A SONG OF THE SEASONS

When Spring comes laughing By vale and hill, y wind-flower walking And daffodil— Sing stars of morning, Sing morning skies, Sing blue of speedwell

When Summer cometh, Full-leaved and strong And gay birds gossip The orchard long-Sing hid sweet honey That no bee sips,

Sing red, red roses

And my Love's eyes

And my Love's lips When Autumn scatters The leaves again, And piled sheaves bury The wide-wheeled wain-Sing flutes of harvest Where men rejoice,

Sing rounds of reapers And my Love's voice But when comes winter With hail and storm, With red fire roaring And ingle warm-Sing first sad going Of friends that part

Then sing glad meetin

And my Love's heart

We hear in July from one of the French padres, who, writing from Sin-klu under date of May 24th, says:— "These poor famished people have been goaded to become cruel among themselves and against those most dear to them. Alas! how many fathers of families who lived honorably committed suicide in order to avoid the ignominity of begging, all their families following such dreadful example. How locusts, and destruction by the elements.

After a little while the prospect appeared to brighten, and we began to congratulate ourselves that the very liberal assistance rendered by foreign ers had materially aided to put an end to the national distress. How fallactions were our expectations we were to learn all too soon. It was the delusive calm of the "inner circle" the awful stillness before the bursting of the storm cloud. First came fitful gusts of sorrowful information regarding lack of rain and crops in peril, and then in regular order, like distress guns from a sinking ship, came news of blighted harvests, drought, locusts, want, beggary, pestilence and famine!—threatening the five great northern provinces of Chihli, Shansi, Hegau, Shensi, and Shantung, the latter having never recovered from her last affliction. The situation was frightful, and made doubly so by the certain knowledge that were the aid a hundredfold that which might be reasonably expected, it would be too late to save millions of sufferers for lack of the means of transportation, many of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the season of the districts in need lying in grip to prove the season of the season of the season of the districts in need lying in grip the volution of the state of state and the the grass with its teeth, the whole arrangement of society keeps daily telling them that a husband is no good at all unless he has a great deal of money. During the last 20 years the practice of luxurious self-indulgence has crept on apace. We are assured that trade is bad, and that everybody is poor. We can only whenever they feel inclined to have a chance. Extravagance, not economy, in gin or beyond the mountains, with hardly a decent post-road, much less a railway, in all the wide land; and the only draught animals, camels and donkeys, totally inadequate for the service. By the first of January of this year the old, old stories—that chill the heart each time, no matter how often they feel inclined to have a chance. Extravagance, not economy, is the standard of domestic happiness at present in fashion. It is not a girl's ideal, when she marries, that she should stay at home; but, on the contary, that she should leave it perpetually. In a word, if you get at the heart of a great many girls, you discover that their ideal of life is that it should be one continual "spree."—Boston Sunday then new famine three months old. the new famine three months old. NOTICE

The little girl began to weep at the sight of the fatal knife, and the neighbors who heard her arrived just in time A correspondent writing from Shanghai under date of July 26th, says:—

* * By June 2nd we find the famine had taken possession of the province of Shansi, and on that date the Governor memorializes the throne, setting forth that on account of drought the people have no food "and the land has come to resound with the lamentations of the famine-stricken multitude," who, after the sale of their houses, land, children, and having exhausted their supplies of roots and bark, and even the wild herb being entirely consumed, the "people manufacture pellets of earth, mingled with stone ground into powder, and eat it, and the answer of the paternal Government is, "It is noted." But China's cup of sorrow was not yet full, so as a fitting adjunct to the horrors of famine and the plague, vast swarms of locusts appeared, and invaded not only the famine district in which moderate rains had admitted the planting of some portion of the region, but also adjoining provinces, which up to then had been the source of supplies for their afflicted neighbors.

We hear in July from one of the to save her life. (Note by Pere Aymeri-Sometimes parents, so they may not

GIRLS OF TO-DAY.

It is indubitable that the girl's idea minity of begging, all their families following such dreadful example. How many woe-stricken women, wives, sisters, and daughters, were sold by their fathers, brothers and husbands to unknown people! And, therefore, in many places are seldom to be seen any women, especially young ones. In a women, especially young ones. In a village where I went to distribute relief, all the women except two were of the physical peculiarities of the Adonis of the period, according to the standlief, all the women except two were old ones, and all the children of both sexes had been sold."

From the official register of this one district, we learn that over one hun dred thousand persons had already smile at such absurdities, but girls are dred thousand persons had already been sold, principly females.

From all official source we hear of yet another affliction showered upon the sufferers, for the wheat crop, although abundant in some regions, has been greatly injured "by locusts and hailstones." So by July we find poor China contending against, floods, famine, civil and border war, plague, locusts, and destruction by the elements.

smile at such absurdities, but girls are very impressionable, and when once they have adopted such an ideal it is not easy to expel it from their minds. The person hardly exists in real life; the nearest approach to it being any or every unprincipled man who is prepared to make "fierce love" to any fool he meets. before is now shut out by a barrier of ice." In two weeks the number of refugees has reached 100,000 at Tientsin. Rev. Mr. Richards writes from Shansi that the famine is "far more extensive" and the suffering much greater than it was at Shantung. The Governor of Shansi reports the death rate at 1,000 a day. Mr. Richards announces the frightful fact that the sufferers have resorted to campibalism and that their children are boiled and eaten. On the 7th of January a fire broke out in one of the relief yards at Tientsin, the gate keeper of which locked the gate and ran away, and the awful spectacle was presented of 2,000 starving women and children burned to death. Then we hear from Tai-Yuen Fu in January, direct from the noble Richards. "The names of eight or nine millions are down for relief" in the four provinces: the soc of an assassination.
