Guelph Evening Mercury

THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 27, 1873.

We publish to-day a fuller report of Mr. Mackenzie's speech than we were able to give yesterday. On an occasion of this kind, it was not to be expected that the Premier would make any detailed or elaborate exposition of the policy of the first Reform Government of the Dominion; but so far as he has gone, he speaks with no uncertain sound. A wide field is covered by the reiterated declaration of the Premier that the Reform policy in opposition would be the Reform policy in office. On two leading questions—the independence of representatives in Parliament and the construction of the Pacific Railway—the Premier's utterances are eminently satisfactory. The whole speech is characterized by the straightforwardness and manliness which are such marked features of Mr. Mackenzie's individuality; and it possesses especial interest as being the first public speech delivered by Mr. Mackenzie in his official character. Our summary will be found convenient to those who have not the time to peruse the four and a half columns which the speech occupies in the great Toronto daily.

Another Minister has been elected by acclamation. At Alexandria, on Wednesday, the Hon. D. A. Macdonald, Postmaster General, was nominated as M. P. for Glengarry, and no opposition was forthcoming. Among those on the platform were Messrs. B. Delvin, James Stewart, Montreal; Cyril Archibald, M. P., H. Sandfield Macdonald and W. Brislow. The Postmaster-General delivered a capital speech on the public questions of the day.

The New York Herald has another warlike despatch from Madrid, exceedingly important if true. On the other hand, there is information from Washington of an exceedingly peaceful tendency. Our readers must make the best they can of the contradictory information. We can scarcely believe the two nations will be so foolish as to go to war over this business.

Captain Speedy, a British officer who distinguished himself in the Abyssinian campaign, has entered the service of the Rujah of Larut, and is to receive a salary of £1,000 per month. Until lately Captain Speedy was the tutor of Prince Alamayu, son of the late King Theodoros of Abyssinia.

The Max Maretzek Opera Company has been disbanded. Luca and Di Murska refusing to submit to a reduction of salary, which the present hard times, in the opinion of the manager, made imperative.

The Newfoundland Legislature meets in January. It is now stated that the result of the elections gives the Government fourteen and the Opposition thirteen.

Ten clerks have been dismissed from the Department of Public Works at Ottawa, and the Civil Service is perturbed last the dismissals may extend to other departments.

A dinner is to be given to Mr. Huntington, at Montreal, about the 23rd prox.

Fordwich.

PROFESSIONAL.—Dr. McDermid has commenced the practice of his profession in Fordwich. The doctor is a graduate of McGill University, Montreal. As he is highly recommended by the likely success in building up a good practice. His office is at Parker's Hotel. See his card in to-day's MERCURY.

Snow.—There is good sleighing in the vicinity of Fordwich. Snow fell on Monday night to the depth of five inches.

Tweed had deeded to his lawyers, bondsmen, and son's wife a large amount real estate. It was said that his sentence involved hard labor. A speedy trial of Coman, Genet, and Norton is promised. Judge Davis commented upon the action of Tweed's counsel in protesting against his riding, and threatened to make an example of them.

LOST IN THE SNOW.—A gentleman, handling a snow-ball on Richmond street, playfully threw it at a friend. A moment afterward he discovered that he had thrown away a highly valued ring, an old keep-sake, which he very much prized.—London Advertiser.

CHAPTER IX.

FLIGHT OF FLORA—A SORROWING MOTHER—OVERTAKEN BY IAN.

A woman came slowly up the gully in the direction in which our hero was lying. A young woman she was, not much older in appearance than Flora herself, but, oh, how haggard and wan, and grief-stricken the face, on which yet lingered traces of great beauty.

Flora's attention became riveted on her, and she felt her heart go out towards her in sympathy before yet she knew aught of her, save that she was a woman like herself, and one who had seen affliction. Her dress was scanty, was faded, tattered and torn. In her arms, tightly clasped to her breast, was the appearance of a child, muffled up in the folds of an old shawl.

She seemed so much fatigued—yes, worn out and exhausted—for when within the clump of trees, and not many yards from our heroine, her limbs faltered, and tottering forward, she sank upon the ground. But as she was speaking—unconscious that human was near—and Flora eagerly listened to the words which fell from her lips. She spoke in the Lowland tongue, with a sweet and tender accent—

"And has it come to this," she wailed. "God knows, perhaps it is better that it is so. To die here will not be without its cheerful side. The music of the dashing stream, and the merry, glad songs of the joyous birds will fall sweetly upon my waning senses as the everlasting shadow closes over me. Everlasting! nay, in the Temple of the Almighty beyond surely the grief and the misery which have been my lot here will exist not even in memory. Surely all darkness and dread will then be put away, and this poor soul refreshed with draughts of the love of the Great Author of its spirit. If not, why—oh why is I ever born?"

"And my child, my child; my bonnie wee Jennie, how can I leave you?" As she spoke, she nuzzled the shawl from the babe at her breast—a fat chubby child, of from one to two years of age. It was asleep, and the fond young mother, after gazing earnestly, with tearful eyes, into its sweet upturned face, impressed a passionate kiss upon the white brow, and sobbed aloud.

"Oh, my darling babe, I would willingly live and toil and suffer for you; but, alas! it is too late now to think of it. What can I do? In the wilds, starving, worn out by fatigue I have come here to die, because I feel it to be easier than continuing the struggle in which I have been engaged. And yet I feel strengthened when I gaze upon your sweet face, and feel that I have you to live for. What can I do? Inclination says, 'Retire from this weary world, its struggles and its trials'; and Duty answers, 'That would be cowardly. Live for your child.' Oh, I cannot live. The world frowns upon me, and desires me out of it. Ronald Murray, Ronald Murray, Ronald Murray, since we are unlikely again to meet on earth, surely you will recognize me if we meet in heaven! Surely if you knew that, even after all you have caused me to suffer, I love you still, you would search me out, and speak to me kindly word ere I leave this earth. I love him still. I cannot, will not, believe that he basely purposed from the beginning to ruin me—nothing more. No, he at one time loved me truly as I loved him. Lough have I wandered after him—not to upbraid, but to show how truly I love him—but I have found him not.

"And I shudder, too, as I think of the suffering my conduct, unexplained as it was, must have cost my parents—a kind father and a still kinder mother. I was as the apple of their eye—they looked on me as a priceless pearl. God knows I did nothing which should have caused them sorrow, but they knew it not. It is hard to think that, though they may be yearning for me, and I as eager to see them, we will never meet again. Never, never. Ah, how happy were the days of my youth and of my childhood—my brave noble brother as my companion, and my loving parents ever doting on me."
