdict for the plannitiff, $120," and being asked if they confirmed it, they said they did so, one answering. The verdict was then recorded, and upon reading it as recorded, one juror said he had only agreed to $100:—Held, that, as the verdict must be unanimously delivered and recorded in open court, the juror dissenting before such recording rendered the verdict informal. Donaldson v. Hatey, 32 C. P. $7.

Mistake as to Partics.]—The jury, having agreed to render a sealed verdict, handed a letter under seal to the consable for the Judge, to whom it was taken at his residence. Upon opening and reading the enclosure, the Judge sent back a written memorandum that it would not do, and that they must find for either plaintiff or defendant. The jury then asked the constable which of the parties was plaintiff, and upon the sheriff being communicated with by the constable, he wrote upon a piece of paper that T., the defendant, was plaintiff, and one W. defendant. This paper he took to the jury, and at the same time told them that T. was and at the same time told them that T. was would find for T. Shortly afterwards a sealed letter was handed to the constable for the Judge, starting that they found for the plaintiff. The constable swore that he believed they intended to give a verdict for T., and the latter's attorney also swore, and was uncontradicted, that the first scaled letter stated that the deeds, upon which the plaintiff (M.) rested his claim, were void:—Held, that the verdict could not stand, and a new trial was, therefore, ordered, Quere, whether adidavits by the jurors as to their mistake ought to have been received in the court below. Morse v. Thompson, 19 C. P. 94.

Separation of Jurors.]—At the trial of an action for overflowing land, the jury were allowed to separate at the end of the first day, before the case was closed. After they had retired to consider their verdict next day, one juror was allowed to go out in charge of a constable, and on his return met the people coming out of the court house, who told him that the court was over and the jury dismissed for that day. He then went home, but was brought back by the constable in less than an hour, and came in with the rest of the jury in a short time to deliver the verdict for the defendants. He swore that during his absence he had had no conversation about the suit, and no misconduct was imputed to defendants in the matter. The court refused to disturb the verdict. O'Mullin v. Bishop, 20 U. C. R. 275.

that the counsel for P, had left the court before the Judge's charge, having authorized F, counsel for two other defendants, to take on his behalf any objections he might think proper to the charge. The jury, after hearing the Judge's charge, were allowed to separate and be at large from Saturday till Monday, before giving their verdiet, which was against the defendants P, and R,:—Held, reversing the decision in 7 O, R. 355, that such a proceeding could not be upheld except upon clear affirmative evidence of consent expressly and knowingly given; and therefore, where counsel for the defendant P. had left the court before the Judge's charge, and it did not appear that he had authorized any one to represent him or his client, or that any one had consented or assumed to consent on behalf of P. to the jury separating, a new trial as to P. was directed, Semble, that, had F, assumed to represent the counsel for P, in assenting to a separation of the jury, P, would have been bound to the same extent as if his own counsel had taken a similar course, contrary to instructions. Still-reell v. Rennic, 11 A, R, 724.

See Coleman v. City of Toronto, 23 O. R. 345.

4. Unsatisfactory Verdict.

Alteration of Verdict — Inconsistency.)—Where a jury found a verdict for the plaintiff and £5 damages, with a condition that each party should pay his own costs, and on the court having refused to receive this, they altered it to a verdict for defendant with the same condition, and sub-sequently, on that verdict being refused also, to an unconditional verdict being refused also, to an unconditional verdict for defendant, a new trial was granted without costs. McKay v. Lyons, 6 O. S. 507.

General Finding — Specific Finding — Evidence.]—Where the jury find negligence and then define the negligence to consist in doing certain acts, the court, if there is some evidence of negligence in other respects, may in their discretion order a new trial, although there is no evidence to support the specific indings. Judgment in 26 O. R. 732 affirmed. Cobban v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 23 A. R. 115.

Inconsistency with Concurrent Verdict. |-- Different verdicts having been rendered in two cases on the same evidence, the Gerea in two cases on the same evidence, the court granted a new trial, with costs to abide the event, in the case in which they considered the finding to be least supported. Wilson v. McNamara, 12 U. C. R. 446.

In an action for injuries caused by collision of steamers, the court had set aside a former verdict given for the plaintiff, as being against law and evidence. On a second trial the jury found again for the plaintiff; and at the same assizes the defendant obtained a verdict in a cross-action for the damage done to his steamer upon the same occasion. The court, under these circumstances, granted a second new trial in the first case, with costs to ablide the event. Gildersleeve v. Bonter, 13 U. C. R. 492.

with Inconsistency Former dict.]—Where a verdict in one action estab-lishes a conclusion directly inconsistent with the result of a former action, yet where the conflicting, the court right to insist on the verdict being found in the second as in the first action. Doe d. Burr v. Denison, 8 U. C. R. 610.

Where in ejectment by a purchaser at sheriff's sale the jury had found that the debtor was living when the fi. fa. bore teste, and therefore sustained the plaintiff's claim; and therefore sustained the plaintiff's claim; and, in a subsequent action by the debtor's widow for dower, damages were given for detention, on the ground that the husband died seised, the court refused, on account of this inconsistency, to set aside the verdict, which was not clearly against evidence. Cadman v. Strong, 10 U. C. R. 501.

Inconsistent Findings.] — See McQuay
v. Eastwood, 12 O. R, 402.

—— Inappreciable Damages.] — See Kerry v. England, [1898] A. C. 742.

Insufficient Findings.] — Held, that the evidence and the finding of the jury having left it in doubt whether the accident to the plaintiff's wife was the proximate cause of her death, and the jury not having been properly instructed as to the liability of the defendants under the circumstances, and the damages being, upon the evidence, excessive, the order of the court below for a new trial should be affirmed. Fork v. Canada Atlantic S. S. Co., 22 S. C. R. 167.

New trial on the ground that the jury had not properly answered some of the questions submitted. In other respects judgment in 27 N. S. Reps. 498 affirmed. Pudsey v. Dominion Atlantic R. W. Co., 25 S. C. R. 691.

Attantic R. W. Co., 25 S. C. R. 691. Sec Clarke v. Rama Timber Transport Co., 9 O. R. 68; Manitoba Free Press Co. v. Mar-tin, 21 S. C. R. 518; Canadian Pacific R. W. Co. v. Cobban Mfo. Co., 22 S. C. R. 132; Stevens v. Grout, 16 P. R. 210; McDermott v. Grout, ib. 215.

Misapprehension.]-Where a case has misapprehension. —Where a case has been properly submitted to the jury, and their findings upon the facts are such as might be the conclusions of reasonable men, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the jury misapprehended or misunderstood the evidence, notwithstanding that the trial Judge was dissatisfied with the verdict. Fraser v. Drew, 30 S. C. R. 241.

See post IX.

VII. MOTION FOR.

1. Affidavits.

Denial of Service or Retainer— Knowledge of Swit.]—In moving for a new trial, an affidavit by one of two defendants that he never was served with process or other paper in the cause, nor did any such writ or paper ever come to his knowledge: that he never, directly or indirectly, retained, employed, or authorized the attorney who apemployed, or althorized the attorized with a peared for both defendants to do so, is not sufficient. He should also have denied knowledge that such a suit was going on. Vaughan v. Ross. S U. C. R. 506.

How Sworn.]-A new trial was moved for by defendants on an affidavit sworn before the partner of defendants' attorney:—Held, that the rule must on that ground be discharged. White v. Petch, 6 U. C. R. 13.

Impeaching Veracity.]-Affidavits impeaching the character for veracity of adeponent, whose affidavit had been filed on moving the rule, were rejected. Clark v. Chipman, 26 U. C. R. 170.

Possible Witnesses - Costs.]-Semble. that on motion for a new trial affidavits of persons who might have been called as witnesses on the trial are inadmissible, and will not be allowed on taxation of costs. Anderson v. Anderson, 1 C. P. 344.

Supplying Evidence not Noted.]-The supplying Evidence not Noted. | The Judge omitted to note the evidence of an important fact, which he charged the jury was proved, and upon which their verdict was founded. Upon affidavit that such fact was true, the court refused a new trial. Winchester v. Cornell, Dra. 60.

Verdict-Mistake.]-Affidavits shewing a mistake in recording a verdict will be received as ground for a new trial, Jamieson v. Harker, 18 U. C. R. 590.

Wife of Party.]—An affidavit of the wife of a party to a cause could not be read on motion for a new trial. Henderson v. Wal-lace, E. T. 2 Vict.

See County Courts, IV. 2.

Effect of Appeal-Reopening Motion 1-In an action for negligence in not keeping a A rule nisi having been subsequently obtained to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, the court made it absolute to enter a nonsuit. peal this indgment was reversed (6 A. R. 181), but the court of appeal made no order as to that portion of the rule nisi in which a new trial was asked, leaving it to be disposed of by the court below:—Held, that the rule nisi was completely and finally disposed of, so far as this court was concerned, by the rule to enter a nonsuit, which the defendants, by taking it without asking for any reservation so far as regarded the new trial, had acquiesced in. regarded the new trial, had acquiesced in. Held, also, that the court of appeal have no power, under s. 23 of the Court of Appeal Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 28, to direct the court below to reopen the rule or reconsider the question whether, in their discretion, a new trial should be granted. Walton v. County of York, 32 C. P. 35.

Effect of Decision on Motion. |- If the judgment of a divisional court directing a new trial is not appealed against, the questions detrial is not appeared against, the questions de-termined by it cannot be reopened upon an appeal from the judgment at the second trial. Journal Printing Co. v. MacLean, 23 A. R.

Final Disposition of Action. |-Under rule 321, O. J. Act, the court may, upon mo-tion for judgment or for a new trial, if satis-fied that it has before it all the materials necessary for final determining the question in dispute . . . give judgment accordingly; but that power must be most sparingly and cautiously exercised. Stewart v. Rounds, 7 A. R. 515.

In an action for damages for negligence by a servant of a street railway company who was injured by a car striking him while he was at work upon the track, the jury assessed the plaintiff's damages at $500, but the trial was at the plaintiff's damages at $500, but the trust the plaintiff's damages at $600, but the trust Judge dismissed the action upon the ground that the plaintiff was the cause of his own misfortune. This judgment was affirmed by a divisional court, but reversed by the court of a divisional court, but reversed by the court of a divisional which ordered a new trial. The suappeal, which ordered a new trial. The su-preme court of Canada affirmed the decision of preme court of Canada affirmed the decision of the court of appeal, but, on counsei for the defendants stating that a new trial was not desired, ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff for $500. Hamilton Street R. W. Co. v. Moran, 24 S. C. R. 717. See Hardman v. Pulnam, 18 S. C. R. 714.

The court of appeal, having held one of the defendants, a sheriff, liable for the act of his officer, a co-defendant, instead of ordering a new trial to assess the damages against hew trial to assess the dallages against the sheriff, directed judgment to be entered against the sheriff for the nominal amount already assessed against his officer. Gordon v. Rumble, 19 A. R. 440.

In an action brought to recover damages for the loss of glass delivered to the defendants for the loss of glass delivered to the derinance for carriage, the Judge left to the jury the question of negligence only, reserving any other questions to be decided subsequently by himself. On the question submitted the jury disagreed. The defendants then moved in a divisional court for judgment, but pending such motion the plaintiffs applied for and obtained an order of the court allowing them to amend the statement of claim by charging other grounds of negligence. The defendants amend the statement of claim by charging other grounds of negligence. The defendants submitted to such order, and pleaded to such amendments, and new and material issues were thereby raised for determination. The action as so amended was entered for trial, but had not been tried when the divisional court pronounced judgment on the motion, dismissing the plaintiffs' action. On appeal to the court of appeal from this judgment of the the court of appeal from this judgment of the divisional court, it was reversed and a new trial ordered. On appeal to the supreme court:—Held, affirming the judgment of the court of appeal, that the action having been disposed of before the issues involved in the disposed of before the issues involved in the case, whether under the original or amended pleadings, had ever been passed upon or con-sidered by the trial Judge or the jury, a new trial should be ordered, and that this was not a case for invoking the power of the court, under rule 799, to finally put an end to the action. Held, also, that the judgment of the court of appeal ordering a new trial in this case was not a final judgment, nor did it come case was not a man judgment, nor did it come within any of the provisions of the Supreme Court Act authorizing an appeal from judgments not final. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co. v. Cobban Mfg. Co., 22 S. C. R. 132.

Interference.] - Where a new trial has been ordered to try certain questions of fact arising in an action, the order should not be interfered with by an appellate court. Scott v. Bank of New Brunswick, 21 S. C. R. 30.

 Discretion.] — The plaintiff, being in possession of land as tenant of H., was evicted by the defendant, who claimed under an overdue mortgage. A nonsuit was entered at the trial, on the ground that the defendant was at law entitled to possession, evidence of was it has entired to possession, evalence of equitable right to possession in the plaintiff having been refused. The court of Queen's bench in its discretion granted a new trial:— Held, that the court of appeal could not inter-fere. Robinson v. Hall, 6 A. R. 534.

3. Forum.

Divisional Court.] — Where there has been a trial by jury in an interpleader issue directed by the chancery division, an application for a new trial must be made to a divisional court, and not to a single Judge. Cole v. Campbell, 9 P. R. 498.

Judge in Court.] — A petition by the plaintiffs for leave to produce newly discovered evidence, and to reopen the case for its aded evidence, and to reopen the case for its ad-mission after the judgment of the court of chancery in favour of the defendants had been affirmed by the court of appeal and the su-preme court of Canada, was brought on for hearing before a single Judge in court:—Held, that, as the application might before the O. J. Act have been made to a single Judge, and as there is no provision in that Act specially applicable to the subject, the original practice of the court remains, and the application was properly made to a single Judge. Synod v. DeBlaquiere, 10 P. R. 11. Trial Judge.] — An application to open the case and put in further evidence, and for a new trial upon fresh evidence, or for leave to bring a new action upon a part of the original claim founded upon such evidence, is properly made to the Judge who heard the original cause. Bank of British North America V, Western Assurance Co., 11 P. R. 434.

— Persona Designata.]—53 Vict. c, 4, 8. S5 (N.B.), relating to proceedings in equity, provides that in an equity suit "either party may apply for a new trial to the Judge before whom the trial was held;"—Held, that such application need not be made before the individual before whom the trial was had, but could be made to a Judge exercising the same jurisdiction. Therefore, where the Judge in equity who had tried a case resigned his office, an application for a new trial could be made to his successor. Footner v. Figes, 2 Sim. 319, followed. Bradshaw v. Baptist Forcign Mission Board, 24 S. C. R. 351.

See Norton v. McCabe, 12 P. R. 506.

4. Rule Nisi or Notice of Motion.

Statement of Grounds.] — The words "on the ground of misdirection," in a rule nisi for a new trial, do not comply with the C. L. P. Act of 1856. Montgomery v. Dean, 7 C. P. 513.

Several objections to the plaintiff's claim under a chattel mortgage were taken at the trial and overruled. A rule nisi was afterwards obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the mortgage, "together with the several renewals thereof, and the statements, papers, and affidavits to the same respectively attached, and all proceedings had and taken thereunder, are informal and irregular, and not according to the Consolidated Statutes of Upper Canada:"—Held, that the grounds of Opper Canada: "Held, that the grounds of objection were insufficiently stated. Strange v. Dillon, 22 U. C. R. 223.

It is a sufficient statement of the grounds to say that the verdict is against law and evidence, without stating in what manner it is contrary to the evidence. Cameron v. Milloy, 14 C. P. 340.

It is insufficient in a rule nisi to ask for a new trial for misdirection and nondirection, and on the ground of improper rejection of evidence and improper admission of evidence. The objections must be more specifically stated. McDermott v. Ireson, 38 U. C. R. 1.

Semble, on motion for a new trial after argument the court will allow a new ground to be taken by the party moving if the justice of the case require it. Vary v. Muirhead, 2 O. S. 121.

In a rule nisi for a new trial for the admission of improper evidence, it is not sufficient to state merely that improper evidence has been admitted, but the evidence objected to should be specified, and the objection should be taken at the trial. Crandell q. t. v. Nott. 30 C. P. 63.

In moving against the ruling of the Judge at the trial with respect to the reception or rejection of evidence, or on the ground that he has misdirected the jury, it is still necessary to state the grounds in the notice of motion or rule. Scott v. Crerar, 11 O. R. 541. See Furlong v. Reid, 12 P. R. 201.

Taking out and Serving Rule—Delay.}
—See Mulholland v. County of Grey. 23 U. C.
R. 517: Lyman v. Snarr, 3 P. R. 85; Campbell v. Keppt, 2 C. L. J. 131; Smith v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 33 U. C. R. 529.

5. Several Defendants.

In trespass a verdict against four was allowed to stand in favour of three, and a new trial granted in favour of the fourth. Davis v. Moore, 2 U. C. R. 180.

The plaintiffs such A., B., and C. on a joint contract: B. allowed judgment to go by default. Plaintiffs, failing to prove a joint contract, accepted a nonsuit as to B. and C., and took a verdict against A. A moved in term to set the verdict aside. B. and C. were not made parties to the rule, which the court made absolute. The order was not served on B. and C., nor did they adopt nor act upon it. B. and C. afterwards entered judgment on the nonsuit:—Held, that B. and C., not being parties to the rule nisi, were not bound by the order made thereon, unless they could be shewn to have been served with it, or to have adopted or acted upon it. Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 4 U. C. R. 167.

Where in trespass a verdict has been found against one defendant and for the others, the court will not grant the former alone a new trial. Davis v. Lennon, S U. C. R. 599.

The application must be for a new trial against all, and the consent of those acquitted must be obtained or the rule nisi served upon them. Ward v. Murphy, 11 U. C. R. 445.

Only one defendant in trover having pleaded, and the other having suffered judgment by default, the court ordered a new trial, where it appeared that, although the rule was moved as on behalf of one defendant only, the other assented to, the application. Kerr v. Gordon, 9 U. C. R. 249.

In an action against makers and indorsers of a note, it is not necessary that all defendants should concur in an application for a new trial. Maulson v. Arrol, 11 U. C. R. 81.

In such action a new trial was granted as to one defendant, leaving the verdict to stand as to the other. Hanscome v. Cotton, 15 U. C. R. 42.

Where several defendants were convicted upon an information charging them with conspiracy, a new trial if granted must be to all. Regina v. Fellonces, 19 U. C. R. 48.

In trespass and trover against five defendants, for taking and converting a steam boiler, it appeared that one defendant, P., had nothing to do with the original taking, but that it had been placed in his yard by the others, or by some of them, not acting in concert with him, and that he had afterwards refused to give it up to the plaintiff. At the trial the plaintiff's counsel declined to elect, but went to the jury against all the defendants, claiming exemplary damages, and a general verdict was rendered. The court ordered a new trial without costs, and refused to allow the verdict to stand against P. alone. Menton v. Lec. 30 U. C. R. 281.

G. Several Issues or Counts.

Where plaintiff has a general verdict, to which on the merits as proved he is clearly entitled, the court will not grant a new trial merely because defendant is entitled on technical grounds on some issues, not involving the whole cause of action. Helliwell v. Eastwood, 5 O. S. 104.

Where upon some issues the jury found no verdict, a new trial was granted without costs. Lynett v. Parkinson, 1 C. P. 144.

Where there are several issues and a general verdict for the plaintiffs, which does not dispose of them, the court will grant a new trial. McMartin v. Graham, 2 U. C. R. 365.

Where defendant has a verdict against him on some issues, and in his favour on others, the court will not on his application grant a new trial on the former only. Elwood v. Cameron, 17 U. C. R. 528.

Where there were several counts, on which the jury gave separate damages, but the verdict was entered generally for the whole amount assessed, the court confirmed the finding as to the counts on which plaintiff was entitled to recover, and directed a new trial as to the others. Ainstie v. Ray, 21 C. P. 152.

7. Time for Making Motion.

The following cases refer to the necessity for moving within the first four days of term, and are now obsolete.—Orer v. Stickler, Tay, 42; Bank of Montreal v. Bethune, 4 O. 8, 303; White v. Church, 4 U. C. R. 23; Bens v. Storer, 12 U. C. R. 623; Kitchin v. Melntyre, 16 C. P. 484; Hood v. Harbour Commissioners of Gity of Toronto, 33 U. C. R. 148; Rooney v. Rooney, 29 C. P. 347, 4 A. R. 255; Mitchell v. Mulholland, 14 C. L. J. 55.

S. Other Cases.

Cause List.]—Semble, that the court may direct Crown cases to stand in the new trial paper for argument, with ordinary suits between party and party. Regina v. Sinaott, 27 U. C. R. 539.

VIII. OBJECTIONS NOT TAKEN AT THE TRIAL.

In What Cases New Trial Granted—Waiver.]—Objections not taken at nisi prius will not in general be entertained on motion for a new trial. Hall v. Shannon, E. T. 2 Vict., R. & J. 2577; McJlahon v. Campbell, 2

U. C. R. 158; Manners v. Boulton, 6 O. S. 663; Doc d. Marrough v. Maybee, 2 U. C. R. 389; Stephens v. Allan, 2 U. C. R. 282; Corner v. McKinnon, 4 U. C. R. 350; Jones v. Duff, 5 U. C. R. 143; Kennedy v. Freeth, 23 U. C. R. 92.

Where in trespass for assault and battery, defendant pleaded molliter manus impositi in defence of possession, and the plaintiff replied de injuria:—Held, on a motion for a new trial, that the plaintiff was at liberty to shew that, that the plaintiff was at liberty to shew that the plaintiff was at liberty to shew that the plaintiff was at liberty to she with the plaintiff was at liberty to she with the plaintiff was not proved, although lish he had the might be not a liberty at liberty and that he might be a liberty at liberty at liberty and that he might be a liberty at libe

Where the objection was not made when the plaintiff closed his case, but merely by way of an objection to an observation of the Judge when charging the jury, the court will not admit the objection in term. Turkey v. Grafton Road Co., S. U. C. R., 579.

The point suggested in the argument not having been taken at the trial, a new trial was granted, with costs to abide the event, Merner v. Klein, 17 C. P. 287; Paton v. Curric, 19 U. C. R. 388. And on payment of costs. Griffiths v. Welland Canal Co., M. T. 2 Vict.

The court will not raise an objection against the merits, not taken by defendant's counsel. McGregor v. Daly, 5 C. P. 126.

The objection that no notice of action was necessary not having been taken at the trial:
—Held, that it could not be raised in term.
Armstrong v. Bouces, 12 C. P. 539.

The rule is the same in criminal as in civil cases, at any rate where the prisoner is defended by counsel, that any objection to the charge of the presiding Judge, either for non-direction or for misdirection, must be taken at the trial, and if not then taken it cannot be afterwards raised, especially where the evidence fully sustains the verdict. Regina v. Flick, 16 C. P. 379.

Where the point suggested on the argument that S. being an infant, could not be primarily liable, and defendant must be, was not taken at the trial, the court granted a new trial; costs to abide the event. Mcrner v. Klein, 17 C. P. 287.

A new trial was refused, when the ruling of the Judge at the trial was not objected to, or his attention called to the distinction insisted on between replevin and trespass under the plea. Fitzpatrick v. Casselman, 29 U. C. R. 5.

At a trial of an action for obstructing a public way, the defendant must shew some substantial damage peculiar to himself, beyond that suffered by the rest of the public who use the way. The plaintiff proved no such damage beyond being obliged in common with every one else who attempted to use the way to pursue his journey by a less direct road. Defendant raised no objection on the ground that the plaintiff had shewn no damage peculiar to himself, but denied the existence of the alleged highway, and the jury found in his favour:—Held, that he might nevertheless support his verdict on this ground, it being to $1,000. Ontario Copper Lightning Rod Co. gon, 22 C. P. 491.

F. was added as plaintiff at a trial of ejectment, defendant objecting that this could not be done in his absence, and without his consent in writing, but F. was afterwards examined as a witness, and no question asked as to his consent:—Held, that the objection could not be entertained in term. Henderson v. White, 23 C. P. 78.

A new trial granted on payment of costs to enable defendant to raise objections to a tax sale, not sufficiently taken at the trial, the sale having been supported against the only objection properly taken. Austin v. Arm-strong, 28 C. P. 47.

The action at the trial was treated as one for malicious arrest, and in that view a non-suit was entered. In term it was argued that the action was really one of trespass, and that the whole case should have been left to the jury as such, but the court held that it was too late to urge this. Donnelly v. Bau-dea, 40 U. C. R. 611.

Remarks as to objections taken in the rule, but not appearing in the Judge's notes. Re-gina v. Desjardins Canal Co., 27 U. C. R. 374.

In a penal action against defendant for acting as a justice without sufficient property qualification it was urged in term that the jury in their finding had treated the defendant as the sole owner of a certain part of the property, whereas it was owned by himself and son as tenants in common, and that his moiety was not of sufficient value. At the trial the deed to the father and son was simply that the deed to the lather and son was simply produced, without the point as to the tenancy in common being taken, and it was proved that the son had afterwards joined with the father in a mortgage of the land:—Held, that the objection could not be entertained, for if taken at the trial such an explanation might taken at the trial such an explanation that there have been given as would have shewn that there was no foundation for it; but, even if such ownership did exist, the question of value become the such that the assumed that ownership did exist, the question of value being for the jury, it could not be assumed that in estimating such value they had disregarded the point. Crandell q. t. v. Nott, 30 C. P.

Waiver of Objections to the Jury.]-See ante VI.

IX. PARTICULAR ACTIONS.

1. Defamation.

Libel-Excessive Damages.]-In an action for libel, the imputations being of a very slanderous character, and a justification pleaded which was not attempted to be proved, the verdict being for £200, the court refused a new trial for excessive damages, though they would have been much better satisfied with a smaller verdict. Gfroerer v. Hoffman, 15 U. C. R. 441.

The jury assessed the damages in a libel suit at $4,000, but the court, being of opinion that, under the circumstances, the damages were excessive, directed a new trial unless the plaintiffs would consent to reduce the verdict

Weight of Evidence. 1-In an action Weight of Evidence. —In an action for a libel published in a newspaper against the plaintiff in his professional capacity as town engineer, &c., a verdict for defendant on evidence preponderating greatly in plaintiff's favour, was set aside on payment of costs, Peters v. Wallace, 5 C. P. 238.

In actions of libel new trials granted merely on the ground that the verdict is against evidence and the weight of evidence. It is for the jury to say whether alleged defamatory matter published is a libel or not, and the widest latitude is given to them in dealing with it. Wills v. Carman, 15 A. R. 695.

Slander — Excessive Damages.] — The charge had been that the plaintiff took medicine to procure abortion:—Held, that the damages (£100) though large, were not, un-der the circumstances, excessive. Miller v. Houghton, 10 U. C. R. 348.

The plaintiff sued his stepmother for slan-The plaintiff sued his stepmother for slander, in having said of him that when his father was ill, he and his sister went into his bedroom and gave him a drug, after which he went into a doze and never recovered, and that the plaintiff and his sister had killed him. There was another count for charging the plaintiff with having robbed defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff and defendant were not on friendly terms, arising out of the defendant's marriage with arising out of the defendant's marriage with the plaintiff's father: that the defendant was a garrulous old lady, prone to talk of the family difficulties; and that the words alleged were spoken when the plaintiff's brother-in-law and another person went to see her to get her to sign a release of dower. The defendant denied having charged any criminal offence, and it appeared that the plaintiff, who was a medical student, had administered some medi-cine to his father shortly before his death. There was no proof of any actual damage; but the jury gave $500:—Held, that the verdict was excessive; and, the trial Judge being dissatisfied with it on this ground, a new trial was ordered unless the plaintiff would reduce it to $100. Cook v. Cook, 36 U. C. R. 553.

-Excessive Damages-Evidence.]-Slander for accusing the plaintiff of lareny; verdict for £150. The court refused a new trial either on the ground of excessive damages or that one of the principal witnesses for ages or that one of the principal witnesses for the plaintiff was shortly after the trial con-victed of forgery and sentenced to banish-ment. Eakins v. Evans, 3 O. S. 383.

Excessive Damages—Innuendo.]—
The words charged were spoken at an election with reference to plaintiff's qualification, a matter in which defendant had an interest. a matter in wince defendant had an interest, and on which it is of consequence to encourage freedom of discussion. The evidence was doubtful as to the sense in which they were used, and the damages large, £150. The court granted a new trial on payment of costs. Swan v. Clelland, 13 U. C. R. 335.

Inadequate Damages.]-New trial refused in slander, where damages were com-plained of as too small. Atkins v. Thornton, Dra. 239; Doe d. Proctor v. Allen, T. T. 2 & 3 Vict. slander charging theft, the verdict was for the plaintiff for £5, and the court considered the evidence was properly left to the jury, although they would have been better satisfied with a verdict for defendant, a new trial was refused. Nodan v. Tipping, 7 C. P. 524.

Words not Actionable—Nominal Damages—Arrest of Judgment. — Words imputing to the plaintiff the having taken a false oath, but not in any judicial proceedings, or on any occasion where it would be an offence in law, are not actionable: but where the jury on such a charge gave £2 10s, damages, the court refused a new trial in order to give defendant his costs, but arrested the judgment. Hoghe v. Hoghe, 16 U. C. R. 518.

2. Ejectment.

Evidence—Deced—Inte of, 1—A new trial granted in ejectment with costs to abide the event, where there was reason to doubt upon the evidence whether the deed under which plaintiff claimed was not executed after the issuing of the writ. Bartels v. Benson, 21 U. C. R. 443.

— Secondary—Lackes.1—The plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, having slept upon his rights for nearly twenty years, and the jury having found for the defendant upon secondary evidence of deeds and papers, the court refused to interfere. Heany v. Parker, 27 U. C. R. 509.

Suspicious Circumstances.] — In ejectment, where plaintiff had been out of possession more than forty years, and had asserted no right, but declared that he owned no land in the township, and the deed under which he cinimed had a suspicious appearance, the jury having found in his favour, a new trial was granted. Ketchum v. Mighton, 14 U. C. R. 90

Forfeiture to Crown — Affidavits — Costs, 1—It was shewn by affidavits, in moving for a new trial in ejectment, that the plaintiff had in fact been attainted for treason, and the land in question forfeited to the Crown, and on this ground the court granted the defendant a new trial on payment of costs, Butter v. Donaldson, 12 U. C. R. 255.

Inconclusiveness — Affidavits.]—A new trial refused in ejectment, the affidavits not being sufficiently explicit, and the court stating that the defendant could bring an action to recover back possession. Doe d. Brown v. Frascr, 4 O. S. 371.

— Merits,]—The court will not necessarily grant a new trial in ejectment on the merits, the verdict not being conclusive upon the parties, Doe d. Stansfield v. Whitney, Tay, 130.

Mortgage—Usury,1—The court will not grant a new trial to enable a mortgagor, plaintiff in ejectment, to shew his own deed void for usury, and thus eject a stranger who sets up as a defence a mortgage to a third party. Doe d. McBernie v. Lundy, 1 U. C. R. 186. Part of Lot—General Verdict—Injunction.]—The jury having found a general verdict for the plaintiff in ejectment, though the defendant was in fact entitled to the part he had cleared—Held, not ground for a new trial, but for an application to restrain the plaintiff from taking possession of such part. Ferrier v. Moodie, 12 U. C. R. 379.

— New Trial as to — Discretion.] — The court has power to grant a new trial as to half of a lot of land, allowing a verdict to stand as to the other half, when the granting of such new trial is in the discretion of the court; and this in ejectment. When the new trial is ordered ex debito justitiae, the whole record is thrown open; and this will be done in ejectment, unless defendant consents to a verdict standing for such portion of the land as the plaintiff has failed to prove title to. McNab v. Stewart, 15 C. P. 189.

Possession—Evidence of — Conflict.]—In ejectment defendant claimed by length of possession by herself and ancestor. The evidence as to her possession being continuous was conflicting, and for part of the time it appeared to have been by such acts as keeping the key of the house, and leaving upon the premises one or two triding articles, with an occasional return to the place. The whole case was left to the jury on the evidence, the Judge charging that he could not say there had not been a keeping of possession shewn. It appeared that, in any event, the most the defendant could recover would be a very inconsiderable portion of the land in question, and there had been already two verdicts against her. The court refused a second new trial. Lewis v. Kelly, 17 C. P. 250.

Third New Trial.]—A third new trial in ejectment refused, though the court thought the evidence strongly preponderated against the verdict. Doe d. Harris v. Benson, 3 U. C. R. 164.

3. Interpleader,

Absence of Counsel — Affidavit—Merits — dests.]—In an interpleader issue, the verdice having been taken in the absence of defendants' counsel and attorney, the court granted a new trial, without requiring the usual affidavit disclosing fully the merits, holding that there was not the same necessity for such affidavit in an interpleader as in other cases. The attorney, who was also counsel in the case, not having satisfactorily excused his absence, the relief was granted only on payment of costs by him within a month. Vidal v. Bank of Upper Canada, 24 U. C. R. 430; 8. C., 15 C. P. 421.

Absence of Defendant—Affidavit—Explanation—Merits—Belief.]—A verdict having been taken in an interpleader suit in the absence of defendant, upon a clear primā facie case, defendant, upon a motion for a new trial, swore that he had not information of the trial coming on in time to be present, and his attorney swore that from information obtained from the plaintiff's brother he verily believed the defendant had a good defence on the merits:—Held, not sufficient, without shewing facts upon which his belief was founded; and sufficient cause for his absence not being shewn, a new trial was refused, Proudfoot v, Harley, 11 C. P. 389.

Division Court—Perjury at New Trial—
Illegality.]—The clerk of a division court, acting under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 53, s. 102, issued an interpleader summons of his own authority, the court was a summon of his own authority which the bailiff's request. Both parties attended the fore a barrister appointed by the Judge of the court, who was ill, and another was made. The Judge afterwards to be a summon of the control of the court of the court was convicted for perjury committed having appeared, the proceedings in the first own of the control of the considered void for want appeared the proceedings in the first offer that the previous application by the bailift; but that it was not competent for the Judge to order such new trial, the first order being made final by the statute; and that the conviction was therefore illegal. Regina v. Proty, 13 U. C. R. 338.

Evidence—Weight of—Trifling Amount.]
—Where on an interpleader issue the amount in dispute was $60.40 only, and a verdict was given for the claimant, which the Judge of the county court who tried the issue was satisfied with, the court refused a new trial, although they thought that if the case had originally come before them for trial on the same evidence, their opinion might have been against the claimant. Gourley v. Ingram, 2 Ch. Ch. 366.

Feigned Issue—Jurisdiction—Forum.]—A common law Judge has no power, unless when given him by a statute, to direct a feigned issue to be tried by a jury; the most he can do is to refer the parties to the full court for the required relief, or perhaps to grant a summons returnable in court. As he cannot grant a new trial in such issue himself, so he cannot, by creating a proceeding of the kind, confer this jurisdiction upon the court, which will therefore refuse to interfere. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 15 C. P. 182.

See Cole v. Campbell, 9 P. R. 498, ante VII. 3.

4. Malicious Arrest or Prosecution.

Damages—Evidence—Trifting Amount.]—
In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment in the division court, it appeared that the defendant, when he made the affidavit, was aware that the plaintiff was then actually in prison. For the defence it was shewn that the goods attached were eventually sold under executions against the plaintiff, and therefore no substantial damage was suffered. The court, however, refused a new trial on this ground, the verdict being small. Ouens v. Purcell, 11 U. C. R. 390.

Evidence—Question for Jury.]—In an action for malicious arrest, the jury found for the plaintif £75. The court, although not altogether satisfied with the verdict, refused a new trial, there being evidence sufficient to unhold it, the question being one entirely within their province. Know v. Cleveland, S. C. P. 176.

— Weight of—Judge's Charge.]—Upon an action brought for malicious arrest, where the jury, notwithstanding strong evidence for defendant, and the Judge's charge in his fayour, found for the plaintiffs, the court set aside the verdict and granted a new trial without costs. Scanlon v. McDonagh, 8 C. P. 82.

—Weight of—Judge's Charge—Costs.]
—In an action for malicious arrest on a criminal charge, though the Judge charged strongly for the plaintiff, and the evidence appeared to be strongly in his favour, the court refused to interfere with a verdict for defendant, but would not give defendant the costs of the application. Miller v. Ball, 19 C. P. 447.

Excessive Damages. |—The damages, in an action for maliciously suing out an attachment, being, in the opinion of the court, excessive, a new trial was ordered unless the plaintiff would consent to reduce the vertict to a sum specified. Hood v. Cronkite, 29 U. C. R. 18.

Action for malicious prosecution. $1,000 damages. New trial refused. Appleton v. Lepper, 20 C. P. 138.

— Amendment—Costs,] — Action for malicious prosecution; verdict for $1,000. The court, considering the damages excessive, allowed the insertion of a count in trespass in Euro of that in case, if the plaintiff would consent to reduce the verdict to $300; and if not, granted a new trial on payment of costs, with leave to the plaintiff to amend. Munroe v. Abbott, 39 U. C. R. 78.

Was of opinion that the damages given, $3.000, in an action for malicious prosecution, were excessive, and directed, subject to the plain-tiff's acceptance, that they be reduced to $1-000, absolutely, and to $500 if such sum and the costs of the action were paid before lst June; but in the event of the plaintiff refusing to accept the proposed terms, then there should be a new trial on payment of costs by defendant. Crandall v. Crandall, 30 C. P. 491.

Grounds for Arrest — Suspicion—Misdirection.]—Though the court, in an action for a malicious arrest, thought a verdict for the defendant would have been more proper, yet, as no clear ground had been shewn by defendant for the suspicion sworn to, and there was no misdirection, they refused a new trial. Davis v. Fortune, 6 U. C. R. 281.

Inadequacy of Damages.]—In an action for maliciously causing the arrest of the plaintiff as a lunatic, the jury found that the defendant acted maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, but they gave a verdict for only one shilling. A new trial was granted for smallness of damages. Dobbyn v. Decon., 25 C. P. 18.

Malice—Absence of—Nominal Damages.]
—In an action for a malicious arrest under a ca. re., the plaintiff gave general evidence of his solvency, &c.; no malice was proved on the part of the defendant; the defendant spound he had arrested, and the jury found nominal damages of les, for the plaintiff. A rule obtained for a new trial on the evidence, was, under the circumstances, discharged, Lyons v. Kelly, 6 U. C. R. 278.

Several Trials—Wrong Verdict—Special Jury.] — The court refused to set aside a fourth verdict for plaintiff for malicious arrest, although wrong, alleging as one reason that defendant should at least have obtained a special jury. Smith v. McKay, 11 U. C. R. 111

Want of Probable Cause — Judge's Charge,]—Where in an action for a malicious arrest on a ca. re., the Judge was of opinion that want of probable cause had not been shewn, and charged the jury strongly to that effect, but still did not peremptorily direct them to find for defendant, the court granted a new trial without costs. Tyler v. Babington, 4 U. C. R. 202.

5. Negligence.

Evidence — Failure of — Solicitors.] — Plaintiff obtained a verdiet against attorneys for negligence in not having procured the attendance of witnesses stated to be material at a trial between plaintiff and another, in which plaintiff failed. It did not appear, however, that the evidence of such witnesses would have procured a different result, and defendants leading counsel at the trial in question had decided upon proceeding without such evidence. On these grounds a new trial was granted. Wade v. Ball. 20 C. P. 302.

dict.]—Ire — Origin—Unsatisfactory Verdict.]—In an action against defendants for neglizently allowing combustible matter, brush, &c., to be on their track, whereby a fire was sussed upon it from defendants' engines and spread to the plaintiff's land, &c., the evidence shewed that the track was in such a state, but it did not clearly appear how the fire originated, or that the state of the track caused the injury to plaintiff's land. The fury havired the case being dissatisfied with the verial type of the plaintiff, and the Judge who tried the case being dissatisfied with the verial type of the plaintiff, and the Judge who will be such as the plaintiff, and the Jud weight of 1—Action by plaintiff, a passenger in defendant's steamer, for refusing to stop at a wharf in the ordinary way, whereby plaintiff was injured in jumping ashore. Verdict for defendant against the weight of evidence. New trial granted. Cameron v. Mitloy, 14 C. P. 340.

Action for negligence in driving a sleigh and horses against the plaintiff. It appeared that the driver to get better sleighing had turned off the road to follow a track along the ditch at one side, and that in coming up again the sleigh upset, and the horses running away overtook and ran against the plaintiff. The passengers in the sleigh which was upset acquitted the driver of any negligence; but another witness, who was near at the time, said that he thought, if more care had been used in coming up, the accident would not have happened. The jury having found for the plaintiff, a new trial was granted. Robinson v. Bletcher, 15 U. C. R. 159.

Weight of — Collision — Statutory Lights.]—Case for injury caused by collision of steamboats at night. Verdict for plaintiff: —Held, that sufficient weight had not been given to the fact that plaintiffs boat was without the lights required by statute, and a new trial was granted to determine whether the accident was attributable to such default, in which case the plaintiff could not recover. Gildersleeve v. Bonter, 12 U. C. R. 489.

Weight of—Expect Testimony.]—Action against a railway company for neightgenee in the construction of their line, owing to which an embaukment zave way. Verdiet for plaintiff, though several of the most embaukment was properly and skiffully constructed, and the jury were cautioned against valuing such evidence lightly. Rule for a new trial on the weight of evidence discharged. Braid v. Great Western R. W. Co., 10 C. P. 137; Great Western R. W. Co., 10 C. P. 137; Great Western R. W. Co., 0 Canada v. Braid, 1 Moo. P. C. N. S. 101, 9 Jur. N. S. 339.

Weight of — Question for Jury.]— Action for injury received by plaintiff, a passenger in defendant's stage, through negligent driving and overloading. The fact of negligence was left fully to the jury, and they found for defendant, who had offered after action brought to pay £25 and costs, which was reasonable compensation. The court, though they would have been better satisfied with a verdict for plaintiff, refused to interfere, Kenny v. Cook, 4 U. C. R. 208.

Action on marine policy. Issue as to the negligence of captain and crew in navigating the vessel, by which the loss was alleged to have been caused. Verdict for defendant, New trial refused on the evidence. Gillespie v. British North America Fire and Life Assurance Co., 7 U. C. R. 108.

Action for injury to plaintiff, a passenger in defendants' cars, caused by an axle breaking. Verdict for plaintiff. New trial refused. Thatcher v. Great Western R. W. Co., 4 C. p. 5,47

Excessive Damages — Bodily Injury.]—Action for injury to plaintiff, a deck hand on a vessel, by defendants allowing their wharf to be out of repair. The plaintiff's leg was broken, he was for five months disabled, and suffered much pain; and it seemed that the leg would never be as serviceable as before. The jury gave £250, the full amount laid in the declaration. New trial refused. Johnson v. Port Dover Harbour Co., 17 U. C. R. 151.

Action by husband and wife for injury alleged to be caused to the wife by defendants' neglect to have a railing or guard along an embankment on a leading highway. Verdict for 82,500. New trial granted on payment of costs, unless the plaintiffs would reduce the verdict to 81,250. Toms v. Township of Whitby, 35 U. C. R. 195.

Costs.] — Action for bodily injury caused to plaintiff by defendants' negligence in carrying plaintiff. Damages assessed at £6,178. New trial granted for excessive damages, on the ground that the jury had not exercised a sound discretion, on payment of costs, and on payment of £500 into court, with leave to plaintiff to accept without prejudice. Batchelor v. Buffalo and Brantford R. W. Co., 5 C. P. 127.

Injury to Property.] — $325 damages:—Held, not excessive in an action against a municipal corporation for improper construction of a drain, by which plaintiff's cellar had been overflowed, putting him to much inconvenience for several months. Recees v. City of Toronto, 21 U. C. R. 157.

ing given $2,000 damages in an action by plaintiff for injuries sustained by him when a passenger on defendants' railway, the evidence as to the injury being very loose, and no medical evidence having been called, the court granted a new trial on payment of costs, Watson v. Northern R. W. Co., 24 U. C. R. 98.

— Solicitors—Omission.] — Plaintiff. being about to invest some money, employed defendants as his solicitors to take security upon two lots of land, one of which they omitted from the mortgage. The value of the lot omitted was not more than $800, while the verdict was $2,600. A new trial was granted. Phelps v. Witson, 13 C. P. 38.

6. Penal Actions.

Absence of Witness—Nonsuit.]—A new trial was refused where plaintiff had been nonsuited owing to the absence of a material witness, the action being of a penal character against a magistrate. Stinson v. Scollick, 2 O. S. 217.

Documents — Non-production — Subsequent Discovery, 1--Where, in a qui tam action for usury, the plaintiff was nonsuited for not producing certain promissory notes in the negotiation of which the usury had taken place, the only evidence offered to account for their non-production having been a letter that they were not to be found in the office of the Judge's clerk, where it was sworn they had been field—the court refused to set aside the nonsuit, upon affidavit that they had been found since the trial. Root q. t. v. Woodward, 1 U. C. R. 311.

Evidence — Weight of—Overvaluation of Property,—In a penal action, where the jury find for defendant, a new trial will not be granted merely because the verdict may be deemed to be against the evidence or weight of evidence; but it is otherwise where the verdict is in contravention of the law, arising either from the misdirection of the Judge, or from a misapprehension of the law by the jury, or from a desire on their part to take the law into their own hands. Where, therefore, in a gui tam action against a justice of the peace for acting without the necessary qualification, which is looked upon as a penal action, the jury, though greatly overvaluing the property, found for the defendant, but none of the above considerations arose, a new trial was refused. Crandell q. t. v. Noti, 30 c. P. 63.

7. Seduction.

Defendant's Means.] — A defendant in seduction is not to be prejudiced in an application for a new trial because his counsel has examined him as to his means, after having endeavoured to exclude such evidence. Fergusion v. Veitch, 45 U. C. R. 160.

See Adair v. Wade, 9 O. R. 15; Udy v. Stewart, 10 O. R. 591.

See also title SEDUCTION.

8. Other Actions and Matters.

Absconding Debtor—Collusion—Attack by Attaching Creditor — Abandoment of New Trial — Costs.] — In an action under the Absconding Debtors' Act, upon a motion by an attaching creditor, upon affidavits which shewed fraud and collusion between the plaintiff and defendant to the prejudice of the other creditors of the defendant, a new trial as granted. One M., an attaching creditor of defendants, applied for a new trial of this cause, which was granted on payment of costs. The rule was taken out, but never served, and subsequently M. gave plaintiff, notice that he had abandoned it. On application by plaintiff, on notice to M., to shew cause why said rule should not be discharged, with costs to be paid by M.:—Held, that the application by M. was in the nature of a collateral proceeding, and though he might, when voluntarily seeking the aid of the court, have been ordered to pay the costs of opposing the rule which he had obtained, he could not now be ordered to pay the costs of opposing the rule which he had obtained, he could not now be ordered to pay the cases of opposing the rule which he had obtained, he could not now be ordered to pay the cases of opposing the rule which he had obtained, he could not now be ordered to pay the same when brought before the court by compulsion, and not being a party to the record. Lawis v. Baker, 13 C. P. 506, 14 C. P. 336.

— Return.]—An absconding debtor returning to the Province after verdict and before judgment, is entitled to a rehearing by the granting of a new trial. Robertson v. Burk, 5 O. S. 75.

Cause Cognizable in Inferior Court.]

—Where actions are brought in the inferior jurisdiction of the superior courts for trifling amounts, which might have been recovered at much less expense in the inferior courts will not favour such actions by granting new trials in cases which rest in their discretion. It must be clearly shewn that the direction of a presiding Judge has been wrong, or that the verdict has been against evidence. Comstock v. Moore, 6 C. P. 434.

Controverted Elections.] — See Peel Election (Ont.), Hurst v. Chisholm, H. E. C. 485.

County Court — Jurisdiction.] — A plea was pleaded bringing title to land in question, and after a verdict for the plaintiff a new trial was granted, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction. On appeal, the judgment was reversed, as the court, having no jurisdiction, could not grant a new trial. Campbell v. Davidson, 19 U. C. R. 222. See COUNTY COURTS.

Division Court.]-See DIVISION COURTS.

Issue as to Frandulent Conveyance.]—Issue directed to try whether a conveyance of land was fraudulent, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 49, s. 12. Quare, as to the granting of a new trial, or reviewing the verdict on such an issue. Merchants Bank v. Brooker, 8 P. R. 133.

Overholding Tenant — Disagreement of Jury.] — Where, upon a commission issued against the overholding tenant under C. S. U. C. c. 27, the first jury summoned could not agree and were discharged:—Held, that another jury might be summoned, and an effectual inquisition held. In re Woodbury and Marshall, 19 U. C. R. 597.

X. PLEADINGS-NEW TRIAL TO AMEND.

When Granted — Particular Circumstances.]—In a very hard case a new trial was granted to enable an executor to plead plene administravit. McMartin v. Travelter, 5 O. S. 155.

But in this case it was refused, there being no satisfactory answer given why the plea had not been pleaded before. McDonald v. DeTuyle, 6 O. S. 335.

Where there were several counts varying the same cause of action, to which defendants pleaded distinct pleas, and the plaintiff, having demurred to some and replied to the others, after judgment against him on the demurrer, recovered a verdict on the other pleas, no defence having been made at the trial:—Held, that, upon the pleadings, the plaintiff's recovery was barred, but, under the circumstances, a new trial granted, with leave to amend. Watson v. Hamtlon, 6 O. S. 312.

The plaintiff, before the argument of the demurrers to his pleas, went to trial, and assessed his damages at £17 10s., and the demurrers were afterwards admitted to be against him. The court refused to allow him to set aside his verdict and amend his pleadings. Tyret v. Myers, 6 O. S. 433.

The court, the pleadings having been before them on demurrer, refused a new trial with a view to an amendment. McKechnic v. Mc-Keyes, 10 U. C. R. 37.

Trespass against a sheriff's bailiff for seizing goods. General issue only pleaded. Verdiet for plaintiff. New trial granted on payment of costs, on affidavit that defendant had instructed his attorney to defend under writs of execution, and the attorney had considered that the defence might be urged under the general issue. Williams v. Knapp. H. T. 4 Vict.

Where a sheriff, in an action of trespass, had omitted to justify specially, and a verdict was found against him, the court granted a new trial on payment of costs, with leave to amend. Lee v, Rapetje, 2 U. C. R. 308.

Where the evidence does not strictly support any one count, but a verdict has been given for the plaintiff, in accordance with justice, the court may grant a new trial, allowing the plaintiff to amend, Elliott v. Croker, S U. C. R. 156.

When the merits have been tried under informal pleadings, and the verdict would be sustained on amendment, the court will refuse a new trial. Deady v. Goodenough, 5 C. P. 163.

Action on a guarantee. New trial refused to allow defendant to put in a plea of discharge by extension of time given to the principals. Higby v. Cummings, 10 U. C. R. 222.

Where the plaintiff was entitled to recover back $200 claimed, but could not recover on the common counts for money had and received, the court, instead of entering a verdict for plaintiff, as moved, pursuant to leave, granted a new trial with liberty to plaintiff to amend his declaration. Carscaden v. Shorc, 17 C. P. 403.

Action in county court. Declaration on a covenant to pay rent. Plea, misdescription of the property, so that defendants had not what they bargained for. Verdict for defendants. On appeal, the plea was held bad on demurrer, and the verdict therefore falling to the ground, this court ordered a new trial with leave to plead de novo. Talbot v. Rossin, 23 U. C. R. 170.

An insurer with a mutual insurance company is not liable for assessments made before his insurance was effected, or premium not given. At the trial the Judge so ruled, and refused to allow defendants to plead a subsequent assessment made after the policy. The court would not grant a new trial on the ground of such refusal, no affidavit of such assessment being filed. Green v. Reaver and Toronto Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 34 U. C. R. 78.

The court, under the circumstances of this case, refused to amend and enter a verdict for the plaintiff: but granted a new trial on payment of costs, to enable the plaintiff to amend, and to have the question as to an alleged waiver of a condition in the agreement sued upon, properly tried. Aitcheson v. Cook, 37 U. C. R. 490. See Hatton v. Beacon Ins. Co., 16 U. C. R. 316.

Action for work and labour. Plea, work not done by the time agreed on; and that defendant, under the agreement, was entitled to deduct a sum specified for the delay. Issue:—Held, that under this issue, plaintiff could not shew that the delay was caused by defendant or his workmen; but a new trial was granted with leave to amend. Hamilton v. Moore, 33 C. C. R. 100.

A part of the claim in this case extended beyond six years, but no application was made at the trial for leave to plead the Statute of Limitations as to this. The court, under the circumstances, refused to grant a new trial to enable this defence to be set up. Cook v. Grant, 32 C. P. 511.

The plaintiff consigned goods to persons in England, and shipped them by defendant com-panies on bills of lading, describing them as shipped by the plaintiff to be delivered toorder, or his assigns, he or they paying freight. The plaintiff indorsed the bills of lading to various persons in England to whom he had sold the goods; the consignees paid the drafts drawn upon them for the price, and, the goods having been seriously damaged in transit, they made claim upon the plaintiff for the loss. The plaintiff now sued for the damages and was nonsuited on the ground that he had not sufficient interest, or was not the proper per-The court, without deciding as to son to sue. son to sue. The court, without deciding as to the plaintiff having no right of action, or the effect of R. S. O. 1877 c. 116, s. 5, set aside the nonsuit and directed a new trial, with leave to the plaintiffs to add as co-plaintiffs any or all of the consignees, or indorsees of the bills of lading, the evidence already given to stand, with any additions the parties might desire, reserving all costs. The validity of R. S. O. 1877 c. 116, s. 5, was disputed on the ground that it was ultra vires as interfering with trade and commerce, but the court refused to decide the point without notice to the attorney-general and minister of justice under 46 Vic. c. 6, s. 6 (O.), which would involve great delay, and adopted the above course as being the speediest and least expensive.

Hately v. Merchants Despatch Co., 2 O. R.

A new trial was granted in this case, there being circumstances requiring further consideration, with leave to so amend the pleadings and add such parties as might be necessary.

Ward v. Hughes, 8 O. R. 138.

XI. RULING AS TO RIGHT TO BEGIN.

A new trial will not be granted for a misdirection as to the right to begin, unless it appear that injustice may have been occasioned by it. McDonald v. McHugh, 12 U. C. R. 503. See also Neville v. Fox, 28 U. C. R.

See Miller v. Confederation Life Assurance Co., 11 O. R. 120.

XII. SUBSTITUTION OF NEW TRIAL FOR NON-SUIT.

Where a defendant obtains a rule for a non-suit as on leave reserved, and it afterwards appears that no such leave was reserved, the court will not allow him to change his rule into a rule for a new trial. Doe d. Gilkison v. Shorey, 2 U. C. R. 183.

Where a verdict had been given for the plaintiff, with leave to defendant to move for a nonsuit, the court declined nonsuiting, but gave a new trial on payment of costs, Burnham v. Simmons, 7 U. C. R. 196, Doe d.

New trial granted on payment of costs, to enable plaintiffs to give evidence of a waiver of the condition in a policy as to proof of loss, where a nonsuit would be equivalent to a verdict for defendants, the six months having expired within which the action must be com-menced. Cameron v. Monarch Assurance Co., 7 C. P. 212.

The condition was, that if there should be any insurance at any other office, notice should be given, and the same indorsed on or stated in the policy, otherwise the first insurance should be void:—Held, that an insurance ef-fected in another office by an interim receipt, was within the condition; but, as there was some evidence of a waiver of the notice resome evidence of a waiver of the notice required, which defendant could not take advantage of under his replication, the court, inof ordering a nonsuit on the leave reserved, granted a new trial with leave to amend. Hatton v. Beacon Ins. Co., 16 U. C. R. 316.

Where a nonsuit was granted in a county court, which the court of Queen's bench thought could not be sustained, but the right of the plaintiff on the evidence seemed doubtful, the court on appeal ordered a new trial. O'Rourke v. Lee, 18 U. C. R. 609.

Special count, on defendant's promise to pay the amount of a judgment recovered against himself and M. by plaintiff, on plaintiff assigning it to one H. Neither judgment nor assignment was proved :—Held, that the motion for nonsuit was entitled to prevail, but a new trial was allowed on payment of costs.

Vol. III. D-153-4

In an action on a marine policy the court granted a new trial, though of opinion that defendants were entitled to a nonsuit, suggesting whether, if certain evidence were given, it might not be held to modify the condition as to seaworthiness on which defendants relied. Coons v. Ætna Ins. Co., 18 C. P.

XIII. SURPRISE OR ABSENCE.

1. Absence of Counsel.

Excuse — Costs.]—Where after plea the plaintiff was nonsuited, because no one ap-peared for defendant to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the court, on affidavit that the defendant's attorney had forwarded title deeds and other documents to counsel, for the purpose of making a defence, which did not arrive in time, and on an affidavit of merits, granted a new trial, on payment of costs. Doe d. Clarke v. McQueen, 3 O. S. 69.

absence of defendant's counsel is ground for a new trial only on payment of costs. Driscoll v. Hart, 5 O. S. 677.

Where plaintiff was nonsuited, his having been unexpectedly called on in the absence of his attorney and counsel, several causes before it on the docket having been suddenly disposed of, the court refused to set aside the nonsuit, except on payment of costs. Doc d. Dundop v. McNob, H. T. 5 Vict.

Refused on an affidavit that defendant's counsel was absent from illness, no attorney having appeared at the trial to attend to the cause, and no application having been made to put if off. Gunn v. VanAllen, 5 U. C. R.

Granted, upon conditions as to payment of verdict and costs, plaintiff having recovered against a sheriff during the absence of his counsel. Martin v. Corbett, 7 U. C. R. 169.

where it could only be granted on payment of costs, and defendant would not be benefited thereby. Harnden v. Anchor, 6 C. P. 517.

One of the prisoner's counsel at the trial, while he was addressing the jury at the close of the case, was suddenly seized with a fit, and incapacitated from proceeding any further view of the case. No adjournment was, however, applied ther. ther. No adjournment was, however, applied for, but the other, who was the senior counsel, continued the address to the jury on the prisoner's behalf, without raising any objection that he was placed at a disadvantage by reason of his colleague's disability. It did not, moreover, appear that the prisoner had been prejudiced by the absence of the counsel alluded to:—Held, no ground for a new trial. Regina v. Fick, 16 C. P. 379.

It is no ground for a new trial that the cause was taken out of its turn on the docket. Parsons v. Ferriby, 26 U. C. R. 380.

See ante IX. 3.

2. Absence of Documentary Evidence.

Forgotten Bond.]—The defendant in dower pleaded ne unques seizie que dower, and after trial and verdict against him, remembered that a bond had been executed by himself and the demandant several years before, providing for the release of the dower in question, which bond had remained in the hands of a third party, and had not been produced at the trial. The court granted a new trial on payment of costs, with leave to add a plea. Germain v. Shact, 7 C. P. 86.

Mislaid Bond.]—Where the plaintiff was nonsuited in an action upon a bond which had been filed as an exhibit at a previous trial, because he was unable to produce it, a new trial was granted on payment of costs, the bond having been afterwards found. Muirhead v. McDongull, 5 O. S. 642.

3. Absence of Parties.

Cause List—Mistake.]—New trial granted under particular circumstances, where defendant's attorney mistook the place of the cause on the docket. Dove v. Dalby, 5 U. C. R. 457.

Notice—Witness—Affidavit.]—The defendant having failed to attend, on notice, as a witness:—Held, that no attention should be given to his affidavit impeaching the correctness of the verdict. Manning v. Mills, 12 U. C. R. 515.

Notice of Trial—Mistake as to.]—Where the notice of a trial was received by a clerk of defendant's attorney, but the attorney, on inquiring of his clerks, was told that none had been served, and neglected in consequence to prepare for his defence, the merits appearing to be doubtful, a new trial was granted. Watton v. Jacvis, 13 U. C. R. 616.

County court suit appeared in person, but gave no address for the service of papers, as required by ss. 52 and 53 of the C. L. P. Act and C. C. rule of court No. 131. The declaration was served on him personally, and pleas filed. The person who served the pleas for him refused to receive the issue book, notice of trial, &c., and they were stuck up in the office of the clerk of the court. The plaintiff took a verdict on the 20th April, the defendant not appearing, and defendant was informed of it on the 27th. No steps were taken by him to stay proceedings, and final judgment was entered on the 5th May. Defendant in Easter term following moved for a new trial:—Held, that the plaintiff's proceeding was warranted by the rule of court, notwithstanding the declaration had been personally served. Semble, that if it were irregular, defendant, on being aware of the verdict, should have moved to stay the plaintiff's proceedings, and that at all events he should have done so if he wished to move upon the merits. O'Neill v. Everett, 4 P. R. 298, distinguished. Covert v. Robertson, 31 U. C. R. 256.

Refusal to Postpone—Affidavit.]—In an action on a note, in which defendant pleaded that his indorsement had been obtained by fraud, a second postponement of the trial had been refused by the presiding Judge, and no defence having been made, plaintiff obtained a verdict. A motion for a new trial, founded upon defendant's affidavit, uncorroborated, and the allegations in which were met by counteraffidavits, was refused. Molsons Bank v. Bates, 7 C. P. 312.

4. Absence of Witnesses.

Affidavits — Conflict.]—Affidavits, stating surprise and absence of witnesses, being met by affidavits in support of the verdict, a new trial was refused. Shipman v. Stevens, 6 C. P. 17.

Diligence—Merits—Costs,]—In the county court, before the cause was called for trial, defendant moved to put off the trial owing to the absence of witnesses. The Judge refused, as he thought proper steps had not been taken to secure the attendance of absent witnesses. A new trial was granted on payment of costs, there having been, in the opinion of the Judge, a defence which ought to have been heard, and to enable the parties to appeal after a trial of the facts. Frontenac Division, No. 2, Soms of Temperance v. Reedston, 4 L. J. 211.

— Postponement—Taking Chances.]—The court refused to grant a new trial on the ground of surprise, consisting in the absence of witnesses, where an application to postpone the trial had failed, because it was not shewn that the required witnesses had been subpensed, and the applicant had run the risk of going into his case with such evidence as he had. Kitchen v. Murray, 16 C. P. 63.

Examination on Commission — Crossexamination.]—A material witness for planitiff stated during the assizes that he was obliged tog to the States on business; and a commission was granted and the witness examined. Defendant's counsel objected to the issuing of the commission, and refused to cross-examine, as he could not consult his client, but he attended at the trial and made the best defence he could. It being very important that this witness should be subjected to cross-examination, the court granted a new trial on payment of costs. Arnold v. Higgins, 11 U. C. R. 191.

Hlness.]—Where a defendant and his witnesses were absent owing to his illness, and the damages might, at all events, have been materially lessened by their testimony, the court ordered a new trial on payment of costs. Farley v. Glassford, 7 C. P. 285.

Notice of Trial—Late Service—Delay— Merits.]—Where notice of trial had been served late—and defendant, immediately on being apprised of it, took steps to procure his witnesses, and arrived with them an hour or two after the trial, having been detained on the road by bad weather, the court granted a new trial, it being suggested on affidavit that defendant had merits. Harrington v. O'Lone, 5 O. S. 78.

Postponement of Trial — Terms — Costs.]—Where a trial was put off at the assizes on affidavit of the absence of material witnesses, and on payment of costs of the day, and defendants' attorney declined paying those costs himself, defendants being absent, in consequence of which the trial proceeded, and no defence was made—the court, on affidavits which gave reason to apprehend that justice had not been done, and considering the large amount of the verdict, granted new trial on payment of costs. Oliver v. Stephens, 3 O. S. 21.

Public Duties. |- It is no ground for a new trial that a witness who was subpensed did not attend, having been engaged in some public works. Woodruff v. Campbell, 5 O. S.

5. Affidavits Required.

Statement of Grounds-Excuse-Merits Opinion-Information and Belief.]-In an undefended cause, though no application was made to put off the trial, the court granted a new trial on an affidavit or merits, and special affidavit shewing that defendant and his witnesses were attending a court martial Ouchec. Lockhart v. Milne, 1 U. C. R. 444. at

The court will not grant a new trial on the ground of surprise unless in clear cases, and where the grounds are strong and specific; if where the grounds are strong and specific; if the surprise be the discovery of a witness of whom the plaintiff was not aware, it must be stated what evidence that witness can give, and generally the witness himself must shew on affidavit what facts he can prove. Robin-son v. Rapulje, 4 U. C. R. 289.

Where a defendant applies for a new trial on the ground that he was taken by surprise by the cause being taken out of its turn, and was unprepared to enter into his defence, he must not rely on a general affidavit of merits, but shew that he had a defence admissible under the pleadings, which he would have been able to sustain. Moore v. Hicks, 6 U. C.

In an interpleader issue in moving for a new trial for the absence of attorney or parties, it is not necessary to set out the merits, inasmuch as the very issue itself dis-closes what the defendant's claim is. The proper form of the general affidavit of merits is, that the defendant has "a good defence to the action on the merits." An affidavit by the attorney that in his "opinion the defendants had a sure and certain defence legally and equitably," was held insufficient. Ordinarily, on an application for a new trial, on the ground of merits, the affidavit must disclose what the merits are. Vidal v. Bank of Upper Canada, 15 C. P. 421,

A defendant applying for a new trial, on the ground that the cause was taken out of its proper order, on the first day of the assizes, and in the absence of his counsel or attorney, must state unequivocally that he lars a good and legal defence to the action. Revina v. Baker, 6 C. P. 68.

Defendant, having given no notice to produce, was precluded from giving secondary evidence of a bond, and the plaintiff had a precluded from giving secondary a bond, and the plaintiff had a verilet. Considering the nature of the de-fence set up, the court refused to interfere upon an afflavit by one of the defendants that he was informed and believed the plea could be proved. Ker v. Bouldon, 25 U. C. 6. Testimony Contrary to Expectation.

Admission-Cause of Action-Damages.] verdict was taken for the plaintiff under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 66, pro confesso, for nonattendance of defendant, who had been notified to attend as a witness, and damages asfied to attend as a witness, and damages as-sessed at 1s., plaintiff failing to prove an of-fer to settle by defendant's attorney, as he had expected:—Held, that the admission was only to be taken as to the cause of action, and not the amount of damages; but a new trial was granted on the ground of surprise, Robertson v, Ross, 2 C. P. 193.

Adverse Witness-Inquiry.]-The decla-Adverse witness—Inquiry. [——Ine deciration was such as to inform defendants what they would be obliged to prove; the chief defendant, in fact, admitting this, but alleging that he trusted to the evidence of a witness on whose veracity he placed implicit reliance, on whose veracity ne piaced impliest reliance, and at whose instance, moreover, the distress, out of which the action arose, had been made. The witness, however, disappointed defendant in his testimony; but a witness who detendant in his testimony; but a witness who was present at the trial, and who, it was admitted by defendants' counsel, would to some extent have contradicted the other, was not called, as it was not considered his contradiction would have established the defence, which had been completely displaced by the evidence of the witness who had proved adverse. But of the witness who had proved adverse. But no sufficient inquiry, it appeared, had been made before the trial as to what this wit-ness would state:—Held, not sufficient surprise to warrant the granting a new trial. Semble, that had inquiry been made, and the witness afterwards deposed differently from what he stated he would, there would have been surprise in this. Walcott v. Stolicker, 16 C. P. 555.

Alteration of Document-Conflict of Affidavits.]-In an action by a creditor of a railway company against stockholders railway company against stockholders for calls, alleging them to have subscribed for 40 shares, the defence was that the figure 40, shewing the number of shares, had been in-serted after the subscription by some stranger. The jury found for the defendants, and that the figures were not written by the partner who subscribed, nor anyone authorized by him. On motion for a new trial the plaintiffs' attorney swore that his objection, as to the figures, had taken him by surprise, and that he thought he would be able to meet it by satisfactory evidence on another trial. In answer, the defendant who subscribed con-firmed by his affidavit the finding of the jury. The court refused to interfere. Moore v. Gurney, 22 U. C. R. 209.

Criminal Trial - Discrepancies in Evidence—Alibi.]—The prisoner, having been in-dicted with two others acquitted, was con-victed of the murder of one H., whose body victed of the murder of one II., whose body was found in a field adjoining a railway on Monday the 10th April, apparently about three days after death, which had clearly been caused by violence. One M., the chief witness for the Crown, swore that on the Friday night previously, he heard cries in this field, a quarter of a mile from his house, and that not long afterwards he saw three persons walk quickly past his house from that direction, whom he recognized as the prisoner and his two sons. He also stated that on the following morning he saw the prisoner walking along the railway and stopping near where the body was afterwards found, his manner being strange and excited. At the coroner's inquest, held six months before, this witness had declared himself unable to identify the person seen by him, and had not mentioned seeing the prisoner on Saturday. On motion for a new trial, on the ground, among others, of surprise at these discrepancies, the court refused to interfere. The indictment alleged the murder to have taken place on the 6th, while the evidence, both at the trial and the coroner's inquest, pointed to the 7th, and it was stated in the affidavits that the prisoner had thus been misled in directing his evidence of an alibi more particularly to the wrong day:—Held, no ground of surprise. Regina v. Hamilton, 16 C. P. 340. See S. C., ante 1V. 1.

— Knowledge of Evidence.]—It is no ground of surprise that a prisoner "had no knowledge of the vidence to be produced against him:" it is sufficient that the party is fully apprised of the case or charge prosed to be proved, which he must prepare himself to repel. Regina v. Slavin, 17 C. P. 205.

Declarations — Authentication — Disproof.]—In assumpsit for work done for defendant in Scotland, the only evidence given by the plaintiff was his own declaration and that of three others, made at Glasgow, under 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 62, s. 15, taken before a justice. There was no authentication of the signature of the justice, nor any proof of there being such a person, nor of his holding this office. No notice had been given to defendant of the intention to produce such evidence, and he swore that he believed he would be able to disprove the demand by crossexamining the plaintiff's witness, and adducing evidence. The court granted a new trial on the ground of surprise. Smith v. McGouean, 11 U. C. R. 399.

Deed—Gennineness.]—A new trial was ordered before a jury as to the genuineness of a deed more than thirty years old, produced by one of the parties, when evidence was adduced which was a surprise upon defendants. The court, at their instance, ordered a new trial on terms. Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Gr. 181.

Ejectment — Title—Proof—Affidavit.]—
A defendant in ejectment, not having offered any evidence of title at the trial, applied for a new trial upon affidavits allegting surprise, but did not state what title he could have shewn. The court discharged his application.
Doe d. Stewart v. Yager, 5 U. C. R. 584.

New trial granted to defendant in ejectment, the plaintiff claiming title by an estoppel, which defendant was not prepared to meet. Doe d. Yager v. Stewart, 7 U. C. R. 174.

Intention of Opposite Party.]—Held, that the abstaining of a party from proof under the idea that the opposite party has no real intention of putting him to such proof, and being thereby taken by surprise, is not ground for granting a new trial. Andrew v. Stuart, 6 A. R. 495.

Reliance on Witness—Proof of Handurriting.]—Where a defendant denied his indersement of a note, and a witness who swore on his examination in chief to his having actually seen defendant sign the note, on his cross-examination could not swear to the identity of the paper indorsed; and the plaintiff, having relied on this witness, was not prepared to prove defendant's hand-writing, and had a verdiet against him, the court granted a new trial on payment of costs. Murphy v. Fraser, 4 U. C. R. 194.

Sheriff—False Return—Judgment Debtor.]—In an action against a sheriff for a false return, the judgment debtor testified to facts which defendant afterwards said took him by surprise. On motion for a new trial:
—Held, that defendant should have gone to trial prepared to shew all transactions with the judgment debtor in relation to the suit, and not having done so, or sworn on this motion to what he could prove, a new trial was refused, Young v, Moderwell, 14 C. P. 143.

Solicitor—Client's Interests—Privileges,
—A solicitor, when questioned as a witness with regard to matters involving his client's interests, should decline to answer unless directed or at least permitted by the court; and where a different course was taken:— Held, that it might be deemed a surprise upon the client, and a new trial was granted, with costs to abide the event. Livingstone v. Gartstore, 23 U. C. R. 193.

Special Plea—Unreadiness to Mect—Excuse.I—The court will not grant a new trial on an affidavit by the plaintiff that he had no idea defendant really intended to give evidence of a special plea, but supposed it was pleaded merely to gain time, and therefore did not prepare to meet it, and likewise of his ability to meet such a defence on another trial. Prout v. Pollard, I U. C. R. 170.

Unfair Evidence—Amount of Recovery.]
—Where a plaintiff was taken by surprise at a trial, by unfair evidence given by defendant, and in consequence recovered much less than he was entitled to, he was granted a new trial on payment of costs. Cummings v. Hauen, M. T. 4 Vict.

XIV. TERMS ON WHICH GRANTED OR RE-

Costs — Conditions — Undertakings.]— New trial refused in an action for seduction, where there was much conflicting testimony, and the verdict was for £100, though the Judge who tried the cause was unfavourable; but the rule for a new trial was discharged without costs, as the plaintiff had improperly written letters to the court on the subject of the suit. Thorpe v. Grier, 1 U. C. R. 528.

Where after a verdict for plaintiff and cause shewn on affidavits against a rule for a new trial, a person who made one of the affidavits for the plaintiff died, it was mude a condition of the rule absolute that his affidavit should be received in evidence at the next trial. Gass v. Colcleugh, E. T. 3 Vict.

Where one of the plaintiff's witnesses lived at a distance, it was imposed as a condition that his evidence, given at the last trial, should be read from the Judge's notes. Conley v. Lee, 12 U. C. R. 456.

Where in an action for use and occupation, the plantiff proved his case by evidence of admissions of defendant, who on his desence put in a lease under seal from plantiff, which he contended was for the same premises, but there was no distinct evidence of identity, and the jury found for plaintiff, the court afterwards, on affidavits shewing that these were the only premises demised by plaintiff to defendant, made a rule absolute for a new trial without costs, unless the plaintiff would elect to enter his judgment for the amount of his verdict only. Boulton v. Defries, 2 U. C. 14, 432.

Trespass for mesne profits. Several issues joined. Verdict for defendants, upon one issue clearly against evidence. New trial granted, unless defendants consented to allow a verdict upon that issue for plaintiff. Anderson v. Todd, 3 U. C. R. 16.

New trial granted, on condition of defendant paying into court or securing the amount of the verdict and costs of former trial by a day named. Dove v. Dalby, 5 U. C. R. 457.

When the question for trial depends upon established rules of law, and the jury, being properly directed, give a verdict in opposition to the charge, the party injured is entitled to a new trial without costs. Logan v. Ryan, 10 U. C. R. 15.

The plaintiff having died before the return of the rule nisi, it was made a condition that in the event of a second verdiet for plaintiff, judgment should be entered as if such verdiet had been rendered at the time of the first trial; and that defendant should undertake not to assign error. Swan v. Clclland, 13 U. C. R. 335.

In an action for taking goods, the jury having found a general verdict for defendant, the court granted a new trial to the plaintiff on his undertaking to restrict himself at such trial to a certain portion of the property, as to which they thought the weight of evidence in his favour. Townsend v. Hamilton, 5 C. P. 230.

The evidence of facts necessary to shew the effect of the devise in question not being clear, a new trial was granted with costs to abide the event, on condition that both parties should admit the seisin of one M., to whose title it appeared they both assented, though he claimed through deeds as to which proof of identity was insisted upon, Nicholson v. Burkholder, 21 U. C. R. 198.

Where the damages given were complained of as being too small, a new trial was granted with costs to abide the event, viz., the event of the plaintiff's recovering more than the amount of the first verdict. Jones v. McDarcell. 12 U. C. R. 214; Craig v. Corcoran, 24 U. C. R. 406.

Where the evidence was not sufficient to go to the jury, but the attention of the Judge at the trial had not been drawn to the particular question, the costs on granting a new trial were ordered to abide the event. Shaver v. Jamicson, 25 U. C. R. 156.

To an action on promissory notes amounting to $10,000 defendants, among other defences, pleaded usury, consisting of a charge of a ½ per cent, made by the plaintiffs on cheques. When the case was called on no one appeared for the defendants, and the plaintiffs had a verdict. The court refused to relieve the defendants on the merits, except on condition of their withdrawing the plea of usury. Commercial Bank v. Harris, 27 U. C. R. 301.

To an action against a maker and indorser, the latter pleaded a set-off in the common form, for work doue by him for the plaintiffs—a plea which had been held bad on demurrer. The plaintiffs, however, did not demur, but took issue, and the jury found the plea proved. The court granted a new trial on the evidence, but on payment of costs by the plaintiffs, as the whole difficulty had been caused by their going to trial on an insufficient plea. Commercial Bank v. Harris, 27 U. C. R. 526.

When a plaintiff, after argument of a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, elects to reduce his verdict, instead of submitting to a new trial with costs to abide the event, he is not entitled to the costs of opposing the rule nisi. Florey v. Royal Canadian Bank, 5 P. R, 257.

Rule to enter nonsuit discharged. Judgment affirmed on appeal; but new trial granted on special terms as to costs, in default of a reference to ascertain the sum recoverable. Great Western R. W. Co. v. Commercial Bunk, 2 E. & A. 285.

Verdict for defendant. Rule for new trial unless defendant should consent to a verdict for nominal damages, no reference being made as to costs. The defendant consented and plaintiff asked for costs of the rule:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the application for new trial and the rule granted thereon. Love v. Morrice, 5 P. R. 36.

An award having been made between the parties, who were partners, the plaintiff afterwards filed a bill to dissolve and wind up the partnership as if no such award had been made, and swore that he was advised and believed the award was invalid:—Held, that this bill was not evidence against him to shew that he had so treated the award, but that he should not have used the award to support his case, and on this ground a new trial was granted without costs. Doupe v. Steveart, 28 U. C. R. 192.

It was made a condition, on refusing a new trial, that the plaintiff should assign to the sheriff, defendant, his interest in a certain mortgage, so that the sheriff might, if possible, recoup himself. Paterson v. Maughan, 39 U. G. R. 371.

Where an indictment for obstructing a highway had been removed by certiorari, at the instance of the private prosecutor, into a superior court, and defendant had been acquitted:—Held, that there was no power to impose payment of costs on such prosecutor. The court, however, has power to make payment of costs a condition of any indulgence granted in such a case; such as the postponement of the trial, or a new trial. Regina v. Hart, 45 U. C. R. 1. XV. TRIAL WITHOUT A JURY.

Legal and Equitable Issues. —Quere, whether, when there are legal and equitable issues, the whole case is not properly triable without a jury; but the fact that such a case has been tried by a jury is no ground for a new trial, where the veridict is unobjectionable upon the evidence. Quere, also, whether, in such a case, the Judge may not call a jury to try the legal issues. Wright v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 29 C. P. 221.

Life Insurance Policy — Answer by Jury not Supported by Evidence—Verdict for Plaintiffs—Power of Court to Enter Verdict for Defendant instead of Granting New Trial.] — See Moore v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co., 3 A. R. 230.

Negligence—Trial before Judge—Verdict for Defendants—Motion for New Trial—Duty of Court to Assess Damages if Plaintiff Entitled to Recover.]—See Denny v. Montreal Telegraph Co., 3 A. R. 628.

Omission of Jury to Answer Questions. |—The mere omission of the jury to answer one of the questions submitted to them is no ground for a new trial; but whether the omission of the jury should have that effect, where the verdict is that of the Judge, must depend on the nature of the question and the character of the evidence bearing upon it, whether the question be an unnecessary one or one going to the foundation of the recovery, and the evidence as to it contradictory. Parsons v. Citicrons Ins. Co., 43 U. C. It. 201.

See Canada Landed Credit Co. v. Thompson, S A. R. 696.

XVI. TWO OR MORE NEW TRIALS.

When Granted.]—Where the jury, in an action for disturbance of plaintiff's ferry, found for defendant perversely, and clearly against law and evidence and the Judge's charge, the court granted a third trial without costs. Kerby v. Lewis, 1 U. C. R. 66; S. C., 6 O. S. 489.

The court will grant repeated trials where verdicts are rendered contrary to law and evidence, especially in cases affecting continuing rights. S. U., 1 U. C. R. 285.

A second verdict for defendants in replevin set aside without costs, they having no legal right of distress. Sanderson v. Kingston Marine R. W. Co., 4 U. C. R. 340.

A third new trial granted, a verdict for money had and received having been thrice found against an officer of the court of chancery on insufficient evidence. Sutherland v. Black, 10 U. C. R. 515, 11 U. C. R. 243.

A third new trial granted, three verdicts having been perversely rendered for the plaintiff, in an action for malicious arrest. Smith v. McKay, 10 U. C. R. 412, 613.

In an action upon a policy of insurance, where the questions of unseaworthiness and deviation were involved, the court, thinking that on the plaintiff's own shewing he was not entitled to recover, granted a second new trial. Haworth v. British America Assurance Co., 6 C. P. 60; Coulson v. Ontario Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 6 C. P. 63.

Where work was to be done (under a special agreement) to the satisfaction of a surveyor, and the jury, notwithstanding that a certificate of the surveyor was not produced, gave a verdict for the plaintiffs, the court twice set the verdict aside. Contsworth v. City of Toronto, 7 C. P. 490; S. C., S C. P. 304.

It was held by the court of Queen's bench that at a former trial the question of boundary should have been tried in this action of ejectment. The court of common pleas held differently upon the same point in other cases, and the chief justice of that court having at a second trial ruled in accordance with their judgment, a new trial was granted without costs. Irwin v. Sager, 22 U. G. R. 22.

The court granted a second new trial, with costs to abide the event, where defendant by his refusal to admit copies of documents in evidence had taken undue advantage of an accident. Murphy v. Case, 21 U. C. R. 470.

The plaintiff, instead of demurring to a bad plea, took issue upon it and the other pleas, and three perverse verdicts had been rendered for defendant in the court below, the last verdict being general, though upon the other is sues the plaintiff was clearly entitled to succeed under the evidence. On appeal, the court ordered a new trial. Vidal v. Ford, 19 U. C. R. SS.

In an action against a railway company for negligence, in setting fire to plaintiffs property by their engine, a second verdict having been found for the plaintiff on insufficient evidence, a new trial was granted. Jaffrey v. Toronto, Grey, and Bruce R. W. Co., 24 C. P. 271.

When Refused.]—Where a new trial had been granted to let defendant set up a defence to an action on a note, of which he did not avail himself, the court refused again to interfere. Ross v. McNab, 3 O. S. 309.

In an action on a note to which defendant defended his signature, a new trial was refused, after two concurring verdicts for the plaintiffs in a case doubtful upon the evidence. *Terri*berry v. Milter, 5 O. S. 129.

Verdicts twice found for defendant, second new trial refused. Burnside v. Wilcox, M. T. 7 Wm. 1V.

Where the jury have twice decided against an alleged fraud, and in favour of the plaintiff, the court will not, except in very glaring cases, grant a third new trial. Hunter v. Corbett, 7 U. C. R. 75; Power v. Ruttan, 5 O. S. 132.

Where defendant had obtained a new trial on the merits, the court refused to set aside a second verdict for the plaintiff, on a technical objection as to the form of action raised for the first time at the second trial. Hunter v. Corbett, 7 U. C. R. 75.

Where two new trials have been granted in order to dispose of the question on its merits, the court will not be disposed at the last trial to consider technical objections taken as grounds of nonsuit. Wajer v. Burns, 12 U.

The court refused to set aside a fourth verdict for the plaintiff, for malicious arrest, although wrong—alleging, as one reason, that defendant should at least have obtained a special jury. Smith v. McKay, 11 U. C. R. 111.

Where the jury had apparently rendered their verdict against the weight of evidence, upon an erroneous desire to restore money actually paid to give colour to a fraudulent transfer, a second new trial was refused. Wight v. Moody, 6 C. P. 502, 506.

C. and P. CinqMars, carrying on business at Belleville, being indebted to B. & Co. for goods, executed to them a confession of judgment. Other creditors pressing, an execution was issued on this confession, and an arrangement made that the goods should be sold by the sheriff; that the plaintiff, a brother of C. and P. CinqMars, and a minor, should buy them in, and the execution creditors receive credit for the proceeds; and that the business should be carried on by the plaintiff and C. CinqMars, the goods remaining in the plaintiff's name as ostensible owner. P. CinqMars lived in Montreal. Afterwards the plaintiff packed up the goods, and being about to send them to his brother in Montreal, they were selzed and sold by B. & Co., as the property of C. CinqMars. For this the plaintiff savel; and the jury having twice found in his favour:—Held, that, although it seemed clear that the plaintiff had never in fact purchased or paid for the goods, but had been set up as a purchaser merely to protect them from other creditors, yet, as B. & Co. had concurred in holding him out in a false character, the court should not interfere. CinqMars v. Moodie, 15 U. C. R. 601.

Where there is a second verdict for plaintiff, and but little probability of another jury finding differently, it being manifest that the plaintiff would then be a great loser by the inadequacy of price of the work done, the court is justified in refusing to disturb the verdict unless on account of misdirection, or the reception of improper evidence. Ireson v. Mason, 13 C. P. 323.

A case having been twice tried, and the second jury being a special one struck by defendants, against whom they found the verdict, the court declined to interfere on the ground of excessive damages. Stock v. Great Western R. 4V. Co., 9 C. P. 134.

In ejectment, where it appeared that, in any event, the most the defendant could recover would be a very inconsiderable portion of the land in question, and there had been already two verdicts against her, the court relused a second new trial. Levis v. Kelly, 17 C. P. 250,

This case, an action on a fire policy, having been four times tried, the plaintiff having succeeded twice, and the jury having disagreed on the other occasions, and the defence being in the nature of a charge of arson, a new trial was refused. McCulloch v. Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 34 U. C. R. 384.

Where the trespass to land and cutting down trees had been wilful and after full notice, the court refused to grant a third trial, though they considered the verdict for S5c very high, and would have been better satisfied with a much lower amount. Nicholson v. Page, 27 U. C. R. 505.

XVII. VERDICT AGAINST LAW AND EVIDENCE OR JUDGE'S CHARGE.

1. Crime Charged.

Arson—Insurance—Misdirection.]—In the absence of misdirection, where the jury find in favour of a party on an issue charging him with a criminal offence, the court will rarely grant a new trial. Gould v. British America Assurance Co., 27 U. C. R. 473.

Insurance—Other Defences.]—The defendants, in an action on a fire policy, had refused to accept a new trial on the plea of arson, which the court below offered them upon their consenting to abandon all other defences, and the court of appeal declined to interfere by granting it. Frey v. Wellington Mutual Ins. Co., 4 A. R. 293. See S. C., 43 U. C. R. 102.

— Insurance—Suspicion.]—In an action on a fire policy the jury found for plaintiff on a plea of arson, for which she had been prosecuted and acquitted, and the court, notwithstanding very strong circumstances of suspicion, refused a new trial. Dear v. Western Assurance Co., 41 U. C. R. 553.

Forgery—Promissory Note—Evidence.]—Where in an action on a promissory note the defence was forgery, and a number of witnesses were examined on both sides, and much conflicting testimony given, and the jury found for the plaintiffs, a new trial was refused, although the defendant positively denied the signature on affidavits and produced numerous affidavits of persons who stated their belief that the signature was not his. Commercial Bank Midland District v. Denison, 1 U. C. R. 13.

Where, in an action against the maker of a promissory note, the plaintiff produced several witnesses who swore to defendant's signature, which two of them said he had admitted, but the jury found for defendant on his own evidence alone, the court granted a new trial, with costs to abide the event. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. McMillan, 31 U. C. R. 596.

Promissory Note — Indorser.] — Where the defence set up by the indorsers of a note was forgery, and the plaintiff recovered, the court refused to grant a new trial. MeLaren v, Muirhead, 3 U. C. R. 59.

A verdict having been given for the defendant on an issue as to the genuineness of his indorsement on a note, the court, upon consideration of the evidence and the affidavits, refused a new trial. Maclem v. Dittrick, 7 U. C. R. 144.

Promissory Note — Marksman.]—
The evidence in this case was insufficient to shew that defendant was the maker of the note sued on, alleged to have been signed by him as a marksman, and the plaintiff should have been nonsuited. The defendant, however, filed an affidavit that he was not the maker, and explained his absence on the trial, and on this ground a new trial was granted. Hand v. Agnew, 32 U. C. R. 559, Stock Book—Evidence.] — There being some doubts attempted to be thrown upon the signature of defendant to the stock book, the jury found against the plaintiff. The evidence of the witness to the signature being very clear, and not being impeached, the court granted a new trial. Ray v. Blair, 12 C. P. 257.

Perjury—Insurance—Proofs of Loss.]—Where, in an action on a fire policy, the plaintiff, in his statement of loss, swore that his damage amounted to about twelve times the amount actually proved, and for which he actually obtained a verdict, and the Judge before whom the case was tried was dissatisfied with the finding, the court, notwithstanding the usual practice as to new trials where the defence charges a criminal offence (this being made perjury by 32 & 33 Viet. c. 23, s. 5 (D.)), granted a new trial, costs to abide the event. McMillen w. Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 21 C. P. 123.

Smuggling—Bill of Exchange—Price of Goods.]—Where in assumpsit on bills of exchange, and for goods sold, the defence was that the bills had been given for the price of goods bought from the plaintiffs in a foreign country, and which they had assisted the defendant in smuggling into this country, and some evidence was given to that effect, but the jury found for the plaintiffs, the court refused a new trial. Walbridge v. Follett, 2 U. C. R. 280.

Theft — Slander — Justification.] — In an action for slander the evidence in support of one of the pleas of justification of a charge of theft was very strong, sufficient to have warranted a conviction if the plaintiff had been on his trial. The charge, however, was made three years after the alleged offence, for which there had been no prosecution, and defendant had no special interest in the matter. The jury having found for the plaintiff, and $150 damages, the court refused to interfere. Edgar v. Nevedl, 24 U. C. R. 215.

Usury—Bond—Evidence.]—Debt on bond; defence, usury; and verdict for plaintiff. In ejectment on a mortgage given to secure the same debt, the jury found for defendant on the same evidence. The court refused to set aside the verdict on the bond, which in effect acquitted the plaintiff of the crime, though the Judge who tried the cause thought the evidence strong to establish usury. Wilson v. Hill, 5 O. S. 56.

2. Facts not Fully Elicited.

Account — Acknowledgment—Time—Uncertainty, 1—Action on account stated, to recover $102$, which defendant was to pay plaintiff for giving up his purchase of land from defendant. It was proved that defendant had acknowledged that he was to pay plaintiff this sum, but there was a nonsuit for want of an agreement in writing:—Held, that if the acknowledgment was made after the agreement had been cancelled and the land resold by defendant, the plaintiff might recover; and this not being clear on the evidence, a new trial was granted to ascertain the fact. Gross v. Bricker, 18 U. C. R. 410.

Assault—Mitigation of Damages—Slander.]—Where in trespass for assault and battery the defendant offered at the trial to prove in mitigation of damages that plaintiff had slandered his wife, and that he had committed the trespass immediately on being informed of such slander, a new trial was granted, that all the circumstances might be elicited. Short v. Lewis, 3 O. S. 385.

Carriers — Contract—Notice.]—In this case a nonsuit was entered for the plaintiffs' omission to give notice in writing of their claim within 24 hours of the delivery of the goods to defendants' freight agent at Halifax, in pursuance of a condition to that effect in the contract on which the goods were carried; but, as the pleas did not set up that there was such an officer there, and the evidence in the case had not been fully given, a new trial was granted, with liberty to amend the pleadings, Fitzecrald v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 27 C. P. 528.

Covenant—Sale for Debts—Existence of Debts.—Covenant by plaintiffs (administrators) against defendants (executors), &c., on defendants (covenant with plaintiffs' intestate, for seisin of land conveyed by them. It appeared on the trial that defendants claimed under a clause of their testator's will to dispose of lands, if necessary, for payment of debts; and after verdict for plaintiffs, a new trial was granted on payment of costs, to enable defendants to prove the existence of debts of the testator, a fact material to maintain the sale. Macdongall v. Macdonell, 5 C. P. 355.

Demurrage—Hire of Vessel—Terms.]—P. N. & Co., brokers at Cleveland, shipped a carge of coal on testator's vessel, consigned to defendant at Toronto, there being no stipulation in the bill of lading as to demurrage. The vessel was detained four and a half days in unloading, for which it was sought to make defendant liable. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, upon the evidence set out in this case, a new trial was granted, as the facts with regard to defendant having hired the vessel had not been fully brought out. Burnett v. Conger. 23 C. P. 5090.

Electment — Evidence—Uncertainty.]—
In this case it was held, that the evidence rejected at the trial was inadmissible; but, as the nature and character of some parts of it were not known with sufficient certainty, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Doc d. Arnold v. Auddjo, 5 U. C. R. 171.

of .— Heir — Death of Ancestor — Time of .]—In ejectment both plaintiff and defendant claimed by deed from T.'s sister, plaintiff having the first conveyance. It was not distinctly proved whether T. died before or after the 1st January, 1852, when 14 & 15 Vict. c. 6 came into force, this point having escaped attention. If he died before, then the plaintiff would be entitled, as claiming under his sister, who would be his heiress; if after, defendant would be entitled as his mother, in preference to his sister. A new trial was therefore ordered, with costs to abide the event, in order to give the plaintiff an opportunity of establishing his case on this point. Beckett v. Foy, 12 U. C. R. 361.

Trial without Jury — Motion in Term against Verdict—Leave to Supply Further Evidence in Term.]—See Young v. Hobson, 30 C. P. 431.

Fire Insurance — Second Policy.] — A policy having been issued by defendants at their head office to the plaintiff, on an application stating that a watchman was kept, the plaintiff applied for a further insurance to defendants' local agent, shewing him this policy, and a second policy was issued on an informal application, sent by this agent, not signed by the plaintiff, and referring to the premises as the same as in the previous policy. The court held that there was not enough to warrant the conclusion that the second policy was issued on statements contained in the application for the first; but a new trial was granted to enable defendants to supply further evidence, with leave to them to plead de novo as suggested. Whitlaw v. Phænix Ins. (6, 28 C. P. 53.

Foreign Law — Conflict of Evidence.]—
The evidence upon a question of foreign law being conflicting, a new trial was granted to enable further evidence to be adduced. Turcotte v. Davsson, 30 C. P. 23.

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to Quit— Authority.]—Plaintiff leased part of a house from defendant L., at $4 a month a house from defendant L. at $4 a month and if L. sold the was to leave if he could get another. L. sold and conveyed it on the 7th August to W., having previously given the plaintiff oral notice to go; and after the conveyance. The 7th August, he, at the suggestion of the real the 7th August, he, at the suggestion of the real time of the property was put out by L. and the other defendant on the 9th September:—Held, that if the notice was given by L. by authority of W., it would be sufficient, and a new trial was granted to determine this point. Matthews v. Lloyd, 36 U. C. R. 381

Promissory Note—Fraud.]—Action on a note given for money alleged to have been obtained by defendant from plaintiffs by fraudulent misrepresentation, and for money paid; plaintiffs held not entitled on the evidence to recover on either count, but to a new trial to enable them to shew the facts more fully. Canada Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Watson, 25 C. P. 1.

—See Canniff v. Bogart, 5 C. P. 341.

Tax Sale — Validity—Laches.]—Quere, whether s. 155 of 32 Vict. e. 36 (O.) applies to make good a sale otherwise bad, in favour of a purchaser for taxes who makes no claim for nearly twenty years, leaving the original owner in possession, and in ignorance of the sale. A new trial was granted to enable defendant to raise this and other points not sufficiently taken at the trial. Austin v. Armstrong, 28 C. P. 47.

Trever — Merits not Fully Disclosed— Justification as Joint Gener, de.—Charge Facourable to Defendant—Verdict for Plaintiff—Vew Trial Refused.]—See Anderson v. Anderson, 1 C. P. 34.

Work and Labour — Hurried Trial.]— Action for extra labour on an agreement to plaster defendant's house. The court, although not seeing that the verdict was against the law and evidence, granted a new trial, on the ground that the case was taken late at night, the defendant further shewing by affidavits that he had not time to go into his defence as fully as he would if time had permitted. Gallina v. Cotton, 6 C. P. 247.

3. Fraud Charged.

Assignment—Evidence,]—A verdict for defendant manifestly against evidence, and in support of an assignment impeached as fraudulent, set aside on payment of costs. Doe d. Wilks v. Massecar, 5 U. C. R. 455.

Deed — Description — Evidence — Creditors, I—Where, in ejectment, the deed under which plaintiff claimed was in several parts illegible, and contained no sufficient description of the part of the lot intended to conveyed, and there was strong evidence that deed was made to defent creditors the court set aside a verdict for the plainties that the court set aside a verdict for the plainties without costs. Doe d. McDonald v. McDonald, 2 U. C. R. 267.

— Procurement—Doubt.)—When evidence was given to shew that a deed had been procured by fraud, and the jury negatived the fraud, but there seemed great doubts as to the correctness of their finding, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Doe d. Neilson v. Gilchrist, 4 O. S. 276.

Interpleader Issue—Sale under Execution Found to be Collusive—New Trial Refused on Affidavits.]—See Servos v. Tobin, 2 U. C. R. 530.

Preference—Evidence.]—Where the bona fides of a transaction impeached for fraul was proved solely by the evidence of the trader (the accused) and his brother-in-law, when a disinterested witness might have been called, the court granted a new trial, on the ground that the ends of justice might be turthered by a second investigation. Foreler v. Hendry, 7 C. P. 350.

Sale of Goods—Bona Fides.]—The question being as to the bona fides of a sale of goods under which the plaintiff claimed:—Held, that though a finding for defendant would have been more satisfactory, yet, as the case went fairly to the jury, and the amount involved was small, the verdict should not be disturbed. Tuer v. Harrison, 14 C. P. 449.

See Molsons Bank v. Bates, 7 C. P. 312.

4. Negligence or Want of Diligence of Applicant.

Diligence.] — Where a losing party has been wanting in diligence, the court will not, as a matter of course, relieve him against the verdict, though it may appear contrary to evidence. Doe d. Wheeler v. McWilliams, 3 U. C. R. 165.

Failure to Give Procurable Evidence. —The court will not grant a new trial to protect an idle litigation about facts which neither party will take the trouble to make clear, though they have the means of doing neither party will take the Walls of doing so. Where a jury, not thinking it safe to rely on oral evidence of the contents of a lost will, where the party offering it was shewn to be aware of the existence of a written copy which he might have produced, gave a verdict against him, the court would not grant a new trial. Doe d. Wheeler v. McWilliams, 4 U. C. R. 30.

The court will not grant a new trial in ejectment on the ground of the very unsatisfactory nature of the evidence upon which the jury decided, when it appears clearly to the court that neither the plaintiff nor defendant will take the trouble to offer to the jury such conclusive evidence upon the disputed fact, as is easily within their reach to produce. Doc d. McWilliams v. Wheeler, 5 produce. Do U. C. R. 238.

Laches of Attorney-Merits.]-Defendattorney, having ascertained an error in plaintiff's proceedings, notified plaintiff's attorney that he had a defence, but took no measures to set aside his proceedings. Upon motion to set aside the verdict for plaintiff, defendant having neglected to set aside the proceedings, knowing the plaintiff was going on, and his affidavits not shewing substantial merits of defence, a new trial was refused. Smith v. Roblin, 13 C. P. 430.

Marriage-Evidence of Reputation.]-Where the demandant relied upon evidence of where the demandant rened upon expanse of cohabitation and reputation to prove a mar-riage said to have taken place in the United States, and failed, the court, under the cir-cumstances of this case, refused a new trial. Street v. Dolsen, 14 U. C. R. 537.

And where the demandant relied upon evidence by reputation of an alleged marriage in a second verdict for the defendant, the court refused to interfere. Lynch v. O'Hara, 6 C.

Omission at Trial-Trifling Matter.]-Where the losing party has failed at the trial, from the omission of his attorney to establish some legal right he might have shewn. the court will not grant a new trial when an expensive litigation would be protracted about a trifling matter. Petrie v. Taylor, 3 U. C. R. 457.

Secondary Evidence—Search for Docu-ment.]—In ejectment on a sheriff's deed, secondary evidence of the fi. fa. lands was rejected, because search had not been made among ed, Decause search and not been made among the sheriff's papers left in the court house. The plaintiff was nonsuited. Affidavits hav-ing been filed that dilligent search had been made in the court house, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Soules v. Donovan, 14 C. P. 510.

5. Trial without Jury.

Semble, that notwithstanding 32 Vict. c. 6, s. 18, a Judge's decision on facts is to be regarded differently from the finding of a jury.

Smith v. Hamilton, 29 U. C. R. 394. Remarks as to the effect of the finding of a Judge upon evidence. Scott v. Dent, 38 U. C. R. 30.

See Young v. Hobson, 30 C. P. 431.

6. Verdict Doing Substantial Justice.

Bank-Cheque - Evidence.]-On application for a new trial upon the weight of evi-dence, where there has been no miscarriage in law, the question is, does the verdict in the opinion of the court do substantial justice: and, if not, is the evidence in their opinion sufficient to warrant interference. In this case, where the verdict rested entirely upon the plaintiff's testimony as opposed to that of two witnesses not interested, the court was of opinion that the verdict did not do sub-stantial justice, and a new trial was granted. Grieve v. Molsons Bank, 8 O. R. 162

Ejectment - Evidence - Special Circumstances. |-The court is not bound to grant a new trial when there was no misdirection nor any point of law involved, and where it does not appear that the justice of the case does not appear that the justice of the case requires it, though the verdict may seem to be against the weight of evidence; and, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, the court refused to interfere. Doe d. McQueca, v. McQueca, 9 U. C. R. 576.

See also McLillan v. Fairfield, 2 O. S. 493; Brown v. Malpus, 7 C. P. 185.

Goods Ordered — Specification—Depart-ure from—Acceptance.]—Where the defend-ant had ordered the plaintiffs to make for him ant had ordered the plaintills to make for him some iron castings of a specified thickness for a shop front, and the plaintiffs made them much thicker than the order specified, but the defendant, notwithstanding, allowed them to be put up in the building for which they had been made, without objection, and the plaintiffs, at nisi prius, obtained a verdict for their full value, the court refused a new trial. Good v. Harper, 3 U. C. R. 67.

Goods Sold—Action for Price—Special Agreement.]—Where the plaintiff sued for goods sold and delivered, and the Judge directed the jury that the action should have been brought on the special agreement, but they, notwithstanding, found for the plaintiff, the court refused a new trial, as substantial justice had been done. Mc-Mahon v. Campbell, 2 U. C. R. 158.

Sheriff - Voluntary Escape.]-Where a sheriff suffers a voluntary escape, leannot afterwards recover from the debtor the amount which he has had to pay for his escape; but where in such an action the justice of the case was clearly with the sheriff, and the Judge charged the jury in favour of the defendant, but they found for the plaintiff, the court refused a new trial. Ruttan v. Ashford, 6 O. S. 280.

Title to Land-Statute of Limitations.] -A defence under the Statute of Limitations against a clear legal title is not one to be favoured, especially in cases between relations; oured, especially in cases between remnons, and where the jury have leaned against such defence in support of the honesty of the case, and there has been no misdirection, the defendant must shew very strong ground to entitle him to a new trial on the evidence. Hemmingway v. Hemmingway, 11 U. C. R. 237.

Trespass—Identity of Premises.]—In trespass, if there be any evidence of the identity of the premises, the court will not grant a new trial for want of sufficient evidence when the damages are small and the justice of the case with the plaintiff. Molloy v. Stansfield, 2 U. C. R. 390.

7. Verdict Perverse.

Interest—Allowance of.]—The jury having perversely allowed only ten per cent, per annum, although they found that defendant had signed the note or instrument agreeing to pay five per cent, a month, a new trial was granted without costs. Young v. Fluke, 15 C. P. 369.

Judge's Charge.]—Semble, that a verdict is not perverse, where a jury find against the charge on a point of law, unless the charge is correct. Todd v. Liverpool and London and Globe Ins. Co., 18 C. P. 192.

Small Verdict.]—Plaintiff, a sheriff, sued defendants on a bond, to re-deliver to him goods seized in execution, on a certain day, at a certain inn. The jury were told that the plaintiff ought to have a verdict for 6s, the sum remaining unpaid upon the execution, but they found for defendants. Notwithstanding the smallness of the verdict the plaintiff was granted a new trial without costs. Moodie v. Brudshau, 4 U. C. R. 199.

S. Other Cases.

Absence of Witnesses — Taking Chances.]—Where a plaintiff is disappointed in procuring testimony, he should withdraw his record or take a nonsuit, and a defendant, in the like case, should apply for a postponement. If, instead of so doing, he chooses to go to trial upon weak or insufficient evidence, he will not be relieved from an adverse verdict. Corporation of Longueuil v. Cushman, 24 U. C. R. 602.

Agreement — Payment of Money,] — Where an action was brought to recover money paid on an agreement which was afterwards cancelled, and the jury found for defendant on the ground that it did not appear clearly that any payment had been made, a new trial was granted, costs to abide the event, the plaintiff's swearing to the payment, which was not denied by the defendant. Couran v. Boyec, T. T. 3 & 4 Vict.

Action upon a special agreement to pay money to release goods under seizure, &c. Verdict for plaintiff; the court held the finding of the jury not supported by the evidence, nor the declaration by the special finding, and granted a new trial without costs. Street v. Cuthbert, 6 C. P. 225.

Amount in Question—Inferior Jurisdiction—Discretion.]—Where actions are brought in the inferior jurisdiction of the superior courts for trilling amounts, which might have been recovered at much less expense in the inferior courts, the courts will not favour such actions by granting new trials in cases which rest in their discretion. It must be clearly shewn that the direction of the presiding Judge has been wrong, or that the verdict has been against evidence. Comstock v. Moore, 6 C. P. 434.

Arrest—Absence of Warrant—Constable—Authority.]—At the trial it appeared that the plaintiff had committed a gross fraud, in Detroit, in the United States; that the defendant, having received a telegram from a public officer there, arrested the plaintiff in this Province, and took him to the police station in London; and that after three days' detention he was discharged, the offence not being within the Ashburton Treaty. Defendant had been chief of police in London, and afterwards appointed, from year to year, constable for the county. He had acted as such for the year in the course of which he made the arrest, and there was some evidence of his having been sworn in, but his name was not upon the list of the clerk of the peace of those appointed for that year. The jury were told that defendant having no warrant, and not being a peace officer at the time, the arrest was not strictly legal, and the plaintiff, therefore, entitled to recover. They found, however, for the defendant, and the court refused to disturb the verdict. Rogers v. Van Valkenburgh, 20 U. C. R. 21S.

Assault — Preponderance of Evidence— Judge's Charge.]—In an action against a public officer for an assault the jury had found a verdict for $190, and a new trial, asked for on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, was refused. The court of appeal granted a new trial, as the evidence strongly preponderated in the defendant's favour, and there was reason to believe that the jury had been misled by the charge. Campbell v. Prince, 5 A. R. 330.

Assignment — Scourity — Cutting down — Insatisfactory Finding.]—On the trial of an issue directed to ascertain whether or not a certain assignment had been originally intended to operate as an absolute transfer of the plaintiff's right, or by way of security only, the jury found that it had been intended as a mortgage. The court, although strongly in favour of the plaintiff upon the evidence and verdict of the jury together, directed a new trial of the issue, the trial Judge having certified that he was not satisfied with the finding. Watson v. Munro, 6 Gr. 385.

Bond — Signature before Sealing.]—Defendants, having signed the bond sued on, left in a hurry, without having it properly sealed, which was afterwards done, but it was clear they knew it to be a bond, and it was stated on the face of it to be under seal. The jury having found against this defence, the court refused to interfere, holding it not one to be favoured. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of Prescott v. Palmer, 20 U. C. R. 441.

Credit—To whom given—Conflict.]—In the conflict of testimony as to which of the parties credit was given to by the plaintifs in their dealings, the weight of evidence and the collateral circumstances being in favour of a dealing with defendants, and the case not having gone as fully and correctly to the jury as it should have done, a new trial was granted to plaintiffs on payment of costs. Northern R. W. Co. of Canada v. Patton, 15 C. P. 332.

Demurrer—Facts Found by Jury.]— After a demurrer had been decided, which admitted the facts found by the jury on a trial of issues, the court refused a new trial, which was applied for on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence. Ives v. Hitchcock, Dra. 480, Disturbance of Verdict — General Rule.]—The rule in relation to new trials upon the evidence is, that the verdict ought not to be disturbed, unless it is clearly wrong. Hooper v. Christoe, 14 C. P. 117.

Ejectment — Mortgage — Usury.] — The court will not grant a new trial to enable a mortgage, being lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment, to shew his own deed void for usury, and thus eject a stranger who sets up as a defence a mortgage to a third party for the premises in question. Doe d. McBernie v. Landy, 1 U. C. R. 186.

Finding of Jury—Uncontradicted Witness.]—A new trial will not be granted because the jury find for defendant in the absence of any evidence to contradict the unimpreached witness of the plaintiff. The jury are to form their verdict upon the whole facts and complexion of the case before them. Lane v. Jarvis. 5 U. C. R. 127.

Fire—Setting out—Question for Jury.]—
If defendant's neighbour be injured by rashness or inconsiderateness on his part, in setting out fire, he will be liable; but this is always a question for the jury, and the court refused to disturb a verifict for defendant, though the evidence would fully have warranted a different finding. Wilkins v. Row. 15 C. P. 325.

Goods Sold — Defence — Smuggling.]— Where, in an action for goods sold, the defence to which was that the goods were smuggled, it was doubtful (the verdict being general) whether the jury understood that the plaintiff knew that the goods were contraband, the court granted a new trial. Sewell v. Richmond, Tay, 423.

Interpleader—Chattels Claimed by Son of Execution Debtor.]—The father of the plaintiff anolied to the defendant company for a loan of $2,500 secured by land valued by the company's appraiser at $3,500. In answer to certain questions put to the applicant, in a printed form of application for loan, he stated himself to be the owner of certain horses, cows, sheep, and other stock. The plaintiff was present with his father at the time of making the application, but swore that he was not aware of the answers given by him as to his personal effects. The defendants sued and obtained execution against the father, under which they seized some of the stock in the possession of the son, who had been residing apart from his father, and from whom, prior to the above application, he had purchased it. In an interpleader issue between the son and the company the jury found in favour of the claim of the former, which verdict the Judge of the county court refused to set aside. On appeal this court, although they considered that a verdict for the defendants would have been more satisfactory, refused to disturb the judgment, the question being one proper for the decision of the jury. Macclamson v. Hamilton Provident and Loan Society, 10 A. R. (510.

Joint Liability—Plea in Abatement.]—
The court will not give a defendant a second chance of obtaining a verdict on a plea in abatement of non-joinder, when the evidence is conflicting, or leaves the fact of joint liability doubtful. But where the verdict for the plaintif was clearly contrary to law they granted a new trial without costs. Tossell v. Diec. 4 U. C. R. 486.

Lease—Covenant—Eviction.] — Declaration on a bond for the performance by one J. V. of covenants in a lease. The evidence tended to shew an eviction rather than that the lessee never took possession, as pleaded. Verdict for defendant. New trial granted with costs to abide the event, and leave to amend. Macdonald v. Vanweyck, 12 C. P. 263.

Lien for Wharfage—Unfounded Claim.]
—The jury having found for defendant against the weight of evidence, on an unfounded claim to retain plaintiff's goods for wharfage, a new trial was ordered. Provincial Ins. Co. v. Mailland, 7 C. P. 426.

Master and Servant—Wages.] — When a person hired by the year departs without consent, he forfeits his wages; and it is important that this law should be enforced. Where the plaintiff had taken such a course, and afterwards sued for his wages, and a verdict was given in his favour for £25, the court granted a new trial without costs, though it appeared that defendant had offered him that sum to settle the suit. Blake v. Shaw. 10 U. C. R. 180.

Parties as Witnesses.]—Semble, that when the verdict is obtained upon the testimony of either plaintiff or defendant, the rule against granting a new trial on the weight of evidence is less strict than it was before the parties were admissible as witnesses. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. McMillan, 31 U. C. R. 596.

Powers of Courts-Supreme Court of Canada - Privy Council - Preponderance of Evidence.]-Upon a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff in an action upon a policy of life insurance to shew cause why a verdict obtained by her should not be set aside and a nonsuit or verdict entered for the defendants pursuant to the Law Reform Act, or a new trial had between the parties, said verdict being contrary to law and evidence, and the finding virtually for the defendants; and for misdirection in that the jury had not been directed on the evidence to find for the defendants; the court of Queen's bench, 41 U. C. R. 197, ordered the verdict for the plaintiff to be set aside and a verdict to be entered for the defendants, while the supreme court eventually reversed this order and restored the verdict for the plaintiff, being of opinion that they had no power to direct a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence:—Held, that, although the court of Queen's bench would have had power to enter this verdict in accordance with what they deemed to be the true construction of the findings, coupled with other facts admitted or beyond controversy, they had no power to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and direct a verdict to be entered for the defendants in direct opposition to the finding of the jury on a material issue. Under 38 Vict. c. 11 (D.), the supreme court has power to make any order or to give any judgment which the court below might or ought to have which the court below hight or ought to have given, and amongst other things to order a new trial on the ground either of misdirection or the verdict being against the weight of evidence; and that power is not taken away by s. 22 in this case, in which the court be-low did not exercise any discretion as to the low did not exercise any discretion as to the question of a new trial, and where the appeal from their judgment did not relate to that subject. Although the Privy Council have the right, if they think fit, to order a new trial on any ground, that power will not be exercised merely where the verdict is not altogether satisfactory, but only where the evidence so strongly preponderates against it as to lead to the conclusion that the jury have either wilfully disregarded the evidence or failed to understand or appreciate it. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Moore, 6 App. Cas. 644, 6 S. C. R. 634, 3 A. R. 230.

Principal and Agent—Money Stolen— Nominal Damages.]—Defendant, having received large sums of money as plaintiffs' agent, deposited the same, mixed with his own and other moneys, in a safe in his office, which was broken into and the money stolen. A verdict having been rendered for defendant, a new trial was granted, with costs to abide the event, as it did not appear with sufficient certainty, on the evidence, that there was enough in the safe to satisfy plaintiffs' claim; and also, because the plaintiffs were entitled to nominal damages, at all events, on the counts for money lent, money paid, &c., to which there was no answer on the record, Gore Bank v. Hodge, 2 C. P. 359.

Promise to Pay Mortgage Debt.]— The evidence of a promise to pay a debt secured by mortgage containing no covenant to consideration of forbearing to sell or eject, being unsatisfactory, and the jury having found for plaintiff, a new trial was granted. Jackson v. Yeomans, 28 U. C. R. 307.

Promissory Note - Collaterals.] - New Promissory Note — Collaterals.] — New trial granted where the plaintiff did not satisfactorily account for notes received by him collateral to the notes sued on, or for the proceeds of the notes collected by him, and refused to produce his books. Lowell v. Ford, 15 C. P. 306.

 Consideration—Smuggled Goods.]-Consideration—Snuggled Goods.]—Where in an action upon several promissory notes defendant proved that they had been given by him for the price of tea which had been smuggled for him by plaintiff, and the inry were directed to find for the defendant if they believed that such was the consideration given, and they found a verdict for the plaintif for the amount of only one of the notes, the court refused to grant the defendant a rule nisi for a new trial. Beebee v. Armstrong, H. T. 6 Vict.

Indorsement - Genuineness - Evidence-Taking Chances.]-Action on a note; dence—Taking Chances, —Action on a note; defendant S., the first indorser, let judgment go by default. P., the second indorser, pleaded "did not inderse." The evidence as to the indorsement by P. was conflicting, but a commission upon which witnesses had been examined, and among others the makers of the note, on being opened, was found to be informal and could not be read. The plaintiffs, notwithstanding, preferred going to the jury to taking a nonsuit. Under the circumstances the court refused to set aside a verificit stances the court refused to set aside a verdict for defendants. City Bank v. Strong, 7 C. P.

Notice of Dishonour-Proof of Receipt.]—Upon a plea denying notice of non-payment, it appeared that the notice, though carelessly mailed by the notary on the day of protest to a wrong address, had been received by defendant about a week after, and there was some slight proof of his having applied to was some signt proof of his having applied to plaintiff for further time for payment. The jury was directed that the evidence was in-sufficient, but they found for plaintiff; and the court, though agreeing with the direction, refused to interfere. Leith v. O'Neil, 19 U. C. R. 233.
See Commercial Bank v. Weller, 5 U. C.

Railway Company—Bias of Jury.]—Action for killing plaintiff's horse by collision with a train. The trial Judge being dissatis-fied with the verdict, and there being reason fied with the verdict, and there being a sym-to believe that it arose from mistaken sym-pathy on the part of the jury for a poor man as against a railway company, the court granted a new trial with costs to abide the event. McGunigal v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 33 U. C. R. 194.

Replevin-Purchase of Chattel-Authority—Ratification.]—Replevin for a piano de-livered to the defendant as alleged by plaintiffs under an agreement that the piano was received by the defendant on hire for six months at $5 a month, with right of pur-chast at $265, $15 cash, and the balance by chast at $255, $15 cash, and the balance by instalments, and until purchase money paid the piano to remain the plaintiff's property; that default was made in the payments, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to take possession of the same. The defendant stated that she purchased the piano, no mention being made at the time of the agreement, which was subsequently signed without defendant's authority to be dearcher. The defendant's authority by her daughter The defendant was unable to read or write, though of fair business capacity The evidence, as urged by the plaintiffs, shewed authority from urged by the plaintiffs, shewed authority from the defendant to sign, and also ratification by her. The jury found for the defendant. The court, not being satisfied with the finding, di-rected a new trial, with costs to the successful party in the cause. Heintzman v. Graham, 15 G. R. 137.

Wrong-doer—Treapass.]—Replevin for staves. The jury were directed to ascertain how many staves had been taken from H.'s land, and only as his vendees, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for any others that there might have been. They found, however, for defendants, and the court refused to interfere, holding that the plaintiff having been clearly a wrong-doer in trespassing on H.'s land, was not entitled to consideration. Sills v. Hunt, 16 U. C. R. 521.

Securities — Illegality — Notice of,] — Held, that under 12 Geo. II. c. 28, securities given for the price of lottery tickets are not void in the hands of a bonâ fide holder for value. Where the jury found that the plaintiffs had not notice of the illegality, the court refused a new trial, holding the defence not one to be favoured. Evans v. Morley, 21 U. C. R. 547; S. C., 20 U. C. R. 236.

Settlement — Injuries — Inadequacy of Compensation.]—It is the duty of a parry setting up that a settlement of a claim for injuries has been obtained by misrepresentation to establish not only that the settlement has been so obtained, but also that the amount paid is an inadequate compensation for such injuries; and where there was an entire failure of evidence on this latter point, a new trial was granted, on payment of costs, Roice v, Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 16 C. P. 500.

Sheriff—Absconding Debtors' Act—Rent—Nuspicious Circumstances.]—Action by a sheriff, under the Absconding Debtors' Act, for rent due on a lease to the debtor. Upon motion, after a verdiet for defendant, for a new trial—Held, that ordinarily the court would require a stronger case against the verdiet than was made out here, but the plaintiff suing in right of his office, and knowing nothing of the transactions between the defendant and the debtor, and the circumstances appearing somewhat suspicious, a new trial should be ordered on payment of costs. Regnolds v. Pearce, 14 C. P. 369.

Survey—Road Mlorance.]—An original survey of part of a township made no mention of roads, and it was apparently the survey-or's intention that the roads should be taken out of the (then wild) land adjacent. The surveyor who afterwards surveyed the adjoining lands treated the road allowance as included within the lines of the original survey, whereby the plaintiff's lot would be diminished one chain in breadth. The jury having found a verdict for defendants, the court ordered a new trial, considering such verdict against the weight of evidence. Stock v. Ward, 7. C. P. 127.

Trespass — Division Furer — Recognized Boundary. — Trespass q. c. f. The division line hetween two lots being in dispute, the plaintiff proved that the line he contended for had been run by a surveyor and fencet for all the plaintiff proved that the line he contended for high the property of the prope

Trespass—Form of Action—Tender.]—In trespass for taking staves, the plaintiff recovered £20. The law on some of the facts which were improperly ellcited at the trial was doubtful, but it appeared that the plaintiff was entitled to recover something in that form of action and the residue in another form; and a new trial was refused, although a tender could have been pleaded to the amount of the whole claim if the action had been brought in another form. Baltard v. Ranson, 2 O. S. 70.

— Prior Trial for Felony—Acquittal.]
—Where A., having been tried for feloniously shooting at B. and acquitted, was afterwards sued in trespass for the same act, and the jury found for defendant, though the trespass was proved, the court refused a new trial. Day v. Hagerman, 5 U. C. R. 451.

Trover — Evidence — Damages,] — First count, trover for goods; 2. for an injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest in them. The jury were directed that there was no evidence to sustain the first count, and no substantial damage shewn on the second, but they found a general verdict for the plaintiff, and $100:—Held, that, as defendant had, on account of the ruling, retrained from giving evidence on the first count, a new trial should be granted. McMurray v. Ngan, 23 U. C. R. 19.

Will—Proof of—Witness.]—The will of Z. not having been properly proved by one of the subscribing witnesses, and the objection having been taken, the court could not enter a verdict for defendant on the leave reserved, but granted a new trial on payment of costs. Woodwaff v. Mills, 20 U. C. R. 51.

— Testamentary Capacity.] — The court, though the weight of evidence seemed the other way, refused to set aside a verdict upholding a will made by testator in his last illness, which was disputed on the ground that he was not competent at the time to exercise a disposing power, though his strength of mind when in health was not doubted. Harwood v. Baker, 3 Moo. P. C. 282, commented on. Bronen v. Bruce, 19 U. C. R. 3.

Work and Labour.] — In assumpsit, there was conflicting evidence as to certain work done, absence of evidence as to other portions of the plaintiff's claim, and failure of proof as to large quantities of the work claimed for, and a verdict for a large sum, nearly the whole amount claimed: a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Heactit v. Georeski, 6 C. P. SO.

In the following cases new trials were granted or refused on the law and evidence or Judge's charge. A reference to them only is given, as the decisions appear to be of ne general importance.

XVIII. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Abandonment of Count at Trial.]— Action on a special parol contract for sale of goods to defendants. Plaintiffs were allowed to add a count in covenant, but on objections being taken to their right to recover under it, they elected to go to the jury on the original count:—Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiffs could not recover on that count, and should therefore have been moustied; and that having abandoned the count in covenant they should not have a new trial on the ground that they were entitled to succeed on it. Moor v. Boyd, 23 U. C. R. 459.

Counsel — Misunderstanding — Terms of Verdict.]—Where there was a misunderstanding between counsel as to the terms upon which a verdict was taken subject to the opinion of the court, a new trial was granted without costs. McLeod v. Boulton, 2 U. C. R. 44.

New Trial as to Some Counts and Nonsuit as to Others.]—Where there were common counts, on which there was evidence for the jury. but the verdict certainly included some damages upon the special counts, a new trial was granted on the common counts, and a nonsuit as to the others. Harper v. Davies, 45 U. C. R. 442.

No Damages.]—The jury having found no damages, an order nisi obtained by the plaintiff for a new trial was discharged, without costs. Lemay v. Chamberlain, 10 O. R. 638.

Nonsuit on Opening—Setting aside.]—A conveyance direct from husband to wife is not necessarily void to all intents and purposes; in equity it may be void. Therefore, in this action, in which the plaintiff claimed possession of the lands against J. M., who, in 1884, had conveyed to S. M., his wife, for an expressed consideration of $100, S. M. having, in 1887, conveyed to the plaintiff, and in 1887, owneyed to the plaintiff at the opening of the case of the plaintiff at the opening of the plaintiff at the plain

R. 180, See Creighton v. Chittick, 7 S. C. R. 348; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Moore, 6 App. Cas. 644.

Notice of Trial—Agreement.]—Notice of trial having been served on defendants too late, and there being contradictory statements as to the agreement to take short notice, the court granted a new trial. Armstrong v. Beccon Life Ins. Co., 4 C. P. 547.

Notice to Produce—Failure to Girc—Costs.]—The court refused a new trial on the ground that, by omitting to give notice to produce, defendant was precluded from going into one branch of his defence, when the facts, if proved, would not have formed a legal bar. Gates v. Grooks, Dra. 180.

And if granted in such case it would be on payment of costs. Grey v. Dayfoot, 7 C. P. 156.

Ordering New Trial instead of Determining Whole Case.] — Plaintiff sued for money advanced by him to defendants to purchase wheat for him, alleging that they had not purchased or accounted. Defendants pleaded, in substance, that the money, while kept unmixed with their own as the plaintiff's money, was stolen from them by persons unknown, without any neglect on their part. At the trial a verdiet was taken for plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court whether defendants were liable, with power to draw inferences of fact. The court declined to assume the functions of a jury in determining, upon evidence wholly circumstantial, whether the money had been stolen, and directed a new trial, with costs to abide the event. Bickle v. Matheuson, 26 U. C. R. 137.

Ordering New Trial instead of Reversing Decree.]—The Court below dismissed a bill filed to enforce a claim for damages sustained by an excessive valuation of land by the brother and partner of the paid valuator duly appointed by the plaintiffs, on the ground that it was not shewn that the valuation was made fraudulently. The court, while differing from such view, declined to reverse the decree, and ordered a new trial, at which the evidence of one of the defendants already taken might be used, in the event of his then being out of the jurisdiction; but ordered the defendants to pay the costs of the appeal; the new trial to be without costs in the court below. Canada Landed Credit Co. v. Thompson, S. A. R. 696.

Reference — Agreement to Submit.] — Hore justice had been done, the court refused a new trial upon the ground that it had been agreed that a third person should have been applied to to settle the matter, he being under no legal liability to do so. Nevils v. Willcocks, Tay. 265.

Discretion of Trial Judge,]—The objection that the Judge at the trial should have himself decided the issue as to failure of consideration, instead of directing an inquiry before the master, is not one that the court will entertain. Featherstone v. Van Allen, 12 A. R. 133.

Removal of Conviction—Justice of the Peace.]—Held, that a defendant is not entitled to remove proceedings by certionari to a superior court from a police magistrate, or a justice of the peace, after conviction or at any time, for the purpose of moving for a new trial for the rejection of evidence, or because the conviction is against evidence, the conviction not being before the court, and no motion made to quash it. Regina v. Richardson, S.O. R. 651.

NOLLE PROSEQUI.

Executors—Discontinuance as to One.]—Where a plaintiff sues two or more defendants as executors, a nole prosequi and discontinuing as to one is not a discontinuance of the action. Masson v. Hill, 5 U. C. R. 60.

Filing.]—A nolle prosequi filed only with the clerk at the assizes, cannot be recognized. Water v. Taylor, 9 U. C. R. 609. See, also, Campbell v. Kempt, 2 C. L. J. 131, — Omission — Verdict — Striking out Name.]—Two defendants, sued on the common counts, joined in a plea of never indebted. After the record had been entered for trial, their attorney told the attorney for the plaintiff that the defendants were not jointly liable, but that one was, and the plaintiff's attorney thereupon entered a noile prosequi on the record as to one, but omitted to file it. He then took a verdict against the other, upon a written agreement, signed by the attorney after such entry, to admit his liability in a sum named. After the verdict this defendant was arrested, and he then moved to set aside the proceedings:—Held, that the plaintiff, instead of entering a noile prosequi, should have moved to strike out the defendant's name, but, under the circumstances, this was allowed to be done after the verdict, and the rule was discharged without costs. Barnard v. Mc-Pherson, 2 P. R. 313.

General Verdiet—Honcy Count—Count in Tort.—Plaintiff sued H. and G. for money had and received. G. allowed judgment by default. A the trial a count was added charging them with negligence as brokers. The plaintiff entered a noile prosequi as to G., and defendants' counsel refused to plead to the new count. objecting to its being allowed. The jury having found a general verdiet for the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff having entered a noile prosequi on both counts as against G., the verdict, being general, could not have been maintained as against H., though the second count was in tort. Hammond v. Hereard, 20 U. C. R. 36.

Irregularity — Notice—Verdict.1—In an action of trespass against several, if the plaintiff proceed to trial with notice of an irregularity in his proceedings as to some, and obtain a verdict, he cannot sustain it by entering a nolle prosequi as to those defendants. Campbell v. Bruce, 5 o. S. 334.

Joint Action—Tort—New Trial.]—In a joint action of trespass one party may be acquitted and the other convicted. Judgment by default had been signed against one of two defendants jointly charged, but the evidence established the tort against the other alone; whereupon the plaintiff entered a noile prosequi as to the former, and took his verdict against the latter only:—Held, that this was the more prudent course, and, therefore, no ground for granting a new trial, which however, was granted on other grounds. Campbell v. Kemp, 16 C. P. 244.

Judgment.]—A nolle prosequi cannot be entered after judgment. Roach v. Potash, M. T. 3 Vict.

Misjoinder — Nonsuit.] — Held, that in joint actions of assumpsit a misjoinder of defendant cannot be cured either by a nolle prosequi or by a nonsuit as to some of the defendants. Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 4 U. C. R. 167.

Promissory Note — Set-off by Maker — Release of Indorser, I—Action on a note made by M. and indorsed by C. Pleas by M., general issue and set-off; and by C., general issue, set-off, and release. The plaintiffs took issue on M.'s pleas, and entered a noile prosequi as to C. The court was equally divided as to whether they could do so. Robertson v. Moore, 6 O. S. 646.

Separate Counts—Admission—Right of Action.]—The first count was on a promissory note, the second on an account stated. The defendant demurs to plaintiff's replication to the plea to first count; and the plaintiff, to avoid the risk of the demurrer, enters a simple noile prosequi to that count;—Held, that the plaintiff might give the note in evidence under the second count, on the account stated; the noile prosequi not involving an express admission, as it sometimes does, that the plaintiff had no right of action on the note. Leslie v. Davidson, 3 U. C. R. 459.

— Agreement.]—The plaintiff declared on two counts, each on an agreement dated 16th November, 1855, to deliver timber. Breach, non-delivery. Defendant pleaded non-assumpsit to the whole declaration, and other pleas to the first count, and to that count a nolle prosequil was entered: — Held, that it was sufficient at the trial for the plaintiff to produce one agreement corresponding with that declared on in the second count, and that it was not necessary for him to prove one corresponding with each count. Usborne v. Grover, 13 U. C. R. 164.

Accepting Nonsuit—Time.]—The plaintiff may take a nonsuit at any time before the pronouncing of the verdict by the furry, but not after it is rendered, and before it is recorded. Van Allen v. Wigle, 7 C. P. 459; Whethen v. Calverley, 5 O. S. 71.

Counsel for Plaintiff Absent.]— Where a cause is called on for trial, and wither counsel nor attorney appears for plaintiff, a jury may be sworn and a nonsuit ordered. Falls v. Levis, Dra. 269.

Counsel for Plaintiff not Ready—Costs, 1—Where defendants' counsel was ready at the assizes, and the plaintiff's counsel not being prepared, the cause was struck out:— Held, that defendants were not entitled to costs, for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, but their proper course was to have insisted upon a nonsuit. Crofts v. McMaster,
3 P. R. 121.

Defendant Calling Witnesses.]—If a defendant move a nonsuit, and afterwards examine witnesses, the plaintiff is entitled to any benefit which he can obtain from their evidence in support of his case. Brock v. McLean, Tay. 398.

Determination of Motion to Dispose of Costs.)—After trial of spectnent upon a mortgage, with leave to move for a nonsuit, the suit was settled and the costs paid by an after mortgage of the property without defendant's authority:—Held, that this could not affect defendant's right to costs in case a nonsuit should be ordered; and, consequently, that it was still necessary to determine the point reserved. Doe d. Morgan v. Boper, 9 U. C. R. 318.

Evidence—Scintilla.]—Held, that on motion for a nonsuit the court will not consider whether there is a scintilla of evidence, but will make the rule absolute where they would have set the verdict aside on motion as against evidence. Wright v. Skinner, 17 C. P. 317.

Sufficiency.]—When leave is reserved to enter a nensuit on the whole case after evidence given on both sides, a non-suit will be ordered unless there be evidence on which a rational verdict for plaintiff can be founded, which the court would not be bound to set aside. Campbell v. Hill, 23 C. P. 473, 22 C. P. 526.

Vol. 111. p=-154-5

——Sufficiency — Direction of Judge —
Address to Jury.1—In an action by husband and wife for negligence of defendants (surgeoms) in treatment of the wife, the evidence was of a very weak and unsatisfactory character, amounting in fact to pure conjecture whether there had been any negligence or not;
while the evidence offered on behalf of defendants was of the most favourable character to them:—Held, on plaintiffs' coursel declining to take a nonsuit, that the Judge was right in directing the jury to find for defendants, as also in refusing him the right to address the jury on the whole case. Storey
v. Veach, 22 C. P. 164.

Interpleader Issue.]—A plaintiff may be nonsuited on the trial of a feigned issue under the Interpleader Act. Bryson v. Clandinan, 7 U. C. R. 198.

Issues of Law Undetermined.]—A nonsuit may be ordered where there are issues of law and fact, and the former undetermined. Bennett v. Covert, 24 U. C. R. 38.

Joint Actions—Nonsuit as to Some Defendants.]—In an action of contract a plaintiff may be nonsuited as to some or one of several defendants, though judgment by default has been entered against the others. Benedict v. Boutton. 4 U. C. R. 96; McNab v. Wagstaff, 5 U. C. R. 588.

So also in an action of trespass and false imprisonment. Armstrong v. Bouces, 12 C. P. 539.

Where in an action against the maker and indorser of a note, under 5 Wm. IV. c. 1, one defendant pleaded the general issue, and the other allowed judgment to go by default, and at the trial plaintiff was non-suited as to both, no one being present in the court on his behalf:—Held, that the nonsuit might have been right as to the one pleading, and it was therefore set aside only on payment of costs. Small v. Powell, 1 U. C. R. 427.

In an action against several defendants upon a joint contract, a plaintiff cannot have a verdict against one and be nonsuited as to the others. Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 3 U. C. R. 361.

In a joint action in assumpsit, a misjoinder of defendants cannot be cured, either by a noile prosequi or by a nonsuit as to some of the defendants; and a nonsuit as to some is a nonsuit as to all, and a verdict returned for some of the defendants is null and void. S. C., 4 U. C. R. 167.

One of Two Counts. |—Quære, as to the correctness of a nonsuit upon one of two counts. Brace v. Union Forwarding Co., 32 U. C. R. 43.

Penal Action.]—A plaintiff may be nonsuited on the trial of a penal action. Stuart v. Buller, E. T. 4 Vict.; Ranney q. t. v. Jones, 21 U. C. R. 370.

Pleading—Payment into Court.]—There may be a nonsuit after payment of money into court, or after a plea of tender. Oakes v. Morgan, S C. L. J. 248.

Powers of Court in Banc.]—At the trial of a case, the jury was directed to find for plaintiff or defendants, according to their view of certain facts on which the evidence was contradictor, according to the evidence was contradictor, according to the contradictor, according to the contradictor, according to the contradictor, according to the contradictor, and were discharged:—Held, that the court could not direct a non-suit under 34 Vict. c. 12. s. 10 (O.), for that can be done only when in their opinion the Judge should have nonsuited at the trial. Feaver v. Montreal Telegraph Co., 25 C. P. 181.

s. 33—the A. J. Act. 1874—does not empower the court to enter a nonsuit or verdict except in cases where before the Act the court would have done so on leave reserved; but it is otherwise where the trial is before a Judge without a jury: 33 Vict. c. 7, 8, 6 (O.) Hughes v. Canada Permanent L. and S. Society, 39 U. C. R. 221.

Verdict—Absence of.]—The Judge at the trial, under 37 Vict. c. 7, s. 32 (O.), submitted certain questions to the jury, but they left one unanswered, which he deemed so material that he was not able to enter n verdict, and discharged the jury:—Held, that the court could not enter a nonsuit under 34 Vict. c. 12, s. 19 (O.), and that s. 33 of 37 Vict. c. 7 (O.) would not apply, for there was no verdict to move against. The point being new, the rule was discharged without costs. Armstrong v. Steuart, 28 C. P. 45.

Several Issues—One Found for Plaintiff.!—Defendants having proved their plea setting up a condition of the policy, the plaintiff contended that it did not bar the action. Leave was reserved to move for a nonsuit on this ground, and the plaintiff had a verdict, there being another issue on the record. Semble, that a verdict should have been entered for defendants on the plea, and plaintiff left to move for judgment non obstante, for that there cannot be a nonsuit while another issue stands in favour of the plaintiff on the record. McBride v.
Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 30 U. C.
R. 451.

See Moore v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, 6 S. C. R. 634, 6 App. Cas. 644, post V.

II. GROUNDS FOR.

Declaration — Averment too Larne,]—Case for malicious arrest, in which the declaration stated that the defendant "not being americans we that the plaintiff would leave Canada." (instead of Upper Canada) made affidavit. See Flea, not guilty. An objection to the averment as being too large was held a good ground of nonsult. McBean v. Campbell, 6 O. S. 457.

Misnomer.]—It is no ground for nonsuit that the plaintiff has declared by a name different from her real name: defendant must apply to make the plaintiff amend the declaration, under 7 Wm. IV. c. 3, s. 8. Murphy v. Bunt, 2 U. C. R. 284.

Nor is a variance in the name of arbitrators, as stated in the declaration, the agreement, and award. Bentley v West, 4 U. C. R. 98. Declaration Proved.]—A plaintiff may be nonsuited although his evidence supports his declaration. McPherson v. Hamilton, 5 O. S. 490.

When the facts alleged in the declaration are proved, the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited upon the ground that they disclose no cause of action. Lewis v. City of Toronto, 39 U. C. R. 343. See, also, Commercial Bank v. Harris, 27 U. C. A. 326; Darby v. Corporation of Croutland, 38 U. C. R. 338, 342.

Venue—Objection.]—Where the objection to venue appears on the face of the declaration, defendant should demur; he cannot insist on a nonsuit, nor after verdict can he arrest the judgment, the objection then being cured by the statute. Ferguson v. Township of Houck, 25 U. C. R. 547.

Evidence—Plaintiff's Case—Supporting Plea.]—Action on two policies of insurance, Pleas, that the risk was increased and rendered more hazardous after the insurance was effected. The plaintiff anticipated the defence by evidence, which was contradictory and unsatisfactory. The onus being or defendants to prove the plea, the court refused a nonsuit on the ground that it was substantiated by plaintiff's evidence. Date V. Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 14 C. P. 502.

Non-joinder.]—Non-joinder of a plaintiff in assumpsit is ground of nonsuit. Walker v. McDonald, 4 O. S. 12.

Objection not Urged at Previous Trial. — Where two new trials have been granted in order to dispose of the question on its merits, the court will not be disposed on the last trial to consider technical objections taken as grounds of nonsuit. Wafer v. Burns, 12 U. C. R. 384.

Objection not Urged at Trial.] — A party moving to enter a nonsuit cannot take an objection which he did not urge at nisi prius. Hall v. Shannon, E. T. 2 Vict.

The plaintiff in ejectment claimed title by deed from M.; the defendant by length of possession. At the trial the plaintiff falled to prove his paper title, but shewed that defendant went in under him, and it was then objected that a demand of possession was necessary, on which defendant had leave to move for a nonsuit. In term this point was not urged, but defendant objected that the plaintiff could not rely on a different title from that in his notice:—Held, that, as this objection had not been taken at the trial, and defendant's case was not one to be favoured, he should not be allowed to raise it afterwards; and the plaintiff's verdict was upheld. Kennedy v. Freeth. 23 U. C. R. 92.

The verdict was set aside by the county court, and a nonsuit entered, upon a ground not taken as a defence at the trial or in the rule nisi:—Held, that effect should not have been given to the objection, which, if taken at the trial, would have been met by an amendment. As the evidence shewed that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon the merits, the appeal was allowed and the rule in the court below discharged. Clarke v. Barron, 6 A. R. 309.

Objection to Plaintiffs' Status—Joint Action.]—T. having title to land, she and her husband brought trespass, and defendants pleaded that the land was not plaintiffs'. It was objected that there was no joint property to sustain the action:—Held, that the objection was not available as ground for nonsuit. Quare, whether it was ground of demurrer or to arrest judgment. Tucker v. Phillips, 24 U. C. R. 626.

Undisputed Facts—Jury.]—The question of reasonable notice of default by the principal for whom defendants were sureties in this case was one for the jury, but the undisputed facts leaving no doubt what the decision of a jury should be, the court ordered a normalit. Corporation of Chatham v. Mc-

IV. SETTING ASIDE.

Accepting Nonsuit.]—Where a plaintiff suffers a nonsuit voluntarily, the court will not afterwards set it aside. Saunders v. Planter, Tay. 40; Barker v. Tabor, 5 O. S. 570; Doe d. Marr v. Marr, 3 C. P. 36.

Nor where the plaintiff requests to be non-stated, rather than go to the jury on an unfavorrable charge upon the merits, Stuart q. t. v. Bullen, I. U. C. R. 451; McGrath v. Cox, 3 U. C. R. 322.

Where the plaintiff's attorney consented to a nonsult, under an apprehension that he would be allowed to move for a new trial, the court allowed the motion, although his consent had not been coupled with the leave of the Judge at his prius to move. Cameron v. McLean, Tax. 208.

Where the plaintiff, in consequence of the Judge's ruling as to the sufficiency of evidence, to which ruling he objects, rather than risk a verdict accepts a nonsuit, he is at liberty in term to move against the nonsuit. Hatton v. Fish, S. U. C. R. 177.

Semble, that the plaintiff, having accepted a nonsuit while the Judge was charging the jury adversely, was not entitled to move against it. Fraser v. North Oxford and West Zarra Plank Road Co., 15 U. C. R. 291.

Where the plaintiff took a nonsuit in deference to the Judge's opinion, expressed not in favour of a nonsuit but of defendant upon the evidence, and the court thought that a verdict for defendant, if found, would have been sustained, they refused to interfere. Wood v. Borden, 23 U. C. R. 466.

Action upon a promissory note. Pleas, fraud and want of consideration. At the end of the charge, in which the Judge had expressed any opinion that there was some evidence in a port of the plea, plaintiff's counsel desired him to charge in a particular way, and upon his decilining to do so took a nonsuit;—Held, that, having thus elected to take a nonsuit, the planniff could not afterwards move against it. Taylor v. Rose, 24 U. C. R. 44. 63 gainst

The plaintiff having accepted a nonsuit in deference to the Judge's ruling:—Held, that he was not prevented from moving against it. Burn v. Blecher, 14 C. P. 415.

The demandant, under the facts stated in this case, having been a party to all that occurred, by appearing and accepting a nonsuit, could not afterwards be allowed to object to its regularity. Multer v. City of Hamilton, 17 C. P. 514.

Consent—Question of Fact.]—Held, upon the facts, that the nonsuit, which was upheld, was not shewn to have been against the plaintiff's consent. Conway v. Shibley, 39 U. C. R. 519.

Judge's Ruling—Acquiescence.]—To set aside a nonsuit it must be shewn that the ruling of the Judge was wrong, or that it is ex debito justifier that a new trial should be granted. Remarks as to the right to move against a nonsuit when acquiesced in either on a point of law or on the evidence. Stoker v. Welland R. W. Co., 13 C. P. 386.

Question of Law—Authority of Agent—Jury.]—In an action on a fire policy, a non-suit having been ordered upon the ground that the condition relied upon by defendants could not be waived by the inspector, or in any way except in writing:—Held, that the nonsuit was right upon the evidence: and the court refused to set it aside. Quare, whether, if the case had been lett to the jury, and they had found that the agent had authority to waive the condition, the verdict could have been allowed to stand. Mason v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 37 U. C. R. 437.

Rule Nisi—Notice of Motion.]—Where in a jury case the Judge at the trial enters a nonsuit, a notice of motion, and not an order nisi, is the proper mode of moving against it. Clarkson v. Snider, 10 O. R. 561.

See Baker v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 11 A. R. 68, post V.

V. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Absence of Witnesses.] — Where a plaintiff is disappointed in procuring testimony, he should withdraw his record or take a nonsuit. Corporation of Longueuit v. Cushman, 24 U. C. R. 602; Hooper v. Christoe, 14 C. F. 117.

Costs-Nonsuit by Judge ex Mero Motu-Appeal.]-Upon the trial of a county court counsel for the defendants, at the action. close of the plaintiff's case, formally moved for a nonsuit, and stated that he would renew the motion at the close of the defend-ants' case. Then he called and examined three witnesses, but, when a fourth was sworn, the Judge interposed and said he would take the responsibility of entering a nonsuit. He heard argument from the plaintiff's counsel opposing this course, and the defendants' counsel said he proposed to tenand the der his evidence and go on and complete the case. The Judge refused to hear further evidence, and entered a nonsuit, which in term he refused to set aside, the defendants' counsel neither opposing nor assenting to the motion. The plaintiff successfully appealed to the court of appeal. Upon the argument there, the defendants' counsel took the same position, but urged that the defendants should not be ordered to pay costs:-Held, however, that nothing was shewn to induce the court to depart from the general rule; and the defendants were ordered to pay the costs of the appeal, the lost trial, and the motion in The mere fact that the Judge below term. The mere fact that the Judge below has ex mero mote made an erroneous adjudi-cation is not a ground for absolving the re-spondent from the costs of the appeal. Mills v. Hamilton Street R. W. Co., 17 P. R. 74.

Declining Nonsuit—Verdict—Address to Jupp.]—Held, that on plaintiff's counsel declining to take a nonsuit, the Judge was right in directing the jury to find for defendants, as also in refusing him the right to address the jury on the whole case. Storcy v. Veach, 22 C. P. 164.

Demurrer.]—Where a judgment of nonsuit has been entered against a plaintiff, he will not be allowed to set down a denurrer for argument, or take any proceedings in the suit. Bags v. Rutten, 5 U. C. R. 634.

Judgment for Plaintiff—Nonsuit Set aside—New Trial—Costs.]—At the trial of a case with a jury the Judge of the county court at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, and without hearing any evidence on the part of the defendants, nonsuited the plaintiff. In the following term the Judge set the nonsuit aside and entered judgment for the plaintiff, claiming a right under the circumstances to do so. On appeal the court, while satisfied with the ruling of the Judge on the legal liability of the defendants, set the nonsuit aside and ordered a new trial upon the facts so as to afford the defendants an opportunity of adducing evidence, but under the circumstances refused them any costs of the appeal. Rules 311, 312, 319, and 321, O. J. Act, discussed. Baker v. Grand Trunk R. V. Co., 11 A. R. 68.

Law Reform Act — Eridence—Appeal.]—In an action on a life policy tried before a Judge and a jury, in accordance with the provisions of 37 Vict. c. 7, s. 32 (O.), the Judge, in place of requiring the jury to render a general verdict, directed them to answer certain questions, and the jury having answered all the questions in favour of the plaintiff, the Judge entered a verdict for the plaintiff. Upon a rule nisi to shew cause why this verdict should not be set aside and a nonsuit or a verdict entered for defendants pursuant to the Law Reform Act, or a new trial had between the parties, said verdict being contrary to law and evidence, and the finding virtually for the defendants, the court of Queen's bench (41 U. C. R. 497) made the rule absolute to enter a verdict for the defendants. The appellant then appealed to the court of appeal for Ontario, and the court being equally divided, the appeal was dismissed (3 A. R. 331):—Semble, that the plaintiff never could have been nonsuited in virtue of 27 Vict. c. 7, s. 33 (O.), as it is only where it can be said that there is not any evidence in support of the plaintiff's case, that a nonsuit can be entered; and that in this case the proper verdict which the law required to be entered upon the answers of the jury was one in favour of the plaintiff. Moore v. Connecticut Mutual Ligt Ins. Co. of Hartford, 6 S. C. R. 634. See S. C., 6 App. Cas. 644.

Set-off notwithstanding Nonsuit.]— Semble, that a defendant, though the plaintiff be nonsuited or have a verdict against him on the other issues, may have his setoff found and a verdict entered for it, for he has an independent right to judgment for his claim, which the plaintiff cannot defeat by a nonsuit. Parsons v. Crabb, 31 U. C. R. 434.

not in itself an official document, came officially into the hands of the notary, among whose records it was found. Grey v. McMillan, 5 C. P. 400.

Promissory Note—Protest—Scal.]—The notary who protests a note need not use an official seal, or subscribe himself in writing a notary nublic; any seal which he declares in the protest to be his official seal is sufficient, and placing his signature before the printed words "notary public," is an adoption of them. Commercial Bank of Canada v. Brega, 17 C. P. 473.

Protest—Copy—Seal.]—A notarial protest from Lower Canada, certified by the notary as a true copy from his notarial book, is sufficient without any notarial seal. Ross v. McKindsey, 1 U. C. R. 507.

Services—Charges—Taxation.]—A solicitor, who is also a notary, and, acting in the latter capacity, obtains for a client the allowance of a pension from the United States Government, is entitled to charge for his services such sum as may be agreed upon, and is not bound by the statutory regulations affecting solicitors' charges, or liable to have his charges taxed. The right to tax a solicitor's bill of charges for conveyancing, in the absence of a special agreement, considered. Outrom v. Renjamin. 2 OA. R. 336.

Signature — Contract — Statute of Francis.]—An ante-nuptial contract, entered into in the Province of Quebec, was not signed by the parties themselves, but by the notaries in their own names, they having full authority from the parties to so sign:—Held, that this was a sufficient signature within the Statute of Frands to bind the parties. Taillifer v. Taillifer, 21 O. R. 337.

Morton v. Benjamin, S U. C. R. 594.

Agreement — Purchase of Railway.]— The Quebec Street Railway Company were authorized under a by-law passed by the corporation of the city of Quebec and an agreement executed in pursuance thereof to construct and operate in certain streets of the city a street railway for a period of forty years, but it was also provided that at the expiration of twenty years (from the 9th February, 1895), the corporation might, after notice of six months to the said company, to be given within the twelve months immediately preceding the expiration of the said twenty years, assume the ownership of said railway, upon payment of its value, to be determined by arbitration, together with ten per cent. additional:—Held, that the company were entitled to a full six months notice prior to the 9th February, 1885, and therefore a notice given in November, 1884, to the company that the corporation would take possession of the railway in six months thereafter, was bad. Quebec Street R. W. Co. v. City of Quebec, 15 S. C. R. 164.

Carriage of Goods — Contract—Notice of Loss or Non-delicery, 1 — See Steele v, Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 31 C. P. 260; Grand Trunk R. W. Co. v. McMillan, 16 S. C. R. 543.

Chattel Mortgage—Actual Natice.]—A purchaser of goods for value, though with actual notice of a mortgage thereon not duly filed:—Held, entitled under the Chattel Mortgage Act. C. S. U. C. e. 45, as zaniast the mortgagee. Morrow v. Rorke, 39 U. C. R. 500.

Companies Act, 1862 (Imperial)— Notices under.]—See Barned's Banking Co. v. Reynolds, 40 U. C. R. 435.

Constitutional Questions — Notice to Attorneys-General.] — See Hately v. Merchants' Despatch Co., 2 O. R. 385; Goring v. London Mutual Ins. Co., 11 O. R. 82.

Contract — Notice of Termination — Laches,]—Semble, that when a party to a contract (in which time is not of the essence) desires to put an end to the contract in consequence of the laches of the other party thereto, the proper mode of doing so is to give notice that unless completed within a period to be fixed, the contract will be considered at an end. O'Keefe v. Taylor, 2 Gr. 95.

Expulsion of Members of Corporation.]—See Cannon v. Toronto Corn Exchange, 27 Gr. 23, 5 A. R. 208; Marsh v. Huron College, 27 Gr. 605; L'Union St. Joseph de Montreal v. Lapierre, 4 S. C. R. 164.

Fire Insurance — Notice of Further Insurance—Mistoke—Frand.]—In an action on a policy of insurance, the defendants alleged that an additional insurance had been effected in another company without their being notified within a reasonable time, and in a proper manner, and without such notice being acknowledged by them, there being conditions indorsed upon their policy in accordance with these objections. It appeared that the notice of further insurance stated the amount to be larger than it really was, and gave the name of the company in which the further insurance was effected wrongly:—Held, that, inasmuch as the defendants were neither prejudiced nor misled by the mistake, and there did not appear to be, and was not alleged to be, any fraud in so giving the notice, the policy was not thereby vitlated. Osser v. Provincial Ins. Co., 12 C. P. 133.

Notice of Further Insurance—Intention—Forfeiture—Time.]—In this case R., who had insured on the 20th April, 1875, in defendant company, on the 1st May effected an additional insurance in the Stadacona com-pany, and on the 5th July posted a notice to defendants' local agent, informing him of the fact, which was received by the local agent on the 8th, and on the same day forwarded to the head office, where it was received on the 10th; and on the 20th, and after notice of the loss, they notified the insured that they dissented to the additional insurance and had cancelled their policy :- Held, that the notice was within the time allowed, and that the policy was forfeited. The notice also notified defendants of the intention of the insured to effect an additional insurance in the Beaver and Toronto Mutual Insurance Company, and the insured, before the expiration of the fourteen days, and without any further notice to defendants, effected such insurance:—Held, that this also avoided the policy. Quere, as to the effect of a notice of the intention to effect a further insurance. Metrea v. Waterloo County Mutual Five Ins. Co., 26 C. P. 431.

Notice of Incumbrance.]—Notice of an incumbrance posted to the secretary of an insurance company, without shewing that it reached him:—Held, not a compliance with a condition that subsequent mertgages "must be notified to the secretary in writing forthwith." McCann v. Waterloo County Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 34 U. C. R, 376.

Fraud — Notice of—Onus—Defence.]—A bis letting forth that one of the defendants procured a conveyance from the plaintiff by fraud, and afterwards mortgaged the property to another defendant, is not demurrable for want of a charge that the latter had notice of the fraud at or before he received his mortgage. It is for defendant in such a case to set up the defence of no notice. Kitchen v. Kitchen, 16 Gr. 232.

Guarantee—Employee's Policy—Notice of Claim—Excuse for not Giving. |—The policy sued on, guaranteeing to the extent of $20,000 the honesty and care of one W. while in the plaintiffs' employment as cashier, contained a condition that it should be void on the neglect condition that it should be void on the neglect of the plaintiffs to make known to the direc-tors of the society in Canada any act or omis-sion of W. discovered by them, giving a claim under it. In declaring on this policy, the plaintiffs alleged that while in their employ-ment a sum exceeding $20,000 was intrusted to W., to be safely kept in the safe at their head office, of which $10,000 was lost, owing under it. to his negligence in regard to its custody; and they alleged as an excuse for not giving the notice, that defendants had ceased to have or appoint directors in Canada. Defendants pleaded that before the alleged neglect of W., they had ceased to carry on business or have directors in Canada, and had appointed one It, to act for them, for the purpose of paying policies already granted, and receiving all no-tices required, of which the plaintiffs had notice, but that they gave no notice to R., or to the directors of the company in any way the directors of the company in any way.

Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad, for the defendants had by their own act deprived themselves of the benefit of the condition, and rendered compliance with it impossible; and they could not insist upon notice to R. Royal Canadian Bank v. European Assurance Society, 29 U. C. R. 579.

- Rent-Notice of Default—Time— Jury—Nonsuit.]—Defendants entered into a bond conditioned that one McK, should pay to the plaintiffs certain rent in equal monthly payments, with a provise 'that the said municipality (the plaintiffs) shall, on default being made by the said McK, in the payment of said amount monthly, give notice thereof to the said obligors: '—'leld, that the provise for notice was a condition precedent to the plaintiffs' right to call upon the defendants as sureties, and that notice of default not having been given within a reasonable time, the defendants were relieved. The question of reasonable notice is one for a jury, but the undisputed facts leaving no doubt what the decision of a jury should be, the court ordered a nonsuit to be entered. Corporation of Chatham v, McCrea. 12 C. P. 352. Harbour—Notice of Closing—Sufficiency.] —Held, that defendants, a harbour company, had authority, under the circunstances mentioned in the case, to the circunstances mentioned in the case, to the notice of the closing, unfaint tion as stated in the report, and that the plaintiff was not cartified to actual personal notice of the fact. Spreamy v. Part Burnell Harbour Co., 19 C. 1876.

Hiegality—Want of Notice of—Equity.]
—Courts of equity cannot, any more than courts of law, on the footing of want of notice of the illegality, give effect to proceedings which, on principles of the common law and under statutes, are utterly void. Gardiner v. Juson, 2 E. & A. 188.

Mortgage—Possession by Mortgagee—Notice by Solicitor—Authority,]—Where a mortgage provided that no means should be taken by the mortgagee to obtain possession of the land until he should have given to the mortgager one calendar month's notice in writing after default made, demanding payment:— Held, in ejectment by the mortgagee, that a notice signed by the plaintiff's attorney, who was also his attorney in a suit brought upon the covenant more than a month before this action, was sufficient, without any proof of authority. Keyworth v. Thompson, 16 U. C. R. 178.

Foreclosure — Defect — Purchase by Solicitor—Knowledge of Agent.]—In a foreclosure suit, defendant, after having been arrested for contempt in not answering, employed the agent of the solicitor for the plaintiff to defend the suit; and, after several proceedings by consent, a decree was made directing the money to be paid on the 25th May. 1841. Three days before the time appointed for payment the plaintiff died; and the solicitor, acting in the cause, subsequently obtained an order appointing a new day for payment, and afterwards the final order for foreclosure by consent, without having revived the suit, and without taking any notice of the death of The representative of the plainthe plaintiff. tiff afterwards conveyed to the trustee for the creditors of his ancestor, and he sold to a third party, who again sold to the solicitor of the plaintiff, through whose agent all the pro-ceedings had been taken, but who was himself ignorant of the defects existing therein. defendant in the cause having died, his widow and devisee, about twelve years afterwards, filed a bill to redeem, setting forth the above facts. The court were equally divided as to whether the right to redeem had been foreclosed. Arkell v. Wilson, 5 Gr. 470.

Held, on appeal, that this was a proper case in which to withhold redemption, under the discretion given to the court, under s. 11 of the Chancery Act; that the purchasers could not reasonably be held to have constructive notice of the defect in the proceedings; and the appeal was dismissed with costs. S. C., 7 Gr. 270.

Purchaser.] — The plaintiff, being owner of land, after having mortgaged it, emigrated to Australia, and subsequently remitted money to his agents here to pay off the incumbrance; but they applied the money to their own use.

Subsequently the assignee of the mortgage proceeded to foreclose, in which suit an answer was put in on behalf of the plaintiff, but without his knowledge or consent, admitting the allegations of the bill, and that the full amount of principal and interest was due; whereupon a final order of foreclosure was, in due course, obtained; and the plaintiff in that suit conveyed to defendant A, for $1,002, the value of the property; and on the same day defendants M, and S, as attorneys of the plaintiff, conveyed the premises to A., who was ignorant of any fraud in the matter. The plaintiff, conveyed the premises to A., who was ignorant of any fraud in the matter, and the plaintiff having returned to the country, and ascertained the frauds which had been practised upon him, filed a bill against his agents and the purchaser A:—Held, that the plaintiff, so far as the purchaser was concerned, was bound by his answer, and was not entitled to relief as against him; and that the fact of the purchaser having heard before his purchase that the plaintiff had remitted money to pay the mortgage was not sufficient to charge him with notice that the foreclosure was wrongful. McLean, v. Grant, 20 Gr. 76,

Municipal Election—Notice of Resignation.]—The notice of a party resigning the office of councillor for a village to which he had been elected, stated that he resigned his "seat" in the council:—Held, sufficient; and that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs, although the Municipal Act requires notice of resignation of the "office" to be given. Smith v. Petersville, 28 Gr. 359.

Partnership — Purchase of Interest—Wrongful Appropriation of Moneys — Notice to Original Partners, 1—Three persons, occupying a fiduciary position towards a bank, became partners in a firm, agreeing to pay for their interest a certain sum of money in liquidation of creditors' claims. They did pay this sum, but out of the moneys of the bank wrongfully appropriated by them. Subsequently the firm was formed into a joint stock company, and the assets of the partnership were assigned by the partners to the company. The company soon afterwards failed, and a winding-up order was made, the original assets, upon which the bank claimed a lien, to a considerable extent coming into the possession of the liquidator: —Held, that the original partners were not affected with constructive notice of the means by which the incoming partners obtained the money brought in, and that, no actual notice to them or to the company being shewn, the bank had no lien. In re Herr Piano Co. 17 A. R. 333.

Notice to Partner to Leave Firm.]
—See O'Keefe v. Curran, 17 S. C. R. 596.

Possession of Land—Adverse Claimant.]
—Possession by an adverse claimant is no notice of his interest to a party parting with the estate. Beck v. Moffatt, 17 Gr. 601.

Promissory Note—Alteration in.]—See Swaisland v. Davidson, 3 O. R. 320.

Stamps — Knowledge — Presumption—Agent, | Where the holder of a note has reasonable notice of the want of proper stamps, he must repel the presumption of knowledge by reasonable evidence, and notice to or knowledge of his attorney or agent must be considered his. Waterous v. Montgomery, 36 U. C. R. 1.

Stamps—Notice to Agent—Actual Knowledge.]—Notice to the attorney or agent of the holder of a note of the want of proper stamps must be considered notice to the holder. And, semble, the knowledge of such want of stamps must be actual knowledge, not constructive notice. Waterons v. Monitomcry, 35 U. C. R. 1. See Third National Bank of Chicago v. Cooky, 43 U. C. R. 58.

Want of Consideration-Notice to Holders.] — In answer to a motion by the plaintiffs for summary judgment under rule 739 in an action upon a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of a trading company and indorsed by them to the plaintiffs. whose manager swore that they were the holders thereof in due course for value, the defendant made an affidavit in which he stated that he had never received any consideration the note; that he made it for the accommodation of the company; that he had heard the local manager of the plaintiffs say that the note was not discounted by them, but was simply left with them; that he believed the local manager was aware when he received the note that it was an accommodation one, and was also aware of the arrangement entered into between the company and the defendant at the time the note was made; and that an accountant placed by the plaintiffs in charge of the books of the company was present when that arrangement was made. did not state that the local manager had the requisite notice to affect the plaintiffs, nor the grounds of his belief that he had such notice: to had any other notice or knowledge of the agreement referred to, nor did he adduce any hearsay evidence in support of the defence attempted to be set up :- Held, that the defendant had not shewn satisfactorily that he had a good defence on the merits, nor disclosed such facts as should be deemed sufficient to entitle him to defend. Bank of Toronto v. Keilty, 17 P. R. 250.

Purchase of Land—Notice of Will Destroyed but not Registered. |—See Re Davis, 27 Gr. 199.

Purchaser for Value — Assignce with Native, |—A purchaser, though he may have had notice, is entitled to the benefit of the position of the party under whom he claims where such a party was a purchaser for value, without notice, Rogers v. Shortis, 10 Gr. 243.

Charge—Priorities.)—In the case of a charge upon equitable property where the legal estate is outstanding, the defence of purchase for valuable consideration without notice is, in general, inapplicable, the rule being that all such charges take rank according to priority in point of time. Litterson Lamber Co. v. Rennic, 21 S. C. R. 218.

Constructive Notice,]—An unpatented and undeveloped mining property, the value of which was purely speculative and the Government dues on which were unpaid, was conveyed to the plaintiff, the consideration mentioned in the deed being 8100, and he, for the expressed, but not actual, consideration of 8750, conveyed the property for the purpose of selling it for his own hencil to one of the defendants, who, after holding it for a year, conveyed it to his co-defendant, who had no actual notice of the circumstances. in consideration of the release of a debt of $255.—Held, that the release of the debt was a sufficient consideration for the deed. Held, also, that, taking the circumstances and character of the property into account, the last grantee, who had made no inquiry, was not, by reason of the consideration expressed in the deeds to and from the plaintiff, put upon inquiry so as to affect him with constructive notice of the plaintiff's rights. Moore v. Kanc, 24 O. R. 541.

Ship — Towage—Public Notice—Govern-ent Regulations—Effect of.] — Declaration, that defendants were owners of a line of towboats on the river St. Lawrence and St. Lawrence canals, and that they received a schooner of plaintiff's to be towed from Lachine to Kingston for reward, &c., and undertook to use due diligence and despatch in towtook to use due diligence and despatch in tow-ing said schooner. Breach, want of diligence and unreasonable delay, &c. Pleas, I. Non assumpserunt; 2: that they did use due dili-gence and despatch, &c. Defendants had en-tered into a contract with the Government to tow vessels on the river St. Lawrence, A public notice signed by the secretary of the board of works, and containing regulations for towage, &c., also signed by defendants, appeared in a public newspaper at Kingston, One of the defendants, when examined as a witness, proved the contract with the Govern-ment. The plaintiff's schooner was taken in tow at Lachine by one of the line, and through the tow boat was several times delayed and detained before reaching the place of destination :- Held, that the contract with the Government was sufficiently proved; that the line of the tow-boats having been established ac-cording to the printed notices imported the basis on which future constructive or implied agreements with individual shipowners were to be rested; that the plaintiff's vessel with a fixed and known destination having been taken in tow by a tug of defendants, the inference must be that she was to be towed through to her place of destination with due and reasondiligence, according to the provisions contained in the public notice; and that without a special agreement on the subject she should not be dropped or deserted at the pleasure of the owner of the tug. Gaskin v. Colvin, 2 C.

Tax Sale—Purchaser for Value—Defect—Kaurelogy of Solicitor, 1—One T., being owner or certain land, executed a marriage settlement, and the swife was entitled to the land for her life. The taxes afterwards settlement, the land taxes afterwards fell into arrear, and the land taxes afterwards fell into arrear, and the land taxes afterwards sheriff to pay them. By arrangement to their interests in the property; and she having sold it to the defendant G., the purchaser at sheriff's sale conveyed to G. In a suit by the assigness of T.'s heirs to set aside this sale, G. claimed to be a purchaser for value without notice. The same solicitor acted for the vendors and the vendee G., in the transaction of the sale to G., and this solicitor knew then, and before, that T. had been the owner, and that he had executed a marriage settlement under which his wife was tenant for life, but he did not know or suspect she was bound to pay the taxes for which the land was sold, and he did not communicate to G. that she was under any such obligation:—Held, that G. was not affected by constructive notice of the liability. Monro v. Rudd, 20 Gr. 55.

Temperance Act.—Notice under—Proof of Signature.]—In an action under s. 42 of the Temperance Act of 1864 (27 Vict. c. 18) by a wife against a tavern-keeper for supplying her husband with liquor after service of a notice in writing signed by her "in accordance with the statute, there was no evidence served, but merely that she signed a notice a copy of which was served:—Held, insufficient. Gleason v. Williams, 27 C. P. 93.

Title — Notice of — Bridence — Conversations. I — Where a party charged a defendant with notice of his title, and evidence was adduced of several conversations in which notice was distinctly proved to have been given to defendant:—Held, that those conversations were admissible in evidence, although not particularly mentioned in the bill, as the fact of notice, and not any particular conversation, was the point in issue. Barnhart v. Patterson, 1 Gr., 459.

— Notice of — Possession—Purchase for Value without Notice—Crown.]—Possession is notice of the title of the party having possession without proving notice of such possession by the party charged with notice of such title. Attorney-General v. McNutly, 11 Gr. 281. Alfirmed on rehearing. 1b. 581.

A plea of purchase for value without notice, cannot be set up against the Crown. Ib. 281.

Trial — Proof of Will — Notice of Using Probate.]—A notice under C. S. U. C. c. 32, s. 9, of the intention to use the probate of D.'s will, was served ten days before the actual day of trial, though not before the commission day of trial, though not before the commission day of the assize: but a similar notice for the preceding assize was admitted to have been served in time:—Semble, that the first named notice was served in time, but that the plaintiff could avail himself of the other notice, for such a notice for one assize need not be repeated. Dehart v. Dehart, 26 C. P. 489.

Voter and Revising Officer — Notice to.]—See Simmons v. Dalton, 12 O. R. 505.

Way — Origin of Right, |—Held, that the defendant in this case, having notice of an actual travelled way across his land, was affected also with notice of the origin as well as the existence of the right. Dixon v. Crose, 4 O. R. 465.

NOTICE OF ACTION.

- 1. Cases in which it is Necessary, 4894.
- II. FORM AND REQUISITES, 4902.
- III. MISCELLANEOUS CASES, 4907.

I. Cases in which it is Necessary.

Arbitrator.] — Trespass does not lie against arbitrators if they had jurisdiction in the matter in which they acted. If they took an erroneous view of the merits, and mistook the law, or come to an unsound conclusion upon the evidence, when the matter referred to them was within their jurisdiction, they would be protected who are authorized by statute to determine differences between masters and servants. Kennedy v. Burness, 15 U. C. R. at p. 487.

Held, following Kennedy v. Burness, 15 U. C. R. at p. 487, that arbitrators between school trustees and teacher, under the Common School Act, acting within their jurisdiction, are entitled to protection under C. S. U. C. c. 126, as persons fulfilling a public duty. Hughes v. Pake, 25 U. C. R. 95.

By-law.]—Notice of action for acts done under a by-law. Carmichael v. Slater, 9 C. P. 423.

Constable.]—The Imperial statute 21 Jac. I. c. 12 does not entitle constables to notice, or limit the period within which they may be sued. Belch v. Arnott, 9 C. P. 68.

To a chief constable in an action for malicious arrest. McKay v. Cummings, 6 O. R. 400.

In an action against constable and a justice of the peace for having and concealing a colt. Howell v. Armour, 7 O. R. 363.

To constable in an action of replevin for impounding cattle. Ibbottson v. Henry, 8 O. R, 625.

Where in an action against a constable for false arrest it is found by the jury that the defendant acted in the honest belief that he was discharging his duty as a constable, and was not actuated by any improper motive, he is entitled to notice of action, and such notice must state not only the time of the commission of the act complained of, but that it was done maliciously. Scott v. Reburn, 25 O, R. 450.

The object of the "Act to protect Justices of the Peace and others from Vexations Actions," R. S. O. 1887 c. 73, is for the protection of those fulfilling a public duty, even though in the performance thereof they may act irregularly or erroneously, and notice of action in such case must allege that the acts were done maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause: but where a person entiled to the benefit of the Act voluntarily does something not imposed on him in the discharge of any public duty, such notice is not required, Actly v, Harton, Kelly v, Archibald, 20 O. R. 608. Affirmed in appeal, 22 A. R. 522.

Arrest without Warrant. |--Where the defendant, a constable, had had no notice of action, it was left to the jury to say whether a constable who had arrested a man without a warrant acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he was performing a public duty:—Held, a proper direction, and a verdict for plaintiff was sustained. Cottrell v. Hueston, 7 C. P. 277.

A warrant to arrest the plaintiff was directed to one S, and all other peace officers of the county. The defendant was sworn in as a special constable to assist S., and he went alone, not having the warrant with him, and made the arrest. On action brought the jury found that the defendant believed he was acting in the execution of his duty:—Held, that under 14 & 15 Vict, c. 54 he was entitled to notice. Sage v. Duffy, 11 U. C. R. 30,

- Invalid Warrant, | - A constable executing a warrant in good faith outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the magistrate issuing the same, without procuring the indorse-ment of a magistrate of the county where the arrest is made, is entitled to notice of action and to the protection of R. S. O. 1887 c. 73. Alderich v. Humphrey, 29 O. R. 427.

County Crown Attorney.]-The defendant, being county Crown attorney and clerk of the peace, received certain promissory notes belonging to the plaintiffs with the deposi-tions from a magistrate on the committal of certain persons for obtaining such notes by false pretences. At the trial before the county Judge the prisoners were acquitted, the Judge saying that the prosecutors' remedy, if any, was in chancery. The defendant refused to give the notes up to the plaintiffs on demand, saying that he would return them to the committing magistrate, and the plaintiffs thereupon brought trover and detinue. The trial Judge having found that the defendant acted Judge having round that the detendant acted bona fide in such refusal:—Held, that he was entitled to notice of action under C. S. U. C. c. 126; that he was an officer fulfilling a pub-lic duty within that statute; and that the refusal, though erroneous, was an act done by him in the supposed discharge of such duty. McDougall v. Peterson, 40 U. C. R. 95.

Division Court Bailiff - Excessive Levy. |-A bailiff of a division court was held not entitled to notice, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 53, s. 107, of an action to recover the excess of money levied under an execution. Dale v. Cool. 6 C. P. 544.

- Execution,]—The defendant C., a division court bailiff, was employed by the plaintiff to sell certain goods under a chattel mortgage given to the plaintiff by one L. The defendant C. advertised and took posses-sion of them, and afterwards executions came into his hands against L., under which the attorney for the execution creditors told him to seize these goods. The plaintiff claimed to seize these goods. The plaintiff claimed them, and obtained judgment in his favour upon an interpleader issue. The defendant C. refused on demand to give up the goods to the plaintiff until he should consult the attorney, who told him to use his own judgment. The who told him to use his own judgment. The plaintiff having brought treepass and trover:

—Held, that C. was liable; that he was not entitled to a demand of perusal and copy of the warrants under which he acted, for the action was not brought by reason of any defect in the process; and that the jury was warranted in finding, as they did, that he did not believe that he was discharging his duty as bailiff in refusing to give up the goods after the decision of the interpleader, which finding disentitled him to notice of action. Stewart v. Cowan, 40 U. C. R. 346.

Execution — Form of Notice.] — C. S. U. C. c. 126, s. 10, requiring notice of action, does not apply to the case of a division court bailiff acting under an execution which is specially provided for by c. 19, s. 193; and a notice thereof to such bailiff not having indorsed upon it the place of abode of naving indorsed upon it the place of aboue of the plaintiff, as required by the former, but not by the latter Act, was held sufficient, Stephens v. Stapleton, 40 U. C. R. 353. Ap-proved and followed in McMartin v. Hurtburt, 2 A. R. 146.

Execution Creditor.]-Want of no-Execution Creditor, I.—Want of no-tice to a bailiff of a division court, acting un-der 4 & 5 Vict. c. 5, must be pleaded specially, But while a bailiff, seizing goods under an execution, is entitled to notice, the planniff in the execution is not, as he is not a "person in the execution of the act." Timon v. acting in the execution of the act." Timon v. acting in the execution of the act." Timon v. acting in the execution of the act." Timon v. 6 0, 8, 572.

Indemnity.]-The statement of a bailiff, that "he believed the cattle to be the plaintiff's," but that he was indemnified and had to sell when he seized them in execution against the person in possession, does not make a notice unnecessary. Sanderson v. Coleman, 4 U. C. R. 119.

A division court bailiff is entitled, under C. S. U. C. c. 19, s. 193, to notice of action for seizure and sale of goods under execution, although he is indemnified and directed to sell by the execution creditor. Lough v. Coleman, 29 U. C. R. 367. See also McCance v. Bateman, 12 C. P.

- Pleading. | - The bailiff of a division court, acting in the discharge of his duty as such, is entitled to notice; and that objection is open to him under the plea of not guilty by statute. Dale v. Cool, 4 C. P. 460.

A bailiff is entitled to notice of an action upon the statutory covenant, for execution, seizure, and sacrifice of plaintiff's goods. Such action must be brought within six months; and the defence may be raised under the general issue by statute. Pearson v. Ruttan, 15 C. P. 79.

Sureties.]-Quere:-Are the sureties of a division court bailff, in a joint ac-tion against principal and sureties, entitled to notice of action to themselves? 2. Can they plead the want of notice to the bailiff in their own protection? 3. Can they, in an action against themselves, take advantage of the want of notice to the bailiff, or of any other defence that would have been open to other defence that would have been open to the latter? Held, in this case, as the re-covery must be against all or none, that the discharge of the principal involved that of the sureties. Pearson v. Ruttan, 15 C. P. 79.

- Unscaled Warrant.]-Bailiffs of a division court are entitled to notice of action for seizing goods, although acting under a warrant without seal. Anderson v. Grace, 17 U. C. R., Osco Hanns v. Johnston, 3 O. R. 100; Pardev v. Glass, 11 O. R. 275.

Division Court Clerk, — Action against un der a judgment:—Held, following Dale v. Cool, 6 C. P. 544, defendant not entitled to motice. Metchish v. Howard, 3 A. R. 503.

Execution Creditor.1 — Held, that a plaintiff in a division court suit who, on an execution against the goods of A., indemnified the bailliff for seizing and selling the goods of B., was not entitled to notice, or to the protection as to venue. Dollery v. Whaley, i.e. C. P. 105.

Government Railway Act.]—See Kearney v. Oakes, 18 S. C. R. 148.

Justice of the Peace.]—In an action for wrongful arrest, though the conviction made by the defendant is void, he is entitled to notice of action if he was acting in his official capacity as a magistrate, and had jurisdiction over the plaintiff in the subject-matter. Haacke v. Adamson, 14 C. P. 201.

Acting without Information.]—The magistrate having acted in direct contravention of the statute, in issuing a warrant without the proper information, or even an oral charge against the plaintiff, and there being no evidence of bona fides on his part, the court held that he was not entitled to notice. Friel v. Ferguson, 15 C. P. 584.

Acting without Jurisdiction.]—A magistrate is entitled to notice, though he has acted without jurisdiction. Where it was clear that defendant had neted as a justice, and there was no evidence of mulice except the want of jurisdiction:—Held, not necessary, to entitle him to notice, to leave it to the jury to say whether he neted in good faith. Bross v. Huber, 18 U. C. R. 283.

A magistrate having entertained a case under the Master and Servant Act. C. S. U. C. c. 75, as amended by 20 Vict. c. 33, and convicted the plaintiff, notwithstanding that more than a month had elapsed since the termination of the engagement, and although he was told that he had no jurisdiction, and was shewn a professional opinion to that effect and referred to the statute:—Held, that the jury were warranted in finding that he did not bona fide believe that he was acting in the execution of his duty in a matter within his jurisdiction; and that he was therefore not entitled to notice. Cummins v. Moore, 37 U. C. R. 130.

In this case the magistrate having, in the honest belief that he was acting in the execution of his duty as such, issued the warrant of commitment after payment of the costs adjudged, was, though acting without jurisdiction, entitled to notice of action, and no notice having been given, the action failed, Sinden v. Brown, 17 A. R. 173. Approved and followed in McGuiness v. Dafoe, 27 O. R. 117, 23 A. R. 704.

Illegal Warrant.]—Semble, that the fact of a magistrate issuing a warrant without the limits of the county for which he acts, does not necessarily disentitle him to notice. Friet v. Ferguson, 15 C. P. 584.

Judgment by default.]—In trespass against a magistrate for false imprisonment and seizing and selling goods and chattels, where he suffers judgment by default, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove that he gave notice of action or commenced his suit within six months. Mills v. Conger, 4 O. S. 383.

Jury's Finding as to Bona Fides.]—
If it be doubtful whether defendant was acting in the execution of his duty, it should be left to the jury to say whether they believed he was acting as a magistrate or not; and if they find in his favour on that noint notice must be proved. Carswell v. Huffman, 1 U. C. R. 381.

Where the plaintiff's evidence shews that the defendant sued in trespass was acting bona fide as a justice of the peace, and the jury so find, the plaintiff must prove notice of action; and this though defendant has pleaded only the general issue, without adding "by statute," in the margin. Marsh v. Boulton, 4 U. C. R. 354.

Held, that in this case the evidence fully warranted a finding that defendants were not acting or intending to act as magistrates or peace officers, but as interest parties; and that this was a question properly left to the jury to determine. Custck v. McRae, 11 U. C. R. 509.

Where a magistrate acts clearly in excess of or without jurisdiction, he is nevertheless entitled to notice, unless the bona fides of his conduct be disproved; but the plaintiff may require that question to be left to the jury, and if they find that he did not honestly believe he was acting as a magistrate, he has no claim to notice. Neill v. McMillan, 25 U. C. R. 485.

Held, that in an action against a justice where no notice was given, the plaintiff was entitled to have submitted to the jury the question whether defendant acted bona fide, with an honest belief in his right so to act, so as to entitle him to notice of action under R. S. O. 1877 c. 73. Neil v. McMillan, 25 U. C. R. 485, followed. Allen v. McQuarrie, 44 U. C. R. 62.

Not Returning Conviction.]—In an action against a justice of the peace for not returning a conviction the defendant is not entitled to notice. Grant q. t. v. McFadden, 11 C. P. 122. See also Ranney q. t. v. Jones, 21 U. C. R. 370.

License Commissioners.]—A notice of action is necessary in an action for damages against a board of license commissioners acting under R. S. O. 1887 c. 194. Leeson v. License Commissioners of Dufferin, 19 O. R. 67.

Mayor.]—The defendant was sued as mayor of a town for refusing to sign an order to enable the plaintiff to obtain a saloon license:—Held, that, as it must be presumed that the defendant, in refusing to sign the order, intended to act in the discharge of his official duty, he was entitled to notice. Moran v. Palmer, 13 C. P. 528.

Municipal Corporation.] — Municipal corporations are not within C. S. U. C. c. c. 126, and therefore are not entitled to notice of action. Hodgins v. United Counties of Huron and Bruce, 3 E. & A. 139.

A municipal corporation is not entitled to notice of action under the Act to protect justices of the peace and others from vexations actions, R. S. O. 1887 c. 73. Hodgins v. Counties of Huron and Bruce, 3 E. & A. 169, followed. Defence of want of such notice struck out upon summary application. Mc-Carthy v. Township of Vexpra, 16 P. R. 416.

By 25 Vict. c. 16, s. 84 (N.B.), and amending Acts, relating to highways, the privileges and immunities formerly vested in commissioners of roads are declared to be vested in the council of the town of Portland, By another Act no action could be brought against a commissioner of roads unless notice thereof was given. The town of Portland afterwards became part of the city of 8t, John, and an action was brought for injuries caused by a broken plank in a sidewalk in what was formerly the town of Portland;—Held, that notice was not necessary; the liability did not depend on s. 84 of 25 Vict. c. 16, but on the statutory duty of the council to keep the streets in repair; the only "privilege or immunity" to the commissioner was exemption from performance of statute labour. City of 8t, John v. Christie, 21 S. C. R. 1.

against a numerical corporation for not providing a proper supply of pure water for the providing a proper supply of pure water for the plaintiffs, and for negligently and knowing allowing the water supplied by them to well allowing pregnated with sand, which greatly damaged the elevator—Held, that the action was one for breach of contract, and therefore the statutory defences and the defence of want of notice of action, &c., under statutes giving the same protection as that given to justices of the peace in the execution of their duties, were imapplicable. Scottish Onterio and Manitoba Land Co. v. City of Toranto, 24 A. R. 208.

Municipal Councillors.] — Notice to municipal councillors, in action for defrauding the corporation:—Held, not necessary. Town of Chatham v. Houston, 27 U. C. R. 550.

— Pathmaster,]—Two of the defendants, members of a township council, were appointed by resolution of the council a committee to rebuild a culvert, and they personally superintended the work, and were paid for doing it, but there was no by-law authorizing their appointment or payment. The other defendants were employed by them and did the work. The plaintiff met with an accident on the highway near the culvert owing, as she alleged, to the nextigence of the defendants in obstructing the road with their building materials, and brought this action for damages for her injuries:—Held, that the defendants were not outlided to notice of action underended the state of the defendants when the state of the defendants were not outlided to notice of action underended the state of the st

Non-feasance.]—Notice is unnecessary where the action is for an omission, not an act done, Harrison v. Brega, 30 U. C. R. 724: Harrold v. Corporation of Simcoe, 16 C. P. 43.

Official Assignee.]—An official assignee insolvency sued for trespass in taking and selling goods, is not entitled to notice. Archibald v. Haldan, 30 U. C. R. 30.

Owner Arresting Thief.]—A person arresting another while engaged in the act of stealing his property is entitled to notice under 4 & 5 Viet. c. 25, s. 67. McDonald v. Cameron, 2 U. C. R. 406.

Pathmaster.]—The defendant being pathmaster, and assuming to act as such, moved the plaintiff's fences, the effect of which was to take off land, from the plaintiff's lot and add it to the defendant's. No notice having been given, it was left to the jury to say whether defendant acted bonā fide in the execution of his duty, and they having found that he did, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Hellicult v. Taylor, 16 U. C. R. 279.

A pathmaster is "an officer or person fulfilling a public duty" within the meaning of R. S. O. 1887 c. 73, s. 1, and for anything done by him in the performance of such public duty he is entitled to the protection of the statute; but where, professing to act as a public officer, he seeks to promote his private interest by some act, he disentitles himself to the protection of the statute, and may he proceeded against for such act as if — were a private individual. Statker v. To enship of Dunnich, 15 O. R. 342.

Person Discharging Public Duty.]— Case for maliciously suing out an attachment in a division court:—Held, that defendant was not entitled to notice, for the statute was intended to protect persons acting under it in the discharge of some duty, not for their own benefit. Pall v. Kenney, 11 U. C. R. 250.

Post Office Inspector.]—A post office inspector is not entitled to notice of an action to recover damages for defamatory statements made by him. Judgment in 26 O. R. 528 affirmed. Hancs v. Burnham, 23 A. R. 10.

Pound-keeper.]—A pound-keeper, acting as such, is entitled to notice of action under C. S. U. C. e. 126, and it must be averred in the declaration that in discharging his duty he acted maliciously and without reasonable cause. Davis v. Williums, 13 C. P. 305.

Defendant was in charge of the pound of the city of Toronto as pound-keeper, having so acted for seven or eight years. He had been appointed by the city commission of the process state of the city commission of the polaritation of the plaintiff's pigs), when some question was raised as to the legality of his appointment. It appeared that after the seizure he had offered to release the pigs on payment of the pound charges only; and, according to one witness, he had said he was not pound-keeper. He had not been appointed by y-law, nor given the requisite bond. The Judge of the county court, trying the case without a jury, found that the defendant was acting as pound-keeper in good faith, and believed, on reasonable grounds, that he was such pound-keeper:—Held, that the finding was fully justified, and that the defendant was clearly entitled to notice of action, Denison v. Canningham, 35 U. C. R. 383.

Registrar of Deeds—Action to Recover Fees. —See County of Bruce v. McLay, 11 A. R. 477.

- Excessive Fees.]—A registrar is entitled to notice of an action brought against him to recover back fees charged by him in excess of those allowed by the statute 31 Vic. c. 20 (O.) Ross v, McLay, 40 U.C. R. ST.

Negligence.]—Notice of action to registrar for negligent omission in certificate: —Held, unnecessary. Harrison v. Brega, 20 U. C. R. 324.

Refusal to Give Statement.]—Held, that a registrar was not entitled to notice of an action against him for neglecting and refusing to furnish a statement in detail of fees charged by him, as required by 38 Vict. c. 17. s. 7 (0.), and claiming a mandamus; such neglect and refusal being an act of omission. Ross v. McLay, 40 U. C. R. 83.

Wrongfully Registering Documents.]—See Ontario Industrial Loan and Investment Co. v. Lindsey, 3 O. R. 66.

Replevin.]—Notice of action is not necessary in replevin. Fedger v. Minton, 10 U. C. R. 423; Kennedy v. Hull, 7 C. P. 218; Applement v. Graham, 7 C. P. 171; Lewis v. Teale, 32 U. C. R. 108.

Returning Officer.]—A returning officer is not entitled to notice in an action for penalties under the Ontario Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10. Walton v. Apjohn, 5 O. R. 65.

Revenue Officer—Ratification.]—Where the seizure was by a person not then authorized, but whose act was subsequently adopted and sanctioned by the collector, he was held entitled to notice under the Customs Acts. Wadescorth v. Murphy. 2 U. C. R. 120.

A person who, acting as a revenue officer, or conceiving that he has authority so to act, seizes goods, is entitled to notice without the necessity of proving his commission or appointment. Wadsworth v. Murphy, 2 U. C. R, 190.

School Trustee.]—Held, in deference to former decisions, that a school trustee sued for any act done in his corporate capacity, is entitled to notice, and this notwithstanding that he may have signed a warrant individually instead of in his corporate capacity; if he was acting in the discharge of his duty as trustee. Spry v. Mumby, 11 C. P. 285.

Sheriff.]—A sheriff is not entitled to notice of an action against him arising out of his execution of a fi. fa. in a private suit. McWhirter v. Corbett, 4 C. P. 203.

Surveyor of Streets.]—Notice of action to surveyor of streets, under 24 Geo. 11. c. 44:—IIeld, not necessary. McFarlane v. Mc-Dougall, 3 O. S. 73.

Tax Collector.] — A collector of school taxes, who committed a trespass while acting under a warrant issued by the trustee's authority, was held entitled to notice of action. Sprg v. Mumby, 11 C. P. 285.

Tax collector sued for damages in respect of acts done by him in execution of his duty is entitled to the benefit of R. S. O. 1887 c. 73. Howard v. Herrington, 20 A. R. 175.

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

Attorney's Name and Residence. —
The name and place of residence of the plaintiff's attorney were not indorsed on the notice, but added inside at the foot of it:—Held, sufficient; and that, at all events, such objection, not having been taken at the trial, could not be made in bane. Bross v. Huber, 15 U. C. R. 625.

Attorney's Name — Plaintiff's Name.]— Defendant was sued as mayor of a town for refusing to sign an order to enable plaintiff to obtain a saloon license. The notice of action was signed by plaintiff, with the name of plaintiff's attorney indorsed thereon:—Held, that the notice was insufficient, not being indorsed with the name and place of abode of the plaintiff and of his attorney or agent who served it. Moran v. Palmer, 13 C. P. 528.

The indorsement on the notice of action was that it was "given by V. M., of Queen street, in the city of Brantford, in the county of Brant, solicitor for the within named James Jones." Within was the notice, namely, "I do hereby as solicitor for and on behalf of James Jones, of the village of Jarvis, in the county of Haldimand, farmer," &c.:—Held, that the notice taken in connection with the Interpretation Act, 31 Vict. c, 1, s, 29 (O.), was sufficient. Moran v. Palmer, 13 C. P. 528, not followed as decided prior to said Act; but quere, whether any notice of action was necessary. Jones v. Grace, 17 O. R. 681.

Attorney's Residence. —It must declare the place of residence of the attorney. The subscription, therefore, of the attorney at the bottom of the notice, "A. B., attorney for the said C. D., Simce, Talbot Distriet," was held insufficient. Bates v. Walsh, 6 U. C. R. 498.

Held, that in the notice set out in this case, the residence of plaintiff's attorney was sufficiently stated. Gillespie v. Wright, 14 U. C. R. 52.

Court.]—A notice of action given to a justice of the peace as follows:—"To John G. Bowes, of the city of Toronto, Esquire, —I. Annie Armstrong, of the city of Toronto, in the Province of Canada, spinster, residing with my father, James Armstrong, at No. 148 Duchess street, in the said city of Toronto," &c., signed by the plaintiff, and indorsed "C. P. Armstrong to John G. Bowes.—The within named Annie Armstrong resides at No. 148 Duchess street, in the city of Toronto. Cameron & Mc-Michael for the plaintiff;"—Held, insufficient, not having the place of abode, or business, of the attorney indorsed, nor the court in which the action was to be brought stated. Armstrong v. Bowes, 2 C. P. N.39.

Conversion.] — Held, that the following notice of action, "And also for that you, on," &c., "at," &c., "did cause the horse upon which the said J. U. was then riding to be seized, taken, and led away, and the said J. U. to be obliged to dismount, and give up the said horse, and converted and disposed of the said horse to your own use, and also, for that you caused the saidle not be ride and halter then on the said horse to be seized, taken and carried away, and to be converted and disposed of to your own use, and other wrongs to the said J. U. then and there did." &c. was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to recover the value of the horse as being his property. Upper v. McFarland, 5 U. C. R. 101.

Court.]—A notice to a division court bailiff under C. S. U. C. e. 19, s. 193, stated that the writ would be sued out of the county court of Brant, but it was issued from the county court of Wentworth:—Held. notice insufficient. Buck v. Hunter, 20 U. C. R. 436.

A notice that the suit will be brought in the court of Queen's bench or common peas is insufficient: the particular court intended must be specified. Where this objection had not been taken at the first trial, and a new trial was granted on other grounds:—Held, that the defendant could urge it at the second trial. Bross v. Huber. 18 U. C. R. 282; Werill v. Tounskip of Ross, 22 C. P. 487.

—— Amendment.] — The particular court in which the action is to be brought must be stated, and the failure to state it is such a defect as could not be amended under the Administration of Justice Act, 1873. Mc-Crum v. Foley, 6 P. R. 164, 10 C. L. J. 105.

Defective Sidewalk. — A notice of action against a nunicipal corporation upon a claim arising out of a defective sidewalk is sufficient if it states the cause of the accident together with the name of the street and the particular side of the street and reasonable information as to locality so as to enable the corporation to investigate. It is not necessary to mention the exact locality. McQuillon v. Town of St. Marry's, 31 O. R. 401.

Description of Accident.] — In an action against a municipal corporation for injuries caused by the defective state of a side-walk the following letter from plaintiff's solicitor was relied on as a sufficient notice of action: "As it is Mr. Christie's intention to claim damages from you for such injuries, I give you this notice that a prompt inquiry into the circumstances may be made and such damages paid as Mr. Christie is entitled to:"—Held, that the letter of the solicitor was not a sufficient notice of action under the statute. If notice of action was necessary the want of it could not be relied on as a defence without being pleaded. City of St. John v. Christie. 21 S. C. R. 1.

Description of Defendant.]—No particular addition or description of the magistrate need be given in the notice. Haacke v. Adamson, 14 C. P. 201.

Division Court Clerk. — Semble, that notice to a division court clerk is sufficient if it complies with C. S. U. C. c. 19, ss. 193, 194, though it may not contain all that is required by c. 126, for the latter Act does not overrule the former, but they establish rules for distinct cases. McPhatter v. Leslie, 23 U. C. R. 573.

Justice of the Peace — Malice.] — A notice of action, founded upon a cause of action arising in a case in which the justice had jurisdiction, must allege that the justice acted "maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause." Howell v. Armour, 7 O. R. 363.

Mistake in Amount.]— The warrant directed T. to levy £1 11s. 6d., together with the charges of distress and sale. The notice of action described the warrant as one directing T. to levy a certain large sum of money, to wit, £1:—Held, no variance. Higson v. Ward, 8 U. C. R. 502.

Mistake in Name.] — The warrant to levy was stated in the notice of action to have been directed to William Hompson, when it really was directed to William H. Thompson:
—Held, not fatal. Higson v. Ward, 8 U. C. R. 502.

Petty Trespass. —In the notice for an act done under the Petty Trespass Act, it is necessary to specify the form of action intended. Wadsworth v. Mewburn, 6 O. S. 432.

Place.]—Notice of action must contain a statement of the place where the trespass or injury was committed. Kemble v. McGarry, 6 O. S. 570. A notice of action against a magistrate must distinctly specify the place where the act complained of was done. Madden v. Sheicer, 2 U. C. R. 115.

The notice of action in this case against magistrates for false imprisonment was held sufficient as to statement of place where injury committed. Connolly v. Adams, 11 U. C. R. 327.

A notice of action which wrongly states the name of the township in the county in which the arrest took place is insufficient. Alderich v. Humphrey and Young, 29 O. R. 427.

Variance.]— The place where the plaintiff was imprisoned must be correctly stated; the fact that the injury took place in the same district, though not at the exact place named in the writ, will not make the variance less fatal. Cronkhite v. Sommerville, 3 U. C. R. 129.

Plaintiff's Residence.] — A notice describing plaintiff's place of abode as "of the township of Garafraxa, in the county of Wellington, labourer," without giving the lot and concession: — Held, sufficient, Neill v. McLillen, 25 U. C. R. 485, Followed in Mebonald v. Stuckey, 31 U. C. R. 577.

Seizure of Chattels.]—"For that you the defendant on, Xe., "seized and took away divers goods and chattels of the plantiff," stating the value, "and converted the disposed thereof to your own use, or the plantiff of the plantiff, and the plantiff, sufficient, Gillespie v. Wright, 14 U. C. R.

Signature by Attorney.]—It is sufficient if notice of action under the Division Courts Act, 4 & 5 Vict c. 3, s. 61, be signed by the attorney of the party complaining. Kemble v. Mctarry, 6 O. S. 570

Time and Place.]—Semble, a notice to a magistrate is bad if it omit the time and place of alleged trespass. Friel v. Ferguson, 15 C. P. 584.

The notice stated a trespass on the 18th October, and on divers other days. The goods were seized on that day, but returned, and seized on the 18th November and sold:—Held, notice sufficient, Oliphant v. Leslie, 24 U. C. R. 398.

In an action against a justice of the passaulted plaintiff, imprisoned him for four days, and caused him to be illegally arrested, and gave him into the custody of a constable, and illegally committed and sent him in such custody to the gaoi at the town of Lindsay, and caused him there to be confined for a long time:—Held, insufficient, as omitting to state where and when the assault took place, and the evidence not being confined to the imprisonment at Lindsay. Parkyn v. Staples, 19 C. P. 240.

Notice of action held insufficient in stating no time when the grievance complained of was committed. Sprung v. Ande, 23 C. P. 152.

A notice of action in trespass under the Division Courts Act, C. S. U. C. c. 19, s. 193; —Held, insufficient for not stating the time and place of the alleged trespass. There is no substantial difference in this respect between the form of notice required under that Act, and under C. S. U. C. c. 126. Moore v. Gidley, 32 U. C. R. 233.

The notice of action stated the time of the trespass committed as "on or about the 28th of May," and the place was described as "at or near the west half of lot 31." The jury found that the seizure took place on the 23rd May; but the evidence shewed that it was only a technical seizure, and that the real cause of action was for the seizure on the 28th May, which was followed by the removal and sale. The jury also found that the trespass was committed on the east half of lot 32:—Held, that the notice was sufficient, as reasonable certainty only is required, so as to identify the acts complained of, and prevent the defendant from being misled. Langlord v. Kirkputrick, 2 A. R. 513.

Service—Pleading.]—In an action against justices of the peace for malicious arrest, the notice of action stated that the cause of action arose "in the month of May last, 1884, at said village of M. and in the town of P.;" and was served at the defendant C.'s head office on his agent there, also at his place of residence, and on his solicitors. The statement of claim alleged the service of such notice. The only defence was "not guilty by statute R. S. O. 1877 c. 73, s. 11," the section requiring notice being s. 10:—Held, that the statement of time and place as well as the service was sufficient. Oliphant v. Leslie, 24 U. C. R. 398, followed. No objection could now be taken to the notice, as under the O. J. Act and rules, the particular section of the statute relied on should have been pleaded. Semble, the omission to give notice of action must be pleaded, or the section which requires it referred to in the plea of "not guilty by statute." Bond v. Conmec, 15 O. R. 716, 16 A. R. 398.

Trespass.]—Trespass against magistrates for false imprisonment. The notice set out in the case held sufficient as to form of action to be brought. Connolly v. Adams, 11 U. C. R. 327.

A notice of action alleging that the defendant on the 8th September, 1803, wrongfully, illegally, and without reasonable and probable cause, issued his warrant and caused the plaintiff to be arrested and kept under arrest on a charge of arson, and on said 8th September, maliciously, illegally, and wrongfully, and without any reasonable and probable cause, caused the plaintiff to be brought before him and to be committed for trial, and to be confined in the common gaol, is a sufficient notice of action in trespass. Semble, per curiam, that notice of action was necessary. Sinden v. Brown, 17 A. R. 173, approved and followed, Judgment in 27 O. R. 117 affirmed. McGuiness v. Dafoe, 23 A. R. 764.

Variance.)—In a notice of action to a justice of the peace under 24 Geo. II. c. 44, the date of the warrant as stated in the notice varied from the date as proved:—Held. not fatal. In the notice the warrant was stated to have been directed to William Thompson, whereas it was really directed to William H.

Thompson:—Held, not a fatal variance. The warrant directed Thompson to levy £1 11s. 6d., together with the charges of distress and sale. The notice of action described the warrant as one directing Thompson to levy a certain large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £1:—Held, no variance. Higson v. Ward. S. U. C. R. 502.

Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act.]—Solicitors for the plaintiff before action wrote as follows to the defendant:—
"We have been consulted by Mr. J. Cox concerning injuries sustained by him while in your employ by which he lost his left hand. We have received instructions to commence an action against you for damages unless the matter is satisfactorily settled without delay. If you intend contesting this suit, kindly let us have the address of your solicitors who will accept service of process on your behalf:"—Held, that this was sufficient notice of action to satisfy the requirements of 49 Vict. c. 28, 85, 7 and 10 (O.) Stone v. Hyde, 9 Q. B. D. 76, followed. Cox v. Hamilton Sewer Pipe Co., 14 O. R. 300.

A notice of action under the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act does not require to be signed, or to be on behalf of any one. Mason v. Bertram, 18 O. R. 1.

III. MISCELLANEOUS CASES,

Action Brought by Different Attorney. |--1t is no objection that the plaintiff declares by a different attorney from the one by whom the notice was given and process issued. McKenzie v. Mcceburn, 6 O. S. 486.

Action Brought too soon.]—It is sufficient if it appear by the nisi prius record that a month had elapsed between the service of notice and filing of the declaration, and if the writ were really sued out too soon, it must be shewn by the defendant. Haight v. Ballard, 2 U. C. R. 29.

Division Court Balliff — Pleading,]—
The plaintiff declares in trespass for breaking and entering his close in the Niagara District, &c. Defendant pleads that, being buillif of a division court in the district of Brock, he committed the alleged trespass in discharge of his duty as such, and that no notice was given to him of the action one month before it was brought. Demurer to the plea, on the ground that it is not shewn by what authority the defendant, though a buillif in the district of Brock, acted in the district of Niagara, where the trespass is laid:—Held, plea bad. Davis v. Moore, 4 U. C. R. 209.

Form—Allegations too Wide.]—The first count and the notice allegad that defendant, on the 30th April. 1872, assaulted and imprisoned the plaintiff. The plaintiff's evidence, on which he obtained a verdict, shewed that about the 25th April he was brought before defendant, a justice of the peace, on defendant's warrant, requiring his appearance, and ordered to find sureties for the peace, and that on the 30th he was again arrested and confined in gaol, under defendant's warrant issued on that day for disobedience of the previous order:—Held, that for the cause of action proved the notice was clearly insufficient cient; but semble, that the plaintiff might have met the objection by confining his evidence and claim to the imprisonment on the 30th. Sprang v. Ande, 23 C. P. 152.

Waiter,] — A defendant, after accepting service of an informal notice, added, "and agree to accept the same as a sufficient notice of action to me under the statute:"— Held, that he could not afterwards rely on a defect in the notice. Donaldson v. Haley, 13 C. P. 87.

Justice of the Peace—Proof of Allegations in Notice.)—In an action against a justice of the peace a plaintiff need not prove every trespass described in his notice; he may prove what he can and recover for what he proves, provided it be an injury stated in the notice. Byrnes v. Wild, 7 U. C. R. 104.

Libel.]—The statement of claim must be confined to the matters complained of in the notice. Obernier v. Robertson, 14 P. R. 553.

Objection not Taken at Trial.]—The objection that no notice of action was necessary not having been taken at the trial:—Held, that it could not be raised in term. Armstrong v. Bouces. 12 C. P. 539. See also Moran v. Palmer, 13 C. P. 528.

Pleading — Objection.] — As to raising objection to want of notice of action by plea. See Verratt v. McAulay, 5 O. R. 313; McKay v. Cummings, 6 O. R. 400.

Proof of Service.]—Held, that the following evidence of a bailiff, as to the service of the notice—'He and two others held the respective papers while they were read and compared, but having allowed planitiff's attorney to keep in the meantime the original with which the copies were thus compared, and not having marked it, he could not swear with certainty that the papers served were copies of that document,'—was sufficient to go to the jury. Burnes v. Wild, 7 U. C. R. 104. See also Gardner v. Burned, Tay, 54.

Protection Act not Retroactive.]—16 Vic. e. 180:—Held, not retrospective, so as to make the notice of action required by it applicable to causes of action accrued before the Act, or to compel the party injured to sue in case and not in trespass. Cusick v. Mc-Rac, 11 C. C. R. 509.

Where an action was commenced after 14 & 15 Vict. c. 54, for a trespass committed before, against an officer protected by this Act but not previously:—Held, that the statute would not apply, and that the defendant was therefore not entitled to notice, White v. Clark, Parsill v, Clark, 11 U. C. R. 137.

See also White v. Clark, 10 U. C. R. 490.

Time for Action.] — Notice of action served on the 28th March, and writ sued out on 29th April:—Held, sufficient, as being at least one calendar month's notice. Melatoh v. Vansteenburgh, S. U. C. R. 248.

The notice required under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 26, s. 40, "one calendar month, at least," before action, means a clear month's notice, exclusive of the first and last days. Dempsey v. Dougherty, 7 U. C. R. 313. Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act—Notice of Objection.]—The provisions of s. I of the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act. 55 Vict. c. 30 (O.), are not compiled with merely by pleading that the notice of action relied on by the plaintiff is defective, or that notice of action has not been given. The defendant must give formal notice of his objection not less than seyen days before the hearing of the action if he intends to rely upon it. Cavanagh v. Park, 23 A. R. 715.

- I. ABATEMENT, 4910.
- II. ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES, 4910.
- III. Indictments, 4912.
- IV. Informations, 4913.
 - V. Injunctions, 4914.

I. ABATEMENT.

Injury from Abatement.] — A person who takes upon himself to abate a nuisance, e. g., a mill dam, may be called upon to pay damage for any unnecessary injury done to the plaintiff's property. Truesdale v. McDonald, Tay. 121.

Right to Abate — Previous Acquiescence — Damages, I—Plaintiffs built a wharf in the bed of the St. Lawrence river which communicated with the shore by means of a gangway, and had enjoyed the possession of this wharf and its approaches for many years, when defendant, on the ground that the wharf was a public nuisance, destroyed the means of communication which existed between the wharf and the shore. Plaintiffs sued defendant for damages, and prayed that the works be restored. After issue joined, defendant filed a supplementary plea, alleging that since the institution of the action one C. R., through whose property plaintiffs' bridge passed to reach the street on shore, had creeted buildings which prevented the restoration of the bridge and wharf:—Held, that defendant, having allowed plaintiffs to erect the gangway on public property and remain in possession of it for over a year, had debarred himself of the right of destroying what might have been originally a musance to him, and that, notwithstanding the subsequent abandonment of this wharf and gangway, plaintiffs were entitled to substantial damages. Caverhill v. Robillard, 2 S. C. R. 575.

Sessions — Jurisdiction—Costs.]—The defendant was convicted at the general sessions on an indictment for a nuisance in obstructing the highway by the erection of a wall thereon, and directed to abate the nuisance, which not having been done, the sessions made an order directing the sheriff to abate the same at the defendant's costs and charges, and to pay the county crown attorney forthwith after taxation the costs of the application and order, and the sheriff's fees and costs and incidental expenses arising out of the execution of the order:—Held, that the sessions had no authority to make the order to the sheriff, the proper mode in such case being by a writ de nocumento amovendo; that the order being a judicial act was properly removed by certio-rari, and must be quashed, but without costs, Remarks as to the jurisdiction of the sessions as to the costs, Regina v. Grover, 23 O. R. 92.

See Drew v. Baby, 6 O. S. 239, infra.

II. ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES.

Damages — Abatement—Reduction—Release.]—Where in an action for a nuisance by landlords as reversioners, they recovered a verdiet for £2.50 damages, which was confirmed on motion for a new trial, the court granted a rule nisi to reduce the verdict to 1s., on the nuisance being abated within a certain time, unless the landlords obtained a release from their tenants to defendant of any cause of action accruing to them from the nuisance. The rule was afterwards discharged on a release being produced, although the release was not exactly in accordance with the terms of the rule. Quare, whether the court had power to make the rule absolute. Brew v. Baby, 6 O. S. 239. See S. C., 1 U. C. R. 428.

— Reversion — Continuance—Nominal Damages.]—In an action on the case by reversioners for a serious injury to their reversionary interest by the erection of a nuisance in a public highway, the jury are not necessarily restricted to a verdict for nominal damages on the first trial, but may give damages commensurate to the injury which the plaintiffs may sustain by the possible continuance of the nuisance. Drew v. Baby, 1 U. C. R. 438.

Fences — Railway,] — Held, that barbed wire fences constructed by a railway company upon an ordinary country road could not be treated as a misance. Hillyard v. Grand Trank R. W. Co., S. O. R. 583.

Injury to Individual. —A person throwing noxious matter into Lake Ontario, or any other mavigable water, is liable both to an indictment and to a private action at the suit of any individual distinctly and peculiarly injured thereby. Watson v. City of Toronto Gus Light and Water Co., 4 U. C. R. 158.

Quere, can the gas company of the city of Toronto, under their Act of incorporation and their lease from the city of Toronto, carry on their work of manufacturing gas, &c., without liability for missances injurious to private rights, so long as they occasion no nuisance which they could by due care have avoided. Watson v. City of Toronto Gas Light and Water Co., 5 U. C. R. 262.

Injury to Reversion—stable.]—Defendant having erected a stable on his own ground, adjoining a dwelling house owned by the plaintiff and rented to one W.—Held, not such a misance as would support an action by the plaintiff as reversioner, though it was shewn that he had been obliged in consequence of it to accept a lower rent for his house. Laurenson v. Paul, H. U. C. R. 334.

Livery Stable—Offensive Odours—Noise of Horses. |—Though a livery stable is constructed with all modern improvements for drainage and ventilation, if offensive odour therefrom and the noise made by the horses are a source of annoyance and inconvenience to the neighbouring residents, the proprietor is liable in damages for the injury caused thereby. Drysdote v. Dugas, 26 S. C. R. 20.

Obstruction of Highway — Continuing Nuisance Created by Another, 1—The owner of a house abutting on a highway placed without authority a trap-door in the sidewalk in order to obtain an entrance to his cellar, the higgs of the trap-door projecting about an inch above the sidewalk. The defendant obtained title from this owner and continued to use the trap-door, and the plaintiff, while lawfully using the highway, stumbled against the hinges and was hurt:—Held, that the defendant could not be held to be continuing the nuisance, as she had no title to the highway, and no right, strictly speaking, to remove the trap-door constructed by another, and that, as the accident was not caused during or by her user of the trap-door, she was not liable. Eveng v. Hewitt, 27 A. R. 290.

Parties — Landlord and Tenant.)—Held, that the landlord and tenant were both liable for damages arising from a nuisance (a water closet) erected by the landlord in the house, and continued to be used by the tenant while occupying it. McCallum v. Hutchison, 7 C. P. 508.

Municipal Corporations—Individual—Water-Dam.]—The defendants, the corporations of two townships, without being bound to do so, built a culvert under the highway between the townships, to which the other defendant, the owner of lands adjoining one side of the highway, in order to carry off the surface water of his lands, built a drain, and subsequently a "gangway" of stones for the convenience of access to the highway, which had the effect of damming the water on his land. He afterwards made an opening in the "gangway," and the water, suddenly rushing through the culvert, looded the plaintiff's land on the other side of the highway, which was also connected with the culvert by a receiving drain, through which he had theretofore permitted the water in its ordinary course to flow:—Held, that the defendants the corporations were not, but that the other defendant was, liable for the damage sustained by the plaintiff. Bryce v. Loutit, 21 A. R. 100.

Pleading—Declaration—Cause of Injury—Plea of Justification.]—Semble, that a declaration would be good in charging, in general terms, the defendants with causing offensive vapours to arise, &c., without assigning the particular cause of the vapours. Were it, however, a good ground of special demurrer, the defect would be cured by the plea undertaking to describe the causes, &c., and to justify them. In an action against a gas company for a nuisance, a plea of justification avering that they are now managing their works carefully, and that the vapours complained of unavoidably arise, is bad, as applying the defence to the time of pleading, and not of action brought. Watson v. City of Toronto Gas Light and Water Co., 5 U. C. R. 262.

See Park v. White, 23 O. R. 611, post V.

III. INDICTMENTS.

Agent.]—A party cannot justify as agent of another for maintaining a public nuisance. Regina v. Brewster, 8 C. P. 208.

— Landlord and Tenant.]—An agent merely to let or receive rents is not liable for a nuisance upon the premises let by him. Quere, as to the liability of a general agent clothed with power to let, repair, and in all respects act for the owner. If the nuisance existed at the time of letting, both tenant and owner are liable. If it arises after the tenancy is created, the tenant only is responsible. Regima v. Osler, 32 U. C. R. 324.

Certiorari—Fine—Costs.]—Where the indictment was removed into the court of Queen's bench by the prosecutors:—Held, that the defendant was not liable to costs; but the court ordered that one-third of the fine imposed should go to the prosecutors, and suggested that the government might on application order the remaining two-thirds to be paid to them, the whole fine being less than their costs incurred. Regina v. Jackson, 40 U. C. 12. 250.

A township municipality prosecuting an indimentary of softwarding a highway in the township, which indictment had been removed on defendant's application into this court, and the defendant convicted thereon:—Held, to be "the party aggrieved" within 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11, s. 3; and the defendant, having to pay their costs and his own, amounting to over $100, was fined only $1. Regina v. Cooper, 40 U. C. R. 294.

Complainants—Status.]—Persons having come to live within the scope of a nuisance after its creation, does not prevent their complaining of it as a public nuisance. Regina v. Breuster, S. C. P. 208.

Evidence—Variance.]—An indictment alleged the nuisance to be near lot 16, and the evidence shewed it to be on it:—Held, a fatal variance. Regina v. Meyers, 3 C. P. 305.

Prescription.]—Held, that twenty years' user will legitimate an easement affecting private property, but not a nuisance. Regina v. Browster, S.C. P. 208.

Previous Conviction—Res Judicata.]—
Where a defendant had been convicted of a missince in obstructing a certain highway by a fence, and after removal of such fence by the sheriff under process, replaced it upon the same highway, though not in precisely the same line as before:—Held, that the former conviction was conclusive against defendant as to the existence of the alleged highway, and that he could not again raise the question on this indictment for obstructing the same highway. Revjau v. Jackson, 40 U. C. R. 290.

Way—Non-repair—Preliminary Inquiry— Production.]—Proceedings against the corporation of a city on a charge of neglecting to repair and keep in repair one of its public street, thereby committing a common nuisance, should be by indictment. Prohibition ratuted to restrain a preliminary investigation of such a charge before a police magistrate, and an order nisi to set aside the order granting prohibition refused by a divisional court. Regian v. City of London, 32 O. R. 326.

See Watson v. City of Toronto Gas Light and Water Co., 4 U. C. R. 158, ante II.

IV. INFORMATIONS.

Construction and Use of Bridge in Unauthorized Manner — Application to Restrain Prevention of Proper Use or Remove Bridge, I—See Attorney-General v. International Bridge Co., 27 Gr. 37. Parties — Attorney-General.]—The Provincial Attorney-General is the proper person to file an information in respect of a nuisance, caused by interference with a railway. Attorney-General v. Niagara Falls International Bridge Co., 20 Gr. 34.

Pleading — Uncertainty.]—An information to restrain a nuisance caused by the erection of a fence on a public highway, alleged that "the defendants or some or one of them," had put up such fence:—Held, bad on demurrer, as being too uncertain an allegation as to who had committed the act complained of. Attorney-General v. Boulton, 20 Gr. 402.

See, also, STREET RAILWAYS.

V. INJUNCTIONS.

Air—Pollution — Acquiescence,]—It is a plain common law right to have the free use of the air in its natural unpolluted state, and an acquiescence in its being polluted for any period short of twenty years will not bar that right. To bar the right within a stated period, there must be such encouragement or other act by the party afterwards complaining as to make it a fraud in him to object. Radenhurst v. Coate, 6 Gr. 139.

— Pollution—Means of Prevention—
Consumption of Smoke.]—Every one has a right to the air on his premises uncontaminated by the occupants of other property, though those who live in a city cannot insist on the complete immunity from all interference which they might have in the country, and the country of the complete immunity air in and around his neighbour's growth air in and around his neighbour's the constant of city property cannot justify the three are known means of countries which there are known means of countries which there are known means of consumer or prevent the sunday planing machine and circular saw, driven by steam, and was in the habit of burning the pine shavings and other refuse: he took no means to consume or prevent the smoke, and it being carried to the plaintiff's premises in sufficient quantities to be a nuisance, the defendant was decreed to desist from using his steam engine in such a manner as to occasion damage or annoyance to the plaintiff from the smoke. Carturipht v. Gray, 12 Gr., 309.

Church—Disturbance of Services.}—In an action by the churchwardens and trustees of a church, wherein weekday services were held, to restrain the playing of a band in an adjoining skating rink, which had the effect of disturbing the services:—Held, that the use by the plaintiffs of the church in the way mentioned was an ordinary, reasonable, and lawful use of their property, and the inconvenience to them and the congregation by the defendants' mode of using their property, was such as to materially interfere with the use and enjoyment of the plaintiffs' property, and to constitute a nuisance. Churchwardens of St. Margaret's v. Stephens, 29 O. R. 185.

Commissioner of Public Works—Provincial Lunatic Asplums—Pollution of Waters—Partics.,—By 32 Vict. c. 28 (0.), all the public buildings and works are placed under the control and management of the commissioner of public works, but the Act negatives any authority of that officer to "cause expenditure not previously sanctioned by the legislature, except for such repairs and alterations as the immediate necessities of the public service may demand." The London lunatic asylum was erected under the provisions of an Act of the legislature, and the drains of it were constructed in such a manner as to discharge into a stream crossing the lands of the plaintiff, thereby causing a serious nuisance to the plaintiff. To remedy this it was alleged that the only effectual means was, to carry the swage to the river Thames at an estimated cost of $30,000:—Held, that the commissioner of public works could not be rustrained by injunction from allowing the nuisance to continue. Semble, to such a suit the medical superintendent of the asylum is not a proper party. Hiscock v. Lander, 24 Gr. 250.

Interim Injunction — Continuance of Nuisance—Laches.)—A person had carried on the business of a soap and candle manufacturer for several years without any steps being taken to restrain him, after which a bill was filed for that purpose, on the ground of nuisance and inconvenience to the party complaining. The court, under the circumstances, refused a motion for an interlocutory injunction, but reserved the question of costs to the hearing. Radicaluses V. Coate, 6 Gr., 139.

Although the fact that a nuisance has commenced will raise a presumption that the same will continue still, where it was alleged that the nuisance complained of was caused by the discharge of refuse matter from the manufactories of the defendants, and it was shewn that no such refuse matter had been discharged by them for upwards of a year, they having closed down their manufactories during that period, and that if the nuisance was increasing at all, it was not through the act of the defendants, the court refused an interlocutory injunction restraining the further con-tinuance of such nuisance. P. granted permission to W., an adjoining owner, to dig a drain partly on his land, for the purpose of draining a pit on the lands of W, which had been in use for some years, and which it was alleged had created a nuisance:-Held, that P., after having granted the permission and lying by so long, was not in a position to obtain an interlocutory injunction restraining such nuisance, unless he could shew that the nuisance had increased of late beyond what formerly was. Swan v. Adams, 23 Gr.

Municipal Corporation — Construction of Weigh Scale—Special Injury, 1—A municipal corporation, although it has under the statute full powers conferred upon it of opening, making, or stopping up roads, streets, and other communications, is not at liberty to place obstructions thereon whilst retained as roads or streets. Where, therefore, it was shewn that the corporation of a town were constructing a weigh scales on a corner of the principal street, which would have caused a special injury to the plaintiff, who kept a store at such corner, the court, at the instance of the plaintiff, restrained the construction on the ground of missance. Cline v. Town of Cornwall, 21 Gr. 129.

— Hospital.]—Injunction granted to restrain a municipality from erecting a smallpox hospital within another municipality. Township of Elizabethtown v. Town of Brockville, 10 O. R. 372. Offensive Trade — Tannery — Acquiexence,—In 1861, while defendant was building a tannery on land adjoining the plaintiff's premises, the plaintiff encouraged defendant to proceed. The business was commenced the same year. In 1863 additions were made to the buildings with the plaintiff's knowledge and acquiescence; and the plaintiff made no complaint about the business until 1868, though all this time it had been carried on, and, he plaintiff had been residing on the premises adjoining:—Held, that by his conduct he had debarred himself from relief in equity on the ground of a tannery being a nuisance. Heenan v. Dever, 18 Gr. 428, 17 Gr. 628.

Parties — Owner of property — Husband and Wife—Offensive Trade—Interlocutory Injunction—Discretion.]—The defendant was engaged in making boilers and gas receivers; in the manufacture of which it was necessary to join together pieces of iron, about an inch thick, by riveting, which produced noises, continuing from seven in the morning until six o'clock at night, rendering the occupation of the house of the plaintiff's wife, which was only fifteen feet distant, and in which they lived, almost impossible, and seriously inter-fering with her health. Upon a bill filed by fering with her health. Upon a bill nied by the plaintiff, the court (28 Gr. 461) granted an interlocutory injunction re-straining the defendant from continuing the boiler-making in such a manner as to be a nuisance to the plaintiff and his premises:—Held, reversing this order, that the wife was the proper person to file the bill, for, as an injury to property is the ground of jurisdiction in cases of nuisance, the owner of the property is the proper party to complain. Quare, whether the husband had any title in the land, and whether his occupancy with his wife was more than permissive on her part. An application made by counsel to add the wife as a party, in order to meet the difficulty, authority having been given by her, was refused on the ground that the suit was not merely improperly constituted, but that, the husband having no locus standi, the suit had no proper existence at all, and another person who had the right could not be substituted for one who had not the right to institute the proceedings, Held, also, that if the suit had been properly constituted, the court would not have interfered with the discretion of the Judge granting the inter-locutory injunction. Hathaway v. Doig, 6 A. R. 264.

Privy Pits — Adjacent Land — Occupation.)—The owner of houses occupied by tenants can maintain an action in his own name for damages and to restrain the continuance of a nuisance arising from privy pits on the land of an adjoining owner, if the nuisance is of such a nature as to be practically continucus and permanent. The owner of the adjoining land, although also occupied by tenants, is liable for the nuisance caused by them if the pits are so constructed that the constant use of them will necessarily result in the creation of a nuisance, or if allowed by the owner to remain in an unsanitary condition where there is power to remedy the grievance. I. DEALINGS WITH LAND.

Agreement as to Crown Patent—Trustee—Doucer.]—J. W. B., a widower, was locatee of the Crown, and agreed with his son J. B. to assign his interest in the land on condition of his son's making certain payments, and performing certain services for the father, which were all duly made and performed; and afterwards the patent was issued in the name of J. B., by which name the father was known to the officers of the land granting department. Meanwhile, before the issuing of the patent, the father married nagain. The son during all the father's life continued to occupy the premises, making valuable improvements, without any claim by the father except for his support under the agreement made between the father and son. After the father's death the widow filed a bill for dower in the premises:—Held, that, even admitting that the grant of land was to, and was by the government meant to be to, the father, he could be treated only as a trustee for the son. Burns v, Burns, 12 Gr. 7.

Agreement as to Purchase of Land-Statute of Frauds-Purchase Money-Resulting Trust.]-A father and son lived together on the same farm, of which they obtained a lease in their joint names, the son having for several years, owing to the infirm state of his father's health. father's health, the entire management of the farm; and any moneys he received from the sale of the produce thereof, he was in the habit of handing over to his mother for safe keeping, thus forming, as it were, a common fund. Subsequently he effected a purchase of the farm in his own name, when he paid $1,000 on account of the purchase money, derived partly from private funds, and partly from the fund held by his mother, and gave a mortgage, with the usual covenants, for the residue of purchase money, on which he sub-sequently made a payment of $1,520, $1,000 of which he borrowed from his wife, the bal-ance being made up partly of funds of his own, partly of funds obtained from the common purse. The father claimed that the purchase had been made for his benefit and benefit of the son and his brother, and filed a bill to enforce such claim. The son answered, denving having made the purchase in the manner alleged, and claiming to be the sole owner of the property, subject to the support of his father and mother out of the same:—Held, that, in the absence of any writing signed by the son, nothing was shewn to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds; and even if the defence of the statute were not set up, sufficient was not shewn to entitle the father to a decree on the ground of contract or on the ground of a resulting trust in his favour, by reason of his having paid a portion of the purchase money, Wide v, Wide, 20 Gr. 521.

Agreement to Convey — Statute of Frauds—Part Performance.]—The owner of real estate, having become greatly enfeebled and unable to wait upon himself, offered to his son that if he would relinquish his own farm, and come to reside with the father, and take care of him during his life, he would give the farm upon which he the father) was resident to his son. To this proposal the son acceded, and removed with his family to the residence of his father:—Hield, reversing the decision in 9 Gr. 403, that there had not been sufficient part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, Black v. Black, 2 E. & A. 419.

Enforcement—Performance of Conditions.]—A father and son entered into mutual bonds, the father agreeing that just before his death he would convey his farm to the son in fee; and the son agreeing that he would, during his father's life, work, till, and improve the farm in a good and farm-like manner, and would consult his father in all the son agreeing the son the son of the condition of his bond; and the son agree of the condition of his bond; and ultimately the father left the farm, the son retaining possession until ejected at the father's suit;—Held, in a suit by the son against his father, that the contract should not be enforced against the father. McDonald v. Rose, 17 Gr. 637.

— Letter—Part Performance.] — The defendant in 1871 wrote to his son, who had left home to work for himself, that if he would return he would give him lifty acres of his farm and a share of the cattle and sheep when the plaintiff got married, but if he stayed away he would sacrifice his own and his father's interests. Upon receipt of the letter the blaintiff returned and remained on the control of the letter had been also been should return the work of the control of the letter than the letter had been so that the control of the letter had been so that the letter had pointed out the fifty acres which he intended to give his son, and the son entered and erected a house thereon with his father's approval, and occupied it with his family, he having married in 1879:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of this agreement, Garson v. Garson, 3 O. R.

Intention—Improvements.] — When a child seeks to enforce an agreement that if he remains with a parent and works his farm and provides for his declining years the parent mult bestow the farm on him, the agreement must be established by the clearest evidence and a certain and definite contract for a valuable consideration proved. In the absence of such evidence the parent will be entitled to change his views and the disposition of the property. In this case the son, who had made certain improvements on the property, was held not to be entitled to a lien for them. Smith v. Smith. 29 O. R. 309.

Specific Performance—Intention to Devise.)—The plaintiff alleged that having remained at tome working for his father until he was of the age of 25 or 26 years, he then told him he must have wages, whereupon the father agreed that he would purchase a certain farm, and that, if plaintiff would remain at home and work until the land was paid for, he would convey the same to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff accordingly remained with and worked for his father until the farm was fully paid for; upon which the farm was fully paid for; upon which the farm the plaintiff in possession of it. In answer to a bill for a specific performance of the alleged agreement, the father positively denied the agreement alleged by the bill, although he admitted that he had bought the land intending to devise it to the plaintiff, and that he had executed a will so disposing of it, and alleged that he intended not to alter the disposition thereby made thereof. The court, under these circumstances, refused the relief prayed, and dismissed the bill with costs. Orr v. Orr. 20 Gr. 425, remarked upon and followed. Jibb v. Jibb. 24 Gr. 487.

Conveyance of Land — Inadequacy of Praud.]—Adequacy of consideration is not necessary to maintain a transaction under 13 Eliz., though the inadequacy may afford some evidence of guilty knowledge. But a conveyance by a father to his son, in consideration of an annuity of less value than the property conveyed, does not suggest the son's guilty knowledge of a fraud by his father, in the same way that a conveyance for an inadequate price to a stranger sometimes does. Carradice v. Currie, 19 Gr. 108.

— Joint Possession—Purchaser—Notice.]—Where a father and son lived together on certain land of the father, and continued to do so after a convexance by the father to the son:—Held, that the son's possession after the conveyance, did not affect a subsequent purchaser from the father. Sherboneau v. Jeffs. 15 Gr. 574.

Improvements on Land — Allowance for. — A testator placed his two sons in possession of certain portions of his real estate, intending to convey or devise the same to them, but during his lifetime retained the full control of the property; notwithstanding this, the sons made valuable improvements upon their respective portions. Upon a bill filed after the decease of the father for a distribution of the estate, the court refused to make to the sons any allowance in respect of such improvements. Foster v. Emerson, 5 Gr. 135.

Maintenance of Brother — Charge — Right of Occupation—Duration, 1 — A father conveyed to one of his sons certain farm lands, subject to his own life estate therein, and subject also to the use by another son, the plaintiff, of a bed, bed-room, and bedding, in the dwelling-house on the farm, and to his board, so long as the plaintiff should remain a resident on the farm:—Held, that the plaintiff took no estate under the deed, but merely the use, after the termination of the father's life estate, and while resident on the land, of the bed-room and board, which was a charge thereon: that no period was fixed for such occupation, which might be either permanent or temporary; and therefore no forfeiture was created by non-occupation. Wilkinson v. Wilson, 25 O. R. 23.

Maintenance of Brothers — Enforcement of Agreement—Parties.]—In consideration of a conveyance to him of a certain farm, the petitioner agreed with his mother that he would, during her life, provide her with a house on the farm, and with necessaries, and support his brothers and sisters thereon, until they reached sixteen years of age, so long as they remained at home on the said farm, and assisted him so far as they were able in the management of it:—Held, that the mother had no right or power to release the petitioner from the obligations undertaken by him with reference to his brothers and sisters under the above agreement, and if the children did their part they could hold their brother to his promise, though the agreement was not in terms made with them as parties. Re McMillan, 17 O. R. 344.

Maintenance of Parent — Condition of Deed—Bereal—Offer, —II. S., by deed dated 4th November, 1863, granted his farm and some chattels to his son T. S. in consideration of $300, "subject to be defeated and rendered null and void upon the non-performance by the said party of the second part of the following condition, or any part thereof, viz. the said party of the second part covenants to feed, clothe, support, and maintain the following condition, or any part thereof, viz. the said party of the first part . . . during the term of his natural life and the first part . . . during the term of his natural life in T. S., having the following the condition during his lifetime, died on 5th October, 1865, leaving a widow and one child. The widow removed from the farm, but offered to take H. S. with her to her there, or to allow him to go to her brother's house, and have him provided for there, or to allow him to go to her brother's nouse in the same way, both of which offers were declined, and, as no maintenance was provided for him by her at the farm, he treated the condition as broken, and brought an action of ejectment, and recovered judgment, and conveyed the farm away by deed, and the defendant became the owner by subsequent conveyance. II. S. was subsequently supported, part of the time on the farm, by the defendant, and died in 1880. In an action of ejectment by the infant daughter of T. S., claiming under the deed to her father against the defendant, it was "-lied, that the grantor was not bound to accept the offers made, and that the conditions of the deed were broken and the land forfeited. Millette v. Sabouria, 12 O. R. 248.

Condition of Deed — Residence — Tomment. — The plaintiff conveyed his farm to his son, subject to the payment of an amouity of $60 a year; and the plaintiff's "maintenance in board, washing, and keep out of the farm," or to "receive in cash an amount sufficient to pay for the same yearly." There was also a bond of same date whereby defendant covenanted to furnish such maintenance, or pay such sum. The defendant sold the farm and went to reside elsewhere. The plaintiff went and lived with him on the new farm for some years, receiving his maintenance, &c., but becoming dissatisfied left:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to reside with the defendant wherever he night choose to go; and under the circumstances was entitled to be paid a reasonable sum for his maintenance, payable at the end of each year. At the trial the defendant's counsel raised the objection that the amount, if any, was only payable at the end of the year. The trial Judge overruled the objection, and decreed that plaintiff was entitled to receive $2 a week, payable weekly. The defendant's counsel then asked to have the amount payable monthly, to which the Judge acceded, and gave judgment accordingly:—Held, that the judgment could not be deemed to be by consent, so as to preclude the defendant from afterwards moving against it. Succept, Succept, 60. R. 92.

Promise to Devise—Part Performance.]
—As to what acts of part performance are sufficient to procure specific performance of an alleged contract based on promises to leave property by will. See Campbell v. McKerricher, 6 O. R. 85; Walker v. Boughner, 18 O. R. 448.

Tenants in Common—Infants—Profits of Land—Trustee—Injunction.] — Although the general rule is, that the mere fact of one tenant in common holding possession of the entire estate will not render him liable to a co-tenant, who might himself enter and enjoy the possession with the other, and the court will not in such a case interfere with the dealing of such co-tenant in regard to the property: still, where the co-tenant in possession was the mother of the other co-tenants, all of whom were infants at the time of her second marriage, the court, at the instance of one of the children who had attained majority, restrained the husband and wife from selling or disposing of the crops of the current year or the proceeds thereof, unless they undertook to bring into court one-third of such proceeds; but refused to interfere with the possession of the mother and her husband in respect of previous years; although as to such years the mother might have been accountable to her infant children as trustee for them. Bates v. Martin, 12 Gr. 490.

II. OTHER MATTERS.

Death of Child—Danages.]—In an action by a parent to recover damages for the death of his child there need not be evidence of pecuniary advantage derived from the deceased; it is sufficient if there is evidence to justify the conclusion that there is a rensonable expectation of pecuniary benefit to the parent in the future, capable of being estimated. Rombough v. Balch, Green v. New York and Ottavea R. W. Co., 27 A. R. 32; Blackley v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., ib. 44 n.; Ricketts v. Village of Markdale, 31 O. R. 610.

Debts of Child—Liability of Parent,1— Plaintiff, upon their order, furnished to several of defendant's sons, who were at the time living with their father, certain articles of wearing apparel, charging the same to defendant, and delivering them at his house. Previously to this defendant had caused to be inserted once in one of the daily papers published in the place, and taken in by the person by whom plaintiff was employed, a notice to the effect that he would not be responsible for any debt contracted in his name from that date without his written order; but, after the goods in question had been furnished to his sons, he wrote to the plaintiff stating that he would not in any way be responsible for any debt incurred by any of his sons from and after that date unless under his written order; —Held, that, in the absence of evidence repelling the presumption of defendant's authority to his sons to contract the liability in his name, the fact of the delivery of the articles at the defendant's house for his sons, and the language of his letter to plaintiff were quite sufficient to justify the jury in finding defendant liable, and that it was not necessary to go further and prove the infancy of his sons.
Hamman v, Heward, 18 C, P, 353.

Gift to Child—Influence—Presumption.]
—See Trust and Guarantee Co. v. Hart, 31
O. R. 414.

Husband and Wife—Removal and Harbouring of Wife by Parent.]—See Metcalf v. Roberts, 23 O. R. 130.

Maintenance — Liability of Parent.]—
Where a father whose children are maintained by another, and who could have obtained possession of their persons by habeas corpus, allows them to be so maintained, he is liable for their support and maintenance, to the person in whose care such children are. Hughes v. Recs, 10 P. R. 301.

Right—Agreement—Variation.]—At common law there is no legal obligation on the part of a parent to minimal his children; the duty is only a moral one. A father, after the death of his wife, agreed in writing with her mother that she should, at her sole expense, have the custedy, maintenance, and education of his children, in consideration of his rehouncing his rights thereto and of other considerations:—Held, that he could transfer his rights as a parent; and, in the absence of frand, evidence of an oral promise by him before the execution of the agreement that he would pay for the maintenance of the children, was inadmissible. Wright v. McCabe, 30 O. R. 390.

Maintenance and Education—Liability of Parcari's Estate—Oral Contract.]—Upon an ection brought against the executors of a testator for the board and education of his (the testator's) daughter, an oral contract with the testator, at he most for three years, was proved, and knowledge of his death being shewn by the plaintiffs themselves, by charges made in their account:—Held, that the contract not being a binding one upon the testator, if alive, this action could not be maintained thereon against the executors after his death. Institute of Ladies of the Sacred Heart v, Matthews, 10 C. P. 437.

Liability of Parent's Estate—Stepfeather—Costs, —In an administration suit it appeared that the stepfather of one of the children of the deceased, and who had the care of such, had been sued for the child's board while at school, his mother being a creditor of the estate, and neither she nor her husband having any funds to pay for such board, while there were funds applicable thereto:—Held, that the stepfather should be allowed the costs of such suit. Mensies v. Ridley, 2 Gr. 544.

Negligence of Child — Liability of Parcett, — The doctrine of the liability of a master for his servant's negligence applies in the case of the implied relationship of master and servant sometimes existing between parent and child, but as in the case of master and servant so in that of parent and child there is no liability if at the time the negligent act is committed the child is engaged in his own affairs and not on the parent's behalf. The father of a lad of twenty, living at home, was held not liable therefore for an accident caused by the lad's negligence while driving, with the father's implied permission, the father's horse and carriage home from a shop to which the lad had gone to purchase, with money carned by himself, articles of clothing for himself. File v. Unger, 27 A. R. 468.

Partnership—Settlement—Parties not on Equal Terms—Account.)—D. B. and W. D. B. were partners in a certain joint stock savings bank, under articles which provided that the partnership should last during their joint irees, and that they should share the profits and expenses. D. B. died in April, 1874, leavand expenses. D. B. died in April, 1844, fearing a will, whereby he bequeathed to the plaintiff, the son of W. D. B., the residue of his property, including his interest in the bank, and appointed L. his executor. In May, 1874, L. gave W. D. B. a general power of attorney to act for him. In July, 1879, the plaintiff came of age, and soon after demanded of W. D. B. an account of the assets of the partnership and a settlement with him; and in November, 1880. W. D. B. gave the plaintiff a cheque for $8,000, handing him at the same time a docu-SS,1990, handing him at the same time a document for signature, which purported to be a receipt of the said sum in full of all claims on the estate of D. B., and the plaintiff signed it. He now brought this action against W. D. B. and L., alleging that after the death of D. B., W. D. B., with L.'s conjuvance, made certain arrangements for the winding-up of the negtroschie and the partnership and the same properties. the partnership, and that large portions of the assets of D. B. and of the bank had been realassets of D. B. and of the bank nat been real ized, and profits made, and converted by W. D. B. to his own use, and claiming to have the said release declared void, and an account of the estate of D. B., and of the partnership, and to have the same wound up, and payment of the share to which he was entitled:—Held, that as to the alleged settlement of November, 1880, the plaintiff and his father could not be and the said to have been on equal terms, document in question was not binding upon the former; that it was clearly the duty of his father, before making any settlement with his father, before making any settlement him, to give him the fullest possible information regarding the estate and his dealings with it, even if then, under the circumstances, a settlement binding on the plaintiff could have been made. Held, on the whole case, that the plaintiff was entitled to the account asked, and that, as regarded the increase or profits and that, as regarded the increase or profits in the dealings with the capital of the estate, these should be apportioned in accordance with the amount of such capital owned re-spectively by the testator and the defendant W. D. B., and the latter should be allowed a liberal remuneration for his exertions, care, time, and trouble in the management of the estate, which appeared to have been skilful and successful, Burn v. Burn, 8 O. R. 237.

Sale of Goods—Continued Outward Possession—Finding of Jury.]—G. had recovered a judgment against his father for costs in an action instituted by the latter, and under the execution issued thereon seized a horse as the property of the father in the possession of the plaintiff A., another son. It was shewn that, several years before, the father had agreed to convey his farm to A. and another brother W., both of whom assumed possession and control of the property before any conveyance was executed, and so continued in possession, the father continuing to reside on the place with the two sons, part of the consideration for the conveyance being that they should support him. The sons also bought the chattel property from their father, the horse in question having been purchased by A. for $50, and this kept upon the premises, as had always been done, using him in the work of the farm, and occasionally working for others with him for hire, the father sometimes using him for his own purposes. On this state of facts the Judge of the county court, in an interpleader issue, left the question of property to the jury, who found a verdict for A. The court, being of opinion that, the claim of G. having arisen long after the alleged sale of chattels, it would require a preponderance of evidence in "avour of G. to induce the court to interfere with the finding of the jury (but which did not exist), refused to disturb the conclusion of the Judge as to the inding of the jury, and dismissed an appeal with costs. Danford v. Danford, S A. R. 518.

PARISH.

Creation—Quebec Law.]—Held, that under R. S. Q., tit, ix., c. 1, every decree for the canonical erection of a new parish which is valid according to ecclesiastical law is a sufficient foundation for proceedings with the view of obtaining the civil recognition of that parish. No objection thereto can be taken on the ground of antecedent irregularity of procedure. Proceedings before the commissioners of the diocese with a view to such civil recognition are not subject to the review or control of a court of justice. An objection to the formation of a new parish, on the ground that one of the old parishes dismembered for that purpose was in debt, is valid under s. 3389, R. S. Q.; but where the debt relied on was contracted by the Fabrique, it must be proved that the Fabrique was unable to pay it, and that a levy on the Roman Catholic freeholders of the parish has been duly authorized. Alexandre v. Brassard, 11853 A. C. 301.

Destruction by Agent.]—When all the accounts and records of an election are intentionally destroyed by the respondent's agent, even if the case be stripped of all other circumstances, the strongest conclusion will be drawn against the respondent, and every presumption will be made against the legality of the acts concealed by such conduct. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

Disbursements by Friends of Candidate—Absence of Account—Inference(.)—A candidate in good faith intended that his election should be conducted in accordance both with the letter and the spirit of the law; and he subscribed and paid no money, except for printing. Money, however, was given by friends of the candidate to different persons for election purposes, who kept no accounts or vouchers of what they paid:—Held, that bribery would not be inferred as against the candidate, who neither knew nor desired such a state of things, from the omission of the subordinate agents to keep an account of their expenditure, especially as the law was new, and contained no provision similar to the Imperial statute, which requires a detailed statement of expenditure to be furnished to the returning officer. But it is always more satisfactory to have the expenditure shewn by proper vouchers; and if money is paid to voters for distributing cards, or for teams, or for refreshment, these will be open to attack, and Judges will be less inclined, as the law becomes known, to take a favourable view of conduct that may bear two constructions, one favourable to the candidate and the other unfavourable. East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70.

Money Paid by Candidate Personally

Oath—"Other Corrupt Practices."]—The

Act 36 Vict. c. 2, ss. 7-12 (O.), requires that all election expenses of candidates shall be paid through an election agent; and the Act 38 Vict. c. 3, s. 6, requires the member-elect to swear that he has not paid and will not pay election expenses except through an agent, and that he "has not been guilty of any other corrupt practice in respect of the said election." Certain payments were made by the respondent personally, and not through an election agent:—Held, that such payments were not corrupt practices. Held, that the words "other corrupt practices" in the member's oath meant "any corrupt practice." West Hastings (Prox.), V. E. C. 211.

Personal Expenses of Candidate—Return.]—Semble, that the personal expenses of the candidate should be included in the statement of election expenses required to be furnished to the return'i.g. officer under 37 Vict. c. 9, s. 123. Bellechasse (Dom.), 5 S. C. R. 91.

See East Middlesew (Prov.), 1 E. C. 250.

2. Agency.

(a) Generally.

Principles of Law—Scope of Agency.]—
To sustain the relation of agency, the petitioner must shew some recognition by the candidate of a voluntary agent's services. The Westminster case, 1 O'M. & H. S9, as to agency, followed. Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 47.

Observations on the reasons why candidates should be held liable for acts done by their agents. The Taunton case, 1 O'M. & H. 184, approved, West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97.

Agency in election matters is a result of law to be drawn from the facts of the case, and the acts of the individuals. East Peterborough (Proc.), H. E. C. 245.

Act of agency and the decisions bearing thereon discussed. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

The law of election agency is not capable of precise definition, but is a shifting elastic law, capable of being moulded from time to time to meet the inventions of those who in election matters seek to get rid of the consequences of their acts. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 755.

If an act, made a corrupt practice by statute, is done by an agent of a candidate, but not in pursuit of the object of the agency or the interest of the candidate, or in any way in relation to the election, but solely for the purpose, interest, or gratification of the agent, such act, not being done by such agent qual agent, is not within the penalties of 36 Vict. c. 2, s. 3. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 391.

Semble, where a corrupt act is committed during an election contest by an agent with the knowledge of the candidate, and it turns out that the person committing it was in fact or in contemplation of the election law the agent of the candidate, it is not necessary that the candidate should at the time have knowledge that the person committing the act is his agent or even that he should know such person individually. The Londonderry case, 1 O'M. & H. 278, and the Dungannon case, 3 O'M. & H. 101, referred to and followed. Prescott (Prov.), 1 E. C. 88.

Allegation, that the government of the Province of Ontario, in the interest and on behalf of the respondent, used undue influence to secure his return. Objection, that no agency was alleged, and because no such agency, if alleged, could in law exist:—Held, that this objection should be left to be disposed of by the Judge at the trinl; and semble, that evidence of agency could be given under the allegation. West Huren (Dom.), 1 O. R. 433.

The parliamentary law of agency is a special law, and is different from the ordinary law of agency. In parliamentary elections the principal is liable for all acts of his agent, even where such acts are done contrary to the express instructions of such principal. Cornical (Dom.), H. E. C. 547.

No formal appointment or any particular words are necessary to constitute agency, and less positive evidence of appointment or recognition and adoption of a delegate to a party convention as an agent is required than in the case of one not a delegate. West Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 128.

It is only for those acts of the agent which are done by him whilst acting or professing to act within the scope of his duties, that the candidate is responsible. It is contrary to all principle to hold any person affected by the act of an agent, unless it was she on that the act was done in the course of the employment, and within the scope of the authority, although it may be in abuse of it. West Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 128.

Agency in election cases differs from agency in ordinary commercial or other transactions of business, inasmuch as in the case of an election the agent, constituted by whatever acts are sufficient for the purpose, may bind his principal by acts which are not only outside the scope of an authority expressly given to him, but which may be directly contrary to the express directions of the person whose agent he is held to be. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Prov.), 1 E. C. 197.

An agent who is not a general agent, but an agent with powers expressly limited, cannot bind the candidate by anything done beyond the scope of his authority. Berthier (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 102.

Effect of acts done by scrutineer who was also an agent. See South Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 420; Haldimand (Dom.), 15 S. C. R. 495.

See North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1.

(b) Sub-Agents.

Responsibility of Candidate for Acts of.]—On a charge of bribery against one T.,

and one A., upon which this appeal was decided, the Judge who tried the petition found as a fact that A, had been directed by T., an admitted agent of the respondert, to employ a number of persons to act as policemen at one of the polling pinces in the parish of Bay St. Paul, on the polling pinces in the parish of Bay St. Paul, on the polling by the strength of the appellant, by giving them $2 each:—Held, that A. was not an agent of the respondent, and, therefore, his acts could not void the election. Held, on appeal, that, as there was no excuse or justification for employing these voters, their employment was merely colourable, and these voters having changed their votes in consequence of the moneys so paid to them, and the sitting member being responsible alke for the acts of A., the sub-agent, as for the acts of T., the agent, and they having been guilty of corrupt practices, the election was void. Charlectois (Don.), 5 S. C. R. 133.

The respondent gave to one II, some canyassing books, with directions to put them into good hands to be selected by him for canyassing. II, gave one of the books to B., a tavern-keeper, and B. canvassed for the respondent. B. was found guilty of a corrupt practice in keeping that part of his tavern wherein liquous were kept in store so open that persons could and did enter the storeroom and drink spirituous liquors there during polling hours:—Held that II, was specially authorized by the respondent to appoint sub-agents, and had under such authority appointed B. as sub-agent, and the corrupt practices committed by B. avoided the election. Welland (Prox.), II, E. C. 187.

Held, that the persons amongst whom the respondent's moneys had been distributed by W., and persons acting under them, were subagents of respondent, and that their corrupt acts avoided the election. Semble, that no limit can be placed to the number of persons through whom the sub-agency may extend. Niagara (Dom.), H. E. C. 509.

When a large and general authority is given to an agent, the candidate will be held responsible for the acts of sub-agents of such person. Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 547.

(c) What Constitutes an Agent—Members of Committees.

About a dozen of the electors met some time before the election and nominated the respondent as the candidate who should context the election in the interest of the political party to which they belonged. The respondent accepted and acted upon the nomination. They met occasionally for the purpose of promoting the respondent's election, procured voters' lists, canvassed voters, and got reports on which they estimated their chances of success:

—Held, that if they did not style themselves a committee, they had assumed the functions which usually devolve upon such bodies. North Wentworth (Prov.), H. E. C. 343.

If a meeting of electors assemble and has the sanction of the candidate, such candidate is responsible for its acts and the acts of the agents appointed by it. But where the meeting is large, then all present cannot be considered as agents; only those to whom certain duties, either as a committee or as individual canvassers, are assigned. Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 547.

The respondent nominated no committees to proanote his election; but he was aware that committees were acting for him in each nunicipality. On one occasion he went to the door of one of the committee rooms, and left some printed bills to be distributed. One P., who attended the meeting of this committee, and who said he was considered on the committee, committee an act of bribery:—Held, that the committee were agents of the respondent; that P. was a member of the committee; and an act of bribery having been committee; and an act of bribery having been committed by him, the election was avoided. East Northumberland (Dom.), H. E. C. 577.

Certain supporters of the respondent met in a room over a tavern to promote his election. Their meetings were presided over by an agent of his, and he attended at least one of such meetings:—Held, that the persons who attended such meetings were his agents. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785.

(d) What Constitutes an Agent—Members of Political Associations.

The delegates to a political convention assembled for the purpose of selecting a candidate, who never had intercourse with the candidate selected, and who never canvased in his behalf, cannot be considered as agents for such candidate. Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 187.

Where a political organization, after nominating their candidate, divided into committees "to look after voters in the particular wards in which they resided:" and the respondent had not given authority to any member of such committees, nor to any canvasser, to canvass generally:—Held, that one K., who was a member of the committee for ward No. 2, and who was alleged to have committed an act of bribery in ward No. 6, having no authority to canvass in the latter ward, was an agent with limited authority to canvass in ward No. 2 only, and therefore the respondent could not be made liable for his alleged acts. London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

One M, was a member of a township committee, organized by direction of the convention which nominated the respondent, and the work of the election was put into the hands of these township committees. M. canvassed his school section, and had a voters' list, which was taken from him by the committee on the allegation that he was not doing much. The respondent never asked M, to work for him, but M, asked the respondent what success he had. The respondent had no one acting for him except these committees and some volunteers, and he never objected to the aid they were giving him, nor did he repudiate their services:—Held, on the evidence, that the respondent was responsible for the comnitiees, and that M., as a member of one of such committees, was an agent of the respondent, North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

The fact of a political association putting forward and supporting a particular candidate demonst make every member of the association his agent; but the candidate may so avail himself of their services in canvassing for thim and promoting his election, as to make them his agents. Aorth Grey (Proc.), H. E. C. 362.

By the constitution of a Reform association, each delegate to the convention was actively to promote the election of the candidate appointed by the convention. The resymmetr of the association, and was familiar with its objects and constitution. He had also as a delegate acted and constitution. He had also as a delegate acted and constitution, and to candidates in the promotion of their elections, and expected the like assistance from the present members of the association, and to the perfection of that system as an election-ering agency, the respondent owed his election:—Held, that the delegates to the association, acting as such in promoting the election of the respondent, were his agents, for whose acts he was responsible; and that an act of bribery committed by one R, a delegate, and who canvassed and otherwise acted for the respondent, avoided the election. East Northumberland (Prov.), H. E. C. 387.

If a political association is formed for a place within the electoral district, and it is not shewn that there was any restriction on the members to work for their candidate within the limits of that place only, they are his agents throughout the whole district. West Prince (Home), 27 S. C. R. 241.

As to the agency of T., it appeared that he was one of the local vice-presidents of the party association; he had been present at two meetings of local party men calling themselves a "Conservative Club," who were interesting themselves in the cost of higher and contributed towards the only work done; at a meeting held by the respondent in the place where T. lived, he had presided, having been elected chairman by the audience, and he made a speech introducing and commending the respondent; before the meeting he had met the respondent; before the meeting he had met the respondent; before the meeting he had met the respondent; in the street, had shaken hands with him, and asked him how things were going. The respondent did not know that T. was local vice-president, and had never heard of the "Conservative Club." T. was not a delegate to the nominating convention nor present thereat. The association, as such, was not charged with any definite duty in connection with the election except the selection of a candidate:—Held, reversing the decision of the trial Judges, that T. was an agent of the respondent. East Elgin (Prov.), 2 E. C. 100.

The respondent was nominated by a Conservative association, and he accepted the nomination. The delegates to the association were to do all they could to secure his election. A committee was appointed in O. to canvass the town, and a committee room was engaged and paid for by the association, voters' lists were procured and used as can-vassing books, and members were appointed to canvass parts of the town, and reports were made to the committee of the result of the canvassing. The respondent, who resided at canyassing. The respondent, who restace at W., did not attend the meetings, but knew they were canyassing for him, and gave them blank appointments of scrutineers to fill up, which they did, but the respondent did not know who composed the committee:—Held, per Wilson, J., that the respondent, by authorizing such committee at O. to appoint scrut-ineers, made them his special agents for that particular matter and for that occasion only, and did not adopt them as his general agents for all the purposes of the election. a member of such committee, canvassed ac-tively for the respondent and to his know-ledge, and on the nomination day attended a meeting of the respondent's friends in W., at which the respondent was present, and which arrangements were made about canvassing and getting out votes, and generally about the election:—Held, by the court of appeal, that T. was an agent of the respondent for the purposes of the election. One G., a member of the same committee, had a voters' list, and canvassed for the respondent, and stated and canvassed for the respondent, and stated he had no doubt the respondent expected him to vote and work for him :—Held, per Wilson, J., that G. was not an agent of the respon-dent. The committee of the town of Y., hav-ing been recognized and its meetings attend-ed by the respondent, the members thereof were held to be his agents. South Ontario (Proc.), H. E. C. 420.

A Reform association existed in the con-stituency as an organized body for bringing forward candidates and doing everything in their power to elect their nominees. B. was present at meetings of the association, and one witness swore "he took as much part as any of us." It was not shewn that the orany of us." It was not shewn that the organization was well defined, or what was necessary to constitute membership. mittee and sub-committee were appointed for the township in which B. resided, but he was not on them, or any committee for election purposes. Committee meetings were held at his hotel at which he was present, but it was not shewn that he did any more at the meetings than any owner of a hotel would do at a meeting held in his house. B. swore that, with the exception of one man, he did no canvassing outside his own house; he did not report to the committee meetings in his house, because he had been doing nothing, but that he gave the respondent the name of one person who wished to see him. It was not shewn that he had any authority from the respondent, or any committee, or that the re-spondent expected his assistance, or gave him any instructions, or recognized any act done by him. At the trial it was proved that B. by him. At the trial it was proved that B. had been guilty of a corrupt practice, without the knowledge or consent of the respondent:

—Held, following the North Ontario case,

H. E. C. at p. 323, that B. was not an agent of the respondent. D, heard of a meeting, went there, and found about half-n-dozen people remove using avera experient like it, which ple present going over a voters' list, in which he did not take part. It was not shewn that he had any authority from the respondent, or any committee or association, or any one on his behalf, or that any act he did was re-cognized. D. was found to have been guilty of corrupt practices without the knowledge or consent of the respondent:—Held, following the North Outario case, H. E. C. at p. 317, that he was not an agent. Welland (Proc.), 1 E. C. 383.

(e) What Constitutes an Agent—Other Circumstances.

Admission by Counsel.] — See Russell (Ont.), H. E. C. 199.

Attending Meetings with Candidate—Canvassing.)—Evidence was given to show that certain persons had attended meetings with the respondent and canvassed for him, and had performed other acts of alleged agency, as set out in the evidence:—Held, that the acts of alleged agency relied on in the evidence were not sufficient to constitute such parties the agents of the respondent. The petition, nevertheless, was dismissed without costs. North York (Proc.), H. E. C. ©.

Poll. — Cancasing—Carrying Voters to Poll. — One C. accompanied the respondent when going to a public meeting, and canvassed at some houses. On the journey, the respondent cautioned C. not to treat nor do anything to compromise him or avoid the election. The respondent's election agent paid for C.'s meals at the place where the meeting was held:—Held, that the evidence shewed that the respondent had availed himself of C.'s services, and was therefore responsible for his acts. A witness stated that he had asked the people in his meighbourhood to vote for the respondent's friends and made arrangements for bringing up voters on polling day, and had a team out on polling day:—Held, that the evidence of his being an agent of the respondent was not sufficient. East Peterborough (Proc.), H. E. C. 215.

canvassing—Other Acts.]—Mere canvassing of itself does not prove agency, but it tends to over it. A number of acts, no one of which sight in itself be conclusive proof of acts, many, when taken together, amount to proof of such agency. Persons who canvassed and went to meetings with the respondent, and attended meetings to premote the election, at which meetings the respondent attended; and persons who canvassed with and introduced voters to the respondent, called meetings and appointed canvasses, and did other acts to further the election, and examined the results of the canvass, were held to be agents of the respondent; and corrupt practices committed by them, and by subagents appointed by them, avoided the election. Cornwall (Don.), 1H, E. C. 547.

Warning. |—One P., a tavern-keeper, took the petitioner's side at the election and at a meeting called by the petitioner, at which he was appointed chairman. Notices of this meeting were sent by the petitioner to P. to distribute, some of which P. put up at his house and some he sent to other places. On polling day P. desired to give a free dinner to some of the petitioner's voters, and asked the petitioner if he might do so. The petitioner did not approve of it in case it should interfere with his election, and told P. that, although he was not his (petitioner's) agent, he would rather he should not do it. P., notwithstanding this, paid for free dinners to forty of the petitioner's voters:—Held, that P. was not an agent of the petitioner. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

Attending Meetings—Acting as Chairman—Canvassing—Other Acts.]—As to the agency of L., it appeared that the respondent was brought into the field as the candidate of his party, having been nominated at a convention of the party association for the electoral district: L. was not a delegate to, nor was he present at, the convention; and he was not upon the evidence connected with the association or its officers; he was not brought into touch with the candidate, nor any proved agent of his, either as regards his or their knowledge of the fact that he was working or proposing to work on behalf of the candidate, or as regards any actual authority conferred upon him to do so. But he was present at three meetings of electors when the voters' list was gone over; he acted as chairman of a public meeting called in the respondent interest; he canvassed some voters; and, from his antecedents, the respondent hoped or believed or expected that he would be an active supporter:—Held, that L. was not an agent of the respondent. Haldiamad case, I E. C. 572, distinguished. East Elgin (Proc.), 2 E. C. 100.

Canvassing—Recognition,1—One C. canvassed for the respondent, and told the respondent he was going to support him, and the respondent expected and understood that he would do everything he could for him legitimately. C. did not attend any meetings of the respondent's committees, and made no returns of his canvassing:—Held, on the evidence, that C. was an agent of the respondent for the purposes of the election. Cornwall (3) (Dom.), H. E. C. 803.

Carrying Voters to Poll—Recognition.]
—One A. had hired teams and taken voters to the polls contrary to R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 154, and it was proved that the candidate, being in the village of G., was told that A. was there for the above purposes, and that he went to see A. in his hotel and discussed the election and the probable results, with lists of voters, &c. —Held, that this, and other circumstances of the case, established the agency of A. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Prov.), I. E. C. 197.

Support of Candidate—Uncertainty.]—The charge was that F., a licensed hotel-keeper, about four o'clock on the polling day served H, and a voter with drinks in the barroom. F. was a member of the Reform association, and generally took part in elections. He attended the meeting called for the nomination of the respondent, but he took no active part in it. On the election day he drove electors to the poll, but it did not appear on which side he was voting. The president of the Reform association said he did not think that F. worked for the respondent, and understood he was a friend of the defeated candidate; and H, said he thought he was working for the respondent. One of the trial Judges held that the evidence failed to shew that F. was an agent of the respondent; the other held that it was sufficient to establish such agency. On appeal, one of the Judges agreed with the former view. The other Judges did not consider the point. East Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

worning of the polling day, S. met McN. in an hotel, and asked him to vote for the respondent, to which he agreed; he then took him to his (S.'s) house, and afterwards to a towern where he treated him, and then to a poll where he voted. S. always took an active part in every election on the Reform side, and during this election he had, on one occasion, attended a meeting of the local political organization, or committee, for whose nets in the management ownershe, when some entry of the control of

Intrusting with Money—Sub-Agents.]
—When a candidate puts money into the hands of his agent, and exercises no supervision over the way in which the agent is spending that money, but accredits and trusts him, and leaves him the power of spending the money, although he may have given directions that none of the money should be improperly spent, there is such an agency established that the candidate is liable to the fullest extent not only for what that ngent may do, but also for what all those whom that agent employs may do. South Grey (Proc.), H. E. C. 52.

Nominating Convention—Address of Candidate—Request for Support.]—The petition in this case charged that one H., as agent of the respondent, in violation of R. S. O. 1877, c. 19. s. 157, sold or gave drink at his tavern within the limits of a polling subdivision on polling day, which, by R. S. O. 1877, c. 11, s. 2, s.-s. 6, is made a "corrupt practice." It appeared that H. was present, and had acted as a delegate at the convention of representative Reformers whereat the respondent was mominated. The latter did not undertake a personal canvass, or appoint any particular persons or association of persons his agents for the purpose of carrying on the contest, but at the said convention he made a speech intimating that he expected his friends to work for him:—Held, that this constituted an appointment by him of every one of those who constituted the convention as his agent for the purpose of the contest, and no proof of acts done by the persons thus addressed and recognized by the candidate, and mo proof of acts done by the persons thus addressed and recognized by the candidate, and as this formula can destent as to come within R. S. 1876. A. O. 1876. The contest of the contest in the contest of the contest

It appeared that when the candidate accepted the nomination of the convention of the party he intimated to those present, among whom was N., that he looked for their accepted with the party he intimated to the contest relation of the present, including N., the leid, at the trial, that this amounted to an authorized and the trial, that this amounted to an authorized in the trial, that the same tangents, for the authorized on the canvass covers agency, and even without on canvass covers agency, and even without a second of the same part in the convention the agency of these persons who were actually attending and tange part in the convention was established in the absolute of anything shewing a repudiation of services which is implied by the very fact of services which is implied by the very fact of their attending and making the momination. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Proc.), I E. C. 137.

— Address of Candidate—Request for Support—Acts of Supporters.—The respondent was nominated by a convention of the Conservative party, composed of fifty or seventy-five persons, among whom was R., or the party, and was on intimate terms with the respondent, both of them being physicians. R. was one of the persons nominated at the convention, but the choice fell on the respondent, who then made a speech of acceptance, in which he said he expected his friends to take an interest in the election and to work for him. R. made no systematic canvass, but he asked several people for their votes, was at various informal meetings of voters held in the interest of the respondent, and with the respondent visited the houses of several voters:—Held, that R. was an agent of the respondent. F. D. was at the convention which nominated the respondent, and he and W. D. were among the supporters of the respondent in a particular locality who held meetings at which the voters' lists were discussed and arrangements were made for looking up doubtful voters:—Held, that these men were both to be regarded as agents of the respondent. E. C. 434.

Ratification of Payment—Knowledge.]—A voter who had a claim of $3 from a former election of respondent, when canvassed to vote, said he did not think he should vote, evidently putting forth the $3 that was due to him as a grievance. The clerk of an agent of the respondent promised to pay it to him, and he voted, and the money was paid after the election, and charged by the clerk in the agent's accounts as "paid J. Landy $5," but without the knowledge of such agent. Another agent of the respondent (McD.), who was treasurer of the ward, and was aware of the claim, and had told the voter it would be made right, paid the first agent's account, but did not then take particular notice of the payment, and it was not explained to him. The clerk had been requested by his employer (the agent first mentioned) to canvass a particular voter, but was not employed as a canvasser generally by any one:—Held, that such clerk was not an agent or sub-agent of the respondent; (2) that the payment of the account by the agent (McD.) was not under the circumstances a ratification by him after the act, so as to affect the election. West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97.

Scrutineer — Written Appointment.]—A scrutineer appointed for a polling place at an election under the written authority of a candidate is an agent for whose illegal acts at the polling place the candidate will be answerable. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 E. C. 529.

Support of Candidate—Motive—Recognition, i—A year before the election the respondent paid part of the charges of a lawyer retained by one O. to attend the revision of the assessment rolls. O at the time of the election attended one of the respondent's meetings at which he stated that his own mind was not made up, but he urged that the respondent ought to have the support of the voters, he being a local man; and in three or four instances O. asked voters to vote for the respondent. The respondent and his friends distributed in the control of the respondent of the respondent of the respondent for the respondent of the respondent for the purposes of the election. Halton (Dom.), H. E. C. 736.

One S., who desired nomination as a candidate by a Reform convention, was not nominated, and thereupon, from hostility to the convention and its nominee, opposed the candidate of the convention, which thereby had the effect of supporting the respondent. At the close of the poll, the respondent publicly thanked S, for being instrumental in bringing about his election. S. owned a shop and tavern, but the license for the latter was in his clerk's name; and during the polling hours on polling day spirituous liquors were sold and given in the shop and tavern :- Held, that what was done by S, at the election was in pursuance of a hostile feeling against the convention and its candidate, and did not constitute him an agent of the respondent. Card-well (Prov.), H. E. C. 269.

Motive — Recognition — Attending Meetings. | One M., the reeve of a township, exerted himself strongly in favour of the respondent, to whom he was politically opposed, and against the other candidate, and attended meetings where the respondent was, and spoke in his favour. The reason for his supporting the respondent and opposing the other (ministerial) candidate with whom he was politically in accord, was, that the ministry of the day had separated the township of which he was reeve from the riding. He was annoyed and indignant at this separation, and announced his intention of using all his influence against the ministerial candidate. The respondent asked M. to attend a public meeting, which he did; and at another meeting which he attended, M. stated (but not in the respondent's hearing)that he was acting there on the respondent's behalf. M. was once in the respondent's committee room, and signed and circulated circulars issued by the respondent's friends:—Held, that the question of agency being one of intent, the respondent, under the circumstances, never conferred upon M. the authority, nor did M. accept the delegation, of an agent for the purpose of the election. North Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 362.

Motive—Treachery.] — L., being a municipal councillor, and as such a member of an association which had brought out the respondent as a candidate for election, had a personal disagreement with the respondent, and refused to attend the meeting of the nominating committee when the respondent received the nomination, and when asked by the respondent to support him refused so to do, saying that he now had an opportunity of getting even with him; but without the knowledge of the respondent he took an interest in the election and bribed a voter:—Held, that he was not an agent of the respondent, and that there was evidence tending to shew that he was acting treacherously toward him. Lennor (Proc.), 1 E. C. 41.

No Agents or Committees Appointed—Authority of Supporters — Recognition.] -Semble, if a candidate in good faith under takes the duties which his agent might undertake, the acts of a few zealous political friends in canvassing for him, introducing him to electors, attending public meetings and advocating his election, or bringing voters to the poil, would not make such candidate re-sponsible for prohibited acts contrary to his publicly declared will and wishes, and without his knowledge and consent. The respondent in his evidence stated that he objected to committees; that he knew certain persons were his supporters, and believed they did their best for him, but he did not personally know that they acted for him. Other evidence shewed that these persons took part in the election on behalf of the respondent; some spoke for him at one of his meetings; and one of them stated that he and some of the others canvassed for the respondent, and that he gave the respondent to understand he was taking part in the election for him:—Held, that as it did not appear that any one of these persons was authorized by the respondent to represent him, and as they did not claim to have any such authority from him, but supported the respondent as the candidate of their party, the said persons were not agents of the respondent for the purposes of the election. Remarks on the evidence of Semble, that if a candidate who had appointed no agents was aware that some of his supporters were systematically working for him, and by any act, or forbearance, could be fairly deemed to recognize and adopt their proceedings, he would make them his agents. South Norfolk (Dom.), H. E. C. 660.

 Organization—Absence of—Recognition-Scrutineer. |-At the election in question there was no formal organization of the party supporting the appellant, The county Reform association had been disbanded and the minutes, regularly kept since 1882, destroyed, as were the rough minutes of every meeting of a convention of the party held since that date. In lieu of local committees vice-presidents were appointed for the respective townships, and on the approach of a contest the vice-presidents called a meeting of the county association, composed of Reformers in the riding, to go over the lists and do all the necessary work of the election. The evidence of H.'s agency relied on by the petitioner was, that he had always been a Reformer, had been active for two elections, had attended one important committee meeting and been recognized by the vice-president of the township as an active supporter of the appellant, and that he acted as scrutineer at the polls in the election in question. The trial Judge held that all these elements combined, in view of the state of affairs regarding organization, constituted H. an agent of the appellant:—Held, that the circumstances proved justified the trial Judge in holding the agency of H. established. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 E. C. 572.

Volunteer-Recognition.]-S., was a political friend and supporter of the respondent, treated a meeting of electors with the knowledge, though not with the direct assent, of the respondent. It was proved at the trial that S. was a noisy, talkative man, employed as a travelling agent through the country; he had a bet or bets on the election; the respondent saw him at the meeting, and had some conversation with him in the crowd. Some time during the contest, and later than the date of the meeting, he went to respondent's office to make some suggestions, and asked his opinion as to the result, as he said some men wanted to bet with him. Withere he saw some "campaign literature" the table and took some of it away with him, with the assent of the respondent. No evidence was given that he canvassed voters, and the respondent swore that he never gave him to canvass or to do any thing for him, and that he was not a man he would employ as an agent :- Held, that at the time of the meeting S. was nothing more than a volunteer, for whose acts the candidate was not responsible. 3. Bribery and Corrupt Practices.

(a) Generally.

Acts of Agents—Motive—Ambiguity,]—When these two things concur, an act that comes within the designation "corrupt practice," and that the doer of the act is an agent for the candidate, the court is not at liberty to say that the act was done in order to promote the objects of the agent, and not in order to promote the interest of the candidate, that, though true it is the act of the agent, it is not the act of the agent, qui agent. It being an act which is profitable to the doer of the act, and the making of the profit being assumed to be the motive of the doer of the act, cannot dissociate the act from the election. The Linconscience is a considerable of the control of th

Motive — Influencing Electors.]—
Where a candidate in good faith intended that his election should be conducted legally, and had printed and circulated throughout the constituency a synopsis of the new law as to corrupt practices, and had caused an editorial article to be printed in a newspaper, and had taken trouble to have the law explained to the electors—Held, that, although many of the acts done during the election created doubt and hesitation in the Judge, yet, as the return of a member ought not to be lightly set aside, the Judge ought to be satisfied that the acts done were done to influence the electors and so done corruptly; and this election was upheld. Deputy Returning Officers — Political Associations.]—The suggestion of names and recommendation of deputy returning officers by political associations commented on and disapproved of. North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1.

Expenditure—Absence of Account—Presumption.1—When an agent of a candidate receives and spends for election purposes large sums of money, and does not render an account of such expenditure, it will create a presumption that corrupt practices have been resorted to. Levis (Pom.), 11 S. C. R. 133.

Judgment — General Finding.)—In this case the judgment appealed from did not contain any special findings of fact or any stement that any of the charges method in the particulars were found proved, but stated generally that corrupt acts had been committed by the respondent's agents without his knowledge, and declared that he had not been duly elected, and that the election was void. On an appeal to the supreme court on the ground that the judgment was too general and vague: —Held, that the general finding that corrupt acts had been proved was a sufficient complicance with the terms of the statute R. S. C. 1886 c. 9, s. 43. Pontiac (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 626.

Statutes—Interpretation of—Meaning of Terms Used.] — The plain and reasonable meaning of 32 Vict. c. 21 (O.) is, that when the prohibited things are done in order to induce another to procure, or to endeavour to procure, the return of any person to serve in parliament, or the vote of any voter at any election, the person so doing is guilty of bribery. The difference beween the Imperial statute (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, s. 2, s.-s. 3, proviso), and the Ontario statute (32 Vict. c. 21, s. 67, s.-s. 3, proviso), as to "legal expenses" in electious, pointed out. East Toronto (Prov.), 11, E. C. 70.

Held, that "illegal and prohibited acts relating to elections," in the definition of corrupt practices in the Ontario Controverted Elections Act, 1871, were confined to bribery, hiring of teams, and undue influence, as defined by ss. 67 to 74 of the Election Act of 1868. North York (Prov.), H. E. C. 62.

The words "illegal and prohibited acts in reference to elections," used in 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 3 (O.), mean such acts done in connection with, or to affect, or in reference to elections; not all acts which are illegal and prohibited under the election law. Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 139.

The definition of "corrupt practices" in s. 3 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, 1873, considered. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

The Imperial and Dominion election laws, as to corrupt practices and their consequences, compared and considered. Kingston (Dom.), H. E. C. 625.

Semble, that the term "wilful," as used in s. 98 of 37 Vict. c. 9 (D.), cannot be construed in a narrower sense than the term "corruptly" in s. 92, s.-s. 1; and that the term "corruptly" does not mean wickedly, or immorally, or dishonestly, but doing that which the legislature plainly meant to forbid; as an act done by a man knowing that he is doing what is wrong and doing it with an evil object. Halton (Dom.), H. E. C. 736.

The intention of the legislature was, that votes should be given from the conviction in the mind of the voter that the candidate voted for was the best person for the situation, and that the public interest would be best served by electing him, and the evil to be corrected was supporting a candidate for causa lucri, or for personal gain in money or mor o's worth to the voter. Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283.

(b) Acts of Trifling Nature and Extent not Affecting the Result of the Election.

The majority of the respondent was 337; but it appeared in evidence that two agents of the respondent had bribed between forty and fifty voters; that in close proximity to the poils spirituous liquor was sold and given at two taverns during polling hours, and that one of such agents took part in furnishing such liquor; and that such agent had previous to the election furnished drink or other entertainment to a meeting of electors held for the purpose of promoting the election:—Held, that the result of the election had been affected thereby, and that the election was void. Primā facie corrupt practices avoid an election; and the onus of proof that they are not sufficient to affect the majority of votes rests upon the respondent. West Hastings (Prov.), H. E. C. 530.

Where corrupt practices by agents, and others in the interest of the respondent, affected less votes than the majority obtained by the respondent at the election:—Held, under 39 Vict. c. 10, s. 37 (Co.), that such corrupt practices did not extend beyond the votes affected thereby, and did not avoid the election. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 489.

Although the irregularities of the deputy returning officer could not, by themselves, be the property of the p

The power of saving an election under R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 150, should be exercised very cautionsly, and a fortiori by the Judges of the appellate court, where the rota Judges have deemed the case to be not proper for the application of the power given by this section of the Act. The object and purpose of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 159, do not require anything in the shape of an attempt to estimate the number of votes which can be shewn or surmised to have been affected by the corrupt act in question, and to balance that against the actual majority. Although, no doubt, the word "trifling "must be construed in each case with some reference to the majority, particularly when considering the extent of the corrupt acts, the court is not called upon to enter into a quasi-seruiny for the purposes of this section. West Simcos (Prov.), 1 E. C. 128.

Held, per Boyd, C., that but one corrupt practice was proved in this case, and that, in view of the provisions of s. 159 of the Act, that one was not sufficient to avoid the return; that, inasmuch as respondent's personal expenses had not amounted to $100, and as, during the canvass, although he had treated friends, he had not done so to any greater extent than had previously been his habit, neither his personal conduct during the election nor the absence from the trial of one of his chief agents, against whom considerable suspicion was raised by the evidence, ought to prevent the court from applying the provisions of R. S. O. 1817 c. 10, s. 159, to the circumstances of this case. Held, per Cameron, C.J., that, although nothing corrupt or unusual was proved as to respondent's expenses or treating, he had not properly returned his personal expenses, and this circumstance, coupled with the keeping out of the way at the time of the trial of one of his chief agents, should prevent respondent receiving the benefit of s. 159 of the Act, and the election should be avoided. On appeal:—Held, that upon the evidence the election was saved under the provisions of s. 159. East Middlesex (Prov.), 1 E. C. 250.

II. was a prominent supporter and agent of the respondent, secretary of the Reform association of the riding, delegate to the convention which nominated respondent, and an active organizer and manager of the election contest. R., a voter, well known to H. as what he called a "loose fish." and belonging to a family reputed to sell their votes, came to H., and asked for money for his vote; not succeeding, he returned next day and made a similar request. Finally he asked for $5, because, he said, he was sick and hard up, and wanted to pay his taxes. Whereupon H. gave him $5, but on R. pledging his word that it had nothing to do with his vote R. told T., another voter, that if he wanted $4 or $5 now was his time, and introduced him to H.; T. asked if any money was going, and offered his own vote for $10, and his father and three brothers for $20. H. gave him $4, calling it a loan, and on T.'s word of honour that it would not influence him in the election. H. also hired the team of a man named C. for the election day. The election was very close, over 2.700 votes being polled, and the respondent's majority being twenty-three:—Held, that these were clearly corrupt acts. Per Boyd, C., that though the several acts of the agent in this case were clearly corrupt acts.

they did not avoid the election, as they came within the protection of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, 8. 159; and per Cameron, J., that they did avoid the election, as the year ontwithin the said protection. Irregularities at nomination and at polling. See S. C., ib. See also Monk (Prov.), H. E. C. 154.

At the trial of the petition one corrupt act, namely, the payment of the travelling ex-penses of a voter, M., by F., an agent of the respondent, was proved; it was also found that C. D. was guilty of bribery, in giving a dollar to each of two voters and official a dollar to each of two voters and offering money to another, but no agency was proved, and that L. B. gave liquor at his tavern dur-ing polling hours, but he was not proved to be an agent. It was contended that these latter acts, and the evidence as to the acts and conduct of three other persons in connection with other charges which were not proved, should all be taken into consideration proved, should all be taken into consideration with the proved corrupt act, in order to take the case out of s. 159 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1877, c. 10, and prevent the respondent from saving his seat under the provisions of that section:—Held, that the election was not avoided. Per Patterson, J.A.—The "result" referred to in s. 159 is the result which touches the right to the seat which is being contested, i. e., the majority of legal and touches the right to the seat which is own contested, i. e., the majority of legal and housest votes. The petitioner could not insist on giving evidence of any corrupt practice which he had not charged—and for this pur-pose illegal acts are corrupt practices—but whether the evidence given upon any charge is sufficient to establish it, or falls short of doing so, any facts or any course of conduct shewn by that evidence may be properly considered in connection with any other corrupt or illegal practice which has been proved, and the nature or probable extent of which it may serve to elucidate; but on consideration of all the facts in this case this election should he held good and the respondent duly elected. Fer Ferguson, J.—The words "other illegal practices at the election," at the end of s. 159, must be illegal practices the existence of which is ascertained and known, and the way their existence becomes known is by the evidence. This cannot rest in conjecture, it must be proved. Whenever, in giving evidence to prove a corrupt practice charged as having been committed by an agent, it appears that illegal practices took place, though the evidence fail to prove the agency, these illegal practices are comprehended in the meaning of the words "other illegal practices at the election," and must be taken in connection with the corrupt act of the agent. On the whole case, the corrupt act proved was so trilling that the result cannot have been affected by it, either alone or in connection with the other illegal practices at the election; the election should not be avoided. Welland (Prov.), 1 E. C. 383.

R. committed two clearly proved acts of bribery; F. D. and W. D. entered imo a scheme for violating the secrecy of the election by inducing voters to exhibit their ballots, after they were marked, at a window; and the evidence developed at least two other acts of bribery, though not by agents, and some suspicious circumstances; but all these were without the knowledge or consent of the respondent. The vote polled was about 4,500, out of which there was a majority of fifty-one for the respondent:—Held, that the election was void because of the corrupt acts of R.; and, in view of the conduct and details of the contest, the saving provisions of s. 159 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, could not be applied. The scheme for violating the secrecy of the ballot was an illegal act under s. 146, and han o little significance when taken in connection with the proved acts of bribery. In estimating the application of s. 159 it was impossible to leave out of sight the illegal practices under s. 146. West Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 153, referred to and followed. East Northumberland (Prov.), 1 E. C. 434.

Where only two acts of bribery were proved, but the perpetrators were both active, and one an important agent of the candidate, neither of whom was called at the trial, and one of the bribes, though only $2,$ was paid out of a general election fund, to which the respondent had contributed $250, and the respondent's majority was 65 out of a total vote of about 5,000 –Held, that the election was rightly avoided, notwithstanding the saving clause, s. 172 of R. S. O. 1897. c. 9. North Waterloo (Prov.), 2 E. C. 76.

The total vote polled was over 4,500, and the majority for the respondent was 29. The trial Judges had reported one person guilty of an act of undue influence, three, of being concerned in acts of bribery, and T, and two others of providing money for betting:—Held, that s. 172 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, could not be applied to save the election. East Elgin (Prov.), 2 E. C. 100.

See Dufferin (Prov.), H. E. C. 530; North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1; Hamilton (Prov.), 1 E. C. 499. (c) Bribery.

Generally—What It Is.]—Bribery is not confined to the actual giving of money. Where a grossly excessive price has been paid for work or for an article, it is clearly bribery. Conweall (Dom.), 11, D. C. 547.

Where money was paid to voters for services agreed to be rendered, but such services were not rendered owing to the misconduct of the voters, such payment was not bribery. West Toronto (Prov.). H. E. C. 97.

Where half a cord of wood was given to a voter in poor circumstances during the election, and the giver swore that it was given out of charity:—Held, not an act of bribery. Where a voter was balled out of god on the day of polling by a friend, but according to the evidence without reference to the election:—Held, not an act of bribery. London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

The giver of a bribe as well as the receiver may be indicted for bribery. The first principle of parliamentary law is that elections must be free; and, therefore, without referring to statutory provisions, if treating was carried on to such an extent as to amount to bribery, and undue influence was of a character to affect the election, the election would be void. By Agents.] — One M., a carier, who voted for respondent, at the request of P., the respondent's agent, carried a voter five or six miles to the polling place, saying that he would do so without charge. Some days after the election F., the agent, gave M. Sayine to the control of the polling place, saying that he would do so without charge. Some days after the election F., the agent, gave M. Sayine to say the control of the poll, but M. thought it was in payment for work which he had done for P. as a carter. The candidate knew nothing of the matter:—Held, that there was properly no payment by P. to M. for any purpose, the money being given for one purpose and received for another; but that if there had been, it was made after P.'s agency had ceased, and there was no previous hiring or promise to pay, to which it could relate back. If such payment had been established as a corrupt practice, it would have avoided P.'s vote, but not M.'s; and it would not have defeated the election, for it was not found to have been committed with the knowledge or consent of the candidate, but the contrary. Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 139.

An elector when asked to vote for respondent said that it would be a day lost if he went to vote, which would cost him $1. To which the canvasser replied: "Come out, and your $1 will be all right: "—Held, not sufficient to establish a charge of bribery. Monck (Prot.), H. E. C. 134.

K., an agent, while canvassing a voter in ward No. 6, gave him money to get beer, for which the voter paid a lesser sum, and, as the voter was poor, told him to keep the change:—Held, under the circumstances, not an act of bribery. London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

One M., the financial agent of the petitioner, agreed with a voter who had a difference with the petitioner about a right to cut timber on the voter's land, to settle the matter—the voter when canvassed to vote for the petitioner having referred to this difference. M. signed an agreement in the petitioner's name, whereby he surrendered any claim to cut timber except as therein mentioned:— Held, that a surrender of the right to cut timber on the lands of another was a "valuable consideration," within the meaning of the bribery clauses of 32 Vict. c. 21 (O.) 2. That the agent M. was guilty of an act of bribery. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

An agent of the respondent, while canvassing a voter, gave $8 to the widowed sister of the voter, an old friend of his, who was then in reduced circumstances. The agent stated that this was not the first money so given, and that it was in no way connected with the election:—Held, under the circumstances, not an act of bribery. An offer by an agent of the respondent when canvassing a voter, that he "would see him another time and things would be made right," is not an offer of bribery. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 202.

One II., a voter, held a claim against the respondent, and M., a member of a township committee, and another, for five years, which he had been endeavouring to procure payment of. When canvassed at the time of the election, he stated that if he did not get it settled he would not vote for the respondent. M. induced the respondent to give his promissory note to II. for the debt, but did not give the respondent to understand directly or indirectly that the note had anything to do with the election: — Held, that it is always open to inquire, under statutes similar to the Election Acts, whether the debt was paid in accordance with the legal obligation to pay it, or in order to induce the voter to vote or refrain from voting. 2. That, on the evidence, the motive which induced M. was that of procuring the voter II. to vote at the election, and that thereby an act of bribery was committed by M. as such agent, which avoided the election. North Ontario (Prov.), II. E. C. 394.

A large sum of money, averaging $3 per head, had been spent by two of the agents of the respondent, and money had been given by them to persons without any instructions:—Held, that where such money had been applied improperly, it must be considered that it was intended to be so applied. Cornwell (Dom., H. E. C. 547.

One L., a tavern-keeper, was told by H., one of respondent's canvassers, that he thought L. could get $18 or $20 from P., if he would stay at home during the election, L. expected that the money would be spent at his tavern, and shewed that he did not know what was intended. Neither H. nor P. was examined:—Held, on the evidence, that there was no actual offer to bribe. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 612.

The agent C. employed one W. to go with him on the evening before the election to several electors, from whom both C. and W. made colourable purchases, but with the corrupt intention of inducing the persons from whom the purchases were made to vote or refrain from voting at the election:—Held, that C. and W. were guilty of bribery, and that the election was avoided in consequence of their corrupt acts. Cornicall (Dom.), H. E. C. 803.

P., an agent of the respondent, on the monity of the election, called on the wife of one K., and asked her to use her influence with her husband to get "I will make it all representations of the respondent and the control of the election that the intended to vote for the espondent any way, or that he would do as he liked, and replied that he intended to vote for the espondent any way, or that he would do as he liked, and he did vote. After the election the wife called at P.'s store, and having reminded him of his promise, she went into the grocery department and got goods to the value of $4.49. Subsequently an account was rendered including this $4.49, and the husband objected to pay it. She then told a clerk of P.'s that that part of the account was settled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time," and a new account was substelled off election time, and the estate, as P. had failed in the meantime, with that item omitted. Per Burton, J.A.—The words of the promise in themselves alone did not amount to "an offer or promise of money or other valuable consideration," but, being followed after the election by the resent of goods, the gift was made in measured with the election, it was not such a corrupt practice as to affect the candidate unless done with his privity and assent. Per Osler, J. A.—P. intended to convey and did convey to the wife the idea that if she procured or would induce her busband to vote as he wished, she would receive something of value; the giving of the groceries after the election was an act of bribery, and if it stood alone it would have been necessary to carry the evidence of agency further, but following the promise it shewed what both parties u

A payment of $10 was made to P. H. to go some miles for voters, although another messenger was sent and paid by another agent for the same purpose, who failed to get through on account of the roads, and returned the money:—Held, that there was no reason to suppose that the money was paid colourably. North Ontario (Prot.), I E. C. I.

Where N., who appeared to have been agent of a candidate, called upon M., an elector, and, without directly asking him to vote, handed him one of the candidate's cards, and stated that he was going to give M.'s wife a present, but that he could not give M. a present, because it was election time, and that M. could get a present for his wife any day he was in B. (one of the places where voting was to take place); and M. went to B. on the night of the election and got the present, which was tea and sugar, &c., worth about 82:—Held, that this came within the acts spoken of in R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 149 (a); and that, the goods having been given to M. under the idea that he had voted, it was immaterial whether it was proved that M. had actually voted or not. Mushoka and Parry Sound (Prots.), 1 E. C. 197.

D., an agent of respondent, bribed M., a voter, by payment of money. The same D. gave one L., after he had voted, $1, which both D. and L. said was a loan and not a gift; —Held, that the first payment was a corrupt practice: as to the latter payment the trial Judges did not agree. H., a voter, was paid $4$ by an agent of respondent for one day's work posting bills:—Held, per Boyd, C., not a corrupt practice: per Cameron, C.J., an unreasonably large payment for the work done, though not sufficient, if it were the only charge, to avoid the election. East Middle-sex (Prov.), 1 E. C. 250

The following acts were relied on a sufficient to have the election set aside. H., a Conservative, prior to the election, canvassed in company with the respondent, one B. On election day H. was selected by the assistant-secretary of the association (an acknowledged agent of the respondent) to represent the respondent at the Buraley poll, and obtained from him a certificate under s. 42 of the Dominion Elections Act, entitling him to vote at the Buraley poll. He there met B. and treated him by giving him a glass of whisky, and after B. had voted, he gave him $2, and subsequently sent him $50. The treating, according to B.'s evidence, was nothing more than an act of good fellowship; and, according to H.'s account, B. was not feeling well, and the whisky was given in consequence. B. negatived that the $2 was paid him for his vote, and H. said that he supposed it was a dollar bill, and told B. to "go and treat the boys," with it, and that it was not given on account of any previous promise or for his having voted:—Held, at the trial, that none of these acts constituted corrupt acts so as to avoid the election. On appeal to the supreme court of Canada:—Held, per Ritchie, C. J., and Henry and Taschereau, JJ., that there was sufficient evidence of H.'s agency. Per Strong, J.—There was no proof of H.'s agency. Agency was not to be presumed from the fact that the respondent permitted H. to canvass B. in his presence, and there was an entire absence of proof of any sufficient authority to H. to bind the respondent by his acts at the polling place in the matters of treating and the payment of the $2. Per Fournier, J., that the treating of B. on polling day, both before and after he had voted, by H., an agent, and the day toted, by H., and agent, and the creating of the sum of $2 immediately after he had voted, by H., an agent, and the day to the

The payment by an agent of a sum of $147 to a voter claiming the same to be due for expenses at a previous election, and who refuses to vote until the amount is paid, is a corrupt practice. Levis (Dom.), 11 S. C. R. 133.

An election petition charged that II., an agart of the candidate whose election was attacked, corruptly offered and paid $5 to induce a voter to refrain from voting. The evidence shewed that H. was in the habit of assisting this particular voter, and that being told by the voter that he contemplated going away from home on a visit a few days before the election, and being away on election day, H. promised him $5 towards paying his expenses. Shortly afterwards the voter went to the house of II. to borrow a coat for his journey, and H.'s brother gave him $5.

went away and was absent on election day:— Held, that the offer and payment of the $5 formed one transaction and constituted a corrupt practice under the Election Act. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 E. C. 572, 17 S. C. R. 170.

Held, that the bribery by L. of two persons to abstain from voting against the respondent was established by the evidence, although it was not shewn that anything was said to them about voting: L. having paid them, for trifling services which he engaged them to perform upon election day, sums considerably in excess of the value of such services, knowing them to be voters and to belong to the opposite political party. By Candidate. |—The respondent, after amouncing himself as a candidate, gave $10 in two $5 bills to a child of a voter, then three or four years old, which had been named after him. He had two years previously intimated that he would make the child a present.—Held, that the gift, under such circumstances, was not bribery. The respondent while canvassing had refreshment for his man and two horses at a tavern for part of a day and night, for which he paid the tavern-keeper $5, and next day $5 more, in all $10, without asking for a bill. The bill would have amounted to about $3. The respondent stated that the tavern-keeper was an old friend of his, and was just starting in business, and that he thought it right to pay him as it were a compliment on his first visit to his tavern, and that he believed he would have done the same thing if it was not election time:—Held, that being an isolated case in an election context, free from profuse expenditure, and this being a quasi-criminal trial, involving grievous results to the respondent if found a corrupt practice, such payment was not—after the explanations of the respondent—an act of bribery, $Glengarry (Pror.), 11. E. C. 8.

The respondent intrusted about $700 to an agent for election purposes without having supervised the expenditure:—Held, that this did not make him personally a party within 34 Vit. c. 3, s. 46 (O.), to every illegal application of the money by the agent, or by those who received money from him. But if a very excessive sum had been so intrusted to the agent, the presumption of a corrupt purpose might have been reasonable. South Grey (Prot.), H. E. C. 52.

A candidate in good faith intended that his election should be conducted in accordance both with the bear and spirit of the law; and the law of the law of the law; and the law of the

that of the Imperial statute requiring a detailed statement of expenditure to be funnished to the returning officer. But it is always more satisfactory to have the expenditure shewn by proper vouchers; and if money is paid to voters for distributing cards, or for teams, or for refreshments, this will be open to attack, and Judges will be less inclined, as the law becomes known, to take a favourable view of conduct that may bear two constructions, one favourable to the candidate and the other unfavourable. East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70.

The respondent had in 1873 compromised with his creditors for fifty cents on the 8, and then promised to pay all his creditors in full. About the time of the election he paid one 8s., who had at the two previous elections supported the opposing candidate, a portion of the promised amount:—Held, under the circumstances, that the payment was not bribery. Dundas (Prox.), H. E. C. 205.

At a late hour on the day preceding the election some agents of the respondent determined to resort to bribery, and the out such determination at an early hour on out such determination at an early hour on the polling day. There was the morning of the polling day. There was no evidence of the respondent's knowledge of or consent to, this act of his agents:—Held, that the shortness of the interval between that the shortness of the interval between the resolve and the execution of the bribery, which was carried out at a place several miles away from where the respondent lived, rendered improbable the fact of the respondent's actual knowledge of such bribery. The wife of one S., a voter, had been injured some years before the election by the horses of the respondent, and in 1872 the respondent gave compensation for the injury partly by 8. compensation for the injury partly by can-celling a debt and partly in cash, for which S. signed a receipt "in full of all accounts and claims whatsoever." The respondent can-vassed S. during the election, saying, "I would like to have you with me at the elec-tion," but S. declined, expressing dissatis-fortion with the compensation made for the faction with the compensation made for the injury to his wife, to which the respondent replied that he was able to do, and could do, what was right. Afterwards the respondent sent his salesman to the wife of S., who told her that the respondent was still able to do justice, to which she replied she would a letter, which she did, and in which she referred to her husband's vote. After the election the respondent gave S. $30, partly by the state of the proposed party and partly in cash. The cancelling a debt and partly in cash. The respondent denied that he gave S. to understand that he would give him anything to induce him to vote for him at the election:— Held, that the evidence shewed that an indirect offer of money or other valuable considto induce him to vote for the respondent to S., to induce him to vote for the respondent. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 391.

The evidence shewed that extensive bribery was practised by the agents of the respondent and by a large number of persons in his interest, but no acts of personal bribery were proved against him, and he denied all knowledge of such acts. It was in evidence that he had warned his friends, during the canvass, not to spend money illegally. The Judge (dubliante) held that no corrupt practice had been committed with the respondent's knowledge or consent, and avoided the election for corrupt practices by the respondent's agents. On appeal: — Held, that the circumstantial evidence in this case was sufficient to shew that corrupt practices had been committed by the respondent's agents with his knowledge and consent. 2. That will full interional ignorance is the same as actual knowledge. 3. That the assent of a candidate to the corrupt acts of his agents may be assumed from his non-interference or non-objection when he has the opportunity. And such candidate's knowledge of and assent to the corrupt acts of his agents, may be established without connecting him with any particular act of bribery. London (Dom.), H. E. C. 560.

A single bribed vote brought home to a candidate would throw doubt on his whole majority, and would therefore annul his return. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

Held, that the settlement by payment of a just dobt by a candidate to an elector without any reference to the election is not a corrupt act of brihery, and especially so when the enablidate distinctly swears he never asked the elector's support, and the elector says he never promised it and never gave it. One P., some years before the election, asserted that the respondent was indebted to him, but the respondent denied all liability, and the dispute caused a coolness between them. One H., four months before the election, was employed by P. to collect another account from the respondent, and did so. H. stated to P. that, as the respondent was in a good humour, it would be a good opportunity to get the old account settled, and asked P. if he would support the respondent in case the old account was settled. P. replied that he might promise what he liked. H. then took the account never referred to the election, nor to the settlement as affecting the election:—Held, that the respondent had not been guilty of bribery in this transaction. South Onderio (Dom.), H. E. C. 751, 3 S. C. R. 641.

The respondent owed one M. a debt, which had been due for some time. He was used for it about the time of the election, and was some time. It is a some time of the election, and was represented by the some properties where the some properties which is a some properties that the second of the sec

The charge was that the respondent bribed one J. F. G., by the payment of a promissory note for 88.9. The evidence shewed that J. F. G. had been canvassing for respondent a long time before the note fell due, and had always supported him. He was on his way to retire his note, while hwas overdue or falling due that day, when respondent asked him to cause that day, and promised to send to cause that day, and promised to send the cause that day, and promised to send the cause that day are promised to send the cause of the cause of action influenced him in any way, and that he had to pay the note and did not expect respondent to make him a present of it:—Held, that the evidence did not shew that the advance of money was made in order to induce J. F. G. to procure or endeavour to procure the return of the respondent, and was not therefore bribery within the meaning of s.s. 3 of s. 92 of the Dominion Election Act, 1874. Selkirk (Dom.), 4 S. C. R. 494.

One Mireau, a blacksmith, who was a neighbour of the respondent, had in his possession for two years several pieces of broken saws which the respondent had left with him for the purpose of making scrapers out of them on shares. A few days prior to nomination the respondent went into Mireau's shop with a scraper to be sharpened, and in return for sharpening the scraper told him to keep the old pieces of saw which he might still have. Mireau in his evidence answered as follows:—"Q. He did not speak of your vote? A. No. Q. What has he said? A. He said that M. Magnan was coming like mustard after dinner. Q. M. Dugas did not ask you for whom you were? A. No. 2* Q. Do you swear on the oath you have taken that M. Dugas left with you these two pieces of saw in question with the intent to buy (bribe) you? A. I think so, I cannot say that it is sure, I don't know his mind (son idée). It is all I can swear. Q. It has not changed your opinion? A. No. Q. For whom were you in the last election? A. For M. Magnan. "The scrapers were worth in all about $2, and were of no use to the respondent, and no other conversation took place afterwards between the parties. The Judge who tried the case found that there was no intention on the part of the respondent to corrupt Mireau, which decision was upheld by the Supreme Court. Montealm (Dom.),

Before setting out on a canvassing tour, the appellant, the sitting member, placed in the hands of one B., who was not his financial agent, $190 to be used for the purpose of the election. While visiting a part of the county with which the appellant was not much acquainted, but with which B. was well acquainted, they paid an electioneering visit to one K., a leading man in that locality, who indicated to B. his dissatisfaction with the candidate of his party, and stated that, although he would vote for the Liberal party, he would not exert himself as much as in the former elections. B. asked by the stated that, although he would vote for the Liberal party, he would not exert himself as much as in the former elections. liberality or charity, but a gift out of appellant's money, with a view to influence a voter favourably to the appellant's candidature, and that, although the money was not given in the appellant's presence, yet it was given with his knowledge, and therefore that the appellant had been personally guilty of a corrupt practice, Megantic (Dom.), 9 S. Proof of Bribery—Sufficiency of Evidence.]—Where a charge of by bery is only the unaccepted offer of a bribe, the evidence must be more exact than that required to prove a bribe actually given or accepted. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

Where the evidence as to the offer of bribes of offers or proposals to bribe, the evidence should be stronger than with respect to actual bribery. Where three voters swore to three separate offers of bribery made to each of them separately by an agent of the respondthem separately by in agent of the respond-ent, which such agent swore were never made by him:—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the setting aside of the election. The language of Martin, B., in the Wigan case, I O'M. & H., 192, doubted as a general rule applicable to this case. East Toronto (Prop.), H. E. C. 70.

Where the evidence as to the offer of bribes was contradictory, and the parties making charges of bribery appeared to have borne indifferent characters:—Held, that the offer of bribes was not satisfactorily established. Welland (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 187.

Where one party affirmed and the other party denied a corrupt offer between them as to voting for the respondent:—Held, that the offer was not sufficiently proved. Dundas (Prov.), H. E. C. 205.

The evidence respecting a charge of bribery by payment of a disputed debt, was held insufficient to sustain the charge. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

Where in evidence of offers of bribery, an assertion on one side is met by a contradiction on the other, the uncorroborated asser-tion is not sufficient to sustain the charge, West Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 274.

A charge of bribery against the respondent where the evidence was unsatisfactory and repugnant in itself, and rested more on suspicion than on clear positive proof, was held not proven. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E.

On a charge that one O. bribed a voter by promising him to procure a deed of his land for him if he would procure votes for the respondent:-Held, on the evidence, that though the voter had so represented, the procuring of the deed had nothing to do with the election. Semble, that O. was not an agent for whose acts the respondent was respon-sible. A witness stated that he had received a letter from a voter, asking for the fulfil-ment of an offer as to his vote, but the letter was not produced:—Held, that it was not proved that the letter in question was written by the voter referred to. One S., an alleged agent of the respondent, made offers of sheepskins to two voters in connection with their votes at the election; he swore the offers were made in jest. As the evidence did not shew that S. was an agent of the respondent at the time of the alleged offers, no effect was the time of the alleged offers, no effect was given to the charge. A statement that an offer to bribe was made in jest should be received with great suspicion; a briber may make an offer which he intends should be taken seriously, and then, if not accepted, he may assert it was made in jest. North Middleser (Prov.), H. E. C. 376, See West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97; Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 187; Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 647.

The respondent was charged with several acts of corrupt practice. Each separate charge was supported by the evidence of one witness, and was denied or explained by the respondent. The Judge trying the petition respondent. The Judge trying the petition stated that if each case stood by itself, oath against oath, and each witness were equally credible, and there were no collateral circum-stances either way, he would have found that each case was not proved; but, as each charge was proved by a credible witness, the united weight of their testimony overcame the effect of the respondent's denial; and on the com-bined testimony of all the witnesses, he held the separate charges proved against the respondent:—Held, that in election cases, each charge constitutes in effect a separate indictment, and if a Judge on the evidence in one case dismisses the charge, the respondent cannot be placed in a worse position because a number of charges are advanced, in each of which the Judge arrives at a similar conclusion, and therefore the separate charges above referred to were held not sustained. Mus-koka (Prov.), H. E. C. 458.

A number of separate charges of corrupt practices against an agent of the respondent, based upon offers or promises, and not upon any act of such agent, each of which de-pended upon the oath of a witness to the offer or promise, but each one of which such agent directly contradicted, or gave a different colour to the language, or a different turn to the expressions used, which quite altered the meaning of the conversations detailed, constituted in effect a complete or substantial denial of the charges attempted to be proved against such agent :- Held, that, although in acting on such conflicting testimony, where there was a separate opposing witness in each case to the testimony of the witness support-ing the charge, the trial Judge might be obliged to hold each charge as answered and repelled by the counter-evidence, he could not give the like effect to the testimony of the same witness in each of the cases where the only opposing witness is confronted by the adverse testimony of a number of witnesses, who, though they do not corroborate one another by speaking to the same matter, are contradicted in each case by the one witness. 2. That the more frequently a witness is contradicted by others, although each opposing witness contradicts him on a single point, the more is confidence in such witness affected, until, by a number of contradicting witnesses, he may be disbelieved altogether. 3. That acting on the above and on a consideration whether the story told by the witness in sup-port of the charge is reasonable or probable in itself, the charges of corrupt practices against the agent of the respondent, set out in the judgment, were proved. North Renfrew (Dom.), H. E. C. 710.

A charge that the respondent promised to give a voter certain work to do if he voted for him, was disproved by the evidence of the respondent and another, and by the admissions of the voter made to other persons. The charge against the respondent and one B., of an offer of money to, and to procure an appointment as justice of the peace for, a voter, in consideration of his voting for the respondent, was supported by the evidence of the voter, who shewed bitter hostility to B.; but the charge was denied by the respondent. The evidence shewing the statement to be improbable, and shewing that the election contest was carried on by the respondent with a scrupulous and honest endeavour to avoid any violation of the law against corrupt practices, the charge was dismissed. Holton (Don.), H. E. C. 736.

A promise to give work to a voter, made without reference to the election and as a juden, not evidence of bribery. Halton (Dom.), H. E. C. 736.

A charge against an agent of the respondent, that he had promised to procure the office of police magistrate for one W., was denied by the agent and the respondent; and it further appearing that W. had acted on the committee of and voted for the opposing candidate, the charge was dismissed. Charges against the respondent, that he had promised an office to the son of a voter, and a contract to the voter himself, were contradicted by other evidence and dismissed. South Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 751.

The respondent canvassed a voter, who at the trial swore that after he had agreed to vote for him, the respondent promised to give the voter some work; the respondent denied the promise.—Held, although the voter appeared to be a truthful witness and was not shaken on cross-examination, that the promise of employment was not made out beyond all reasonable doubt. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785.

Treating—Under what Circumstances it may be Bribery.] — See North Waterloo (Prov.), 2 E. C. 76.

(d) Fraudulent Device.

Shortly before polling day the respondent's agents issued a circular, the substance of which was that they had ascertained upon undoubted authority that W., an independent candidate, despairing of election himself, was procuring his friends to vote for C., the opposition candidate. W. denied the truth of this report:—Held, that this was not a "fraudulent device," within the meaning of 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 32 (O.), to interfere with the free exercise of the franchise of voters, Lust Northumberland (Prov.), H. E. C. 803.

See Cornwall (3) (Dom.), H. E. C. 803.

(e) Hiring Conveyances.

The hiring of teams, &c., is not a "corrupt practice" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Controverted Elections Act, 1873, unless the hiring amounts to bribery. The words "Act of the Parliament of Canada" in that section refer to an Act of the Dominion of Canada. East Toronto (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 248.

Cabs and carriages were hired for the use of committee-men and canvassers during the election and on the day of polling, with instructions to the drivers that they were not to convey voters to and from the poll. One cab was however used for that purpose for the greater part of the day, but without the assent of the agent of the respondent, who had charge of the cab:—Held, that, as the evidence did not shew that the cabs and carriages were colourably hired for the purpose of bribery or conveying voters to the poll, or that the one cab was so used with the assent of the agent of respondent, the hiring was not an illegal act within 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 71 (O.) West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97.

On polling day, one W. asked two voters to go with him and vote for the respondent, and he would bring them back, and they could feed their horses and have dinner. W. sent one of his horses on some of his own business, and hired from one of these voters a horse, for which W. paid him fifty cents, and then drove with the two voters to the poll:—Hield, not a hiring of a horse, &c., to carry voters to the poll within 32 Vict. c. 21. s. 71 (O.), nor a furnishing of entertainment to induce voters to vote for the respondent, within s. 61 of the Ontario Election Act of 1868. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

Where the amounts paid for hiring teams were fair and reasonable, such hiring was not bribery under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, 1873. Where a canvasser for the respondent received money for hiring teams, and hired from those indebted to him, and agreed with them to give them credit for the respective amounts to be paid for the teams, such an arrangement was not evidence of corrupt practices. Money given to a person to hire a team and to go round canvassing, held, on the evidence, not brihery. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 612.

One L., a voter, hired a horse and cutter on the day of the election, and with M., a scrutineer for the respondent, drove to the poll and voted. The day after the polling L. and M. returned to their homes, and on the way M. gave L. $4 to pay for the horse and cutter:—Held, that the payment of $4 having been made after the election, and not having been made corruptly to influence the voter to vote for the respondent, was not a corrupt practice or a wilful violation of 37 Vict. c. 9, s. 96 (D.) 2. That M.'s agency was a limited one, and had ceased before the payment in question. Halton (Dom.), H. E.

A room was procured at which private meetings were held of the friends of the respondent to promote his election, some of which meetings he attended. One W. attended these meetings, and was appointed to procure the vote of a certain voter who was absent from the riding. W. hired a vehicle to convey the voter to the poll:—Held, that W. was an agent of the respondent, and that his hiring such a vehicle was a corrupt practice. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785.

The evidence shewed that M.'s team was hired some days before the opening of the poll by C., an agent of the respondent, for the purpose of bringing two voters to the pells, M. went for the voters, returned the day previous to the pelling day without the voters, and was paid $15:—Held, that the term "six preceding sections," in s. 98 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, means the six sections immediately preceding the 98th, and therefore the hiring of a team to convey voters to the polls, prohibited by s. 98, was a corrupt practice within the meaning of $98. Selkke (Dom.), 4 8.C. R. 494.

The hiring and paying of carters by an agent to convey voters who are known to be supporters of the agent's candidate is a corrupt practice. Selkirk (Dom.), 4 S. C. R. 494, followed. Levis (Dom.), 11 S. C. R. 133.

Held, that what is referred to in R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 154, is hiring vehicles to convey persons with the intention of their voting, and the qualification of such persons, or their right to vote, is immaterial, whereas s. 153 requires persons therein referred to to be voters. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Prov.), 1 E. C. 197.

W., an agent of the respondent, was in partnership as a livery stable keeper with G. Under an agreement between them, if either partner took out carriages for his own use he was to pay his co-partner half hire for them. On election day W. took out carriages of the partnership and conveyed voters to the poll, and afterwards, after the election, duly accounted to G. for half hire for the same:—Held, that this constituted a corrupt practice under R. S. C. 1886 c. S, ss. 88, 91, being a hiring of carriages to carry voters to the poll, and that the election of the respondent was void. West Middlesex (Dom.), 1 E. C. 465.

See Cornwall (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 313.

(f) Hiring Rooms.

Alleged expenditure of money intended to influence a certain class of voters, viz., keepers of public houses: hiring of rooms at public houses to hold meetings—effect of, and how far a violation of the law as to bribery. Kingston (Dom.), 11 C. L. J. 19.

The candidate is not restricted to his purely personal expenses, but may (if there is no intent thereby to influence voters or to induce others to procure his return) hire rooms for committees and meetings in connection with the election. East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70.

One W., a voter, who was in arrears to the Crown for the purchase money of a lot of land, was canvassed by B., an alleged agent of the respondent, who told him that the government would look sharply after those in arrears for their land who did not vote for the supporters of the government:—Held, that what occurred was at most a brutum fulmen, if intended as a threat at all, and only an expression of opinion upon a subject on which every one was competent to form his own judgment. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

C. occupied as a boarding house, a house of a lumber company rent free, and was paid for boarding the men by the men themselves, but through the company retaining the amount thereof out of their wages. C. acted as scrutineer for the defeated candidate, and while so acting, but after he had voted, was sent for by P., the company's manager, an agent of the respondent, and given to understand that his so acting was not satisfactory to the company and against their interest. No threat of any kind was made. C. returned to the polling place and continued to turned to the poining piace and continues to act, but, on reflection, about twelve o'clock he ceased to do so. C. had canvassed the men at the boarding house for the defeated candi-date, for whom some had promised to vote, and a good many of the men had voted before and a good many of the men had voted before he left. It did not appear that what P. had said to C. was communicated to any voter, or that any voter was influenced thereby:— Held, that a charge of intimidation was not Heid, that a charge of intimidation was not proved. After the election C. received notice of dismissal from the company, and was informed by P. that it was for talking too much in the election about one of the hands having been sent away to prevent his voting. It was charged that C. was dismissed on account of his having voted at the election :-Held, that the charge was not proved. East Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

See Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283; Soulanges (Dom.), 10 S. C. R. 652; Muskoka (Prov.), H. E. C. 458; Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 187.

(h) Paying Canvassers and Public Speakers.

A candidate may, if there is no intent thereby to influence voters or to induce others to procure his return, employ men to act as canvassers, to distribute cards and placards, and to perform similar services in connection with the election. The friends of the candidate formed themselves into committees, and some them voluntarily distributed cards and canvassed different localities, with books containing lists of voters, noting several particulars as to promises, &c. These canvassers often met in public houses, and while there, according to custom, treated those whom they found there, and thus spent their money as well as their time. On this being represented to those who had charge of the money for election expenses, the latter, in several cases, reimbursed the canvassers:—Held, that these general payments, if not exceeding what would be paid to a person for working the same time in other employments, would not be such evidence of bribery as to set aside an election. East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70.

The bona fide employment and payment of a voter to canvass voters belonging to a particular religious denomination, or to the same trade or business, or to the same rank in life, or to canvass voters who only understand the French or Celtic languages, is not illegal. The fact that such a voter has skill or knowledge and capacity to canvass would not make his employment illegal. Money was paid by an agent of the respondent ($7 each) to certain voters for canvassing, they observed.

ing that "a little money in election time was allowed for knocking around," which observation the agent considered was "going about to solicit votes." The agent denied that it was paid with any corrupt intent, although his evidence was not satisfactory. The voters swore the money was paid to their wives, and the agent was not recalled to explain it:—Held, that, although such payments night be open to unfavourable interpretation, it was not, according to the evidence, inconsistent with being made without any improper motive. West Toronto (Prot.), II. E. C. 97.

The respondent and one M. employed one H., a lawyer and professional public speaker, to address meetings in the respondent's interest, and promised to pay H.'s travelling expenses, if it were legal to do so:—Held, that such a promise was not bribery. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785, 4 S. C. R. 430.

Held, per Armour, J., that the biring of orators and canvassers at an election is bribery. S. C., H. E. C. 785.

Per Fournier, J., that candidates may legally employ and pay for the expenses and services of canvassers and speakers, provided the agreement be not a colourable on intended to evade the bribes of the Act. Per Taschereau and Gwynne, JJ., that such a payment would be illegal. S. C., 4 S. C. R. 431.

Certain persons were paid as canvassers on behalf of the respondent:—Held, not a corrupt practice. Lennox (Prov.), 1 E. C. 41.

(i) Paying Travelling Expenses,

Held, that hiring by an agent of the respondent of a railway train to convey voters to and from places along the line of railway where they could vote, was a payment of the travelling expenses of voters in going to and from the election, within the meaning of 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 71 (O.) and was a corrupt practice, and avoided the election. North Simcoc (Prov.), II. E. C. 50.

The payment of a voter's expenses in going to the poll is illegal, as such, and a corrupt practice, even though the payment may not have been intended as a bribe. South Grey (Prox.), H. E. C. 52.

The court declined, in the present state of the law, to exclude inquiry as to the payment of travelling expenses of persons going to and returning from the poll, inasmuch as such payment might amount to bribery. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

The obtaining by an agent of a candidate from the president of a railway company, of six passes, for which nothing had been or was ever intended to be paid, three of which were used in bringing as many voters to the poll, is not a corrupt practice within the meaning of the Election Act, s. 154. The mischievous effects that might arise from such a practice on the part of railway companies remarked upon. South Victoria (Prov.), 1 E. C. 182.

S., an agent of the respondent, with his own conveyance, brought a voter from N. to his own house, where he remained as a guest until after the polling day:—Held, not within s. 153 or s. 154 of the Act. North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1.

When the agent of a candidate asked a voter if he intended to vote, and the voter said he did not think so, as he could not spare the money to go, but that if he went he would not vote for the opposing candidate, and the agent thereupon lent him the cost of a return ticket; and the evidence shewed that the transaction was a bonh fide loan and not a gift, and was not made with the intention of influencing the voter in favour of the principal, and that the money was repaid shortly after the election without any demand made therefor: — Held, that the above did not constitute a corrupt practice under R. S. C. c. S. s. S4 (a), or s. S8. The voter had the will to go and vote for the agent's principal, but he had not the means to enable him to do so, and these were furnished to him by the agent, but as a bonh fide loan, not as a gift. Thus he was not induced but merely enabled to vote by a temporary loan, and no breach of the law contained in the above sections was committed. East Elgin (Dom.), 1 E. C. 475.

The payment of a voter's expenses in going to the poll is illegal, as such, even though the payment may not have been intended as a bribe. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 391.

One L., the agent of C., the respondent, gave to certain electors employed on certain steamboats, tickets over the North Shore Railway to enable them to go without paying any fare from Montreal to Berthier, to vote at the Berthier election, the voters having accepted the election, the voters having accepted the election, the voters having accepted the the election. The tickets shewed on their face that they had been paid for, but there was evidence that L. had received them gratuitionsly from one of the officers of the company. The Judge who tried the case found as a fact that the tickets had not been paid for, on and were given unconditionally, and therefore he till was not corrupt, and therefore he taking to the company of the company of the control of the co

G., a voter and a supporter of the respondent holding a free railway ticket to go to Listowel to vote, and wanting $2 for his expenses while away from home, asked for the loan of the money from W., a bar tender and friend. W., not having the money at the time, applied to S., an agent of the respondent, who was present in the room, for the money, telling him he wanted it to lend to G. to enable him to go to Listowel to vote. S., the agent, lent the money to W., who handed it over to G. The day before the trial W. returned the $2 to S. Hidd, that as the decision of the trial Judges depended on the inference drawn from the evidence, it could be reversed in appeal, and that the proper inference to be drawn from the undisputed facts in the present case was that the loan by 8, to W. was a mere colourable transaction by 8, to pay the travelling expenses of G. within the provisions of s. 88 of the Dominion Elections Act, and a corrupt practice sufficient to avoid the election under s. 91. Per Strong and Patterson, JJ., affirming the judgment of the court below, that upon the evidence the Grand Trunk Railway tickets issued at Toronto and Stratford for the transportation of voters by rail to the polls in this case were free tickets, and that as the free tickets had been given to voters who were well known supporters of the respondent prepared to vote for him and him alone, if they voted at all, it did not amount to paying the travelling expenses of voters within the meaning of s. 88 of the Dominion Election Act. Berthier (Dom.), 9 8, C. R. 102, followed. North Perth (Dom.), 20 8, C. R. 1531.

See South Renfrew (Prov.), 1 E. C. 359.

(j) Subscriptions to Churches and Charities.

The respondent was charged with using means of corruption at his election (1) by giving up a promissory note and also $20 to one M., on condition of M. and his sons voting for him; the charge depended upon the contradictory oaths of M. and the respondent; (2) by giving a large subscription to an election fund, some of which was expended for illegal purposes; and (3) by subscriptions to churches. The respondent denied any corrupt motive in these subscriptions. The trial Judge, on the evidence, found that the respondent was not personally guilty of corrupt practices, but he avoided the election on the ground of bribery by agents. Candidates and agents should select less suspicious seasons than election times for exercising their liberality towards charitable and religious objects. South Huron (Dom.), H. E. C. 576.

Held, that if gifts and subscriptions for charitable purposes, made by a candidate who is in the habit of subscribing liberally to charitable purposes, are not proved to have been offered or made as an inducement to, or on condition that, any body of men, or any individual, should vote or act in any way at an election, or on any express or implied promises or undertaking that such body of men, or individual, would, in consequence of such gift or subscription, vote or act in respect to any future election, then such gifts or subscriptions are not a corrupt practice, within the meaning of that expression as defined by the Dominion Election and Controverted Elections Acts, 1874. South Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 751, 3 S. C. R. 641.

(k) Treating.

Generally.]—Treating at an election, in order to be criminal, must be done corruptly, and for the purpose of corruptly influencing the voter. South Norfolk (Dom.), H. E. C. 660.

Treating is not per se a corrupt act, except when so made by statute; but the intent of the party treating may make it so, and the intent must be judged by all the circumstances by which it is attended. North Middlesex (Prov.), H. E. C. 376.

Where a charge of a corrupt intent in treating is made, the evidence must satisfy the Judge, beyond reasonable doubt, that the treating was intended directly to influence the election, and to produce an effect upon the electors, and was so done with a corrupt intent. Glengarry (Prov.), H. E. C. S.

Treating, when done in compliance with a custom prevalent in the county and without any corrupt intent, will not avoid an election. Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 37.

The general practice which prevails here of persons drinking in a friendly way when they meet, would require strong evidence of the profuse expenditure of money in drinking, to induce a Judge to say it was corruptly done, so as to make it bribery or treating at common law. Kingston (Domn.), H. E. C. 625.

Declaration, for hire of horses and carriages, and provisions furnished. Plea, that the alleged debt was contracted for and on account of spirituous liquors and other refreshments furnished by the plaintiff to defendant and his friends and supporters, during a parliamentary election, at which election defendant was a candidate, and for work and services performed, and for provisions and materials provided by plaintiff for defendant as a candidate at and during said parliamentary election, contrary to the law and statutes in such case made and provided — Held, a good plea, under 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 6. Mottashed v. Reed, 23 U. C. R. 432.

The word "treating" refused to be struck out of the petition though not specifically prohibited by the Act. West Toronto (Prov.), 5 P. R. 394.

See North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252; North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

At Mectings.)—The respondent, who was then representing the county in the legislature, on two several occasions at the close of public meetings of electros called by him to explain his conduct as such member, treated all present to liquor at taverns. He had not at the time made up his mind to be a candidate at the then coming election, but told the electors that "if they gave him their support he would expect it:"—Held, under the circumstances, that such treating was not done with a corrupt intent. Quere, whether such treating was in any case a corrupt practice, under 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 61 (0.); or other than an illegal act which subjected the party to a penalty of $100 under s. 65—the statute pointedly omitting all mention of treating. Glengary (Prov.), H. E. C. 8.

Reasonable refreshments furnished bona fide to committees promoting the election are not illegal. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

Violations of the Ontario Controverted Elections Act, 1871, s. 61 (treating at meetings), is not a corrupt practice within the meaning of that Act and of the Election Act of 1868, unless committed in order to influence voters at the election complained of. North York (Prov.), H. E. C. 62.

The respondent, who was a member of a temperance organization, held an election meeting in a locality within the electoral division, and, about an hour after the meeting had dispersed, went to a tavern where he met about ten or fifteen persons in the street of the mean and the street of the street of the mean and the street of the respondent, said street, and he did treat the persons of the street of the respondent, said present, and the respondent gave him the score to pay for the treat:—Held, that, as the meeting for promoting the election had dispersed an hour before the respondent went to the tavern, this was not a meeting of electors, 2. That the treating, not having been done with a corrupt intent, was not an offence under 32 Vett, c. 21, s. 61, as a mended by 36 Vict, c. 2, s. 2, nor at common law. Quere, whether the Treating Act, 7 Wm. III. c. 4, is in force in this Province. Dundas (Prov.), 11, E. C. 205.

One F., an agent of the respondent, brought a jar of whisky to a meeting of electors assembled for the purpose of promoting the election, and gave drinks from the same to the electors present, which was held a corrupt practice, and a violation of the Ontario Election Act of 1898, as amended by the Election Act of 1873, so that the election was avoided thereby. West Wellington (Prov.), H. E. C. 231.

A meeting of the electors was held in a town hall, and C. (an agent of respondent) and a number of electors went from the meeting to a tavern, where they were treated by C::—Held, that this was a meeting of electors assembled for the purpose of promoting the election; and that the treating by C. was a corrupt practice, and a breach of 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 61, as amended by 36 Vict. c. 2, s. 2. East Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 245.

After a meeting of electors in a town hall, some friends of the respondent remained together consulting about the election, and afterwards went to a tavern, where some of them boarded, and had an oyster supper:—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge that this was an entertainment furnished to a meeting of electors under 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 61 (O.), as amended by 36 Vict. c. 2, s. 2. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

Providing refreshments at a meeting of electors, all of one political party, or at a meeting of a committee to aid in returning a caudidate, by and at the expense of one or more of their number, unless in some extreme case, cannot be deemed a breach of the provisions of the statute against treating. Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283.

A meeting of the electors was held at a layers, at which both candidates were present. A dispute arose, and the meeting broke up and the parties left the room as a disorderly crowd, and began pulling off their coats and tailed of fighting. A treat was proposed to quiet the people, and one F. (an agent of the respondent) treated, and the crowd quieted down and dwindled away:—Held, that the treating, under the circumstances, was not furnishing drink to a meeting of electors as sembled for the purpose of promoting the election. On appeal the court, without expression.

sing any opinion as to the treating, held, on the evidence, that F. was not an agent of the respondent at the time of the treating. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

One W., a member of a political association, treated the members of the association present at a meeting in a tavern:—Held, that the members so present were electors assembled to promote the election of the respondent within s. 61 of the Election Act of 1868, and that such treating was a corrupt practice by W. North Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 362.

After the nomination of candidates on the nomination day, and on another occasion, after a "meeting assembled for the purpose of promoting the election," and after the business for which the electors had assembled was over, the electors left the building in which the meeting was held and dispersed to various taverns, at which their vehicles had been put up, and then before leaving for home treated each other; and at one of the taverns the respondent himself partook of a treat:—Held, not furnishing drink or other entertainment to meetings of electors within s. 61 of the Ontario Election Act of 1848. 2. That the meeting of electors for the nomination of candidates, is a "meeting assembled for the purpose of promoting the election." North Middlesex (Prov.), H. E. C. 376.

An association formed "for the greater diffusion of Liberal principles and the social and intellectual improvement of its members," being prevented by an accident from meeting at the town hall, held a meeting in a tavern, and was treated by the respondent:—Held, not a meeting of electors within s. 151 of the Act. North Ontario (Prov.), I. E. C. 1.

A meeting of some thirty-live or forty electors had assembled for the purpose of promoting the election. During the meeting an agent of the net election. During the meeting an agent of the relation of the r

It appeared that on 15th February the respondent was chosen by a convention of his party as their candidate. On 23rd February a public meeting was held by him in a room in a hotel, which meeting was composed of about sixteen persons, some belonging to the opposite political party. A chairman was appointed, and the respondent addressed the meeting, as did others also. As soon as the proceedings closed, i. e., when the speaking was over, nearly all present crossed the hall, and went into the barroom. The respondent followed, first inviting the few who remained to join them, and then in the barroom invited them to drink, which they did, he paying for the liquor. On 27th February the nomination took place, and the polling on 13th March:—Held, that this was a violation of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 151. Per Hagarty, C.J.O., and Burton, J.A.—R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 151. refers clearly to a meeting of electors, whether the formalities of appointing a chairman or secretary are observed or not. Held, also, that though the act of treating appeared to have been committed in ignorance that it was a violation of the statute, it will be a violation of the statute, it will be a violation of the statute, it will be a violation of the statute, and the was involuntary or excusable. Per Burton, J.A., that under the present emettent in R. S. O. 1877 c, 10, s. 151, it need not be shewn that the meeting in question was assembled for promoting the election of the candidate furnishing the entertainment, but the meeting referred to is a meeting assembled for the purpose of promoting the election of a representative of the election of a representative of the electional district. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Prox.), I E. C. 197.

On different occasions a few members of one of respondent's local committees met together at different taverns, to go over voters' lists and arrange as to doubtful votes, and on each occasion liquor was furnished to the computtee men thus engaged, at the expense of different agents of respondent:—Held, per Boyd, C., that such committee meetings were not "meetings of electors" within the meaning of s. 151 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10; per Cameron, C.J., that s. 151 was specially directed against the treating of such committee meetings. On appeal:—Held, by the court, that such meetings were within the meaning of the section. Held, at the trial, that particulars and evidence shewing the furnishing of liquor to such meetings of committees, were admissible under the general allegation of the petition, that respondent by himself and his agents had been guilty of "treating." East Middlesex (Prox.), 1 E. C. 250.

Where after a meeting of electors had broken up, an alleged agent of the respondent had treated at the bar of the hotel where it had been held, a mixed multitude composed of some who had been at it, and others who had not :—Held, that this was not treating "a meeting of electors assembled for the purpose of promoting the election," within s. 161 of the Ontario Election, att, R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, nor was such treating "bribery" within R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, s. 159. Corrupt treating in its nature runs very close to bribery on the part of the treater, but the circumstances in which a treat can be said to be a valuable consideration within s. 159 so as to amount to bribery on the part of the person accepting it, must be unusual. North Waterloo (Proc.), 2 E. C. 76.

A number of voters met at a voter's house for the purpose of going over the voters' lists and then of having a card party. After the lists were disposed of the card party took place, and meat and drink were supplied by the host, but the drink, a quarter cask of beer, was paid for by subscription, according to the custom of the locality, which was a German settlement:—Held, not a corrupt practice within the meaning of s. 161 of the Elections Act. R. S. O. 1897 c. 9. South Perth (Proc.), 2 E. C. 141.

By Agents.]—The furnishing of refreshment to voters by an agent of a candidate, without the knowledge or consent of the candidate and against his will, will not be sufficient ground to set aside an election, unless done corruptly or with intent to influence voters. Where the object of an agent in treating is to gain popularity for himself, and not with any view of advancing the interest of his employers, such treating is not bribery. East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70.

One F., an agent of the respondent, on the day of the nomination of candidates to contest the election, and while the speaking was going on, treated a large number of persons at a taven across the street from the place of the nomination for which he paid 87 or 88:—Held, a corrupt practice by an agent of the respondent, which avoided the election. Dundas (Proc.), H. E. C. 205.

One D., who had been a candidate for various offices for twenty years prior to the elec-tion in question, and freely employed treating as an element in his canvassing, became an agent of the respondent, and treated extenagent of the respondent, and treated exten-sively, as was his common practice, during the election. The respondent was aware of D.'s practices, and once, in the early part of the canvass, cautioned D. as to his treating, but never repudiated him as his agent :-Held, on the evidence, that, as D. did no more in the way of treating during the election than he had done on former occasions, and had em-ployed treating as he ordinarily did as his argument, and had not used it as a means of corruptly influencing the electors, he was not guilty of a corrupt practice. Semble, the treating proved in this case, if practised by one not theretofore given to such practice, would have been sufficient to have avoided the election. Observation on the law as it now stands, as holding out inducements to candidates to employ men who are habitual drinkers to canvass by systematic treating, and thus cause electioneering to depend upon popularity aroused by treating, rather than the merits of the candidates, or the measures they advocate. East Elgin (Dom.), H. E. C. 769.

During an election liquor was given to an elector who at the same time was asked to vote for a particular candidate:—Held, that this was corrupt treating under s. 86 of the Dominion Election Act, R. S. C. e. S. West Prince (Dom.), 27 S. C. R. 241.
See East Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 70; West Northumberland (Dom.), 10 S. C. R. (35; North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1; London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

By Candidate, |—About an hour after a meeting of a few friends of the respondent at a tavern, one of their number was sent some distance to buy oysters for their own refreshment, of which the parties and others partook. The following day a friend of the respondent treated at a tavern, and not having change, the respondent gave him twenty-five cents to pay for the treat:—Held, not to be corrupt treating, nor a violation of 36 Vict. c. 2, s. 2 (O.) Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 187.

The treating of persons by the candidate at a tavern during his canvass:—Held, under the evidence, not to be a treating of electors with corrupt motives. London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

Semble, where treating is done by a candidate in order to make himself a reputation for good fellowship and hospitality, and thereby to influence electors to vote for him, it is a species of bribery which would avoid his election at common law. When the respondent, who, in the course of his business as a drover, had been in the habit of treating at taverts, treated during his canvass, but to a less extent than was his habit, and not apparently for the purpose of ingratiating himself with the electors:—Held, under the circumstances, that such treating was not corrupt, and his election was not avoided. North Middlesex (Prov.), H. E. C. 376.

A respondent during his canwass and on the same evening that a public meeting was held for the purposes of promoting the election reacted a number of persons, many of whom were voters collected in a barroom. It was shown that it was not the respondent's gental that to treat, and all persons were invited to drink, and that he had not treated more than twice or perhaps three times during the canwass:—Held, not a corrupt practice, and that in view of the ordinary custom of treating in the country it might be regarded more as an expression of good feeling to those who were supporting him. North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1.

The undisputed evidence shewed that the respondent from the time of his nomination as the candidate of his party frequently treated the electors and others in the barrooms of hotels whilst engaged in his canvass. He was not a man whose ordinary habit it was to treat, nor one who, in the course of his ordinary occupation, frequented barrooms:—Held, that the trial Judges properly drew the inference that the treating was done with corrupt intent, so as to avoid the election of the respondent. Remarks on the amendment to the Election Act, in respect to "the habit of treating," by 58 Vict. c. 4, s. 21 (O.) West Wellington (Prox.), 2, E. C. 16.

By Other Persons, |—The giving of free dinners to a number of electors who had come a long distance in severe winter weather, in the absence of evidence that it was done for the purpose of influencing the election either by voting or not voting, or that such electors voted:—Held, not a corrupt act. North Victoria (Dom.), II. E. C. 671.

Certain voters met at a tavern on polling day, and one B, said he did not know how to mark his ballot. One of the voters, after shewing B, how to mark his ballot, according to the candidate he desired to vote for, treated:—Held, that the treating was not a violation of s, 94 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, nor a corrupt practice under s, 98 of the Act. North Ontario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785. See North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

Selling Liquor or Treating on Polling Day.]—The distribution of spirituous liquors on the polling day with the object of promoting the election of a candidate, will make his election void. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

The violation of s, 66 of 32 Vict. c, 21 (giving or selling liquor at taverns on polling day) is not a corrupt practice within the meaning of the Ontario Controverted Elections Act, 1871, or the Election Act of 1868, unless committed in order to influence voters at the election complained of. North York (Prov.), H. E. C. 62.

H. and B. voted for respondent. H. kept a saloon, which was closed on the polling day; but upstairs, in his private residence, he gave beer and whisky without charge to several of his friends, among whom were friends of both candidates. B., who had no license to sell liquor, sold it at a place near one of the polls to all persons indifferently. This was not done by H. or B. in the interest of either candidate, or to influence the election, B. acting simply for the purpose of gain; and the candidates did not know of or sanction the proceedings:—Held (though with some doubt as to B.), that neither H. nor B. had committed any corrupt practice within 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 47 (O.), and therefore had not forfeited their votes; for they had not been guilty of bribery or undue influence, and their acts, if illegal and prohibited, were not done "in reference to" the election, which, under 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 47, is requisite in order to avoid a vote. Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 139.

Section 66 of 32 Vict, c. 21 (Ontario Election Law of 1868) provides that "no spirituous or fermented liquors or drinks shall be sold or given to any person" during the day appointed for polling in the wards or numicipalities in which the polls are held; and by 36 Vict, c. 2, s. 1, "corrupt practice" means "any violation of s. 66 of the Election Law of 1863 during the hours appointed for polling;" and by s. 3 of the latter Act any corrupt practice "committed by any candidate at an election, or by his agent, whether without the actual knowledge or consent of the candidate," avoids the election. On the day of the election in question, and during the hours appointed for polling, one Mosea of general election in question, and during the hours appointed for polling, one Mosea of general election in question, and the proposition of the purpose of the proposition of the proposition of the purposition of the proposition of the proposition

One F., a tavern-keeper, was given $5 by the respondent, and requested to appoint a scrutineer to act for the respondent at the poll on polling day. F. kept his tavern open on polling day, and various persons treated there during polling hours. Counsel for the respondent, after the evidence of the above facts had been given, admitted that F. was an agent of the respondent, and that his acts were sufficient to avoid the election:—Held, that, although the court did not adjudicate that the respondent, by giving the $5 and requesting F. to appoint a scrutineer, had constituted him an agent for all purposes, it was the practice of the court to take the admission of counsel in place of proof of agency, and therefore the admission of counsels as to F/s agency was sufficient. Held, further, that F, as such agent, had been guilty of a corrupt practice in keeping his tuvern open on polling day, and that such corrupt practice avoided the election. Russell (Prov.), H. E. C. 199.

Where a member of the respondent's committee, on the day of election, invited some of his friends to his house, which was opposite the polling booth, and gave them beer, &c., during or soon after polling hours:—Held, not a contravention of 32 Vict. c. 21, s. 66. London (Prov.), H. E. C. 214.

On the day of election and during the hours of polling, one W., an agent of the respondent, was offered a treat in a tavern within one of the polling divisions, of which such agent and others then partook:—Held, that giving a treat in a tavern during polling hours was a corrupt practice, and being an act participated in by an agent of the respondent, the election was avoided. South Essex (Prov.), H. E. C. 235.

One B. was appointed, in writing, by the respondent to act as his agent for polling day, During the day he went to a tavern and asked for and was given a glass of beer:—Held, that B. treated himself, and neither gave nor sold, and was not therefore guilty of a corrupt practice. East Peterborough (Prov.), H, E. C. 245.

One M., an agent of the respondent, treated at a tavern during polling hours on polling day. The evidence was, that decanters were put down, and people helped themselves, but there was no evidence that spirituous liquors were used. The evidence was objected to at the time, as the charge was not mentioned in the particulars, but admitted subject to the objection: — Held, that the nature of the treat in the barroom of a country tavern raised the presumption that the treat was of spirituous liquors, and was a corrupt practice, which avoided the election. 2. That had an application been made in regular form to add a particular embracing the charge, it would have been granted. North Victoria (Prox.), H. E. C. 282.

The decision in the Lincoln Election Case, H. E. C. 391, that tavern-keepers alone are liable for the violation of 32 Vict. c. 24 8. 66 (O.), as amended by 32 Vict. c. 24 8. 66 (O.), as amended by 32 Vict. c. 24 8. 10 tapproved of. On the colling day and during the hours of points the respondent drove up to a target of the colling day and during the hours of points the respondent drove in the committee, and addressing him or the assembled people, said, "Boys, this is the first time I came to C. when I dare not treat, and some one will have to treat me." S. replied that he would treat, and, with the respondent and a number of persons, variously estimated at from thirty to fifty, went into the tavern, where S. treated some of the people, and the respondent drank with the rest:—Held, that going into the tavern for the purposes of the treat, when the law directed that such tavern should be kept closed, and joining in and accorpting such treat, was a literal as well as a substantial violation of the law, and a corrupt practice; that the concurrence of the respondent in the commission of such corrupt practice made him liable to the disqualification imposed by the statute for "a corrupt practice committed with the actual knowledge and consent of a candidate." North Wentworth (Prov.), II. E. C. 343.

The respondent, during polling hours on the polling day, met one P., a supporter of the opposing candidate, and told him he would like a drink; and both of them, not thinking it illegal, went to a taxern, and the bar being closed, P. treated the respondent in the hall of the taxern:—Hold, that the receiving of a treat by the respondent during the hours of polling, was a corrupt practice and avoided the election. Semble, that as to the seller or giver of the treat, the only person liable to the penalty of $100 would be the taxern-keeper, as the statute does not authorize two penalties for the same act. North Grey (Prox.), H. E. C. 362.

One L., an alleged agent of the respondent, went into the tavern of one D. during polling hours on polling day, and purchased spirituous liquor, with which he treated himself and several persons there present:—Held, per Gwynne, J., at the trial, that the penalties provided by s. 66 of the Election Act of 1808 (O.) apply only to the taven-keeper, who as such is able to control what is done on his own premises in violation of the Act, and that the treating by L. was not a corrupt practice. Per Draper, C.J.,—(1) That s. 66 must be construed distributively. (2) That under the first part of the section the tavern-keeper is the only person who can incur the penalty for not keeping his tavern closed during the prescribed time. (3) That under the second part of the section the persons who incur the penalty are (a) the tavern-keeper who sells liquor in violation of the statute, and (b) the purchaser who gives the liquor purchased by him to persons in the tavern. Lincoln (Proc.), H. E. C. 391.

One B. was a member of the committee at W. for the respondent's election, canvassed for him, and met him at the committee rooms once or twice. B, was also appointed in writing by the respondent to act as scrutineer for him on the polling day, and during polling hours gave whisky to the deputy returning officer in the polling booth:—Held, that B., while acting as such scrutineer, was not acting in his former capacity as committee man or agent of the respondent, and that his appointment as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as crutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his to do an as scrutineer did not empower his down to the scrutineer did not empower his down to the scrutineer did not empower his down to the scrutineer did not empower his down to be dependent of a tavern at W. and partook therein of spirituous or fermented liquor, for which he did not then pay—Held, that he did not "sell or give" spirituous liquors within the meaning of s, 68 of the Ontario Election Law of 1808. South Ontario (Prox.), H. E. C. 420.

Held, by the court of appeal that s, 66 of the Ontario Election Law of 1868, 32 Vict. c. 21, as amended by 36 Vict. c. 2, applies only to shop, hotel, and tavern-keepers, who alone are liable to the penalties for keeping open the tavern. &c., and for selling or giving spirituous liquors during the prohibited hours. Held, by the court of appeal, that the prohibition in such section (66) as to opening taverns and giving or selling liquor "in the municipalities in which the polls are held," applies to all the municipalities within the constituency, irrespective of the place where the vote is given, or to be given. South Outario (Pror.), H. E. C. 420.

By 39 Vict. c. 10, s. 3, (O.), which is substituted for s. 66 of the Election Law of 1868, tavert-keepers or persons acting in that enpacity for the time, who sell or give liquor at toverns on polling day and within the hours of polling, are guilty of corrupt practices; but persons who treat or are treated at such taxens are not affected by the statute. Ford's Vote, Lincoln (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 500.

Held, upon the evidence, that one Peters was properly held not to have been an agent of the petitioner; and that the dinner given by him to forty electors at a distant polling place in the winter, where there was no inn, was not shewn to have been corruptly given or accepted, nor was there sufficient evidence that these persons all voted at the election, Morth Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 671, 37 U. C. R. 234.

One M. canvassed a voter on polling day, and urged him to vote for the respondent, and while canvassing treated the voter four times; the voter then went and voted:—Held, that the treating was for the purpose of corruptly influencing the voter to vote or refrain from voting at the election. A scrutineer for the respondent had some whisky with him on polling day, and treated the deputy returning officer, poll clerk, and another in the polling station:—Held, not a corrupt practice. North Onlario (Dom.), H. E. C. 785.

S., being an agent of the respondent, on the election day brought some whisky to a blacksmith shop near a poll, being a place where the neighbours were in the habit of comergating to warm themselves, &c., there being no tavern or public house in the neighbourhood, and treated those present (most of them being voters) without reference to their voting, and without distinction as to which side they supported;—Held, not a corrupt practice. Lennos (Prov.), 1 E. C. 41.

Section 157 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10 forbils the selling or giving of liquor at any time during the polling day, under a penalty of fine or impresoment, and the same Act provides that any violation of that section the same action of the section during the polling, is a compared to the section during the polling hours by an agent of the candidate, must be conclusively presumed to have been intended corruptly to influence the election. Prescott (Prov.), 1

It appeared in the evidence that at the phase of polling the respondent's firm had a house in connection with their mills, where their workmen were boarded and where the respondent himself had rooms. A short time before the election Mrs. B., who had formerly been housekeeper of the house, had become tenant of it, or was allowed to occupy it, and Vol. III. b—157—8 have the use of the furniture, and was paid a certain sun per week or month for each man boarding there, and a sum per day for casual boarders, and she was in this position at the time of the election. On polling day H., a nephew and partner of the respondent, who spent the day at the polling place, told voters that if they went to the said boarding-house they could warm themselves and would find dinner if they wished it, and meat and drink was accordingly caused to be given to the voters at the boarding-house by H., who was clearly the respondent's agent throughout:—Held, at the trial, that the voters having come to the place for the purpose of voting, and that being their errand there, and the election being the occasion on which the provision was made and the hospitality extended to them, the act in question was done on account of each man so entertained "having voted or being about to vote," and, inasmuch as it was impossible to say that the result may not have been affected by the above ofter of hospitality (R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 159), the election would have been void by reason thereof under s, 158, had the matter been properly charged in the petition. Held, however, that the evidence did not shew that the corrupt act was committed with the actual knowledge and consent of the respondent, and therefore he had not incurred the penal consequences of K. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 1611. West Simcor (Prov.), 1 E. C. 128.

Two agents of the respondent went for a voter, having a flask of brandy in their conveyance. The voter having said he was unwell was asked if he would have a drink, which the trial Judges held meant a drink from the flask, and which he declined:—Held, that this offer did not fall within the provision of s. 155, R. S. O. 1887 c. 9, as there was no "giving or causing to be given," Held, also, that it did not come within s. 151 (a), a drink not being a valuable consideration. Hamilton (Proc.), 1 E, C. 499.

(1) Undue Influence.

A candidate's appeal to his business, or to his employment of capital in promoting the presperity of a constituency, if honestly made, is not prohibited by law. West Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 274.

One B, claimed the right to vote in respect of his wife's property, and was told by W., an agent of the respondent, that he could not vote unless he could swear the property was his own. The voter's oath was read to him, and the agent repeated his statement, and said he would look after the voter if he took the oath. The voter appeared to be doubtful of his right to vote, and withdrew:—Held, that the agent was not guilty of undue influence. Quere, whether the act of the agent as above set out was undue influence under 32 Viet. c. 21, s. 72. Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283.

The respondent stated at a public meeting of the electors with reference to an alleged local grievance, that he understood it to be the constitutional practice, here and in England, for the ministry to dispense as far as practicable the patronage of the constituency on the recommendation of the person who contested the constituency on the government would have the patronage in respect of appropriations and appointments, whether elected or not:—Held, that the respondent by such words did not offer or promise directly or indirectly any place or employment, to or for any voter, or any other person, to induce such voter to vote or refrain from voting. 2. That the respondent was not guilty of under influence as defined by s. 72 of the Ontario Election Act, 1808, nor as recognized by the common law of the Parliament of England. 3. That to sustain such a general charge of undue influence, it would be necessary to prove that the intimidation was so general and extensive in its operation that the freedom of election had censed in consequence. Muskoka (Prov.), H. E. C. 458.

Observations on the impropriety of division court bailiffs canvassing voters during an election. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 612.

Two agents of the respondent gave a voter M, some whisky on nolling day, and took him in a boat to an island, where they stayed for some time. One of the agents then left, and the other sent M, to another part of the island for their coats. During M's absence the latter agent left the island with the boat, but M, got back in time to vote, being sput for by the opposite party:—Held, that the two agents were guilty of undue influence. North Ontario (Dom.), H, E, C, 785.

The election of a member for the House of Commons guilty of clerical undue induence by his agents is void. Sermons and threats by certain parish priests of the county of Charlevoix amounted in this case to acts of undue influence, and were in contravention of s. 35 of the Dominion Election Act, 1874. Charlevoix (Dom.), 1 S. C. R. 145.

See North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

(m) Wagering or Betting.

Where in addition to other corrupt acts, bets were made by agents of the respondent and others, with a number of voters who were supporters of N., the opposing candidate, the effect of the bets being that in order to win the bets, the voters must vote for the respondent.—Held, that these bets were for the purpose of getting votes for the respondent, and were corrupt practices, and that in connection with the other corrupt acts proved, they affected the result of the election; and that the election was therefore avoided. Lincoln Election (2) (Prov.), I.E. E. C. 489.

Money was given to certain voters to make bets with others on the result of the election, but, as there was no evidence of a previous understanding as to the votes, such bets were not bribery. The practice of making bets on an election condemned as like a device to commit bribery. South Norfolk (Dom.), H. E. C. 660,

One Pringle, an acknowledged agent of the respondent and the president of the Conservative association, whose candidate the respondent was, made a bet of $5 with one Parker, a Liberal, that he would vote against the Conservative party, and deposited with the stakeholder the $5, which, after the election, was paid over to Parker. defection was paid over to Parker. depending the tendent of the t

Three persons, T. being one of them, each lent $10 to R. La, knowing that the moneys so lent were intended to be used by him, as he then told them, in betting on the result of the election. Any bet or bets which he made were to be his own bets, not theirs, and he was to return the money in a couple of days. He did not succeed in getting anyone to bet with him, and he returned the money to each on the following day:—Held, that this was providing money to be used by another in betting upon the election, and was a corrupt practice within the meaning of s. 164 (2) of the Election Act. East Elgin (Prov.), 2 E. C. 100.

(n) Other Corrupt Practices.

Appointment of Agent — Place of Variance of Agent — Place of Variance — The appointment of a voter as an agent so as to allow him to vote in a division other than his own, and near where he was employed, is not a corrupt practice. North Onterio (Prov.), I E. C. 1.

Employment — Casual or Indefinite.] — Quare, whether the word "employment" used in the bribery clauses of 32 Vict. c. 21 (O.), refers to an indefinite hiring, or would include a mere casual hiring. West Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 274.

Promise by Candidate to Procure— Finding of Trial Judges.]—On a charge by the petitioner that the appellant had been guilty personally of a corrupt practice by promising to a voter, W., to endeavour to procure him a situation in order to induce him to vote, and that such promise was subsequently carried into effect, the trial Judges held on the evidence that the charge had been proved. The promise was charged as having proven made in the township of Thorold on the 28th February, 1891. At the trial it was reoved that W. some time before the trial made a declaration upon which the charge was based, at the instance of the solicitor for the petitioner, and had got for such declaration employment in Montreal from a railway company until the trial took place, and W. swore that the promise had been made on the 17th February. G., the appellant, although denying the charge, admitted in his examination that he intimated to W. that he would assist him, and there was evidence that after the election G. wrote to W. and did endeavour to procure him the situation, but the letters were not put in evidence, having been destroyed by W. at the request of the appellant—Hield, that, as the evidence of W. was in part corroborated by the evidence of the appellant, the conclusion arrived at by the trial Judges was not wrong, still less so entirely erroneous as to justify the court as an appellant tribunal in reversing it on the questions of fact involved. Welland (Dom.).

Evasion of Oath — Scheme—Scrutineer—Costa,]—One T., who was on the roll as an elector, and had sold his property in June, 1874, before the final revision of the assessment roll by the county Judge, was, with the knowledge of the respondent—who was aware a doubt existed as to T.'s right to vote—given an appointment to act as scrutineer at a distant polling place, and also a certificate from the returning officer under 38 Vict. c. 3, s. 28 (O.), to emble T. to vote at the place where he was to act as such scrutineer, at which place T. voted without taking the voter's outlis, and returned without entering upon the duties of scrutineer. On a question of law reserved on the above facts for the court of appeal:—Held, that the act complained of was not a corrupt practice under the statute; but, under the circumstances, the court gave the respondent no costs in appeal. West Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 274.

Holding Meetings at Taverns.]— Meetings for promoting the respondent's election were held at public houses with the object of inducing the owners to support the respondent at the election, and because the westler was cold and meetings could not be held in the open air. No evidence was given by the petitioner that equally convenient places, and such as were more proper to be used for that purpose, could be obtained:—
Held, that, as the respondent and his friends had a legitimate motive for holding their meetings at such houses, although their other motives might not be legitimate, no corrupt act had been committed. Kingston (Dom.), II. E. C. 625.

Inducing Aliens to Vote—Paid Agents Voting—Amendment—Saving Clause.]—A number (300) of forms of oaths of residence and allegiance were printed and paid for by the association supporting the respondent as part of the election expenses, and some of the respondent's agents actively canvassed a number of foreigners, who were aliens; and by getting them to swear to these affidavits, and by conversations induced them to believe that they were thus naturalized, and had the right to vote, and several of them did vote.
The evidence did not shew how many were sworn, but 255 unused forms were produced, and the remaining sixty-five were not accounted for:—Held, that the procuring of the affidavits just before the polling day, when the agents knew that no court would sit in time to complete the naturalization proceedings by that day, was a plan, design, or scheme to in-duce aliens to vote for the respondent; that the knowledge, referred to in s. 160 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 9, is not a knowledge of the statute, but a knowledge of the facts disentitling the person to vote; that, although that seccontains a penalty of $100, still partly penal and partly remedial; that in enforcing the penalty, the person against whom it is inflicted is the only person con-cerned, and it should be strictly construed; but in ascertaining whether a corrupt pracbut in ascertaining whether a corrupt prac-tice has been committed the whole consti-tuency has concern, and only the remedial part of the section is invoked; that on the evidence an agent had the knowledge that one of the aliens had no right to vote at the time induced him to vote. Before the trial notice was given that if the evidence failed to shew money received by the persons named in charge No. 8 for the purpose of influencing voters as therein stated, an appli-cation for an amendment would be made substituting a charge under paragraphs Nos. 11 and 13 of the petition, that those persons were paid for their services, and so were guilty of paid for their services, and so were guilty of corrupt practices in voting for the respon-dent, knowing that they had no right to vote: —Held, that two agents of the respondent who were paid for their services, knowing the facts and being presumed to have known the law, were each guilty of a corrupt prac-tice when they voted for him; and that the amendment as to them should be allowed as it was really giving particulars under para-graph 13 of the petition, and could be made without any amendment of the petition, and that the evidence sustained it, and as notice had been given the respondent was not prejudiced. Held, that the acts of the two paid agents in voting, had they stood alone, not being part of any comprehensive scheme, the court would have hesitated before deciding that they did not fall within s. 163, in which case the election would not have been which case the election would not have been avoided; but, following the East Simcoe Case, 1 E. C. 291, that the inducing the aliens to vote was an overt act, part of an arranged system of operations, and was such a corrupt practice as could not be considered "of such triding nature," or "of such triding extent," that the result could not be supposed to be affected by it Had the corrections. affected by it. Had the corrupt practice in-dicated above not been sufficient of itself to avoid the election, the two other corrupt practices proved, together with certain other other corrupt illegal practices committed by a person not an agent of the respondent, the evidence as to which was uncontradicted, would sufficed. Hamilton (Prov.), 1 E. C. 499.

Inducing Voter to Take False Oath.]

—The insisting by a scrutineer upon the taking of the farmers' sons' oath T. by a hesitating voter whose vote is objected to and who is registered on the list as a farmer's son and not as owner, when, as a matter of fact, the voter's father had died previous to the final revision of the list, leaving the son owner of the property, is a wilful inducing or endeavouring to induce the voter to take a false oath so as to amount to a corrupt practice within ss. 90 and 91 of R. S. C. c. 8, and such corrupt practice will avoid the election under s. 93. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 with Franchise Interference Voters — Scheme — Deputy Returning Officer.]—In an election petition it was charged that the respondent personally, as well as acting by C. A. C., D. F., and others, his agents, did undertake and conspire to impede, prevent, and otherwise interfere with the free exercise of the franchise of certain the free exercise of the franchise of certain voters, and that, in furtherance of a premedi-tated scheme, which the respondent and his agents well knew to be illegal, they did, in agents well knew to be inegal, they did, in fact so impede, prevent, and interfere with the exercise of the franchise of certain voters, by getting their ballots marked, rendered identifiable, and consequently void, whereby the franchise of these voters was unjustifiably interfered with. At a previous election the respondent had been defeated by a majority of three votes, and the election, having been contested, was set aside, and certain voters were reported by the Judge as having been guilty of corrupt practices, but had not been found guilty of such corrupt practices under 8. 104 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874. At a public meeting before the election, C. A. C., the respondent's agent, to intimidate these persons and prevent them from voting, in a speech made by him, threatened them with punishment if they voted; and, subsequently, printed notices to the same effect were sent to these voters. On the polling day D. P., who had been appointed deputy returning who had been appointed deplay returning officer, on the distinct understanding with, and promise made to, the returning officer that he would not mark the hallots of these voters, consulted with C. A. C., and on his advice and in collusion with him, marked the ballots of certain of these voters:—Held, that the election was void by reason of the attempted intimidation practised by C A and by reason also of the conspiracy between the said agent and the deputy returning officer to interfere with the free exercise of the franchise of voters, violations of s. 95 of the chise of voters, violations of s. 35 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, and corrupt practices under s. 98 of the said Act. Voting without Right - Knowledge.] -Actual knowledge on the part of a voter that he has no right to vote is necessary to constitute a corrupt practice under R. S. O. 1887 c. 9, s. 160. Evidence to establish agency discussed and found insufficient. South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 30.

It was charged that a person had voted at the election, knowing that he had no right to vote, by reason of his not being a resident of the electoral district. He knew that his name was on the voters' list, and that it had been maintained there by the county Judge, notwithstanding an appeal, and he believed that he had, and did not know that he had not, a right to vote:—Held, that a corrupt not, a right to vote:—Held, that a corrula practice under s. 168 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, was not established. Under that section the existence of the mala meas on the part of the vote, "knowing that he has no right to vote," not merely his knowledge of facts upon the legal construction of which that right depends, must be proved. The offence does not depend upon his having taken the oath; it may be proved apart from that; nor does the fact that he has taken the oath, even if it be shewn in point of law to be untrue, necessarily prove that the offence has been committed. Haldimand Case, 1 E. C. 529, distinguished. East Elgin (Prov.), 2

4. Candidates.

Disqualification.]-See post 5 (a).

Nomination — Defect in Nomination Paper — Duty of Returning Officer.] — The Paper — Buty of Returning Officer.]—The nomination paper of B., one of the candidates at the election complained of, was signed by twenty-five persons, and had the affidavit of the attesting witness duly sworn to as required by the statute. The election clerk found that one of the twenty-five persons was not entered on the voters' list, and thereupon the returning officer and election clerk compared the names on the nomination paper with the certified voters' lists in his possession, and on finding that only twenty-four of the persons who had so signed were duly qualified electors, he rejected B.'s nomination paper, and returned the respondent as mem elect :- Held, (1) that, as the policy of the law is to have no scrutiny, or as little as possible, in election cases, and to give the people a full voice in choosing their representatives, the defect in the nomination paper was one to which the returning officer should not have yielded. (2) That if the election had gone on, the defect in the nomination paper would not, according to 37 Vict. c. 9, s. 80, have affected the result of the election. Semble, that the returning officer is both a Seantle, that the returning officer is both a ministerial and a judicial officer; and that he might decline to receive the nomination of persons disgualified by status or office, and also nomination papers signed by unqualified persons if he had good reasons for so doing. South Renfrew (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 705.

Meeting — Statutory Requirements -Time.]—Under s. 33 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, the returning officer is to fix the place and time of nomination, such time to be between eleven a.m. and two p.m. of the day fixed therefor. The returning officer, who lived at B., owing to inevitable accident arising from the train being blocked with snow did not reach O., the place of nomination, till two p.m. and the hustings until ten minutes afterwards. The two candidates who contested the constituency were then nominated in the presence of a large number of electors, including the petitioner, who made no protest. It did not appear that any injury had been caused thereby. Per Boyd, C.—The require-ment was merely directory or regulative; noncompliance therewith might or not be fatal, and so avoid the election, according to circumstances: and, as no one was prejudiced, it could have no fatal effect. In any event the petitioner, under the circumstances, was estopped from raising the objection; and semble, he was also precluded from raising semble, he was also precluded from raising the objection by reason of, as it appeared, his claiming the seat for the defeated candidate, thus ratifying and adopting what was done at the election. Per Cameron, J.—The requirement was imperative, and noncompliance therewith avoided the election; and the petitioner was not estopped from raising the objection. On appeal to the court of appeal, the judgment proceeded on another ground. Per Burton, J.A.—The point was covered by s. 48 of 47 Vict. c. 4 (O.) Per Patterson, J.A.—Quere, whether s. 48 was intended to apply to this point, this being a matter specially dealt with by s. 15 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10. East Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

the meeting of Electors.]—Held, that the meeting of the electors at the nomination of candidates is a meeting "for the purpose of promoting the election of a candidate," within the meaning of 36 Vict. c. 2, s. 2 (O.) Aurth Middleser (Dom.), H. E. C. 376.

Property Qualification of Candidates, —Held, as in the North Victoria case, II. E. C. 584, that the Dominion Election Act of 1874 not being retrospective, the question of property qualification of candidates at elections for members of the House of Commons bedd before the passing of the Dominion Elections Act of 1873 could still be raised in pending cases. 2. That it is not necessary for an elector, demanding the property qualification of a candidate, to tender the necessary declaration for the candidate to make, the intention of the statute being that the candidate must himself prepare the declaration. 3. That if the property qualification of a candidate be properly demanded at the right time, the demand must be compiled with; and it is not sufficient, after the return of a candidate is contested, for him to shew that at the time of his election or return he was duly qualified. Carducell Chem.). 5. Disqualification of Candidates and Others.

(a) Of Candidates,

Currupt Acts of Agents—Expenditure of Money—Knowledge or Complicity of Candidate.]—When all the accounts and records of an election are intentionally destroyed by the respondent's agent, even if the case be stripped of all other circumstances, the strongest conclusions will be drawn against the respondent, and every presumption will be made against the legality of the acts concented by such conduct. South Grey (Prov.), II. E. C. 52.

The respondent intrusted about $700 to an agent for election purposes without having smercised the expenditure:—Held, that this lat the same should be smercised the part within 24 vict. c. 3, 46 (O.), to every illegal application of the money by the agent, or by those who received money from him. But, if a very excessive sum had been so intrusted to the agent, the argument of a corrupt purpose might have been reasonable. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

A candidate in good faith intended that his election should be conducted in accordance both with the letter and spirit of the law; and he subscribed and paid no money, except for printing. Money, however, was given for election purposes, by friends of the candidate to different persons, who kept no account of vouchers of what they paid:—Held, that bribery would not be inferred as against the candidate. A total expenditure of $840, where the number of voters on the roll was $4,609, was not excessive. East Toronto (Proc.), II. E. C. 70.

Appeal from the judgment of the trial Judge, avoiding the election and disqualifying the respondent. His decision was sustained as to the compileity of the respondent in the "Stewart case," the particulars of which are set out in the report; but otherwise as to the "Sunday raid," his knowledge and consent to the corrupt acts of his agents being held not proven, the circumstances not being inconsistent with his innocence. The question discussed as to how far or when a candidate is to be assumed to be aware of and impliedly consenting to corrupt acts done by his agents, of which in the natural course of things he can scarcely be ignorant, or of which he wilfully avoids any knowledge. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 391.

Held, that the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to shew that corrupt practices were committed by the agents of the respondent, and with his knowledge and consent, notwithstanding his disclaimer on oath. It is sufficient to shew the candidate's knowledge of and assent to the fact that his agents were using bribery to procure his election, without connecting him with any particular act of bribery; and his assent must be assumed from his non-interference or objection when he has the opportunity. Semble, that wilful intentional ignorance is the same as actual knowledge. London (Dom.), 24 C. P. 434, H. E. C. 560.

The respondent, in a constituency where 642 persons voted, received 336 votes, and his election expenses were about $2.000. The money was intrusted by him to one G., with a caution to see that it was used for lawful purposes only. About $1.200 of this money was given by G. to one W., who distributed it to several persons in sums of $40, $100, $200, and $250. No instructions as to expenditure were given by G. to W., or by W. to the persons amongst whom he distributed the money; and by the latter several acts of bribery were committed. The respondent publicly and privately disclaimed any intention of sanctioning any illegal expenditure; but made in intries after the election as eck or two before the election trial. He denied any act of bribery, direct or indirect, or any knowledge thereof; and no proof was given of a personal knowledge on his part of any of the specific wrongful acts or payments proved to have been committed by persons amongst whom his money had been distributed:—Held, that under the peculiar circumstances of the respondent's canvass, and on a review of the whole evidence, the respondent's emphatic denial of any corrupt motive or intention should be accepted. Niagara (Dom.), H. E. C. 568.

Money had been contributed by the respondent and by his friends for the purposes of the election, which had been placed in the hands of one C, a personal and political friend of respondent, who gave it without any instructions or warnings to such committee men as applied for it. A great deal of the money was spent in corrupt purposes, in bribery, and in treating, to the extent of avoiding the election. The respondent in his evidence started that he did not, directly or indirectly, authorize or approve of or sanction the expenditure of any money for bribery, or a promise of any for such purpose, nor did he sanction or authorize the keeping of any open house, and that he was not aware that any open houses had been kept, and that he always impressed on everybody that they must not violate the law. There was no affirmative evidence to shew that the money which the respondent knew had been raised for the purposes of the election was so large that as a reasonable man he must have known that some portion of it would be used for corrupt purposes:—Held, that looking at the whole case, and at this branch of it, as a penal proceeding, the respondent should not be held personally responsible for the corrupt practices of his agents. The avoidance of an election for an act of bribery committed by the agent of a candidate is a civil proceeding, and is not brought about to punish the eardidate, but to secure an unbiassed election. Kingston (Dom.), H. E. C. 625.

A candidate is not disqualified by the corrupt acts of his agents, under 36 Vict. c. 27, s. 18 (D.), without his knowledge or consent. Cornucall (Dom.), 11 C. L. J. S1, H. E. C. 647.

It appearing that a number of persons visited the district, and that the object of their visit was to influence the electors by corrupt means, and that there was an organized and systematized plan to employ corrupt means to influence and carry the election in various ways, and that the trial Judges were that such practices were likely to be committed by persons acting in his behalf in the conduct of the election, and found that corrupt practices prevailed at the election, and declined to relieve the respondent under s. 162, of the penalties incurred by him under s. 162, of the penalties incurred by him under s. 162, of the penalties incurred by him under s. 162, of the penalties incurred by him under s. 161, the court of appeal now declined to interfere. Per Hagarty, C. J. O.—When a corrupt practice is proved, the onus is at once shifted to the respondent to bring himself within the saving clause, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 162. Prescott, I. E. C. 88, followed. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Prov.), I. E. C. 197.

Corrupt Acts of Agents at Former Election—Knowledge or Connent, 1—An election was held in January, 1874, under the Act of 1873, at which the petitioner and the respondent were candidates, and at which the respondent was elected. This election was avoided on the ground of corrupt practices by a knowledge or consent (H. E. C. 547). A new election was held, under the Act of 1874, at which the petitioner and the respondent were again candidates, when the respondent was again elected. Thereupon another petition was presented, charging that the respondent was again elected. Thereupon another petition was presented, charging that the respondent was again elected. Thereupotices at this last election; that he was ineligible by reason of the corrupt practices at this last election; that he was ineligible by reason of the corrupt acts of his agents at the former election; that persons reported guilty of corrupt practices at the former election trial had improperly voted at the last election; and claiming the seat for the petitioner:—Held, on preliminary objections, (1) that the two elections were one in law; and it was not material that they had been held under different Acts of Parliament. (2) That the respondent was not ineligible for re-election, as the corrupt practices of his agents at the former election had been committed without his knowledge or consent. Cornwall (2) (Dom.), II. E. C. 647. But see R. S. C. c. 8, 8, 9.5.

Corrupt Acts — Defeated Candidate.] — The 2nd subsection of s. 3 of 36 Vict. e. 2 (O.) applies equally to the elected and defeated candidates at an election; and, if found assenting parties to any practice declared by the statute to be corrupt, each of them is liable to the disqualifications mentioned in the statute. North Weathcorth (Prov.), H. E. C. 343.

Proof of Offence—Conflict of Evidence.]—Refore subjecting a candidate to the penalty of disqualification, the Judge should feel well assured, beyond all possibilities of the conflict of the state of the penalty of the penalty of the state of the state

The respondent was charged with corrupt practices, in that, when canvassing one C, a voter who said he would not vote unless he was paid, respondent said he was not in a position to pay him anything, but that if C, would support him, one of his (the respondent is friends would come and see about it. The respondent, as he was leaving the voter's house, met one K, a supporter, who, after some conversation, went into C, s house and gave him $5 to vote for the respondent. The charge depended upon the evidence of the voter C and his wife. The respondent denied making such a promise; and he was sustained by K, as to a conversation outside C,'s house, in which the respondent cautioned K, not to give or promise C, any money. The trial Judge on the evidence found that the respondent was not personally implicated in the bribery of the voter C, by K. Before an election Judge finds a respondent or any other person guilty of a corrupt practice involving a personal disability, he ought to be free from reasonable doubt. Centre Wellington (Dom.)*, H. E. C. 579.

Proof of Offence—Evidence—Penal Proceeding.]—It is a general rule that no man can be treated as a criminal or mulet in penal actions for offences which he did not connive at; and it is settled law that enactments are not to be given a penal effect beyond the necessary import of the terms used. But the election laws are not to be so limitedly construed by an election Judge; and for civil purposes they are more comprehensive, and reach a candidate whose agents bribe in his behalf, with or without his authority. Where the disqualification of a candidate is sought, they are to be construed as any other penal statutes, and the candidate must be proved guilty by the same kind of evidence as applies to penal proceedings. Kingston (Dom.), H. E. C. 625.

Treating—Participation in—Habitual Conduct—Intent.]—After the nomination of the candidates in a rural constituency, and on another excasion after a meeting assembled "for the purpose of promoting the election of the purpose of promoting the circumstance of the purpose of the purpose of a treat:—Held, that this was not a contravention of 30 Vict. c. 2, s. 2 (O.), and that the respondent was not disqualified under s. 3, s.-s. 2, of the same Act. Treating per sea is not, except when made so by statute, a corrupt act, but the intent of the party treating may make it so, and this intent must be gathered from the circumstances attending it. Where, therefore, it was sought to disqualify a candidate who had treated during his cauriast, though to a much less extent than was his habit previously, and who did not seem to have treated for the purpose of ingratiating himself with the public:—Held, that such treating was not a corrupt act. North Middlesca (Dom.), 12 C. L. J. 14, H. E. C. 376. See Muskoba (Prov.), H. E. C. 458; Centre Wellington (Dom.), H. E. C. 579; North Ornario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 359; East Middlesca (Prov.), 1 E. Office or Contract—Carrying Mails.]—Held, that a member of the Ontario Legislature is not disqualified from holding his seat by reason of his having a contract for the conveyance of Her Majesty's mails. Centre Since (Prov.), 31 C. L. J. 68.

Dual Membership.]—By commission or instrument under the hand and seal of the Lieutemant-Governor of Prince Edward Island, one E. C. was constituted and appointed ferryman at and for a certain ferry for a term of three years, pursuant to the Acts relating to ferries, and it was by the commission provided that E. C. should be paid a subsidy of $95 for each year of said term. E. C. had given to the government a bond with two sureties for the performance of his contract. By articles of agreement between E. C. and S. F. P. (the respondent), E. C., for valuable consideration, assigned to S. F. P. one-fourth part or interest in the ferry contract, and it was agreed that one-fourth part of the net proceeds or profits of said contract should be paid over by the said E. C. to the said S. F. P. or his assigns. At the time the agreement was entered into S. F. P. was a member of the House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island, having been elected at the general election held on the 30th June, 1886. Subsequently S. F. P. was returned as a member elect for the House of Commons for the electoral district of Prince county, Prince Edward Island, and upon his return being convested:—Held, that by the agreement with E. C., S. F. P. became a person holding and enjoying, within the meaning of s. 4 of 39 Vict. c. 3 (Prince Edward Island), a contract or agreement with Her Majesty, which disqualified him and rendered him ineligible for election to the House of Assembly or to sit or vote in the same, and by s. 8 of the said Act, to be read with s. 4, his sent in the Assembly became vacated: and he was therefore eligible for election as a member of the House of Commons. Prince (Dom.), 14 S. C. R. 265.

—Notice of, to Electors.]—The respondent, a postmaster in the service of the Dominion of Canada, became a candidate att an election held on the 14th and 21st March. 18th, and was elected by the service of the 18th, and was elected by the postmaster, which was the postmaster which was the postmaster which was the postmaster which was the postmaster which was the pointed after the election. Evidence of the notoriety of the alleged disqualification of the respondent was given, which was that such alleged disqualification was a matter of talk, and that all the people at the meeting for the nomination of candidates were supposed to be aware of the supposed difficulty as to such disqualification:—Held, that, even if the respondent was disquallified for election, the Judge could not on such evidence declare that the electors voting for the respondent had voted perversely, and had therefore thrown away their votes, so as to entile the petitioner to claim the sent. West York (Prov.), H. E. C. 156.

At the nomination a protest was handed to the returning officer, signed by the defeated candidate and three electors, claiming that respondent was disqualified, and that the opposing candidate was entitled to the seat. Notice thereof was posted at some of the polls, and some electors were told of it:—Held, on the evidence, the trial Judges having refused to award the seat to the defeated candidate, that the court in appeal would not interfere. South Renfrew (Prov.), 1 E. C. 359.

Postmaster.]—Held, that a member of the Ontario Legislature is not disqualified from holding his seat by reason of his filling the office of postmaster with no permanent salary, for a place which is not a city or town, South Norfolk (Prov.), 31 C. L. J. 68.

(b) Of Others.

Forfeiture of Vote.]—The right to vote is not to be taken away or the vote forfeited by the act of the voter unless under a plain and express enactment, for it is a matter in which others besides the voter are interested. Brockville (Prov.), II. E. C. 139.

Report to Speaker — Effect of.]—Held, that the fact of persons having been reported by the Judge as guilty of corrupt practices at a former election, had not the effect of disqualifying them from voting at a second election. The report of the Judge is not as to them an adjudication, for voters are not, in a proper judicial sense, parties to the proceedings at an election trial. Cornucall (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 647.

Trial — Notice.] — Quære, whether the Judge presiding at the trial should not direct notice to be given to the parties who, from the evidence, were apparently guilty of corrupt practices, so that he might decide upon their liability to disqualification, and report them under the statute. Prescott (Prov.), H. E. G. 1.

The election having been declared void on account of the corrupt practices of an agent of the respondent, the Judges, acting as a court for the trial of illegal acts committed at the election, after notice to such agent, granted an order for the punishment of such agent by fine and disqualification. 6. Law and Statutes Governing Elections.

Common Law.] — The common law of England relating to parliamentary elections is in force in Ontario, and applies to elections for the House of Commons, Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 547.

Dominion Elections Act — Application to Pending Proceedings, 1 — The Dominion Elections Act of 1874 does not affect the rights of parties in pending proceedings, which must be decided according to the law as it existed before the passing of that Act; s. 20 of that Act referring to candidates at some future election. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

— Croice, 1.—The Grown is not bound yes, 100 and 122 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874. The 46th clause of s. 7 of the Interpretation Act, R. S. C. 1886 c. 1, whereby it is provided that no provision or enactment in any Act shall affect in any manner or way whatsoever the rights of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, unless it is expressly stated therein that Her Majesty shall be bound thereby, is not limited or qualified by any exception such as that mentioned in the Magdalen College case, 11 Rep. 70b, "that the King is impliedly bound by statutes passed for the general good . . . or to prevent fraud, injury, or wrong." The Queen v. Puliot, 2 Ex. C. R. 49.

Ontario Elections Act—Penalty.]—See Johnson v. Allen, 26 O. R. 550; Malcolm v. Race, 16 P. R. 330.

Quebec Elections Act—Promissory Note—Illegality,—In an action on a promissory note the evidence shewed that its proceeds were given to an election agent to be used as a portion of an election fund controlled by the maker:—Held, that the transaction was illegal under 38 Vict. c. 7, s. 296 (Q.), R. S. Q. Art. 425, which makes void any contract, promise, or understanding in any way relating to an election under that Act, and the plaintiff could not recover. Dansereau v. St. Louis, 18 S. C. R. 587.

7. Penalties-Actions for.

(a) Bribery.

Constitutional Law—Powers of Dominion Parliament — Imposition of Penalty.]—
The jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures over "property and civil rights" does not preclude the Parliament of Canada from giving to an informer the right to recover, by a civil action, a penalty imposed as a punishment for bribery at an election. The Dominion Election Act, 1874, by s. 100, provides that all penalties and forfeitures (other than fines in cases of misdemeanour) imposed by the Act shall be recoverable, with full costs of suit, by any person who will sue for the same, by nettion of debt or information, in any of Her Majesty's courts in the Province in which the cause of action arose, having competent jurisdiction:—Held, that the enactment was valid. Dople v. Bell, 11 A. R. 326, 32 C. P. 632.

Dismissal for Delay—Costs.]—The acts of bribery complained of were committed between the 13th and 23rd June, 1882. The writ was issued on the 12th June, 1883, and was served on the defendant on the 27th November thereafter. The defendant, on the 30th November, moved to dismiss the action for wilful delay in prosecution under 39 Vict. e. 9 (0.) The plaintiff's solicitor swore that he was also solicitor for the petitioner in the he was also solicitor for the petitioner in the Lennox election petition, at which election the acts of bribery complained of were alleged to have been committed, and in order not to endanger the success of that petition it was deemed advisable not to serve the writ until that petition was disposed of, which, on account of objections to the jurisdiction, was not tried till the 10th October, 1883. He also deposed that at the trial of the election petition an application was made for a summons against the defendant under 39 Vict. c. 9, to have the penalties for bribery imposed upon him; and that the application was not dis-posed of till the 23rd November, at which date the Judge declined to interfere :- Held, that such delay as would not expose an ordinary suit to dismissal may be fatal to an action under this Act, under the special provision that such an action shall be carried on without wilful delay. Held, also, that there had been wilful delay not to be excused by the explanations given, and that the plaintiff was entitled as of right to have the action perpetually stayed or dismissed. An order was made dismissing the action, but without costs, for the reason that a prima facie case of bribery was established against the defendant, which he had not attempted to contradict. Miles v. Roc. 10 P. R. 218.

Informer—Status—Infant.] — Held, that 18 Eliz. c. 5, which enacts that an informer shall sue either in person or by attorney, is in force in this Province, and therefore the plaintiff, an infant suing by his next friend, could not maintain an action for a penalty under the Election Act. The appellant having omitted to take this objection in the court below, the court of appeal, in allowing the appeal on that ground, refused him his costs of appeal. A person who sues for a penalty given by the Election Act is a common informer. Garrett v. Roberts, 10 A. R. 650.

Quebec Election Act—Appeal—Supreme Court of Canada — Future Rights.] — See Chagnon v. Normand, 16 S. C. R. 661.

(b) Illegal Voting.

Informer — Right to Suc — Crown.]—
In an action under R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 182, against an agent for the sale of Crown lands, to recover a penalty alleged to have been incurred by voting at an election of a member for the legislative assembly, contrary to s. 4 of the Act:—Held, overruling a denurrer to the statement of claim, that, though forfeitures and penalties belong to the Crown unless otherwise disposed of, the sum declared to be forfeited by s. 4 of the Act for a breach thereof is a penalty within the meaning of s. 182, s.-s. 1, for which an action may be maintained by any person who will sue for the same. Shrighey v. Taylor, 4 O. R. 396.

See also S. C., sub nom. Srigley v. Taylor, 6 O. R. 108.

(c) Refusing Votes.

Deputy Returning Officer—Dutics of—Oaths—Notice of Action.]—At the election of a member of the legislative assembly for Algoma, six persons tendered their votes and offered to take the necessary and its required by it. S. O. 1877 c. 10, to entitle them to vote. The deputy returning officer refused the vote of one because he could not produce his title deeds, and of the others because they had no houses on their lands. Four of those rejected offered to take the oath prescribed, and described the property on which they claimed to vote. In an action for penalties for refusing the votes:—Held, that the duties of a deputy returning officer in taking the votes are ministerial (save where he suspects personation, want of qualification, &c., in which case he should exercise his judgment as to administering the oath), and that having refused the tendered votes of those who had sufficiently shewn their right to vote, he had refused to perform an obligation or formality, required of him within s. 180, and was liable to the penalties prescribed by the Act. One Anderson, when tendering his vote, was not able to describe his land accurately, but stated that it was in one of three townships which he named. His vote was refused on the ground that he had no house on his land:—Held, that the deputy returning officer was liable for the penalty for, refusing this vote. Held, also, that the point as to whether the polling division in question was within Ontario or not, could not be raised by the deputy returning officer acting under a writ for an election in Ontario. Held, also, that notice of action was not necessary, nor was it necessary to aver or prove notice. Walton v. Apjohn, 5 gainst a deputy returning officer by a "person aggrieved," to recover a penalty under s. 183 of the Ontario Election Act, 55 Vict, c. 3, for an alleged wilful refusal to allow the plaintiff to vote:—Held, that the word "wilful" in the section means "perverse" or "malicious;" and, although the plaintiff was deprived of his vote by the refusal of the defendant to allow him to deposit a "straight" ballot, and there was thereby a contravention of the Act, yet, as the defendant honestly believed the plaintiff was not qualified, and believed in his own power to withhold the ballot, the action failed. Lewis v, Great Western

R. W. Co., 3 Q. B. D. 195, followed. Walton v. Apjohn, 5 O. R. 65, distinguished. Johnson v. Allen, 26 O. R. 550.

Shewing Ballot Paper and Refusing to Give New One—Breach of Duty.] — The word "conveniently" in s. 109 of R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, the Ontario Election Act, means "conveniently for the voter and for his wish, purpose, and intention in voting." The plainan elector, in marking his ballot at election of a member to serve in the legislative assembly of Ontario inadvertently marked it for the candidate against whom he intended to He immediately and before he left the apartment at the polling place set apart for marking ballots informed the defendant, the deputy returning officer, of his mistake, and asked for another ballot paper. The defendasked for another bands paper. The derendant said he must first see the marked ballot paper, which the plaintiff refused to allow, but, on the scrutineer for his party recommending him to do so, he handed it to the defendant, without creasing or folding it that it might be placed in the ballot box, in such a way that those present could not see how it was marked. The defendant looked at it, and then either shewed or placed it so that it could be and was seen by nearly all present, and, contending that it was not a spoiled ballot, contrary to the plaintiff's protest, placed it in the ballot box, and it was counted for the person against whom the plaintiff intended to vote :- Held, that the defendant by his acts in disclosing how the plaintiff marked his ballot paper, in not cancelling it, and in refusing to give the plaintiff another ballot paper on his demanding one, and by his action compelling him to vote for the candidate whom he wished to oppose, was thereby guilty of breaches of duty which entitled the plaintiff to judgment in his favour for the penalties under the statute. Hastings v. Summerfeldt, 30 O. R. 577.

(d) Returns-Neglecting Duties as to.

Deputy Returning Officer — Mistake—Pleading.]—An action to recover the penalty of $200 imposed by 37 Vict. c. 9, 8, 198 (D.). The sixth paragraph of the statement of claim alleged that the defendant as deputy returning officer neglected to make out the statement required by s. 57, and enclose it in the ballot box. The seventh paragraph alleged that defendant pretended that he did make up the statement in question, but that he enclosed it by mistake in the envelope containing the ballot papers; and charged that the doing so was a neglect of duty, within the meaning of was a neglect of duty, within the meaning of the statement of the defence denied the statement of the statement Returning Officer—Notice of Recount— Delay of Return—Powers of County Court Judge.)—Action by the plaintiff, a defeated candidate at an election for the Ontario legislature, against the defendant, the returning officer, for wilfully contravening the provisions of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 125, in not delaying the return after receiving notice from the county Judge of a recount of the ballots. The county Judge had mailed a notice to the defendant, which it was not controverted had reached him in time, and a duplicate of it was left at his residence with his wife:—Held, that the evidence did not shew that the notice came to defendant's knowledge before he made his return, and therefore he did not contravene the section, so that there could be no recovery. The plaintiff was a "person aggrieved" within s. 181 of the Act; and the defendant could not question the power of the county Judge to give the appointment or issue the notice on the material before him, because the process of the court or Judge must be obeyed while it stands when, as here, there was jurisdiction. Hays v. Armstrong, 7 O. R. 621.

(e) Other Cases.

Ontario Voters' Lists Act, 1889—Notice of Action — Clerk of Municipality.]—A clerk of a municipality is not an officer within the meaning of R. S. O. 1887 c. 73, in respect to the performance in that capacity of the duties prescribed by the Ontario Voters' Lists Act, 1889, 52 Vict. c. 3, and is not entitled in an action for the penalties imposed for default in that regard, to the protection of the above revised statute. McVittie v. O'Brien, 27 O. R. 710.

Summons for Corrupt Practices— Time Limitation--Evidence--Several Charges.] —See Halton (Prov.), 2 E. C. 158.

8. Recount and Scrutiny.

Corrupt Practices at Previous Election.]— Evidence of corrupt practices committed by persons in the interest of both candidates at the previous election, may be given at the trial of the second petition, with the view of striking off the votes of any such persons who may have voted at the second election, Corneall (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. (647.

Inquiry as to Age of Voters.]—Held, that no inquiry could be made on a scrutiny as to voters being under the age of twenty-one, as the voters' lists were final and conclusive on that point. South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 144.

Practice on Scrutiny — Onus.]—On a scrutiny the practice is for the person in a minority to first place himself in a majority, and then for the person thus placed in a minority to strike off his opponent's votes. Stormont (Prov.), H. E. C. 21.

Qualification of Farmers' Sons.]—
Reading s. 41 in conjunction with s. 45, s.s.
2, and the oath T in schedule A of R. S. C.
c. S, an inquiry on a scrutiny as to the qualification of a farmer's son at the time of voting is admissible, and if it is shewn that a larger number of unqualified farmers' sons' votes than the majority were admitted, the election will be void. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 E. C.

Recount — Interim Injunction against— Appeal.]—Where, after the expiration by effluxion of time of an interim injunction order, proceedings are taken against a party to the action to commit him for contempt for dissobeying the order, an appeal by him against the interim order will lie. A Judge of the high court has no jurisdiction to restrain by injunction a county court Judge and returning officer from holding a recount of the ballots cast at an election for the House of Commons. Centre Wellington, 44 U. C. R. 132, and North Perth, Hessin v. Lloyd, 21 O. R. 538, considered. Where an injunction is being appear in opposition to the application should be heard. MeLeed v. Noble, 24 A. R. 459.

Interim Injunction against—Invalidity of—Dissobedience to—Motion to Commit—Contempt.1—The House of Common of Canada alone has the right to determine all matters not rebegated to the courts concerning the election of its own members, and their right to sit and vote in parliament. The preliminary recount provided for by R. S. C. c. S. s. 64, is a delegation pro tanto of parliamentary jurisdiction, and the county court Judge, as the presiding officer, is one designated by parliament, and is responsible to the house for the right performance of his duties. On an application to commit for contempt of court a barrister who had in argument, as asent of a candidate, urged a county court Judge to disregard an injunction staying proceedings granted by the high court of justice for Ontario and to proceed with the recount, and a returning officer who had, under the direction of the county Judge, produced the ballots for the purpose of the recount, notwithstanding that the injunction prohibited him from so doing:—Held, that the plaintiff, the defeated candidate, had no particular specified legal remedy in the courts. Held, also, that the high court had no jurisdiction to enjoin the prosecution of proceedings connected with controverted elections of the Dominion, such as a recount under s. 64, R. S. C. c. S. Held, also, that a county court Judge having jurisdiction, and having issued his appointment for a recount, Held, lastly, that the injunction, heing one the courts of the election, held, lastly, that the injunction, heing one the court had no jurisdiction to grant, was extra-judicial and void, and might properly be disobeyed. McLeod v. Noble, 28 O. R. 528.

— Mandamus, 1.—The court refused a mandamus to the junior Judge of the county court of Weilington to proceed with the recount of votes under 41 Vict. c. ü, s. 14 (D.), as being a matter not within its jurisdiction, but belonging to parliament alone. Centre Weilington (Dom.), 44 U. C. R. 132.

Quere, whether the county Judge can object to the validity of a ballot paper when no objection has been made to the same by the candidate or his agent, or an elector, in accordance with the provisions of 37 Vict. c. 10, 8.56, at the time of the counting officer of the votes by the deputy returning officer. Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247.

Registrar of Court — Abandonment of Seat—Declaration by Court.]—Where a petition claims the seat, a scrutiny of votes may be ordered to be taken in each municipality by the registrar acting for the Judge on the rota. During the scrutiny of votes the respondent abandoned the seat to his opponent, after his opponent had secured a majority of eight votes, and agreed that such should stand as his opponent's majority, and that the courtshould declare such opponent duly elected; and the same was ordered by the court. West Elgin (Prov.), H. E. C. 227.

Value of Property.]—On a scrutiny an objection that the persons objected to were not owners, tenants, or occupants within £. 5 of 32 Vict. c. 21, excluded an objection as to the value of the assessed property. Morrouc's vote, South Grenville (Prov.), H. E. C. 163.

Votes—Striking of—What may be Sheven.]
—A petitioner claiming the seat on a scrutiny may shew, as to votes polled for his opponent:
(1) that the voter was not twenty-one years of age; (2) that he was not a subject of Her Majesty by birth or naturalization; (3) that he was otherwise by law prevented from voting; and (4) that he was not actually and bond fide the owner, tenant, or occupant of the real property in respect of which he was assessed. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C.

See Russell (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 519; Bothwell (Dom.), 8 S. C. R. 676.

See post 12 (b) and (g), 13 (a).

9. Returning Officers and Returns.

Claim against Crown—Services of Subordinates.]—A person duly appointed and acting during an election as returning officer under the provisions of the North-West Territories Representation Act, R. S. C. 1886 c. 7, cannot recover from the Crown for the services of several enumerators, deputy returning officers, or other persons employed in connection with such election. Lucas v. The Queen, 3 Ex. C. R. 238.

Duties.]—Semble, that a returning officer is both a ministerial and judicial officer. South Renfrew (Dom.), H. E. C. 705.

Return—When Made.]—The return of a member by the returning officer is only made when it has been actually received by the clerk of the Grown in chancery, and not when the returning officer has placed it in the express or post office for transmission to such clerk. Ottawa (Prov.), 2 E. C. 64.

Witness Fees, |—Semble, a returning officer, whose conduct has been impeached, is not entitled to his expenses as a witness before a committee of the House of Commons, although he was summoned to attend by the Speaker's warrant, in the same manner as other witnesses. Biackbock v. Mellartin, Tay. 320.

See ante 3 (n), 7 (c), (d).

10. Riots and Assaults.

Conviction.]—Under the statute for repressing riots at elections no power is given to magistrates to convict summarily. The offenders must be tried by a jury. Ferguson v. Adams, 5 U. C. R. 194.

Penalty — "Convicted."]—Section 60 of 32 Vict. c. 21 (O.) enacts that "every person convicted" of a battery committed during any part of the days whereon "any election is to be held, within two miles of the place where such election is so held, &c., shall incur a penalty of $50." By s. 77, all penalties imposed by the Act shall be recoverable by any person who will sue for the same by action of debt or information in any court having competent jurisdiction. And it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff in any such action or suit to state in the declaration that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of money thereby demanded, and to allege the particular offence for which the action is brought, and that the defendant has acted contrary to the Act. It was held, in the county court, that the words "every person convicted," &c., did not mean who had been convicted in some criminal proceeding, but that the offence might be proved, and the appeal was dismissed. Wilde v. Boucen, 37 U. C. R. 504.

11. Trial of Controverted Elections.

(a) Appeals.

Consent to Reversal of Judgment.]—
Upon the application of counsel for the respondent and upon the written consent of the attorney and agent for the petitioner, the supreme court of Canada allowed (without argument) an appeal by the respondent from an order of a Judge overruling preliminary objections to the petition, and sustained the preliminary objections, all without costs. Lincoln and Niagara (Dom.), 1 E. C. 428, 432.

The trial of two controverted Dominion election petitions was commenced more than six months after the filing of the petitions, no order having been made enlarging the time for the commencement of the trial. Upon the consent of the respondents, subject to the objection that the court had no jurisdiction, judgments were given voiding the elections for corrupt practices by agents. Upon the respondents' appeal to the supreme court of Canada, the petitioners filed a consent to the reversal of the judgments appealed from without costs, admitting that the objection was well taken. Upon the filing of an affidavit as to the facts stated in the consent, the appeal was allowed and the petitions dismissed without costs, Bagot (Dom.), Rouville (Dom.), 21 S. C. R. 28.

Disagreement of Trial Judges.]—Where the trial Judges have certified that they disagree, the whole case is before the court of appeal on the evidence, and ought to be disposed of in all respects as on an appeal from the trial Judges. East Simcoe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

Discontinuance — Certificate of Registrar.]—Upon the trial of a controverted Dominion election petition the respondent was unseated by the judgment of the superior court, by reason of corrupt practices by agents, and appealed to the supreme court of Canada. When the case was called, no one appearing for the appellant, counsel for the petitioner stated that he had been served with a notice of discontinuance. The court ordered that the appeal be struck off the list. The notice of discontinuance having been filed, the registrar of the court certified to the Speaker of the House of Commons that by reason of such discontinuance, the decision and report of the trial Judges were left unaffected by the proceedings taken in the supreme court; and the Speaker subsequently issued a writ for a new election. L'Assomption (Bom.), 21 S. C. R. 29.

Dissolution of Parliament—Certificate of Registrar—Deposit—Costs.]—In the interval between taking an arceal from a decision delivered on the 5th November 1800. Controverted election petition and the February sittings (1891) of the supreme court of Canada, parliament was dissolved, and by the effect of the dissolution the petition dropped. The respondent subsequently, in order to have the costs that were awarded to him at the trial taxed and paid out of the money deposited in the court below by the petitioner as security for costs, moved before a Judge in chambers to have the court in chambers of the full court having referred the motion to a Judge in chambers to have the record remitted to the court below. The petitioner as mitted to the court below. The petitioner asserted his right to have his deposit returned to him:—Held, that the final determination of the right to costs being kept in suspense by the appeal, the motion should be refused, Held, also, that inasmuch as the money deposited in the court below ourth to be disposited for the court should certify to the court below that the appeal was not heard, and that the petition dropped by reason of the dissolution of parliament on the 2nd February, 1891. Halton (Dom.), 19 S. C. R. 557.

Fresh Evidence — Admission of — New Trial.] — Charges of corrupt practices, consisting of promises of money and of employment, were made against the respondent and his agent denied making any promises of money, but left the promises of employment unanswered; and the Judge trying the petition avoided the election. Thereupon the respondent and ent appended to the court of appeal, and under 28 Vict. c. 3, s. 4 (O.). offered further evidence by affidavit, specifically denying any offer or promise, directly or indirectly, of employment. The Judge who tried the petition having intimated to the court that had the respondent and his agent made the explicit denial as to offers of money or employment which it appeared they had intended making, be would have found for the respondent:—Held, that the finding should be set aside, and that a new trial should be held before another Judge on the rota. Observations on the difference between an election trial and a trial at his prins. Pet (Prov.), H. E. G. 485.

New Charge—Particulars—Trial.]—The petitioner was not allowed to urge before the court of appeal a charge of corrupt practices against the respondent personally, which had not been specified in the particulars, or adjudicated upon at the trial. South Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 420.

Objection to Jurisdiction — Appeal on — Remitter of Case to Court Below—Subsequent Appeal.] — The original petition in this case was tried by the Judge on the merits subject to an objection to his jurisdiction. The Judge, having taken the case en deliberé, arrived at the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction, declared the objection to his jurisdiction well founded, and "in consequence the objection was maintained, and the petition of the petitioner was rejected and dismissed." This judgment was appealed from, and the now respondent, under s. 48 of the Supreme Court Act, limited his appeal to the question of jurisdiction, and the received the terms of the supreme court hed that the Judge had jurisdiction, and it was ordered that the record be transmitted to the proper officer of the lower court, to have the cause proceeded with according to law. The record was accordingly sent to the prothonotary of the superior court at Montmagny. The Judge, after having offered the coursel of each of the parties a rehearing of the case, proceeded to render his judgment on the merits and declared the election void. The respondent then appealed to the supreme court, and contended that the Judge had no jurisdiction to proceed with the case—Held, that the supreme court remitting the record to the proper officer of the course for the course of the case for the merits, and that the order of this court remitting the record to the proper officer of the course five had not been limited to the question of jurisdiction, have given a decision on the merits, and that the order of this court remitting the record to the proper officer of the course appealed to the proper officer of the course appealed to the proper officer of the course o

Preliminary Objections—Appeal on.]

—On the 21st April, 1877, an election petition was filed. The respondent pleaded by preliminary objections that this election petition, notice of its presentation, and copy of the receipt of the deposit had never been served upon him. Judgment was given maintaining the preliminary objections and dismissing the petition with costs. The petitioners, thereupon, appealed to the supreme court under 38 Vict. c. 11, s. 48 (D.):—Held, that the judgment was not appealable, and that under that section an appeal will lie only from the decision of a Judge who has tried the merits of an election petition. — Appeal on—Jurisidiction)—An appeal does not lie to the court of appeal from a judgment of the court of common pleas overruling a preliminary objection as to the jurisdiction of the court to try a controverted election for the Dominion. Niagara (Dom.), 4 A. R. 407.

Appeal on—Order Dismissing Petition—Affidarit of Petitioner.]—The appeal given to the supreme court of Canada by the Controverted Elections Act (R. S. C. 1886 c.

9, s. 50), from a decision on preliminary objections to an election petition, can only be taken in respect to objections filed under s. 12 of the Act. No appeal lies from a judgment granting a motion to dismiss a petition on the ground that the affidavit of the petitioner was untrue. Marquette (Dom.), 17 s. C. 18 218.

Appeal on—Withdrawal of De-posit.]—A petition was duly filed and pre-sented by appellant on the 5th August, 1883, under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. 1874, against the return of respondent. Preliminary objections were filed by respondent, and before the same came on for heardent, and before the same came on for hear-ing the attorney and agent of respondent ob-tained, on the 13th October, from the Judge, an order authorizing the withdrawal of the an order authorizing the withdrawn of the deposit money and removal of the petition off the files. The money was withdrawn, but shortly afterwards, in January, 1883, the appellant, alleging he had had no knowledge of the proceedings taken by his agent and attorney, obtained, upon summons, a second order from the Judge rescinding his prior order of 13th October, 1882, and directing that upon the appellant repaying to the clerk of the court the amount of the security, the petition be restored, and that the appellant be at lib-erty to proceed. Against this order of Janu-ary, 1883, the respondent appealed to the supreme court of New Brunswick, and the court gave judgment rescinding it. Thereupon petitioner appealed to the supreme court of Canada:—Held, that the judgment appealed from was not a judgment on a preliminary objection within the meaning of 42 Vict. c. 39, s. 10 (the Supreme Court Amendment Act, 1879), and therefore not appealable. King's County (Dom.), 8 S. C. R. 192, followed. Gloucester (Dom.), 8 S. C. R. 204.

Reversal - Penal Statute - Benefit of Doubt. |—In penal statutes questions of doubt are to be construed favourably to the accused, and where the court of first instance in a quasi-criminal trial has acquitted the respondent, the appellate court will not reverse his finding. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C.

Questions of Fact.]—On a charge that the respondent offered to bribe the wife of a voter by a "nice present," if she would do what she could to prevent her husband from yoting, three witnesses testified to the offer; the respondent denied, and another witness who was present heard nothing of the offer. On this evidence, and there being no proof that the witnesses in support of the charge were acting from malicious motives or corrupt expectation, nor any evidence impeaching their veracity, the charge was held proved. The respondent appealed to the court appeal: - Held, that an appellate court will not, except under special circumstances, interfere with the finding of the court of first instance on questions of fact depending on the veracity of witnesses and conflicting evi-dence. 2. That, as the Judge trying the petidence. 2. That, as the Judge trying the peti-tion had found that the respondent had made the offer to the wife of the voter in the man-ner above stated, such an offer was a promise of a "valuable consideration," within the meaning of the bribery clauses of 32 Vict. c. 21. Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283.

review of the evidence, declined to set aside review of the evidence, declined to set aside the finding of the election Judge. The appeal was dismissed without costs, as the petitioner had strong grounds for presenting it. South Huron (Hom.), H. E. C. 576.

The charge upon which this appeal was principally decided was that of the respon-dent's bribery of one David Asselin. The Judge who tried the case found as a fact that the appellant had underhandedly slipped into Asselin's pocket the $5 for a pretended purpose that was not even mentioned to the purpose that was not even mentioned to the recipient; that this amount was not included in the published return of his expenses as re-quired by the Election Act, and this payment was bribery:—Held, that an appellate court in election cases ought not to reverse, on mere matters of fact, the findings of the Judge who has tried the petition, unless the court is convinced beyond doubt that his conclusions are erroneous, and that the evidence in this case warranted the finding of the court below that appellant had been guilty of personal bribery. Bellechasse (Dom.), 5 S. C. R. 91.

Held, that the supreme court, on appeal, will not reverse on mere matters of fact the judgment of the Judge who tries an election petition, unless the matter of the evidence is of such a nature as to convey an irresistible conviction that the judgment is not only wrong, but is erroneous, and that the evidence in support of the charge of bribing one M., as well as of the other charges of bribery and treating, was not such as would justify an appellate court in drawing the inference that the respondent intended to corrupt the voters. Montcalm (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 93.

The judgment of the court below will not be versed unless clearly wrong. Berthier reversed unless clearl (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 102.

At the trial it was found on a review of the evidence that an offer to bribe, which had not been carried out, was not proved:—Held, on appeal, that the finding of the trial Judges should not be disturbed unless the court above was convinced that it was wrong, and that if no more could be said than that the evidence might have warranted a different condence hight have warther the clusion, it should not be interfered with.

Trial of Corrupt Practices.]-The Trial of Corrupt Practices.]—The right of appeal given under s. 63 and following sections of the Controverted Elections Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, does not extend to decisions either of the Judge or Judges for the trial of the petitions or other Judges sitting as a court for the trial of corrupt practices under ss. 174 and 175 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, and amendments. Observations upon anomalies and difficulties in the procedure. Lennox (Prov.), 1 E. C.

(b) Costs.

From the judgment on the personal charges the petitioner appealed; but the court, on a sonal Charges—Failure.]—The petitioners, after a notice from the respondent admitting bribery by one of his agents, examined witnesses on the personal charges, which were not proved, and in determining the question of costs, it was held, that as the petitioners might have come to the court on the notice served by the respondent, and have asked to have the election set uside, and as they had attempted, but had failed, to establish the personal charges, the respondent should only pay such costs as he would have had to pay had the petitioners accepted the notice served upon them before the trial. West Northamberland (Dom.), H. E. C. 502.

Agreement to Pay Costs—Champerty— Stay of Proceedings.]—It is not a champertous transaction that an association of persons, with which the petitioner was politically allied, agreed to pay the costs of the petition. Even if the agreement were champertous, that would not be a sufficient reason to stay the proceedings on the petition. North Simcoe (Dom.), II. E. C. 617.

Appeal—Grounds for—Dismissal without Costs.]—The Judge who tried an election case having set aside the election for bribery by agents, but found that the candidate was not himself guitty of corrupt practices, the court, on appeal, declined to interfere; but the appeal was dismissed without costs, as there were strong grounds for presenting it, and had the finding been otherwise, it would not have been disturbed. South Huron, 24 C. P. 488, H. E. C. 576.

Gounsel Fees, I—On the trial of an election petition against the return of a member to the Outario Legislature, which resulted in favour of the petitioner, to whom the costs were awarded, the defendant was retained by an association for prosecuting the petition, and accet as petitioner's attorneys, and M., one of the plaintiffs, a firm of attorneys as well as barristers, acted as petitioner's senior composed, under an agreement to that effect with defendant, neither he nor his firm being retained by petitioner. The petitioner's costs were settled by defendant and the respondent's attorney, and defendant received $1,600, including $905 counsel fees to M., which M. proved became the property of his firm. The plaintiffs having brought an action against defendant to received to their use:—Held, that they could not recover, for that the costs, including these fees belonged to the petitioner, and not to defendant as attorney. Miller v. McCarthy, 27 C. P. 147.

At the trial of an election petition, and on appeal from the judgment, the petitioner, a barrister, appeared in person, but was assisted by a junior counsel. On taxation, the petition having been dismissed, counsel fees were charged, to the first counsel at the trial $300, and to second counsel $150; and on argument of the appeal, to first counsel $150, second counsel $100. The master disabwed fees to the first counsel, but allowed $200 of the second counsel at the trial and the $100 on appeal; there being no addicted for parents or receipt for such fee allowed $200 as called for and insisted upon for the free allowed fees and for and insisted upon for the free second for and insisted upon for the free second for any person of the free second for any person of the free second counsel at the trial and the second for the second counsel at the trial and the second for the second counsel at the trial and the second counsel at the second counsel at the trial and the second counsel at the second counsel at the second counsel at

A revision was therefore ordered, with an intimation that the $150 and $100 might be allowed on satisfactory proof of payment. North Victoria (Dom.), 39 U. C. R. 147.

Depriving Successful Party of Costs—Conduct. —The petition was dismissed, but owing to the unwise and imprudent acts of the respondent, he was allowed only one half of the taxable costs. Glengarry (Prov.), H. E. C. S.

Distribution of Costs—lbandonment of Scrutiny.]—Where the Judge reserved a special case for the Queen's bench as to his power to amend the petition at the trial by allowing the insertion of an objection to a voters' list used at the election, and the court of Queen's bench held that the Judge had power so to amend the petition, and on the reassembling of the election court the petitioners abandoned the scrutiny; the petitioners were ordered to pay the costs of the respondent up to the meeting of the election court, and the costs of the special case; but each party was ordered to pay his own costs of the trial. Monck (Pro.), H. E. C. 154.

Failure of Charges.]—The petitioner was held entitled to costs of the charges on which he succeeded, and the respondent to the costs of the charges on which the petitioner failed. North Renfrew (Dom.), H. E. C. 710.

The petitioner was allowed his costs, but not the costs of the charges which he failed to establish. Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 803.

The petitioner was declared entitled to the general costs of the inquiry, and the costs of the evidence incurred in proof of the facts upon which the election was avoided; but the costs incurred in respect of charges which the petitioner failed to prove were disallowed. South Essex (Prov.), H. E. C. 255.

Failure of Charges—Witnesses.]—
The costs of investigating charges of bribery against the respondent's election agent, though not established, were awarded against the respondent, owing to the equiveed conduct of his agent in the matters which led to the charges; also the costs of other charges of bribery which were not established, and the costs of proving that several tavern-keepers, for their own profit, had violated s. 66 of the Election Act of 1838, as the witnesses who gave evidence of these matters also gave evidence of other matters, as to which it was reasonable they should be subponened. West Wellington (Prov.), H. E. C. 233.

— General Costs—Failure of Charges.]

duly elected, the costs did not follow this event, but, under s. 160 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, had to be disposed of as if the event had been the setting aside of the election; the respondent paying the general costs, including the full costs which would have been taxable if the only charges had been those on which the petitioner had succeeded, the latter being deprived of costs in respect to the charges on which he failed, the respondent bearing his own costs of those charges. Welland (Proc.), 1 E. C. 383.

Scrutiny.]—The petitioner was held entitled to the general costs of the petition, except as to the cases of the voters whose names were not on the voters' lists, and as to the scrutiny of ballots. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

— Useless Scrutiny.]—During the progress of a scrutiny of votes, certain ballot papers, counterfoils, and a voters' list were stolen from the court, which had the effect of rendering the proceedings in the scrutiny useless. And in disposing of the costs the court ordered the respondent to pay the costs up to the date the election was avoided, but that, under the circumstances, each party must bear his own costs of the scrutiny. Lincoln (2) (Proc.), H. E. C. 480.

— Unfounded Charges.]—The respondent was charged with intimidating government servants during his speech at the nomination of candidates, by threatening to procure the removal of all government servants who should not vote for him, or who should not vote for him, or who should vote against him. The evidence shewed that, though in the heat of debate, and when is ritated by one U., he used attouch hear in the contract of the con

Failure of Petition—Excessive Treating—Dismissal without Costs.]—Where there had been excessive treating by an agent but not used as a means of corruptly influencing the voters, the petition was dismissed without costs, following the rule laid down in the Carrickfergus Case, 1 O.'M & H. 264. East Eigin (Dom.), H. E. C. 769.

Inquiry — Public Interest.] — The election was sustained, but it being in the public interest that the matters brought forward should have been inquired into, and as the respondent had not exercised supervision over the expenditure in connection with the election, the petition was dismissed without costs. West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97.

Inquiry into Bribery by Petitioner—Costs of,]—The respondent sought to establish, on an inquiry under a preliminary objection, that the petitioner (the opposing candidate) had been guilty of bribery, and was therefore disqualified as such. The inquiry was not concluded, as during its pendency the English election courts held that bribery would not disqualify a petitioner; but, so far as the evidence went, while it disclosed such a large expenditure of money by the petitioner and his agents as to lead to the suspicion that it was not all expended for the legitimate purposes of the election, it did not shew bribery by the petitioner. The respondent then consented to his election being avoided on the ground of bribery by one of his agents without his knowledge or consent:—Held, that the general rule as to costs should prevail, and that the respondent should pay the costs of the inquiry as well as the general costs of the cause. South Renfrew (Dom.), II. E. C. 556.

Mistakes of Deputy Returning Officers—Costs Caused by.]—When the petition has been rendered necessary by the mistakes of the deputy returning officers, for which neither the petitioner nor respondent was responsible:—Held, that each party should bear his own costs. Russell (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 519.

Mistakes of Returning Officer—Costs Caused by.1—The returning officer having acted honestly and fairly in rejecting the nomination paper, each party to the petition was left to bear his own costs. South Renfrew (2) (Domn.), H. E. C., 705.

Particulars—Costs of.]—See East Northumberland (Dom.), H. E. C. 577.

Personal Charges Failing.] — Costs should follow the event, although the personal charges against the respondent fail, unless put in wantonly, or unless the expense of the trial has been thereby increased. Cornwall (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 313.

Where bribery by an agent is proved, costs follow the event, even though personal charges made against the respondent have not been proved, there having been no additional expense occasioned to the respondent by such personal charges. South Grey (Dom.), H. E. C. 52.

The petitioner, having been warranted in continuing the inquiry as to the personal complicity of the respondent with the illegal acts of his agents, was held entitled to the full costs of the trial. Kingston (Dom.). H. E. C. 625.

— Bribery by Agents.]—Various acts of bribery and of colourable charity having been proved against the agents and sub-agents of the respondent, the election was set aside, with costs, including the costs of the evidence on the personal charges against the respondent. Cornwall (Dom.), H. E. C. 547.

Inquiry — Public Interest.]—There being no grounds for charging the respondent personally with corrupt practices, and the accutiny having been abandoned, the costs of those parts of the case were ordered to be paid by the petitioner. But with respect to the other costs, though the respondent was successful, the matters were proper to be inquired into in the public interest, and each party was left to pay his own costs. East Toronto (Proc.), H. E. C. 70.

Sheriff's Costs of Publication—Payment by Petitioner—Claim on Security Deposited.]—Where an election petition is dismissed at the trial without costs, the petitioner must pay to the sheriff the costs incurred in the publication of the notice of trial thereof; and, although the sum deposited as security is not security for such expenditure, payment out of court will only be ordered on the condition of its being made good to the sheriff or attending to the publication, no allowance therefor being authorized by the tariff. East Middlesex (Prov.), 2 E. C. 150.

Unfounded Charges—Witness Fees.]—
The election was set aside with costs, except as to the costs of certain charges which were unwarranted. A party, though successful, is not entitled to the costs of the witnesses he may subpona, nor is the fact of them being called or not called the test of such costs being taxable. Niagara (Dom.), H. E. C. 568.

Witness Fees.]—In trials under the Controverted Elections Act of 1871, the costs and witness fees, and the materiality of evidence, are in the discretion of the master, subject to the court, as in other trials. The master will generally be the sole judge as to how many witnesses shall be allowed for as to one issue. So, where the master allowed fees to seventy witnesses subpospaed, but not called, on charges of bribery by the petitioner, the election having been avoided on the evidence of other witnesses :- Held, that the master exercised a proper discretion, even though respondent's attorney swore he believed the witnesses would have disproved the charges they were called to prove; the facts that each witness was subpensed to prove appearing on the petitioner's brief put in before the master, and it appearing also by affidavit that the witnesses were subponsed bons fide, and were material. There is no presumption in a trial under the Controverted Elections Act of 1871, arising from the number of witnesses subposnaed, that they are unnecessarily called, The presumption is to the contrary. Prescott (Prov.), 32 U. C. R. 303.

The Judge at the trial declined to decide when witness fees should be paid by the respondent, thinking it to be the province of the taxing master on taxation, after hearing both parties, to decide what witnesses to allow or disallow, as in ordinary cases. Niagara Election (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 317

Witnesses — Costs of Interviewing.] — A petition under the Ontario Controverted Elections Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, was dismissed with costs:—Held, on appeal, reversing the decision of one of the traxing officers, that under ss. 97 and 100, R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, the respondent was not entitled to tax against the petitioners the costs of interviewing, before the trial, persons named in the petitioner's bill of particulars as bribers and bribes. West Middlessex (Prov.), 10 P. R. 509.

(c) Court for Trial.

Constitutional Law—Powers of Dominion Parliament.]—Held, that 37 Viet. c. 10 (D.), by which the trial of controverted elections to the House of Commons was referred to the court of common pleas, or any Judges thereof, amongst the other courts named in this Province, was not ultra vires of the Dominion Parliament; and a preliminary objection raising this question was disallowed with costs. Niagara (Dom.), 29 C. P. 261; South Ontario (Dom.), West Hastings (Dom.), 29 C. P. 270. See also Montmorney (Dom.), 3 S. C. R. 1, 5 App. Cas. 115, where the Act was also held to be intra vires.

Election Court—Jurisdiction—Change in Law. —The Dominion Controverted Elections Act, 1874, 37 Vict. c. 10, repealed the Controverted Elections Act, 1873, 36 Vict. c. 28, under which the election court existed, except as respected elections held before the passing of the Act, and directed all controverted elections in future to be tried in the superior courts. The petitioner, on the 6th February, 1875, filed his petition under the last Act, but initialed "In the election court." the notice of filing and of the deposit and other parers being intituled in the same court, and delivered it to the clerk of the Crown, who was the clerk both of the Crown, who was the clerk both of the election court and of the court of Queen's bench, Afterwards, on the 28th August, an order was made setting aside the notice of trial given, initialed in the court of Queen's bench, and by a rule of the election court the petition was taken off the files of that court, on the ground that no petition was filed therein; and by a rule of the election court the petition to try a petition under the Act of 1874. The petitioner then, on the 20th November, 1876, applied to the court of Queen's bench to fix a day for the trial, which was refused; for there was no petition in the court; and if the petition had been at first well filed, the trial was not commenced within six months from its presentation, and no application made within the time to postpose it. Kingston (Domn.), 39 U. C. R. 139.

Judicature Act—Change in Nomes of Courts—Presentation of Petition—Initiuling.]
—The court of Queen's bench is an existing court for the presentation and trial of Dominion controverted election cases, notwith-standing the O. J. Act. 1881. The petition in this case was intituled, "In the Queen's bench division," and was delivered, without any special instructions to him, to an officer of, and in the office of, the Queen's bench division, with whom and in which the business of the court of Queen's bench had formerly been transacted, and the officer entered it in the procedure book of the Queen's bench division;—II-eld, that the words "High court of justice, Queen's bench division," added in intituling the petition, might be rejected as surplusage, and that the petition had been properly presented in the Queen's bench—Held, also, that the act of the officer in entering it in a wrong book should not prejudicially affect the petition. Russell (Dom.), 1 O. R. 439. But see the two cases next following.

A petition against the return of a member for the House of Commons was filed in the high court of justice, common pleas division, constituted by the O. J. Act: and the required security was furnished by the deposit thereof being made in a bank under a direction obtained therefor from the accountant of the said high court, appointed under the said Act:—Hield, by Cameron, J., that the common pleas division of the said high court was not one and the same court as the court of common pleas as constituted prior to the passing of the Judicature Act: that the said court of common pleas still existed, and was capable of receiving and trying the said petitions; and, therefore, the said common pleas division had no jurisdiction to entertain the same. Held, also, that the question was properly raised by way of preliminary objection, as was also the question as to the security furnished. Held, also, that the onus of proving the preliminary objections rested on the respondent, who raised them. The question as to jurisdiction being important, and open to reasonable doubt, no costs were allowed. North York (Dom.), 32 C. P. 458. Over-ruled. See the next case.

The election petition against the election and return of the respondent was intituled in the high course; justice, Queen's bench division, are presented to the official in the office of the Queen's bench divisions and filed and entered in the books of that office. A preliminary objection was taken that the high court of justice had no jurisdiction:—Held, reversing the judgment in 1 O. R. 433, and overruling North York (Dom.), 32 C. P. 458, that the Ontario Judicature Act, 1881, makes the high court of justice and its divisions a continuation of the former courts merged in it, and that the petition had not been irregularly intituled and filed. West Huron (Dom.), 8 S. C. R. 126.

time for FHing.] — The appellant, the sitting member, against whom an election petition had been filed by the respondent, an unsuccessful candidate, presented a crosspectition under s. S. s. 2, of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, 1874, alleging that the respondent was guilty, as well by himself as by his agents, with his knowledge and consent, of corrupt practices at the said election. This cross-petition was not filed within thirty days after the publication in the Canada Gazette of the return to the writ of election by the clerk of the Crown in chancery, but within the delay mentioned in the last part of s.-s. 2 of s. 8, viz., fifteen days after the service of the petition upon the appellant complaining of his election and return. The cross-petition was met by a preliminary objection (maintained by a Judge), albeging that it was filed too late:—Held, on appeal, that the sitting member cannot file a cross-petition, within the delay of fifteen days is given only when a petition has been filed against the sitting member, alleging corrupt practices after the return. Mont-worcher (Mom.), 3 S. C. R. 90.

Admissions of Agent.]—Evidence of admissions made by an agent after his agency has expired, is inadmissible, West Peterborough (Prov.), H. E. C. 274.

Admissions of Counsel.] — The admission of counsel in open court, that the giving of $2 to a voter by an agent of the respondent, after such voter had voted, such yoter admitting that he did not know why the $2 was given to him, was bribery, acted upon, and the election avoided. Carleton (Prov.), H. E. C. 6.

A voter who had been frequently fined for drunkenness was canvassed by C, to vote for Vol. III. p-158-9 the respondent, and was asked by him "how much of that money" (paid in fines) "he would take back and leave town until the election was over." Counsel for the respondent admitted that C. was an agent of the respondent, and that the evidence was sufficient to avoid the election:—Held, that the election was void on account of corrupt practices by an agent of the respondent. Cornucall (Prov.), H. E. C. 203.

On the admission of the respondent's counsel the election was avoided, on the ground that agents of the respondent had, during the election hired and paid for teams to convey voters to the polls. Prince Edward (Prox.), H. E. C. 45.

The respondent was elected by a majority of 261, and at the trial counsel for the respondent admitted that there was evidence capable of being produced which would have the effect of avoiding the election under R. S. O. 1877 c. 10. s. 159; and the court on such admission declared the election void. Dufferia (Prov.), H. E. C. 550.

Admissions duly made upon an election trial may be acted upon as evidence of the facts admitted; but admissions as to how certain voters, whose ballots had been lost, voted, made before the registrar, when both parties were acting under the erroneous assumption that he had power to count the ballots, were held to be not binding. Lincoln (Prov.), 4 A. R. 206.

See Russell (Prov.), H. E. C. 199.

Admissions of Respondent—Bribery by Agent.] — Before the trial the respondent served a notice upon the petitioner, admitting that the election must be avoided on the ground of bribery by an agent without his knowledge or consent: such admission was acted upon at the trial, and the election avoided accordingly. North Sincon (Dom.), H. E. C. 624.

— Bribery by Agent—Petitioner Pressing Personal Charges.]—The respondent, a week before the trial, served a notice on the petitioner admitting bribery by one of his agents, and notifying the petitioner not to incur further costs. At the trial the respondent, pursuant to the notice, gave evidence of bribery by an agent, which the court held sufficient to avoid the election. The petitioner then contended that he had a right to shew that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, and that the respondent had been personally guilty of corrupt practices:—Held, that the functions of the court were indicial and not inquisitorial, and that no further evidence should be received on the issue as to the avoidance of the election on account of bribery by agents. But if incidentally it should appear, in the inquiry as to the personal charges against the respondent, that corrupt practices extensively prevailed, the same would be certified in the report to the Speaker. West Northumberland (Prox.), H. E. C. 562.

Disclosing Vote—Persons not Entitled to Vote—Counting Votes.]—Where it can be ascertained, by taking into account the number of votes proved by inspection of documents to have been cast for each candidate, and the whole number cast, and as a mere matter of calculation, that certain persons have voted and for which candidate they have voted, these votes may, on this evidence, be counted for the candidate for whom they were cast. The statement of a voter cannot be received as evidence that he voted or for whom he voted, either by proving statements so made or by calling the voter as a witness. The petitioner, being bound to establish affirmatively that the party for whom he claims the seat was duly elected, cannot diminish the respondent's majority by the votes of these who have been held not entitled to vote, when owing to the loss of papers and inadmissibility of other evidence it cannot be ascertained for whom they voted. Lincoln (Prox.), 4 A, R, 206

Persons not Entitled to Vote—Pleuding.]—Allegation, that forty persons whose names were not on the voters' list and who were not entitled by law to vote, did vote and voted for the respondent. Objection, that the matters alleged were not available, because the seat was not claimed for the defeated candidate, and because it could not be shewn that the forty votes were east for the respondent:—Held, that, though this objection came within East Elgin (Dom.), 4 A. R. 442, there appeared to be too much doubt about the question to strike out the allegation; for, semble, that a person who has voted without a right to do so is not entitled to the protection of the statute as to secret voting, and that an elector should not be prevented from shewing that the elected member obtained his majority through bad votes. West Huron (Dom.), 1 O. R. 432.

Foreign Commission.] — A commission to examine witnesses in a foreign country may be issued in the case of the trial of an election petition. Cornwell (3) (Dom.), H. E. C. So3, S. P. R. 64.

Notes of Evidence.]— The shorthand notes of the shorthand writer employed by the court to take down the evidence were not extended in his handwriting, but were signed by him:—Held, that the notes of evidence could not be objected to. Megantic (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 279.

Particulars—Liquor on Polling Day,!— A witness called on a charge in the particulars of giving spirituous liquors in a certain tavern on polling day, during polling hours, cannot be asked if he got liquor during poiling hours in other taverns. South Oxford (Prov.), II. E. C. 243.

Preliminary Objections — Evidence to Establish.]—See Megantic (Dom.), 8 S. C. R. 149

Proof of Petitioners' Status—Voters' List.]—At the trial of the petition, the returning officer, who was also the registrar of the county of Megantic, and secretary of the municipality of Inverness, was called as a witness, and produced in court in his official capacity the original list of electors for the township of Inverness, and proved that the name of L. McM., one of the petitioners whom he personally knew, was on the list. The original document was retained by the witness, and, as neither of the parties requested that the list should be filed, the Judge made no order to that effect. The status of the other petitioners was proved in the same way.—Held, that there was sufficient evidence that the petitioners were persons who had a right to vote at the election to which the petition related under 37 Vict. c. 10, s. 7 (D.) Megantic (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 279.

Telegrams — Production of—Agency,]— The court ordered the agent of a telegraph company to produce all telegrams sent by the respondent and his alleged agent during the election, reserving to the respondent the right to move the court of appeal on the point; the responsibility as to consequences, if it were wrong so to order, to rest on the petitioner, South Oxford (Prov.), H. E. C. 243.

Weight of Evidence — Finding — Bribery, —Where in ordinary cases there is evidence to go to a jury, but on which the Judge, if sitting as a juror, would find for the defendant; in similar cases in election trials he ought to find against the charge of bribery. West Toronto (Proc.), H. E. C. 97.

(f) Judges' Report.

Effect of — Corrupi Practices.] — The Judges' report to the Speaker as to those persons "other than the candidate," who have been proved guilty of corrupt practices, is not conclusive, so as to bring them within 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 49 (O.), and so render them liable to penal consequences. South Oxford (Prov.), H. E. C. 238.

The definition of "corrupt practices" in s. 3 and the effect of s. 20 of the Controverted Elections Act, 1873, as to the report of election Judges to the Speaker, considered. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

— Disqualification of Candidate—Disagreement of Trial Judges—Saving Clause—Subsequent Election, 1—A provincial election trial was held in 1883, before Boyd, C., and Cameron, J., who made separate reports, agreeing in avoiding the election under R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 161, by reason of respondent paying or consenting to the payment of the travelling expenses of certain voters to convey them to the poll; but differing in their judgments as to whether the respondent was guilty thereby of a corrupt practice under s, 161. Cameron, J., reported that respondent was proved guilty of said corrupt practice; and Boyd, C., reported that the respondent committed an illegal act under s. 154 in sanctioning such payment, but without any corrupt intent, and in ignorance, which was involuntary and excusable, under a belief that sa long as he did not personally bear or was involuntary and excusable, under a belief that as long as he did not personally bear or pay the said expenses it was not illegal, and under the fullest belief that the said voters were bound or were willing to repay the said expenses or allow them to be deducted from their wages. A subsequent election took place on 18th January, 1884, when respondent was elected. A petition was filed attacking his election on the ground of the prior disqualification of the respondent :-Held, affirming the judgment of the trial Judges, that the finding that the respondent was guilty of a corrupt practice was correct; and that he was therefore personally disqualified; and, as there was not a concurrent finding that he came within the relieving clause of s. 162, the disqualification was not removed; and that the amending Act 27 Vict. c. 4, s. 48 (O.) which was passed on 25th March, 1884, did not apply to this case. South Renfrew (Proc.), 1 E. C. 359. See 48 Vict. c. 2, s. 18 (O.)

Interim Certificate.]-The court cannot grant an interim certificate declaring an election void, as the statute contemplates only one certificate to the Speaker, certifying the result of the election trial Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 489.

Joint Report-Separate Reports-Objection—Waiver.]—On appeal from the decision of the trial Judges in this case (1 E. C. 70):
—Held, per Osler, J. A., that one joint report of the trial Judges under the hands of both is not essential; but there may be two separate reports each under the hand of one of the Judges. Quære, whether the certificate under R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, s. 55, of the result of the trial, should be joint; but that this was not now open to the respondent, for by his becoming a candidate at the subsequent election he must be taken to admit that the former election was on some ground or other regularly set aside. (g) Particulars.

Amendment of.]—Where a question is raised as to the sufficiency of the notice of objection to voters, the Judge may amend the particulars; giving time to the party affected by the amendment to make inquiries. Stormont (Proc.), H. E. C. 21.

At the trial of the petition, an amendment of the particulars as to corrupt practices will be allowed; and if the respondent is pre-judiced by the surprise, terms may be im-posed. Welland (Prov.), H. E. C. 47.

The respondent was elected by a majority of twenty-three, and on the trial of an election petition, filed to set aside his election for corrupt practices and illegal votes, evidence was given by both sides on a charge not propwas given by some same on a charge non-pop-erly set out in the petitioners' particulars of corrupt practices. At the close of the evi-dence the respondent objected that the charge was not in the particulars, and that it was not wrifted by the affidavit of the petitioners; not writted by the amdayit of the petitioners:

—Held, (1) that the petitioners might amend their particulars, and that the charges in the petition were wide enough to cover the charge. petition were wide enough to cover the charge, (2) That as to this charge, the parties had in fact gone into evidence without particulars, and that the petitioners' affidavit verifying the particulars was not necessary. Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 489.

On an application by the petitioner to amend the particulars by adding charges of bribery against the respondent personally, and his agents, his attorney made affidavit that different persons had been employed to collect information; that the new particulars only came to his knowledge three days before the application; and that he believed they were material to the issues joined:—Held, that, as it was not shewn that the petitioner or the persons employed could not have given the attorney the information long prior to the application, and as it was not sworn that the charges were believed to be true, nor were they otherwise confirmed, and as the amend-ment might have been moved for earlier, the application should be refused. South Norfolk (Dom.), H. E. C. 660.

The evidence in support of the offer of a The evidence in support of the other of a present, or something nice, to the wife of a voter to induce the voter to refrain from voting, shewing that it had reference to a different election than the one in question, an amendment of the particulars was refused and charge dismissed. Halton (Dom.), H.

Semble, that the powers of the Judge at the trial, as to amendment of the petition and particulars and postponement of the trial. should be liberally exercised, so as to prevent a failure of justice to either party.

Toronto (Prov.), 5 P. R. 436.

Application to Set aside - Acceptance -Forum.]-Where particulars were delivered after the time limited by the order for particulars, and apparently accepted, as they were not returned, an application made at the trial to set them aside was refused; such application should have been made in cham-bers before the trial. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

Better Particulars.] - Where particulars of alleged corrupt practices, &c., have been delivered under an order for that purpose, better particulars will not be ordered if those delivered substantially comply with the those derivered substantianly comply with the spirit of the order by giving all reasonable in-formation. Nor will better particulars be ordered even when the order is not complied with in furnishing certain details, provided the Judge to whom the application is made thinks these details unnecessary or unreasonable, nor unless the respondent can shew on affidavit that the want of such information will prejudice him in his defence. West Toronio (Prov.), 5 P. R. 436.

Charge not in Particulars—Evidence at Trial.]—Where evidence of an act of keeping open his tavern on polling days and selling liquor therein as usual, by P., an agent of the petitioner, came out on cross-examination, and during the argument the evidence was objected to because the charge was not in the particulars, the case was not considered. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

Costs of.]—The particulars not having been properly prepared, the petitioner, while obtaining the costs of the proceedings, was disallowed the costs of the particulars. East Northumberland (Dom.), H. E. C. 577.

Order for—llegal Votes—Rejected Votes—Corrupt Practices.]—Where the petition claimed the seat for the unsuccessful candidate on the grounds that (1) illegal votes and (2) improperly marked ballots were received in favour of the successful candidate, (3) good votes and (4) properly marked ballots for the unsuccessful candidate were improperly refused, and (5) the successful candidate and his agents were guilty of corrupt practices, and particulars of all such votes and ballots and corrupt practices were asked from the petitioner:—Held, (1) as to the illegal votes, that the 7th general rule prescribed the particulars to be given of votes objected to, and the time of filing and delivering the same, and a special order was not therefore necessary. (2) As to the improperly marked ballots and improperly registed ballots, since editing the particulars were ordered of the names, addresses, abode, and addition of persons having good votes, whose votes were improperly rejected at the polls; and particulars of the corrupt practices charged by the petitioner against the respondent, and his agents. Verification of—Appenl—Vagueness.]—In proceedings under the Controverted Elections Act, R. S. O. 1897 c. 11, it is sufficient to attach an affidavit of verification to the particulars filled, without serving an affidavit of verification on the respondent. It is too late on appeal from the judgment on an election petition to object to the insufficiency or vagueness of the particulars. North Waterloo (Proc.), 2 E. C. 76.

(h) Petition.

Affidavit of Petitioner—Grounds of Belief—Examination—Verifying Petition.]—By 54 & 55 Vict. c. 20, s. 3, amending the Controverted Elections Act. R. S. C. c. 9, an election petition must be accompanied by an affidavit of the petitioner "that he has good reason to believe and verily does believe that the several allegations contained in the said petition are true." The petitioner in this case used the exact words of the Act in his affidavit;—Held, that the respondent to the petition was not entitled on the hearing on preliminary objections to examine him as to the grounds of his belief. Held, further, that it was not necessary that the petition should be annexed to or otherwise identified by the affidavit, as in case of an exhibit, the references in the affidavit being sufficient to shew what petition was referred to. Lunenburg (Dom.), 27 S. C. R. 226.

Allegations and Form of Petition— Contents.]—Section 73 of the Dominion Elections Act of 1874, which provides for striking off votes equal in number to the corrupt votes, only applies where the sent is claimed. The claimes in the petition herein which did not claim the seat, framed under the above section, were therefore struck out, with costs to the respondent. East Elgin (Dom.), 4 A. R. 11, 412.

The 6th general rule in election cases does not preclude the statement of evidence in the petition; it renders it unnecessary, and is intended to discourage such pleading. South Oxford (Proc.), H. E. C. 238.

On a petitioner claiming the seat on a scrutiny, the court declined on a preliminary objection to strike out a clause in the petition, which claimed that the votes of persons guilty of bribery, treating, and undue influence, should be struck off the poll. The giver of a bribe, as well as the receiver, may be indicted for bribery; but quære, as to the effect on their votes respectively under the present state of the law, North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

An election petition need not shew the time at which the return of the respondent was published in the Gazette. Russell (Dom.), 1 O. R. 439.

An allegation in the petition "that the respondent was by himself, &c., guilty of corrupt practices as defined by the Controverted Elections Act of Ontario" sufficiently charges the commission of corrupt practices under ss. 152 and 153 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10. North Ontario (Prov.), 1 E. C. 1.

The petitioner, in his particulars delivered, charged the respondent with giving, or causing to be given, meat, drink, and refreshment to voters on polling day on account of their having voted or being about to vote, being a corrupt practice under R S. O. 1877 c. 10, s. 15%. The petition itself, however, merely charged that the respondent "before, during. at, and after the said election, was by his agents and by other persons on his behalf guilty of corrupt practices as defined by the Controverted Elections Act of Ontario, R. S. O. 1877 c. 11. s. 2:"—Held, at the trial, that this form of petition was objectionable, being hardly reconcilable with the intention of the legislature in requiring petitioners to file an affidavit with the petition stating that they had reason to believe and do believe the statements contained in the petition to be true in substance and in fact, and, moreover, the charge being only by reference to a statute, the affidavit in such case could only be in-telligently and honestly made by one who had informed himself of the provisions of the statute and applied to them some definite construction, and in any event the deponent would only be swearing to his own construc-tion of the statute, without stating what that construction was. Held, further, that, inas-much as "corrupt practices," so far as de-fined at all by R. S. 0, 1877 c. 11, were de-lared to mean "bribery, treating, and undue influence, or any of such offences, as defined by this or any other Act of the legislature, or recognized by the common law of the Par-liament of England," and also the violation of certain specific sections of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, among which s. 153 was not included and inasmuch as acts prohibited by s. 153 were clearly not corrupt practices under the common law of Parliament, nor is there any definition of "treating" in any of the Acts legislature, and therefore nothing to shew that it covers offences under s. 153, and therefore, inasmuch as there might be extended upon the face of the petition every offence covered by the description or definition of corrupt practices contained in the Controverted Elections Act of Ontario, and yet there would not be amongst them any charge under s. 153; therefore the petitioner could not sucunder s. 153, as he sought to do here, unless allowed to add it by way of amendment to his petition. On the cross-appeal of the petitioner on this point no judgment was given, the disposition of the respondent's appeal the disposition of the respondent's appear rendering it unnecessary to do so. Held, further at the trial, that such amendment could not be allowed, for R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, s. 9, sufficiently shews that the court has no jurisdiction to allow such an amendment, notwithstanding s. 2, s.-s. 1, and s. 43, of that Act, as does also the requirement of an affi-Act, as does also the requirement of all and davit inder s. 11. Maude v. Lowley, L. R. 9 C. P. 165 followed. Monck (Prov.), H. E. C. 154, 32 U. C. R. 147, distinguished. West Simooe (Prov.), 1 E. C. 128.

It is no objection to an election petition that it is too general (as by the Act it may be in any prescribed form) if it follows the form that has always been in use in the Provime. Moreover, any inconvenience from generality may be obviated by particulars. Luneuburg (hom.), 27 S. C. R. 226.

Wet Huren (Dom.), I. O. R. 433.

Alteration after Filing-Spoliators-Ratification.]—After an election petition had been filed, two clerks of the Toronto agents of the solicitor for the petitioner were allowed to compare it with an engrossed copy, and finding that the two were different, they altered the filed petition so as to correspond with the copy, adding in one place the word "treating," which had the effect of introducing a charge of a corrupt practice not in the original. The copy served upon the respondent after this alteration corresponded with the petition as altered. It was not shewn and it was denied that the petitioner knew of the alteration: Held, that the addition of the word "treating" was an alteration in a material part; but that the clerks in doing what they did were not the agents of the respondent or his solicitor. As the document was in the possession of the court, such an alteration made by persons who were mere strangers or spoliators had not the effect of The service of the petition in its altered condition could not, in the absence of knowledge of the alteration, be treated as a ratification by the respondent. It was ordered that the petition should be restored to its original state, and that the copy served should be amended to conform with the petition as it was when filed. Lincoln and Niagara (Dom.), 1 E. C. 428.

Amendment.]-The Judge trying an election case has power to amend the petition by allowing the insertion of any objection to the voters' list used at the election. Monck (Prov.), H. E. C. 154.

Hamilton (Prov.), 1 E. C. 499.

Clerk of Court—Preliminary Objections—Rules of Court.]—Held, that the Judges of the court of Manitoba not having Judges of the court of Manitoba not having made rules for the practice and procedure in controverted elections, the English rules of Michaelmas term, 1898, were in force (R. S. C. c. 9, s. 63) and that under rule 1 of the said English rules the petitioner, when filing an election petition, is bound to leave a copy with the clerk of the court to be sent to the returning officer, and that his failure to do so is the subject of a substantial preliminary objection and fatal to the peti-tion. Lisgar (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 1.

Filing—Place of—Mistake—Remedy for.]
—Held, that under 37 Vict. c. 10 (D.) the filing of an election petition in the local regis-trar's office at L'Orignal was not a presentation of the petition within the requirements of the statute, which requires the filing to be at the head office, and that no amendment could be made to validate such petition. Prescott (Prov.), 9 P. R. 481.

— Time for — Cross-petition.] — See Montmorency (Dom.), 3 S. C. R. 90.

Time for-Holiday.]-When time limited for presenting a petition against the return of a member of the House of Commons of Canada expires or falls upon a holi-day, such petition may be effectively filed upon the day next following which is not a holiday. (Leave to appeal to the privy council refused.) Nicolet (Dom.), 2 S. C. R. 178.

Time for-Return-Holidays.]-Held, that the twenty-one days limited filing an election petition after the return of the writ, are to be reckoned from the time of the receipt of the return of the clerk of the crown in chancery, and not from the time of mailing by the returning officer. Good Friday and Easter Monday are holidays with-Friday and Easter Monday are holidays within the meaning of the Act, and they are not to be reckoned in computing the twenty-one days. The joint effect of 23 Vict. c. 21 (0.) and the Ontario Interpretation Act, 31 Vict. c. 1, s. 7, s. s. 13, is, that when the word "holiday" is used, it includes the above days as "set apart by Act of the Legislature." West Toronto (Prov.), 5 P. R. 394, 31 U. C. R. 409.

(Dom.), 39 U. C. R. 139.

Parties-Agent - Disqualification.]-The petition, besides charging the respondent with various corrupt acts, charged one of his agents with similar acts, and claimed that the agent was subject to the same disqualifications and penalties as a candidate. The prayer of the petition asked that this agent might be made a party to the petition, and that he might be subjected to such disqualifications and penalties:—Held, that there is no authority in the Election Act or elsewhere, for making an agent of a candidate a respondent in a petition on a charge of personal misconduct on his part. (2) There is no authority given to the election court or the Judge on the rota to subject a person "other than a candidate," to such disqualifications. South Oxford (Prov.), II. E. C. 238.

Petitioner—Description—Amendment.]— Held, that the omission to set out in the petition the residence, address, and occupation of the petitioner, is a mere objection to the form, which can be remedied by amendment, and is therefore not fatal. Lisgar (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 1.

—Description—Occupation.]—The petition in this case simply stated that it was the petition of Angus Chisholm, of the township of Lochiel, in the county of Glenzarry, without describing his occupation, and it was shewn by affidavit that there were two or three other persons of that mame on the voters' list for that township—Held, that the petition should not be dismissed for the want of a more particular description of the petitioner, Glengarry (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 38.

status — Alica.]—The respondent attacked the qualification of one of the petitioners on the grounds that he was an alieu, and that he had no property qualification, having made an assignment in insolvency before the election. The Judge admitted the evidence, but:—Held, (1) that the evidence as to the petitioner having lived in the United States, without shewing that his parents were American citizens, was not sufficient to establish the charge of allengae. (2) That the Ontario Election Act of 1868, by the term "owner," gives to the husband whose wife has an estate for life or a greater estate, the right to vote in respect of his wife's property; and that the petitioner having that qualification, and being in possession of his wife's estate, was entitled to petition. Prescott (Prov.), II. E. C. 1.

New Petitioner, 1—A person by birth a British subject who has renounced his allegiance and become the subject of a foreign state, being an alien, has no status as a petitioner although on the voters' list. Terms upon which in such a case a new petition may be substituted. South Ontario (Prov.), 18 C. L. T. Occ. N. 321.

preliminary objections to an election petition, it was alleged in substance that the petitioner, who was a voter at said election, could not be a petitioner, because he had been guilty of corrupt practices at the election of members of the House of Commons within eight years before, and at the election complained of:—Held, that the objections must be disallowed, for that under 37 Vict. c. 9, s. 104 (D.), no disqualification arises until after the person has been found guilty, i. e., after conviction. South Huron (Dom.), 29 C. P. 301.

The fact that a petitioner in an election petition, with regard to the Ontario Legislature, has been guilty of corrupt practices during the election, is no objection to his status as a petitioner. As the Outario Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, makes no provision, as the Dominion Act does, as to the time in which preliminary objections must be taken, the special circumstances of such an application must determine whether it is made with sufficient promptitude. Dufferin (Prov.), 4 A, R. 420.

The respondent, on the opening of the case, charged that the petitioner was a candidate at the election, and as such candidate was guilty of corrupt practices, and therefore disqualified to be a petitioner. The Judge, without deciding whether the respondent had the right to attack the qualification of the petitioner, allowed the evidence to be given, but held the same to be insufficient. Prince Edward (Proc.), H. E. C. 45. See next case,

A petitioner in an election petition who has been guilty of corrupt practices at the election complained of, does not thereby lose his status as a petitioner. Except where there are recriminatory charges against the unsuccessful candidate, or for the purpose of declaring the petitioner's vote void on a scrutiny, the conduct of a petitioner at an election cannot be inquired into, and in this case there is no distinction between a candidate-petitioner and a voter-petitioner. Semble, that if the petitioner in this case was proved at the trial of the election petition to have been guilty of corrupt practices at the election complained of, the petition could not be dismissed. Dufferin (Prox.), H. E. C. 529, 4 A. R. 420.

A duly qualified voter is not disqualified from being a petitioner on the ground that he has been guilty of bribery, treating, or undue influence during the election. Disqualifications from corrupt practices on the part of a voter or candidate arise after he has been found guilty; there is no relation back. North Simcoe (Dom.), H. E. C. 617.

In order to disqualify the petitioner acting as such, the respondent offered to prove (1) that the petitioner had been reported by the Judge trying a former election petition as guilty of corrupt practices: (2) that the petitioner had in fact been guilty of corrupt practices at such election: and (3) that he had been guilty of corrupt practices at such election: and (3) that he had been guilty of corrupt practices at the election in question:—Held, that, such evidence, if offered, would not disqualify the petitioner as such. Held, that, as the petitioner did not on the petition claim the seat, evidence could not be gone into for the purpose of personally disqualifying him. Cornucall (3) (Dom.), H. E. C. 803.

Status—Property Qualification.]—
A candidate may be a petitioner although his property qualification be defective, if it was not demanded of him at the time of his election. If he claims the seat, his want of qualification may be urged against his being seated, but he may still shew that the respondent was not duly elected, if he so charge in his petition. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

- Status—Right to Vote.]—By preliminary objections to an election petition the respondent claimed that the petition should be dismissed because the petitioner had no right to vote at the election. On the day fixed for proof and hearing of the preliminary objections the petitioner adduced no proof, objections the petitioner adduced no proof, and the respondent declared that he had no evidence, and the preliminary objections were dismissed:—Held, per Ritchie, C. J., and Taschereau and Patterson JJ., that the onus Taschereau and Patterson 37, that the solubly probability was upon the petitioner to establish his status, and that the appeal should be allowed and the election petition dismissed. Per lowed and the election petition dismissed. Fer Strong, J., that the onus probandi was upon the petitioner, but in view of the established jurisprudence the appeal should be al-lowed without costs. Fournier and Gwynne, JJ., contra, were of the opinion that the onus probandi was on the respondent. Megantic probandi was on the respondent. Megantic (Dom.), 9 S. C. R. 163, discussed. Stanstead (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 12.

The petition was served upon the appellant on the 12th May, 1891, and on the 16th May the appellant filed preliminary objectious, the first being as to the status of the petitioners. When the parties were heard upon the merits of the preliminary objections no evidence was given as to the status of the petitioners, and given as to the status of the pertubbers, and the court dismissed the objections. On ap-peal to the supreme court:—Held, that the onus was on the petitioners to prove their status as voters. Stanstead (Dom.), 20 S. status as voters. Stanstead (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 12, followed. Bellechasse (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 181.

In this case the respondent, by preliminary objection, objected to the status of the peti tioner, and, the case being at issue, copies of the voters' lists for the electoral district were filed, but no other evidence offered, and the filed, but no other evidence offered, and the court set aside the preliminary objection "without prejudice to the right of the re-spondent, if so advised, to raise the same ob-jection at the trial of the petition." No ap-peal was taken from this decision, and the case went to trial, where the objection was renewed, but was overruled by the trial Judges, who held that they had no right to enterting it, and on the merits they allowed the petition and voided the election. There court of Canada, on the ground that the outper the court of Canada, on the ground that the onus was on the preparation of the supremers of the court of Canada, on the ground that the onus was on the preparadies to work their court of the court of was on the respondents to prove their status, and that their status had not been proved:— Held, that the objection raising the question of the qualification of the petitioner was propof the qualification of the pertubble was properly raised by preliminary objection and disposed of, and the Judges at the trial had no jurisdiction to entertain such objection: R. S. C. c. 9, ss. 12 and 13. Prescott (Dom.), c. 9, ss. 20 S. C. R. 196.

Held, that where the petitioner's status in an election petition is objected to by preliminary objection, such status should be established by the production of the voters' list actually used at the election, or a copy thereof certified by the clerk of the Crown in chancery: R. S. C. c. S, ss. 41, 57, and 65; c. 5, s. 32; and the production at the enquête of a copy, certified by the returning officer, of the list of voters upon which his name appears, but which has not been compared with the voters' list actually used at said election, is insufficient proof. Richelieu (Dom.), 21 S. C. R.

On the hearing of preliminary objections to an election petition, to prove the status of the petitioner a list of voters was offered, with a certificate of the clerk of the Crown in chan-cery, which, after stating that the list was a true copy of that finally revised for the dis-trict, proceeded as follows: "And is also a true copy of a list of voters which was used at said polling division at and in relation to an election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada for the said electoral dismons of Canada for the San electoral dis-trict . . which original list of voters was returned to me by the returning officer for said electoral district in the same plight and condition as it now appears, and said original list of voters is now on record in my office:"

—Held, that this was, in effect, a certificate that the list offered in evidence was a true copy of a paper returned to the clerk of the Crown by the returning officer as the very list used by the deputy returning officer at the pol-ling district in question, and that such list remained of record in possession of said clerk. It was then a sufficient certificate of the paper offered being a true copy of the list actually used at the election. Richelieu (Dom.), 21 S. C. R. 168, followed. Winnipeg (Dom.), Macdonald (Dom.), 27 S. C. R. 201.

Substituting — Jurisdiction.]—The court has no power in a proceeding under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act to substitute a new petitioner, unless either no day has been fixed within the time prescribed by statute or notice of withdrawal has been given by the petitioner; and where a petition came regularly down to trial, and the petitioner stated he had no evidence to offer, an application of a third party to be substituted as petitioner upon vague charges made on information and belief, of collusion in the dropping of the petition, which were contradicted, and of corrupt practices, was refused and the petition dismissed with costs. ——— Onus.]—The election petition in this case complained of the return of the respondent as member elect for the county of Megantic (P. Q.) for the House of Commons. gantic (P. Q.) for the House of Commons. The petition was met by preliminary objections, in which the sitting member alleged, inter alia, that the petitioners were not electrons, nor qualified to vote at the election in question, &c. A day having been fixed for the hearing of these preliminary objections, no evidence was given upon them, and they were dismissed, the trial Judge holding, following the practice adopted by the superior court of Quebec, sitting as an election court, in the L'Islet case, Duval v. Casgrain, 19 L. C. Jur. 16, that the onus probandi was on the respondent to support such objections. On appeal to the supreme court of Canada, the court being equally divided, the Judgment of the court below stood affirmed with costs. Megantic (Dom.), S. C. R. 199.

mala fide by other persons, is a matter of fact to be tried, and cannot be raised by preliminary objection. North Simcoe (Dom.), H. E. C. 617.

—— Status of Petitioner.]—An objection to the status of a petitioner cannot be taken by preliminary objection. Dufferin (Prov.), H. E. C. 529, 4 A. R. 420, —Striking out Appeal.]—The supreme court refused to entertain an appeal from the decision of a Judge in chambers granting a molection petition struck out for not being filled in time. Such decision was not one on preliminary objections within s. 36 of the Controverted Elections Act. and, if it were, no judgment on the motion could put an end to the petition. West Assimibaia (Dom.), 27 S. C. R. 215.

Time.]—As the Ontario Act. R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, makes no provision similar to that in the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. 1874. G37 Vict. c. 10), limiting the time within which preliminary objections to an election petition should be taken, the special circumstances of each case must determine whether the preliminary objections have been taken with sufficient promptitude. Dufferin (Proc.), H. E. C. 529, 4 A. R. 429.

Preliminary objections to an election petition under 37 Vict. c. 10 (D.), though presented after the expiration of five days from the service of the petition, are not void but at most irregular, and while they remain on the files of the court the petition is not at issue, and there can be no examination of the parties. Service — Copy—Certificate—Return.]—
A return by a bailiff that he had served an election petition by leaving true copies, "duly certified, with the sitting member, is a sufficient return. It need not state by whom the clear return. It need not state by whom the control of the copies are returned with the contents of the copies served will not be allowed to cross-examine the bailiff as to the contents of the copies served without producing them or laying a foundation for secondary evidence. Beauharnois (Dom.), 27 S. C. R. 232.

Notice — Evasion—Substitution.]—
It is not essential to the due service of the notice made necessary by s. 1 of 20 Vict. c. 23, that it should be made in the manner prescribed by that Act. Where, therefore, the sitting member removed himself and his family so as to avoid a personal service, and continued absent or concealed for the fourteen days allowed by the statute for personal service or service at his residence upon a grown copy of the notice on the door of his residence, and by leaving a copy with his brother, who was also his agent, was held sufficient. Essex (U. C.), 4 L. J. 70. Sec 8. C., 4 L. J. 71.

— Notice of Presentation.]—It is not essential under the Ontario Act, R. S. O. 1897 c. 11, s. 15, that a notice of the presentation of a petition should be served, where such notice is indorsed on the petition. Ottawa (Prov.), 2 E. C. 64.

— Order Extending Time—Re-service.]
—On the 15th April. 1891, the petitioner omitted to serve on the appellant, with the electron of the control of the electron of Order Extending Time—Service out of Jurisdiction.]—An order extending time for service of an election petition filed at Hallfax from five days to fifteen days, on the ground that the respondent was at Ottawa, is a proper order for the Judge to make in the exercise of his discretion under s. 10 of R. S. C. c. 9. Semble that the court below had power to make rules for the service of an election petition out of the jurisdiction. Shelburne (Donn.), 14 S. C. R. 258.

Out of Jurisdiction.]—A petition to unseat a member may be duly served out of the jurisdiction of the court; and it is not essential that an application should be made for leave to effect such service, or for allowing the service so made. West Algoma (Prov.), 2 E. C. 13.

— Personal—Out of Province—Order.]
—Election petitions against the return of members for electoral districts in Prince Edward Island were served personally on the respondents at Ottawa:—Held, that such service, without an order of the court, was a good service under s. 10 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. Queen's and Prince (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 20.

— Personal—Residence of Respondent — Order.]—Upon appeals from decisions of the supreme court of Nova Scotia dismissing preliminary objections to Dominion election petitions:—Held, that personal service on the respondents at Ottawa, with or without an order of the court at Halifax, or at the domicil of the respondents, was good service. Shelware, Anapolis, Lunenburg, Antigonish, Picton, and Inverness (Dom.), 20 S. C. R.

Residence of Respondent.]—The service of an election petition made in the Province of Quebec, at the defendant's law office, situated on the ground floor of his residence and having a separate entrance, by delivering a copy thereof to the defendant's law partner, who was not a member of, nor resident with, the defendant's family, is not a service within

s. 11 of c. 9, R. S. C. 1886, and Art. 57, C. C. P., and a preliminary objection setting up such defective service was maintained and the election petition dismissed. Montmagny (Dom.), 15 S. C. R. 1.

Held, that leaving a copy of an election petition and accompanying documents at the residence of the respondent with an adult member of his household, during the five days after the presentation of the same, is a sufficient service under s, 10 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, even though the papers served do not come into the possession or within the knowledge of the respondent. See 54 & 55 Vict. c, 20, s, 8. King's (N. S.) (Dom.), 19 S. C. R. 526.

— Residence of Respondent—Order Allowing Service.]—There is no power in the court or a Judge under s. 10 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, R. S. C. 1886 c.
9, to make an order within the first five days after an election petition is filed allowing service of such petition in any manuer other than that intended by the final part of the section.
But where under an order made within the five days a petition was directed to be served, among other modes, upon the wife of the respondent at his domicile at the village of D.:
—Heid, that, as service on the respondent "either personally, or at his domicile," was good service, within the meaning of the section, no order was necessary, and the fact that the service in this case was made under an order did not make it any the less a good service. Heidimand (Dom.), 1 E. C. 480.

(i) Recriminatory Charges.

Claim to Seat.]—Recriminatory charges are permitted in the interest of electors, in order to prevent a successful petitioner obtaining the vacated seat if he has violated any provision of the election law. North Victoria (Proc.), H. E. C. 252.

Where the right of the petitioner to claim the seat is decided adversely in one case, it is no prejudice to the respondent's case that other charges against the petitioner are not pronounced upon. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 250.

Withdrawal of.] — In an election petition claiming the seat for the defeated candidate, recriminatory charges were brought against the defeated candidate, and the trial Judge, after having found that the election of the sitting member should be set aside for corrupt practices, fixed a day for the evidence upon the recriminatory charges. Thereupon the petitioners withdrew the claim to the seat, and the Judge gave judgment avoiding the election:—Held, that s, 42 of c, 9, 18, S, C, no longer applied, and the Judge was right in refusing to proceed upon the recriminatory charges. Joliette (Dom.), 15 S, C, R, 458.

Mere Irregularities.]—J., the appellant, claimed under 37 Vict. c. 10, s. 66 (D.), that, if he was not entitled to the seat, the election should be declared void, on the ground of irregularities in the conduct of the election generally, and filed no counter-petition, and did not otherwise comply with the provisions of 37 Vict. c. 10:—Held, that s. 66 only applies to cases of recriminatory charges, and not to a case whether neither of the parties nor their agents are charged with doing any wrongful act. Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 947

Method of Trial.]—Where a charge of corrupt practices by way of a recriminatory case is alleged by a respondent against a petitioner, it may be reserved until the conclusion of the petitioner's case. North Simcoe (Prov.), H. E. C. 50.

Particulars—Costs, 1—Particulars of recriminatory charges delivered were allowed, but the petitioner was allowed to apply for time to answer the charges therein, and was given such costs as had been occasioned by the granting of the application. North Victoria (Prov.), H. E. C. 252.

(j) Reserving Special Case.

Doubt as to Law.]—A special case may be reserved for the opinion of the court of Queen's bench only when the Judge presiding at the election trial has a serious doubt as to what the law is; or believes that the court might entertain a different opinion from his. North York (Prov.), H. E. C. 62.

Powers of Trial Judge.] — Quere, whether, under 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 20, the rota Judge has power, before the close of the case, to reserve questions for the court. Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 139.

Question of General Importance—Abandonment of Case—Costs.]—Where a class of persons affected by the decision of a case is numerous, and the question involved is one of general importance, the Judge may reserve a special case for the opinion of the court of Queen's bench, and the Judge here decided to take that course. The peritioner, after such special case had been reserved, appeared before the Judge trying the election petition, and consented to the abandonment of the special case and the dismissal of the petition, with costs, and it was so ordered. West York (Prot.), II. E. C. 156.

See Monck (Prov.), H. E. C. 154.

(k) Security.

Deposit—Receipt—Deputy Prothonotary,1—In Prince Edward Island two members are returned for the electoral district of Queen's County. With an election pertition against the return of the two sitting members, the petitioner deposited the sum of $2,000 with the deputy prothonotary of the court, and in the notice of presentation of petition and deposit of security he stated that he had given security to the amount of $1,000 for each respondent, "in all, two thousand dollars," duly deposited with the prothonotary, as required by statute. The receipt was signed by the deputy prothonotary as required by the Judges, and acknowledged the receipt of $2,000, without stating that $1,000 was deposited as security for each respondent; —Held, that, there being at the time of the presentation of the petition security to the amount of $1,000 for the costs of each respondent, the security given was sufficient: ss. 8 and 9 (e), e, 9, R. 8, C. Held, also, that the payment of the money to the deputy prothonotary of the court at Charlottelown was a valid payment; s. 9 (g), c. 9, R. S. C. Queen's and Prince (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 26.

— Reccipt—Acting Prothonotary.]—
Upon appeals from decisions of the supreme court of Nova Scotia dismissing preliminary objections to Dominion election petitions:—
Held, that payment of the security required by s. 9 (e) of R. S. C. ISSG c. 9 into the hands of a person who was acting for the prothonotary at Halifax, and a receipt signed by such person in the name of the prothonotary, under s. 9 (g), were valid. Shelburne, Annapolis, Laucaburg, Antiponish, Pictou, and Internaces (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 169.

Receipt—Prothonotary, 1—The preliminary objection in the case was that the security and deposit receipt were illegal, null, and void, the written receipt signed by the prothonotary of the court being as follows:— "That the security required by law had been given on behalf of the petitioners by a sum of $1,000 in a Dominion note, to wit, a bank note of $1,000 (Dominion of Canada) bearing the number 2914, deposited in our hands by the said petitioners, constituting a legal tender under the statute of the Dominion of Canada now in force." The deposit was, in fact, a Dominion note of $1,000:—Held, that the deposit and receipt complied sufficiently with s. 9 (f) of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. Argenteuil (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 1934.

-Subsequent Disposition of.]—The deposit of $1,000 was given to the clerk at the time of the presenting the petition, but it was afterwards paid into a bank under the direction of the accountant of the supreme court.—Held, that having been properly paid to the clerk, the subsequent disposition of it could not affect the petitioner. Russell (Dom.), 1 O. R. 439.

Necessity for—Cross-petition.]—Under s. 13 of the Controverted Elections Act, R. S. O. 1887 c. 10, security for costs is required only in the case of the original or principal petition, and not in that of a cross-petition. Kingston (Proc.), 2 E. C. 110.

Payment into Court of Chancery.]—
A Dominion note for $81,000 was offered as security in this case to the registrar of the court of chancery, who stated to the petitioner's solicitors that he could not receive it, but directed them to make payment of it through the accountant of the court in the same manner as moneys were usually paid into court. The solicitors then paid the money into the bank to the credit of the matter of the petition according to the usual practice of the court of chancery:—Held, that the deposit of the security, as required by the Act 37 Vict. c. 10 (D.), was properly given. North York (Dom.), H. E. C. 749.

Payment out of Court — Mistake — Change in Courts, —One thousand dollars, the deposit required to be paid in on filing Dominion election petitions, was handed to D., who had been the clerk of the election court (then abolished), and was also clerk of the Queen's hench. The latter court, no petition having been filed in it, refused an order to pay the money out. Kingston (Dom.), 41 U. C. R. 310. See, also, S. C., 39 U. C. R. 139.

Persons Farmishing Money.]—When the money deposited in court as security for the costs of an election petition is not the money of the petitioner but belongs to other persons who furnished it on behalf of the petitioner, it may be paid out to the persons farmishing it, after the purpose for which it was deposited has been served, and a creditor of the petitioner has no claim upon it. The agreement by which the money was so deposited is not illegal as savouring of champerty and maintenance. Halton (Dom.), 12 C. L. T. Oce, N. 33.

Recognizance—Amount—Place — Surety—Magistrate.] — Held, that upon a petition against two members, under 36 Vict. c. 28 (D.), only the same security in amount need be given as upon a petition against one. 2. That the place where it was taken need not be shewn on the face of the recognizance. 3. That a country magistrate can take the recognizance in a city which has a police magistrate, if within his county. Hamilton (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 170.

— Validity.]—The recognizance filed in this case was in the usual form, but was not signed as directed by rule 24 of the general rules of the election court:—Held, that the recognizance was nevertheless valid. Niggrar (Dom.), 10 C. L. J. 249.

Substitution of Petitioner-Retention of Deposit—"Corrupt Bargain."]—The applicant, alleging that there was a corrupt agreement for the withdrawal of the petition in these cases, by which the petitions were to be allowed to lapse, each petitioner withdrawing the charges by him respectively preferred, applied to have himself substituted as petitioner in each case, and that the deposits made therein should remain as security for any costs that might be incurred by him; and for the appointment of a day of trial of such petitions:-Held, that under s. 2 of the Act 1875, the trial of election petitions must take place within the six months limited by that Act, unless postponed as therein directed and it appearing that the time so limited had expired prior to the application, it could not expired prior to the application, it could not therefore be entertained. Held, also, that, in any event, the deposits would not be directed to remain as such security, for, although the said agreement might be deemed in law to constitute a "corrupt bargain," yet that it would not be so under the statute 37 Vict. c. 10, s. 5 (D.), for that thereunder the motives and intent of the parties must be considered, and the evidence shewed that no corrupt bargain was intended. Kingston (Dom.), 30 C. P. 389.

See East Middlesex (Prov.), 2 E. C. 150; South Leeds (Dom.), 2 E. C. 1.

(1) Time for Trial.

Commencement of Trial—Sufficiency of.]—Where the proceedings for the commencement of the trial have been stayed during a session of Parliament by an order of a Judge, and a day has been fixed for the trial within the statutory period of six months as so extended, on which day the petitioners proceeded with their enquête and examined two witnesses, after which the hearing was adjourned to a day beyond the statutory period as so extended, to allow the petitioners to file another bill of particulars, those already filed being declared insufficient:—Held, that there was a sufficient commencement of the trial within the proper time, and the future proceedings were valid under s. 32, R. S. C. c. 9. Joictle (Dom.), 15 S. C. R. 458.

Enlargement—Expiry of Period—Motion to Diomiss.]—An order may be made extending the time for the trial of an election perition under 38 Vict. c. 10, s. 2 (D.), notwithstanding that six months have elapsed since the presentation of the petition, and though the application for such extension is not made within the six months. Semble, if the trial be not commenced within the six months, the respondent should move to dismiss the petition. Week Middlesse (Prov.), 10 P. R. 27.

— Expiry of Period—Order—Invalidity.]—The time within which the trial of an election petition must be commenced cannot be enlarged beyond six months from the presentation of the petition, unless an order has been obtained on application made within said six months. An order granted on an application made after the expiration of the six months is an invalid order, and can give no jurisdiction to try the merits of the petition, which is then out of court. Glengarry (Dom.), 14 S. C. R. 453.

— Expiry of Period—Power—Discretion.]—The time for the commencement of the trial may be enlarged under s. 33, R. S. C. 1886 e. 9. notwithstanding the expiration of the six months; but it had not been established in this case that the requirements of justice rendered such enlargement necessary; and the court refused to appoint a time and place for trial or to enlarge the time. Algona (Dom.), 1 E. C. 448.

spondent's Presence at Trial, 1—The petition was presented on the 6th May, 1887, during a session of parliament which ended on the 2drd June; no application was made or steps taken after that until the 6th December, 1887, when the petitioner applied to have a time and place appointed for trial and to have the time for the commencement of the trial enlarged. The first part of s. 32 of the Controlled Properties of the Co case, the time of the session of parliament was not to be excluded from the six months within which the trial was to be commenced. It was not incumbent upon the respondent to move to dismiss the petition for default. The court could not nune pro tune declare that the respondent's presence at the trial was necessary. Algoma (Dom.), 1 E. C. 448.

Orders—Notice of Trial—Appeal—Notes of Écidence, —On the 10th October, 1891, the Judge in this case, within six months after the thing of the election petition, by order enlarge of the eccenter of the commence of the trial to the for the commence of the trial to the for the commence of the trial to the former of the six months expiring on the 18th October and the 18th October another order was made by the Judge hixing the date of the trial for the 4th November, 1891, and 14 clear days notice of trial was given. The respondent objected to the jurisdiction of the court:—Held, that the orders made were valid; ss. 31, 33, c. 9, R. S. C. 1886. Held, also, 1st, that the objection to the sufficiency of the notice of trial given in the case under s. 50 (b) of c. 9, R. S. C., was not an objection which could be relied on in an appeal under s. 50 (b) of c. 9, R. S. C.; 2nd, that evidence taken by a shorthand writer, not an official stenographer of the court, but who has been sworn and appointed by the Judge, need not be read over to witnesses when extended. Pontiac (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 626.

Session - Order.] - On the 23rd April, 1891, after the petition in this case was at issue, the petitioners moved to have the respondent examined prior to the trial, so that he might use the deposition upon trial. The respondent moved to postpone such trial, the session, on the examination until after the session, on the ground that, being attorney in his own case, it would not "be possible for him to appear, it would not "be possible for him to appear, answer the interrogatories, and attend to the case, in which his presence was necessary, before the closing of the session." This motion was supported by an affidavit of the respondent stating that it would be "absolutely necessary for him to be constantly in court to attend to the present election trial," and that it was not possible "for him to attend to the present case, for which his presence is necessary, before the closing of the session," and the court ordered the respondent not to amer, until after the session of narnot to appear until after the session of parnot to appear until after the session of par-liament. Immediately after the session was over, on the 1st October, 1891, an application was made to fix a day for the trial, and it was fixed for the 10th December, 1891, and the respondent was examined in the interval. On the 10th December the respondent objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the trial had not commenced within six months following the filing of the petition, and the objection was maintained:-Held, the order was in effect an enlargement of the time for the commencement of the trial until after the session of parliament, and, therefore, in the computation of time for the commencement of the trial, the time occupied by the session of parliament should not be included; R. S. C. c. 9, s. 32. Laprairie (Dom.), 20 S. C. R. 185.

Objection Overruled at Trial—Appeal—Session.]—Held, that the decision of a Judge at the trial of an election petition overruling an objection taken by respondent to the Jurisdiction of the Judge to go on with the trial, on the ground that more than six months had elapsed since the date of the presentation of the petition, is appealable to the supreme court of Canada under s. 50 (b), R. S. C. 1886 c. 9. Glengarry (Dom.), 14 S. C. R. 453.

In computing the time within which the trial of an election petition shall be commenced, the time of a session of parliament shall not be excluded unless the court or Judge has ordered that the respondent's presence at the trial is necessary. Ib.

Order Before Trial—Motion to Dismiss—1ppeal.]—An order in a controverted election case made by the court below or a Judge thereof not sitting at the time for the trial of the petition, and granting or rejecting an application to dismiss the petition on the ground that the trial had not been commenced within six months from the time of its presentation, is not an order from which an appeal will lie to the supreme court of Canada under s. 50 of R. S. C. 1886 c. 9. L'Assomption (Dom.), Quebec (Dom.), 14 S. C. R. 429.

Order Fixing Time — Alteration.]—The day appointed for the trial of an election petition may be altered to an earlier day by consent of the parties, and by an order of the Judge. West Eigin (Proc.), H. E. C. 227.

— Forum.j—Held, that an order fixing the time for the trial of the petition in this case might be made by the three Judges of a divisional court, sitting together, or by any one of them sitting alone, and that it was in their discretion to dispense with notice of the application under the circumstances in this case. Semble, a Judge making such an order need not necessarily be sitting formally in court. Haldimand (Dom.), I. E. C. 480.

Session — Judgment Reserved — Delivery during Session, — Notwithstanding R. S. O. 1897 c. 11, s. 48, providing against the trial of a petition during a session or within 15 days from the close thereof, when judgment has been reserved after examination of witnesses and hearing and the arguments of counsel, the trial Judges may give judgment and issue their certificate and report at any time whether during or after a session. North Waterloo (Proc.), 2 E. C. 76.

— Undertaking of Member to Appear.]
—The provision in s. 32 of the Controverted Elections Act, R. S. C. 1886 c. 9, as to the suspension of proceedings during the session of parliament, is for the benefit of the sitting member, and if he is desirous of having the proceedings expedited, and undertakes to appear at the trial, a time for proceeding with the trial during the session will be named. South Perth (Hom.), 12 C. L. T. Occ. N. 317.

See Kingston (Dom.), 30 C. P. 389; Glengarry (Dom.), 12 C. L. J. 117; Addington (Dom.), 39 U. C. R. 131; Kingston (Dom.), 39 U. C. R. 139.

(m) Withdrawal of Charge or Petition.

Recommendation of Court — Substitution of Petitioner.]—The court recommended the petitioner to withdraw his petition in this case; and on an application for that purpose, another elector having applied to be substituted as a petitioner;—Held, that, as the court of appeal had been placed in possession of all the charges against the respondent, and of the evidence in support of them, and had recommended the withdrawal of the petition, and no sufficient additional grounds had been shewn for such substitution of petitioner, the order for the withdrawal of the petition should be granted. Pect (Prov.), H. E. C. 485.

Solicitor—Unange of—Right to Object to—Security—Time to Apply to Substitute Petitioner.]—The only person who can complain of an order changing solicitors in an election matter is the former solicitor, and his right can solicitor, and the right is a limited right; and the court will not censider it unless as a part of a scheme to get rid of the petition. An ordinary voter has no status to attack the order. Even if the applicant here had the right to move against an order allowing the petition to be withdrawn:—Held, on the evidence adduced, that there was no irregularity in the application to withdraw. Semble, even if there was reason to suspect collusion, the petitioner had the right to withdraw, but the Judge might order that the deposit should remain as security for the costs of a substituted netitioner. The proper time to make an application to substitute a petitioner is at the time the motion is made to withdraw the petition, and the Judge's power is limited in that respect. If no application is then made, and the order for withdrawal is granted, the petition is out of court and cannot be revived. Even if there was power to make such an order at a later period, it should be applied for within a reasonable time and full explanation of the delay given, neither of which conditions being compiled with and a delay of more than two months occurring:—Held, that the application here was too late. South Leeds (Dom.), 2 E. C. 1.

Leave to Withdraw.]—There being only one question raised, and if being disposed of, leave to withdraw the petition and for payment out of the deposit was granted, the court being satisfied that there had been compilance with all the prescribed formalities as to publication of notice of the application, and the bona fides of it. Centre Simcoe (Ont.), 31 C. L. J. 68.

Leave was given to withdraw the petition, the court being satisfied that there was no collusion, and that, holding a clear opinion in the respondent's favour on the question raised, a special case ought not to be stated for the opinion of the full court. South Norfolk (Proc.), 31 C. L. J. 68.

Willingness of Petitioner to Withdraw—Duty of Court—Corrupt Practices.]—Semble, if evidence shewed that corrupt practices had been committed by a respondent, it would be the duty of the court so to adjudicate, whether the petitioner was willing to withdraw the charge or not. South Kenfrew (Dom.), H. E. C. 556.

See South Essex (Dom.), 2 E. C. 6; South Ontario (Prov.), 18 C. L. T. Occ. N. 321; Kingston (Dom.), 30 C. P. 389.

(n) Other Cases.

Adjournment of Trial.]—After the trial of an election petition has been commenced the trial Judge may adjourn the case from time to time, as to him seems convenient. Joliette (Dom.), 15 S. C. R. 458.

New Trial.]—See Peel (Prov.), H. E. C.

Place of Trial — Order of Court — Adjournment.]—When a rule of court has been issued under the Controverted Elections Act, appointing a place for the trial not within the constituency the election for which is in question, the Judge by whom the petition is being tried has no power to adjourn, for the further hearing of the cause, from the place named in the rule of court to a place within such constituency. South Grey (Prov.), H. E. C. 52.

Postponement of Trial.]—The trial of an election petition should not be postponed without the applicant shewing very cogent and almost unanswerable grounds. In this case the reason given was that the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario was a necessary and material witness, and that he could not properly leave Toronto during the sittings of the house of assembly:—Held, not a sufficient reason. Held, that the application to postpone a trial allowed by 3S Vict. c. 10, s. 2, is confined to that part of the enactment relating to the proceeding of the trial de die in diem after it has commenced. Glengarry (Dom.), 12 C. L. 117.

38 Vict. c. 10, s. 2 (D.), enacts, trial of every election petition shall be commenced within six months from the time when such petition has been presented, and shall be proceeded with de die in diem, until the trial proceeded with deed of media, that the trait is over, unless on application supported by affidavit it be shewn that the requirements of justice render it necessary that a postponement of the case should take place." The petition here was filed on the 12th December, 1874. Hilary and Easter terms, and the session of parliament, took up three months and eleven days, so that under the Act the six mouths would not expire until the 21st Sep-1875. The trial having been fixed tember, 1875. The trial having been fixed for the 10th August, the respondent's attorney consented, without prejudice, to adjournment, and on the 30th July an order was made positioning the trial until a Judge should be able to attend. On the 22nd December, 1875, the trial was fixed for the 18th January ary, 1876, and afterwards by consent post-poned till the 2nd February:—Held, that the trial need not be commenced within six months in order to authorize a postponement, but that the commencement may be postponed beyond that time. Glengarry (Dom.), 12 C. L. J. 117, not followed. But, under the facts more fully stated in the report, it was held that the proceedings stayed. Addington (Dom.), 39 U. C. R. 131.

Principles of Law—English Decisions.]—The effect of s. 30 of 34 Viet. c. 3 (O.) is that the Judge is to act on the principles upon which election committees in England have acted where he has no light from the rules which his own professional experience supplies him with: and he is in addition to be bound by the decisions of the rota Judges in England trying elections under Acts similar to our own, in the same way as the courts feel bound by their judicial decisions in other legal matters. West Toronto (Prov.), H. E. C. 97.

Respondent's Answer.] — Where a respondent had filed certain preliminary objections to the petition, which were overruled, he was not allowed to insert similar objections in his answer, and the clause containing them was struck out. The respondent cannot, in his answer, set up that the petitioner was, by himself and his agent, guilty of corrupt practices, whereby he became disqualified to be a candidate. The court or a Judge has power on a summary application to strike out any allegations in an answer which are not an answer in law, and might be embarrassing at the trial to the petitioner. North Oxford (Dom.), S P.R. 526.

Settings of Divisional Court.]—Semble, that R. S. C. c. 9, s. 33, s.s. 2, does not prevent a Judge proceeding with the trial of an election petition pending the sitting of the divisional court of which he is a member. West Middlesex (Dom.), 1 E. C. 465.

Two Petitions — Separate Trials — Brucketing — Prothonotary.] — Two election petitions were filed against the appellant, one by A. C., filed on the 4th April, 1892, and the other by A. V., the respondent, filed on the 6th April, 1892, and the other by A. V., the respondent, filed on the 6th April, 1892. The trial of the A. V. petition was, by an order of a Judge in chambers, dated the 22nd September. 1892, fixed for the 26th October, 1892. On the 24th October the appellant petitioned the Judge in chambers to join the two petitions and have another date fixed for the trial of both petitions. This motion was referred to the trial Judges, who, on the 26th October, before proceeding with the trial, dismissed the motion to have both petitions joined, and proceeded to try the A. V. petition. Thereupon the appellant objected to the petition being tried then as no notice had been given that the A. C. petition had been fixed for trial, and, subject to such objection, filed an admission that sufficient bribery by the appellant's agent without his knowledge had been committed to avoid the election. The trial Judges then delivered judgment setting aside the election. On an appeal to the supreme court:—Held, 1st, that under s. 30 of c. 9. K. S. C., the trial Judges could not proceed with the petition in this case, because the two petitions filed had not been bracketed by the prothonotary, as directed by s. 30 of c. 9. K. S. C., was not an appealable judgment of decision: R. S. C.

(a) Assessment Roll and Voters' List.

Finality of List—Assessment Roll.]—The court will not go behind the voters' list to inquire whether a voter's name was entered upon the assessment roll in a formal manner or not. North Simcoe (Dom.), H. E. C. 617.

Attack on Names—Onus—Qualification—Mistake as to—Court of Revision Value.]—Special report, and observations on making the revised lists of voters final, except as to matters subsequent to the revision. See Stormont (Prov.), H. E. C. 21.

The name of the voter being on the pollbook is prima facie evidence of his right to

The name of the voter being on the pollbook is prima facie evidence of his right to vote. The party attacking the vote may either call the voter, or offer any other evidence he has on the subject. Ib.

A voter being duly qualified in other respects, and having his name on the roll and list, but by mistake entered as tenant instead of owner or occupant, or vice versa:—Held, not disfranchised merely because his name was entered under one head instead of another. Ib.

The only question as to the qualification of a voter settled by the court of revision under the Assessment Act, is the one of value. Stewart's vote, ib.

Being rated as tenant instead of owner:— Held, not to affect the vote. Blair's vote, ib.

Where the voter had only received a deed of the property on which he voted on the 16th August, 1870, but previous to that date had been assessed for and paid taxes on the place, but had not owned it:—Held, that not possessing the qualification at the time he was assessed, or at the final revision of the roll, he was not entitled to vote. Cakey's wote, ib.

Where the voter had been originally, before 1865 or 1866, put upon the assessment roll merely to give him to vote, have seen a request arrangement with his father, as well as the seen as the seen arrangement with his father, and apply the rest of the proceeds to his own support:—Held, that if he had been put on originally merely for the purpose of giving a vote, and that was the vote questioned, it would have been bad, but being continued several years after he really became the occupant for his own beneit, he was entitled to vote, though originally the assessment began in his name merely to qualify him. Gore's vote, ib.

The voter and his son leased certain property; the lease was drawn in the son's name alone, and when the crops were reaped the son asserted that they belonged to him solely. The voter owned other property, but was assessed for this only, and voted on it:—Held, that the vote was bad, Hill's vote, ib.

— Effect of M Vict. c. 21.]—Particulars for a security of votes were delivered by the respondent objecting to certain voters, as (1) aliens: (2) minors: (3) not owners, tenants, or occupants of the property assessed to them: and (4) farmers' sons not residing with their fathers upon the farm, as required by law. On a motion to strike out such particulars: — Held, that under the Voters Lists Finality Act, 41 Vict. c. 21, s. 3 (0.), the legality of the votes so objected to could not be inquired into, and that the particulars should be struck out. Held, further, that the effect of the Act was to render the voters' lists final and conclusive of the right of all persons named therein to vote, except where there had been a subsequent change of position or status, by the voter having parted with the interest which he had (or by the assessment roll appeared to have) in the property, and becoming also a non-resident of the electoral division. South Wentworth (Prot.), II. E. C. 531.

Name on Roll—Inconclusiveness—ment roll is conclusive as to the amount of the assessment; but the mere fact of the name of a person being on the roll is not conclusive as to his right to vote. The trurning officer is the authority of the starting officer is conclusive, in copying the voters' lists should not deprive legally qualified voters of their votes any more than the names of unqualified voters being on the list would give them a right to vote. But the mere fact that the lists were not correct alphabetical lists, or had not the correct number of the lot, or were not properly certified, or the omitting to do some act as to which the statute is directory, is no ground for setting aside an election, unless some injustice resulted from the omission, or unless the result of the election was affected by the mistake. North Victoria (Dom.), II. E. C. 584.

Mistake as to Polling Subdivision.]

—Where a voter properly assessed, who was accidentally omitted from the voters' list for polling subdivision No. 1, where his property lay, and entered on the voters' list for polling subdivision No. 2, voted in No. 1, though not on the list, his vote was held good. Little's vote, Brockeille (Proc.), H. E. C. 129.

Mistake as to Property.] — A.'s name appeared on the assessment roll and voters' list as owner, but no property appeared opposite his name; just below A.'s name, the name of B. was entered as tenant, with certain property following it, but B.'s name was not bracketed with A.'s. Evidence was admitted to shew that A. owned the property next below his name, for which B., his tenant, was assessed as tenant, and A.'s vote was held good. Baker's vote, ib.

If a man be duly assessed for a named property on the roll, even though there was a clerical error in describing such property in the voters' list, or erroneously setting down another property on the voters' list, if no question or difficulty arose at the poll as to the taking the oath, the vote will not be struck off on a scrutiny. S. C., 7 C. L. J. 221.

Different from List.]—The mistake of the number of the lot in the assessment roll does not come under the same rule as the mistake of a name, as the latter is provided for in the statute and the voter's oath. Place's vote, South Grenville (Prov.), H. E. C. 163.

Parol evidence is inadmissible on a scrutiny to alter the value assessed against property in the assessment roll. Stewart's vote, ib.

Where a voter was assessed for property which he sold on the 27th February, 1871, before the revision of the assessment roll, and was not assessed for other property of which he was in possession as owner or tenant, he was held not entitled to vote. Place's vote, ib.

A person assessed for land he does not own, though receiving rent for it from a tenant, is not qualified to vote. Clark's vote, Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 500.

A voter was assessed in two wards of a town: he parted with his property qualification in one of the wards, but voted in such ward:—Held, that the vote might be supported on the qualification in the other ward, which, if the voter had voted on it, would have made it necessary for him to vote in another polling division. Gibson's vote, ib.

Mistake as to Qualification—Voting in it rong Capacity.]—The respondent was elected by four votes. At the election the names of twelve persons who were entered on the assessment roll as "freeholders," appeared on the voters' lists, owing to a printer's mistake, as "farmers sons. Their votes were challenged at the poil, and they were required by the petitioner's scrutineers to take the farmers' sons oath, which they refused. Subsequently they oftered again to vote and to take the owner's oath, and the deputy returning officer, who was also clerk of the municipality, knowing them, gave them ballot papers and allowed them to vote.—Held, (1) that having been rightly entered on the assessment roll, the mistake as to their qualification on the voters' list did not disfranchise them. (2) That their refusal to take the farmers' son's oath was not a refusal to take the oath required by law. A refusal to swear is where a voter refuses to take the oath appropriate to his proper description. (3) That having a right to vote, although they voted in a wrong capacity, their votes could not be struck off. Semble, that the provisions of the law as to how voters are to be entered on the voters' list in respect to their property, and as to the manner in which they are to you, are directory. Prescott (Dom.), H. E. C. 789.

Omission of Names — Tendered Votes.]
—The names of certain persons who were qualified to vote at the election appeared on the last revised assessment roll of the municipality, but were omitted from the voters' instrumined to the deputy returning officer, and used at the election. They tendered their votes at the poll, but their votes were not received; and a majority of them stated to the deputy returning officer that they desired to vote for the petitioner. The petitioner had a majority without these votes:—Held, no ground for setting aside the election. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

Where all the requisite preliminaries in the preparation of voters' lists under the Act had been duly observed, but in one of the printed copies delivered to the county court Judge, and certified to by him, two pages containing voters' names were accidentally omitted, and this defective copy was sent by the Judge to the clerk of the peace, who from such copy certified to the returning officer similarly defective lists, which were used at the election:—Held, that the voters whose names were so omitted were entitled to vote by "tendered ballot," and their votes should be counted on a scrutiny. Semble, that the effect of ss. 72 and 103 of the Ontario Election Act, 1887, is that where a person who has a right to vote is omitted from the list he may vote by tendered ballot. East Durham (Prot.), 1 E. C. 489.

Previous Year's Assessment—Qualification Arising Subsequent to Final Revision of Roll—Frecholders—Tenants.]—Where the assessment for a city, on which the rate for the year 1898 was levied and the voters' list Proper List at Election—Irregular List
-Itesuit.]—Held, (1) that the proper list of voters to be used at an election is "the last list of voters made, certified, and delivered to the clerk of the peace at least one month before the date of the writ to hold such election." (2) That an irregular voters' list had been used in one of the townships in the electoral division; but that the result of the election had not been affected thereby, and that the election was not avoided. Monck (Prov.), II. E. C. 154.

Held, following the last case, that the list of voters to be used at an election must be the list, made, certified, and delivered to the clerk of the peace at least one month before the date of the writ to hold such election. Prince Edward (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 160.

The list of voters used at the election in the township of Hillier was not filed until the 28th November, 1871, and the writ of election was dated 9th December, 1871:—Held, that the list of voters of 1871 should not have been used, and the sent was thereupon awarded to the other candidate, he having obtained on a scrutiny a majority of the votes. Ib.

- Triplicate.]—Any one of the three voters' lists regularly prepared, and certified to by the county court Judge under the Voters' Lists Acts, is "the proper list to be used," and n case of irregularity in, loss or destruction of, or other accident to one, the other or others may be resorted to for the purpose of the election. East Durham (Prov.), 1 E. C. 489.

Sufficiency of Description of Property.]—The right of a voter, whose name has been entered on the voters' list, to exercise the franchise, is not destroyed under 32 Vict, c, 21, ss. 5-7 (O.), by the want of a sufficient or of any description of the real property on which his qualification depends. The provision requiring such description to be inserted is directory only, and does not make it essential to the right to vote; and this, notwithstanding the enactment in s.-s. 3 of s. 7, that the time therein mentioned should be directory only, the maxim expressio unius, &c., not being applicable. Per Moss, C.J.A.—The description must be accepted as sufficient where it is the same as that given in the assessment roll, as it was in this case. Lincoln (Prov.), 2 A. R. 324.

See South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 30; East Elgin (Prov.), ib. 100; McVittie v. O'Brien, 27 O. R. 710. (b) Court of Revision and County Court Judge—Complaints and Appeals.

Certificate of Judge-Time-Finality.] The assessment roll of a municipality was finally revised and corrected by the court of revision on the 31st May, 1882. The clerk of the municipality prepared the voters' list therefrom, and on the 7th September, 1882 posted a copy thereof in his office, as required by R. S. O. 1877 c. 9, s. 3. He transmitted copies of the list to some, but not to all the persons entitled to receive them under ss. 3 and 4, and no complaints having been received by him up to the 30th October, he on that day signed the certificate and report mentioned in 11 of the Act, and obtained the certificate of the deputy Judge of the county court on three copies of the list as being the revised The Judge list of voters for the municipality. of the county court found that the clerk's certificate was false, and made with intent to deceive the deputy Judge, and that the clerk had designedly withheld the lists; and he there-fore set aside the clerk's certificate and the certificate of the deputy Judge:—Held, that as soon as the list is posted up in the clerk's office the time for making complaints in respect of it begins to run; that such time being by s. 9 expressly limited to thirty days from the posting up of the list, and no complaint having been made within it, the deputy Judge was bound to certify; that the omission to transmit the copies, whether negligent or wil-ful, could not authorize an extension of time; and that the deputy Judge's certificate was final, and could not be set aside. In re-Voters' List of L'Orignal, In re-Johnson, 9 P. R. 425.

Court of Revision — Refusal to Hear complaints — Appeal — Mandamus.] — By Complaints — Appeal — Mandamus.] — By s. 13, s.-s. 1, of the Manhood Suffrage Act, Vict. c. 4 (O.), it is provided that complaints of persons not having been entered on the roll as qualified to be voters who should have been so entered, may, by any person en-titled to be a voter or to be entered on the voters' list, be made to the court of revision as in the case of assessments, or plaints may be made to the county Judge under the Voters' Lists Act. By s. 61 of the Assessment Act. R. S. O. 1877 c. 193, it is provided that the court of revision of each municipality shall meet and try all complaints in regard to persons wrongfully omitted from the roll; and by s. 68, s.-s. 1, that an appeal to the county Judge shall lie, not only against a decision of the court of revision on an appeal to that court, but also against the omission, neglect, or refusal of said court to hear or decide an appeal. The court of revision of a municipality refused to hear or adjudicate upon a complaint made by M. under s. 13 of the Manhood Suffrage Act, that the names of the certain persons had been wrongfully omitted from the assessment roll:-Held, that it was the duty of the court of revision under s. 61 to try the complaint made by M.; and that if no other complete, appropriate, and convenient remedy had existed, M. would have been entitled to a mandamus to compel the court to perform its duty; but, as the legislature by s. 68 had given a specific remedy for this very breach of duty, by appeal to the county Judge, M. was not entitled to a mandamus. The right which M. was seeking to enforce was to have the names of certain persons placed on the assessment roll; not, as was contended, to have his complaint disposed of by the court of revision; the complaint to the court of revision was a means of enforcing his right, not the right itself. In re Marter and Court of Revision of Town of Gravenhurst, 18 O. R. 243.

Duty of Judge—Revision of Lists—Adding Names—Nulity—Income—Assessment.]—The duty of a Judge in revising the voters' list under 37 Vict. c. 4 (O.), only extends to correcting and varying it in respect of the qualification of those who are before him on the revision; and he has no authority to decide who is entitled to vote. Lincoln (Prov.), 2 A. R. 316.

Upon a revision of the voters' list under 37 Vict. c. 4 (O.), the Judge, without making any order in accordance with s. 11 of that Act, added certain names which were not on the assessment roll, and made no mention in the list of the property or income upon which they were rated:—Held, that the added list was a nullity. Ib.

Under 37 Vict. c. 4 (O.), the Judge has no power to add to the voters' list in respect of income any person or persons who are not assessed for income in the last revised assessment roll. Ib.

Notice of Complaint—Expire of Time ——Omission to Notify Voter—Ilandamus.]
——Comission to Notify Voter—Ilandamus.]
——Luder 30 Vict. c. 10, s. 1, persons qualified to vote, whose names are onitted from the voters' list, must, in order to have the omission rectified, notify the cierk of the municipality with said list, of their intention to make application therefore the complete of the property of the assessment coll for income, was, without any notice to him, erased by the court of revision, and was in consequence omitted by the clerk from the voters' list. The applicant did not discover the omission until after the expiration of the thirty days, when he made application to the clerk to have his name inserted in the list, and on his refusal to do so he applied for a mandamus to the county Judge and clerk to make the insertion:—Held, that the application must be refused. In re Bronning and Judge of County Court of Wentworth, 43 U. C. R. 13.

Loss of—Parol Evidence.]—A list of appeals, containing names sought to be added to the voters' lists, was prepared, and a voter's notice of complaint in form 6 to the Ontario Voters' Lists Act, R. S. O. 1897 c. 7, was signed by the complainant, attached to the list of names to be added, and handed to the clerk in his office within the thirty days required by the statute. When the list was produced by the clerk in court, the notice of complaint was missing.—Held, that it was competent for the Judge to hear and receive parol evidence as to the form and effect of the notice in question and of its loss; and that, upon his being satisfied by such evidence that a sufficient notice of complaint was duly left with the clerk, the complaint might be dealt with. Re Voters' Lists of Marmora and Lake, 2 E. C. 162.

Service on Clerk—Registered Letter.] — A notice of complaint, with list of names, was received by the clerk through the mail by registered letter, in due time:—Held, that s, 17 (1) of the Voters' Lists Act. R. S. O. 1897 c. 7, had been compiled with. Re Voters' Lists of Madoc, 2 E. C. 165.

signing—Validity.]—Held, that the a complaint of any error or omission in the voters' list, must be signed by the voter giving the same or his agent. The name in the beginning is not a sufficient signature. Semble, that the question of the validity of the notice an be raised before the Judge hearing the appeal, after it has been received and entered in the list of appeals, the clerk who receives and enters it having no judicial duty to perform. In re Simpson and County Judge of Lanark, 9 P. R. 358.

Order of Judge—Hearing of Complaints—Juvidiction — Time — Interference with Election Officers—Prohibition.]—The voters' lists for the city of St. Thomas were posted up in the office of the city clerk, on 23rd October, 1886. On the 19th November, three days before the time for giving, by a voter, notice of any complaint against the list, had expired, the clerk made a report to the county Judge in the form No. 7 in the schedule to the Voters' Lists Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 9; and the said Judge thereupon, on said 19th November, 1886, for the holding of a court to hear complaints of errors and omissions in the said voters' list, and notice of the time and place thereof was duly published in a newspaper published in said city. Previous to the 19th November, notice of a number of complaints of errors and omissions in the list was given to the clerk. On an application for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the county Judge from holding the court, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make the order, inasmuch as the thirty days for filing appeals had not then expired:—Held, that the county court Judge had jurisdiction to make the order, inasmuch as the thirty days for filing appeals had not then expired:—Held, that the county court Judge had jurisdiction to make the order, and the application was therefore refused with costs. Per Cameron, C.J.—The appeal or complaint made within the thirty days after the clerk has posted the voters' list would be in time, and should be disposed of, whether made after the order for holding the court or not; but quere, whether the Judge could deal with such appeals at the 30th November court. Per Cameron, C.J.—Quære, whether the court last he right to interfere with election officers, except where express statutory power to do so is given. Per Rose, J.—Under the Voters' Lists Act, the Judge is not confined by the report of the clerk, but may and should hear all appeals. In re Revision of Voters' List of 8t. Thomas, In re Boyes, 13 O. R. 3.

Status of Complainants.]—Under 37 Vericht to examine and decide whether the person objecting to any votes in the list of voters is a voter or person entitled to be a voter, although such complainant may appear on the roll as duly qualified. The Judge having found as facts, on the evidence before him, that one of the two complainants did not give the notice of his complain required by s. 6, and that the other was not entitled to be a voter:—Held, that his decision could not be reviewed. In re Parsons and Toms. Re Voters' List of Goderich, 36 U. C. R. SS.

Voters' List—Signature of Clerk—Irregularity.]—The list of voters required to be Vol., III. p—159—10 posted to various persons under 37 Vict. c. 4 (O.), was prepared and certified by the clerk of the municipality, ready for transmission on a certain day, but he died before that day came, and they were in fact transmitted by his successor without any alteration in the certificate. They were regular in every respect, with this exception:—Held, that, as 8. 3 of 37 Vict. c. 4 was only directory, and as the object of the statute was fulfilled to all intents and purposes, the list was sufficient to give jurisdiction to the county Judge to revise it. In re Revision of Voters' Lists of Township of Goderich, 6 P. R. 213.

(e) Disquilification.

Crown Lands Agent — Security.]—By order in council the defendant was appointed agent for the location and sale of lands under the Free Grants and Homesteads Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 24. By letter from the Crown lands department, the defendant was instructed to enter upon his duties respecting the location of free grants, but not to sell lands or receive money until he had given the usual security. By I. S. O. 1877 c. 19, S. 4, all "agents for the sale of Crown lands," amongst other persons, are disquallified from voting at elections for the legislature, under a penalty. The defendant, before he had given the necessary security, voted at an election for the legislature: —Held, that he was an agent for the sale of Crown lands within the meaning of the section, and therefore liable to the penalty imposed, Whether or not the defendant was such an agent is a question of law and not a question for the jury. Srigley v. Taylor, 6 O. R. 108.

Forfeiture of Vote—Statute—Construction.] — The words "illegal and prohibited acts in reference to elections," used in 34 Vict. c. 3, s. 3 (O.), mean such acts done in connections with, or to affect, or in reference to elections; not all acts which are illeral and prohibited under the election law. The right to vote is not to be taken away or the vote forfeited by the act of the voter unless under a plain and express enactment, for it is a matter in which others besides the voter are interested. Brockville (Prov.), 32 U. C. R. 132.

Postmaster — Penalty.] — Held, that a postmaster of a city is not liable to a penalty for voting at an election for a member of the house of commons of the Dominion. But, semble, he is not entitled to vote, and should he do so his vote might be struck off on a scrutiny. Savage v. Deacon, Smythe v. Deacon, 22 C. P. 441.

See ante 5.

(d) Income Qualification and Manhood Suf-

Requirements of Statute.] — A voter whose qualification is successfully attacked may shew a right to vote on income; but in such case he must prove that he has compiled with all the requirements of the Act which are essential to qualify him to vote on income. Gray's vote, Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 590

"Resided Continuously"—Meaning of.]—The provision of s. 8 of the Ontario Voters' Lists Act, R. 8. O. 1897 c. 7, that persons to be qualified to vote at an election for the legislative assembly, must have resided continuously in the electoral district for the period specified, does not mean a residence de die in diem, but that there should be no break in the residence: that they should not have acquired a new residence; and where the absence is merely temporary, the qualification is not affected. Where, therefore, persons resident within an electoral district, and otherwise qualified, went to another Province merely to take part in harvesting work there, and with the intention of returning, which they did, their absence was held to be of a temporary character, and their qualification was not thereby affected. Re Voters' Lists of Seymon, 2 E. C. 63).

(e) Naturalized Subjects and Aliens.

Certificate of Naturalization.] — Naturalized subjects are not required to procure certificates of naturalization in order to entitle them to vote. West Elgin (U. C.), 9 L. J. 320.

— Outh of Allegiance, 1—An alien who came to Canada in 1850, and had taken the oath of allegiance in 1861, but had taken no proceedings to obtain a certificate of naturalization from the court of quarter sessions, was held not qualified to vote. Bacon's vote, Brockville (Proc.), H. E. C. 129.

An alien whose father had taken the oath of allegiance on obtaining the patent for his land under 9 Geo. IV. c. 21:—Held, not qualified to vote. Healey's vote, ib.

Oath of Allegiance—Administration of.]—Certain sliens had taken the oaths of allegiance, &c., before a justice of the peace of a town, which oaths were administered to then in a township, but within the same county:
Held, that under the Alien Act, 34 Vict. e. 22, s. 2 (D.), the justice of the peace, in administering the oaths, was acting ministeringly and not judicially; and that the oaths were properly administered. Johnson's vote, Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 500.

Place of Birth — Evidence.] — The evidence that the parents of a voter had stated to such voter that he was born in the United States, but that his father was born in Canada, received, and the vote held good. Wright's vote, Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 129.

Evidence—Oath at Polls—Naturalization—Presumption,1—Where evidence was given of parol admissions made by certain voters, some years before the election, that they had been born in a foreign country, and also evidence that since the parol admission the voters had voted at parliamentary elections, and had taken the voter's oath as to being British subjects by birth or naturalization:—Held, (1) that the oath at the polls could not be treated as testimony, not having been given in any judicial proceeding. (2) That by swearing at the polls he was a British subject by birth or naturalization, the voter only stated the legal result of certain facts. (3) That there was therefore no presumption of naturalization sufficiently strong to rebut the presumption of the continuance of the original status of alienage. Shenek's vote, Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 500.

Where a voter, in support of his own vote, swore that he was born in the United States but that his parents were British subjects:—
Held, that the whole statement of the voter must be taken, and that it amounted to this:
"I was born in the United States of British parents." Mulrennań vote, ib.

— Parentage — Residence.] — Where the voter was born in the United States, his parents being British-born subjects, his father and grandfather being U. E. Loyalists, and the voter residing nearly all his life in Canada:—Held, entitled to vote. Place's cote, Stormont (Prov.), H. E. C. 21.

See Hamilton (Prov.), 1 E. C. 499; South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 30; South Ontario (Prov.), 18 C. L. T. Occ. N. 321.

(f) Property Qualification. (See ante (a)).

How Regulated.] — Held, that by the Dominion Election Act of 1873, the qualification of voters to the house of commons was regulated by the Ontario Act. North Victoria (Dom.), H. E. C. 584.

Husband and Wife.]—Where the owner died intestate, and the husband of one of his daughters leased the property and received the rents, such husband was held not entitled to vote. Leslie's vote, Brockville (Prov.), H. E. C. 129.

Where a husband had possession of a lot for which he was assessed as occupant and his wife as owner, but which belonged to the wife's daughter by a former husband, his vote was held good. Whaley's vote, ib.

Parent and Son.1—Where a father was hard agreement "to have his living off the place," the son being owner and in occupation with the father, the father was held not entitled to vote. Wittse's vote, ib.

Where it was proved that an agreement existed (oral or otherwise) that the son should have a share in the crops as his own, and such agreement was bonh fide acted on, the son being duly assessed, his vote was held good; the ordinary test being; had the voter an actual existing interest in the crops growing and grown? Caldwell, Moore, and Smith's rotes, ib.

Where it was proved that for some time past the owner had given up the whole management to his son, retaining his right to be supported from the product of the place, the son dealing with the crops as his own, and disposing of them to his own use, the son's vote was held good. Ib.

But where such crops could not be seized for the son's debt, the son was held not entitled to vote. Francis's vote, ib.

Where the agreement did not shew what share in the crops the son was to have with his father, and it appeared to be in the father's discretion to determine the share, such son was held not entitled to vote. Johnson's rate, th.

The widow of an intestate owner continuing to live on the property with her children, who own the estate and work and manage it, should not, till her dower is assigned, be assessed jointly with the joint tenants, nor should any interest of hers be deducted from the whole assessed value. Where, therefore, four joint tenants and such dowress occupied property assessed for $900, the joint tenants were held entitled to the qualification of voters. Glrop's vote, ib.

Where the father had made a will in his son's favour, and told the son if he would work the place and support the family he made the place and support the family he made the told give it to him, and the entire management remained in the son's hands from that time, the profits to be applied to pay the debt due on the place:—Held, that, as the understanding was that the son worked the place for the support of the family, and beyond that for the benefit of the estate, which he expected to possess under his father's will, he did not hold immediately to his own use and benefit, and was not entitled to vote. Weart's vote, Stormont (Prov.), H. E. C. 21.

Where the objection taken was that the voter was not at the time of the final revision of the assessment roll the bona fide owner, occupant, or tenant of the property in respect of which he voted; and the evidence shewed a joint occupancy on the part of the voter and his father on land rated at $240:

—Held, that the notice given did not point to the objection that if the parties were joint occupants, they were insufficiently rated, and as the objection to the vote was not properly taken, the vote was held good. The court intimated that if the objection had been properly taken, or if the counsel for petitioner (whose interest it was to sustain the vote) had stated that he was not prejudiced by the form of the objection, the vote would have been held bad. Baker's tote, ib.

Where a certain occupancy was proved on the part of the son distinct from that of the father, but no agreement to entitle the son to a share of the profits, and the son merely worked with the rest of the family for their common benefit:—Held, that, although the son was not merely assessed for the real but the personal property on the place (his title to the latter being on the same footing as the former), he was not entitled to vote. Raney's rote, th.

Where the voter and his son leased certain property, and the lease was drawn in the son's name alone, and when the crops were reaped the son claimed them as belonging to him solely, the voter owning other property, but being assessed for this only and voting on it:—Held, that he was not entitled to vote. Hill's vote, ib.

Where father and son live together on the father's farm, and the father is in fact the principal to whom money is paid, and who distributes it as he thinks proper, and the son has no agreement binding on the father to compel him to give the son a bare of the proceeds of the farm, or to cultivate a share of the land, but merely receives what the father's sense of justice dictates:—Held, the son has no vote. Eamon's vote, ib.

In a milling business where the agreement between the father and son was, that if the son would take charge of the mill and manage the business, he should have a share of the profits, and the son, in fact, solely managed the business, keeping possession of the mill, and applying a portion of the proceeds to his own use:—Held, that the son had such an interest in the business, and while the business lasted such an interest in the land, as entitled him to vote. Bullock's vote, ib.

Where the voter was the equitable owner, the deed being taken in the father's name, but the son furnishing the money, the father in occupation with the assent of his son, and the proceeds not divided:—Held, that being the equitable owner, notwithstanding the deed to the father, he had the right to vote. Blair's vote, ib.

Where the voter had been originally, before 1865 or 1866, put upon the assessment roll merely to give him a vote, but by a subsequent arrangement with his father, made in 1865 or 1866, he was to support the father, and apply the rest of the proceeds to his own support:—Held, that if he had been put on originally merely for the purpose of giving a vote, and that was the vote questioned, it would have been bad; but being continued several years after he really became the occupant for his own benefit, he was entitled to vote, though originally the assessment began in his name merely to qualify him. Gorés vote, ib.

Where an oral agreement was made between the voter and his father in January, 1870, and on this agreement the voter from that time had exercised control, and taken the proceeds to his own use, although the deed was not executed until September following:—Held, he was entitled to vote. Gollinger's vote, ib.

Where a father had made a will devising a lot to his son, who was assessed for it, and the son took the crops except what was used by the father, who resided on the lot with his wife, the son residing and working on another farm:—Held, that the son had not such a beneficial interest in the lot as would entitle him to vote. Mullin's vote, South Grenville (Prov.), H. E. C. 163.

Where the owner of a lot told his son that he might have the lot, and advised him to get a deed drawn, and the lot had been assessed to the son for three or four years, and was reuted to a tenant by the father with the consent of the son, who paid to the father his wages, but the father collected the rent:

—Held, that, as there was nothing but a voluntary gift from the father to the son, without possession, the son's vote was bad. Landy's vote, ib.

Where the owner of mortgaged property died intestate, leaving a widow and sons and daughters, and the property was sold under the mortgage, and the deed made to the widow, but three of the sons furnished some of the purchase money and all remained in possession, and the eldest son was assessed as occupant:—Held, that, as the eldest son did not shew that the property was purchased for him, and the presumption from the evidence being that it was bought for the mother, such eldest son had no right to vote. Morrow's vote, ib.

Partners and Joint Owners. |—Where a son was assessed at $7.00 for a farm in which he and his father were partners, in the proportion of three focurts of the profits to the father and one-fourth to the son, and the objection to the voter was non-ownership:

—Hold, that the partnership was established by the evidence, and in view of the objection taken, the vote was susstained. Smale's vote, id.

Where two partners in business occupied premises, the freehold of which was vested in one of them, and the assessment of the premises was sufficient to give a qualification to each, both partners were held qualified to vote. Fitzgerald's vote, ib.

Where one of two joint owners was assessed for property at $200:—Held, that neither of such joint owners was entitled to vote. Stewart's vote, ib.

Tenants. |—Where the voter was the tenant of certain property belonging to his father-in-law, and before the expiration of his tenancy the father-in-law, with the consent of the voter than the being a witness to the voter to the property to another, the toter's lease not expiring until November, and the new lease heing made on the 28th March, 1870.—Held, that after the surrender by the lease, to which he was a subscribing witness, he ceased to be a tenant on the 28th March, 1870, and that to entile him to vote he must have the qualification at the time of the final revision of the assessment roll, though not necessarily at the time he voted, so long 88 he was still a resident of the electoral division, Rupert's vote, Stormont (Prov.), II. E. C. 21.

A tenant from year to year cannot create a sub-tenancy nor create a right to vote by giving another a share in the crops raised on the leased property. Dunham's vote, Brock-ville (Proc.), H. E. C. 129.

Toll Collector.]—Where a man occupied a house as toll collector, and not in any other right, he was not qualified to vote. McArthur's vote, ib.

Trustees, |—A trustee under a will, having no present beneficial interest in the real property assessed to him, was held not entitled to vote. Jones's vote, South Grenville (Prov.), H. E. C. 163.

Where A., who resided out of the riding, had made a contract in writing to sell to B. the property assessed to him as owner, but had not at the time of the election executed the deed, B. having been in possession of the property for several years under agreements with A:—Held, that A. was a mere trustee for the purchaser, and had therefore no right to vote. Holden's vote, ib.

Vendor—Licensec.]—Where a vendor before the revision of the assessment roll had conveyed and given possession of the property to a purchaser, and such purchaser had afterwards given him a license to occupy a small portion of the property, such vendor was held not entitled to vote. Noblin's vote, South Grenville (Prov.), H. E. C. 163.

Voters in Unorganized Townships.]—
Held, that a person, the owner of real estate of the value of $200 or upwards, anywhere within the electoral district, has the right to vote at any polling place in the unorganized townships in the electoral district where he may happen to be on polling day. (2) That where the real estate on which such person relies as his qualification to vote is situate in one of the unorganized townships his right is to vote in any of the unorganized townships without being restricted to the township where his property may be situate. (3) That to entitle a person to vote in the unorganized townships on the qualification of householder, he must be a householder—i, e, have his qualification as such—within the limits of the unorganized township. Muskoka and Parry Sound (Pror.), 1 E. C. 137.

(g) Revising Officers.

Mandamus-Voters' List-Notice of Objections—Service — Proof—Time.]—A revising officer under the Electoral Franchise Act, 48 & 49 Vict. c. 40 (D.), having declined to entertain the application of S. to have the name of D. struck off the voters' list, on the ground that the notice to D. provided for by s. 26 of the Act was not proved, and that the notice to the revising officer provided for by same section was not duly served on or given to him in time; on an application for a mandamus to the revising officer, although it appeared no copy of the notice to D. was kept, and no notice to produce the original was served, it was shewn by two witnesses that a notice to D. filled up on a printed form with his name, address, and the objection to his vote, had been mailed to him by a prepaid registered letter on the 26th June, for the sit tings of the revising officer of 12th July following, and the certificate of registration was produced, although the witnesses had no distinct individual knowledge of the particular notice to D., and that such evidence given before the revising officer :- Held, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, such proof was sufficient. Re Simmons and Dalton, 12 O. R. 505.

The notice to the revising officer was left with his clerk at his office during the absence from town of the revising officer, on Monday the 28th June, and on his return on the afternoon of that day he was told what had been done, and that if he did not consider that sufficient the notice would be procured again and served on him personally, but he said what was done was sufficient:—Held, that the last day for service for the sittings for the fund revision to be held the 12th July was Sunday the 27th June, but that, under s. 2, s.-s. 2, of the Act, the time was extended, and S. had all the next day, and that the notice was well given on Monday. Ib.

Held, that the service of the notice on the clerk of the revising officer was, under ss. 19 and 26, a sufficient "depositing with" the revising officer to satisfy the statute, and the conduct of the revising officer amounted to an adoption of the action of the clerk, and was equivalent to personal service if such were required by the statute. D.

Held, that the revising officer erred in point of law in assuming that the notice to him required personal service, and that it was too late, and in holding that notice to produce the notice to D. should have been given, which were not findings of fact, and such mistakes or errors are not such decisions as prevent the granting of the writ of mandamus. If he had found as matter of fact that notice was nad round as a matter of fact that notice was not given to D., there might have been some difficulty in interfering with his conclusion. The Centre Wellington Case, 44 U. C. R. 152, referred to and distinguished. Ib.

It was contended that the revising officer was an appointee of the Dominion Government, and that his sittings were sittings of a court of record, and that there was no jurisdiction in a provincial court to issue a mandamus to him:—Held, that the Dominion Parliament had, by the Electoral Franchise Act, interfered with civil rights in this Province, and having made no provision for a court to superintend the conduct of the officials, and following Valin v. Langlois, 3 S. C. K. 1, that until such a court is created the provincial courts, by virtue of their inherent jurisdiction, have a right to superintend the discharge of their duties by any inferior officer or tribunal. Ib.

Voters' List—Notice of Objection—Grounds—Inpeat]—Held, by the Queen's banch division, that a notice under s. 19 of the Electoral Franchise Act, R. S. C. c. 5, as amended by 51 Vict. c. 9, s. 4, to a person whose name was objected to, for the purpose of having the name taken off the scores' list at the final revision, which simply gave "not qualified" as the ground of objection, was sufficient. The revising officer (who as not a Judge) having ruled that the notice was valid, the person whose name was objected to appealed from that ruling to the count's Judge, who held that the notice was invalid, and the revising officer ferrounds and the revising officer for the county Judge were coram and hear the complaint—first the proceedings before the county Judge were coram non judice. A mandanus was granted. Held, by the court of appeat, that the Queen's bench division having ordered a mandanus to issue directing a revising officer to consider the objections to the qualification of certain persons whose names appeared on the preliminary voters' lists, and the revising officer having obeyed the mandanus. A motice of application to have a manne relaced from the voters' lists, giving as the ground of objection only the statement. The validies' is sufficient, per Hagarty, C.J.O., Button and Mancleunan, J.J.A. In re Lilley and Allina, 21 O. R. 424, 19 A. R. 101.

Prohibition—Jurisdiction of High Court of Justice, 1—There is no jurisdiction in the high court of justice to issue a writ of prohibition to a revising officer to compel him to abtain from "performing any duty under the Electoral Franchise Act." The legislation in regard to such matters does not trench upon nor is the question one of "property and civil rights in the Province." Re Simmons and Daton, 12 O. R. 505, not followed. Re North Perk, Hessin v. Lloyd, 21 O. R. 538. 13. Voting.

(a) Ballot Papers.

Marking by Voters—Irregularities in.] —The Election Act in its enacting part requires ballots to be marked with a cross on any place within the division which contains the name of the candidate. Ballots marked with a straight line within the division, or with a cross on the back, were rejected. Observations on the difference between the English and Ontario statutes in this respect. South Wentworth (Prov.), H. E. C. 531.

The following ballots were held invalid: (1) Ballots with a single stroke: (2) ballots with the candidate's name written thereon in addition to the cross; (3) ballots with marks in addition to the cross, by which the voter might be identified, although not put there by the voter in order that he might be identified; (4) ballots marked with a number of lines; (5) ballots with a cross for each candidate. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

Quarre, whether ballots with a cross to the Quare, whether ballots with a cross to the left of the candidate's name should be rejected, as the deputy returning officer is not bound to reject such ballots under s. 55 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874. D.

The following irregularities in the mode of marking ballot papers, held to be fatal: (1) making a single stroke instead of a cross; (2) any mark which contains in itself a means of identifying the voter, such as his initials or some mark known as being one used by him; (3) crosses made at left of name, or not to the right of the name; (4) two single strokes not crossing. Monck (Dom.), H. E. C. 728.

The following ballots were held invalid: (1) ballots with a cross in the right place on the back of the ballot paper instead of on the printed side; (2) ballots marked with an x instead of a cross. Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247.

The following ballots were held valid: (1) ballots with a cross to the right just after the candidate's name, but in the same column, and not in the column on the right hand side of the name: (2) ballots with an ill-formed cross, or with a small lines at the ends of the cross, or with a line across the center or one of the limbs of the cross, or with a curved line like the blades of an anchor. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), II. E. C. 671.

The following irregularities held not to be fatal: (1) An irregular mark in the figure of a cross, so long as it does not lose the form of a cross. (2) A cross not in the proper compartment of the hallot paper, but still to the right of the candidate's name. (3) A cross with a line before it. (4) A cross rightly placed, with two additional crosses, one across the other candidate's name, and the other to the left. (5) A cross in the right place on the back of the ballot paper. (6) A double cross or two crosses. (7) Inadvertent marks in addition to the cross. (8) Cross made with pen and ink instead of a pencil. Monck (Dom.), H. E. C. 725.

In ballot papers containing the names of four candidates the following ballots were held' valid: (1) Ballots containing two crosses, one on the line above the first name, and one on the line above the second name, valid for the two first-named candidates. (2) Hallots containing two crosses, one on the dividing the second and third compartments, valid for the first-named candidate. (3) Ballots containing properly made crosses in two of the compartments of the ballot paper with a slight lead pencil stroke in another compartment. (4) Ballots marked in the proper compartments, thus y Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247.

Certain ballot papers were objected to as having been imperfectly marked with a cross, or having more than one cross, or having an inverted V, or because the cross was not directly opposite the name of the candidate, there being only two names on the ballot paper and a line drawn dividing the paper in the middle :-Held, that these ballots were valid. Whenever the mark evidences an attempt or intention to make a cross, though the cross may be in some respects imperfect, the ballot should be counted, unless from the peculiarity of the mark made it can be reas onably inferred that there was not an honest design simply to make a cross, but that there design simply to make a cross, but that there was also an intention so to mark the paper that it could be identified, in which case the ballot should be rejected. But if the mark nade indicates no design of complying with the law, but on the contrary a clear intent not to mark with a cross as the law directs, as, for instance, by making a straight line or round O, then such non-compliance with the law renders the ballot null. Bothwell (Dom.), S. S. C. R. 676,

On this appeal, certain ballot papers being objected to:—Held, that it will require a clear case to reverse the decision of the trial Judge who has found as a question of fact whether there was or was not evidence that the slight pencil marks or dots objected to had been made designedly by the voter. Also, that where the X is not unmistakably above or below the line separating the names of the candidates, the ballot is bad, Haldimand (Dom.), 15 S. C. R. 435, 1 E. C. 529.

If a ballot is so marked that no one looking at it can have any doubt for which candidate the vote was intended, and if there has been a compliance with the provisions of the Act, according to any fair and reasonable construction of it, the vote should be allowed:

—Heid, that the dividing lines on the ballot between the names of the candidates, and not the lines between the numbers and the names, are set in the lines between the number and the names, are set in the lines between the number is part of the division of the ballot containing the candidate's name, and that votes marked by a cross to the left of the ballot containing the candidate's name, and that votes marked by a cross to the left of the lines between the numbers and the names were good. Heid, also, that a ballot, from which a portion of the blank part on the right-hand side had been removed, leaving all the printed matter except a portion of the lines separating the names, but which was properly marked by the voter, was good. Heid, also, that ballots from the handidates, and a ballot marked on the back, although over a candidate's name, were properly rejected. Held, also, that certain ballots with other marks on them besides the cross were good or bad under the circumstances of each case, set out in the report. Held, also, that a ballot, having the name of a candidate marked on its face in peneli, in addition to being properly marked for that candidate, was good; that a ballot with two initials on the back as well as those of the deputy returning officer, was good; that a ballot with the name of a voter on the back was bad; and that ballots with certain peculiar crosses marked thereon were good. West Elpin (No. 1) (Prov.), 2 E. C. 38.

The fact that a number has been placed on the back of each ballot paper in a voting subdivision, in pencil, by the deputy returning officer, will not invalidate them. The fact that the cross is marked in the division on the left-hand side of the ballot paper containing the candidate's number, and not in the division containing his name, will not invalidate it. West Elgin No. 1 (Prov.), 2 E. C. 28, followed. Where the printer had printed the surname of a candidate too high up and in the division of the ballot paper occupied by the name of another candidate; —Iteld, that the ballots marked with a cross above the dividing line but opposite to the surname so placed could not be counted for such candidate, but were either marked for the other candidate, or were void for uncertainty. South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 47.

Where the surname of a candidate has been printed so high up in the ballot paper as to appear in the division containing the name of another candidate and to lead to uncertainty as to which of the two candidates divisions of the ballot paper it was in, it was held that the votes marked opposite to such surname were ambiguous and could not be counted for either candidate, and under the circumstances a new election was ordered. South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 52.

A ballot from which the official number was ton off, without any thing to shew how it happened, was held bad. Ballots marked by or A were held good. Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247, followed. Ballots marked for a candidate, but having (1) the word "vote" written after his name; (2) having the word "Jos.," being an abbreviation of the candidate's christian name, written before his name; (1) having the candidate's christian name, written bere his mare; (1) having the candidate's surname written on the back of the ballot; were held bad. West Haron (Proc.), 2 E. C. 38

Marking for Illiterate Voters

Irregularities.]—One B., a voter who could neither read nor write, came into a polling booth, and, in the presence of the deputy re turning officer, asked for one C., who was not present, to give him instructions how to mark his bullot. The deputy returning officer gave a ballot paper to the voter, who then stated he wished to vote for the respondent.

One W., an agent of the respondent, in the polling booth, took the pencil and marked the ballot as the voter wished, and the voter then handed it to the deputy returning officer. No declaration of inability to read or write was made by the voter:—Held, that no one but the deputy returning officer was authorized to mark a voter's ballot, or to interfere with or question a voter as to his vote; and the deputy returning officer, by permitting the agent of a candidate to become acquainted with the name of the candidate for whom the voter desired to vote, violated the duty im posed on him to conceal from all persons the mode of voting, and to maintain the secrecy of the proceedings. Halton (Prov.), H. E. C. 283.

The deputy returning officer, in polling the votes of some fifty illiterate voters, instead of taking from each illiterate voter a declaration "that he was unable to read," asked each if he was able to read or write, and, having received an answer in the negative, requested him to put his mark to the declaration of illiteracy, explaining what he conceived to be its effect thus, " you hereby sign that you are its effect thus, "you hereby sign that you are unable to read or write sufficiently to mark your ballot paper." He then openly marked the ballot paper as instructed by the voter, in the presence of both candidates, their agents, and the poll clerk, all of whom had taken the and the poli cierk, all of whom had thach he usual declaration of secrecy. One witness also said the constable was in the room:— Held, that substantially there was no viola-tion of the principle of secret voting laid down in R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, and that the votes were not improperly taken. Per Osler, J.A.—There is nothing in the Act which makes it necessarry that the deputy returning officer should withdraw with the agents of the canadates and the voter to another room, or which forbids the poll clerk or other persons lawfully present in the polling booth from remaining there while the voter announces for whom he wishes to vote. Per Spragge, C. J.O.—The illiterate voters were not misled, but the conduct of the deputy returning officer was perverse. The manifest policy of the Act is that the voting shall be in all cases as secret as under the circumstances it can be. It was not necessary that more than the three persons named in the Act besides the voter him-self should be present; the deputy returning officer and one representative of each candidate. The presence of any others was not in accordance with the spirit and policy of the Act and should not have been permitted by the deputy returning officer. Per Burton, J.A. Beyond the slight mistake made by the deputy returning officer in explaining the declaration, there appears nothing in the course pursued which was not warranted by the Act; there was no one present except the deputy returning officer, the candidates and their agents, and the poll clerk, all of whom had taken the oath of secrecy except the constable, who was in another part of the room. Prescott (Prov.), 1 E. C. SS.

Marks Improperly Made or Omitted by Deputy Returning Officers. |—On a recount before a county court Judge, J., the appellant, who had a minority of votes according to the return of the returning officer, was declared elected, all the ballots cast at three polling districts, in which the appellant had polled only 131 votes, and the respondent, B., 345, having been struck out on the ground that the deputy returning officer had neglected to place his initials upon the back of the ballots. On the trial of a controverted election petition it was proved that the deputy returning officer had placed his initials on the counterfoil before giving the ballot paper to the voter, and afterwards, previous to his putting the ballot in the ballot box, had detached and destroyed the counterfoil, and that the ballots used were the same as these he had supplied to the voters, and for trial Judge held that the ballots of the three polls ought to be counted, and did count them. On appeal to the supreme court of faunds:—Held, affirming the judgment, that the deputy returning officer having had the means of identifying the ballot papers as being those supplied by him to the voters, and the neglect of the deputy returning officers to put their initials on the back of these ballot papers not having affected the result of the election or caused substantial injustice, the election was not invalidated. Monck (Dom.), H. E. C. 725, commented on and approved of. Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247.

In a polling division, No. 3, Dawn, there was no statement of votes either signed or unsigned in the ballot box, and the deputy returning officer had indorsed on each ballot paper the number of the voter on the voters' list. These votes were not included in the count before the returning officer, nor in the resumming up of the votes by the Judge of the county court, nor in the recount before the Judge who tried the election petition:—Held, that the ballots were properly rejected. Bothwell (Down.), 8 N. C. R. 676.

In division No. 1, Sombra, during the progress of the voting, at the request of one of the agents, who thought the ballot paners were not being properly marked, the deputy returning officer, who had been putting his initials and the numbers on the counterfoil, not on the ballot papers, initialled and numbered about twelve of the ballot papers, but, finding he was wrong, at the close of the poll, he, in good faith and with an anxious desire to do his duty, and in such a way as not to allow any person to see the front of the ballot papers, and with the assent of the agents of both parties, took these ballots out of the box and obliterated the marks he had put upon them: — Held, that the irregularities complained of not having infringed upon the secrecy of the ballot, and the ballots being unquestionably those given by the deputy returning officer to the voters, these ballots should be held good, and that such irregularities came within the saving provisions of s. 80 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, Queen's (Dom.), 7 S. C. R. 247, followed.

The petitioner had received a majority of the ballots cast at the election; but, on a recount before the county Judge, certain ballots, with other marks on the back than the initials of the deputy returning officers, were rejected, thereby giving a majority to the respondent. Evidence was given on the hearing of the petition that the deputy returning officers had, from a mistaken idea of their duty, placed the numbers of the voters, as marked in the voters' list, on the backs of the ballots:—Held, that under 42 Vict. c. 4, s. 18 (O.), the marks so made did not avoid the ballots, and that such ballots should be counted. Semble, that the county Judge, acting ministerially on the recount of ballots, could not have inquired by whom or for what motive such marks had been made on the ballots. Russell (2) (Prov.), H. E. C. 519.

Certain deputy returning officers, before giving out ballot papers to the voters at the election in question, placed numbers on the ballots corresponding with the numbers attached to the names of such voters on the voters' lists:—Held. (1) that the deputy returning officers had acted contrary to law in numbering the ballots, and that the ballots so numbered should be rejected as tending to the identification of the voters. (2) That such conduct of the deputy returning officers having had the effect of changing the result of the election, a new election should be ordered. East Hastings (Dom.), H. E. C. 761.

The neglect or irregularities of a deputy returning officer in his duties under the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, will not invalidate an election, unless they have affected the result of the election or caused some substantial injustice:—Held, therefore, that the neglect of a deputy returning officer to initial the ballot papers, and the providing pen and ink instead of a pencil to mark them, would not avoid the election. Monck (Dom.), H. E. C. 725.

Irregular acts or omissions by a deputy returning officer in dealing with a ballot before or after it has been cast by a voter do not warrant its disallowance for the candidate indicated by the voter. When there appeared, along with the ordinary printed forms of ballots, certain written ballots, giving little more than the names of the candidates, but apparently supplied by the deputy returning officers and counted by them:—Held, that, on a recount, the county Judge was not justified in rejecting the written ballots, Muskoka and Parry Sound (Dom.), 18 C. L. J. 204.

A ballot properly marked, but not initialled by the deputy returning officer, having instead the initials C. S., which appeared and were assumed to be those of the poll clerk, was held good. West Huron (Proc.), 2 E. C. 58. See Soulanges (Dom.), 10 S. C. R. 652; Prescott (Proc.), 1 E. C. 88.

Torn Ballot Paper—Inadvertence: 1—A voter who had inadvertently torn his ballot and whose ballot was rejected on the counting of votes, was allowed his vote, the evidence proving that no trick was intended for the purpose of shewing how he intended to vote. South Wentworth (Prov.), 11. E. C. 531.

(b) Irregularities in Taking the Poll.

At a polling subdivision, through a series of mischances, and without any wilful default of the officials, the poll was not opened till between balf-past one and two, whereby, it was charged, a number of electors were deprived of the opportunity of voting. The petitioner failed to prove the charge, while, if the onus of doing so were on the respondent, he shewed there was ample time to poll all the votes at that subdivision, and that all who desired to vote could have done so. The supply of ballot papers at a polling subdivision, through a blunder of the officials, ran out, and, while waiting for instructions, the poll was closed for half an hour, whereby, it was charged, some seventeen voters were prevented from voting; but as a matter of fact none of these voters was prejudiced thereby. The deputy returning officer and subordinate officers at a polling subdivision, through improvidence, but not mala fide, did not make the declaration of secrecy required by s. 147 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 10: but the result was not affected thereby:—Held. by the trial Judges, that, as these grounds of irregularity did not per se affect the result, they came within the protection of

s. 197. and did not avoid the election. East Simcoc (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

(c) Refusal to Take Oath.

Freeholders who appeared on the voters' lists, owing to a printer's mistake, as farmers' sons, being challenged at the poll, refused to take the farmers' sons' oath:—Held, that their refusal to take such oath was not a refusal to take the oath required by law. A refusal to swear is where a voter refuses to take the oath appropriate to his proper description. Prescott (Dom), H. E. C. 780.

(d) Refusing Ballot Paper.

An elector duly qualified, who has been refused a ballot paper by the deputy returning officer, cannot be deprived of his vote; otherwise it would follow that because the deputy returning officer had wrongfully refused to give such elector a ballot paper, his vote would not be good in fact or in law. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

(e) Secreey in Voting.

Where a voter offered to vote at a poll, but did not ask for or put in a tendered ballot paper:—Held, that the Ballot Act required the vote to be given secretly, and that the parol declaration of the voter as to his vote could not be received in order to add it to the poll. Secord's vote, Lincoln (Prov.), H. E. C. 500.

Secrecy of the ballot is an absolute rule of public policy, and it cannot be waived. See R. S. C. c. 9, s. 71. Haldimand (Dom.), 1 E. C. 529.

Semble, that, though the only mode of voting is by ballot, if it became necessary to decide the election by determining the right to add certain votes, it should be determined in the manner most consistent with the old law, and which would have saved the disfranchisement of electors, and the necessity of a new election. If the right of voting can only be preserved by divulging from necessity for whom the elector intended to vote, the necessity justifies the declaration the elector from saying for whom he intends to vote. North Victoria (2) (Dom.), H. E. C. 671.

Declaration of Secrecy by Returning Officer and Others.] — See East Simcol (Prov.), 1 E. C. 291.

(f) Tendered Ballots.

14. Other Cases.

Commissioner for Taking Evidence—Legislative Council.]—A Judge of a county court in a Legislative Council electoral division had authority, where the election for the division was contested, to take evidence under 20 Vict. c. 23. Tecumseth (U. C.), 4 L. J. 283, 284.

Fees of—Recovery, I—Held, that a commissioner for taking evidence in a contested election, under 20 fc, 23, s. 9, might maintain an office of the recognition of the result of the recognition of the remedy given under the recognition of the reco

20 Vict. c. 23 did not extend to elections for the Legislative Council. Where a county court Judge, assuming that it did so extend, acted at defendant's request as commissioner for taking evidence in a contested election for that body:—Held, that he could recover nothing for his services. Burritt v. Jones, 19 U. C. R. 194.

Contempt of Court—Power to Punish.]

—All the powers which the court of Queen's bench possessed with respect to controverted elections were transferred by 38 Vict. c. 3, s. 2 (O.). to the court of appeal, which has therefore now the power to punish for contempt in election cases. Lincoln (Prov.), 2 A. R. 353.

Costs of Defence — Prosecution for Bribery—Private Prosecutor.]—The plaintiffs were tried for bribery at an election at the Habilmand assizes in the spring of 1887, and acquitted. The information upon which the indictment was supposed to have been founded was laid against them by the defendant, and he was examined as a witness before the grand jury. At the conclusion of the trial the presiding Judge, at the request of the counsel for the accused, indorsed on the indictment the statement that it was proved that the defendant was the private prosecutor. The plaintiffs taxed their costs of the prosecution, and brought this action to recover payment of these costs from the defendant. The information and indictment (there being no evidence connecting the latter with the former, with the indorsement, and the fact that the defendant was examined as a witness before the grand jury, were the only evidence that the defendant was the private prosecutor:—Held, that the information was laid by the defendant, and that he was laid by the defendant, and that he was examined as a witness before the grand jury, were not sufficient evidence that he was the private prosecutor. May v. Reid, 16 A. R.

Costs of Opposing Petition—Action— Declaration.]—As to the form of declaration under 4 Geo. IV. c. 4. s. 35, to recover the costs incurred by a member of parliament in opposing a petition against his return. Smith v. Rourke, 6 O. S. 307.

Powers of Legislative Assembly—Issue of Writ—Nession.]—Held, that the legislative assembly has power while in session to order the issue of a writ to hold a bye-election, s. 33 of R. S. O. 1897 c. 12, applying only to vacancies occurring while the assembly is not in session. South Perth (Prov.), 2 E. C. 144.

Summary Trial for Illegal Acts—4p-peat.]—The right of appeal given under s. 63 and following sections of the Controverted Elections Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 11, does not extend to decisions either of the Judge or Judges for the trial of the petitions or the other Judges sitting as a court for the trial of corrupt practices under ss. 174 and 175 of the Election Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 10, and amendment. Observations upon anomalies and difficulties in the procedure. Lennox (Proc.), I E. C. 422.

Time—Limitation—Evidence—Several Charges.]—The limitation of one year for bringing action prescribed by s. 195, ss. 3, of the Ontario Election Act. R. S. O. 1897. c. 9, applies only to actions for penalties under that section, and not to proceedings by summons for corrupt practices under ss. 187-8, nor are the latter within the limitation of two years for actions prescribed by R. S. O. 1897 c. 72, s. 1. On such proceeding under ss. 187-8 the Judges may, if they see fit, hear the widence on all the charges before giving judgment on any of them. Halton (Prov.), 2 E. C. 158.

II. MINISTERS OF THE CROWN.

Change of Office.]-Defendant, while a member of parliament, was appointed to the office of postmaster-general, and again reoffice of postmaster-general, and again re-elected for the same constituency. On the 29th July he resigned that office, and within a month was appointed president of the council, which office he resigned on the same day, and on the next day was re-appointed to his and of the leak day was re-appointed to make the old office of postmaster-general:—Held, that this was authorized by 20 Vict. c. 22. The penalties imposed by that Act apply to members of the assembly retaining their without re-election after acceptance seats of office, and not only to persons absolutely ineligible. The exemption contained in the seventh clause is not confined to one reseventh clause is not confined to one re-signation and acceptance of office, but allows the change to be repeated, and the person may thus go back to the same office which he first resigned. It was stated in the plead-ings that the ministry, of which defendant as postmaster-general was a member, all resigned office on the 29th July, and on the 2nd August were succeeded by the opposition, who resigned on the following day: that on the 6th the old ministry were re-appointed, but took different offices from those which they before held, and on the 7th resigned again and were re-appointed to their old places; and it was alleged that the appointment to a different office in the first instance was colourable, and made only to enable defendant to resume his original appointment without going back for re-election :- Held, that, although such a proceeding was probably not contemplated by the Act, it was allowed by it; that the court could not look at defendant's motives, or strain the construction of the statute so as to impose a penalty; and that whether the course taken was or was not consistent with the system of political government established in this Province, was a question which they could not take into consideration, McDonell v. Smith, 17 U. C. R. 310, See, also, Macdonell v. Macdonald, 8 C. P. 479.

Postmaster-General — Printing.] — Quere, as to whether an action for parliamentary and departmental printing would lie against the postmaster-general, and the propriety of asking the courts to pass an opinion. Taylor v. Campbell, 33 U. C. R. 264.

See Stewart v. Jones, 19 P. R. 227.

III. PRIVILEGE OF PARLIAMENT.

1. Actions against Members.

Bill and Summons.]—A member of parliament had formerly the privilege of being sued by the bill and summons, not by the ordinary process. This was abolished by 12 Viet. c. 66: C. L. P. Act. s. 2. For decisions under the old practice, see McKonne v. Fotheryill, Tay, 350; Phelps v. McKenzie, 5. O. S. 80; Mahon v. Ermatinger, 1. U. C. R. 334; Hincks v. Crooks, E. T. 2. Viet., R. & H. Dig, 333; Lyster v. Boulton, 5. U. C. R. 632.

Declaration.]—In an action against a member, the declaration would not be set aside for a variance between it and the original bill. Hill v. McNab, 1 U. C. R. 413.

Examination for Discovery—Order for—Enforcement—Attachment.]—Where a defendant resides out of Ontario, and is only in it for a temporary purpose, his attendance to be examined for discovery can only be obtained, under rule 477. by a Judge's order upon notice, and not by appointment under rule 443. An order was made under rule 447 for the examination in Ontario of a defendant who resided in British Columbia and who was temporarily in Ontario atrending the meetings of the House of Commons of Canada, of which he was a member. Although this order could not be enforced by attachment against the defendant while the house was in session, in the event of his refusing or neglecting to attend, it could be enforced, under rule 454, by striking out his defence. Cox v. Prior, 18 P. R. 492.

2. Arrest and Attachment.

An attachment was granted against a sheriff who was a member of parliament, for not returning a writ pursuant to a rule of court. Bell v. Buchanan, M. T. 1 Vict.

Members of parliament in Upper Canada have the same privilege from arrest as in England. One of the defendants, being a member, was arrested on the 29th November, 1851, under an attachment issued against him as an attorney for non-payment of a debt. The last preceding session during which he had been a member expired on the 30th August, 1851, and that parliament was dissolved on the 6th November following. On the 10th December he was again elected, and in February applied to be discharged on the ground of privilege:—Held, that he was not privileged under the first election, as at the time of arrest he was not a member, and more than forty days had elapsed from the close of the last session; but that he was entitled to his discharge as a member of the new parliament, having been arrested within forty days next before the return of the writ of election. The return at the new election was held sufficiently proved by the affidavit of the applicant. Regina v. Gamble, 9 U. C. R. 546.

An order to commit to close custody for not attending to be examined pursuant to a Judge's order is a commitment for contempt, not a commitment in execution. A member of parliament is therefore not privileged from arrest under such order, and a party committed under it is not entitled to his discharge on payment of the debt and costs. Semble, that if the order be so framed as to entitle defendant to his discharge on payment of the claim, the privilege of parliament would avail against it. Henderson v. Dickson, 19 U. C. R. 592.

An order will not be made for the examination of a judgment debtor whose home is in the Province of Quebec, though temporarily residing in Ontario, attending to his duties as a member of parliament. Regan v. Mc-Greccy, 5 P. R. 94.

A member of the provincial parliament is privileged from arrest for forty days after the prorogation or dissolution of parliament, and for the same period before the next appointed meeting. Wadsworth v. Boulton, 2 C. L. Ch. 76.

Defendant applied to set aside an arrest for irregularity; his application was defeated, not on the merits, but owing to plaintiffs applying for and obtaining an order to amend:—Held, therefore, that the defendant was still at liberty to move after the amendment against the arrest on the ground of illegality. Ib.

Where a party having privilege had been in contempt for non-compliance with an order of the court, and the order nisi for a sequestration had been duly served; but between that and the application for the writ to issue, the party had ceased to be a member, the court refused the writ, and directed the party moving to commence vorceedings for the contempt de novo. Meyers v. Harrison, 4 Gr. 148.

An application to commit the sitting member for contempt in not attending the investigation before the county Judge as a witness for his adversary, refused. Essex Election, 4 L. J. 212.

3. Other Cases.

Contempt — Committee of House.] — The house of assembly has the power of imprisoning persons guilty of contempt in answering or refusing to answer questions before a select committee. McNab v. Bidwell, Dra.

Speaker's Warrant — Departure from Limits—Authority, 1—To an action on a bond, alleging a departure, defendants pleaded that the debtor, by virtue of a warrant of the Speaker of the House of Assembly, then in session, was required to attend as a witness before the house, and that to obey the warrant he left the limits and remained away nen days:—Held, no defence, as it was not shewn that the Speaker knew the debtor to be on the limits, or what occasion there was for requiring his attendance, or that any process lad issued by which he was placed in custody of an officer while absent. Brown v. Parton, 19 U. C. R. 238.

Witness—Parliamentary Duties—Postposing Frist.)—The engagements of a witness, who was a senator of the Dominion and a member of the executive council, at his session, were deemed sufficient excuse for not procuring his attendance, and good grounds for putting off the hearing. Rees v. Attoracytic craft, 2 Ch. Ch. 386.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Conspiracy to Bribe Members.]—A conspiracy to bribe members of the Legislative Assembly is a misdementour at common law, and as such is indictable. Regina v. Bunting, 7 O. R. 524.

Parliamentary Committee—Contracts—Liability of Crown, I—When a tender for parliamentary printing had been accepted by both houses of parliament, and a contract exceuted between the suppliants and the clerk of the joint committee of both houses on printing:—Held, that such a contract could not be enforced against the Crown. The Queen v. Maclean, 8 S. C. R. 210.

Services—Liability of Crown.]—The Crown is not liable upon a claim for the services rendered by any one to a committee of the house of commons at the instance of such committee. Kimmitt v. The Queen, 5 Ex. C. 12, 130.

Witness—Expenses.]—Semble, that a returning officer, whose conduct has been impeached, is not entitled to his expenses as a witness before a committee of the house of commons, although he was summoned to attend by the Speaker's warrant in the same manner as other witnesses. Blacklock v. Mc-Murtin, Tay, 320.

Parliamentary Grant — Bounty of Crown—Receiving Order.] — See Stewart v. Jones, 19 P. R. 227.

Resignation of Members—Voluntary Art—I acanavi,—Sections 10 and 12 of 32 Virt. c. 4 (O.) provide that a member may resign: 1. by giving notice in his place of his intention; 2. by delivering to the Speaker a declaration of such intention, either during a session or in the interval between two sessions; or 3. by delivering it to any two members, in case there is no Speaker, and the resignation is made in the interval between two sessions:—Held, to mean only an interval between two sessions of the same assembly, and not to apply to the interval between the last general election and the election of a Speaker. Section 3 provides for a new election in case of a vacancy happening by the death of any member, or by his accepting any contract, as mentioned in the third section. And s. 14, for the case of a vacancy arising subsequently to a general election, and before the first meeting of the assembly thereafter, "by reason of the death or other of the causes aforesaid."—Held, that the "other canses besides death mentioned in s. 13; and that a voluntary resignation, therefore, did not create a vacancy within s. 14.  - 1. Adding Parties in Master's Office.

General Rule—Necessary Parties.]—The proper practice is, to bring all necessary parties before the court at the hearing, and not to add them in the master's office. Herchmer v. Benson, 1 Gr. 92

Defendants petitioned for a second re-hearing on the ground that certain persons, necessary parties, were not before the court; but, as two opportunities of making the objection had been disregarded, and the interests of the parties complaining of the onission would be properly protected by making them parties in the master's office, the petition was refused. Patterson v. Holland, 8 Gr. 238.

— No Direct Relief Sought.]—Unless where the parties to be charged are too numerous to be made parties to the bill, or there is some other special reason, the 42nd general order of the 3rd June, 1853, is confined to cases where no direct relief is sought against the parties to be added; or where the object is to bind their interests by the proceedings in a manner similar to what is provided for by the 6th of the same orders. Rolph v. Upper Canada Building Society, 11 Gr. 275.

Adverse Claimant — Administration.]—
In an administration suit the referee has no power to make an order allowing a person claiming adversely to the heirs to be made a party in the master's office with a view of establishing a claim there. Re Tobin, 7 P. R. 67.

Incumbraneers, |—To a bill by an incumbrancer for the sale of the property, all other incumbraneers, whether prior or subsequent to the plaintiff, must be made parties in the master's office; and the proceeds of the sale will pay off all the incumbrances according to their priorities. White v. Beastey, 2 Gr. 690,

G., a creditor of F., under a judgment recovered in 1855, filed his bill to redeem W., the alleged mortgagee under a deed of conveyance to him from F., absolute in form. A creditor of W., under judgment recovered in 1859, and kept alive by fl. fa. lands, was made a party in the master's office as an incumbrancer subsequent to plaintiff: — Held, that he could not properly be thus made a party: but the plaintiff was allowed to amend his bill by making him a party, in order that an opportunity might be afforded him of contesting the plaintiff's right to treat the conveyance from F. to W. as a mortgage as against him. Glass v. Freckleton, 10 Gr. 470.

A registered judgment creditor had filed a bill impeaching a conveyance made by his debtor, which was ultimately declared void, and, in proceeding to take the account in the master's office, the plaintiff obtained and served an order from the master making a prior incumbrancer a party:—Held, that, as the plaintiff in his proceedings had elected not to make the prior incumbrancer a party to his bill, his serving him with the order in the master's office was irregular, and the order was discharged at the instance of such prior incumbrancer. Crawford v. Meldrum, 19 Gr. 165.

Certain machinery was placed in a factory on the premises in question, some before and some after the execution of the mortgage to the plaintiffs in 1874. The mortgager, the defendant, had no interest in any of the machinery at the date of the mortgage to the plaintiff, having previously sold out to A., but afterwards he became solely entitled to all of it, and he then executed a chattel mortgage of the same to a lumber company. On the reference under the decree obtained by the plaintiffs the master made the lumber company parties as subsequent incumbrancers:—Held (assuming the machinery or some portions of it to be trade fixtures removable as between landlord and tenant), that the machinery or such portions aforesaid, when acquired by the mortgager, would go to increase the plaintiff's security, and that therefore the master was right in making the lumber company parties as subsequent incumbrancers. London and Canadian Loan, &c., Co, v, Psilord, S. P. R. 150.

Mortgage of Reversion—Administration Action — Method of Objection.]—A testator divided his real estate among his three sons, the portion of A. C., the eldest, being charged with the payment of $1,000 to each of his brothers and its proportion of the widow's dower. The will also provided that "should any of my three sons die without lawful issue and leave a widow, she shall have the sum of $50 per annum out of his estate as long as she remains unmarried, and the balaviath of the estate shall revert to his brother and the said $50 per annum out of his estate as long as the remains unmarried, and the balaviath of the estate shall revert to his brother died after the center, and the said $50 on her marriage. A. C. died after the center, and the balaviath of the said $50 on her marriage. A. C. we shall be said $50 on her marriage. A. C. we shall be said $50 on her marriage. A. C. we have some said the said $50 on her marriage. A. C. we have some said the said $50 on her marriage. A. C. we have some said the said $50 on her marriage. A. added, in the master's office, as a party to an administration action, and could take objection at any time to the proceeding either by way of appeal from the report or on further directions, and was not limited to the time mentioned in order 48 of the supreme court of judicature, which refers only to a motion to discharge or vary the decree. Judgment in 23 A. R. 457 reversed. Covan v. Allen, 26 S. C. R. 202.

Semble, that if a person is improperly made a party in the master's office after judgment in administration proceedings, he is not limited to moving against the order making him a party, but may appeal from the report. Coman v. Allen, 23 A. R. 457.

Master as Party—Change of Reference.]

—Where it becomes necessary in the course of a suit to add as a defendant the master to whom the cause stands referred, a change of reference will be made on the ex parte application of the plaintiff. Weldon v. Templeton, I Ch. Ch. 360.

Mechanics' Liens — Holders — Owner — Sub-contractor's Suit.]—Where a bill is filed by a sub-contractor against the owner of propects, and a contractor with him, to enforce a claim against such contractor, the owner of the property and all persons claiming to have lieus are necessary parties in the master's office, whose costs will be ordered to be paid out of the amount found due to the contractor, and the balance distributed ratably among the several lien holders, and a personal order made against the contractor for the deficiency, if any. Hovenden v. Ellison, 24 Gr. 448.

Mortgagor's Children—Decease of One—Redemption.]—Before a redemption suit one of the mortgagor's surviving children died an infant and intestate:—Held, that this suit emred to the benefit of those entitled to her share, including her mother as tenant for life, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 105, s. 27. Held, also, that the mother should be directed to be made a party in the master's office under G. O. 438, since the present case did not fall under the Judicature Act. Semble, if under that Act, the same might have been directed under rule S0. Foulds v. Harper, 2 O. R. 405.

Partner,]—One of several partners being out of the jurisdiction and alleged by the bill to be insolvent, a decree to take the accounts and wind up the affairs of the partnership was made in his absence; and he, after the decree had been carried into the master, softee, returned to this Province, and was, by order of the master, made a party defendant in his office. From this order the defendant so added appealed:—Held, that under the 42nd of the general orders of 1853, s. 15, the master had authority to add such party in his office, and the appeal was dismissed with costs. Paterson v. Holland, 7 Gr. 563.

In proceeding upon a reference under a decree, the master cannot, under general orders 244. 245, order a person to be made a party to the suit against whom any relief is sought; and where in proceeding under a decree for the administration of a testator's estate, the master directed one D., who had been in partnership with the testator up to the time of his death, to be made a party, and requiring him with the executors to bring in under oath an account of the partnership dealings, against which D, appealed:—Held, that the object of making D, a party was for the purpose either of relief or discovery, and in either view the plaintif could not obtain it in this mode of proceeding, as D., so far as discovery was concerned, could only be regarded as a witness. Hopper v. Harrison, 28 Gr. 22.

Purchaser of Land.]—In September, 1855, one 6. entered into a contract (which was never registered) with one M., for the sale to him of a lot of land. In October, 1857, the plaintiffs recovered and registered a judgment against G. and thereby acquired priority over M., on the lot sold by him, and in March, 1861, filed a bill against G. to enforce their judgment against the lot contracted to be sold to M., as well as against other lands of G., to which bill the plaintiffs thaving no notice of the contract) did not make M. a party, a certificate of lis pendens being however registered. In March, 1862, M. obtained from G., under the contract, a conveyance of the lot, which be registered in September, 1862, and the plaintiffs becoming aware thereof applied ex parte on the 10th June, 1864, under the order of the 29th June, 1861, for, and obtained, an order to make M. a party in the master's office:—Held, that the suit was not pending as against M. prior to the date of the order to make him a party; that therefore there was no suit pending against him on the 18th May, 1861; and, in consequence, that the lien created by the registration of the plaintiffs' judgment against the lot, the subject of the contract, was gone; and that M. was not a necessary or proper party to the suit. Juson v. Gurdiner, 11 Gr. 23.

See Kline v. Kline, 3 Ch. Ch. 161; Hill v. Merchants' and Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 28 Gr. 569; Duff v. Canadian Mutual Ins. Co., 6 A. R. 238; Reinhart v. Shutt, 15 O. R. 325; Lally v. Longhurst, 12 P. R. 510; Wilgress v. Craueford, 12 P. R. 658.

2. Misjoinder and Nonjoinder.

(a) Misjoinder of Defendants.

Co-indorsers — Judgment.]—Two indorsers agreed that the maker of the notes indorsed by them should convey to the holder thereof certain property in discharge of his indebtodness, which property was to be sold, and, if the same did not realize sufficient to pay the amount for which they had indorsed, that they would pay the difference. Subsequently the holder of the notes sold the property to one of the indorsers, but he never paid the purchase money or any portion of it, in consequence of which he was sued and judgment recovered against him for part of the purchase money, and an action was also brought against the indorsers on their agreement to pay, in which action judgment was recovered and writs against lands were sued out on both judgments, and placed in the hands of the sheriffs of several counties in which the defendants had equitable estates; whereupon a bill was filed against both the defendants to enforce these several judgments, to which they severally demurred on the ground of misjoinder:—Held, that the bill against the two jointly was proper, and the demurrers were overruled with costs. Smith v. Bogart, 10 Gr. 550

Distinct Causes of Action—Penalties.]—In an action by several plaintiffs qui tam against two defendants for penalties for not registering their partnership under R. S. O. 1877 c. 123, of which s. II gives the right of action to "any person" who may sue:—Held. (1) that under the above section and the Interpretation Act any objection to the action being brought in the name of more than one person could not prevail. (2) That the circumstance that the plaintiffs resided out of the jurisdiction could not defeat their action. (3) That the joinder of two defendants for several penalties was not a ground of denurrer. Chapat v. Robert, 14 A. R. 534.

Polluting Stream.]—The plaintiff, the owner of a water lot and boathouse abutting on the Ottawa river, who carried on the business of letting boats for hire, brought an action against four sawmill owners, alleging that they, being each the owner of a sawmill situated higher up on the river than the plaintiff's lot, had each been in the habit of throwing sawdust, slabs, &c., into the river, and that this waste matter floated down and lodged upon and in front of the plaintiff's water lot, and had there formed into a solid mass:—Held, that the four sawmill owners were properly joined as defendants in one action. Rattle V. Booth, 10 P. R. 649.

Specific Performance — Other Relief.] — The plaintiff's claim as against her husband, one of the defendants, was for spe cific performance of an ante-nuptial contract to transfer to her certain property of various kinds, and as against the several other defend ants, to whom the husband had made trans fers of such property, or in whose hands it was, for relief by way of declaration, cancellation, and order for payment: Heid, that although the plaintiff's right to each cause of action was historically connected with each of the others, that connection related only to her rights; the rights of each set of the defendants were as distinct as they were before the events which conferred upon the plaintiff the rights which she asserted; and such causes of action could not properly be joined in one action. Smurthwaite v. Hannay, [1894] tion. Smurthwaite v. Hannay, [1894] A. C. 494, and Sadler v. Great Western R. W. Co., [1896] A. C. 450, followed. Faulds v. Faulds, 17 P. R. 480.

Heirs-at-Law of Mortgagor - Judicature Act. |-Since the Judicature Act the proceeding by demurrer for misjoinder of parties is no longer available. Werderman v. Société Générale D'Electricité, 19 Ch. D. 246, fol-Société lowed. In an action upon a mortgage for foreclosure, immediate payment, and immediate possession, the plaintiff joined as defendants the heirs-at-law of the deceased mortgagor (who had died after the Devolution of Estates Act) with the administrator of the real and personal estate. One of the heirs-atlaw demurred to the statement of claim, on the ground that the administrator represented the estate in all regards, that the heirs-at-law were not bound by any covenants of the deceased, and that no relief was claimed or could be granted against them:—Held, that the demurrer was in effect one for misjoinder of parties, and that the proper remedy was a motion under rule 324 (a) to strike out the name of the demurring defendant. Carter v. Clarkson, 15 P. R. 379. Shareholders.]—See McKenzie v. Dewan, 36 U. C. R. 512.

Stranger to Contract — Intention to Sign.1—To an action brought on an indenture of apprenticeship, purporting to have been made by two defendants, an amendment by striking out the name of one defendant who had not signed was refused, on the ground that the other would not then have been liable, as it was intended that both should execute —Held, that he would have been liable, not withstanding such intention, and that the reason for the refusal was therefore insufficient, Judge v. Thomson, 29 U. C. R. 523.

(b) Misjoinder of Plaintiffs.

Insolvent and Assignee. | - A railway company entered into a contract for the con-struction of their road, which was to be completed and in perfect running order by the 1st January, 1875; and to be paid for partly in cash and municipal bonds, partly in bonds or debentures of the company, and partly in guaranteed shares or stock of the company; and the contractors entered upon the construction of the work, but owing to financial difficulties they were obliged to suspend in 1873, and in August, 1874, they made a deed of composition with their creditors, and J. was appointed their official assignee. After the time appointed for the completion of the work, the assignee and contractors filed a bill in their joint names against the railway company, asking that the contract might be performed by the company, offering on their own part to perform it, and seeking to restrain the company from entering into any new contract for the work with any other person; and from making, signing, or issuing any stock or bonds of the company, until the stock or bonds to which the plaintiffs were entitled, were issued to the assignee. A demurrer for want of equity and for misjoinder of plaintiffs was allowed; the rule of the court being that it not decree the specific performance of works which the court is unable to superintend; and that an insolvent or bankrupt cannot be joined as a co-plaintiff with his assignee. Johnson v. Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction R. W. Co., 22 Gr. 290.

Master and Servant — Assault.]—Two plantiffs joined in an action a claim by one for damages for the wrongful interference of the defendants with him in the completion of a building, and for assaulting and arresting his servant and co-plaintiff, and a claim by the other for damages for the same assault and arrest:—Held, that each was a separate and distinct cause of action, and could not properly be joined, under rule 300. Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 18841 A. C. 194, and Carter v. Rigby, 18861 2 Q. B. D. 406, distinguished. Mooney v. Joyce, 17 P. R. 241.

Owners of Separate Parcels of Land—Crawen Patent,1—Several persons being in possession of separate portions of Crown lands filed a bill, claiming to have, by the invariable usage of the government, a preemptive right, each to the portion he was in possession of, alleging that a patent had been obtained for all the lands by a defendant through fraud, and praying that the patent might be rescinded. A demurrer of the bill for misjoinder

this action as land owners injuriously affected by certain drainage works of the defendants and the assessments made under by-laws relating to the same, seeking damages and other relief:—Held, that there was no misjoinder of plaintiffs, nor was it incumbent on the plaintiffs to sue on behalf of any others, and the plaintiffs to sue on behalf of any others, and way of action and not of arbitration. Alexander v. Township of Howard, Galbraith v. Township of Harvich, 14 O. R. 22.

Several Interests.]—The plaintiffs, who were severally interested in certain chattels, joined in a bill seeking to have an alleged sale and transfer of them to defendant set aside, on the ground of fraud by defendant. A demurrer, on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs, was allowed. Skinner v. Palmer, 20 Gr. 374.

Shareholders.] — The company having joined some of their bondholders and shareholders as co-plaintiffs, raising questions affecting them individually:—Held, that the action of the court should be confined to issues between the company and the defendants. Great North-West Central R. W. Co. v. Charlobie, [1890] A. C. 114.

Stranger to Contract.] — Two of the plaintiffs contracted under seal to do certain work, which was done by the three, but not according to the agreement. The three having sued were nonsuited on production of the contract. The nonsuit was upheld, and an amendment by striking out the name of the third plaintiff, in order to save the Statute of Limitations, was refused. Bricker v. Ancell, 23 U. C. R. 481.

A claim was compromised, the creditors agreeing to receive in satisfaction part of the delt secured by acceptances of B, indorsed by C, who were no parties to the contract. Before the acceptances were given a bill was filed by the debtor and proposed acceptor for the specific performance of the agreement:—Held, on denurrer, that the latter was improperly joined as co-plaintiff. The absence of any alegation that the proposed indorser had induced or was ready and willing to indorse, was miso held to be a fatal objection. Gartishov v. Gore Bank, 13 Gr. 187.

See Chaput v. Robert, 14 A. R. 354, ante

(c) Nonjoinder of Defendants.

Alternative Claim — Company—President—Contract.] — The plaintiff, having a claim for arrears of salary and damages for wrongful dismissal, sued the defendant company therefor, alleging an agreement made with the president aud certain directors before the company's incorporation, and a subsequent by-law and resolution of the company ratifying the agreement. In consequence of what was alleged in the statement of defence, and after discovery had, the plaintiff applied for leave to amend by adding another company as defendants, fearing that he might not recover against the defendant company, because, although they got the benefit of his services, it might appear that his contract was not with them, but with the other company, or that, from want of authority of those who assumed to act on behalf of one or other of the companies, his contract was in law with the president personally, or the president was liable to him in, damages as upon a warranty of authority:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, by virue of rule 192, to have the question as to which one of the three parties was responsible to him, decided in one action; and, although he had omitted to join two of them originally, an order should be made, under rule 206 (2), adding these two as defendants at this stage of the proceedings. Bennetts v. McIlwrait, [1886] 2 Q. B. 464, followed, Tate v. Natural Gas and Oil Co. of Ontario, 18 P. R. S2.

Beneficiaries under Will — Costs—In-quiry.] — Where on the hearing it appeared from the plaintiff's evidence that certain persons named in the will of plaintiff's ancestor were necessary parties, and had not been brought before the court, leave was given to amend by adding them, though it would enable the plaintiff to vary to some extent the case made out and the relief prayed, though not as against the present defendants. And as the defect of parties did not appear by the bill:—Held, that leave could only be granted on payment of the costs of the day. Where it comes out in the course of a cause, that the ancestor of one of the parties to the suit, who claims as heir-at-law, has in fact made a will, it is incumbent on the court to direct an inquiry on that point, although unnoticed in the pleadings. Chikholm v. Sheldon, I Gr. 108.

Joint and Several Sureties — Insolvence, 1—In a suit against one of two sureties of an assignee in insolvency and the administrator ad litem of the assignee, the bill alleged that P. (the other surety), was "without means or other estate of any kind that the plaintiff can discover, and is in fact, as the plaintiff can discover, and is in fact, as the plaintiff sureties, insolvent," as a reason for not making P. a party defendant:—Held, that these allegations were not sufficiently distinct to dispense with the necessity of joining him as a defendant. Sureties were jointly and separately bound: but a general account being necessary, the consolidated order 62, allowing proceedings to be taken against one of two or more persons jointly and severally liable, does not apply to such a case; and the allegation as to the insolvency of one of them is not sufficient to dispense with him as a party. That order is only available where the suit is for a liquidated sum or for a single breach of trust. Quare, whether in such a case the administrator ad litem sufficiently represents the estate of the principal debtor. Garrow v. McDonald, 20 Gr. 122.

Joint Contractors.] — This action was brought to rescind a contract for the sale of a vessel by the plaintiffs to the defendant, on the ground that the defendant had failed to perform his part of the contract, and for damages for breach of the contract and for injuries to the vessel, which had been delivered to the defendant, and to restrain the defendant from dealing with it, and for delivery up thereof. The defendant applied to add as a co-defendant one W., on whose behalf, as well as his own, the defendant had made the contract in question, and who with knowledge of it had ratified and adopted it, but who was not formally a party to it:—Held, following Kendall v. Hamilton, 4 App. Cas. at p. 513 et seq., that the defendant had no right to force W. upon the plaintiff as a defendant, in the character of a joint contractor. Quare, whether W. would have a right to be brought as a defendant on his own motion. Toronto and Hamilton Navigation Co. v. Sileas, 12 P. R.

Under an incomplete agreement with the plaintiff, the defendant and one R. went into possession of the plaintiff's shop, intending to carry on business as partners. The agreement never was completed, the defendant and R. were put out of the shop, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover the amount received by the defendant from sales of goods while in possession of the shop. The defendant asserted that the contract was a joint one on the part of himself and R., but the plaintiff and R, denied this:—Held, that an order under con. rule 324 (a) compelling the plaintiff to add R, as a party defendant, in the character of a joint contractor, was under the circumstances a proper order, Robb v, Murruy, 13 P. R, 337.

— Committeemen.] — Where credit is given to an abstract entity such as a club, the creditor may look to those who in fact assumed to act for it and those who authorized or sanctioned that being done, at all events where he did not know of the want of authority of the agent to bind the club. Review of English cases on this subject. The liability in such cases is not several, but joint. Aikine v. Dominion Live Stock Association of Canada, 17 P. R. 303.

Necessary Party as to Part of Claim.]

—The rule of equity is that if any person not made a party to the suit be a necessary party in respect of any part of the relief prayed by the bill, it is ground of demurrer. Where, therefore, a bill was filed against the Dominion Telegraph Company, seeking to restrain that company from carrying out an agreement for the transfer of telegraph messages to the American Union Telegraph Company, on the ground that such agreement was in contravention of an agreement previously entered into between the plaintiff and defendant companies for mutual exclusive connections and exchange of rule acknesses, without making the American Union Company a party, a demurrer for want of parties on that account was allowed with costs, Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Co. v. Dominion Telegraph Co., 27 Gr. 592.

Next of Kin—Action to Establish Will.]
—See Cornell v. Smith, 14 P. R. 275.

(d) Nonjoinder of Plaintiffs.

Assignee of Subject of Action Pendente Lite.]—Whether an agreement by a plaintiff with persons not parties to the action respecting the assignment of the subject of the action made pendent lite makes the action defective depends upon the nature of the agreement. If its legal effect is such as to render it impossible for the court to give the relief asked for without the addition of the other parties, the action becomes defective and cannot be proceeded with until proper parties are before the court; but it is otherwise when the nature of the agreement does not prevent the court from giving the relief asked for. Scott v. Benedict, 9 C. L. T. Occ. N. 181.

Beneficial Plaintiff—Bank—Cheque.]—A cheque had been drawn upon the plaintiffs, payable to the Hamilton Tool Company, and, upon an indorsement purporting to be that of the company, the defendants cashed the cheque, and upon presentation by them to the plaintiffs, were repaid the amount. The company repudiated the indorsement. The defendants solicitor swore that he had good reason to believe, and did believe, that a third person was the beneficial plaintiff, and that there were equities which would attach as against the present plaintiffs. Leave to ads sque third person was refused, but leave was given to the defendants to amend by alleging that the third person was the beneficial plaintiff, and to set up any defence that might be open to them on that ground. But Rev. of Commerce v. Bank of British North America, 10 P. R. 158.

Consignor and Consignee. |—The plaintiff consigned goods to persons in England, and shipped them by the defendant companies on bills of lading, describing them as shipped by the plaintiff, to be delivered to rike assigns, he or they paying freight. The plaintiff indorsed the bills of lading to various persons in England, to whom he had sold the goods. The consignees paid the drafts drawn upon them for the price, and the goods having been seriously damaged in transit, they made claim upon the plaintiff for the loss. The plaintiff now sued for the damage, and was nonsuited on the ground that he had not sufficient interest, or was not the proper person to sue. The court, without deciding as to the plaintiff having no right of action, or the effect of R. S. 0. 1877 c. 116, s. 5, set aside the noisnit, and directed a new trial, with leave to the plaintiff to add as co-plaintiffs any or all of the consignees or indorsees of the bills of lading, the evidence already given to stand with any additions the parties might desire, reserving all costs. Hatty v. Merchant's Deepatch Co., 2 O. R. 350, 2 O. R. 360.

An objection was taken in the divisional court, that the action should have been brought by the consignee, J., because, as was alleged, the evidence shewed that the property had passed to him. The objection was not taken at the trial or in the pleadings, otherwise it would have been shewn that the property was still in the plaintif; and in any event J. consented to be added as a co-plaintif:—II-del, that the objection could not now be raised; and, even if there were anything in it, the court would allow J. to be added as a co-plaintiff. Dyment v. Northern and North-Western R. W. Co., 11 O. R. 343.

Husband and Wife. |—In a bill the style of cause named several female plaintiffs as being severally wives of their respective husbands, but the stating part of the bill did not allege that they were married; a demurrer on the ground that their husbands were not named as parties was overruled with costs. Webster v. Leys, 28 Gr. 471.

Insolvent—Assignec.]—A suit was transferred from the Queen's bench under the A. J. Act, which, on argument of a demurrer, proved to be defective for want of the assignee in insolvency as a party, there not being the necessary allegation in the plaintiff's pleadings to shew that the right of action had revested in the plaintiff; the court, however, directed the cause to stand over in order to make the necessary allegation in the pleadings or to add the assignee as a defendant. Curtis v. Wilson, 23 Gr. 215.

One C., a practising barrister, dealt largely One C., a practising parrister, dean largery in land transactions, but it was not shewn that he depended thereon for his living. Becoming insolvent, proceedings under the Insolvent Act of 1875 were taken against him. The plaintiff was assignee of a mortgage made The plannil was assignee of a mortgage made by C, and brought an action thereon against H, the assignee in insolvency of C, and D, and others, the owners of the parts of the mortgaged lands. It was objected by D, that C should have been made a party:—Held, that C, was not a trader within the meaning of the Insolvent Act, and that nothing passed is the assignment in the insolvent Proceedings of the proceedings. to the assignee in the insolvency proceedings. C. was therefore declared to be a necessary party, and leave was given to add him as a defendant. Joseph v. Haffner, 29 Gr. 421.

Action by plaintiffs for $460, as assignees under an assignment from the assignee in in-solvency of the estate of W, & A. At the trial the Judge held that, under the circum-stances, the amount did not pass to the plaintiffs under the assignment to them, but he re-fused to add the insolvents as co-plaintiffs, because the defendant was not in a position to know whether he had a defence as against them. During the following sittings of the court, the defendant having had sufficient time to ascertain his rights, and shewing no defence, the court under the O. J. Act, rule 90. directed the insolvents to be added, and judgment to be entered for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, but, under the circumstances, without costs. Woodward v. Shields, 32 C. P. 282.

Company-Receiver.]-A receiver has no right to sue in his own name for a debt due to the person or corporation whose assets he has been appointed to receive; nor an that right be conferred on him by order. But where by an ex parte order made in the action in which the plaintiff was appointed receiver, he was authorized to bring actions in his own name for the collection of debts due his own name for the collection of debts due to a certain Grange, and brought this action pursuant thereto:—Held, that an amendment should be made adding the Grange as co-plaintiffs without security being given for their costs, they being insolvent. If there were no person in whose name the action could be brought, there would perhaps be jur-ishetion to direct it to be brought in the name of the receiver. McGuin v. Fretts, 13 O. 18 (39) O. R. 699,

Seduction—Action by Step-father—Addi-tion of Mother.]—Plaintiff caused defendant to be arrested for the alleged seduction of his step-daughter, she at the time of the alleged seduction not being in his service. Afterwards he applied to amend his declaration by joining his wife, striking out the allegation that the girl seduced was the daughter of the plaintiff, and substituting the statement that and substituting the statement that the daughter of the wife. The applishe was the daughter of the wife. The application was refused. Lawson v. McDermott, 9 L. J. 45. Vol. III, p—160—11

(e) Procedure in Cases of Misjoinder and Nonjoinder.

Added Plaintiffs-Right to Object Hearing. - Where new plaintiffs are added by amendment, they have at the hearing the same rights, and the court has the same rights and the court has the same discretion in the case of a misjoinder, as if they had been plaintiffs originally; and the court may, under the general orders, treat such new plaintiffs as the sole plaintiffs. Meson v. Seney, 11 Gr. 447.

Adding Plaintiff after Appeal-Attorney-General—Final Judgment.]—A motion made by the plaintiffs, after the judgment in 23 A. R. 566, for leave to amend by adding the attorney-general as a party plaintiff in order to meet the difficulty raised by the judgment that the plaintiffs had no locus standi, was refused, upon the ground that such an amendment could not be made after final judgment. Johnston v. Consumers' Gas Co. of Toronto, 17 P. R. 297.

See S. C. 27 O. R. 9, 23 A. R. 566.

Adding Plaintiff at Trial-Consent.] A patentee assigned part of his interest to the plaintiff, who alone filed a bill to restrain the infringement of the patent. At the hearing an objection was taken that the patentee was not a party to the suit; but he, by his counsel, appearing and consenting to be named as a plaintiff and to be bound by the proceedings in the cause, an amendment in that respect was directed by the decree to be made, and relief granted as prayed. Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495.

Adjourning Hearing to Add Parties. —A plaintiff filed a bill to enforce a legal right only, and in the course of the proceeding it appeared that there were others in regard to whom it was a question proper to be dis-cussed whether they had not an equitable right in the subject of the suit: one of whom had not been made a party, and the other had failed in a legal defence which he had set up, but the point was not raised by the parties. The court, under the circumstances, ordered the cause to stand over, without costs, in order to add parties; the party so failing in his legal defence to be at liberty to put in a supplemental answer if so advised. Wilson v. Proudfoot, 14 Gr. 630.

Duty of Trustees.]—Where a bill is filed against a trustee by persons claiming adversely to his cestuis que trust, without making them parties to the bill, it is the duty of the trustees to object that the owners of the estate are not before the court. Where, therefore, a trustee under such circumstances neglected to make the objection, the cause was, notwithstanding, ordered to stand over, with leave to amend by adding parties, without costs. Cleveland v. McDonald, 1 Gr. 415.

Demurrer-Amendment - Costs.]murrer was filed for want of parties and for want of equity, and on the argument it was admitted that the bill was defective as to parties. The court refused to allow the other question to be argued until the bill was want to be argued until the bill was made perfect as to parties, and gave the plaintiff liberty to amend on payment of costs.

Malcolm v. Malcolm, 14 Gr. 165.

joinder of parties since the Judicature Act.]—Mis-is no longer a ground of demurrer. Young v. Robertson, 2 O. R. 434; Carter v. Clarkson, 15 P. R. 397.

— Examination.]—A proper mode of taking an objection to a person being made a defendant is by demurrer to the bill; he need not wait until he is examined, and then object to the questions put to him. Kerr v. Read, 22 Gr. 529.

Particularity.]—Where a defendant demurs for want of parties, he should shew with sufficient precision the persons who ought to be parties, not necessarily by name, but in such a manner as to point out to the plaintiff the objection to his bill, and enable him to amend by adding the proper parties. Calvert v. Linley, 21 Gr. 470.

Time.]—When a demurrer is filed for want of parties as well as for want of equity, the question of parties must be disposed of before the demurrer for want of equity can be argued. Malcolm v. Malcolm, 2 Ch. Ch. 200.

Injunction—Consent to Add Parties.]—
On a motion for injunction an objection was taken, that certain necessary parties were not before the court; but counsel appearing for the absent parties, and consenting to their being made parties, to be bound by the proceedings, and treated as if actually defendants on record:—Held, that this cured the defect for the purposes of the motion. Attorney-General v. County of Grey, 7 Gr. 592.

Effect of Adding Partics—Costs.]—
A plaintiff having obtained the common injunction for want of answer, upon a bill defective for want of parties defendant put the property of the property o

Nolle Prosequi—Nonsuit.] — Misjoinder of defendants in a joint action of assumpsit cannot be curred either by a noile prosequi or by a nonsuit as to some of the defendants. A nonsuit as to some is a nonsuit as to all, and a verdict returned for some of the defendants is null and void. Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 4 U. C. R. 167.

Objection First Taken on Appeal.]—It is too late to raise an objection for the first time in the argument before the supreme court that the legal representatives of the assured were not made parties to the cause. Venner v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 17 S. C. R. 394.

Objection Taken after Hearing.]—After witnesses had been examined and the cause heard at Sandwich, the cause was reargued at Toronto:—Held, that the defendant could not insist, as a matter of right, on an objection for want of parties not taken at the hearing at Sandwich. King v. Keating, 12 Gr. 29.

Staying Proceedings for Misjoinder of Plaintiffs—Leave to Bring New Actions—Ante-dating Writs—Statute of Limitations.]——Upon the defendants' application, in a case of misjoinder of plaintiffs, under rule 324, the usual order is that all proceedings be stayed till election is made as to the plaintiff who shall proceed, and that the names of the others be struck out. But there is no power to direct that the rejected plaintiffs shall be allowed to issue writs of summons for their respective causes of action against the defendants nune pro tune as of the date when the writ in the original action was issued, there being no power to alter the date of the process. Clarke v. Smith, 2 H. & N. 753, Nazer v. Wade, 1 B. & S. 72S, and Doyle v. Kaufman, 3 Q. B. D. 7, 340, followed. Nor can a term be imposed that in the new actions the defendants be restrained from setting up the Statute of Limitations. Smurthwaite v. Hannay, [1894] A. C. 494, 506, specially referred to, Huthnauce v. Township of Raleigh, 17 P. R. 458.

Staying Proceeding until Defend-ants Added—Affidavit.)—By analogy to the old practice where a plea in abatement for nonjoinder of co-contractors was pleaded, a defendant now moving to stay proceedings until the co-contractors are added as parties, should shew by affidavit the names and residences of the persons alleged to be joint con tractors whom he seeks to have added, and the same liability as to costs, in case sons are added who turn out not to be liable, should be entailed upon him. In an action begun against an unincorporated company, as a partnership, to recover a sum for costs paid by the plaintiffs, an order in chambers allow-ing the plaintiffs to amend by adding as defendants certain members of the executive committee of the company, and to charge them in the alternative as personally liable by reason their having sanctioned the arrangement between the plaintiffs and the association, was affirmed without prejudice to the defend-ants applying to add parties. Aikins v. Dom-inion Live Stock Association of Canada, 17 P. R. 203.

Partners.]—In the case of a nominal corporation, which has no legal status as such, the ostensible corporators are partners; and their liability as partners, on the contracts of the company, is a joint, and not a joint and several, liability. Where some, but not all, of the contractors are sued in an action, they are entitled of right to have all the others within the jurisdiction added as defendants; and, the plea of abatement having been abolished, the method of exception is by prompt application to the court under rule 324. As to the representatives of the deceased or insolvent partners, there is a discretion to add or not. Gildersleeve v. Battour, 15 P. R. 239.

Staying Proceedings until Plaintiff Added - Involvency. 1—Where a suit was commenced in the name of a person who had previously assigned his interest to a creditor by way of security, and the plaintiff became insolvent before decree, but the cause proceeded to a hearing without any change of parties, and a decree for the plaintiff was pronounced, the court, at the instance of defendants, stayed proceedings until all proper parties should be brought before the court.

Striking out and Adding Defendants at Trial.]—At the trial, on objection by defendants counsel, that one defendant had been improperly joined, the Judge, on plaintiffs anotheration, struck his name out of the record; and upon defendants' counsel claiming the right to plead in abatement the non-joinder of another party, the name of such party was with his consent added to the record as a defendant:—Held, that the first amendment had been properly made, but not the second. McKee v. Judi, 20 C. P. 516.

Striking out Defendant after Verdict - Costs - Pleading.]—The plaintiff obtained a verdict against two defendants as partners, which was set aside because partnership was not proved. The pleintiff then applied to strike out the name of one of the defendants:—Held, that the amendment might be made, with costs to the defendant struck out, as upon a nolle prosequi. Held, also, that the defendant might plead de novo, without swearing to his defence, within two days after the amendment and payment of costs. Ponchoy v. Eastwood, 1 C. L. Ch. 63.

— Nolle Prosequi, — Two defendants being sued on the common counts joined in a plea of never indebted. After the record had been entered for trial, their attorney told the attorney for the plaintiff that the defendants were not jointly liable, but that one was, and the plaintiff's attorney thereupon entered a nolle prosequi on the record as to one, but omitted to file it. He then took a verdict against the other, upon a written agreement, signed by the attorney after such entry, to admit his liability in a sum named. After the verdict this defendant was arrested, and he then moved to set aside the proceedings: Held, that the plaintiff, instead of entering a tode prosequi, should have moved to strike our the defendant's name, but under the circle of the defendant's name, but under the circle world, and the rule was discharged without coss, Burnard v. McPherson, 2 Y. R.

Striking out Defendant without His Consent. —In an action for services rendered to defendants' vessel, the plaintiffs proced orally that the four defendants sued oanel the vessel, One of them was then called, and swore that another defendant had ceased to have any interest in the vessel when the services were rendered, though he was still a registered owner. The name of this defendant was then struck out. No certificate of registration was produced: — Held, that under the C. L. P. Act. s. 68, the amendment was authorized; and that the name of a defendant improperly joined may be struck out without his consent, and even against his express objection. Lake Superior Navigation for, Meating, 34 C. C. R. 201.

Striking out Plaintiff — Husbard and life - blatement.]—Under the practice in Nova Scotia, when the wife is improperly joined as co-plaintiff with the husband, the still does not abate, but the wife's name must be struck out of the record and the case determined as if brought by the husband alone. Caldwell v. Stadacona Fire and Life Ins. Co., 11 S. C. R. 212.

See McKean v. Jones, 19 S. C. R. 489; Lee v. Hopkins, 20 O. R. 666; Crerar v. Holbert, 17 P. R. 283; Chaput v. Robert, 14 A. R. 354; Cowan v. Allen, 23 A. R. 457, 26 S. C. R. 292.

3. Practice in Adding Parties.

After Decree—Petition—Costs.]—An application to amend after decree, under order 438, by adding a party interested in the equity of redemption, need not be on petition, but is properly made on motion. Where such a motion was opposed on the grounds of irregularity as not being by petition, the costs of opposing it were refused. Harrison v. Grier, 2 Ch. Ch. 440.

— Petition—Devisee of Mortgagor.]
—A., a mortgagee, filed his bill to foreclose against B., alleging that the mortgagor had died intestate, leaving him his heir-at-law, and so entitled to the equity of redemption. After decree, A. discovered that the mortgager had by will devised the mortgaged premises to C., and, by petition, sought to add him as a party, and that he might be held bound by the past proceedings in the suit. The leave was refused. Portman v. Paul, 10 Gr. 458.

See Rogers v. Rogers, 2 Gr. 137.

After Replication—Costs.]—After replication:—Held, that the plaintiff might amend his bill by adding a defendant, without withdrawing the replication, but on payment of costs. Johnson v. Covan. 2 Ch. Ch. 13.

Bill Taken pro Confesso.] — Where a plaintiff had obtained an order to take the bill pro confesso against one of the defendants, and afterwards applied to amend by adding parties without prejudice to the order which had been so obtained, the motion was refused. Herchner v. Benson, 1 Gr. 92.

Dispensing with Service on Original Parties — Judgment Creditor—Assignment.]—Where a plaintiff desired to amend by adding as a defendant a judgment creditor who had assigned his claim to the plaintiff, leave was given for that purnose, dispensing with service on the defendants aiready before the court. Boomer v. Gibson, 4 Gr. 430.

Evidence after Amendment.]—Where, after the evidence at the hearing was closed on both sides, the court ordered the cause to stand over to add a party, further evidence between the original parties was held to be inaumissible at the adjourned hearing. Attorney-General v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 15 Gr. 187.

Evidence before Amendment.]—
Where a bill is amended by adding parties plaintiff, the depositions of witnesses who had been previously examined in the cause may be read at the hearing. Chisholm v. Sheldon, 2 Gr. 178.

Laches in Applying. |—An application for leave to withdraw the replication and amend the bill by adding parties, where the cause had been set down for examination, and where the amendment would postpone examination till the following term, was refused with costs, the plaintiffs having been guilty of laches in making the application. Woodstock v. Niagara, 1 Ch. Ch. 166.

Leave to Amend-Scope of.]-When a cause stands over with leave to amend by adding parties, the plaintiff has no right to introduce any amendment, though immaterial, that is unconnected with such leave. But the amendment made in this case was not so unconnected with the order to amend as to render a motion to expunge the same proper. Chisholm v. Sheldon, 1 Gr. 294.

Where a cause stood over at the hearing with leave to add parties and to exhibit an interrogatory to prove the will of the testator, and the plaintiff afterwards amended by making the devisees of the testator co-plaintiffs and in addition to the tiffs, and in addition to the interrogatory to prove the will exhibited interrogatories to prove the fact of the persons so added as coplaintiffs being those named in the will; motion made to expunge those interrogatories as being unwarranted by the order to amend, was refused with costs, S. C., ib. 425.

Where, after the time for amending as of Where, after the time for amending as of course, an order is obtained to amend by adding a party "with apt words to charge him or otherwise, as plaintiff shall be advised," the plaintiff can only make such amendment as is required to introduce the additional party. Gülespie v. Grover, 2 Gr.

Praccipe Order. | —A party plaintiff may be added under a praccipe order to amend. Dunn v. McLean, 6 P. R. 97.

Waiver of Contempt. |- An amendment of a bill by adding parties, requiring no ans-ver from the defendant, is a waiver of process of contempt for want of answer, and in such a case the court will on an ex parte motion order the defendant's discharge. Thrusher v. Connolly, 1 Gr. 422.

Waiver of Injunction. |-After service of an injunction the plaintiff amended his bill, and added a new defendant, who was a mere trustee for the plaintiff, without however al-tering the frame of the bill, or the prayer Afterwards defendants committed a breach of Arterwards declarants committed a breach of the injunction, and the plaintiff moved to commit them:—Held, that the amendment was not a waiver of the injunction. McDon-cii v. ucKay, 12 Gr. 414.

Where a motion for injunction stood over, and before it was again brought on the plain-tiff amended his bill by adding necessary parties, and again brought on the motion without giving a fresh notice, the court refused to hear the motion on this objection being taken. Westacott v. Cockerline, 13 Gr. 159.

See Jones v. Miller, 24 O. R. 268, post H. 3.

4. Practice in Striking out Parties.

At Trial—Defendant—Objection,]—Under C. L. P. Act, s. 68, the name of a defendant improperly joined in an action on contract may be struck out at the trial, without tract may be struck out at the trial, without his consent, and even against his objection. Lake Superior Navigation Co. v. Beatty, 34 U. C. R. 201. See Burritt v. Hamilton, 17 U. C. R. 443.

Plaintiff.]-Where in assumpsit the wife of the plaintiff was improperly joined: —Held (before the C. L. P. A.), that the Judge at the trial could not strike out her name. Rischmuller v. Uberhaust, 10 U. C. R. 612

Defendants not Served.] - Where the plaintiff had declared against several defendants, and only one had been served, the others were allowed to be struck out of the declara-tion. Zavitz v. Hoover, M. T. 1 Vict.

A Farte Order.]—Neither a party plain-tiff nor a party defendant can be struck out under an order to amend obtained ex parte. Dunn v. McLean, 6 P. R. 97. Ex Parte Order.]-Neither a party plain-Witnesses-Incompetency - Removal by WHESSES incompetency—Removal by Striking out as Parties.]—The plaintiffs sued defendants H., M., and S., as joint makers of a note. H. and M. did not appear, and judgment was signed by mistake against all, but set aside as against S., who pleaded: Held, that an application to strike out the names of H. and M. from the record, so that they might be called as witnesses for S., was properly refused. Kerr v. Hereford, 17 U. C.

5. Revivor.

(See, also, Scire Facias and Revivor.)

Death of Party-Infants-Guardian.]-When it becomes necessary to revive by way of amendment against infant defendants, the proper course is to amend simply in the first instance by making the infants parties. After that is done, if the infants fail to have a guardian appointed, the plaintiff may apply under the 15th order to have a solicitor appointed guardian, and in either case the plaintiff will be in a position to move that the suit do stand revived. Kirkpatrick v. Fouquette, 4 Gr. 549.

Mortgage — Ejectment — Improvements.]-In ejectment the plaintiff obtained a verdict, but, as the defendant had made improvements on the land under a bona fide belief that the land was his own, he was held entitled to the relief given by R. S. O. 1877 c. 95, s. 4, and a master was directed to as-certain the value of such improvements and report thereon, which he did. A rule nisi having been obtained to refer back the report for the reasons stated, it appeared that after the report the defendant died intestate, and that no personal representative had been ap-pointed, leaving a widow who was residing on the land in question and a son by a former but no children by the second wife. and also that defendant had assigned all his interest in the sum to be found due for improvements to a loan society. The court per-mitted the plaintiff to amend his rule nisi by calling on the widow or son of the deceased and on the loan society to shew cause why they should not be made parties to the suit and why the former should not be appointed under A. J. Act, s. 9, to represent the estate under A. J. Act, 8, 9, to represent the estate of the defendant for the purposes of this motion and all subsequent proceedings in the reference, and why in that event the relief asked by the rule should not be granted. McCarthy v. Arbuckle, 31 C. P. 48.

Order to Amend.]-When any of the parties to a suit die, and it is necessary to bring the representatives of such deceased parties before the court, an order to amend the bill for that purpose will be granted. Smith v. Meredith, 2 Gr. 691.

Order to Amend—Notice of Motion.]—When a defendant to a suit dies, and the plaintiff desires to amend by way of revivor, pursuant to s. 15 of 4the 9th general order, the proper mode of proceeding is to serve notice of motion to amend upon the person intended to be brought before the court by the amendment. Goodeve v. Manners, 4 (fr. 101.

Proceeding without Order — Subsequent Adding of Parties.]—When a suit becomes defective, and is proceeded with without an order of revivor being taken out, a subsequent application, by petition, to supply the defect by adding parties, is not improper; but the new parties may not be bound by the proceedings had in their absence. Peck v. Bucke, 2 Ch. Ch. 294.

See Quantz v. Smelzer, 6 P. R. 228, post II.

6. Solicitor Joining Plaintiffs without Authority.

(See, also, Solicitor.)

Striking Out—Costs.]—Name of person improperly made a plaintiff by a solicitor struck out, and solicitor ordered to pay the costs. Miller v. Hill, 4 C. L. J. 78.

Right of Defendant to Apply-Costs. |- By a resolution of the council of a municipal corporation the mayor and clerk were instructed to grant a certificate under the corporate seal to the solicitors for the other plaintiffs authorizing them to join the corporation as value for corporation as plaintiffs in this action upon receiving a bond, to the satisfaction of the mayor, indemnifying the corporation against all costs. A bond was accordingly handed to the mayor, who retained it, but the action was brought by the solicitors, and the corporation joined therein as plaintiffs, without the granting of any certificate under the corporate seal. After the action had been begun the mayor informed the defendants' solicitors that no certificate had been issued, and stated that he would not sign one until he had been properly advised by counsel:-Held, that the action was brought in the name of the corporation without authority; and that the defendants had the right to move to have such name Semble, that the corporation should have been parties to the motion. also, that as the solicitors for the plaintiffs other than the corporation were not guilty of any intentional wrong-doing in joining the corporation as plaintiffs, they should not be made liable for the defendants' costs. Town of Baerie v. Weaymouth, 15 P. R. 95.

Authority—Corporate Seal—Costs.]—Solicitors who began an action in the name of a public school board and an individual as plaintiffs were retained for the board by a special committee appointed by resolution of the board, not under the corporate seal; the purposes of the appointment, as stated on the face of the resolution, embraced the commencement of any action respecting the matters referred to and the employment of counsel, the subject of the action being one of such matters:—Held, that this was not proper authority from the school board to the solicitors to bring the action, and the defendants had the right to have the name of the board as plaintiffs struck out. Town of Barrie v. Weaymouth, 15 P. R. 35, followed. The solicitors having acted in good faith and under the belief that their retainer was sufficient, no costs were awarded. Barrie Public School Board v. Town of Barrie, 19 P. R. 33.

7. Strangers Applying to be Added.

Creditors — Substantial Interest — Assignee, — The defendant C., as assignee of the defendant H. for the beneit of creditors, had taken possession of the goods in question, on which the plaintiff claimed a lien under an unregistered agreement in the nature of a chattel mortgage. On motion of certain creditors they were made parties to the action, under rule 105, O. J. Act, on the ground that they had a substantial interest in the subject matter of the action. Kitching v. Hicks, 9 P. R. 518.

Judgment Creditor — Registration of Judgment—Priorities.]—A, obtained a judgment against B, and registered same and issued fi. fas. against lands, kept them in force, and filed a bill on the judgment, before the Act abolishing the registration of judgments; C, had obtained judgment against B, and registered it, but subsequently to A.; C, filed his bill to set aside a prior sale made by B to D., not making A. a party. A decree was pronounced in his favour sustaining the sale, but giving him a lien on the purchase money. A. applied by petition to be made a party, and have his priority declared in that suit;—Held, that he could not by petition make himself a party to that suit, and that his remedy, if at all, was by bill. Quare, had be any remedy at all? City Bank v. McConkey, 3 C. L. J. 125.

Purchaser—Improvements, 1—A. having an interest in improvements for which, in a suit between B., his vendor, and C., B. obtained a decree:—Held, that A. could not, by petition, make himself a party to such suit; and that his remedy was by bill. Slater v. Young, 11 Gr. 208.

Wife Seeking Alimony — Collusive Suit.]—The action was brought by one F, and his wife, against Archibald F., to recover nine years' arrears, under an annuity deed made by the defendant to secure $120 a year to the plaintiffs during their lives. Johnston and the defendant's wife, land joins his particular to the plaintiffs during their lives. Johnston and the suit of defend this action, on the ground that it was collusively brought for the purpose of defeating her suit for alimony, and to deprive her of her dower in the lands:—Held, that Janet F, was entitled to be admitted to defend. Ferris v. Ferris, 9 P. R. 443.

See Toronto and Hamilton Navigation Co. v. Silcox, 12 P. R. 622, ante (2) (c). S. Substitution of Parties.

(a) Defendants.

Municipal Corporations — Water Commissioners.]—Under the extensive powers of amendment conferred by recent statutes:— Held, that there was power to substitute the corporation of the city of Toronto as defendants in this case. Trotter v. Toronto Water Works Commission, 14 C. L. J. 198

See also Hoorigan v. Driscoll, S P. R. 184.

(b) Plaintiffs.

Class Suit—Dismissal of Action—Appead to Court of Appead.]—Upon motion on behalf of the plaintiit to a Judge of the court of appeal for an order substituting a new plaintiff for him, and extending the time for giving security for the costs of his appeal from a judgment dismissing the action and for delivering reasons of appeal:—Held, that although where a judgment has been pronounced in favour of the plaintiff in a class action, that judgment curres to the benefit of the class, and he cannot deprive the others of that benefit, this is not so where the action has been dismissed; the reasons which apply in favour of depriving a plaintiff of the control of a favourable judgment do not exist in the case of an adverse decision; and in this case there was no ground upon which, unless by consent of the defendants, an order for substitution could be made. Macdonald v. City of Toronto, 18 P. R. 17.

Controverted Municipal Election — Withdraward of Relator.]—Where the relator in a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto under the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1892, desires to withdraw, the court has no power, under the statute or otherwise, to compel him to go on against his will, nor to substitute a new relator. The power given by s. Bu6 is to substitute a new defendant, not a relator. Regina ex rel. Masson v. Butler, 17 P. R. 382.

Ejectment.]—The C. L. P. Act, 1856, does not authorize the striking out all the plaintiffs hames in a summons in ejectment, and substituting a new set therefor, after the entry of the record for trial. Robinson v. Bell, Vastbinder v. Bell, 9 C. P. 21.

Promissory Note — Division Court.]— Revised rules 211, 216, and 224 of the division courts authorized the Judge in this case to substitute the name of the plaintiff for that of the original holder of the promissory note sued on as plaintiff in the action. Pegg v. Howlett, 28 O. R. 473.

See Worthington v. Boulton 6 P. R. 68.

9. Other Cases.

Beneficiaries—Consent — Amendment — Discretion. |—To entitle a defendant to security for costs, it is not sufficient to show that the plaintiff is a man of no means and has no beneficial interest in the subject-matter of the action; it must be shown that it is really the action of some other person. Gordon v. Armstrong, 16 P. R. 432, explained. The defendant sought, in the alternative, to have the nersons alleged to be really beneficially interested added as plaintiffs:—Held, that they could not be added without their consent in writing: rule 324 (b). Leave given to amend the defence by setting up that these persons were necessary parties. Semble, however, that the court has discretion, under rule 319, to proceed in the absence of some of the persons interested in the question under adjudication. Major v. Mackenzie, 17 P. R. 18.

Collateral Proceedings.)—Semble, that the power to bring other parties before the court under s. 8 of the A. J. Act. 1873, does not apply to summary proceedings collateral to the action. Victoria Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Bethune, 1 A. R. 398.

Counterclaim - New Defendants to-Striking out.] — A person brought into an action as defendant to a counterclaim delivered by the original defendant cannot deliver a counterclaim against such defendant. Such a pleading, not being authorized by the rules the practice, was struck out on summary application. Construction of rules 371-383. Street v. Gover, 2 Q. B. D. 498, followed Green v. Thornton, 9 C. L. T. Occ. N. 139, distinguished. Semble, if the company brought in here as defendants by counterclaim had been proper parties, cross-relief might have been given them, under rule 374, by staying execution upon any judgment recovered against them until they should establish their set-off them until they snown in an independent action. The action was in an independent action. The counterclaim of upon a promissory note. The counterclaim of the original defendants alleged that the plaintiffs took the note under circumstances disentitled them to recover:—Held, a defence and not a counterclaim. It further asked that the plaintiffs might be ordered to deliver up the note to be cancelled :-Held, that if that was a proper subject of counterclaim, it was one arising between the plaintiffs and the defendants as the result of the establishment of the defence, and did not render the introduction of new parties necessary. It further asked that if the plaintiffs should be found entitled to recover upon the note, new defendants by counterclaim should be ordered to pay it:—Held, not a matter in which the plaintiffs were concerned, and therefore, under rule 376, other persons could not be brought in as defendants by counterclaim. It further alleged that the plaintiffs and the new defendants by counterclaim conspired together with the fraudulent intention of keeping certain insurance moneys without applying them upon the note sued on; but there was no assertion that the plaintiffs received the insurance moneys, or any part of them, the insurance moneys, or any part of them, beyond the amount of the note; and the prayer was that the new defendants by counterclaim, and not the plaintiffs, should account for the insurance money over and above the amount of the note:—Held, that there was no excuse for joining the plaintiffs as parties liable to account with the added parties, and therefore no excuse for adding the latter. And the counterclaim of the original defendants, as far as it added new parties, was struck out. General Electric Co. v. Victoria Electric Light Co. of Lindsay, 16 P. R. 476, 529.

Creditors — Chattel Mortgage.] — The plaintiffs took a chattel mortgage from W., who the next day assigned to the defendant in trust for the benefit of his creditors. The defendant was not a creditor, and, before any creditor had been informed of the assignment, the plaintiffs, who had omitted to register hear morrgage, demanded of the defendant the goods contained in it, which was refused, whereupon this action was brought. Upon the application of the defendant, with the consent of M. a creditor of W., the master in chambers ordered M. to be added as a party defendant, in order to test the validity of the plaintiffs morrgage:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the order, for when the plaintiffs demanded the goods the creditors had no right, and they could not by a subsequent assent make good their claim under the assignment. Hyman v. Hourne, 5 O. R. 430.

Owner of Adjoining Land-Reseission of Salc-Fraud.] — The defendant and his brother partitioned their lands, defendant taking the west half of a lot, on which was an hotel, and the brother the east half, on which a store was erected, each supposing that the division line ran between the two The defendant sold his portion to buildings. the plaintiff, who had lived opposite for many years, the land being described as the west haif according to a plan. The hotel encroached upon the east half at the rear end of the building about thirty-four inches, the value of the land encroached upon being very trifling. It appeared that the hotel could be moved for about 840; and that the defendant had offered to procure a lease of the portion encroached The plaintiff charged that the defendant had falsely and fraudulently represented that the division line between the two lots ran between the two buildings, and brought an action therefor, praying for a rescission of the sale, for an account of improvements, and for damages. The deed was drawn after the alleged misrepresentation, and after the plainthe encroachment, and nothing d about the line. The Judge at tiff knew of was then said about the line. The Judge at the trial found that there was no false representation, but he added defendant's brother as a party, and directed him to convey to the plaintiff the land encroached upon:—Held, that the brother should not have been added; and the prother should not have been added, and the plaintiff, having based her action on the ground of fraud, should not be allowed to rely upon an entirely different ground. Dunbar v. Meck, 32 C. P. 195.

Release by One Plaintiff,]—After issue joined one of two plaintiffs gave to the defendant a release under seal of all actions and demands. The defendant thereupon moved to stay all proceedings in the suit:—Held, that the defendant should plead the release, and that he was not entitled to a stay of proceedings, and the remaining plaintiff was allowed to strike out the name of the other plaintiff. Methigne v. Carling, S.P. R. 171.

Transferees of Goods — Assignce for Creditors. |—The firm of R. & Co., consisting of three members, supplied goods to the defendants, and subsequently one of the members retired, and transferred his interest in the assets of the firm to the remaining partners, who continued to carry on business under the same firm name, and afterwards made an assignment to E, under 48 Vict. c. 25 (9.), for the benefit of their creditors. E. as assignnes, sold to the plaintiff the debt supposed to be due from the defendants to R. & Co. for the price of the goods supplied, and also the interest of R. & Co. in any goods supplied and charged to anyone, remaining un-sold, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover the same. The goods in question, however, were not purchased by defendants, but were consigned to them for sale by R. The goods in question, & Co., by whose instructions the proceeds of the goods actually sold were remitted to H. the goods actually soid were remitted to H. & Co., to whom they had been assigned by R. & Co. At the trial it appeared from the evidence that the defence was undertaken and conducted for the defendants by H. & Co. conducted for the defendants by H. & Co. The Judge found that no debt had ever existed from the defendants to R. & Co., and dis-missed the action, refusing to add H. & Co. as parties. The plaintiff moved by way of appeal from this judgment, seeking to make H. & Co. and E. parties, and to charge the defendants in the character of ballees of the residue, remaining mostly of the goods conresidue, remaining unsold, of the goods con-signed to them by R. & Co., in which he claim-ed an interest, subject to the right of H. & Co., if the transfer to them should be upheld, or absolutely if that transfer should be set aside as a fraudulent preference:—Held, that these questions were "questions in-volved in the action" within the meaning of rule 103, O. J. A., having regard to the manner in which the defence was conducted, and to the fact that the transfer to H. & Co. was set up in the defence, and that the plain-tiff should be allowed to amend under that rule, but the amendment must be confined to the plaintiff's possible rights. 2. That by s. the plaintiff's possible rights. 2. That by s. 7 of 48 Vict. c. 26, E. was the only person entitled to enforce the right of the creditors of R. & Co. to set aside the transfer to H. & Co., but that transfer was not made by the same firm of R. & Co, who assigned to E.; that the two estates were distinct, and creditors of the original firm, not the creditors of the new firm, were those only against whom a fraudulent preference by the original firm could be declared void; that the plaintiff could have no higher right than E., through whom he claimed, and could not therefore attack the assignment to H. & Co. The plaintiff was he claimed, and could not therefore attack the assignment to H. & Co. The plaintiff was granted leave to amend by adding H. & Co. as defendants, his claim against them to be limited to an account of their debt and of payments on account thereof, and, as against the original defendants, to obtain the unsold goods as soon as the debt due II. & Co. should goods as soon as the debt due 11. & Co., should be satisfied; and by adding E. as a plaintiff upon filing his consent, payment by the plain-tiff of the defendants whole costs to be a condition precedent. Adams v. Watson Manufacturing Co., 15 O. R. 218.

II. NECESSARY AND PROPER PARTIES.

1. Assignor and Assignee of Chose in Action.

Absolute Transfer — Demurrer — Res Judicatu.] — C., by instrument under seal, assigned to the defendant, as security for moneys due, his interest in certain policies of instrance, on which he had actions pending. C. afterwards gave to B. & Co. an order on the defendant for the bulance of the insurance money that would remain after paying his debt to the defendant. B. & Co. indorsed the order and delivered it to the plaintiff, by whom it was presented to the defendant, who wrote his name across its face. B. & Co. afterwards delivered to the plaintiff a document signed by them stating that, he been informed that the indorsed order not negotiable by indorsement, to perfect the plaintiff's title and enable him to obtain the money in the defendant's hands, they assigned transferred their interest therein and appointed the plaintiff their attorney, in their name, but for his own use and benefit, to collect the same. The defendant, having received the amounts due C. on the insurance policies, informed the plaintiff, on his demanding an account, that there were prior claims that would absorb it all. The plaintiff then filed a bil in equity for an account and pay-ment of the amount found due him, to which the defendant demurred for want of parties, alleging that the order, though absolute on its face, was, in fact, only given as security, and that, an account between B. & Co. and C. being necessary to protect C.'s rights, C. was a necessary party to the suit. The demurrer was overruled and the judgment overruling it not appealed from, and the same defence of not appealed from, and the same defence of want of parties was set up in the answer to the bill:—Held, that the question of want of parties was res judicata by the judgment on the demurrer, and could not be raised again by the answer. Even if it could, the judg-ment was right, as C, was not a necessary party. As between the plaintiff and the de-fendant the order was an absolute transfer of the fund to be received by the defendant, and was treated by all the parties as a nego-tiable instrument. The defendant had nothing to do with the equities between C. and & Co., or between B. & Co. and the plain tiff, but was bound to account to the plain-tiff in accordance with his undertaking as indicated by the acceptance of the order. McKean v. Jones, 19 S. C. R. 489.

Written Assignment — Restoration of Assignee's Right.]—Under the provisions of R. S. O. 1887 c. 192, in order to enable the assignee of a chose in action to sue in his own name, the assignment must be in writing, but a written instrument is not required to restore the assignor to his original right of action. Rennie v, Block, 26 S. C. R. 356.

See Prittie v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 23 A. R. 449: Walls v. Sault Ste. Marie Paper and Pulp Co., 18 C. L. T. Occ. N. 117; Scott v. Benedict, 9 C. L. T. Occ. N. 181: Bank of Commerce v. Bank of British North America, 10 P. R. 158; Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495; McCarthy v. Arbuckle, 31 C. P. 48.

2. Attorney-General.

Canal Company—Suit by Shareholders —Improper Conduct of Directors,]—Where by the Act of incorporation the government is authorized to purchase the corporate estate on payment of its full value, the attorneygeneral is not a necessary party to a bill by the stockholders against the directors, complaining of improper conduct on the part of the latter in dealing with the corporate funds, Hamilton v, Desjardins Canal Co., 1 Gr. 1.

Charitable Bequest.]—To a bill either to establish or impeach the legality of certain charitable bequests, the attorney-general may be made a party. Davidson v. Boomer, 15 Gr. 1.

Church Corporation — Suit by Member. |—A bill will lie by a member of the corporation of the church society of the diocese of Toronto, on behalf of himself and all other members of the society, to correct and prevent alleged breaches of trust by the corporation; and to such a bill the attornery-general is not a necessary party. Boutton v. Church Society, 15 Gr. 450. Sec S. C., 14 Gr. 123.

Church Trustees — Action to Set aside Decet. — Where a bill was filed in the name of "The Trustees of the Franklin Congregation of the Methodist Church of Canada," against persons claiming under a deed from their grantor, for the purpose of setting aside such deed as a cloud upon the title of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the suit was properly instituted by the trustees as such; and that neither their grantor nor the attorney-general was a necessary party thereto. Trustees of Franklin Church v. Maguire, 23 Gr. 102.

Crown.)—The attorney-general is not a necessary party where the result of a suit, whatever it may be, will not prejudice the Crown, and there is no interest of the Crown to be protected. Bennet v. O'Meara, 5 Gr. 396.

Title to Land.]— The attorney-general was held a necessary party where a question affected the right of the government to the land granted in a patent; and leave to amend was granted to enable him to be added as a party, although the defendant was in a position to move, and made a counter-motion, to dismiss; but defendant was allowed costs, Great Western R. W. Co. v. Jones, 2 Ch. Ch. 219.

Crown Patent—Suit to Set aside.]—The bill alleged that the patentees obtained their patent by false representations to the government, and shewed a case in which the patentees would not be entitled to compensation if the patent were set aside and the land given to another:—Held, that to such a bill the aftorney-general was not a necessary party. Recs v. Attorney-General, 16 Gr. 467.

Expropriation of Land—Title to Roadway.]—See Re Trent Valley Canal, 11 O. R. 687.

Gas Company—Application to Add Attorney-General after Final Judgment.]—See Johnston v. Consumers' Gas Co. of Toronto, 27 O. R. 9, 23 A. R. 566, 17 P. R. 297.

Insurance Company—Suit by Share-holder — Non-payment of Stock Subscriptions.]—An insurance company was incorporated by statute with a capital of $500,000, and by the Act it was provided that when $100,000 was subscribed and 10 per cent. paid up, a general meeting of the shareholders might be called and directors elected; but the company was not to commence business until at least $50,000 of its capital stock should be paid up. It appeared that the $50,000 required by the Act had been paid into the minister of finance, who had thereupon granted a license to the company to transact insurance business, but that the money had been borrowed for the purpose of being so deposited; that the 10 per cent, payment on stock subscribed for had not been made in cash, but notes of hand taken from several of the subscribers therefor; and that the $50,000 of the stock required by the statute to be paid up had not been so paid. One of the stock-holders, who had paid his deposit in cash, thereupon filed a bill setting up these facts and seeking to restrain the company from carrying on business under their charter until at least the $50,000 was paid up.—Held, on demurrer, that the bill was properly filed by the shareholder alone, and need not be on behalf of himself and others. 2. That the attorney-general was not a necessary party.

3. That the shareholders who had paid their deposits by promissory notes were not necessary parties. Cass v. Ottava Agricultural Inst. 6., 22 Gr. 512.

Legacy for Religious Purposes.]—
The attorney-general was held a necessary party to a bill filed to administer an estate and declare a legacy for religious purposes void. Long v. Wilmotte, 2 Ch. Ch. 87.

Municipal Corporation—Suit by.]— The attorney-general is not a necessary party to a bill filed by the municipal council of an incorporated town to prevent an injury to the property of the municipality. Town of Guelph v. Canada Co., 4 Gr. 632.

Mayor,] — A bill will lie by some of the inhabitants of a municipality alleging an illegal application of the funds by the mayor, which the council refused to interfere with. The attorney-general is not a necessary party to such a suit. Paterson v. Bouces, 4 Gr. 170.

Bank.]—Suit by Ratepayer—Debentures—
Bank.]—A municipal corporation, after raising money on the credit of the municipal loan fund for a purpose specified in a by-law, passed another by-law diverting the debentures to another purpose; and under this second by-law the debentures passed into the hands of the Bank of Upper Canada;—Held, that a bill would lie by a ratepayer, on behalf of himself and all other ratepayers of the municipality, against the bank and the municipal corporation, for the restoration of the debentures to the corporation; and a demurrer, on the ground that the attorney-general was not a defendant, was overruled. Brogdin v. Buck of Upper Canada, 13 Gr. 544.

See McMurray v. Northern R. W. Co., 22 Gr. 476.

3. Companies, Shareholders, and Officers.

Company made Party with Directors—Intervent of Stock. —Held, that the company were properly made parties to an action to restrain a forfeiture of stock made under a resolution of the directors, it being alleged that the number of directors had been lingually reduced, as the reduction of the directorate was the act of the company. Christopher V. Nozon, 4 O. R. 672.

Company made Party with Share-holders. |—In an action by an execution creditor of a company against shareholders to make them liable upon their shares for the amount unpaid thereon, the plaintiff sought also to recover from the defendants moveys shewn to be in their hands, which is moveys shewn to be in their hands, which is moveys the party of the open shewn to be in their hands, which is the party of the open shewn to be in their hands of the open shewn to be in of such moneys; but the company were necessary parties to the action; and their consent to being added as plaintiffs not having been filed as required by rule 324 (b), they should be added as defendants. Held, also, a proper case, under rules 324 (c) and 328, for dispensing with service upon the company, as the defendants already before the court were directors and the principal shareholders in the company, Jones v. Miller, 24 O. R. 208.

Officers made Defendants with Company—Infringement of Patent,1—A bill was filed against a joint stock company (limited) to restrain the infringement of a patent, to which certain officers of the company were made parties, and the bill alleged that "the defendants" were committing the act complained of, and prayed relief against "the defendants." A demurrer on the ground that the officers were improperly made parties was overruled with costs; these officers being charged personally with committing the nets complained of, and relief being prayed against them. Cline v. Mountainview Cheese Factory, 20 Gr. 227.

chip.1—A bill was filed by a member of an incorporated association, against the corporation, the president, and the secretary thereof, charging that these officers had colluded and conspired together to refuse and deprive the plaintiff of the rights and privileges of the association, and setting forth certain loss and damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason thereof, and praying amongst other things that defendants might be ordered to pay and make good such loss and damage, and that the defendants, other than the secretary, might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit:—Held, notwithstanding the provisions of the G3rd general order of 1808, that the secretary was a proper party to the bill; and a demurrer by him, on the ground that that he was not a necessary or proper party, was overruled with costs. Cline v. Mountainview Cheese Factory, 20 Gr. 227, approved of and followed. Cuthbert v. Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada, 24 Gr. 531.

Railway—Purchase by New Company— Rights against Old Company.]—The statute 19 Vict. e. 21, incorporating the Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., with power to purchase the railway therein mentioned, did not deprive unpaid owners of any lien they had for the price of land therefore sold to the old company. The old company was held to be a necessary party to a suit by a land owner to enforce a lien for purchase money in respect of land sold to the old company before the transfer of the railway to the new company; it not appearing but that the old company was interested in the question to be litigated. Paterson v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 17 Gr. 521.

Railway Companies—Carriage of Goods—Connecting Lines.]—The plaintiff shipped goods from St. Johns, Quebec, to Dundas, Ontario, to be carried from St. Johns to Toronto by the Grand Trunk R. W. Co., who delivered them to the Great Western R. W. Co., who carried them to Dundas, where they arrived in a damaged static. The plaintiff being in doubt as to state. The plaintiff being in doubt as the separate contract with each, joined both as defendants. Held, affirming the order of a Judge, who had affirmed the order of the master in chambers (9-P. R. So), that the case came within rule 94 of the Judicature Act, and that the plaintiff had a right to make both companies parties. Harcey v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 7 A. R. 715.

Railway Company—Joint Tort-feasor.]
—Plaintiff sued defendant for flooding his land by means of a mill dam, after the determination of a license to do so. The Great Western R. W. Co. had turned the waters of the stream into another channel, which was not deep enough to carry off all the water if the defendant's dam were removed, so that by the act of the railway company the plaintiff could not obtain complete relief by succeeding against defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff should have liberty under rules 91, 103, O. J. A., to add the railway company as defendants. Head v. Boseman, 9 P. R. 12

Retired Directors—Parties in Master's Office. —A decree was obtained in a suit by a shareholder on behalf of himself and all other shareholders, for the administration of the assets of the society, and charging the directors with losses sustained:—Held, that persons who had ceased to be directors before the suit could not be made parties in the master's office. Rolph v. Upper Canada Building Society, 11 Gr. 275.

Use of Company's Name by Share-holders.]—Where the directors of an incorporated company misappropriated the funds, a bill against them and the company, in respect of such misappropriation, cannot be sustained by some of the stockholders on behalf of all except the directors; the company must be made plaintiffs whether the acts of the directors are void or only voidable, and the stockholders have a right to make use of the name of the company as plaintiffs in such proceedings. Hamilton v. Desjardins Canal Co., 1 Gr. 1.

Where a suit is necessary to obtain from the directors or officers of an incorporated company an account of their dealings with the company, or to recover from them, or any other person, property or money of the corporation, the only proper plaintiff is the company itself. Where one shureholder of a railway company filed a bill on behalf of himself and all other shareholders (except a defendant) against the company and its managing director, alleging that the managing director, alleging that the managing director had virtually the appointment of a majority of the directors, and thus controlled the action of the company; and charging that such managing director had misappropriated large amounts of the company's funds, and had also been guilty of several other acts of misconduct, which, if it were true, were properly subjects for the cognizance of a court of equity, and in respect of which the directors had omitted to call him to account, but the plaintiff failed to shew that the consent of the directors of

of the shareholders could not be obtained to institute proceedings in the name of the company, a denurrer to the bill for want of equity, as well as for want of parties, filed by the company and the managing director, was allowed. Such an objection to the frame of a bill is not a mere "formal objection," such as is intended to be provided for by the Administration of Justice Act of 1875, s. 49. To such a bill the attorney-general, though a proper, is not a necessary party. Hamilton v. Desjardina Canal Co., 1 Gr. I. and Paterson v. Bowes, 4 Gr. 170, followed. Brogdin v. Bank of Upper Canada, 13 Gr. 544, distinguished. McMurray v. Northern R. W. Co., 22 Gr. 476.

A denurrer to a bill filed by shareholders of an incorporated company on behalf of thenselves and all other shareholders except the defendants, in which the company were joined as co-plaintiffs, attacking a transaction whereby all the shareholders, including some of those whom the plaintiffs assumed to represent, received shares in the transaction sought to be impeached, was allowed. City Light and Heating Co. of London v, Marche, 28 Gr. 333.

See Cass v. Ottuwa Agricultural Ins. Co., 22 Gr. 512; Johnston v. Consumers Gas Co. of Toronto, 17 P. R. 297; Jones v. Imperial Bunk of Canada, 23 Gr. 202; McKensie v. Decean, 30 U. C. Sec. also, ante 2.

4. Debtors and Creditors.

Greditors—Fraudulent Conveyance—Execution.]—Where a suit is instituted by a judgment creditor, who has not placed an execution against lands in the hands of the sherilf, in order to set aside a deed as fraudulent, he must sue on behalf of all creditors of the defendant, and the fact that the deed was made by a third party in consideration of money paid by the debtor does not alter the rule of pleading in this respect. Morphy v. Wilson, 27 Gr. 1.

The plaintiff filed her bill for alimony, alleging that a conspiracy had been entered into between her husband and the other defendant to prevent her realizing any alimony that might be awarded her, and that for that purpose her husband fraudulently conveyed all his lands to the co-defendant, and the bill prayed to have such contrained declared fraudulent. The grantee in the impacthed conveyance demurred for multifariousness, for want or equity, and want of parties. The court overruled the demurrer on the first. The court overruled the demurrer on the first of parties; the plaintiff, not having reaching the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties. The court overruled all other creditors. Longeway v. Bickleid, i. Gr. 190, Turner v. Smith, 236 Gr. 198, Culver v. Swayze, 25 Gr. 356, and Morphy v. Wilson, 27 Gr. 1, considered and followed. Campbell v. Campbell, 29 Gr. 256.

New Cause of Action.]—An action was brought by one of the next of kin to set aside, as having been obtained by undue induence, a transfer to the defendant of policies on the life of a person who had died intestate; and subsequently his administrator was, on his own consent, added as a party plaintiff. After the action was entered for trial, the plaintiffs' solicitors, also acting as solicitors for certain creditors of the deceased, obtained an order under rule 445 from the master in chambers to amend the statement of claim and record by making such creditors parties, suing on behalf of themselves and all other creditors to set aside the transfer of the policies as fraudulent and void against them:—Held, that the addition of the new plaintiffs was not necessary to determine the real matter in dispute in the "action commenced," as required by the rule, but was the introduction of a new action altogether distinct from the action commenced, and one which the plaintiffs in that action could not maintain; and the order of the master was set aside. Tinning v. Bingham, 16 P. R. 110.

Trust Deed—Action by or against trustee.]—To a suit brought by or against a trustee of un insolvent's estate, in respect of a sun owing by one of the debtors of the insolvent, the creditors for whose benefit the trust deed was executed are not necessary parties. O'connell v. Charles, 2 Gr. 489.

— Trust Deed — Representation.] — A large body of creditors may be represented by one or more of the number, but in any such proceeding the bill must disclose a sufficient reason for this departure from the rule of practice requiring all persons interested to be parties to the suit. Where, therefore, a bill by one of several creditors entitled under a deed of trust was filled, and stated "that the creditors of the said L. entitled to the benefit of the said indenture are too numerous to make it practicable to prosecute this suit if they were all made parties: "—Held, that such statement was too general to satisfy the court that the rule could not be compiled with. Quere, whether it is necessary to furnish proof of the allegation that the parties are too numerous to be all brought before the court; and whether in a creditor's suit any decree can be made without previous proof of its debt. Michie v. Charles, 1 Gr. 125.

Where a bill was filed by one of several creditors of a debtor who had assigned his estate for the benefit of his creditors, against the debtor and the trustees, seeking an necount of the estate and payment, without making any other creditor a party, the court overruled an objection for want of parties, on the ground of the absence of any such creditor, Wood v. Brett, 9 Gr. 78. See Wylie v. Mekay, 20 Gr. 421.

Where a bill was filed by one or two creditors, both of whom claimed to be paid in priority to the other creditors, of an estate, axinst the representatives of the trustee and one of several creditors who claimed that all should share pro rata:—Held, that all the parties interested were sufficiently represented. Wight v. McLean, 24 Gr. 237.

Debtor—Judgment—Surety.]—To a suit by a streety against the creditor for an assignment by him of a judgment recovered assist the debtor, the debtor is a necessary party. Cockburn v. Gillespie, 11 Gr. 465.

Execution Creditors — Mortgage.]—A suit was instituted upon a mortgage against the assignee in insolvency of the mortgager, and on proceeding to the master's office it appeared that there were creditors of the mortgager who had executions in the hands of the sheriff at the date of the assignment in insolvency:—Held, that it was proper to add such creditors as parties in his office. Canada Landed Credit Co. v. McAllister, 21 Gr. 593.

Execution Debtor — Sale under Execution—Sheriff. I—Semble, that the court would entertain a bill for the purpose of compelling a sheriff to convey property sold under an execution, but to such a bill the execution debtor whose property has been sold must be made a party. Without v. Smith, 5 Gr. 203.

Joint Debtors—Fraudulent Conveyance by One.]—To a bill by an execution creditor of two joint debtors, to set aside conveyances by one of them as fraudulent and void against creditors, the grantor was a defendant:— Held, that if the grantor was a necessary party, his co-debtor should be a party also. Pyper v, Cameron, 13 Gr. 131.

Judgment Creditor.] — When a judgment has been recovered pendente lite, it is not necessary to make the judgment creditor a party. Wallbridge v. Martin, 2 Ch. Ch. 275.

See City Light and Heating Co. v. Mache, 28 Gr. 363; Beattie v. Wenger, 24 A. R. 72; Ferguson v. Kenny, 12 P. R. 455; Gibbons v. Barvill, 12 P. R. 478; Boomer v. Gibson, 4 Gr. 430; City Bank v. McConkey, 3 C. L. J. 125; Hyman v. Bourne, 5 O. R. 430; Adams v. Watson My. Co., 15 O. R. 218.

5. Executors and Administrators.

Annuity—Enforcement against Land.]—
In a suit to enforce a lien for an annuity secured upon real estate, it is not necessary to make the personal representative of the person bound to pay a party, unless an account of the personal estate of the deceased is asked. Paine v. Chapman, 7 Gr. 179.

Assignor in Trust—Personal Represent-ative—Rights of Cestuis que Trust.]—J. M. by an informal instrument purported to assign to his son-in-law, W. M., all his estate real and personal, "with notes and accounts, on condition that he pay his heirs in the manner following," and the instrument then proceeded to direct the payment to certain of the assignor's children and grandchildren of $400 each; it also contained this agreement: "The said W. M. hereby becomes bound to pay the above mentioned sums to the parties therein named at the time of the decease of the said J. M., or as soon after as can conveniently be done: "—Held, that the effect of the instrument was to entitle each of the beneficiaries to file a bill in his own name after the death of J. M., to enforce payment of the $400 coming to him; and that the personal representative of J. M. was not a necessary party. Muholland v. Merrium, 19 Gr. 288.

Executors without Probate.] — Such executors as have proved may sue without making the others parties, though the latter have not renounced. Forsyth v. Drake, 1 Gr.

Renunciation.]—A party entitled as a residuary devises filed a bill against one of three persons named as executors and trustees, praying to have the trusts in the will carried out; alleging that the other two persons named as executors and trustees had renounced probate, and had never acted in the trusts. Defendant's residence was unknown to plaintiff, and service had been effected by advertisement, under the general orders; the bill was taken against him pro confesso, and there was no evidence other than such admission of defendant, as to the other parties having renounced or refused to act. The court refused to make any decree in the absence of the co-executors. Lane v., Young, 17 Gr. 100.

Insured—Personal Representative—Claim to Insurance Moneya,—A life policy was assigned absolutely to one F., who afterwards left the country. The insured died insolvent, and no one administered to his estate. The plaintiffs claimed the insurance money, alleging that the assignment had been made in trust for them, to secure a larger sum owing to them by the assignor; and having filed a bill to compel payment by the company to them, they moved under the G. O. No. 30 (June, 1853), that they might be at liberty to proceed without a personal representative to the estate of the insured; but the court held the case was not within the order, Toronto Savings Bank v. Canada Life Assurance Co., 13 Gr. 171.

Intestate — Personal Representative— Distribution of Estate.] — A., domiciled in Scotland, died there intestate, leaving personal property. Three of the next of kin, a brother and two sisters, concurred in appointing an agent in Scotland to wind up the estate and transmit an account to them therefor. The agent did so, and transmitted to the brother some money and personal chattels as all that remained after paying the intestate's debts and funeral expenses. The brother paid the sisters their shares of the money, but kept all the chattels. In a suit by the sisters for a division of these, an objection taken to the absence of any personal representative of deceased in this country, was overruled. Sutherland v. Ross, 13 Gr. 507.

Mortgage — Personal Representative of Mortgagor's Husband.] — Where several tenants in common, and the husband of one of them, in order to secure a debt due by another of them, executed a mortgage which conveyed a life estate only to the mortgage, and on default in paying the mortgage money, the mortgage has sued and obtained judgment and execution against all the mortgagors for the amount of the debt, and under the execution so obtained had sold their reversion, and the mortgage was thereby satisfied; but the purchaser went into possession during the life of the mortgage :—Held, that the personal representative of the husband was a necessary party to a suit by the mortgage's life estate and an account of the rents and profits. Nelson v. Robertson, 1 Gr. 530.

Partner—Personal Representative.]—One of several joint contractors having died during the progress of the work contracted for.

and a bill being afterwards filed by the survivors to enforce a claim under the contract;
—Held, that the personal representatives of the deceased partner should have been made parties; the rules respecting the rights of surviving partners to sue alone not applying to suits in equity. Sykes v, Brockville and Ottawa R, W, Co., 9 Gr. 9.

Where a suit was brought by a surviving partner against a person entitled to the equity of redemption in certain railway stocks and bonds, for the purpose of realizing the amount due on the mortgage, it was held to be unnecessary to make the personal representatives of the deceased partner parties. The last case not followed. Bolckow v. Foster, 24 Gr. 333.

— Real or Personal Representative.]
—Where the mortgage debt is taken in the name of one partner to secure a partnership debt, and a bill is filed to enforce the security, the representatives real or personal of a deceased partner are not necessary parties, Stephens v, Simpson, 12 Gr. 493.

Personal Representative ad Litem.]

—By order No. 30 of 1853, the court may proceed without any personal representative of a decensed person where none has been appointed, or may appoint some person to represent the estate for the purpose of the suit. This does not apply to cases where parties have a beneficial or substantial interest, but only to cases of mere formal parties. Shericood v. Frechand, 6 Gr. 305.

[But see con. rule (1897) 194].

Purchaser of Land — Specific Performance, — Quare, where it is clear that a purchaser of real estate has paid all his purchase money, whether it is necessary, in a suit for specific performance against the heirs-at-law of the vendor, to make the personal representatives parties to the bill therefor. In such a case it would seem sufficient to add the personal representatives as parties in the master's office. Addaman v, 81 stat. 13 Gr., 692.

Testator — Personal Representative—Account.]—Where the will had not been proved, a bill filed for an account against persons said to be in possession of the assets, was dismissed on the ground that the personal representative was a necessary party. Zimmerman v. O'Reilly, 14 Gr. 640.

Personal Representative — Charge under Will.—Where a testator devised his real and personal estate to A., subject to a charge of $200 in favour of B., and A., after the testator's death, mortgaged the real estate to B. to secure a further sum, a bill by B. for payment of the two sums, praying in default a foreclosure or sale, was held not to be multifarious. In such a case the personal representative of the testator was held to be a necessary party; and an allegation that the defendant had been appointed executor by the will was held insufficient, in the absence of any allegation that he had proved the will or had acted as executor. Kelly v. Ardell, 11 Gr. 570.

6. Heirs-at-law, Next of Kin, and Persons Interested under Wills.

Devisees—Dower—Devolution of Estates Act.]—Since the Devolution of Estates Act. R. S. O. 1887 c. 108, s. 4, devisees are not necessary parties to an action for dower. Malone v. Malone, 17 O. R. 101.

Mortgage Actions.]-See Mortgage.

Trustee and Cestui que Trust.]—A bill having been filed by the assignee of the right to certain lands against the trustee thereof, without making the heir of the assignor a party, and the trustee having set up a defence impenching the assignment, and instaing that such heir was the party entitled to the conveyance, the court, at the hearing, ordered the cause to stand over, with liberty to mend by adding the heir as a party defendant. Miller v. Ostrander, 12 Gr. 349.

Vendor and Purchaser.]—Where a vendos, before obtaining a conveyance, assigned to A, half of the land purchased, and to B, the other half; and the vendor afterwards executed a conveyance to each, intending to convey to A, and B, their respective portions, but ley a mistake the conveyance to A, comprised E, s land and did not comprise A, s own, nor did the conveyance to B, comprise A, s land; but each took and kept possession of the land actually intended for him:—Held, that to a bill afterwards filled by B, against A, for a conveyance of B, s land to him, the heir of the original vendor, in whom the legal estate in A, s land was still vested, was a necessary party. Rowsell v, Hagden, 2 Gr. 557.

Will — Action to Annul.]—See Currie v. Currie, 24 S. C. R. 712.

Action to Establish.]—The plaintiffs propounded a will in a surrogate court, under which they took the whole estate, and were named as essecutors. The defendant, who was one of several next of kin, all having an equal interest if the will was invalic, contested its validity, and the case was removed into the high court. The other next of kin also disputed the will, but were not acting in concert with the defendant. Upon an objection taken by the defendant at the trial:—Heid, that the other next of kin should be made parties; and the trial was adjourned for that purpose, it appearing that they could conveniently be added. Cornell v. Smith, 14

In an action to establish a will where the execution is impeached on the ground of undue influence, all parties interested should be made parties to the action; rule 319 (con. rule, 1807, 202) being confined to cases where some special reason exists for not bringing all proper parties before the court. Gunn v. Corson, 11 C. L. T. Occ. N. 47.

Beneficiaries—Married Woman.]—
Where a house and land, the separate property of a married woman, were sold, and the powerds taken and retained by her husband, who had never accounted for them:—Held, it is not because the process, and the wife's claim constituted separate estate. Semble, that where, in such an action, the plaintiff claims that the married woman sentitled to separate estate under a certain will, the court will determine the point without requiring the other beneficiaries under the will to be added as parties. Briggs v. Willson, 24 A. R. 521.

—— Decease of Heirat-law—Revivor.]
—The rule that all parties interested in the subject matter of a suit must be before the court, should only be relaxed, under con, order 57, where the interests of justice manifestly require it. A suit was brought to set aside a will, and the persons interested under the will, as well as those interested as next of kin or heirat-law in the event of the will being set aside, were made parties. The defendant M. S., one of the heirax-law, died subsequently to the institution of the suit:—Held, that the suit should be revived against the representatives of M. S.: and that, although their interest was represented by other parties to the suit, con, order 57 did not apply, as they might afterwards bring another suit to impeach the same will in case this suit failed, and no sufficient reason was given to justify the suit being proceeded with in their absence. Quantz v. Smelzer, 6 P. R. 228.

Person to Whom Legacy Paid.]—A testator gave legacies to three grandchildren, to be paid at majority or marriage, and provided: "In case of the death of any one of my grandchildren, the bequests , shall be divided among and go to the survivor or survivors of them, share and share alike." All three survived the testator, but two died before marriage or majority, and the executor paid all three legacies to the survivor. The plaintiff, the personal representative of the grandchild who was the second to die, brought this action against the executor to recover one-half of the legacy of the grandchild who died first:—Held, that, as a determination of the proper construction of the will was necessary to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, it was not an improper exercise of discretion to require the surviving grandchild, or his representative, to be added as a party, so as to prevent an adjudication being had as to his rights under the will, behind his back, and to have the question decided in one action. Clifton v. Crurlord, 18 P. R. 316.

— Persons Interested under-Account.] —See Dorion v. Dorion, 20 S. C. R. 430.

7. Husband and Wife.

Fraudulent Conveyance to Husband.]

—The inchoste right of dowes at law obtained by a wife in land conveyed to her husband makes her a proper party defendant to a suit to set aside a conveyance made to her husband by fraud in which the wife is alleged to have assisted. McFarland v. McFarland, 9 P. R. 73.

Frandulent Conveyance to Wife.]—
In a proceeding against a married woman to obtain a conveyance of property vested in her, it is not necessary to join her husband as a party. Where, therefore, a trader in contemplation of insolvency had purchased land, the conveyance of which he took in his wife's name, with the fraudulent design of withdrawing part of his estate from his creditors, and thereupon a bill was filed by the official assignee for the purpose of obtaining a conveyance or sale of property, to which the husband on the ground that he was not a necessary party. Bousted v. Whitmore, 22 Gr. 222.

Fraudulent Mortgage by Wife. —To a nortgage made to her, on the ground that the same was fraudulent as against creditors, the husband was made a party defendant: —Held, on demurrer, that since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1872, the husband was not a necessary or proper party. McFarlane v. Marphy, 21 Gr. 80.

Injunction in Respect of Wife's Property. |—See Hathaway v. Doig, 6 A. R.

Separate Estate of Wife. |—In suits by a married woman respecting her separate property, she must sue separately from her husband (by her next friend), and must make her husband an defendant, as otherwise the proceeding is looked upon as exclusively the suit of the husband, and would not be conclusive on the wife or those claiming under her. Houlding v. Poole, 1 Gr. 206.

Title to Land of Wife—Action to Remore Cloud,—Action to remove a cloud from the title to certain land of the plaintiff, a married woman, whose husband when in embarrassed circumstances had bought the land and taken a conveyance in her name. The plaintiff had no separate estate, and her husband was not a person of substance. There was no trust between the husband and wife:—Itled, that, although suing alone and without separate estate, a married woman is not required to give security for costs. The only person who could be plaintiff on the title was the wife, and her husband could not be joined as a necessary or even a proper party. Me-Kay v, Baker, 12 P. R. 341.

Tort against Wife. — A married woman may bring an action of libel in her own name without joining her husband as plaintiff. The omission of the words "either in contract or in tort or otherwise," found in s. 2 (2) of the Married Woman's Property Act, 1884, from s. 3 (2), R. S. O. 1887 c. 132, does not limit the legal effect and operation of that section. Spahr v. Hean, 18 O. R. 70.

Tort Committed by Wife,]—Under R. S. O. 1877 c. 125, in an action for a tort committed by a wife during coverture the husband is not a proper party, but the wife must be sued alone. Amer. y, Royces, 31 C. P. 195.

Action against a husband and wife alleged to have been married before 1884, for a tort committed by the wife:—Held, on denurrer, that the husband was properly joined as a party. Amer v. Rogers, 31 C. P. 195, and Seroka v. Kattenburg, 17 Q. B. D. 177, considered. Lee v. Hopkins, 20 O. R. 366.

S. Infants.

Dower — Will—Beneficiaries,]—Where a testator devised land to A. for life or till marriage, and after A.'s decease or marriage to the testator's executors, in trust to sell the same and apply the proceeds for the benefit of infant children of the testator, and in payment of certain legacies:—Held, that the children were not necessary parties to a bill by the testator's widow for dower, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay them their costs. Craig v. Templeton. S Gr. 483.

Partition—Infants out of Jurisdiction.]
—Where in a bill for partition it was stated that certain infants residing with or near their father, out of the jurisdiction of the court, not parties, were interested in the lands sought to be partitioned, their father being a party defendant, a demurrer for want of parties was allowed. Tryon v, Peer, 13 Gr. 311.

See Kirkpatrick v. Fouguette, 4 Gr. 549.

9. Insolvent and Assignee.

Conspiracy — Account—Partnership.]—In an action for damages for a conspiracy in pursuance of which the defendants, as alleged, fraudulently withdrew moneys from the assets of a firm of which the plaintiff was a member:—Held, reversing the decision in 18 P. R. 76, that refusing the plaintiff leave to amend by adding the assignee of the firm for the benefit of creditors as a party and by claiming an account of the moneys withdrawn by the defendants, was a proper exercise of discretion by the trial Judge which ought not to have been interfered with by a divisional court. Smith v. Boyd, 18 P. R. 296.

Deed of Composition — Action to Vacute.]—Where a bill was filed by a creditor to vacate a deed of composition and discharge, where the discharge had been obtained by a fraudulent concenhment of assets:—Held, that the assignee in insolvency was not a necessary party. MeGee v. Campbell, 2 O. R. 130.

Perferential Arrangement with Creditor—Action for Account,1—An insolvent trader having made an assignment of all his estate for the benefit of his creditors, under R. S. O. 1887 c. 124, his stock-in-trade was purchased by his wife from the assignee, the defendants, who were creditors of his, becoming responsible to the assignee for payment of the purchase money, and, by a secret arrangement made beforehand, receiving security from the wife monthe goods purchased by her, not only for the amount for which they had become responsible, but also for the full amount of their chains as creditors of the husband:—Held, that the assignee was a necessary party to an action by another creditor for an account. Segsworth v. Anderson, 23, O. R. 573.

Preferential Transfer — Action to Set aside. |— The debtor is not a proper party to an action by his assignee against a creditor to set aside a preferential transfer. Beattle v. Wenger, 24 A. R. 72

Refusal of Creditors to Accept Assignment — Action by Insolvent.]—An assignment for the benefit of creditors is reveable until the creditors either execute or otherwise assent to it. Where creditors from the accept the benefit of an assignment under R. S. O. 1887, c. 124, and the assignment was notified of such refusal and the assignment had not been registered, an action for damages was properly brought in the name of the assignor against a mortgage of his stock in trade who sold the goods in an improper manner. Rennie v. Block, 26 S. C. R. 356.

Transactions before Insolvency—Discovery.]—An insolvent who has made an assignment under the statute is not a proper party to a bill in respect of transactions occurring before his insolvency, notwithstanding that the bill seeks to obtain information of facts which are unknown to any one other than the insolvent; although if it were not shewn that he had been engaged in fraudulent transactions whereby he had acquired property, it would seem he might be made a party; and that, although the property so acquired had, by the operation of law, been transferred to his assignee. Under no circumstances is it proper to make an insolvent a defendant for the purpose of discovery only. Kerr v. Read, 22 Gr. 529.

See McKenzie v. McDonnel, 15 Gr. 442; Garrow v. McDonald, 20 Gr. 122; Johnson v. Montreal and City of Ottawe Junetion R. W. Co., 22 Gr. 230; Kitching v. Hicks, 9 P. R. 518; Wylie v. McKay, 20 Gr. 421; Thompson v. Dodd, 26 Gr. 381.

See, also, ante I. 2 (d), II. 4.

10. Mortgagor and Mortgagee,

(a) Mortgagee.

Administration — Mortgagee of Reversion. |—See Cowan v. Allen, 23 A. R. 457, 26 S. C. R. 202.

Compensation for Land Taken.]—The land in respect of which the claim was made was mortgaged:—Held, that the mortgage was not a necessary party, the proceedings not being for compensation for land taken, but as a defence of and protection to property. As, however, his security might be prejudiced or diminished by the washing away of the land, and he might be able to assert some right to the compensation, there could be no objection to his being joined; but, as the compensation was only some $50, the court would not require him to be made a party. In re Nickle and Town of Walkerton, 11 O. R. 433.

Damages for Injury to Land. — It was contended on the part of the defendants that the mortgagees of the property should be made the mortgage entitled to the possession of land, as to which the mortgage has given no notice of his intention to take possession, to sue to prevent, or recover damages in respect of, any trespass or other wrong relative thereto, in his own name only, and that the objection for want of parties ought not to prevail. Platt v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 12 O. R. 119.

Realization of Charge on Land.]—In an action for arrears of an annuity and to declare the same a charge on land, mortgages of the land whose mortgage was subsequent to the will creating the charge and subject to the terms of it, were made defendants by the will of summons; but, on their own application immediately after delivery of statement of claim, their name was struck out with costs. Nelson v. Cochrane, 13 P. R. 76.

Right of Way.] — Where an action is because it is a right of way over lands adjusting those of which the plaintiff is the owner, subject to a mortgage, and, having regard to the value of the property, the amount of the mortgage, and other circumstances, the lands may be said to be really the mortgage's.

and the action substantially his, the defendant is entitled to security for costs, if the plaintiff be without substance: — Held, in chambers, that the mortgagee was not a necessary party to the action. Semble, by a divisional court, that he was. Gordon v. Armstrong, 16 P. R. 432.

Trespass.]—See Brookfield v. Brown, 22 S. C. R. 398.

See Polson v. Degeer, 12 O. R. 275; Macdonald v. McCall, 12 A. R. 593; McMullen v. Free, 13 O. R. 57; McVean v. Tiffin, 13 A. R. 1.

(b) Mortgagor.

Fire Insurance—Transferce of Note.]-The mortgagor covenanted to insure, and insured accordingly. The houses having been burned, he attended, with the mortgagee, at the office of the insurance company, and signed an order, drawn up by the secretary of the ed an order, drawn up by the secretary of the company, to pay the insurance money to the mortgagee, upon an oral agreement on his part to expend it in rebuilding. The mort-gage having withdrawn from this agreement, the mortgager attended before the board of directors, and obtained from them the usual promissory note of the company at three months, for the amount of the policy, which he transferred for value to a third party, who was aware of the claim of the mortgagee. third party, The mortgagee thereupon filed a bill against the mortgagor and the company, claiming the the horizagor and the company, calming the insurance money to the extent of the amount due on his mortgage. The court made a decree for payment, and ordered the company to pay plaintiff the costs, but dismissed the to pay plaintif the costs, he bill as against the mortgagor with costs, he being an unnecessary party:—Held, that the person to whom the note of the company was transferred was not a necessary party. v. Gore District Mutual Ins. Co., 8 Gr. 523.

Injunction. — The plaintiff filed his bill against M and B. claiming to be entitled to certain mortgage mores as against B., which were payable by M. The plaintiff and B., an example of the plaintiff and B., an example of the plaintiff and B., an example of the plaintiff and M. was made a party solely for this purpose: —Held, that M. was a proper party to the suit, and a denurrer by him for multifariousness and want of equity was overruled. McKenzie v. Brown. 15 Gr. 309.

11. Municipal Corporations and Officers.

Debentures — Railway Aid—Township— County. |—The county of Simeoe had, under a by-law, passed in pursuance of 35 Vict. c. 66, s. 15, issued debentures to the amount of 8300,000 to aid in the construction of the Hamilton and North Western Railway (see 29 Gr. 211), but, by reason of the neglect of the company to commence the construction of the railway within the time limited, their charter had become forfeited, and the by-law under which the debentures had been issued had therefore become void and of no effect, whereupon one of the townships which had joined in the petition for the passing of the by-law filed a bill against the railway company, the county corporation, and trustees of the debentures, seeking to restrain the trustees from selling or parting with the debentures and to have the same handed back to the county—Held, on denurrer by the county, (1) that the township had no interest to maintain such a suit, and (2) that the corporation of the county was the proper party to institute proceedings. West Gueillimbury, N. Hamilton and North Western R. W. Co., 23 Gr. 383.

Warden.]—Where a bill was filed to restrain the issue of debentures by a municipal council, but did not allege that the warden was individually acting in the matter, or taking any step otherwise than as the officer of the council, and under the by-law, the court on denurrer held that he was not a necessary or proper party to the suit. West Gwillimbury v, Simcoc, 21 Gr. 68.

Water Commissioners.]—Where a bill was filed to restrain one of the chartered banks of the Province from purchasing from the water commissioners of the city of Toronto $900,000 of debentures issued by the city:—Held, that the water commissioners were necessary parties to the suit. Jones v. Imperial Bank of Canada, 23 Gr. 262.

Inhabitants—Suit against Mayor.]—A bill will lie by some of the inhabitants of a municipality alleging an illegal application of the funds by the mayor, which the council refused to interfere with. Paterson v. Bouces, 4 Gr. 170.

Municipal Councillors—Collusion with Treasures—Ratepapers,—An action by two ratepayers behalf of themselves and all other arteriors of A. against all the mention of the numicipal council of A., charging that the defendants, acting fraudulently and in collusion with the treasurer of A., continued him in office after it had come to their knowledge that he was a defaulter, and allowed him to receive further moneys, causing loss to the municipality—Held, that the law attaches the liability of trustees to the municipal councillors and that it was sufficient to charge them as such without using the word "trustees;" that the action was one in the former exclusive jurisdiction of the court of chancery, and a jury notice was therefore improper. Semble, that the municipal corporation should have been made a party to the action, and the action should have been on behalf of all ratepayers, except the defendants. Morrow v. Conner, 11 P. R. 423.

Schools—Treasurer of Township.]—To a bill by a rural school section corporation to compel the municipality to make good money paid by the municipality to a person alleged not to be the duly appointed officer of the corporation, the treasurer of the municipality is not a proper party. Hamilton School Trustees v, Veil, 28 Gr. 408.

Street Rallway—Statutory Restrictions—Information—Contract—Action to Enforce.]—An Act having been passed authorizing the construction of a street railway, confirming a covenant entered into for the purpose with a municipal corporation, and providing that the rails should be laid flush with the streets, &c.:—Held, that to enforce the contract against the company, a suit by the municipal corporation, the other party to the contract, was necessary; that an information of the contract was necessary; that an information of the contract was necessary to the contract was necessary that an information of the contract was necessary that the second of the contract was necessary that an information of the contract was necessary that the contra mation by the attorney-general to enforce the statutory restrictions was proper; but that the municipal corporation was a necessary party to the information. Attorney-General v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 14 Gr. 673.

Tax Sale—Suit to Set aside.]—A municipality in proceeding to a sale of land for taxes is in the position of a trustee; and if it is afterwards sought to impeach the sale for any irregularity, and to make the municipality answerable to the purchaser for the purchase money paid, or the costs of the suit, the municipality must be made a party to the cause. Ford v. Proudfoot, 9 Gr. 478.

To a suit by an owner to set aside a sale for taxes, the plaintiff offering to repay the purchase money with interest, the corporation of the county is not a necessary party. Smith v. Redford, 12 Gr. 316.

The corporation of the local municipality is not a proper party to a bill impeaching a tax sale. Mills v. McKay, 14 Gr. 602.

A municipal officer charged with some irregularities in the performance of his duty, but not guilty of any fraud or intentional wrong, is an improper party to a bill to set aside a tax sale on the ground of such irregularities. Mills v. McKay, 15 Gr. 192.

In an action for the cancellation of a tax deed:—Held, that the fact that the defendants might have a remedy over against the municipal corporation which had sold the land for taxes, did not make the corporation a necessary party to the action. Charlton v. Watson, 4 O. R. 489.

Town Trust—Mayor.]—The mayor of Cohourg was ex officio one of the commissioners of the Cohourg town trust when certain acts complained of were done, but ceased to be such before the institution of a suit by a party injured by such acts to be relieved in respect thereof:—Held, notwithstanding, that he was a proper party to the bill. Standly v. Perry, 23 Gr. 507.

12. Partners.

Continuing Partners — Insolvency.]— Prior to the general orders of 1853 (rule 8, order 6,) it would have been necessary to make the continuing partners parties to such a bill as in this case unless it were shewn that they were insolvent, in which case that would afford a sufficient reason for not making them parties. Harper v. Knowlson, 2 E. & A. 253.

Corporators — Nominal Corporation.]— See Gildersleeve v. Balfour, 15 P. R. 293; Seiffert v. Irving, 15 O. R. 173.

Dissolution—Action against Firm.]—
The cause of action arose before, and the writ of summons was issued after, the dissolution of the defendants firm:—Held, that the defendants were properly sued in their firm name. Wilson v. Roger McLay & Co., 10 P. R. 355.

Release of Interest in Partnership— Action to Set aside—Surviving Partners—Executor of Deceased Partner.]—D. B. and W. D. B. were partners in a certain joint stock savings bank, under articles which provided that the partnership should last during their that the partnership should have the profits and expenses. D. B. died in April. 1874, leaving a will, whereby he bequeathed to the plaintiff, the son of W. D. B., the resistance of the plaintiff. his property, including his interest in the bank, and appointed L. his executor. In May, 1874, L. gave W. D. B. a general power of attorney to act for him. In July, 1879, the miff came of age, and soon after demanded W. D. B. an account of the assets of the partnership and a settlement with him; and in November, 1880, W. D. B. gave the plain-tiff a cheque for $8,000, handing him at the same time a document for signature, which purported to be a receipt for the said sum in full of all claims on the estate of D. B., and this of an elastic street in the patients signed it. He now brought this action against W. D. B. and L. alleging that after the death of D. B., W. D. B., with L. a contivance, made certain arrangements for the winding-up of the partnership, and large portions of the assets of D. B. and of the bank had been realized, and profits made, and converted by W. D. B. to his own use, and claiming to have the said release declared void, and an account of the estate of i). B., and of the partnership, and to have the same wound up, and payment of the share to which he was entitled:—Held, that the as brought, for, though the general rule is, that persons who have possessed themselves of the projectly of the deceased, or are debtors to be state generally, cannot be made parties to a suit against the executor, yet this rule is relaxed in the case of surviving partners of the deceased, whom it is allowed to make parties with the executor in order that the parties with the executor in order that the per-plaintiff may have an account of the per-sonal estate entire. At all events, such an action may be supported in all cases where the relationship between the executors and the surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment in the prosecution by the executors of the rights of the parties interested in the estate against the surviving partners, as seemed the case here, although it did not appear that there had been actual collusion between L. and W. B. D. Burn v. Burn, S. O. R. 237.

Taking Accounts of Partnership—
Standard of Limitations.]—Where a member of a partnership, whose accounts the master was directed to take, was by order made a party in the master's office, but on subsequent induly it appeared that all liability on his part was barred by the Statute of Limitations, the master on the application of the party added discharged his former order, holding that the applicant was not a necessary or proper party, and that all partnership accounts required to be taken could be taken in his absence. Kline v. kline, 3 Ch. Ch. 161.

Winding-up of Partnership—Sale of Partner's Interest, 1—In a bill to liquidate the joint liabilities and wind up the affairs of a partnership, a partner whose interest has been sold under execution is a necessary party. Partridge v. Melntosh, I Gr. 50.

See Cowan v. McIntyre, 19 U. C. R. 607; Paterson v. Holland, 7 Gr. 563; Doxding v. Fastwood, 1 C. L. Ch. 63; Hopper v. Harrian, 28 Gr. 22; Thomas v. Torrance, 1 Ch. Ch. 46.

Joint Contractors—Absence from Juris-diction.]—On a joint contract by three, all must be sued, if within the jurisdiction. If one is without, the other two must be sued. One alone cannot be sued if there are two remaining within the jurisdiction, because all three cannot be sued. Corbett v. Calvin, 4 U. C. R. 123.

Joint Debtors—Partners.]—See Ducher Watch Case Mig. Co. v. Taggart, 26 A. R. 295, 30 S. C. R. 373; Mittleberger v. Merritt, 1 U. C. R. 330.

Joint Duty.] Semble, that when the tort alleged is the non-performance of n joint duty, e.g., to repair a bridge, if the joint duty be not proved, the plaintiff must fail in toto, and cannot recover against the defendant on whom alone the duty is imposed. Woods v. County of Wenteroth, 6 C. P. 101.

Proof of Liability. — Action by a joint stock road company, incorporated under 12 Vict. c. St. against stage proprietors, for tolks. Use the stage proprietors for tolks. 14. Trustee and Cestui que Trust.

Avoidance of Trust Deed—Benefit of Creditors.]—Where a bill is filed to Impeach a conveyance to trustees for the henefit of creditors, whether such assignment is or is not in insolvency, the trustees are necessary parties. A demurrer was therefore allowed, because one G., to whom it was alleged in the bill that M. had conveyed his estate and effects for the benefit of his creditors, was not made a party. And quere, whether the bill was not also demurrable on the ground that it did not distinctly shew the relation of trustee and cestuis que trust between M. and his creditors to have been created by the conveyance, to G., or that such conveyance was anything more than a deed of management. Wylie v. McKay, 20 Gr. 421.

——Partnership.]—To a bill filed by one co-partner against another seeking to set aside a marriage settlement, as having been made by the settlor at a time when he was insolvent, the trustees and cestuis que trust of the settlement are necessary parties, as they are entitled to have the accounts of the partnership taken, and assets thereof applied in exoreration of the settled lands. Thomas v. Torrance, 1 Ch. Ch. 46.

Representation.]—The court has jurisdiction to decree a trust deed void, in the absence of the cestuis que trust, the trustessufficiently representing them under order 6, 8, 2, rule 7 (1853); and it is in the exercise of the discretion of the court under that rule, that in such cases the cestuis que trust, or some of them, are required to be made parties. King v. Keating, 12 (pt. 20.

Trant for Life.]—Where the tenment for life was trustee, and after the cesser of other estates was to hold the estate for the benefit of the children of P. C.:—Held, that they need not be parties to a bill impeaching the trust deed as fraudulent against creditors. Thompson v. Dodd, 26 Gr. 381.

Bank—Liability of Sharcholders.]— The trustees of the bank of Upper Canada were held necessary parties to a bill by creditors to enforce the double liability of shareholders. Brooke v. Bank of Upper Canada, 17 Gr. 301.

Breach of Trust—Participant—Decisee of Trustee.]—Where a trustee commits a breach of trust, a person participating in it is not a necessary party to a suit for the general administration of the trust estate. One devisee of a trustee, against whose estate a suit is brought, sufficiently represents those Interested in the estate. Tiffany v. Thomoson, 9 Gr. 244.

— Personal Representative,]—Where a for breach of trust, which, it was stated in the bill, consisted of the sale and receipt by him of the proceeds of certain real estate, which, by the terms of the trust, he was to sell absolately, and hold the proceeds on the trust specified;—Held, that such a bill could only be sustained by the personal representative of the cesum que trust. A demourer for want of equity to a bill by the next of kin was in such a case allowed with costs. Allan v. Gamble, 3 Ch. Ch. 105.

Destruction of Trust Estate.]—Where a bill seeks the destruction of a trust estate, some or one of the cestuis que trust are necessary parties. Baker v. Trainor, 15 Gr. 252.

Enforcement of Trust—Cashier of Bank—Representation.]—W, undertook to settle the property of his intended wife as her guardians should require. After the marriage the wife's property was all sold, and the proceeds applied to the purposes of his business by W., who subsequently, and while in a state of insolvency, assigned to the cashier of a bank a policy on the life of himself (W.i., in trust, to pay certain bills of his in the hands of the bank, and after payment thereof to hold the moneys to be received on the policy for the benefit of his wife and children, but, in the event of W. paying off the bills, to reassign the policy to him, or as he should appoint. W. having died, the trustee received the insurance money, paid these bills, and claimed a right is aunly the stratus in paying off other liabilities of W.; to the bank.

Upon a bill filed by the widow and children of W. agninst the trustee:—Held, that the trustee, being the cashier of the bank which had thus received the benefit of the moneys, he sufficiently represented the bank, and it was therefore not necessary to make the institution itself a party to the suit. Whitlemore v. Lemone, 10 Gr. 125.

Person Beneficially Entitled under Agreement.]—Held, that inasmuch as, if the parents of the plaintiff had brought a suit upon the agreement made by them for her benefit and recovered, they would be trustees of the proceeds for her, the plaintiff might maintain the suit in her own name. Roberts v. Hull, 1 O. R. 388.

Possession of Trust Estate. |—In a suit by trustees to reduce into possession the trust estate, and in which the existence of the trust estate is called in question by the defendant, the cestuis que trust are necessary parties. Houlding v. Poole, 1 Gr. 206.

Will—Trustee under — Renunciation.] — One of the devisees in trust under a will refused to accept the trust: —Held, that he was not a necessary party plaintiff in an action for rent of the premises devised, although his formal renunciation in writing was not made until after the rent had accrued due. Hughes v. Brooke, 43 U.C. R. 609.

Trustees under—Representation.]—
Where the whole of the testator's property, real and personal, and the whole control of it, were vested in trustees subject to the trusts declared by the will:—Held, not necessary to make any of the cestuis que trust parties to a suit for the purpose of enforcing a contract of purchase which the testator had entered into during his lifetime. Delisle v. Mc. Care, 22 Gr. 254.

The plaintiff was the surviving trustee under the will of one J. B., of certain land, on which was erected a two storey brick house, the westerly wall of which formed the boundary of one L.'s land, immediately adjoining the plaintiff's on the west. L. leased to F., who erected thereon a large brick building, using the plaintiff's westerly wall as a party wall, inserting joists therein, and building thereon so as to raise it two storeys higher, thereby weakening the plaintiff's wall. F. mortgaged to a building society, who, on default, sold to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff under the O. J. Act, rule 95, was entitled to maintain an action as representing the estate, without making the cestuis que trust parties. Brooke v. McLean, 5 O. R. 200.

15. Other Persons.

Arbitrators—Nomination of—Residence out of Jurisdiction.]—In a suit to set aside the nomination by the defendants of an arbitrator on behalf of the plaintiffs for irregularity in such nomination:—Held, that the arbitrators being necessary parties and the defendants resident in this country, the arbitrators though resident out of the jurisdiction, were properly made defendants to the bill. Direct Cable Co. v. Dominion Telegraph Co. 28 Gr. 648.

Assignee of Purchaser - Specific Performance - Costs.] - A purchaser of land agreed before conveyance to assign his interest. In a suit subsequently brought by the vendor to enforce a specific performance, the assignee was made a party defendant, and a derree was pronounced against him with such costs as were occasioned by making him a party in the event of his co-defendant, the purchaser, failing to pay the general costs of the suit, which were awarded against him. Heusion V. Fuller, 10 Gr. 498.

Churchwardens — Change.]—A bill was filed by churchwardens, and during the progress of the suit the churchwardens were changed at the vestry needing; the new churchwardens were not made parties. The suit not being brought to a hearing within the time required by the practice; it was held that a notice to dismiss the bill served on the plaintiff's solicitor was regular. Quere, whether it was necessary to make the new churchwardens parties. Meleceters v. Dixon, 3 Ch. Ch. S4.

Claimant in Issue.]—See Henderson v. Rogers, 15 P. R. 241.

Claimant of Purchase Money—Action by Purchaser—Failure of Consideration.]—
The rendency of modern practice is to dispense with parties, where it can be done with safety: therefore, where in certain interpleader proceedings one R. disclaimed any right to the proceeds of a sale under execution, and subsequently obtained possession of the property sold by means of a writ of replevin, but afterwards gave notice to the person holding the money that he claimed the proceeds of the sale, and forbade him paying back the purchase money to the purchaser, whereupon the latter filed a bill seeking to recover back the amount, on the ground of an entire failure of consideration, to which he made R. a defendant, who demurred, as being not a necessary or proper party, the demurrer was allowed with costs, liberty being given to the plaintiff to amend in order to make a better case, if so addised. Methonald v. Reid, 25 for, 139.

Consignor and Consignee.]—See Hately v. Merchants Despatch Co., 2 O. R. 385; Dyment v. Northern and North Western R. W. Co., 11 O. R. 343.

Debentures—Person to Whom Issued.]

—A bill being filed by the holder of debentures, issued by the defendants and payable to bearer, to enforce payment of the debentures, the company by answer objected that the person to whom the debentures were issued was a necessary party to the suit, but did not name the person:—Held, that the company must be presumed to know who this person was; that there was no presumption that the plaintiff knew him; and that the person not being named in the answer, the objection could not be insisted on at the hearing, Woodside v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 14 Gr. 405.

Dowress—Vendor's Lien.]—Where a suit to enforce by sale a vendor's lien is instituted against the heirs-at-law of the purchaser, the widow of the vendee is a necessary party in respect of her right to dower. Paine v. Chapman, 7 Gr. 179.

Grantor of Defendant — Ejectment — Fraud. —In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff claimed title under a conveyance from the father of the defendant in 1885, and the defendant claimed by virtue of possession since 1874, under an oral agreement to purchase made with his father, and the defendant said on his examination that he had vaid his father money on account of the purchase, which he had entered in his father's books:—Held, that the father might have been made a party under rule 199, on the ground of his having been a party to a fraud in conveying land to the plaintiff after he had made an agreement with his son. McMaster v. Mason, 12 P. R. 278.

Lessees of Bridge—Vaisance.]—To an information alleging that the bridge erected by the International Bridge Company constituted a nuisance, a railway company who had become lessees of the bridge were held to be proper parties. Attorney-General v. International Bridge Co., 27 Gr. 37.

Lessees of Railway—Costs.]—The lessees of a railway having been made part'ss to the bill, the court refused relief against them, with costs to be paid by the lessor company. Cameron v. Wellington, Grey, and Bruce R. W. Co., 27 Gr. 95.

Mechanics' Liens—Parties to Action to English to Montreal v. Itaffuer, 5 O. R. 183, 10 A. R. 592; Oldfield v. Barbour, 12 P. R. 554; McVean v. Tighn, 13 A. R. 1; Hoceaden v. Ellison, 24 Gr. 448.

Owner of Equity — Vendor's Lien. | — Where a purchaser of a mortgaged estate takes the same subject to his vendor's mortgage, and sells to another without paying off said mortgage, he will be compelled to fulfil his undertaking to do so. Thus, A., beirg the owner in fee of a certain lot of land, mortgaged the same to B., and then sold to C., leaving the mortgage to be paid by C. to B. as the balance of the purchase movey. C. then sold to D. without paying the mortgage, and, default having been made, B. sued A. at law on his covenant, whereunon A. filed a bill against C. and D. to pay off their mortgage:—Held, that A. as surety for C. had a right to call upon him to pay the mortgage to B. and also his costs of the action at law. Held, also, that D. was a proper party where the vendor sought to enforce his lien on the land. Joice v. Duffy, S. L. J. 141.

Owner of Leval Estate—Way.]—Since a way of necessity can only pass with the grant of the soil, the owner of the legal estate in the land as to which it is claimed, should be a party to an action claiming such way, and where an equitable owner of the land such, he was permitted to make the owner a co-plaintiff by amendment at the hearing. Saylor v, Cooper, 2 O, R, 398.

Owners of Separate Parcels of Land —Inmits.]—Where a suit is brought to enforce the payment of an annuity issuir go ut of several parcels of lands, it is not necessary that all the nersons interested in these lands should be made parties; but where this was not done the court directed that the defendants should be at liberty to proceed by petition to add the persons whom they might consider liable to contribute to the claim of the annuitant; it being more reasonable that the questions involved should be lititated at the expense of the defendants than at the expense of the annuitant. The rule applicable to mortgage cases where the legal estate is in the hands of several parties, does not apply, as there the party seeking to redeem is entitled to a reconveyance of the whole estate, and in that view the whole estate must be represented. Miler v, Vickers, 23 Gr. 218.

Person out of Jurisdiction. —Where a party interested was not before the court, the bill stating him to be out of the jurisdiction, but there was no proof of the fact, the court refused, even with consent, to proceed without such proof. Michie v. Charles, 1 Gr. 125.

The fact that a person interested in the subject matter of a suit is resident out of the jurisdiction of the court, is not a sufficient reason for not making such absent person a party, Munro, v. Munro, 17 Gr. 205.

Persons Interested under Deed of Assignment.]—See Guertin v. Gosselin, 27 S. C. R. 514.

Policy-holders-Mutual Insurance Company — Branch — Representation.]—Where a right of suit exists in a body of persons too numerous to be all made parties, the court will permit one or more of them to sue on behalf of all, subject to the restriction that the relief prayed is one in which the parties whom the plaintiff professes to represent have whom the plaintifi professes to represent have all of them an interest identical with that of the plaintiff. But where a mutual insurance company had established three distinct branches, in one of which, the waterworks branch, the plaintiff insured, giving his promissory note or undertaking to pay $168, and the company made an assessment on all notes and threatened suit in the division court for payment of such assessment, whereupon the plaintiff filed a bill "on behalf of himself and the other policy-holders associated with him as hereinafter mentioned," alleging that the company was about to sue him and the other policy-holders in said branch, that large losses had occurred in the company prior to the time of his effecting his insurance, insisting that he and the other policy-holders could be properly assessed only in respect of such losses as had arisen since they entered the company, and praying that the necessary inquiries might be made and accounts taken, alleging that the division courts had not the machinery for that purpose :- Held, that, according to the statements of the bill, policy-holders in the waterworks branch were not represented in the suit, and a demurrer on that ground filed by the company was al-lowed with costs. Thomson v. Victoria Mu-tual Fire Ins. Co., 29 Gr. 56.

Principal and Agent.]—The contract in this case having been made between appellant and respondents only, and being a contract of agency apart from any question of ownershin, the action was properly brought by appellant in his own name. Weidon v. Vasplan, 5 S. C. R. 25.

Principal and Surety.] — Where proceedings were taken against sureties without joining their principal:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not proceed against the sureties alone if they required the joinder of the principal in order that they might have their remedy over against him. Exchange Bank v. Springer, Exchange Bank v. Barnes, 29 Gr. 270.

Provincial Government—Railway Aid—Petition of Right.]—An Act of the Legislature of Canada provided that a railway company should be entitled to 4,000,000 acres of the waste lands of the Crown, on the completion of the road, and a proportionate quantity of such lands on the completion of 20 miles of the road, and on completion of 20 miles the grant of the proportion then due was refused. The company filed a petition of right against the Province of Ontario, when it was alleged that the Province of Ontario, when it was alleged that the Province of Ontario and not sufficient lands along the line of railway to make the grant desired:—Held, that this formed no ground for the Province of Ontario insisting that the Province of Quebec should have been made a party, Canada Central R. W. Co. v. The Queen, 20 Gr. 273.

Purchaser of Land—Enforcement of Lien.]—See Juson v. Gardiner, 11 Gr. 23.

Purchasers of Railway.]—See Allen v. Ontario and Rainy River R. W. Co., 29 O. R. 510.

Ratepayer—Class Action.]—Where a person suing on behalf of himself and others is disentitled to sue on his own behalf, be cannot do so on behalf of the others interested. Dillon v. Township of Raleigh, 13 A. R. 53, 14 S. C. R. 739.

Registrar of Deeds.]—Parties to an action for the removal of an instrument from the register where the registration of such instrument is not authorized by the Registry Act. See Ontario Industrial Loan and Investment Co. v. Lindsey, 3 O. R. 66.

Relators—Counterclaim.]—In an action brought in the name of the Attorney-General upon the relation of certain persons to restrain the defendants from collecting tolls or keeping their toll-gates closed upon their roads, the defendants alleged by way of defence certain wrongful acts of the relators, and by way of counterclaim asked damages against them:—Held, that the relators were not in any sense plaintiffs; and the allegations against them must be struck out. Attorney-General v. Vaughan Road Co., 14 P. R. 516.

Remaindermen—Ratification of Deed-Grantor and Grantee. 1—By a deed of gift from a father to his daughter it was intended to convey a life estate to the daughter with remainder to her issue, but, through the want of skill of the person preparing the deed, the same conveyed the fee simple to the daughter, whose interest was afterwards sold under execution, the sheriff at the time of sale distinctly stating in the presence and hearing of the purchaser that the interest he was selling was only an estate for life of the defendant in the writ. The purchaser afterwards claimed the fee in the lands under the terms of the deed of gift and conveyance of the sheriff; whereupon, and upwards of fifteen years after the sheriff's sale, a bill was filed by the children of the daughter, seeking to have both the deeds rectified in accordance with the true intention of the grantor, to which the defendant demurred on the ground that the plaintiffs had not shewn any interest in the land:—Held, that the plaintiffs, though volunteers, had such an interest as entitled them to have the deeds rectified. To such a bill it was considered that the grantor, but that the grantee must be made a party, as she had a right to have her before the court, in order to protect him from another suit. Calvert v. Linker, 2 for, 470.

Settlor—Fraudulent Settlement,]—Where a person in embarrassed circumstances hastened the marriage of his daughter, and made a conveyance of all his real estate to a trustee for the benefit of his daughter and the issue of the intended marriage, the court, upon a bill filed by a judgment creditor against the husband and wife and their infant children, to set aside ruch settlement, declared the same void as against creditors. To such a bill the settlor is not a necessary party. Commercial Bank of Canada v. Cooke, 9 Gr. 524.

Sub-tenants—Ejectment.]—In an action by a landlord for possession of the premises, it is not necessary to make sub-tenants in actual possession parties defendant, and a judement for possession may be given against the tenant under which the sub-tenants must go out. Incorporated Synod of Toronto v. Fiston, 20 O. R. 738.

Superintendent of Public Building— Nutsinee.]—To a bill filed for an injunction to restrain the commissioner of public works from allowing a drain from the London lunatic asylum, which was a nuisance, to continue to flow across the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that the medical superintendent of the asylum was not a proper party. Hiscox v. Lander, 24 Gr. 250.

Tenant in Possession—Dower.]—To a bill for equitable dower, the tenant in actual possession of the premises may be a proper though not a necessary party. McIntosh v. Wood, 15 Gr. 92.

Water Commissioners — Injunction — Rank.]—Where a bill was filed to restrain one of the chartered banks of the Province from purchasing from the water commissioners of a city, debentures issued by the city:—Held, that the water commissioners were decessary parties to the suit. Jones v. Imperial Bank of Canada, 23 Gr. 262.

III. PARTIES TO APPEALS.

County Court Appeal — Claimant.]— Under s. 42 of the County Courts Act, R. S. O. 1887 c. 47, an appeal lies to the court of appeal from the order or judgment of a county court disposing of an issue directed by an order made in an action in such county court upon a garnishing application; and the claimant, the plaintiff in the issue, though not a party to the original action, is a "party" within the meaning of s. 42, and may be an appellant. Sato v. Hubbard, G.A. R. 546, distinguished. The court will not ordinarily quash or dismiss an appeal because the order or judgment appealed from has not been drawn up. Henderson v. Rogers, 15 P. R. 241.

Cross-appeal—Third Parties.]—An order was made by a local Judge, upon the ex parte application of the defendant, allowing him to serve a third party notice, but, upon the application of the third parties so called upon, this order was set aside by an order of the master in chambers, which was affirmed by a Judge at chambers and by a divisional court upon the appeal of the defendant. That court, however, at the same time made an order staying the proceedings until the plaintiff should add the third parties as defendants, and from this order the plaintiffs appealed to the court of appeal, not making the third parties respondents. The defendant, however, served notice of cross-appeal upon the plaintiffs and the third parties moved to strike out this notice:—Held, that the word "parties" in rule $21 means persons who are parties to the action or proceeding in question on the appeal; and that what the defendant sought by the cross-appeal was not a variation of the order appealed from, which is what rule $21 speaks of, but the substitution of one of an entirely different character; and the notice was struck out. Begg v. Ellison, 14 P. R. 267.

Quebec Appeal—Judgment of Distribution—Incidental Proceedings—Persons Interested.]—See Guertin v. Gosselin, 27 S. C. R. 514.

Rehearing — Dismissed Party,] — Where a cause is re-heard at the instance of some of the defendants against whom relief has been granted, a defendant against whom a bill was dismissed at the original hearing must be before the court on the re-hearing. Hiscox v. Lander, 24 Gr. 250.

Third Party—"Party Affected by the Appeal"—Notices.]—The defendants, alleging that another person was liable to indemnify them against the plaintiff's claim, caused him to be served with a third party notice under rule 209. The third party appeared, and an order was made under rule 213 that he should be at liberty to appear at the trial and take such part as the Judge should direct and be bound by the result; that the question of his liability to indemnify the defendants should be tried after the trial of the action; and that pleadings should be delivered between the defendants and him. The Judge who tried the case dismissed the action, but held the third party bound to indemnify the defendants against any costs they incurred in the action. The third party appealed from this judgment to a divisional court, and the plaintiff appealed to the court of appeal:—Held, that the third party was a "party affected by the appeal" of the plaintiff within the meaning of rules 709 (2) and $11, and it was the plaintiff's duty to give the notices therein provided for; but there his duty as regards the third party ended, unless he was regards the third party ended and unless he was in a position to demand some relief against him; and the third party was not but the position of the property of the

V. THIRD PARTIES.

Close of Pleadings—Reopening—Order Permitting Third Partice to Defend,1—Where a third party notice had been served by the defendant before the close of the pleadings between the plaintiffs and defendant, but the action had been set down by the plaintiffs to be tried at Toronto without a jury and notice of trial given before the plaintiffs were aware that such third party notice had been served, and before notice of motion had been given by the defendant for an order giving directions as to the trial:—Held, that the order made upon such motion, which permitted the third parties to come in and defend, and directed that the issue between the defendant and the third parties should be tried at the same time as the action, reopened the pleadings, and they were not closed (the third parties, having delivered a defence) until the expiration of the time for replying to that detence. The duty of the plaintiffs then was to draw up a new record of the pleadings, including in it the defence of the third parties, enter the case again for trial, and give notice of trial to the defendant and third parties, under rule 542. Confedention Life Association v. Labatt, 18 P. R. 238.

Contribution — Agreement — Notice — Setting aside— Appearance.]—The plaintiffs' claim against the defendants was for the balance of a sum agreed to be paid for the bire of a race track. The defendants alleged that a ferry company had agreed with the plaintiffs to pay and contribute towards the hire of the track a certain sum for each day of the race meetings, in consideration of the increased travel, and that defendants had thereby been induced to enter into the agreement with the plaintiffs: — Held, that this allegation was not sufficient to support a claim against the ferry company for contribution, indemnity, or any other relief over, within rule (1887) 209; and therefore the defendants should not have been allowed to serve a third party notice. Held, also, that the proper practice in moving against a third narty notice, is to move without entering an appearance. Leave to appeal refused. Windsor Fair Grounds and Driving Park Association v. Highland Park Club, 19 P. R. 130.

Leave to Appear.]—In an action for the non-delivery of coal, one of the defendants gave notice to S. and M., under the first part of rule 107 and rule 108, of the action, and that he claimed contribution from them to the extent of one-half of any sum recovered against him, on the ground that they were co-partners in the transaction, &c. S. and M. appeared to this notice, and the master in chambers subsequently made an order giving them leave to appear, and directing that they should be bound by any judgment against the said defendant:—Held, that the order had been properly made. McLaren v. Marks, 10 P. R. 451.

Determining Question in Action—Repletion.]—I stored cerain goods with the defendant, and the plantiff brought this action for possession of the goods and damages for their detention, and replevied them:
—Held, not a case in which J, should be added as a defendant, under rule 324, and not a case for the application of rule 328; but rather a case in which a notice should be served on him under rule 330, in order to have him bound by the judgment to be given. Peterson v. Fredericks, 15 P. R. 361.

Specific Performance.]—In an action for specific performance by a vendor against a purchaser, the question raised by the defence, whether a third person has a title to the whole or part of the land, is not one which, under con. rule 328, should be determined between the parties to the action, or either of them, and the third person: and an order cannot properly be made under that rule and con, rule 330, adding such third person as a defendant. Neither do con, rule 329, 331, or 332 andly in such a case. The consolidated rule as to third parties discussed. Regg v. Elison, 44 P. R. 334.
Sec, also, 8, C., 14 P. R. 267, and it III.

Dismissal of Action — Discretion of Trival Judge—Appeal.]—Where a third party has been brought into an action by the defendant, and an order obtained by the latter directing that the question of indemnity as between the third party and himself be tried after the trial of the action, and that the third party be at liberty to appear at the trial of the action and oppose the plaintiff's claim, so far as the third party is affected thereby, and at the trial the action is dismissed:—Semble, that the third party is entitled against the defendant to costs up to and inclusive of the trial. Held, however, that the disposition of such costs is in the discretion of the trial Judge, whose order, by R. S. O. 1897 c. 51, s. 72, is not subject to appeal without leave. Held, also, that the third party cannot be heard in a divisional court upon an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment at the trial, and is entitled to no costs of such appeal. Exving v. The plaintiff brought this action to restrain the defendant from obstructing his light and view, and the defendant served a third party notice upon the landlord, claiming, under a covenant for quiet enjoyment, to be protected against the plaintiff's ment, to be protected against the plantage claim:—Held, that the defendant could not call upon his landlord to defend him against an unfounded claim; but if the plantiff's claim was well founded, it was by freason of an easement expressly or impliedly granted by his lease, and the defendant took subject to such easement, and could not claim that the ment of that which did not pass under his lease; and, therefore, whether the plaintiff's claim was well or ill founded, the landlord was not a proper party to be called on for indennity under rule 329. Thomas v. Owen, 20 Q. B. D. 225, followed. Held, also, that upon a motion by the defendant, under rule 332, for directions as to the mode of trial where a third party had been notified under rule 329, it was proper to make an order dismissing the third party from the action, with-Batt, S Q. Mortgage—Counterclaim, 1— In an action by the assignee of a mortgage against the mortgagor and the purchasers from him of the equity of redemption, the latter alleged that they had been induce 1 by the mortgagee that they had been induce 1 by the mortgagee that they had been induce 1 by the mortgagee that they had been induce 1 by the mortgagee the purchase the lands by his promise to discharge the mortgage and accept in its place an assignment of another mortgage, which agreement he had failed to carry out and had afterwards assigned the mortgage to the plaintiff, his wife:—Held, that the purchasers of the equity were not entitled to claim "indemnity" against the mortgagee, within the meaning of that word as used in rule 32%, as amended by rule 1313; and a third party notice served upon him was set aside. Semble, a proper case for counterclaim against the plaintiff and third party jointly to enforce the alleged agreement or for damages. Moore v. Death, 16 P. R. 206.

— Mortoge — Interest.1,—The plaintiff and P. both claimed to be entitled by assignment to a mortgage made by the defendant. The defendant paid P. one gale of interest, and received indemnity for the amount paid grainst any claim on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff then brought this action claiming the interest which had been paid to P. and also the principal for default in payment of interest. The defendant applied to have P. added as a Co-defendant.—Held, not a proper case for adding P. as a party under rule 103 (a), but rather one in which a notice might be served upon P. by the defendant under rule 108, O. J. Act. Quiere, whether the defendant had not a remedy by interpleader. Heierit v. Heise, 11 P. R. 47.

Verligence—Breach of Contract—Identity of Valuus,]—In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in the defendants' factory in October, 1897, the negligence charged was that there was a defect in the lugs holding fast the doors of a retort, whereby they were broken by the force of steam, and the plaintiff thereby injured from the escape of hot air, &c., and that the retort was dangerous because not furnished with a safety valve, whereby the lugs were exposed to an undue pressure of steam. The defendants sought to bring in as third parties the manufacturers of the retort, which was made in January, 1896, under written contracts, which contained no warranty, and from which it appeared that the defendants undertook to provide and put in their own fittings, including the safety valve:—Held, that the object of the rules permitting a third party to be brought into an action is to prevent the same question, common as between the plaintiff and defendant and the defendants and the third party, from being tried on different occasions and in different forums, and there was no such identify bere; there could be no claim for indemnity against the manufacturers; if the defendants could recover at all, their damages would be assessed on a different principle from those of the plaintiff; and no relied over could be obtained. Wison v. Bortler, 18 P. R. 107.

— Negligence — Insurance Company.]
— The plaintif sued for a personal injury, which by his statement of claim he alleged he had weaved, when acting as a conductor of a street railway car operated by the defendants, by reason of the negligence of a servant of the defendants, who was driving a scavenger waggon used by the defendants. The company who had operated the railway before the defendant assumed it, were insured against all sums for which they should become liable to any employee in their service, while engaged in their work. The insurance policy was assigned to the defendants when they assumed the railway. The defendants served on the insurance company a third party notice claiming indemnity: — Held, that the policy did not cover injuries accruing by reason of the negligence of the defendants or their service; and that the insurance company should not be kept before the court on the chance of a different state of facts being developed at the trial from that which the plaintiff alleged. An order was, therefore, made in chambers setting aside the third party notice. Ferguson v. City of Toronto, 14 P. R. 358.

of Deceased Partners, — In an action by creditors of a partnership against the surviving partner and the administratrix of the estate of the deceased partner, the name of the administratrix of the estate of the deceased partner, the name of the administratrix was struck out, leaving the creditors to pursue their remedy against the estate in a proceeding pending for its administration, and to proceed concurrently with the action against the surviving partner. Held, also, that a claim of the surviving partner, Held, also, that a claim of the surviving partner, Held, also, that be called the surviving partner against the state of the deceased for indemnity or relief over in respect of the plaintiffs claim, must be made in the administration proceedings and not in the action under the third party procedure. Held, further, that the right of the surviving partner against the administratirx, in her personal capacity, to recover upon a mortgage given by her as a security to him against his liability to the plaintiffs, was neither a right to indemnity nor to relief over, because it was a right which might be enforced before he was damnified, there being no reference on the face of the instrument to the liability asserted by the plaintiffs; and, therefore, she could not be brought in as a third party. Campbell v. Farley, 18 P. R. 97.

— Trial—Action.] — The action was upon promissory notes made by the defendants to the order of the B. C. L. Co., and by them indersed to the plaintiffs. The defendants claimed indemnity against the B. C. L. Co., and at the trial that company, against the protest of the plaintiffs, was made a third party defendant, and judgment was directed to be entered against them in favour of the defendants to indemnify the defendants against the judgment recovered against them at the suit of the plaintiffs:—Held, reversing the order making the company a third party, and the judgment against them, that third party, and the judgment against them, that third party is the proper of binding them by the judgment against the judgment defendant; and that in any case they can be joined only for the judgment the original defendant; and that in order that the original defendant may obtain indemnity against a third party be must bring a separate action. Intervention of Third Party—Quebec Law. 1— See Price v. Mercier, 18 S. C. R. 303; Ball v. Caffrey, 20 S. C. R. 319.

Relief against Co-defendants — Pleading. — In an action for the price of goods sold, C., to whom the defendant had paid the price of the goods, believing him and not the plaintiff to have the tilte thereto, and J. C. F. and A. F., who were charged by C. with having fraudulently obtained possession of the goods and made a pretended sale of them to the plaintiff, were added as defendants under rule 109, O. J. Act, with a direction that C. should, in his pleading, state his case against J. C. F. and A. F., and that they should be at liberty to reply. Brown v. Consincaux, 11 F. R. 363.

Security for Costs.]—Where a defendant proceeds under rule (1897) 215 to seek relief from a co-defendant which he would not be entitled to upon the pleadings and proofs between the plaintiff and defendants, he is a "plaintiff" within the meaning of rule 1198, and, if resident out of the jurisdiction, is liable to an order for security for costs. Walmsley v, Griffith, 11 P. R. 139, considered. Molsons Bank v. Sauvyer, 19 P. R. 316.

Relief Over—Mendment—Time—Order—Discretion—Appeel.]—An action was brought against two defendants, one of whom suffered judgment by default; the plaintiff proceeded against the other, claiming by virtue of an assignment from the first of his cause of action against the second, which was in the nature of a claim for indemnity against lability for the claim on which the judgment by default had been suffered. At the trial the action was dismissed against the second on the ground that the assignment was inoperative. Upon an appeal by the plaintiff to a divisional court, an order was made directing that, notwithstanding the assignment, the first defendant should be allowed to amend the pleadings by claiming over against the second defendant, who was to be allowed also to amend, and further evidence was to be taken, if necessary:—Held, not a mere discretionary order, but one from which an appeal lay. Hately v. Merchant? Despatch Transportation Co., 12 A. R. 640, followed. 2. That the order could not be sustained under Rules 328-332 (1313) or otherwise, as it was made at too late a stage, and uson the application of the plaintiff only. Beautice v. Cockran, 17 P. R. 9.

— Conversion of Goods—Vendor.]—In an action for the conversion of goods, the defendant may bring in the person who sold him the goods as a third party, the words "any other relief over" in rule 209 being wide enough to include a claim made by the defendant against his vendor. Conjecteration Life Association v, Labatt (No. 2), 18 P. R. 266.

Remedy Over—Municipal Corporations.]

—A third party is "a party to the action" within the meaning of s. 531, s.-s. 5, of the Municipal Act, 55 Viet, c. 42; and where a defendant nunicipal corporation, under that enactment, seeks to have another corporation or person added as a party for the purpose of enforcing a remedy over, such person or corporation should be made a third party and not a defendant, unless the plaintiff seeks some relief against such added party; and it is improper to add such party both as a defendant and a third party. Erdman v. Town of Walkerton, 15 P. R. 12. See, also, S. C., 22 O. R. 693, 20 A. R. 444, 23 S. C. R. 352.

Trial of Claim against Third Party.]—Under rule 112, where in an action the plaintiff is entitled to recover against the defendant against whom the action is brought, the defendant is precluded from trying questions arising between himself and a third party added at his instigation under rule 108, in the trial of which the plaintiff has no interest, and which has the effect of delaying the plaintiff in his recovery. Town of Dundas v. Gilmour, 2 O. R. 463.

Defendants, sued by the plaintiffs for the amount due under a lease of a toligate, brought in W. as a defendant, alleging that an agreement to commute tolls payable by W. had been made by the plaintiffs, and claiming as a set-off the difference between such computation and the tolls otherwise payable by W. This agreement having been disproved, the parties proceeded to try the question as to the liability of W. to the original defendants, in which the plaintiffs had no interest, and judgment was given in favour of the original defendants:—Held, that such judgment must be set aside. Ib.

Dowress.]—A dowress is not entitled to demand, although she is compelled to suffer, partition. R. S. O. 1877 c. 101, s. 49, s.-s. 2, refers to the case of a married woman who joins in a petition with her husband who is entitled to demand partition. Rody v. Rody, I. C. L. T. 546.

A person entitled only to dower, unassigned, out of land is entitled to apply for partition, Rody v. Rody, I. C. L. T. 546, overruled, But where one only of several is desirous of partition, all that that one is entitled to is to have his or her portion set aside, leaving the others to hold jointly or in common, as before. Hobson v. Sherwood, 4 Beav, 184, followed. Devereux v. Kearns, II. P. R. 452.

Where the downess applied for partition or sale, confessedly with the object of obtaining the latter, and all the other parties opposed it, and it appeared that the applicant had by another proceeding obtained the right to have her dower assigned out of the lands, the application was refused with costs. Ib.

Although some expressions in the Partition Act. R. S. O. 1847 c. 101, authorize a person entitled to dower not assigned to annly for partition or sale of the lands in which she is interested, yet the court may, in its discretion, refuse the application and leave the dowress to proceed under the Dower Procedure Act. R. S. O. 1847 c. 55, or otherwise, to have her dower assigned. The provisions of the two Acts must be harmonized. Fram v. Fram, 12 P. R. 185.

The application of a dowress for nattition or sale of two purcels of land owned by the defendants in severalty, subject to the right opposed the application and the proposed proceedings were for the benefit of the applicant only. Devereux v. Kearns, 11 P. R. 152, discussed, The Mortgagee.]—A mortgagee, whose title has not been perfected by foreclosure or otherwise, is not entitled to an order for partition or sale upon summary application under rule 989. Mulligan v. Hendershott, 17 P. R. 227, Mortgagee of Interest.] — Quere, whether the appellant in this case, whose only interest was that of mortgages of the interest of one S., the owner of an undivided one-sixth interest in the lands, had any locus standi to bring a suit for partition or to appeal without his co-plaintiff. Laplante v. Scamen, S A. R. 557.

Purchase at Sheriff's Sale—Interest in Equity.]—A decree for partition issued by a local master at the instance of a purchaser at sheriff's sale under an order made by a county court Judge, where the interest which had been sold was that of one of four tenants in common in an equity of redemption in land, which was subject to two mortgages in different hands, was on appeal reversed with costs. Wood v. Hurl, 28 Gr. 146.

Remaindermen.]—See Murcar v. Bolton, 5 O. R. 164.

Tenant for Life.]—A tenant for life is entitled to a partition, and where there is a right to a partition there may be a right to a sale as the court may determine. Lator v. Lator, 9 P. R. 455.

A sole tenant for life of an estate has no locus standi under the Partition Act, R. S. O. 1887 c, 104, to apply for sale of the estate. In the nature of things no partition is possible as regards the life tenancy. Fisken v. Ifc, 28 O. R. 595.

Trustee for Sale.]—The plaintiff, being a trustee for sale, was held not to be in a position to ask for partition. Keefer v. Mc-Kay, 29 Gr. 162.

2. Other Cases.

Admission of Common Title.]—The Partition Act of 1869 only applies to cases in which some common title in the petitioner and respondents, to the land in question, is admitted. Bennetto, v. Bennetto, 6 P. R. 145.

Adverse Title—Possession.]—A summary application for partition or sale of land by the plaintiff as one of several heirs was dismissed with costs where the plaintiff before making it knew that a defendant was in possession clamming title to the exclusion of the plaintiff and his co-heirs. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 9 P. 8, 71.

Agreement to Partition—Acting on—Infants—Improvements.]—The adult co-heirs of an estate agreed to partition, and bound themselves to execute quit chims to carry it out as soon as the minors came of age and mitted therein. Some of the co-heirs went into possession of their portions and reade improvements; some released their interest in the property allotted to others; but some of the minors on coming of age declined to adopt the agreement is—Held, on that account, that the agreement was not binding on any of the purities to it; and a decree for partition was made; and the master was directed to have regard in partitioning to the possession and improvements by the parties. Wood v. Wood, vi Gr 471.

Consent—2 Wm. IV. c. 35.]—The court could not award a writ of partition, under 2 Wm. IV. c. 35, where all the parties interested in the partition consent to its being made. In re Enstwood, 1 U. C. R. 3; In re Usher, 46, 527.

Crown Lands—Representatives of Locatee.—The court will not decree the partition of lands the title of which is vested in the Crown; neither will it decree the sale of such lands at the instance of the representatives of a deceased locatee. Abell v. Weir 24 Gr. 464. See also Pride v. Rodger, 27 O. R. 320, post II.

squatter.]— The right which a squatter acquires by being in possession of lands of the Crown, is not such an interest therein as the court will order a partition of amoigst his heirs: in such a case the only remedy is by application to the government. Jenkins v. Martin, 20 Gr. 613.

Order for Sale—C. S. U. C. c. 86, s. 17
—Refusal to Act under—Rescission.]—A sale of lands having been ordered, under s. 17 of C. S. U. C. c. 86, to be made by certain persons agreed upon by the parties, one of these persons refused to act, and the petitioners then applied on this ground to rescind the order for sale, and for partition by the real representative:—Held, that the court could not interfere, not having any original or common law jurisdiction, and such a case not being provided for in the Act. Quere, whether the person refusing might not have been regarded as guilty of contempt, or have been subjected to costs. Quere, also, whether the order might not have been varied or rescinded by consent of all those who consented to its being made; or if one of those appointed to make the sale were to die or become incapable of acting, whether the court might not order the proceedings to be completed by those remaining. In re Knowles and Post, 24 U. C. 8, 311.

Outstanding Term.]—The fact that there is an outstanding term in lands to portions of which infants are entitled, is no defence to a bill of partition, although it may influence the court in deciding between a sale or a partition of the estate. Fitzpatrick v. Wilson, 12 Gr. 440.

Sale of Part—Charge on Remainder— Greing Order.]—In a suit for partition the greiner part of the property, the subject of the partition, had been sold under the decree of the court, but pertions of it still remained unrealized. It appearing that all prior charges upon the property (such as the costs of the various parties to the suit, &c.) had been paids and that the unrealized property was for less in value than the amount of the co-owners the co-owners the co-owners on a petition by plaintiff, an order was granted, westing all the unrealized property in him. Arnold v. Hurd, 1 Ch. Ch. 252.

Will—Executors — Refusal—2 Wm, IV, c. 35.1—Where a testator directed in his will that after the death of A., his land should be divided between his children, by his executors:—Held, that, in the absence of any refusal of the executors to make the partition after the death of A., the court could not direct a partition under 2 Wm, IV, c. 35. Cronk, C. Cronk, G. O. S. 332.

Period for Partition—Infants.]—
Where an estate consisted in large part of personalty, and by the will of the testator the whole was to be divided among his children on the youngest attaining twenty-one, all of whom took vested interests on their attaining majority, and in the event of the death of any before the period of distribution, leaving issue, the share of the one so dying was to go to his children, share and share alike:—Held, that until the youngest child attained twenty-one, the adult parties were not entitled to call for a partition or distribution of the property. Murphy v. Mason, 22 Gr. 405.

Trustees — Legacies—Charge.]—A testator dying in 1820 devised his farm to trustees in trust to pay certain legacies, and divide the residue amongst the testator's three sons. The trustees refused to act, and the eldest son, in consequence, on coming of age in 1823, sold portions of the land, and applied the proceeds, or part of them, towards paying the legacies. After his death the surpaying the legacies. After his death the surviving trustee executed a conveyance of the whole farm to the two surviving sons, from misunderstanding the nature of the deed pre-sented to him for execution. The two sons sented to him for execution. The two sons then sold what remained of the farm, and brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff, who was in possession of the parcels sold by the eldest son during his lifetime. court restrained this action, declared the plaintiff entitled, as far as might be necessary for his protection, to stand in the place of the eldest son in regard to his undivided third of the whole property, and to his charge for twothirds of the legacies he had paid on his brothers' undivided two-thirds of the estate, and decreed a partition and the necessary inquiries to give effect to such declaration. Hiscott v. Berringer, 4 Gr. 296.

Trustees—Power of Sale—Majority of Heirs.]—J. C. died in 1847, having by his will provided as follows: "And whereas trouble . may arise among my family with regard to the property . . on account of its being put out of the power of my trustees to sell or dispose of the property. I

II. ALLOWANCE FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Agreement to Partition—Action on— Infants.]—See Wood v. Wood, 16 Gr. 471.

Crown Lands — Locatec—Jurisdiction— Declaratory Relief—Statute of Limitations,] —A locatee of Crown lands left the Province in 1868, and was last heard of in 1877. defendant, a son of his, had resided continuously on the property since 1881, cultivating and improving it, and the plaintiff, a daughter, resided on it also, from time to time, till 1887. There were two other children, who had not been in possession of the land for more than ten years before action, which was brought in 1895: — Held, that the locatee must be presumed to have been dead by 1884, and the defendant had acquired a title by possession as against the children other than the plaintiff, whose claim as to one-quarter was as good as his, and in making partition the Crown should recognize his right to improvements. The Statute of Limitations, R. S. O. 1887 c. 111, applied because the rights involved upon the record were merely private rights not affecting the pleasure or the sovereignty of the Crown. Even in the case of unpatented lands, declaratory relief may in a suitable case be given, which will work prac-tically the result of a partition of the pro-perty, subject to the Crown being willing to act upon the judgment of the court. Rodger, 27 O. R. 320.

Parent and Son—Intention to Advance.]

—A father placed one of his sons in possession of certain wild land, and announced his intention of giving it to him by way of advancement. He died without carrying out this intention; but meanwhile the son had taken possession, and by his improvements nearly doubled the value of the land;—Held, that the son was entitled to a charge for his improvements, and to have the land allotted to him in the division of his father's estate, provided the present value of the land in its unimproved state would not exceed his share of the estate, Quare, in such a case, whether the son is not entitled to an absolute decree for the land. Bichn v. Bichn, 18 Gr. 497. See Hovey v. Ferguson, ib. 498.

Intention to Devise.]—A testator portions of his real estate, intending to convey or devise the same to them, but during his lifetime retained the full control of the property: notwithstanding this, the sons made valuable improvements upon their respective portions. Upon a bill filed after the decease of the father for a distribution of the estate, the court refused to make to the sons any allowance in respect of such improvements, Foster v. Emerson, 5 Gr. 135.

Tenant in Common.]—See Lasby v. Crewson, 21 O. R. 255.

III. CONFIRMATION.

Decree—Finding of Master—Further Directions.]—Where a decree, which reserved no further directions, directed that a sale or partition of the property should take place, as the master might consider most for the interest of the parties, the court, on motion, ordered the execution of conveyances and the delivery of the possession of the property agreeably to the finding of the master. O'Lone, C. O'Lone, C. Gr. 642.

Report—Partition Suit.1—The report in a partition suit by bill under C. S. U. C. c. 85, uses not require to be specially confirmed by the court, but before it will be acted upon it will be examined by the court to see whether there is in it the manifest error referred to in s. 24 of the Act. Dunn v. Dowling, 1 Ch. (Ch. 305.5)

Rale Confirming—Non-issue of—Acquiexence-Death of Party.]—In 1855 the widow and children of one of two joint owners of land petitioned for a partition under 2 Wm. IV. c. 35, the other owner being respondent. In the same year partition was made by the sheriff, the return and plan were filed, and a rule to record and conlirm it was moved for, but by some mistake never issued, and there was no official entry of its having been either granted or refused. In 1800 the respondent died. The partition thus made had always been acquiesced in, the parties supposing the it had been confirmed:—Held, that the concould not now, even by consent, examine and confirm such partition, for it would in effect be giving judgment against a party (the respondent) several years dead, and he proceeding would be void. In re Park and Park, 24 U. C. R. 459.

Sale in Parcels — One Unsold.] — In a proceeding for partition under C. S. U. C. c. 86, a sale had been ordered by the court, under which the real representative sold four of the five lots into which the property had been divided by the real representative; but, there being no bidders for the remaining one at what he considered a reasonable price, he withdrew it. The court suggested that it might be better to wait till the rest of the property was sold; but, after consideration, confirmed the sale and ordered deeds to be executed. In re Westerrectt, 10 L. J. 15.

See Jenking v. Jenking, 11 A. R. 92.

IV. Costs.

Apportionment — Direction — Solicitor and Client.)—In a suit for partition, the decree omitted a direction to tax the costs as hereen solicitor and client, or to apportion them amongst the several parties. On a motion for an order directing the master to do so upon the taxation, the order to apportion the costs was made. The order for taxation as being a variation of the decree. Bernard v. Jarvis, 1 Ch. Ch. 24.

Commission in Lieu of Costs.]—The sum alletted to the guardian of infants for commission in partition suits should not be measured only by the work done in the master's office. Cameron v. Leroux, 9 P. R. 304.

See Clark v. Clark, 8 P. R. 156.

Party and Party—Solicitor and Client.]
—The costs decreed in partition suits are, as in other suits, party and party costs, and where any of the parties are not sui juris, costs as between solicitor and client are not decreed even by consent. Harkness v. Conneg, 12 Gr. 440.

Proportionate Allotment.] — In suits between joint owners for partition or sale, the costs are to be borne by the parties in proportion to their respective interests in the property, except that in the case of partition the court, if it see fit, may give no costs to either party up to the hearing. Cartwright v. Biehl, 13 Gr. 360.

Unnecessary Suit — Infants — Next Friend.].—The court will not countenance the unnecessary incurring of costs of filing a bill for the partition and sale of the estate of infants for the purpose of discharging a mortage shereon, which object could be obtained as effectually in the ordinary way by proceedings being taken at the instance of the mortagee; and where such a suit was brought in the name of infants, the court, on dismissing the bill, ordered the costs of the defendants to be paid by the next friend of the infants. Carroll v. Carroll, 25 Gr. 438.

See Brown v. Brown, 9 P. R. 245; Campbell v. Campbell, 8 P. R. 159; McKay v. McKay, 8 P. R. 334.

(See also ante I. 1.)

Absentee — Guardian — Dispensing with Senice—Substituted Service J.—Where, in a proceeding for partition or sale of lands, begun by summary application, a person interested in the estate, not originally made a party, had been long unheard of, and there was uncertainty whether he were living or dead, an order was made by a Judge, under ss. 18 to 20 of the Partition Act, R. S. O. 1857 c. 123, which are expressly made applicable by s. 35 of the Judicature Act, R. S. O. c. 51, appointing a guardian and directing that he be served with an office copy of the judgment or order for partition, and notice, for the absentee. Semble, that the master to whom a reference is directed by the judgment or order has power to dispense with service of his warrant or of an office copy of the judgment: Rules 203, 659. Smith v. Houston, 15 P. R. 18, discussed. Semble, also, that the court or Judge has power to make an order for substituted service of an office copy of a judgment or order. Re Hynes, Hodgins v. Andreuss, 19 P. R. 217.

Infants.] — Where in a bill for partition it was stated that certain infants residing with or near their father, out of the jurisdiction of the court, not parties, were interested in the lands sought to be partitioned, their father being a party defendant, a demurrer for want of parties was allowed. Tryon v. Peer, 13 Gr. 311.

— Plaintiffs — Official Guardian.]—
Where in a partition suit commenced by summary application under G. O. Chy. 640, the infants interested in the estate had been joined as plaintiffs, and a sale of the land had taken place by public auction:—Held, that the infants were improperly joined as plaintiffs; that they should have been defendants and represented by the official guardian; and a reference was directed to the master to fix the guardian's commission as if he had been engaged in the suit from the beginning. On consent of the guardian, it was ordered that the proceedings taken for sale, if they proved to be regular, should stand; but this was not to be a precedent. Brown, Brown, 9 P. R. 245.

Lessee.]—To a bill for partition a lessee for years may be a necessary party. Fitzpatrick v. Wilson, 12 Gr. 440.

Mortgagee.]—Although partition may be directed of an estate subject to a mortgage thereon, still, if one of several co-tenants creates an incumbrance on his undivided share and institutes proceedings to obtain a partition of the estate, the party holding the incumbrance must be brought before the court, and the party creating the charge must bear any additional expense occasioned thereby, McDougall v. McDougall, 14 Gr. 207.

Opposing Party.]—A petition for a partition under 2 Wm. IV. c. 35, must have been verified by affidavit, and there must be an onposing party, although the suit was an amicable one, and one of the parties consenting to the partition had to be dropped for that purpose. Esp. Robinson, M. T. 2 Vict.

VI. PRACTICE.

Advertisement for Creditors — Dispensing with.] — The fact that an intestate, whose estate is being partitioned, has been dead for forty-five years, does not warrant the master in dispensing with the usual advertisement for creditors. Biggar v. Biggar, S.P. R. 488.

Sales by the court of real estate held in cotenancy are governed by the provisions of the Partition Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 101; and masters should not, without any specific or sufficient reasons dispense with inquiries and advertisements for creditors holding specific or general liens upon the whole or any undivided share of the estate, down to the time of sale, and not merely at the time when the order under G. O. Chy. 640 is made. Robson v. Robson, 10 P. R. 324.

Consolidation - Forum. |-- An application to consolidate two motions for administration and partition pending before a local master, should be made to him and not to a Judge in chambers. Lambier v. Lambier, 9 P. R. 422.

Lands in Different Counties - Local Lands in Different Counties—Local Moster,—After an order for partition of lands in the county of Peel had been granted by a master under G. O. 641, an order was made by a Judge in chambers to include in said order lands in another county, though such lands were known of at the time the partition order was made. The costs of the usual commission under G. O. 645. Clark v. Clark, S P. R. 156.

Where lands are situate in different coun Where lates are situate in different counties, a local master has no jurisdiction to make an order for the partition or sale the reof, and such an order and the proceedings thereunder, even as to lands within the county in which he is master, are wholly void. Regina v. Smith, 7 P. R. 429, followed. Achelot, v. Athenby, 17 O. R. 275.

Petition Affidavit.] — See Ex p. Robin son, M. T. 2 Vict. ante V.

Demurrer.]—The respondent to a petition for partition under 2 Wm. IV. c. 35 might demur. Cronk v. Cronk, 1 U. C. R.

Real Representative—Partition or Sale—Re/crence.]—Partition, where ordered, is to be made by the real representative. In re-

Foster, 1 Ch. Ch. 103.

The question whether partition should be ordered is proper to be referred to the r al representative, who is to make sale if ordered. Ib.

The court may order a sale in the first instance, if it see fit. 1b.

The court will use its own machinery for carrying the purposes of the Act into effect.

Reference-Powers of Master.] - Power of master on a reference for partition or sale of lands to try the validity of a lease, or a fraudulent alteration in a sealed instrument. Re nogers, Rogers v. Rogers, 11 P. R.

- Powers of Master-Scheme of Partition. |- In the course of a reference to make partition of lands, a master appointed two a partition of lands, a master appointed two skilled persons to examine the property and prepare a scheme of partition, and on their cybelone he adopted the scheme prepared:— Held, that the course adopted by the master was a reasonable one; that he had the power under G. O. Chy. 240, to take such course, and that the fees paid to the skilled persons by the defendant should be taxed. McKay v. Kecter, 12 P. R. 250.

Sale—Death of armointee.]—Where a sale of lands is ordered under C. S. U. C. c. 86, s. 17 (the Partition Act), to be made by certain nersons agreed upon by the parties:—Quære, if one should die or become incapable of acting, whether the court might not order the proceedings to be completed by those re-maining. In re-Knowles and Post, 24 U. C.

Service of Bill-Infant.]-In a partition suit an order allowing substitutional service of the bill on the official guardian of an infant defendant, resident without the jurisdiction of the court, was granted on the ground that the share of the infant in the lands in question amounted to only $40, and substitu-tional service would be inexpensive. Weatherhead v. Weatherhead, 9 P. R. 96.

Service of Notice -Time.]-A writ service of Notice — Time.]—A with of partition could not be ordered, under 2 Wm, IV. c, 35 without forty clear days' notice before the term. Where, therefore, the service was made on the 21st July, and the term began on the 30th August, it was held insufficient. In re Loney, 10 U. C, R, 305.

Summary Application—Forum—Place Reference.]—Under G. O. 640, where special circumstances are shewn on an application for partition or sale of lands, a reference to a master other than the master in the county town of the county where the lands are situate, will be directed. The application under the order should be made to a Judge in chambers. Re Arnott, Chatterton v. Chat-terton, 8 P. R. 39.

Injunction—Necessity for Bill.]—
A notice of motion for partition having been served, the plaintiff moved for an injunction restraining the defendant from collecting rents, and for a receiver. It appeared that the defendant was a stranger, whose right to be in possession was denied:—Held, that no relief could be had against him without bill filed. Young v. Wright, 8 P. R. 198.

Time-Death of Intestate.]-An or der for partition of the realty was refused, when the application was made within six months of the death of the person whose es-tate was sought to be partitioned. The rule laid down by the Partition Act, R. S. O. 1877 c. 101, s. 6, held applicable. Grant v. Grant, 9 P. R. 211.

Partition Act of 1869 only applies to cases in which some common title in the petitioner and respondents to the land in question is Where it appeared, from the stateadmitted. ments in the petition, that two of several respondents claimed to be entitled absolutely to part of the lands sought to be partitioned, and that the petitioners contested such claim:— Held, that the proper mode of proceeding as against these respondents was by bill in the ordinary way. Bennetto v. Bennetto, 6 P. R. 145

The jurisdiction created by G. O. 640 is intended to be exercised in simple cases only where there is no dispute. Where questions are raised of title, or the like, a bill must be filed. Macdonell v. Metidiks, S. P. R. 339.

The defendant, who occupied the property in question in a partition suit, claimed an absolute title by possession under the Statute of Limitations. The master, notwithstanding, of Limitations. The master, notwithstanding, continued the inquiry and proceeded to take evidence. The chancellor directed the plain-tiff to file a bill within two weeks, and the parties to go to a hearing at the then next ensuing sittings, costs to be costs in the cause. Re McMillan, Patterson v. McMillan, 8 P. See ante V.

Title—Issue—Hearing.]—In a partition such a question of title raised between co-defendants was decided at the hearing, and without being referred to the master. Wood v, Wood, 16 Gr. 471.

Trial — Notice of — Irregular Issue — Forms. |— Where a defendant is not misled by a motice of trial, any trilling irregularity therein, as, in this case, the omission of the words, "In the matter of partition between" before the plaintiff's and defendant's names in the style of cause, will not entitle the defendant to set aside the verdiet; and irregularities of this kind should be objected to promptly, otherwise the court will not interfere. Issues in partition suits under 32 Vict. c. 33 (10.) are within 32 Vict. c. 6, s. 17, ses. 2 (the Law Reform Act, 1868); and such an issue in the county court may, therefore, be tried at the assises. Symonds v. Symonds, 20 c. P. 271.

VII. SALE-WHEN ORDERED.

Nature of Property—Immediate Sale.]
—Where on the hearing of a cause for partition, it was shewn that the estate could not be divided without prejudice, the court, without waiting for any return to that effect, ordered a sale. Bennett v. Bennett, 8 Gr.
446.

Number of Claimants.]—Where the property was not indivisible in its nature, but the freeholders returned that it was desirable that no division should take place, but that the whole should be taken by one of the parties entitled, or otherwise sold, there being more than eighteen claimants; the court approved of the return. In re Dennic, 10 U. C. R. 104.

Outstanding Term.]—See Fitzpatrick v. Wilson, 12 Gr. 440.

— Reference to Master—Sale of Portions.]—In a suif for partition, where infants were interested, affidavits were produced shewing that a sale rather than a partition would be for the benefit of the infants; and that the property was not susceptible of equal partition. The court directed a reference to the master to enter into contracts for the sale of portions of the estate, which sales should be carried into effect upon being approved of by the Judge. Steren v. Hunter, 14 Gr. 541.

Water Privilege.]—The plaintiff filed her bill for a partition of 200 acres of land on the river Ottawa and a water mill privilege appurtenant thereto. The property in question had been acquired by her and one II. as tenants in common, and H. had subsequently conveyed an undivided one-fifth of his portion to the four other defendants. The evidence shewed that in order to divide the water privilege very complicated structures would have to be made at heavy expense, and a large sum of money expended annually in maintaining them. It also appeared that the difficulties in carrying out the scheme would be very great:—Held, that it was the duty of the court to consider the interests of all the defendants, and a partition could not be decreed without injuring them; but that, even if the case were decided without reference to the interests of the defendants other than H., partition was under the circumstances rightly refused; and a sale of the water privilege, together with a sufficient quantity of land for the purpose, was ordered. Blasdell v. Ballevin, 3 A. R. 6.

Reference to Real Representative, —
The question whether partition or sale should be ordered, is proper to be referred to the real representative, who is to make sale if ordered. The court may order a sale in the first instance, if it see fit. In re Foster, 1 Ch.
Ch. 103.

Remaindermen—Right to Sale—Tenant for Life—Prohibition.]—The Crown, by letters patent, granted land to F. B. for life, with remainder to her children, the petitioners, as tenants in common in fee simple. On a petition presented to the Judge of the county court, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 101, for partition or sale, a sale was ordered. A motion for a prohibition was made on behalf of F. B., the tenant for life:—Held, that the case did not come within the Partition Acts, and that there was no power to compel a sale of the lands as against the tenant for life. Prohibition ordered. Murcar v. Bolton, 5 O. R. 184.

See In re Knowles and Post, 24 U. C. R. 311; Arnold v. Hurd, 1 Ch. Ch. 252; Lator v. Lalor, 9 P. R. 455; Devereux v. Kearns, 11 P. R. 452; Fram v. Fram, 12 P. R. 185.

VIII. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Account of Personal Estate — Executor—Infant Legatees.] — In a suit for the partition of the real estate of an intestate, who was one of the executors of his father's will, and had taken possession of the personal estate, and who died a minor, it was contended on behalf of infant legatees, who had not been paid their legacies, that an account should be taken of the personal estate come to the hands of such executor, and that their shares thereof should be charged upon the land in question before partition:—Held, that the executor having been a minor, his estate was not liable to account therefor. Nash v. Mc-Kay, 15 Gr. 247.

Advancement—Hotehpot.]—A child who has been advanced is bound to bring into hotehpot that wherewith he has been advanced only when it has been so expressed in writing either by the parent or the child so advanced. Filman v. Filman, 15 Gr. 643.

Agreement to Partition—Secret Promise—Enforcement—Statute of Frauds—Married Woman.]—A testator having devised his real property to such of the persons named as should be living at the death of his widow, the parties interested came to an agreement of the parties of during the widow's lifetime. There were during the widow's lifetime, There were the parties. The plaintiff, who was the parties of the parties with the parties of the parties of the parties of the parties of the devisees, that the latter should, after partition, hold a portion of her share in trust for the plaintiff. This agreement was not known to the other devisees; the partition deed was executed by all the parties; the partition would not have been agreed to by the plaintiff but for the promise stated:—Held, that the promise was not binding, both because there was no writing within the Statute of Frauds, and because the party making it was a married woman, Morley v. Davison, 20 Gr.

Appeal — Special Case.]—An appeal will lie under the Partition Act. 32 Viet. c. 33 (O.), from the judgment of a county court Judge on a special case stated. In re Shaver and Hart, 31 U. C. R. 603.

Consent — Mode of Partition — Relief against — Forum, 1 — In a partition suit, a gentleman who was not a solicitor, nor a clerk of any solicitor in the cause, was employed by the defendant's solicitor to attend to the ense for defendant, and gave a consent in good faith, but inconsiderately, and without the knowledge or authority of or communica-tion with the defendant or his solicitor, to a mode of partition suggested by the opposite party:—Held, that the consent might be re-lieved against on terms, it not appearing that the plaintiff would thereby be prejudiced Held, also, that an application for relief against the consent, and to set aside the report, was properly made in chambers, and not in court. Rolfe v. Coote, 1 Ch. Ch. 308.

Claim — Administratrix Creditor's Costs.]—An order for partition or sale was made under G. O. 640, by a master, of the made under G. O. 640, by a master, of the estate of one M., deceased. In proceeding under that order the master advertised for creditors, and M. & M., sent in a claim for obtaining letters of administration, and for defending an action in the court of common pleas, brought by W. M., a defendant in this suit, and entitled to a share of the estate against the administratrix. The master allowed the claim, and W. M. appealed, on the ground that neither the deceased nor his estate were indebted to M. & M., and that they were not entitled to prove as creditors in this cause:—Held, that the administratrix was justified in defending the administratrix was justified in defending the suit, and the appeal was dismissed. Mc-Kay v. McKay, 8 P. R. 334.

Judgment in Partition—Effect of.]—When proceedings for a partition in a county court have been terminated by an order confirming such partition, and nothing remains to be done by way of enforcing the judgment, such judgment cannot afterwards be impeached on the ground of fraud or deception on the court otherwise than in resisting an action in which it is relied on, or by bringing an action for the express purpose of setting it aside, Jenking v. Jenking, 11 A. R. 92. See Van Velsor v. Hughson, 9 A. R. 390.

Mistake — Family Arrangements.]—See Baldwin v. Kingstone, 18 A. R. 63.

Proceeds of Sale - Infant-Realty.]-When lands are sold for the purpose of effecting a partition, the share of an infant retains its character of realty. Thompson v. Mc-Caffrey, 6 P. R. 193, Lunatic's Interest - Statute -Realty.]-One of several heirs of an intestate being lunatic, an Act was procured authorizing the sale of the intestate's lands, and the investment of the lunatic's share, for the benefit of the lunatic "and his representatives." The lunatic afterwards died :- Held, that this share, for the purpose of distribu-tion, retained the character of realty, and was to be divided between his real representatives and not his next of kin. Campbelt v. Camp-bell, 19 Gr. 254.

Payment into Court-Interest.]-In partition suit the mortgagors of an undivided share became the purchasers, but they aroused share became the purchasers, but they did not pay the purchase money into court until long after the day named in the master's report:—Held, that the mortgage, though a party to the suit, was entitled to interest at the rate reserved in the mortgage until notice of such payment into court. Mo-Dermid V. MeDermid, 7. P. R. 457.

Retrait Successoral-Quebec Law-Sale by Co-heir — Prescription,] — See Baxter v. Phillips, 23 S. C. R. 317.

Setting aside Partition.]-An unequal partition obtained in a county court against a minor of feme covert, through the contrivance of the co-tenant, the gross laches of the guardian ad litem, and the misapprehenthe guardian ad litem, and the misapprehen-sion of the referee (appointed under s. 17 of the Partition Act) as to the extent of his duty and power, was held not binding. The minor, on coming of age, filed a bill for a new partition, and a decree was made accord-ingly. Merritt v. Shauc, 15 Gr. 321. See Jenking v. Jenking, 11 A. R. 92, supra.

Transfer of Share in Land-Construc tion of Instrument.]—One of the devisees of an estate sold her interest therein to her brother, and executed with her husband an instrument in the form of a power of attorney, authorizing the assignee for his own benefit to demand and receive of and from the exnt to demand and receive of and from the ex-ecutor, &c., all moneys which might become due and payable to her and her husband, or either of them, by virtue of all devises and bequests under the last will and testament of her father; in fact, at the time of the execution of this instrument, she was entitled to a share of another brother's portion of the a share of another brother's portion of the estate by assignment from him:—Held, on appeal from the report of the master, that the instrument executed by the husband and wife had not the effect of transferring the share of the wife in the portion of the brother so assigned. Pherrill v. Pherrill, 10 Gr. 589.

I. GENERALLY.

1. Proof of Partnership.

Admissions.]—In an action against a member of a joint stock company, his admissions that he was a partner are sufficient to prove his liability, without producing the partnership deed. Lee v. McDonald, 6 O. S. 130.

The admissions of one partner, that a third person was jointly interested with himself and his co-partners, is not evidence against the latter to prove such joint interest. Carfrae v. Vanbuskirk, I Gr. 539.

Contradictory Affidavits.]—On the contradictory affidavits in this case, the court refused to interfere on the ground of an alleged partnership between plaintiff and defendant. Clark v. Chipman, 26 U. C. R. 170.

Dissolution—Evidence — Jury.] — Held, that on the evidence in this case the jury were justified in finding defendants to be liable as pariners, notwithstanding the proof of a dissolution. Jordan v. Smith, 17 U. C. R. 500.

Evidence — Interence — Intention.] — Where there has been a contribution of capital as well as participation in the profits accraing from that capital, a partnership will be intended, even though the parties have alread that they will not call themselves partners, or did not intend to constitute that relationship:—Held, that the evidence, which is Vot. 111. b—162—13 fully set out in the report, was sufficient to prove that the defendant was a partner. Botham v. Keefer, 2 A. R. 595.

Inference—Jury.]—Where upon a question of partnership between father and son (defendants), the evidence shewed that the son, a young unmarried man, lived with his father, was in general occupied with his business, carrying beer to his customers, receiving money and making payments for him, &c., and had furnished part of the money with which his father had built his brewery:—Held, that this evidence laid no ground upon which a partnership between father and son could be inferred. The jury having found for the plaintift, a new trial was granted on payment of costs. Sculthope v. Bates, 5 U. C. R. 318.

See Stuart v. Mott, 14 S. C. R. 734.

Parol Agreement—Statute of Frauds— Interest in Land—Mineral Claim.]—See Archibald v. McNerhanie, 29 S. C. R. 564.

Representation — Agent — Letters.]—
The representation of an agent that his principuls are a firm in a distant Province, and that such firm is composed of A. and B., coupled with evidence of receipt by the person to whom the representation is made of letters from one of the alleged members of the firm, written on paper on which the names of such members are printed, in answer to letters from such person, is prima face evidence that A. and B. constitute the said firm. Mc-bonald v. Gübert, 16 S. C. R. 700.

Repudiation—Delay.)—Where a plaintiff filed a bill alleging that he and the defendants had agreed to be partners in certain government contracts, and it appeared that the defendants had repudiated the partnership as soon as the contracts were energed into, that the contracts were to be completed in a year, the contracts were to be completed in a year, and the contracts were to a contract of the defendant of the court offered the plainting appearance of the delay, or that his bill should be dismissed without costs. See Darling v. Magnan, 12 U. C. R. 471; Sylvester v. McCuaig, 28 C. P. 443; Bank of Rochester v. Stonehouse, 27 Gr. 327; Haggart v. Allan, 4 Gr. 36.

2. What Constitutes a Partnership.

Agreement—Construction.]—Held, upon the agreement and facts as given in this case, that the defendant M., in certain transactions between the plaintiffs and defendants, must be considered as a partner with defendants. Tobin v. Merritt, 2 U. C. R. 1.

Held, that the agreement, given in the report of this case, did not create between the parties a partnership inter se, and that consequently the one could sue the other thereon at common law. Hawley v. Dixon, 7 U. C. R. 218.

Creditors—Profits—Holding out.]—
G. R. and his brother were lumber merchants at Stayner. P. & H., of Toronto, received consignments of lumber from them for sale.

and accepted their drafts drawn against such consignments. P. & H. were paid by commission until 1872, when R. and brother dissolved. It was then agreed that the business should be carried on by G. R.; that P. & H. should receive one-half the net profits of the business, to be credited to them upon a state ment and settlement of mutual accounts each instead of a commission as formerly, and should guarantee all sales made by them and that the amount then due to P. & H should be carried to the debit of G. R. No provision was made in respect of losses, but, by a special agreement when R.'s mill and a large quantity of lumber were destroyed by fire in 1873, P. & H. shared half of the loss. partly, as they said, to save him from ruin, which would have destroyed all prospect of their getting paid what he owed them, and partly because they were to blame for not seeing that he was insured. P. & H. had access to R.'s books, and the vearly balancing was done under their supervision. One purchase of timber land was made in the joint names of R. and a member of the firm of P & H., which was said to have been by way of security to them, but it was paid for by R. alone. G. R. haying become insolvent, P. & H. claimed as his creditors for the balance due them, but their claim was resisted on the ground that they were partners with the insolvent. It appeared from the evidence that no partnership was ever intended by the parties, and that they had never held themselves out as partners:—Held, that no partnership existed. In re Randolph, 1 A. R. 315.

emed G. and W. for the plaintiffs send G. and W. for the price of goods sold to the firm of P. W. G. & Co., and the principal question in the action was, whether W. was an actual partner in the firm, the evidence failing to shew that he was an ostensible partner, and as such, liable to third persons:—Heid, that the true test to be applied to ascritain whether a partnership existed, was to determine whether there was a joint business, or whether the partnership existed, was to determine whether there was a joint business as principals and agents for each other:—Held, that the facts and documents set out in the report did not establish that the husiness was the joint business of G. and W., or that they were carrying it on as principals or agents for each other; but that they did estamish that the true relation was that of denor and creditor; and W. was therefore not liable to the plaintiffs. Mendelssohn Pinno Co., v. Graham, 19 O. R. S., 17 A. R. 378.

Creditor—Security—Prafits.]—Two deeds of the same date were excuted by D. B., one of the defendants, who lived chiefly at Montreal, and by W. B. and H. I., the last two being then in partnership at Hamilton, under the name of B. I. & Co. The first deed recired that the firm were indebted to D. B. for goods supubled and agency, in £1.454 4s. 1d., the time for payment of which had agreed to enlarge as therein set forti; and they thereby covenanted to furnish him with a yearly balance sheet to shew the state of their business, and that they would pay him the sum due with interest, as follows, namely, £6,000 by instalments specified, and after satisfying that sum that the profits of each year, after deducting exp-uses and a certain sum for each partner, should be applied towards payment of the balance due. It was provided that D. B. should, until his debt was paid, have free access to their books, and, although he should have power to enlarge the time for payment of any part of his claim beyond the days specified, yet that in case of default in payment according to the covenant, either of £6,000 or the balance, from the profits, as set forth, he should be entitled to enforce payment of the whole principal and interest then unpaid. The second deed recited the indebtedness of the firm to D. B., and the enlargement of the time for payment; and it was thereby agreed that until the final discharge thereof, or until an election by said D. B., of the alternative plans thereinafter proposed for the alternative plans thereinafter proposed for the settlement thereof, the said D. B. should act as agent of the firm in the purchase and shipment of goods, &c., and that in consideration thereof, instead of commission, they should pay him £500 a year. It was then provided that so soon as the capital stock of each of the partners should equal the sum then due to D. B., so that by transferring his claim to the firm he would have an equal third share, then he should be entitled to demand either to be admitted as a partner, or a bonus by way of compensation for such right, and on such demand being made and acceded to his annual salary should cease. No such election had been exercised, nor was it shewn that the circumstances of the firm had been such as to make it possible—Held, that D. B. did not become by either deed a partner in the lirt. Darting v. Bellhouse, 19 U. C. R. 208.

Held, upon the same facts as set out in the last case, that a person agreeing to give a firm who were indebted to him, live years for the payment of the debt, with the understanding that he was to be paid out of the profits, and with the right, when the debt due to him equalled the interest of the members of the firm, to become a co-partner therein, if he chose, or to receive a houns from the business, did not constitute him a member of the partnership or make him liable for its debts. Such an agreement does not constitute a participation in profits. Hill v. Bellhouse, burling v. Bellhouse, 10 C. P. 122.

essed a farm to B. upon the condition that B. was to deliver to him one-half of the wheat to be raised on the farm. B. was to harvest and thresh it, and deliver it in to the defendant's grannary:—Held, that under this agreement A. and B. were not partners in the wheat while it grew in the field, but stood to each other in the relation of landford and tenant; and that therefore no legal property in the wheat could vest in A. till B., the tenant, had threshed it and delivered to him his portion. Haydon v. Crawford, 3 O. S. 583.

Interest in Patent—Licensec.]—The holder of patents for improvements in certain agricultural implements agreed to assign to the defendant the exclusive right to sell these implements, but not to manufacture them: and in certain contingences he also make the patents were invalid for want of novelty, and the defendant, having reassigned any interest he had in the patents, claimed the right to manufacture the implements for his own benefit:—Held, that the effect of such agreement was not to constitute the defendant a partner, but to give him an interest in the patents; and that he was not a rere license of the patents; and that he was not a rere license of the patents.

 under seal, that R. should purchase in Canada, and ship to plaintiffs in Albany, such lumber as they should direct—in consideration whereof plaintiffs were to furnish B, with the necessary funds for purchasing, shipping, and other expenses connected therewith, and out of the profits when the lumber was sold, to allow and pay to B. a percentage for his services, and to apply the remainder of the said profits in payment of B.'s prior indebtedness to plaintiffs. The now defendant, as an execution creditor of B., seized the lumber purchased by him, and an interpleader issue was ordered to try the right of the now defendant to the goods as against the plaintiffs:—Hield, that there not being a community of profit and loss between the oblaintiffs and B, there could be no partnership. 2. That B, was not the owner of the lumber, but the mere agent and servant of the plaintiffs. Clark v. Mehchler, 12 C. P. 562.

Where the defendant P. entered into a written agreement, as "D. P. & Co.," with the other two defendants N. and J., as "H.J. N. & Co.," reciting that the parties had agreed to carry on certain lumber transactions on joint account, and providing for a joint capital. tal to carry on such joint transactions; that advances on the joint account should bear interest; that the returns from a certain coverage of the carry of the ca should be on the joint account, and the rental thereof paid out of the profits of the joint account: that any of the parties that might be agreed upon might contract for timber for their joint interest, and all expenses should be charged to the joint account; that the pro-fits or losses of the joint business should be divided in a certain way, and the commission, charge, and profits arising from the joint account shared equally, and in case of difference as to their joint transactions, arbitration should be resorted quently, P. entered should be resorted to; and where, subsequently, P. entered into separate written contracts with G. S. & M. to furnish D. P. & Co. a certain quantity of timber, there I. N. Co. a certain quantity of timber, there being no meution in such agreements of any joint stock, nor of any contribution by G. S. &M. for losses sustained, nor of any share proper of the profits to be enjoyed by them texcept as to a certain class of timber, the total profits of which they were to share equally with D. P. & Co.), but in return for their services they were to receive half the profits of the timber up to a certain price per foot, which it was stipulated should belong to D. P. & Co., and be delivered to them at a certain point in Lower Canada; that D. P. & Co. should make advances to aid in the manufacture and conveyance of the timber to is destination, and that the parties should pay them interest on such advances; and where the plaintiffs carried to T., over their railway, the timber forwarded by the parties in pursuance of their agreements, charging in pursuance of their agreements, charging the freight in their books to said parties, and not to P. D. & Co., but parting with the timber at the request of D. P. & Co., before payment of the freight, contrary to their previous course of dealing with G. & M.:—Held, that the firstly above re-8. & M.:—Held, that the firstly above referred to agreement, entered into by the defendants with one another, created a partnership between them, and that when P. contracted with G. S. & M., he did so as agent of the defendants, under the partnership name of "D. P. & Co." 2. That the agreement secondly above referred to, entered into between D. P. & Co. and G. S. & M., constituted a mere contract of hiring and service, and not a partnership, not even as to the timber. a partnership, not even as to the timber, in the total profits of which they were to share equally; for that there were none of the incidents of a partnership contained in the agreements, inasmuch as there was an absence of all community of interest in the general and final result of the adventure, no interest in or share of the capital, a mere contribution of personal service towards the enterprise, for which they were to be remunerated by a certain proportion of profits, and no liability for possible losses beyond a certain sum agreed to be paid them for their services. Aorthern R. W. Co., V. Patton, 15 C. P. 332.

By articles of agreement entered into by several persons, it was stipulated that one of them should furnish the premises in which to carry on the business at a stipulated rental, and capital for carrying on the business at a certain rate of interest, and that he should receive a stipulated sum annually for his time and expenses, and the others certain stipulated sums together with a certain proportion of the net profits:—Held, that this contract had the effect of creating a special agency, not a partnership, between the parties. Munson v. Hell, 10 Gr. 61.

— Profits — Ownership—Plant.]—The defendant, owner and publisher of a newspaper, entered into an arrangement with C., by which C. was to purchase half the interest in the paper and plant for $850, to receive $500 a year for his labour, out of the business, and half the remainder of the net profits. Afterwards one F. came into the concern, paying a certain sum, and he and C., being practical printers, were each to have $500 a year for their labour out of the business, after paying expenses, and to own each one-third of the plant; and the balance of the net profits, if any, was to be divided equally among the three. Nothing was said about losses in either case:—Held, that a partner-ship existed in each case. Pinkerton q. t, v. Ross, 33 U. C. R. 508.

Railways — Working — Profits.] — Semble, that a valid agreement in the terms of the resolution passed by plaintiffs, authorizing an arrangement by which they should work defendants' road for a certain period, and share the profits with defendants, would not have created a partner-ship between the partless. Great Western R. W. Co. v. Preston and Berlin R. W. Co., 17 U. C. R. 477.

The agreement between the two companies set out in 29 & 30 Vict. c. 95, was for the working of defendants' lines by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, from 1st July, 1894, for 21 years: the net receipts with certain deductions to be divided in certain proportions between the two companies; the control and working of the defendants' road from the time of its being handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to be placed in the hands of the latter, under a joint committee selected from the boards of each company, and the defendants' railway and appurtenances during said term to be kept in good repair, &c.:—Iteld, that, because the defendants were to receive a portion of the net profits to be divided in certain proportions between them and another railway company, they were not on that account to be considered partners and liable as such. McCollum v. Bufolio and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 19 C. P. 117.

Assignment for Creditors — Effect of Execution by.] — An assignment for the benefit of creditors gave the trustees power from time to time, as they should deem expedient, "to purchase stock for the purpose of enabling them to assort and sell off the present stock to the best advantage, for the benefit of the estate:"—Held, that creditors executing would not by this become partners in the business. Maulson v. Peck, 18 U. C. R. 113

A similar assignment, made before 22 Vict, c. 96, provided that the assignee might carry on the business for the benefit of the creditors executing, and employ the debtor to manage it, at such salary as might be agreed on, and supply goods to keep up the stock and for the more beneficial management of the business for the interest of the creditors, and pay for such goods out of the trust estate. Ouere, whether this would make the executing creditors partners in the business. Crapper v. Paterson, 19 U. C. R. 100.

Go-operative Association — Abortice Organization — Monbers, 1—The defendants (other than C.) and others signed a certificate of their intention to become incorporated as a co-operative association under R. S. O. 1877 c. 158. They failed, however, to fulfil the requirements of the Act, and never actually became a corporation under it. In the meanishile the plaintiff simplied the defendants and other intended members of the association with certain goods, and now sued the former for the balance due in respect thereof:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendants as partners; but as to C., who came into the arrangement at a later date than the others, only as to poods supplied after such later date. Seiffert v. Irring, 15 O. R. 173.

Purchase of Land—Ownership per Indivisi,—W, and D, entered into a joint specularity. In the purchase of real estate; and he perations of real estate; and he perations resulting from this co-partnership; no power of attorney or authority was given to enable one to act for the other, and they did not consider that any such authority existed by virtue of the relations between them; all conveyances required to carry out sales were executed by each for his undivided interest. Upon the death of W, and D, the business was continued by their representatives of W, subsequently sold their interest to T. W., who purchased on behalf of, and to protect, some of the legatees of W,, without any change being made in the manner of conducting the business. A book-keeper was employed to keep the books required for the various interests, with instructions to pay the moneys received at the office of the co-proprietors into a bank, whence they were drawn upon cheques bearing the joint signatures of the parties interested, and the profits were divided equally between the representatives of the parties interested, some in cash, but generally be cheques drawn in a similar ness of the representatives of S. page light and the profits were divided equally between the representatives of the parties interested, some in cash, but generally be cheques drawn in a similar ness of the representatives of S. page light and the profits of the conduction of the interest confided to him, and received their share of such profits, but J. C. B., who acted in the W. interest, so negligently looked after the business as to enable the book-keeper to embezale moneys which represented part of the share of the profits coming to the representatives of W. to make the representatives of D. bear a share of such losses:—Held, that the facts did not establish a partnership between the parties, but a mere ownership par indivis, and that the representatives of D. were not liable to make good any part of the loss, having by proper vigilance and prudence obtained only the share which belonged to them. Even if the partnership existed, there would be none in the moneys paid over to the parties after a division made. Archbald v. DeLisle, 25 S. C. R. 1.

Ship — Ownership — Earnings.] — Part owners of a ship are tenants in common of the ship, and partners in the earnings only. Baker v. Casey, 19 Gr. 537.

See Mair v. Bacon, 5 Gr. 338; Merchants Bank v. Thompson, Mallon v. Craig, 3 O. R. 541; Crossman v. Shears, 3 A. R. 583.

II. ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS BY AND AGAINST PARTNERS.

Appearance—Subsequent Proceedings.]—In an action against two partners sued as a firm in the firm name, though after dissolution, one of the partners appeared in his individual name, and afterwards delivered a statement of defence and counterchiim, also in his individual name. The other partner did not appear. By rule 288, "Where partners are sued in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names; but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm.'?—Held, that the words "subsequent proceedings should be confined to proceedings by the plaintiff; and a motion to set aside the pleading was dismissed. Langman v. Hudson, 14 P. R. 215.

Want of Authority—Judgment—Execution—Creditors' Relief Act—Sheriff.]—After service of the writ of summons upon out the partners in an action against a next property of the partners in an action against a context of the partners in an action against a matter ship in the firm name, an appearance was entered by a solicitor in the names of both partners individually, but upon the instructions of one partner only and without the authority of the other. Upon motion by the latter to set aside the appearance and subsequent proceedings:—Held, that the appearance and the plaintiffs' judgment founded thereon were irregular. After the judgment had been set aside, several creditors of the defendants obtained judgments against them and placed writs of fi, fa. in the sheriff's hands, under which he sold the defendants' goods. Upon a motion by the plaintiffs, made in their own action and also in the several actions in which judgments had been obtained, for an order directing the sheriff to pay the proceeds of the sale into court, instead of making the usual entries under the Creditors' Relief Act, in order to preserve the priority of the plaintiffs' judgment, in case it should be restored upon appeal:—Held, that there was no power, upon the plaintiffs' application, to interfere with the sheriff's proceedings upon writs of fi, fa. regularly in his hands. Mason v. Cooper, 15 P. R. 418.

Arbitration — Agreement—Execution by one Partner.]—In an action on an agreement under seal to abide by an award, the declaration alleged that defendant agreed with the plaintiffs to refer:—Held, not supported by proof of an agreement made and executed by one plaintiff only on behalf of himself and the others, being his partners. French v. Weir, 17 U. C. R. 245.

Discovery — Examination of One Partacc. |—The statement of one partner on his examination in a suit against the firm as to transactions which occurred during the partner-hip, binds all the partners, unless they seek, by an examination of some of themselves, to contradict or qualify the statements of the partner whose evidence they object to. Taylor v, Cook, 11 P. R. 69.

V. Isbister, 14 P. R. 112.

Examination as Judgment Debtor— Actual Partner—Division Courts Act. R. S. O. 1887 c. 51, s. 108, s. ss. 4, 5, 6.1—See Re Young v. Parker & Co., 12 P. R. 646.

Judgment — Bar to Proceeding against Other Partners.] — See Dueber Watch Case M/g. Co. v. Taggart, 26 A. R. 295, 30 S. C. R. 373.

- Execution.]—Where an application is made under rule 876 for leave to issue execution, upon a judgment against a firm, against an alleged member of the firm, who has not admitted that he was and has not seven adjudged to be a partner, and who was not served as a partner with the writ of summons, and who disputes his liability, there is no power in a court or a Judge, under rule 756 or otherwise, to summarily determine the question of his liability; but an issue must be directed. Tennant v. Manhard, 12 P. R. 619, overruled, Standard Bank of Canada v. Frind & Co., 14 P. R. 355.

- Execution-Issue-Amendment.] -The latter part of rule 876, providing for an application for leave to issue, upon a judgment against a firm, execution against some person as a member of the firm other than those mentioned in s.-ss (b) and (c) of the rule, applies only where there is in truth a partnership which is bound by the judgment partnership when is bound by the Judgment obtained against the firm in consequence of the service of the writ of summons upon one of its members or its manager. Where there is in fact no partnership, no one can be bound by a judgment against an abstraction called "a firm," except the person who has been "a firm," except the person who has been served under the provisions of rule 266, and who has appeared or pleaded in the action. And where the wife of the manager of the business of a so-called firm, who was shewn by the subsequent proceedings to have been merely a trustee for him of the profits, was personally served as a defendant with process in an action against the firm upon a bill of exchange, and defended:—Held, that, as there was in fact no partnership, an issue directed to determine whether the husband was liable to have execution issued against him as a member of the firm, upon a judgment recovered in the action against the firm, must be found in favour of the husband; and no amendment could be made which would enable the court to determine otherwise. Standard Bank of Canada v. Frind, 15 P. R. 438.

- Execution—Judgment Summons— Division Court.]—A member of a partnership, against which a judgment has been recovered in a division court in the firm name, who has not been personally served with the summons, and has not admitted himself to be or been adjudged a partner, cannot be proceeded against by an order for committal for non-attendance on a judgment summons. Decision in 25 O. R. 573 reversed. In re Reid v. Graham Brothers, 26 O. R. 126.

Laches — Accounting for—Arbitration— Correspondence. — Delay in filing a bill to enforce a disputed agreement for a partnership, was considered sufficiently accounted for by evidence of an unanswered proposal for an arbitration and of correspondence between the plaintiff and his solicitors before suit. Haggart y, Allan, 4 Gr. 36.

Nominal Corporation — Status of Corporators — Partics — Application to Add Copartners. —In the case of a nominal corporation which has no legal status as such, the ostensible corporators are partners; and their liability as partners on the contracts of the company is a joint, and not a joint and several, liability. Where some but not all of the co-contractors are sued in an action, they are entitled of right to have all the others within the jurisdiction added as defendants; and, the plea of abatement having been abolished, the method of exception is by prompt application to the court under rule 324. As to the representatives of deceased or insolvent partners, there is a discretion to add or not. Gildersfeere v. Ballour, 15 P. R. 293.

Parties — Dormant Partner.]—In an action for goods sold and delivered the nonjoinder of a dormant partner is not fatal. Briggs v. Bower, 5 O. S. 672.

Penalty — Non-registration—Jurisdiction.]—In an action by several plaintiffs qui tam against two defendants for penalties for not registering their partnership under R. S. O. 18-77 c. 123, of which s. I gives the right of action to "any person" who may sue:—Held, that under the above section and the Interpretation Act, any objection to the action being brought in the name of more than one person, could not prevail; (2) that the circumstance that the plaintiffs resided out of the jurisdiction could not defeat their action; (3) that the joinder of two defendants for several penalties was not a ground of demurrer. Chaput v. Robert, 14 A. R. 354.

Settlement — Lease—Improvements alone orally leased certain premises for a place of business, for five years, at a given rent. A. and B. went into possession. A memorandum for a lease was prepared by A., but never signed by the lessor. It was orally agreed between the lessor and A. that A. should erect a granary, &c., on the premises, the lessor to furnish the lumber and pay for the improvements at the end of the term. The lumber was furnished and the buildings erected with partnership funds. In the meantime the lessor ran an account at the store for goods. A. and B. afterwards dissolved, and B. released and assigned to A. all his right to debts, &c. A. then took C. into partnership, with whom the lessor settled the account for the goods by allowing an alleged set-off. A afterwards sued his lessor for the goods sold and the value of the granury.—Held, (1) that B, sliould have joined in such action; (2) that the settlement with C, was not bonâ fide as against A.; (3) that no lease having been excented, upon the facts, A, was a tenant at will, and that it might be orally agreed that he should make the improvements and be paid for them, and that the plaintiff might sue for them in his own name, though they were made with partnership funds. Brougham v. Balloar, 3 C, P, 72.

Partnership Name — Action by One Plaintiff—Amendment. [— A person carrying on business alone, in a name denoting a partnership, cannot bring an action in that name. Where, however, such name consisted of his surmane, prefaced by the initials of his Christian names, and followed by the words "and Co.;"—Held, that these words in the style of cause in an action were mere surplusage, or, if not, they should be struck out; and, as the mistake was trifling, and no one was misled or affected by it, an amendment at the trial should have been granted as of course. Mason v. Mogridge, S Times L. R. 805, distinguished. Lang v. Thompson, 10 P. R. 516.

— Dissolution.] — The cause of action arose before, and the writ of summons was issued after, the dissolution of defendants firm:—Held, that the defendants were properly sued in their firm's name. Wilson v. Roger, McLay, & Co., 10 P. R. 355.

Pleading—Sufficiency of Traverse.]—See Mylius v. Jackson, 23 S. C. R. 485.

Service of Writ of Summons.]—
Blakeslee, Brown, & O. carried on business in partnership, under the name of Blakeslee & Co. Blakeslee absconded, and the business continued. O. assigned his interest to Brown, and after such assignment, but before it had been made public, the plaintiff served his writ of summons against the firm on O.:—Held, that the service was good. Bank of Hamilton v. Blakeslee, 9 P. R. 130.

Set-off.)—Evidence of a debt due by one of a firm (plaintiffs) in his individual capacity, will not support a plea of set-off to an action by the firm for a partnership claim. Pegg v. Plank, 3 C. P. 398.

In a partnership suit, the partnership was found indebted to the defendant; and, on the other hand, the defendant was liable to certain costs. The defendant having become insolvent, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled, notwithstanding the insolvency, to set off the costs against the debt. Brigham v. Smith, 17 Gr. 512.

Slander of Firm — Right of Action.]— See Bricker v. Campbell, 21 O. R. 204.

 Contracts of Partnership — Construction, Effect, and Terms of.

Debt by Firm to Partner—Purchase of Plant—Valuation.]—The respondents, having on hand large contracts to fulfil, entered into partnership with the appellant, under the style of J. W. & Co. The respondent A. P. M. subsequently filed a bill against W., the appellant, and his two sons, co-partners, asking for a decree declaring him and his two s entitled to receive credit to the amount of $40,000, the estimated value of certain plant, &c., used in the construction of the works done by the partnership. Under an article (set out in the report) in the deed of partnership executed before a notary public in the Province of Quebec, the respondent claimed to be entitled to a credit of $40,000. There was evidence that the plant had cost originally $57,000, and that it was valued in the inventory at $40,000 at the request of the appellant; it was also shewn and admitted that the profits of the business were sufficient to reimburse the appellant the sum of $24,000 and other moneys advanced, and that there was still a large balance to the credit of the partnership:—Held, varying the judgment in 7 A. R. 531, that the plant, &c., furnished by the respondents having been inventoried and valued in the articles of partnership at $40,000, the respondents had thereby become crediuse, the respondents had thereby become credi-tors of the partnership for the said sum of $40,000, but, as it appeared by the articles of partnership that the plant was subject at the time to a lien of $24,000, and that the lien had been paid off with the partnership moneys, the respondents were only entitled to be condited as creditors of the partnership moneys, the respondents were only entitled to be credited, as creditors of the partnership, with the sum of $16,000, being the difference between the sum paid by the partnership to redeem the plant and the value at which it had been estimated by both parties in the articles of partnership. Worthington v. Macdonald, 9 S. C. R. 327.

Execution of Contract-Non-completion -Co-partnership of Separate Firms-Sharing Profits-Giving Credit to One. |-Held, upon the facts set out in the report, (1) that the refusal of two of the members of sign a certain agreement rendered it inoperative not only as to those refusing to sign it but also as to those who had signed it, and that until all had signed it was not a completed agreement; (2) that those who actually signed the agreement could not thereby bind their co-partners who did not sign it; (3) that, even if the agreement had been completed, did not constitute a partnership between the two firms, so as to enable one firm to pledge the other firm's credit, for advances in carrying on the trade: (4) that the provision for sharing profits and losses, which in an ordinary trading association, where there is a com-munity of capital and stock-in-trade, and a common undertaking, is conclusive evidence of a partnership, is nevertheless not a conclusive test of partnership where there is an extraordinary adventure between two partnerships presenting a well defined and well known separation of interests and ownerships; (5) that the way in which the profits are to be participated in is the essence of the matter, and that when the right to call for a proportion of the profits arises by virtue of an express contract to that effect, which would not otherwise flow from the relations of the parties, the right exists, qua debt, and not by virtue of partnership; (6) that, even assuming that the agreement constituted a partnership between the two firms, yet the plain-tiffs with knowledge of all the facts, by electing to give credit to one firm alone, were pre-cluded from thereafter resorting to the other. Mcrchants Bank v. Thompson, Mallon v. Craig. 3 O. R. 541. Interest — Capital—Proceeds of Bills— Carrone, —Parties about to enter into partinorship. in Canada, agreed each to pay in Scott capital, and one of them omitted to pay in any perform thereof; — Held, that such omission production of the continuous and party with interest on his share of the propose of the transparent of the party with interest on his share of the propose of the transparent of the propose of the transparent of the propose of the transparent of the protinuous of the partnership, drew bills in the most of the transparent of the transparent in the product of the transparent of the transparent in the product of the transparent of the partnership, interest is never charged against one partner in favour of aneter. Wilson v, McCarthu, 25 Gr., 151.

solution of partnership, interest is never charged against one partner in favour of another. Wilson v, McCorthy, 25 Gr. 151.
Certain of the parties paid in the amount of their proposed capital in United States securities, mortgages, and notes, in respect of which the master credited them with their value in Canadian currency ($7,200):—Held, on appeal, that the agreement must be taken to have meant that the amount each agreed to pay in was that sum in Canadian currency, or its full equivalent in United States currency. Ib.

Loss—Speculation—Apportionment.]— A parmership was formed between two civil engineers and architects, the profits of which were to be divided in shares of three-fifths and two-fifths. During the partnership in the purchase of real estate, which resulted in a loss:—Held, that the loss was to be borne by the parmers in the same proportion as they were to share the profits and loss of their other business. Storm v. Cumberland, 18 Gr. 245.

Misrepresentations — Relief from Contract.]—A person was induced to become a member of a firm, on the faith of representations made to him that the previous losses of the firm only amounted to $18,000, but it subsequently turned out that such losses amounted to about $22,000 or $21,000 — Held, that by reason of such misrepresentation he was satitled to be relieved from such agreement, and to be indemnified by the other members of the firm against all liabilities incurred by him as such partner prior to the discovery of the unitrath of the representation made as to the losses of the firm. Held, also, that having become a partner also on the fairth that the firm in question intended to form a syndicate arrangement with another firm, which arrangement failed to be carried out for want of the concurrence of some of the members of such other firm, he was on that account also entitled to be relieved from his agreement to become a partner. Mallon v. Craig, 3 O. R. 541.

Profits — Construction of Contract.] — Where by articles of partnership between M. and L. it was recited, in substance, that they had for some years been equally interested as partners in trade, and that all their then or after acquired property and all profits should be divided equally, and that at the settlement or dissolution of the partnership M. should have £150 over and above one-half of all which they might then possess: and it was then provided, inter alia, that all profits and leaves should be borne equally. *except, as has already been done, that M. should receive should be deducted from the gross amount of money, and not from L. S share merely. O'Lone, v. O'Lone, 2 Gr. 125.

An agreement was entered into for a joint speculation in lands; A. to find the enpital, and B. to select the lands and make purchases; A. to be allowed in the first place to retain out of each sale of any of the lands, as made, his money expended upon the same, and the remainder, the profits, to be equally divided between them; B.'s trouble, experience, and time, being considered equal to A.'s capital:—Held, that the profits divisible between the parties was the value, whether ascertained upon re-sale or by valuation, after deducting the cost and incidental expenses. Proudfoot v. Bush, 7 Gr. 518.

Trust—Statute of Frauda.]—A partnership was formed between three persons, A., B., and C., to dig for gold on the property of one Allan. A and B, were to do the work, and G. to pay the expenses; all three to share in the profits. The place so named was afterwards abandoned by mutual consent, and A alot in another township, Elsevir, where they resumed work, C. paying expenses as before:
—Held, that, in the absence of any express agreement, it was to be presumed they were working on the same terms as at the place originally named. The plaintiff had occasion to leave the work on the 2nd March, and did not return. He filled a bill to enforce his partnership rights on the 30th July:—Held, that, as there was no stipulation respecting the time he was to work, and he was not requested to resume work, and no notice was given him of any complaint or intention to exclude him from the profits of the adventure, the delay did not bar the suit. C., in his own name, bought the privilege of dieging for gold on the Elzevir lot, and subsequently formed a company by whom that lot was purchased:—Held, that the plaintiff, one of the working partners, was entitled to a share of all the profits and advantages made by C. in this transaction. There was no writing signed by C. acknowledging the agency and trust:—Held, that A, and B. having entered and worked on the lot, the Statute of Frauds did not apply. Burn v. Strong, 14 Gr. 651.

IV. DEATH OF PARTNER,

Contract with Apprentice—Liability of Survivor.]—A surviving partner is bound by the covenant of himself and his deceased partner to teach an apprentice until the end of the term for which he was apprenticed. Connell v. Owen, 4 C. P. 113.

Contract with Servant—Termination by Death.]—A contract of hiring entered into with a firm by a commercial traveller is put an end to by the death of one of the partners. Burnet v. Hope, 9 O. R. 10.

Executor—Carryinj on Business—Capital.]—A testator's directions to his executors to continue to carry on business with his surviving partners, does not authorize the executors to embark any new capital in the business. Smith v. Smith, 13 Gr. 81. Carrying on Business—Debts— Liability of Estate.]—The assets of a deceased person are not liable for debts incurred by an executor or administrator in continuing the trade or business of the deceased. Lovell v. Gibson, 19 Gr. 280.

Heirs, being also next of kin, who had been parties to the continuing of the business of the deceased with his assets and those of his partner, were held precluded from objecting to payment by the estate of the losses incurred in continuing the business. Ib.

Farm Stock of Partnership—Jus Accrescendi.]—A., of whom plaintiff was administratrix, and defendant having worked and stocked a farm in partnership:—Held, that on the death of one, the survivor did not take the whole of the chattlels, but that the maxim "Jus accrescend inter mercatores locum non habet," applied. Rathiectl v. Rathwell, 26 U. C. R. 179.

Insolvency after Death—Estate—Assignee.]—Upon the death of one member of the firm and the subsequent insolvency of the surviving partners, the joint estate passes to their assignee in insolvency. Bacidson v. Papps, 28 Gr. 91.

Lands of Partnership—Executor—Tenant in Common.]—The executor of a deceased partner in trade is tenant in common with the surviving partners, and the surviving partners cannot sue him in trespass for a wrongful sale and conversion of the whole of the partnership property against their will. Strathy v. Crooks, 2 U. C. R. 51.

mand.]— Legal Estate in One—Heir—Demand.]—Though a surviving partner may have an equitable title in lands, yet this doce not make a demand of possession necessary on the part of the heir of the deceased partner suing in ejectment upon his ancestor's legal title. Doc d. Atkinson v. McLeod, 8 U. C. R. 344.

Personal Representative — Sheriff's Sole—Judgment — Execution — Revivor.]—Three partners having taken a conveyance of real estate, "as and for partnership," and one of the purposes of the partnership," and one of the partners having left the Province and another died, a mortangee of the property filed a bill for the foreclosure of his mortgage:— Held, that the personal representative of the deceased partner was a necessary party, and that the plaintiff must prove the absence from the jurisdiction of the non-resident partner, and perhaps the plaintiff's inability to serve him with process. Baster v. Turnbull, 2 Gr.

Quere, the effect of a sheriff's sale to a subsequent incumbrance of an equity of redemption in real estate of a partnership, where the execution was issued against all the partners, but one of the defendants had died after judgment and before execution, the judgment not having been revived, and such sale having taken place pending a suit by the first are. 1b.

Personalty.)—Two merchants entered into partnership, inter alia, in the buying and selling of lands; and accordingly beight lands with partnership moneys, some of which were conveyed to each partner, and some to both jointly:—Held, that, as between the real and personal representative of one partner who died, the lands so bought were personal estate. Wylie v. Wylie, 4 Gr. 278.

Persons engaged in the "oil business" purchased land, on parts of which they sank wells, and leased or sold other portions thereof to various persons desirous of extracting oil from them:—Held, that such lands were part of the partnership assets and to be treated as personal property. Sanborn v. Kanborn, 11 Gr., 359.

Purchase of Share-Discount-Goodwill -Continuance of Partnership after Expiry of Term. |-A deed providing for a partnership during seven years from its date provided for purchase by the survivors of the share of a deceased partner, with a special provision that if one partner should die the value of his share should be subject to a discount of 20 per cent. After the seven years had expired, the partners continued the business by oral agreement for an indefinite period, and while it so continued K. died:—Held, that, even if the parties had not admitted that the business was continued under the terms of the partnership deed, such terms would still govern, as there was nothing in the deed repugnant to a partnership at will; that the pugmant to a partnersup at will; that the surviving partners had, therefore, a right to purchase the share of K. and to be allowed the deduction of 20 per cent, therefrom as the deed provided; and that, in the absence of any stipulation in the deed to the contrary, the goodwill of the business and K.'s interest therein should be taken into account in the valuation to be made for such purpose. Hib-ben v. Collister, 30 S. C. R. 459.

Railway Stock and Bonds—Sale—Purchase Moncy—Surviving Partner—Action by —Representative of Deceased Partner—Pleading—"Firm."]—Where a sale of railway stock and bonds was effected by a partnership, a mortgage being taken back to secure part of the purchase money, and one of the partners subsequently died:—Held, that the right to enforce payment of the unpaid purchase money remained in the surviving partner, whether the subject of sale was to be treated as realty or goods and chattels. Bolckow v. Foster, 24 Gr. 333.

In such a case the plaintiff in his bill set forth that he, as well on his own behalf as that of the firm, sold to the purchaser and the purchaser bought from the plaintiff and the firm; and then alleged the death of his partner, "leaving the plaintiff sole surviving partner of the said firm; and the plaintiff so sole surviving arter of the said firm and the plaintiff is now solely entitled to all the interest of the said firm under the said agreement with the defendant," the purchaser:—Held, that this sufficiently stated the title of the plaintiff as the surviving partner of the firm. Ib.

Held, on rehearing, affirming the decision in 26 ft. 333, that the right to enforce payment of the unpaid purchase money remained in the surviving partner, and that the representative of the deceased partner was an unnecessary party to the bill. Held, also, that the word 'firm' meant a partnership; and that property alleged to belong to a firm must be taken as belonging to its members as partners, and not as tenants in common. Bole-kow v. Foster, 25 Gr. 476.

Survivor—Rights of—Representatives of Deceased Partner—Rights of—Receiver—Sade. —A surviving partner, by reason of his liability to pay the debts due by the partnership, is entitled to receive all moneys and collect all debts due to, and dispose of all the effects of the firm for that purpose. The representatives of the deceased partner have a right to inspect the books of the partnership, and to be informed of the proceedings of the survivor; and any exclusion of them in these respects will entitle them to an injunction and receiver. Bullon v. Blakely, 6 Gr. 575.

Although a surviving partner may not be chargeable with any fraud or misconduct, still when there is a difference of opinion between him and the representatives of his deceased partner as to the mode of winding up the estate, they are entitled to the assistance of this court for that purpose, through the medium of a receiver and sale. S. C., 7 Gr. 214.

Valuing Share of Deceased Partner—Bebts of Firm—Probate Fees, — For the purpose of taking out probate and paying the fees thereon, the representative of a deceased partner in a mercantile firm must be taken to be interested in the corpus of the partnership effects to the extent of the share of the deceased, undiminished by the debts and liabilities of the firm. In re Surrogate Court of Wentworth and Kerr, 44 U. C. R. 207.

V. DISSOLUTION.

1. Agreements as to Payment of Debts.

Continuing Liability of Retiring Partners — Co-surcties — Equality as to Amount.] — A. and B., a trading partnership, entered into a joint speculation with C. and D. for the purchase and sale of lands. Afterwards E. was admitted into the concern; each to be entitled to one-fourth of the profits, and liable in the same proportion to any losses incurred. For the purposes of the co-partnership the parties were in the habit of discounting notes, which was the purpose of the co-partnership the parties were in the habit of discounting notes, which and the partnership of the purpose of the co-partnership the parties were in the habit of discounting notes, which and the purpose of the co-partnership the partnership the partnership of the purpose of the continuation of the partnership of th this note an action was subsequently brought against all the parties thereto, and a sale of 1s' lands was effected under the execution in that action, which realized only a portion of the amount. Thereupon D. filed a bill against C., seeking to make him, as prior indorser, pay the amount still remaining due in respect of the judgment, to reimburse D. what his lands had sold for, and also to make up the loss sustained by him in consequence of the sale of his lands at, as was alleged, a great undervalue. Under the circumstances of the case, the court below treated C. and D. as co-sureties for the continuing partners, and as such liable only to make up the amount of the claim in equal proportions; and, it appearing that C. had already paid more than his moiety of the demand, ordered D. to repay the excess to him, together with the costs of the suit. An appeal was dismissed with costs. Harper v. Knowledon, 2 E. & A. 253.

Covenant against Receipt of Debts.]—Defendant, on retiring from partmership with the plaintiff, covenanted not to receive any debts due to the firm; and to an action on this covenant pleaded that he had received only $10, which he retained as the consideration for his executing to the plaintiff at his request a lease of certain land; on which the plaintiff took issue. On a reference to find the facts, with power to the court to give such judgment thereon as might appear just, the arbitrator reported that after the defendant had received the $10 the plaintiff, by letter, offered him $10 if he would execute the lease, which defendant did accordingly; and that the plaintiff had not paid defendant. Tecr v. Smith, 21 U. C. R. 417.

Indemnity — Recovery of Judgments— Non-payment, —Upon a bond given by a retiring partner on a dissolution conditioned to protect, save harmless, and keep indemnified the continuing member against all actions, charges, damages, &c., which might be commenced against him, or which he might have to pay or become subject or liable to, by reason of the debts of the late firm:—Held, that the obligee was entitled to recover the full amount of judgments obtained against him afterwards for partnership debts, though he had paid nothing upon them. Held, also, that the facts with regard to one of the judgments formed no ground for diminishing the amount to be recovered against defendants on account of it. Smith v. Teer, 21 U. C. R. 412.

The plaintiff and M. having been in partner-ship, on their dissolution M., with the two other defendants, agreed to pay the debts of the firm, and to relieve the plaintiff therefrom, in consideration of which the plaintiff therefrom, in an action against defendants for certain debts due by the firm, which the plaintiff alleged defendants had not paid, and for some of which the plaintiff had been sued, and judgment recovered:—Held, that the plaintiff had no right of action, unless he had himself paid such debts. Gray v. McMillan, 22 U. C. R. 456.

New Firm—Agreement to Pay Debts of Old—Creditors' Rights—Trust—Novation.]—A firm composed of two members dissolved partnership. One of the partners continued the business, giving to the retiring partner a number of notes in payment of his share in the business. The continuing partner afterwards formed a partnership with another person, and, by the articles thereof, transferred the new firm, as his contribution to the capital, all the assets of his business, subject to the deduction therefrom of his liabilities, which they were sufficient to pay in full, and which were to be assumed by the co-partnership and charged against him. Among these liabilities, known to the new partner, was a number of the notes which the retiring partner had indorsed to the plaintiff before maturity. new firm paid two of these notes and interest on another, and had some negotiations with plaintiff for an extension of time for payment of the unpaid notes :- Held, by a majority of the court, disagreeing with the judgment in 14 O. R. 137, that no trust was established in favour of the retiring partner by the articles of partnership of the new firm, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce against the new firm the performance of the stipulation in the articles for payment of the stipulation in the articles for payment of the notes held by her. Held, also, by a majority of the court, that an independent agreement by the new firm with the plaintiff to pay the notes was not proved. Gregory v. Williams, 3 Mer. 582, and In re Empress Engineering Co., 16 Ch. D. 125, specially considered. The court heing evenly divided as to the result, the appeal was dismissed with costs. His decreacourt being evenly divided as to the result, the appeal was dismissed with costs. Henderson v. Killey, 17 A. R. 456, Reversed in Osborne v. Henderson, 18 S. C. R. 698. (The judgment of the supreme court of Canada is nowhere reported in full, but the judgment of Patterson, J., in that court, is printed in 11 C. L. T. Occ. N. 88.)

Agreement to Pay Debts of Former Firm—Damages—Novation.] — A firm which had contracted with respondents to supply them with a number of bicycles, was subsequently dissolved, one partner retiring, and a new partner taking his place. The notice of dis-solution stated that the business would be carried on by the new firm, who would pay the indebtedness of the old, and who were alone authorized to collect his debts, and, by the agreement for dissolution, the partners re-leased each other from all liability, and it was agreed that all the claims of the old firm belonged to and would be collected by the new, The respondents had a large claim for damages against the old firm for non-fulfilment of contract, and upon learning from appellants the facts as to the dissolution, made claim against the new firm :-Held, upon the corre spondence, that novation had taken place, and that the respondents were entitled to claim against the appellants the damages which the former had sustained through breach of the contracts, but that such damages must be limited to those arising from breaches occurring prior to the dissolution. Judgment in 27 O. R. 631 varied. Scyfang v. Mann, 25 A. R. 179

Promissory Note—Part Failure of Consideration—Tender,1—To an action on a promissory note for $498, made by the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded, on equitable grounds, that, by an agreement between the parties, a partnership which had existed between them was dissolved, and the defendant was to give the plaintiff the promissory note in question, and to pay certain debts and liabilities of the firm, and in consideration thereof to become the sole owner of certain property of the firm, and to have assigned to him by the plaintiff all the plaintiff's interest in certain debts and accounts due to the firm, as well as certain debts and accounts due to the plaintiff personally; that the defendant had performed his part of the agreement by giving the note and paying such debts and liabilities, but that the plaintiff, although requested so to do, had neglected to perform his part by giving the defendant such a power of attorney or assignment as would enable him to sue for the said debts and accounts, whereby he was prevented from obtaining payment of the same; that, except as taining payment of the same; that, except as aforesaid, there was no consideration for the making of the said note; and that such debts and accounts were equal to the plaintiff's claim on the said note;—Held, plea had, as shewing only a part failure of consideration; and that defendant's remedy was by tion; and that detendant's remedy was by cross-action. Semble, that the plea was also bad, for not averring a tender to the plaintiff for execution of the power of attorney and assignment required. Kilroy v. Simkins, 26

Retaining Title on Retirement-Nature of Title—Security for Payment of Debts.]—Where a partner, desiring to retire from the business, agrees to sell out his in-terest in the joint property subject to the payment of all claims against the partnership; and a sale is effected by the remaining partner to a third party subject to such payment; the title which remains in the retiring partner until the payment of the debts of the firm is a legal, not a merely equitable right, and such as an execution against the remaining part per, for a private debt, will not affect. S, and were in partnership as dealers in lumber. and had become involved to some extent, in consequence of which it was agreed that should sell out his interest to S., and retire from the business, leaving S. sole owner, who thereupon, and without anything having been paid to A., entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for carrying on the same business as partner: the plaintiff agreeing that the first proceeds of the partnership sales should be employed in discharge of the claims against the firm of S. & A., which the plaintiff al-leged he thought were composed of $17,000 due to the banks. In reality a claim of about $8,000 was held by the brother of S., who sued for and recovered judgment and execution under which the sheriff seized and advertised the timber of the partnership for sale, where upon the plaintiff filed a bill impeaching the bona fides of the judgment and seeking to restrain the sale, on the ground, amongst others, of the peculiar value of the timber. The court, however, being of opinion that the debt re-covered was not fictitious, refused to interfere with the sale, but offered the plaintiff a reference to the master for the purpose of procuring the production of certain papers-not produced at the hearing-to impeach the bona fides of the debt; the master's report to be procured within fifteen days after their production; if the reference not taken, or if the master's report were in favour of the bona fides of the claim, the bill to be dismissed with costs; but, if the master reported against the bona fides of the debt, further directions and costs were reserved, and the amount of the judgment with interest and costs was directed to be paid into court—otherwise the execution

2 Cause for Dissolution.

Misconduct.]-Articles of co-partnership provided that a manager of the business should be appointed by a majority of the co-partners be appointed by a majority of the co-partners and subject to their control; and a manager was accordingly appointed, who was subse-quently dismissed by a majority, but remained, nevertheless, in the management, at the re-quest of another partner:—Held, that this glest of another parties was such misconduct in such partner as en-titled the others to a dissolution. Newton v. Doran, 1 Gr. 590.

Subsequent Consent-Forfeiture of Goodwill. |- Partnership articles for a firm of three persons provided that if any partner should violate certain conditions of the terms of partnership the others could compel him to retire by giving three months' notice of their intention so to do, and a partner so retiring should forfeit his claim to a share of the good will of the business. One of the partners having broken such conditions of the partnership, the others orally notified him that he must leave the firm, and to avoid publicity he must leave the mm, and to avoid publicity accounted to an immediate dissolution, which was advertised as "a dissolution by mutual consent." After the dissolution the retiring partner made an assignment of his goodwill and interest in the business, and the assignee brought an action against the remaining partners for the value of the same:—Held, reversing the judgments in Mead v. O'Keefe, 15 O. R. 84, 15 A. R. 163, that the action of the defendants in advertising that the dissolution was "by mutual consent" did not preclude them from shewing that it took place in ensequence of the misconduct of the retiring partner; that the forfeiture of the goodwill was caused by the improper conduct which led to the expulsion of the partner in fault and not by the mode in which such expulsion was effected; and, therefore, the want of notice of intention to expel required by the articles could not be relied on as taking the retirement out of that provision of the articles by which the goodwill was forfeited :-Held, also, that if it was a dissolution by one partner voluntarily retiring no claim could be made by the retiring partner in respect to good-will, as the account to be taken under the partnership articles in such cases does not provide therefor. Semble, that the goodwill consisted wholly of the trade name of the firm. O'Keefe v. Curran, 17 S. C. R. 596.

3. Notice of Dissolution.

The plaintiff sued M. and B. upon a promissory note signed M. and Co., made by M., dat-el 10th October, 1853, For the defence, a deed of dissolution of partnership between M. and B. was proved, dated 25th May, 1853, and three Cauada Gazettes giving notice of such dissolution, the first dated 25th June, 1853. It was not shewn that the plaintiff ever knew of B. being a partner, and the note was made of B. being a partner, and the note was made at Port Hope, where M. and B. had carried on business, but B. lived in Montreal:—Held, of the process not to be interfered with. Steronton v. Sexsmith. 21 Gr. 355. that a verdict should have been found for defendant B. Darling v. Magnan, 12 U. C. R.

See Seyfang v. Mann, 25 A. R. 179, ante 1; Bryce v. Davidson, 25 U. C. R. 371, post 4; Caldwell v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America, 24 S. C. R. 263.

4. Rights and Obligations of Partners after Dissolution.

Brokers-Discount of Promissory Note-Misappropriation of Proceeds.] — Defendants H. and G., who had been in partnership as brokers, were sued for money had and re-ceived, the cause of action being for the proceived, the cause of action being for the pro-ceeds of two notes made by the plaintift, payable to them, to be discounted, which it was alleged they had received and not paid over. G. allowed judgment to go by default. It appeared that the plaintiff had handed the notes to G., acting for the firm, to get them discounted for him; that they were indorsed in the name of the firm while it continued; and that after the partnership had been duly and that after the partnership had been duly dissolved G. sold them, and received the pro-ceeds, which he applied to pay a debt of his own, contracted by him in the name of the firm, H. not being aware of the sale. It was objected that the plaintiff could not recover against both defendants on this evidence, and the plaintiff was then allowed at the trial to add a count charging that defendants as brokers received the notes to negotiate for the plaintiff and pay him the proceeds, but that by their neglect of duty said notes, before they became due, were indorsed by defendants, and came so indorsed into the hands of one G., who sold the same to one A., and applied the money to his own use: and that the plaintiff was afterwards compelled to pay the notes to The plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to G., and defendant refused to plead to this count, objecting to its being allowed. The jury having found a general verdict for the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against both defendants on either count, for as to the first count the money was not received by the firm, but by G. alone, after the dissolution, and without the knowlafter the dissolution, and without the knowledge of H.; and as to the second, it was no breach of duty in G. to discount the notes, that being the purpose for which he received them, and for the wrong committed by him in not paying over the money received after the partnership had ceased, H. was not liable. Hammond v. Heward, 20 U. C. R. 36; S. C., 11 C. P. 26; 11 C. P. 261.

Contract before Dissolution-Enforce ment.]—The defendants contracted to deliver lumber to a firm of three partners. Before Before delivery the firm was dissolved, and the defendants refused to carry out their contract. In an action brought in the individual names of the three partners for damages for non-delivery:—Held, that the dissolution of the firm was no justification in law for the defendants' refusal to carry out their contract. McCraney v. McCool, 19 O. R. 470, 18 A.

Interest - Delay in Settlement - Misconduct.] - When the defendant was, at the dissolution of a partnership, to receive £150 more than the plaintiff, and it appeared that a settlement of the accounts had been delayed by the misconduct of the defendant:— Held, that he was not entitled to interest on the £150 from the time of the dissolution. O*Lone v, O*Lone, 2 Gr. £25.

— Valuation of Stock.]—In a deed of dissolution between plaintiff and defendant, it was recited that the plaintiff had agreed to give up all his interest in the assets on defendant satisfying all claims, and paying to him 53.080, for which amount the plaintiff agreed to take certain stock at a valuation, so can be suited by the state of the plaintiff and said stock, to be paid the plaintiff itself as all stock to be paid, the plaintiff itself as all stock to be paid to the plaintiff itself as a state of the plaintiff and state the plaintiff itself as a state of the plaintiff and defendant covenanted to pay the plaintiff at the expiration of three, six, nine, and twelve months after the valuation, the balance of said £3.080, with interest. The valuation was delayed for some time:—Held, that interest could be claimed only from such valuation, not from the dissolution. Rove v. Cutton, 17 U. C.

Lien of Retiring Partners—Profits— Account.]—A retiring partner obtained from one of the continuing partners a letter agreeing to reimburse the amount advanced by him out of the one-fourth of the profits from the business:—Held, that the retiring partner had a lien on such fourth part of the profits, and a corresponding portion of the capital stock and assets of the partnership, and was entitled to an account of the partnership dealings. McGregor v. Anderson, 6 Gr. 334.

Promissory Notes-Use of Name of Retiring Partner—Power of Attorney.]—Defendant, on the 8th August, 1863, gave a bond to the plaintiffs conditioned to pay, to the extent of $2,000, debts then due or to be incurred to them by the firm of M. & G., carrying on business at Galt, whom the plaintiffs had been supplying with goods, In July or August, 1863, G. went to Buffalo, telling M. that he was going to leave the firm; and before going, in June, he gave to the defendant, his uncle, a power of attorney, which recited his intention to reside some time in Buffalo, and that his interest in the firm would continue notwithstanding, and authorized defendant to carry on the business, with power to close it up, and to sign bills, notes, &c., in G.'s name, or that of the firm. After the left, the sign, by the defendant's direction, was changed to M. & Co., but defendant told M. to give notes in the name of M. & G., to the plaintiffs for goods supplied after the date of the power of attorney. In June, a notice of intended, and in September a notice of actual, dissolution, was published in a local paper, of which the plaintiffs were not proved to have had notice. In April, 1864, M., with the defendant's knowledge, signed notes in the name of M. & G., payable at different dates, for the balance according to an account then rendered, and a separate note for the goods bought in March previous; and in September, 1864, defendant, in writing to the plaintiffs, expressed his hope that it would soon be an advantage to them to continue their account with M. & G., without his guarantee. G. returned to Galt in September, 1863, and was employed in the bank of which defendant was agent; but he said he had not authorized his name to be used to the notes given in April, 1864. In an action against defendant on this bond, the court being left to draw inferences of fact:—Held, that G.'s teurn from Buffalo, without in the court of the court defendant, was not a recent the court of the court withstanding the dissolution, which must be held to have taken plane in September, 1883, he might permit his name to be used as it was in closing up the business; that the power sufficiently authorized defendant so to use it; that the inference from the facts was, that in what he did he was acting under such power; and that defendant, therefore, was liable for the purchase made in March, 1864. Bryce v. Davidson, 25 U. C. R. 371.

Receiver — Exclusion—Security.]—Two partners dissolved. On a bill afterwards filed by one for exclusion, the defendant justified the exclusion on the ground of a parol agreement, which the other denied, and it was not otherwise proved:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a receiver for his security until the hearing. Steele v. Grossmith, 19 Gr. 141.

Sale of Partnership Assets by Continuing Partners—Ponding Suit for Account. [—G. D. and A. D., who were in partnership as bakers, purchased some wheat for their business, but, not being of the required quality, it was not used by them. On 28th January, 1876, the partnership was dissolved by an instrument under seal, G. D. giving A. D. $165 in cash and a note for $500, retaining the assets and continuing the business. On 14th March, A.D., on the ground of his being a minor and not bound by the terms of the dissolution, filed a bill in chancery by his next friend for a partnership account. On 16th March, being after the dissolution, G. D., to meet existing demands against the partnership, and to convert the assets into money for the benefit of the partners, bona fide sold the wheat for value to the plaintiff, who was aware of the dissolution, but not of the chancery proceedings:—Held, that the sale was valid. Murphy v. Ycomaus, 29 C. P. 427.

The defendant, who held the wheat in store

The defendant, who held the wheat in store for the firm, on receiving a delivery order signed by G. D., undertook to hold the wheat for the plaintiff, and negotiated with him for the purchase of it, but afterwards repudiated the plaintiff's title, and, on being indemnified by A. D., refused to give the wheat up to the plaintiff:—Semble, that the defendant, after what he had done, could not be permitted to set up A. D.'s title against the plaintiff. Is Solicitor—Action for Costs.]—Defendant signed a written retainer of D. & E. as his attorneys to prosecute one M. While the suit was pending the partnership between them was dissolved, and E. retired, assigning to D. all his rights. D. S. name alone appeared as plaintiff's attorney on the record:— Held, that D. might sue alone for the costs. Pougalt V. Ockerman, 9 U. C. R. 354.

Withdrawal of Capital—Agreement as to—Effect of Dissodution,—Plaintiff and two others entered into partnership under articles of agreement, dated 9th January, 1877, providing that on the death of any one partner the business was to be closed until stock was taken and the affairs of the firm settled, when there was to be a division of profits; and that if any partner desired to withdraw after a year from the date of the articles he should give the other two members the right of refusal of his share of the business, &c. There was a contemporaneous agreement as to what and how plaintiff was to pay for his share of the business; and then there was an instrument providing for the purchase by the other two partners of plaintiff's interest on certain conditions, with the alternative provise, that if the plaintiff desired to withdraw from the firm he should be repaid at two months notice of purchase or sale to ke given on either side. One of the two other partners did within six months from the date of the articles, and the plaintiff more than two months before the expiration of the year gave notice of his desire to retire and get back his money.—Held, that the effect of the death in the partnership within the year was to dissolve the lirm, and that, taking the three instruments together, the plaintiff could only lare obtained the benefit of the last agreement in case the firm continued to exist until after the close of the year; and therefore that his right of action was defeated by the desouttion, and his only remedy was an account in the ordinary way. Frank v. Houster, 44 U. C. R. I.

5. Other Cases.

Assignment of Interest of Partner-Passession of Partnership Premises—Tavern License. |—A partnership for a definite term, which has not expired, can be put an end to be the voluntary assignment by one of the partners of his interest in the business, at his own instance or at the instance of his assignce, against the will of the other partner. And where a partnership was so put an end to the assignor being the lessee of the to, the assignor being the lessee of the premises on which the business was carried on, and assigning the term to the assignee, the latter was held entitled to recover possession of the premises against the other partner Where the holder of a tavern license enters into partnership with another person, to whom he assigns an interest in his tayern such assignment is not an assignment of his business within the meaning of of the Liquor License Act, R. S. O. 1887 Under the construction of the partpership agreement in this case, the new partner did not take an undivided one-half terest in the license. Westbrook v. Who Wheeler, Wheeler v. Westbrook, 25 O. R. 559.

Purchase of Partner's Interest by Co-partners — Errors in Statements — Frand.]—In order to avoid a dissolution of partnership and a winding-up of the business, the interest of a partner in the partnership assets was purchased by his co-partners, for an amount equal to the profits standing at his credit, his salary to the time of the purchase, and a percentage of his capital as shewn in the last yearly balance sheet, which was based upon statements prepared under the supervision of this partner. More than two months after the transaction, the purchasers brought this action, alleging that part of the stock-in-trade had been over-valued in the statements, and claiming repayment of part of the purchase money: — Held, upon the evidence, that the purchase price was arrived at as a compromise, and not as an arbitrary proportion of definite items: but that, apart from this, as the statements had been prepared in good faith and in accordance with the uniform usage of the business, the defendant was not liable. Stroud v. Wiley, 27 A. R. 516.

Settlement—Valuation—Deceit,]—Plaintiff and defendants were partners. Defendants, before the expiration of the term, induced the plaintiff to agree to a dissolution. A valuation of the assets was thereupon made by the defendants, and a settlement took place, founded on such valuation, under the erroneous impression on the part of the plaintiff that one of the defendants was to retire from the business, and that the interest of the other defendant in the valuation was identical with the interest of the plaintiff; while the fact was, that the defendants had entered into a private agreement, that, after settling with the plaintiff, the stock should be sold for the joint benefit of the defendants, and that they should share equally the proceeds and carry on the business:—Held, that by reason of this deceit the transaction was not binding on the plaintiff. O'Connor v. Maughton, 13 Gr. 428.

Simulated Dissolution — Husband and Wife—Creditors. I.—In April. 1886, J. S. McL. Perice from the firm of McL. Bros. composed of himself and W. McL., and agreed to leave his capital, for which he was to leave his capital, for which he was to every himself and W. McL., and agreed to leave his capital, for which he was to stituted by W. McL. and another. It was arranged that such capital should rank after the creditors of the old firm had been paid in full. The new firm undertook to carry on business under the same firm name up to 31st December, 1889, J. S. McL. died on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. died on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. died on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. ale on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. ale on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. ale on 18th November, 1889, I. S. McL. where the new firm of McL. Bros. and the estate of J. S. McL. and by Mrs. J. S. McL. and W. McL. and when the state of J. S. McL. and by Mrs. J. S. McL. the were contested by the Merchants Bank, on the following grounds among others:—I. That the bank had been creditors of the firm, and continued to make advances to the new firm on the faith of the agreement of April. 1880; 2. that Mrs. J. S. McL. had the dissolution was simulated; that the dissolution was simulated; that the dissolution of the partnership was simulated; that the moneys which appeared to be owing to Mrs. J. S. McL. after crediting her with her own separate moneys, were in reality moneys deposited by her husband in order to confer upon her, during marriage, benefits contrary to law; and that the bank had a sufficient interest to contest these claims, the transaction being in fraud of their rights as creditions. Mcchants Bank of Canada v. McLacna, 23 S. C. R. 43.

- VI. LIABILITY OF PARTNERS TO OTHERS.
 - 1. As to Bills, Notes, and Cheques.
- (a) Note Given for Partnership Purposes.

Accommodation Accoptance by Partner—Mala Fides of Moder.]—The three defendants carried on business in partnership as stock brokers and financial agents, under the name of Cassels, Son, & Co. By the articles of partnership it was recurred that all bills, drafts, cheaues, &c., smould be signed in the name of the firm. It appeared that one of the defendants and one L. were engaged in private transactions not connected with or known to the firm, and in the course thereof L., who had no available funds in the firm's hands, drew a cheque or order on them in favour of the plaintiff for $600, and C., one of the defendants, marked across it "Good." L. then procured plaintiff for $600, and C., one of the defendants, marked across it "Good." L. then procured plaintiff to discount it at the rate of thirty per cent, per annun, and to hold it for a month:—Held, that the firm were not liable on such order, for the acceptance was not taken by plaintiff in good faith. Howey v. Cassels, 30 C. P. 230.

Notice to Holder—Release of Drawer—Pleading, I—In an action by indorsees for value, against a firm of M, & C., on a bill drawn by S, & Co., in their own favour, accepted by the defendants and indorsed by S, & Co. to plaintiffs, the defendant C, pleaded that the bill was necepted by his partner M. in the name of the firm as an accommodation for S, & Co., and without his partner M, in the name of the firm as an accommodation for S, & Co., and without his (C.'s) authority, and was not within the scope and objects of the partnership business. Also, equitably, that the plaintiffs after the bill had matured, having notice of the accommodation acceptance, agreed with S, & Co., the drawers, without the consent of defendant, to accept a composition from S, & Co., which composition was paid to plaintiffs, who thereupon discharged S, & Co. from liability; and that defendants were discharged in equity thereby:—Held, that the first plea was insufficient in not stating that the acceptance had no reference to any dealing between S, and the firm of M, & C. 2. That the equitable plea was bad, for the plaintiff, having notice only after the bill matured, might release the drawers without releasing the accommodation acceptors. City of tlasgow Bank v, Murdock, 11 C, P, 138.

Accommodation Indorsement by Partner-Knowledge of Holder, I—II. made a note payable to L., or order, and took it to M., requesting him to indorse it for his accommodation. M., who was in partnership with the other defendant, indorsed it in the name of the firm, but without his co-partner's sanction or knowledge. L. afterwards indorsed, but without recourse, and the plaintiff took it with knowledge of the circumstances: —Held, that M. could not bind his partner by indorsing for such a purpose, and the plaintiff could not recover. Harris v. Mc-Leod, 14 U. C. R. 164.

The plaintiffs discounted a note for J. N., the maker, payable to and indorsed by a firm in the partnership name by one of the partners, the plaintiffs knowing that it was so indorsed as security for J. N., and having no reason to suppose that it was in connection with the partnership business:—Held, that the other partners were not liable. Federal Bank v. Northwood, 7 O. R. 389.

— Want of Knowledge of Holder, —
The plaintiff, having a claim against M, agreed to give him time, on receiving a good indorsed note, and M, sent him a note made by himself, payable to W. M. or order, and indorsed by W. M. and by the firm of "J. & J. Carveth." The plaintiff took the note before it was due, knowing nothing of the circumstances under which it was indorsed by the firm or of the authority of James Carveth, who indorsed it, to use the partnership name. When it fell due, James Carveth being absent from the country, the plaintiff sue the other partner, John;—Held, that he was entitled to recover. Henderson v. Carveth, 16 U. C. R. 324.

Debt of Partner.]—A note given by a partner for a private debt in the name of the firm, was held not binding on the firm. Beals v. Sheldon, 4 O. S. 302.

Frandulent Acceptance — Discount — Active — Change in Partnership Name.] — Where the plaintiffs, a bank, discounted a bill drawn by one partner, and accepted by him in the name of the firm, the manage being aware that it was intended by such partner to reimburse himself for more, which he alleged that he had advanced to the firm; and it appeared that such acceptance was unauthorized by the other partners—Held, that the bank could not recover against them. Royal Canadian Bank v. Wilson, 24 C. P. 362.

The partnership name, when the bill was

The partnership name, when the bill was odrawn and accepted, was J. S. W. & Co. and the acceptance was in the name of W. M. & Co.:—Held, that this also would have been fatal to the plaintiffs' recovery. Ib.

Fraudulent Indorsement—Discount—Misappropriation.] — Plaintiff gave defendants, who were co-partners and brokers, two notes, payable to their order, to get discounted for him. He afterwards drew upon them for £200 on account of the notes. Defendants discolved partnership, when one defendant, in fraud of his co-partner, indorsed the partnership name on the notes, and passed them away, and applied the proceeds to his own personal use: — Held, that defendants were jointly liable, and that the draft for £200 did not annul the original contract or affect the responsibility of defendant H. Hammond v. Heccard, 11 C. P. 261.

Fraudulent Making—Discount — Value—Notice.1—Defendants and one M. were in partnership in the lumber business at Barrie, the two defendants residing there, and M. in Hamilton. The working capital was $5,100 furnished equally by the three, and was in M.'s hands; and the lumber was, by as rangement of the partners, to be consigned by the defendants to M., who was to accept under the constant of the partnership was formed in December, 1873, and lasted until March, 1874, when M. absounded. In January, 1874, M. took to the plaintiffs a note for $808 filled up in his writing, and purporting to be made by W. M. & Co., payable to himself, and indorsed by him, which the plaintiffs took from him for value. This note was made for his own private purposes in fraud of the partnership the weldence was contradictory as to writer the name of the firm was in his scritting or not. The plaintiffs' manager swore that he relied on M.'s security and did not inquire about the firm. It was intended or agreed that the name of the firm should be W. M. & Co.; but that of J. W. & Co. was used until March without M.'s knowledge, when the former name was adopted. The trial Judge held that the defendants were not bound. The court of Queen's bench held, as an inference of fact from the evidence, that M. did sign the name of the firm as makers and in the proper partnership name; and entered a verdict for the plaintiffs. On appeal the court was equally divided and the judgment below was therefore affirmed. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Wilson, 36 U. C. R. 9.

Motice to Holder, —The defendant was related as agent for his co-defendants under a written agreement that no partnershipshould be created between them, or "the parties held to be partners." To all appearance, however, W. acted as a partner and as such effected a sale to the plaintiff of a quantity of wine, &c., at ninety days' credit. Subsequently he applied to plaintiff for a loan of money for the purpose, as he stated, of the relating notes of customers of the firm, but which he told the plaintiff he was desirous of concealing from the other defendants, his so-called partners, and for the amount so borrowed he gave the promissory note of the firm:—Held, that what transpired between W, and the plaintiff when lending the money, was sufficient to shew that the advances had not been for partnership purposes, and therefore that the other defendants were not liable. Metometh v. Witkins, 13 A. R. 238.

E. was a member of the firm of S. C. & Co., and also a member of the firm of E. & Co., and in order to raise money for the use of E. & Co., be made a promissory note which he signed with the name of the other firm, and indorsing it in the name of E. & Co. had it discounted. The officers of the bank which discounted the note knew the handwriting of E. with whom the bank had had frequent dealings. In an action against the makers of the note C. pleaded that it was made by E. in fraud of his partners, and the jury found makers. & Co. had not authorized the bank of want of authority: — Held, that the note was made by E. in fraud of his partners, and that the bank of want of authority: — Held, that the note was made by E. in fraud of his partners, and that the bank had sufficient knowledge that he was using his partners' manes for his own purposes to put them on inquiry, the bank could not recover against C. Creighton v. Hoilias Banking Co., 18 S. C. R. 140.

E. Dunham carried on business at Montreal from February, 1886, to 1st September, 1886, under the style of J. E. Dunham & Co. The same J. E. Dunham, with W. W. Park, carried on business at Toronto from 1st May, 1886, to 1st August, 1886, under the same style, J. E. Dunham & Co. By the articles of partnership between Dunham and Park it was agreed that Dunham should not sign the firm name to bills or notes. The dissolution of the partnership between Dunham and Park was agreed that Dunham should not sign the firm name to bills or notes. The dissolution of the partnership between Dunham and Park was not advertised until the 20th

August, 1886. Dunham, for purposes of his own, and without the knowledge of Park, upon the 11th August, 1886, signed a series of notes amounting to $21,000 with the firm name of J. E. Dunham & Co., and gave them to one Isaacs. The note in question in this action was one of that series, but antedated upon the 30th July. The plaintiffs, who had no knowledge of Park being a member of J. E. Dunham & Co., took this note without notice of any infirmity, and to secure a pre-existing debt which was overdee. The Judge at the trial charged the jury that the plaintiffs had a right to resort to either firm for payment:—Held, a misdirection, and that there was no such right of election; that it there was no such right of election; that it there was no such right of election, that it there was no such right of election, that it there was no such right of election, that it there was no such right of election, that it there was no such right of prove that they were not the debtors. Held, also, that if this note had been given before the 1st August, the Judge at the trial should have left it to the jury to say which firm Dunham intended to bind; but that, as the noic was not given during the partnership, and as the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the firm, or of Park being a member of it, the question was not material. Held, also, that, as the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the firm of J. E. Dunham & Co., or the members of it, and had had no dealings with it, the defendant Park was not liable upon the note signed after the 1st August, when the dissolution accumily took place, although before the court, instead of ordering a new trial, judgment was given for the defendant Park with costs. Standard Bank V. Dunham, 40 C. R. G.

— Notice to Holder—Presumption of Natherity.]—The plaintif, knowing that the defendants were a tirm of solicitors, and the defendants were a tirm of solicitors signed by the and by one of the nefendants expend by the analysis one of the nefendants of the solicitors of the solicitors. One of the solicitors relied upon to shew such authority:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against both defendants, but that the defendant who signed the note was liable. Semble, that, even in the case of a trading partnership, a partner has no implied power to give the partnership name to secure the debt of a third person. Wilson v. Brozen, 6 A. R. 411.

See Ex parte Griffin, In re Rankin, 3 A. R. 1.

(b) Other Cases.

Consideration—Settlement—Conditions—Pleading.]—To an action upon two notes against the maker by the indorsee of the payee, K., the defendant pleaded that the notes were given when be and the plaintiff and K. were in partnership, and in respect of transactions between defendant and K. as partnership, and with the understanding and agreement between defendant and K. and the plaintiff—that the notes were to be held by K. and the plaintiff—that the notes were to be held by K. and the plaintiff merely as evidence of such transactions, &c., and as security for any sums which might be found due to K. or the plaintiff, on accounts being taken and settlement made between them and defendant as partners, and upon the terms and condition of such an account being taken at or after the dissolution of the partnership; but that the partnership had since been dissolved, and no such account taken or settlement made:—Held, on demurrer, plea bad, for it admitted a good consideration for the notes, and did not allege expressly that they were not to be sued upon. Semble, that it was also defective in not negativing any other consideration than that appearing on its face. Stuttzman v. Yeagley, 32 U. C. R. 630.

Debt of Partnership — Acceptance of New Firm—Novation—Pleading.)— Declaration against R. and H. for goods sold. Plen by defendant H., on equitable grounds in substance, and the sold of t

— Acceptance of Note of One Partners.]—To an action against two partners for wharfage and warehouseroom of goods, defendants pleaded the delivery and acceptance of the promissory note of one of them in satisfaction of the claim. At the trial the plaintiff's book-keeper said that he presented the account, and took the note made by one defendant in settlement, writing at the foot of the account "received payment by note." The Judge thereupon directed a verdict for defendants. On motion for judgment non obstants verdict, or for a new trail:—Held, that the plea was good, but that it should have been left to the jury to find whether the note was accepted by the plaintiffs in satisfaction of the demand; and a new trial was ordered. Fort Durlington Harbour Co. v. Squair, 18 U. C. R. 533.

Gurantee — Indorsement by One Partners.] — Where a non-negotiable promissory note, given for money leut to a firm, is made by one member thereof and indorsed by the other, the character in which the indorsement is made will be implied from the purposes for which the note is given, the indorsement obtained, and the particular circumstances of the case, which were here held to make such indorser liable as guarantor. McPhee v. Mo-Phee, 19 O. R. 603.

Implied Authority to Indorse Cheques — Land Transactions — Acquiescence.]—When a partnership is entered into for the purpose of buying and selling lands, the lands nequired in the business of such partnership are, in equity, considered as personalty, and may be dealt with by one partners a freely as if they constituted the stock-in-trade of a commercial partnership. The active partner in such business has an implied authority to borrow money on the security of mortgages acquired by the sale of partnership lands. An amount so borrowed was paid by a cheque made payable to the order of all the partners by name. The active partner had authority, by power of attorney, to sign his partners' names to all deeds and conveyances necessary for carrying on the business, considered the partners' name of the conditional control of the partners' names on the could indorse his partners' names on the cheque, and the drawees had a right to assume that he did it for partnership purposes, and were justified in paying it on such indorsement. Held, also, that if the payment by the drawees was not warranted, the drawees was not warranted, the drawers waring, for two years after, received monthly statements of their account with the drawees and given receipts acknowledging the correctness of the same, they must be held to have acquiesced in the payment. Manifold Mortgage Co. v. Bank of Montreal, 17 S. C. R. 632.

Joint Indorsers—Partnership Purposes—Action by One.]—A promissory note for $6,200, made by the president and secretary of a syndicate formed for completing the Hamilton and Dundas Street railway, in favour of O., S., and the defendants, was indorsed by them to the Bank of Commerce or order. On the day the note fell due O. and S. respectively paid the same. O. paying $2,000, and S. $4,200, the remaining sum due thereon, S. at the time directing the bank agent to indorse it to the plaintiff, who it appeared gave no value for it. The agent indorsed it as follows: "Pay to J. S." (the plaintiff) or order. D. Hughes Charles, Manager." The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendants as indorsers:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover, for the evidence shewed that S. by his payment intended to satisfy the note, and it being made for a purpose directly relating to and not collateral to the partnership of which S. and defendants were partners, S. could not recover against defendants thereon, and, as the plaintiff was found to have only the same right as S., neither could be recover. Small v. Riddel, 31 C. P. 373.

See Honsinger v. Love, 16 O. R. 170.

A third person holding a note for the benefit of one joint indorser, cannot maintain a joint action against the co-indorsers under R. S. O. 1877 c. 116, ss. 2, 3, as indorsers, for the full amount of the note, but must sue each separately in a special action for his share of the contribution. Held, also, that the Act does not refer to partnership transactions. Small v. Riddel, 31 C. P. 373.

Joint and Several Promissory Note—Dissolution—Discharge of Collateral Security—Release of Retiring Partner, 1—A, and B, partners in business, borrowed money from C, giving him as security their joint and several promissory note and a mortgage on partnership property. The partnership having been dissolved, A, assumed all the liabilities of the firm and continued to carry on the business alone. After the dissolution, C, gave A, a discharge of the mortgage, but without receiving payment of his debt, and afterwards brought an action against B, on the promissory note:—Held, affirming the judgment in 20 A, R, 635, that the note having been given for the mortgage debt, C, could not recover without being prepared, upon payment, to convey to B, the mortgaged lands, which he had incapacitated himself from doing. Held, also, that, by the terms of the dissolution of the partnership, the relations between A, and B, were changed to those of principal and surety, and it having been found at the trial that C. had notice of such change, his release of the principal. A., discharged B., the surety, from the liability for the debt. Alison v. McDondd, 23 S. C. R. 635.

Joint Stock Company—Suppression of Notee—Subsequent Circulation.]—A partner in a joint stock company, the notes of which were suppressed by 7 Wm. IV. c. 13. having retired their notes which were in circulation after the suppression, cannot put them into circulation again so as to bind the partnership. Hall v. Buck, T. T. 2 & 3 Viet.

Judgment against Firm—Action thereon against Alleged Partner—Res Judicata—Partnership by Estoppel.)—An action was brought against a firm in the firm name as makers, and an individual as indorser, of a name and was dismissed as against the indorser on the ground that he had indorsed at the request of the loiders for their accommodation, Judgment being given against the firm:—Held, reversing the judgment in 24 O. R. 497, that the dismissal of this action was an answer to an action on the Judgment, in which it was sought to prove that the indorser was, as regards the plaintiffs, a partner by estoppel, and therefore bound by the judgment against the firm. Held, however, affirming the judgment, that the plaintiffs had the right to proceed by action on the judgment and to try therein the question whether the defendant was a member of the firm so as to be bound by the judgment. Clark v. Cullen, 9. Q. B. D. 355, followed. Ray v. Isbuster, 22 A. R. 12. See the next case.

Where promissory notes are signed by a firm as makers, a person who holds himself out to the payees as a member of such firm, though he may not be so in fact, is liable as a maker. In an action upon a promissory note against M. I. & Co., as makers, and J. I. as indorser, judgment was rendered by default against the firm, and a verdict was found in favour of J. I., as it appeared by the evidence that he had indorsed without consideration for the accommodation of the holders, and upon an agreement with them that he should not be held in any manner liable upon the note.—Held, in a subsequent action on the judgment to recover from J. I. as a member of the firm who had made the note, that the verdict in the former suit was conclusive in his favour, the said agreement meaning that he was not to be liable either as a maker or indorser. Judgment in S. C., sub nom. Ray v. Isbister, 22 A. R. 12, affirmed. Isbester, v. Ray, 26 S. C. R. 79.

Judgment against One Partner—Subtequent Claim against Partnership.]—In the absence of express agreement to that effect, a creditor taking the note of one partner for a debt of the partnership, and suing thereon, and recovering judgment but failing to realize the amount of the note, is not precluded from afterwards claiming the amount of the note adults, 20 (etc.) 12 (etc.) 2 (

J. C. and T. A. formed a partnership under the style or firm of "C. & A." Both parties were illiterate and unused to business, and in giving notes for debts of the partnership were in the habit of each signing his own surname, thus forming the partnership name. Une of such notes being about to fall due, Vol. III, b—163—14 and the partnership being unable to retire it, the holder agreed to renew it; and he, together with C. endeavoured to find A. to procure his signature in the usual way to the new note, but being unable to find him, C. gave his own note for a sum sufficient to cover the old note and an account for goods furnished to the partnership by the holder. This note being unpaid, an action was brought by the holder against C., and a small portion of the amount realized by sale of his goods under execution. Subsequently a suit was brought by C. against A. to wind up the partnership, and the holder of the note sought to prove for the amount of it against the partnership extate, which the master refused to allow, and on appeal his order was affirmed. The holder thereupon re-heard the appeal motion:—Held, that the holder, by the proceeding he had taken, was not precluded from claming the amount against the partnership assets. Ib.

Name of One Partner.]—A. and B., representing themselves as partners, obtained C.'s accommodation indorsement to a note made by A. alone, but stated by B. to be made for their joint lenefit, and on their joint liability. The note was discounted at a bank, and C. was subsequently obliged to pay it, A. having in the meantime absconded:—Held, that C. could not recover against B. on the note, but that he might maintain his action on the count for money paid. Annis v. Louces, 5 O. S. 198,

One partner cannot bind the firm by a bill drawn in his own name, although for partnership purposes. Goldie v. Maxwell, 1 U. C. R. 424.

Collateral Security. —In April, 1876, F. & C. entered into partnership for the purpose of purchasing one M.'s interest in a macadamized road contract and completing it; C. alone to provide the necessary funds on his own credit, but F., for the use of his name to secure the contract, to have half the profits. On 20d May, C., being in want of funds, made a note in his own name for $150, which was indorsed by one Cockburn, and the proceeds applied to the partnership purposes. On 25th May he made two further notes for $175 respectively, one in the name of the firm and the other in his own name, but of the proceeds of the latter note $87 was applied to partnership purposes. Both these notes were also indorsed by Cockburn. At the same time C. also made a note for $500, in the name of the firm, in favour of Cockburn, as security for his above indorsations. This note Cockburn indorsed to the plaintiff, but without consideration, and the plaintiff merely stood in Cockburn's place:—Held, that there could be no recovery on this note, for as to the $150 and one of the $175 notes, they were not made in the partnership name; and as to the other $175 note, it was outstanding in the hands of a third party. Semble, that one partners in such a business has no implied authority to raise money, even for partnership purposes, in the joint name. McCord v. Field, 27 C. P. 391.

Notice of Dishonour,]—Where a note is payable to or indorsed by several persons jointly who are not partners, notice to one is notice to all. Bank of Michigan v. Gray, 1 U. C. R. 422.

The following notice was held insufficient, the note having been indorsed by defendant in his own name only, although he was one of the firm: "Messrs. P. M. Grover & Co. Gentlemen:—Take notice that the promissory note," &c., "on which you are indorsers, due this day, remains unpaid. Therefore the holders look to you for payment thereof as such indorsers." Bank of Montreal v. Grover, 3 U. C. R. 27.

Signature to Note — Agent] — "A. & Co., by A. junr." primā facie imports that A. signs the notes for, and not as one of, the firm. Dowling v. Eustwood, 3 U. C. R. 376.

Solicitors—Evidence of Authority. |—In an action against B. & S., a firm of solicitors, on notes indorsed by B. in the name of the firm, it was proved that on other occasions S. had so indorsed in the same manner, and, as the witness believed, with B.'s knowledge, but it did not appear what the consideration was for the indorsements sued on, or that S. knew of them:—Held, sufficient evidence to go to the jury of a mutual authority. Workman v. McKinstry, 21 U. C. R. 625.

Sureties—Liability—Joint or Several.]— Where a firm of two or more indorse in the partnership name, the liability as sureties is a joint liability, and not the several liability of each partner. Clipperton v. Spettigue, 15 Gr. 269.

Transaction outside Scope of Rusiness—Renefit of Partnership,—One partner cannot bind his co-partner for transactions out of the usual scope of the business; nor for the summary of the business; nor for the commentary of the com

2. Execution of Deeds.

Agreement under Seal—Benefit of—Estoppel.]—Where an agreement under seal, but of a nature not requiring a seal, was executed by one of two partners in the name of the firm, and the partner not executing afterwards acted under and received the benefit of it, such agreement was sustained as his deed; and it was held that he could not dispute the authority by which it was executed in his name. Bloomley v. Grinton, 9 U. C. R. 455.

—Signature of Firm.]—An agreement under seal was made between the plaintiff, of the one part, and "samuel Farwell & Co.," of the other part, and signed "S. Farwell & Co.,"—Quare, whether this contract, as executed by Farwell, could bind the other defendants, his partners, Logan v. Stranahan, 12 U. C. R. 15.

Defendants, R. and A., being in partner-ship, agreed under seal to buy a quantity of tobacco, B. signing the name of defendants' firm opposite to one seal:—Quare, whether one or both defendants could be held liable upon the deed. Moore v. Boyd, 23 U. C. R. 459.

Arbitration Bond.]—One of two partners cannot execute an arbitration bond in the partnership name without the authority or consent of the other partner, so as to hind the other partner. Baby v. Davenport, 3 U. C. R. 54.

Assignment for Creditors.]—One partner in trade cannot, without the express consent of his co-partner, execute a deed disposing of all the stock-in-trade and assets of the firm to a trustee to dispose of the same for the general benefit of the creditors of the partnership. Cameron v. Stevenson, 12 C. P. 281: Stevenson v. Brown, 9 L. J. 110.

One of two partners, a few days before an attachment against both under the Act of 1804 had issued, assigned his estate for the benefit of his creditors: — Held, void as against the official assignee. Wilson v. Stevenson, 12 Gr. 239.

See Nolan v. Donnelly, 4 O. R. 440, post XII.

Covenant for Payment of Money.]—
Two persons carrying on business in partnership as bankers took from a customer as security for his indebtedness to them a conveyance to them individually of certain land which was subject to a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs. Subsequently, upon proceedings being threatened by the plaintiffs upon their mortgage, one of the partners, without the knowledge or assent of the other, in consideration of a stay of proceedings, signed in the firm name a covenant under seal to pay to the plaintiffs the arrears due on the mortgage:—Held, that this covenant bound only the partner who signed it. Hamilton Provident and Loan Society v. Steinhoff, 23 A. R. 184.

Deed — Signature — Seal — Assent.] — Where one partner signs in the name of both in the presence of the other and for him, with his assent, though there is but one seal, it is the deed of both. Moore v. Boyd, 15 C. P. 513.

Indenture of Apprenticeship—Signature—Isscit.]—Upon an application under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 45, for the discharge of a prisoner committed under the Apprentices and Minors Act for disobedience to his masters, on the ground, inter alia, that the indenture of apprenticeship was not a binding contract; it having been executed by only one of the employers, in the name of the firm:—Held, that the indenture must be considered to be sufficiently executed, as it was binding at all events upon the apprentice and the partner who had signed it, and there was nothing to shew that his co-partners had not been present and assented to the execution. Regina v. McNaney, 5 P. R. 43S.

Mortgage — Authority.]—One partner of a firm authorized the other to obtain an limborser, in order to raise money from a bank:
—Held, that if express authority was required, this empowered the partner to morter gare all the stock-in-trade of the firm to secure such indorser. Paterson v. Maughan, 39 U. C. R. 371.

— Unknown Partner,]—A mortgage with distress clause, by the legal owner of property of which, at the time, he is in nossession, and to all appearance in sole possession, is valid at law and in equity against an unknown partner, whose only claim to the possession, when the mortgage was executed, was as tenant at will. Mason v. Parker, 16 Gr. 230.

3. Other Cases.

Contract of Partner—Assent of Co-partner—Powers of Managing Partner, —Where S., a partner, had contracted in writing, in the partnership hame, to sell certain timber limits, property of the partnership, but standing in his name only, and M., his co-partner, when informed thereof, had not dissented, but had shortly afterwards furnished information to the purchaser, which he was only entitled to ask for as such purchaser;—Held, having regard to all these circumstances, that M. had assented to the contract, and was bound thereby. It appeared also, that S., who was the managing partner, and the purchaser; subsequently put an end to the terms of credit, and agreed to a cash payment of $15.500, part of the purchase momey:—Held, that it was competent for them so to do, and within the power of S., so far as his co-partner was concerned. Reid v. Smith, 2 O. R. 53.

Damages—Chose in Action — Assignment of—Counterclaim—Novation.]—See Seyfang v. Mann. 27 O. R. 631, 25 A. R. 179, ante

Debt of Partner—Payment out of Partnership Funds—Authority—Action.]—The defendants were indebted to the plaintiffs' irm, consisting of two partners, and one partner was individually indebted to the defendants. This partner wore two letters to the defendants, one over his own signature and the other over the firm name, stating that he had paid certain sums due by him to the defendants by giving the defendants credit in the books of his firm. This was done without the authority of the other partner, but the entries were actually made in the books of the firm, to which the other partner had access, though he did not in fact know of the entries were actually made in the books of the firm, to which the other partner had access, though he did not in fact know of the entries until after the firm had been dissolved. Accounts were afterwards rendered to the defendants without any claim being made in respect of the sums credited. This action was brought after the dissolution, in the name of the firm, for the price of goods sold—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to credit for the sums referred to. Leverson v. Lane, 13 C. B. N. S. at p. 285, In re Riches, 4 DeG. J. & S. at p. 556, and Kendal v. Wood, L. R. & Ex. 243, applied and followed. Held, also, that rule 317 authorized the bringing and sustaining of the action in the name of the partnership existing at the time the goods were furnished to the defendants. Fisher & Co. v. Robert Linton & Co. 280, R. 322.

Election to Look to Directors—Trading Association—Undertaking.]—Where parties associate for a trading purpose, taking specified shares of a fixed amount, with a mutual understanding that they are only to be liable to the extent of their shares, and on the agreement that their business is to be conducted by a committee from the partners acting as managers, if a party dealing with such directors, with a full knowledge of the terms and stipulations of the association, accept an undertaking from them which is expressly founded on such terms and stipulations, he cannot maintain an action based upon his dealings against the shareholders and directors charging them with a joint liability as ordinary partners in a trading concern. Coleman v. Bellhouse, 9 C. P. 31.

Election to Look to One Partner.]—Where goods had been sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to a partnership consisting of the two defendants prior to the dissolution of the firm, the retiring partner set up in an action for the price of the goods that the plaintiffs had agreed to discharge him and look to the remaining partner alone. The only evidence of this was the fact that the plaintiffs had rendered an account for these goods, along with others for which the remaining partner alone was liable, to the remaining partner, and afterwards had accepted promissory notes for the amount, signed in the firm name, with the knowledge that the firm name, with the knowledge that the firm was then composed of the remaining partner only:—Held, insufficient to shew an agreement such as was set up; for the facts were quite consistent with an intention on the plaintiffs' part to look to both defendants in case the notes should not be paid at maturity. Bresse v. Griffith, 24 O. R. 492.

The defendant set up that the plaintiffs had elected to treat the other member of the firm as their sole debtor, by reason of their having proved their claim with and having purchased the assets of the partnership from the assignee the reof under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, in which it was recited that the other was the only person composing the firm; and that the defendant had relied and acted upon their conduct and election, and they were therefore estopped from suing him as a partner:—Held, that, even if there was evidence that the defendant had acted in any way by reason of the plaintiffs' action, no estoppel arose, because the plaintiffs' action, no estoppel arose, because the plaintiffs' action, no all and he had no right to assume an election from what they did, nor to act as if such an election had been made. Ray v. Asbister, 24 O. R. 497, 22 A. R. at p. 17. Affirmed, 26 S. C. R. 79.

— Surety—Discharge.] — H. and M. were carrying on business in co-partnership, and H. becoming dissatisfied with the manner in which the business was conducted, a dissolution was agreed upon, in October, 1876, with the knowledge and approval of the plaintiffs, one of them having assisted in arranging it, H. retiring and assigning to M. his interest in the partnership assets, in consideration of $1,332, for which M. gave his promisory notes at three, six, nine, and twelve months, and bound himself to pay all the debts of the co-partnership. M. continued to carry on the business, and in doing so had several transactions with the plaintiffs, from whom he continued to receive goods on credit, giving promissory notes for the price as well as to cover the firm's indehedness, during which time the plaintiffs rendered periodical statements to M., ignoring apparently the existence of H., in which the liabilities of the firm and M. were embraced; although ex-pressed "M. and H. liability," giving the items, and "J. M. liability," also detailing the items. M. by means of contra accounts against H. had reduced the latter's claim to about $400. In November or December, 1876, the plaintiffs applied to H. to renew the part-tersity notes, but this be declined to do an nership notes, but this he declined to do, on the ground that he was not liable, notwith-standing which the plaintiffs continued to deal with M. until he became insolvent in Janu-ary, 1880, when they instituted proceedings but this he declined to do, on against both partners to recover their claim —Held, reversing the judgment in 31 C. P. 430, that the effect of the dealings between H. and M. was not to constitute II. a surety H. and M. was not to constitute 11, a surely for M., and that he and M. remained liable to the plaintiffs for the partnership debts. Birkett v. McGuire, 7 A. R. 53. Reversed by the supreme court, Cassels' Dig. 598.

Guarantee - Authority to Bind Firm.]-One D. having recovered a judgment against M. & Co., certain notes payable to the firm were deposited with B. and underneath a list of them was the following guarantee: "We hereby, in consideration of £50 by us received from D. this day, guarantee the payment of the above notes by the respective makers at the respective maturities thereof." This was signed by M. & Co., and underneath was an agreement that on payment of the judgment within ten days the notes should be returned to M.:—Held, that M. had authority to bind his partners by signing the guarantee. Day v. McLeod, 18 U. C. R. 256.

Incoming Partner - Action-Joint Liability—1ssets.]—An agreement was entered into under seal between A., B., and C., for the advance of certain moneys from A. to B. and C., who were partners in a mill business. and who, from the assets arising from the business, were to repay such advances. D. nusiness, were to repay such advances. D. afterwards became a partner with B. and C.: —Held, that A. could not maintain an action of assumpsit against B., C., and D. jointly, for the recovery of the balance of such advances. Mittleberger v. Merritt, 1 U. C., R. 330.

- Assumption of Liabilities—Rights of Creditor — Knowledge,] — Defendant M., having been in business alone, was indebted to the plaintiff for goods. He then entered into partnership with W., on the understanding that W. should share in the profits, and be liable for the debts from the commencement indie for the debts from the commencement of M.'s business. There was no written agreement between them. After this W. was introduced to the plaintiffs by M. as his partner, and M. and W. together purchased from the plaintiffs to a considerable amount. W. then retired from the lirm. There was no evidence to shew that the plaintiffs were aware of the arrangement between M. and W.:—Held, that such arrangement, without the assent of the plaintiffs, could not convert the separate debt of M. into the joint debt of the firm; and, therefore, that W. was liable only for the goods supplied after the partnership. Mc-Keand v. Mortimore, 11 U. C. R. 428.

Assumption of Liabilities-Rights of Creditor-Notice.]-Held, that an incoming partner, who as between himself and copartners entered into a joint liability (with notice to the creditor), as well for prior as subsequent debts, was liable for debts con-tracted before he became a member of the firm, contrary to the general principle of law. Hine v. Beddome, S C. P. 381.

Assumption of Liabilities-Rights of Creditor-Trust-Novation.]-A firm consisting of two persons dissolved partnership. the retiring partner receiving a number of promissory notes in payment of his share in the business, which notes he indorsed to the plaintiff H. The continuing partner of the firm afterwards entered into a partnership with O., the defendant, and transferred to the new firm all the assets of his business, his liabilities, including the above mentioned his habilities, including the above mentioned promissory notes, being assumed by the co-partnership and charged against him. The new firm paid two of the notes and interest on others, and made a proposal for an exten-sion of time to pay the whole, which was not entertained:—Held, reversing the deci-sions in 14 O. R. 137 and 17 A. R. 456, sub nom. Henderson v. Killey, that the agreement between the continuing partner and the defendant did not make the defendant a trustee of the former's property for the payment of his liabilities, and the act of the defendant in paying some of the notes did not amount to a novation, as it was proved that the plaintiff had obtained and still held a judgment against the maker and indorser of the notes in an action thereon, and there was no consideration for such novation. Osborne v. Henderson, 18 S. C. R. 698. See S. C., 11 C. L. T. Occ. N. 88.

A certain firm was indebted to the plaintiffs. Another firm bearing the same name, but composed of different individuals, assumed its liabilities, as between itself and the former firm, and continued the business, and made certain payments to the plaintiffs, and also certain payments to the plaintills, and also asked for time to pay the balance. There was no evidence of any assets of the first time being taken over by the second:—Held, that the above was not sufficient to create a new obligation as between the plaintills and the new firm. Osborne v. Henderson, 18 S. C. R. 633, referred to. Canadian Bank of Company of the control of the contr merce v. Marks, 19 O. R. 450. Sec. also, Seyfang v. Mann, 25 A. R. 179, ante V. 1.

- Covenant of Indemnity-Assignment of. |-Upon a covenant by an incoming partner to indemnify and save harmless a retiring partner against the liabilities, contracts, and agreements of the firm, no cause of action accrues to the covenantee merely because an ac-tion to recover unliquidated damages for an alleged breach of agreement has been brought against the firm. Mewburn v. Mackelcan, 19 A. R. 729, and Leith v. Freeland, 24 U. C. R. 132, distinguished. Such a covenant is not assignable by the covenantee to a plaintiff suing the firm so as to enable him to join the covenantor as a defendant in the action to recover against him the damages for which the firm may be ultimately held responsible. Sutherland v. Webster, 21 A. R. 228.

Money Borrowed-Assent of Partner.]-Money borrowed by a partner, with the know-ledge and assent of his co-partner, is not necessarily chargeable by the creditor against the latter; it must appear that the money was borrowed on partnership account, or used for partnership purposes. Hamilton v. Me-llroy, 15 Gr. 332.

- Use for Partnership Purposes.]-Where one member of a partnership borrows money upon his own credit by giving his own promisory note for the sum so borrowed, and he afterwards uses the proceeds of the note in the partnership business of his own free will, without being under any obligation to, or countact with the lender so to do, the partnership is not liable for the loan, under Art. 1867, C. C. Maguire v. Scott, 7. L. C. R. 451, distinguished. Shaw v. Caducell, 17 S. C. R. 357.

Mortgage from Partner—Extension of Inne—Extension of Inne—Extension of Josh — Contract.]

Partnership by Estoppel.]—When a person, not in fact a partner, authorizes his name to be there is a the firm name of a partner, and there is a life firm name of a partner to any one who know, and the person so authorizing its use; but a partnership by estoppel or by holding out will not be created if the real position of affairs is known to the creditor. Judgment in 21 O, R, 683 recersed in part. McLean v. Clark, 20 A. R.

Action against the defendant S. W., as a member of the firm of S. W. & Son, on promposory notes made by the firm in favour of the plaintiff. The defence was that the defendant had retired from the firm long before the notes were made, and, although his son had carried on the business under the same firm name, he, S. W., had no interest in it; also that at the most he could be liable only in respect to the business of a general country store, which was the business of the firm ing and selling real estate and investing in securities, which business his son alone had carried on, and in respect of which the notes in question were given;—Held, that public notice of the dissolution of the partnership between the defendant and his son had not been given; that the defendant was aware that his name still alpeared as a member of the firm on the bill-heads and in other ways; that he was aware of the the defendant was therefore liable on the notes. Wigle v. Williams, 24 S. C. R. 713.

Payment to Firm — Deduction of Sum Due by Partner, 1 — A. and B., partners, agreed to sell to C. 500 barrels of flour at so much per barrel, to be paid per 100 barrels after the delivery, and upon the production of the wharfinger's receipt. The son of A. (one of the partners) came to C. with the wharfinger's receipt for 100 barrels; C. gave him a cheque for the amount due in favour of the lime, and took his receipt. As the son was leaving C.'s store, C.'s clerk reminded him that a private note of A.'s to C. for £40 was then due and unpaid. A.'s son, with the proceeds of C.'s cheque, took up the note of £40. B. the other partner, in consequence of this application of the money of the firm by A.,

refused to send C. any more flour till the £40 was made good to him. C. then sued A. and B. and recovered:—Held, that the payment to A.'s son, under the circumstances, was such a payment to the partnership as acquitted C. upon the whole sum paid. Semble, that if it could have been shewn by B. that C. paid A.'s son upon the previous understanding that A.'s private debt was to be retained out of the cheque given to the firm, the son's receipt would not have discharged C. from the repayment of the £40 to the firm. Brunskill v. Chumasero, 5 U. C. R. 474.

Purchase of Goods for Use of Partner—Scope of Business.]—Where a partner without collusion gives orders in the name of the firm for goods in the use of which he is himself solely interested, and the goods are of such a nature that strangers cannot tell whether they might not be for the joint business of the firm, such orders will bind the partners. Simpson v. McDonough, 1 U. C. R. 157.

Retiring Partner-Notice of Retirement -Estoppel. - The plaintiffs received from their traveller an order for goods from the their travelier an order for goods from the firm of C. Bros., hotelkeepers. Before they delivered the goods they became aware by means of a mercantile agency that a partnership had existed under the name of C. and that S. L. C. was one of the members of it, and they were at the same time informed partnership still existed. They that the shipped and charged the goods, and also goods subsequently ordered, to C. Bros. As a matter of fact, however, the partnership did not exist at the time the first order was given, S. L. C. having retired from the business, and the plaintiffs had had no dealings with the firm while it was in existence. No public notice was given of the dissolution; S. L. C. continued to live at the hotel except when he was absent on his own business; the lamp with the name of C. Bros. continued at the door; the liquor license in the name of C. Bros, continued to hang in the barroom; and letter-paper with the heading "C. Bros., proprietors," continued to be handed to customers:—Held, that where a known member of a firm retires from it, and credit is afterwards given to the firm by a person who has had no previous dealings with it, but has become previous dealings with it, but has become aware as one of the public that it existed, and has not become aware of his retirement, the retiring member of the firm is liable unless he shews that he has given reasonable public notice of his retirement; and, as such notice was not given here, S. L. C. was liable, not only for the goods first, but for those subsequently, ordered, no notice of the retirement having ever been given. Reid v. Coleman, 19 O. R.

Stock Subscription—Authority to Bind Firm—Calls—Creditors—Pleading.]—To an action by creditors of a railway company against shareholders, under the Railway Act. s. 80, defendants pleaded, on equitable grounds, in substance: 2. That the company was incorporated to construct their road from B. to

D., with a capital of £500,000; that they entered into a contract with the plaintiffs and others to make a portion of it, and instructed them to proceed, without having enough stock subscribed to afford a reasonable expectation that they would obtain subscriptions for the whole, or for enough to give a reasonable hope that they would be able to complete the line: that this contract was afterwards abandoned and another made with the plaintiffs for a smaller portion of the line; that the sum required for this last contract exceeded what could reasonably have been expected from the stock subscriptions, which had since proved insufficient to pay it; that when they entered into these contracts the company had no means and no reasonable hope of obtaining the means to complete the whole line, of which the plaintiffs then had notice; that no portion of the road had been completed; that the plainjudgment was obtained upon the last contract; that defendants never consented to the construction, or to any contract for the construction, of any portion of the railway without the whole stock having been subscribed for; and that they never waived the im-plied condition on which they subscribed, namely, that they were only to be liable provided the whole stock was subscribed for; and so they said they never were shareholders, nor liable to pay for their shares. 3. That the defendants (three in number) at the time of the alleged subscription were in partnership as anged subscription were in partnership as ironmongers; that by the terms of their co-partnership no one of them could bind the others by such a subscription without their consent; that the subscription was signed by , one of them, in the name of the firm, without the consent of G., another of the partners, but on the express condition that unless he should ratify it the same should not bind any of them, and that G. refused to ratify; and defendants denied that they had ever paid anything on account of the shares, as alleged in the declaration:—Held, on demurrer, both pleas bad; for, as to the first, the facts alleged would clearly not entitle defendants to perpetual injunction, if to any relief, in equity; and as to the second, though one partner could not bind the others in such a matter, it should have been averred that when the calls were made upon the defendants as alleged, they refused to pay on the ground that they were not shareholders or liable. Semble, that the second plea was had also, as being pleaded as a defence by all, when it was a defence for C, only, by reason of the facts pleaded. Moore v. Garney, 21 U. C. R. 127.

Undertaking to Indemnify — Scope of Parturvising — Intervent — Consideration — Parties. |— Action against K. and M., alleging in the first count that defendants promised the plaintiff that if he would refrain from suing one F. in respect of certain matters stated, and would see G. and D. instead, defendants would indemnify the plaintiff against any loss, costs, or charges, which he might sustain by reason of bringing such action, and would, in the event of failure to recover from G. and D. the value of certain goods taken from the plaintiff, which constituted the plaintiff scause of action against them, repay to the plaintiff the price paid by him to F. for said goods. The second count alleged that the plaintiff purchased goods from F. as assignee in insolvency of W. and K.; that certain creditors of W. and K., disputting F!s right to sell, had taken the goods from teplaintiff.

who had sued these creditors and their bailiff who may she mese creaters and their online for such taking, and the defendants in such action having obtained a verdict, a new trial had been granted to the plaintiff; that defend-ants, being creditors of W. and K., and so interested in maintaining F's title, requested the plaintiff to proceed with the action, and promised, if he would do so, to indemnify him against the costs then incurred or to be incurred, and to pay him the value of said goods in case he should fail to recover in said action or to collect the same from G. and D.; that the plaintiff, in consideration of defendants promise, promised defendants to proceed with said action, which otherwise he would not have done, and recovered judgment therein, but was unable to collect it; yet that defend ants had not kept their promise. As to the first count, it appeared that the promise, if made at all, was made without the knowledge of defendant K., and that the transaction out of which the promise arose was one in which a firm composed of K, and B, only, in which M. had never been a partner (though he was a partner in the firm of K., B., & M.), were alone interested:—Held, that neither of the defendants was liable, for as to K. the promise defendants was liable, for as to K. the promise was not one relating to the business of the partnership, so that B. could bind him by it; and as to M. B., as a partner in the firm of K., B., & M., could not bind that firm in a matter in which they had no interest. As to the second count:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover, for the reasons already given, and further, because no sufficient consideration appeared for the alleged promise, the evidence shewing that defendants were not creditors of W. and K. at all. Macklin v. Kerr, 28 C. P. 90.

See Jones v. Brown, 9 C. P. 201.

VII. LIMITED PARTNERSHIP UNDER 12 VICT. c. 75 (C. S. C. c. 60.) See R. S. O. 1897 c. 151.

Creation of General Partnership by Conduct — Consent — Contribution — Indemnity. —Although parties may enter into an undertaking intending to form a limited partnership only, still they may act in such a manner, either knowingly or unknowingly, that a general partnership may be created as to third parties; and when this occurs with the consent and concurrence of all the parties, the effect may be to make them answerable not only as to the third parties, but as between themselves. Patterson v. Holland, 6 Gr. 414.

Although the members of a limited partnership may so act as to create a general partnership not only as to third persons, but also inter set still. If the acts creating such a general partnership as to the world are done by some of the partners without the knowledge or consent, or against the consent, of the others, they will not be entitled to contribution from the others, but will be liable to indemnify them against the consequence of the acts so done. Ib.

Pleading — General Partner—Sufficiency of Allegation, 1—Defendant was described in the declaration as the general partner of the firm of D. B. & Co., and evidence was given that the steamer was understood to be owned by D. B. & Co.:—Held, sufficient to charge defendant, there being no plea in abatement. Howland v. Bethune, 13 U. C. R. 270.

Special Partners - Contribution-Cash out - False Statement,1 - The Act requires the special partners to contribute actual ash payments to the capital of the firm, and if any false statement be made in the certifia any idea statement be made in the certificate filed, all the partners are to be liable for the debts of the firm. Whittemore v. Macdonell, 6 C. P. 547.

One of the special partners paid by bills of exchange the sum specified in the certificate as cash:-Held, that the special partners became, in consequence, liable for the debts of the firm 1b.

Contribution—Cash Payment—Deficiency-Winding-up-Profits of Partner.]-A large number of persons agreed to form themselves into a limited partnership; but several of them, instead of paying in the amounts of their contributions to the partnergave promissory notes therefor. Upon a bill filed by some of the partners seeking to compel their co-partners to contribute towards making up a large deficiency, ascer-tained on the winding-up of the affairs of the company :- Held, that the circumstances which had transpired rendered the parties general partners not only as to third parties, but also as between themselves. Patterson Holland, 7 Gr. 1.

One of the members of a limited partnership was appointed manager of the business, and while so acting furnished from his shop goods for the partnership, upon which he charged the usual trade profits:—Held, that prima facie, these transactions could not be sustained. Ib.

- Contribution-Cash Payment-Representations.]—Under 12 Vict. c. 75, ss. 2, 4, the money to be contributed by the special partners must be actually paid in cash, or they will be liable as general partners. Where the hote sned on was signed T. & Co., and it was asserted that the firm was a limited partnership, composed of T. as general and W. as special partner, but it appeared that W., when he gave the note, had represented to the payee that he was a partner, and had an interest in the business:—Held, sufficient to warrant the jury in finding W. equally liable with T. Watts v. Taft, 16 U. C. R. 256.

scription of Business.]—A. and B. formed a limited partnership, A. to be the general partner, and B. the special, contributing £750. B. beld A.'s notes for that sum, which he gave up to A. by way of payment:—Held, not a payment in money within the statute. Held, also, that a description of the business to be carried on as that of "general dealers" was in-ried on as that of "general dealers" was insufficient. Quære, whether under a plea of non fecit to a note signed by the firm, defendant was entitled to shew a limited partership: but where he was allowed to do so-Held, that the plaintiff might, in answer, ob ject to the description of the business: an semble, that he might also object that the spe-cial partner had not paid in his share. Bene-dict v. Van Allen, 17 U. C. R. 234.

Interference-Effect of-Nature of Business.] — Assumpsit by plaintiffs as indorsees of a note made by D. B., under the name of D. B. & Co., as the general partner of a limited partnership under 12 Vict. c. 75, payable to H. or order, and indorsed by H. and the two other defendants, P. and M. The company was formed about 1849 for the purpose of building and running steamboats, and was composed of eighty-three subscribers, D. B. being the general partner, and B., one of the plaintiffs, one of the special partners:

—Held, that the business in which the parties were engaged might properly be the subject of a limited partnership under the statute. Held, also, that the acts of interference on the part of the plaintiff B., as mentioned in the case, and the controlling power exercised over the business by the committee of which B. was chairman, were such as to render him liable as a general partner, and therefore that, being bound by the partnership signature as maker, he could not recover against the in-dorsers. Semble, that when a special partner has by any such acts become a general part-ner, under s. 14, he is so for all purposes, as regards the relations between himself and the other partners, and not merely as respects his liability to creditors. Bouces v. Holland, 14 U. C. R. 316.

- Formation of Part-Interference nership.]-Where defendants are charged as general partners, having become so liable by intermeddling, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to shew that the limited partnership was regularly formed under the statute:—Held, that in this case the evidence of interference was sufficient to establish defendants' liability. Davis v. Bowes, 15 U. C. R. 280.

Interference - Liability Continuing.]—Where a special partner has once reliefered himself liable as a general partner under s. 14, by interference, he continues so liable, and is not relieved after he has ceased to intermedile. Hutchison v. Bowcs. 15 U. C. R. 156.

— Interference—Liability for Debts,]
—The special partners elected a board of directors to advise the general partner, the mem-bers of which board interfered in the transaction of the business of the firm, especially during the absence of the sole general partner in England:—Held, that the members of the board became liable for the debts of the firm. Whittemore v. Macdonell, 6 C. P. 547.

VIII. PARTNERSHIP AND SEPARATE ESTATE.

Administration of Partner's Estate-Claim against Partnership — Action against Surviving Partner—Indemnity.]—At law, as in equity, before the Judicature Act, a partnership debt was, in strictness, joint and not several, and upon the death of one partner the only liability existing at law was that of the surviving partner; the estate of the deceased partner being only made available through the equities existing in favour of the surviving partner, which the partnership creditors were allowed to make use of: and the Act has not converted into a joint and several debt that converted into a joint and several debt that which had theretofore been merely joint. Kendall v. Hamilton, 4 App. Cas. 504, and In re Hodgson, 31 Ch. D. 177, followed. And in an action by creditors of a partnership against the surviving partner and the administratrix of the estate of the deceased partner, the name of the administratrix was struck out, leaving the creditors to pursue their remedy against the estate in a proceeding pending for its administration, and to proceed concurrently with the action against the surviving partner. Held, also, that a claim of the surviving partner against the estate of the deceased for indemnity or relief over in respect of the plaintiffs' claim, must be made in the administration proceedings and not in the action under the third party procedure. Held, further, that the right of the surviving partner against the administratrix, in her personal capacity, to recover upon a mortgage given by her as a security to him against his liability to the plaintiffs, was neither a right to indemnity nor to relief over, because it was a right which might be enforced before he was damnified, there being no reference on the face of the instrument to the liability asserted by the plaintiffs; and, therefore, she could not be brought in as a party. Campbell v. Farley, 18 P. R. 97.

Claims of Creditors — Valuing Securities.] — A partner who has individually joined as a maker in a promissory note of his firm for their accommodation is not "indirectly or secondarily liable" for the firm to the holder within the meaning of 59 Viet. c. 22, s. 1, s.-s. 1 (O.), but is primarily liable, and in claiming against his insolvent estate in administration the holder need not value his security in respect to the firm's liablity. Bull v. Oltavea Trust and Deposit Co., 28 O. R. 519.

- Claim of Co-partners - Fraud.]-The rule in equity, as well as in bankruptcy. is, that the separate estate of a partner is to be applied first in discharge of his separate debts; and, in applying this rule, money paid by co-partners on a liability created by the fraud of the partner towards them is treated as a separate debt, provable and payable pari passu with the claims of the other separate creditors of such partner in case of his death insolvent. The mere liability so fraudulently created cannot be proved against the separate estate as a debt until the liability is paid, or until something equivalent to payment takes place. Where the fraud was in the use of the partnership name on bills, the other partners becoming insolvent, the holders of the bills proved them against the partnership estate. The assignee, in a suit for administering the separate estate of the guilty partner, claimed to prove the amount against the separate estate; but the master restricted the proof to the expected dividend from the partnership estate and the separate estate of the surviving partners:—Held, that the assignee was not entitled to prove for a larger sum. Baker v. Dauebarn, 19 Gr. 113.

— Joint and Separate Creditors,]—In the administration by the court of the insolvent estate of a deceased partner the surviving partner is entitled to rank for a balance due to him in respect of partnership transactions and partnership debts paid by him, when, apart from his claim, there would be no surplus available for partnership creditors. In re Ruby, Trusts Corporation of Ontario v. Ruby, 24 A. R. 509.

Assignment by Firm for Benefit of Cheditors—General Property of Partners.] —Held, by the Queen's bench division, that a assignment under R. S. O. 1887 c. 124, for the general benefit of creditors, made by the members of a trading partnership, in the words mentioned in s. 4, vests in the assignee all the properties of each of the partners, several as well as joint. But, by the court of appeal, that the benefit of a covenant by a third person to indemuify one of the partners against a mortgage does not pass to the assignee. Ball v. Tennant, 25 O. R. 50, 21 A. R. 602.

Assignment by Partner for Benefit of Creditors — Rights of Partnership Creditors.]—Where an assignment for the benefit of creditors is made by an assignor carrying on business by himself, creditors having claims against him for goods sold to a firm in which he was formerly a partner are entitled to rank against his estate ratably with creditors having claims for goods sold to the assignor alone. Section 5 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 124 does not apply to such a case, but only to the case of an assignor who has both separate estate and joint estate. Macdonald v. Balfour, 20 A. R. 404.

Right of Assignce to Examine Former Employee of Firm.]—When a partnership has been dissolved a former employee or servant of the firm may be examined, under the Assignments and Preferences Act. R. S. O. 1897 c. 147, s. 34, by the assignee of the separate estate of one of the partners, as to the affairs of such estate. Re Guinane, 18 P. It, 208.

Creditors — Priorities — Preference.]—
The court has jurisdiction, and will exercise it, to prevent a creditor of one partner obtaining an undue preference over the creditors of a firm by means of proceedings in court.
Felan v, McGill, 3 Ch. Ch. 68.

Execution against Partner—Scisure of Partnership Property.]—Under an execution against an individual partner the sheriff can seize the partnership goods and sell the execution debtor's share, whatever may be the difficulties which arise thereafter; and the Judicature Act has made no difference in this respect. Harrison v. Harrison, 14 P. R. 436.

Insolvency of Partnership and of Partner—Transfer of Interest — Rights of Several Assignees, I — A partnership existing between two persons was, within three months of the issue of a writ of attachment in insulance, discalled and one of the next. in insolvency, dissolved, and one of the partners transferred his interest in the partner-ship property to the other, but at the time of such transfer the firm, as well as the partner individually, were insolvent, which they were aware of or had probable cause for believing. Afterwards, the remaining partner and the firm were placed in insolvency by compulsory irin were placed in insolvency by compusory liquidation and a different assignee appointed for each:—Held, that the transfer was fraudulent and void, and that nothing passed under it; and that the assignee of the firm, therefore, and not of the separate partner, was entitled to the effects of the partnership; and an order made by the county Judge for the transfer of such property from the separate to the joint assignee was confirmed. Held, that, even if the partnership creditors could prove against the effects in the hands of the separate assignee, so that all that was required was a direction to that effect, as the making of the order was purely a matter of discretion, the court would not interfere. In re Caton and Cole, 26 C. P. 308.

Judicial Abandonment-Dissolution-- Subrogation - Confusion of Composition — Subrogation — Conjuston of Rights—Compensation.]—A partner in a com-mercial firm which made a judicial abandon-ment was indebted to the firm at the time of abandonment in a large amount overdrawn upon his personal account. Subsequently he made and carried out a composition with the creditors of the firm, and with the approval of the court the curator transferred to him, by an assignment in authentic form, "all the assets and estate generally of the said late firm, as they existed at the time the said curator was appointed." At the same time the creditors discharged both him and his partners from all liability in respect to the partnership:—Held, that the effect of the judicial abandonment was to transfer to the curator not only the partnership estate, but also the separate estate of each partner, as well as the partners' individual rights as between themselves. Held, that the assignment of the estate by the curator and the discharge by the creditors, taken together, had the effect of releasing all the partners from the firm debts, but vested all the rights which had been transferred by the abandonment in the transferce personally, and could not revive the indi-vidual rights of the partners as between themselves, and that, in consequence, any debt owing by the transferee to the partnership at the time of the abandonment became extinguished by confusion. MacLean v. Stewart. 25 S. C. R. 225. Reversed by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, 28th July, 1896 (un-

Partner as Surety—Cross-examination— Liabilities of Firm.]—A surety on a bond, who is a member of a mercantile partnership, but justifies on his own individual property, not on his share in the partnership, is not compellable, upon cross-examination on his affidavit of justification, to disclose the liabilities of the partnership. Douglas v. Blackey, 14 P. R. 504.

See Wallace v. James, 5 Gr. 163, post XI. 2 (c).

IX. POWERS OF PARTNERS.

To Assign Debts.]—C., one of two partners, in consideration of $100 paid to him, assigned to the plaintiff a debt of $118 due to the firm for goods sold to the defendant in the ordinary course of business, by a deed made and executed in his individual name, without his partner's knowledge, but by which he professed to transfer all debts due to the two partners, naming them, from the defendant. At the trial his partner swore that he considered himself bound by the assignment, and that he thought that C. had authority to make it:—Held, that the assignment was within the scope of the partnership business, and covered by the agency of one partner for the other. Held, also, that, even in the absence of implied authority, the subsequent ratification was sufficient. Held, also, that the fact that the transfer was by deed did not deprive the of its effect as a written contract. Houeld v. McFarland, 2 A. R. 31.

To Mortgage Stock-in-trade.] — One partner of a firm authorized the other to obtain an indorser, in order to raise money from a bank:—Held, that, if express authority was required, this empowered the partner to mortgage all the stock-in-trade of the firm to secure such indorser. Paterson v. Maughan, 39 U. C. R. 371.

To Pledge Goods—Lien of Pledgec.]—A partner intrusted with possession of goods of his firm for the purpose of sale may, either as partner in the business or as factor for the firm, pledge them for advances made to him personally, and the lien of the pledgee will remain as valid as if the security had been given by the absolute owner of the goods notwith-standing notice that the contract was with an agent only. Dingwall v. McBean, 30 S. C. R. 441.

To Sell Partnership Lands.] — See Crain v. Rapple, 22 O. R. 519, 20 A. R. 291.

See Reid v. Smith, 2 O. R. 69, ante VI. 3.

X. REGISTRATION OF CO-PARTNERSHIPS.

See R. S. O. 1897 c. 152.

Necessity for Registration — Notice—Mere Change in Firm—Dissolution, 1—T. N. trading in co-partnership with J. B. N. under the style of T. N. & Son, retired from the firm, which had been registered in accordance with the Registration Act of 1869, 33 Vict. c. 20 (O.), under an agreement that J. W. should succeed him; that the style of the new partnership, which was to be composed of J. B. N. and W., should be N. & Co.; and that the new firm should assume all the liabilities of the old to its creditors; but no declaration of this change was filed. Subsequently a note was signed by J. B. N. in the name of T. N. & Son, and accepted by the plaintiffs, who knew that the firm of T. N. & Son had been dissolved, in renewal of certain notes made before the retirement of T. N.:—Held, in the Queen's bench, 43 U. C. R. 447, that there was merely a change in the membership and alteration in the name of the partnership, which should have been registered under the statute, and that T. N. therefore was liable. Held, reversing this judgment, that the evidence shewed an entire dissolution, to which 33 Vict. c. 20 did not apply, and that T. N. was therefore not liable. Bank of Toronto v. Nixon, 4. A. R. 346.

Penalty — Publication of Neuspaper.]— The business of printing and publishing a newspaper constitutes the partners employed in it a partnership "for trading purposes," within the meaning of 33 Vict. c. 20, s. 1 (0), and liable to the penalty for not registering such partnership. Pinkerton q. t. v. Ross, 33 U. C. R. 508.

Qui Tam Action for Penalties for not Registering.]—See Chaput v. Robert, 14 A.

Registered Declaration—Evidence Contradicting—Penal Action.]—Section 6 of 33 Vict. c. 20 (0.), by which the declaration of the names, &c., of a partnership required to be filed under that Act is made incontrovertible, does not apply to the case of a penal action brought against a member of the firm for neglecting to file such declaration. The preamble and general tenor of the Act shew that it was intended for cases in which a claim is made against the firm, or in which the part nership is concerned. Where, therefore, such declaration was filed on the 6th July, 1870, and stated that the partnership existed since the 23rd August, 1860;—Held, that it was competent for defendants to prove that in fact it was not formed until the 1st July, 1870, so that the declaration was filed in time. Cassady q, t, v, Henry, 31 U. C. R. 345.

Evidence Contradicting.]—See Caldwell v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America, 24 S. C. R. 263.

XI. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF PARTNERS BETWEEN THEMSELVES.

1. At Law.

Balance on Settlement of Accounts.]—When on a dissolution one partner has admitted a balance due his co-partner, assumpsit will lie although there be no promise to pay. McNicol v. McEleon, 3 O. S. 485.

An action cannot be maintained by one partner against another, on an offer made on arranging for a dissolution to pay a certain sum if he were allowed to keep the books and collect the debts. Burgess v. Fanning, 4 O. 8, 188.

A., one of two partners, entered in the partnership books: "I have this day (5th April, 1841) examined our books and find them correct, and a balance due my co-partner of £288." No promise to pay the balance was proved by B., the co-partner, and subsequently to that entry the two partners continued the business, and afterwards finally settled and dissolved:—Held, that B. had no right of action against A., upon the balance stated in the entry. Allan v. Garven. 4 U. C. R. 242.

An unsettled balance due by one partner to another cannot be attached, but if the balance has been fully ascertained by a settlement of accounts it may be attached. Campbell v, Peden, 3 L. J. 68.

Dower—Partnership Lands—Pleading.]—
Dower, Plea, on equitable grounds, that the land was part of the partnership property and the stock in trade of the husband and 8, trading together as merchants, and was purchased by them as such partners, and paid for out of their partnership money, and used in the said partnership business, and that the husband was never seised thereof otherwise than as such partner:—Held, that the plea sufficiently shewed the land to have been purchased for partnership purposes, and formed a good defence, Conger v. Platt, 25 U. C. R.

Money Had and Received.] — See Lefebvre v. Aubry, 26 S. C. R. 602.

Promissory Note—Advance of Partnership Funds.—A member of a joint stock company, not incorporated, lending with the assent of the company out of the joint fund to another member, and taking from him a promissory note payable to himself individually for repayment, can recover on the note, nowithstanding the funds were advanced from the common stock. Comer v. Thompson, 4 O. S. 256.

Trespass—Executor of Deceased Partner—Salc.;—The executor of a deceased partner in trade is tenant in common with the surviving partners of the partnership property, and the surviving partners cannot sue him in trespass 4 for a wrongful sale and conversion of the whole of the partnership property against their will. Strathy v. Crooks, 2 U. C. R. 51.

Trover—Conversion.] — One partner cannot maintain trover against another for converting the partnership property. Smith v. Book, 5 O. S. 556.

Conversion—Sale.]—One tenant in common of chattels may maintain trover against the other for a sale of the property, where such sale is plainly intended not for the objects of the joint owners, such as to pay partnership debts, &c., but in order to deprive the other owner of all interest in the property or proceeds. In this case the defendant, who had worked and stocked a farm in partnership with A., after A.'s death sold the stock and crops on the farm, and threatened to go off with the money, unless the plaintiff (A.'s administratrix) would set with him on his own terms. After action brought he applied part of the proceeds towards payment of the debts, but until then he had never pretended that the sale was made with that object. The court being left to draw inferences of fact:—Held, that such sale was a conversion, and that the plaintiff might maintain trover. Rathcell v. Rathcell, 26 U. C. R. 179.

Conversion — Sheriff—Pleading.]—
In an action by a sheriff under the Absconding Debtors Act, against a partner of the absconding debtor, for converting the joint property: — Semble, that, inasmuch as there may be a conversion by one co-partner of the joint property, it was not necessary to allege more than the fact of conversion, leaving it to be shewn by the evidence that there was such a destruction of the joint property as would make it between persons so situated a conversion. Taylor v. Brown, 17 C. P. 387.

The Retention by Partner.]—The plaintiff, having compiled a book, caused it to be printed by a firm consisting of himself and defendant, on paper furnished by them; and defendant having refused to give up to him the copies thus printed, he brought trover:—Semble, that he could not recover, for the property belonged to the firm, and defendant had as much right to retain as the plaintiff to take it. Doupe v. Stewart, 28 U. C. R. 192.

— Vendee of Partner—Fraud.]—One partner may recover in trover the value of partnership goods from the vendee of his copartner where there has been a fraudulent collusion between the vendor and vendee; but each partner has a power of sale over the effects of the firm, and the mere omission of the vendor to consult his co-partner is no ground of fraud as against the vendee:—Held, therefore, that in this case the plaintiff could not recover the value of the partnership goods. For v. Rose, 10 U. C. R. 16.

See, under next sub-head, Garven v. Allan, 3 Gr. 238; Newton v. Doran, 3 Gr. 353; Mitchell v. Lister, 21 O. R. 318.

2. In Equity and Since the Judicature Act.

(a) Account.

Costs—Improper Conduct of Defendant— Action at Law.]—Where a memorandum had been made in partnership books and signed by one partner, A., stating that he was indebted to his co-partner, who subsequently sued for that sum, notwithstanding that it was evident from the entries in the books that it was not due: the court, upon a bill filed by A., directed an account of the partnership dealings to be taken, with costs to be paid by defendant up to the hearing. Garven v. Allan, 3 Gr. 238.

—Increase by Hearing—Taking Accounts,1—In a partnership suit defendant's answer stated the terms of the partnership. The plaintiff, not accepting the statement, took the case to a hearing, instead of moving for decree, and he proved a slight difference, which involved a further charge of £4 only against the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff should pay the extra costs occasioned by the hearing. The rule which charges the costs of taking partnership accounts on both parties is not to be applied where it would be tantamount to the denial of any remedy. In a partnership suit the reference embraced private as well as partnership transactions; there were no partnership assets; the suit did not involve the administration of a partnership estate. The defendant claimed a large balance to be due to him, while the result had been a report for $418.74 in favour of the plaintiff; and there were no special circumstances in favour of the defendant. The court charged him with the costs of taking the account. Woodans v. Vansickle, 17 Gr. 451.

— Prejudice of Creditors.]—A bill was filed to establish a partnership, and the partnership being proved, the usual accounts were directed, including an account of the claims of creditors.—Held, that the costs of the suit should not be paid out of the fund to the prejudice of creditors. Bingham v. Smith, 16 Gr. 373.

— Scale of—Amount in Question.]—
On a reference to take an account of partnership dealings the report found that the plaintiff had contributed to the partner-ship capital 887.39, and that there was due from the defendant to the plaintiff 843.74. The taxing officer taxed the plaintiff 843.74. The taxing officer taxed the plaintiff 843.74. The taxing officer taxed the plaintiff 843.74. Consider the same within C. S. U. C.
c. 15, 8, 34, 8, 8, 1. On appeal, the taxing officer's ruling was reversed. Blancy v. MeGrath, 9 P. R. 447.

— Untrue Statement.]—Where, on the dissolution of a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant, it was agreed that the defendant should wind up the centern and the plaintiff having demanded a statement of action, the defendant render that the defendant render that the defendant render that the defendant was indebted to him on account of partnership assets received, which the defendant denied, and the plaintiff succeeded:—Held, that the defendant must pay the costs of the suit. Carmichael v. Sharp, 1 O. R. 381.

Costs in Partnership Actions.]—See Costs, IV.

Discovery.]—See Mack v. Dobie, 14 P. R. 465.

Settled Accounts — Releases—Opening up. |—One of two members of a firm not possessing business capacity, the other managed and controlled all the affairs, presenting at intervals to his partner statements of accounts, which the latter signed on being assured of their correctness. In 1891 mutual releases of all claims and demands against each other, based upon statements so submitted by the active partner, were executed by each. In an action against the active partner to set aside these releases and open up the accounts.—Held, that all it was necessary to establish was, that in the accounts as settled there were such errors and mistakes as would inflict material injustice upon the plaintiff if the accounts should be held to be closed. West v. Benjamin, 29 S. C. R. 282.

Suit for Account—Breach of Articles—Business Done by Partner—Profits.]—Where articles of partnership bound the parties to be just and true to each other, and to devote their time diligently to the concerns of the firm, and not to engage in any other business; and it appeared that after notice of dissolution had been given, one of the partners had taken orders on his own account to be filled by him after the termination of the partnership.—Held, that his co-partner had no equity to compel him to account for the profits of the business thus done by him. The remedies in such a case are by injunction, or by action for damages. Denn v. MacDowell, 8 Ch. D. 345, followed. Mitchell v. Lister, 21 O. R. 318.

— Business in Name of One Partner.]
—An agreement between two that they should carry on business as co-partners in the sole name of one of them, the other being in debt, and wishing by this means to keep the property from his creditors, does not exempt the partner whose name was used from rendering an account of the partnership dealings to his co-partner. Brigham v. Smith, 3 E. & A. 46.

Delay in Filing—Repudiation of Partnership.]—Where a plaintiff filed a bill alleging that he and defendant had agreed to be partners in certain government contracts; and it appeared that the defendant had repudiated the partnership as soon as the contracts were to be completed in a year, and that the bill was not filed for about eighteen months after the repudiation; the court offered the plaintiff a reference to the master to inquire the cause of the delay, or that his bill for an account and to restrain defendant from receiving moneys, should be dismissed without costs. Haggart v. Alfan, 2 Gr. 407.

— Division of Assets—Mandate.]—In the Province of Quebec, when there is no other arrangement between the partners, the partition of the property of a commercial partnership must be made according to the rules laid down in the civil code in relation to the partition of successions, in so far as they can be made to apply. Upon the dissolution of a partnership, where one of the partners has been intrusted with the collection of moneys due as the mandatory of the others, any of his co-partners may bring suit against him directly either for an account under the mandate, or for money had and received. Lefebvre v. Aubry, 26 S. C. R. 502.

See Allen v. Fairfax Cheese Co., 21 O. R.

by means of a contre-lettre became interested by means of a controller became in the city of Montreal, effected by one P. S. M. In December, 1886, G. B. brought an action against P. S. M. to have a sale made by the latter to one Barsalou declared fraudulent, and the new purchaser restrained from paying the balance due to the parties named in the deed of sale. A plea of compensation was filed, and pending the action a sequestrator was appointed, to whom Barsalou paid over the money. In September, 1887, another action was instituted by G. B. against P. S. M. asking for an account of the different real estate transactions they had conformably to the terms of the contre-lettre. To this action a plea of compensation was also filed :-Held, that the plea of compensation was unfounded. G. B. having the right to put an end to P. S. M.'s mandate by a direct action, and therefore, until the account which had been ordered in the second action had been rendered, the moneys should remain in the hands of the sequestrator appointed with the consent of the parties. Bury v. Murphy, 22 S. C. R.

ships.]—Three partners carried on business ships.]—Three partners carried on business for a short period, when one retired; the other two continued for some time afterwards, when a dissolution took place, but no settlement of the accounts of either of the co-partnerships was had. One partner filed a bill against the other two for an account of the partnership dealings of both firms. To this bill a demurrer by the partner who had retired, on the ground of multifariousness, was allowed with costs. Crooks v. Smith, 1 Gr. 356.

Costs. — Parties — Vendee of Partner—Costs. — One of several partners, engaged in the purchase of wheat and flour, sold half of his interest to a third party, to which the other partner, who supplied all the funds in the transactions of the firm, assented, and a loss having occurred upon a re-sale, he filed a bill against the original co-partner and his vendee for an account and payment by them of one-half of the loss sustained on such re-sale:—Held, that the vendee was not, by what had taken place, constituted a partner of the plaintiff, and the bill as against him was dismissed with costs, but an account directed as against the other defendant with costs to the hearing. Mair v. Bacon. 5 Gr. 338.

Proof. — Profits—Right to Share—Burden of Proof.]—In June, 1874, the plaintiff and defendant by writing entered into an agreement for supplying together the iron for the Grand Junction Railway, and providing for the division of the surplus or profits. No division of the profits was made, and the defendant went on investing the receipts from that enterprise in other contracts, and the plaintiff claimed a like interest in them also, which the defendant denied his right to:—Held, that the onus of negativing such right of the plaining rested on the defendant, and having failed to negative his right to such share, the court declared him entitled thereto, and directed a reference to take the accounts between the parties. Cameron v. Bickford, 11 A. R. 52. This case was reversed by privy council. Not reported.

The fact that the plaintiff, who had for some years acted as legal adviser of the defendant, was appointed one of the directors of the railway company at the same time that he claimed to be interested with the defendant in the contract for the construction of the road, formed no ground for the defendant refusing to account to the plaintiff for his share of the profits of the enterprise. Ib.

Sale of Interest to Co-partner—Falsifying Books.]—One member of a co-partner—Blooks.]—One member of a co-partnership was intrusted with the sole management of the books and finances of the company. The books, kept by the book-keeper of the company, shewed him in advance to the firm, while in reality they should have shewn a balance against him for a considerable amount. This partner sold out his interest to one of his co-partners:—Held, that such purchase did not vary the right of the partner to call upon the other to account for moneys not appearing in the books of the co-partner-ship. Kintrea v. Charles, 12 Gr. 117.

Trust—Amendment.]—A bill was filed by a surviving partner against the representatives of the deceased partner, praying an account of certain partnership dealings, to which a demurrer for went of equity was allowed, on the ground that the relief sought was barred by the lapse of more than six years between the death of the deceased partner and the filing of the bill; but leave was given to amend, with the view of shewing that certain lands held by the deceased partner, which had descended to his heir-at-law, had been purchased with partnership assets, and that therefore there was a resulting trust in favour of the plaintiff. McFadgen v. Stewart, 11 Gr. 272.

Statute of Limitations.]—See Cotton v. Mitchell, 3 O. R. 421.

Taking Accounts—Administration Decree—Adding Party.]—Under an administration decree a creditor claimed by virtue of a partnership with the testator. It was objected that the establishment of his claims involved taking the partnership accounts, and they could not be gone into under the decree. The master held that the claim could be entertained, and directed that a third partnership accounts. With an office copy of the decree and notified of the proceedings to take the partnership accounts. Kline v. Kline, 3 Ch. Ch. 137.

Charge—Dissolution.]—Under a decree for taking partnership accounts, a charge unde by the master against one of the partners for his board, &c., with the other, after the dissolution of the partnership:—Held, wrong, and that the objection could be taken on the hearing on further directions. O'Lone v. O'Lone, 2 Gr. 125,

Charges—Interest on Capital Advanced.]—Two partners, W. and M., agreed each to furnish a certain amount of capital wherewith to carry on business together. In pursuance thereof W. did bring in the amount stipulated, but M. bought hi nothing, in a preceding to wind up the partnership estate, with interest on the amount agreed to keep and, which the master refused to charge M.'s representation of the partnership estate. With interest on the amount agreed to allow, and on appeal, his ruling was sustained. Rish-row v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 236, specially referred to, Wilson v. McCarty, 13 C. L. J.

——Charges—Interest on Capital Advancod—Commission on Sales—Objections—Delay.]—In the absence of a special custom or an agreement, interest is not usually allowable to a partner on advances of capital made by him to the partnership, or for partnership purposes. Where parties agreed to purchase goeds on joint account, and at the joint risk, and that one should furnish the funds in the first instance:—Held, that interest could not be charged on the funds so furnished. Jardine v. Hope, 19 Gr. 76.

In such a case a firm in Canada was to advance the funds, and the goods were to be consigned for sale to their firm in Liverpool, which went by a different name:—Held, that they could not charge commission on their sales, Ib.

Three months before the filing of a bill respecting the partnership, accounts had been furnished in which interest and commission were charged, and none of the partners had before suit suggested their objections to those charges:—Held, that they were not precluded by this delay from objecting thereto in the suit. Ib.

Claim for Damages—Misconduct.]
—Under the usual directions for taking partnership accounts, the master may entertain and adjudicate upon a claim by one partner for damages sustained through the misconduct of the other, occasioning the dissolution before the expiration of the term agreed upon. Dampe v. Steucart, 13 Gr. 637.

— Claim of Clerk.]—In a suit to wind up a partnership for alleged misconduct by one partner and the confidential clerk and manager of the business, the court, having reference to the facilities for investigating matters of account before the master, gave the clerk leave to carry in and prove any claim he had against the firm for his services, although it was clear that he had been guilty of gross misconduct, and might have been left to sue at law for his demand, if any; and directed sufficient of the partnership funds to be reserved to satisfy the claim if established. Meaton v, Doran, 3 Gr. 353.

Direction of Master—Executor of Partner.]—The survivor of two partners, after baving continued the business with the personal representative of the deceased partners, filed a bill for an account of the partnership dealings, and a decree was made for that purpose, and in proceeding on that decree the master directed the executor to bring in an account of the partnership dealings between the deceased and the surviving partner;—Held, that the executor was bound to make up the accounts from the books of the partnership in his possession. Strathy v. Crooks, 6 Gr. 162.

Distribution of Assets—Costs.]—In partnership actions, in the absence of special circumstances such as misconduct or negligence, the assets will be applied, first, in payment of creditors, next, in payment of the sum found due to the successful party, and lastly, in payment of the costs of all parties. Hamer v. Giles, 11 Ch. D. 942, followed. Chapman v. Aweell, 14 P. R. 208

Interest—Delay]—When defendant was at the dissolution of a partnership to receive £150 more than the plaintift, and it appeared that a settlement of the accounts had been delayed by the misconduct of defendant:—Held, that he was not entitled to interest on the £150 from the dissolution, O'Lone v. O'Lone, 2 Gr. 125.

— Investments of Partnership—Losses.]
— partnership was formed between two civil engineers and architects, the profits of which were to be divided in shares of three-fifths and two-fifths. During the partnership they invested moneys of the partnership in the purchase of real estate, which resulted in a loss:—Held, that the loss was to be borne by the partners in the same proportion as they were to share the profits and loss of their other business. Storm v. Cumberland, 18 Gr. 245.

— Misrepresentations as to Liabilities— Interest—Profits—Advances to or by Partners—Erection of Buildings—Continuance of Partnership—Sheriff's Sale—Award—Wilful Default.]—The proper method of taking partnership accounts in a very special case, discussed and illustrated. Davidson v. Thirkell, 3 Gr. 330, Allowances made to an incoming partner in respect to misrepresentations made to him by his co-partners, as to the liability of the business when he joined it. Ib.

In such a case the master was held to have jurisdiction to charge the guilty parties with either interest or trade profits, on the advances which such misrepresentations rendered it necessary for the incoming partner to make.

Interest allowed to and against each partner on advances by and to him during the partner-ship. Ib.

One partner, A., was held to have been properly allowed by the master for buildings erected by him for the purposes of the business without the sanction of or reference to his-opartner, during a period that the existence of any partnership between them was not recognized by either; the one, A., affirming it had been put an end to by sheriff's sale, which the other B., denied, affirming on his part that an award was valid, which, amongst other things, put an end to it, and which award A. impeached, the court having afterwards held that the partnership continued notwithstanding both sheriff's sale and award, and having directed the accounts to be taken accordingly. Ib.

It is contrary to the ordinary course to charge partners with what but for their wilful default they would have received. Ib.

Master's Office—Statute of Limitations.]— In a partnership suit it was held that the defence of the Statute of Limitations could not be raised under the common decree directing an account of the partnership dealings and transactions. Carroll v. Eccles, 17 Gr. 529.

Report of Master-Opening up.]-In a partnership suit the usual decree had been made and the master made a general report, finding that a certain balance was due from defendant to plaintiff, but that all the partnership assets had not been realized. After this defendant applied for leave to carry into the master's office and prove a charge and discharge. It appeared that defendant had been guilty of gross negligence, which was not explained, in omitting to bring these papers in; but the court was of opinion that the report was erroneous in finding a sum to be due from the one party to the other before the assets were realized, and the liabilities paid; and as the report could not be acted upon, defendant's application was granted on terms. Smith v. Crooks, 3 Gr. 321.

See Robertson v. Junkin, 26 S. C. R. 192.

(b) Injunction and Receiver.

Injunction — Breach of—Misappropriation of Assets — Following by Receiver,]—Where it was proved that a partner had purchased a house, and a large part of the furniture thereof, with partnership funds, improperly withdrawn by him for that purpose; and such partner, being the defendant in the cause, had withdrawn all the partnership books and papers from the jurisdiction, in breach of an injunction, the court ordered the mother and sister of the defendant, whom he left in possession, to deliver up to the receiver, already appointed, the house and all the furniture, as partnership property. Prentiss v. Brennan, 1 Gr. 484.

Property—Claim by Strangers—Reference.)—Where a receiver of partnership property had been appointed, and certain chattels had been exceed under a sequestration against the defendant for contempt of the injunction, and the chattels so seized were alleged to be the property of the defendant and his co-partner, but it appeared that third persons claimed an interest therein—the plaintiff having moved to sell this property, a reference was directed on such motion (on which the claimants had appeared), to inquire as to their interests, and any further order on the motion was reserved, the parties to the motion electing to have a reference instead of issues to try the questions in dispute. Prentiss v. Brennan, Re Brennan, 2 Gr. 274.

Breach of—Sequestration—Transfer of Security to Strangers—Leave to Attack. —In a suit in which a receiver of partnership effects had been appointed and a sequestration issued against the defendant for contempt, the court retained a motion against third persons for delivery or payment to the receiver or sequestrators of a promisory note, the property of the partnership, transferred subsequently to the issuing of the injunction and sequestration, but before the note became due by the defendant, in a foreign country, the athidavit as to the bona fides of such transfer being contradictory; the court giving leave to file a bill against such third persons. Prentiss v. Brennan, Re Bunker, 2 Gr. 322.

_____Judgment at Law—Relief against— Interim Order—Terms.]—The plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement, under which the defendant was to procure goods, or guarantee the payment for goods, which were to be obtained and sold by the plaintiff for their joint benefit, in certain proportions; and the plaintiff, to secure and indemnify the defendant against all loss in respect thereof, executed a confession of judgment, to be acted upon only in default of plaintiff meeting the payment on such goods. The plaintiff made default, and the defendant entered up judgment and sued our execution. The court dissolved an injunction which had been issued, although upon the construction of the agreement it was doubtful whether a partnership had not been created between the parties; but the defendant (the plaintiff in the execution) having caused certain goods, provided by himself under the agreement, to be levied upon, the court directed that the amount thereof, at cost and charges, should be deducted from the amount of the debt and costs, or that the injunction should be continued in respect of that amount. Watt v. Foster, 4 Gr. 543.

— Judgment on Aveard—Relief against —Error—Interim Order,]—The court will relieve against an award made between partners in ignorance, on the part of the arbitrators and of the remaining partners, of important omissions by the other, the managing partner, in the books of the firm, in consequence of which the award had been too favourable to such managing partner. Wilson v. Richardson, 2 Gr. 448.

An injunction to restrain proceedings on a judgment recovered upon such an award was continued to the hearing, when the ultimate success of the plaintiffs at the hearing was not considered clear, the amount of the judgment being ordered into court. Ib.

Misapplication of Funds—Interim Order—Bill.]—Where a partner in a special contract applies the funds derived from such contract to other contracts, not belonging to such special partnership, an injunction will be granted against him, until the partnership be wound up, although such injunction may not have been prayed for in the original bill. Thibodo v. Scobell, 5 L. J. 117.

Injunction and Receiver—Exclusion of Executor of Partner.]—A surviving partner, by reason of his liability to pay the debts due by the partnership, is entitled to receive all moneys of, and collect all debts due to, and dispose of all the effects of, the firm for that purpose; the representatives of the deceased partner have a right to inspect the books of the partnership, and to be informed of the proceedings of the survivor; and any exclusion of them in these respects will entitle them to an injunction and receiver. Bilton v. Blakely, 6 Gr. 575.

Exclusion of Partner — Refused to Account.] — Where a managing partner was charged, on affidavit of his co-partner, with excluding the latter from access to the books and papers of the partnership, and with not delivering to him accounts, which the partnership articles stipulated for—an injunction and a receiver were granted against such managing partner, though his affidavit denied the principal charges, but not satisfactorily. Prentiss v. Brennan, 1 Gr. 371.

Receiver—Interim Sale of Assets.]—Under special circumstances an order may be made, in an action for the dissolution and winding-up of an insolvent partnership, for the sale of assets by the receiver before the trial. McLaren v. Whiting, 16 P. R. 552.

Misappropriation of Assets by Partner.]—After the dissolution, one partner claimed most of the partnership property as his own by reason of certain misconduct he charged against the plaintiff, and made use of the partnership property in carrying on business on his own account:—Held, that such proceedings were wrong, and entitled the other partner to a receiver. Doupe v. Steucart, 13 (r. 637.

— Partnership Articles—Appointment.]

Where partnership articles provide that on dissolution the partners shall appoint a person to collect the accounts and settle the partnership affairs, the court will, on failure of the parties to agree on some person, appoint a receiver. Mitchell v. Lister, 21 O. R. 22.

See Young v. Huber, 29 Gr. 49; Mason v. Parker, 16 Gr. 81.

(c) Other Cases.

Assets of Partnership-Disposal of, by Partner-Estoppel-Lien.]-In 1867 de-lant S, entered into an agreement with fendant S. fendant S, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for an advance of money to enable him to perform a stipulation in a lease made to him a short time before for the period of seven years by the Rossin House Hotel Company, that he would expend $10,000 in providing furniture, &c., for the hotel. The agreement was as follows: "Said E. D. C. agrees to advance the money necessary to open the Rossin House in Toronto, not exceeding the sum of $10,000, and G. P. S. to pay interest on one-half the amount till repaid to E D. C., and each party to share equally in all profits, articles of furniture, supplies, &c., put in the said house, and E. D. C. to have a in the said house, and E. D. C. to have a chattel mortgage on everything belonging to both parties, until the half of all the money advanced is repaid to E. D. C." After the expiration of the term there were negotia-tions between the plaintiff and S. for a settlement, in the course of which the lat-ter rendered statements to the plaintiff in which he assigned a value to the furniture and treated it as an asset belonging to them jointly. After these negotiations S. continued jointly. After these negotiations S. continued to carry on the business of the hotel without any dissent by the plaintiff, under a new lease which had been granted to him by the hotel company before the expiration of the origi-In 1875, S. becoming embarrassed. a new arrangement was concluded between him and the company, by which he surren-dered the old lease and obtained a new one for the term of ten years; and in consideration of an advance of money and arrears of rent. he executed a bill of sale to the company of the furniture. The lease contained a stipulaton that on certain conditions being performed the furniture should at the end of the term belong to S. Subsequently S. assigned the lease to one I., who had actual notice of the plaintiff's interest in the furniture. Evidence was given to prove that the company had notice of the relation existing between S. and the plaintiff in reference to this furniture. There was no evidence to shew that the plaintiff knew of this transaction until after it was consummated, when he promptly re-pudiated it:—Held, that there being a partnership between plaintiff and S., and they being joint owners of the furniture. S. had no power to sell and convey the plaintiff's interest therein. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not estopped by simply remaining passive from asserting his right to the furniture, and that he was entitled to a lien for any balance that might be due to him on the accounts being taken. Crossman v. Shears. 3 A. R. 583.

Award—Lien—Declaration of —Sale.]— Arbitrators, upon a reference to settle disputes between parties, found the balance due from the firm to one of the partners, and declared in the award that the balance was a lien upon the assets to be paid out of them specifically: —Held, that they had the power to give this direction, and the partner in question had power to sell to satisfy the lien out of the specific property applicable of which he was joint owner. Redick v. Skelton, 18 O. R. 100.

Capital of Partnership—Irregularity—Contribution.]—Four persons who entered into a joint undertaking for the purchase of oil lands, for the purpose of re-saile, agreed to contribute and did nuture the necessary capital in certain uncertain uncertain contribute and did net interests of two of the coparaties. One of the interests of two of the coparatries. The lands having become greatly depreciated in value, the plaintiff, in whose name the conveyance of the lands had been taken for the joint benefit, filed a bill calling on the other party interested to make up the difference in money contributed by him and that paid in by the plaintiff, and those whom he represented. A demurrer for want of equity was allowed with costs. Foster v. Chaplin, 19 Gr. 251.

Costs—Declaration of Partnership—Hearing—Reference.]—In a suit for the dissolution of a partnership and for an account and a receiver, where one or two partners denied the existence of a partnership, and a bill was in consequence filed against him, and by the evidence taken in the cause the partnership was established, the court gave the plaintift the costs up to the hearing, also the costs of a consent reference as to the fact of partnership, and beyond that refused costs to either party. O'Lone v. O'Lone, 2 Gr. 125.

Creditor's Claim—Separate Business of Partner—Mining.]—One of two partners carried on the business of bill broker on his own account, and in that capacity received from plaintiff moneys by cheques and proceeds of drafts on the plaintiff, as the price of certain promissory notes, and the money was by the broker paid into and used with the partnership funds. It was afterwards discovered that these had been all forged by the broker, who absconded, and the remaining partner assigned all the joint effects to trustees for the benefit of all the creditors; but on a bill filed for that purpose: — Held, that the plaintiff had a right to be paid his claim out of the partnership assets. Wallace v. James, 5 Gr. 163.

Declaration of Partnership — Admissions—Parties.] — Upon a bill against three partners by a person who claimed to be a copartner, and proved admissions made by two of the three to that effect:—Held, that no relief could be granted against the two, excluding the third. Carfrae v. Vanbuskirk, 1 Gr. 700.

Discovery — Production of Documents— Establishing Partnership. — A plaintiff seeking to establish a partnership, is not bound by the defendant partnership, is not bound by the defendant seeks, and, although the defendant swears positively that the papers have no bearing upon the case made by the bill, the court will order their production. Saunders v. Furnivall, 2 Ch. Ch. 49.

Disposal of Individual Interest in Partnership Property-Right to Profits.] —M. and G. met and agreed to jointly pur-chase 150 acres of land and sell it in lots, or perhaps en bloc, to a syndicate, if one could be got up. Both parties knew that others were interested under each of the two prin-M. had one-third interest and G. had two-thirds. No syndicate was got up to take the whole, and G. telegraphed M. that he was going to arrange a syndicate for two-thirds, and he formed a syndicate of eight persons, of whom he was one, to purchase his two-thirds' interest, and obtained a large profit thereon. This arrangement was made in writing, and recited that G. was seised in fee of the lands, and had executed a declaration of trust of one-third in favour of M., and "executes this declaration as to the remaining two-thirds." A quit claim deed was afterwards executed by M. in favour of G., and a declaration of trust as to one-third in and a declaration of trust as to one-third in favour of M., was signed by G. In an ac-tion by M. for a share of G.'s profit:— Held, that there was no sale of any of the lots that belonged to M. The two-thirds had not been disposed of so as to pass out of the partnership, though as to them there might be a sub-partnership; there had been no dealing with the joint property of the partnership, but only of the individual interest of one partner; he had sold some portion of his individual share, and no injury had resulted to his partner, and, even if any had, it would be no more than one of the inevitable concomi-tants attendant upon the right of one member to deal as he pleases with his share of the partnership concern. The action was, there-fore, dismissed with costs. Mitchell v. Gorm-ley, 9 O. R. 139, 14 A. R. 55.

Fraud or Misrepresentation in Formation of Partnership.]—See Merchants Bank v. Thompson, Mallon v. Craig, 3 O. R. 541; Morrison v. Earls, 5 O. R. 434.

Hlegal Contract — Refusal to Enforce — Costs.]—A member of a municipal correctation agreed with another person to take a contract from the corporation for the execution of certain works in his name, the profits whereof were to be divided between the parties: —Held. that such a contract was in contravention of the Municipal Act. 16 Viet. c. 181, and the court refused to enforce the agreement for a partnership; but, the defendant having denied the existence of a partnership, which was established by the evidence, the bill was dismissed without costs. Collins v. Swindle, 6 Gr. 282.

Judgment against Firm—Payment by Partner—Right to Enforce.]— The plaintiff and defendant were partners, and judgment was recovered against them in 1876 by a bank, upon certain promissory notes, of which they were respectively maker and indorser. The plaintiff paid the judgment immediately after its recovery, took an assignment of it, and in 1886 proceeded to enforce it against the defendant. The partnership accounts were taken by a referee, whose finding, approved by the court was, that the defendant should have paid one-half of the judgment:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to that extent to stand in the place of the original judgment creditor, and enforce the judgment against the defendant. Per Armour, C.J.—The Mercantile Amendment Act, R. S. O. 1887 c. 122, ss. 2, 3. 4, applies to the case of partners. Small v. Riddel, 31 C. P. 373, Potts v. Leask, 35 U. C. R. 476, and Seripture v. Gordon, 7 P. R. 164, not followed, in view of the opinions expressed in London and Canadian L. and A. Co. v. Morphy, 14 A. R. 517. Honsinger v. Love, 16 O. R. 170.

Right of partner paying a judgment against the firm to enforce it for his own benefit. See London and Canadian L. and A. Co. v. Morphy, 14 A. R. 577.

Lands Used by Partnership—Owner-ship—Inquiry—Evidence.]—Where partnership business was carried on in buildings erected by the funds of the firm upon lands, for part of which the patent from the Crown had issued in the name of one of the partners, parol evidence was received to shew whether the land was separate or joint property. Newton v, Doran, 3 Gr. 353.

Misconduct of Partner—Remedy of Copartner—Dissolution—Indomnity—Knowledge, 1—Where one co-partner acts so improperly in the affairs of the co-partnership as to render it liable to an action for damages, the other members may maintain a suit for the amount thereof against him, even though on the dissolution of the partnership the continuing partner gave to the one so acting a bond of indemnity, and to save him harmless from actions, if it appear that the fact of such improper acting of his partner was withheld from him. Kintrea v. Charles, 12 Gr. 123.

Purchase of Lands—Title—Notice of Defect.)—M. and G. were negotiating for the formation of a partnership to be carried on in respect of premises which G. was negotiating for the purchase of, during the pendency of which, and on the day before the purchase was completed. M. was informed that the object of the vendor in disposing of this property was to defraud his creditors, but which information M., did not communicate to G.—Held, that this was not sufficient to affect G. with notice; although on the completion of the purchase M. might have some rights against G. in respect of the property so purchased. Driffill v. Goodwin, 23 Gr., 431.

Statute of Limitations.]—In partnership suits the defence of the Statute of Limitations is not available unless six years have clapsed before the filing of the bill since the dealings of the partners wholly ceased. Storm y, Uumberland, 18 Gr. 245.

Winding-up-Services — Remuneration.]—If the business of winding up a partnership concern is apportioned between the partners, and each undertakes to perform the share allotted to him, one of them camout afterwards claim to be paid salary or other remuneration merely for the reason that his share of the work has been more laborious or difficult than that performed by his copartner, in the absence of any express agreement to that effect, or one to be implied from the conduct of the parties, Liggett v. ${\it Hamilton},~24$ S. C. R. 665.

See Baker v. Dawbarn, 19 Gr. 113, ante VIII.

XII. MISCELLANEOUS CASES,

Arbitration — Disputes Subsequent to Submission.]—Where arbitrators were authorized to dissolve a partnership:—Held, that they might, in order to adjust the terms of the dissolution, award upon disputes arising as to the partnership subsequent to the submission. Thirkelt v. Struchan, 4 U. C. R. 136.

Assessment—Personalty.]—Held, that the personal property of a partnership must be assessed against it at its usual place of business. In re Hatt, 7 L. J. 103.

Assignment for Benefit of Creditors—Assent of Creditors.] — An assignment for the benefit of creditors was executed by one partner, at the request of his co-partner, in the partnership name, and was made at the request of several creditors:—Held, that the assignment was properly executed, and that there was sufficient assent of the creditors. Notan v. Donnetly, 4 O. R. 440.

Sale of Assets—Extinguishment of signment of Debtors—Judgment.]—An assignment of the assets of a partnership was duly made pursuant to the provisions of the Assignments and Preferences Act, and the assignments and Preferences Act, and the assignments and Preferences to a nominee of the plaintiffs and two other creditors, sold and transferred the assets to a nominee of the plaintiffs and two other creditors of the other creditors of a composition, and subject to the claims of these three creditors. The other claims of these three creditors and to indemnify him therefrom :—Held, that the claims of these three creditors and to be demnify him therefrom to the claims of these three creditors and part of the purchase money, and were extinguished by the transfer of the assets. A judgment recovered against one or more of partners or other joint debtors under rules (1897) 587, 603, and 605, does not prevent the plaintiff from proceeding in the same action to judgment against the other defendants. McLeod v. Power, [1898] 2 Ch. 295, distinguished. Dueber Watch Case Manufacturing Co. v. Taggart, 26 A. R. 295. Affirmed, 30 S. C. R. 373.

Auctioneer—Sale of Goods—Purchase by Partner,]—Where goods were sold by auction, but, not having been taken away by the purchaser, were afterwards re-sold at a loss, and were purchased by a person who was a partner of the auctioneer, although in another business totally distinct from that of the auctioneer, and an action was afterwards brought by the auctioneer to recover from the first purchaser the loss on the re-sale:—Held, that it was no ground of objection to such action that the goods on the re-sale lad been purchased by such partner of the auctioneer. Clarkson v. Noble, 2 U. C. R. 361.

Award—Invalidity — Estoppel — Agreement—Acc Trial.]—The plaintiff, having compiled a book, caused it to be printed by a firm consisting of himself and defendant, on paper furnished by them; and defendant having refused to give up to him the copies-thus Vol. III, b—164—15 printed, he brought trover:—Semble, that he could not recover, for the property belonged to the firm, and defendant had as much right to retain as the plaintiff to take it. There was evidence, however, of an agreement between them by which the copies had become the plaintiff's property; and, as this view had not been fully submitted to the jury, and the damages given for the plaintiff were excessive, a new trial was granted. An award having been made between the parties, the plaintiff afterwards filed a bill to dissolve and wind up the partnership as if no such award had been made, and swore that he was advised and believed the award was invalid:—Held, that this bill was not evidence against him to shew that he had so treated the award to support his case, and on this ground the new trial was granted without costs. Doupe v. Steveart, 28 U. C. R. 192.

Bequest of Partnership Business—Acceptance by Legater-Right to Account.]—J. and his brother carried on business in partnership for over thirty years, and the brother having died, his will contained the following bequest: "I will and bequeath unto my brother J. all my interest in the business of J. & Co. in the said city of St. Catharines, together with all sums of money advanced by me to the said business at any time, for his own use absolutely forever, and I advise my said brother to wind up the said business with as little delay as possible:"—Held, that J. on accepting the legacy was under no obligation to indemnify the testator's estate against liability for the debts of the firm in case the assets should be insufficient for the purpose, and did not lose his right to have the accounts taken in order to make the estate of the testator pay its share of such deficiency. Robertson v. Junkin, 26 S. C. R. 192.

Change in Firm — Notice under Special Agreement—Validity.]—See Francis v. Turner, 25 S. C. R. 110.

Chattel Mortgage and Assignment for Creditors—Execution by Infant Partner.]—See Powell v. Calder, S O. R. 505.

Debt of Partnership—Securities—Application of Payments. —One partner of a firm gave as security for half of the partnership indebtedness a mortgage on his separate real estate; the other partner gave an indorsed note for the remaining portion of the debt. Subsequently payments were made to the creditior on account of the joint debt, which he credited on the note, claiming to hold the mortgage for the entire balance:—Held, that an assignee of the mortgagor was entitled to have one-half of all sums which had been paid out of the partnership assets on account of the flebt credited on the mortgage security. Moore v. Riddell, 11 Gr. 69.

Execution against Partner—Sale—Injunction —Infant—Parties—Execution Creditors.]—In a suit by an infant partner against his co-partner praying for dissolution, receiver, reference. &c. after a decree pro confesso, and during the taking of the accounts—under an agreement for the continuance of the partnership business for that purpose—certain creditors of the firm obtained judgments and executions at law against the partner of the infant, who was not increased of these proceedings until the sheriff and seized, and was about to self-business of the partnership property:—theld, on motion for injunction, that the proceedings at law were not within the dovisions of R. S. O. 1877 c. 123, s. S. and that the sale should be restrained. Held, also, that the execution creditors might be made parties for that pursee on motion simply. Young v. Huber, 29

Firm Name—Injunction.]—H. P. and N. P. carried on business under the name of H. P. & Bro. They afterwards dissolved partnership, and each carried on a like business in his own name. Subsequently H. assigned his business to the plaintiff, with authority to carry it on in H.'s name, and then two sons of N. P. carried on a similar business next door, under the firm name of H. P. & Co. An injunction to restrain the use of that name was refused. Aikins v. Piper, 15 Gr. 581.

Goodwill—Sale of.]—See O'Keefe v. Curran, 17 S. C. R. 596.

Injunction—Morinage by One Partner— Restraining Sale, —Two persons were in joint possession of and carried on business as partners on property of one, when the owner mortgaged it, giving a power of distress in case of default, and the mortgaged distrained on the partnership property. On a bill by the assignee of the other partner, it not appearing that the latter assented to or had notice of the mortgage, the court granted an injunction to the hearing. Mason v. Parker, 16 Gr. St.

Judgment—Declaration of Existing Partnership—Vesting Partner's Property—Aurisdiction.]—Upon a bill filed by the plaintif, as assignee in insolvency of the firm of S. J. & Co., seeking to have the defendant declared a member of the firm, and to vest his property in the plaintiff, as such assignee, the court made a decree as asked. Objection to the jurisdiction of the court of the first being the court of the partnership the plaintiff could have asked to have the partnership accounts taken; but that it had no power to vest defendant's property in the plaintiff. Botham v. Keefer, 2 A. R. 505.

Mercantile Amendment Act.] — See Honsinger v. Love, 16 O. R. 170, ante XI. 2 (c).

Mineral Claim—Interest in—Statute of Frauds—Farol Agreement, —Sections 50 and 51 of the Mineral Act of 1896 (B. C.), which prohibit any person dealing in a mineral claim who does not hold a free miner's certificate, does not prevent a partner in a claim recovering his share of the proceeds of a sale thereof by his co-partner, though he held no certificate when he brought his action, having allowed the one he had up to the time of sale to lapse. A partnership may be formed by a parol agreement notwithstanding it is to deal in land, the Statute of Frauds not applying to such a case. Judgment in 6 B. C. Reps.

260 affirmed. Archibald v. McNerhanic, 29 S. C. R. 564.

Municipal Elections—Property Qualification. — In 1802 a city council passed a bylaw exempting the property of the partnership of the region of the partnership property, the four partnership property, the four partnership property as freeholders to the amount of $10,000; 55 Vict. c. 42, ss. 73 and $6 (O.) The words "exempt from taxation" in 56 Vict. c. 55, s. 4. mean exempt from payment of all taxes, including school rates. Regisae xet. Harding v. Bennett, 27 O. R. 314.

Held, that "actual occupation" in s. 73 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1892, 55 Vict. c. 42 (0.), which provides, with regard to the property qualification of candidates, that where there is actual occupation of a freehold rated at not less than $2,000 the value for the purpose of the statute is not to be affected by incumbrances, does not necessarily mean exclusive occupation; and that when two partners were in occupation of partnership property, each should be deemed in actual occupation of his interest in the property within the meaning of the above enactment. Regina ex rel. Harding v. Bennett, 27 O. R. 314, followed as to the latter point. Regina ex rel. Joanisse v. Mason, 28 O. R. 495.

Principal and Surety-Agent Becoming Partner-Continuance of Surety's Liability.]

—A person became surety for another for the due discharge of his duty as agent in the purchase of wheat for a mercantile firm. After-wards the agent and his principals entered into an agreement for partnership, and during the continuance thereof he became indebted to his co-partners in the sum of £750; and the surety, having been called upon, executed a confession of judgment for the amount of his principal's indebtedness, in ignorance, as he alleged, of the fact that the agency had ceased and a partnership been formed. Upon a bill filed to enforce the judgment against the surety, the court, under the circumstances, directed a reference to ascertain what, if any, portion of the debt for which the assignment was given arose in respect of dealings during the agency, reserving further directions and costs; or, if the plaintiffs should decline this reference, then that the bill should be dismissed with costs, Gooderham v. Bank of Upper with costs, Canada, 9 Gr. 39.

Release—Liabilities — Partnership or Individual.]—A release by creditors to one of two partners of all actions and causes of actions, suits, debts, &c., which they now have, or ever had, or are entitled to in respect of any act, matter, or thing from the beginning of the world, is a release of individual as well as partnership liabilities. Hall v. Irons, 4 C. P. 351.

Sale of Intestate's Interest.]—Under the statute to amend the law of property and trusts, the court made an order approving of a proposed sale to a partner of an intestate's interest in the partnership assets. Ex parte Scssions, 2 Ch. Ch. 300.

Unincorporated Company—Committee-men—Liability — Amendment — Co-contrac-tors—Addition of as Parties.]—Where credit is given to an abstract entity such as a club the creditor may look to those who in fact assumed to act for it and those who authorized or sanctioned that being done, at all events where he did not know of the want of authority of the agent to bind the club. Review of English cases on this subject. The liability in such cases is not several, but joint. By analogy to the old practice where a plea in abatement for non-joinder of co-contractors was pleaded, a defendant now moving to stay proceedings until the co-contractors are added as parties should shew by affidavit the names and residences of the persons alleged to be joint contractors whom he seeks to have added, and the same liability as to costs, in case persons are added who turn out not to be liable. the creditor may look to those who in fact and the same nability as to costs, in case par-sons are added who turn out not to be liable, should be entailed upon him. In an action begun against an unincorporated company, as begun against an unincorporated company, as a partnership, to recover a sum for costs paid by the plaintiffs, an order in chambers allow-ing the plaintiffs to amend by adding as de-fendants certain members of the executive conduction of the company, and to charge them some of their having sensitive and the arrange-ment between the plaintiffs and the arrange-tion, was affirmed without prejudic to the de-fendants applying to add parties. Interpretation of Grant.]-The grant-Interpretation of Urantij lie granding of letters patent to inventors is not the creation of an unjust monopoly, nor the concession of a privilege by mere gratuitous favour, but it is a contract between the state and the discoverer, which, in favour of the latter, ought to receive a liberal interpretation. Barter v. Smith, 2 Ex. C. R. 455.

of an invention—Simplicity.]—The simplicity of an invention is no reason why a patent therefor should not be protected. Powell v. Begley, 13 Gr. 381; Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495.

Where, therefore, by a simple contrivance of cutting away a portion of the log out of which a pump was to be manufactured, thus giving it the form of a chair, and by the introduction into the tube of a conical tube through which the piston worked, the plaintiff had been enabled to construct a force pump made of wood, the court restrained the infringement of a patent procured therefor. Powell v. Begley, 13 Gr. 381.

The invention of an inclined plane in a cer-The invention or an inclined plane in a certain form and position, as a means or appliance for directing a tool cutter, so as to produce spiral or curved grooves in a roller:
—Held, a proper subject for a patent; the simplicity of a new contrivance being no objection to a patent for it. Summers v. Abell, 15 Gr. 332.

The mere attaching of the support of the handle of a pump higher or lower in position than that formerly in use, is not the subject of a patent. Owens v. Taylor, 29 Gr. 210.

Process and Product—Purchaser of Arcounts—Courts—Decisions,)—A patent Accounts—Courts—Decisions,)—A patent granting the exclusive right of making, con-structing, using and selling to others to be used, an invention, as described in the specifications setting forth and claiming the method of manufacture, protects not only the process but the thing pro-duced by that process, and an action will lie protects against any person purchasing and using articles made in derogation of the patent, no matter where they came from; and, although the plaintiff cannot have both an account of profits and also damages against the same defendant, he may have both remedies as against different persons (e.g., maker and purchaser) in respect of the same article. A keeping of the accounts pending the action against the importers does not operate as a license to justify the sale of the articles; it is only an expedient to preserve the rights of all parties to the close of the litigation. As the infring-ing articles were manufactured in the United States and brought into Canada for sale, there was sufficient evidence given that they were was sufficient evidence given that they were made according to the plaintin's process to throw the onus on the defendants of shewing the contrary. Although the high court may be in the particular case the final court of appeal, it will defer to previous cases decided affirming the validity of a patent and follow the court of appeal in refusing to disturb a deci-Sion in the exchequer court. Earlier and later American cases commented on. Toronto Auer Light Co. v. Colling, 31 O. R. 18.

II. CANCELLATION OR FORFEITURE.

Improper Importation.]—Where the subject of a patent is a new combination of old devices, the patentee cannot import such devices in a manufactured state, and simply apply his combination to them in Canada, without violating the prohibition against importation contained in s. 28 of the Patent Act, 1872. Mitchell v. Hancock Inspirator Co., 2 Ex. C. R. 539.

To bring an importation by the patentee within the prohibition of s. 37 of the Patent Act, R. S. C. c. 61, it is necessary that it consist of, or affect, the particular invention in respect of which the patent has been granted. Wright v. Bell Telephone Co., 2 Ex. C. R. 552.

Non-manufacture.]—Section 3T of the Patent Act, R. S. C. c. 61, does not require the patentee, or his legal representatives, to personally manufacture his invention in Canada. So long as he puts it within the power of persons to obtain the invention at a reasonable price in Canada, he fullis the requirement of the statute. Brook v. Broadhead, 2 Ext. C. R. 562.

Although a patentee may not have commenced to manufacture the patented article within the period limited in s. 28 of 35 Vict. c. 26 (E.), as amended by 38 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, yet, so long as he is in a position either to furnish it, or to license its use, at a reasonable price to any person desiring to use it, his patent ought not to be declared forfeired. (2) It is not incumbent upon a patentee to shew that he has made active efforts to create a market for his patented invention in Canada. It rests upon those who seek to defeat the patent to shew that he neglected or refused to sell the invention for a reasonable price when proper application was made to him therefor, (3) The intention of the legislature in enacting the provisions of s. 28 of 35 Vict. c. 26, which prohibit the patentee from importing his invention in a manufactured state after the expiry of a given time from the granting of his patent, was to protect the industrial interests of Canada, and the prohibition should not be extended to operate a for-feiture in cases where the character and circumstances of the importation tend to promote rather than prejudice such interests. (4) If, after the time has expired wherein the patentee may have imported the invention without prejudice to his rights, he consents to its importation by others, such consent brings him within the prohibition of the startute and avoids his patent. Barter v. Smith, 2 Ex. C. R. 455.

Non-manufacture — Unreasonable Price.]—The claim in the specification for the re-issue of a patent was as follows:— The method herein described of making incandescent devices, which consists in impreg-nating a filament, thread, or fabric of com-bustible material with a solution of metallic salts of refractory earths suitable when oxidized for an incandescent, and then exposing the impregnated filament, thread, or the impregnated filament, thread, or fabric to heat until the combustible matter is con-sumed:" — Held, that it was open to the owners of the patent to import the impregnating fluid or solution mentioned in the specification of their patent, without violat-ing the provisions of the law as to manufacture. (2) That, although the plaintiffs had at the outset put an unreasonable price upon their invention, yet, as it was not shewn that during such time any one desiring to obtain it had been refused it at a lower and reason-able price, the plaintiffs had not violated the provisions of the law as to the sale of their invention in Canada. (3) That it is not open to any one in Canada to import for use or sale try in accordance with the process protected by the plaintiffs' patent. Auer Incandescent Light Manufacturing Co, v. O'Brien, 5 Ex. C. R. 243. illuminant appliances made in a foreign coun-

Prescribed Time — Sale—Importa-Prescribed Time — Sale—Importa-tion of Parts. |—The A. D. T. Co. were the assignees of patent No. 38,284 for an im-provement in tires for bicycles. They imported, after the period allowed by the Patent Act for importations of the patented invention to be lawfully made, some twenty-two tires in a complete and finished state, and fifty-nine covers that required only the insertion of the rubber tube to complete them. In the completed tires and in the covers in the state in which they were imported was to be found the invention protected by the said patent. These tires and covers were not imported by the company for sale, but to be given to expert riders to be tested, and for the purpose of ad-vertising the tire so patented. However, onpair of such tires was sold through inadvertence or otherwise but they were not imported for sale. The company had a factory in Canada, where the invention patented was manufactured, and the value of the labour displaced importation complained of only by the amounted to $2.18:—Held, in accordance with the decision in Barter v. Smith, 2 Ex. C. R. the decision in Barter v. Smith, 2 Ex. C. R. 455, which the court felt bound to follow, that the facts did not constitute sufficient ground for cancellation of the patent under the provisions of s. 37 of the Patent Act. (2) In order to avoid a patent for illegal importation, the thing imported must be the patented article itself, and not merely consist of materials which, while requiring but a trifling amount of labour and expense to transform them into the patented invention, yet do not in their separate state embody the principle of the invention. Anderson Tire Co. of Toronto v. American Duntop Tire Co., American Dunlop Tire Co. v. Anderson Tire Co. of Toronto, 5 Ex. C. R. $2.

Non-manufacture—Improper Importation, I—Where the owner of several patents illegally imports elements common to the composition of all his inventions, but uses the same in the construction of one of them only, such importation operates a forfeiture in respect of the particular invention so constructed, but does not affect the other patents. A patentee is within the meaning of the law in regard to his obligation to manufacture, when he has kept himself ready either to furnish the natented article or to sell the right of using, although not one single specimen of the article may have been produced, and he may have avoided his patent by refusal to sell, although this patent is in general use. To-routo Peterplane Mig. Co. v. Bell Telephone Un. 2 Ex. C. R. 524.

Refusal to Sell—Improper Impor-tation.]—If an article imported by a patentee and used by him in the construction of his invention is a common commercial article eminvention is a common commercial article employed for many purposes, and is not specified in the patentice's claim as an essential part of his invention, such importation does not operate a forfeiture of the patent. (2) A fair test of the patentie's ability to freely import any article required in the construction of his invontion is to according the life for import any article required in the construction of his invention is to ascertain if it is open to every person in Canada to manufacture, import, sell, and use the same without thereby infringing the patent in question. If the article is thus part of the public domain, the patentee is at liberty either to import it or purchase it in Canada for the purposes of such construction. (3) Where the subject of a patent is a combination of elements, and one of them is a novelty invented by the patentee, such novelty is in the same position as the other elements with respect to importation by him unless its production or manufacture is and thress its production or manufacture is covered by the patent in question. (4) There is no express provision in the statute impos-ing the penalty of forfeiture for importing into Canada the various parts of the invention in respect of which the patent was granted, much respect of which the patent was granted, much less for importing one of its parts. The words of the statute are "the invention for which the patent is granted," and they ought not to be extended beyond their plain meaning. In administering the statute, the minister can only apply the penalty to the offence which the statute forbids. He cannot apply it to an attempt to evade the statute. (5) In imposing penalties Parliament must take its own measures to prevent evasion, and it would be not unsafe to impose, in the case of an eva-sion, the heavy penulty which the law has leveled at the principal offence, on the theory, which may or may not be correct, that Parliament intended by an equal penalty to for-bid the doing of that which would be almost or quite an equivalent of the principal offence, Where the article patented is of delicate and skilful manufacture, and one from which the patentee can only reap the reward of his labour and expenditure through its being es-terned successful by the public, it is reasonable for him, at a time when public opinion with respect to it is in suspense, to decline to soil his invention unconditionally to those who, by unsuitable use, would fail to derive benefit from it themselves, and would create an impression in the public mind that the invention was a failure. If, upon application made to him for the purchase of his invention, he imposes a limitation in respect of fix use, he ought not to be held to have thereby forfeited his patent, unless it appear that such limitation is imposed for the purpose of evading compliance with the provisions of the statute which require him to sell the patented invention at a reasonable price. (7) In relation to the provisions of s, 37 of the Patent Act touching the price of the patented invention to purchasers, it would appear that the evil the statute was principally intended to prevent is the exaction of exorbitant prices under the monopoly secured by the patent. Royal Electric Company of Canada v. Edizon Electric Light Co., 2 Ex. C. R. 576.

Refusal to Sell—Improper Importation—Connivance. 1—The importation of the component parts of a telephone, in such a state of manufacture as to simply require putting together in Canada to make the completed instrument, falls within the prohibition of s. 28 of 35 Vict. c. 26 (D.), as amended by 38 Vict. c. 14, s. 2. Upon application being made to the respondents to purchase a number of their telephones for private purposes, they refused to sell the same, accompanying such refusal by the statement:
"We do not sell telephones, but we reat them:"—Held, that the respondents had thereby afforded a good ground for forfeiture of their patent. Connivance by the patentee in an improper importation is equal to importing or causing to be imported within the meaning of the statute. Toronto Telephone Manufacturing Co. v. Bell Telephone Co., 2
Ex. C. R. 495.

Practice in Action to Avoid—Default of Pleading—Judgment, —Upon a motion for judgment for default of pleading in an action to avoid certain patents of invention, the court granted the motion, but directed that a copy of the judgment should be served upon the defendants, and that the registrar should not issue a certificate of the judgment for the purpose of entering the purpor thereof on the margins of the enrolment of the several patents in the Patent Office until the expiry of thirty days after such service. Peterson v. Uroun Cork and Scal Co., 5 Ex. C. R. 400.

III. COMBINATION AND NOVELTY.

Defective Patent—Reissuc—Operation—Amendment—User,]—In November, 1879, the plaintiff obtained a patent for a new and useful improvement in bakers' ovens, which was expressed to be, "In combination with a baker's oven, a furnace, 'D.', set within the oven but below the sole, 'A.' This patent he surrendered, and a new one issued in August, 1880, on the ground that the first was inoperative by reason of the insufficiency of the description. The new patent was for the unexpired portion of the five years covered by the first patent. The claim of invention, as set forth in the specification, was: "(1) In a firepot or furnace placed within a baker's oven, below the sole thereof, and provided with a door situated above the grate. (2) In a firepot or furnace placed within a baker's oven, provided with a door stunted with a door above the level of the sole of the oven, and connected with the said furnace by an inclined guide. (3) In a flue, 'H.', leading from below the grate, 'B.', to the flue, 'E.' (4) In a baker's oven provided with a circular tilting grate situated below the sole of the oven, and provided with a door.

(5) In a cinder grate, 'F.', placed beneath the fire grate, 'B.', in combination with a flue, 'H.' The plaintiff in his specifications claimed all these as his inventions; in his evidence he claimed each of the combina-tions to be the subject of his patent:— Held, that, if the plaintiff was correct in the latter view, the last four combinations being new, the first patent could not have been inoperative as to them; and the second patent in respect of these must be construed as an independent one, issuing for the first time on its date, and as all other than the first combination had been used for upwards of a year prior to the patent, he was not entitled to a patent therefor. (2) That the fifth combina-tion of previously known articles, as applied to a baker's oven, which was productive of results which were new and useful to the trade, was a subject of a patent. Some of the devices were in use before the patent, but numerous witnesses engaged in baking tes-tified that they never knew of the combination before the plaintiff's invention :- Held, that the defence for want of novelty failed. Held, also, that the first combination in the patent of 1880 was such an amendment as is contemplated by the Act 35 Vict. c. 26, s. 19 (D.) The defendant's oven was completed early in July, 1880, and before the reissue of the plaintiff's patent; she had in use the first and fourth combinations, and continued to use them after such reissue :- Held, that there was not any remedy for the intermediate user, as the patent was then inoperative; but as to any subsequent infringement, the user under the defective patent could not operate as a defence, Hunter v. Carrick, 28 Gr. 489. Reversed, 10 A. R. 449, 11 S. C. R. 300.

Held, by the court of appeal, that the combination of the tilting gate and the feed door below the sole of the oven was so wanting in novelty as to render the patent obtained in respect thereof invalid. S. C., 10 A. R. 449.

Held, by the supreme court of Canada, that the combination, being a mere aggregation of parts not in themselves patentable, and producing no new result due to the combination itself, was no invention, and consequently it could not form the subject of a patent. S. C., 11 S. C. R. 300.

Improvement—Absence of New Combination.]—The plaintiff introduced into a drum stove, in addition to a spiral flue, which had been previously in use, a centre pipe closed at the sides and open at both bottom and top, as a means of producing a greater amount of heat, and obtained a patent for "the spiral flue in connection with the pipe in the centre:"—Held, that the improvement did not involve any new principle or new combination, and that the patent was void. North v. Williams, 17 Gr. 179.

Absence of Novelty — Lack of Invention.]—The plaintin obtained a patent for a new and useful improvement on machines for bending wood for making chairs, and other purposes, and sued the defendants for infringement of it. By the old process the wood to be bent for the back of a chair was placed on an iron strap, one end resting against a fixed shoulder upon the strap, the other confined by a movable shoulder, which was tightened against the end of the wood by a wedge, in order to give the end pressure required to prevent the wood from breaking or splintering in bending. In the plaintiff's ma-chine a screw was used in place of the wedge, and by it, but not by the wedge, the pressure could conveniently be regulated and adjusted during the bending. With the wedge, too, only a single curve or semi-circle for the back of the chair could be accomplished, while by plaintiff's machine the two ends of the back piece could be bent down, so as to con-nect with the sent or body of the chair as side pieces. This also was effected by end pressure with the screw; and the side piece and back were thus formed out of one piece by continuous pressure, instead of from separate pieces. Semble, that the use of the screw to produce the end pressure could not be the subject of a patent, though the construction of the side and back in one piece might be. Bonathan v. Bowmanville Furniture Manujacturing Co., 31 U. C. R. 413.

— Change in Form or Proportion.]—
Quare, whether the patent in this case, which was for an improvement in the form of the mould board in ploughs, called the "Gain Twist," was not for an improvement which is, in the language of s. 21 of C. S. C. c. 34, "simply changing the form or the proportion of any machine or composition." If so, it should not be deemed a discovery. Huntingdon v. Lutz, 13 C. P. 168.

Combination—Claim—New Invention,]—A patent is good for a combination of old or before-used inventions, as well as for an entirely new one, provided the patentee does not claim it as an invention new in all its parts, but merely for the improvement in the combination. Emery v, Iredale, Emery v, Hodge, 11 C. P, 106.

Prior Suggestion — Validity.]—On the 15th October, 1892, J. obtained a patent in Canada for alleged new and useful improvements in boiler furnaces. The distinctive feature of J.'s invention was that, instead of using a fuel chamber or magazine bowlike in shape, such as that claimed in W.'s Brough of both the hape fuel colleged with the ward of bath-the hape fuel colleged with ward-or bath-the hape fuel colleged with the form of fuel chamber was suggested in the W. patent, but was not worked out by its inventor, it being his view apparently that several magazines or chambers howl-like in shape could be used within the trough-shaped chamber. The W. patent was not commercially successful. J., using an oblong or trough-shaped chamber, was the first to manufacture a mechanical stoker that was commercially successful. Between W.'s and J.'s there was all the difference between failure and success: —Held, that J.'s patent was valid. General Engineering Co., of Ontario v. Dominion Cotton Mills Co., of Ex. C. R. 309. See also S. C., ib. 351, post XI.

— Substantial Identity — Infringement.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of letters patent No. 38,284, for improvements in bicycle tires. The inventors' object was to produce a pneumatic tire combining the advantages of both the "Dunlop" tire and the "Clincher" tire, and that was done by finding a new method of attaching the tire to the rim of the wheel. They used for this purpose an outer covering, the two edges of which were made inextensible by inserting in them endless wires or cords, the diameter of the less than the diameter of the outer edge of the crescent or "U" shaped rim that was used shaped rim that was used the tire was placed. Then and into which the tire was placed. Then odges of the outer covering were pressed upwards and outwards, as far as the endless wires would permit, and were there held in position by the pressure exerted by the air rube. In the second and third claims made by the plaintiffs, and in their description of the invention they describe a rim "provided with an annular recess near each edge into which enters the wired edge of the outer tube or covering." In their first or more general or covering." In their first or more general statement of the claim is described "a rim, the sides of which are so formed as to grip the wired edges of the outer tube;"—Held, that a rim with annular recesses did not constitute an essential feature of the invention, the substance of which consisted in the use of an outer covering having inextensible edges which are forced by the air tube when inflated into contact or union with a grooved rim. the diameter of the outer edges of which are greater than the diameters of the circles made by such inextensible edges. (2) The defendby such inextensible edges. (2) The defend-ants manufactured a pneumatic tire with an outer covering through the edges of which was passed an endless wire forming two circles instead of one. The wire was placed in pockets, in the outer covering, which ran nearly parallel to each other except at one point where the two circles crossed each other. The wire being endless, the two circles performed in re-spect of the inextensibility of the edges of the spect of the inextensionity of the edges of the outer covering, the same part and office that the wire with a single coil or circle in the plaintiffs' tire performed. There was, however, this difference, that the two circles, into which the wire would form itself in the dewhich the wire would form itself in the de-fendants' tire when the inner tube was in-flated, would not be concentric, but as one circle became larger the other would become smaller:—Held, that, while the defendants' tire might have been an improvement on that of the plaintiffs', it involved the substance of the plaintiffs' parent and constituted an in-fringement upon it. American Dunlop Tire Co. v. Anderson Tire Co., 5 Ex. C. R. 194.

Walidity — Infringement, |—C. obtained a patent for an alleged invention styled "The Paragon Black Leaf Check Book," and in his specification claimed as his invention, "In a black leaf check book of double leaves cone-half which are bound together while the other half fold in as fly-leaves), both being perforated across so that they can be readily form out, the combination of the black leaf bound into the book next the cover and provided with hape across its ends, the said black leaf having the transferring composition on one of its sides only." A half interest in this patent was assigned to the defendant, with whom C. was in partnership, and on the dissolution of such partnership said half interest was reassigned to C., who afterwards assigned the whole interest to the plaintiffs. Prior to the said dissolution the defendant obtained a patent for what he called "Butterfield's Improved Paragon Check Book," claiming as his invention the following improvements on check books previously in use: (1) A kind of type. (2) The membrane hinge for a black leaf, the whole bound by an elastic band to the ends or sides of the lower cover. (3) A totalling sheet. After the dissolution he proceeded to manufacture check books under his patent. The plaintiffs instituted proceedings to restrain such manufacture, claiming that their patent was thereby infringed:—Held, reversing the judgment in 11 A. R. 145, that the patent of the plaintiffs under which they claimed was a valid patent, and that it was infringed by the manufacture and sale of the defendant's books. Grip Printing and Publishing Co. of Toronto v. Butterfield, 11 S. C. R. 291.

Insufficient Novelty—New Combination—Prior Similar Application.]—The plaintiff had obtained a patent for an improved gearing for driving the cylinder of threshing machines, and the gearing was a considerable improvement; but it appeared that the same gearing had been previously used for other michines, though not before applied to threshing machines.—Held, that the novelty was not sufficient to sustain the patent. Abell v. Me-Pherson, 17 Gr. 23, 18 Gr. 457.

New Application of Old Mechanical Device. — The application to a new purpose of an old mechanical device is patentable when the new application lies so much out of the track of the former use as not naturally to suggest itself to a person turning his mind to the subject, but requires thought and study. The application to an oil pump of the principle of "rolling contact" was held patentable. Bicknell v. Peterson, 24 A. R. 427.

New Arrangement — Colourable Imita-tion—Damages.]—In 1877 L., a candle manu-facturer, obtained a patent for new and useful improvements in candle making apparatus. Improvements in candle making apparatus. In 1879 C., who was also engaged in the same trade, obtained a patent for a machine to make candles. L. claimed that C.'s patent was a fraudulent imitation of his patent and prayed that C. be condemned to pay him $13,200 as being the amount of profits alleged to have been realized by C. in making and selling candles with his patented machine, and also $10,000 exemplary damages. C. contended that his patent was valid as a combination patent of old elements; that there could be no action for infringement of L's patent until C's patent was repealed by scire facias; and also that L's patent was not a new invention. At the trial there was evidence that there were other machines known and in use for making candles, but there was no evidence as to the cost of making candles with such machines, or what would have been a fair royalty to pay L. for the use of his patent. And it was proved also that L.'s trade had been increasing. The superior court on the evidence found that C.'s patent was a fraudulent imitation of L.'s patent, and granted an injunction and condemned C. to pay L. $600 damages for the profits he had made on selling candles made by the patented machine. This judgment was affirmed by the court of Queen's bench (appeal side). On appeal to the supreme court of Canada:—Held, that C.'s machine was a mere colourable imitation of L's, based upon the same principles, composed of the same elements, and differing from it only in the arrangement of those elements, and producing no results materially different therefore L.'s patent had been infringed, and there was no necessity in order to recover damages for infringement that C.'s patent should first be set aside by scire facias. Held, also, that in this case the profits made by the defendants was not a proper measure of damages; that the evidence furnished no means of accurately estimating the damages, but substantial justice would be done by awarding $100. Collette v. Lasnier, 13 S. C. R. 563.

 Substantial Identity—Device—Improvement.]—A patent for a horse-rake, the specification of which described as part of the invention "the construction and novel arinvention "the construction and novel arrangement of a divided axle, with wheels firmly fastened thereon, a friction gripe for engaging with the divided axle," &c.; the description of the construction and operation stating that "the axle being divided into two parts, permits the wheels to then in approa-directions; a piece of iron or steel wire, or cord, or chain, is colled round each half of the axle, one end of each coil being secured firmly to the rake head, while the other ends of the wall are secured to a foot treadle," ke; is parts, permits the wheels to turn in opposite of the coil are secured to a foot treadle, -Held, not to be infringed by a rake worked by a strap passed twice or oftener round the inner part of the hub of the wheel elongated for the purpose of receiving it, one end of the strap being attached to the axle, and the other connected with the treade. Held, also, that the mode of using the cord was not novel, being essentially the same described in an earlier patent as consisting of "flexible metallic straps which encircle the inner extension of the hubs, one end of each strap being at-tached to a fixed bearing secured to the axle, and the other to the short end of the lever &c. Semble, that neither the circle nor the coil was the subject of either invention, but only modes of using a friction band in connection with another device which was the patented improvement. Sylvester v. Masson, 12 A. R. 335.

New Combination — Old Elements.]— Though the number of mechanical powers are limited, their combinations may be very numerous; and a new combination of previously known implements or elements is the proper subject of a patent. Patric v. Sylrester, 23 Gr. 578.

Patent for New Principle-Absence of Real Novelty-Infringement.]-The plaintiff obtained a patent for a platform pump. constructed upon the principle and for the purpose of raising water for animals to drink from wells by their own weight and act, the specification claiming such principle as his invention. He sued for the infringement of this patent. It appeared that an inclined platform working upon a fulcrum led up to the trough, and that being depressed by the weight of the animal when near the trough, forced down the piston rod and plunger, with which it was connected, thus driving the water up a pipe into the trough. There was nothing new in the different parts or in the principle on which they produced their effect, but the novelty, if any, was in the combina-tion:—Held, that the patent, not being for such combination, but for the principle, could not be sustained. Semble, that the utilizing the instinct of the animal to seek water was the only novelty, and that this could not be the subject of a patent. The infringement complained of was a pump for which defendant had obtained a patent, and it was objected that this patent was an answer to the action until set aside; but, semble, clearly not. Merrill v. Cousins, 26 U. C. R. 49. Patentable Invention.] — A patent was obtained for an improvement in the construction of carriages by the combination of a folding sectional roof joined to the carriage posts, in such a way and by such an arrangement of sections of the roof and of the carriage posts that the whole carriage top could be made entirely of sections of wood or other rigid material with glass sashes all round, and the carriage be opened in the centre into two principal parts and at once converted into an open uncovered carriage. In an action for infringement of this patent:—Held, that the combination was not previously in use and was a patentable invention. Danscreaw v. Bellemere, 16 S. C. R. 180.

New Device—Infringement.1—C. & Co. were assignees of a patent for a check book used by shopkeepers in making out duplicate accounts of sales. The alleged invention consisted of double leaves, half being bound to-gether and the other half folded in as fly-leaves, with a carbonized leaf bound in next the cover, and provided with a tape across the What was claimed as new in this invention was the device, by means of the tape, for turning over the carbonized leaf without soiling the fingers or causing it to curl up. H. made and sold a similar check book with a like device, but, instead of the tape, the end of the carbonized leaf, for about half an inch, was left without carbon, and the leaf was turned over by means of this margin. It an action by C. & Co. against H. for infringe ment of their patent:—Held, affirming the decision in 3 Ex. C. R. 351, that the evidence at the trial shewed the device for turning over the blank leaf without soiling the fingers to have been used before the patent of C. & Co. was issued, and it was therefore not new that the only novelty in the patent was in the use of the tape; and that using the margin of the paper instead of the tape was not an infringement. Carter & Co. v. Hamilton, 23 S. C. R. 172.

Lack of Invention.]—There is no inventive merit in making in one piece the cap-bar and protector of a washing machine, the cap-bar and protector having been previously made in two separate pieces, Taylor v. Brandon Mfg. Co., 21 A. R. 361.

New Purpose-Combination of Old Elements—Lack of Invention.]—In May, 1864, one F, obtained a patent for an "improved chair for preventing bolts or nuts from be-coming loose or insecure;" and the invention was by the patent itself described as consisting "in the lipped chair in combination with the heads or nuts of bolts;" and in the speci-ications the invention was described, partly, as follows: "The chair is constructed with a raised edge or lip, and extending over a part or the whole length of its surface. This lip is formed and made of a suitable shape and depth, so as to be in constant contact with the heads or nuts of the bolts D after they are placed in position and firmly screwed to the straps and rails, as shewn. It will be seen that the upper portion of the chair at E forms a seat or cheek for receiving the sides the nuts or heads of the bolts, and which will entirely prevent the bolts from 'workloose or dropping out of their places from the vibration of vehicles passing over the rails, or from other causes:"—Held, that, although rails, chairs, fish plates, and screw bolts, had long been in use separately on railways, still the present combination was such as to effect a new purpose, and as such formed the proper subject of a patent. Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495.

Held, on appeal, that, although a most useful contrivance, the invention in this case could not be the subject of a patent, as it was wanting in the element of invention. Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 2 A. R. 223.

New Result—Combination of Old Decice. |—An invention consisting of a new and useful combination of well known materials or devices, which produces a result not theretofore so obtained, is a proper subject for a patent. Toronto Telephone Manufacturing Co. v. Bell Telephone Co. 2 Ex. C. R. 435.

Combination of Known Elements—Trifling Change.]—A new combination of known elements is an invention, and as such is patentable. The person who has devised such new combination has all the rights and privileges of an inventor, even if the novelty consists in a trifling mechanical change, provided, in the latter case, some economic or other result is produced in some way different from what was obtained before. Mitchell v. Hancock Inspirator Co., 2 Ex. C. R. 539.

Old Contrivance-New Object or Application. |-In an action for infringement of old patent for what was described as "a new and useful improvement in the construction of steam and water saw mills," it appeared from the specifications that what the patentee claimed as his invention was "generally the simplicity of construction of the saw mill and making it portable, but especially the direct appli-cation of steam or water power by the concation of steam or water power by the con-necting rod or shaft B to drive the circular saw." Plaintiff, the assignee of the original patentee, proved that apparently his plan was the first in which the direct application of the motive power was made to drive circular saws, by placing the saw at the end of the shaft to which the motive power was directly applied, thereby saving the use of the belt and pulleys, by which the second shaft, to which the saw had been attached, was turned, and discontinuing that shaft also. For the defence, it was shewn that the "direct action" plan had, long before the date of the patent in question, been applied to other steam engines, locomotives, and machinery, the only novelty appearing to be in the discontinuance of the second shaft in driving a circular saw. The jury were directed to inquire whether the invention was new, or whether it was a new application of an old invention to the propelling of a circular saw, and they found for the plaintiff, and that the patent was for "a new application of an old invention to the propelling of a circular saw:"—Held, to the propelling of a circular saw:"—Held, that upon this direction the verdict could not be supported, and that the proper question was, whether the invention was novel and useful. Semble, that the invention or improvement claimed by plaintiff in this case was not the subject of a patent. The saying of labour and expense, and the production of a new and useful result, cannot alone support a patent; there must be some invention. The act or contrivance which is the subject of a patent must be new, and it is not suffithat the object or application of a contrivance is new if the contrivance itself be old. Waterous v. Bishop, 20 C. P. 29.

Old Elements — Similar Application.]
—The plaintiff claimed as his invention, for the purpose of purifying flour during its manufacture, a botting cloth or sieve, through which a current of air was forced upwards by means of an air chamber and a fan, or substitute therefor, and, in order to keep such sieve from becoming clogged, a brush, or a number of brushes, arranged in such a manner as to traverse the under service. The air chamber and the fan combined with the bolt or sieve were admittedly old; and it appeared that one B. had patented a machine which was in use in the manufacture of semolina, in which a similar brush arrangement was in use for the purpose of keeping open the meshes of the sieve when used:—Held, that the plaintiffs invention was patentable, the united action of three elements, each of which viously combined, having produced new and useful results. Judgment in 7 A. R. 628 reversed. Smith v. Koldie, 9 S. C. R. 46. Special leave to appeal to Her Majesty in council was refused.

Substitution of Known Element.]—In an application for a patent the object of the invention was stated to be the connection of a spring tooth with the drag-bar of a seeding machine, and the invention chained was "in a seeding machine in which independent dragbars are used, a curved spring tooth, detachably connected to the drag-bar, in combination with a locking device arranged to lock the head block to which the spring tooth is attached, substantially as and for the purpose specified." In an action for infringement of the patent it was admitted that all the elements were old, but it was claimed that the substitution of a curved spring tooth for a rigid tooth was a new combination, and patentable as such:—Held, that the alleged invention, being the mere insertion of one known article in place of another known article, was not patentable. Smith v. Goldie, 9 S. C. R. 46, and Hunter v. Carrick, 11 S. C. R. 300, referred to. Wisner v. Coulthard, 22 S. C. R. 178.

Substitution of Material.]—In a suit for the infringement of a patent the alleged invention was the substitution in the manufacture of corsets of coiled wire springs, arranged in groups and in continuous lengths, for indiarubber springs previously so used. The advantage claimed by the substitution was that the metal was more durable, and was free from the inconvenience arising from the use of indiarubber caused by the heat from the wearer's body:—Held, affirming the judgments in 9 O. R. 228 and 12 A. R. 738, that this was merely the substitution of one well take the substitution of one well well known as merely the substitution of one well well known that in the substitution of the use of indiarubber, and it was, consequently, void of invention and not the subject of a patent. Ball v. Crompton Corset Co., 13 S. C. R.

Substitution of Mechanical Equivalents. |—The plaintiff obtained a patent for "a new and useful improvement in seed drills," which was particularly described in the specification attached to the patent. Subsequently the defendant procured a patent to be granted him for "Sylvester's Improved

Spring Hoe," which he made and attached to seeding machines. The plaintiff, claiming that the machines manufactured by defendant were substantially the same as those the plaintiff lad obtained his patent for, sought to restrain their further manufacture by the defendant, and on the hearing the evidence shewed that the machines were substantially the same, with colourable deviations only—the chief one being the mode of attaching certain pivot connections or bars forming what are known as togele or elbow joints, which the plaintiff attached below the junction of the draw-bar with the tubes or hoes, while the defendant attached his above; the power thus operating by compression on the defendant's bars and by tension on those of the plaintiff, and in both by tension on a gutta perchaspring. The court, being satisfied that the difference was only one of mechanical arrangement or a mere substitution of mechanical equivalents, and not a difference in principle of the invention, granted the relief prayed, and ordered the defendant to pay the costs of the litigation. Patric v. Sylvester, 23 Gr. 573.

Variation — Mechanical Equivalent—Infringement of Combination.]—Where in an action to restrain infringement of a patent, brought against C., and one H., who had been employed as a workman by C., it appeared that the only portion of the defendants' combination which was not identical with the plaintiff's patented machine was a mere variation in arrangement, or a mechanical equivalent of a corresponding portion of the plaintiff's machine—a device containing no element of invention, but effecting the same purpose by a slightly different method:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for an injunction against both defendants, but to a reference as to damages only as against C. Woodward v. Clement, 10 O. R. 348.

IV. INFRINGEMENT-ACTIONS FOR.

1. Costs.

Scale of—Certificate—Claim for Injunction—Pleading,1—Held, that the fact that a plaintiff prays an injunction in an action in a superior court in which an injunction may be granted, is not, even after verdict for plaintiff, sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover superior court costs without the certificate of the Judge who tried the case, when the amount of damages recovered is clearly within the jurisdiction of an inferior court. Emery v. Iredale, Emery v. Hodge, 7 L. J. 181.

The action itself must be of such a nature, and the equitable relief sought of sufficient importance, to satisfy the Judge who tried the cause in certifying it to be a proper action to be withdrawn from the inferior and tried in the superior court. Ib.

There is nothing in the Patent Act (C. S.

There is nothing in the Patent Act (C. S. C. c. 34) to justify the presiding Judge in refusing to certify for costs merely because defendant might have defented plaintiff entirely in his action by proper pleading, but had not done so. Ib.

of done so. Th.

Under the peculiar circumstances of these cases:—Held, that the first was a case proper for a certificate, but the second case not so. Th.

See Patric v. Sylvester, 23 Gr. 573, ante

Treble Costs—Injunction.]—Held, that C. S. C. c. 34, s. 23, which gives to a party whose patent for an invention has been infringed, besides damages, "treble costs to be taxed according to the course and practice of the court," does not entitle a plaintiff who has availed himself of the provisions of the C. L. P. Act, and claimed an injunction, to tax treble costs of his application for the injunction, Huntingdon v. Lutz., 10 L. J. 46.

See Hunter v. Carrick, 28 Gr. 489, ante Costs, II. 3.

2. Damages.

Reference — Inquiry—Scope—Pleading,]—In a patent action the judgment of the supreme court of Canada declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to an inquiry and to be paid the amount found due upon such inquiry for damages sustained from the making, constructing, using, selling, or vending to others to be used, by the defendants, and by the persons to whom they have sold, given, or let the same, of any of the machines, &c. The judgment gave relief beyond what the plaintiffs asked by their bill of complaint:—Held, that where the language of the decree is unambiguous, the allegations in the pleadings shall not be taken into account in the inquiry as to damages, and therefore the master was wrong in excluding evidence of damages to the plaintiffs by the use of machines by persons who had bought them from the defendants. Smith v. Goldie, 11 P. R. 24.

See Leslie v. Calvin, 9 O. R. 207; Collette v. Lasnier, 13 S. C. R. 563; Woodward v. Clement, 10 O. R. 348; Toronto Auer Light Co. v. Colling, 31 O. R. 18.

3. Evidence and Discovery.

Examination of Defendant—Denial of Right—Details—Transactions, I—In an action to restrain the defendants from selling a certain drug in violation of the rights of the plaintiffs under a patent, and of the terms upon which the drug was sold to the defendants, and for damages for selling in violation of such rights and terms, and for damages for a trade-libel, the defendants admitted that they bought the drug, but not from the plaintiffs, and were selling it by their agents, and upon their examination for discovery stated fully their mode of procedure in buying and selling, but in their pleading they denied the plaintiffs' patent right:—Held, that, there being a bond fide contest as to that right, the defendants should not, before the trial, be compelled to afford discovery of the details and particulars of such buying and selling, so as to disclose their and their customers' private business transactions. Such discovery should be deferred until after the plaintiffs should have established their right, even if a subsequent separate trial of the question of infringement should be necessary. Dickerson v. Rudeltife, 17 P. R. 586.

Grounds of Attack—Prior User.]—
The general law applicable to discovery governs in patent cases. A defendant may be properly interrogated as to the ground of his attacking a plaintiff's patent, and there should be a fair and full disclosure of the particular lines of attack which are contemplated, but no such individualizing of the persons who are alleged to be prior users as would enable the plaintiff to fix upon the defendant's witnesses, Smith v. Greey, 10 P. R. 482.

Production of Documents—Privilege.]
—In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, the plaintiffs objected to produce documents described as "professional opinions of the writers of them" (who were engineers) "as to the validity of the patent, the subject matter of this suit," claiming that they were privileged communications:—Held, that documents of this description are only protected where they have been obtained in view of or in anticipation of litigation which has actually taken place, and in which the discovery is sought. Toronto Gravet Road Co., v. Taylor, 6 P. R. 227.

In an action to restrain the infringement of a patent in which the defence was that the supposed invention had been previously patented in the United States and England, copies of American patents material to the defendant's case were precured by his solicitors of their own motion for the purposes of the action:—Held, that such documents were privileged from production. Guetph C. Co. v. Whitehead, 9 P. R.

See Barter v. Howland, 26 Gr. 135; Beam v. Merner, 14 O. R. 412; Toronto Auer Light Co. v. Celling, 31 O. R. 18.

4. Injunction to Restrain.

Interim Injunction — Common Law Court—Affidavits—Damages.]—In an action for an infringement of a patent, an application under the C. L. P. Act for an injunction to restrain defendant was refused, the patent being very recent, and there being conflicting affidavits as to the rights of the plaintiff to it; and it was held, that the plaintiff must establish his title at law before he would be entitled to an injunction. Semble, (1) that the application would also have been refused under the Patent Act of 1869, s. 24, (2) That, to entitle a plaintiff to an interim injunction or account, he must waive all claim to more than nominal damages at the trial. Bonathan v. Boumanville Furniture Manufacturing Co., 5 P. R. 1955

Different Courts—Concurrent Applications.]—Where the exchequer court was asked to grant an interim injunction to restrain an infringement of a patent of invention, and it appeared that similar proceedings had been previously taken in a provincial court of concurrent jurisdiction, which had not been discontinued at the time of such application being made, the court refused the application. Auer Incundescent Light Manufacturing Co. v. Breschel, 5 Ext. C. R. 384.

Undertaking as to Damages.]— When a plaintiff on obtaining an injunction enters into the usual undertaking to abide by such order as the court may make as to damages, it is in the discretion of the court to grant or refuse a reference as to such damages where the injunction is afterwards not continued or is dissolved. Where, therefore, a person in the employment of the owner of a machine for which a patent had been granted, surreptitiously obtained such a knowledge thereof as enabled him to construct a similar machine for defendant, the court, although unable to continue the injunction in consequence of the invalidity of the patent, refused the defendant a reference as to damages, he having availed himself of the knowledge which he knew had been so improperly obtained. Hessin v. Coppin, 21 Gr. 253.

Perpetual Injunction - Common Law Court—Finding of Jury—Account.]—On the 20th June, 1857, letters patent were granted to plaintiff for an improvement in the construction of the form of the mould board in ploughs, called the "gain twist." And this action was brought for the infringement of such patent right by the manufacturing of a plough called the "Queen of the West," and an injunction was asked for to restrain the alleged infringement, &c., and that an account might be kept and taken of the profits, &c., made by defendants by such infringement during this suit, and that defendants might be ordered to pay such profits to plaintiff. interim injunction was granted restraining the alleged infringement, which was dissolved on the undertaking of defendant L. to keep an account of all the profits made on sale of the plough. At the trial a verdict was rendered for plaintiff with 1s, damages, which the court refused to disturb. The plaintiff then moved to revive the injunction and make it perpetual; for an account and payment by de-fendant to L.; and to make the order on this application part of the final judgment:— Held, that the question of infringement was not open to argument on this application.
2. That the jury having found such infringement, the plaintiff was entitled to an fringement, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining defendant from manufacturing the improvement called "the gain twist." 3. That C. S. U. C. c. 23, s. 12, gives the court the power to grant an injunction restraining, &c., and ordering defendant to keep an account, give security "or otherwise," as may seem meet, but not to order an account to be taken of the profits, or to order defendant to pay. Huntingdon v. Lutz. 13 C. P.

Evidence on Motion for Interim Order—Following Decision.]—Where the evidence at the hearing was the same as that given on a motion for injunction, and the Judge before whom it was made granted the injunction, the court, at the hearing, made the injunction perpetual, although doubting whether the facts, as shewn in the cause, were not sufficient to entitle the defendant to an entire rescission of the agreement, on proper proceedings being taken for that purpose. Gillies v. Colton, 22 Gr. 123.

See Emery v. Iredale, 7 L. J. 181; Huntingdon v. Lutz, 10 L. J. 46, ante 1; Woodward v. Clement, 10 O. R. 348; Toronto Auer Light Co. v. Colling, 31 O. R. 18.

5. Particulars.

Defence—Want of Novelty—Order—Notice of Objection.1,—In an action for an infringement of plaintiff's patent, upon an order that defendant should deliver to the plaintiff particulars of any objections on which he intended to rely in support of his plea that the invention was not new but had been wholly and in part used, practised, and vended in Great Britain before the patent: — Held, that a notice that he intended to object at the trial to the patent altogether, as being granted for what was not a new invention, was sufficient. Mills v, Scott, 5 U. C. R. 369.

— Want of Novelty—First Inventor— Dates and Persons.] — In an action for infringement of a patent the defendants denied (4) the novelty of the invention, and (6) that the plaintiff was the first and true inventor: —Held, affirming the decision of a Judge in chambers, a divisional court being equally divided, that the defendants should deliver particulars under these defences, shewing in what respects they deny that the plaintiffs' patent was for any new machine, &c., and the dates and occasions when, and also the names of the persons by whom, the prior user was had. Mills v. Scott, 5 U. C. R. 360, discussed. Smith v. Greey, 11 P. R. 169.

— Order for Particulars — Default — Lexision of Pleading—Exclusion of Pedding—Exclusion of Feddence.]—In making an order for particulars of the defence in a patent action, the better practice is to provide merely for exclusion of evidence in case of no particulars or insufficient particulars being delivered, and not to order the excision of the defence, if good per se. And where both excision of the pleading and exclusion of evidence were provided for in an order:—Held, that the discretion of a Judge in chambers in striking out the provision for excision was rightly exercised. Nazon Brothers Manufacturing Co., v. Patterson and Brother Co., 16 P. R. 40.

See The Queen v. Hall, 27 U. C. R. 146.

6. Parties.

Assignce of Patentee — Plaintiff — Amendment, 1— A patentee assigned part of his interest thereunder to the plaintiff, who alone filed a bill to restrain the infringement of the patent. At the hearing an objection was taken that the patentee was not a party to the suit; but he, by his counsel, appearing and consenting to be named as a plaintiff and to be bound by the proceedings in the cause, an amendment in that respect was directed by the decree to be made, and relief granted according to the terms of the prayer. Yates v, Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495.

Officers of Company — Defendants.] — A bill was filed against a joint stock company (limited) to restrain the infringement of a patent, to which certain officers of the company were made parties, and the bill alleged that "the defendants" were committing the acts complained of, and prayed relief against "the defendants." A demurrer on the ground that the officers were improperly made parties, was overruled with costs, these officers being personally charged with committing the acts complained of, and relief being prayed against them. Cline v. Mountain View Cheese Factory, 10 C. L. J. 45.

7. Pleading.

Answer—Declining to Admit Facts—Novelty—Denial—Evidence.]—Where a defendant declines to admit, by stating he "does not know or admit the truth " of, certain facts alleged in the bill, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove such allegations, as, by declining to admit the defendant in effect denies, and the state of the such a such as the such as the Plea—Not First Inventor.]—The plaintiff complained of defendant having infringed his patent obtained for a new and useful mode of generating and distributing heated air in dwelling houses. Plea, that the plaintiff was not the true and first inventor of the said improvement in the said declaration mentioned, in manner, &c. Demurrer to plea, as traversing something not alleged:—Held, plea good. Mills v. Scott, 6 U. C. R. 205.

Want of Novelty—Specification—Combination.]—To an action for the infringement of a patent for the manufacture of eave-troughs of tin or galvanized iron, defendant pleaded (1) not guilty; (2) that the supposed invention was not new. The evidence proved the patent to have been a combination, partly new and partly of old inventions;—Held, that defendant, under these pleadings, could not raise the question whether the combination was claimed as being new in all its parts, or merely a combination of before-used inventions. Semble, that if he could, the specification must have been held insufficient Emerry v. Iredale, Emerry v. Hodge, 11 C. P. 1006.

See Barter v. Howland, 26 Gr. 135.

8. Trial.

Jury.]—An action for the infringement of a patent should not ordinarily be tried by a jury. Vermilyea v. Guthrie, 9 P. R. 267.

Venue—Dominion Statute.]—In an action for the infringement of a patent, plaintiff laid the venue in Hamilton, while the defendant was a resident of Toronto:—Held, that, regarding the language of s. 24 of the Patent Act, 1872, the venue should be laid in the county where the defendant resided; and an order was made under rule 254 to change the place of trial to Toronto. Goldsmith v. Walton, 9 P. R. 10.

Held, that the word "may" in 35 Vict. c. 28, 24 (D.), was obligatory and not merely permissive, and that the venue in an action to restrain the infringement of a patent, must be laid at the place of sittings of the court in which the action is brought, nearest to the place of residence or business of the defendant. Held, also, that s. 24 was not ultra vires the Dominion Parliament. Aitchesos v. Mann, 9 P. R. 253, 473.

9. Other Cases.

Defence — Employment of Plaintiff,] — Held, that the plaintiff, having been employed by the defendants expressly to make or improve a machine, could not claim to be the inventor as against them. Bonathan v. Bonemagneille Furniture Manufacturing Co., 31 U. C. R. 413.

License—User without Consent.]—Plaintiffs had agreed under seal with one N, for a hoense to use their patented invention in erecting a certain number of mills at a fixed rate per mill. Defendant's mill was erected to N, according to the plaintiff's patent, and N, charged him a less sum, on the understanding that he was to settle the patent fee with the plaintiff's. Just before the trial, defendant paid the plaintiff's their patent fee, and on the trial claimed that the plaintiffs should be non-smited on the ground that the infringement, if any, had been made by N,:—Held, that defendant had infringed the patent and brought himself under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, as having made use of the machinery of the mill without first obtaining plaintiff's consent. Smith v. Powell, 7 C. P. 332.

— Patent not Set aside.] — The infingement of the plaintiff's patent for a pump, which was complained of, was by a pump for which defendant had obtained a patent, and it was objected that this patent was an answer to the action until set aside; but, semble, not. Merrill v. Cousins, 26 U. C. R. 49.

Executors — Action against — Actio Personits.]—The plaintiff sued the executors of the control o

Laches.] — The defendants continued to me a combination patented from the year 1870, and they claimed to have used a similar contrivance some years prior to the patent, and no claim was ever made against the defendants in respect of such user and alleged diringement until the year 1874, when Y. to whom F. had assigned an interest in the patent, wrote to the proper officer of the defendants, making a formal demand in respect thereof, but no attention was paid to such demand, and, although the defendants continued to use the combination, no proceedings were taken to prevent them from so doing until the 8th March. 1876, when Y. filed a bill seeking to restrain the further infringement of the patent:—Held, that the delay in proceeding formed no objection to the party obtaining relief. Yates v. Great Western R. W. Co., 24 Gr. 495.

V. JURISDICTION OF MINISTER OF AGRICUL-TURE.

Decision of Disputes—Judicial Tribunal—Dominion Statute—Prohibition.]—Section 28 of the Patent Act of 1872, after specifying certain cases in which patents are to be null and void, provided that in ease disputes shall arise under this section as to whether a patent has or has not become void, such disputes shall be settled by the Minister of Agriculture or his deputy, whose decision shall be final:—Held, that a court or judicial tribunal for the determination of the matters referred to in the section was constituted by the Act; that the constitution of such a court was not ultra vires the Dominion Parliament as infringing provincial legislation; and that it was competent for the Minister to decide as to the existence of disputes arising for his decision. Prohibition therefore was refused. In re Bell Telephone Co. and Telephone Manufacturing Co. and the Minister of Agriculture, 7 O. R. 605.

Voiding Patent—Judicial Tribunal
—Dominion Statute—Certiorari — AttorneyGeneral.]—On a motion for a writ of certiorari to bring up into the high court all the proceedings. &c., before the Minister of Agriculture, including his decision therein, on an application made before him to have a patent declared void for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 28 of the Patent Act of 18/2:— Held, that the Minister of Agriculture, or his deputy, had jurisdiction under s. 28 to decide any dispute as to whether a patent had become void for non-observance or violation of the provisions of that section. In re Bell Telephone Co., 9 O. R. 339,

Telephone Co., 9 O. R. 339.

Semble, that the Minister's duties are ministerial, and therefore cannot be reversed or reviewed in a court of law; but, even if judicial, this court cannot interfere on the ground of a total want of jurisdiction on the Minister's part to make the inquiry, for, so far at least as this court was concerned, this must be considered res judicata by the decisions of Smith v. Goldie, 9 S. C. R. 46, and Re Bell Telephone Co. and Minister of Agriculture, 7 O. R. 605; nor was there a partial want of jurisdiction, by reason of the neglect of the Minister to examine witnesses on oath or his refusal to issue summonses for witnesses to attend before him, because under s. 28 this was not required. Quare, whether also, if judicial, the provincial courts have jurisdiction to interfere with such a tribunal, it being, on this assumption, a Dominion court. A writ of certorari was therefore refused. Ib.

Semble, that on an application to question a patent under the statute the intervention of the Attorney-General is not essential. Ib.

Exclusive Jurisdiction.]—The jurisdiction in respect to the avoidance of patents conterred upon the Minister of Agriculture by s. 28 of the Patent Act of 1872 is exclusive of that possessed by any other tribunal in the Dominion. Toronto Telephone Manufacturing Co. v. Bell Telephone Co., 2 Ex. C. R. 524.

Forfeiture—Breach of Conditions—Imputation — Administrative Functions.] — The Minister of Agriculture, or his deputy, has exclusive jurisdiction over questions of forfeiture under s. 28 of the Patent Act, 1872, and a defence on the ground that a patent has become forfeited for breach of the conditions in the said s. 28 cannot be supported after a decision of the Minister of Agriculture, or his deputy, declaring it not void by reason of such breach. Smith v. Goldie, 9 S. C. R. 46, 7 A. R. 628.

VI. LICENSES, ASSIGNMENTS, SALES, AND ROYALTIES.

Assignment of Interest in Patent-Failure of Consideration — Manufacture by Others.]—The plaintiffs, being the patentees of a certain article, by memorandum in writing, under seal, reciting that they were the inventors of the article in question, assigned all their interest in the patent to the defendant for a certain district or territory, in consideration of certain royalties and sums of money therein agreed to be paid by him. In an action to recover the consideration, in which the evidence of the defendant went to shew that he knew before the first year after the making of the contract had expired that others were manufacturing the patented article, but he did not complain or repudiate the transaction, or refuse to pay, or offer to reassign, or require the alleged infringers to desist, or call upon the patentees to vindicate their patent, and that he had a profitable user of the invention to a substantial extent :-Held, that, in the absence of fraud, or war-ranty, or representation which induced the bargain and was falsified in the result, such a contract was simply for the purchase of an interest in an existing patent. No assumption arises, and no implication is to be made that the patent is indefeasible. The plaintiffs were the patient is indereasible. The plaintiffs were therefore held entitled to judgment. Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. N. 8, 67, and Hall v. Conder, 2 C. B. N. 8, 22, commented on, Hayne v. Maitby, 3 T. R. 438, and Saxton v. Podge, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 84, distinguished. Vermiligea v. Canniff, 12 O. R. 164.

Assignment of Patent — Invalidity of Patent—Payment of Royalties.] — The mere attaching of the support of the handle of a pump higher or lower in postion than that formerly in use, is not the subject of a patent; but P. having obtained a patent therefor, which he assigned to the defendant subject to certain royalties.—Held, that notwithstanding the invalidity of the patent he was entitled to recover the amounts payable to him under the agreement during the currency thereof. Owens v. Taylor, 29 Gr. 210.

Patent—Improvement, 1—The defendant and another, who had acquired by assignment from the inventor, and acquired by assignment from garbage, &c., assigned to the planing from the from garbage, &c., assigned to the planing from the form the first of the planing from the following assigned to the planing from the planing from the following from the first of the first of the same interest therein as in the first patent. A claim by the plaintiff that he was entitled to the benefit of the second patent as an improvement within the meaning of the first patent under the terms of the assignment was upheld. It was not necessary that the second patent should have been an infringement of the first one to enable the plaintiff to claim it as an improvement, the word "improvement," within the meaning of the assignment, not being used in a technical sense nor as having any defined legal meaning, but according to its popular use, for the parties were dealing not with a particular composition described in the first patent but with the development of the central idea underlying it. Watson V. Harris, 31 O. R. 134.

Rights of Assignce — Future Improvements — Consideration.] — By contract under seal M. agreed to sell to B. and S. the patent for an acetylene gas machine, for which he had applied, and as to which a caveat had been filed, and also all improvements and patents for such machine that he might thereafter make, and covenanted that he would procure patents in Canada and the United States and assign the same to B. and S. The latter received an assignment of the Canadian patent and paid portion of the purchase money, but when the American patent was issued it was found to contain a variation from the description of the machine in the caveat, and they refused to pay the balance, and in an action by M. to recover the same, they demanded by counterclaim a return of what had been paid on account :- Held, that the agreement was not satisfied by an assignment of any patent that M. might afterwards obtain; that he was bound to obtain and assign a patent for the machine described in the caveat referred to in the agreement; and, that, as the evidence shewed the variation therefrom in the American patent to be most material, and to deprive the purchasers of a feature in the machine which they deemed essential. M. was not entitled to recover. Held, further, that, as B. and S. accepted the Canadian patent and paid a portion of the purchase money in considera-tion thereof, and as they took the benefit of it, worked it for their own profit, and sold rights under it, they were not entitled to recover back the money so paid as money had and received by M. to their use. Bingham v. McMurray, 30 S. C. R. 159.

Assignment of Right to Manufacture—Option to Purchase Patent Rights.]—
The patentee for the manufacture of certain machines for the extinguishing of fires, assigned to another the right to manufacture such machines, reserving a certain royalty, with the right at any time within one year on the part of the assignee to absolutely purchase all the rights of the patentee under the batent for a sum named:—Held, notwith-standing such right of purchase, that the assignee was not entitled to the exclusive right of manufacturing, and that the patentee could, not withstanding such assignment, confer on other persons the right of manufacturing. Fire Extinguisher Co., v. North Westera (Babocok) Fire Extinguisher Co., 20 Gr. 625.

Assignment of Right to Sell-Invalidity of Patent-Right of Assignee to Manufacture-Estoppet-Interest. The holder of patents for improvements in certain agricultural implements, agreed to assign to the defendant the exclusive right to sell these implements, but not to manufacture them; and in certain contingencies, he also agreed to assign the patents themselves. In fact the patents were invalid, for want of novelty, and the defendant, having re-assigned any interest he had in the patents, claimed the right to manufacture the implements for his own benefit:—Held, that, owing to the agreement between the parties, and their dealings with each other thereunder, the defendant was estopped from questioning the validity of the patents. Held, also, that the effect of such agreement was not to constitute the defendant a partner, but to give him an interest in the patents, and that he was not a mere liceusee of the patentee. Gillies v. Collon, 22 Gr. 123.

Contract to Assign Patent Rights— Necessity for Deed—Pleading, |—The declara-tion alleged that the defendant, being the intentor and patentee in Canada of a certain baggy seat called "Daniel Couboy's turn down seat," agreed to permit the plaintiffs for lifteen years from the Sth February, 1875, to have the exclusive right, privilege, and liberty of making, constructing, and using, in the county of Wellington, the right to manufacture and sell the said patented article; to give the plaintiffs the privilege of selling it in the Province of Ontario; and to prepare, execute, and deliver to the plaintiffs a proper and sufficient deed of assignment of the said patented invention, capable of being registered in the patent office, pursuant to the statute in that behalf, and sufficient to empower the plaintiffs to make and sell the said patented invention as aforesaid. The breach alleged was that defendant did not deliver such deed, but refused to do so. The defendant pleaded that the agreement was in writing, and set it out verbatim. By it the defendant granted out verbatim. By it the defendant granted and sold to the plaintiffs for fifteen years from 8th February, 1875, the exclusive right from stir February, 1830, the excusive right and privilege of making, constructing, and using, and vending to others to be used, the invention specified, to any one in the county of Wellington, and granted to them the privilege of selling the patented article in any part of Ontario, "and bind myself to forward to them the proper deed of invention: Held, on demurrer, that the plea was bad, for that the agreement as alleged in the declara-tion was a valid one, and that the written agreement set out supported the declaration. As to the various objections alleged: -Held, (1) that a contract to give such an assignment need not, under 35 Vict. c. 26 (D.), be in writered ing, though the assignment itself must; and that, if a writing was required, the declaration med not aver but would be held to import it.

That the agreement was not for a mere license, and need not be by deed.

That the defendant was bound under the agreement to do whatever was necessary to entitle the plain-tiffs to hold and enjoy the rights assigned or intended to be; and, therefore, to execute and deliver a proper deed which could be registered. 4. That he was bound also to prepare such deed. Dalgleish v. Conboy, 26 C. P. 254.

Covenant to Assign Share in Invention—fonsderation—Breach — Independent Covenants — Pleading.]— Declaration on a deel, by which, in consideration of $1, the defendant assigned to the plaintiff one-fourth share in an invention, for which he was applying for a patent in the United States, and covenanted to assign to him the same share in the letters patent to be issued; in consideration whereof the plaintiff covenanted to use his best endeavours to bring said patent into general use in the United States. Breach, that after the patent had been obtained, the defendant would not assign to the plaintiff, but wrongfully sold his whole interest to there. Plea, or equitable grounds, the plaintiff well knew as a neideration, as the plaintiff well knew as neideration, as the plaintiff well knew as neideration. The plaintiff well knew as the patent of the states that the plaintiff which we have a superstanding the patent into use in the United States; that the plaintiff wholly neighbour that the defendant of his right, under value and speaked the plaintiff sposition and speaked to the plaintiff's position and ability to serve the defendant by his recommendations, and his defendant by his recommendations, and his defendant was induced to only a single plaintiff wholly a serve the defendant of the plaintiff's position and so the defendant's and before any breach on the defendant's argueement where his agreement, where his agreement where his were independent; the plaintiff will drew from and broke as the same as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a transfer as soon as the plaintiff was entitled to a farmand and the non-performance by him of something to be done afterwards, could not defeat his right of action. Storiet where the plaintiff was something to be done afterwards, could not defeat his right of action. Storiet where the patent and the non-performance was the second and the non-performance was a second as the second and the non-performance was a second as the second and the non-p License—Disputing Validity of Patent.]— During the existence of a license, the licensor cannot dispute the validity of a patent obtained by him, and afterwards assigned by him for value to another. Whiting v. Tuttle, 17 Gr. 454.

License to Manufacture — Right of Licensec to Terminate.]—The defendants were licensees of a patent under an agreement whereby they had to pay certain royalties to the patentee, and in consideration thereof were empowered to manufacture the patented machine in question, to the end of the term of the letters patent. Subsequently the defendants became possessed of an undivided one-fourth interest in the patent, and they thereupon gave notice to the plaintiff, who was the holder of the patent and entitled to the benefit of the above agreement, that they would, after a day named, terminate the agreement and make no further payments for royalites, but would manufacture the machine in question as owners of an undivided one-fourth interest in the patent:—Held, that the defendants were entitled so to do. If an interest is transferred in a patent, then it requires the consent of both parties to put an end to the transfer; but, if the transaction is merely permission on certain terms to invade the monopoly, then the license and make at his peril the patented machine. Noron v. Noron, 24 O. R. 401.

Sale — Covenant — Breach — Release — Pleading — Joinder of Causes of Action — Royalties—Joint and Several Claims, 1—The plaintiffs sold to defendant by deed the right to manufacture and sell the patent right for "Kinney's Metallic Waggon Seat." for the time in the patent mentioned. Defendant covenanted to manufacture at least twenty per day, and as many more as the demand should require, paying each of the plaintiffs one-half of a royalty of twenty-five cents on each seat, and further, to supply McK. & Co. with at least 200 seats per month at 95c, each, pursuant to an agreement between them and the plaintiffs, paying on these a royalty of 20c, to the plaintiffs. There were other covenants by defendant to manufacture in a work man-like manner, &c., and to make use of all means to introduce the seats and make them known. The declaration set out the deed and assigned breaches of all the covenants. The third plea was, that after breach it was agreed between the plaintiffs and defendant that they should release each other from the performance of their respective covenants, and all rights of action in respect there of, and in consideration thereof, defendant agreed to manufacture theoceforth only so many seats as would supply the demand, and the plaintiffs accepted such agreement in satisfaction of the cause of action declared on:—Held, bad, as pleaded to the whole cause of action, whereas it could only be an answer to the breaches of the covenant and not to the covenant itself, for it shewed no release, but only an agreement for one, and no satisfaction by deed; and because the satisfaction was insufficient, the new agreement being merely to manufacture a less number of the same article in the same way, and on the same terms. McGiverin v. Turnbull, 32 U. C. R. 407.

The fourth plea, on equitable grounds, al-leged that, in consideration that defendant would release the plaintiffs from performance of said covenants on their part, and from all causes of action in respect thereof, the plaintiffs agreed to release defendant from performance of said covenants on his part, and that defendant accordingly did release the plaintiffs from the performance of said covenants on their part :- Held, bad, for not averring a release of the plaintiff from all causes of action; and because such an oral concord under these circumstances could be no defence in equity, unless the plaintiffs accepted the release or by their conduct and acquiescence led defendant to believe the first agreement at an end. The 13th plea, averring that the second agreement was made in consideration that the defendant would not avail himself of a right he possessed under the first deed to put an end to it by giving a sixty days' notice to plaintiffs:—Held, a good plea on equitable grounds. The declaration was held bad for a misjoinder of causes of action, being for royalties payable severally to the plaintiffs, and also for other royalties payable to them jointly. 1b.

Sale of Patent Rights—Covenant by Vender against Infringement—Wrong-docrs— Royalties. |—In 1875 J. R. obtained letters patent for improvements in "harvesters," and sold and assigned to the plaintiffs the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the same, and to sell such right to other persons. In the same year the plaintiffs executed a deed to the defendant, assigning to the defendant the exclusive right to manufacture and sell such "harvesters" in certain counties, he paying $10 royalty on each one to be manufactured by him. It was then covenanted by and on the part of the plaintiffs that the original patentee, J. R., would warrant and defend the defendant in the possession of the granted, and further agreed that if J. R. neglected or refused to protect and defend him in his peaceable possession of the said nim in his penceanic possession of the said patent, then the royalty agreed to be paid by him should cease. Per Hagarty, C. J. O., and Morrison, J.A., that the plaintiffs under this covenant were liable only to the defendant in case J. R. neglected to defend him against all persons having a right to manufacture and sell the machines, not as against mere wrongdoers. Per Burton and Patterson, JJ.A., that the terms of the covenant bound J. R. to protect the defendant against all infringers, the rule of construction of covenants to " warrant and defend," as applied to lands, not having any application in cases like the present, Green v. Watson, 10 A. R. 113, 2 O. R. 627. Semble, if there had been a breach of the covenant by G., the defendant would not have been liable to pay the royalty under the above agreement, though he had continued to manufacture the patented article. S. C., 2 O. R. 627.

— Covenant to Pay Royalty—Breach —Plea of Want of Novelty.] — Declaration, that defendant by deed covenanted with plaintiff to manufacture, within a year, at least 100 machines, and to pay to plaintiff every at least three months, during the first nine months of said year, $2 for every machine made and sold; and at the end of the year to pay $2 for every machine made and not sold during the first nine months of said year; averment, the arst time motions of said year, averaged, that all things, &c., and defendant had made 200 machines, but had not paid, &c. Plea, that by said deed it was recited that letters patent had been granted to A. for a "new and useful," &c., being the machine menand useful," &c., being the machine men-tioned, of which A. claimed to be inventor; and by said deed it was recited that plaintiff was assignee of said letters patent, and the rights conferred, and plaintiff as such assignee contracted with defendant for the sale of nee contracted with defendant for the sale of the exclusive right of making, &c., said in-vention in, &c.; that by said deed plaintiff pretended to grant and assign to defendant said rights so contracted for, &c.; averment, that after making said deed defendant dis-covered that the invention was not new:— Held, plea bad. Gray v. Billington, 21 C. F.

- Payment of Price-Plea-Change in Name of Invention-Materiality.]-A declaration set out an agreement, by which, after reciting that the plaintiff had made an in-vention called "The New Dominion Stove-pipe Collar," and the agreement of the parties for the sale and purchase thereof, it was witnessed that plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant to purchase the right to use and sell. &c the said article known as the above, in consideration of a specified sum, to be paid after the issue of the patent therefor. The declaration then averred that the patent had issued for the invention referred to in the agreement and covering the article there described, though it was described in the patent as "Wandby's Improved Stove-pipe Collar," and that all conditions had been fulfilled, &c., yet the defendant had not paid, &c. Plea, that when the agreement was made both parties contemplated that the invention should be called "The New Dominion Stove-pipe Collar," and should be so described in the letters patent, with the object, amongst others, of dis-tinguishing it from another similar but less valuable invention theretofore manufactured and sold by the plaintiff under the name of "Wandby's Improved Stove-pipe Stone;" and that the change of name was made by the plaintiff without defendant's knowledge or consent:—Held, plea good, for that the name of the invention was a material part of the contract. Wandby v. Hewitt, 27 C. P. 571.

Renaval Terms—Representations of Fendor—Aprenent—Specific Performance—Costs.]—C. P., who had for some time been carrying on the business of pump making, in partnership with B. and C., was the holder of a patent for an improved pump, which would expire on the 19th July, 1877, but was renewable under the Patent Act for two further terms of five years each. On the 1st June, 1877, C. P. agreed to sell to the defendant P. his interest in such partnership business, together with the land and buildings in which it was carried on, for 84,500; and by the instrument evidencing the agreement executed on the 23rd June, "he agreed to assign his interest in his pump-patents to Mr. P. for the counties of," &c. After the expiry of the patent (19th July, 1877), C. P. filed a bill seeking to enforce payment of $3,000, balance of purchase money due in respect of the sale of his interest in the partnership, and of the right as before stated, insisting that all he had sold, or intended to sell, was his interest in the then current patent; one object which he had in view in so doing, it was proved, being to prevent of the sale of the sale of the patent, although it was shown in evidence that C. P., in speaking of the patent he held, said it was good for ten years. The court, being of opinion that what the defendants intended to purchase was the right for the years, and that the belief that they were purchasing such right was induced by the representations of C. P., who knew how the fact was, and was, therefore bound to specifically perform the agreement by executing such an assignment as would effectually convey the right for the counties named, whether at the time of the original contract the patent was really good for the years, or afterwards became so, made a decree for that relief at the instance of P. and his partners in a suit instituted by them for that purpose, and ordered V. Peck, Peck V. Powell, 26 Gr. 322, S A. R. 488.

Held, by the supreme court of Canada, reversing the judgment of the court of appeal, that under the agreement and assignment plaintiffs were entitled to the extension as well as the current term. Peck v. Powell, 11 S. C. R. 494.

Sale of Right to Manufacture—Royal-ties—Warranty against Infringement—Plea of Want of Novetter—Jury—Evidence—Res Judicate—Jabelling—Jyants,—Action to recover royalties alleged to be payable on threshing machines manufactured by defendant, under an indurure made between plaintiff B. soid and defendant, whereby the plaintiff B. soid and defendant, whereby the plaintiff B. and defendant agreed to pay a manufacture—and use a certain invention known as "Beam's Thresher;" and in constituent of the plaintiff B. subsequently assigned to the complaintiff B. subsequently assigned to his co-plaintiff B. subsequently assigned to his co-plaintiff F. one-half share of interest in the invention, and also one-half of the moneys then, and to grow, due under the indenture. The plaintiffs' patent was for a combination, part only of which was used by defendant. The machines in question were manufactured after the assignment to F. The defendant objected that the patent was lovalled in the ground of want of novelty in the invention, and that it was not the subject of a patent; and also that the machine Vyi. 171 D—165—16 was not manufactured on the principle of the plaintiffs' patent. Parole vicience was admitted, subject to objection, that the plaintiff B. agreed to prevent any infringement of the patent, and, if he failed to do so, he should not be entitled to any royalties. The agreed to prevent any infringement of the patent, and the failed to any properties. The agreed of the patent of the validity of the patent. (2) That whether the machines were or not manufactured "upon or after" the principle of the plaintiffs' patent, was a question for the jury on the evidence, and they having found, as they were warranted by the evidence in doing, that they were so manufactured, the finding could not be interfered with. (3) That the parol evidence was not admissible to vary the deed, following McNeely v. McWilliams, 13 A. R. 324; and also that, by a prior judgment, the matter was res judicata, and the fact that that judgment was between R, alone and defendant, could make no difference. Heaven, 14 Co. Red 12.

fact that that judgment was between B. alone and defendant, could make no difference. Beam v. Merner, 14 O. R. 412.

In an action under a similar agreement, it appeared that the defendant partly manufactured a number of machines, and then soid out his establishment to a firm M. D. & Co., who completed the machines, and labelled them as required by the contract. Afterwards the defendant took M.'s place in the firm, and the firm manufactured a number of machines upon and after the principle of the plaintiffs patent, which they labelled with another name from that required by the contract. The plaintiffs sued for the royalties, and for not labelling as required:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as for a manufacture and sale by defendant, for they might assume that the defendant was making the machines under the contract, and that the firm were but agents working for him. VII. PRIOR USER.

First Inventor—Evidence.]—Where one who says he is the inventor of anything has had an opportunity to hear of it from other sources, and especially where delay has occurred on his part in patenting his invention, his claim that he is a true inventor ought to be carefully weighed. American Dunlop Tire Co. v. Goold Bicycle Co., 6 Ex. C. R. 293.

— Rights of, against Prior Patentee.]
—To be entitled to a patent in Canada, the patentee must be the first inventor in Canada or elsewhere. A prior patent to a person who is not the true inventor is no defence against an action by the true inventor under a patent issued to him subsequently, and does not require to be cancelled or repealed by scire facias, whether it is vested in the defendant or in a person not a party to the suit. Smith v., Goldie, 9 S. C. R. 46.

Foreign Patent—Independent Invontor— Disclaimer — Piedaing — Evidence.]—Where the plaintiff had, more than one year previous to his application for a patent in Canada, obtained a patent in the United States disclosing the same invention, though not containing all the Calaims contained in the Canadian patent:—Held, under s. 7 of the Patent Act, 1872, that such foreign patent amounted to a publication of the whole invention in the United States, and imported a disclaimer of all parts not claimed in the foreign patent. Held, also, that such defence was sufficiently raised by the pleadings in this case. Held, also, that a patent in Canada granted to an independent inventor after the plaintiff's foreign patent, but before his application for a patent in Canada, was valid against the plaintiff's subsequent patent. Held, also, that evidence of such prior Canadian patent to an independent inventor was admissible under a general denial that the plaintiff was the first inventor. Barter v. Howland, 26 Gr. 135.

——Statement of.]—It is not illegal to manufacture and sell an article in this country which has been natented in the United States, and put upon it a statement that it is so patented, as a recommendation of it, so long as there is no infringement of a valid existing patent in this country. Kidder v. Smart, Kidder v. Smart Manufacturing Co., 8 O. R. 362.

User before Canadian Patent -Wrong-doer - Injunction.] - The plaintiffs the patentees of a certain invention in were the United States, and, being desirous of having the article with some improvements patented in Canada, one of them employed one of the defendants, a mechanic, to make a model, and under a pledge of secrecy placed the United States patent in his hands and imparted to him his ideas as to the improve It was afterwards discovered that the defendant so employed had, during his employment, taken out a patent for a similar article, under which he and the other defendants were manufacturing. In an action brought to set aside this patent and for an injunction restraining the manufacture by the defendants of the article, it was contended on the latter's behalf, that the article was not protected in Canada by the United States patent, and in fact that the idea was public property:—Held, following Morrison v. Moat, 9 Ha. 241, that the plaintiffs had the right to succeed as to the injunction, and that their title was good as against the defendants, even though they might not have a good title against the public. Lean v. Huston, 8 O. R.

Foreign User.]—Action for the infringement of a patent. Plea, that the invention was not new, but had been publicly used and vended in a foreign country:—Held. a good answer. Vannorman v. Leonard, 2 U. C. R. 72.

Inventor's User before Patent.]—A machinist invented a machine in which an inclined plane was applied for a novel purpose. He contemplated further improving his invention, but meanwhile made use of it in his workshop. Five years or more afterwards he adopted or invented a contrivance which was not new, but which, in connection with the inclined plane, increased greatly the value of the machine; and he then took out a patent for the improved machine;—Held, that, not-withstanding his prior use of the original machine, the patente was entitled to the exclusive use of the inclined plane. Summers v. Abell, 15 Gr. 529.

Manufacture before Patent — Consent—Rights after Patent.] — Section 46 of the Patent Act, R. S. C. c. 61, does not authorize one who has, with the full consent of the patentee, manufactured and sold a patented article for less than a year before the issue of the patent, to continue the manufacture after the issue thereof, but merely permits him to use and sell the articles manufactured by him prior thereto. Foucht v. Chonn, 25 O. R. 71.

Prior Foreign Invention - Non-user-Non-disclosure.]—The pneumatic tire as applied to bicycles came into use in 1890. It consisted of an inflatable rubber tube with an outer covering or sheath, which was cemented to the under surface of a U-shaped rim similar to that which had been used for the solid and cushion rubber tires which preceded it. This tube was liable, in use, to be punctured, and, as the sheath was cemented to the rim and, as the sneath was cemented to the rim of the wheel, it was not readily removable for the purpose of being repaired. La Force's invention met that difficulty by providing for the use of a rim with the edges turned inward so as to form on each side a lip or flange, and of an outer covering or sheath to the edges of which were attached strips made of rubber or other suitable material, which fitted under such lips or flanges and filled up the recess between them. When the rubber tube is not inflated, this tire may read ily be attached to or removed from the rim of the wheel; but when inflated the covering or sheath is expanded, and the outer edges of the strips attached thereto are forced under the flanges of the rim, and the whole securely held in position by the pressure of the in-flated tube upon such strips. The defendant's assignor hit upon this idea in April, 1891. and in company with his brother made a section of a rim and tire on this principle in May following. On the 3rd August in the same year a patent therefor was applied for same year a patent therefor was applied for in Canada, and on the 2nd December follow-ing the defendant obtained it. In March, 1891, Jeffery, at Chicago, in the United States, conceived substantially the same device, and confidentially communicated the nature therecommunicate the nature thereof to his partner and patent solicitor. On the 27th July he applied for a United States patent, and on the 12th January, 1892, such patent was granted to him. On the 5th February, 1892, he applied for a Canadian patent. which was granted to him on the 1st June in the same year. When, in May, 1891, La Force's conception of the invention was well defined, there had been no use of the invention anywhere, and the public had not any-where any knowledge or means of knowledge thereof: -Held, that the fact that, prior to the invention of anything by an independent Canadian inventor, to whom a patent there-for is subsequently granted in Canada, a tor-eign inventor had conceived the same thing, eign inventor had conceived the same thing, but had not used it or in any way disclosed it to the public, is not sufficient under the patent laws of Canada to defeat the Canadian patent. Regina v. La Force, 4 Ex. C. R. 14.

Public User before Patent—Inventor's Consent—Foreign User.]—It appeared that a machine had been used for many years in the United States which performed the same work as the plaintiff's, but it was too expensive. The plaintiff had been employed in defendants' factory in bending for about three months, and was asked by the foreman "to study up an invention or apparatus for bending chair stuff." He discovered the invention that same night, about the 1st May, and next morning explained it at the factory. The machine was constructed there, defendants supplying the materials and the blacksmith's and carpenter's work, and was used there for chairs until about the 14th July, when the plaintiff applied for a patent, many persons in defendants' employment being aware of its construction and operation. It appeared, also, that other persons in the factory as well as the plaintiff had been employed in trying to devise such an apparatus, and that when this was found successful the manager said he would patent it for the factory, to which the plaintiff did not then object. The said ne would patent it for the factory, to which the plaintiff did not then object. The plaintiff never informed detendants of his application for the patent, which issued in October following:— Held, that there had been a public user of the invention with the plaintiff's consent and allowance before he applaintin's consent and anowance before he ap-nlied for the patent, so as to destroy his claim to it. Bonathan v. Bowmanville Furniture Manufacturing Co., 31 U. C. R. 413.

Inventor's Consent — Sale — Prior Provincial Patent.]—To invalidate a patent of invention on the ground that the subject thereof was in public use in any of the Proof invention on the ground that the subject thereof was in public use in any of the Provinces of the Dominion for more than a year prior to the application of the inventor for a patent, such use need not be shewn to have the state of the s scription and specification, and the inventor, having surrendered that patent, obtained one from the Dominion Government in 1874, in accordance with an amended description and specification, for the unexpired term of the one so surrendered:—Held, that the prior user of the invention so patented in New Brunswick (and extended) was not such a user as invalidated the patent of 1874. Ib.

Single Sale before Patent - Use by Purchaser. |-The inventor of a new machine before taking out a patent, erected and a machine embodying his invention, and the purchaser had it in use for three years before the inventor procured a patent. The machine so sold was not put up for the purpose of exso sold was not put up for the purpose of ex-perimenting, but was sold as a complete mach-ine, and was placed in the premises of the purchaser in order that he might reap the profits expected from its use:—Held, that the inventor had lost his right to a patent. Heavin v. Coppin, 19 Gr. (22).

See Abell v. McPherson, 17 Gr. 23.

VIII. RE-ISSUE.

Additional Claim-Omission from Original Patent - Error - Laches.] - Where to an action to restrain certain alleged infringe-ments of a re-issued patent, it was objected by way of defence that the re-issued patent contained a combination not in the original patent or the application therefor, and was therefore invalid; and it appeared that the combination in question was manifested in the drawings and specifications of the original patent, but by mistake and inadvertence was not separated from the other parts of the de-scription, and made the subject of a distinct claim, so as to be protected by the original patent:—Held, the divisional court being evenly divided, affirming the decision of the Judge at the trial, that, there being no laches, the re-issued patent was nevertheless valid.

Withrow v. Malcolm, 6 O. R. 12.

Mistake in Original Pacent—Delay in Re-issue.]—Held, that the delay (without any excuse) of a patentee for a period of a little more than a year and nine months, after full knowledge of an inadvertence and mistake in his original patent, and after a re-issue of the same patent in the United States, founded upon the same alleged inadvertence or mistake (during which period manufacture had been carried on in the United States under a re-issue there), before the application for a re-issue in this country, is fatul to the validity of the re-issue here. Kidder v. Smart Kidder v. Smart Manufacturing Co., S O. R. 362. Mistake in Original Parent-Delay in Specification — Change in Claim — Identity of Invention—Special Statute—Jurisdiction of Commissioner—Defect in Patent.]— An inventor, in the specification to his first An inventor, in the specimeation to his first Canadian patent, after disclaiming all other illuminant appliances for burners, claimed: "An illuminant appliance for gas and other burners consisting of a cap or hood made of fabric impregnated with the substances here-fabric impregnated with the substances hereinbefore mentioned and treated as herein de-scribed." In the specification the substances scribed." In the specification the substances and the proportions in which they might be and the proportions in which they might be combined were stated. Eight years after-wards the owner of the original patent sur-rendered the same and obtained a re-issue, the specification whereof differed from that of the original only in respect of the claim, which was as follows:—"The method herein described of making incandescent devices, which consists in impregnating a filament. which consists in impregnating a filament thread, or fabric of combustible material with a solution of metallic salts of refractory earths suitable when oxidized for an incanearths suitable when oxidized for an inclu-descent, and then exposing the impregnated filament, thread, or fabric to heat until the combustible matter is consumed:"—Held, that, although in the claim of the re-issue there were no words of reference or limitation to the refractory earths mentioned in the specification, yet the words "salts of refractory earths" occurring in the claim must be limited or restricted to such refractory earths as were mentioned in the preceding part of the specification, or to their equivalents. (2) That the re-issue was for the same invention as that which was the subject of the earlier patent. (3) The re-issue being for the same invention as the original patent, delay in making the application for the re-issue did not making the application for the re-issue did not invalidate the same. (4) That the Act 55 & 56 Vict. c. 77, passed for the relief of Von Wels-bach and Williams, the original patentees, was effective although at the time it was passed others than they were interested in the patent. (5) To give the commissioner jurisdiction to authorize the reissue of a patent it is not necessary that the patent be defective or inoperative for some one of the reasons specified in s. 23 of the Patent Act. It is sufficient to support his jurisdiction that he deems the patent defective or inoperative for any such reasons, and his decision as to that is final and conclusive. Auer Incandescent Light Manufacturing Co. v. O'Brien, 5 Ex C. R. 243.

See Hunter v. Carrick, 28 Gr. 489, 10 A. R. 449, 11 S. C. R. 300.

IX. SCIRE FACIAS TO REPEAL PATENTS.

Flat—Attorney-General.]—A soi, fa, to pet aside a patent was issued at the instance of a private relator, without the fast of either the attorney-general for the Dominion or for Ontario having been irrst obtained.—Held, that a fiat was necessary. 2. That the attorney-general for Ontario was the proper authority to grant it. The Queen v. Pattee, 5 P. R. 292.

Particulars of Breaches — Declaration — Trial.)—The effect of C. S. C. c. 34, s. 29, s.-s. 2, enacting that the proceeding on a writ of sci. fa. to repeal a patent shall be "according to the law and practice of the court of Queen's bench in England," is to introduce the Imperial Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83:—Held. therefore, that leave to deliver particulars of the breaches, which should have been delivered with the declaration, could only be granted as if the declaration were delivered de nove; and that, as the jury had been sworn, and this, therefore, could not be done, a verdict was properly directed for defendant. The court, however, upon affidavit, allowed the plaintiff to deliver particulars, on terms. The Queen v. Hall, 27 U. C. R. 146.

Trial—Right to Begin.]—Under the general order of the exchequer court of Canada bearing date the 5th December, 1892, and the provisions of s. 41 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83 (Imp.), the defendant in an action of scire facias to repeal a patent for invention is entitled to begin and give evidence in support of his patent, and, if the plaintiff produces evidence to impeach the same, the defendant is entitled to reply. The Queen v. La Force, 4 Ex. C. R. 14.

See Smith v. Goldie, 9 S. C. R. 46; The Queen v. General Engineering Co. of Ontario, 6 Ex. C. R. 328.

X. Specifications.

Drawings Annexed.] — The drawings annexed to a patent may be looked at to explain or illustrate the specification. Regina v. La Force, 4 Ex. C. R. 14.

Sufficiency of—New Invention.]— The plaintiff claimed a patent for a new and useful improvement in the construction of saw-mills, describing his invention thus; "What constitutes the invention is, generally, the simplicity of construction of the said saw-mill, and making it portable; but especially the direct application of steam or water power by the connecting rod or shaft B to drive the circular saw." On the drawing the circuar saw was attached to the end of a shaft, the other end of which was connected directly by a crank pin and the rod B with the engine. In an action for infringing this patent, the evidence shewed that in other mills a shaft had been long in use, to which the circular saw was attached; but that this shaft was turned by a belt and pulleys connected with the shaft, which by the plaintiff's invention was connected directly with the circular saw; and that the novelty therefore consisted, not in the direct application of the power to the last mentioned shaft, nor in the placing the circular saw on the end of a shaft, but in placing the saw on the shaft to which the power was directly applied, thus dispensing with the other shaft:—Held, that the patent, specification, and drawing, sufficiently shewed that the plaintiff claimed as a new invention what appeared by the evidence to be so. Smith v. Ball. 21 U. C. R. 122.

The above specification was also held sufficient in Smith v. Mutchmore, 11 C. P. 458, and in Waterous v. Bishop, 20 C. P. 29.

Uncertainty. — A specification providing merely that a protector of a washing machine is to be arranged "at an angle" is void for uncertainty. Taylor v. Brandon Manufacturing Co., 21 A. R. 361.

See Emery v. Iredale, Emery v. Hodge, 11 C. P. 106; Patric v. Sylvester, 23 Gr. 573.

XI. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Delivery of Model—Time for.|—The statute 35 Vict. c. 26 (D.) does not require delivery of a model prior to the issue of a patient of invention. In this case, after the granting of the patient, the commissioner grantice of the patient, the commissioner on receipt of the model, which was sent, and the patient was then forwarded:—Semble, that delivery of the model prior to the grant of the patient was dispensed with, merely requiring it to be sent before the patient was dispensed with, merely requiring it to be sent before the patient was dispensed with, merely re-quiring it to be sent before the patient would be forwarded. The Queen v. Smith, 7 O. R. 440.

Foreign Patent—Effect of Expiration.]
—The expression "any foreign patent" occurring in the concluding clause of s. 8 of the Fatent Act—"under any circumstances, if a foreign patent exists, the Canadian patent shall expire at the earliest date on which any foreign patent for the same invention expires, nust be limited to foreign patents in existence when the Canadian patent was granted. Awa Incandescent Light Manufacturing Co. v. Dreschel, 6 Ex. C. R. 50, 28 S. C. R. 608.

Aforesaid"—Jurisdiction. — "Cause as Aforesaid"—Jurisdiction. —Upon a proceeding by scire facias to set aside a patent for invention because of an alleged expiry of a foreign patent for the same invention under the provisions of s. 8 of the Patent Act:—Held, that there was so much doubt as to that being one of the clauses included in the expression "for cause as aforesaid" in cl. 2 of s. 34 of the Act, that the action should be dismissed. The Queen v. General Engineering Co. of Ontario, 6 Ex. C. R. 328.

Effect of Expiration—"Exists."]—
On the 1st March, 1892, J. filed an application for a Canadian patent, and on the same day applied for a British patent and an Indian patent. The British application was accepted on the 30th April, 1892, and the patent issued on the 12th July, but was dated the 1st March, 1892. The Italian patent was issued on the 19th March, 1892, and was granted for a term of six years and was granted for a term of six years and was granted on the 1st March, 1892. The British perturbed is the 1st Merch parameter was remarked on the 1st March, 180. There was some doubt whether a similar was some doubt whether a similar was some doubt that the patent expired at the end of the six years, when no steps were taken by the inventor for its renewal.—Held, that the Canadian patent was void. (2) That the words "foreign patent" in s. 8 of the Patent Act, R. S. C. e. 61 (as amended by 55 & 56 Vict. c. 24, s. 1), include all patents that are not Canadian. (3) That the word "exists" in s. 8 has reference to the date or time when the Canadian patent is granted, not when it is applied for. (4) That the words "shall expire at the earliest date on which any foreign patent for the same invention expires," are not to be limited to the expiration by lapse of time of the potential term of the foreign patent, but include any ending at a time earlier than the end of the term for which the patent is granted. General Engineering Co. of Ontario v. Dominion Cotton Milks Co., 6 Ex. C. R. 357.

Promissory Note—"Given for a Patent Right."]—See BILLS OF EXCHANGE, III.

Residence of Patentee—Application for Patent—Inventor—Foreign Patent,1—Action for Infrincement of a patent, by the assignee. Plea, amongst others, that the patentee was not at the time of granting of the patent a resident in this Province. The evidence shewed that the patentee had lived in the United States for many years before 1850, when he came to Canada, leaving his family behind him, and applied for the patent; he remained until about three weeks after it was obtained, and, being unsuccessful in disposing of it, he returned to the States, where he had since continued, and where he afterwards sold his previous patents. The patent is the state of the United States, A verilet was found for defendant generally, although there were other issues on which the plaintiff was clearly entitled to succeed:—Held, that it would be useless to grant a new trial, because, although the issue taken was immaterial—the statute requiring residence only at the time of making application for the patent—yet the evidence shewed clearly that the patentee was not then a resident, and defendant would be allowed to amend his plea. Semble, that the inventor must also be a resident at the time when he makes the discovery, Quarca as to the effect of the patentee having previously obtained a patent in the United States. Project v. Res. 25 (1998 v. Bende), 13 U.C. R. 642.

Stamping Patented Articles—License.]

—Upon an action brought for the infringement of a patent right:—Held, that 12 Vict. c. 21, s. 16 (C. S. C. c. 31, s. 28), only regulars the date of the patent to be stamped on articles sold or offered for sale, and does not make such stamping per se amount to a license to use the invention. Smith v. Mitchesor, 16 (C. P. 391).

Application to Part of Claim—General Issue.]—To an action of indebitatus assumpsit, defendant pleaded:—1. As to all but 1106 18, 11d, non-assumpsit, 2. As to all but 1106 18, 11d, non-assumpsit, 2. As to fix 18, 25, and 18, and 18

Sufficiency of Amount—Jury.]—Declaration upon the common counts. Plea, as to goods sold and delivered, that the goods were 724 tons of coal, purchased by defendants, at $2.75 per ton, that the amount due thereon, $1.991, was paxable to the plaintiff at Cleveland; also another quantity of 284 tons, for which defendants were to pay $8.94 of current money of Canada; and as to the money due in Cleveland they bring into court $1.314.06 of lawful money of Canada, and say the same is sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. Demurrer, because the plea admits a cause of action for a certain sum, and pleads payment of a smaller sum in satisfaction:—Held, that upon this plea the only question was, whether the sum paid into court was equal in value to the amount admitted to be due the plaintiff, and, that being a matter of fact to be tried by a jury, the defendants were entitled to judgment, Crawford v. Beard, 13 C. P. 35.

Performance of Contract.]— Debt on bond conditioned to deliver to plaintiff certain wood. Breach, non-delivery. Defendant pleaded, as to part of the breach, payment of $25 into court, and as to the remainder, performance:—Held, on demurrer, a bad plea. Thompson v. Kaye, 13 C. P. 251, distinguished. Lovee v. Moricc, 19 C. P. 123.

Election to Take out-Time-Appeal 1 -In an action to recover money for services rendered, the defendant pleaded that $325 was more than an ample and sufficient payment that he had before action paid the plaintiff $25, and had always been ready and willing and was now ready and willing to pay him $300 more; that before action he had tendered $300 in payment of the services rendered, but the plaintiff refused to accept it; and the defendant brought $300 into court in satisfaction of all claims and demands of the plaintiff in this action:—Held, that the defence was so framed that if the plaintiff had desired to take the money out of court, he must have elected to do so before replying or before the expiration of the time for replying, as provided by con, rule 636, and must have taken it in satisfaction of all his claims in the action, and have filed and served a memorandum in accordance with con, rule 635. But, as he, instead of taking this course, proceeded with the action (in which he recovered more than $300), the defendant was absolved from his offer, and the money remained in court subject to further order; the defendant was entitled, in the absence of special circumstances, to have it remain to be dealt with when the case should be finally disposed of; and it was open to the defendant to contend upon appeal that the amount recovered should be reduced below $300, notwithstanding the payment into court, by the plaintiff's election not to take the money out at the appropriate time. Denison v. Woods, 17 P. R. 549.

— Time—Extension—Judgment.] — A defendant brought money into court with his defence, under rule (1887) 449, in full satisfaction of one of the alleged causes of action. The plaintiff did not elect to take the money out of court within the time limited by rule 424, and judgment was given in favour of the defendant upon the cause of action in respect of which the money was paid in. The judgment did not dispose of the money in court:—Held, that it remained in court subject to the final order of the court after the determination of the action, and must be disposed of in accordance with such determination. The plaintiff, not having elected to take the money out within the proper time, was not entitled, after judgment, to have the time extended by an order nunc pro tune under rule 353. Magana v. Ferguson, 18 P. R. 201.

Receipt.]—See Miles v. Harwood, 1 U. C.

Time for Payment in.] — A summous may be taken out to pay money into court before declaration, but it must be afterwards pleaded. Molson v. Monro, 1 C. L. Ch. 97.

See Henderson v. Bank of Hamilton, 25 O. R. 641, 22 A. R. 414; Davis v. National Assurance Co. of Ireland, 16 P. R. 116.

2. Effect of Payment in.

(a) As an Admission.

Trover for conversion of five cattle, as to which the defendants paid into court $52:— Held, that such payment admitted only a cause of action, not the particular cause sued for: and that defendants were entitled to a verdict, the evidence proving no conversion by defendants. O'Rorke v. Great Western R. W. Co., 23 U. C. R. 427.

The defendant stated in his defence that in case the court should be of opinion that he was liable for the payment of the balance, &c., be, the defendant, brought into court the sum of $4,300, saying that the same was sufficient to pay in full all claims of the plaintiff in repeat of the balance, &c.; and paid into court under his defence the said sum of $4,300, which was withdrawn by the plaintiff after issue and before trial. The Judge at the trial, although he held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, refused to order him to refusal was dismissed with costs, as the result of a division of opinion:—Held, by the supreme court, that the payment was a payment into court in satisfaction which the plaintiff had a right to retain, notwithstanding his action was dismissed at the hearing. Bell v. Fruser, 12 A. R. 1; S. C., sub nom. Fraser v. Bell, 13 S. C. R. 546.

The plaintiffs sued for work and labour as contractors, claiming a balance of $511. The defeadant by his statement of defence denied all the allegations in the statement of claim, and also said that $300 was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' whole claim, and he paid that sum into court in satisfaction of such claim. Con rule $32 provides that "the payment into court shall not be deemed an admission of the cause of action in respect of which it is so paid;"—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled, before the determination of the suit, to take out the money paid into court, unless they took it in full satisfaction of their claim. Kane v. Mitchell, 13 P. R. 118.

(b) As to Costs.

Where defendant, in an action of assumpsit, paid money into court and died, and the action abated; and the plaintiff afterwards sued the defendant's executors for the same cause of action, and took the money in the former suit out of court, but proved his debt to no larger an amount;—Held, that he could not retain the costs of the first action, and recover against the executors for the difference between the same remaining and that originally paid in. Carge v. Choat, 6 O. S. 467.

The defendant brought into court with his defence a sum which he pleaded was sufficient to arrayer the plaintiff's claim, and the Judge at the trial, finding that it was sufficient, directed judgment to be entered for the defendant with costs:—Held, that the Judge at the trial had a discretion to deal with the question of costs, and having exercised it, the taxing officer had no alternative but to tax to the defendant his full costs incurred, as well before as after the payment into court. Small v. Lyon, 10 P. R. 223.

The statement of defence set up that the assault complained of was in self-defence, and, as an alternative defence, that, while the defendant did not admit his liability for damages, he brought into court $150 and said that the same was sufficient, &c.:—Held, that the money paid into court under this defence could not be retained there to answer the defendant's costs, if he succeeded, unless a proper case was made for ordering security for costs. Rogers v. Loos, 11 P. R. 118.

The rule as to costs before the Judicature Act was, that if money was paid into court in respect of the whole cause of action, and the plaintiff refused to accept it in satisfaction, and recovered no more at the trial, the defendant was entitled to judgment and his costs of the suit; and there is nothing in the Judicature Act to alter this rule. Tobin v. McGillis, 12 P. R. 60.

The plaintiffs claimed in this action $3,-249.36, "amount of defalcation of J.," and $80.55 for certain expenses connected therewith, in all $3,339.91. The defendants paid into court $8,275, align by their notice of payment in, that it was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim. There was no specific application of the money paid in to any part of the claim. The plaintiffs did not deliver a statement of claim, and, upon notice of a motion under rule 203 to dismiss the action being served by the defendants, the plaintiffs gave a notice under rule 170 of withdrawal of the balance of their claim:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no power under rule 170 to withdraw; the portion of that rule relating to the withdrawal of part of the alleged cause of the complaint is applicable only where the part sought to be withdrawn can be severed from the rest of the claim; and an order dismissing the action was proper. Semble, that the plaintiffs, not having under rule 218 accepted the money in full satisfaction of their claim, were liable to pay the whole costs of the action; but the disposition of costs by the local Judge who made the order was not interfered with on appeal. Bank of London v. Guarantee Co. of North America, 12 P. R. 499.

The defendants having paid into court twenty cents less than the correct amount due by them, the plaintiff was held entitled to full costs, Henderson v. Bank of Hamilton, 25 O. R. 641, 22 A. R. 414.

The plaintiff in an action in a county court claimed $140, the balance alleged to be due upon the sale of a chattel, and the defendant brought into court $95 in full of the plaintiff's cause of action, which the plaintiff accepted in due time. The Judge of the county court thereupon made a summary order allowing the defendant to set off his costs incurred in the county court in excess of such costs as he would have incurred in a division court against the costs of the plaintiff, and to enter judgment and issue execution for the excess, if any, of the costs of the defendant over and above the costs of the plaintiff. "Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to tax his costs of the action according to the county court scale.

irrespective of the amount paid into court and accepted by him in satisfaction of his claim; and the plaintiff being cutitled to his costs by the express provision of rule (1897) 425 (which is not qualified by rule 1130), they were not subject to the discretion of the Judge. Babeock v. Standiska, 19 P. R. 195.

3. Executors, Administrators, Guardians, and Trustees.

Infants' Moneys.]—An application for an order sanctioning the payment of a bequest in favour of infants to their father, who with the infants resided in a foreign state, and had there been appointed guardian by a surrogate court, was refused, and the executors were ordered to pay the amount of the bequest into court. Re Andrews, 11 P. R. 1199, distinguished. Re Parr, 11 P. R. 301.

Where an infant had become entitled to a fund, the subject of an express trust in her favour under a will, and the fund was claimed in the infant's name by her guardian appointed by a surrogate court, but the infant, represented by the official guardian, opposed the claim:—Held, that it was not a case in which an order should be made under R. S. O. 1887 c. 110, s. 37, upon the application of the trustees of the will, determining the claim of the guardian; but that the trustees should be allowed to transfer the fund into court. Huggins v. Law, 14 A. R. 383, distinguished. Re Matteers, 18 P. R. 13.

Where infants are entitled to maintenance out of a fund in the hands of the executor of their father's will, against whose character or solvency there is no imputation, it is nevertheless their right to have the fund brought into court. Re Humphries, Mortimer v. Humphries, 18 P. R. 289.

The defendant, having in her hands a fund to the benefit of which the plaintiff, an infant, was entitled, asserted that, by the terms of the trust upon which she held it, she had a discretion as to the application of it for the benefit of the plaintiff. She nevertheless paid the money into a bank to her own credit as trustee for the plaintiff, and agreed that she would not use it except for his benefit, and would pay it to him at majority.—Held, that the defendant was a mere trustee for the plaintiff, without the discretion which she contended for; and a summary order (made before delivery of statement of claim in an action to recover the fund and for an injunction) requiring the defendant to pay the fund into court, and thereupon perpetually staying the action, was affirmed. Re Humphries, Mortiner v. Humphries, 18 P. R. 289, approved. Whitercood, V. Whitercood, V

Order for Payment — Admission.] — Where an administrator by his accounts admitted in his hands $112, the court refused a motion for payment of that amount into court pending the reference. Collins v. Orme, 3 Ch. Ch. 70.

Jurisdiction of Referee.]—The referee in chambers has no jurisdiction to make an order for payment into court by an executor or administrator of amounts admitted by him to be in his hands. Re Curry, Wright v. Curry, Curry v. Curry, S P. R. 340.

4. Insurance Moneys.

Administration — Voluntary Payment.] Administration

A testator insured his life for the benefit of his wife and children. The policy provided that the money should be payable as might be directed by will. The testator by will appointed executors, and gave his wife the income of his estate for life and after death the corpus to his son. The executors renounced probate, and after revocation of a prior grant to the son, who was then a minor, administration was granted to the defendant P. The policy provided that the money might be payable to the executors or administrators. The Act 47 Vict. c. 20 (O.) provides that such policy moneys to which infants are entitled shall be payable to a "trustee, executor, or guardian," P. claimed the moneys as administration of the control of istrator, whereupon the insurance company, under s. 15 of the Act, and G. O. 197, and rule under s, 15 of the Act, and G. O. 124, and rue 541 (a), O. J. Act, applied to the master in ordinary in chambers for leave to pay the moneys into court. The master held (1) that voluntary applications to pay in money may be made in chambers. (2) That under rule 541 (a), O. J. Act, he had jurisdiction, by virtue of the administration proceedings be-fers him to make the order. (3) That the (3) That the fore him, to make the order. money was no part of the estate subject to the control of creditors, and when paid in should be "ear marked," and not mixed with the other funds of the estate. On appeal by the administrator, P., an order was made directing that the money in court be paid out to the in-surance company. Merchants Bank v. Monsurance company. Merchants Bank v. Monteith, Ex p. Standard Life Assurance Co., 10 P. R. 588.

Stakeholder.] — Although the rule of equity is, that money in the hands of a stakeholder held for others, whose rights are to be disposed of by the court, will usually be ordered into court; still, it must be clear that some of the parties litigant are entitled to the fund or a portion of it. Where, therefore, the proceeds of a policy of insurance which had been deposited with the attorney of a bank, to be held in trust for such bank, and with the proceeds to pay off the liabilities to the bank of the person making such deposit, had been paid to and were still in the hands of the attorney, and the depositor, without shewing what amount was due the bank, applied to have the money paid into court by the attorney, the court, under the circumstances, refused the application. Corbett v. Meyers, 10 Gr. 36.

Trustees — Conflicting Claims.]—On an application by a benevolent society for leave to pay insurance money into court, claimed by different parties:—Held, that s.s. 5 of s. 53 of the Judicature Act extends the benefit of the Act for the relief of trustees to such cases, and that the society was entitled to pay the money in. Re Bajus, 24 O. R. 397.

5. Interest Allowed.

Moneys in Hands of Prothonotary—Rate Received by Him.]—Under 31 Vict. c. 122, and 37 Vict. c. 133, the minister of public works of the Dominion of Canada appropriate eld to the use of the Dominion certain lands in Yarmouth county, known as "Bunker Island." In accordance with said Acts, on the 2ad April, 1875, he paid into the hands of W., prothonotary at Hullfax, the sum of $6,180 as compensation and interest, as provided by those Acts, to be thereafter appropriated among the owners of the said island. This sum was paid, at several times, by order of sum was paid, at several times, by order of the supreme court of Nova Scotia, to one A., as owner, to one G., as mortgagee, and to others entitled, less $10. As the money had remained in the hands of W., the prothonotary of the court, for some time, H., attorney for G., applied to the supreme court for an order the interest upon G.'s proportion of the moneys, which interest (H. was informed) had been received by the prothonotary had been received by the prothonotary from the bank where he had placed the amount on deposit. W. resisted the application on the ground that he was not answerable to the proprietor of the principal, or to the court, for interest, but did not deny that interest had been received by him. A rule nisi was granted by the court and made absolute, ordering the prothonotary to pay whatever interest he received on the amount :- Held, that the was not entitled to any interest he received on the amount :- Held, that the prothonotary was not entitled to any interest which the amount deposited earned while under the control of the court. That in ordering the prothonotary to pay over the interest received by him, the court was simply exercising the summary jurisdiction which each of the superior courts has over all its immediate officers. Wilkins v. Geddes, 3 S. C. R. 303.

Rate of Interest — Rate Allowed by Court — Supplementing.] — During the process of this action money had been paid into court by the defendants, which remained there on deposit for upwards of seven years.—Held, attending the judgment in 12 O. R. 402, that on taking the account between the parties the entire of the seven that the seven the parties the this sum the rate allowed upon the residue of the principal, and were not limited to the rate allowed by the court. Powell v. Peck, 15 A. R. 128.

6. Percentage and Fees of Officers.

See Gladstone v. French, 9 C. P. 30; Carrall v. Potter, 3 P. R. 11.

7. Purchase Money of Land.

Contest as to Incumbrance — Conveyance—Possession.]—Where there was a controvery as to whether a purchaser bought subject to or free from a mortgage which was on the property, and there was no suggestion of the property, and there was no suggestion to court in a very special case refused to order by the subject of the amount into court pending proceedings, though a conveyance had been executed and the purchaser had gone into possession. Mutholland v. Hamilton, 15 Gr. 53.

Delay — Investigation of Title — Possession. |—Possession and user of the premises do not deprive the vendee of his right to have a good title shewn; but where unreasonable delay has occurred in requiring tite to be adduced, the court will order the purchase money to be paid into court, pending the investigation of the title. Crooks v. Glenn, S Gr. 239. Judicial Sale—Payment to Solicitor.]—Instalments of purchase money (not the deposits on sale) were paid by the purchasers to all in the plaintiffs, and by him the solicitor of the plaintiffs, and by him the solicitor of the plaintiffs and by the purchasers to pay mumeration from the example of the purchasers to pay their moneys into court. Re Robertson, Robertson y, Robertson, 24 Gr. 555.

Specific Performance—Reference as to Title! — A person went into possession under a contract for the purchase of a lot of forest land, in order to clear and cultivate it, and thereby raise the purchase money, which was to be paid by instalments. On a bill filed by the purchaser for a specific performance of the contract:—Held, that he had not, by going into possession, walved his right to a reference as to title; and that he was bounding the inquiry before the master. O'Keefe v., Taylor, 2 Gr. 305.

8. Receiver.

Default - Attachment - Irregularities-Punishment — Claim upon Money — Specific Order for Payment.] — An attachment lies against a receiver as an officer of the court for default in compliance with an order to pay into court money found to be in his hands as receiver. The powers of the court are not invoked nor its process issued for the purpose of recovering or enforcing payment of a civil debt or claim inter partes, but by punishing its officer, who has disobeyed its order; and ss. 6 and 11 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 67 are inapplicable. An understanding between the receiver and the solicitor of one of the parties ought not to be accepted as an excuse for non-compliance with the order to pay in, more especially when the authority to waive the order is not admitted, but denied. Nor can the receiver be permitted to discharge himself by setting up claims upon the money which, had they up claims upon the money which, had they been put forward in the first instance, would probably have prevented his appointment. Where, upon an application in such a case to rescind an order for an attachment, no objections are taken to the regularity of the pro-ceedings, the court of appeal should not be astute to discover them or permit them to be raised for the first time on the argument of the appeal. In this case, a letter written by the receiver, before the order for his attach-ment was made, stating that he was ready to pay the money into court as soon as a specific order for that purpose was made, was regarded as an answer to his subsequent application for relief against it, as shewing that the grounds urged upon appeal were a mere afterthought. Semble, that a specific order to pay over the balance is the proper course in the first instance. Fawkes v. Griffin, 18 P. R. 48.

9. Restoration of Fund Paid out.

Payment out by Mistake — Lapse of Time.]—Statutes of limitation have relation only between subject and subject—the Crown cannot be bound by them. The supreme court of judicature for Ontario is a public trustee as to all moneys and securities in its hands.

Moneys in court are in custodia legis, in this case tantamount to custodia regis, and to such fund and such a custodian the Statute of Limitations has no pertinence. Suitors and claimants are not barred by any lapse of time in their application for payment out of moneys they are entitled, and reciprocally they should not be protected by lapse of time from making restitution, if they have improperly or fraudulently received moneys from the court to which they have no just claim. stitution was ordered after a period of fourteen years, without interest, as the mistake was that of an officer of the court. Where moneys in court have been improperly paid out in an action, a motion to refund amount is the proper procedure. Allstadt v. Gortner, 31 O. R. 495.

Performance of Undertaking—Mistake as to—Petition.]—W. entered into a contract for the purchase of property, the price being payable by instalments, and the vendor was to give the top the top of the top of the vendor was to give the top of the vendor was not due. A decree was made, at the suit of the vendor, for specific performance, on the undertaking of the plaintiff, recited in the decree, to procure a release or discharge of the mortgage, and the overdue instalments were ordered to be paid into the bank, subject to the further order of the court. On a question subsequently arising as to the effect of this undertaking:—Held, that the performance of the undertaking was not a condition precedent to paying in the money, but to its being paid out. Robson v. Wride, 13 Gr. 419.

A sum of money having been paid in under the decree, an application was made by plaintiff to have it paid out, which the court declined to order without an unconditional execution of a discharge by the mortgagees. A deed scaled by the mortgagees, but which had never been delivered, was then, through some misunderstanding, submitted to the court as duly executed and delivered, and on the faith of this representation the money was paid out. On the facts being discovered by defendant and brought before the court on petition, the court ordered the restoration of the money.

Winding-up Act — Receiver-General—Wrongial Payment — Jurisdiction.]—Where the liquidators of an insolvent bank have passed their final accounts and have paid into court the balance in their hands, and that balance is by inadvertence paid out of court to a person not entitled to it, the receiver-general has such an interest in the fund that he may, even before three years from the time of payment in have expired, apply to the court for an order for repayment into court of the fund. The court has also inherent jurisdiction to compel the repayment into court of money improperly obtained out of court. In re Central Bank of Canada, Hogaboom's Case, 24 A. R. 470, 28 S. C. R. 192.

The judgments of the court of appeal and of the supreme court in this case 124 A. R. 470, 28 S. C. R. 192), are conclusive on the point that the moneys repaid into court in this matter, pursuant to those judgments, after having been erroneously paid out to certain applicants, being the balance unclaimed in the hands of the liquidator by an insolvent bank after passing their final accounts, were the property of the receiver-general of Canada under R. S. C. c. 129, s. 41, subject to the liability of paying it over to the persons entitled thereto. In re Central Bank of Canada, 30 O. R. 320.

See Bell v. Fraser, 12 A. R. 1, 13 S. C. R. 546; aute 2; Citizens Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 32 C. P. 492; Pritchard v. Pritchard, 18 O. R. 173, 178.

10, Seizure or Attachment of Moneys in Court.

Attachment.] — See Macpherson v. Tisdale, 11 P. R. 261.

Execution. —Money paid into court is not liable to seizure under execution while in the hands of the officer of the court. Calverley v. Smith, 3 L. J. 67.

11. Sheriff.

Confession of Judgment—Security—Money Realized.]—A confession was given to secure a second set of sureties of a county treasurer, but on an arbitration it was found that defalcations had occurred under a former bond, a surety in which was also in the second. The evidence was conflicting as to whether the protection was for one set or for all. On a motion to retain in the sheriff's hands, moneys which had been made on the confession, it was ordered that the whole amount should be paid into court. Leonard v. Black, 6 Gr. 599.

Improper Payment—Costs.]—Where a striff has improperly paid money into court, a Judge will not order the sheriff to pay the costs of such payment into court, but the proper application is for the sheriff to pay over the money returned by him as made, without reference to the payment into court. Crombie v, McNaughton, Warnock v. McNaughton, 5 L. J. 161.

Interpleader — Proceeds of Sale of Goods.]—The gross proceeds of a sale of goods in an interpleader matter should be paid by the sheriff into court without deducting anything for his expenses. Ontario Bank v. Revell. 11 P. R. 249.

Moneys Realized under Executions.]

Right to Pay.]—A sheriff has no legal right to pay into court money made upon a writ in his office. Gladstone v. French, 9 C. P. 30.

12. Solicitor.

Deposit on Sale—Payment to Solicitor— Default, |—Where the plaintiff's solicitor made default in payment into court of the ten per cent. paid to him at the time of sale, under the conditions of sale:—Held, that the other parties entitled to the purchase money should not suffer thereby, but that the plaintiff's share should be charged with the deficiency. Mulkins v, Clarke, 11 P. R. 350.

Order for Payment in—Payment to Solicitor.]—Where money is ordered to be paid into court, a payment to the solicitor of the party entitled to it is not a good one, and therefore is no ground for dispensing with payment into court. Blackburn v. Sheriff, 1 Ch. Ch. 208.

Order for Payment out—Rescission—Delanti of Repayment—Contempt—Connet.

Let al. — A solicitor in an action had obtained an order for the payment and the initial of certrain moneys in court and upon such order obtained the meeting the above order and directing the solicitor to forthwith repay the solicitor to forthwith repay the solicitor to forthwith repay the solicitor to forthwith repay the solicitor on his non-compliance directing motion was made for his committal:—Held, that the order for committal should go, for what was sought by the motion was the punishment of the solicitor for his contempt in disobeying the order of the court: and that con, rule 867 had no application, Pritchard v. Pritchard, 18 O. R. 173, 178.

See Re Robertson, Robertson v. Robertson, 24 Gr. 555, ante 7.

13. Other Cases.

Alimony—arrest—Bail Bond—Default— Pannead into Court.]—Where a party is entitled to an assignment of a bond, and to realize it for his own benefit, his rights are the same in regard to money deposited; and where in an alimony suit the statutory bond under a writ of ne exent has been given, the plaintiff is entitled to have the money deposited as collateral security therefor, paid into court, and applied in discharging arrears of alimony. Richardson v. Richardson, 8 P.

Where the plaintiff in an allmony suit obtains a writ of arrost, and the defendant gives ball, and a breach of the bond is committed, the plaintiff is entitled to have the amount for which the writ was marked, paid into court, to be applied from time to time in payment of the alimony and costs:—Semble, upon such payment the sureties are entitled to be discharged from their bond. Needham v. Needham. 29 Gr. 117.

Costs out of Fund—Interpleader Issue.]

Plaintiffs and defendants, being joint owners of a vessel, instituted a suit to have the partnership terminated. The vessel was sold under order of the court, and notes taken in part payment, and deposited with the registure of the court. Subsequently these notes the court in the name of the registrar, and execution obtained, under which the vessel on the second of the court should be should be depended by certain persons, the sheriff obtained an order for an interpleader between the leave of the court being asked by the execution plaintiff, but without the leave of the court being asked by the execution plaintiff, but without the leave of the court being asked by the execution plaintiff therefor, or for the litigation should be and the court being asked by the execution plaintiff therefor, or for the litigation should be subsequently to the court should have been obtained to the courtest at law, if the parties beand to look to the fund in court for the court should have been obtained, that most make out a special case to get the cast so look to the fund in court for the applicant must make out a special case to get the cast so to the fund. Under the circumstances the costs at law were ordered to be paid, but only between party and party, and on terms. Macdonald v. Carrodi, 1 Ch. Ch. 145.

Directors—Admission.]—On a bill against the directors of an incorporated company for misappropriating the corporate funds, the defendants having answered admitting certain moneys to have been received by the directors, a motion to pay the amount into court was refused. Hamilton v. Desjardins Canal Co., 1 Gr. 1.

Expropriation—Award, 1—Payment into court of amount awarded for compensation of land expropriated by a municipality for a court house site. In re Beckett and City of Toronto, 10 O. R. 106.

How Paid in—Bank.]—Money ordered to be paid into court must be paid into the Canadian Bank of Commerce, as provided in Cou. G. O. 352, and in no other manner. Bloomfield v, Brooke, 6 P. R. 265.

Judgment.]—See Stevenson v. Sexsmith, 21 Gr. 355.

Indemnity.] — Where judgments were recovered against the plaintiff, and he sued the defendants upon a bond of indemnity to recover the amount of the judgments, although he had not himself paid them:—Held, that the defendants should be ordered to pay the amounts into court. Boyd v. Robinson, 20 O. R. 404.

— Price of Goods — Possession.] — In an action for damages for refusal to accept goods sold, judgment was given for the plaintiff for the full price of the goods as damages, and the defendant was allowed to pay the amount of the judgment and costs into court, to be paid out to the plaintiff upon his shewing that the defendant could obtain possession of the goods. Tutts v. Ponces, 32 O. R, 51.

promise. |—A suit having been brought for the specific performance of an agreement of compromise, after amendment of the bill and a special injunction granted, on the merits confessed in answer to the original bill, restraining proceedings at law, judgment was obtained in an action brought by defendants for the recovery of the whole amount originally claimed, but which the plaintiff had always denied his liability to pay. A motion was made—amongst other things—for the payment into court of the amount of the judgment, or for security for the performance, by plaintiff, of the decree of the court. Payment into court was refused, but security ordered to be given for the performance of the articles of compromise, in the event of the same being decreed. Merritt v. Tobin, 1 O. 8, 251.

— Set-off — Cross-action.] — Where there were cross-actions, in one of which a sum had been reported due and a claim of set-off had been disallowed, in a subsequent action brought to recover the sum disallowed, the plaintiff was held entitled to move for judgment under rule 324. But the affidavits filed on the motion being conflicting:—Held, that the action must be entered for trial at the sittings for the examination of witnesses, but the amount found due in the first action was ordered to be paid into court, to abide the result of the second action. Francis v. Francis, 9 P. R. 209.

Mechanics' Liens—Discharge of Owner—Uosts. |—In a mechanics' lien action a certain sum was found due from the owner to the contractor, and the latter was found indebted to other lienholders. Payment of the former sum into court was ordered and made, the amount, however, being insufficient to pay the claims of lienholders against the contractor. The latter then appealed unsuccessfully, and was ordered to pay the costs of appeal to the owner, who contended that these costs should be paid out of the moneys paid by her into court:—Held, that by the payment into court for distribution she was discharged from her liability, and the money censed to be hers, and that she was not entitled to have the costs due to her deducted from the amount paid in. Patter v. Laidatac, 26 O. R. 189.

Order for Payment in—Appeal—Stay of Proceedings.]—An order for payment of money into court, pending a reference to the master to take accounts, &c., is an order upon which the court will stay proceedings upon the perfecting of the security, in the event of the order being appealed from. Whitehead v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 7 Gr. 578.

Hearing—Report.]—Where a bill was filed to comple I a railway company to carry out a contract entered into by their agent for constructing the road, and the evidence shewed that, at the prices agreed upon, which the company insisted were most exorbitant, a bulance of £12.500 was due to the contractor, the court at the hearing ordered that amount into court without waiting for the master's report. Whitchead v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 7 Gr., 351.

Interlocutory Motion.]—An interlocutory order for payment into court will be made only where, upon all the evidence before it, the court is satisfied that at the hearing a decree must inevitably be made in favour of the party moving. McClennaghan v. Bwchanan, 7 Gr. 92.

Notice—Indorsement.]—An order for payment of money into court is an order for payment of money within the meaning of Con. G. O. 291. Such an order does not require to be indorsed with the notice, schedule N. to the orders. Nelson v. Nelson, G. P. R.

II. PAYMENT OF MONEY OUT OF COURT.

1. Appeal Pending.

Rehearing.]—A sum of money having been paid into court by defendant, instead of being paid to plaintiff, as directed by a decree of the court, upon depositing which proceedings against defendant were stayed, he having signified his intention of appealing from this decree—the plaintiff moved to have this money paid out to him pending the appeal. The defendant upon the motion undertook to enroll the decree at once if plaintiff would consent, and to urge on the appeal to a hearing. The court refused the application, but without costs; and on the application of the defendant the deposit on the rehearing was retained in court for two weeks to enable defendant to proceed with the appeal. Hill v. Rukerford, I Ch. Ch. 121.

Where a certain sum ordered to be paid to the plaintiffs under a decree had, pending a rehearing and appeal, been paid into court by arrangement between the parties, to obtain a stay of proceedings, in lieu of the security required by s.-s. 4 of s. 16 of the Act relating to appeals; and on the appeal the decree was affirmed only in part, that part directing the payment of the money being in part reversed by the amount being reduced to a comparatively small sum; a motion to pay out the money to the party who had paid it in was granted. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, 3 Ch. Ch. 16.

To Court of Appeal. —About $40,000 was puid into court during the progress of the suit. The decree dismissed the bill, and ordered payment of the money in court to defendant. The plaintiff appealed, and paid $400 into court as security for costs. Subsequently an order was made by the referee staying payment out to the defendant, pending the appeal, upon the plaintiff giving additional security to the amount of $200 for the difference between the legal interest and that allowed by the court:—Held, on appeal, that such order was not ultra vires nor unreasonable. McDonald v. Worthington, S. P. R. 554.

The plaintiffs having moved for an injunction to restrain the sale of goods under execution, the motion was enlarged and the sale permitted to proceed, the money arising therefrom being directed to be paid into court to the credit of the cause, there to abide the further order of the court. The injunction was afterwards refused:—Held, that the payment out of the fund was discretionary with the court, and that pending the appeal to the court, and that pending the appeal to the court, but might be paid out on proper security being given. Held, also, no objection that the order refusing the injunction and the order for payment out had not been entered. King v. Duncen, 3 P. R. 61.

The plaintiffs, who resided in England, obtained a verdict for the price of goods in the defendant's possession. The defendant appealed to the court of appeal. The plaintiffs applied for payment out of $300 paid in by them as security for costs on commencing the action:—Held, that, as the plaintiffs were shewn to have goods in the country, and in the defendant's possession, the $300 should be paid out. But for this the plaintiffs would not have been entitled to the money, the appeal being a step in the original cause, not a new action. Napier v, Hughes, 9 P. R. 134.

Money paid into court in lieu of giving the usual bond for security for costs will not be paid out to the party paying it in, in whose favour a decree has been made, pending an appeal to the court of appeal. National Ins. Co. v. Egleson, 9 P. R. 202.

To Privy Council.]—Right to recover in action money paid out of court on Judge's order pending appeal to privy council. See Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 32 C. P. 492.

To Supreme Court of Canada. |-The defendants paid $400 into court as security for the costs of an appeal from an interlocutory order, and afterwards another $400 as security for the costs of an appeal from the decree at the hearing, and afterwards another $400 as order refusing a stay pending the appeal These three appeals were all allowed, and the plaintiff then appealed to the supreme court of Canada, notwithstanding which an order was made for payment out of court of the $1,200 to the defendants :- Held, that where money has been paid into court for a specific purpose, and that purpose has been answered in favour of the person paying it in, it will be paid out to that person, McLaren v. Caldwell, 9 P. R.

On the 16th November, 1881, an order was made directing D. to pay a certain sum of money into court. D. appealed from this order to the court of appeal, and for the purpose of staying execution, instead of giving security, as required by R. S. O. 1877, C. 3S. s. 4, he paid this sum into court, being authorized so to do by an order in chambers. On the 27th October, 1883, the court of appeal reversed the order of the 16th November, 1881. The respondents then gave notice of appeal to the supreme court of Canada:—Held, that the money paid in by D. must be taken to have been so paid in lieu of the bond required by the statute; that when the decision in appeal was given in D.'s favour, the money had served the purpose for which it was paid; and that it ought to be repaid. Re Donoran, Wilson v, Reatty, 10 P. R. 71.

The defendants, being entitled by the judgment of the court of appeal to the costs of the action, obtained out of court for suit the bond given by the plaintiff for security for such costs. Before action on the bond, and pending an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of the court of appeal to the superme court of Canada, one of the sureties on the bond dotained leave and paid into court by being the sureties on the bond to the sureties of the bond obtained leave and paid into court by being the sureties of the sure

The defendants succeeded at the trial, in the dissional court, and in the court of appeal. Pending an appeal by the plaintiffs to the surreme court of Canada, the defendants applied for payment out of court to them of a sun paid in by the plaintiffs representing the whole subject matter of the litigation:—Held, that the application was in the discretion of the court: that that discretion should be exercised in the same way as upon an appeal to the court of appeal; and that the application should therefore be refused, following King v.

Duncan, 9 P. R. 61. Canadian Land and Emigration Co. v. Township of Dysart, 11 P. R. 51.

By the terms of a consent order, a sum of money was to be retained in court to abide the result of such proceedings as the plaintiffs might be advised to take to assert and enforce their rights and remelies with respect to a claim made by them, and such proceedings were to be commenced within four months. Substantially the sum of money was to represent that which the plaintiffs claimed, and they were to have it if their claim proved a valid one. The plaintiffs brought this action to enforce their claim, and carried it to the court of appeal, where it was dismissed. They then commenced an appeal to the supreme court of Canada:—Held, that this appeal was one of the proceedings, or part of such proceedings, as the plaintiffs were at liberty to take under the order, and, until its determination, the money should not be paid out. City of Toronto v. Toronto Street R. W. Co., 15 P. R. 358.

The plaintiffs appealed to the court of appeal from a judgment of the high court dismissing their action with costs, and gave the security for the costs of appeal required by s. 71 of the Judicature Act, by paying $400 into court, and also gave the security required by rule 804 (4), in order to stay the execution of the judgment below for taxed costs, by paying $322.14 into court. Their appeal was dismissed with costs. Desiring to appeal to the supreme court of Canada, they paid $500 more into court, and this was allowed by a Judge of the court of appeal as security the costs of the further appeal:-Held, that execution was stayed upon the judgments of the high court and court of appeal until the decision of the supreme court. Construction of ss. 46, 47 (e), and 48 of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, R. S. C. c. 135. Semble, that payment out of the moneys in Exchequer Courts Act, R. court to the defendant of his costs of the high court and court of appeal, upon the undertaking of his solicitors to repay in the event of the further appeal succeeding, could not properly be ordered. Kelly v. Imperial Loan Co., 10 P. R. 499, commented on. Agricul-tural Ins. Co., v. Sargent, 16 P. R. 397.

See Billington v. Provincial Ins. Co., 9 P. R. 67 n.

2. Creditors' Claims.

Judgment — Consent—Parties — Costs.]
—The undertaking of the defendants having been sold by the provisional directors, free of all liens and incumbrances, for a certain sum of money, which was paid to them, and a portion of which was paid into court under an order in another action; all the provisional directors being parties to this action, and two of them submitting to the order of the court and being willing that the judgment debt should be paid out of the fund in court; an order was made, notwithstanding that the purchasers were not parties, directing payment of the plaintiff's debt and costs and of the costs of the two directors out of such fund. Allen v. Ontario and Rainy River R. W. Co., 29 O. R. 519.

3. Infants' Moneus.

Stop Order-Assignments-Priorities.]-H. M. C., being entitled to certain moneys in court, obtained certain advances from A. H., and gave him a power of attorney to indorse and gave fill a power of attorney to indorse any cheques issued to him by the court and re-nay himself. Subsequently H. M. C. obtain-ed another advance from W. H., and assigned all his interest in the funds in court to W. H., which assignment was duly filed in the accountant's office and entered in the accountant's books and acted on for three years. commant's books and acted on for three years.

W. H. had no notice of A. H.'s power of attorney, A. H. recovered a judgment against H. M. C. for the amount due him in December, 1883, and obtained a stop order in October, 1885. On a motion for payment out to A. H., which was resisted by W. H., who claimed all the moneys under his assignment: -Held, that the court is the custodian of the fund and not the accountant, and that noto the accountant of an assignment of funds in court is not tantamount to notice of the assignment of a trust fund to a private trustee, and that a stop order is the proper way of perfecting such security. Cottingham y, Cottingham, 11 O. R. 294.

— Creditor's Relief Act—Priorities.]—
Since the coming into force of the Creditors'
Relief Act. 1880, 25th March, 1884, execution creditors who obtain stop orders on funds in court do not obtain any priority thereby, but all must share ratably. As some of the provisions of the statute are to enable simple contract creditors to come in and obtain the position of execution creditors, they must have the same right with regard to funds in court as they would have with regard to funds in the sheriff's hands, and in any case where an execution creditor obtains a stop order there must be a reference to the master to ascertain if any other creditors desire to ask a share of the fund. Daucson v. Moffatt, 11 O. R. 484.

—Judgment Creditor.]—Where a judgment creditor petitioned for payment out to him, or that the sheriff might be permitted to seize, under writs in his hands, funds in court standing to the credit of his debtor upon which a stop order had been issued before the cheque was drawn, an order was made directing a cheque to be made out in favour of the petitioner, Re Gilchrist, Bohn v. Fije, 7 P. R. 439.

Simple Contract Creditor—Creditor—ors' Retlief Act.1—A stop order upon a fund in court to which defendant was entitled, was granted in favour of a simple contract creditor who had not obtained judgment, there being another creditor with execution in sheriff's hand against defendant. Steckle v. Byers, 10 C. L. T. Occ, N. 41.

Surplus Proceeds of Mortgage Sale—Creditors' Relief Act—Sherilf—Distribution.]

—Where the surplus proceeds of a mortgage sale were paid into court by the mortgages, and claimed by execution creditors of the mortgage, whose executions were in the hands of the sheriff at the time of the sale:—Held, following Dawson v. Moffatt, 11 O. R. 484, and having regard to the provisions of s. 24 of the Creditors' Relief Act, R. S. O. 1887 c. 65, that the fund in court should be paid to the sheriff for distribution in accordance with the provisions of that Act. Re Bokstal, 17 P. R. 201.

Executors and Administrators—Right to Money in which Injunts Inferested.]—A sum of money left by a testator in his will to his daughter, who predeceased him, was paid into court by his executors. The daughter, by her will, had disposed of the moneys which she expected from her father's estate, leaving part to her husband and part to her infant children, naming her husband executor, and directing him to invest the infants' shares and expend the interest for their maintenance. It was admitted by the official guardian on behalf of the infants that there was no reason to anticipate danger to the money if paid out to the executor:—Held, that the will of the testatrix should be respected, and the infants' money paid out to the executor. Re Mc-Dougall Trusts, 11 P. R. 494.

The administratrix of a deceased party who had died before the Devolution of Estates Act came into force was allowed to take out of court a sum of $210, which was part of the personal estate of the deceased, notwithstanding that two infants were among the next of kin who would be entitled to share in the estate after the payment of debts, &c. Hanrahan v. Hanrahan, 19 O. R. 396, followed. Re Parsons, Jones v. Kelland, 14 P. R. 144.

Money in court belonging at the time of her death to an intestate was paid out to her administrator, notwithstanding that infants might be or might become entitled to it or a share of it. Semble, if the money belonged specifically to infants, the disposition might be otherwise. Stewart v. Whitney, 14 P. R. 147.

Guardian — Right to Money—Maintenance,]—Money paid into court to the credit of infants will not be paid out to their guardian appointed by surrogate court, upon his application, as a surrogate court, upon his approper case, an appointed for their maintenance and education may be made to him out of such moneys. Re J. T. 18 O. R. 327, followed. Huggins v. Law, H. A. R. 383, and Hanrahan v. Haurrahan, 19 O. R. 306, distinguished. Re Harrison, 18 P. R.

Insurance Moneys — Foreign Tutrix — Trustice.]—The provisions of ss. 155 and 157 of the Ontario Insurance Act, 60 Vict. c. 36, provide a special mode for dealing with the shares of infants in insurance moneys, and exclude the application of the ordinary rules of law so far as inconsistent therewith. And therefore a tutrix of infants duly appointed in the Province of Quebec is not entitled quaturix to moneys of the infants paid into court under s. 157 of the Act; but she may, under s. 155, s.s. 2, be appointed a trustee of the fund and receive it, upon giving proper security. Re Berryman, 17 P. R. 573.

Legacy—Vested Interest — Assignment—Distribution.]—Two devisees of full age having a vested interest absolute in a definite fund in court, although not divisible by the terms of the will until a third devisee attained twenty-one, having assigned their interest in the fund to a purchaser, the court, the estate having been otherwise wound up, made an order for payment out to the assignee, without waiting for the period of distribution. Re Wartmen, 22 O. R. 601. See also Goff v. Strohm, 28 O. R. 503.

Maintenance—Contingent Interest—Life Insurance.]—An order was made for payment, out of a fund in court to which an infant was contingently entitled, of an allowance for his maintenance, upon security being given by way of life insurance for the benefit of those who would be entitled byon the death of the infant under full age. Re Arbuckle, 14 W.
R. 585, followed. Re Campbell, 18 P. R.
400.

Marriage of Infant—Majority—Foreign Lave.]—Where a female was entitled at majority to payment out of court of a sum of money, and it appeared that, although only nineteen years of age, she was married and demiciled in a foreign country, by the laws of which a female is entitled upon marriage to receive money due her, an order was made for immediate payment out. Kavanagh v. Lennon, 16 P. R. 229.

Order for Payment out — Judicature Act. |—An order was made before the passing of the O. J. Act directing certain ascertained shares then in court to be paid out to certain Infants as they respectively came of age:—Held, that the shares might be paid out without any further order, notwithstanding rule 424, O. J. Act. Re Cameron Infants, 9 P. R.

See Huggins v. Law, 14 A. R. 383; Hanrahan v. Hanrahan, 19 O. R. 396; Re Thompson, Thompson v. Thompson, 19 P. R. 304, post 5.

See next sub-head.

4. Investment of Money Paid into Court.

Government Stock.] — Since the establishment of a government Dominion stock, the investment of infants' money by the court should, as a general rule, be in such stock, rather than, as formerly, in mortgages, kingamilt v. Miller, 15 Gr. 171.

Legacy to Married Woman—Purchase of Furn.—A legacy had been paid into court, and the will directed that it, together with a house and lot also devised to the same person, should be held for the legatee independently of her husband, she receiving the rents, interest, and profits. On a motion to have the money paid out, or that it might be invested in the purchase of a furn for the legatee's benefit:—Held, that it was in the jurisdiction of the court to make such an order, and the application was granted as to the purchase of the farm, but refused as to the purchase for the money to her absolutely. In re Trusts of Turneric Will, Exp. Scaton, 3 Ch. Ch. 259.

Loan — Security — Borrower's Credit.]—
The court will not grant a loan of money except to persons of undoubted credit, apart from the question of value of security offered. Where the applicant was a young woman residing with her father, the application was refused. Attorney-General v. Alexander, 3 Ch. Ch. 101.

Mortgage Security.]—As a general rule, leans of money in court cannot be made on property on which there is any prior charge, however small, unless all parties interested consent. Andrews v. Hempstreet, 1 Ch. Ch. 347.

Primâ facie money in court should be invested in the public funds; but the court has, under C. S. U. C. c. 12, s. 72, a discretion to authorize investments on mortgages of real estate. Re Gronan, Farrell v. Scanlon, 6 P. R. 221.

Trustee Company—Payment out to, for Investment.]—On an application by a trustee company, and a party who was entitled for life to the income of a fund in court, which was the proceeds of the sale of certain settled was the proceeds of the sale of certain settled was the proceeds of the sale of certain settled was the proceeds of the sale of certain settled the sale of the fund for the trusteesses (they having been appointed the trusteess (they having been appointed the trustees (they having been by the settled application was opposed by the official guardian on behalf of the remainderman:—Held, that the practice and current of authority were against what was asked by the pelitioners, and that they were not entitled to it as a matter of right, and that the application must be dismissed. Re J. T. Smith's Trusts, No. 2, 18 O. R. 327.

5. Lunatics' Moneys.

Life-tenant — Foreign Guardian—Maintenance. |—During the infancy of the defendant $2.000 was paid into court, to one-half of which she was entitled on attaining majority, and to the other half after the death of her mother. The defendant having come of age, but being of unsound mind, and residing abroad with her mother, who had been appointed her guardian by a foreign court, the mother applied for payment out of the whole fund, having given in the foreign court specific security for the amount:—Held, as to the half of the fund in which the applicant had a life interest, that it might be paid out to proper trustees appointed to administer and safeguard it, or it might be paid out to the applicant upon substantial security being given. Held, as to the other half, that, being actually in the hands of the court; it was subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and should be applied for the support and maintenance of the person of unsound mind, in the discretion of the court—whatever sum should be shewn to be necessary for maintenance being paid to the foreign guardian, Re Thompson, Thompson, V. Thompson, 19 P. R. 304.

Maintenance.]—Money in court to the credit of a lunatic, though not so found, was directed to be paid out in annual sums for maintenance. Re Hinds, Hinds v. Hinds, 11 P. R. 5.

Inspector,]—Sections 48 and 49 of the Act respecting lunatic asylums and the custody of insane persons, R. 8. O. 1887 c. 245. providing that the inspector of prisons and public charities may take possession of the property of lunatics to pay for maintenance, do not apply to money in court. Where the property of the lunatic is money in court, the property of the lunatic is money in court under s. 61, and must shew clearly that the person to whom the money in court belongs is a lunatic, and that the purpose for which the money is sought is to pay charges for maintenance of the lunatic in a public asylum; but it is not necessary, having regard to s. 1, s.-s. 2, that the person shall have been, or shall be, declared a lunatic. Re McKenzie, Re Lind, Re Campbell, 14 P. R. 421.

6. Mortgage Suits.

Application—Costs.] — Where defendant refused to consent to payment of the mortage money out of court, the plaintiff obtained an order for such payment, but at his own costs. Bernard v. Allen, 2 Ch. Ch. 91.

- Notice.]—The purchase money for lands sold under a morigage was paid into court:—Held, that the morigage must have notice of any application to pay out to plaintiff the amount found due him by the master's report. Smith v. Kerr, 3 Gr. 109.

An order for the payment of money out of court will not be made ex parte; the party who has paid it in must be served with notice. Bullen v. Renuick, 1 Ch. Ch. 213.

The court will not grant an order on an exparte application, unless the practice distinctly authorizes it. An application for payment out of redemption money in court, was refused. Totten v. McIntyre, 2 Ch. Ch. 462

Mortgagee's Claim — Amount — Reference.]—A report had been made in a suit for the sale of mortgaged property, finding that the plaintiff (the mortgagee) was the only incumbrancer on the property, and that the amount due to him was £235 12s, 10d. The property was sold for £261, and the purchase money had been paid into court. Two years after the report, a motion for payment of the whole purchase money out of court to the plaintiff was granted, without a reference to the master to take a subsequent account, it being clear that the interest and the costs of the sale would make the plaintiff's claim larger than the amount of the purchase money paid in. Gilmour v. O'Brien, 1 Ch. Ch. 244.

Solicitor—Payment to—Power of Attormen, I—A power of attorney or other written authority is necessary to authorize the payment of money out of the solicitor, even though the parties to whom it is coming are numerous, and not resident in the solicitor, the additional circumstance of the mental playing been realized from the sale of property mortgaged to secure negotiable debentures, which were in the possession of the solicitor since the institution of the suit:—Held, not to dispense with the necessity of a power of attorney, Suan v. Marmora Iron Works Co., 2 Ch. Ch. 155.

7. Purchase Money of Land.

Tax Sale—Redemption Money.]—After a purchaser of land sold under a decree had accepted a vesting order, he ascertained that the land had been sold for taxes:—Held, that the purchaser was entilled to payment, out of the money in court, of the amount required to redeem. Turrill v, Turril Taxes — Interest — Repayment to Purchaser.]—When a purchaser had paid school taxes for the year and had paid his purchase money, the plaintiff having received the rents and profits up to a time subsequent to the maxment of the money into court, and subsequent to the end of the year for which the taxes had been paid:—Held, upon an application on behalf of the plaintiff to have the money paid out to him, that the purchaser was entitled to be repaid the taxes and the interest on his purchase money during the time the plaintiff received the rents and profits, the plaintiff to have the excess (if any) of such interest over the rents and profits, Yourer v. Alcombrack, 13 C. L. J. 226.

8. Other Cases.

Bill—Dismissal.]—Application for payment of money out of court, on plaintiff dismissing his bill, granted. Clarke v. Manners, 1 O. S. 27S.

Controverted Election Trial—Deposit—Courts, — A petition filed on the 6th February, 1875, against an election held in December, 1874, was initiuted in the election court, which court had been abolished by 37 Vict. c. 10 (D.), passed on the 26th May, 1874, except as regarded elections held before that Act. The deposit of $1,000 was made on the same day with D., who was clerk of the election court as well as to the court of Queen's bench, and who signed a receipt for it as clerk of the election court. headed in that court:—Held, that the court of Queen's bench had no power to make an order on D. to pay out the money, he having received it as clerk of another court. Moneys Paid in by Garnishee Disposition of J.—Where moneys have been voluntarily deposited by a garnishee in the hands of the prothonotary, and the attachment of such moneys is subsequently quashed by a final judgment of the court, there being then no longer any moneys subject to a distribution or collocation, such moneys cannot be claimed by an opposition en sons ordre. Barnard v. Molson, 15 S. C. R. 716.

Moneys Paid in by Sheriff — Master's Charges. |—Where the plaintiff obtained an order to take out of court money paid in by the sheriff, on the condition that he should pay the master's charges, and was given to understand that he might either take it on these terms or sue the sheriff for it:—Held, that having availed himself of this order, he could not afterwards recover from the sheriff the fees paid to the master, on the ground that the money had been improperly paid into court. Crombie v. Davidson, 19 U. C. R. 398.

Next of Kin of Deceased Party Entitled.] — Money in court will not be paid out to the next of kin of deceased parties without a personal representative having been appointed and made a party by revivor, except in simple cases, where the sum in court is small, and the circumstances are such that the court can see that it is safe to dispense with administration or revivor or both, in order to save costs. Mulock v. Cauthra, 13

Wages and Disbursements Ship-louchers.]—In delivering judgment in favour of a lien-holder in respect of a claim wages and disbursements made and liaincurred on account of a ship, court directed, in regard to the unpaid liabilicourt directed, in regard to the unpaid liabili-ties incurred, that vouchers of their due pay-ment must be filed by the lienholder with the registrar before the former could receive out of court sums awarded in respect of his claim. III. PAYMENT TO CREDITORS.

1. Generally-What Amounts to Payment.

Arrangement with Solicitor — Advance of ence - Anoueledge.]-In order to give a preference to a particular creditor, a debtor, in insolvent circumstances, executed chattel mortgage upon the stock-in-trade in favour of a money-lender by whom a loan was made. The money, which was in the hands of the mortgagee's solicitor, who also acted for the preferred creditor throughout the transaction, was at once paid over to the credi-tor, who, at the same time, delivered to the solicitor, to be held by him as an escrow and dealt with as circumstances might require, a bond indemnifying the mortgagee against any loss under the chattel mortgage. The mortgage had previously been consulted by the solicitor as to the loan, but was not informed that the transaction was being made in this manner to avoid the appearance of violating the Acts respecting assignments and preferences and to bring the case within the ruling in Gibbons v. Wilson, 17 O. R. 1: Held, that all the circumstances, necessarily known to his solicitor in the transaction of the business, must be assumed to have been known to the mortgagee, and the whole affair considered as one transaction contrived to evade the consequences of illegally preferring a particular creditor over others, and that, under the circumstances, the advance made was not a bona fide payment of money within the meaning of the statutory exceptions. Burns v. Wilson, 28 S. C. R. 207.

Vol. III. p—166—17

- Mortgage - Transfer of Loan.] The defendant, the mortgagor, being unable to pay off plaintiff's mortgage, at the suggestion of the plaintiff's attorney borrowed the required amount from the moneys of another client in the attorney's hands, with which the attorney was to pay off the plainwhich the atomety was to pay on the plain-tiff's mortgage, the defendant giving another mortgage therefor:—Quere, whether this ar-rangement amounted to a payment of the plaintiff's mortgage to the attorney. Pulmer v. Winstanley, 23 C. P. 586.

Debiting Customer's Account - Bank -Cheque.] - The plaintiff, a merchant and customer of defendants' bank, having a note payable there on the 28th January, 1873, made a cheque payable to himself or bearer, and left with defendants to meet the note. cheque, however, was not used for that purcheque, however, was not used for that pur-pose nor returned to the plaintiff, but the note was paid by defendants and charged to plaintiff's account. The cheque was after-wards, on the 31st January, 1874, presented to the defendants by some one unknown, year having been changed from 1873 to 1874. and it was paid by defendants without noticing the alteration, and charged to the plaintiff's account. How it got out of defen-dants' bank was not ascernined:—Semble, we that the cheque must be considered to have been paid when the note for which it was given was handed over by defendants to plaintiff, and on that ground the plaintiff could not have been made liable upon it. Beltz v. Mot-sons Bank, 40 U. C. R. 253.

 Bank—Promissory Note.] — Defen dants were the bankers of both the plaintiff and one E. and E. having given a note payable to the plaintiff at the defendants' bank, the plaintiff, about two weeks before its maturity, left it with defendants for collection, and to be protested if not paid. On the 4th December, the day of its maturity, the ledger keeper debited E.'s account and credited the plaintiff's with the amount of the note, and on the plaintiff calling at the bank next mornon the plantan caring at the pank heat morning, he received his pass book with an entry crediting him with the amount of the note. Subsequently the manager — on the ground that the entry had been made by the clerk by mistake and without authority, as E.'s account was then overdrawn—caused the entry to be was then overdrawn—caused the entry to be reversed, and refused to pay plaintiff the amount of it. E. stated that he always gave authority to pay each particular note, which he did not do here; and the manager stated that without such authority it was not the custom of the bank to pay any note:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the that the plaintiff was childed to recover amount of the note from the bank: that by amount of the plaintiff, by making the amount of the note from the bank; that by the general law the plaintiff, by making the note payable at defendants' bank, authorized them to pay it; and that the act of the ledger keeper in charging it to E.'s account and crediting it to the plaintiff in his account and pass-book, amounted to a payment of the note, and was irrevocable. Nightingale v. City Bank of Montreal, 26 C. P. 74.

Proceeds of Discount-Subsequent Dishonour of Bill.]-The plaintiff held defendant's mortgage, with a condition that the whole principal should become payable if the whole principal should become payable if the interest was in arrear for ten days. By agreement between them, plaintiff drew on defendant for the interest (at three days 'sight) a few days before it became due, which draft was discounted by plaintiff at his bank, and the proceeds placed to his credit prior to the expiration of the ten days, and was afterwards accepted by defendant; but upon maturity was dishonoured and charged to plantic the state of the Science under Execution—Sale—Value of Loods.]—The plaintiffs sued defendants, H. M., and S., as joint makers of a note. S. pleaded that a judement had been obtained in this suit against all three defendants in this suit against all three defendants in the sale and the sale of the s

Set-off — Contra Account.] — In a mechanics lien action the owner of the property had an old account against the contractor for bread supplied, which account, with interest, he charged against the sums due to the contractor under the contract—Held, upon the evidence, that the account and interest should be treated, not as a matter of set-off, but as a payment of so much of the contract price, Truar v, Diran, 17 O. R. 336.

— Item of Account.) — The plaintiff wrote to defendant, who had a demand against one C., saying that C, had asked him to settle the claim with defendant, and requested him, therefore, to charge it to his, the plaintiff's, account. It was not proved that any account had been rendered by defendant in which he took credit to himself for this as a payment on any particular account: — Held, that this must be considered merely as an item of set-off, and not as a payment. Notman v. Crooks, 10 U. C. R. 105.

Settlement-Dispute.] - The plaintiffs sued defendant for $150, money lent, to which defendant pleaded a set-off against L., one of the plaintiffs, accepted by L. in satis-It appeared that defendant having built a house for L., cross demands arose out of the contract, and their solicitors negotiated for a settlement; that the $150 was mentioned, and L.'s solicitor offered to pay $650 in full of all matters, taking this $150 into account as a credit to L. Defendant refused to take less than $700, and sued L., whose solicitor, before he was aware of the suit, paid $650, and afterwards paid $50 into court, which was taken out. The jury were asked whether L. or his attorney agreed absolutely to allow the $150 as a payment on the contract, or only for the sake of a settlement, which was not arrived at; to which defendant objected, that if the negotiations proceeded on the supposition that the $150 was to be so allowed, and L. afterwards paid the $700 on a different understanding, he was bound so to state at the time:—Held, that the direction was right, and a verdict for the plaintiffs was upheld. Young v. Taylor, 25 U. C. R. KQQ spondent at the request of P., the respondent's agent, carried a voter five or six miles to the polling place, saving that he would do so without charge. Some days after the election, P. gave M. $2. intending it as compensation for such carriage, but M. thought it was in payment for work which he had done for P. as a carter. The candidate knew nothing of the matter:—Held, that there was properly no payment by P. to M. for any purpose, the money being given for one purpose and received for another; but that, if there was a payment, it was made after P.'s agency had ceased, and there was no previous hiring or promise to pay to which it could relate back. In re Election for Brockville and Elizabetkucen, 32 U. C. R. 132.

Surrender of Promissory Notes.]—A. and B. formed a limited partnership, A. to be the general partner, and B. the special, contributing £750. B. held A.'s notes for that sum, which he gave up to A. by way of payment:—Held, not a payment in money within the statute. Benedict v. 1 an Allen, 17 U. C. R. 234.

Tender — Railway Fare.] — Plaintiff got upon the train without a ticket, and when asked for his fare declined paying then, as he said he had not made up his mind how far he should go. The conductor said he must decide, and afterwards, on his declining again on the same ground, stopped the train and put him out. The plaintiff at last tendered a $20 gold piece, telling the conductor to take his fare, $1.35, out of it: — Held, that the plaintiff had refused to pay his fare, within the meaning of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 51, s. 21, s. 25, G. and that defendants servant was justified in what he did. Fulton v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 17 U. C. R. 428.

Taxes.] — Defendant, as treasurer, returned the plaintiff's land as part of a tract on which taxes were unpaid. The plaintiff tendered the amount of taxes on his own portion, which defendant refused to accept, and the land was sold:—Held, that an action would not lie against the treasurer for not accepting the redemption money, the tender to and reflexing the latter being equivalent to payment; at the latter being equivalent to payment; at the contract the plaintiff had not lost his land. Cunningham v. Markland, 5 0.

Third Person—Payment to on Account of Urchitor—Direction.]—The plaintiffs, N. and T., entered into a joint contract for the performance of certain work for defendants, to be paid for monthly, as it progressed. The defendants through their treasurer opened accounts and paid moneys on orders, making the cheques payable to N. & T., which cheques were indorsed sometimes by N., and sometimes by T., in the name of N. & T. Upon an actual contract of the contract of $256.81, and an order and payment into court of $256.81, and an order and payment into court of $256.81, and an order and payment thereunder in the following words:

"Brantford, 31st July, 1858. Allan Clephorn, Eso., Reserve $300 from the central school, payable to Ritchie & Russell, N. & T." This was signed by T:—Held, that the payment thereunder was a payment on account of the plaintiffs, and could not be recovered again. North v. Brantford School Trustees, 10 C. P. 401.

Transfer of Account by Creditor - Appropriation of Payments.] - M. died in November, 1847, indebted to the plaintiff in is5, having appointed defendant his executrix. The account was continued after his death, and was afterwards rendered to defendant and leaded as against widow M., and further defendances were made to her from time to time and pasments made by her on account, down to far more than the debt due from the testator. In December, 1849, the payments amounting to far more than the debt due from the testator. In December, 1849, a confession of judgment was obtained from defendant, as executrix of the resultor. On a rule nisi to set aside the judgment entered on the confession:—Held, that the plaintiff, having transferred his claim against the estate to the individual account with the defendant, and with her assen, and having since received more than sufficient to cover the debt of the estate, could not sever the two accounts and fall back upon the estate for the amount due at the testator's death; and the judgment was set aside. Heatily v. Musrvell, 1 P. R. S5.

2. Appropriation of Payments.

(a) General Principles.

Direction — Option — Presumption.] — Where a debtor is indebted upon two accounts, the creditor has his election to place a payment to which he pleases, unless there is a specific direction for its application, or circumstances tantamount to one. Hagerman v. Smith. Tay. 123.

Under special circumstances, however, the law will sometimes make the appropriation, and take the option out of the hands of the creditor, Cummings v. Glassup, 1 U. C. R. 344.

If a debtor pay a sum of money to a judgment creditor who has also a claim on a current account, and no directions be given, the creditor may apply such payment to the account, though the judgment were earlier in date. Armour v. Carruthers, 4 L. J. 210.

Plaintiff sued for £70 balance of accounts, and proved himself entitled to £59 19s. 5d.:— Held, that defendant could not prove payneatis made on the whole account, and apply the same in reduction of the balance sued for. Stock v. Men. 1 C. P. 300.

A party receiving a cheque to be applied in a particular way, cannot afterwards apply it discretise, even although he may not have given a receipt. Canada Powder Co. v. Barley, 9 C. P. 290.

If money is not expressly appropriated by the parry paying it, the parry receiving it may appropriate it even upon a claim which he cannot enforce by suit. Fraser v. Love, 10 Gr. 207.

Appropriation of payments is to be made (1) as the debtor directs at the time of payment; (2) when there is no direction by the debtor, as the creditor directs; (3) when neither makes any direction, then the law will apply it to the older debt, or as may be just. Wilson v. Rykert, 14 O. R. 188.

Appropriation of payments is a question of intention; and where a creditor takes security for an existing indebtedness, and thereafter continues his account with the debtor in the ordinary running for u, charging him with goods sold, and crediting him with moneys received, and crediting and charging notes on account in such a way as to render the original indebtedness undistinguishable, there is no irrebuttable presumption that the payments are to be applied upon the original indebtedness. Griffith v. Crocker, 18 A. R. 370.

(b) Particular Cases.

Attachment—Sheriff.]—Upon the evidence set out in the report of this case, the question was, whether the sheriff had not appropriated the money in defendants' hands to the attachment, without reference to the decision of the court, and the jury having found for the plaintiff, the vertict was sustained. Carrall v. Montreal Bank, 21 U. C.

Bank-Borrowing from Crown - Deposit Receipts—Error in Appropriation.]—A bank borrowed from the Dominion government two sums of $100,000 each, giving deposit receipts respectively numbered 323 and 329. The bank respectively numbered 323 and 329. The bank asked for a further loan of a like amount, which was refused, but afterwards the loan was made, on O., one of the directors of the bank, becoming personally responsible for repayment, and the receipt for such last loan was numbered 346. The government having demanded payment of $80,000 on account, that sum was transferred in the bank books to the general account of the government. to the general account of the government, and a letter from the president to the finance department stated that this had been done, en-closed another receipt number 358 for $50,000 on special deposit, and concluded: These return deposit receipt No. 323— $100,000 now in your possession." Subsection $100,000 now in your possession." Subsequently $50,000 more was paid, and a return of receipt No. 358 requested. The bank having failed, the government took proceedings against O., on his guarantee for the last loan made, to recover the balance after crediting said payments and dividends received. The defence to these proceedings was, that it had been agreed between the bank and O, that any payments made on account of the borrowed money should be first applied to the porrowed money should be first applied to the guaranteed loan, and that the president had instructed the accountant so to apply the two sums of $50,000 paid, but he had omitted to do so. The trial Judge gave effect to this objection and dismissed the information of the control of the contro that the president knew what the accountant had done and did not repudiate it, and as the act was for the benefit of the bank, the lat-ter was bound by it; that the act of the government in immediately returning the speci-fic deposit receipts when the payments were made was a sufficient act of appropriation by the creditor within Art. 1160, C. C., no appro-priation at all having been made by the debtor, on the hypothesis of error; and, if this were not so, the bank could not now annul the imputation made by the accountant unless the government could be restored to the position it would have been in if no imputation at all had been made, which was impossible, the government would then have had an option which could not now be exercised. The Queen v. Ogilvie, 29 S. C. R. 299.

Bond — General Account — Creditors.] — Where the defendant gave a bond payable at a distant period, and the plaintiffs continued their dealings with him, sending accounts which contained debits and credits, including the sum for which the bond was given, though the last of them was rendered before the time for the payment of the bond had arrived:—Quere, could the defendants treat the credits contained in these accounts as payment on the bond? Maitland v. Secord, Dra. 450.

Chattel Mortgage - Unsecured Debt-Set-off.]—A trader carrying on business in two establishments mortgaged both stocks-intrade to B. as security for indorsements on a composition with his creditors and for advances in cash and goods to a fixed amount. The composition notes were made and in-dersed by B., who made advances to an amount considerably over that stated in the mortgage. A few mouths afterwards the mortgagor was in default for the advances and a portion of overdue notes, and there were some notes not matured, and B, consented to the sale of one of the mortgaged stocks, taking the purchaser's notes in payment, applying the amount generally in payment of his overdue debt, part of which was unsecured. few days afterwards B. seized the other stock of goods covered by his mortgage, and about the same time the sheriff seized that stock under execution, and shortly afterwards the mortgagor assigned for benefit of creditors. An interpleader issue between B. and the execution creditor resulted in favour of B., ceived, out of the proceeds of the sale of the goods under an order of the court, the balance remaining due on his mortgage: Horsfall v. Boisseau, 21 A. R. 603. The assignee of the mortgagor then brought an action against B. to recover the amount representing the unsecured part of his debt, which was paid by the purchase of the first stock, which pay ment was alleged to be a preference to B. over the other creditors:—Held, affirming the decision in 23 A. R. 230, that there was no preference to B. within R. S. O. 1887 c. 124. s. 2; that his position was the same as if whole debt, secured and unsecured, had been overdue, and there had been one sale of both stocks of goods realizing an amount equal to such debt, in which case he could have appro-priated a portion of the proceeds to payment of his secured debt, and would have had the benefit of the law of set-off as to the un-secured debt under s. 23 of the Act; and that the only remedy of the mortgagor or his assignee was by redemption before the sale, which would have deprived B. of the benefit of such set-off. Stephens v. Boisseau, 26 S.

Defalcations—Earlier Items of Default —Guarantee Policy.]—B, was a defaulter to the plaintiffs. Soon after his defalcations were discovered he died, and after his death his executrix handed over certain of his projecty to a trustee, who was also an officer of the plaintiffs, to realize and apply the money therefrom towards satisfying B.'s defalcations, but without indicating to what part of such defalcations it should be applied.
The trustee applied it towards satisfaction of the earlier of B.'s liabilities, in respect to which the defendants, a guarantee company, were not liable, since by a condition of their policy they were not to be liable except for losses occurring within a year before notice of claim made to them:—Held, that the case was similar to payment made by a debtor to a creditor without express appropriation, in which case the creditor could appropriate it, and the defendants had no right to complain of the appropriation made in this case. City of London v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 13 O. R. 713.

Goods Sold—Old and New Account—
Agreement—Breach,]—befendant employed the plaintift, a butcher, to supply his steamer with meat. At the close of 1851 he was indepleted to the plaintift, and authorized the captain of his steamer to pay this balance out agreed with the plaintift for furnish supplies for 1852, but stipulated that if the account was allowed to run over a week at a time he would not be answerable. The captain paid sums at different times in 1852, on account of the current supplies, but the account was frequently suffered to run over a week, and little more than half of the claim for the season was paid:—Held, that defendant could wipe off the balance due for 1851, on the ground that the plaintiff had forfeited his account for 1852, by allowing it to accumulate. Wuche, Nelley, II U. C. R. 235.

Separate and Partnership Accounts -Specific Appropriation.]-Defendants McC. McL., while in partnership, purchased goods from the plaintiff. Subsequently they dissolved partnership, McC. continuing the business and taking over the assets, which included a considerable portion of these goods, and thereafter McC. purchased goods from the plaintiff on his own behalf, and from time to time made payments to the plaintiff with moneys partly his own and partly the proceeds of the partnership goods. The plaintiff sued of the partnership goods. defendants for the balance due upon the goods furnished to the firm, and the question was whether the payments so made were to applied on the individual or the partnership indebtedness. It was alleged that the evidence shewed that there was a specific appropriation to McC.'s individual account, in accordance with a stipulation between plaintiff and himself therefor, and that McL. was not only aware of such appropriation and assented thereto, but that he expressly agreed for valuable consideration to pay off the partnership indebtedness; and also that the partnership was indebted to McC. in a sum beyond the payments made, and that McC. could therefore properly apply the payments to his own in-debtedness. The payments were made in ad-vance of the falling due of the items of McC.'s separate account, but evidence was given in explanation of this. The jury having found for defendants, a new trial was granted to enable the facts to be more fully considered: and semble, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. Fitch v. McCrimmon, 30 C. P. 183.

Gurantee Goods Sold-New Account.]
In April. 1850. R. became security to the plaintiffs for S. to the extent of £100, and S. thereupon received goods from them to the amount of £151. In April S. desired to purchase more. R. became security for £75, and in his letter said, "I understand from S. that he has paid you £75 on account of the £100."
The plaintiffs sent no answer, but supplied the goods required. The £75 had been paid by S. and in his letter enclosing it he said, "I send you £75 on account of goods bought by me, being one-bull of the whole:"—Held, that R. was entitled to have this payment credited against the £151. Lyman v. Miller, 12 U. C. K. 215.

Guarantee Policy-Earlier Items of Default. | Action on a guarantee policy for loss sustained by the plaintiffs through the default of one D., their secretary-treasurer. The plaintiffs made, on 1st January, 1879, their ciaim under the policy, which extended only to losses occurring within the period of twelve to losses occurring within the period of tweeter months prior to such claim being made. It appeared that at the end of 1877 the default was 8674, which was increased during the first two months of 1878 to $1,261.57, but in the next four months the deficiency was reduced by payments to $292.85, after which it again increased util, at the end of 1878, it amounted to 8844.22:—Held, in accordance with the general rule as to appropriation, that, in the absence of any specific appropriation, the payments must be appropriated. to the earliest items of the default, thereby paying off the whole of the default due at the end of 1877, so that the whole amount of $814.22, due at the end of 1878, must be deemed to have accrued due within that year; and that the plaintiffs were entitled, if at all, to recover this amount. Board of Education of Town of Paris v. Citizens' Insurance and Investment Co., 30 C. P. 132.

Loan - Keeping down Interest.] - Where defendant is making payments on a loan, the plaintiff may insist, in the absence of any agreement, that the payments be applied first to keep down the interest. McGregor v. Gau-lin, 4 U. C. R. 378. See also Cummings v. Usher, 1 P. R. 15.

Mortgage-Future Advances-Mutual Accounts-Interest - Prior Advance.]-Where a mortgage was to secure advances to be made from time to time, and interest thereon, and there were mutual accounts, the items of which were entered in the mortgagee's books, with the concurrence of the mortgagor, who was his clerk:—Held, that the credits given therein to the mortgagor were first applicable to the interest on all these advances, and then to the eldest of the principal sums charged. Ross v. Perrault, 13 Gr. 206.

General Account—Balance—Dis-charge of Security.]—The debtor of a mer-cantile time, being desirous of extending his transactions with his creditors, executed to them a mortgage to secure £2,000. Subsequent transactions between the parties took place, and during one year alone the sums charged to the debtor, including the sum due on the mortgage, amounted to £30,000; and after four years' dealing between the parties from the execution of the mortgage, an account was delivered shewing a balance of 11.641 against the debtor. Upon a bill filed to foreclose for this amount:—Held, that the transactions which had taken place discharged the mortgage debt. Buchanan v. Kerby, 5 Gr.

— General Account — Creditors — Reduction of Amount Secured.]—Where a creditor held a security on lands of his debtor, and afterwards, in rendering his accounts, carried the amount of such mortgage into the general account, and received from the debtor, and on his account, several sums, which, as the creditor alleged, were to be credited on certain other dealings, but instead thereof they were carried to the debtor's credit generally: Held, that this precluded any inference from their previous conduct, or from any previous agreement; and that therefore the receipts must be applied, in the first instance, to the reduction of the sum secured by the mortgage security. Re Brown, 2 Gr. 111.

A creditor took a mortgage for £2,000 (part of a debt of £2.414), and afterwards rendered accounts, commencing with the balance of £2,414, taking no notice of the mortgage, and crediting (without any objection by the debsums received after the mortgage given, but before it fell due :-Held, that this proved an appropriation of such sums towards payment of the original debt, including that part of it secured by mortgage. S. C., ib. 590.

General Account-Earlier Items of Default-Credits-Reference.]-J. H. S. was a local agent for an insurance company and collected premiums on policies secured through his agency, remitting moneys thus received to the branch office at Toronto from time to time. On 1st January, 1890, he was behind in his remittances to the amount of $1,250, and afterwards became further in arrears until on the 15th October, 1890, one W. S., joined him in a note for the $1,250 to immediate discount by the company, and executed a mortgage on his lands as collateral to the note mortgage oil in that might be given, in which it was declared that payment of the note or renewals or any part thereof was to be con-sidered as a payment upon the mortgage. The sidered as a payment upon the mortgage. The company charged J. H. S. with the balance then in arrears, which included the sum secured by the note and mortgage, and continued the account as before in their ledger, charging J. H. S. with premiums, &c., and the notes which they retired from time to time as they became due, and crediting moneys received from J. H. S. in the ordinary course of their business, the note and its various renewals being also credited in this general account for cash. W. S. died on 5th December, 1891, and afterwards the company accepted notes signed by J. H. S. alone for the full amount of his indebtedness, which had increased in the meantime, making debit and credit entries as previously in the same account. On the 31st July, 1893, H. S. owed on this account a balance of $1.926, which included $1,098 ac-crued since 1st January, 1890, and after he had been credited with general payments there remained due at the time of trial $1,009 note W. S. signed on 5th October, 1890, was payable four months after date with interest at 7 per cent., and the mortgage was expressed to be payable in four equal instalments of $312.50 each, with interest on unnaid principal:—Held, that the giving of the accommo-dation notes without reference to the amount secured had not the effect of releasing the surety, as being an extension of time granted without his consent and to his prejudice; that the renewal of notes secured by the collateral mortgage was prima facie an admission that, at the respective dates of renewal, at least the amounts mentioned therein were still due upon the security of the mortgage; that, in the absence of evidence of such intention, it could not be assumed that the deferred payments in the mortgage were to be expedited so as to be eo instanti extinguished by entries of in the general account which included the debt secured by the mortgage; and that there being some evidence that the moneys credited in the general account represented premiums of insurance which did not belong to the debtor, but were merely collected by him and remitted for policies issued through his agency, the rule in Clayton's case as to the appropriation of the earlier items of credit towards the extinguishment of the earlier items of debit in the general account would not apply, and there should have been a reference to the master to take the account. Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Sargeant, 26 S. C. R. 29.

Insurance Moneys—Application by Mortgagor.]—See Corham v. Kingston, 17 O. R. 432; Edmonds v. Hamilton Provident and Loan Society, 18 A. R. 347.

Floating Balance, I—A trader, being indebted to a wholesale merchant for goods, executed a mortgage to him securing £3,000, and the craditor having entered into a new partnership, the firm continued to make further advances for several years, during which time the debtor made several payments, much more than enough to pay off his original indebtedness; and the firm in rendering their accounts to the mortgager did not bring in the old debt:
—Held, that these circumstances were sufficient to shew that the security was intended to cover a floating balance, and was therefore not satisfied. Russell v. Darey, 7 Gr. 13.

— Promissory Note—Separate Securities—Partnership—Credits.]—One partner gave as security for half of the martnership debt a mortgage of the security for half of the martnership debt a mortgage of the securities of the securities. Subsequently payments were made on necount of the joint debt, which he credited to the creditor on the note, claiming to hold the mortgage for the entire balance:—Held, that an assignee of the mortgage was entitled to have one-half of all sums paid out of the partnership assets on the debt credited on the mortgage security. Moore v. Riddell, 11 Gr. 69.

— Time for Making Appropriation.]
—An appropriation of payments on a mortgage made by the creditor for the first time on bringing the account into the master's office, and apparently on the very day on which it is brought in, is too late. Fraser v. Locie, 10 Gr. 207.

Unappropriated Payments—Usurious Interest.] — Since 16 Viet, c. S0, and before the abolition of the usury laws, a mortgage at ten per cent, cannot be enforced for more than six per cent,, though as to payments made without appropriation the mortgagee can appropriate the money to the satisfaction of the usurious interest before coming into court, Fuller v, Parnall, S C, L. J. S6,

In part payment of the usurious mortgage another mortgage of a third party was assigned, which had not fallen due:—Held, that the amount of this mortgage could not be applied by anticipation to the payment of usurious interest not due. Ib.

Promissory Note —Bond — Contra Account—Intention as to Application.]—Action on a note for £37 lbs. At the trial B., the defendant, produced an account for £20 lbs. 3%d., commencing in September, 1848, and ending in January, 1850. He also proved a receipt for 112 lbs. The plaintiff then put in an annuity bond conditioned for the payment by the defendant to plaintiff of £25 per annum during his life, the first payment to be made on or before the 1st June, 1846, and the like sum on the 1st June in each succeeding year. The payment of the annuity for 1848 was proved, and that it consisted of items of an account, and was inforsed on the bond as one sum of £25; this evidence was objected to by the defendant's counsel but admitted. The Judge told the jury. "that from the evidence it appeared that more than $25 was due on the annuity bond when defendant's account was read over to the plaintiff, and that if, in their opinion, the amount thereof was intended as a payment of so much on the annuity, the plaintiff had a right so to apply it; and in that case not to allow credit for it against the mote, but to deduct it if they thought there was no such understanding. As to the £12 10s., that the plaintiff had indorsed it on the bond, and had a right to do so at any time; and that, although it appeared to have been very recently done, that would make no difference." The jury found for the plaintiff the full amount of the note and intreest:—Held, that the direction and verdict were right. Miller v. Miller, 1 C. P. 240.

General Account—Charging against Maker—Release of Indorser.]—Where A., the indorsee of a note, sued B., the payee, and it was proved by C., the maker, that the note was made an item in the current account between A. and C. (the maker); that it was long before charged to the maker as a debt due by hin; and that when it was so charged the balance was in the maker's favour:—Held, that the note must be taken to have been paid by the maker, and that it must be so taken as soon as subsequent credits were admitted by A. sufficient to cover the note, though when the note was charged the balance was not in C.'s. (the maker's) favour. McGillieray v. Accefer, 4 U. C. R. 342.

- Proposal for Renewal - Acceptance of Cheque-Interest in Advance.]-At maturity of certain promissory notes made by the defendants, and held by the plaintiffs, the dedefendants, and neid by the planning, the de-fendants sent the plaintiffs a proposal for a renewal in part, accompanied by a cheque for part of the amount due and two renewal notes for the balance, the total amount including a sum for interest on the renewals. The plaintiffs returned the renewal notes, but retained the cheque, and brought this action upon the original notes, giving credit for the amount of the cheque:—Held, that, although there was no obligation on the part of the creditors to assent to the debtors' proposal, yet by receiving the cheque and keeping it they must be taken to have applied it in the man ner in which the debtors when tendering it stipulated, and, as it included interest in vance upon the renewals, the creditors were bound to give the debtors the benefit of the time for which the renewals were drawn. Lowden v. Martin, 12 P. R. 496.

Statute of Limitations—Execution account should be taken of all dealings between St. J., the plaintiff, and R., the defendant. The muster found that $413.20 was due to the defendant by the plaintiff. The master disallowed to the defendant by the plaintiff. The moster disallowed to the plaintiff the amount tred by the Statute of Limitations; and reduced the interest on a sum of $3.000 advanced, from twenty-four per cent, to six per cent, after judgment had been recovered. The note of $5.10 was dated 18th November, 1861, and was payable with interest at the rate of $10 per week from the 23rd November, 1861. On the 6th March, 1867, the defendant, who had been sued by the plaintiff for certain other claims, entered into an agreement with him in order to relieve him from the pressure of execution debts, paid him $2,000 on account of his indebtedness, and got time for the balance. The plaintiff made no demand at the time to be paid this note, and did not instruct his attorney who acted for him to seek payment of it until 1870:—Held, that the evidence shewed an appropriation by the defendant of the S2.000 on account of the debts for which he was being pressed, and, as the note for $5.10 was not included in such debts, the master was right in treating it as barred by the Statute of Limitations. St. John v. Rybert, 10 S. C. R. 278. See S. C., 26 Gr. 249, 4 A. R. 213.

Unappropriated Payments—Interest Statute of Limitations.]—Defendant was indelted to the plaintiff and gave him several promissory notes in payment, which fell due in 1871. The interest was paid up to August 1878. The defendant thereafter paid in 1882 850, $40, and $100, and in 1883, $100. The first two payments were specially appropriated by the defendant to the interest, and the others were unappropriated—Held, that the payments must be applied to the interest due on all the notes, the effect of which was to take them out of the Statute of Limitations. Watson v. Rykert, 14 0, R. 188.

Rent—Promissory Note—Option as to Application.]—Defendant gave a note for his rent due up to the 1st December, 1856. He afterwards obtained a note of the plaintiff's for £28 158., and being unable to pay his taves, gave it to the bailiff before it fell due, telling him to ask the plaintiff to advance the sum required, and to credit the balance on the then current rent. The plaintiff's clerk advanced the momer and took the note, but refused to credit the balance on the rent then current to the plaintiff to advanced the momer and took the note, but refused to credit the balance on the rent then care to the property of the plaintiff to the saying that he would apply it on the present the plaintiff to the foreign the plaintiff to the foreign the plaintiff to plaintif

Acceptance of Note in Satisfaction—Question for Jury.]—To an action against taw partners for wharfage and warehouseroom of goods, defendants pleaded the delivery and acceptance of the promissory note of one of them in satisfaction of the claim. At the trial the plaintiff's book-keeper said that he presented the account, and took the note made by one defendant in settlement, writing at the foot of the account "received payment by

Construction of Contract—Question for Court—Evidence—Jury.]—Defendant, wishing to buy an organ from the plaintiffs, since a conditional hire-receipt which gave the right of purchasing the organ for $129, payable as follows: a cash payment of $129, payable as follows: a cash payment of the payable as follows:

ment should remain the plaintiffs' property on bire at $4 a month until it was fully paid for. The defendant paid the $50 and obtained the instrument. At the end of the year he was granted an extension of time for the parment of the balance, which was followed by similar indulgences, until at last, being pressed for payment, he offered to pay $50 cash and give his note for the remainder at four months. The agent communicated this offer to one of the plaintiffs, who replied, "As we require the matter closed up, you can accept the $50, provided he gives at same time a note for balance at four months with interest." The letter also requested him to obtain the hire-receipt, which had been sent to the defendant by mistake. The defendant paid $50, sent back the hire-receipt, and gave the note as required, and received a receipt for it, being balance of at maturity, and the plaintiffs epilety of the organ. The Judge left it to the jury to say whether the note was staken conditionally or on account, or was a settlement of the balance due, so that from theneforth the organ was to be the defendant 's:—Held, that the construction of the contract was for the court; and that there was no evidence that the note was given in satisfaction of the unpular residue of the purchase money. The mere taking of a note for the purpose of closing an account is not proof that it is taken in payment. Nord-heimer v. Robinson, 2 A. R. 305.

Condition — Conflict of Evidence.] — Action on a note. Plea, set-off for money due on a note made by plaintiffs, for freight due to defendants. Conflicting evidence as to whether note given conditionally, subject to a future settlement, or as a final settlement of the freight. Verdict for plaintiffs set aside, and new trial granted; costs to abide the event. Mcllish v. Wilkies, 4 C. P. 407.

Discount of Bill — Subsequent Dishonour.]—The plaintiff held defendant's mortgage, with a condition that the whole principal should become payable if the interest was in arrear for ten days. By agreement between them plaintiff drew on defendant for the interest (at three days' sight) a few days before it became due, which draft was discounted by plaintiff at his bank, and the proceeds placed to his credit prior to the expiration of the ten days, and was afterwards accepted by defendant; but upon maturity was dishonoured and charged to the plaintiff's account:—Held, that this was no payment, and that the whole mortgage money was due. Cameron v. Knapp, 7 C. P. 502.

Exchange of Notes — Satisfaction.] — Plantiff holding defendant's note (not negotiable) payable on demand, for £500, in transactions with one R. (a partner of defendant) gave it to R., taking in return his note for £1,000, for this and other transactions. In dissolving partnership, it was arranged that this £1,000, or note of R.'s, should be paid by defendant. R. being called upon for payment obtained defendant's cheque for £500 and returned defendant's cheque for £500, and returned defendant's cripinal note for £500 to plaintiff in payment of the note for £100. To an action on the note for £500 defendant pleaded satisfaction thereof by the taking of R.'s note for £1,000.—Held, that there had not been payment, and that defendant was liable. Booth v. Ridley, S. C. P. 4344.

Partnership Debts-Note of One Partner-Action on Election. |- In the absence of express agreement to that effect, a creditor taking the note of one partner for a debt of the partnership, and sumg thereon, but failing to recover the amount of the note, is not precluded from afterwards claiming the amount of the note against the partnership. Carrathers v, Ardagh, 20 Gr. 579.

Sale of Land — Purchaser's Notes — Production of.] — Where promissory notes had been given in payment of the purchase money of land, and several years afterwards a bill was filed by a vendee of the original proprietor against the heirs at law of the original purchaser:—Held, that the promissory notes must be produced or satisfactorily accounted for before the purchase money would be ordered to be paid, even though a good title were shewn. Crooks v. Glea, 8 Gr. 239.

Sale of Mortgage by Executor — Purchaser's Note.]—An executor holding a mortgage given to the testnor, sold and assigned it, taking the purchaser's promissory notes payable to himself or order:—Held, upon an issue of plene administravit, that this in law amounted to a receipt of the original dela, making the executor chargeable with the mortgage as an asset in possession. Macbeth v. Macbeth, 26 U. C. R. 549.

4. Cheques-Payment by.

Acceptance as Cash.—Delay,].— Defendant bought goods from the plaintiffs, paying part in cash, and giving for the balance a bank cheque drawn by H. payable to bearer. Plaintiffs presented the cheque early next morning, but there were no funds; and at the end of a week, after repeatedly calling on H., they demanded payment from defendant:—Held, that they could not recover, for (1) the cheque must be taken to have been received as cash; and (2) the plaintiffs had, at all events, made it their own by the delay in calling on defendant. Redpath v. Kolloge, 16 U. C. R. 433.

Delay—Pleading—Jury, I—The plaintiff on the 12th January, 1867, gave defendants $150 in silver, and $4,50 for the discount on it, receiving their I. O. U. for $150 in bills. Aiterwards, on the same day, they gave him the cheque of one H. on a bank, payable to the defendants or bearer, but post-dated to the 16th. It was not presented till the 18th, and was refused, there having been no funds since the 16th. H. on the same day told the plaintiff he would make it all right, and the plaintiff in consequence left it at the bank; but on that evening H. made an assignment, having been insolvent for some time. Defendants' shop was closed on the 19th, Saturday, and on Monday the plaintiff returned the cheque to them as worthless, still retaining their I. O. U. The plaintiff having such on a special count for not delivering the bills, and on the common counts and necount stated, it was left to the jury to say whether there was a debt due by defendants to the plaintiff when the cheque was given, and whether three cepted in satisfaction; and they found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the case was properly submitted and the verdict right. 2. That under a plea of payment, the defendants could not set up that the plaintiff by his laches in presentment and notice had made the cheque his own; and, semble, had this been specially pleaded, the plaintiff, on a replication of the facts excusing his delay, would have been entitled to succeed. Smith v. Buchan, 27 U. G. R. 106.

Receipt—Division Court Clerk.]—
The defendant, clerk of the division court of York, sent a transcript of the entry of a judgment recovered therein by the plantiff to one M., the division court clerk of Essex, with directions to remit the money by post office order or by cheque, M., having recovered the money, paid it into his private account at McG. Bros., private bankers, and sent their cheque to the defendant for the amount, as he had been accustomed to do, which the defendant for McG. The McG. C. clerk of Windsor, $70.40." Before the cheque was presented McG. Bros. failed, and the plaintiff sued the defendant for the money:
—Held, that the cheque and receipt operated as payment between M. and the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money from the defendant for the money:

Held, that the cheque and receipt operated as payment between M. and the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money from the defendant as money received to his use. McLeish v. Howard, 3 A. R. 503.

Acceptance as Payment — Jury—New Trial.]—A cheque operates as payment until it has been presented and payment refused. In this case, on the evidence set out in the report, it was held the plantial had received the cheque as payment; and the jury having found otherwise, a new trial was granted. Hughes v. Canada Permanent Building and Savings Society, 30 U. C. R. 221.

Acceptance "in Full of "Claim—Evidence—Receipt.]—A cheque of the plaintiff's, when produced at the hearing, had written on it, "in full of all his (the defendant's) claims for notes or otherwise," which words the plaintiff swore were on the cheque when sent to the defendant, which he denied, however, Four crosses were on the face of the cheque, and some initial letters in the margin, and these the plaintiff stated were the initials of the clerk in the bank, whom he had requested to initial the words so introduced. The court refused to receive this as evidence of a receipt in full, in the absence of the bank clerk, who should have been called as a witness. Livingston v. Wood, 27 Gr. 515.

Acceptance of Cheque of Third Person. — Presentment—Notice of Dishonour—Delay. — Where the cheque of a third person is received from a debtor as conditional payment of an antecedent debt, the creditor must without undue delay present the cheque for payment, and, if it is dishonoured, notify the debtor of the fact and claim recourse against him on the original indebtedness. Unless this is done, the creditor will be taken to have accepted the cheque in payment of the debt, and the debtor is discharged. Savyer v. Thomas, 18 A. R. 129.

Premium on Life Policy.]—See Neill v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co., 7 A. R. 171; £ina Life Ins. Co. v. Green, 38 U. C. R. 459.

Suspension of Bank—Delay in Presentment—"Market Cheque.")—The payees of a cheque took it to the bank on which it was drawn on the afternoon of the day on which they received it from the drawer and got it marked "good," the amount being charged to the drawer's account. They then took it away without demanding payment. The bank, on the exening of the same day, suspended payment, and on the following day, on presentation of the cheque, payment was refused:—
Held, that the drawer of the cheque was discharged from all liability thereon. Boyd v.
Namith, 17 O. R. 40.
Namith, 17 O. R. 40.

Transfer of Cheque of Third Person.)

The handing by a debtor to his creditor of the cheque of a third person upon a bank in the place where the creditor lives, the maker of the cheque having funds there to meet it, is a "payment of money to a creditor" within the meaning of R. S. O. 1887 c. 124. s. 3, s. a. I. Armstrong v. Hemstreet, 22 O. R. 336. Overruled by the next case.

Indorsing and giving to a creditor the unaccepted cheque of a third person in the debtor's favour is not a payment of money to the creditor by the debtor within the meaning of s. 3 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 124. Armstrong v. Hensitzet, 22 O. R. 336, overruled. Davidson v. France, 23 A. R. 459, 28 S. C. R. 272.

A trader in insolvent circumstances sold his stock-in-trade in good faith, and directed the purchaser to pay as part of the purchase money a debt due by the trader to his bankers, who held, as collateral security, a chatted merigage on the stock-in-trade. The purchaser had an account with the same bankers, and gave to them a cheque on this account for the amount of their claim, there being funds at his redit to meet the cheque:—Held, that this was a payment of money to a creditor and not a realization of a security, and that the bank-were not liable, in a creditor's action, to account for the amount received. Davidson [Fraser, 23 A. R. 439, 28 S. C. R. 47. distinguished, on the ground that the deepse never was the property of or under the control of, the insolvent. Gordon v. Union Bank of Canada, 26 A. R. 155.

5. Currency in which Payment to be Made.

Domestic Contract-Foreign Premises-Pleading. |- The plaintiffs, two corporations, Produity. I have been supported by the plainting two corporations, declared on defendants covenant to pay them $22,500 for six months' rent, due on the 1st June, 1863. Defendants pleaded that the premises were partly in the United States; that the plainting had their place of business in the States; and that on the 1st June defend-ants tendered to them their $22,500 in lawful currency of the States, which they refused; and the defendants brought into court $15,-525 of lawful money of Canada, which they averred was on said 1st June, and is, equal in value to the said $22,500 of the lawful currency of the States. The plaintiffs replied that the deed was executed in Canada; that one of the plaintiffs was a company incorporated and having its domicile here, and the other in the States; that the rent reserved was payable in current money of this Prowas payane in current money of this Fro-vince; and that at the execution of the deed and hitherto the said $22,500 was and had always been equal to $22,500, and not at any time to $15,525, of current money of the Pro-vince; and that the tender made of the equivalent in American currency of the last mentioned sum was not valid. On demurrer to the replication :- Held, that the contract made in Canada, and mentioning no place for the payments, must be governed by our law; that the rent must be intended from the declaration to be payable in current money of Canada; that there was nothing in the plea to displace this intendment; and that the plain-tiffs therefore were entitled to judgment. Niagara Falls International Bridge Co. v. Great Western R. W. Co., 22 U. C. R. 592.

Place of Payment.]—Defendants resided at Toronto, Canada; and one of them, when at Cleveland, U. S., or, as plaintiff contended, at Toronto, wrote to plaintiff, resident in Cleveland, as to coal; to which letter the plaintiff replied, and addressed his letter to defendants at Toronto, agreeing to furnish coals at Cleveland at $2.75 per ton:—Held, that the place where the money is payable governs the question as to how it is to be paid; and, as the goods were to be delivered at Cleveland, it was to be presumed they were also to be paid for there on delivery; and that therefore the plaintiff must accept American currency in payment thereof. Crawford v. Beard, 14 C. P. 87. See S. C., 13 C. P. 34.

Value at Time for Payment—Interest.]—Defendants in Toronto covenanted to pay $516 in New York, on 20th August, 1858, which they failed to do, and when sued here in 1895, they claimed to pay in American currency at par, though in the meantime it had become very much depreciated:—Held, however, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the equivalent of the $516 in New York on the day of payment, with interest. Massachusetts Hospital v. Provincial Ins. Co., 25 U. C. R. 613.

A mortgage being payable in lawfu! money of the United States of America, the holder thereof, in seeking to foreclose, is entitled only to claim the amount in the current money of that country, or its equivalent at the time of default made in payment, or at any time subsequently, at his option. Crawford v. Beard, 14 C. P. 87, approved of and followed. Morrell v. Ward, 10 Gr. 231.

6. Mode and Time of Paument,

Bank Notes - Failure of Bank-Acceptance at Par. |- K. was trustee for sale of certain lands belonging to M. Two parcels were subject to a mortgage to the Bank of Upper Canada for more than the value thereof. trustee agreed for the sale of these parcels to a purchaser; the bank, before becoming insolvent, assented to the sale and received the first instalment of the purchase money. purchaser went into possession, but was in dedefault in paying purchase money: the defendants were his assigns. By the trust deed, which the bank executed on becoming insolvent (which deed was afterwards confirmed by statute), it was made the duty of the bank trustees to accept in payment and liquidation of any debt due to the estate the notes or bills of the bank. On a bill by the bank trustees for payment :-Held, that, as the money was coming to the bank, the trustees were bound to accept payment in the notes of the bank at par. Trustees of Bank of Upper Canada v. Canadian Navigation Co., 16 Gr. 479.

Failure of Bank — Avend.] — A debtor of the late pretended bank of Upper Canada at Kingston having called upon the bank commissioners to arbitrate under 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, an award was made for £900, to be paid in notes and other securities of the bank; — Held, that the debtor had a right to pay in notes for which no certificates had been issued pursuant to the Act. Dalton v. McNider, 5 Gr. 501.

Instalments—Contract for Work—Construction.] — A, entered into an agreement with B. to do certain work, &c., for B., for which by the terms of the contract A, was to be paid the sum of £3,000, partly in materials, &c., and the balance "in three yearly instalments, and according as the work progressed: —Held, that the amount of each yearly instalment to be paid to A, was limited by the amount of work done and the materials provided and delivered by him during the year, Grant v, McDonald, 9 C, P. 195.

Promissory Note — Acceptance—Failure to Psy—Revival of Remedy.]—The owner of land agreed to sell the growing timber thereon, and by the terms of the agreement it was stipulated that the price should be paid by the purchaser's note, indorsed by "a responsible party," renewable for half at its maturity, the delivering of such note within ten days from the date thereof to be the completion of the consideration for said agreement:—Held, that this was only a mode of paying the purchase money, and was not substituted for it; and that upon failure of payment the vendor was entitled to an injunction to restrain the felling of timber or the removal of such as had been already cut down. Mitchell v. McGaffey, 6 Gr. 361.

Agreement to Accept—Non-delivery
—Subsequent Tender.] — Where a plaintiff contracts to receive for work done, at its completion, a certain sum of money, and then agrees to accept from the defendant the promissory note of B. for the sum—if the note be not delivered, he may sue for the money. Fisher v, Ferris, 6 U. C. R. 534.

If the note be not tendered at the time spe-

If the note be not tendered at the time specified, a subsequent tender of the note and refusal will be no defence to such an action. Ib.

Sunday—Date of Payment.]—Where the day on which money is due under an agreement falls on Sunday:—Semble, that the payment must be made on Saturday. Whittier v. McLennan, 13 U. C. R. 438.

See Tanner v. D'Everado, 3 U. C. R. 154, post 10; McDonell v. McKay, 2 Ch. Ch. 354, post 10.

7. Person to Whom Payment Made.

Agent of Depositor in Bank—Person Presenting Pass-book—Rules of Bank.]—Defendants associated themselves together to conduct a savings bank, but before they were organized under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 32, their treasurer received a deposit from B. of £75, which he swore was made by B. with the express understanding that any person producing his pass-book should be entitled to receive it. B. died, and the sum was afterwards paid to a connexion of his, who presented the pass-book. The payment, it appeared, was made in pursance of certain rules adopted by defendants, but which were not filed according to the statute for some months after:—Held, that such payment was unauthorized, and that the defendants were liable to B.'s administrator for the money. Hunter v. Wallace, 14 U. C. R. 205.

Agent of Insurance Company — Premium.] — Defendant, through one B., the plaintiffs, agent, effected a life policy with the plaintiffs. B., who had authority to receive the premium, brought the policy with the receipt for the first premium, issued from the plaintiffs, head office, to defendant, who was in charge of a branch of the bank at which B. kept his account. Defendant dew a cheque on another branch of the bank, and B. requested him to place the amount to the credit of his bank account, which was done in the usual way, and the cheque charged to defendant; but K.'s account was at the time over-drawn, and he afterwards became insolvent:—Held, that the payment thus made to B. was a payment to the plaintiffs. Etha Life Ins. Co. v. Green, St. U. C. R. 459.

Company—Slock Subscription—Claim of Creditor—Anonclodge, 1—The plaintiff, a creditor of a railway company, having had his execution returned nulls bona, sued the defendant, a shareholder, for the amount remaining unpaid upon his stock. The defendant pleaded, that before the commencement of this suit the railway company sued him for the same moneys, and that after being served with the writ of summons in that case, and before declaration in either case, and after the commencement of this suit, he paid the company in full:—Held, no defence, as it was not averred that such payment was made in ignorance of the plaintiff's claim. Tyre v. Wükes, 13 U. C. R. 482.

Contractor — Pariner Subsequently Admitted, — Where a contract was made with collection of the contract was made with collection to share in the contract:—Held, that the payment to the original contractor was sufficient, and that no notice need be taken of the subsequent co-partnership. Carlisle v. Visionar Deck Co., 5 O. S. 600.

Person of Similar Name—Deposit in Sarings Society — Recovery by Rightful the ner—Division Courts.]—In an action to recover a deposit of money to the credit of the plaintiff with the defendants, it appeared that the whole amount had been innocently but wrongfully paid by the defendants into court and also directly to the creditors of another person of the same name as the plaintiff, under garnishee proceedings in a division court:—Held, that there was nothing in such proceedings to bar the plaintiff of his right to recover, or to protect the defendants against his claim, and that the judgments in the proceedings did not apply to money in their hands belonging to the plaintiff. Held, also, that s. 195 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 51 only protects a garnishee against being called upon by a primary debtor to pay over again and does not protect him against any third person. Andrew v. Canadian Mutual L. and I. (20, 29 O. R. 365.

Solicitor for Creditor—Retainer to Collect. —The retainer of an attorney or solicitor to collect a demand, and to take such proceedings as he may deem proper to effect this object, gives him authority to receive the amount before or after suit, and to discharge effectually the party making the payment. Moody v. Tyrell, 6 P. R. 313.

Solicitor for Mortgagee.]—An authority by planniff to his attorney to collect the interest due on a mortgage in the planniffs, and not in the attorney's, possession, does not entitle the attorney to receive payment of the principal. Palmer v. Winstanley, 23 C. P. 1881.

Wharfinger — Agent of Consignor of Galacia [— Semble, that a wharfinger is not an agent of the forwarder, to whom the consigne is authorized to make payment, after the delivery of the goods to the consignee, and after an account has been stated between him and the forwarder. Torrance v. Hages, 2 C. P. 338; S. C., 3 C. P. 274.

8. Plea or Defence of Payment.

Admission of Amount.]—In an action on the common counts for money paid, money lent goods sold, &c., the plen of payment admirs only that something not ascertained was due it property of the causes of action sued upon, leaving phintiff to prove the precise amount. Mulholland v. Morley, T. L. J. 323.

Bond—Condition—Breach.]—A plea of payment in satisfaction of a bond conditioned to do a collateral thing is bad, unless it aver that the payment was made after the time for performance, and after a breach. Prindle v. McCans. 4 U. C. R. 298

Contract—Breach—Plea to Damages.1—Where, in a declaration on a contract for the making and delivery of a certain number of burrels, the breach alleged was that, after the delivery of a certain number of burrels, defendants refused to allow plaintiff to deliver the remainder, and the damages claimed were as well for the price of those delivered as for loss of profits on those which defendants refused to allow to be delivered, a plea of payment as to all delivered, though objected to on the ground that it was merely a plea to damages, was allowed, on the ground that it answered a substantite part of the plaintiff's cause of action. Wingall v. Enniskülen Oil Co., 10 L. J. 216.

Breach—Uniquidated Damages.]—
A declared on an agreement with B. for the purchase by him from B. of goods, and the payment of $250 by A. to bind the bargain, and averred a tender of the balance of the purchase money, and breach by defendant in performance of the contract, but claimed no specific amount as damages. B. pleuded that after the writ and before declaration be paid $149 in full of all demands in respect of the matters set out in the declaration, which A. receive!—Held, plea good, as the action was for unliquidated damages, and there was nothing to shew that the amount paid was not a reasonable amount for the breach, and that it was not received by A. in satisfaction thereof. Gardiner v. Ford, 13 C. P. 446.

Evidence—Reduction of Damages. |—A party pleading payment of a larger sum may give evidence of payment of a smaller sum in reduction of damages, although the issue must be found against him. Gooderham v. Chalmers, 1 U. C. R. 172.

General Counts—Plea to.]—Payment of a certain sum pleaded to two counts, without alleging how much of the said sum is paid on each count:—Held, good on demurrer. Brown v. Ross, 3 U. C. R. 158.

Third Person—Custom of Payment—Notice, 1—Assumpsit on the common counts for work and labour, &c., by plaintiffs, who were common earriers by water. Plea, setting forth a delivery of the goods carried by plaintiff to a wharfinger at T., to whom defendants, according to the custom and usage of forwarders and carriers at T., paid the plaintiffs' claim:—Held, plea bad, for not averring notice of the custom to the plaintiffs. Torrance v. Hayer, Z. C. P. 338, S. C., 3 C. P. 274.

Undertaking — Breach.] — Declaration that defendants undertook to give their promissory notes payable at certain periods for 10s. on the pound sterling of the debts due by one F. to such of his creditors as should, within two months of the date of the deed, express their consent to accept the composition. Defendants pleaded payment, without alleging before breach:—Held, bad. Matthewson v. Henderson, 13 C. P. 96.

See Montreal City and District Savings Bank v. County of Perth. 32 C. P. 18; Smith v. Buchan, 27 U. C. R. 106, ante 4.

9. Presumption and Proof of Payment.

Acknowledgment — Set-off—Sci. Fa.]—Plaintiff, having sued defendant on a bond to pay money by instalments, obtained judgment for the penalty, and execution of the first and brought sci, fa. for the third. Defendant pleaded satisfaction by conveyance of land and set-off: and at the trial an acknowledgment was produced, signed by the plaintiff, of defendant's set-off, and that the bond had been paid in full:—Held, that it should be assumed that the payment had been made before admissible under the piea. Shipman v. Henderson, 21 U. C. R. 447.

Promissory Note—Indorsement—Canedlation.]—Where an indorsee suing the indorser upon a note, produces it at the trial from his own custody, with defendant's indorsement thereon cancelled, not as if by any accident, but in the most unequivocal manner, some explanation must be given to the jury for rejecting the inference that the note had been satisfied by the defendant whose name is thus cancelled. Peet v. Kingsmill, 7 U. C. R. 394.

Receipt — Construction—Dute.] — A receipt produced at the trial as evidence of payment of a couple of sums payable on the 1st November, 1867, was in these words:—"35. Fergus, 9th Nov., 1867. Received from Mr. Robert Morice the sum of thirty-live dollars, being the amount due to him for the instalment ending 1st November, 1867, of a bond. Robert Lowe:"—Held, no evidence of payment on 1st November, for that the construction of the receipt (and the question was one of construction, and not of presumption) was an acknowledgment of payment, made on the day it bore date, of a sum of money due on the 1st November. Lowe v. Morice, 19 G. P. 123.

Statement in Sworn Answer—Evidence.]—C., through whom the plaintiffs claimed in ejectment, in an answer in a suit in chancery, having stated a certain sun paid by him and the facts:—Semble, that the pleadings in the suit having been put in by defendants, were some evidence as against them of such payment. Cooley v. Smith, 40 U. C. R. 543.

10. Other Cases.

Action Pending—Agreement — Set-off— Mominal Dumages—Costs.]—Plaintiff agreed with defendant, after action brought, that, if defendant would take a note which the plaintiff had given to a third person, it should be allowed for and on account of this action. Defendant did so, and by such payment and other items of set-off accruing before action brought, over-balanced the plaintiff's demand; —Held, that plaintiff was still entitled to a verdict with nominal damages, which would carry full costs. Sherwood v. Campbell, 5 O. S. 2

Bank—Special Deposit—Refusal to Pay— Damages—Costs.]—See Henderson v. Bank of Hamilton, 25 O. R. 641, 22 A. R. 414.

Gontract—Part Payment—Complete Performance,—Upon a contract extending over several years for work and labour to be paid for by instalments, defendants admitted part performance, and pleaded general non-performance to the satisfaction of their officer named in the contract, and that complete performance was a condition precedent to payment:—Held, that by payment in part they were not barred from claiming such full performance. Continuous Contract of Toronto, 19 C. P. 73.

Rescission—Purchase Moncy—Deposit—Forfeiture.]—Where a contract for the sale of property is rescinded by the vendor for default of payment of the purchase money, be cannot afterwards recover from the purchase the amount of a promissory note given by the latter before the default, in part payment.
Semble, moneys paid by the purchaser after rescission cannot be recovered back by him.
Fraser v. Ryun, 24 A. R. 441.

Legacy—Vested Interest—Period of Payment.]—Where a testator gives a legatee an absolute vested interest in a defined fund, the court will order payment on his attaining twenty-one, notwitistanding that by the terms of the will payment is postponed to a subsequent period. Rocke v. Rocke, 9 Beav. 66, followed. Goff v. Strohm, 28 O. R. 553. See Re Wartmen, 22 O. R. 601.

Overpayment—Action by Administratris to Recover.]—An administratris, having given the statutory notice for creditors, after expiry of the time therein mentioned, paid money on a claim, and afterwards, new claims being raised against the estate, sought to recover a portion of the money back as on an overpayment.—Held, that she had no locus standit to maintain the action. Leitch v. Molsons Bank, 27 O. R. 621.

Pleading—Readiness to Pay—Particular Manner, J—Where a payment is to be a condition precedent, or a concurrent act, and is to be made in a certain manner, the plaintiff must aver readiness to pay in the precise manner stipulated. Tanner v. D'Everado, 3 U. C. R. 154.

Remittance by Post—Time of Payment.)—Where costs collected by the sheriff hand been posted on the evening of 27th November, addressed to the plaintiff's solicitor, but not received by him until after defendants had moved for a stay of proceedings, pending their appeal:—Held, under C. S. U. C. c. 13, s. 18, that the money was constructively in the possession of the plaintiff's solicitor when mailed; and a motion to refund it was refused with costs, McDonell v. McKay, 2 Ch. Ch. 35.

Trustees — Extension of Time.]—An extension of time for payment of money, found due by trustees and executors, appears to be granted only in cases where a forfeiture would result from its non-payment. Lauson v. Crookshank, 2 Ch. Ch. 373. See Accord and Satisfaction, II.—Bills of Exchange, VII. 5—Contempt of Court—Contract, III.—INFART, II. 3—Landloud and Texant, XXIII. 4, 5, 4.—Lenn, V. PEDIGREE.

See EVIDENCE, I. 5.

PEDLAR.

Arrest—License—Pleuding in Trespass.]
—In trespass for false imprisonment, a plea judging the arrest, as a constable, without a warrant under the Hawkees and Pedlars' Act, 58 Goo. 111. c. 5, for fordelling without license, must slew that the plaintiff was found tradius at the time of the arrest, and that defendant took him before three of the nearest justices of the peace. Orient v. Bell, 1 U. C.

License — Servant of Licensec — Conviction.]—Quare, whether the license to a hawker and pedlar granted under the Municipal Acts of 1806 and 1873, is confined to the licensee only, or whether it extends to a servant employed by him. Semble, that it is personal only; but, the point being doubtful, a certiforari was granted to remove the conviction of the servant in order that he might be moved against. In re Ford v. McArthur, 37 U. C. R. 542.

I. PENALTY BY CONTRACT.

- 1. Penalty or Liquidated Damages.
- (a) Provision Construed as Authorizing the Allowance of Liquidated Damages.

Building Contract.]—A sum stipulated to be paid per week for delay in completion of a building:—Held, liquidated damages, not a penalty. Gilmour v. Hall, 10 U. C. R. 309.

A contract to do the excavation and mason's and plasterer's work on a dwelling house for plaintiff, within a specified time, with a penalty of £4 a week in case of default, as rent of the premises:—Held, liquidated damages, not a penalty. Gaskin v. Walcs, 9 C. P. 314.

An agreement by plaintiff to do certain work specified, contained the following clause: "The whole of the work to be completed and the mill in good running order by the 15th April next, under a penalty of $10 per day from that day until completion, as and for liquidated damages, and to be deducted from the price to be paid for such work:—Held, not a penalty, but a liquidated sum. Fisher v. Berry, 16 C. P. 23.

Plaintiffs agreed to do certain iron work on a building for defendant, and to finish it on or before the 1st July, 1871, "under a forfeiture of 850, as liquidated damages, for every week the work remains unfinished after the said time:"—Held, that the 850 per week was liquidated damages, not a penalty, Humidton v. Moore, 33 U. C. R. 100; S. C., 15, 520.

Plaintiff, by deed, agreed to build a house for defendant for $1,150, by a day named, and for each day that should elapse after that day until completion, defendant might deduct $5 from the contract price:—Held, that the sum of $5 per day was liquidated damages, not a penalty, and that it might be deducted from the contract price, without pleading it specially by way of set-off. Scott v. Bent, 38 U. C. R. 30. See, also, Worthington v. Municipal Council of Haldimand, 10 U. C. R. 217, post 2.

To an action for the balance due under a building contract, the defendant set up as a defence that by the contract the plaintiff was to build the house and have the same completely finished and ready for the defendant's occupation by a named date, "under a penalty of $5 per day," to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant for each and every day the work of the said house remained unfinished after the said date; alleging that the work remained unfinished after the said date for a certain number of days, making an amount which the defendant claimed to deduct from the contract price Held, defence good; that the 85, though called a penalty, was in fact liquidated damages, Chatterton v. Crothers, 9 O. R. 683.

Under a building contract, in writing, the contractor agreed that, subject to any extensions of time by the architect, the building should be finished by a named day, and that in default he would pay 850 a week as liquidated damages. The building was not completed until more than four months after the time fixed. The architect was not asked for and did not grant any extension of time:—Held, that the contract must govern, and that the defendants were entitled to recover upon their counterclaim the sum provided by the contract as liquidated damages. McNamara v, Skain, 23 O. R. 103.

Where a building contract provided that upon non-completion by a fixed date a contractor was to pay or "allow" ten dollars a day until completion:—Held, that this authorized a deduction as liquidated damages of the amount so allowed from the contract price, even as against lienholders claiming adversely to the contractor. McRean v. Kinnear, 23 O. R. 313.

Charter of Vessel. |—By an agreement under seal between plaintiff and defendant, and under the fourth clause thereof, defendant agreed with plaintiff to continue to run his vessel between two ports anned, for the period of six weeks; and at the time of the agreement plaintiff paid the defendant $2.090, which the latter was to retain, subject to his continuing to suit deriods six weeks, and up to the 27th July then next, at his own risk and for his own benefit, and for a further period named, provided that during the six weeks the gross earnings of the said vessel should not be less than $75 per running day, with the same provise as to the further period; and provided also, that upon plaintiff paying any deficiency in said rate of $75, at his option, he might require said vessel to continue her running during said period. On the expiration of the first week defendant ceased to run his vessel. In an action at plaintiff's suit for breach of his agreement;—Held, that the measure of damages which the plaintiff was entitled to recover, for the non-fulfilment of the agreement, was such proportion, being five-sixths of the $2,000, as would represent the five weeks not completed by the vessel, and that he was not obliged to prove his damage, as this was fixed by the agreement in question. Thompson v. Leach, 18 C. P. 141.

Composition Deed—Condition—Revival of Original Demand.]—Two traders, E. and R., having become insolvent, an agreement was entered into between them and their creditors, whereby it was stipulated that E. should retire from the partnership and that E. and G. should form a new co-partnership, and that the creditors of E. & R. should accept the notes of the new firm for Es. in the pound of their claims. By the deed of composition it was expressly agreed that in the event of E. & G. becoming insolvent before the notes securing the 15s. in the pound were paid, the original debts should revive against E., G., and R., and that the creditors should be entitled to rank on the estate of E. & G. for the full amount of their respective claims against the firm of E. & R., less any sum which might have been paid them by E. & G. on account of said debts. Before the notes were all satisfied E. & G. were compelled to make an assignment in insolvency.—Held, that the creditors were entitled to prove against the estate of E. & G. for the full amount of their original claims against E. & R., giving credit for such sums as had been paid to them by E. & G. in respect of the composition notes; and that the agreement for the revivor of the original demands was not in the nature of a penalty. Watson X. Mason, 22 Gr. 180.

Hiring—Bank Clerk.]—Defendant entered into a written agreement whereby, in consideration of a certain salary and allowance to be paid to him by the plaintiffs, he agreed to serve them in their business as bankers for three years, and if he should leave within that period, to pay them 8400, as liquidated damages. The agreement was signed by the defendant, but not by the bank:—Held, that defendant was bound by it; and that having left without excuse, he was liable for the $400, which was recoverable as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. Bank of British North America v. Simpson, 24 C. P. 354.

Mortgage—Increase of Interest.]—Where a mortgage stipulated that up to a certain day the interest should be eight per cent.; and if the principal were not then paid, twelve per cent. should be thereafter charged:—Held, that the stipulation for payment of twelve per cent, was not by way of penalty, but an agreement to pay that rate from the day named. Waddelt v. McColl, 14 Gr. 211.

Railway Bonus—Breach of Condition— Liquidated Damages.]—See County of Halton v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 19 A. R. 252, 21 S. C. R. 716.

Removal of Obstructions—Trespass to Land.]—The defendant, who had trespassed to the plaintiff's hand by placing stones and commencing to hald a store face thereon, entered into an agreement to remove the same before the 15th December, unless, upon a resurvey, which he had the privilege of having made before the 15th November, it was found that the line run by one S. a surveyor, was not the correct line, or unless defendant should fail to have such resurvey; and he agreed "to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $200 as liquidated damages if the said stones and stone fence are not removed, as hereinbefore agreed, at the times mentioned in this agreement."—Held, that the sum mentioned was not a penulty, but liquidated damages for the onlession to perform a specific act, viz., the removal of the stones and stone fence. Craig v. Dillon, 6 A. R. 116.

Sale of Goods—Delivery.]—On an agreement to deliver a certain number of withes and traverses of specified qualities and dimensions, for binding and rafring timber, by the 1st March, and to pay 84 "as liquidated and assessed damages, recoverable by action of covenant or deductible from the contract money hereinafter mentioned, for each and every day after the said 1st March that the said with said traverses, or any part thereof, shall or may be undelivered as aforesaid:"—Held, that the sum named must be treated as liquidated damages, not as a penalty; and the stipulation for payment daily of a small sum, instead of one payment large in amount, was regarded as tending strongly to that conclusion. McPhee v. Wilson, 25 U. C. R. 169.

Price — Value.]—Declaration, in substance, that the defendant agreed under seat to manufacture into pot barley, and to store for plaintiffs, certain barley of the plaintiffs, on or before the 15th July, 1878, and on said date to purchase said barley and pay therefor the sum of 8785; that it was further provided, that in case the defendant did not pay the said sum of $785 on the said date, defendant should pay the plaintiffs the sum of $100 as liquidated damages. Breach, non-payment of the $100. Defendant denurred on the ground that the $100 claimed as laquidated damages was in fact a penalty, and could not be recovered:—Held, that the declaration was good; that this question could not properly be raised by demurrer, for the plaintiffs were entitled to some damages; and that the $100 was not a penal sum or forfeiture for not paying money due, or for any ordinary debt or claim, but liquidated or agreed on damages for not buying at a named price goods of a fluctuating and uncertain value. Knowlton v. Mackay, 20. C., 601.

Sale of Land.]—Where in a contract for the sale of land it was agreed that in case either of the parties should retract, he "should pay to the other by way of ascertained and inpudated damages the sum of £100."—Held, not a penalty. Cummings v. McLachlan, 16 U. C. R. 626.

The first count in the declaration in effect stated that the plaintiff, being owner of certain land subject to two mortgages, of which defendant at the time had notice, agreed to sell the same to defendant, who on his part agreed to buy for $2,300, of which $1,000 was to be paid down; under a penalty of $300, to be paid on the 19th September following by either, in case he refused to carry out the agreement. Breach, that, though the 19th September had passed, and the plaintiff had been ready, able, and willing to fulfil his part of the agreement, and to have had the mortgage discharged prior to that date if defendant had paid down the $1,000, yet defendant had not paid the $1,000. The second count stated that the instalment of $1,000 was to be paid for the purpose of satisfying thereout and discharging the said mortgages from the land:—Held, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was entitled to sue for the $1,000 independently of any act which he had to do in conveying or making a good title, and as nothing appearin the pleadings to this count which shewed that there would be any circuity of action created by his recovery upon it, the plaintiff was entitled to the $300 as liquidated damages. Koster v. Holder, 17 C. P. 139, 16 C.

Trade Agreement — Price of Goods — Union of Manufacturers.] — On 27th May, 1885, certain individuals forming a cigar manufacturers' association, amongst whom an ine defendant, considering themselves agriced by the members of the cigar makers' mion, who refused to lower the price of making a particular kind of cigar, entered into all agreement in writing between themselves of the first part and S, of the second part, as follows: "Whereas for the mutual advantage and protection of the parties hereto it has been agreed that the parties of the first part shall become severally bound to S, in the sum of $500, liquidated damages, in case any them shall at any time during the continuance of this agreement, either directly or indirectly, buy or sell any cigars marked with the labels of the cigar makers' union. or shall use . . . in connection manufacture of cigars by him . in connection with the any cigar makers' union label, or shall permit union label, . . . or shall permit any cigar makers' union, or any union or set of men, to compel him to hire or employ union men only, or to dismiss any employee, Now, therefore, . the parties hereto of the first part severally covenant with S. each for himself that he will, in case he shall at any time hereafter violate any of the fore-going stipulations (setting them out), immediately pay to S. the sum of $500; the intention being that in case of a violation of all the stipulations or any of the stipulations . . . aforesaid by any of the parties hereto of the first part. by any of the parties hereto of the hist part, he, the said party so offending, shall imme-diately forfeit and pay to S, the full sum of $500, . . . because of his so offending, as liquidated and ascertained damages (and not as a penalty) to be by S. applied, &c.

The intention, also, being that the entire sum of $500 shall be the amount of the ascertained of Soud shall be the amount of the ascertained and liquidated damages for any violation or breach whatever of any of the stipulations . . aforesaid on the part of any one of the parties of the first part." The defendant having broken the above agreement in all respects, S. brought this action against him to recover $500 as liquidated damages:-Held, that the sum of $500 was liquidated damages and not a penalty. Schrader v. Lillis, 10 O. R. 358

Where a contract contains a condition for payment of a sum of money as liquidated damages for the breach of stipulations of varied importance, none of which is for payment of an ascertained sum of money, the general rule is, that the sum named is not to be treated as a penalty, but as liquidated damages. The stipulations in this case resolved themselves into one—viz., that the defendant would not submit to the dictation of the cigar makers in carrying on his business. It was impossible to calculate the damage to the other members of the manufacturers' association by non-compliance with the agreement. The case would therefore seem to come within the rule that when the agreement is for the performance of one act, and there is no adequate means of ascertaining the damages from a violation and the parties agree upon a sum as liquidated damages, it will not be treated as a penalty. Ib.

(b) Provision Construed as Penalty.

Apprenticeship.]—Where a party bound hisself in an agreement to pay the plaintiff £25, if A., an apprentice, should not fulfil all the covenants and conditions of an indenture of apprenticeship executed by him, the £25 was held to be a penalty. McLean v. Tinsley, 7 U. C. R. 40.

Building Contract.] — Plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement, by which defendant was to build for the plaintiff a grist mill, according to certain specifications, for the sum of £1,150; "and for the true and faithful performance of all and every of the covenants and agreements above mentioned, the parties to these presents bind themselves, each unto the other, in the penal sum of $250 cy., as fixed and settled damages to be paid by the failing party: "—Held, a penalty, not liquidated damages, and therefore not the subject of set-off. Brown v. Taggart, 10 U. C. R. 183.

Defe dant contracted under seal to do all the car benter's and joiner's work required in the erection of two dwelling houses for the plantiff, and covenanted that the work should be ready for the lathing by the 10th October, and ready for the painter by the 10th November, and should be fully completed by the 24th November, under a penalty of $20 a week as liquidated damages for every week beyond the said time the said works should remain incomplete. The trial Judge, sitting without a jury, construed the contract as one for a penalty, and computed the damages at $14.86 a week. On motion, the court being equally divided, the rule dropped. Archbold v. Wilson, 32 U. C. R. 500.

Debt—Forfeiture.] — Upon the following clause at the end of an agreement, "and for the performance of this agreement each party binds himself to the other in the penalty of £50, liquidated damages, and not as a penalty, which £50 shall be forfeited by him who fails to perform this agreement, and shall be recovered the one of the other in an action of debt after one mouth from this date, on default made by either party." it was held that the £50 was a penalty, not liquidated damages. Henderson v. Nichols, 5 U. C. R. 398.

Improvements to Land—Trifling Breach— —triad Damages.]—Where the plaintiff, in debt on an agreement, lays his breach in such a manner as to make it uncertain whether he is not claiming liquidated damages by reason of a failure in some very minute particular of the agreement—as, for instance, for not clearing off all the standing timber, nor fencing certain land by a named day—the court will treat the sum mentioned in the agreement as a penalty, though the parties have expressly agreed otherwise. Ainsile v. Chapman, 5 U. C. R. 313. Where a sum claimed in the declaration as

Where a sum claimed in the declaration as liquidated damages, is held to be a penalty only, 8 & 9 Wm. HI. c. 11 will restrict the plaintiff to the damages sustained. Ib.

Indemnity—Covenant—Several Breaches—Immunit.—The plannings being indebted to defendant in $80,000, and to other persons (whether partnership or individual debts) in an amount not exceeding $2,160, by deed dated October, 1855, in consideration of a release of the $80,000 and os $4,000 paid, assigned to defendant all their stock-in-trade, book debts, and assets (except household furniture), with a covenant on defendant's part to indemnify the plaintiffs from all debts and demands not exceeding $2,160; and a further evenant by both plaintiffs and defendant for $4,000 as liquidated damages for the performance of the evenants on both sides centralized in the deed:—Held, that the sum of $4,000 was not a debt due as liquidated damages upon each breach of the covenant. Rutherford v. Storel, 12 C. P. 9.

Mortgage—Acceleration.] — The plaintiff held defendant's mortgage, with a condition that the whole principal should become payable if the interest was in arrear over two years:—Held, that the condition was in the nature of a penalty only, and that the court would restrain an action, brought upon such covenant, to enforce payment of the whole sum due, after default in payment of one of the gales of interest. Knapp v. Cameron, 6 Gr. 559.

Defendants, B. and S., with two others, made a mortgage to the plaintiff to secure £4,990 and interest, by which it was agreed that if default should be made in any payment of interest, for the period of one month after it should have become due "and been demanded," then the whole principal money and such unpaid interest should immediately be payable:—Semble, that such a covenant is not to be looked upon in a court of law as a penalty, but nerely as fixing the credit to be allowed for the principal. Case v. Burton, 19 U. C. R. 540.

Sale of Goods—Von-delivery,]—Where two persons entered into an agreement, the one to deliver and the other to receive a certain quantity of hops yearly, for five years, at the end of which agreement there was the following clause: "It is further agreed that each shall be bound to the other for the faithful performance of the said contract in the sum of $200;"—Held, that the sum named must be treated as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages; and, therefore, that the plaintiff suing for non-delivery might recover beyond the $200, Sleeman v. Waterous, 23 C. P. 195.

Work and Labour — Time—Delay.] — Where a contract provides that an engine shall be built and placed in position by a certain date, with a penalty for each day's delay, the time of commencement is of the essence of the contract, and if, owing to the purchaser's fault, the contractor is materially delayed in commencing the work, the parties are at large so far as the penalty is concerned, the purchaser, if the work be not completed by the time fixed, being entitled only to actual damages. Kerr Engine Co. v. French River Tug Co., 21 A. R. 190, 24 S. C. R. 703.

2. Other Cases.

Bond—Defence—Set-off,] — To an action on a replevin bond by the assignee of the sheriff, a set-off forms a good legal defence, the penalty being considered as the debt. Mc-Ketcey v. McLean, 34 U. C. R. 635.

Interest—Judgment.]—A bond consined a stipulation that in the event of any sum being found due by M. to the bank. Interest should be payable thereon from the time an account of the balance due was delivered to the parties to the bond by the bank, and judgment was given in the court below in excess of the penalty:—Held, however, as the law would not allow a verdict against the obligors for a greater sum than the penalty, interest could not be computed on that amount until after judgment. Exchange Bank v. Byringer, Exchange Bank v. Barnes, 13 A. R. 390.

of Damages — Judgment—Execution.]—The plaintiffs sued upon a bond for $1,000 penalty, conditioned to convey land, alleging non-performance. A verdict was rendered at the trial for $1,000, and twenty cents for detention, no damages being assessed on the brench. A world execution was afterwards issued, interest to levy the $1,000 and costs taxed:—

Held, that the bond being within $8.49 Wm.
Hill. C. II. and the plannitifs having paid the twenty cents and costs, execution might be stayed, for the penalty could not be levied. Greer v. Johnston, $40 U. C. R. 116.

8 & 9 Wm. III. c. 11—Rule 589— Assessment of Damages—Judgment.]—See Star Life Assurance Society v. Southgata P. R. 151; Appleby v. Turner, 19 P. R. 145, 175.

Maintenance — Right to Sue for Support.—The liability of the obligor in a bond in a fixed penal sum conditioned for the payment of future maintenance is not limited to and is not satisfied by payment of the amount of the penalty, and the obligee has the right to sue for her support as it accrues from time to time. Baker v. Trusts and Guarantee Co., 29 O. R. 456.

Bonus to Manufacturers—Mortgage—Security—Performance.] — The plaintiffs under a by-law granted the defendant a bonus of $20,000 to aid him in the manufacture of steam fire engines and agricultural implements, subject to a condition in the by-law that he should give a mortgage on the factory premises for $10,000 and a bond for $10,000, to be conditioned: (1) for the carrying on of such manufactures for twenty years; (2) during that period to keep $80,000 invested in the factory; and (3) to insure the building and plant in plaintiffs' favour for $10,000. The defendant gave the bond and mortgage, the latter containing a covenant for insurance, and he invested the $30,000 as stipulated for. He also made a further mortgage on the premises to the plaintiffs for $5,000, not mentioned in the by-law. The factory was one in which eighteen to twenty-live men might be a superior of two years only twenty movers were contracted, and the number of persons employed dwindled down from eighteen or twenty to two or three;—Held, that the performance contemplated by the parties to the contract to carry on manufactures was one reasonably commensurate with the capabilities of the factory; and that, upon the evidence, the defendant had failed in the performance. Held, also, that the $10,000 mortgage was given as a security for any damages the plaintiffs might sustain by the defendant's default, to an extent not greater than $10,000, and not as a charge for that specific sum. Held, also, that the $10,000 mortgage was not authorized by the by-law, as to it the plaintiffs might sustain by the by-law, as to it the plaintiffs might sustain by the beforedared by the master in assessing the damages. Village of Brussels v. Roadd. 11 A. R. 605.

Building Contract — Delay—New Coning the Inspired Incorporation of Provision.] —Plaintiffs on the 31st May, 1871, contracted to make and complete the iron work upon a building put up for the defendant by the 1st July. 1871, and to pay $50 a week as liquidated damages for every week the same should remain unfinished after that time. Defendant had not the building rendy to receive the iron work for nineteen weeks after the 1st July, but the plaintiffs did not finish their work for more than seven weeks after they were Vot. 111. D—167—18 enabled to begin:—Held, that such a special provision as that for liquidated damages would not be considered as incorporated in the new contract under which the work was done after 1st July, though the plaintiffs might be liable for the delay in an action for damages. Hamilton v. Moore, 33 U. C. R. 520.

Building Society — By-law — Fines—Pleuding, — The by-law of a building society provided that any member neglecting to pay his monthly dues, should be fined a specified sum per share each month, "until the end of ene year, when the share or shares in default then directed that a month of the society." It then directed that a month of the society. It then directed that a more than the share of the state of a notice to the defaulter, calling his attention to the by-law; and provided that in case of the defaulter being a borrower these fines should be trebled; and that at the end of six months' default the mortgage should be liable to foreclosure, and to be declared forfeited:— Held, that the by-law, being penal in its character, should be construed strictly, and that the lines could be imposed on borrowers only for twelve, and on non-borrowers for six, months, the right to forfeit or to foreclose being then substituted. Held, also, that such fines could not be recovered on a common count, but that the declaration should set out the by-law, so that the court might judge of its legality. Ottava Union Building Society v. Scott, 24 U. C. R. 341.

Payment of Penalty—Doing Prohibited Acts — Injunction.] — Defendant agreed to serve the plaintiffs in their business of milkmen, with special stipulations as to not serving customers on his own behalf, &c., and in case of any breach by him of the agreement entered into between the parties, and signed by them, that he would forfeit $50, to be recovered by the plaintiffs as stipulated dampages, and not as a penalty:—Held, that this did not enable defendant, on payment of the $50, to do the prohibited acts; and in a bill seeking to enforce the agreement the plaintiffs prayed for payment of the amount of the liquidated damages, and for an injunction to restrain defendant from acting in breach of his agreement. On the motion for injunction coming on:—Held, that the plaintiffs were at liberty to waive their claim for damages, and elect to have relief by injunction. Toronto Dairy Co. V. Gozcans, 26 Gr. 230.

Settlement of Action—Payments—Default—Avoidance—Relief against—Reformation.]—To an action for the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, the defendant pleaded, on equitable grounds, that the plaintiff and his daughter had entered into an agreement under seal with defendant for the settlement of the suit and other matters (setting it out), by which the amount to be paid by defendant was fixed at $120, which the defendant agreed to pay by instalments of $15 at the times specified; and it was stipulated that if defendant the agreement should be void. The pleaned set out that defendant paid three instalments, but by accident omitted to pay the fourth, which he was ready and willing to pay; and he submitted that the provise to avoid the agreement on non-payment was, on the true construction of the agreement, and should be reformed. The attorney who drew the agreement and should be reformed. The attorney who drew the agreement and that he put in this proviso of his own accord, without instructions to do so, but that it was read over to the parties and executed in duplicate, each party taking one:—Held, that there was no ground for saying that the proviso was introduced by mistake: that it was not a penalty against which defendant should be relieved being a reservation only of an existing legal right; and that it formed no defence therefore to this action. Boland v. McCarroll, 38 U. C. R. 487.

Work and Labour—Delay—Right to Deduction—Pleading.] — Debt for work and labour. Plea, as to part of the demand, that the work was done under a contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, by which it was agreed that in case all should not be done on the day appointed in the agreement therefor, to wit, on the 15th February, 1851, the plaintiffs would permit defendants to deduct and retain £6 per week from the money agreed to be paid for every week beyond the time allowed: that the plaintiffs did not complete the work until thirty weeks had elapsed beyond the time appointed, wherefore defendants became entitled to deduct a sun exceeding that in the introductory part of the plea mention-od:—Held, on demurrer, plea bad, for the different reasons given by the court. Worth-ington v. Municipal Council of Haldimand, ington v. Munici, 10 U. C. R. 217.

(b) Discovery.

Examination of Defendant.] — See Malcolm v. Race, 16 P. R. 330.

An action brought in the high court of justice for Ontario, in the name of Her Majesty, to recover a penalty for a violation of the statute of Canada 60 & 61 Vict. c. 11, restricting the importation and employment of stricting the importation and employment of allens, is an action to which the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act, 56 Vict. c. 31, apply, within the meaning of s. 2, which provides that the Act shall apply "to all criminal proceedings, and to all civil proceedings and other matters whatsoever respecting and other matters whatsoever respecting diction the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction that the Act was now found in 46 Wilson of S. of that Act, as now found in 46 Wilson of S. of that Act, as now found in 46 Wilson of S. of that Act, as now found in 61 Vict. c. 53, the defendant can be examined for discovery before the trial. The Queen v. Fox, 18 P. R.

Production of Documents.] — The double tolls imposed by s. 42 of the Timber Slide Companies Act, R. S. O. 1887 c. 160. for false statements, are imposed by way of punishment, and not as compensation; and therefore an action to recover such double tolls is an action for a penalty, in which discovery of documents will not be enforced. Pickerel River Improvement Co. v. Moore, 17 P. R. (c) Pleading.

Amendment of Pleadings.]—See Fra-zer q. t. v. Thompson, 1 U. C. R. 314, 522.

Declaration-Claim-Informer-Crown-Declaration—Informer—trous— Form of Action,—In a qui tam action for penalties under the Imperial statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 114, which gives one-third of the penalty to the King, one-third to the Lieu-tenant-Governor, and one-third to the in-former, the court refused to arrest judgment because the plaintiff claimed the penalty for himself and the King only, not naming the Lieutenant-Governor. 2 once q. t. v. Chace. deutenant-Governor. Jones q. t. v. Chace,

An action of debt will lie on that statute to recover the penalty. 1b.

Informer - Receiver-General -Magistrate's Conviction - Jurisdiction.]-In an action against a magistrate for not returnan action against a magistrate for not returning a conviction:—Held, no objection to the declaration that the plaintiff sued for the Receiver-General, and not for Her Majesty, inasmuch as suing for a penalty for the Receiver-General, for the public uses of the Province, is in fact suing for the Queen. Besides, C. S. U. C. c. 124 authorizes a party to sue qui tam for the Receiver-General. Held, also, that the defendant, having actually convicted and imposed a fine, could not object that the declaration did not shew that he had jurisdiction to convict. Bagley q. t. v. Curtis, 15 C. P. 366. 15 C. P. 366.

Magistrate's Conviction—Return— Statutes—Qui Tam Action—Form of Action Statutes—Qui Tam Action—Form of Action— — Jurisdiction.] — A declaration against a magistrate for not returning a conviction made by him with another justice, was held bad, for not alleging defendant's neglect to have been contrary to the statutes, not merely the statute, there being two statutes upon the subject, each requiring a distinct return :-Held, that the plaintiff might sue for himself only, and need not sue qui tam. Held, also, that an action would lie against each magis trate for the penalty, for, though in form, in debt, the action was in fact ex delicto. Drake q. t. v. Preston, 34 U. C. R. 251.

Quare, there being now some offences under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, and some under that of Ontario, and a different return required and a different penalty imposed, as regards each class, whether the declaration should not state the nature of the offence, and that it was within the magistrate's juris-diction, though formerly this was not requisite. 1b.

- Non-payment.] -Held, that after verdict it need not be averred that the defendant had not paid the penalty. Church q. t. v. Richards, 6 U. C. R. 562.

Plea-Time for Bringing Action.]-Where it appears upon the record in a penal action that it is brought too late, defendant may take advantage of the objection without having specially pleaded it. Mewburn v. Street, 21 U. C. R. 498.

- Not Guilty-Statutes.]-In an action for a penalty for not affixing stamps under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 4, s. 5, the defendant was held not precluded from a defence, by virtue of 31 Eliz. c. 5, that the action was not brought within a year, by reason of his having marked in the margin of his plea of "not guilty" the statute 21 Jac. I. c. 4 only. Mason q. t. v. Mossop, 29 U. C. R. 500. See, also, Regina v. Aumond, 2 U. C. R. 166; Hart v. Meyers, 7 U. C. R. 416.

(d) Practice.

Affidavits.]—Affidavits to be used in qui tam actions must shew the character in which the plaintiff sues. Robertson q. t. v. Orchard, 4 P. R. 23.

Judgment-Setting aside.] - A judgment of non pros. regularly signed in an action by a common informer for a penalty, will not be set aside. McClenaghan v. McLean, 3 P. R.

Nonsuit.]—In a qui tam action the plaintiff may be nonsuited. Stuart q. t. v. Bullen, E. T. 4 Vict.; Ranney q. t. v. Jones, 21 U. C.

Trial — Postponement — Costs.] — On putting off the trial of an information for penalties at the instance of the defendant, the court will make payment of costs a condition in the same way as in civil cases. Rex v. Ives, Dra. 440.

(e) Security for Costs.

Time—Default—Dismissal of Action—Indugence — Merits.] — An order under Rule 1244 for security for costs in an action for a penalty may properly contain provisions limiting the time for giving security and for dis-missal of the action, without further order, upon default; and such an order, not appealed upon detaunt; and such an order, not appealed against, is conclusive between the parties as to all its terms. Thompson v. Williamson, 16 P. R. 308, distinguished. The action was brought against justices of the peace to recover a penalty for non-return of a conviction of the plaintiff, the error of the defendant being merely clerical, and one not prejudicing the plaintiff:—Held, not a case in which the indulgence of extending the time for giving security should be granted to the plaintiff. Ashcroft v. Tyson, 17 P. R. 42.

See Martin q. t. v. Consolidated Bank, 45 U. C. R. 163; Budworth v. Bell, 10 P. R. 544.

2. Compounding.

Action-Leave-Terms-Crown.]- Leave was given to compromise a penal action under 32 Hen. VIII. c. 8, for buying pretended titles, on paying the Crown's share into court. May q. t. v. Dettrick, 5 O. S. 87.

hibits the compromise of a qui tam action without leave of the court. Blecker v. Meyers, 6 U.C. R. 134.

Where therefore a plaintiff, who had brought such an action, agreed to discontinue it upon being paid his costs, and in a subsequent action for those costs recovered much less than he thought the jury should have given him, the court, from the nature of the transaction, refused a new trial. Ib.

Compounding Offence against Provincial Statute—Provincial Crime—Powers of Legislature.]—The Legislature of Ontario having passed an Act to regulate tavern and shop licenses, 32 Vict. c. 32, under the power given to them by the B. N. A. Act, 1867, s. 92, s.-ss. 9, 16:—Held, that they had power, under s.-s. 15, to enact that any person who, having violated any provisions of the Act, should compromise the offence, and any person who should be a party to such compromise, should on conviction be imprisoned in the common gaol for three months; and that such enactment was not opposed to s. 91, s.-s. 27, by which the criminal law is assigned exclu-sively to the Dominion Parliament. Regina v. Boardman, 30 U. C. R. 553.

Illegal Consideration — Pleading.] — Hiegal Consideration — Pleading.]—
Where it clearly appears on the face of the declaration, which it did not in this case, that the consideration of defendant's promise was a compromise, without leave of the court, of a penal action, brought by the plaintiff as a common informer against defendant, the consideration will be held to be illegal, and the declaration bad. Hart v. Meyers, 7 U. C. R.

Indictment for Compounding Criminal Prosecution.] — Indictment for compounding a penal prosecution instituted by defendant against one F. under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 51, s. 256, for selling spirituous liquors without license. It appeared that F. had been convicted under that Act, on the information of defendant, by the police magistrate for H., and a fine of $50 imposed upon him, and that, on an appeal therefrom, defendant for $10 agreed with F. not to oppose this appeal, but consented that the conviction should be quashed, which was accordingly done:—Held, that consented that the conviction should be quashed, which was accordingly done: -Held, that the indictment would neither lie at common law, nor, on the authority of Rex v. Crisp, 1 B. & Ald. 282, under 18 Eliz. c. 5, s. 4; and the conviction of the defendant was therefore annulled. Regina v. Mason, 17 C. P. 534.

3. Particular Statutes.

(a) Election Acts.

Informer—Infant—Objection — Appeal.]
—Held, that 18 Eliz. c. 5, which enacts that an informer shall sue either in person or by attorney, is in force in this Province, and therefore the plaintiff, an infant, suing by his next friend, could not maintain an action for a penalty under the Election Act. The appellant having omitted to take this objection in the court below, this court in allowing the appeal on that ground, refused him his costs of appeal. A person who sues for a penalty given by the Election Act is a common informer. Garrett v. Roberts, 10 A. R. 630. informer. Garrett v. Roberts, 10 A. R. 650.

Misconduct of Deputy Returning Officer—Spoiled Ballot Paper—Refusing to Give New One.]—The word "conveniently" in s. 109 of R. S. O. 1897 c. 9, the Ontario Election Act, means "conveniently for the voter and for his wish, purpose, and intention in voting." The plaintiff, an electror, in marking his ballot at an election of a member to serve in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, inadvertently marked it for the candidate against whom he intended to vote. He immediately and before he had left the apartment at the polling place set apart for marking at the polling place set apart for marking ballots informed the defendant, the deputy re-turning officer, of his mistake, and asked for another ballot paper. The defendant said he must first see the marked ballot paper, which the plaintiff refused to allow, but, on the scruthe plaintin retused to allow, but, of the scruincer for his party recommending him to do so, he handed it to the defendant, without creasing or folding it, that it might be placed in the ballot box, in such a way that those present could not see how it was marked. defendant looked at it, and then either shewed or placed it so that it could be and was seen by nearly all present, and, contending that it was not a spoiled ballot, contrary to the plaintiff's protest, placed it in the ballot box, and it was counted for the person against whom the plaintiff intended to vote :- Held, that the defendant by his acts in disclosing how the plaintiff marked his ballot paper, in not cancelling it, and in refusing to give the plaintiff another ballot paper on his demanding one, and by his action compelling him to vote for the candidate whom he wished to oppose, was guilty of breaches of duty which entitled the plaintiff to judgment in his favour for the penalties under the statute. Hastings v. Summerfeldt, 30 O. R. 577.

Personal Disqualification of Candidate—Append.)—In penal statutes questions of doubt are to be construed favourably to the accused, and where the court of first instance in a quasi-criminal trial has acquitted the respondent, the appellate court will not reverse his finding. North Ontario (Prov.), H. E. C. 304.

Refusal of Vote.]—See Johnson v. Allen, 26 O. R. 550.

Selling Liquor on Polling Day—Acts of Agent.]—In an action for penalties under the statute C. S. C. c. 6, s. SI, prohibiting the selling of liquor on polling days, the Judge having told the jury that defendant was responsible for his agent's (bar-keeper's) acts, although done in direct contravention of his command, and the question of connivance on the defendant's part, notwithstanding his command to his bar-keeper, not having been left to the jury, a new trial was ordered without costs. Hugilt v. Merrifield, 12 C. F. 263).

Terms of Statute — Pleading.]—
C. S. C. 6, s. 81, enacts that every hortel shall. &c., 6, s. 81, enacts that every hortel shall. &c., 6, s. 81, enacts that every hortel shall. &c., 6, s. 81, enacts that we day appointed for polling, and that no spirituous or given during the said period, under a penalty of $100 for either offence. In an action for penalties under this Act for both offences, claiming $100 for each, in separate counts:—Held, that the declaration should not be in the disjunctive, for not keeping the hote or tavern closed, and giving or selling spirituous or fermented liquors. &c. Widdifield, V. Mctealf, 21 U. C. R. 247; Metealf v. Widdifield, 8 L. J. 74.

See, also, Parliament, I. 7.

(b) Foreign Statute.

Action on Foreign Judgment.]—The courts of this Province will not indirectly enforce the penal laws of a foreign country by entertaining an action founded on a judgment obtained in that foreign country in a penal action. The court being divided in opinion, both as to the penal nature of the judgment sued on and as to whether the law applicable to such question was that of the foreign country or of this Province, the appeal was dismissed, and the judgment in 17 O. R. 245 was affirmed. Huntington v. Attrill, 18 A. R. 136. See the next case.

To an action by the appellant in an Ontario court upon a judgment of a New York court against the respondent under s. 21 of New York State Laws of 1875, c. 611, which imposes liability in respect of false representations, the latter beaded that the judgment that the pulling of the properties of a penal character, ought not to be entertained by a foreign court:—Held, that the action being by a subject to enforce in his own interest a liability imposed for the protection of his private rights, was remedial, and not penal in the sense pleaded. It was not within the rule of international law which prohibits the courts of one country from executing the penal laws of another or enforcing penalties recoverable in favour of the state. Held, further, that it was the duty of the Ontario court to decide whether the statute in question was penal within the meaning of the international rule so as to outs its jurisdiction: and that such court was not bound by the interpretation thereof adopted by the courts of New York. Huntington v. Attrill, [1883] A. C. 150.

(c) Municipal Act.

Municipal Elections — Actions against Municipal Clerk and Returning Officers under the Municipal Act, 1883, s. 167.]—See Atkins v. Ptolemy, 5 O. R. 366.

Returning Officer—Refusal to Deliver Ballot Paper to Voter—Liability—Penalty—Damages—Municipal Act, 1882 ss. 89, 198.]—The plaintiff's name was properly entered on the last revised assessment roll of a nunicipality as a tenant of real property of the value entitling him to a vote at a municipal election under the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1892, s. 80, and was entered on the voters' list, but, after the final revision thereof, he ceased to be the tenant and to occupy the property, although he continued to reside in the municipality and was the owner of real property as a freeholder of the value entitling him to vote, and was such freeholder at the time of an election. At such election he demanded a ballot paper, and was willing to take the oath for freeholders, but the defendant, the returning officer, refused to furnish him with a ballot or to permit him to vote unless he took the oath required for tenants:

—Held, that the defendant's duties were merely ministerial, and that an action for a breach thereof was maintainable without any proof of malice or negligence; that the plainiff was entitled to vote at such election; and that the defendant's refusal to allow him to vote constituted a breach of his duty, and rendered him liable to the penalty given by sec. 168, and also to damages at common law. Wilson v. Manes, 28 O. R. 4189, 26 A. R. 308.

(d) Stamp Act.

Time for Action—Pleading.]—An action for a penalty for not affixing stamps under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 4, s. 5, must, by 31 Eliz. c. 5, be brought within a year. No right of action vests in the plaintif until the action is so brought, and defendant, therefore, may take advantage of this latter statute under a plea of not guilty. Mason q. t. v. Mossop, 29 U. C. R. 500. See, also, Mewburn v. Street, 21 U. C. R. 498.

Void Promissory Note.] — The Stamp Act does not require an instrument to be stamped with stamps that would not be valid for some purposes; or, semble, which would not be a promissory note, draft, or bill of exge. No penalty, therefore, can be recov-under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 4, s. 9, for not change. affixing starps to a promissory note for money lost at play, for such note under the statute of Anne is utterly void. Taylor v. Golding, 28 U. C. R. 198.

(e) Other Statutes.

Arbitration Act - Arbitrator's Fees -Arbitration Act.—Arbitrator's Fees— Overcharge, —An arbitrator is not brought within the punitive provisions of s. 29 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 53, when the payment of the alleged excessive fees is made by cheque to an agent who has authority to accept money only, and the arbitrator refuses to take the cheque. Per Osler, J.A.—In order to fix an arbitrator with the penalty, there must, after the expiration of the time named, be either a demand up on him to make, execute, and deliver the award and a refusal to do so, unless a larger sum is paid for fees than is permitted by the Act, or actual payment of such larger sum. Per Mac-iennan, J.A.—The person desiring to take up the award may either have the fees taxed and then tender the amount, or he may pay the amount demanded and bring action for the penalty, which is a sum equal to treble the excess demanded and not equal to treble the whole amount of the fees demanded. Judgment in 25 O. R. 444 affirmed, Jones v. God-son, 23 A. R. 34.

Assignments Act — Registration of Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.]—An instrument in writing whereby a debtor transfers all his assets to an assignee for the purpose of paying a fixed sum on the dollar to the creditors, and of securing to the debtor the enjoyment of the residue, is an arrangement by way of composition, and not an absolute assignment under R. S. O. 1887 c. 124, although stated in the instrument to be under that Act; and an action for penalties against the assignee for not advertising and registering such an instrument, pursuant to that Act, will not lie. Gundry v. Johnston, 28 O. R. 147.

Billiard Tables License - Act Requiring.]-Held, that an action of debt would lie for the penalty, under 50 Geo. III. c. 6, for keeping a billiard table without license. keeping a billiard table without licens Church q. t. v. Richards, 6 U. C. R. 562.

Branding of Barrels -Act Requiring-Landity of Seller-Magistrates—Informer.]

The seller of flour in barrels not marked or branded under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 89, s. 23, was not liable to the penalty imposed, but only the manufacturer or packer; and magistrates had no summary jurisdiction where the accumulated penalties were more than £10. Regina v. Beekman, 2 U. C. R. 57. Where the inspector in a corporate town was the informer, he was not entitled to half the penalty. Ib.

Inspection of Hides — Act Requiring— Powers of Inspector.] — Defendant bought hides, some of which had been produced within and some without the county of Middlesex, but all without the city of London. Some were purchased by him in and some out of the county, but none within the city; and they were brought by him into the city, placed in his tannery there, and manufactured into his tamery here, and manufactured into leather. The plaintiff was an inspector of raw hides and leather, appointed under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 24, and 33 Vict. c. 37 (D.), for the city and county, hav-Vict. c. 37 (D.), for the city and county, nav-ing a place of inspection within the city, but not elsewhere: — Held, that his compulsory powers extended only to the city, but that his limits of inspection might extend to the area assigned to him as the district in which the city was situate, although his acting therein would be optional with him; and he might in his discretion go also into any part of the Province not within another inspector's limits. 2. That all raw hides, or green raw hides, produced within a city or town for which there is an inspector, must be inspected before being sold there; that if produced and sold without such city or town, they are exempt from inspection until brought within it; and the then purchaser must have then inspected before selling or disposing of them in any way whatever. 3. That the tanning or using the hides in his own business was not a "disposing of them in any way whatever," within the statute 29 & 30 Vict. c. 24, s. 1. Defendant, therefore, was held not liable to the penalty for not having these hides inspected. Olicer q. t. v. Hyman, 20 U. C. R. 517.

Interest—Illegal Rate—Act Provising Penalty.]—Before the passing of 16 Vet. c. 80, a qui tam action was commenced under 51 Geo. III. c. 9, s. 6, for taking an illegal rate of interest—Held, that the suit could not be continued, for by the first mentioned Act the court had lost the power of giving judgment for the penalty; but, semble, that contracts prohibited by the former law must still be held void. Jones q. t. v. Ketchum, 11 U. C. R. 52.

Lottery Act—Forfeiture of Land—Parties.]—Where an information was filed by a common informer, under 12 Geo. II. c. 28, to forfeit lands illegally sold by defendant by lottery, the court, the plaintiff not objecting, allowed the owner of a portion of the lands, who was not in possession, and had not been served with the information, to come in and defend. Semble, however, that the interest of such owner could not have been affected by a judgment obtained against defendant. Mewburn v. Street, 21 U. C. R. 306.

Registration of Co-partnerships—Act Requiring—Joinder of Parties.]—In an action by several plaintiffs qui tam against two defendants for penalties for not registering their partnership under R. S. O. 1877 c. 123. of which s. Il gives the right of action to "any person" who may sue:—Held. (1) that under the above section and the Interpretation Act, any objection to the action being brought in the name of more than one person could not prevail; (2) that the circumstance that the plaintiffs resided out of the jurisdiction could not defeat their action; (3) that the joinder of two defendants for several penalties was not a ground of demurrer. Public Works—Executory Contract—Prescribed Formalities—Departmental Work.]
—By his petition of right, W., a sculptor, alloged that he was employed by the Dominion Government to prepare plans, models, specifications, and designs, for the laying out, improvement, and establishment of the Parliament Square, at the city of Ottawa; that he had done so, and superintended the work and construction of said improvements for six months. He claimed $50,000 for the value of his work. 31 Vict. c. 12, s. 7 (D.), provides, that when executory contracts are in writing they shall have certain requisites, such as signing, sealing, and countersigning, to be binding; and s. 15 provides, that before any expenditure is incurred there shall have been a previous sanction of parliament, except for such repairs and alterations as the public service demands; and s. 20 requires that tenders shall be invited for all works, except in cases of pressing emergency, or where from the mature of the work it could be more expeditionsly and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department:—Held, that the Crown in the Dominion cannot be held responsible under a petition of right on an executory contract entered into by the department of public works for the performance of certain works placed by law under the control of the department, when the agreement therefor was not made in conformity with the above 7th section of 31 Vict. c. 12, 8, 2, (2) That under s. 15 of said Act, if parliament has not sanctioned the expenditure, a petition of right will not lie for work done for and at the request of the department of public works, unless it be for work done in connection with repairs and alterations which the necessities of the public service demanded. 3. That in this case, if parliament had made appropriations for these works and so sanctioned the expenditure, and if the work done was of the kind that might properly be executed by the officers and servants of the department under s. 20 of the Act, then no written contract would be necessary to bind the department, and the suppliant should recover for work so done. Wood v. The Queen, 7 S. C. R. 634.

Extras-Engineer - Certificate.]-The suppliant engaged by contract under seal, dated 4th December, 1872, with the minister of public works, to construct, finish, and complete, for a lump sum of $78,000, a deep wharf at Richmond station at Halifax, agreeably to the plans in the engineer's office and specifications, and with such directions as should be given by the engineer in charge during the progress of the work. By the 7th clause of the contract no extra work could be performed, unless "ordered in writing by the engineer in charge before the execution of the work." By letter dated 26th August, 1873, the minister of public works authorized the suppliant to make an addition to the wharf by the erection of a superstructure to be used al floor, for the additional sum of Further extra work which amounted as a coa $18,400. coal to $2,781, was performed under another letter from the public works department. The work from the public works department. The work was completed, and, on the final certificate of the government engineer in charge of the works, the sum of $9.081, as the balance due, was paid to the suppliant, who gave the following receipt, dated 30th April, 1875: "Received from the Intercolonial Railway, in full, for all amounts against the overnment for ceived from the Intercolonial Railway, in full, for all amounts against the government for works under contract, as follows:—'Richmond deep water wharf works for storage of coals, work for bracing wharf, rebuilding two stone cribs, the sum of $9.681." The suppliant sued for extra work, which he alleged was not covered by the payment made on the 30th April, 1875; and also for damages caused to him by deficiency in and irregularity of payments:—Held, that all the work performed by the suppliant for the government, was either contract work within the plans or specithe government, was fications, or extra work within the meaning of the 7th clause of the contract, and that he was paid in full the contract price, and also the price of all extra work for which he could produce written authority, and that the writ-ten authority of the engineer and the estimate of the value of the work were conditions pre-cedent to the right of the suppliant to recover payment for any other extra work. O'Brien v. The Queen, 4 S. C. R. 529.

Extras Engineer—Certificate—Approval of Intercolonial Railway Commissioners—Misrepresentations by Servants of Crone—Delay in Work—Penalty—Waiver—Costs.]—On the 25th May, 1870, J. and C., contractors, entered into a contract with the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners (authorized by 31 Vict. c. 13) to construct and complete section No. 7 of the said Intercolonial Railway for the Dominion of Canada, for a bulk sum of $557,750. During the progress of the work, changes of various kinds were made. The works were sufficiently completed to admit of rails being laid, and the line opened for traffic on the 11th November, 1872. The total amount paid on the 10th February, 1873, was $557.750, the amount of the contract. The contractors thereupon presented a claim to the commissioners amounting to $116,-463.83 for extra work, &c., beyond what was included in their contract. The commissioners, after obtaining a report from the chief engineer, recommended that an additional sum of $31,091.85 (less a sum of $8,300 for timber bridging not executed, and $10,354,24 for under drain taken off contractor's hands) be paid to the contractors upon receiving a full discharge of all claims of every kind or description under the contract. The balance was tendered to the suppliants and refused. contractors thereupon, by petition of right, claimed $124,663.33, as due from the Crown to them for extra work done by them outside of and beyond the written contract, alleging that by orders of the chief engineer additional work and alterations were required, but these orders were carried out only on the under standing that such additional work and alterations should be paid for extra; and alleging, further, that they were put to large expens and compelled to do much extra work which they were entitled to be paid for, in consequence of misrepresentations in plans and blil of works exhibited at the time of letting. the profile plan it was stated that the best information in possession of the chief engin-eer respecting the probable quantities of the several kinds of work would be found in the schedules accompanying the plan, but contractors must understand that these quanti-ties are not guaranteed;" and in the bill of works, which purported to be an abstract of all information in possession of the commis-sioners and chief engineer with regard to the quantities, it was stated. "the quantities herein given as ascertained from the best data obtained are, as far as known, approximately accurate, but at the same time they are not warranted as accurate, and no claim of any kind will be allowed, though they may prove to be inaccurate." The contract provided, inter alia, that it should be distinctly understood, intended, and agreed that the said price or consideration of $557,750 should be the price of, and be held to be full compensation for, all the works embraced in or contemplated the said contract, or which might be required in virtue of any of its provisions, or by law, and that the contractors should not, upon any pretext whatever, be entitled by reason of any change, alteration, or addition, made in or to such works, or in the said plans and specifications, or by reason of the exercise of any of the powers vested in the governor in council by the said Act, intituled "An Act respecting the construction of the Intercolonial Railway," or in the commissioners or engineer, by the said contract or by law, to claim or demand any further or additional sum for extra work, or as damages or otherwise, the contractors thereby expressly waiving and abandoning all and any such claim or pretension, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, except as provided in the fourth section of the said contract, relating to alter-ations in the grade or line of locations, and that the said contract and the said specifications should be in all respects subject to the tions should be in all respects subject to the provisions of the Act first cited in the said contract, initiated "An Act respecting the construction of the Intercolonial Railway," 31 Vict. c. 13, and also, in as far as they might be applicable, to the provisions of the Railway Act of 1868. The 18th section of 31 Vict. c. 13 cancts "that no money shall be paid to any contractor until the chief engineer-shall have certified that the work for shall have certified that the work, for or on account of which the same shall be claimed, has been duly executed, nor until such certificate shall have been approved of by the commissioners." No certificate was given by the chief engineer of the execution of the work :-Held, that, the contract requiring that any work done on the road must be certified to by the chief engineer, until he so certified and such certificate was approved of by the commissioners, the contractors were not entitled to be paid anything. That if the work in question was extra work, the contractors had by the contract waived all claim for payment for any such work. If such extra work was of a character so peculiar and unexpected as to be considered dehors the contract, then there was no such contract with the commissioners as would give the contractors any legal claim against the Crown; the commissioners alone being able to bind the Crown, and they only as authorized by statute. That there was no guarantee, express or implied, as to the quantities, nor any misrepresentations respecting them. But, even if there had been, a petition of right will not lie against the Crown for tort, or for a claim based on an alleged fraud, imputing to the Crown the fraudulent mis-conduct of its servants. Jones v. The Queen, 7 S. C. R. 570.

In the contract it was provided that if the contractors failed to perform the works within the time agreed upon In and by the said contract, to wire let July, 1871, the Contract, and the let July, 1871, the Contract, and also the further sum of $2,000 per week for all the time during which said works remained incomplete after the said 1st July, 1871, by way of liquidated damages for such default. The contract was not completed till the end of August, 1872:—Held, that if the Crown insisted on requiring a decree for the penalties, time being declared the essence of the contract, the damages attached, and the Crown was entitled to a sum of $2,000 per week from the 1st July, 1871, till the end of August, 1872, for liquidated damages. The Crown subsequently waiving the forfeiture, judgment was rendered in favour of the suppliants for the sum of $12,436.11, being the amount tendered by the respondent, less the costs of the Crown in the case to be taxed and deducted from the said amount. Estras — Engineer — Certificate— Damages for Delay—Intercolonial Railway Commissioners—Powers of,] — In January, 1872, the commissioners of the Intercolonial Railway gave public notice that they were prepared to receive tenders for the erection, inter alia, of certain engine-houses according to plans and specifications deposited at the office of the chief engineer at Ottawa. J. I. tendered for the erection of the engine-house at Metapediac, and in October following he was instructed by the commissioners to proceed in the execution of the work, according to his accepted tender, the price being 821,989. The work was completed and delivered to the government in October, 1884. The specifications provided as follows: "The commissioners will provide and lay railway iron and will also provide and fix cast iron evitumes, iron girders, and other iron work required for supporting roof." In September, 1573, J. I. was unable to proceed further with the execution of his work in consequence of the neglect of the commissioners to supply the iron girders, &c., until March following, owing to which delay be suffered loss and damage. During the execution of the work J. I. was instructed and directed by the commissioners or their engineers to perform, and did perform, certain extra works not included in his accepted tender, and not according to the plans, drawings, and specifications. By his petition of right, J. I. claimed $3,795.75 damages in consequence of the delay on the part of the commissioners to provide the cast iron columns, &c., and $8,505.10 for extra works. The Crown demurred and also traversed the allegation of negligence and delay, and admitted extra work to the amount of $5,056.60, and set up the 18th section of 31 Vict. c. 13, which required the certificate of engineer-in-chief as a condition precedent to the payment of any sum of money for work done on the Intercolonial Railway. By 37 done on the Intercolonial Railway. By 37 Vict. c. 15, on the 1st June, 1874, the Intercolonial Railway was declared to be a public work vested in Her Majesty and under the control and management of the minister of public works, and all the powers and duties of the commissioners were transferred to the minister of public works, and s. 3 of 31 Vict. c. 13 was repealed, with so much of any other part of the said Act as might be in any way inconsistent with 37 Vict. c. 15:—Held, that the tender and its acceptance by the comthat the tender and its acceptance by the com-missioners constituted a valid contract be-tween the Crown and J. I., and that the delay and neglect on the part of the commissioners acting for the Crown to provide and fix the cast iron columns, &c., which were, by the specifications, to be provided and fixed by them, was a breach of the said contract, and that the Crown was liable for the damages resulting from such breach. There the wave resulting from such breach. That the extra work claimed for being for a sum less than 810,000, the commissioners had power to order the same under the statute 31 Vict. c. 13, s. 16, and J. I. could recover by petition of right for such part of the extra work claimed as he had been directed to perform. That s. 18 of 31 Vict. c. 13 not having been embodied in the agreement with J. I, as a condition precedent to the payment of any sum for work executed, the Crown could not now rely on that section of the statute for work rely on that section of the statute for work done and accepted and received by the government. That the effect of 37 Vict. c. 15 was to abolish the office of chief engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, and for work performed and received on and after 1st June, 1874, to dispense with the necessity of obtaining, as a a condition precedent to the payment for the same, the certificate of said engineer-in-chief, in accordance with s. 18 of 31 Vict. c. 13. Erection of Dam - Acts of Servants of the Crown.]—In order to establish a right to damages as against the Crown for having, as alleged, obstructed the flow of water to the mills of the suppliants, it is incumbent on the suppliants to shew that less than the natural volume of water forming the stream reaches the mill on account of such alleged obstruction; therefore, where it appeared upon the evidence that certain waters alleged to have been penned back by a dam, would never have reached the mills of the suppliants, and the extreme and unprecedented dryness of the season had had an appreciable effect upon the supply of water :— Held, that the evidence did not sustain the petition, which alleged that the suppliants sustained damage by the erection of Muskoka Mill Co. v, The Queen, 28 Gr. 563.

The maxim that the Crown can do no

The maxim that the Crown can do no wrong applies to alleged tortions acts of the officers of a public department of Ontario, and a petition of right will not lie for such alleged wrongful acts under 35 Vict. c. 13 (O.), which creates no new right in the subject ngainst the Crown, but relates rather to procedure only. The redress of a subject suffering damage from such acts, if unauthorized by statute, would be against the subject who committed the wrong, and not against the Crown. Ib.

Injury to Person—Government Bridge—Mon-repair—Acqliquence of Servant—Minister of Public Works. —Petition of right to recover damages for personal injuries to the suppliant by reason of a government bridge being out of repair. There was no evidence that the Injury resulted from the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment, so as to bring the case within s. 16 (c) of the Exchequer Court Act:—Held, that there is nothing in the Public Works Act, R. S. C. c. 36, in relation to the maintenance and repair of such a bridge which would make the minister of public works an officer or servant of the Crown under s. 16 (c) of the Exchequer Court Act. There is no duty on the part of the Crown, or any minister of the Crown, to keep a public work such as this bridge in repair for the failure of which a petition will lie against the Crown at the suit of one injured by non-repair, unless the case comes within s. 16 (c). Order in Council-Recognition of Claim Creation of Debt.]-Prior to Confederation one T. was cutting timber on territory in dispute between the old Province of Canada and the Province of New Brunswick, the In order to utilize the timber so purpose, cut, he had to send it down the St. John cut, he had to send it down the St. John river, and it was seized by the authorities of New Brunswick, and only released upon payment of fines. T. continued the business for two or three years, paying fines to the Province of New Brunswick each year, until he was finally compelled to abandon it. The two Provinces subsequently entered into negotiations in regard to the territory in dispute, which resulted in the establishment of a boundary line, and a commission was appointed to determine the state of accounts between them in respect to such territory. One member of the commission only reported finding New Brunswick to be indebted to Canada in the sum of $20,000 and upwards, and in 1871 these figures were verified by the Dominion auditor. Both before and after confederation T. frequently urged the collection of this amount from New Brunswick, with the object of having it applied to indemnify the persons who had suffered by the said diswhile engaged in cutting timber, finally, by an order in council of the Dominion Government (to whom it was alleged the in-debtedness of New Brunswick was transferred by the B. N. A. Act), it was declared that a certain amount was due to T., which would be paid on his obtaining the consent of the Governments of Ontario and Quebec therefor. Such consent was obtained and payments on account were made by the Dominion Government first to T. and afterwards to the suppli-ant, to whom T. had assigned the claim. Finally, the suppliant, not being able to obtain payment of the balance due by the order in council, proceeded to recover it by petition of right, to which petition the defendant demurred, on the ground that the claim was not founded upon a contract and was not properly a subject for petition of right:—Held, that there being no previous indebtedness shewn to T. either from the Province of New Brunswick, the Province of Canada, or the Dominion Government, the order in council did not create any debt between T. and the Dominion Government which could be enforced by petition of right, The Queen v. Dunn, 11 S. C. R. 385.

Possession of Railway — Restitution— Damages — Judgment — Pleading.]—By an agreement entered into between the Windsor and Annapolis R. W. Co. and the government, approved and ratified by the governoin council, 22nd September. 1871, the Windsor Branch, N. S., together with certain running powers over the trunk line of the Intercolonial Railway, was leased to the suppliants for the period of twenty-one years from 1st January. 1872. The suppliants under the agreement went into possession of the Windsor Branch and operated the same thereunder up to the 1st August, 1877, on which date C. J. B. be-Jat August, 1877, on which date C. J. B. being and acting as superintendent of railways as authorized by the government (who claimed to have authorizy) under 37 Vict. c. 16 (1)., passed with reference to the Windsor Branch to transfer the same to the Western Counties R. W. Co., otherwise than subject to the rights of the Windsor and Annapolis E. W. Co., ejected suppliants from and precented them from using said Windsor Branch. tented them from using said Windsor Branch, and from passing over the said trunk line; and four or five weeks afterwards said government gave over the possession of said Windsor Branch to said Western Counties R. W. Co., Branch to sain Nesterin Counties 12. 1. 2. who took and retained possession thereof. In a suit brought by the Windsor and Annapolis R. W. Co. against the Western Counties R. W. Co. for recovery of possession, &c., the It. W. Co. for recovery or possession, &c., the judicial committee of the privy council held, that 37 Vict. c. 16 (D.) did not extinguish the right and interest which the Windsor and Annapolis R. W. Co. had in the Windsor Branch under the agreement of the 22nd September, 1872. On a petition of right being filed by suppliants claiming indemnity for the damage sustained by the breach and railings on the next of the Cream. demility for the damage sustained by the breach and failure on the part of the Crown to perform the said agreement of the 22nd September, 1871, the exchequer court held, that the taking possession of the road by an officer of the Crown under the assumed au-thority of an Act of parliament was a tortious act, for which a petition of right did not lie:—Held, on appeal to the supreme court of Canada, that the Crown, by the answer of the attorney-general, did not set up any tortious act for which the Crown claimed not to be liable, but alleged that it had a right to put an end to the contract and did so, and that the action of the Crown and its officers being lawful and not tortious, they were justified. But, as the agreement was still a continuous, valid and binding agreement, to which they had no right to put an end, this defence failed. Therefore the Crown by its officer having acted on a sconception of or misinformation as to the ats of the Crown, and wrongfully because satrary to the express and implied stipulations of their agreement, but not tortiously in aw, evicted the suppliants, and so, though unand everteed the suppliants, and so, though un-conscious of the wrong by such breach, become passessed of the suppliants' property, the peti-tion of right would lie for the restitution of such property and for damages. Windsor and Annapolis R. W. Co. v. The Queen, 10 S. C. R. 335, 11 App. Cas. 607.

Prior to the filing of the petition of right, the suppliants sued the Western Counties Railway Company for the recovery of the possession of the Windsor Branch, and also for moneys received by the Western Counties Railway Company for freight or passengers on the railway since it came into their possession, and obtained judgment for the same, but were not pried. The judgment in question was not pleaded by the Crown, but was proved on the hearing by the record of the supreme court of Camada, to which court an appeal in said cause had been taken, and which affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of Nova Scotia:—Held, per Ritchie, C.J., and Tascheren, J., that the suppliants could not recover against the Crown as damages for breach of contract what they claimed and had by the Western Counties Railway Company.

and in this case there was no necessity to plead the judgment. Per Fournier and Henry, JJ., that the suppliants were entitled to damages for the time they were by the advice of the government deprived of the possession and use of the road to the date of their filing their petition of right. Ib.

— Statutory Title—Procedure—Mandamus—Petition.]—A petition of right is an appropriate remedy for the assertion by the suppliant of any title to relief under s. 29 of 7 Vict. c. 11, and where it is in the power of a party having a claim against the Crown of such a nature as in this case, to resort to a petition of right, a mandamus will not lie, and a mandamus will never under any circumstances be granted where direct relief is sought against the Crown. McQueen v. The Queen, 16 S. C. R. 1.

III. PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

Appeal—Right of.]—The provisions of the Spurpene and Exchequer Courts Acts relating to appeals from the Province of Quebee, apply to cases arising under the Petition of Right Act of that Province, 46 Vict. c. 27. McGreevy v. The Queen, 14 S. C. R. 735.

Costs — Hearing—Demurrer,]—In dealing with the question of costs upon a petition of right, the same rule will be applied as if the question was one between subject and subject; therefore, where on a petition of right the Crown, instead of demurring, went to a hearing, the court, in dismissing the petition, allowed to the Crown such costs only as would have been taxed had the liability of the Crown been raised by demurrer. Muskoka Mill Co. v. The Queen, 28 Gr. 503.

Pleading — Petition—Demurrer.]—N. C., the suppliant, by his petition of right claimed, as representing the heir of P. W. jr., certain parcels of land originally granted by letters patent from the Crown, dated 5th January, 1806, to P. W. sr., together with a sum of $200,000 for the rents, issues, and profits derived therefrom by the government since the illegal detention thereof. The Crown pleaded to this petition of right: 1st, by demurrer, defense au fonds en droit, alleging that the description of the limits and position of the property claimed was insufficient in law; 2nd, that the conclusions of the petition were insufficient and vague; 3rd, that in so far as respects the rents, issues, and profits, there had been no signification to the government of the gifts or transfers made by the heirs to the suppliants. —Held, that the objection taken should have been pleaded by exception â la forme, pursuant to Art. Hô, C. C. P., and, as the demurrer was to all the rents, issues, and profits as well those before as those since the transfer, it was possing notification of the transfer necessary with respect to rents, issues, and profits accrued previous to the sale to him by the heirs of P. W. jr. Chevrier v. The Queen, 4 S. C. R. 1.

Security for Costs — Discretion—Delay in Moving.]—Where, by a letter addressed to the suppliant, the secretary of the public works department stated that he was desired by the minister of public works to offer the sum of $3,950 in full settlement of the suppliant's claim against the department, an appli-cation on behalf of the Crown for security for costs was refused, on the ground that the power of ordering a party to give security for costs being a matter of discretion and not of absolute right, the Crown could suffer no inabsolute right, the Crown could shife no in-convenience from not getting security, as well as on the ground of delay in making the appli-cation. Wood v. The Queen, 7 S. C. R. 631. An application for security for costs in the exchequer court must be made within the time allowed for filing statement in defence, except under special circumstances. Ib.

Change in Boundaries - Adoption of Change in Boundaries — Adoption of Survey—Effect of Subsequent Survey.—The plaintiffs held a license, dated in September, 1860, to cut timber within certain limits, com-mencing "at the south branch of the Indian river, at the extremity of a limit licensed to A. & Co., ten miles above the forks." In 1842 and the survey has been above the forks." a survey had been made by the deputy inspec-tor of woods and forests, to determine A. & Co's limits, when the upper end, where the plaintiffs began, was marked by blazed trees; and in 1844 this survey was completed by one and in 1844 this survey was completed by one R., under instructions from the department, and the line previously marked was then adopted, and recognized until March, 1807. In that mouth a surveyor was instructed by the department to determine the defendant's limits, which were the same as those of A. & Co., and he made the upper boundary not so far from the forks as the previous surveys. His plan was returned to the department, but no action taken on it. The plaintiffs then sued defendant for cutting timber on the strip between the two surveys, the trespasses comnetween the two surveys, the trespasses com-plained of having been committed apparently before the last survey was made:—Held, that they could not recover, for R.'s survey having been adopted and acted on by the government, the boundary marked on the ground in accordance with it must govern until changed by competent authority. White v. Dunlop, 27 competent authority. U. C. R. 237.

Change in Dimensions of Lot-Road Allowance.]—One R. in 1829 first surveyed part of the township of Plympton fronting on Lake Huron, and his plan returned shewed the lots fronting on the lake with an oblique line in rear, following the general course of the lake, but no allowance for road. After-wards a plan of the whole township was compiled in the Crown land office, from surveys of three separate portions of it made by different surveyors. The descriptions of the lots were made from this plan, all the lots having been granted after it had been completed, and the distances in the descriptions contained in the distances in the descriptions contained in the deeds were according to the scale on which the plan was compiled. This plan shewed a road in rear of the front lots, and made their depth greater than in R.'s plan. There was no proof of any work on the ground shewing that R. had ever run out or posted the rear line as it appeared on his plan:—Held, that it was competent for the government to make such allowance for road, not being inconsists. such allowance for road, not being inconsistent with any work on the ground. Held, also, that in order to give effect to the change made by such allowance, to avoid an irregular rear boundary for such front lots, and to reconcile the plans and the grants for one of the front lots and two gore lots in rear of it, which could not all three be carried out owing to a deficiency in the land—a proportionate reduction should be made in each of such lots. Hagarty v. Britton, 30 U. C. R. 321.

Change in Numbers of Lots — Surrepor's Posts.]—In regard to a survey made before 59 Geo. III. c. 14, that Act will not have the effect of necessarily confining the grantee to the land designated by the posts planted in the original survey, if the plan of survey had been altered by the government before the patent and before the statute. Therefore, where the government had added to the ends of the concessions a strip of land which the surveyor had left unsurveyed between his concessions and the adjoining townships, and in consequence of such addition had changed the numbering of the lots throughout the concession:—Held, that the grants issued in accordance with such reformed survey would cover the land which the government intended to be included within the boundaries expressed in the patent, though the number of the lots would not correspond with the posts set by the surveyor. Doe d. Talbot v. Paterson, 3 U. C. R. 431.

II. CROWN GRANT-SUBSEQUENT SURVEY.

Ambiguity in Description — Reference to Plan—Supplementary Survey.]—The question in dispute was, what quantity of land was granted by the patent issued in 1797, the description in which was, "beginning about 18 chains below a small creek which empties itself into the river Thames, in lot No. 17; to the description of the castern boundary of lot 16, two chains more or less; thence north 45 de 28 chains, more or creek stangle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 16c-28 chains, more or the creek angle of 16 creek and the point of the river against the stream to the place of beginning, being the broken fronts of 16 and 17. The lots were supposed to contain 150 acress. There were two creeks, and the point of commencement contended for by the plaintiff (the upper creek) would give him a much larger quantity of land than the defendant alleged he was entitled to, while that sought to be upheld by the defendant would reduce it to about 50 acres. An old map from the surveyor-general's office was put in evidence, under which the lot had evidently been granted; and a surveyor called for the defence stated that the ground contended for by the plaintiff corresponded best with the older and the plaintiff corresponded best with the older and the plaintiff corresponded best with the olders plant to be found in the surveyor-mands department, and with a survey since mands of tracing out or companies and the proposed of tracing out or companies are proposed to the covery. Moreover, Morre v. Munro, 7 C. P.

Semble, the Crown may grant a tract of land by a sufficient description to designate the portion meant, although the township within which the land lies has not been surveyed and laid out into lots and concessions; and the grantee will be entitled to hold it although a subsequent survey made by authority of the Crown makes it by name a different lot, or places it in a different concession, from that named in the patent, or the surveyor laying it out projects a road through it. Ib.

Possession under Grant—Effect of Subsequent Survey—Road Allovance.]—On the Sth January, 1836, a surveyor, in compliance with instructions from the government agent, laid out a road or street on the northern limit of the town of London, two chains wide, a portion of which was then, and had for some time been, in the actual possession of the Episcopal church, to which body a patent subsequence of the state of the state — Effect of Subsequent Survey—Agreement.]—It appeared that no survey had been made on the ground of the 10th or 11th concessions of the township of Eldon north of the Portage road, but the patents had been granted according to a plan returned by the surveyor; instructed to make the original survey; and by taking this plan, with the original instructions and field-notes, the lots could be found upon the ground. One D., a provincial land surveyor, made a survey in accordance with this plan, by which the plaintiff's lot, 32 in the 10th concession, 30 acres. While a dispute as to this line was pending, the defendant W. induced the plaintiff to sign a document under seal. agreeing that the portion of the line between the 10th and 11th concessions opposite lots 32 be surveyed upon the same bearings as that portion of said line lying south of the Portage road. Defendant W., who was a sharp, intelligent man, knew that the effect of this would be to deprive the plaintiff's lot of 50 acres and add it to his own, while the plaintiff, who was alliterate and dull, was quite ignorant of this; and defendant W. as usured him that if the effect of the agreement should be to reduce his, defendant W. in istance, and the plaintiff signed it without taking any advice:—Held, that the plan and survey must govern, and that there was nothing in the agreement, if binding upon the plaintiff, to prevent him from asserting his title in accordance with them, or to divest him of any portion of his unustances plaintiff.

McEachern v. White, 37 U. C. R. 609.

Supplementary Survey-Double Fronts.]

—The plaintiff claimed a piece of land as part of lot 10 in the 1st concession west of the Communication road in the township of Harwich; the defendants claimed it as part of lot 9; and the plaintiff was entitled to recover if the line between the lots was to be run as in the case of a double not a single-fronted concession. It appeared that lots 9 and 10 were described for patent by metes and bounds in 1793, and letters patent were soon after issued in accordance with this description. The ori ginal survey of that part of the township was not completed on the ground, but the surveyor laid out the Communication road as directed. and returned a plan shewing it, and, as the trial Judge found, he gave the information upon which the description for these lots and for others about the same time were prepared. The principle of survey with double fronts was not in use before 1820. In 1821 another surveyor was instructed by the government to complete the survey of this township with double-fronted concessions, and to explore and survey the road, but not to interfere with the lands ceded intersecting it. No posts on the ground were found along the Communication road pointing out the lots along it as doublefronted :- Held, that the latter survey made after the patents for these lots could not affect them; that the principle of survey with double fronts could not be applied to the grant made long before it was adopted; and that the plaintiff therefore should succeed. McGregor v. McMichael, 41 U. C. R. 128.

See Keeley v. Harrigan, 3 C. P. 173; Raile v. Cronson, 9 C. P. 9.

III. DOUBLE-FRONTED CONCESSIONS.

Side Lines — How Run.]—In this township the lots were originally surveyed in double fronts; but the Adjala road, which forms the northern boundary of the township, cuts lots 30 and 31 in the 7th concession diagonally, leaving the eastern halves of these lots broken, and not corresponding with the front or western halves; and no posts or monuments were placed to mark the angles of the east halves:—Held, in appeal, that the side or division road between lots 30 and 31 should not run direct from one front to the Adjala road in a direct line, but that the side road should be run from each front to the centre of the lots. McLachlin v. Dixon, 4 C. P. 307; S. C., ib. 71.

How Run — What is a Double Front.] — The 11th concession of Trafalgar, the last to the east, and adjoining the road allowance between Trafalgar and Toronto, is only 30 chains deep, less than half the depth of the other concessions in the same township, which are 60 chains 67 links. In the original survey posts were planted on the front or west side of this concession, to mark the lots, and also at the rear or east side, on the road between the two townships; but the lots in it were granted as broken lots, containing 90 acres; not as half lots, except lot 11, in question, which was erroneously described as containing 100 acres:—Held, not a double-fronted concession, within the meaning of the statutes; and that the side lines in it should be ascertained by running from the posts in front, parallel to the base line of the townships, and without reference to the posts on that road. Warnock v. Covan, 13 U. C. R. 251.

of Cumberland is bounded to the north by the Ottawa, and has a range of lots on the river with their rear boundaries irregular, corresponding to the course of the stream in front, the remainder of it being laid out into concessions running north and south, numbering from the east, and into lots running east and west numbering from the north. The instructions for the original survey were to leave one chain as an allowance for road between each concession, to be double posted at the distance of 50 links right and left from the centre of the road. The surveyor, however, planted the road. only a single row of posts in rear (i. e., at the west side) of each concession, and he stated in his evidence that the west halves of lots in the concession were to be measured from these posts, and the east halves of lots in the next concession westward by beginning at the distance of one chain from each post westerly, parallel to the side line of the township. No line therefore was run or posted at the front of the 8th concession. The plaintiff sued for trespass on the west half of lot B, in the 8th concession, and the question was, how the course and starting point of his side line were to be determined. His surveyor took the line dividing Cumberland from Russell, the adjoining township to the south, as governing the course of the side line, because, though the lots numbered from the north, there was no continuous straight line at that end of the concession. He found an original monument on the rear line of the 7th concession, intended to mark the limit between lots A, and B. there, and ran the side line from a point one chain west of that monument to the rear of the 8th concession, which, if correct, shewed that the plaintiff should recover; while, if the township was to be treated as double-fronted, the line should have been run from the post at the west side of the concession, and in that case the defendant should succeed. It appeared that whole lots had been granted in appeared that whole lots had been granted in several of the concessions, and the north half of two lots and the south half of one, all be-fore 1854, but that many more grants had been made from 1821 to 1858 for the east and west halves of lots separately described: west naives or lots separately described:— Held, that the course of the side line was, under the facts proved, correctly ascertained, the case being within the proviso to 8, Ti of C.
S. C. c. 77, and the principle of McDonald v.
McDonald, 11 C. P. 374, 2. That S. Sc could not apply, for no line in front of the Sh corcession load course here. cession had ever been run or posted. As to the starting point for the side line, the precise case of this survey is unprovided for by the Act; the concessions were not single-fronted, for the lines had been run and posted in rear, not in front, and very few whole lots had been granted; and they were not within the definition of double-fronted concessions, or within s. 28, for only a single row of posts had been planted, and the grants had not all been by half lots. Held, however, looking at the in-structions, the evidence of the surveyor, and the grants made, that the weight of evidence was much in favour of treating the township as one with double rather than single-fronted concessions, in which case the plaintiff's side line had not been correctly determined. Held, also, that, if it was a single-fronted concession, as the posts in the rear of the 7th were intended to govern the front angle of lots in the Sth concession, the plaintiff's line might properly begin as it did by his survey. Holmes v. McKechin, 23 U. C. R. 52.

The jury in the last case having again found the first property of the state of the

The jury in the last case having again found for the plaintiff, the court granted a second new trial, holding that upon the facts proved the township should clearly be treated as one with double-fronted concessions :- Held, that, as all the grants before the passing of the Survey Act, 12 Vict. c. 35, s. 37, had described the land in half lots, that feature of a double-fronted concession was established by the retrospective words of the Act; and subsequent grants, therefore, could not affect the question. There are several townships with double-fronted concessions, in which the posts have not been planted on both sides of the allowance for roads between the concessions, though the statute makes that a part of the definition of such townships. S. C., ib. 321.

12 Vict. c. 35, s. 37 (C. S. U. C. c. 93, s. 28), which prescribes the rule for drawing the side lines in double-fronted concessions, applies to townships theretofore surveyed. Held, following the last two cases, that the expression "the lands having been described in half lots" is made by that section part of the definition of township with double-fronted concessions. Held, also, that the rule prescribed applies to Held, also, that the rule prescribed applies to all lands in such concessions, not to the grants of half lots only, and that it is brought into application by the granting of any half lots. Semble, however, that the section is on both points open to doubts, which it is desirable to remove by legislation. Marra v. Davidson, 26 U. C. R. 641.

Subsequent Survey — Authority to Change to Double Front.]—The first five concessions of a township were surveyed in 1797, the lots being 29 chains 87 links in width. About 1813 an original post was found by a surveyor in front of the 5th concession, by which he determined the limits of the lots, and the half hear actual on accordingly. In 1821. they had been settled on accordingly. In 1821 the remaining concessions were surveyed under instructions from the surveyor-general, which directed the several concession lines to be produced, beginning with that between the of produced, beginning with that between the 5th and 6th concessions, and from the centre of each line at the distance of 50 links each way, right and left, at right angles thereto, the several lots of the width of 29 chains 37 links were to be posted. The surveyor, under these instructions, double-posted the line be-tween the 5th and 6th concessions, making the lots 29 chains 37 links wide, and patents were afterwards granted for half lots in the concession. It was contended that this made the 5th concession double-fronted, having the lots 29 chains 87 links wide in the front and 29 chains 37 links in the rear. One of these patents, however, made the rear half 29 chains 87 links wide, and the government plans shewed no jog in the side lines of the 5th conshewed no jog in the side lines of the out con-cession.—Held, that the concession was not double-fronted, for the evidence shewed that the whole of it had been surveyed as a single-fronted one in 1797, and the surveyor in 1821 had no authority to change it, if he so intend-ed. Murphy v. Healey, 30 U. C. R. 192.

What Constitutes a Double Front— Evidence—Estoppel.]—The land in question was situated at the rear of the concessions (the concessions running north and south and numbering from the west), and plaintiff, claiming that it was a double-front concession, had the division line run from a point on the concession line in the rear, or what he claimed to be the east front, of the concession, but there was no proper evidence of the concession having, in the original survey, been laid out as a double-front concession, and of posts being planted in the rear, while the lots were granted by the letters patent as whole, and not as half lots:—Held, that the fact of 28 and 29 having been granted as whole lots was prima facie evidence of the concessions being single-fronted, and that the grant of half lots in the adjoining concession could not affect it. Held, also, that the fact of defendants at-tempting to prove a post in rear, from which they contended the line should be run, did not estop them from asserting that the concession was single-fronted. Dark v. Hepburn, 27 C.

See McGregor v. McMichael, 41 U. C. R. 128.

IV. EVIDENCE IN ACTIONS.

Admissibility of Evidence-Entries by Surveyor-New Trial.] - Notes of a survey made by a deceased surveyor in a book in which he kept a diary of matters private and professional, were tendered in evidence prove the boundary between lots 3 and 4. prove the boundary between lots 3 and 4. The entry of the survey was as follows: 6th June, 1827—Got Mr. Ashbridge to shew the stake between Nos. 3 and 4, &c. And in another part of the book the following entry appeared: June 15, 1827.—D. Bolton, Esq. £2 16 3 At D. Bolton's house for fence. . 0 4 0

There was no evidence that at or about the time of the survey B. had any interest in either lot 3 or 4; but it was shewn that he obtained a conveyance of lot 2 two months afterwards, and of lot 3 in 1830. Surveyors were not at that time under any obligation to make notes of surveys, and it was not proved that the entry was made contemporaneously with the transaction: — Held, reversing the judgment of the Queen's bench, 39 U. C. R. 597 (see also 37 U. C. R. 430), that the entry was not admissible as one made in the course of business, or in the performance of a quasi public duty. Held, also, that the notes of the survey were not sufficiently connected with the entry of payment to be read with it as an entry against interest. O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 A. R. 247.

Boundaries — Affidavits.]—The question at the trial being the boundary line between lots 11 and 12 in the 5th concession of Saltfleet, affidavits were offered in evidence as to line between lots 4 and 5, and 14 and 15, in the same concession, taken by the sur-15, in the same concession, taken by the surveyor employed by defendants to run this line in 1860, and filed with the registrar under C. S. U. C. c. 93, s. 51:—Held, that such affidavits were properly rejected. Quære, as to effect of the words in that section, "subject to be produced thereafter in evidence in any court of law. ject to be produced thereafter in evidence in any court of law or equity within Upper Canada." One affidavit went to shew that none of the side lines in this concession had been run in the original survey, owing to a large swamp:—Held, not an affidavit within the statute, for evidence "concerning any boundary" does not mean evidence that no such boundary ever existed; and on this ground, also, such affidavit was rightly rejected. Manary v. Dash, 23 U. O. R. 580.

- Ascertainment-Lost Surveys.]-In an action of ejectment the question to be decided was whether the locus was situate with-in the plaintiff's lot No. 5 in concession 18. or within defendant's lot adjoining, No. 24 in concession 17. The grant through which the plaintiff's title was originally derived gave the southern boundary of lot 5 as a starting point, the course being thence eighty-four chains more or less to the river. The original surjeys were lost, and this starting point could not be ascertainte!—Held, affairing point could not be ascertainte!—Held, affairing the judgment in 14 A. R. 788 (which reversed that in 2.0, R. 614), that such some properties of the secretained by measuring back exactly eighty-lour chains from the river. Plumb v. Steinhoff, 14 S. C. R. 739.

True Line — Burden of Proof clausum fregit, to try the boundary line between lots 28 and 29 in the 5th concession of Ops, the plaintiff described in his declaration by metes and bounds the piece of land trespassed upon, alleging it to be part of 28, to which lot his title was not disputed. The jury were asked: 1. Is the point contended for by the defendants the place where the original post stood? 2. Did the plaintiff, when he moved his fence, do so on the understanding with defendants that they acknowledged his right, or was his possession to be subject to the correct adjustment of the line? They found that the post had not been proved, and that the plaintiff was given possession by the defendants:—Held, that on the first answer the verdict should have been for defendants, for the fact that defendants had not proved the post did not relieve the plaintiff from proving the true line; and that the second question was not presented by the case. Bark v. Hepburn, 27 C. P. 357.

Work on Ground.]—It is by the work as executed on the ground, and not as projected before execution, or represented on a plan afterwards, that the boundaries are to be determined. Ovens v. Davidson, 10 C. P. 302.

See, also, Carrick v. Johnson, 26 U. C. R. 69; McGregor v. Calcutt, 18 C. P. 39.

- Work on Ground-Disregard of, in Subsequent Survey.]-In questions relating to boundaries and descriptions of lands, the well established rule is, that the work on the ground governs; and it is only where the site of a monument on the ground is incapable of ascertainment that a surveyor is authorized to apportion the quantities lying between two defined or known boundaries. Therefore, where an original monument or post was planted as indicating that the north-west angle of a lot was situated at a distance of half a chain south therefrom, and another surveyor had actually planted a post at the spot so indi-cated, and subsequently two surveyors, in total disregard of the two posts so planted, both of which were easy of ascertainment, made a survey of the locality and placed the post at a different spot, the court disregarded the survey, and declared the north-west angle of the lot to be as indicated by the first mentioned monument. Artley v. Curry, 20 Gr. 243

Cadastral Plans—Entries—Admissions.]
—Statements entered upon cadastral plans and official books of reference made by public officials and filled in the lands registration offices, in virtue of the provisions of the civil code of Lower Canada, do not in any way bind persons who were not cognizant thereof at the time the entries were made. Durocher, v. Durocher, 27 S. C. R. 363.

Description of Lot—Crown Lands Department — Admissibility.]—The description of a lot by metes and bounds from the Crown lands department is admissible in evidence to explain the patent for the lot in which it is described only by the number and concession. Hagarty v. Britton, 30 U. C. R. 321.

The description of a lot prepared for and used by the Crown lands department in framing the patent, which grants the lot by number or letter only, is admissible evidence to explain the metes and bounds of that lot. The plan of survey of record in and adopted by the Crown lands department governs on a question of location of a road, when the surveyor's field notes do not conflict with the plan, and no road has been laid out on the ground. Kenny v. Caldwell, 21 A. R. 110, 24 S. C. R. 699.

Field Notes — Copy — Admissibility.]— Semble, that an admitted copy of the field notes from the Crown lands office may be received in evidence. Doe d. Strong v. Jones, 7 U. C. R. 385.

A certified copy of part of the field notes of the original survey, is admissible in evidence. Carrick v. Johnston, 26 U. C. R. 69.

Field Notes of Surveyors as Evidence.]—See McGregor v. Keiller, 9 O. R.

Monuments — Road Allowance.]—Monuments placed in compliance with the provisions of ss. 34, 35, 36, and 37 of R. S. O. 1877 c. 146 must be placed at the true corners, governing points, or off-sets, or at the true ends of concession lines, and there is nothing in these sections making a survey thereunder or the placing of the monuments conclusive, whether right or wrong, and evidence may be received in contradiction. So held on a case reserved from general sessions on an indictional form of the section of a highway, being the town line between two counties. Tanner v. Bissell, 21 U. C. R. 353, Regina v. McGregor, 19 C. P. 69, Re Fairbairn and Sandwich East, 32 U. C. R. 573, and Roley v. McLean, 41 U. C. R. 200, distinguished. Regina v. Cosby, 21 O. R. 591.

Original Plan — Copy—Admissibility—
Road Allowance—Non-user.]—The piece of land marked out in the original plan of a township as an allowance for a road does not lose that character because it has never been used as a road for forty years; and a copy of the original plan of the township is admissible in evidence to prove such allowance, although it does not appear by whom, nor from what materials, the plan was compiled. Badgley v. Bender, 3 O. S. 221.

Original Posts — Knowledge of Residents.]—A surveyor cannot act independently of 59 Geo. 111. c. 14, and arbitrarily lay on one side the evidence which neighbours are ready to give from their own knowledge of the situation of original posts. Shericood v. Moore, 3 U. C. R. 468.

Proposed Survey—Sketch—Parol Evidence.)—An agreement for sale of lands referred to them as certain lots in "Stretton's survey." No survey had in fact been then made, but a rough sketch of the proposed survey was in existence:—Held, that such sketch could not be considered as the survey referred to in the agreement; and, as parol evidence was necessary to shew the particulars as to size and position, without which such sketch was unintelligible, the court refused to enforce the agreement, Stretton, 24 Gr. 20.

Sufficiency of Evidence—Entries by Surveyor—Map—Work on Ground.]—Held, that the entries in the diary of the surveyor, together with a small piece of map, also produced, supposed to be his (which was all that remained in the Crown lands office shewing the lines in question run), and the trace of a blaze for a great part of the way, were evidence of the fact of the lines having been run by him in the manner in which he was directed to run them by his instructions (which were produced), although there was no further evidence upon the ground that the original lines had been run. Smith v. Clunas, 20 C. P. 213.

of Running Line.]—In ejectment by the patentee of the south-east quarter of a lot, to try a disputed boundaries quarter of a lot, to try a disputed boundary quarter of a lot, to try a disputed boundary quarter of a lot, to try a disputed boundary quarter of a lot, to try a disputed boundary quarter of the lot, divided it into equal halves, and drew a line across the lot on a bearing corresponding to the concession line in the rear, and that of the quarter so ascertained defendant was in possession of 11 acres. He said, however, that he did not know the quantity in the whole lot, which fronted on a river, and there was a jog in the concession line in the rear, for which he had made no allowance. By the Survey Act. C. S. C. c. 77, s. 66, every grant of an aliquot part of a lot shall be construed as a grant of such aliquot part of the whole, whether more or less than expressed in the grant:—Held, that the plaintiff had not clearly shewn his right to the land claimed, and was therefore not entitled to succeed; but a new trial was granted instead of a nonsuit. Babann v. Lauson, 27 U. C. R. 399.

Mistake at Trial—New Trial.]—When a witness, a surveyor, founded his evidence upon the assumption of a certain monument as the correct point to start from in running a line, and the jury gave their verdict accordingly, and such witness afterwards discovered that he was in error as to the correctness of that boundary, and made affidavit of his mistake, the court granted a new trial. Due d. Case v. Magill, 5 O. S. 56.

Witness — Boundary—Competence.]—A person not a licensed surveyor is a competent witness on a question of boundary. Potter v. Campbell, 16 U. C. R. 109.

Witnesses—Bias—Weight of Evidence—Road Allowance.]—An original government survey of part of a township made no mention of roads, and it was apparently the surveyor's intention that the roads should be taken out of the land (then wild) adjacent. The surveyor who afterwards surveyed the adjoining lands treated the road allowance as included within the lines of the original survey, whereby the plaintiff's lot would be diminished one chain in breadth. The jury having found for defendants, the court ordered a new trial, considering such verdict against Vol. III. D—168—19 the weight of evidence. The weight attached by the court to the evidence given by professional witnesses is diminished by efforts to sustain the views of the party who may call them; it should be given free from bias. Stock v. Ward, 7 C. P. 127.

Original Monument—Field Notes.]
—In ejectment for part of a gore between lots 12 and 13, the plaintiffs proved by the recollection of witnesses the original monument between lots 10 and 11, and between lots 14 and 15, and claimed to have the space between these two boundaries proportionately divided according to the width of lots 11, 12, and 13, and of this gore, as designated in the field notes. Defendant gave evidence of an original monument between the gore and lot 12, which, if proved, entitled him to a verdict; but it did not appear from the field notes that any post had been planted there in the original survey. The court set aside a verdict for defendant, without costs. Richmond v. Ferris, 6 C. P. 163.

See Boley v. McLean, 41 U. C. R. 260.

V. LINES.

1. Concession Lines.

Mistake in Numbers.]—A mistake of a surveyor in marking the number of the concessions wrong on some of the posts of an original survey will not make it proper to assume the lots so marked as being in the concession numbered on the posts. Jarvis v. Morton, 11 U. C. R. 431.

Original Line—Retracing—Evidence.]— See Spratt v. E. B. Eddy Co., 29 S. C. R. 411.

Re-survey — Straight Lines—Confirmation.]—In the first government survey of a township (Loughborough) in 1797, the lines between alternate concessions only, as the 2nd and 3d, 4th and 5th, 6th and 7th, had been run and staked out, numbering from south to north. These lines were not straight, but curved or bent southward in the centre of the township. It appeared (though not very satisfactorily) that several persons had, under government, settled according to these lines. Subsequently, in 1852, a surveyor was employed by government to run the concessions omitted in the first survey. He did so; but, instead of running them parallel to the lines formerly surveyed, he ran them in straight lines, thus cutting off part of the rear of the northerly concessions and adding them to the front of the southerly concessions. This survey was remonstrated against by petition, and was never definitely adopted or confirmed. Held, that the last-mentioned survey content of the southerly depend as confirmed by 12 Vict. c. 30, as having been legally done under the former Acts. Kedey v. Herrigan, 3 C. P. 1755. Followed in Raile v. Cronson, 9 C. P. 1755. Followed in Raile v. Cronson, 9

Width of Concessions—Error.]—There is no law requiring each concession to be of the same width throughout a township; nor any principle by which an error in the survey of one concession, entirely unconnected with the actual work and survey on the ground in another, is to affect such other concession. Johnson v. Honsberger, 6 C. P. 201.

See Re Walker and Township of Burford, 15 U. C. R. 82; Re Fairbairn and Township of Sandwich East, 32 U. C. R. 573; Boley v. McLean, 41 U. C. R. 260.

2. Side Lines.

Crown Grant — Description — Impossibility.]—The eastern side line of 24 in the front or 1st concession of Kingston, cannot be run as it is described in the grant from the Crown, or parallel to the western limit of the township, according to 59 Geo. III. c. 14, because that would carry the concession beyond the line which was originally run at its eastern boundary. Doe d. Stuart v. Forsyth, 1 U. C. R. 324.

Original Plan—Fraud—Production of Side Lines.,1—In trespass defendant claimed, as part of lot 16 in the broken front of Escott, that part of Cary's point in the river St. Lawrence which would be included within the side lines of the lot, if projected from the main shore across a small bay, to and across the point to the river in front of it. In the original plan of the township the line across the point from west to east, shewing an intention to include it in the broken front, was continued only as far east as lot 14, though the point extended far enough to cover the fronts of lots 15 and 16. In scaling, the front on the river posts appeared to have been put down on the main land, but none could be traced on the point. The jury found that these posts were intended to mark the width of lots, not the front angles of lots in the broken front, and that the front of lot 16 was upon the main shore, and not on the river in front of the point:—Held, that upon the evidence the verdict was right, as no part of the point appeared to be included in the lot. Thomson v. Shertwood, 21 U. C. R. R. 173.

Original Survey-Course of Boundary Line-Ascertainment of Side Line-Statutes.] -Where the lots in a concession ranging from east to west were not numbered all the way from the boundary line of the concession on the east, but two blocks of five lots each had been laid out in the original survey fronting on and towards that line, and the remainder of the concession in blocks of five lots each, fronting as usual on the concession line, numbering westward, beginning at No. 10:— Held, that s. 35 of 12 Vict. c. 35 would, nevertheless, apply, and that the side line of the lot in question (32) must be determined by the course of the eastern boundary line of the Held, also, that the last proviso concession. in that section would not apply, so as to make the boundary line of the block in which lot 32 was the governing line, because the town-ship was surveyed from the 27th March, 1829. Bell v. White, 15 U. C. R. 171.

Lost Post—Ascertainment,]—On the original survey of a township a base line had been run, but the concession lines had not been run from one side of the township to the other, and the surveyor had also run the side lines, planting a post at the measured depth of each concession, to mark the concession line; but it appeared impossible the concession lines so marked could be straight, and one of the angles of a lot could not be discovered by any stake or monument; —Held, that 12 Vict. c. 35 and 18 Vict. c. 83 do not provide a rule for determining the front of any lot in a township so surveyed; that the first of a scertaining the first of a scertaining the discount of a scertaining the discount of the first of a scertaining the discount of the first of a scertaining that the first of the f — Posts on Base Line—Ascertainment of Side Line.]—A concession or base line had been run and posts planted on it upon a survey made on a similar principle to that referred to in the last case, but the question was, how the side line of a lot was to be ascertained:—Held, that the distance between the two nearest ascertained monuments on the base line should be measured and divided proportionately between the lots, making due allowance for roads, and that the side line required should be run from the angle of the lot so ascertained. Culp v. Culp, 6 C. P. 466.

River Front—Ascertainment of Side Lines.)—The three easterly lots only of one concession in a township (Smith, in the county of Peterborough.) were bounded in front by a river, and the line had been run in the original survey in front of such concession, up to though not past these lots, but the township itself fronted upon another township:—Held, clearly not a township bounded in front by a river, within C. S. U. C. c. 93, s. 27, so that resort might be had to the posts in the concession in rear to determine the side lines of these lots. Quarre, whether such a case is provided for by the statute. Johnson v. Hunter, 25 U. C. R. 348.

— Subsequent Survey.]—In the original survey of the township of K., which was made by alternate concessions, the lines in front of the 1st and rear of the 2nd concessions were run, and a single row of posts planted along the latter, to divide the space into two hundred acre lots. The line between the 1st and 2nd concessions was afterwards surveyed under instructions from government, and divided off into lots of the same size:—Held, a case within s. 36 of 12 Vict. e. 35; and therefore that the side lines of lots in the 2nd concession should be ascertained by the posts of the original survey on the line in rear of that concession, and not by those of the subsequent survey on the division line between the 1st and 2nd concessions. McDonell v. McDonell, 10 U. C. R. 530.

Subsequent Survey—Course of Boundary Line—Ascertainment of Side Line.]—Two surveyors, being employed to divide the gore of land marked in the plan in the statement of case, ran lines as are therein dotted and named McLaurin's and McLeod's lines. The parties apparently acquiesced in McLeod's line for a time, but subsequently disagreed, and this action was brought to contest the division:—Held, that the rule of the statute, that the course of the boundary line in each concession, on that side from which the lots are numbered, shall be the course of the division or side line, not being applicable to the case, as these lots gurported to number from the east, while the gore at the east of the concession was not numbered, the defendant was entitled to recover. Macdonald v. McDonald, 11 C. P. 374.

— Establishing Line.]—Held, that upon the evidence set out in this case, the surveyor had properly proceeded to establish the side line between plaintiff's and defendant's lots. Crossicaite v. Gage, 32 U. C. R. 196.

- True Line - Acquiescence.]-Trespass, to try the boundary line between the plaintiff and defendant. The former claimed title to part of the north-west part of lot 20 in the 6th concession of South Dumfries, by in the oft concession of South Dumfries, by metes and bounds; the defendant claimed the east half. The descriptions in the deeds did not conflict. A line was originally run by B, for the prior holders of the property, one of them at the time claiming title through the treem at the time canning the through the original patentee, under an agreement for purchase, but was not acquiesced in by the pinintiff. In 1849 one M., a provincial land surveyor, at plaintiff's request, ran a line supposed to be acquiesced in by the defendant, but posed to be acquiesced in by the defendant, but upon the erection of a fence thereon by the plaintiff the defendant objected, and it was re-moved. In 1883 P. ran a line, claimed by the plaintiff as the true line, which caused this dis-pute. P. and J., being present at the time on defendant's behalf, concurred in opinion that this line was correct. The jury laving found for the plaintiff, and leave being reserved to defendant to move against the verdict:—Held. that the line originally run, and now contended for by defendant, was not binding upon the parties, and that the evidence shewed the line run by I'., and acquiesced in by the defendant, to be the correct one, and therefore the verdict for the plaintiff was correct. McNaught v. Turnbull, 13 C. P. 426.

See Holmes v. McKechin, 23 U. C. R. 52.

VI. MUNICIPALITIES-SURVEYS MADE ON AP-PLICATION BY.

By-law of County—Direction to Levy— Invalidity—Pleading.]—Declaration, that the plaintiffs, pursuant to the statute, applied to the governor to have the concession lines in the defendants' township re-surveyed, which was ordered accordingly, and the expense paid by plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs thereupon directed defendants to levy and collect the money so paid; but, although they did levy part, they refused to pay the same to the plaintiffs. Plea, that the only direction was by the plaintiffs, bridger which the by-law, which before suit was quashed: -Held, on demurrer, that the declaration was had for not shewing a by-law, as the plaintiffs could proceed only in that way; and that the plea was good. Quære, whether the money can be levied before the survey has been actu-ally made. County of Peterborough v. Town-thip of Smith, 28 U. C. R. 40.

— Re-survey of Township—Expense.]

—The county council passed a by-law directing a township municipality to levy and collect from the patented and leased lands of the township a certain sum required to reimburse the expenses incurred in a re-survey of the township:—Held, that the by-law was illegal, for the statute directs that such expense shall be defrayed by the proprietors of the lands interested. Semble, that the jurisdiction to pass such a by-law should appear on the face of it, by shewing a survey such as the statute contemplates. Quare, whether the Act authorizes the re-survey of a whole township. In re Scott and County of Peterborough, 25 U. C. R. 453.

The by-law directed the money to be levied The by-inw directed the money to be review on all lands patented, leased, sold, agreed to be sold, and located as free grants" in the township of Harvey:—Held, bad, following the previous case. In re Scott and Township of Harvey, 26 U. C. R. 32.

The same county council by a subsequent by-law directed the collection of a further sum by-law directed the collection of a further sum for the purpose, to be levied on the proprietors of land in the township in proportion to the quantity of land held by them respectively in such townships. This by-law was quashed, on the grounds: 1. That the statute does not au-thorize the re-survey of a whole township. 2. That it directs the expense of each conces-sion to be borne by the proprietors of land there. In re Scott and County of Peterbor-ough, 26 U. C. R. 36.

By-law of Township—Adoption of Sur-y—Invalidity—Acquiescence.]—Section 6 of S. U. C. c. 93, authorizing the county council to apply to the governor to cause a concession line to the surveyed, applies only where such line was not run in the original survey or has been obliterated. Where, therefore, it appeared that there were in fact two line clearly traceable, the question being which was the original line, and the surveyor decidwas the original line, and the surveyor decided this upon conflicting evidence:—Held, that such survey was not binding or conclusive, and that a by-law of the township adopting it must be quashed. Held, also, that the acquiescence by the applicant in the line thus adopted (which was a highway) could not be urged against the application, other interests than his, both public and private, being affected. Section 7 directs that the surveyor shall so draw the line as to leave each of the adjacent concessions of a denth proportionate to that draw the line as to leave each or the adjaceus concessions of a depth proportionate to that intended in the original survey. The depth of the concession on the north side of the line in question lay from north to south, and the concessions on the south extended in depth free part to west, so that the depth of depth from east to west, so that the depth of that on the north only would be affected by the position of the line:—Semble, that this would not prevent the application of the sta-tute. In re Fairbaira and Township of Sandtute. In re Fairbairn and T wich East, 32 U. C. R. 573.

Request of Landholders-Absence of-Request of Landholders—Absence of— Rate.]—An application was made under 12 Vict. c. 35, s. 31, without any request of the landholders, to mark out concession lines, and under it the survey provided for in 18 Vict. c. c. 33, s. 8, was afterwards made, to define the boundaries of lots:—Held, that such survey was illegal. Re Walker and Township of Burford, 15 U. C. R. 82.

The rate to pay for a survey, made under these Acts, must be levied not upon the as-sessed value of the land, but in proportion to the quantity held by the respective proprie-tors. Ib.

tors. Ib.

Moiety-Resolution of Council.]-Held, the application to the corporation not being from one-half the resident landholders affected, and the resolution of the corporation thereon not being such as the statute requires to authorize an application to the government for the survey, that the survey made by the instructions of the commissioner of Crown lands was unauthorized. Cooper v. Well-banks, 14 C. P. 364.

— Petition — Sufficiency,] — It was proved and not disputed that the necessary number of resident landholders under the Act had applied for the survey:—Held, no objection that the petition did not shew this. Held, also, as to the other objections—viz., that the petition did not shew any want or obliteration of the original survey, and that neither petition nor memorial prayed for placing monuments—that the two documents could not to be read in any other sense than as containing an application to the governor requesting the making of a survey under the Act; and if so, then that the marking by permanent stone boundaries under the direction of the commissioner of Crown lands, as prescribed by the Act, was an incident to the survey necessarily involved in the application for it; and therefore, that the petition was sufficient, Regime v. McGregor, 19 C. P. 63.

Retracing Original Line-Invalidity-Proof of Survey.]—A surveyor employed by the government, under C. S. U. C. c. 93, ss. 6-8, to survey a concession line alleged not to have been run in the original survey, or to have been obliterated, instead of attempting to make a survey in accordance with those sections, satisfied himself that the original line could be found and endeavoured to retrace it -Held, following Tanner v. Bissell, 21 U. C R. 553, that such survey was not binding under the statute; and held, on the evidence, that the line so run was not in fact the same as the original line. Semble, that, in order to prove a survey which will be conclusive under the statute, the application by the county council to the government for such must be shewn. Boley v. McLean, 41 U. C. R. 260.

VII. REGISTERED PLANS.

Amendment of Plan.]—See In re Chisholm and Town of Oakville, 12 A. R. 225; In re Allan, 10 O. R. 110.

Closing Street—" Party Concerned"—Land Titles Act.]—All persons who buy lots according to a registered plan do not ipso facto become "parties concerned" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Land Titles Act. 52 Vict. c. 20 (O.). in every street shewn upon it. Whether they are "concerned" or not in having a particular street kept open, is a question of fact; and in this case, in the absence of any representation at the time of the sale, by the vendor, that the street should be kept open, it was held that a person owning a lot several hundred yards away, and on the other side of a highway from the street in question, could not object to its being closed. In re Methmurray and Jenkins, 22 A. R. 308.

Division into Town Lots — Replacing en Bloc. |—Quarre, whether a person who has laid out land into town or village lots for sale cannot afterwards, if he finds that he cannot dispose of them as such, or for any other reason, replace his land as it was before. In re Allan, 10 O. R. 110.

Sale by Plan-Lane not in Use.]-Abandonment of an easement may be shewn not only from acts done by the owner of the dominant tenement indicating an intention to abandon, but also from acquiescence in acts done by the owner of the servient tenement. Where, therefore, the owner of the property over which a right of way existed built, with the knowledge of the owner of the property for the benefit of which the right of way had been reserved, an icehouse upon the portion re-served, and after some years pulled down the icehouse, and with the same knowledge built a stable on the same site, and a row of shops over another part of the right of way, it was held that the owner of the dominant tenement could not then have the right of way opened. Mykel v. Doyle, 45 U. C. R. 65, considered. Semble, that a conveyance made in pursuance of the Short Forms Act, of a lot according to a registered plan upon which a lane is laid out, does not pass any interest in the lane, when it has not in fact been opened on the land, and has not been used or enjoyed with the lot in question. Bell v. Golding, 23 A. R. 485

Sale of Lots—Way.]—Under the Municipal and Surveyors' Acts, by the filing of a plan, and the sale of lots according to it, abutting on a street, the property in the street becomes vested in the municipality, although they may have done no corporate act by which they have become liable to repair. Roche v. Ryun, 22 O. R. 107.

A street or road laid out upon a registered plan of a township lot, where, although houses are clustered, there is not an incorporated village, continues to be a private street or road, although the owner should sell a lot fronting on it, until the township council adopts it as a public highway, or until the public by travelling upon it has accepted the dedication offered by the proprietor. R. S. O. 1887 c. 152, s. 62, only applies to cities, towns, or incorporated villages. A person who purchases lots according to such a plan, abutting upon streets laid out thereon, acquires, as against the person who laid out the plot and sold him the land, a private right to use those streets, subject to the right of the public to make them highways, in which case the private right becomes extinguished. The right so to use a private road does not necessarily mean a right over every part of the roadway, but only to such a width as may be necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of it. Sklitzsky v. Cranston, 22 O. R. 590.

VIII. SPECIAL STATUTES - SURVEYS UNDER.

Township of Binbrook.]—Under the statutes passed to remedy an erroneous public survey. In Binbrook, I Wm. IV. c. 8, 7 Wm. 1V. c. 8d., an inhabitant living in the front concessed and the dispossessed by ejectment concessed by the dispossessed by ejectment of the property of the disposses of the disposses of the property of the land, to whom alone these Acts and the property of the land, to whom alone these Acts and the property of the land, to whom alone Euck. Doe d. Crooks v. Catler, 7 U. C. R. 581.

Township of Cumberland.]—23 Vict. c. 101 declares the mode in which the side lines of the 1st concession of Cumberland shall be run, and provides a method by which those injured by the change from the original plan of survey may obtain compensation:—Held, that the general statute, 20 Vict. c. 78, was thereby excluded, and that defendant was confined to this method. Smith v. Sparrow, 21 U. C. R. 323. See Holmes v. McKechin, 23 U. C. R.

IX. SURVEYORS.

Adoption of Line.] - A line run by a subordinate and adopted by the principal (the surveyor) is the work of the latter. Ovens v. Davidson, 10 C. P. 302.

Contract - Formal Survey-Adoption of Former Line.]—R., who held a license from the government of New Brunswick to cut timber on certain Crown lands, claimed that timber on certain Crown lands, claimed that S., license of the adjoining lot, was cutting timber on his grant, and he issued a writ of replevin for some S00 logs alleged to be cut by S. The replevin suit was settled by an agreement between the parties to leave the matter to surveyors to establish the line between the two lots, the agreement providing that the lines of the land held under said license (of R.) should be surveyed and established by thaning the surveyors) and the stumps countries. (naming the surveyors) and the stumps counter, &c.:—Held, that under this agreement the surveyors were bound to make a formal survey, and could not take a line run by one of them at a former time as the said boundary line. Snowball v. Ritchie, 14 S. C. R. 741.

Liability of Township.] — Held, that the lownship council of Hamilton, coming in the place, under 12 Vict. c. 81, of the trustees of the Newcastle district, could not be held liable in debt to the surveyor appointed under 38 Geo. III. c. 1, to survey the township. Roach v. Municipal Council of Hamilton, § U.

Negligence - Duty - Contract - Damages. A surveyor in making a survey is under no statutory obligation to perform the duty, but undertakes it as a matter of con-tract, and is liable only for damages caused by want of reasonable skill, or by gross negli-gence. Township of Stafford v. Bell, 6 A. R. 273.

The defendant, a provincial land surveyor, who was employed by the plaintiffs to run certain lines for road allowances, proceeded upon a wrong principle in making the survey, and the plaintiffs sued him for damages which they had paid to persons encroached upon by openand paid to persons encroached upon by open-ing the road according to his survey;—Held, reversing the judgment in 31 C. P. 77, that the plaintifs could not recover, as, although the survey was made by the defendant on an erroneous principle, the evidence failed to prove that the lines as run by him were not correct. 1b.

Remarks upon the impropriety of receiving the opinions of surveyors as experts, as to the proper mode of making a survey under a statute. Ib.

Private Survey - Adjacent Land.]-A surveyor has no power to enter upon the lands of one neighbour to make a mere private survey for another. Turnbull v. McNaught, 14 C. P. 375.

X. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Boundaries - Ascertainment.] - Where there is a dispute as to the boundary line between two lots granted by patents from the Crown, and it has been found impossible to identify the original line, but two certain points have been recorded in the Crown lands department, the proper course is to run a straight line between the two certain points: R. S. Q. Art. 4155. Bell's Asbestos Co. v. Johnson's Co., 23 S. C. R. 225.

- Estoppel.]-J. McA. et al., plaintiffs' auteurs, having leased a certain portion of a added is, naving leased a certain portion of a lot of land for mining purposes, described in the deed by metes and bounds, with the fol-lowing option: "Pourra le dit acquéreur changer la course des lignes et bornes du dit lopin de terre sans en augmenter les bornes, lopin de terre sans en augmenter les nornes, l'étendue, on superficie, en suivant dans ce cas la course ou ligne de la dite veine de quartz qu'il peut y avoir et se rencontrer en cet endroit, après que lui, le dit bailleur, aura prospecté le dit lopin de terre susbaillé!' adopted certain lines of a survey made by one Proulx, as containing the vein of quartz. B. et al., defendants' auteurs, leased another portion of defendants' auteurs, leased another portion of the same lot In an action en bornage be-tween the parties the court appointed three surveyors to fix the boundaries, Each sur-veyor made a separate report, and the report and plan of the surveyor Legendre, adopting Prouls's lines, was adopted and homologated by the court:—Held, that plaintiffs' auteurs having located their claim in accordance with the terms of this deed, plaintiffs were now estopped from claiming that their property should be bounded according to the true course of the vein of quartz, and that the judgment homologating the survey adopting Prouls's or the vein or quartz, and that the judgment homologating the survey adopting Prouls's lines and survey was right and should be af-firmed. McArthur v. Brown, 17 S. C. R. 61.

Referce's Decision—Bornage—Arbitations,1—The owners of contiguous farms executed a deed for the purpose of settling a boundary line between their lands, thereby naming a third person to ascertain and fix the true division line upon the ground, and agreeing further to abide by his decision and accept the line which he might establish as correct. On the conclusion of the referee's operations, one of the parties refused to accept or act upon his decision, and action was brought by the other party to have the line so established declared to be the true boundary and to revindicate the strip of land lying upon his side of it:—Held, that the agreement thus entered into was a contract binding upon the parties to be executed between them according to the terms therein expressed, and was not subject to the formalities prescribed by the code of civil procedure relating to arbitrations. McGovy v. Leany, 27 S. C. R. 545.

Boundaries—Timber Licenses—Variations of Compass.]—Defendant claimed under a timber license which described his limits as bounded on the south by "the continuation of a line from the head of Mud Lake on the course north 54° E. formerly the boundary between T. C. and A. R. M.º The plaintiff claimed under a license which gave his northerly limit as the same line, describing it also as running N. 54° E. Both licenses were renewals of previous licenses from about 1839:—Held, that the boundary between them was the true astronomical line N. 54° E.; and that the plaintiff could not claim according to a line run in 1874 N. 54° E. magnetically, making no allowance for the variations of the compass. Thibaudeau v. Skead, 39 U. C. R. 387.

Compensation for Improvements in Consequence of Unskilful Survey.]—See Plumb v. Steinhoff, 2 O. R. 614.

Original Survey—Private Person.]—A survey made by a private person of an unsurveyed block granted by the Crown is the original survey, and has the same force and effect as if made by government authority. VanEvery v. Drake, 9 C. P. 478.

s. 35 of c. 93, C. S. U. C., the work upon the ground, in the original survey of towns and villages, to designate or define any lot, will override any plan of such lot. McGregor v. Calcutt, 18 C. P. 39.

Specific Performance — Varying Surveys, — The defendant had for some time used part of the plaintiff sland as a mill-pond, and differences existed between them in relation thereto, to put an end to which they entered into a written agreement that the plaintiff should sell to the defendant as much of the land as was or had been overflowed by the water of the mill-pond, for a price which was proved to be much beyond the intrinsic value of the piece of land so sold. To carry into effect this contract, the plaintiff had the ground surveyed, but the survey was errone-ous, and the deed which the plaintiff there-upon tendered comprised, in consequence, less land than the defendant was entitled to have. The defendant refused this deed, procured a new survey to be made, and tendered a new deed for execution by the plaintiff, which deed the plaintiff refused to execute. When the first installment of the purchase money became due the defendant tendered it, but did not pay, in consequence of the non-execution of the conveyance. The defendant continued to use the land for a mill-pond, and gave no intimation of his intention to abandon the contract; and twelve months afterwards the plaintiff filed a bill for a specific performance of the contract, which was decreed without costs. Paul v, Blackwood, 3 Gr. 394.

Stay of Proceedings—Improvements—Conveyance.]—Upon the facts of the case:—Held, that the court had no authority under s. 12 of 59 Geo. III. c. 14, to stay the proceedings until defendant received the value of his improvements, or until the plaintiff conveyed the land in dispute. Doe d. Short v. Bass, 8 U. C. R. 147.

- 2. Certainty and Particularity.
- (a) Alleging Contracts to be in Writing or by Deed.

Declaration, that in consideration that Declaration, that in consideration that plaintiff would sell and convey to defendant certain lands for £275, which were then subject to a mortgage of £700, defendant promised to pay off said mortgage, and save the plaintiff harmless therefrom &c.—Held, that it was unnecessary to allege the promise to be in writing. Martin v. Arthur, 16 U. C.

A declaration that the defendants, a corpora-A declaration that the defendants, a corpora-tion, by their duly authorized agents in that behalf, entered into an agreement in writing with the plaintiffs to refer a matter to ar-bitration:—Held, good, without averring the agreement to have been under seal, for that might be matter of evidence or the subject of a plen. Cultin v. Provincial Ins. Co., 20 C. P. 21.

A replication alleging a purchase of timber growing upon an allowance for road from a municipal council ought to shew a transfer by deed, or at least a contract of sale in writ-ing. Cochran v. Hislop, 3 C. P. 440.

Quære, as to the sufficiency of a plea to a written contract, that before breach it was rescinded and a new contract substituted, not alleging the rescission to have been in writing. Wingall v. Enniskillen Oil Co., 10 L. J. 216.

Where an agreement to convey land is aver-red in a plea to have been accepted in satisred in a piea to have been accepted in satisfaction of the cause of action, it must be alleged to have been in writing, for without this the plaintiff would have no remedy, Balsam v. Robinson, 19 C. P. 263.

Action for rent due on a lease. Plea, that after the lease the plaintiff "did grant and convey, by way of mortgage in fee simple," the demised premises to one M., who claimed the rent:-Held, sufficient, without averring that the conveyance was by deed. Perdue v. Hays, 31 U. C. R. 111.

Declaration on a note. Plea, on equitable grounds, setting up an agreement between plaintiff and defendant for a dissolution of partnership, and that the debts which were to have been assigned to defendant exceeded the note, &c. It was urged by defendant that, as the plea did not aver that the agreement for the dissolution was in writing, it must be assumed not to be so, and so in equity an account would have to be taken, and on this ground the plea was supportable: — Held, (1) that, even if such an averment were necessary, the defendant could not take advantage of the defect in his own pleading; and (2) that there was no necessity for such an averment, for the distinction in this respect between the declaration and subsequent pleadings is now abolished; and where a writing is necessary it need not be averred, but must be proved in evidence. Kilroy v. Simkins, 26. P. 281.

See, also, Clarke v. Carroll, 17 C. P. 538; Dalgleish v. Conboy, 26 C. P. 254; Kelly v. Isolated Risk Ins. Co., 26 C. P. 299.

(b) Averments of Identity,

A plea justifying the taking of A.'s goods under an execution against B., and that divers goods of B. were in the possession of A., without averring them to be the same goods, is bad on special demurrer. Frieman v. Bounelly, 5 O. S. 16.

To a count in trespass, defendants avowed under a distress for rent, alleging that the plaintiff raudulently removed certain of his goods from the demised premises, whereupon defendant took the said goods in the second count mentioned:—Held, plea good, and not open to the objection that the goods taken were not shewn to be the goods fraudulently removed. Hatch v. Holland, 28 U. C. R. 213.

See, also, Cameron v. Borrowman, 28 U. C. R. 262,

(c) Other Cases.

Declarations.]—In trespass qu. cl. fr. and for taking goods, it is not an objection on general demurrer that the goods were not alleged to be the plaintiff's. O'Brien v. Harahy, 1 U. C. R. 475.

Where the declaration alleges that A., wife of B., "having a lawful right to an estate in dower," refused with B. to execute a release, it will be intended that the release was required from A as the wife of B., and not as the wife of the former husband whom she had survived. Hoyt v. Widderfield, 5 U. C. R. 180.

Where a defendant is sued upon a promise to continue a former agreement, which at the time of the alleged promise is about expiring, the plaintiff should state in his declaration the precise terms of the former agreement, and also aver that the terms so stated composed the whole of the former agreement. Barnes v. McKay, 5 U. C. R. 246.

An uncertainty in the statement of a part of the consideration for the defendant's promise, with respect only to a part of the plaintiff's demand, does not make the declaration bad ca general demurrer. Bradford v. O'Brien, 6 U. C. R. 447.

An averment of a material fact in a pleading by way of quod cum is sufficient. Principal of Upper Canada College and Royal Grammar School v. Boulton, 2 C. P. 326.

This declaration, being a special one on the case against a sheriff for breach of duty, was considered insufficient from the fault of uncertainty, not in any particular breach, but as to the number of breaches intended to be relied upon. Reid v. Carrall, 8 U. C. R. 275.

Semble, that on non est factum, if it were shewn that there was but one agreement between the parties relating to the matter, the error in the recital of it would not be fatal, and the plaintiffs might recover. Wadsworth v. Townley, 10 U. C. R. 579.

A declaration stating that defendant falsely, deceiffully, fraudulently, and wilfully represented the maker and indorser (without naming them) of a promissory note, to be good:—Held, bad, for want of sufficient certainty. Neuman v. Kissock, S.C. P. 41.

Quere, whether, when a contract is to pay at a particular place named in a declaration, the general averment that the defendant did not pay, is not sufficient, and any statement as to the plaintiff not being at the place named to receive the money, or that defendant was there ready to pay it, must not arise by way of defence. Becker v. Town of Amherstburg, 23 C. P. 62.

Action for representations by which plaintiff was induced to contract:—Semble, that the declaration was bad, it not stating what the representations were, and how departed from. Reid v. Board of Agriculture for Upper Canada, 26 U. C. R. 565. See Armstrong v. Levien, 34 U. C. R. 269.

In declaring on a policy, guaranteeing to the extent of $20,000 the honesty and care of one W, while in the plaintiffs' employment as cashier, the plaintiffs alleged that while in their employment a sum exceeding $20,000 was intrusted to W, to be safely kept in the safe at their head office, of which $10,000 was lost owing to his negligence in regard to its custody:—Held, that the averment of W,'s neglect in the declaration was not too general. Royal Canadian Bank v, European Assurance Society, 29 U. C. R. 579 U. C. P. STONE CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

Remarks as to the use of ambiguous language in pleading. Macdonald v. Dick, 34 U. C. R. 623, Declaration, that the plaintiff agreed to buy and the defendant to sell 20,000 cubic feet of good merchantable board timber, of the quality and manufacture therein mentioned, to be delivered, as in the agreement set out, not later than 19th May next ensuing, the plaintiff to pay at the rate of twelve cents per cubic foot of timber so delivered at the times and in the manner in the agreement set out; that plaintiff, in pursuance thereof, paid the $300 on account; and all conditions were fulfilled, &c., yet defendant ofd not deliver the said timber or any part thereof:—Held, that the declaration was defective for uncertainty in not setting out what the agreement was as to the quality and manufacture and delivery, but that the defect was cured by the plea. Reid v. Robertson, 25 C. P. 568.

Allegation in a declaration that a chose in action "was duly assigned, in the manner required by the Act;"—Held, sufficient under 35 Vict. c. 12, s. 4. Cousins v. Bullen, 6 P. R. 71.

Declaration, that D., by writing, for valuable consideration, duly assigned to the plaintiff the sum of $5.00, money due and to become due to D. by defendants, whereof defendants had notice in writing, and at the time of and after said assignment, and after said notice, and before action, defendants were indebted to D. in money sufficient to pay the sum so assigned to plaintiff, &c.;—Held, bad, as not setting forth any fact from which the existence of and promise to pay a debt would be implied by law. Mitchell V. Goodall, 44 U. C. R. 308, and Brice v. Bannister, 3 Q. B. D. 509, distinguished. Smith v. Ancaster Township, 45 U. C. R. 86.

Subsequent Pleadings. —Where to a declaration in debt upon a bond, conditioned to pay money on the execution of a conveyance according to agreement, the plea stated that the plaintiffs had not made a conveyance according to the agreement, the plea was held bad for not shewing what the agreement was, although the agreement was referred to, and its contents might be collected from the condition of the bond as set out upon oyer. McGulray v. McDonnell, Tay, 139.

A plea of the Statute of Limitations stating that the causes of action, "if any such there were, or still are," did not accrue within six years, is bad on special demurrer. Meyer v. Burke, H. T. 6 Vict. See also Perdue v. Corporation of Chinguacousy, 25 U. C. R. 65.

A plea was held not objectionable as not admitting and avoiding the plaintiff's claim, but referring to it as the plaintiff's alleged claim, if any. Burrowes v. DeBlaquiere, 34 U. C. R. 498.

In covenant against a sheriff's sureties, the breach assigned was that the sheriff arrested a debtor and afterwards allowed him to escape. Defendant pleaded that the gaol was accidentally destroyed by fire, and so the debtor escaped:—Held, bad, for not denying that the fire occurred through the negligence or default of the sheriff or his deputy. Corkery v. Graham, 1 U. C. R. 315.

Declaration charging defendant with the non-performance of a contract. Plea, that the said contract was not duly performed by the said parties, to wit, the plaintiff and defendant, in manner, &c.—Held, bad, in leaving it uncertain which of the said parties had not performed and in what particular. Jones v. Hamilton, 3 U. C. R. 170.

Uncertainty as to time in plea:—Held, bad. Rees v. Dick, 7 U. C. R. 496.

In setting out a will in pleading, there is no necessity to aver that all the solemnities of the statute have been observed in regard to the execution of the will. The averment that the will was made and published as by law is required for the passing of real estate, is sufficient. Walton v. Hill, 8 U. C. R. 562.

To an action on a mutual insurance policy on a dwelling house and furniture, the defendants pleaded that a certain assessment was declared by defendants on plaintiff's premium note, of which assessment the plaintiff had due notice, but did not pay the same, whereby the policy became void:—Held, plea good: for that the allegation of due notice, without stating the particulars of the notice or the manner of giving it, was sufficient. Smith v. Mutual Ins. Co. of Clinton, 27 C. P. 441.

Semble, although the statute enacts that all by-laws made and passed shall be authenticated by seal, and signed by the person presiding, yet it is not necessary to set out these facts whenever a by-law is pleaded, but it is sufficient to aver that it was duly made and passed. Wilson v. Town of Port Hope, 10 U. C. R. 405.

In a justification by a landlord for evicting his tenant, relying upon a forfeiture of the term for non-payment of taxes:—Held, that it was unnecessary in the plea to set out every requisite to shew a valid rate, there being a distinction in this respect between an avowry and a justification. Taylor v. Jermyn, 25 U. C. R. 86.

See, also, Haacke v. Marr, S C. P. 441.

Plea justifying as poundkeeper the sale of an animal impounded—general allegation that all proceedings were lawfully had, &c.—sufficiency of. See Rourke v. Moscy, 26 U. C. R. 546.

Plea, bad for uncertainty in not shewing whether an agreement was made by an individual or a firm, and for not stating the Christian names of the members of the firm. Murray v. Mountloy, 4 C. P. 169.

First count, debt, on the statute for double value, claiming £40. Second count, for an occupation, claiming £20. Plea, to the whole declaration, "as to £20, parcel," &c.:—Held, bad, for not shewing to what £20 it was pleaded. Hamer v. Lainp, 13 U. C. R. 233.

A plea that a debenture was not issued "under the formalities required by law," because the by-law under which it was issued did not settle a special rate, and was therefore void:—Held, bad, for not averring distinctly that such debenture was issued in pursuance of a by-law, and for not pointing out wherein it was defective. Trust and Loan Co. of Upper Canada v. City of Hamilton, 7 C. P. 96.

Action upon an agreement in writing between plaintiff and defendant, by which the plaintiff was engaged as editor of a newspaper for one year at a salary payable quarterly. Defendant pleaded that the plaintiff so improperly and disobediently conducted himself, that he was obliged to dismiss him, "as he lawfully might?"—Held, plea good, though it would have been better to state the misconduct particularly, Hunter v, Foote, 12 C. P. 175.

Plea, that the plaintiff did not execute a lease when tendered him by defendant. Replication, that the plaintiff was ready and willing to execute the lease when tendered, but was prevented by the acts and misconduct of defendant, &c.:—Held, bad, for not shewing how defendant's acts and misconduct hindered and prevented plaintiff executing a lease expressly tendered to him for execution. Walker v. Kelly. 24 C. P. 174.

A plea setting up the assignment of a debt sued for before action, must state the name of the assignee or that it is unknown to defendant. Ferguson v. Elliot, 12 C. L. J. 249.

To an action for maliciously making demand for an assignment under the Insolvent Act, the defendants' third plea, after setting up a variety of dealings between the parties, shewing that the plaintiff had from time to time failed to meet his engagements with defendants, concluded that the plaintiff being indebted to the defendants in the sum of $1.400, and being unable to pay the same or to meet his engagements, and the plaintiff being also, to the knowledge of the defendants, bond fide helper in large sums to divers other persons, creditors of the plaintiff, the defendants, bond fide believing the plaintiff, the defendants, bond fide helpering the plaintiff, the defendants, bond fide helpering the plaintiff, the defendants, bond fide helpering from the manifest of the plaintiff, the defendants, bond fide helper fide to the plaintiff, the defendants, bond the plaintiff, as complete cause for so believing, and without malice, made a demand on the plaintiff, the c:—Held, a good plea, although it was not expressly averred in the words of s. 4 that the plaintiff had ceased to meet his liabilities generally as they became due, Quære, whether that expression means his liabilities generally. Nagle v. Timmins, 31 C. P. 221.

P. 350; Town of Peterborough v. Edwards, 31 C. P. 231.

3. Colour.

[By C. L. P. Act, c. 102, R. S. O. 1877 c. 50, express colour is unnecessary in any pleading.]

See Monaghan v. Hayes, 4 C. P. 1; Boswell v. Ruttan, 6 U. C. R. 199; Thompson v. Breakenridge, 3 O. S. 170. See, also, Millard v. Kirkpatrick, 4 U. C. R. 248.

4. Conditions Precedent.

The omission of an averment of a special request, where required, is matter of form only, and cannot be objected to on general demurrer. McLeod v. Jackson, 5 O. S. 381.

Declaration, that plaintiffs covenanted with defendants to do certain works within a limited period, with power to defendant on six days' notice to take the works out of plaintiffs' hands in default of sufficient progress to ensure completion of the said works within the time; but, omitting to set out the works,

"It is also understood that the work is to be carried on unceasingly night and day, with sufficient force to ensure its completion within the limited time." Averment, that though plaintiffs fulfilled the conditions precedent, defendants did take the works out of the plaintiffs' hands without notice or just cause, &c., whereby, &c.:—Held, on motion for nonsuit, to be no variance, as by s. 105 of C. L. P. Act, 1856, the averment of performance by plaintiff of conditions precedent, not denied by defendants, is sufficient. Hennessey
v. Weir, II C. P. 179.

Held, that in declaring on an agreement authorized by statute, "subject to the consent of two-thirds of the stockholders voting in person or by proxy," the general averment of the performance of all conditions precedent was sufficient, without alleging specially that the statutable consent had been obtained. Great Western R. W. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 25 U. C. R. 37.

If the memorandum sued upon had shewn a sale of the land in question by plaintiff to defendant, not a lease, so that the plaintiff would have been bound to tender a conveyance:—Semble, that such tender must have been alleged in the declaration, and would not be included in the general averment that "all things happened," &c., for such averment covers only conditions precedent to be performed by plaintiff under the agreement. Fairbairn y, Hilliard, 27 U. C. R. 111.

Declaration on a deed, set out in it, by which plaintiff was to do all the work on an extension of defendants' railway. By the 17th clause of the deed defendants economical to provide all the rails required for the extension and works connected therewith, and further, when required by plaintiff, to supply him with engines, &c., for the purpose of ballasting, &c. By the 19th clause defendants agreed to pay plaintiff for the work and materials the scheduled prices by monthly payments in certain proportions specified, and within a time named after the giving of a certificate by defendants' engineer. The declaration averred that "the plaintiff did all things necessary on his part to entitle him to have the said contract performed by defendants, and the time for so doing has elapsed:"—Held, that the general allegation would only cover acts to be done by the plaintiff, and therefore sufficiently averred the request by the plaintiff to provide the engines, &c., but not that the engineer had granted the certificates; but that this defect was covered by defendants pleading over. Shanly v. Midland R. W. Co., 33 U. C. R. 604.

In an action on an order made under the Companies Act, 1862, in England, in the winding-up of a company, making a call upon defendant in respect of his shares, and directing payment thereof to one of the two official liquidators appointed:—Held, that the general averment that all things happened, &c., necessary to render defendant liable to pay and entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action, sufficiently alleged, if defendant could be considered as being charged as a past member, that the court was of opinion that the present members were unable to pay, and that the call was a debt accrued before defendant ceased to be a member. Barned's Banking Co. v. Reynolds, 36 U. C. R. 256.

In replevin for a mare, defendant justified under a by-law of the township, enacting that the pound-keeper should impound any horse for unlawfully running at large, &c., delivered to him for that purpose by any person resident within the township; and that the person distraining should deliver to him at the same time duplicate written statements of his demand against the owner, and, if required by the pound-keeper, a written ages the distress should prove the control of the statements of his demand against the owner, and, if required by the pound-keeper, a written ages the distress should prove the case. The plea alleged that surget, to have a large and doing anamer in the township, "as ally impounded by a lawfully authorized pound-keeper of said township," &c., and thereupon all proceedings were lawfully had, all steps taken, notices given, and time elapsed, necessary to enable the pound-keeper to sell said mare, &c.;—Held, on demurrer, plea bad, for not alleging that the mare was delivered to the pound-keeper by a resident of the township; and that this allegation was not supplied by the general averment that all proceedings were had, &c., which applied only to what took place after the impounding. Held, also, that the other requisites of the by-law, as to the statement of sale, &c., were covered by the general allegation. Rourke v. Mosey, 30 U. C. R. 546.

5. Construction and Meaning.

The present rule is, to maintain pleading demurred to, if it can be properly maintained. McCulloch v. White, 33 U. C. R. 338; Kelly v. Isolated Risk Ins. Co., 26 C. P. 305.

And to give to it a meaning that will support rather than one which will destroy it. Shannon v. Gore District Mutual Ins. Co., 37 U. C. R. 388.

The court assumes a pleading which alleges an agreement to import a valid agreement; and it is unnecessary in any pleading to aver that the contract set up is in writing. Dalpleish v. Conboy, 26 C. P. 258.

II. AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

1. Generally.

The court will not allow an amendment the effect of which would be contrary to the justice of the cause. Corby v. Cotton, 3 L. J. 50. See also McKenzie v. Van Sickles, 17 U. C. R. 226.

An amendment should not be allowed, where the effect of it is to make the pleading demurrable. Bank of Upper Canada v. Ruttan, 22 U. C. R. 451.

Semble, that it is not proper to allow amendments at the trial which end or must end in a demurrer. Sheerman v. Toronto. Grey, and Bruce R. W. Co., 34 U. C. R. 451.

Under the C. L. P. Act, s. 222, all amendments necessary to determine the real question in controversy are imperative, without reference to the character of the action or defence. The only point for the court or a Judge to determine is, whether they are so necessary. Bank of Montreal v. Reynolds, 24 U. C. R. 381.

2. Adding Counts, Pleas, and Replications.

IV. DECLARATIONS.

1. Commencement and Conclusion.

Declaration on an award, concluding as in debt:—Held, bad, on demurrer, as an informal declaration on the bond of submission. Simpson v. Mode, 6 O. S. 511.

It is no ground of special demurrer that in the commencement of his declaration the plaintif appears in person, and the declaration is signed at the conclusion by a person as his attorney. Murphy v. Burnham, 2 U. C. R.

Declaration against executors, averring that an action had accrued to the plaintiff to demand "from defendants, executors as aforesaid, &c.." instead of "from the defendants, as executors:"—Held, good. Ferrie v. Jones, 5 U. C. R. 504.

An improper conclusion to a declaration was a good ground of special demurrer. Hart v. Meyers, 7 U. C. R. 416.

A declaration filed under and pursuant to s. 60 of C. S. U. C. c. 22, and not shewing at its commencement the date of issue of the writ as required by s. 85 of the same Act, is irregular. Halley v. Staunton, 9 L. J. 158.

Section 85 of C. L. P. Act is obligatory, and a declaration was set aside because it did not commence by shewing whether the plaintiff sued in person or by attorney. Monck v. Northwood, 2 C. L. J. 268.

2. Joinder of Counts.

| Formerly counts framed in different forms of action could not be joined; but by C. L. P. Act, s. 84, R. S. O. 1877 c. 59, this restriction was done away with. See rule (1897) 132 et seq. |

One count for slander stated a cause of action accruing to the plaintiffs as partners, as being an injury to them in their joint business; other counts charged defendant with imputing forgery to the plaintiffs. The imputation of forgery not being a partnership imputation, the declaration was held, bad, for misjoinder of counts. Morley v. Nichols, 1 U. G. R. 235.

A declaration containing two counts for delivering lumber to plaintiff less in quantity and inferior in quality to that contracted for, thereby deceiving the plaintiff, was held, not objectionable for misjoinder of counts, both being either in tort or in assumpsit. Keise v. Miller, 2 C. D. 296.

Causes of action in replevin and trespass may not be joined under s. 75 of C. L. P. Act, 1856. Great Western R. W. Co. v. Chadwick, 3 L. J. 29.

In an action by a husband, one count was for a ground of action for which he could not sue alone; another count combined different causes of action, for some of which he should sue alone, and others for which the wife should be joined:—Held, that the proper course was, to arrest judgment, and not to award a venire de novo. Smith v. Carder, 11 U. C. R. 77.

For other cases under the old practice in this respect, see Beebe v. Secord, Tay. 409; Ross v. Webster, 5 U. C. R. 570; Land v. Woodward, 5 U. C. R. 190; Quin v. School Trustees, 7 U. C. R. 130; McLeod v. Eberts, 7 U. C. R. 251; Morrison v. Carrall, 1 C. P. 226; Curry v. McLeod, 12 U. C. R. 545; Taylor v. Brown, 17 C. P. 387.

Semble, that it is improper to join with a count for distraining when no rent was due, a count for the seizure and conversion of the goods. Robinson v. Shields, 15 C. P. 386.

An executor or administrator may by a submission to arbitration preclude himself from pleading plene administravit, and thus render cutor or administrator, refer causes of action which arose in the lifetime of the testator or intestate, so as to bind the estate only; and therefore, the declaration being for non-performance of an award made in pursuance of such a reference, and also, on the common counts admittedly against the defendant in her representative character: — Held, that there was no misjoinder of causes of action. Reid v, Reid, 16 C. P. 247.

The plaintiff having demurred merely to the plea to the first count:—Held, that defendant could not except to the declaration on the ground of misjoinder of counts, as that objection could only arise on demurrer to the whole declaration. Taylor v. Brown, 17 C. P. 387.

Different causes of action included in the same declaration may be served and tried separately. Fitzsimmons v. McIntyre, 5 P. R. 119.

After a count by husband and wife for injury done to the wife during coverture, a second count by the husband alone—after setting out the fact that the horse and cutter in which both plaintiffs at the time were, had been precipitated over a bridge with the wife, and that she was thereby greatly injured, and and that she was thereby greatly higher, and laid up for a long time in consequence of the injuries sustained by her, and endured great suffering—proceeded to allege that the husband was put to great trouble and expense by reason of the loss of his wife's society and her services, and was compelled to pay, and did pay, large sums of money on account of her pay, large sums of money on account illness to nurses and medical men, &c., and also lost the said horse and cutter, and was otherwise put to great expense, &c. The jury having found for the plaintiffs, and assessed damages generally on both counts:-Held, that after verdict the second count must be treated as a count only for the damage of the husband, for which he alone could sue; and that, treating it as such, it was well joined with the first count, under the C. L. P. Act, though damages were sought by him for the injury to the horse and cutter, as well as for that resulting to the husband from the injury to the wife. Campbell v. Great Western R. W. Co., 20 C. P. 345, S. C., in appeal, ib. 563.

The declaration was held, bad, for a misjoinder of causes of action, being for royalties payable severally to the plaintiffs, and also for other royalties payable to them jointly. McGiverin v, Turnbull, 32 U. C. R. 407.

R. 498, 506; Ley v. Louden, 10 U. C. R. 380; Parsons v. Crabb, 24 U. C. R. 136; McKenzie v. McKitiridge, 24 C. P. 145.

Piess held had, in actions on bills and notes, as pleaded to the whole declaration, and answering the part. Wood v. Rogers, 2 U. C. R. 309, Property Wood v. Rogers, 2 U. C. R. 301, Property of the property

(b) Disjunctive Pleas.

See Gieynne v. Brock, 6 O. S. 271; Müller v. Hamilton, 1 U. C. R. 428; Upper v. Hamilton, 1 U. C. R. 467; Wright v. Benson, 5 U. C. R. 249; Turner v. Ham, 6 U. C. R. 255.

(c) General Issue by Statute.

[See Rule 21 of T. T., 1856, and see Con. Rule (1897) 287.]

A defendant in trespass for false imprisonment cannot urge that he arrested as a constable, and that the action was brought in a wrong county, if he has omitted to insert in the margin of his plea, "by statute," unless the court can say, upon the facts proved at the close of the plaintiff's case, that defendant was acting as constable. Brown v. Shae, 5 U. C. R. 141.

Where the plaintiff's evidence shews that the defendant, sued in trespass, was acting bona fide as a justice of the peace, and the jury so find, the plaintiff must prove notice of action; and this though defendant has pleaded only the general issue, without adding "by statute," in the margin. Marsh v. Boulton, 4 U. C. R. 354.

A marginal reference "according to statute," instead of "by statute:"—Held, sufficient. Robertson v. Cooley, 7 U. C. R. 305.

Any statute relied upon for the defence must be referred to in the margin, as well as that by which such plea is allowed. But where such a statute had been omitted in the county court, this court, on appeal, directed the court below to amend by inserting it. Yan Nattery, Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 27 U. C. R. 581. See, also, Belch v. Arnott, 9 C. P. 68.

Held, that defendants proceeding to straighten a highway, acting as trustees of the highway under a by-law of the municipal council passed in 1848, and under proceedings in general quarter sessions in 1823, and in so doing encroaching on the plaintiff's possession, were not entitled to the protection of 50 Geo. III. c. 1. Nor could they give the special matter in evidence under the general issue. Joy v. McKinn, 1 C. P. 13.

Where a road company was sued for not keeping their road in repair: — Held, that they could not, under 16 Vict. c. 190. s. 53, plead the general issue and give any special defence in evidence, the injury complained of not being anything done by them in pursuance of the act, but a duty omitted. March v. Port Dover and Otterville Road Co., 15 U. C. R. 138.

Semble, that in an action for not making a convenient crossing over defendants' railway, which intersected plaintiff's land, being for nonfeasance, the defendants could not plead the general issue by statute. Reist v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 15 U. C. R. 355.

Action by an administratrix for an alleged action by an administratrix for an alleged in digging and opening a drain in one of the highways of the city of Ottawa, and leaving it at night uncovered, without any fencing, guard, or light, whereby the deceased, passing along the street at night, was injured, and in consequence died:—Held, that defendants were entitled to plead the general issue by statute 35 Vict. c. 80, s. 28 (O.) (their act of incorporation), for the act complained of was something done by them, i. e., digging the drain without protecting properly, not a mere omission. Cairns v. Water Commissioners for City of Ottawa, 25 C. P. 551.

auging the drain without protecting properly, not a mere omission. Cairns v, Water Commissioners for City of Ottava, 25 C. P. 551. A plea of the general issue by statute, where no statute is applicable, is not demurable; but the reference to the statute may be struck out on motion. <math>Ib.

A defendant was not allowed to plead special pleas in addition to the general issue, "by statute." O'Donohoe v. Maguire, 1 P. R. 131; Dale v. Coon, 2 P. R. 160.

A person acting in aid of a bailiff may plead under the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 54, but not if he be a mere volunteer interfering from the interest which he has in the process. Daie v. Coon, 2 P. R. 160. In an action for taking gravel from land in a manner contrary to a special agreement: —Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover, for the defendants were not bound by the agreement; and, besides, it being entered into with the plaintiffs jointly, they could not maintain separate actions. Pew v. Buffalo and Lake Huron R. W. Co., 17 U. G. R. 282.

Title to land does not, on mere suggestion, necessarily come in question under a plea of not guilty by statute in the county court. The general rule is, that it must not only be pleaded, but be verified by affidavit. Ball v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 16 C. P. 252.

In a penal action for not affixing stamps to a note under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 4, s. 5, which must, by 31 Eliz. c. 5, be brought within a year, defendant may take advantage of this statute under a plea of not guilty; and he was held not precluded from such defence by having marked in the margin of his plea, the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 4, only. Mason v. Mossop, 29 U. C. R. 500.

An equitable defence is not admissible under the general issue by statute. Brown v. Blackwell, 35 U. C. R. 239.

(d) General Issue-" Not Guilty."

IX. SETTING ASIDE OR STRIKING OUT PLEADINGS.

1. Embarrassing Pleas.

The court refused to strike out several pleas on the ground that they amounted to the general issue, which was also pleaded; and, semble, the plaintiff should have demurred. Truax v. Christy, Dra. 213.

Plea set aside as being tricky, meant for delay, and not issuable. Sherwood v. March, 1 C. L. Ch. 176.

Pleas ordered to be amended as calculated to prejudice or embarrass, within s. 119 of C. L. P. Act. Green v. Hurd, 4 P. R. 336; Cowan v. White, 9 L. J. 131.

Having erroneously treated a plea as a nullity, and signed judgment, which was set aside, it was held not to prevent the plaintiff from afterwards moving to set the plea aside as irregular and embarrassing. Abell v. Glen, 6 P. R. 64.

An equitable plea to an action upon a promissory note, that the plaintiff had covenanted to pay the defendant's debts, which covenant he had broken, whereby the defendant was damnified to an amount equal to the amount of the note sued upon:—Held, bad, and struck out as embarrassing. Griffith v. Griffith, 6 P. R. 172.

Action against a married woman on a promissory note. Plea, coverture. Replication, that the note was made with respect to property which was defendant's separate property, within the meaning of 35 Yet. c. 16, s. 9 There was also a replication, on equitable grounds, that the defendant had separate estate:—Held, that the first replication must be struck out as unnecessary and embarrassing. Quebce Bank v. Howe, 6 P. R. 347.

The C. L. P. Act. R. S. O. 1877 c. 50, s. 120, empowers the court or a Judge to strike out pleas not merely where they are embarrassing to the pleas are confused in terms and so difficult to understand, but where they combine several defences in one plea, or are repetitions of a defence already pleaded, and may thus be embarrassing, or prejudice a fair trial. In this case, being an action on promissory notes, the defendant, having pleaded total failure of consideration, added other pleas repeating that defence, and setting up, besides, another agreement, not necessarily connected with the notes, and so stated as to leave it uncertain whether it was intended as a separate defence or as supporting the other defence: — Held, that such pleas were properly struck out. Abell v. McLaren, 31 C. P. 517.

See, also, Simpson v. Kerr, 33 U. C. R. 345.

2. False or Fraudulent Pleas.

Even after verdict the court will order a plea of release to be taken off the files, if clearly shewn to be fraudulent. Rowand v. Tyler, 3 O. S. 630.

The court will not interfere summarily to set aside a plea on the ground of fraud, except in manifestly clear cases. Waltenberger v. McLean, 4 U. C. R. 350; Smith v. Dissitt. 5 U. C. R. 200; Watt v. Buell, I. C. L. Ch. 103.

A Judge has power to strike out a plea false in fact, when a proper case is made out for doing so. Boxes v. Howell, 2 C. L. Ch. 134; Bank of Upper Canada v. Ketchum, 4 L. 1, 69. See Wanzer v. Stoutenburgh, 13 U. C. R. 184.

To an action on a bond, the defendant's only plea was clearly no defence, but by demurring the plaintiff would be thrown over an assize. On an affidavit that the plaintiff believed the plea to be vexatious and false, it was ordered to be set aside, and defendant was allowed to plead issuably, on terms. Bears v. Neville, 1 P. R. 361.

When a plea has been struck out as false and bad in law, another plea setting up the same defence, but so worded as to make it good in law, will not in general be allowed. Pleading a second time without paying the costs of previous pleas struck out with costs, will not make the latter pleas irregular. Bank of Upper Canada v. Ketchum, 4 L. J. 69.

A plea merely for time, and admitted in a proceeding in the cause to be false in fact, will be struck out under 34 Vict. c. 12, s. 8, and leave given to sign final judgment. McMaster v, Beattie, 6 P. R. 162.

Ejectment on mortgage. Defendant appeared, but on examination under Administration of Justice Act, 1873, he admitted the execution of the mortgage, and that the defence was merely for time:—Held, that the appearance and defence could not be struck out, as defendant was entitled to possession until plaintiff should prove his case. Metropoliten Building and Savings Society v. Rodden, 6 P. R. 294.

A summons to strike out defendant's plea, as proved to be false by his examination under the desired of anti-matter between the desired at th

Held, that defendant's admission that his defence was for time, was not sufficient evidence of the falsity of the plea to entitle the plaintiff to have it struck out; but that the further admission that he had "no real defence," supplied the defect. Davis v. Code, 7 P. R. 2.

Defendant contracted to sell and convey to plaintiff certain real estate, and covenanted to give possession within certain times specified. Defendant found it necessary, in order to recover possession of the property from a third party, to require from plaintiff an assignment of all his interest in the land. The deed of assignment was accordingly made by plaintiff to defendant, and only for the purpose of the proposed action of ejectment. Afterwards plaintiff, to thaving received possession of the land according to the terms of the contract, commenced an action against defendant on his covenant. Defendant pleaded that before breach, the plaintiff, by the deed already mentioned, bargained, sold, and assigned to defendant all his interest in the land. Plaintiff, with a full knowledge of the facts, in order to get down at the then approaching assizes, took issue and served notice of trial. Afterwards plaintiff obtained a summons to set aside the plea with costs, and to be allowed to sign judgment as for want of a plea, without prejudice to his notice of trial, and that such notice of trial, should stand as a notice of assessment of damages, the plea being against good faith; or that the plaintiff should, without prejudice to the notice of trial, have leave to reply on equitable grounds the facts above stated. An order was made to strike out the plea, and giving plaintiff leave to sign judgment unless he preferred to take an order to add the proposed equitable replication; but, under the circumstances, the Judge refused to go further, and allow the notice of trial to stand. Dickson v. Grimshowe, 10 L. J. 192.

Upon an application to strike out pleas under the A. J. Act, leave may be granted to add a plea if supported by affidavits verifying the same Johnson J. D. P. 28.

a plea if supported by affidavits verifying the same. Johnson v. Johnson, 7 P. R. 288.

Pleas struck out, under the circumstances detailed in the report, as being shewn by defendant's examination to be untrue. Ib.

Upon his examination under R. S. O. 1877 c. 50, s. 156, the defendant swore that he did not know whether the note sued on was stameed or not when it was signed, and a co-defendant swore that it was:—Held, that the plea could not be struck out, for that can only be done under the above Act where defendant admits it to be untrue. Imperial Bank v. Summerfelt, 7 P. R. 320.

To an action on a promissory note defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations. Five years after the note was made defendant signed an agreement written on the note that it "should continue a good security notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations." Leave to strike out the plea was refused, but the plaintiff was allowed to put in a special replication. Post v. Leys, 7 P. R. 357.

Defendants upon their examination under R. S. O. 1877 c. 50, s. 156, admitted that their only ground for denying the plaintiff's incorporation was, that they did not know that the plaintiff's had ever been incorporated, and acknowledged that they had joined in a bond to the plaintiff's as a company:—Held, that the plea could not be struck out, as evidence might be produced shewing that they had ceased to be a corporate body. Queen Ins. Co. v. Boyd, 7 P. R. 379.

See Pegg v. Nasmith, 28 C. P. 330; Doyle v. Owen Sound Printing Co., 8 P. R. 69.

3. Other Cases.

Count—Jurisdiction.]—Striking out count in county court suit, to meet objection as to jurisdiction. Fitzsimmons v. McIntyre, 5 P.

County Court — Title to Land.] — A county court Judge, at the trial of a case, upon the application of plaintiff's counsel, struck out a count of the declaration and all pleadings relating thereto, because the pleadings thereunder ousted his jurisdiction, by brigning title to land in question:—Held, that he had the power to do so. Fitzsimmons v. Melniyre, 5 P. R. 119.

Issues of Fact—Order—Leave to Plead.]—A defendant will be allowed, where the plaintiff's declaration is held bad on demurrer, upon payment of the plaintiff's costs of the application and of the replication, to strike out the issues in fact upon some of the pleas, and need not move to rescind the order allowing him to plead several matters. Westover v. Bronch, 5 P. R. 215.

PLEADING IN EQUITY BEFORE THE JUDICATURE ACT.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Construction of Pleading-Facts within Knowledge of Opposite Party.]—It is the duty of the court on perusing a pleading with a view of ascertaining whether or not it is sufficient on denurrer, to put a fair and reasonable construction on the pleading, to ascending to ascending to the construction on the pleading to ascending to the language used; and to be interest except the language used; and the plaintiff to relief, to allow the same and the plaintiff to relief, to allow the same and the plaintiff to relief, to allow the same and the plaintiff to relief, to allow the same and the plaintiff to relief, and the same and the sam

Dower — Express Averment.]—Where a widow is made a defendant as being entitled to dower, it is not sufficient for the bill to allege that the husband died leaving her his widow; the bill should further expressly aver that she is entitled to dower, and that she claims to be so entitled. Martin v. McGlaskan, 15 Gr. 485.

Positive Allegations.] — On demurrer ore tenus:—Held, that every material allegation in a bill must be positive. Yarrington v. Lyon, 2 Ch. Ch. 22.

Reformation of Document—Opposite Party, —Semble, it does not follow because a plaintiff asks in his bill for reformation of a document that therefore a defendant is entitled to claim the same relief though he has not asked for it. Wolffe v. Hughes, 1 O. R. 322.

Stating Effect of Document.]—Where a party alleges the legal operation and effect of an instrument, he is bound by such allegation. Foster v. Beall, 15 Gr. 244.

Useless Statements—Costs.]—Pleadings should be in language and statement as brief and concise as possible, and neither matters of argument nor evidence should be introduced into them. Where pleadings are filed containing useless or improper statements, or admissions so restricted as to render proof necessary, the costs of such pleading will not be allowed to the party filing it; but, on the contrary, he will be ordered to bear the costs occasioned thereby. Kennedy v. Lawlor, 14 Gr. 224.

2. Certainty and Particularity.

Account-Allegation of Payment.] - The bill alleged that tenants pur autre vie had sold and conveyed to a railway company land for their roadway. After the cesser of the life estate the parties entitled in remainder filed a bill against the vendors and the company, seeking discovery as to what estate or interest the vendors had conveyed, stating that the company alleged that they had paid the vendors the full price of the fee in land, and that they (the vendors) were liable to account for the price so paid, and prayed for an account and payment to the plaintills of a proper share or proportion thereof:—Held, on demurrer by the vendors, that no sufficient ground of equity was alleged against them; the plaintills, how bill alleged that tenants pur autre vie had sold was alleged against them; the plaintiffs, however, to be at liberty to amend their bill as they should be advised. Ouston v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 26 Gr. 93.

railway company paid to tenants for life the full price of the land conveyed by them to the company for their line of railway, and on the cesser of the life estate the parties entitled in remainder filed a bill stating that the railin remainder filed a fill stating that the Fairway company assumed to purchase the lands for the right of way; that the company alleged that they had paid the full consideration for the land to the tenants for life; submitting that if the company did make such payment that if the company did make such payment they did so in their own wrong, and asking for payment of the plaintiff's share of the pur-chase money: — Held, (1) that the word "assumed" was a sufficient allegation of the assumed was a summent allegation of the fact of sale and conveyance. But (2) that the statement that the company "alleged" that the purchase money was all paid to the vendors was not such a positive statement of the fact of payment to the tenants for life as to make them proper parties to the bill, and a demurrer was allowed on this ground. Oveston v. Grand Trunk R. W. Co., 28 Gr. 428.

Damage—Statement of, |—In a bill filed by a mortgager against his son, a bidder at the sale by a loan company, to which bill the company and one B. were also defendants, it was alleged that it had been agreed between the son and B. that, in consideration of the son securing to B. a debt of the plaintiff, B. would advance the deposit necessary to enable the son to buy the land at the sale; that the son should attend and buy in the land, which he accordingly did; that in consequence of E.'s refusal to make the promised advance the son was unable to carry out the sale; that the bidding of the son deterred others present from bidding; and that B. afterwards privately bought the land at a great undervalue, to the loss of the plaintiff:—Held, on demurrer, that the bill sufficiently, though inartifically, alleged that by reason of B.'s agreement and refusal to make the advance agreed upon, he had occasioned an abortive sale and profited thereby, to the loss and damage of the plaintiff. Campion v. Brackenridge, 28 Gr. 201.

Deed—Allegation of Delivery.]—Held, that the bill set out in the report sufficiently averred the delivery of the alleged deed, and that the defect, if any, was removed by the answer. Smith v. Doyle, 4 A. R. 471.

Dower—Bar by Lapse of Time—Statutes.]—In a bill seeking to obtain the benefit of a sale of land freed from the dower of the widow of the deceased owner, it was alleged that he had died at such a time as would, if true, bar the widow's right to dower, and submitted "that the defendant E. B. (the widow) is not entitled to dower?"—Held, a sufficient allegation that the defendant's right to dower was barred by the statute, though it omitted to state that this was the legal result of any particular statute. Banks v. Bellamy, 27 Gr. 342.

Positive Allegations—Necessity for.]— Every material allegation in a bill should be positive; and an allegation that, so far as the plaintiffs knew, an assignee had not accepted the assignment executed by an insolvent, was held insufficient. Yarrington v. Lyon, 12 Gr. 308.

An information to restrain a nuisance caused by the erection of a fence on a public highway, alleged that "the defendants or some or one of them" had put up such fence:—Held, bad, as being too uncertain an allegation as to who had committed the act complained of. Attorney-General v. Boutton, 20 Gr. 402.

By an amendment it was stated that, subsequently to the filing of the bill, the Federal Bank gave notice that they claimed a lien on A. M.'s bond to S. M. to assure payment of the purchase money as assignee of S. M., but there was no distinct allegation that a bond was given:—Held, that the defendants could not be required to answer a statement so uncertain and inconclusive. St. Michael's College v. Merrick, 1 A. R., 520.

Title—Statement of.] — Where a sale of railway stock and bonds was effected by a partnership, a mortgage being taken back to secure part of the purchase money, and one of the partners subsequently died:—Held, that the right to enforce payment of the unpaid purchase money remained in the surviving partner, whether the subject of sale was to be treated as realty or goods and chattels. In such a case, the plaintiff in his bill set forth that he, as well on his own behalf as that of the firm, sold to the purchaser and the purchaser bought from the plaintiff and the firm; and then alleged the death of his partner, "leaving the plaintiff sole surviving partner of the said firm; and the plaintiff is now solely entitled to all the interest of the said firm under the said agreement with the defendant," the purchaser:—Held, that this sufficiently stated the title of the plaintiff as the surviving partner of the firm. Bolckow v. Foster, 24 Gr. 333.

A bill set forth the plaintiff's title to land by mesne conveyances from the grantee of the Crown; stating that the plaintiff had gone into possession, not saying when, and not saying that any of the parties through whom he derived the title had been in possession. It alleged that the defendant pretended to be able to establish title to the land by possession as the assignee of one E. K.; and that E. K. was for a short period (not saying how long) in possession. It charged that the conveyance to the defendant was a cloud on the plaintiff's title, and prayed the usual relief. The bill was taken pro confesso:—Held, that its allegations were insufficient and too vague to entitle the plaintiff to a decree. Carson v. Cryster, 16 Gr. 499.

A bill alleged that the defendants A, had taken from their co-defendants B, their "line of railway for a certain number of years, the unexpired, and the state of special spec

The bill stated that the plaintiff was grandson of L., who had died intestate:—Held, that this did not sufficiently state the title of the plaintiff. Lario v. Walker, 28 Gr. 216.

PLEADING SINCE THE JUDICATURE ACT.

I. Generally.

Admissions—Inference.]—When a pleading contains an answer to allegations in the opposite pleading, which is insensible if not read as admitting certain statements, those statements must be taken as admitted. Richardson v. Jenkin, 10 P. R. 292.

- Inference — Incidental Proceedings - Quebcc Law.]—See Guertin v. Gosselin, 27 S. C. R. 514.

Arrangement of Defences.] — The plaintiff should not be driven to spell out the defences set up in an action. He is entitled to have them set forth in such manner as will enable him, upon reading them, to form a fairly correct judgment as to their scope and meaning, and as to what is intended to be relied upon under them. Dryden v. Smith, 17 P. R. 305.

Conditions Precedent—Performance.]— Under the Ontario Judicature Act the performance of conditions precedent to a right of action must still be alleged and proved by the plaintiff. Home Life Association of Canada v. Randall, 30 S. C. R. 97.

Hypothetical Defences.] — Quære, whether hypothetical defences can be pleaded. Smith v. Fair, 14 O. R. 729.

Material Facts—Absence of Denial.]—
Under the system of pleading in the high court of justice and in county courts under the Judicature Act, rules 128, 146, 147, 148, 240, where a material fact is alleged in a pleading, and the pleading of the opposite party is silent with respect thereto, the fact must be considered as in issue. Waterloo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 4 O. R. 295, approved of. Seabrook v. Young, 14 A. R. 97.

II. AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

1. Adding or Substituting New Claim.

Conspiracy—Account — Parties.] — The action as framed was to recover damages for an alleged conspiracy between the defendants, the plaintil's partner in a mercantile business and another, whereby they fraudulently and secretly withdrew money from the assets of the firm. The real grievance was the alleged misappropriation by the plaintil's partner, with the assistance of the other defendant, of partnership and of the plaintil's. At the trial the plaintil's ought to amend by alleging that moneys were received by the other defendant in trust for the firm, and by adding the firm's assignee for the benefit of creditors as a party, and by claiming an account:—Held, by a divisional court, that the amendment, which had been refused, should have been granted upon proper terms as to costs. Held, by the court of appeal, that refusing the plaintiff leave to amend by adding the assignee of the firm for the benefit of creditors as a party and by claiming an account of the moneys withdrawn by the defendants, was a proper exercise of discretion by the trial Judge, which ought not to have been interfered with by the divisional court. Smith v. Boyd, 18 P. R. 76, 296.

Different Cause of Action—Service out of Jurisalicition — Limitation of Actions.]—
Where a writ of summons in an action for a specified cause has been issued and served upon defendants out of the jurisalicition, with a statement of claim, pursuant to an order under rule 271, and the defendants have appeared, an order may properly be made allowing the plaintiffs to amend the statement of claim by adding a new claim for an entirely different cause of action, provided that it is a claim in respect of which leave to serve process out of the jurisdiction might have been obtained. Holland v. Leslig. [1894] 2 Q. B. 336, 450, followed. Held, also, that the plaintiffs should, in respect of the Statute of Limitations running against their added claim, be placed in the same position as if their action for the added claim had been brought at the date of the amendment. Hogaboom v. MacCulloch, 17 P. R. 377.

Foreclosure—Possession.] — The plaintiff interest of the land in dispute, as being the assignee of a lease made by him to the defendants, who assigned to a third party, who assigned to a third party, who assigned and surrendered to the plaintiff. The defence was that the lease was in effect a mortgage, and fraud and want of consideration were alleged:—Held, that the plaintiff could not amend his statement of claim, and ask a foreciosure of the land as mortgage. Mellhargey v. McClinnis, 9 P. R. 157.

Negligenee — Third Party — Direct Claim against.] — An action for damages for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk was brought against a city corporation, who, under R. S. O. 1887. c. 184, a. 5541, a. 5. 4, b. tained an order adding O. as a forty defendant, and alleged in their defence that O. was responsible for the defects in the sidewalk, and asked a remedy over against him. O. delivered a defence derying the cause of action, and alleging that, if any accident ecurred, two through the neglect of the open correct of the control of the correct of granted, and judgment was entered against O. for the damages awarded:—Held, that the leave to amend was properly granted, and the judgment should be affirmed. Stillineay v. City of Toronto, 20 O. R. 98.

Seduction—Alternative Cause of Action—Surprise.—In an action for enticing away and having carnal knowledge of the plaintiff's daughter, the plaintiff was allowed at the close of the case to amend by setting up, as an alternative cause of action, the enticing away of the daughter and having connexion with her by force and against her will, and consequent loss of service. No application was made by the defendants to put in further evidence, nor was any suggestion made that they were in any way prejudiced by the amendment:—Held, that the amendment was properly allowed. Cole v. Hubble, 26 O. R. 279.

Specific Performance — Inconsistent Cleins. — At the hearing of a suit by P. to enforce performance of an agreement by the decise of land under a will to convey it to P., he claimed to be entitled to a decree in the event of the ease made by his bill failing, on the ground that the will was not registered according to the registry laws of New Brunswick, and was therefore void as against him an intending purchaser, and C. had an interest in the land be had arreed to sell to him as an heir-st-law of the estate: ——Heid, that on a bill claiming title under the will. P. could not have relie based on the proposition that the same will was void against him, and no amendment could be permitted to make a case not only at variance with but antagonistic to, that set out in the bill, especially as such amendment was not asked for until the hearing. Porter v. Hale, 23 S. C. R. 205.

See Todd v. Dun. 15 A. R. 85; Townsend v. O'Keefe, 18 P. R. 147; Leggat v. Marsh, 29 S. C. R. 739; Rodger v. Noxon Co., 19 P. R. 327.

2. Adding New Defence.

Bills of Sale Act.]—Under rule 444 an amendment should be allowed at any stage of the proceedings, if it can be made without injustice to the other side; and there is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs. Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co., 16 Q. B. D. 556, applied and followed, notwithstanding the difference in the English rule. And semble, a matter of mere lardship should not govern the question of granting or refusing an amendment. And where in an action to recover possession of a chattel, the defendants, who were subsequent bond fide purchasers for value without notice of the plaintiff's purchase, were at the trial refused liberty to amend their defence by setting up the provisions of the Bills of Sale Act, which amendment would have called for no additional evidence, a divisional court allowed it upon appeal. Williams v. Leonard, 16 P. 18, 544. Adfirmed by the court of appeal, 17 P. 18, 73, and by the supreme court, 26 S. C. 18, 406.

Exemption from Liability for Negligence. |—The defendants were such as comnon carriers for breach of contract to carry and deliver safely the plaintiffs' goods, and, in the alternative, if the defendants had become wardousemen of the goods, for their loss and destruction by fire, caused by the defendants' negligence. The defendants denied the contract, and averred that the goods were safely carried to their destination, but that the plaintiffs left them in the defendants' hands at their own risk, and, if they were destroyed, it was without any negligence on the defendants' part. The only question at the trial was whether the fire was caused by the negligence of the defendants, and this, on the evidence, was found against them by the trial Judge. On appeal to the court of appeal the defendants for the first time sought to defend under the special conditions on the bills of lading, by which, it was contended, they were exempted from liability for loss by negligence in the character of bailees or warehousemen, and for loss by firs:—Held, that the very right and justice of the case did not require the court to permit the defendants to raise the new defence by amendment. Browne v. Daun, 6 R. 67, applied and followed. Salcs v. Lake Eric and Detroit River R. W. Co., 17 P. R. 224. Reversed, 26 S. C. R. 663, but not on the question of pleading.

Forfeiture—Life Insurance. |—Action on life policy. The application contained a number of questions and answers, and at the foot was a declaration, signed by the assured. that to the best of his knowledge and belief the foregoing statements and other particulars were true; that the declaration should form the basis of the contract: and that if any untrue averment had been intentionally made therein in the replies to the company's medical adviser in connection therewith, the policy should be void. By the policy the declaration and "relative papers" were made the basis of the contract, with a proviso that if any fraudulent or wilfully untrue material allegation was contained in said declaration, or if it should thereafter appear that any material information had been withheld, and any of the matters set forth had not been truly and fairly stated, then the policy should be void. To the question in the application as to the name and residence of usual medical attendant, and for what serious illness had he attended, the assured answered "none;" and to the questions by the medical adviser as to what other disease or personal injury and from whom had he received professional as-sistance, &c., the assured answered "none." It was found that these answers were wilfully it was found that the information was wilfully untrue, and that the information was wilfully withheld from and was material to be stated to the company:—Held, that these answers constituted a breach of the express contract between the parties, and therefore the policy was void. The pleas setting up these defences were added at the trial, and after the case had been in progress for some time. The action was commenced before the Judicature Act came in force, but the trial took place thereafter:—Held, that, whether under s. 8 of the A. J. Act, or under rule 128 of the O. Act, the pleas were properly added. plication to these pleas set up that certain correspondence between the company's general manager and their local agent, but of which the assured had no notice, directing the agent to make inquiries as to the habits, &c., of the assured, upon the result of which the agent was to issue the policy, constituted an agreement that the company would rely on the judgment of the agent alone, founded on such inquiries:—Held, that the replication could not be supported, either at law or on the facts, Russell v. Canada Life Assurance Co., 32 C.

O. was a member of Court Maple of the defendants' order, and was insured under the endowment provisions thereof for $1,000. This court left the order in a body and joined another order of Foresters, and it was in consequence suspended. On joining the net-it was arranged that O., who was in ill-health, and had gone to California for change, should and had gone to california for change, should quence suspended. On joining the new order pended courts in good standing at suspension were, on application within thirty days, to the supreme secretary, and payment of a fee of $1, to receive a card of membership and be entitled to the endowment, provided they paid all assessments as they fell due, and afaliated with another lodge of the order; but if after thirty days, they must pass a medical ex-amination. On his return from California, O., on ascertaining that the Court Maple had been suspended, within the thirty days, being then in good standing, applied to the defendants' supreme secretary for his card of membership, tendering $1 and assessments due, which was refused on the ground that a medical certificate was necessary. O., by reason of his not having the card, was prevented from affiliating, though he endeavoured to do so, with another court. By the endowment certificate the $1,000 was payable to the widow, orphans, or legal heirs of O., and by indersement thereon O. directed the amount to be paid to the plaintiff, the widow. At the trial an amendment was asked, to set up a forfeiture of the policy by reason of O, having gone to Califormia without a permit, which was refused by the Judge: — Held, under the circumstances, that the refusal was proper. Quere, whether the way, cause, and manner in and for which O, and the other members of Court Maple left it and joined in a body another order might not, if properly pleaded, have required some consideration. The frame and effect of the pleading in this case considered. Oates v. Independent Order of Foresters, 4 O. R. 535.

Mortgage—Sale of Land for Taxes—Purchaser for Value without Notice.]—Lands under mortgage were offered for sale by the municipality for arrears of taxes, and purchased by the wife of the mortgage. The tax sale certificate was afterwards assigned to Lo, who obtained a deed from the municipality. In an action against the mortgagor, his wife, and L. for foreclosure, the mortgage alleged that the purchase at the tax sale was in pursuance of a fraudulent wheme by the mortgagors to obtain the land freed from the mortgage, and the trial Judge so held in giving judgment for the mortgages:—Held, that L. could not claim to have been a purchaser for value without notice, as such defence was not pleaded, and it was not a case in which leave to amend should be granted. Lauctor v. Day, 29 S. C. R. 441.

Stamps.]—Adding plea of promissory notes being insufficiently stamped. Caughill v. Clarke, 3 O. R. 269; S. C., 9 P. R. 471.

Statute of Frands.]—In an action by a lesson against an assignee of the lense, brought after the expiry of the lense, to recover possession of the demised premises, and for cancellation of the lense, and for relief from any claim of the defendant for renewal under a covenant in that behalf, the defendant set up in his defence the covenant to renew, and aleged that he and the plaintiff had never been able to agree upon a new rent, but that he had always been ready and willing to have it fixed by arbitration, as required by the lease, and had, since action, notified the plaintiff of the appointment of an arbitrator. In reply the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had made a written offer to renew at a named rental; that the plaintiff had accepted the offer; but that the defendant had not carried out the arrangement so made. There was no further pleading. At the trial the evidence shewed a written offer made by the defendant, but only a conditional acceptance by the plaintiff, who, subsequent oral renewal by the defendant and acceptance by the plaintiff of the terms of the former written offer:—Held, that by the conditional acceptance of the written offer, it was in effect refused, and had ceased to exist when the subsequent oral agreement was made; it was not necessary for the defendant to plead the Statute of Frauds in rejoinder to the reply, as he was able to shew that his offer had been refused; and when the plaintiff was allowed at the trial to give evidence of a subsequent renewal by parol of the terms of the lapsed written offer, the defendant should have been allowed to set up the Statute of Frauds; upon which he was entitled to succeed. Elms-ley v. Harrison, 17 P. R. 425, 525.

Statute of Limitations.]—The defendants obtained leave to amend their statement of defence by setting up the Statute of Limitations as an additional defence in an action for waste brought by the plaintiffs as owners of the remainder in fee in certain lands of which the defendants were tenants for the lives of others:—Held, following Williams v. Leonard, 16 P. R. 544, 17 P. R. 73, that the Statute of Limitations being a defence permitted by law, and the real question between the parties being as to the right of the plaintiffs to recover by action the damages claimed by them, "the very right and justice of the case" demanded that the plaintiffs should not recover in this action if the statute afforded a bar to their right to do so. Brigham v. Smith, 3 Ch. Ch. 313, referred to, however, as laying down a more reasonable and just practice. Patterson v. Central Canada S. and L. Co., 17 P. R. 470.

3. Other Cases.

Adapting Pleadings to Proof.] — In this case, which was an action for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land:—Held, that, inasmuch as all the evidence that could throw light upon the case had admittedly been given, the fact that the issue of improvidence was not raised on the pleadings was immaterial. In such a case it is a mere matter of form to adapt the pleadings to the matters proved. Gough v. Bench, 6 O. R. 699, Amendment of pleadings by changing an action for a breach of contract not proved into an action for breach of warranty. Ellis v. Abell, 10 A. R. 226.

Appeal — Interference.] — The supreme court of Canada with not interfere on appeal with an order made by a Provincial court granting leave to amend the pleadings, such order being a matter of procedure within the discretion of the court below. Williams v. Leonard, 26 S. C. R. 406.

In Master's Office.]—The master has no jurisdiction to make amendments to the pleadings after judgment; nor can he give leave to file a statement in his office raising a defence which ought to appear in the pleadings. Hughes v. Rees, 10 P. R. 301. See Court v. Holland, 4 O. R. 688.

New Trial — Malicious Prosecution.]— New trial granted in action for malicious prosecution with leave to plaintiff to amend the statement of claim. Macdonald v. Henwood, 32 C. P. 433.

Possession—Limitation of Actions.]—In an action en déclaration d'hypothèque for the balance due on the purchase price of land, secured by a bailleurs de fonds privilege, the defendants pleaded that they had acquired the property in good faith by a translatory title, and had become freed of the hypothec by ten ten years' possession. In their declaration the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had been in possession of the property since 9th May, 1876, but after the equête they moved the court to amend the declaration by substituting for 9th May, 1876, the words "18t December, 1881;"—Held, reversing the judgment of the court below, that the motion should have been allowed, so as to make the allegation of possession conform with the facts as disclosed by the evidence. Baker v. Société de Construction Meteropolitaine, 22 S. C. R., 364.

Venue—Changing by Amendment.]—See Bull v. North British Canadian Investment Co., 10 P. R. 622, post XII.

III. CLOSE OF PLEADINGS.

Joinder of Issue.]—A cause is at issue where a joinder of issue has been delivered, or where three weeks have elapsed after statement of defence has been delivered. Schneider v. Protor, 9 P. R. 11.

Semble, the joinder of issue referred to in rule 176, O. J. Act, is not a simple denial of a previous pleading.

P. R. 323,

The plaintiff delivered a reply which was a simple joinder of issue upon the statement of defence and counterclaim:—Held, that this closed the pleadings. Hare v. Cauchtrope, 11 P. R. 353.

A defendant by simply taking issue upon the statement of claim closes the pleadings, and may then serve notice of trial. Hare v. Cawthrope, 11 P. R. 353, followed. Malcolm v. Race, 16 P. R. 330.

— Counterclaim.]—A pleading delivered by the defendant to a counterclaim, in answer theroto, whether by the original plaintiff or by added defendants, which denies the allegations in the counterclaim, puts the plaintiff to the proof thereof, and submits that the counterclaim should be dismissed, is not a foundation of issue, but a statement of defence to the counterclaim; the plaintiff by counterclaim has by the rules three weeks to reply thereto; and the pleadings, at least quoad the counterclaim, are not closed until after the lance of three weeks, or until the plaintiff by counterclaim has joined issue. Notice of trial set where given by the original plaintiffs after the lapse of four days from the delivery of such a pleading, no subsequent pleading of such a pleading, no subsequent pleading of such a pleading, no subsequent pleading pleading is amended under an order giving leave to amend, rule 427 does not apply; and, under rule 392, when the amendments allowed by the order have been made or the time thereby limited for making them has elapsed, the pleadings are in the same position as to their being closed as they were in when the order was made. Thompson v. Howson, 16 P. R. 378.

Note — Entry—Time.] — The last of the eight days within which the defendants should have delivered their statement of defence, as required by con. rule 371, was a Saturday, and on that day at twenty-five minutes past two in the afternoon, no statements of defence having then been filled, or served on the plaintiffs' solicitor, the officer entered a note that the pleadings were closed:—Held, that the officer had no power to close the pleadings until the end of the day, which would be three o'clock; and therefore the note was irregular and should be set aside. Con. rules 7, 393, 398, 489, considered. Lloyd v. Ward, 13 P. R. 238.

See Garner v. Tune, 12 P. R. 280; Macara v. Snow, 12 P. R. 616; Irwin v. Brown, 12 P. R. 639; Smith v. Boyd, 17 P. R. 463; Jackson v. Gardiner, 19 P. R. 137.

IV. Costs.

Amendment.]—Where the original plainties in an action were not entitled to any relief but by amendment, and a party was added to whom relief was granted:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to costs of the action up to the date of the amendment. Clarkson v. White, 4 O. R. 663.

Counterclaim.] - See Costs, III. 5.

Demurrer.]—Where the demurrer is partly successful and partly unsuccessful, neither party should get costs. Attorney-General v. Midland R. W. Co., 3 O. R. 511.

Third Parties.]-See Costs, IV.

Where Party Succeeds only in Part.]
-See Costs, II. 3.

V. COUNTERCLAIM AND SET-OFF

1. Generally.

Assignment of Account — Claim for Damages Arising out of Contract.] — Held, that to an action by an assignee of an account for the price of lumber and staves delivered by the assignor to the defendant under two certain contracts therefor, the defendant, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 116, ss. 7, 10, and the Judicature Act, ss. 11, 16, and rule 127, can set up as a defence a claim for damages for the non-delivery by the assignor to the defendant of certain other timber and staves specified in the contracts, and for the inferior quality of those delivered. Exchange Bank v. Stinson, 32 C. P. 158.

Set-off against Assignor.] - The plaintiff sued defendant on an account assigned to him by one F. Defendant, by his counterclaim, alleged a set-off against F., and adding F. as a defendant claimed judgment against him for a balance due:—Held, that the counterclaim as against F. must be disallowed, the defendant having no right in this suit to raise an issue between himself and a third party, with which the plaintiff was not concerned. Romann v. Brodrecht, Brodrecht v. Fick, 9 P. R. 2.

Claim Arising since Action-Set-off or Counterclaim.]—The Judicature Act has not changed the law so as to allow of a claim arising since the commencement of the action being pleaded as a set-off, although it may be made the subject of counterclaim. Therefore, where a defence of money due to defendants by the plaintiffs, part of which accrued before and part after action brought, was pleaded by way of set-off, the order of a local Judge directing the defendants to amend by confining their pleas of set-off to those debts which accrued before the commencement of the action was affirmed. Chamberlin, 11 P. R. 501. Chamberlain v.

Contra-account—Subject of Set-off.]-The plaintiff in his statement of claim alleged certain transactions between him and the defendant, in the whole comprehending over $1,000, and claimed a balance of $169.72 and interest from the 1st January, 1888. The de-fendant by his statement of defence denied that he was indebted to the plaintiff in any sum, and alleged that the plaintiff was indebted to him for goods supplied and on certain promissory notes in the sum of $1,325.74, for which he counterclaimed:—Held, that the matter of the counterclaim was really a setoff, and, even if it were not improper to call it counterclaim, having regard to con. rule 373, this could not change its real character. Cutler v. Morse, 12 P. R. 594, referred to. Bennett v. White, 13 P. R. 149.

Exchequer Court.]-A substantive cause of action cannot be pleaded as an incidental demand or counterclaim to an information by the Crown. The Queen v. Montreal Woollen Mills Co., 4 Ex. C. R. 348.

Liquidated Damages.] - If a claim of liquidated damages by a defendant is pleaded by way of counterclaim, the plaintiff may reby way of counterclaim, the plaintiff may reply matters arising subsequent to action brought. The plaintiff was allowed to reply that the final payment under the contract had accrued due after action brought. Allter, if pleaded by ways of a sci-off. Toke v, Andrews 8 Q. B. D. 428, followed. McNamara v. Skain, 23 O. R. 103.

Mechanics' Lien.]-A defence filed by a Henholder within the period mentioned in s. 23 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 126, in an action by the owner of the property to set aside the lien, is not a "proceeding to realize the claim" within the meaning of that section, though a within the meaning of that section, though a counterclaim, if properly framed, and a certificate thereof duly registered, might be. Observations as to the effect of registration of the lien. MeVean v. Tiflin, 13 A. R. 1, considered. Semble, that the defendant in this action having commenced an independent action and registered his lien within the prescribed period, his lien was preserved, and the registration of the cer-tificate in the other action enured to his benefit in the present one, though after judgment establishing his lien he abandoned the other proceedings. McNamara v. Kirkland, 18 A.

Misrepresentations-Deceit.]-In an action on a promissory note, one member of a syndicate cannot ask to have a contract set aside by reason of misrepresentation, the other members not asking for a rescission; his remedy must be by cross-action or counter-claim for deceit. Morrison v. Earls, 5 O. R. 434.

Mortgagee - Agreement-Indemnity.1-In an action by the assignee of a mortgage against the mortgagor and the purchasers from him of the equity of redemption, the latter alleged that they had been induced by the mortgagee to purchase the lands by his promise to discharge the mortgage and accept in its place an assignment of another mortgage, which agreement he had failed to carry out. and had afterwards assigned the mortgage to the plaintiff, his wife:—Held, that the purchasers of the equity were not entitled to claim "indemnity" against the mortgage within against the mortgagee within the meaning of that word as used in rule 328, as amended by rule 1313; and a third party notice served upon him was set aside. Semble, a proper case for a counterclaim against the plaintiff and the third party jointly to enforce the alleged agreement or for damages.

Moore v. Death, 16 P. R. 296.

Nature of Defence.] - A counterclaim must be a defence in the action in which it is pleaded, and it is as much a part of the defence as any of the other pleas. And therefore where the plaintiff took issue on the defence, not mentioning the counterclaim:-Held, that the pleadings were closed, and a notice of trial served thereafter was regular. Macara v. Snow, 12 P. R. 616.

Parties—Action.)—A counterclaiming de-fendant is not a plaintiff in an action; nor is a counterclaim an action. Irvein v. Brown, 12 P. R. 689. Overruled by Irvein v. Turner, 16 P. R. 349, ante III.

Recovery of Land-Joinder of Causes of Action-Mortgage-Leave.]-A counterclaim for the recovery of land is an action for the recovery of land, within rule 341 as to joinder recovery or land, within rule 341 as to joinder of causes of action. Compton v. Preston, 21 Ch. D. 138, followed. And a counterclaim for foreclosure and recovery of possession of mortgaged premises is within the exception contained in rule 341 (a). And where the plaintiff sought a mortgage account and redemption, and the defendant counterclaimed for foreclosure and nossession: — Hold that if foreclosure and possession: — Held, that, leave were necessary, it was a proper case for granting it, the rights being correlative. Hunter v. Stark, 17 P. R. 47.

Relief against Co-defendant.]fendant asking relief against his co-defendant will not be ordered to give security for costs on the ground of residence out of the jurisdies tion. Semble, such relief should not be asked by way of counterclaim. Walmsley v. Grif-fith, 11 P. R. 139. But see Molsons Bank v. Sawyer, 19 P. R.

Sec. also, Cope v. Crichton, 18 P. R. 462, post 2.

Relief Obtainable without Crossaction Costs.] - The counterclaim of a defendant, properly so-called, is a claim by the defendant for a relief which cannot be obdefendant for a relief which cannot be solutioned by him in the action; and calling a claim made by the defendant a counterclaim cannot make it one. The plaintiff claimed a cannot make it one. The plaintiff claimed a declaration that his interest as a chargee upon land could not be sold under the power in the defendant's mortgage upon such land, and, in the alternative, that he was entitled to redeem the defendant. By her pleading in answer the defendant alleged certain facts justi-fying her right to exercise the power of sale, and "by way of counterclaim" claimed payment of her mortgage, sale or foreclosure, pos-session, costs, and damages. The action was at the trial dismissed with costs, the defendant not desiring a foreclosure, which she was of-fered:—Held, that the relief claimed by the defendant was obtainable by her in the action brought against her, and was not the subject of a cross-action or counterclaim; and the defendant were such costs as were occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of the claim made by the defendants, treating it as a claim properly made in the action and dismissed; and such costs should be set off pro tanto against the defendant's costs of the dismissal of the action. The judgment dismissing the "counterclaim costs meant that such costs should be taxed as were appropriate to it in its true character. Semble, that in this Province the law as to set-off is different from the English law, and here a set-off should not be treated as a counterclaim nor be pleaded as such. Girardot v. Welton, 19 P. R. 162, 201.

Rent—Damages for Non-repair—Distress.]

—The defendant having distrained for rent in arrear, the plaintiff asserted that the defendant was indebted to him in damages for breach of the covenant in the lease to repair and to lease to plaintiff an adjoining piece of land, and obtained ex parte an interim injunction restraining proceedings under the distress, which was dissolved on the ground of conceniment of facts:—Held, that the damages claimed by the plaintiff were not a "debt" within s. 3 of 50 Vict. c. 23 (O.), so as to constitute a set-off against the rent; and although under the O. J. Act they might be the subject of counterclaim they would not justify an injunction as against a distress levied as here. Walton v, Henry, 18 O. R. 620.

Rules of Court.]—The O. J. Act, rule 17, and G. O. Ch. 647 (effete), do not apply to counterclaims. Klein v. Union Fire Ins. Co., 3 O. R. 234.

Will—Propounding.]—The defendant contested the validity of a will propounded by the phintiff, and also propounded two earlier wills under which, in the event of the last in data being invalidated, he claimed;—Held, that this was a proper subject of counterdim. Appleman v. Appleman, 12 P. R. 138.

2. Striking out or Excluding.

Assignee's Action for Benefit of Creditor-Claim against Creditor.]—Where, in at a tellon by the assignee of C, for the benefit of his creditors, under 48 Vict. c. 26 (O.), stored to be brought for the benefit of one of such creditors, the F, Bank, to set aside a Vol. III, b—170—21 mortgage made to the defendants, as fraudulent and preferential, a judgment for foreclosure of the mortgage obtained against the plaintiff was pleaded as a bar to the action, and a counterclaim was asserted for payment by the F. Bank of certain moneys alleged to be due to the defendants, a motion to strike out such defence and counterclaim was refused, and the plaintiff was left to demur. Semble, that the counterclaim was not inadmissible. Glass v. Grant, 12 P. R. 480.

Bill of Exchange—Breach of Contract.]—In an action by the plaintiffs as indorsees of a bill of exchange, the defendant (the acceptor) set up that the bill was part of the price of goods bought by them from H. & G., the drawers, and filled a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, and H. & G., as defendants by counterclaim, alleging that the bill was transferred to the plaintiffs after maturity, with full notice and knowledge of the facts, and claiming $10,000 damages from H. & G. for breach of contract in respect of the goods, and asking for the delivery up and cancellation of the bill, and other bills in the same transaction. Upon the application of H. & G., the master in chambers struck out the counterclaim, and the names of H. & G. as defendants. Semble, that, as against the plaintiffs, the allegations should have been made as a defence to the claim on the bill. Torrance v. Livingstone, 10 P. R. 29.

Bond—Indemnity.]—An action against the defendant on his bond as surety for H. & McT. for the amount due the plaintiffs by H. & McT. on their banking account with the plaintiffs. Counterclaim by the defendant against the plaintiffs and H. & McT., alleging that the defendant is liable only as such surety, and that the plaintiffs ought to resort to H. & McT. to enforce payment from them, and that H. & McT. should be ordered to pay the amount, and indemnify the defendant. As the counterclaim was not rested upon any particular agreement, but was set up as arising from the position of the parties as creditors, principal debtor, and surety, it was held bad, and ordered to be struck out. Federal Bank v. Harrison, 10 P. R. 271.

Cross-counterclaim — Cross-Relief — Original Counterclaim—Parties.]—A person brought into an action as defendant to a counterclaim delivered by the original defendant cannot deliver a counterclaim against such defendant. Such a pleading, not being authorized by the rules or the practice, was struck out on summary application. Construction of rules 371-388. Street v. Gover, 2 Q. B. D. 498, followed. Green v. Thornton, 9 C. L. T. Occ. N. 139, distinguished. Semble, if the company brought in here as defendants by counterclaim had been proper parties, cross-relief might have been given them, under rule 374, by staying execution upon any judgment recovered against them until they should establish their set-off in an independent action, The action was upon a promissory note. The counterclaim of the original defendants alleged that the plaintiffs might be ordered to deliver up the note to be cancelled—Held, that, if that was a proper subject of counterclaim, it was one arising between the plaintiffs and the defendants as the result of the establishment of the defence, and did not render the introduction of new parties necessary. It further asked that if the plain-tiffs should be found entitled to recover upon the note, the new defendants by counterclaim should be ordered to pay it:—Held, not a mat-ter in which the plaintiffs were concerned, and therefore, under rule 376, other persons could not be brought in as defendants by counter claim. It further alleged that the plaintiffs and the new defendants by counterclaim conspired together with the fraudulent intention of keeping certain insurance moneys without applying them upon the note sued on; but there was no assertion that the plaintiffs received the insurance moneys, or any part of them, beyond the amount of the note; and the prayer was that the new defendants by counterclaim, and not the plaintiffs, should account for the insurance money over and above the amount of the note:—Held, that there was no excuse for joining the plaintiffs as parties liable to account with the added parties, and therefore no excuse for adding the latter. And the counterclaim of the original defendants, so far as it added new parties, was struck out. General Electric Co. v. Victoria Electric Light Co. of Lindsay, 16 P. R. 476, Injunction — Damages—Relators.] — In an ac ion brought in the name of the attorney-general, upon the relation of certain persons, to restrain the defendants from collecting tolks or keeping their toll-gates closed upon their roads, the defendant alleged by way of defence certain wrongful acts of the relators, and by way of counterchaim asked damages against them:—Held, that the relators were not in any sense plaintiffs; and the allegations against them must be struck out. Attorney-General V. Vanghan Road Co., 14 P. R. 516.

Mortgage—False Statements as to Value.]
— A counterclaim for damages by reason of false and depreciatory statements with regard to the value of the mortgaged premises having been set up by the defendants in an ordinary mortgage action, an order striking it out under con, rule 374 was affirmed, as well on the ground of inconvenience in trying the action and counterclaim together, as on the ground that the counterclaim was filed for delay. McLean v. Hamilton Street R. W. Co., 11 P. R. 193, and Central Bank of Canada v. Osborne, 12 P. R. 160, followed. Odell v. Beanett, 13 P. R. 10

Negligence — Libel.] — In an action for damages for negligence, a counterclaim for libel was excluded, on the ground of the inconvenience which would arise in trying the two causes of action together, but leave to bring an independent action was given. McLean v. Hamilton Street R. W. Co., 11 P. R. 193.

Promissory Note — Breach of Trust,]—
A promissory note made by the defendant had been held by the Consolidated Bank, and after its maturity the defendant transferred certain timber limits to the bank as collateral security for the payment of the note, which limits the bank sold. The plaintiffs became holders of the note for value after dishonour and after the timber limits transaction, and brought this action upon the note. A counterclaim against the plaintiffs and the bank by the defendant, setting up that the bank had sold the timber limits without authority and for an insufficient price, and were thereby guilty of a breach of trust, and claiming permission to set off so much of his claim therefor against the bank as would satisfy the balance claimed upon the note, was held bad and struck out as not being properly a counterclaim. Panadian Securities Co. v. Prentice, 9 P. R. 324.

Libet and Slander.]—To an action on a promissory note the defendant L., the indorser, plended that by an arrangement made with the plaintiffs, who had discounted the note, it was to be renewed from time to time, and paid out of the proceeds of a certain agency business, in which the defendant O., the maker of the note, and the defendant O., the maker of the note, and the defendant L. were engaged as partners; that the defendant O. had absconded; and that afterwards the plaintiffs had, by libel and slander of the defendant L., prevented him from securing the continuance of the agency business for himself, whereby he was unable to carry out the arrangement; and he also pleaded a counterclaim against the plaintiffs for the alleged libel and slander. The court struck out the counterclaim, upon an application under rule 127 (b), O. J. Act. Central Bank of Canada v. Osborne, 12 P. R. 160.

Relief against Co-defendant-Costs-Pleading to Counterclaim-Waiver. |-One of the defendants, in an action brought to recover possession of land and to set aside a conveyance of the land from him to his codefendant, delivered with his statement of defence a counterclaim against his co-defendant for relief upon the covenants contained in the conveyance attacked and in a prior mortgage deed, but sought no relief against the plaintiff in that regard, and did not serve a third party notice upon his co-defendant. The latter pleaded to the counterclaim, but at the trial moved to strike it out, and, after an expression of opinion from the trial Judge, the counterclaiming defendant submitted to have it struck out:—Held, that the co-defendant was entitled as against the counterclaiming defendant to such costs as he would have been entitled to upon a successful motion to strike out the counterclaim. Held, also, that the fact of his having pleaded to the counterclaim did not militate against his rights. Cope v. Crichton, 18 P. R. 462.

VI. DELIVERY OF PLEADINGS,

Default—Dismissal.]—See Armstrong v. Toronto and Richmond Hill R. W. Co., 15 P. R. 449.

Vacation.]—A party to an action has the risk, notwithstanding the insertion in rule 484, by rule 1331, of the words "or of the Christmas vacation," to deliver a pleading during such vacation; and a notice of trial given therein is regular. Thompson v. Howson, 16 P. R. 378.

See ante V.; post VII., VIII., IX., X.

VII. DEMURRER.

1. Generally.

Ambiguity—Prayer for General Relief— Multifariousness. 1—See Gunn v. Trust and Loan Co., 2 O. R. 393. — Remedy.]—When a pleading is ambiguous or uncertain, the proper remedy is to apply in chambers to strike out or amend the defective matter, and a demurrer on that ground will not lie. Attorney-General v. Midland R. W. Co., 3 O. R. 511.

Costs. —No other or greater costs were allowed to defendants in this case than if they find successfully demurred instead of defending and going down to trial. Hepburn v. Toranship of Orlord, 19 O. R. 585.

Power Over.]—See Jones v. Miller, 16 P. R. 92.

Effect of Decision—Res Judicata.]—A defence setting up non-compliance with a condition in a contract having been demurred to, and the plaintiff not having appealed against a judgment overruling the demurrer, the question as to the sufficiency in law of the defence was held to be res judicata. Grand Trank R. W. Co. v. McMillan, 16 S. C. R. 543.

Equitable Relief—Indirect Attack.]—
Held, that where a party seeks equitable relief to which he is not entitled, the opposite party should, unless in a very clear case, denur, instead of attacking the pleading indirectly by asking to have a jury. Bingham
v. Warner, 10 P. R. 621, commented on.
Fracer v. Johnston, 12 P. R. 113.

Exception—Notice of.]—A party whose plending is denurred to may still serve a notice of exception to the plending of the opposite party. O'Donnell v. Duchenault, 14 O. R. I.

Failure to Set down—Practice.]—A defendant did not, within ten days after delivery of a demurrer to a paragraph of the statement of defence, enter it for argument and give notice, nor serve an order for leave to amend, as required by rule 195 (a), O. J. Act:—Held, on an ex parie motion by the plantiff for judgment upon his demurrer, that the proper practice in such a case is to apply to a Judge in court, upon notice to the opposite party, for an order to strike out the pleading or part of the pleading demurred to, and for a direction as to payment of costs; but on the return of the motion the party in default will have no right to be heard as to the validity of the pleading. Licingston, v. Tront, 10 P. R. 438.

Frivolous Demurrer—Pleading and Demuring.—Where a statement of claim sets up in different paragraphs more than one cause of action, the defendant may under rule 384 plead to one and demur to another without filing the affidavit mentioned in rule 389. A demurrer to a claim for wrongful dismissal, which does not allege a hiring by the day, or week, or month, or otherwise, cannot be said to be frivolous. Ross v, Bucke, 14 P. R. (3).

Setting aside, 1—A demurrer to a statement of claim raised the question whether in an action against a person living in On-Jordon, as a shareholder in a Quebec joint stock action as a shareholder in a Quebec joint stock demans in incorporated under the Dominion Jones Stock Companies Act, 1877, it is sufficient to show a judgment against the company and execution thereon returned unsatished in Quebec, or whether this must be shewn in Ontario:—Held, that the demurrer was not frivolous. Brice v. Juno, 10 P. R. 548. Semble, the jurisdiction as to setting aside demurrers as frivolous, should rarely be excreised where the point is a new one, and is apparently raised in good faith to obtain the opinion of the court. 16.

Misjoinder.]—Misjoinder of parties is, since the Judicature Act, no longer a ground for demurrer. Young v. Robertson, 2 O. R.

Part Demurrer.]—In case of a demurrer to part of a pleading under rule 189, if any one or more paragraphs be demurred to, the court will look at any other paragraph or paragraphs bearing on the same matter of defence, and if the whole taken together disclose a sufficient defence, the demurrer must be overruled. Attorney-General v. Midland R. W. Co., 3 O. R. 511.

Amended Bill—Costs,]—The defendant having filled his statement of defence, the plaintiff replied thereto by amending his claim, adding to the statement two new paragraphs which would have been demurrable if pleaded as a reply. The matters thereby set up, when separated from the rest of the statement, did not disclose any distinct cause of action. Thereupon the defendant served an amended statement of defence, and demurred to the two paragraphs which had been so added. In view of the fact that the paragraphs which had been so added did not disclose any separate or substantial cause of action, and that the demurrer, however decided, could not advance the cause, the court overruled the demurrer, but without costs, as it was the first occasion the point had arisen under the Judicature Act. Rumohr v. Marx, 29 Gr. 179.

The propriety of demurrers to parts of pleadings, which do not bring up the whole or

The propriety of demurrers to parts of pleadings, which do not bring up the whole or even a substantial question between the lirigants, thus tending to increase costs, considered and remarked upon. Ib.

Relief Prayed.]—A demurrer to the relief prayed in respect of the cause of action, and not to the cause of action itself, will not be allowed. Rule 384 referred to. Oliver v. McLaughlin, 24 O. R. 41.

What Constitutes—Reply—Admission.]
—To an action on a foreign judgment the defendants pleaded that the order for such judgment was obtained upon a false affidavit, and that the naintiffs obtained the judgment by fraudulently concealing from the court the true nature of the transactions between them and the defendant:—Held, a good defence. The plaintiffs, after the coming into force of rule 1322, replied that the defendant was precluded by law from raising any question as to the validity of the foreign judgment which might have been raised by way of appeal in the foreign forum:—Held, that this replication was equivalent to a demurrer under the former practice, and was an admission of the truth of the facts stated in the defence; and to such a replication. Hollender v, Ffoulkes, 28 O, R, 61.

Striking out — Irregularity.]—To an action for wrongfully taking out of possession of the plaintiff goods seized by him as a balliff under process against the goods of an absconding debtor, the defendants set up a number of defences of fact, and also alleged that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action, since it contained no allegation that the goods seized by the plaintiff were the property of the absconding debtor, and started that the defendants set up the same rights as it they had demurred:—Held, that this was a demurrer, and, as it was pleaded along with defences, without an affidavit under rule 389, or an order under rule 389, it should be struck out as irregular. Vandusen v. Malcolm, 4 C. L. T. 211, and Snider v. Snider, 11 P. R. 140, referred to. The proper procedure for the plaintiff was to move to strike out the pleading, not to set it down as a demurrer. Mackey v. Bierel, 16 P. R. 148.

2. Particular Cases.

Bill of Costs — Delivery — Omission to State.]—In an artion by a solicitor to recover the amount of a bill of costs, the fact that he does not, in his statement of claim, allege that the bill was delivered a month before action brought is not since, as it was not before, the O. J. Act, ground for demurrer, but only for defence. Scane v. Duckett, 3 O. R. 370.

Company—Action against Shareholder— Execution.]—See Brice v. Munro, 10 P. R. 548, ante 1.

Ejectment — Defence — Expropriation—Rituites—Certainty, 1—In an action by the attorney-general upon the relation of the bursar of Toronto University, to recover possession of certain lands claimed to be vested in Her Majesty, for the benefit of the university, the defendants pleaded that the lands had been, with the assent of the university and bursar, taken possession of by them for the purposes of their railway under their statutory powers, and that they had since retained and then were in possession them, and they also pleaded the Statute of Limitations:—Held, on denurrer, that it was not necessary to set out specifically the statutes alluded to, in the various of the land, and the defence was not objectionable, upon denurrer, on the ground of wan of certainty, by reason of its merely general allegation tof compliance with the statutory requirements.
Held, also, that the mere allegation that the defendants were in possession afforded a good defence in law in such an action, and put the plaintiff to the proof of his cause of action, under rule 144. Attriney-General v.
Muland R. W. Co., 3 O. R. 511.

Fraudulent Preference—Creditors' Action—Omission to State. —In an action to set aside a conveyance of land as a fraudulent preference, the non-averment that the plaintiffs sued on behalf of all other creditors, is not ground for denurrer, but a mere informality to be dealt with under O. J. Act, rules 103, 104. Scane v. Duckett, 3 O. R. 370.

Sale of Land—Enforcement of Contract —Parties.]—See Gunn v. Trust and Loan
Co., 2 O. R. 393.

Specific Performance—Sufficiency of Contract.]—Where a denurrer is raised to a statement of claim for specific performance on the ground of no sufficient agreement, it is enough if, in any aspect of the case, the plaintiff may be entitled to some relief. In this case it was held, on the statement of claim set out in the report, that a concluded contract was shewn, and that defendant was liable, Young v. Robertson, 2 O. R. 434.

VIII. REPLY.

Further Pleading after Joinder—Counterclaim, 1—The defence of the planntiff to a counterclaim is technically the plaintiff reply, notwithstanding con. rule 379, and there can, without leave, be no further pleading by the defendant, but a joinder of issue. Irwin v. Broten, 12 P. R. 639.

To a counterclaim against the plaintiff, who

To a counterclaim against the plaintiff, who lived out of Ontario, seeking the recovery of a debt contracted out of Ontario, the plaintiff pleaded that the court had no jurisdiction, and the defendant replied, without obtaining leave, that the plaintiff had assets in Ontario to the value of $200:—Held, that this reply, even if leave were obtained, was bad, because s.s. (e) of rule 45, O. J. A., has not been incorporated in the consolidated rules. Ib.

Inconsistency—Refusal to Try Action.)—By their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged themselves to be creditors for wages of two of the defendants, and they sought relief against the third defendant only as having obtained certain assets from the other two, either fraudiently or upon a trust to pay the plaintiffs' claims. In their reply they set up that they were creditors of the third defendant himself, upon the ground that he was really the person who hired them. There was no subsequent pleading:—Held, that the reply was a direct violation of rule 419: and that the trial Judge was within his right in refusing, in his discretion, to try the action until the issues were properly presented upon the pleadings, and in directing that the costs of the postponement should be borne by the plaintiffs. No opinion expressed as to whether a divisional court had power to review such a ruling. Hurd v. Bostoucch, 16 P. R. 121.

Right to Amend—Time—Close of Pleadings.]—The defendants by counterclaim delivered a reply, which contained more than a mere joinder of issue, to the statement of defence and counterclaim of the original defendants. No subsequent pleading having been delivered, the defendants by counterclaim, after the lapse of four days, served notice of trial:—Held, that the pleadings were not closed, and the notice of trial was therefore irregular. The plaintings by counterclaim were entitled under rule 180 to twenty-eight days from the delivery of the defence and counterclaim in which to amend. Garner v. Tune, 12 P. R. 280.

Time for Delivering — Extension—Irregularity.]—Consolidated rule 381 provides that "a plaintiff shall deliver his reply, if any, within three weeks after the defence or the last of the defences shall have been delivered, unless the time shall be extended by the court or a Judge;" and con. rule 392 provides that upon the expiry of the three weeks the pleadings shall be closed:—Held, that where, upon a motion to set aside a reply delivered after the three weeks, nothing else appears than the fact that the time has expired, the pleading should not be set aside; and, even if there is the right to move, the proper order to make upon such a motion would be one extending the time for delivery of the reply, and the moving party should have no costs. Held, also, that upon such a motion such a motion no grounds of irregularity except those taken in the notice can be considered; referring to con, rule 534. Wright v. Wright, 13 P. R. 268.

Waiver of Forfeiture — Necessity for Pleading, — A member of a beneilt association died while suspended from membership for non-payment of assessments. In an action by his widow for the amount of his beneilt certificate it was urged that the forfeiture was waived: — Held, that the waiver not having been pleaded it could not be relied on as an answer to the plea of non-payment. Allen v. Merchants Marine Ins. Co., 15 S. C. R. 488, followed. Supreme Tent Kniphts of the Macaleus of the World v. Hilliker, 29 S. C. R. 397.

See Sawyer v. Short, 9 P. R. S5; McNamara v. Skain, 23 O. R. 103; Hollender v. Fjoulkes, 26 O. R. 61.

IX. STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

1. Generally.

Anticipating Defence.]—In a statement of claim, to anticipate and reply to matters of defence is a highly improper practice. Lake Eric and Detroit R. W. Co. v. Sales, 26 S. C. R. 633.

Cause of Action—Sufficiency of Allegation—Acgliquence,1—The plaintill in his statement of claim claimed damages from the defendants for "unlawfully, negligently, and wrongfully," depressing certain streets in a town and thereby making it inconvenient and almost impossible for nersons to approach the plaintill's store for business: also for, in like manner, blocking them up, and rendering them almost impossable in the neighbourhood of the plaintill's store, and thereby "negligently, unlawfully, and wrongfully," preventing customers or others coming thereto, and almost entirely destroying the plaintill's business. The statement further claimed that if the depressing and blocking up should be found to be lawful, a mandamus should be granted requiring the defendants to proceed to arbitrate to ascertain the compensation payable to plaintill'; or that it be referred to the proper officer to ascertain the compensation payable to plaintill'; or that it be referred to the proper officer to ascertain the compensation payable to plaintill'; or that it is greatered that the work was melligently done, and this gave a cause of action, even though the work itself might be havful. Quillinan v. Canada Southern R. W. Co., 6 O. R. 567.

Date of Adding Party.]—Where a new decident was added in 1889 to an action begun in 1886;—Held, that the statement of claim should shew on its face the date at which defendant was made a party; and an amendment was ordered. St. Louis v. O'Callaphan, 13 P. R. 322.

Date of Writ.]—Held, that the mention of the date of issue of a writ in a statement of claim was essential, but leave was given to amend on payment of costs. Scott v. Creighton, 9 P. R. 253.

Matters Arising pending Action.]—
A plaintiff cannot set up in his statement of claim matters arising pending the action.

McLean v. McLean, 17 P. R. 440.

See Home Life Association v. Randall, 30 S. C. R. 97, ante I.

2. Conformity with Writ of Summons.

Extension of Claim—Rule 244.]—The writ of summons in an action by a mortgages against a mortgages was indorsed with a claim for an injunction to restrain waste. The statement of claim went further and claimed to recover possession of the land in respect of which the injunction was sought:—Held, that what was claimed by the pleading was an "extension" of what was claimed by the writ, within the meaning of rule 244. United Telephone Co. v. Tasker, 59 L. T. N. S. S52, and Cave v. Crew, 41 W. R. 359, 3 R. 401, distinguished. Smythev. Martin, 18 P. R. 227.

See Sowden v. Sowden, 4 P. R. 276; Huggins v. Guelph Barrel Co., S. P. R. 170; Lainchberry v. Dunn, 9 C. L. T. Occ. N. 412; Ross v. Edvards, 15 P. R. 150; McNab v. Macdonnell, ib. 14; Hogaboom v. MacCulloch, 17 P. R. 377; McLean v. McLean, ib. 440; Campbell v. James, 11 P. R. 347; Ketchum v. Rapelje, 1 C. L. Ch. 152; May v. Drummond, 17 P. R. 21, post 4; Bugbee v. Clergue, 27 A. R. 196; Rodger v. Noxon Co., 19 P. R. 327, post 4; Wyman v. The "Duart Castle," 6 Ex. C. R. 387; Edsall v. Wray, 19 P. R. 245.

3. Filing and Delivery.

Abridgement of Time—Default—Dismissal.]—Under rule 485 the court or a Judge may, in a proper case, order a plaintiff to deliver his statement of claim within a limited time shorter than that allowed by rule 369; but an order dismissing the action for failure to deliver the statement within the time so limited is not, having regard to rule 646, to be made until after default. And an order directing that the action should be dismissed for want of prosecution, if the statement of claim was not delivered within eight days, was amended so as to make it direct only that the plaintiff should deliver the statement within eight days. Armstrong v. Toronto and Rickmond Hill Street R. W. Co., 15 P. R.

Extension of Time.]—An order allowing further time to file a statement of claim should not be made ex parte. Wigle v. Harris, 9 P. R. 276.

Extension of Time after Default.]—
If a statement of claim is filed after the time limited by rule 158 (a) (three months from appearance entered), the action will not be dismissed for its non-delivery, but the statement is irregular and may be struck out. In this case, under the circumstances, the time for delivery was extended upon payment of costs of the motion. Clarke v. McEwing, 9 P. R. 281.

— Dismissal of Action.]—An order of the 4th October, 1886, extended the time for the delivery of the statement of claim till the 12th October, but provided that, if it was not so delivered, the action should stand dismissed with costs. Upon failure to deliver in time, the defendant signed judgment dismissing the action:—Held, that, notwithstanding the dismission of the action, an order could properly be made under rule 462 vacating the judgment and further extending the time for delivering the statement, and the master in chambers had jurisdiction to make such an order. Neucomb v. McLuhan, 11 P. R. 461.

— Terms — Irregularity—Wairer.]—

Upon the defendant's application to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, an order was made on the 6th May, that upon payment by the plaintiff of $20 costs within eighteen days, and upon his delivering his statement of claim within the same time, the defendant's application was dismissed. On the 26th May, after the expiry of the eighteen days, the plaintiff filed his statement of claim and delivered a copy to the defendant's solicitors, and tendered them $20, which they refused to accept. They also declined to admit service of the statement of claim, but retained it in their possession. On the 3rd June an order was made extending for one week the time for filing and delivering the statement of claim and paying the $20. This order did not provide that the statement of claim already delivered should stand. Within the week the plaintiff paid the $20, and nine days afterwards signed judgment against the defendant for defants of defence, upon the statement of claim delivered on the 26th May:—Held, that, although the plaintiff was wrong in filing and serving his statement of claim before paying the costs, this irregularity was waived and the service became effective when the costs were afterwards received, they bein paid under the order of the 3rd June. Pierce v. Palmer, 12 P. R. 275.

See Laidlaw v. Ashbaugh, 9 P. R. 6.

4. Joinder of Causes of Action.

Alimony — Fraudulent Conveyance,] — Claims on behalf of a wife for alimony and to set aside a conveyance of the husband's property as fraudulent should be joined in one action. Snider v. Snider, Snider v. Orr. 11 P. R. 140.

Fraudulent Conveyance-Several Grantees—Parties.]—Action by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the defendant L., asking for judgment against L. upon two overdue promissory notes and seeking to obtain execution for such claim, and also a previously recovered judgment, against two several parcels of land, alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to the other two defendants respectively. A motion was made to strike out the name of one or other of the alleged fraudulent grantees as improperly joined in the same action:—Held, that it was possible under the present practo combine two such causes of action, which, if well founded, had a common root in the fraudulent transfer, and that here there would be no practical inconvenience in trying both on the same record. The motion was, therefore, refused. Chaput v. Robert, 14 A. R. 354, at pp. 361, 362, specially referred to. Heaton v. McKellar, 13 P. R. 81.

Fraudulent Notes and Agreement— Secting axide—Other Claims—Several Defendants. —The statement of claim alleged that two of the defendants, by fraudulent representations, induced the plaintiffs to enter into an agreement for the purchase of a horse; that one of these defendants, in the name of his partner, a third defendant, having agreed to become a co-partner with the plaintiffs in the purchase, made a fraudulent profit by way of commission out of the transaction; that these three defendants transferred promissory notes, made by the balmtiffs with the intention of carrying out the transaction, and the control of the frame of the defendants, who had notice of the fraud; and claimed to have the agreement declared fraudulent and void and ordered to be cancelled; or to have the notes declared void and ordered to be cancelled; or to have the first three defendants ordered to indemnify the plaintiffs against the notes; damages for the false representations; or that the defendants alleged to have received a commission should be ordered to account to the plaintiffs therefor. After the parties had been for more than six months at issue, the defendants applied to strike out the statement of claim as embarrassing:—Held, that the transaction complained of was one that should be investigated in all its parts on the one record, and that no peculiar difficulty would arise in dealing with it as a whole, and then following such details as might be pertinent. Crerar v. Hother, I. T. P. R. 289.

Recovery of Land — Joining Other Causes of Action with.]—An action for assignment of dower is an action for the recovery of land. McCulloch v. McCulloch, 4 C. L. T. 252, followed. Where leave is necessary under rule 341 to join other causes of action with an action for the recovery of land, it must be obtained before the writ of summons is issued, unless under very exceptional circumstances. McLean v. McLean, 17 P. R. 440.

The plaintiff, without leave, indorsed his writ of summons with a claim for recovery of land and to set aside a conveyance. The writ was personally served, and, the defendant not appearing, the plaintiff delivered a statement of claim, and, on default of defence, moved the court for judgment. It appeared from the statement of claim that the setting aside of the conveyance mentioned in the indorsement was sought by the plaintiff as a part of what was necessary to establish his title :- Held, following Gledhill v. Hunter, 14 Ch. D. 492, that the action was to be treated as one for the recovery of land merely, in which judgment for default of appearance could have been entered without a motion; or, if not, that the plaintiff had improperly joined another claim with a claim for the re-covery of land, without leave; and in either ase the motion must fail. May v. Drummond, 17 P. R. 21.

Where the writ of summons was indorsed with a claim for the recovery of land and for mesne profits, but the statement of claim asked specific performance of the contract by the defendant to buy the land from the plaintiff, and in the event of specific performance not being decreed, possession, &c., and no order had been obtained for leave to join another cause of action with a claim for the recovery of land, as required by rule 116, O. J. Act, and a motion was made to set aside the writ of summons and statement of claim, or one of them:—Held, that the causes of action were improperly joined in the statement of claim without leave, but, inasmuch as the two causes of action could not conveniently be prosecuted separately, leave was given to amend the writ by adding a claim for specific performance, or the statement of claim by striking out such claim, at the plaintiff's option. Campbell v, James, 11 P. R. 347.

Trespass to Land—Assault of Servant.]
—See Mooney v. Joyce, 17 P. R. 241.

Wrongful Dismissal — Defamation — Company—Triatl.)—The writ of summons claimed damages against an incorporated company for wrongful dismissal and slander. The original statement of claim was confined to the former cause of action, but, after defence and before reply due, the plaintiff amended on practipe by adding a claim for slander:—Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff to do so, under rule 300. Semble, that an incorporated company may be liable if slander is spoken by its servants or agents in direct obsclience to its orders, Held, that, at all events the pleading setting up slander should not be struck out summarily, but should be adjudicated on. Leave to the defendants to have the question of law first determined. The two causes of action were properly joined; but application might be made under rule 257, to direct the method of trial. Rodger v. Noron Co., 19 P. R. 327.

X. STATEMENT OF DEFENCE,

Company — Calls—Suspension of License—Incadacent.1—In an action for calls defendants pleaded that plaintiffs license had been suspended:—Held, on demurrer, that the defence should have alleged notice in the Gazette of the suspension of the license, pursuant to R. S. O. 1877 c. 160, s. 34, and 42 Vict. c. 25, s. 3, s.-s. 7, but an amendment was allowed, this point not having been taken. Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Lyman, 46 U. C. R. 471

Defence Arising after Action—Confession—Judgment—Otherwise Order,"]—In an action against a judgment debtor and his brother to set aside a conveyance by the former to the latter as frauddlent, both described a several defences. Afterwards the judgment debtor applied for leave to amend by adding as a defence, without abandang his other defences, that since action the judgment had become extinguished by reason of a set-off ordered in another action:—Held, a case in which the plaintiff should not be abloaded to confess the new defence and sign judgment for his costs under rule 440, but one in which the court should "otherwise order" under the list clause of the rule. Construction and history of rule 440. Harrison v. Marquis of Abergavenny, 15 L. T. N. S. 360, discussed. Patterson v. Smith, 14 P. R. 558.

Denial—Sufficiency of Traverse—Appeal.]

The planninff by his statement of claim alleged a partnership between two defendants, one being married, where the partnership was substituted for that of her husband without her knowledge or authority:—Held, that a denial by the married woman that "on the date alleged or at any other time she entered into partnership with the other defendant," was a sufficient traverse of the plaintiff's allegation to put the party to proof of that fact. Held, also, that an objection to the entertained when taken for the first time on appeal, the issue having been tried on the assumption that the traverse was sufficient. Mylius v. Jackson, 23 S. C. R. 485.

Denial of Cause of Action—Want of Notice,]—Statement of claim claiming damages for an accident to the plaintiff by his stepping upon the covering or lid of a manhole in the sidewalk alleged to be defective, &c., through defendants negligence. By the first paragraph of the statement of defence defendants denied the correctness of the statements contained in the statement of claim; and by the second paragraph set up that defendants had no notice or knowledge of the defect:—Held, on demurrer to the second paragraph, that the whole statement of defence must be read together; and that the second paragraph taken with the first constituted a good defence or was immaterial; that it could not embarrass the plaintiff, for if he proved actionable negligence he must prove either actual or presumptive notice, Beasley v. City of Hamilton, 9 O. R. 112.

Filing and Delivery—Time.]—A statement of defence, delivered after the proper time and on the same day on which the plaintiff set the action down to be heard on motion for judgment;—Held, irregular, and the court ordered that it should be struck out, and judgment granted for the plaintiff as prayed by the statement of claim, unless the defendant paid the costs of setting down the action and of the motion for judgment within a limited time. Suider v. Suider, 11 P. R. 34.

A statement of defence filed after the pleadings have been noted as closed for default of defence under rule 263, is irregular, but not a nullity, and should be regarded as evidence of an intention to defend; and where, as permitted by rule 586, a motion for judgment upon the statement of claim is made ex partle, and the fact of the defence having been filed is brought to the knowledge of the Judge, he should direct notice to be served in order to give the defendant an opportunity to make his defence regular. In this case judgment having been granted ex parte, it was ordered that there should be no costs of the defendant's motion for relief under rule 358, which was granted. Jackson v. Gardiner, 19 P. R. 137.

Foreign Judgment.] — See Hughes v. Rees, 10 P. R. 301, 9 O. R. 198.

Fraud Pleaded to Actions on Judgments.] — See Stewart v. Sutton, S O. R. 341; Harvey v. Harvey, 9 A. R. 91.

Matters Alleged in Mitigation of Damages.]—In an action for malicious arrest the statement of defence set up that there was a warrant in the hands of a constable for the apprehension of the plaintiff on a charge of misdemeanour; that the plaintiff was avoiding arrest; that the defendants therefore constable, and then gave him into custody; and that the defendants did this in the bond fide belief that they were justified in thus aiding the arrest:—Held, that, although these facts did not constitute an answer to the action, yet they could be given in evidence in mitigation of damages, and therefore it was proper that they should appear upon the record. Puraley v, Benacht, 11 P. R. 64.

Not Guilty by Statute.]—"Not guilty by statute" cannot be pleaded to an action for specific performance of a contract; and the defence of "not guilty" irrespective of statutory authority is not admissible under the Judicature Act. Town of Peterborough v. Middand R. W. Co., 12 P. R. 127.

Semble, the omission to give notice of action must be pleaded, or the section which requires it referred to, in the plea of "not guilty by statute." Bond v. Connec, 16 A. R. 398.

Held, reversing the judgment in 18 O. R. Ast, that evidence of contributory negligence is properly admissible under a defence of "not guilty by statute" without any special plea of contributory negligence, and at any rate in this case, even if strictly speaking the evidence were not admissible as the pleadings stood, still, it having been given without objection, the plaintiff could not afterwards complain. Doon v. Michigan Central R. W. Co., 17 A. R. 481.

Notice of Action — General Issue—Statutory Defences.]—Action against a municipal corporation for not providing a proper corporation for not providing a proper corporation for not provided to the providing to a proper corporation of the property of the provided to the pr

— Negligence — Defective Sideualk.]
— The defence of want of notice of action required by s. 13 of the Municipal Amendment Act. 1894, in an action against a municipal corporation for injuries sustained through a defective sidewalk, should be set up in the statement of defence, if the statement of claim is silent on the point, and the Judge can then go into the circumstances, if any, which excuse the want or insufficiency of the notice. And where the objection, in such a case, to the want of notice was not raised until after the evidence was closed, a motion for a nonsuit was refused. Longbottom v. City of Toronto, 27 O. R. 198.

Workmen's Compensation Act—Notice of Objection.]—The provisions of s. 14 of the Workmen's Compensation for Injuries Act, 55 Vict. c. 30 (O.), are not compiled with merely by pleading that the notice of action relied on by the plaintiff is defective, or that notice of action has not been given. The dedefendant must give formal notice of his objection not less than seven days before the hearing of the action if he intends to rely upon it. Cavanagh v. Park. 23 A. R. 715.

Offer before Action — Omission to Repent—Costs.]—Where an offer to do certain work, which would abate an injury to suppliant's property caused by a public work, was made in writing by the Crown, and its receipt acknowledged by the suppliant before action brought, but such offer was not repeated in the statement of defence (although filed subsequently pursuant to leave given), the court, in decreeing the sumpliant relief in terms of the undertaking, refused costs to either party. Fairbanks v. The Queen, 4 Ex. C. R. 130.

Paragraphs — Separate Defences.] — Though each paragraph of a statement of defence should, under rule 128, as nearly as may be, contain a separate allegation, it need not contain a separate defence. Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Lyman, 46 U. C. R. 453.

Payment into Court.] - In an action to recover money for services rendered, the defendant pleaded that $325 was more than defendant pleaded that 8325 was more than an ample and sufficient payment; that he had before action paid the plaintiff 825, and had always been ready and willing to pay him 8300 more; that before action he had tendered 8300 in payment of the services rendered, but the plaintiff refused to accept it; and the defendant brought $300 into court in satisfaction of all claims and demands of the fence was so framed that if the plaintiff had desired to take the money out of court, he must have elected to do so before replying or before the expiration of the time for replying, as provided by con. rule 636, and must have taken it in satisfaction of all his claims in the action, and have filed and served a memorandum in accordance with con, rule 635. But, dum in accordance with con. rule 639. But, as he, instead of taking this course, proceeded with the action (in which he recovered more than $300), the defendant was absolved from his offer, and the money remained in court subject to further order; the defendant was entitled, in the absence of special circum-stances, to have it remain to be dealt with when the case should be finally disposed of; and it was open to the defendant to contend upon appeal that the amount recovered should be reduced below $300, notwithstanding the payment into court, by the plaintiff's election not to take the money out at the appropriate time. Denison v. Woods, 17 P. R. 549. See Bell v. Fraser, 12 A. R. 1: S. C., sub nom. Fraser v. Bell, 13 S. C. R. 546.

nom. Fraser v. Bell, 13 S. C. R. 546.

Pending Action in Another Prevince.]—The fact that a suit for the same matter is pending in Quebec, cannot be urged as a plea in bar to a suit for the same cause in this Province. Hughes v. Rees, 5 O. R. 654.

Res Judicata.] — Under the Judicature Act of Ontario res judicata cannot be relied on as a defence unless specially pleaded. Cooper v. Molsons Bank, 26 S. C. R. 611.

Statute — Necessity for Pleading.]—The statement of claim alleged a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant, but did not aver whether the agreement was in writing or not. The defence set up a special agreement by which the defendant was to be remunerated by a share of the profits in lieu of wages or salary, but did not expressly refer to R. S. O. 1877 c. 133. It was admitted that something was due to defendant, and a reference was ordered. The master in ordinary held, following Rogers v. Ullman, 21 Gr. 139, that, as the defendant had not pleaded R. S. O. 1877 c. 133, so as to negative the plaintiff's allegation of a partnership, he could not claim the benefit of that statute to support his account, but, to enable him to properly raise the question on appeal, permitted an affidavit to be filed shewing that there was an agreement under the statute:—Held, on appeal, that the case did not come within the terms of rule 141, O. J. Act, and that it was not necessary to plead the statute more specifically. Neil v. Park, 10 P. R. 476.

Statute of Frauds—Necessity for Pleading.]—The Statute of Frauds not having been pleaded nor any objection properly taken to the sufficiency of the delivery of the goods in question, either at the trial or in the order nist, the court, without deciding that there had been a sufficient delivery, held that the objection was not open to the defendant and refused to permit an amendment, Greenizen
v. Burns, 13 A. R. 481.

render—No Payment into Court.]—This action was to recover money as compensation for land expropriated, and for other relief. Defendants pleaded a defence in denial, and also a tender of $400 and interest, but did not pay the amount into court:—Held, that, the defence of tender without payment into court was a good defence under the O. J. Act, and a motion to strike out the defence, or to compel payment into court, or for judgment for the amount, with leave to proceed for a further amount, was refused. Demorest v. Midland R. W. Co., 10 P. R. 314.

Volenti non Fit Injuria.]—Quære, whether it is not necessary to set up specially a defence arising from the maxim "volenti non fit injuria." Le May v. Canadian Pacific R. W. Co., 18 O. R. 314.

XI. STRIKING OUT PLEADINGS.

(See, also, ante, II.)

1. Counterclaim.

See ante V. 2.

2. Demurrer.

See Ross v. Bucke, 14 P. R. 63; Mackey v. Bierel, 16 P. R. 148, ante VII. 1.

3. Statement of Claim.

Malicious Prosecution—Observations of Judge—Damage by Publication.]—In an action for malicious prosecution, a part of the statement of claim setting out the observations of the Judge before whom the plaintiff was tried upon the criminal charge out of which the action arose, was struck out; but a part stating damage to the plaintiff from publication of such charge in newspapers and otherwise by defendants, was allowed to stand. Judgeroe v. Chepne, 12 P. R. 487.

Slander — Particulars — Amendment.]—In an action of slander the statement of claim, after alleging that the slanders had been spoken and published to certain named persons, added "and to others at present unknown to the plaintiff:"—Held, sufficient, It is also alleged that during a period of five months the defendant spoke and published various slanders to certain named persons and to others not known to the plaintiff:—Held, lad, for it did not shew which of the persons mentioned were present when the different statements were made, nor at what times and places they were made. Leave to the plaintiff to amend by adding further charges within reasonable limits. Townsend v. O'Keefe, 18 P. R. 147.

See Lauder v. Carrier, 10 P. R. 612; Campbell v. James, 11 P. R. 347; McNab v. Macdonnell, 15 P. R. 14; Crerar v. Holbert, 17 P. R. 283; Rodger v. Nozon Co., 19 P. R. 327.

4. Statement of Defence.

Champerty.]—To an action under Lord Campbell's Act, the defendants pleaded that it was brought and maintained under a champertous agreement which disentitled the plaintiff to sue:—Held, that this defence should not be struck out; if proved, it was for the court to say what effect should follow. Welbourne v, Canadatan Pacific R. W. Co., 16 P. R. 343.

Claiming Benefit as of Demurrer.]—Claims on behalf of a wife for alimony and to set aside a conveyance of the husband's property as fraudulent should be joined in one action. Separate actions were brought for such claims, the five defendants appearing by the same solicitors, and filing separate statements of defence. A paragraph of each of the defences submitted that "the plaintift had made out no case entitling her to relief." This was struck out by the local master, by five separate orders to the same effect:—Held, that the paragraph was neither scandalous, nor prejudicial, nor embarrassing under rule 178, but was a mere reference to s. 44 of the Judicature Act, and should not have been struck out; and the costs of only one order were allowed. Snider v. Snider v. Snider v. Orr. 11 P. R. 140.

Denial of Liability—Tender and Payment into Court—Prejudice,1—In an action upon an insurance policy the defendants pleaded denying their liability, and also tender before action and payment into court. The plaintiff replied that there was due to him a larger sum than that paid in. Upon a motion to strike out the defences in denial:—Held, that they did not tend to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action, within the meaning of rule 423. Discussion as to the effect of the defences of tender and payment into court upon the question of costs and otherwise. Rules 632-640 considered. Davis v. National Assurance Co. of Ireland, 16 P. R. 116.

Doubtful Pleading — Demurrer,]—As a general rule pleadings should not be set aside on summary applications unless so plainly frivolous or indefensible as to invite excision. Where a matter is doubtful or difficult it is better to leave the objecting party to demur; and, even if the pleading appears to be demurrable, that is not a sufficient reason for expunging it from the record. And in this case a motion to strike out the defence and counterclaim (see aute V, 2) was refused. Glass v. Grunt, 12 P. R. 480.

Embarrassment—Prolivity.]—The plaintiffs were a gas company, doing business in and distributing gas by their mains throughout a city; the defendant was also the owner of gasworks in the same place, from which he supplied certain buildings in the city. The statement of claim charged that the defendant laid or caused to be laid a pipe to communicate with the pipe belonging to the plaintiffs, or in some way obtained or used the plaintiffs' gas, without their consent; and claimed the penalty given by s. 3 of the Gas and Water Companies Act. R. S. O. 1887 c. 164, and also the value of the gas alleged to have been taken. The de-fendant, in 13 paragraphs of his statement of defence, set out at great length various facts and circumstances, the gist of which was that the pipe mentioned in the statement of claim was so laid or caused to be laid by the plaintiffs, or by some one on their behalf, and not by the defendant; and also made therein alle-gations of a malicious course of conduct by the plaintiffs towards the defendant, affording reasons for the probability of the truth of the The thirteen paragraphs containing these allegations were moved against by the plaintiffs as embarrassing and irrelevant: Held that an embarrassing pleading under rule 423 is one which brings forward a defence which the defendant is not entitled to make use of; but here the defendant was entitled to make use of the defence set up, and there was nothing in the paragraphs tending to prejudice or delay the fair trial of the action. It might be that evidence of the course of conduct of the plaintiffs alleged by the defendant could not be permitted to be given; but that was a question for the trial Judge, and not one to be determined upon a motion to strike out pleadings except in a plain case, Even if it was unnecessary to plead this course of conduct, that did not make the pleading embarrassing. The court should not hesitate to interfere with the discretion exercised in chambers, where the defendant has been thereby deprived of his right to set up a defence which he is entitled to make use of. Remarks on verbosity in pleading. Glass v. Grant, 12 P. R. 480, approved. Stratford Gas Co. v. Gordon, 14 P. R. 407.

In an action by creditors of an insolvent partnership against the assignee for the benefit of creditors, for an account and payment of dividends upon the estate, and interest, the defendant, inter alia, set out in his defence, at great length, certain correspondence between his solicitors and the plaintiffs', as to the terms upon which he should acknowledge the right of the plaintiffs to dividends, as to the securities held by the plaintiffs, the value placed thereon, and the claim of the plaintiffs for interest, and alleged that, for the sake of peace and to avoid litigation, he paid into court a sum of money, which he had tendered pursuant to the request of the plaintiffs, as shewn by the correspondence, upon conditions upon which the plaintiffs had stated they were will ing to accept it, with the exception that he would not pay interest from the date fixed by them, there being, as he submitted, no right in them to receive interest, and he reserved the right to take proceedings to recover the amount overpaid in case the security of the plaintiffs should be upheld, and it should be held that they should have valued it:—Held, that these portions of the defence were properly stricken out as prolix and embarrassing. Brock v. Tew. 18 P. R. 30.

Falsity of Defence.]—In an action for damages for detention of dover, defendants pleaded: (1) that the lands in question were wild, and plaintiff was not entitled to the sum claimed for damages; if any; (2) that plaintiff had assigned her claim for damages; (3) set-off for moneys expended in respect of said lands; (4) that they did not detain, but were always willing, &c. On a motion in chambers, after issue joined, for an order directing a reference as to the damages under s. 47, O. J. Act, and upon evidence by affidavit both for and against the truth of the pleas, the master made an order striking out the 2nd and 3rd pleas, and directing a reference:—Held, that the master had no jurisdiction to make the order, and that the issues raised questions that were properly triable only at the hearing, Ryan v, Fish, 10 P, R, 187.

Inapplicable Defence.] — A defence which is wholly inapplicable may be struck out, unless amended, although it is neither scandalous nor tending to prejudice, embarrass, or delay. Chamberlain v. Chamberlin, 11 P. R. 501.

Municipal Corporation—Votice of Action.]—A municipal corporation is not entitled to notice of action under the Act to protect justices of the peace and others from vexations actions, R. S. O. 1887 c. 73. Hodgins v. Counties of Huron and Bruce, 3 E. & A. 169, followed. Defence of want of such notice struck out upon summary application. McCarthy v. Township of Vespra, 16 P. R. 416.

Promissory Note—Payment.] — Upon a summary application under rule 1322 (387) to strike out defences on the ground that they disclose "no reasonable answer," the court is not to look upon the matter with the same strictness as upon demurrer; a party should not be lightly deprived of a ground of substantial defence by the summary process of a judgment in chambers. And in an action upon a promissory note, alleged by the defendants to have been taken by the plaintiffs after maturity, defences of payment, estoppel by conduct, and a claim for equitable protection arising out of agreement, were allowed to remain on the record. Bank of Hamilton v. George, 16 P. R. 418.

Seduction — Cause of Action — Pleading and Denurring.]—A pleading will not be summarily struck out merely on the ground that it is demurrable. Glass v. Grant, 12 P. R. 489, followed. Where the statement of defence in an action of seduction alleged that the cause of action was in another than the plaintiff, but did not allege that that other sought to proceed by action:—Held, that, as there was no authority expressly holding this defence to be bad, it should not be struck out; but leave was given to reply and demur. Daley v. Byrne, 15 P. R. 4.

See Attorney-General v. Midland R. W. Co., 3 O. R. 511; Switzer v. Laidman, 18 O. R. 420.

XII. VENUE.

(See also TRIAL.)

Change of, by Amendment.] — The plaintiff, having in his statement of claim named Toronto as the place of trial, afterwards amended it on practice under rule 179. O. J. Act, naming Belleville as the place of trial:—Held, on appeal, following Frietsch v. Winkler, 3. Ch. Ch. 100, that no change of the place of trial could be made by amendment of the statement of claim. Bull v. North British Canadian Investment Co., 10 P. R. 622.

Local Venue.]—Held, that the effect of rule 254 of the O. J. Act, is to abolish all local venues, as well those made so by statute as at the common law, except in actions of ejectment. Legacy v. Pitcher, 10 O. R. 620. See also Ireland v. Pitcher, ib, 631.

In an action against magistrates for malicious and illegal arrest and imprisonment:—
Held, following Legacy v. Pitcher, 10 O. R.
620, that the venue need not be laid where the offence was committed. Bond v. Conmec, 15
O. R. 716.

The venue in this action was laid in the city of Toronto, and subsequently an order was made striking out the jury notice and directing the trial to take place at Port Arthur:—Held, that in view of this order the objection that the venue was improperly laid could not be sustained. S. C., 16 A. K. 398.

— Foreclosure—Claim for Possession.]

—An action by a mortgagee for foreclosure, payment, and possession of the mortgaged premises, is not an action of ejectment within the meaning of the exception in rule 254, O. J.
Act, and the venue need not therefore, in such an action, be laid in the county where the lands he, Seymour v, DeMarsh, II P. R. 472.

Patent for Invention—Infringement of Patent.]—See Goldsmith v. Walton, 9 P. R. 10; Aitcheson v. Mann, 9 P. R. 253.

Residence of Plaintiff—Rule 529 (b.) ——Rule (1897) 529 provides that: (a) the plaintiff shall, in his statement of claim, name the county town at which he proposes that the action shall be tried; (b) where the cause of action arose and the parties reside in the same county, the place so to be named shall be the county town of that county:—Held, that the residence of the plaintiff at the time of the delivery of the statement of claim, and not at the time of the issue of the writ of summons, is the time referred to in rule 529 (b). Elsall v. Wray, 19 P. R. 245.

Sheriff—Party to Action.]—In an action wherein a sheriff is plaintiff or defendant, the opposite party, if he so desire, may have the action tried in the county adjoining that in which the sheriff resides. Brannen v. Jarvis, 8 P. R. 322.

Writ of Summons—Indorsement — Election.]—Where in the special indorsement of his writ of summons the plaintiff names a piace of trial, he is not at liberty to change by naming another place in his statement of caim. Rule 529 must be read subject to the provision of rule 138 (2). Segsworth v. Me-Aimon, 19 J. R. 178.

XIII. WAIVER BY PLEADING.

Judgment — Reference.]—Where a party does not plend a prior judgment in bar by way of estoppel before the entry of a judgment directing a reference to the master, he waives it, and leaves the whole matter at large to be inquired into on the evidence. Hughes v. 76s., 10 P. R. 301. But see S. C., 9 O. R.

Will—Accrual of New Rights.]—Held, that a clause in the answer of W. S., expressing his willingness that the will should be construed by the court and the rights of the parties thereunder determined, had not the effect of waiving any right that might have accrued to him during the progress of the suit. Archer v. Severn, 12 O. R. 615.

XIV. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Arbitration-Compensation for Land.]-D. brought an action to compel a railway company to arbitrate to ascertain the value of certain land taken for the purposes of the railway company, and after the service of the writ the company served a notice to arbitrate, and after arbitration an award was made by two of the arbitration an award was made yet two of the arbitrators, but was subsequently set aside by the court as invalid. D. then proceeded with his action, and the railway company pleaded that the arbitrators had fixed a time for the making of the award, but did not make any within the time limited, and did not enlarge the time, and that, therefore, the sum of $400 offered by the railway company before proceedings taken had become the amount of the compensation. The Judge amount of the compensation. The Judge found on the evidence that no time had been fixed by the arbitrators for making the award: -Held, that, as the parties by their pleadings had placed themselves upon an issue as to whether the arbitrators had fixed a time or not, and as that issue was found in favour of the plaintiff, the sum of $400 offered had not become the compensation to be paid, and a reference back was ordered. Demorest v. Grand Junction R. W. Co., 10 O. R. 515.

Defamation — Trade-libet—Action on the Case. —An action for words written and published relating to articles of the plaintifs' manufacture and the rights of the plaintifs' manufacture and the rights of the plaintifs under certain letters patent by virtue of which they claimed a monopoly of the manufacture and sale of the articles, is not an action of defamation properly so called, but an action on the case for maliciously acting in such a way as to inflict loss upon the plaintiffs, and does not come within s. 109 of the Judicature Act, 1895, so as to be triable only by a jury, unless by consent. Dickerson v. Radeliffe, 17 P. P. R. 418.

The plaintiff, a tradesman, claimed damages for injury to his credit and business by reason of the defendant having sent certain hand-bills issued by the plaintiff, advertising his business, to various wholesale creditors of the plaintiff, and having written and published letters to such creditors falsely and maliciously charging that the plaintiff was advertising his business and unduly forcing sales with the view of selling and disposing of his goods to defeat and defraud his creditors:—Held, that the action was for libel, and not in case for disturbing the plaintiff in his calling, and the defendant was entitled to have the words of the alleged libel set out in the pleading, Flood v. Jackson, 11895 [2 Q. B. 21, and Riding v. Smith. 1 Ex. D. 91, specially referred to. Robinson v. Sugarman, I P. R. 419.

Notice of Exceptions.]—See O'Donnell v. Duchenault, 14 O. R. 1.

Production of Documents before Pleading—Felse Representations.]—Production of documents should not be ordered to be made by the defendant for the benefit of the plaintiff before he delivers his statement of claim, unless the Judge is satisfied that the documents called for are essential to the statement of the plaintiff's claim. In an action for damages for false representations of the plaintiff's claim.

sentations made by the defendants, whereby the plaintiffs were induced to supply them with goods and money, and to enter into agreements with them, to the plaintiffs' loss:—Heid, that it was enough for the plaintiffs to aver in their statement of claim that the goods and money were supplied on the faith of statements, oral and written—specifying them—falsely and fraudulently made; and this they could do without the production of the defendants' balance sheets, books of account, &c. If particulars were afterwards claimed, it would then be time enough to apply for discovery. Arthur and Co. (Ltd.) v. Runians, 18 P. R. 205.

Question Raised by Plea — Incidental Issue.]—Issues raised merely by pleas cannot have the effect of increasing the amount in controversy so as to give the supreme court of Canada jurisdiction to hear an appeal. Standard Life Assurance Co. v. Trudeau, 30 S. C. R. 308.

PLEDGE.

Assignment of Covenant—Redemption.]
—The plaintiff transferred a covenant for the payment of $4,000, executed by four persons in his favour, to the defendant, by an absolute assignment, as security for $2,000; the defendant giving to the plaintiff a separate agreement to "re-assign" on payment of the loan and interest. On a bill to obtain a re-assignment, alleging that such loan had been repaid, the court made a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff with costs; the defendant having set up a claim to be entitled to hold the security as absolute purchaser thereof. Livingston v. Wood, 27 Gr. 515.

Bonds—Fraudulent Conversion—Notice—Estoppel.] — The Quebec Turnpike Trusts bonds issued under special Acts and ordinances (R. S. Q. 1888, sup., p. 505) are payable to bearer and transferable by delivery. Certain of these bonds belonging to the estate to bearer and transferable by delivery. Certain of these bonds belonging to the estate could be a such in the case of Young v. Rattray, and having been afterwards lost, were advertised for in a newspaper in Quebec in the year 1882. About ten years afterwards W., who was the agent and administrator of the estate, and had the bonds in his possession as such, pledged them to a broker for advances on his own account, the bonds being then long past due, but payment being provided for under the advertisement, nor the marks upon the bonds, nor the broker's knowledge of the agent's insolvency, were notice to the pledgeof ed efects in the pledgor's title; and that the owners of the bonds, having by their act enabled their agent to transfer them by delivery, were estopped from asserting their title to the detriment of a bond fide holder. Held, also, that a bond fide holder acquiring commercial paper after dishonour takes subject not merely to the equities of prior parties to the paper, but also to those of all parties having an interest therein. Railway Rolling Stock—Non-delivery—Creditors.]—B., who was the principal owner of the South Eastern Railway Company, was in the habit of mingling the moneys of the company with his own. He bought locomotives which were delivered to, and used openly and publicity by, the railway company as their own property for several years. In January and May, 1883, B., by documents sous seing privé, sold, with the condition to deliver on demand, ten of these locomotive engines to F. et al., the appellants, to guarantee them against an indorsement of his notes for $50,000, but reserved the right on payment of the notes or any renewals thereof to have the locomotives redelivered to him. B. having become insolvent, F. et al., by their action directed against B., the South Eastern Railway Company, and B. et al., trustees of the company under 43 & 44 Vict. c. 49 (Q.), asked for the delivery of the locomotives, which were at the delivery of the locomotives, which were at the time in the open possession of the South Eastern Company, unless the defendants paid the amount of their debt. B. did not plead. The South Eastern Railway Company and B. et al., as trustees, pleaded a general denial, and during the proceedings O'H. filed an intervention, alleging that he was a judgment creditor of B, notoriously insolvent at the time of making the alleged sale to F. :–Held, that the transaction with B, amounted only to a pledge not accompanied by delivery, and, therefore, F. et al. were not entitled to the possession of the locomotives as against creditors of the comlocomotives as against creditors of the company, and that in any case they were not en-titled to the property as against O'H., a judg-ment creditor of B., an insolvent. Court of Justice-Stealing Information.] Held, that the police court of the city of Toronto is a court of justice within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 21, s. 18 (D.), and that the prisoner was properly convicted of stealing an inform. ation laid in that court. Regina v. Mason, 22 C. P. 246.

C. P. 246.
Whether the police court is such a court or not, is a question of law which may be reserved by the Judge at the trial under C. S. U. C. c. 112, s. 1; and where the Judge refused to reserve such question, it cannot be considered upon a writ of error. Ib.
Held, that maliciously destroying an information or record of the said court, is felony within the same Act. Ib.
An indictment describing an offence within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 21, s. 18, as feloniously stealing an information taken in a police court, is sufficient after verdict. Ib.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS CASES, 5417.

I. APPOINTMENT.

Evidence-Provincial Patent - Dominion Evidence—Provincial Patent — Dominion Patent.]—The court declined to hear discussed the question whether the police magistrate in this case, if appointed only by the Ontario Government, was legally or validly appointed, as his appointment should have been by the Dominion, the patent by the Ontario government only being produced, and it not appearing that na commission by the Dominion had is: that no commission by the Dominion had is-sued to him, nor that any search or inquiry had been made at the proper office as to the fact, the only other evidence as to the appointment, besides the mere production of the On-tario patent, being the defendant's affidavit tario patent, peng the detendant's allocarios stating that the magistrate had no authority or appointment from the Crown or Governor-General of the Dominion, and that he knew this "of common and notorious report." Regina v. Richardson, 8 O. R. 651.

Provincial Government-Right to Appoint.]—The power to appoint police magis-trates, rests with the Ontario government. Richardson v. Ransom, 10 O. R. 387.

Provincial Statute — Intra Vires.] — 28 Viet. c. 20, authorizing the Governor to ap-point police magistrates, relates to the administration of justice, and is within the powers of the legislature of Ontario, and is still in force as continued by 31 Viet. c. 17 (0.) Regina v. Iteno, 4 P. R. 281.

Held, that the appointment of police magistrates is not ultra vires the legislature of Ontario. Regima v. Bennett. 1 O. R. 445, followed. Regima v. Lee. 15 O. R. 393. See also Repina v. Bush. 15 O. R. 398.

II. FEES AND SALARY.

Action for-Statute-Debt.]-Held, that Vict. c. 81 made it not only the duty a town council to pay their police magisof a trated but created a debt, the payment of which he might enforce in an action of debt, not as founded upon a contract, but on the statute, and that the action may be maintained without the aid of a by-law of the municipality to confer it. Quære, is debt the only remedy? Wilkes v. Town of Brantford, 3 C. P. 470.

Additional Fees-Salary Paid - Police Additional rees—satary Pan—rottee Clerk—Statutes,—The salary paid to a police magistrate for a city or town, under R. S. O. 1877 c. 172, s. 1, covers all cases that may come before him, arising within the city or town; so that he is not entitled to any fees except in what may be called purely country when the charge arises and the except in what may be called purely country cases, e.g., where the charge arises and the parties reside out of the city or town, or where it is a local matter, as for injury to property situate out of the town or city. A town clerk, being also town treasurer, did not act as police being also town treasurer, did not act as police clerk, and no appointment having been made by the municipal council, the police magistrate appointed a clerk from 1871 to 1877, which appointment the council, with full knowledge and notice thereof, never repudiated:—Held, that under these circumstances the clerk must be considered as if appointed by the council, and entitled to retain the fees given to police clerks by the statute. Held, also, that the police magistrate was not entitled to charge these fees himself, and to pay the clerk a salary in lieu thereof. Town of Peterborough v. Hatton, 30 C. P. 455. A police clerk of a town, remunerated by a fixed salary, paid over to the municipality, in accordance with the statute, the fees received by him, amongst them being the fees for hearing and determining cases, and for records of convictions:—Held, that the police magistrate, for the reason and except as above stated, could not claim such last named fees. Held, also, that the corporation of the town were not entitled to recover from the defendant any fees received by him. Ib.

III. JURISDICTION.

Arrest of Witness—Absence of Madice.]
—Where a police magistrate, acting within his jurisdiction under R. S. C. c. 174, issues his warrant for the arrest of a witness who has not appeared in obedience to a subpena, he is not, in the absence of malice, liable in damages, even though he may have erred as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the arrest. Judgment below, 24 O. R. 576, affirmed. Cardon v. Demson, 22 A. R. 315.

Conviction — Recibul of Office — Justice Acting for Magistrate; — The prisoner had been convicted by one justice of the peace of the pe Crown Case Reserved. — A police magistrate cannot reserve a case for the opinion of a superior court under C. S. U. C. c. 112, as he is not within the terms of that Act. Regina v. Richardson, S.O. R. 651.

Disqualification — Interest in Fine — Salary, 1—Section 419 (a) of the Municipal Act, 1892, which provides that a magistrate shall not be disqualified from acting as such by reason of the fine or penalty, or part thereof, on conviction going to the municipality of which he is a ratepayer, includes a police magistrate. Where a police magistrate, appointed under R. S. O. 1887 c. 72, is paid a salary by the municipality instead of by fees, such salary being in no way dependent on any fines which he may impose, he has no pecuniary interest in the fines, and so is not thereby disqualified. Semble, that in such a case there would have been no disqualification at common law. Regina v. Fleming, 27 O. R. 122.

Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace in Absence of Police Magistrate, —See Regina v. Gordon. 16 O. R. 64; Regina v. Lynch. 19 O. R. 664; Regina v. Clancey, 7 P. R. 35.

Liquor License Act — Right to Try County Ofteners.] — The defendant was charged with a breach of the Liquor License Act, in the township of Barton in the county of Wentworth, and was tried and convicted at the city of Hamilton, situated in the said county, before the police magistrate thereof: —Held, that under s. 18 of the Police Magistrates Act, R. S. O. 1887 c, 72, the police magistrate had jurisdiction in the premises. Region v, Gully, 21 O. R. 219.

Stipendiary Magistrate for Judicial District of Parry Sound.]—See Regina v. Monteith, 15 O. R. 290.

Summary Trial—Dominion Statute—Intra Vires. [—38 Vict. c. 47, giving power to police and stipendiary magistrates to try in a summary manner felonies and misdemeanours, is intra vires the Dominion Parliament. In re Boucher, Cassels' Dig. 325.

Nature of Offence.]—The defendant sold to C, amongst other things, a horse-power and belt, part of his stock in the trade of a butcher, in which he also sold a half-interest to C. The horse-power had been hired from one M, and at the time of the sale the term of hiring had not expired. At its expiry, M demanded it, and C. claimed that he had purchased it from defendant. The defendant then employed a man to take it out of the premises where it was kept and deliver it to M, which he did. The defendant was summarily tried before a police magistrate and convicted of an offence againsts 32 & 33 Vict. c. 21, 8, 110 (D).:

—Held, that the conviction was bad, there being no offence against that section, and no, jurisdiction in the police magistrate to try summarily, Regina v. Young, 5 O. R. 400.

Territorial Jurisdiction.]—Police magistrates have jurisdiction both in cities and counties. Regina v. Mosier, 4 P. R. 64.

The defendant was tried at Belleville before the police magistrate for the county of Hastings and convicted, for, amongst other things, supplying milk from which the cream or strippings had been taken or kept back. The factory was in Hastings, but the defendant resided and the milk was supplied in the county of Lennox and Addington: — Held, that the police magistrate for Hastings had no jurisdiction to try the offence, and the conviction must be quashed. Held, also, that certiforari has not been taken away in such cases; but, even if it had, the court would not be justified in refusing to examine the evidence to see if the magistrate had jurisdiction. Regina v. Dowling, 17 O. R. 698.

Action. — Police Limits — Police Court — Xotice.]—The prisoner was convicted by the police magistrate for the city of Toronto, for that he "did on." &c., "at the said city of all on the city of Toronto, for the city of Toronto, keep a common disorderly bawdy comes on Queen street, in the said city," and committed to gool at hard labour for six months. On application for her discharge under a labeas corpus:—Held, no objection that the commitment did not shew that the offence was committed within the "police limits" of the city, the words used in C. S. C. e. 105, s. 14, for there was no ground for supposing any difference between these and the ordinary city limits; nor that no notice had been put up as required by s. 25 of the same Act, to shew that the court was that of the police magistrate, not of an ordinary justice of the peace, for the jurisdiction, in the absence of express emactment, could not be made to depend on the omission of the clerk to post up such notice. Regime v. Murno, 24 U. C. R. 44.

Warrant of Commitment — Recital of Office.]—A warrant of commitment on a conviction had before a police magistrate for the town of Chatham, in Upper Canada, under 28 Vict. c. 2, averred that on a day named, "at the town of Chatham, in said county, he, the said A. S., did attempt to procure A. B. to enlist to serve as a soldier in the army of the United States of America, contrary to the statute of Canada in such case made and provided;" and then proceeded: "And whereas the said A. S. was duly convicted of the said offence before me, the said police magistrate, and condemned," &c.:—Held, that the warrant sufficiently shewed that the magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction. IV. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

"Police Office"—Municipal Corporation—Accommodation—Stationery,] — The police magistrate of a town cannot require the municipal corporation to provide facilities for the transaction of business not strictly apper-laining to his office of police magistrate, such as business relating to an adjoining county of which he is a justice of the peace, nor is he entitled to a private office in addition to a public one. It is sufficient if a suitable room or chamber for a police office is provided in any building belonging to the municipality (in this case the council chamber), although by providing a room which is used for other purposes the hours for the transaction of police business may be limited. A municipal corporation is flable to a police magistrate for a claim of the first policy and the stationery, although extending beyond a first little of the province of the prov Replevin—Search Warrant—Stay of Proceedings 1-A gold watch having been taken of a search warrant from a person who abscouled, the plaintiff claimed title to it, and brought replevin therefor against a city police magistrate, who applied to stay proceedings under 16 Viet, c. 180, s. 6:—Held, that replevin did not come within the Act; and the application was dismissed. Manson v. Gurnett 2 P. R. 389. Return of Convictions — Penulty,]—A police magistrate, acting ex officio as justice of the peace, is not subject to the provisions of s. 1 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 76, and need not make a return as therein required to the clerk of the peace. Section 6 of R. S. O. 1887 c. 77 exempts him from this duty, whether he is acting as police magistrate or ex officio as justice of the peace. Hunt q. t. v. Shaver, 22 A. R. 202.

Devise—Acquisition of Interest. — A person having a power of attorney to sell certain lands, entered into possession after the death of the owner, with an intention to acquire the title, and died in possession, but before his possession had ripened into a title as against the representatives of the true owner: —Held, that he had such an interest as passed under a general devise in his will. Held, also, that the devisees were entitled to claim the property in equity as against the testator's heirs, who had gone into possession; but that a suit for the purpose could be successfully resisted by shewing sufficient length of possession by the heirs after the testator's death to give a title as against the plaintiffs. Hevard v. Hevard, 15 Gr. 516, 5 Gr. 516, 5 Gr. 516.

POST OFFICE AND POSTAGE.

Postage—Rate Chargeable.]—Postage on a letter carried by inland navigation from one post town to another, was chargeable under 9 Anne c. 10, 5 Geo. III. c. 25, according to the distance the letter was actually carried, and not according to the distance by the post road between the two places. Dickson v. Crooks, Dra. 125.

Postmaster—Disqualification from Voting.1—Held, that a postmaster of a city is not liable to a penalty for voting at an election for a member of the house of commons of the Dominion of Canada. But, semble, he is not entitled to vote, and should he do so his vote might be struck off on a scrutiny. Savage v. Deacon, 22 C. P. 441.

— Fraud — Receiver—Indictment.]—
One D., being postmaster at Berlin, transmitted to defendant, at Toronto, several post office orders payable there, which defendant presented and got cashed, but it appeared afterwards that the moneys thus obtained had never been received by D. for defendant, and that frauds to a large exteen had thus committed. Liability for Negligence.]—An action will lie against a postmaster for not sending a letter, but the declaration must aver that the letter is the plaintiff's. Campbell v. Mc-Pherson, 6 O. S. 34; Carey v. Lawless, 12 U. C. R. 285.

Surcties. — Proceedings by Crown against—Surcties. — The defendants entered into a joint and several bond to the Queen with D, and T. for the faithful discharge by S, of the duties of deputy postmaster at O. On sci. fa. against defendant on the bond, he appeared to it on the grounds: 1. That a bond of this nature should, since the passing of the Post Office Act, C. S. C. c. 36, have been proceeded on by suit in the name of the postmaster-general, and not by sci. fa. or at the instance of the attorney-seneral. 2. That the proceedings should have been against the parties to the bond jointly, or it should appear why the other parties were not joined:—Held, that, muster-general in such cases to sue in his official name, the words "or otherwise contained therein, do not deprive the Crown the name of the Queen. Regina v. Me-Pherson, 15 C. P. 17.

Held, that the Post Office Act, 1867, 31 Vict. c. 10, s. 89 (D.), does not take away from the Crown the remedy by extent upon a bond given by a postmaster. Regina v. Mc-Nabb, 30 U.C. R. 479.

The condition of a bond given by the defendants, as sureties for a postmaster, to the postmaster general, was, that the postmaster do not and shall not commit any theft, larceny, robbery, or embezzlement of, or lose or destroy, or commit any malfeasance, misfeasance, or neglect of duty, from which may arise any theft, larceny, robbery, or embezzlement, loss or destruction of, any money, goods, chattels, valuables, or effects, or of any letter or parcel containing the same, which may come into his custody or possession, as such postmaster," &c. The postmaster opened several letters which came into his possession as such postmaster, and having taken therefrom certain cheques, forged the payees" names as undo postmaster and having taken therefrom certain cheques, forged the payees "names as indorsers thereof, and got them cashed by a bank upon guaranteeing the genuineness of such indorsements. The drawers refused to recognize these cheques, but issued duplicates to the payees and paid them, so that the bank lost the money. In an action by the postmaster-general on the bond, on behalf of the bank, to recover from defendants, as such surveites, the loss so incurred: —Held, referring to ss. 37 and 78 of the Post Office Act 1875, that defendants were not liable, for that the forgery and the postmaster's guarantee, and not the larceny, were the proximate causes of the loss, and the contents of the letters did not belong to the bank. Remarks as to form of the condition. Postmaster-General v. McColl, 31 C. P. 364.

In an action by the Crown, on the information of the attorney-general for Canada, upon a bond executed in the Province of Quebee in the form provided by the Act respecting the security to be given by the officers of Canada (31 Vict. e. 37, 35 Vict. e. 19) and the Post Office Act (38 Vict. e. 19). Held, that the right of action under the bond was governed by the law of the Province of Quebee. Held, further, that such a bond was not an obligation with a penal clause within the application of arts. 1131 and 1135 of the civil code of Lower Canada. Black v. The Queen, 29 S. C. R. 633.

Post Office Building—Ice on Steps—Inliability.]—The Crown is under no lugal duty or obligation to any one who goes to a post office building to post or get his letters, to repair or keep in a reasonably safe condition the walks and step leading to such building. 2. A person who goes to a post office to post or get his letters goes of his own choice and on his own business, and the duty of the Crown as owner of the building, if such a duty were assumed to exist, would be to warn or otherwise secure him from any danger in the nature of a trap known to the owner and not open to ordinary observation.
3. A petition of right will not lie against the Crown for injuries sustained by one who falls upon a step of a public building by reason of ice which had formed there and which the caretaker of the building, employed by the minister of public works, had failed to remove or to cover with sand or ashes. 4.
The expression "public work" occurring in s. 16 of the Exchequer Court Act includes not only railways and canals and such other public undertakings in Canada as in older countries are usually left to private enterprise, but also all public works mentioned in the Public Works Act, R. S. C. c. 36, and other Acts in which such expression is defined. Leprohon v. The Queen, 4 Ex. C. R.

Post Office Inspector.—Slander—Notice of Iction.]—A statement by a post office inspector when investigating couplaints as to lost letters, to the sureties of the postmaster state the postmaster swife has stolen the letters in question and that given him a written confession of her full insprind facie privilegel, because of the sureties in the investigation. Semble, such a strengent to a partner of one of the sureties in the investigation. Semble, such a strengent to a partner of one of the sureties is not rotected. The facts that the plaintiff at the trial denies having stolen the letter of the sureties of the sure Proof by Posted Letter — Fire Insurance. [—A condition indorsed on a fire policy provided that any subsequent mortgage of the property insured "must be notified to the scretary in writing forthwith, otherwise the policy shall be void." The plaintiff mortgaged part of the property insured to one M., who mailed a letter to defendants' secretary, notifying him, as required by the condition, but the letter did not reach him:—Held, that the mere posting, without shewing that it reached the secretary, was not a compliance with the condition. McCann v. Waterloo County Mutata Fire Ins. Co., 34 U. C. R. 376.

An interim receipt for an insurance premium provided that the directors should have power to cancel the contract at any time within thirty days, "by causing a notice to that effect to be mailed to the applicant," at a specified address. The general manager of the company proved that he directed a letter declinancy the risk to be sent to the plaintiff; that he saw it written and placed with other letters to be sent; and that one H., a clerk in the office, had charge of them, and his duty was to address them to the parties and enter them in the mailing book. The mailing book was produced, with an entry in it of this letter; and H. swore that this entry was in his writing, and that he had no reason to doubt that the letter had been mailed. The plaintiff (the insured), however, swore that he had never received it:—Held, per Hazarty, C.J., that, on this evidence, the question of mailing must have been submitted to the jury, who should have found that it had been mailed. Per Gwynne, J., that a verdict finding otherwise could not have been sustained. The case, however, was decided in defendants' favour upon another ground. Johnson v. Provincial Inst. 60, 27 C. P. 464.

Post Mark.]—A foreign post mark on a letter is prima facie evidence of the time when the letter was mailed. O'Neil v. Perrin, M. T. 3 Vict.

Attempting to bargain with or procure a woman falsely to make the affidavit provided Vol. III. p-171-22 for by C. S. U. C. c. 77, s. 6, that A. is the father of her illegitimate child, is an indictable offence. The attempt proved consisted of a letter written by defendant, dated at Bradford, in the county of Simceo, purporting, but not proved, to bear the Bradford post mark, and addressed to the woman at Toronto, where she received it:—Held, that the case could be tried in the county of York. Semble, that if the post mark had been proved, and the letter thus shewn to have passed out of the defendant's hands in Simcoe, intended for the woman, the offence would have been complete in that county, and the indictment only triable there. Per Hagarty, J., that the defendant in that case would still have caused the letter to be received in York, and might be tried there. Regina v. Clement, 26 U. C. R. 297.

Transmission of Legal Documents and Money.]— Where a sheriff, on being ruled to return a fi, fa., returned it by post to the Crown office, where it was not filed because the postage was unpaid:—Held, that the sheriff was bound to have paid the postage, to make his return effectual. Regina v. Moodie, 1 U. C. R., 410.

Where A. agreed to accept as notice actually given any which B. should mail directed to A., it is a sufficient compliance with such agreement that a written notice is actually delivered to A., though not put into the post for him. Morton v. Benjamin, S. U. C. R. 594.

Where it was agreed between the attorneys of the parties to a cause (the one resident in Whitby and the other in Collingwood) that papers should be served by mail:—Held, that the time of the service of notice of trial commenced to count from the time it was mailed by plantiff's attorney, and not from the time of its receipt by the defendant's attorney. Robson v. Arbuthnott, 3 P. R. 313.

Semble, that where such a mode of service is agreed upon, the paper mailed, in the event of loss or miscarriage, is entirely at the risk of the attorney to whom sent. Ib.

Persons sending writs to the sheriff by mail which require immediate attention, must run the risk of his delay in sending to the post office. Robinson v. Grange, 18 U. C. R. 260.

Where costs collected by the sheriff had been posted on the evening of the 27th November, addressed to the plaintiff's solicitor, but not received by him till after defendants had moved for a stay of proceedings pending their appeal:—Held, that the money was constructively in the possession of the plaintiff's solicitor when mailed; and a motion to refund it was refused with costs. McDonell v. McKay, 2 Ch. Ch. 354.

The transfer by the defaulting treasurer of a municipality to the bankers of the municipality of the accepted cheque of a third person for the amount due by him to the municipality, cannot be impeached under the Assignments and Preferences Act, the duty to make good his wrong being sufficient to protect the transaction. The cheque was sent by the treasurer by post in a letter to the bankers, and this letter was received by the bankers in the afternoon, but the amount was not credited in the bank books to the municipality till next morning, and before this was done an assignment for the benefit of creditors had been made by the treasurer:—Held, that the property passed as soon as the cheque reached the bankers, and that the assignment was not a revocation of the transfer. Fer Ferguson, J., that the property in the cheque passed Irrevocably by virtue of the provisions of the Post Office Act, R. S. C. c. 35, s. 45, as soon as the letter was posted. Haivedl v. Totenship of Whiton, 24 A. R. 628.

Transmission of Letters—Loss.]--Held, that the stage coach proprietor (who was also the contractor for carrying the mail) was not liable, under the facts of this case, for the loss of a letter containing a note. Holman v. Weller, S U. C. R. 202.

Held, (1) that it is not illegal to deliver a money letter to a private friend on his journey, provided such letter be delivered by such friend to the party to whom it is addressed; (2) that such friend as a gratuitous balies would be bound to take as much care of the letter as he would of his own; (3) that if lost, where he does take such care, he is not responsible.
