Some criticism has been made upon the wording of this resolution. Some gentlemen have found it difficult to attach any intelligent meaning to the word 'adequate.' I have noticed on some occasions that the same hon. gentlemen made use of the word and found it good enough to serve their purpose. Let me say that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) favours 'legitimate protection.' I have his language declaring that policy, under my hand, used by him in a recent campaign in Maisonneuve. I suppose that 'adequate' is quite as definite as 'legitimate,' particularly when coupled with the proviso that the protection we ask should be adequate to maintain the Canadian market for Canadians. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), this session, when introducing his Railway Commission Bill, expressed his opinion that it would 'adequately protect' our shipping interests. Yet my hon. friend the Minister of Finance says that the phrase 'adequate protection' is absolutely meaningless. I commend his criticism to his hon. colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and I trust that the speech of the latter will be revised in accordance with that criticism. I find also that the provincial premiers introduced the phrase three times in their resolutions which the government is now considering. Would it not be well for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance if he adheres to the opinion he expressed in Halifax, to send these resolutions back to the provincial premiers for an explanation of this meaningless phrase which they have used. But I have a better authority than all these, one I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will not question. A certain editor of a newspaper published in Halifax some years ago, and published there still, used the following strong language with regard to the coal duty :

The coal duty is a confessed mockery—an organized hypocrisy. The coal owners of Nova Scotia have been fooled, as we predicted they would be ; they get no adequate protection.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who wrote that article, does not understand now the meaning of the term 'adequate protection' which was then used by him in that article. That only shows how some of us travel backwards in our education.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On both sides.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Most of us go a little forward, but my hon. friend, in this regard at least, has found himself travelling backward in his comprehension of the English language. With these excellent authorities, especially the last, perhaps the Minister of Finance may be inclined to reconsider his obiter dictum.

Sir, I concur in the eloquent words which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance uttered in his peroration. We all realize now the wealth of our resources, the splendour of our heritage. It is true that the Liberal leaders in days gone by did not entertain the same view of the great west which has been expressed so eloquently by the hon. gentleman. The great Conservative leaders of the past had opposed to them men who, in all sincerity, saw nothing in the province of British Columbia, save a sea of mountains, who saw nothing in our great west but a land incapable of paying for the oil required in operating a transcontinental railway. But let bygones be bygones. These gentlemen see now what the great Conservative leaders of bygone days saw years ago. We are glad that now we all think alike on this subject. We have a great country, a great heritage, and, therefore, great responsibilities. I fear not for the future of the west, nor do I believe that any narrow or sectional spirit now pervades or will pervade the people of that country. Like the people of the east, they will stand for a broad and strong Canadian policy, a policy which will give to our producers the advantage of our own markets, and to our labouring people a fair living wage; a policy which will keep our young men in our country and under which we can all unite in upbuilding a happy, prosperous and contented Canada.

I beg to move the following amendment to the motion of the hon. the Minister of Finance :

That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be left out, and the following substituted therefor :—'This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians ;

'And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session.'

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright).

As the hon. gentleman has appealed to me for my opinions as to the divers doctrines he has expressed, and the divers statements which may have been made in former times by myself and other members of the government, it would be, I think, rather discourteous on my part to decline to reply, and it is not my intention to do so. However, I will pay the hon. gentleman the compliment on this occasion of imitating his example of yesterday. And as to-day is Friday, and a number of our friends are disposed to return to their homes, I will take the liberty of moving to adjourn the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER. With the consent of the House I will now move :

That the debate be continued from day to day until completed, and that it be the first order of the day except on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, when it will be the next order after questions put by members.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I see no objection to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ATLANTIC AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILWAY.

Mr. GEORGE BALL (Nicolet) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 36) respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. He said : Mr. Speaker, in presenting this motion, I would like to draw your attention and that of the House to the facts of the case. This Bill was on the Order paper a short time ago, and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) thought he would render me a service by presenting it in my absence. My hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), lacking knowledge of parliamentary procedure—being, like myself, a new member of this House—thought he would propose the six months' hoist. Fortunately or unfortunately, I do not know which, the Bill had not been printed in French, and my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) raised the point of order. In this way the Bill remains on the Order paper, and comes up for its second reading to-night. Since the last occasion, I have made some inquiries, and I find what I am about to read to you :

The consent given by the House to the second reading of a private Bill does not necessarily commit the House to the principle of the Bill. The expediency of a private Bill being mainly founded upon allegations of fact which have not yet been proved. The House in agreeing to the second reading affirms the principle of the Bill conditionally and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee.

Since 1868 no private Bills have been defeated on the second reading. It was done, however, before confederation but then Council could be heard at the Bar for or against the Bill.

In 1880 objection was made to the second reading of the Bill concerning the Credit Valley Railway Company. A long discussion took place on that objection and the Hon. Mr. Holton, who has always been considered as a high authority on parliamentary procedure, said that a private Bill should always receive its second reading, and Sir John Macdonald, in spite of the fact that objection was raised by one of his political friends, expressed the same idea as the Hon. Mr. Holton.

In 1879 Sir John A. Macdonald expressed the same principle on a Bill concerning the Saskatchewan Colonization Railway Company, and this Bill was also read a second time and referred to the committee.

In 1889, Sir John A. Macdonald, on the Ottawa and Montreal Boom Company said, it is greatly to the advancement of public business that private Bills should be sent to the various committees to be dealt with and then on the reports of the committees the great question whether the Bill would become law or not comes up. Though the objection made to the Bill which was then under consideration was because it was a Bill of public nature.

Now, the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), represents the Prime Minister in that right hon. gentleman's absence and leads this House. I would ask him kindly not to allow such attempts to be made to kill a Bill at its second reading. And for various reasons. Supposing that this principle were adopted to-day, what difficulty might we not look for in the future. There are on the list here a good many private Bills. All private Bills are generally read the second time in about half an hour, no matter what the number may be. Supposing that on each of these Bills, an hon. member should raise objection and seek to prevent the second reading, you can see what difficulty there would be. I would ask the protection of the leader of this House. I would like him to treat me as he treats every one else. I want British fair play.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Before this motion is put, I beg permission to say a few words. The hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Ball) has certainly made out what appears to be a very strong case regarding the precedents in the second reading of private Bills. There is not the least doubt that it is in the interest of the House and of parties applying to the House that private Bills should be sent, as a matter of course, to committee to be discussed. But, in this case, we are dealing with a most extraordinary set of people; and I feel it to be in the interest of my county and the people I represent and only just to myself to bring the matter before the House, so that I may explain the peculiar position in which we stand. This application of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway—the name is not unfamiliar to the old members of the House—is connected with the old Baie des Chaleurs Railway, which, as most members are aware, has been before this House on several occasions during the last ten or fifteen years. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company was originally incorporated in 1893, for the building and operation of a line of railway from Gaspé Basin in the county of Gaspé, to Sault Ste. Marie. It was made up of eight different sections of road, including the Baie des Chaleurs, the Great Eastern, the Montreal and Sorel, the Montreal Bridge, the Ottawa Valley, the Pontiac and Pacific Junction, the Ontario Pacific and the Intercolonial section. The year following this incorporation, an Act was passed in this parliament authorizing the transfer of the Baie des Chaleurs and the Great Eastern to this company and the system was operated under the name of the Atlantic and Lake Superior. For some years the promoter of this company, Mr. C. N. Armstrong, who is well known to the members of this House, attempted in various ways to bring about the successful completion of the undertaking. The charter of the Montreal Bridge Company was discussed last session in this House, and on that occasion, I believe, the House gained an insight into the methods that were employed. But for the moment I wish to limit myself more particularly to what happened in the county of Bonaventure. This new company, the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, took over the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and constructed some eighteen miles from Caplan down to New Carlisle. In 1900, when I had the honour of being elected to this House, the powers of the company were lapsed, and the subsidies which had been voted were also lapsed. But to-day we find this company coming again before parliament and asking for a renewal of its powers, and asking that we should extend for five years the time during which this undertaking may be completed, not only from Gaspé Basin to Sault Ste. Marie, but to enable this company to be incorporated and purchase the roads which are mentioned in the Bill, which would enable it to reach as far as the Pacific ocean over the unbuilt Grand Trunk Pacific.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, before they are given these powers that the House should be made acquainted with the manner in which they have dealt with the people of Bonaventure. The Minister of Railways, in December last, at my request, and to give effect to the law which had been adopted here in 1900 reviving the subsidy, issued a circular calling upon the people of Bonaventure county more especially, and the public at large, who had claims on the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway for the last section of thirty miles thereof, to send in their claims to the Department of Railways to enable him to distribute pro rata the $16,000 which had been reserved from the subsidy for the payment of labour, board bills and material. What was the result ? The Minister of Railways received, during five or six weeks, claims amounting to $226,000, a tabulated list of which has been prepared. These claims were sworn to, and were produced for that amount on thirty miles of the road. The claims that remain on the other seventy miles of road, not coming within the purview of the subsidy bill, were not filed. We have therefore reasonable cause to believe that this company owes $300,000 in the county of Bonaventure, to Liberals and Conservatives, poor men for the most part, labourers, local merchants, widows keeping boarding houses, and so forth. In spite of the fact that this company owes to-day $300,000, they have the audacity to come before this parliament and to ask for what practically amounts to a transcontinental charter. This company, Mr. Speaker, is practically out of business. In 1900 it transferred its charter to the trustees for the bondholders who are now operating the road. These trustees are represented in Montreal by Senator J. P. B. Casgrain, and the chief of these trustees is Mr. Joaquin Galindez, of London. These people do not make the application themselves, but it is the old company which has gone out of business, which has transferred its road, and which owes $300,000 in my county alone, and who wish to comprise in this scheme the Montreal bridge, the charter of which has expired, and a portion of the Montreal and South Shore Railway, which has been transferred to other hands. All these are comprised under the general name of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway.

I therefore feel it my duty, in justice to my constituents to inform the House of this state of affairs. Last year I had no opportunity of doing so, because the Bill was killed in committee without being discussed, since the very mention of the name was sufficient to cause the Bill to be thrown out. The year before, the trustees of the road, rather than take advantage of the two years extension of time which we had given them in which to build the two miles of road, introduced a Bill in the Senate, and which was passed in the Senate, extending for five years the time during which they could complete two or three miles of road. To-day the Private Bills Committee of Quebec was called upon to consider another Bill introduced by these same people under the name of the Quebec and Oriental Railway Company. These people ask for power from the legislature of Quebec to build a railway from Rivière du Loup to Metapedia parallel to the Intercolonial Railway. They ask for power under a simple resolution of their board of directors to transfer the Atlantic and Lake Superior and the Baie des Chaleurs Railway over to the new concern. If that should happen, Mr. Speaker, I wish to know in what position the unfortunate people of Bonaventure will be if this road is so transferred. Under all these circumstances I thought it my duty to call particular attention to this Bill. My county is not the only one interested, all the counties to the south of the St. Lawrence in the province of Quebec are interested, in fact almost every county up to Montreal, and thence across the river, and from Montreal up the Ottawa valley, on to Sault Ste. Marie, and by their connections out to the Pacific coast. I think that before these people are allowed to leave Bonaventure they should settle with their debtors there. At the request of the government I will willingly consent not to move the six months hoist, because I know it is somewhat contrary to precedent. Now that I have laid down the lines upon which I oppose this Bill, I am satisfied to leave it to the Railway Committee, confident that ample justice will be done in the matter. For these reasons I will consent to the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BALL. I wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil).

Mr. SPEAKER. It is against the rules of procedure.

Mr. BALL. I want to explain the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman has no right to speak at this stage.

Mr. SPROULE. I only rise to say that my hon. friend (Mr. Ball) was under the impression that he had a right to speak and answer what was said by the member for Bonaventure. I was going to suggest to him that he will have every opportunity to speak when the Bill comes before the Railway Committee. I thought that it was scarcely likely the hon. member for Bonaventure would move the six months hoist for an ordinary private Bill, something that has rarely or never been done in this House, seeing that a discussion of the Bill can more advantageously take place in the committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). We should be careful not to limit ourselves by establishing a precedent. There can be no question whatever as to the right of the House to reject a Bill, even a private Bill, on the second reading, if special and urgent reasons of a general public character be urged against it. It is quite conceivable that even a private Bill might be of such a character that the House would desire to reject it, and we should do nothing that would seem to imply that we are under any restriction in that respect. As a rule, these private Bills involve no principle, and I think it is only just to the hon. gentleman that this Bill should go to the committee. But we should not limit in any way by a precedent the right of the House to reject even a private Bill on the second reading.

Mr. SPROULE. It was because my hon. friend the other night waived the right of speaking on the Bill that he desired to speak to-night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I think it is well for the House to reserve to itself the unrestricted right of disposing of a Bill on the second reading, and more especially so if the House is in possession already of sufficient facts, or if it has sufficient knowledge with respect to the undertaking itself, to deal with it at this stage. I have no objection at all to the Bill going to the committee, but I may say to my hon. friend that I am sufficiently acquainted with the transactions of this company and with the condition to which their affairs have fallen to make it impossible for me to consent that this Bill should become law. I am of the opinion that not only the Bill in some portions is objectionable, but that the Bill as a whole should be rejected by this House. I think that would be the sense of the committee which will have to deal with the matter if it should go to the Committee on Railways and Canals, but if the House feels that it knows enough about the transaction to say that it is useless to send it to the committee because there can only be one result of the reference, then, I think, my hon. friend will at once yield to the reasonableness of the position which is taken in regard to it and allow us to dispose of the matter now. We have a great deal of business to go before the Railway Committee and sending it unnecessary work is a thing, which, I think, we ought to avoid doing. I am quite sure the committee cannot look with favour upon the passage of this Bill. The company is in an absolutely demoralized condition and it has left things in such a shape that great difficulty is experienced in unravelling its affairs for the purpose, not of trying to save something for the company, but of trying to get some small percentage of the wages for the labouring people who have worked on the road. That is the condition in which this company stands. I do not think anything like it has been known in the history of railway construction in this country. Certainly there is no company that has ever approached parliament with less claim for consideration at the hands of parliament than the present company. It may seem to be a little ungracious to say that the hon. gentleman's Bill should not proceed further, but I think he must realize that it is useless to go further even if the House should be willing to accede to his request.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) speak as he has done in respect to this Bill. This is the first time since I have been a member of this House that I have ever heard anything of this kind in connection with the second reading of a Bill. The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) is to be congratulated on the position he has taken. There are many hon. members of the House who would like to know something of this legislation and I think it is not too much to ask that the matter should be left to the Railway Committee. I am sure the Railway Committee will go thoroughly into the matter and if the statements made by the hon. minister are found to be correct, I am sure the Railway Committee is composed of men who will deal summarily with the Bill if it is of the character described. If the statements made by the hon. minister are correct it will take a very short time for the Railway Committee to deal with it. I think it would be unfair to many of us here to kill a private Bill when the motion for its second reading is made.

Mr. SPROULE. And it would establish a bad precedent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not wish to press any objection to the Bill going to the committee. I merely stated what will be the probable result in view of the knowledge I have in a case of this kind. I would not press my objection to the Bill being referred to the committee if it is the desire of hon. members that it should be.

Mr. INGRAM. We have not all the knowledge that the hon. gentleman has in connection with this Bill, and for that reason we desire to have it sent to the Railway Committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very good.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

OTTAWA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SPROULE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 59) respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Monk.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I may say that this Ottawa Valley Railway is a section of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway. It forms part of the same concern. Five or six miles of the road have been constructed from St. Andrews to Carillon in Argenteuil county. It forms part of the system of this defunct Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. For the same reason that I allowed the other Bill to go through I consent to this Bill being read the second time reserving my right to take the same objection to this Bill as to that of the parent company.

Mr. INGRAM.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

NEW CANADIAN COMPANY.

Mr. BELCOURT moved the second reading of Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the new Canadian Company, Limited.—Mr. Lemieux.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the mover of this state whether the road covered by this Bill runs parallel with the line dealt with by the two former Bills which have been read a second time? Probably the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) could tell us.

Mr. MARCIL. Bill (No. 83), I may explain, has no connection with the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, but I understand, it is part of the undertaking of the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway.

Mr. INGRAM. It runs parallel with the other two lines does it not?

Mr. MARCIL. It runs from the Gaspé basin through the interior of Gaspé. This is more of an application for power to build docks, jetties, &c., at Gaspé basin than to build a railway. This is not a railway company at all.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a miscellaneous private Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 88) respecting the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of the city of Montreal, and to change its name to the Montreal Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. LaRivière.

Bill (No. 97) respecting the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 98) respecting the Bruce Mines and Algoma Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Canada Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCreary.

Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Bank of Canada.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Royal Trust Company.—Mr. Casgrain.

Bill (No. 104) to incorporate the Brockville and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 105) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Standard Car Truck Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Isolated landing pier, Cross Point, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). This work is now under contract and the total cost will be $11,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What does an 'isolated' landing pier mean ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Cross Point is in Bonaventure county, opposite the town of Campbellton, N.B., the Restigouche river dividing the two. Campbellton is an enterprising and progressing town, and is the market centre for a large section of the country. The Restigouche is a tidal river. At low tide the steam ferry is unable to go beyond the middle of the river and for many years Mr. McAlister, who represented Restigouche, together with the then member for Bonaventure, urged that a pier should be built here so as to enable teams to reach the middle of the river to connect with the ferry. I am glad to say that we have succeeded in getting this done. The word 'isolated' was put in a couple of years ago because it was thought the wharf would be erected in the centre of the river, but it was found that this would not be practicable, and a wharf is to be built from the shore to extend to the middle of the river. This expenditure of public money has been of great public utility and has given great satisfaction to the people in that district.

Heavy repairs to wharf at Crane Island, $3,000.

Mr. MORIN. What kind of a place is this and is the wharf used for sailing vessels or for steamers ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officials have reported to me that this is being repaired principally to protect the lighthouse, which is situated at the end of the wharf.

Mr. AVERY. Is it on private property ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, government property.

Landing pier, Father Point, $61,000.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the minister explain what has been done for this large expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a new pier at Father Point 800 feet long and the total cost is $86,000. The work is under contract and this vote is to complete.

Mr. INGRAM. When was this work started ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract was let on the 8th of November, 1901.

Mr. CLARE. You appear to have voted $8,000 for this in 1901; $25,000 last year, and now you want $61,000. That is more than the contract price.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not more than this contract. It is $25,000 and $61,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this a timber wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What kind of timber ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hemlock and spruce.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is quite a difference between hemlock and spruce as regards the price. Is there any special part of hemlock ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The specifications permit both to be used. I am not prepared to take the responsibility of saying so, but I understand that hemlock lasts as well under water as spruce.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). So long as the specifications call for hemlock, that is all right; but if they called for spruce and hemlock were used, that would be different.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister tell us what was done with the $15,000 that was voted in 1901-2 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only explanation is that the money was not spent, and the vote lapsed. The total amount of the contract, as I have stated, is $86,000.

Grande Vallée—pier, $36,000.

Mr. MORIN. Is the pier anywhere near a wharf that has been built at that place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not aware that there is any other pier or wharf at this place.

Mr. MORIN. There was money voted last year and two years ago for this very place. There was $25,000 voted last year for that very same pier, and this year you are asking for $36.000 more.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may explain to my hon. friend that the amount of the contract for this work was originally $53,900, and while there was a small vote in 1901-2, none of that money was spent. There has been spent up to the 30th of June, 1902, $14,857, and since then nearly $9,000. $36,000 it is estimated will be required to be spent during the next year. That will pay the contractor to complete this work with the exception of $3,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the whole work will cost $54,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $59,500.

Mr. MORIN. Will the hon. minister tell the House the population of that town ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no information of the population. I do not think there is any town there of any size.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). What kind of timber is used in this wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that there are considerable timber limits in that district. Large mills have been erected, and this pier is built for the purpose of allowing the shipping to be carried on. Large business has been developed in the district. The timber used is no doubt spruce and hemlock, and perhaps pine; I am not sure about that.

Mr. AVERY. Is this the property of which a deed has been given ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A deed of it has been given to the Crown free of charge.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister tell us about what population there is in the neighbourhood of this place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the hon. minister to say the department have a deed of this property. Who is the property deeded from ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I may say that Grande Vallée is situated in the county of Gaspé adjoining my county. This wharf was not built for the population that is there, because according to the last census the population was very small. It was then somewhat over 300. This wharf is on the St. Lawrence side of the county of Gaspé. It was built for the purpose of enabling a large tract of timber limits in the interior of the county to find an outlet to the St. Lawrence. When this wharf is completed and schooners are able to reach this point, it will afford an outlet for the whole south shore of the county of Gaspé, which is now practically a terra incognita, and will greatly benefit the whole district. I am sure the money is well invested.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who owns the timber limits ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). That I cannot say.

Mr. HACKETT. What stream is this on ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It is on the St. Lawrence, but there is a river running into the St. Lawrence at this point, on which there is a large water power. It is a section of country which up to the present has been entirely neglected, and a work of this kind will change the whole complexion of the place.

Mr. MORIN. Will the hon. minister tell us why, when a few years ago there was no wharf at this place, there should be such great necessity for the spending of from $20,000 to $50,000 there ? Is that expenditure for the benefit of commerce generally, or for the benefit of somebody who sits in this House not very far from here ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very pleased to inform my hon. friend that the reason for building this wharf is to develop a large section of that portion of the province of Quebec in which there are timber limits and great opportunities for business.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who owns the timber lands ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know the company, but this wharf will give facilities to bring goods there and take away the lumber.

Mr. MORIN. It certainly appears to me passing strange that while a few years ago there was nothing there, all at once some one who sits not very far from here went down there and bought a large tract of timber land, and then we find the government stepping right in and making this large expenditure, the main object of which is evidently to help somebody out of a hole. That certainly appears ridiculous to me, and I do not see why it should not appear equally ridiculous to the hon. Minister of Public Works. I am not opposed to the expenditure of public money where it is necessary, but such expenditure where and when it is unnecessary, is a ridiculous waste of the people's money. Just look at the census. Before 1901, there was not a soul in that section of the country, and last year we find that there were only 314 people there, all of whom are labouring men working in the sawmills and the woods. It is all very well for the hon. minister to tell us that this expenditure is in the public interest, but it is a different thing for us to put any credence in such a statement. I have seen lately in one of the Quebec newspapers that the party who bought these timber limits, has refused a sum of money which would clear him a profit of $100,000 out of the operation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who is the gentleman ?

Mr. MORIN. I do not like to give his name, but I can look across there and see him.

An hon. MEMBER. You cannot see him now.

Mr. MORIN. No, he is not there. I would like to put the hon. minister another question. The other night he told us that when the government built a wharf, he would see that the government owned it. Will this particular wharf belong to the government or will it not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This property belongs to the government—the land on which it is situated and the work itself. Perhaps the best justification for building this wharf is the statement which my hon. friend has made, that since it has been begun, the value of property has been so much increased there, that property owners can make a large profit on their holdings. True it is that this is an undeveloped section of the province of Quebec, but the giving of this facility for the carrying on of the lumbering trade will enhance the value of the limits and give employment to a large number of people. This expenditure was authorized by parliament some three years ago.

Mr. MORIN. Yes, at the time of the elections.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We committed ourselves to the work, a contract entered into, and I am now asking for the money to meet the obligations undertaken by the Crown. I am pleased to hear the hon. gentleman state that the development of the country is so good that those interested in that section of country will reap great benefit from this work.

Mr. MORIN. Who authorized the government to give that money for that wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Parliament.

Mr. MORIN. Who recommended the grant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Minister of Public Works at that time.

Mr. MORIN. There must have been somebody else behind him. I have carried on considerable lumber business myself, and I have never had the government build a wharf for me or anything else. When I wanted to build any work, I had to build it myself and pay for it. How is it that just at election time, some men from the Eastern Townships should go to that country and buy a large tract of timber, and then have the government step right in and find the money to build a wharf for them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My own experience is that of the hon. gentleman. I never got anything or asked anything from the government. But he was mistaken about the election. There was no election on when the vote was authorized by parliament.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman was incorrect in stating that when the vote was passed that there was no opposition on this side.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. What I said was that parliament did authorize the work and that a contract was entered into by virtue of that authority, and I am only asking a vote to carry it out.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the strenuous opposition offered last year, when the vote for this work was originally submitted, we are justified in making comments on it today. The facts were these, as shown by 'Hansard.' The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell), who is always out of the House when the question comes up for discussion, invested in some timber limits in that locality. It is not an arable section, its chief value being the standing timber. Here then we have the hon. member for Stanstead wanting the Crown to aid him in his enterprise and taking the government and the Minister of Public Works by the throat, with the result that the government pledge themselves to an expenditure of $70,000 for the sole advantage of his lumber company. We should have the assurance that this will be treated as a business enterprise. It is true that the hon. gentleman was not in charge of the Department of Public Works when the vote for this work was first taken, and is consequently not personally responsible for its inception, but he should pledge the House and country that the government is going to tax the hon. gentleman from Stanstead and his company a rental which will give a fair return on the outlay. Let me read, for the benefit of the House, a list of these docks built at the expense of the public exchequer. Here is a list of docks in the province of Quebec, built at the expense of hundreds of thousands to the people of Canada, showing receipts from those docks for the last year :

Carleton, $28.07 ; Cedars, $17.10 ; Coteau du Lac, $27.84 ; Greece's Point, $10.24 ; Isle aux Grues, $0.12 ; Lacolle, $9.76 ; Percé, $24.71 ; St. Irenée, $55.69 ; St. Thomas de Montmagny, $2.62.

In view of the fact that these docks are used by public corporations and private parties and that they have cost the country hundreds of thousands, I think the hon. minister, before this item passes, should promise the House that there shall be a fair return of at least $500 from the docks now under discussion. This should be done especially because the company, when they have completed their lumbering operations will leave it in the hands of the people, a work from which no revenue can be obtained.

Mr. SCHELL. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is evidently not familiar with the timber trade of the eastern provinces, or he would not make the statement he has made. When he speaks of the spruce timber being cut off in a few years, he is completely outside the facts. Price Bros., for instance, have been cutting on their limit for over sixty years. Spruce reproduces itself in from sixteen to twenty-five years, and operators claim that they can cut indefinitely from the spruce forests of the province of Quebec. If the limit that has been referred to is of such large extent as has been alleged—and it would need to be pretty large to make it worth the money spoken of—no question arises as to that timber ever being cut out. There seems to be a disposition on the part of certain speakers on the opposition side to reflect upon an hon. member of this House because he had an interest in this property. So far as that hon. member is concerned, he is not now interested in this property. It is well known that he sold out to a large company of which he is not a member.

Mr. BENNETT. Sold out at an enhanced value, I suppose.

Mr. SCHELL. The value may be enhanced or it may not. But the plain fact remains that there is no danger, if this is a large spruce limit, of the timber being cut out; this dock will be as useful twenty, or forty or fifty years from now as it is to-day.

Mr. BENNETT. We on this side must thank the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) for the information he has given. His statement is—and I accept it as true, I know he would not make the statement unless it were true—that the hon. member for Stanstead was either sole or part owner of this property and was desirous of unloading on some company, and, to increase the value, he gets his party friends to spend $70,000 of public money there, of which he gets the benefit. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) did not say so directly, but I am sure he is blaming the government for this action and I say he is quite right in doing so. The hon. minister is taken to account by the member for Glengarry. What does the hon. gentleman complain of? He is complaining that after this great amount of $60,000 or $70,000 for this dock was appropriated, the owner unloads it on an incorporated company and gets the benefit. I agree with the hon. member for Glengarry that the minister and the party should be censured for having made such a grant. Another point brought out by the hon. member for Glengarry—and I must thank him for it also—is that if it were true that the timber could be cut out in fifteen years or so it might be a hardship on the hon. member for Stanstead to ask him to build a dock; but it would not be a hardship to ask him to build the dock instead of having it built by the public, because the timber constantly reproduces itself in from sixteen to twenty-five years. It will be seen, therefore, that the hon. member for Stanstead had a more decided advantage that I thought he had. In view of the complaint made by the hon. member for Glengarry I am sure the hon. Minister of Public Works will agree not to allow the dock to be used by the company that has purchased the rights of the hon. member for Stanstead—at least the hon. member for Glengarry says they have done so—without giving the country a rental of at least eight per cent on the expenditure, and also keeping the dock in repair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not see how I am to make an agreement contrary to the law. These people will have to pay dues according to the rates fixed. There is a large business done, and the dock ought to yield a good revenue.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are the dues?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the rates here; they are under another department.

Mr. SCHELL.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is evident from the list read by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) either that the dues are very small or, in the case of many of these docks, no business is done. I cannot but feel that there has been a great deal of public money spent in these public works without ministering to any real public need. No man can convince me that a revenue of from twenty-five cents to twelve dollars from works that have cost thousands can indicate anything but that the money spent on these works has been almost wholly wasted. When I think that along the shores of Lake Ontario, in such ridings as that I have the honour to represent, where millions of bushels of grain are shipped and large quantities of goods imported, there are towns whose post offices give a large revenue to the country, yet where not a dollar of public money has been spent, I am convinced more than ever that there must be something radically wrong in such a vote as this. The proposition now before us seems to be one of the most absurd ever submitted to the House since I have had the honour of being a member—that we are to spend something like $60,000 at a point where the minister tells us there is not a town. I venture the assertion that if we were to look at the Postmaster General's Report we should find there is not even a post office there.

Mr. MORIN. There is not—I have looked it up.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have no objection to hon. members of this House buying timber limits, but the objection that I raise is to the expenditure of public money for the benefit of corporations or private individuals. And against this the minister should set his face determinedly. I believe that the minister feels deep down in his own heart that there has been a wrong which it will be his duty to make right at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was obliged to go to Montreal this evening. He left in my hands a copy of the estimates with some items marked to be reserved, and amongst them I find the item now under discussion. If there was an agreement that this and other items should be allowed to stand until the House goes into Supply again, I do not think we should discuss the matter at greater length. I presume the hon. Minister of Public Works will allow these items that are marked to stand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am most anxious to meet the wishes of the members of this committee, but the proposition I have to make is better for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier than that presented by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) and it is in accordance with the arrangement I entered into with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier before he left. We all have rights in these matters. This is the third or fourth time the items have been allowed to stand on account of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monk's) absence. To-day, when he was going away I agreed—and I am anxious to carry out that agreement, and I submit it is more generous than what the hon. member for West Toronto is asking—that the general vote for the province of Quebec should stand with the understanding that when it comes up, any item in the Quebec list can be taken up and discussed. This will give greater latitude than would be given by merely picking out four or five items and passing the others. This carries out the understanding we had with the hon. member before six o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I hope the minister does not mean that he will pass all these items, because I think it is possible that a motion will be made to strike out this item. I think the time has arrived when jobs of this kind should be stopped. I am satisfied that the minister, if he wishes to make a reputation for himself in his new office, will see that this sort of thing is ended. Here we have a member of this House engaged in the lumber business, going down there where there is not even a post office, where there is not even a resident, and gets thousands of dollars nominally expended on a wharf. Has anybody inspected that wharf? Is there a report of the inspector of the work? Is there a wharf in existence? Possibly this is the stuff which sailed down the Bay of Fundy, and formed a portion of some of the money spoken of by Senator Ellis which was sent from the Dominion government to assist the Liberal party in New Brunswick elections. We may as well look these things squarely in the face. So far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation in saying that I would like to see this item stricken out, unless we get some more satisfactory data in connection with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend had paid careful attention to the discussion——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I listened to every word that was said. I object to the hon. gentleman's insinuation that I did not pay attention to what was said. I can tell him everything that transpired in the conversation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not intend to offend the hon. gentleman. What I meant to say was that he could not have understood the situation, or given it that thought that it requires. I said that parliament some three years ago had committed itself to this contract. I believe the matter was discussed at considerable length on a previous occasion, I am not sure but that there was a vote on this question on a previous occasion. If the item was struck out of the estimates now, it would not save the country from paying the amount already expended, with the added cost of a suit brought against the Crown. The government are legally bound to the contractors to carry out the work. Perhaps about one-half the money has already been spent; therefore no member of this committee under these conditions would feel disposed to vote to strike the item out of the estimates. The contract has been entered into and the amount will have to be paid; if the vote is cancelled, then the country will have to pay such damages as the court may find in favour of the contractors, in addition to what they have already earned.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister tell us from whom this dock was purchased, who are the contractors, who owned the timber limit? Let us have the names of the people in connection with this matter. Don't be afraid to bring out the names of the men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think it is within the province of the department to have all the information the hon. gentleman asks for; but all that we have and all that is reasonable, I am ready to produce. It has been stated here, though I have no personal knowledge of it, that the member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) was largely interested in timber limits in this district. I would like to know how many business men there are in this House who have not business interests in various parts of the country where public works are constructed, and whose property will be more or less affected by our legislation. It is quite true that there may be extreme cases where the money expended will benefit an individual or a corporation rather than the public at large. In this particular case, all I know is that statements have been made that an hon. member of this House was interested largely in timber limits in that district. There are many men sitting in this House at present, and have sat in it in the past, who have greatly benefited by the expenditure of public money in different parts of the country where they happen to be owners of timber limits, or who may be engaged in other business. The development of the country would not go on unless men of their energy and ability engaged in business. The argument that no money should be spent in a locality because certain individuals will benefit from it more than others, I do not think any one giving it serious thought would endorse. We have spent something over $80,000,000 on our canal system, which has directly benefited certain parties along the rivers, and certain large centres more than other parties and other centres. We have lately gone so far as to free the canals of the dues that were charged to people using them, believing that it was in the general interest of the country to do so. In this case, I know that in 1901 or 1902 a vote was taken committing parliament to this expenditure, and a contract was entered into. The hon. gentleman wanted to know the names of the contractors. They are Heney & Smith, of Ottawa. This contract was entered into on the 29th of June, 1901; and, as I have already stated, about half the money has already been paid to the contractors.

Mr. CLARKE. When was the first vote taken ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1901 or 1902.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have not heard the name of the party from whom this property was purchased. The minister told us the government had purchased this dock and had a deed of it. From whom was that deed obtained ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the deed here, nor could it be expected that a minister should have these documents.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister should have all this information at his fingers end.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All reasonable information, but not unreasonable information. I have stated on the authority of the deputy minister that a grant of the land required here has been made over to the Crown.

Mr. INGRAM. Was there any deed of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I am informed there was a deed. Of course, it could not be a legal grant without a deed. Supposing that this property belonged to an individual member, the deed would come from him. That seems to be the insinuation. I do not know, the deputy minister does not remember. But the point in which this committee and the public are interested is to know whether the Crown has been granted the property and at what price. In this particular case the grant was made free.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the contract entered into before any vote was passed by this House ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given the date of the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says that what the committee is interested in is to know that we are committed to the contract. Is it to be said that if we have allowed, without knowledge, an item to pass whereby we become committed to a contract that is unwise and injudicious, in which the country's money is spent to no good purpose, and because a portion of the money has already been expended, that we are bound to spend the rest, or, in other words, to throw it away ? On the very face of it, this seems to be a job, and not a very creditable one at that. If the information we have got out peacemeal be correct, an hon. member of this House goes down and buys a large timber limit in a comparatively unknown forest, and by some kind of understanding with the government, I presume come to beforehand, he is promised that he will get a dock there, and the country is going to spend $70,000 or $80,000 to benefit his property. There is no business to be done, no boats running there, no trade; but the government commences an expenditure. For whose benefit ? Simply for the purpose of benefiting a member of this House. That seems to be the whole story so far as the information goes at present. Now, the country had better know that. Then the minister went on and told us that the very fact that this man sold his interest in that timber limit at such an enhanced value is no evidence that it was a vote of this House which made the place valuable. It was nothing else which made the place valuable. There was no trade to be done, it was a forest, it was on the river, I presume. And when the government agreed to make an expenditure of $80,000 to build a wharf, it is no wonder that the property has become valuable. The result is that an hon. member supporting the government helps to vote the money and then sells out at a greatly advanced price, and we are told that because we are committed to it we must go on and make this expenditure. The country had better know this, because, so far as we know, or so far as any information is vouchsafed to this House, this is a most discreditable transaction throughout, unjustifiable, and I was going to say corrupt. I think I would be quite justified if I did so. I want the people of my part of the country to know this. They have tried very hard to get a few thousand dollars spent to improve harbours and to build wharfs where there are large and enterprising manufacturing towns surrounded by a prosperous farming country and where an extensive trade is being done. Yet, they cannot get this government to provide proper facilities to carry on their trade. But, the government will go to the province of Quebec and start to build a wharf where there is no trade, where there is nothing but a timber limit, the property of a member of this House, where there is not even a post office, or a settlement, not even a trade to be done, not even a boat calling there, and yet we are committed to an expenditure of $80,000, and because we inadvertently became committed to it, not having this knowledge when we committed ourselves, which, if we had had it we never would have submitted to vote the item—because we have been committed to it without proper knowledge, then, it is said, we must go on and carry it out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Why does the hon. gentleman say that the cost will be $80,000 ?

Mr. SPROULE. That which has been already done the hon. member tells us, must cost $59,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is under contract, and there should not be any mistake. The cost is $59,500.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to get an answer from the hon. minister to my question. Which came first—the vote or the contract for the erection of this wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The vote came first.

Mr. FOWLER. When was the contract let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 29th June, 1901.

Mr. FOWLER. And the first vote was last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the first vote was in 1901.

Mr. FOWLER. How much was that vote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Five thousand.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the amount of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifty-three thousand nine hundred.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it intended with that vote of $5,000 to build this wharf ? Had the engineers gone down there and estimated that $5,000 would be sufficient to build the wharf that was afterwards to cost $59,500 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the hon. gentleman now leading the opposition (Mr. Sproule) will see that it is hardly fair to say this matter was done without the knowledge of the House. There was a very full discussion last year, and if I am not mistaken a vote was taken on this very item.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well then I have been misinformed. I could not vouch for that statement, but I was under the impression a vote had been taken. However, 'Hansard' will show.

Mr. INGRAM. There was no discussion when the item was brought up in the first instance, and that is what the opposition complained of last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is wrong for this House to grant a vote of money without having knowledge of the total amount of the cost.

Mr. FOWLER. That is our contention.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite agree with hon. gentlemen. I have no fault to find with that proposition. I think it is right. It should be the duty of the minister of the department to furnish that information to the House. I think it is due to the House and the country that when a vote is taken of a small amount for the reason that it would not be spent within the current fiscal year the estimated cost of the undertaking should be submitted so that parliament would know what it was committing the country to.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to see that the hon. minister takes that view. It seems to me that as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, this smells very strongly of jobbery. It seems that in order to get a candidate in a certain county in the province of Quebec, it was necessary for a deal of this sort to be made. The deal was, as appears from the statements that have been made, that in order to get this gentleman to run in a certain county in the province of Quebec it was necessary to make him a promise that this property which he had bought and which was not valuable from the fact that there were not then the necessary facilities for carrying on the lumbering business, would be made the object of a large expenditure of money. Then an arrangement was made for the vote that was passed in this House. The thin edge of the wedge was put in at first. The small amount of $5,000 was put in the estimates for the purpose of committing the House to the greater expenditure which was to follow and without any estimate whatever from the engineer and without any information being vouchsafed to the House as to the expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) say what authority he has for making the statement that there was an agreement in regard to this matter ?

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. minister dispute that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, as far as I am concerned and on behalf of the government, I am prepared to take the responsibility of saying that there is no knowledge on the part of any member of the government of any such thing. I have admitted the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the interest of an hon. member in the landed property and in the timber limits, as I could not dispute it, but I do desire to say on behalf of myself and on behalf of the government that there was no arrangement previous to the election, or any discussion in regard to the matter whatever. Unless the hon. gentleman has some authority for a serious statement of this kind, he is not justified in making it. He as a lawyer, and as a member of this House will see the necessity for giving some authority for such a statement.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a very strong rumour in the county of Stanstead that such an arrangement was made, and I may say further to the hon. minister that the facts of the case, as disclosed to-night and in the debate of last year when this matter was up, show clearly that there is a very strong ground for the rumour that prevails in Stanstead. What do we find ? We find that one hon. member who knew that this matter was coming up, and who should have been here to stand up and explain it is conspicuous by his absence. I speak of the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell). The first vote was a small vote of $5,000, when, if there had been any examination at all, it must have been known to the department that it would require a very much larger amount of money to build that wharf there. Now, the hon. minister comes down and asks for $60,000.

Mr. MORIN. They asked for $25,000 last year.

Mr. FOWLER. And how much this year?

Mr. MORIN. Thirty-six thousand.

Mr. FOWLER. Making upwards of $70,000 for this purpose. We find that they are making this expenditure of public money in a place where there are no people to serve except the one individual who owned the property, not even a post office in this place, while there are important towns and harbours all over the country requiring an expenditure of public money. Take the great city of Toronto, where it was impossible to get a grant of any size from the government to provide the necessary facilities for the great metropolis of this country ; yet $70,000 of an expenditure is to be made in an obscure place where there is no post office, simply to enable this gentleman who had made a bad bargain in his purchase of this property to unload it. The facts of the matter have been clearly shown by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell). The committee must be grateful to the hon. member for Glengarry for the exceeding amount of light he has thrown upon the question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. During the discussion last year I think the amount of the contract was given to the House.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not remember whether it was or not, but I know that a great part of the discussion last year was with respect to the deed to the property on which the wharf was going to be built, and we found the Minister of Public Works first declaring that no one owned it, and then that he thought it was Crown land. Now we find that it was private property, and that some one has given a deed to the department. In view of the fact that last year there was considerable discussion with regard to this, it is very surprising that the deputy minister should say that some one gave a deed of the property, but who he does not know. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. Schell) says that the property belongs to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell), and we are much obliged to him for that information.

Mr. SCHELL. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman. Personally, I do not know anything about the circumstances, and I did not say that I did. The member for Simcoe said that the timber would be cut off in a few years, and I rose to correct that statement. I went on further to say, as the name of the hon. member for Stanstead was mentioned in connection with this, that I had seen in the 'Canada Lumberman' where this property had been sold for a certain sum.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

Mr. SCHELL. I cannot tell you now, but you can get the paper in the reading room. I mentioned these two points, and if hon. gentlemen attribute any further statements to me, they are mistaken.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) has just confirmed what I said. He stated that the property belonged to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell), who had since sold it to a corporation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) tells us that he read that statement in the 'Canada Lumberman.'

Mr. CLARKE. It has not appeared in the 'Canada Gazette' yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps it will appear there next. I must congratulate the minister that he has come around to our way of thinking, and has promised that there will be no more jobs of this kind while he is minister.

Mr. SPROULE. I want more than that promise from the minister. We must have the papers showing who first applied for the building of the wharf and upon whose advice the expenditure was undertaken. It would be better that the minister should leave the vote over, and get the information in the meantime.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be the part of wisdom to allow this item to stand until the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is present ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Everything that was said to-night was said last year.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course, I could get the 'Hansard' and read what was said last year, but if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) understood that this item was to be reserved, that understanding should be carried out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be very particular indeed to carry out any arrangement I made with any member of the opposition.

Mr. CLARKE. I believe that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The arrangement which I propose is much broader, and I might be found fault with if I narrowed it down to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. CLARKE. If the narrower arrangement suits us and suits the hon. member (Mr. Monk), no fault can be found with the minister if he agrees to it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My proposal is that the general vote for the province of Quebec should stand, with the privilege to any hon. member to discuss any and every item as fully as he wishes. If hon. gentlemen look at the 'Hansard' of last year they will find that the amount of the contract, the names of the contractors, and all other information was given, and that parliament has committed itself to this work. We cannot set up against the contractor that parliament did not possess full knowledge, and we are under obligations in the highest sense to pay the contractors for the work that has been undertaken.

Mr. INGRAM. It is due to the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) that this item should stand until he is present. Last year the statement was made in the House that the only condition under which he would be a candidate was that the government would expend a large sum of money at this place, and that, when the government promised that, he consented to be a candidate. That charge was made last year in the House, and it is made again this year. I remember distinctly that when the matter was up last year the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lovell) was in his place that day, but when this discussion came on he was not in his seat. It is due to that hon. gentleman (Mr. Lovell) that he should be in his place in this House to say whether or not the rumour is well founded. So far as I am concerned, putting one piece of information I have received with another, I have no doubt in my mind that this was an inducement held out to the hon. gentleman to be a candidate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lovell) had not been a member of this House before ; he had large interests at this place, and we find that here, where there are something like 314 souls, men, women and children, the government is going to expend a sum of nearly $60,000. Last year we objected that the government had no title to this property, and to-night the minister is not in a position to give us any information on that point. Last year we were told that Rocky Point, where the pier is being built, was Crown land, and now we are told that some private person has given a title, but who that private person is the government does not seem to know. Last year we complained that the government came down with a vote for $5,000 for a work that would ultimately cost $60,000, and to-day we say that parliament had not the information before it necessary to consent to the work in the first place. We are told that we should ask this information in the first instance, but every one knows that from time to time certain items may slip through because the opposition feel that they do not want to carp over every item. We want to find fault only with the items which we think we are justified in finding fault with, and this is one of the items. Let this item stand until the member for Stanstead can tell us whether or not there is any truth in the rumour that he would not be a candidate until it was promised that this money would be expended.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are two points which the hon. gentleman makes. The first is that the item ought to stand. The agreement with the hon. member was that one item should stand and that all the items in this vote might be discussed under that item at a future time. I do not think the hon. gentleman could say that any broader or fairer proposition could be made.

Mr. SPROULE. I confess that I am very much against that principle, because when we have passed items in that way, we have been stopped from discussing them on the ground that they have passed the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not if we made an agreement that they might be discussed.

Mr. SPROULE. But we are practically committing ourselves to the vote when we have not the information properly before us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The other point the hon. gentleman makes is that the information was not properly given. If he looks in 'Hansard,' he will find that the information was given.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Stanstead, it is stated, refused to be a candidate until it was agreed that this money should be spent for his benefit.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not the point I am referring to. If any hon. gentleman has a charge to make against the ex-Minister of Public Works, who proposed this vote and explained it, there is a proper way to make that charge. We are now passing an appropriation to pay the balance of this contract. That is what is under consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman's predecessor did not take the same view of this question that the hon. gentleman is now taking. He said that the hon. gentleman with the rest of his colleagues were as responsible for this matter as he was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is perfectly correct. Every gentleman acquainted with our constitutional system knows that.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman's predecessor in office stated the position; and, as the Minister of Justice has passed over 'Hansard,' I will read what his colleagues said last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman need not read it, because I admit that the government is responsible for this contract. The majority in parliament are also responsible. As Minister of Public Works, I am committed, the ministry is committed and parliament is committed to this contract. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister why it was necessary to get a deed of this property, because on page 1034 of 'Hansard' of last year, the Minister of Public Works is reported as having stated that no site was purchased, because it was not necessary to purchase a site, the work being built on a rocky point that did not belong to any one. If the minister says there is a deed of the property, I would like to know why this deed was obtained, and from whom it was obtained.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must see that that is an unreasonable proposition, because parliament voted the money last session to carry out this contract. In view of the statement then made by the late minister that the government did not own the property, we are now in a much stronger position, because I have made the statement that the deed has been procured. As to whom it was purchased from, I have promised to bring down the document so that every man can see it.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the strongest reason why the vote should not go through now, because we have not that information. I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman wants to press it, in view of the rumours that are floating about in regard to the connection of the hon. member for Stanstead with this transaction, and in view of the fact that a deed has been obtained when it was said last session that there was no need of obtaining a deed. I think we should have this information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The passing of this item does not prevent any hon. member from bringing that up.

Mr. FOWLER. Then the minister could use the same argument that he has used already. He has stated that we committed ourselves so far last year and the year before that we cannot back out of this transaction now; and yet he wants to take the vote and still further commit the House. Then he will say, you passed this vote without the information, and now, what do you want the information for, when you have committed the House to the whole expenditure?

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister ought to let this item stand for the present and furnish the information we require. We should have the deed of the property, we should be informed who applied for this dock to be built and who recommended it, and should have all the papers connected with it. We should be informed what the engineer's estimate of the cost was before the work was undertaken. We require all this information to enable us to judge of the matter before we commit ourselves any further to it. Then, the hon. member for Stanstead is not present, neither is the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who wished to be here when this matter was discussed. These are strong reasons why this item should be held over.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer the hon. gentleman's questions seriatim. He says the item should stand until we are informed who recommended this vote. I have already stated that it was recommended by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE. There must have been some one who applied for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have stated that there was no further information about it in the department. How can I bring down information that is not in the possession of the department?

Mr. CLARKE. Is it possible that there was no application made for the expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have answered one question. The next is as to the report of the engineer. Parliament authorized the expenditure after the minister had stated that there was no report of the engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister submit it without a report of the engineer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am only giving the facts as they are. I have nothing to keep back. There is no reason for letting the item stand in order to bring down what does not exist. The minister admitted that there was no report, and still parliament voted the amount.

Mr. INGRAM. Against the wishes of the opposition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The opposition did not oppose it.

Mr. INGRAM. They protested against it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They did not vote against it, and parliament passed the item. I cannot agree to the suggestion that this should stand because either the ex-Minister of Public Works or the hon. member for Stanstead is not present. If there was not the fullest opportunity given to bring the matter up when they were present, I would say there was some reason for the request; but under the circumstances I can see no reason why this item should be delayed further.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to me that the very fact that there is no request from any person in the records of the department, as the hon. minister has just told us, for the erection of this wharf, is a confirmation of this very rumour, so prevalent through the county of Stanstead, that the hon. member for Stanstead became a member of this House on the understanding that he was to have the value of his property enhanced by the building of this wharf at the public expense. If such were not the case, there would be some recommendation or some petition to the department showing the desire of the people of that section for the construction of this work.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the absence of the hon. member for Stanstead, who should be here to defend himself, I notice that there are two members present from the adjoining locality of Bonaventure and Restigouche. These hon. gentlemen could throw some light on the question.

Mr. HACKETT. We are now called upon to vote $36,000 in connection with a certain pier at Grande Valée. While I have no desire to embarrass the hon. minister and wish to expedite as far as possible, the work of the session, I feel bound to call attention to the fact that while at this place there are only three hundred people.

Mr. MORIN. Three hundred and fourteen.

Mr. HACKETT. While at this place, with a population of only three hundred and fourteen, we are called on to spend $36,000, in the province of Prince Edward Island, where we have a population of 100,000, the government are only spending $34,000 on public works. That is not right and I protest against it in the name of the people I represent. If you cannot spend more than $34,000 in Prince Edward Island, you can surely have no justification for spending $61,000 in Grand Valée. In the interest of fair play and justice, this item should be allowed to stand until the hon. member from Stanstead is here to explain the facts. If he thinks that by absenting himself, he is going to escape being called to account we should prove to him that he is mistaken. Any hon. member who gets a timber limit from the government should be prepared to stand up in this House and defend himself against the criticisms made on such a transaction as the present, but the hon. gentleman does not want to go into the facts. He has made his escape by the back door and left this item to be discussed by his friends. I think we should insist on this item standing over.

Mr. MORIN. I wish to show exactly the position of this thing. There is no doubt something wrong in it. The hon. minister has admitted that the government had no engineer there. The hon. member from Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) is a lumber man. Lumber men do not engage engineers to locate their work but select the places themselves where they require wharfs, and evidently in this case the hon. member interested said to the government: I want the wharf at a certain place and you will build it there. According to the admission of the hon. Minister of Public Works, the government did not know anything about the best locality where to build that wharf. Well, who did? It must be clear to everybody that they were completely in the hands of the parties interested and are eating and drinking their own condemnation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We have no evidence whatever that there is any such wharf in existence. No engineer, no officer of the department, has ever seen the wharf.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let us have the wharf in the House.

Mr. CLARKE. Bring in the wharf.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since that contract was let, there has been an engineer in charge of the work.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. minister tells us that this wharf is for the benefit of the public. How is it that for the last two hundred years, down the gulf of the St. Lawrence, the shores of which are inhabited by fishermen who require wharfs, there never has been a wharf built except at this locality, and that is down in the interests of the hon. member from Stanstead and promised at the time of the election in 1901. That in itself shows that there must be something wrong.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are making only a reasonable request when we ask the hon. minister to allow this matter to stand over. The discussion to-night shows this to be one of the rankest jobs that ever disgraced this or any other government, and to call on the followers of the government to vote this thing through without the fullest information is putting a very severe test on their party allegiance.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman wants information he will get it. What information does he require?

Mr. AVERY. Last year the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said that the deed of that property was all right and that it did not belong to any body but the government. But when the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) was asked who owned the property where the dock was built, he said that it was owned by the firm of Lovell and Company. The ex-Minister of Public Works then said that if he had known that he would not have undertaken the work and that he would not continue it until the government had a proper deed of the land. He must have been misled or he would not have put a dollar into that dock until the deed of the property was given. We would like to know who misled the Minister of Public Works last year when he spent several thousand dollars of public money in building a dock for a private individual who owned lumber lands in that locality ? If public money is to be spent, it should be expended where the people generally get the benefit and not for the special advantage of one individual. I am in the lumber business myself, and if at any time I require a wharf for my business, I have to build it myself, and that is the case with other lumber men. If the hon. Minister of Public Works will let this item stand over and thoroughly investigate the matter, he will conclude to spend no more money there. We have spent more money on that dock than the country can afford, taking into consideration any benefit the country will get from it. The hon. minister would do well if he would stop all proceedings on that work, because I do not think it will ever be of any public advantage at all corresponding with the amount invested. It will be a detriment to the country to keep it up, and the benefit will go to one individual.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has misquoted the ex-Minister of Public Works last year. According to 'Hansard' he said :

> I quite agree that we should have titles in every case, and my officers have received positive instructions on that point. They are within hearing of my voice and they know that I have given them the most positive and severe instructions.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Instructions as to what ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to the deed.

Mr. CLARKE. What page is the hon. minister quoting from ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Page 1042.

Mr. FOWLER. That refers to the Caraquet wharf.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps so. But, so far as the point under discussion is concerned, to clear that up, I have informed the Committee that the deed to this property has been procured.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). From whom ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not that information.

Mr. BENNETT. It might be given as some defence of this scheme if it could be shown that other persons would be served besides this company. But the map shows that this part of Gaspé is so rough that the local government have not even surveyed it into townships, or parishes. The place where this work is situated has the suggestive name of 'Grand Valley of the Mountains.' It was stated here last year, and the hon. member for Stanstead has had an opportunity to deny it, that he, being the owner of this property in Gaspé, was desirous of having a dock established there. He was not a member of the House before this parliament, and the facts seem to bear out the rumour current among his friends in his own riding, that he became a candidate upon condition that this large public expenditure should be made for his benefit. It is due to the hon. member for Stanstead to give him an opportunity to contradict that rumour, and I am prepared for my part, to carry on the discussion until the hon. member for Stanstead is summoned to give his explanation of the matter. Why should not the minister allow this item to stand. A reference to the census shows that at the place where this work is to be there are only about thirty heads of families. This saw-mill must be a very small one. I do not know the capacity of the mill or the extent of the timber limit. But I will be bound to say that, when the facts of the case come out, it will be found that the amount paid for the mill and the limit is about equal to the government's expenditure on this work. In fact, as stated by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell), the government is spending $60,000 to enhance the value of the property of the hon. member for Stanstead. About half the amount has already been expended. Let the hon. minister put down his foot and stop the work on this dock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. You would not save any money by that.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, certainly. The hon. minister will have to settle with the contractor; and he knows that the contractor cannot go into court without getting a fiat from his department through the Minister of Justice. Let the contractor be paid for what he has done, and we may be quite sure the lumber company will finish the dock, as they are to get the benefit or it. It is plain beyond the shadow of a doubt that the whole thing, from its inception, was a political job. And, now that the country has spent $30,000 to enrich the hon. mem for Stanstead, I am prepared for one, to vote against any further expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) suggests that the discussion should be kept up merely for the sake of the discussion. Now, it seems to me that an arrangement made between the parties in this House should be carried out——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What arrangement has been made between the parties? None whatever. There may have been an arrangement between private individuals on either side——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If there is no other reason for further discussion than has already been given, I cannot see what objection there can be to the proposal I submitted. I have offered to allow the general vote to stand with the understanding that when it comes up any special item in the Quebec list can be discussed by any hon. member whether he is present now or not.

Mr. CLARKE. It is due to the hon. minister to say that I do not dispute the accuracy of his statement respecting the arrangement entered into between himself and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), but I do say that that hon. gentleman, who is absent, must have misunderstood what the agreement was, because, as I have explained, he left with me a copy of the estimates with several items, including the one under discussion, marked to be reserved. Evidently he did not understand that this item was to pass.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. minister says that an arrangement was made between the two parties. I want to tell him there was nothing of the kind. It has been a fashion in this House—it may have come in before hon. gentlemen opposite took office, but it has been very carefully followed by them—for the government to reserve an item in a given list with the understanding that any item on the list may be discussed when it comes up; then they bring it up at a time when the people interested are not here, and it goes through without discussion. I want to tell the hon. minister that this item is not going to get by in any such way; I give him fair warning of that. We are going to get at the facts in this case, or we will know the reason why.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was not present in the earlier part of the discussion. May I ask what amount has been spent on this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $20,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I happen to be responsible for this work. I was in office when representations were made to us that there was a very large trade to be developed if a wharf was built at Grande Vallée. We had the survey made, and, after a good deal of discussion and, perhaps, of hesitation, the government decided to go on with the work. The expenditure now under discussion is not a new one, and it seems to me rather late to treat it as it is being treated now. The whole thing came up before the House last year. There was some discussion but the item went through. Now a contract has been entered into, and the government of the country is pledged to that work. Whether the House made a mistake or not, the government is pledged. This is the case in two words. But there is not so much mistake as hon. gentlemen opposite seem to believe. It is to my knowledge that, in the past, both long ago and in recent times, the country has built wharfs in places where there was not a large population. It is not necessary that there should be a large population at the place before a work of this kind is gone on with. The hopes of the future are an element in every public work of importance. But whether we have made a mistake or not, the House authorized the Minister of Public Works last year to go on with the work. There is no answer to that. If we have made a mistake, well, so much the worse for us. But the country is bound to pay for that work now. It has been said, and I believe truly said, that certain parties, among whom is a member of parliament, will benefit by that work. I do not know of many public works in which some people are not benefited. We do not build wharfs for heaven's sake all the time. We build wharfs for the people living on this planet, not for those who are in heaven, but for those who are on this very planet that we are so happy to live on. Now this work comes within that category. It is built for people who are living under God's sun, and the hon. member for Stanstead is among them. He has bought limits there. There are many members of parliament who have property in places where wharfs are built. Are they guilty of any job? Are they guilty of any crime? It is not a crime against civilization or against God to build public works for the benefit of people, whoever they may be. Members of parliament, to my knowledge, have often benefited by works which have been constructed in the past, and which are going on now. Well, this work is of some magnitude for Grande Vallée. It may be a little exaggeration of the blessings that we have freely distributed in this country. But this country is prosperous. The Minister of Finance has just told us that we have a surplus of $13,500,000, and out of that surplus we are bound to pay to the contractors of Grand Vallée the balance of the work.

Mr. POPE. I quite agree with the request of some gentlemen on this side of the House that Mr. Lovell should have an opportunity of explaining his connection with this matter. He comes from a county adjoining my own in the Eastern Townships. There is in the public mind a scandal connected with this affair that ought to be cleared up in the interest of the firm of Lovell & Sons, of which the hon. member for Stanstead is the head. At the time of the convention when candidates were chosen for Stanstead county, Mr. Lovell came to the convention called by the Conservatives, and there it was generally understood that he was desirous of being the candidate, not solely on account of his love of the Liberal party, but for the purpose of furthering some object that he was understood to have in view. That was the general understanding at this meeting. He made a proposition which was accepted by the Conservative party of Stanstead county, that so far as that election was concerned it should be run free from any corruption or expenditure. Whether that agreement was kept or not, it is not necessary for me to inquire. But we were surprised in the first place that Mr. Lovell should be desirous of being a candidate; we were surprised in the next place that he attended our convention; we were surprised in the third place that he made this proposition, because it has not been the habit of the Liberal party in Stanstead county to run elections upon that pure and angelic basis. Well, Sir, that was our feeling, and as we prosecuted our inquiries, we were confidentially told that Mr. Lovell had some axe to grind, and that was the reason he was a candidate. Now he bought a limit from the government, a very small piece of land on the lower St. Lawrence. There was nothing else there but a forest, he built a mill and acquired these limits, and then it seems that he wanted a wharf. In Mr. Lovell's county and in the district in which he lives, it is firmly believed, I am sorry to say to his discredit, that this wharf is the price of his candidature for the Liberal party. Now, Sir, I think it is a grave situation, a disgraceful situation, and one that Mr. Lovell should be prepared to stand up in this House and either refute or acknowledge, as the case may be. Therefore I think that when we ask the government to allow this item to stand, it is done as much in the interest of Mr. Lovell and of his character as of anybody else. Since that time the property has been sold. Mr. Lovell and his sons, so I understand by the public press, are no longer owners of that property, it has passed over to other hands, and Mr. Lovell is reputed to have received something like $100,000 out of his property.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). How much did he pay for it ?

Mr. POPE. He paid very little. They are making the price of this wharf out of it. Now, Mr. Chairman, don't you think that this is a most extraordinary situation, that this country should go to work and spend $50,000 or $60,000 in building a wharf for a property the total value of which is only $100,000 or $125,000 ? It is a most extraordinary position. The expenditure is unwarranted on that basis alone. On a property that is only valued at $125,000 we have no right to expend $60,000 of the public money for its development. I think we have a right to protest against it on that ground alone as a business proposition, to say nothing about the other question that has been raised.

Now, before I sit down I wish to say that, taking all these matters into consideration, the statements that have been made at the very outset of Mr. Lovell's candidature for Stanstead county that he was to receive some consideration, that he had some object in view in running for that county besides being the candidate of the Liberal party, and when we find this item put in here and this charge made throughout the country, throughout the Eastern Townships, all around Mr. Lovell's home, in the very village where he lives—I say in view of all these circumstances it is a duty the government owes to itself, irrespective of party, that that hon. gentleman should be given an opportunity to stand up in this House and defend himself from these imputations. I say this, Sir, because the name of Lovell & Sons as an honoured business concern has been above-board in our section of the country. Moreover, this gentleman is sitting in his seat here in parliament for the last time. He is an old man, and whatever the results of the next battle may be in Stanstead county for membership in this parliament, Mr. Lovell will not be the member for Sanstead county. There is not much quesion about that. Now, having had such a business career in that section of the country, I think this is not the way that he should retire from political life, leaving this stain upon his character. Therefore, I say that the minister in justice to Mr. Lovell and his family, in view of his business record, should allow this item to stand until the whole matter is properly explained so far as Mr. Lovell's connection with it is concerned.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this contract was let in November, 1901. Now if that statement is correct, I would like to know what is the use of the government going through the farce of entering into a contract pledging us to pay $53,000 for a work when the contract was made in November, 1901 ? Is it not a bit of a farce to enter into an arrangement without first coming to parliament and laying before us what the work is supposed to be, what the cost of the work is to be ? But after the government entered into a contract it comes down and, as a matter of form, asks us to pass a vote. They first expend the money and then come and ask parliament to vote it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already stated—the ex-Minister of Public Works will be able to speak for himself—that he took the responsibility of recommending this work, and the government assumes responsibility for it now. Last session parliament, after full discussion, endorsed the contract after it was made.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister be good enough to tell us the size of the wharf, how much work has been done on it? Is there such a wharf in existence? I have asked that two or three times.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no doubt that there is such a wharf in existence. The work has been taken charge of by a special engineer of the department named Mr. Dubuc. The works placed under contract comprise the construction of a breakwater-pier composed of a substructure of seven cribs of ballasted cribwork having a total length of 900 feet and a breadth increasing from twenty-five feet on top at the shore end to twenty-nine feet at the outer end and which are to be sunk flush with the low water level, spring tide, and topped by a continuous superstructure standing eighteen feet above the said low water level, spring tides.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). How much of it has been done? Is there any report of the progress made?

Mr. COCHRANE. Did you say eighteen feet above low water?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eighteen feet above low water.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman the first estimate made?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I have the total amount that has been paid out.

Mr. FOWLER. How much is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $20,000. The material must be on the ground by this time and under the contract the work must be finished within a month or two.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the work been continued during the winter months?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand form the reports of the department that the material was got out during the winter, that it is now on the ground and that the work will soon be completed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who are the contractors?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Messrs. Heney & Smith, Ottawa.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is only fair that under the special circumstances in this case the hon. minister should not press the vote. It is a fact that there is no public interest to be served by this dock save the interest of this lumber company which own the land adjoining and if the hon. minister stops the work at present and does not do anything more upon it, he knows very well that the lumber company will complete the work. It will not be the first contract that this government have broken after contracts have been let. The hon. minister knows that hundreds and hundreds of contracts equally as binding in point of honour and from a business point of view were broken by this government. When the hon. gentlemen came into power they found from one end of this country to the other a contract solemnly entered into by the Postmaster General with mail carriers. What did the hon. gentlemen do? Without even giving a cent of compensation they cut these contracts in two, refused to carry them and refused to give these men permission to go into court to seek damages to which they were entitled. This is only going to be a case of hardship on this lumber company who own the property if called upon to complete this dock which, if completed, will be serving them and them alone. I think it is fair to ask the hon. minister that no further money shall be spent on this work and let this company complete the work. There are no surveyed lands in the neighbourhood, the dock is not going to serve any public interest after this company get through with their saw-mill operations which appear to be on a very limited scale and thereafter the work will stand as a monument to this government's waste of public money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should be very sorry to shut off any discussion. I have made that proposition over and over again. I think the hon. gentleman leading the opposition will see the fairness of my suggestion because I do not think he can point out any reason why the item should not be proceeded with now. In my opinion time would be gained by disposing of it for the present with the understanding that if any question is asked or any discussion is desired at any future time the subject will again be brought up without any objection from myself or from the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Over and over again when we requested that any particular item should be allowed to stand it has been agreed to by the hon. minister at once. Why is this one forced through? When it is a fact that we have no information in reference to the grave suspicion of the worst kind of jobbery connected with it, I submit that in the absence of that information we are justified in asking it to stand over. The hon. minister asks us to give the vote the approval of this committee by allowing it to go through and reserving the discussion until later, but, we say the time to discuss it is when we get the information we want from the department and when the hon. members are present who are interested in it. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) are the parties who should be present. Surely the hon. minister will allow the item to stand.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I must protest as energetically as I can against that word 'jobbery.' I did not commit any jobbery when I was in office or elsewhere. I am not guilty of any jobbery. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has been on the Public Accounts Committee for six years. He has investigated the accounts to the best of his ability, which is large, and yet he has not found any jobbery that I have committed. I protest against that word; it is unfair. That work has been carried out in good faith. Whether I made a mistake or not is another question. I was not a party to any jobbery. We have built works elsewhere. In the Yukon we built roads where there was no population. We have been spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in building roads where there were no settlers. We have spent nearly $1,000,000 in building a telegraph line in view of future prospects. In Grande Vallée we have acted on the same principle. I thought in perfect good faith that it would develop that part of the country. The work was recommended to me by several members of parliament, especially by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) who, I am sorry not to see in his seat. The work was undertaken in good faith. There was no jobbery. I protest against that word. I hope it has not been applied to the department or to myself. If it has been I must protest against that with all the energy I possess.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the statement of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is a little premature. I think it is a little bit uncalled for. If the hon. gentleman had been in this House for the last hour and a half or two hours, during which, as by degrees, we got out the little information we could, and listened to the discussion, he would have known why it was characterized from this side of the House. We were told the circumstances which took place, of the rumours that were prevalent in regard to the transaction, the name of the original owner of the property and the purpose for which the wharf was to be built. In answer to the request I made twice or three times in succession as to who recommended this work, I was told that there was no record in the department that anybody recommended it. When we asked for the engineer's estimate for the cost of the undertaking, we were told that there was none. I do not say that the ex-Minister of Public Works was in it. He may have been innocently led to do this work but I have not a single word to take back. I say it is surrounded by suspicion, by more than a strong suspicion of jobbery, and it is the very strongest justification for demanding that this item shall be held over until we get the information from the department, or until we know something more about it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) may take back or not take back what he has said, but there is no jobbery in it, and before a member of parliament has the right to use the word 'jobbery' he must be in a position to prove what he is saying.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I challenge my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) to prove that there has been any jobbery. The word 'jobbery' is not parliamentary, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who is an old hand, knows very well that before he is in a position to use such strong and uncalled for language, he should have some evidence to sustain him. Where is his evidence? It is not forthcoming and it cannot be forthcoming. The only suspicion is that there is a member of parliament who has timber limits in the neighbourhood, but perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) himself has some property near some wharfs that have been built by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Not a cent nor never had.

Mr. McISAAC. Nor never will.

Mr. SPROULE. Nor never will in that kind of business.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no jobbery, and my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has no right to use that word. He may not take it back, but if he does not that will not strengthen his position. The work has been given in good faith; the contract has been awarded and the matter was discussed last year. Let me add that one of the men interested in that work is dead and in his grave.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We cannot get at him.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, but in view of that sad circumstance it would be a little fairer to let bygones be bygones. The work has been done and the country is bound to pay for it. The hon. gentlemen opposite have made their case last year and this year again. Last year they had some ground for opposition because it was the first time a vote was asked, but parliament has approved of it, and parliament is responsible and the government is responsible for the price of the work. Hon. gentlemen know right well that the contract cannot be cancelled. This whole thing is a tempest without any cause whatever at the present time.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) argues that last year there might be some reason for a protest. He says that the contract having been let we can do nothing but pay the shot, but last year when the discussion came up the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) told us himself that the contract was let and that we should not discuss it then. He argued in that way last year because in the year previous they slipped in a small vote of $5,000 for a work which they must have known would cost twelve times that amount. The Hon. Mr. Tarte tells us now that we cannot repudiate this contract. Fancy this government talking about not repudiating contracts when they repudiated not only the contracts in the Post Office Department, but contracts in the Militia Department, entered into with the Messrs. Sanford for the supply of clothing, and they did that so hastily that they had to recall their action when they found that no one else could do the work in so satisfactory a manner. Twenty thousand dollars have been spent on this work up to the present time. It would be far better for the country that you should stop the contract; pay the contractor for the work he has done and pay his estimated profit on the work that is to be done.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does the hon. gentleman mean that after having spent $20,000 on a useful public work you should let the whole thing go.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the material for the balance is on the ground.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It would be a waste of money to do that.

Mr. FOWLER. It would be far less a waste of money to stop the whole thing than to go on spending more of the money of the people for the benefit of a single individual, or the benefit of a corporation who bought out that individual's rights. To hear these gentlemen opposite talk you would think this is a work for the general benefit of the country. Why, the argument which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) uses to defend this could be equally as well used to defend the worst kind of a job that could be perpetrated. There are 314 souls living at this place according to last census, and every adult of them is in the service of the hon. member for Stanstead or his company. It is not for their benefit you are building this; it is for the benefit of the hon. member for Stanstead and no other. In view of what has been said by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), in view of the very strong rumour which I first stated to the House that prevails in Stanstead, and in the Eastern Townships; in view of the serious reflection there is upon the character, upon the honour, upon the integrity of one member of this House that he has used his position—if it be true, and I do not say it is true, for I do not know whether it is true or not—in view of all this it seems to me that if the government had the interests of the hon. member (Mr. Lovell) at heart, they would want to have that hon. gentleman here to stand up upon the floor of parliament and explain to this House and to the country his whole connection into the matter. If they were true friends of the hon. member for Stanstead that is the course they would take. I say, Sir, even though the expression may be objectionable to the ex-minister; I say that while it may not be jobbery, yet it smells most strongly of jobbery. We find the government spending $60,000 in the interests of a supporter, and spending that money for no other purpose than the private purpose of that hon. member. We find first a vote of $5,000; next year a vote of $25,000, and this year a vote for $36,000. We find all this, and we have reason to protest against it. Last year we were told that a contract was let and certain work performed. Last year we were told that nobody owned this property and that the title of it was in the clouds, but this year there is a deed of the porperty although the department is entirely innocent as to whom that deed came from. Why are they so innocent about it? Surely they knew that we would require information on that point this year, and yet they come here without information and attempt to rush this vote through by means of the brute force of their majority. That is all they have to rely upon. If this is an honest transaction; if there is no jobbery in it; if the skirts of the hon. member for Stanstead are absolutely clean, and the skirts of the government clean as well, because one involves the other; then it would be far more seemly on the part of the Minister of Public Works to let this item stand until the member for Stanstead is here to defend himself from this serious charge. I trust that in the interests of parliament; I trust in the interests of public life in this country, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lovell) can properly defend himself and can clear himself from the very strong suspicion which at the present time attaches to his name.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the item were suspended, there would be twice as much noise about it as we hear to-night. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat would point to that fact as the best evidence that there was jobbery. The Minister of Public Works may do as he likes, but if I were in his place I would go on with the item, because there is nothing wrong with it. It is a fair expenditure of money. It may be a little large, I grant. On various occasions different governments have spent large sums of money on works which at their inception did not seem to be very meritorious. In this case, if the name of a member of parliament had not been connected with the work, there would not have been ten words said about it in the House. But there is a member of parliament who has properties in that neighbourhood. Members of the opposition are in their right in criticising the item. This is a political game. Criticism is a good thing ; I do not object to it at all ; but criticism does not make black what is white. In this case, I say it again, if a member of the ministerial party had not properties in that neighbourhood, the item would have passed like a shot. But there is a member of parliament in that position. This is political warfare——

Mr. BENNETT. This is a political wharf, too.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, I grant that politics has a lot to do in the world ; but politics has made at times a good deal worse work than this wharf will be. This work will be a useful one. It will develop a large lumber industry.

Mr. CLARKE. Hear, hear ; that is the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where is the objection to developing the lumber industry of this country, even by means of a wharf ? We are developing all kinds of industries by means of improvements. If I were the Minister of Public Works, I would ask that the item go through.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman knows as well as anybody that the development of the lumber industry belongs to the province of Quebec, and it gets the benefit.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The province of Quebec has not the right to build wharfs. That is a sacred right of this parliament.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am delighted to see that the ex-Minister of Public Works does not hang his head in shame. I notice that the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has gone out ; the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Reid) has escaped ; and the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) is not in his place.

Mr. TALBOT. Restigouche is 500 miles from this place.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I beg pardon ; it is right opposite Gaspé. I know where the county is just as well as any member on the other side, and I want to tell them that the hon. member for Restigouche cannot be gotten to stand up in the House and defend this job. Bring him in and he will condemn it as well as every man in that part of the country. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) charged the Minister of Public Works last year with building wharfs along the shores of the St. Lawrence river so thickly that there was not room for them on the shore, and they had to hang them on the trees. This is one of those docks, I suppose. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the great North-west, where settlers from the United States and from the old lands are now going in such large numbers, is entitled to legitimate and necessary expenditures, and the territorial legislature should be strengthened by grants of money for the development of that country, instead of throwing it away on the rocks around Gaspé. Perhaps the ex-Minister of Public Works can tell us from whom the deed of this property was obtained. We have been asking that all night.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think the deed was given by Mr. Lovell himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where is the crime in that ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We have been trying all night to get that information.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not see why it was not given immediately. I would have given it immediately.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish you had come in sooner, then.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was better engaged.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think 'Hansard' will show that I did say that if the property belonged to Mr. Lovell, the deed must have been got from him. I may say that previous to six o'clock the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated that he wished to be absent this evening. I said that, so far as I was concerned, I was willing that the general vote for the province should stand, so that all the items might be discussed, and the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition was willing that this item should pass, as I had given all the information I had with regard to it. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works is now here, and has confirmed everything I said. That being the case, if any hon. gentleman on the other side will ask for any information that has not been furnished, it will be given if it is in the department, and there will be an opportunity for further discussion under the arrangement that has been made. Then I ask that the item be allowed to pass.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not by a long chalk. It might as well be understood that if this item passes to-night and is discussed generally, we cannot afterwards vote on it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it not a most interesting feature of this debate to see a member of parliament like my hon. friend getting up and saying that Restigouche is just opposite Grande Vallée ? It is not even in the same province.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I did not say anything of the kind. Restigouche is in the province of New Brunswick, across the river.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am very glad that my hon. friend has at last found that Restigouche is in New Brunswick. He should have known it before. It is not on the same river at all. There are about 500 miles between the two places. Here is a member of parliament, one of the leaders on the other side of the House, who criticises an estimate on the ground that Restigouche and Grande Vallée are a few steps apart, when there are about 500 miles between the two. We cannot take him seriously. He is good to make war in South Africa, but he is no good to criticise items of this kind; he is not in it. When my hon. friend speaks of rocks, he again speaks of things he does not know. Gaspé is one of the most fertile districts of this country. There is not only lumber there, but fertile lands. We are glad in the province of Quebec to give as much money as is necessary to develop the west, but we insist on having our share of honest public expenditure. My hon. friend reminded the House last year that a member of parliament unwisely said that we had built so many wharfs in the province of Quebec that there is no room for navigation there. Well, a good deal less money has been spent building wharfs in the province of Quebec than in Ontario. We have not said anything against this; we do not kick, to use a vulgar expression. We are pleased with our lot, but it seems to me that when we are only asking ordinary favours, amongst which is this Grande Vallée wharf, we should not be treated as if we were a lot of thieves. We are not going to get out of the country with that wharf. It will stay there and will be very useful for the development of an important industry—the lumber industry. Moreover, I repeat, the district of Gaspé is one of the most fertile districts of this country, and that wharf will not only be useful for lumber operations, but also for settlers. Everybody who knows anything of colonization in the province of Quebec knows that the settlers there must go into the forests. We build roads for them. On this occasion we are building a wharf, not only for lumbering operations, but for the settlers those lumbering operations will bring in there. The settlement of Lake St. John's district, in which there are to-day over 40,000 people, is due to colonization and lumber operations. The province of Quebec is not like our North-west. In the North-west a man has only to take a pair of oxen and go on with his work, but in the province of Quebec we have first to cut down the timber, and the best friend of the settler is the lumber merchant, when he is carrying on his work in an honourable manner. Everybody who knows anything of the way in which the province of Quebec has been settled knows that. I do not see why we should take up more time discussing this wharf. If the name of a member of parliament were not mixed up with it, it would not be discussed. This work will be useful from the standpoint of the settlers. My hon. friend should not forget that there is not a railway there. He has railways in his county, but this section of country has none, and if we do not give the people there a wharf, what are they going to have?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). For the last twenty-five years, I have almost sworn by the hon. gentleman, but can have faith in him no longer. When an hon. gentleman stands up in this House and says it is 500 miles from Restigouche to Gaspé, he shows a lamentable ignorance of the geography of his own country.

Mr. TALBOT. I make the same statement too.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Nobody pays any attention to what the hon. gentleman says. Nobody would ever charge him with knowing anything even about his own province, but from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken we expected something better.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I move that a good surveyor be appointed immediately to measure the distance.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In our county we have railways, but we have paid for them ourselves to the tune of $250,000, and we want the province of Quebec to tax themselves in the same way. The ex-Minister of Public Works, who has just skipped out of the Chamber, says that the government have built wagon roads there for the farmers. But that is supposed to be done by the province in the new districts, and we find that that is one of the large corruption funds which the Ontario government uses to corrupt electors. All the roads outside colonization roads have to be built by the municipalities themselves, and I object to our spending the hard cash of the people of Ontario in building roads through the bush in the province of Quebec, or in constructing docks for the benefit of private companies. I am surprised that the hon Minister of Finance would allow an item of this kind to go into the estimates and that the hon. Minister of Public Works would permit this kind of thing to go on.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot see that there is anything to get very warm over in this item. Last year the government were asked what amount of trade was to be done at that port and what was the real object of building the wharf, and there was no one present to give the information. I would like to point out to the government that while we cannot expect the present Minister of Public Works, who has but lately assumed the position, to know all the details, but surely it is due to the House that when a public work is being built, especially in a constituency which returns a supporter of the government, the least we should expect is that the member for that constituency should be in his place to give that explanation to the House which the minister is not prepared to give. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Lovell) absented himself from the House last year when this vote was up. He was in this House yesterday and must have known that the estimates of the province of Quebec were to be discussed this evening, and yet we find him still absent. In view of this fact, and in view of the rumours which went the rounds during the general elections, and which have been current since in connection with that hon. gentleman, surely he ought to have deemed it his duty to remain here for the purpose of explaining what amount of trade is to be done in this place, and what is the object of building this work there. I see no reason why we should not be entitled to this information before passing this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What information ?

Mr. INGRAM. The information as to what trade the government expect will be done at this point. No explanation has been given us of that. There is no hon. gentleman in a position to give it except the hon. member for Stanstead, and he remains away. I can see no reason why this item should not stand until we get that information. Certain rumours have been circulated against that hon. gentleman, and in justice to himself and to his constituents, he ought to be here prepared to deny them. In view of the very vague information we have in connection with this item and the suspicious circumstances surrounding it, I think that it should be allowed to stand over. Why are we refused this information ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What information ? I have stated over and over again that all the information which is in the department has been given. But hon. gentlemen are putting questions that cannot be answered. Information was given before the ex-Minister of Public Works entered the Chamber, and he has confirmed what was said. It is alleged that a corrupt bargain had been made between the ex-Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Stanstead——

Mr. INGRAM. Nobody said that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I am mistaken I shall be glad to withdraw what I said. But I certainly understood hon. members to say that there was a corrupt bargain on behalf of the ex-Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

An hon. MEMBER. It was said fifty times.

Mr. COCHRANE. I deny it emphatically. It was not said fifty times; it was not said once.

Mr. LENNOX. 'Hansard' will show that it was not said.

Mr. INGRAM.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am in the judgment of hon. members when I say that the statement was made that there was jobbery or corruption, that there was an arrangement made for the hon. member for Stanstead to become a candidate on the understanding that this work would be gone on with.

Mr. LENNOX. That was said.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I denied that on behalf of the government.

Mr. COCHRANE. You don't know anything about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as my knowledge went. And the ex-Minister of Public Works is here, and he denied it emphatically. It is only fair that I should say to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) that I have offered, particularly in this instance, to give all the information asked for that is in the possession of the department.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand the hon. minister to say that, if this item is passed, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who is unavoidably absent, or any other member will be free to discuss this matter on an item to be reserved.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I stated so distinctly, and I think it is only fair that it should be carried out.

Mr. INGRAM. I was interrupted in my remarks by the Minister of Public Works, who desired to say that any information desired should be furnished to the committee, if it was in the department. But what we complained of last year, and what we complain of this year, is that the information is not in the department. The only one who can furnish it is the hon. member for Stanstead. No doubt he recommended the work; he was directly interested. There must have been some reason given in support of the application, but he has never communicated it to the House, nor has the government. The minister talks about the amount of trade to be done. Has he ever furnished us any information which would enable us to judge what that trade was likely to be ? Nobody charged the ex-Minister of Public Works with jobbery in this matter. What we said and what we say, is that it was commonly reported in that constituency that he had become a candidate on the understanding that this work was to be carried out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Would not that be a corrupt job ?

Mr. INGRAM. We have stated that that rumour was in circulation. Let the hon. member come here and deny it; if he does not, he rests under the stigma of it. If such a charge were made against me I should feel it my duty to myself and my constituents to remain in the House when the vote in relation to the matter was under discussion, so as to clear myself. The fact that the hon. gentleman is not here is prima facie evidence that there is something in the rumour. I do not desire to lecture hon. gentlemen opposite, but, when there are works going on in the constituencies, it is only fair to the House that they should give us the benefit of the information they have, which must be more detailed and intimate than the minister can give. We are entitled to all reasonable information; but it seems like pulling teeth, to use the common comparison, to get information we desire. And, if we criticise we are accused of mere carping. Of course, our criticism is regarded by hon. gentlemen opposite as much less lofty than that indulged in by them when they were on this side, when the McMullen's and others carried on the discussion. I am glad to say that the criticism of the opposition has been much fairer since 1896 than it was when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side. Even with the much greater provocation that we have had, you never hear language used in this House such as they used. If the hon. minister wishes this item to pass, he should have a statement of the trade expected to be done, so that we may understand what is the object of spending this money.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a word with reference to the ex-Minister of Public Works, because he worked himself into a good deal of excitement, and it almost seemed to me he was trying to draw a red herring across the trail. Is not Quebec, he asked, entitled to have public money spent within her borders? No person objected to money being spent in Quebec wherever it was proper to do so. We are quite willing to see expenditures in Quebec, where sufficient information is given us to lead us to believe that the expenditure is in the public interest. But it is because the minister cannot or will not give us the information necessary that we ask the item to be held over. When the item was first read, the request was made, in a good-natured way that it should be allowed to stand in the absence of the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). On the other hand, the Minister of Public Works proposed that some other items should be allowed to stand. To-night, the minister seeks to stop us from discussion on the ground that we are committed to this expenditure. But we were told the same thing last year; and, if we allow the item to go without discussion, no doubt that fact will be quoted to prevent discussion at any time in the future. We asked who recommended this work, and the Minister of Public Works said that he did not know that anybody recommended it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no, I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. The ex-minister stated that it was recommended by members of the House.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I stated that it was recommended by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), who is not now in his seat. If the Minister of Public Works will look in his department, he will find also that there was a pretty large petition from the settlers there. The work was strongly recommended.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that not fully justify the position we take? The hon. minister told us there was nothing in the department. I asked specifically if there was any application from the people in the locality, and I was told that there was not. Surely, if there was urgent need for this work somebody must have applied for it. We asked that the item should be allowed to stand that the minister might look up the information. I asked if there was an engineer's estimate, and was told that there was not. Surely there must be such information in the department, but that information is not given to us. Are we doing an improper thing when we ask that the item stand till the information be given us? I hold that we should be doing much less than our duty as an opposition if we allowed the item to pass until all reasonable information was given us. We urged that other items should be gone on with, so that those items might be passed to which there was little or no objection. But nothing will suit the hon. minister but that this very item which we do not want passed, shall be passed. We only ask reasonable information, that we may know whether we are justified in voting this money or whether we should move that the item be struck out. We do not want to do that, because we believe the information is available, and if the Minister of Public Works was as agreeable as he usually is, he would allow that item to stand.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Members of parliament have a right to ask for information, and I would be the last to decline to recognize such a right. But what I objected to was the strong expression used by my hon. friend. He is a man of long experience and knows the value of words; and when, on entering the House I heard the word 'jobbery'—well, I did not like it, it is not a pleasant word to hear concerning a work with which one was connected. I am sure so far as I am concerned there was no jobbery and nothing improper.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is any satisfaction to the hon. gentleman, I may say that I had no reference to him when I spoke of jobbery.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not object to hon. members asking for information, but no information in the department would justify the use of that word by my hon. friend.

Now, if our hon. friends opposite insist that this item should not go through, it is for the minister to say what he will do. So far as the department is concerned, there was the ordinary information. There was a petition, there was a survey made, there was an estimate made. My hon. friend who is now Minister of Public Works is still a little fresh. It is easy to understand that he cannot possibly know all the details of the office over which he presides. But I remember well the facts in the present case. There was a petition, there were the ordinary representations made in such cases. The information is available just as the wharf is available.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The information has at last been vouchsafed to us by the ex-Minister of Public Works. I do not mean to say that the present minister was withholding it deliberately, although he had his deputy at his elbow, and should have known something about the business.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the chief engineer had been here the whole thing would have been explained.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). So it transpires that a member of parliament sitting in this House is the gentleman who has handed over the deed of this property to the government of Canada. What was the consideration given for that ? If there was none, the deed is valueless. If there has been a money transaction, then that hon. member has violated the Independence of Parliament Act. We find that all the circumstances point to the fact that it was through the influence of this member of parliament and to benefit his own property so that he could sell it, that this expenditure has been made. And we have heard to-night from another Liberal who says that there was an enormous rake-off, and this wharf has been constructed and the people are taxed to pay for an expenditure that is not justified. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not intend that this thing should continue. These gentlemen may just as well be given to understand that the people of this country have rights, and members of parliament have rights, and we intend to exercise them, and that this jobbery should cease of building docks along the shores of the county represented by the Finance Minister or along the shores of the St. Lawrence where they are not needed. These things have got to be justified, or else they will not be allowed to pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If there were any doubt as to whether we were asking for useless information, that doubt has been dispelled by the information given by the ex-Minister of Public Works. We have been told over and over again by the Minister of Public Works that there was no information, or that the information asked for was not available in his department. We are now informed by the ex-minister that the information asked for is available and that it is in the department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It was there when I left.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So we have not been asking for that which does not exist. I myself made use of that very objectionable word, and I think I used it advisedly ; I said that if this debate went to the public without the information which we asked for, it would have the appearance of the rankest jobbery. I did not say it was that, but it would certainly leave that impression. I hope the Minister of Public Works will not call upon the supporters of the government to vote this thing through without giving us the fullest explanation that is possible to be had.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has spoken for some time, and he has not submitted one question saying what kind of information he would like to have. I have stated time and again that all the information with regard to this matter has been furnished to the fullest possible extent. I have also stated that last session when this matter was before the House the ex-Minister of Public Works gave all the information in his possession with regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have the questions all written down here, and the answers that were given. The first was : Who applied for this wharf ? and the answer was : No person, so far as I know. The next question : Who recommended it ? The answer was : I do not know. The next question was : What was the engineer's estimate for the cost of this work ? The answer was : We have not any. The next was who gave the deed of it ? We could not get that either.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must take exception to this statement. In the first place the question was asked : Who is responsible ? I said the Minister of Public Works last session took the responsibility and the government took it with him. The ex-minister last session gave this information, and he was more familiar with it than I could be :

> The improvement of the St. Lawrence is one thing and the erection of the wharf at Grande Vallée is another thing. We are attending to the improvement of the St. Lawrence better than it has ever been done in the past. It is of no use to make so much fuss—for it is fuss that is being made now and nothing else. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) is not in his seat at the moment. He is one of those who came to the government and represented to us that, if there was a wharf built there large lumbering interests would be fostered and developed.

That answers both questions. Large lumbering interests would be established at that place and for that reason parliament authorized that work.

Mr. SPROULE. Why does the hon. minister say it is not in the sessional papers ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Every one is liable to be mistaken. I spoke from the information of the official of the department. It is the usual custom to have petitions in these cases, but he was speaking then with the information fresh in his mind.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If I remember right I received a deputation or two.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no record kept of deputations as a rule.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If there was any information asked for that was held back or was not brought down I would be only too glad that the item should stand. I perhaps would have granted the request of my hon. friend even then had it not been for the arrangement which has been made with gentlemen who wish to discuss the subject. That was the only reason why I desired that we should pass the item. If there was any information in the possession of the department that I could bring down, I would be only too glad to do so. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works continued :

> We considered the case and came to the conclusion that it was a meritorious work. Now it is not fair and it is not good policy to say that improvements must always be made at places where there is a large population. If by the erection of this work you help population to settle there that will be a good thing.

And so on. This information was all given when the hon. gentleman was in office and that large amount was given committing parliament to this contract. I think after this full discussion and in view of the arrangement that the subject may be brought up again this item might be passed for the present. I am placed in a position in which I could not adopt the suggestion of hon. gentlemen opposite unless some hon. gentlemen can say that there is some information wanted which has not been brought down.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. Minister of Public Works has put his argument fairly, if he will abide by it. I have refrained, and that is very hard work for me, during the last two or three hours while this has been going on from taking part in it but it has occurred to me several times that we might arrive at an understanding of this animated discussion. The hon. minister says if there is any information that any hon. member of the committee desires it will be brought down and that for that purpose the item will be allowed to stand. I submit it is quite evident that there is in the department certain information most valuable to this committee, information that will probably help the elucidation of the matters in dispute and which should be brought down. For instance, we have the assertion definitely that there was an estimate by the engineer. It was thought at one time that there were two. There was at least one estimate made by the engineer. We have a right to have that document brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not understand what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that the engineer made an estimate of this work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That has been given.

Mr. LENNOX. That estimate has not been brought down to the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS It has; that information has been given to the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not argue with the hon. mininster as to what has been given in the past. I understand that when I stand on the floor of this House I am entitled to all the information which is given to the House. As the hon. gentleman has suggested that hon. members should ask for the information they require, I respectfully ask, without reference to whether it has been or has not been given in time past, that it shall be given now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope the hon. gentleman will not think I am interrupting him when I say that I have given that information on several occasions.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister misunderstands me. The estimate of the engineer, I understand, to be in writing. It is a document in the department. The examination of that document is important and that document should be brought down to the committee so as to enable the committee to inspect it and form an opinion upon it. Then, we have heard from the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that there was a recommendation. That recommendation may or may not be in writing. If that recommendation is in writing it should be brought down to this committee. It is a subject of information to which we are entitled.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What recommendation does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. LENNOX. The recommendation for the prosection of the work—the recommendation by some important supporters of the government. These things all have to have their inception.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have said that there is no such writing in the department.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works seems to think there is.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What ?

Mr. LENNOX. The recommendation of the hon. member for Gaspé and several others.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They called upon him, he says.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to debate that because I may not be right on that point. There is an estimate; that point is clear. That is one source of information that I as a member, do ask for. I want the recommendation done in writing if a recommendation exists. If it does not exist that point goes by. The next point I come to and about which I ask the hon. minister to furnish us information is the petition. It is acknowledged, I suppose, that there was a petition sent by a number of persons as stated by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There was a deputation or a written petition—I do not remember exactly which. I remember very well that the hon. member for Gaspé came on several occasions and with several people to ask for that work. That I remember very distinctly indeed because it was in his own division, but members of parliament do not always write. They come up often and see the ministers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works said that there was a petition signed by the people.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There may have been. I know I received a petition or two. As to the engineer's report the policy of the department is that before any work is offered for tender there is an estimate made. There is a survey of course because we cannot prepare plans without having a survey made and it was made in this case as in all other cases. In the ordinary way plans and specifications were prepared.

Mr. LENNOX. I was speaking of the petition. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works seemed to be perfectly clear when he first spoke upon this subject that there was a petition. He repeated that more than once. I noticed also that just a little while ago the hon. Minister of Public Works intimated to the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works that he might be wrong about that and I know that the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works intimated that he still thought he was right. I am not going to argue that he is right, but to put our position in the weakest possible way we may say that it is a subject of doubt. It leaves the probability that there is a petition on file in the department. While the bare possibility remains that there is a document on file in the department it is unfair to this Committee to ask us to pass this item until the hon. minister has ascertained definitely and conclusively that no such document exists in the department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Suppose there is none ?

Mr. LENNOX. Then it is for the minister to candidly say to the committee that there is none.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If there is one he will bring it down.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not understand that the minister has stated that he has actually made a search to see if there was a petition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I did not inquire if there was a petition ?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know as to that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did inquire and there are no papers further than I have explained.

Mr. LENNOX. Do I understand the minister to say that since this question has come up a search has been made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, you can understand that.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that since this has come up a search has been made in the department. Is that right ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is right.

Mr. LENNOX. Then I put the responsibility on the minister that it will turn out that he is mistaken in this matter. There is no question, however, that there is a deed, and it is said that deed was given to the government for nothing. It is very important for us to know whether that was a voluntary deed or a deed for a consideration. I submit that the facts show that whether there is an expressed consideration in that deed or not, there was actually a consideration for that deed and a valuable consideration necessarily passing from the government to this Mr. Lovell. It was all-important to this Mr. Lovell the member for Stanstead, that that work should be executed in consideration of the execution of that deed, and not otherwise. For no other cause moving him to it he gave this deed to the government. It is a consideration passing from the government to a member of this House, and therefore this deed should be submitted to this committee for consideration. We should have such documents as now remain into the custody of the department, we should have a clear explanation of the absence of this petition in case it is absent, and we should have the plans prepared by the engineer and then we will be in a position to intelligently consider this estimate. Summing it up, I ask the Minister of Public Works does he not now see—I don't think he will because he has been pretty candid and courteous to us so far—does he now not see that there are requests for information which ought to be supplied before this item goes through? What difference can it make whether it goes through now and is discussed hereafter, or is allowed to stand over until we get the information ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained to the hon. gentleman frankly, and I think the ex-minister endorsed it, that no estimate of the work had been made previous to the vote of 1901-2; that afterwards an estimate was made. The hon. gentleman has asked me several questions, and I ask him now, whether the written estimate would be of any value after the contract was made ? The contract was entered into in 1901; that shows the cost of the work, and any estimate made previous to that would be of no value whatever.

Mr. INGRAM. It would show a change in opinion as to how this work should be done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no change. The contract was entered into and that was the cost of the work.

Mr. LENNOX. It is important that we should have the engineer's estimate because by it we could form an opinion as to whether or not it would be better to continue this work ; whether it would be better to abandon this work, let the money we have expended go, and pay fair damages in equity; rather to further waste public money in this matter.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand, this contract was entered into in 1901 for $53,900, and up to date $20,000 has been expended by the government. How is it that before the $53,000 is expended and paid by the government, the minister comes forward and asks for another vote that will make a total of $61,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a revote of $5,000. The total cost is $59,500. The work is under contract. I am informed that the material is on the ground, that the work is being proceeded with and as soon as the money is voted the progress estimates will be ready. There would still be a balance to be provided of $3,500. The engineer has estimated the cost of superintendence at $5,600, and, as I have explained, it would require $3,500 more to pay for the full cost of this work.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not object to the cost of the dock; I never object to the cost of any government work which may be necessary. The point in this case is that a member of this parliament is engaged in a deal with this government. He disposed to the government of a site for a dock. He has a timber limit adjoining. The government then turns round and builds a wharf to increase the value of his property at a place where there are no settlers except a few men who are working in his one-horse mill. That to my mind is the serious part of the whole business, and I think the minister should meet the wishes of the committee and let this item stand over until the whole matter is explained. Nothing will be injured by doing so. We want the hon. member from Stanstead to be here and give us a statement of the facts of the case. Is the country going to pay for a private dock for every friend of the government who happens to have a timber limit ? Is that the line on which hon. gentlemen opposite are going to carry on the affairs of the country ? I think the ex-Minister of Public Works is responsible for this, and it is hardly consistent with his usual high standard of morality.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am responsible for worse things than that. It is a first-class thing.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister tell us what consideration was paid for that deed ? Is it in the department ? Was it submitted to the Minister of Justice ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say, first, that I would be only too glad if I had any reasonable excuse to grant the hon. gentleman's request; but, after the explanations that have been made, I cannot see that there is any ground why this contract should not be carried out. With regard to the deed, the ex-minister says it was got from Mr. Lovell, or rather from his company, or his son, without consideration. How much interest the present member may have in the company I do not know. I am not in a position to deny all the statements and rumours that have been made here; they have to go for what they are worth; but every possible information that it is in my power to give has been given.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). May I ask the hon. Minister of Justice, would this deed be of any value without a consideration ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know anything about the deed. I have no present recollection of it; but I know the facts, and as we have been talking of this thing for a couple of hours, it might be interesting to get the facts. If my information is correct, the wharf is built on the shore on a site which is vested in the Crown. That which it was important to get from the lumber company was the right of access to the wharf, and I understand the intention was to convey that right of access to the Crown. Whether that was given or not I cannot say, but it was never contended that the site upon which the wharf is situated was ever vested in any one but the Crown.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand the Minister of Justice to mean that the site belonged to the province of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not quite prepared to say that. That is a very big question, which has been discussed many times in the courts—whether riparian rights of this kind are vested in the province or in the Dominion. There is a great deal of difference between the right of property vested in the province and the right of user vested in the Dominion.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this at the mouth of a river or estuary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not at the mouth of any river, but is on the shore of the St. Lawrence. I understand that it is on a point jutting out into the St. Lawrence river. I have never seen the wharf itself.

Mr. SPROULE. In the face of all that information, which we have got now after two hours' trying, is it unreasonable that we should ask that if there was a deed it should be produced, as well as the plan and the engineer's estimate on which the item passed the council The ex-minister says there was such an estimate.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is an estimate of that kind before every work is offered for tender. There is no objection, of course, to bringing down the plans, but it has never been done on such an occasion since I have been in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had plans of public works laid on the Table over and over again.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not after the contract has been given. Had my hon. friend asked for the plan before the work was awarded his request would have been reasonable. Of course there is no objection of bringing down the plan, but the plans are usually produced when the money is first asked and not after the contracts are given out.

Mr. SPROULE. I could state cases of my own knowledge to the contrary, where the plans were brought down after the contracts were let.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it unreasonable that we should ask that to-night ? Not one of the requests we have made has been granted, and we ask that the item should stand until a search is made into the department and the information brought down which we require.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is it fair, after three hours' discussion, to ask for the plans ? I have given a description of the work. In my twenty-three years' experience, after a contract has been let, I have never heard of a request to bring down the plan. I have answered every question ; I have given all the information in the possession of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. That is another thing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are not superhuman, and cannot give information we do not possess.

Mr. COCHRANE. You did not tell us who gave you the deed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Just as soon as the question was put I sent to find out. In the meantime, my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works told the committee, and I verified his statement. The property was vested in the Crown, and nobody else could give the deed.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why did you get a deed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained that while the property belonged to the Crown, there was a doubtful question of right of way, and a deed was got from the owner of the property over which the right of way ran.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the hon. gentleman was asked for the information, he refused to give it, and we did not get it until the Minister of Justice came in. What I object to is that we should make this enormous expenditure for the benefit of a private corporation and not of the community generally. To my mind, it has all the indications of a job. The ex-Minister of Public Works objects to my calling it a job, but that certainly is to my mind the most apt description I can give to it. Just fancy spending $60,000 where there is not a post office, where nobody resides except the men working in a saw-mill, and all for the benefit of a member of parliament who was the owner of the timber limits, and who sold them to a corporation at a big profit, which he could not have done unless the government had come to his rescue and built that wharf. I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works whether he does not think that we have good reason for our belief that there is a nigger in the fence ? If this deed is not for the property on which the wharf was built, why were we not told that last session ? Now we are told that the deed is only for the right of way to the wharf, and that it was given by a member of this House, but I am satisfied that he would not have given a deed for the right of way if the government had not undertaken to spend $60,000 for his benefit in the erection of this wharf. The building of this wharf made his property more valuable and enabled him to sell it for a much larger amount than he could otherwise have got.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no other information that I know of, directly or indirectly, in the possession of the department that can be given with regard to this matter, and it seems to me very unreasonable, after we have discussed it here during three hours, to ask that the item should again stand over.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to make a proposition to the Minister of Public Works. We are old enough and civilized enough, surely, to understand what we are doing. Here we have been three hours and a half talking about the same thing over and over and nothing done. We should be more reasonable. If one party says: We will not give up, and the other party says the same, the result will be we must all stay here till I don't know when. Somebody has got to give up. Now, is it unreasonable to ask the Minister of Public Works simply to jump over this item, and then vote as many others as he pleases. We can vote all the other items for Quebec to-night, and we can take this one up some time next week.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already granted that request a dozen times—that the item should be discussed at some future time.

Mr. MORIN. Well, let it stand then. Will the hon. minister agree to that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will carry out the understanding I reached.

Mr. MORIN. Well, now, we are all as contrary as we can be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry if my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) is in that humour. I am trying to meet hon. gentlemen opposite and I think they should try to meet me in the same spirit.

Mr. INGRAM. In the list left by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) are several items marked to be reserved, and this is the very first one. It seems manifest that that hon. gentleman understood that the items would not go through. But if the hon. Minister of Public Works is determined that it shall go through I am afraid that we shall see the early hours of the morning before it does.

Some hon. MEMBER. All right.

Mr. TALBOT. Go on with your threats.

Mr. MORIN. What would be the use of that to anybody?

Mr. INGRAM. Last year, the Minister of Public Works of that time (Hon. Mr. Tarte) vouchsafed this information in the House, speaking of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux):

> He is one of those who came to the government and represented to us that, if there was a wharf built there, large lumbering interests would be fostered and developed. We considered the case and came to the conclusion that it was a meritorious work.

The hon. Minister of Public Works says that he has not this information in his department. I would ask any business man in this House if it is reasonable to suppose that the government entered upon this work without first getting any information about it. Last year we asked for the facts, and we could not get them, nor are we getting them now. We are told in a general way that this expenditure will have the effect of encouraging the lumber industry. Is it anything but reasonable that we should ask that this item be allowed to stand until the hon. member for Stanstead is in his place, he having been associated with the lumber interest to be developed? He could give us information which would enable us to judge whether the government is justified in making this expenditure to encourage the lumber industry at that point. If, when the information is given us we conclude that this is not a justifiable expenditure of public money, we can vote against the item. But why, in the name of decency, should we be pressed to swallow this vote without having the means of judging whether it is a good one or not? If that is the stand that the hon. Minister of Public Works takes with regard to such items, I, for one, lose my respect for him, though I have hitherto entertained the highest regard for the hon gentleman's fairness. I have discussed this question seriously, and, I think, in a proper way. I have said nothing that I feel like taking back, nothing that an opposition member is not quite entitled to say in view of the circumstances surrounding the item. I have not charged any jobbery or bribery, but I have contended, and I think justifiably, that this expenditure was entered upon in an unbusiness like way, seeing that due information was not furnished when it was first proposed. I have protested a hundred times in this House against this way of deciding upon the expenditures of public money. If hon. gentlemen wish public works carried on in their constituencies, the least they can do is to furnish the minister with information which he can lay before the committee and make every vote a business proposition, giving the reasons why, in his opinion, the money should be voted. We point out the serious nature of this expenditure, and it is a serious matter. No man would pretend to say that, at a place where there are only 314 souls, and where there is not even a post office, we are justified in spending $60,000 without any sufficient reason given. This is business, pure and simple; and the opposition's part of that business is to investigate; and, if any rumour justifies us in being suspicious of the matter, it is our duty to ask for an explanation why it is placed in the estimates. Because we ask for that information, is that any reason we should be compelled to stay until daylight? I think we are perfectly justified in asking that this item be allowed to stand until the hon. member for Stanstead is here to give us the facts we desire to know.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The ex-Minister of Public Works, I think, is about the only gentleman on that side of the House who knows anything about the locality of this public work. He has passed there on his pleasure yacht on the down trip. Would he tell us what is the nature of the shore there? It struck me when I saw it, as rather bold and rocky——

Mr. BENNETT. It is a bluff.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The ex-minister spoke of good soil. My information is that it is a place absolutely unsuited for farming; that you could not get grain in with a peg awl, and if you did, it would not grow. What settlement is there in rear of this place, or what settlement can be expected?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The appearance of the place is very picturesque. The leaves, the green trees are charming. The province of Quebec has some rocks, and it has some beautiful plains also. In that locality there are rocks, trees, rivers and scenery which, no doubt, would captivate the poetic mind of my hon. friend. If I were allowed to offer any advice to-night, as the hour is pretty far advanced, I would say that we had better go to bed and discuss this item later on, after we get further information, if there is any. I do not say that there is no more information to be obtained. The site has been given free. My hon. friend complains that it was given free.

Mr. BENNETT. Was there any consideration in the deed?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, the consideration was the public service.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Before we go home, I would like to recall the attention of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to an observation he made a few moments ago. I have no knowledge of this particular matter, but I have knowledge of another matter to which the hon. gentleman alluded, and to which I want to call his attention, so that, if he was serious, he may have an opportunity of explaining himself. He said he proposed to stop the jobbery in connection with public works along the shores of the county represented by the Minister of Finance. I want to know if my hon. friend has any reason to suppose that there is any jobbery in connection with public works along the shores of my county, and if so, I should be exceedingly pleased to have him put his statement in a somewhat more definite form. If he was serious I would be glad to have him enlarge upon it; if he was not serious I will give him an opportunity to withdraw.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I did not use the word 'jobbery' in relation to the Minister in connection with public works along the shores of his county; but I have no hesitation in telling the Minister of Finance here that I consider it is a very extraordinary thing indeed that the Finance Minister of this country should come down and ask for the expenditures that he does annually along the little coves and bays of the shores of his county, where there is no revenue derived from them whatever. I tell the Minister of Finance further that if there is no jobbery in connection with it—I am not here to prove it or to make a charge—but if there is no jobbery in connection with it, it is about the only part of the Dominion of Canada where I have ever seen any public work carried out since he has been on the treasury benches where there has not been more or less of jobbery. In connection with the Public Works Department and other departments of this country, rumour is very current of transactions such as the one I asked the minister about to-night specifically, concerning hemlock and spruce. When the specifications called for spruce, hemlock is put in, in works not a thousand miles from the city of Montreal and from Sorel. I have nothing to retract of what I said.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question is whether or not the hon. gentleman said there was jobbery in the public works of the county I represent. That is the question. If the 'Hansard' does not say that the hon. member used the word 'jobbery,' then I am wrong and will apologise to him. If the 'Hansard' does say that the hon. gentleman said there was jobbery, then I ask him to come forward with some evidence, or to acknowledge that he has made a mistake.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would ask the hon. member for Victoria to make the same explanation of his charges of jobbery in the neighbourhood of Montreal. He has insinuated that when I was in office I had made changes that were tantamount to jobbery. Well, I invite an investigation on those points. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I did not state that the minister was a party to it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If there was anything wrong, I am responsible for it. If there was jobbery, I am certainly guilty of it, and am responsible. But there was no jobbery, and my hon. friend is just as far wrong as his neighbour was who used the word 'jobbery.' When a member of parliament gets up and charges jobbery, he must be prepared to prove it, otherwise he has no right to use the word. It is no use to take military airs and speak of jobbery. If my hon. friend wants to have an investigation before the Public Accounts Committee of the changes that have been made at Montreal, I will be ready to meet him. He may call all the officials that are available, and let us have an investigation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think it has been clearly established before the country to-night that a member of parliament supporting the Finance Minister in this House, has given a deed of a property to the government after the government had expended $60,000 on a dock in order that he might enhance the value of some other of his property. I think no further proof is required that there has been jobbery in connection with this transaction. I have nothing to retract, and the people of this country, I am satisfied, will open their eyes to the situation. It is all very well for these gentlemen to get up with their bluffs, they are talking to the wrong individual. We have it admitted that a member of parliament has given a deed. What consideration did he give for the deed ? It was given, I presume, in the form of a wharf. Another hon. member, a Liberal member that I see over yonder, stated that he had sold the property for over $100,000 which cost very little.

Mr. SCHELL. Did I state any sum at all ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The sum of $100,000 was mentioned.

Mr. SCHELL. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The sum of upwards of $100,000 was mentioned to-night by some hon. member. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what the sum was ?

Mr. SCHELL. I do not know what the sum was.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the stand taken by the Minister of Public Works, I am obliged to move that this item be struck out. I regret that I have to take this step, but I am compelled to do so in view of the fact that all the information is absolutely refused, and we have no other alternative. If the hon. gentleman says we are not entitled to know what amount of business is done at this point, or what amount of business was estimated to be done, if he declines to furnish us with that information or to let the item stand until we can get that information, then there is no other alternative but to move that the item be struck out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I acknowledge that the committee are entitled to all the information available. I am responsible as the minister of the department, and on my responsibility I have stated over and over again that I have given all the information available. The hon. member will acknowledge on reflection that he has made an unreasonable request, and one outside of my power to grant. By passing this vote we do not deprive him of another opportunity of getting any information that may be had in that direction. If I had understood that there was a desire that the item should stand we would not have objected. But, after the understanding I had with that hon. member and the liberal proposition I made, I thought it was dealing very unfairly with the committee, not to say anything of myself, to press this. I have no objection at all to the vote being taken.

Mr. INGRAM. We have the estimates marked by one of the members of the opposition who takes a special interest in matters relating to the province of Quebec. He requests certain items to be allowed to stand. Amongst these is the Grande Vallée item which he requested to stand. Last year when this item was up the hon. gentleman who was interested in getting this item in the estimates was absent. That hon. gentleman was present yesterday and he knew these estimates were to be taken up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nobody expected these estimates would be up to-night. I did not expect it at all this afternoon.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the arrangement entered into at three o'clock that after the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) addressed the House, the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was to move the adjournment of the debate, an arrangement which I know was entered into, what then had the House to do for the balance of the evening if it could not take up the Public Works estimates ? The hon. gentleman knew that and yet he absents himself from this House. The hon. minister says that he has no power to force the hon. gentleman to make a speech or to give an explanation. If that is the character of that hon. gentleman, the sooner the House knows it the better, and if the hon. gentleman refuses to get up and state the information which he has in his possession, or repudiate the rumours which have been circulated against him, the House will not have a very high regard for his standing. Let the item stand over until he is in his place and if he then refuses to give the information, we will not hold the hon. minister responsible for the information we are asking for. I do not see any justification for the hon. minister's course at all, and I believe that he is simply trying to bluff this item through the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think the hon. member has any ground for that statement.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot see any other reason. I am obliged to be frank with the hon. minister. If the hon. gentleman could say that we were asking anything unreasonable in respect to this item, I might be willing to change my mind on that point. The hon. gentleman says that he has no information in the department. I am not finding fault with the hon. gentleman as to that, but I am finding fault with his attempt to bulldose the item through the committee and not give us an opportunity of hearing the explanation of the hon. gentleman who got this vote put into the estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am leaving an opportunity.

Mr. INGRAM. You are not leaving an opportunity.

Mr. TALBOT. We on this side are willing to stay.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not require any suggestions from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot). I have had as much parliamentary experience as he has.

Mr. TALBOT. With a good deal more talk.

Mr. INGRAM. And with better effect, I think, than the talk of the hon. gentleman. I wish to say in respect to this item that there is no opportunity of discussing the matter again except on concurrence, and every one knows that during concurrence is no time to debate an item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite agree that if there is any desire to vote, now is the time.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman knows that on the last day when concurrence is run through there is no opportunity to debate an item. Then, why not let the item stand over ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Why not vote now ?

Mr. INGRAM. I will take advantage at a later period of doing something in this matter that will take up more time of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister made a statement that I do not think he was justified in making. He said that if objection had been taken to this item before the discussion took place, he would not have pressed it. The very moment it was read from the Chair objection was taken and the request was made that in the absence of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) it should be allowed to stand. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier gave us a copy of the estimates with a number of the items marked for the specific purpose of allowing these items to stand during his absence. The hon. minister repeats that he has given all the information until the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works comes in and gives us information that we had not received before and which he believes is in the department. The hon. minister tells us that this information is not in the department. We remember that last year when this House remained in session for four hours discussing an item the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) declared again and again that there was no information in regard to it, and yet, next day, he brought down all the papers and laid them on the Table. Are we not justified in believing from the information we have about the deed, about the estimates and about the plans and specifications that there are papers in the department which we should see. We are denied the right to see these papers. My hon. friend makes the request that the item should be allowed to stand. The hon. minister says that he was prepared to grant that long ago. But, that is not what he is prepared to grant. He is prepared to force the item through and then he says: I will reserve one item upon which you can have the discussion. That is not what we want. There are many of these items to which we do not object, but to this one item we do object and we want more information before we allow it to pass. Our position is not unreasonable. We have dealt very reasonably with the hon. Minister of Public Works, and I regret to see the obstinacy that he displays now because he has usually been very fair and agreeable. We have been disposed to allow many items to pass that otherwise we would not have allowed to pass so easily but for the fact that we thought he was ready to give us all the information he could. I do not think this should be forced through. I think it is very improper and very unfair and it is not paving the way towards that good feeling that has existed heretofore between the opposition and members of the government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained so often that I need scarcely repeat that if I had any further information on the matter I would be glad to bring it down and that if hon. gentlemen allow this item to pass we will reserve the right to discuss it at any future time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is no doubt in the world that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) deliberately marked certain items that he wished to be held over. If he had only wished the privilege that the hon. Minister of Public Works refers to of reserving one item he would have indicated that but the hon. gentleman deliberately marked a number of items and the distinct understanding was that these items were to be held over, not that they were to be passed and the discussion had upon one item, but that the whole of those items were to be held over and we charge the hon. Minister of Public Works with breaking faith here to-night. This is the first time we have had to do it. He has always kept good faith with this House, but for some unaccountable reason, whether it is the absence of the hon. member who is so seriously involved in this matter I do not know—but undoubtedly for some unaccountable reason he insists on pushing through this item and violating the agreement entered into with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Mr. HACKETT. I suggested one or two hours ago that this item should stand. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier was very desirous that he should be present on the occasion of the discussion of this matter, and I think it is a highhanded act on the part of the government that they should carry this item through without having the hon. gentleman here. We are told that the government business must be carried on. We have been here a month without doing any business of importance. We are now settling down to business and at a very important time when we think that matters affecting the people should be discussed we are simply bluffed and sat upon and told that we are of no importance, and that we, representing the opposition, have no rights in this House. Some remarks have been made about jobbery. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works repudiated the idea that there was any jobbery. The greatest jobbery that was ever perpetrated in Canada was perpetrated in Prince Edward Island in 1900, when the government, without having any appropriation, or having a dollar of money voted by this parliament, expended money at Skinner's Pond for the purpose of gaining votes for their candidate against your humble servant. I charge him now, and I charge the government of Canada with that. There was not one dollar voted for this expenditure, and yet one month before the election they took money that should go for another purpose, in order to try and corrupt the electors of West Prince. The ex-minister cannot deny it. I have the proof. They talk about cancelling contracts, but they cancelled the contract for a most useful public work at Summerside and there is not one dollar in the estimates to-day to show that they intend to continue that work. A very unkind remark was made imputing ignorance to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes). The hon. gentleman was told that he was quite ignorant about the geography of this locality, whereas the fact is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) was right and the man who corrected him was wrong.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have measured the distance spoken of to Restigouche, and it is a little over fifty miles across country. I have been over the whole region, and I knew what I was talking about.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) was quite right, and the hon. member who contradicted him was wrong. Now, with regard to this work. The government proposes to spend $60,000 on a pier in land where there is no water at all, and while they expend this large amount of money on building a pier where there is no water we have plenty of water around the shores of Prince Edward Island where there is need of a number of piers, and the whole province only gets a vote of $34,000. This place has a population of 314 people and Prince Edward Island has a population of 105,000, and it is contrary to justice and equity that you should spend $61,000 at this little place and only $34,000 for all Prince Edward Island. We are prepared to keep up this discussion until the sun rises to-morrow morning and the best thing the minister could do is to hold over this item until the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is present.

Item voted: Yeas, 36; nays, 19.

Mr. SPROULE. It is time that we should adjourn now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are a few items here which perhaps we might pass to-night, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would consent.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister will not get his items through by pursuing these tactics. I have seen staying exhibitions here which were good for one day, and the next day, too.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope that my hon. friend will not get angry. I suggested that some unimportant items should be taken up, but I said that if the gentleman who leads the opposition did not wish to do so, then I would not proceed.

Mr. SPROULE. I expressed the desire, as plain as the English language could express it, that the committee should now rise.

Mr. INGRAM. I should like to add that, judging from the treatment we have received to-night, the Minister of Public Works cannot expect to get many more items through. I wish to say further that the hon. minister and his department have been treated with the greatest courtesy by the members of this House, and I am sorry that he has treated us in the manner he has done to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. INGRAM. We have always got along very nicely, and I think I am speaking within my rights. I say we have treated the hon. gentleman with courtesy; but if that is to be the spirit with which we are to discuss these matters, then I wish it to be understood that on every item on which I have doubts, I will speak as fully and freely as I choose; and if the hon. gentleman cannot get his items passed as easily as he would like, he has only himself to blame.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In moving that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, I have only to say that the hon. gentleman has a perfect right to exercise all his privileges as a member of this House.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. Saturday.

REPORT PRESENTED.

List of Shareholders of the Chartered Banks to the 31st of December, 1902.—Hon. Mr. Fielding.

THE DEATH OF SIR OLIVER MOWAT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before we proceed further with the business of the House, it is my painful duty to inform it officially of the death of the lieutenant governor of the province of Ontario. Although Sir Oliver Mowat never was a member of this House, he was for some time a respected member of another branch of the legislature, and for more than forty years he occupied in the national life of this country a position of such prominence that the House would be remiss to a proper sense of its own dignity if it failed in some way to record its appreciation of the great loss the country has sustained. This loss will be all the more keenly felt because Sir Oliver Mowat was one of the last of the few survivors of that generation of exceptionally strong men who, after the union of Upper and Lower Canada in 1840, contributed to revolutionize, peaceably but thoroughly, the relation which had previously existed between the colonies and the parent state, and to shape our destinies and institutions to the form and condition which we now enjoy. In that remarkable galaxy of men which included Brown, Macdonald, Cartier, Dorion, Mackenzie, Holton, Galt and McGee, Sir Oliver Mowat was one of the most remarkable, and to him belongs the undisputed distinction of having given more continuous years to the service of the state than any other man in our history. If we examine his career, we realize what gigantic strides have been made in the comparatively short period of a single life, from those old days when the provinces of British North America were a few small and scattered Crown colonies to the present status of Canada, a nation. His life embraces the whole space that has elapsed from those old days when the rights, the opinions, the sentiments and the feelings of the people were haughtily scorned and trampled upon by an audacious oligarchy, to those happier days of our own time, when questions arising from the conflict of opinions and sentiments inseparable from human affairs, are settled by the regular and normal action of constitutional government. He was a mere youth when the abuses of the former regime culminated in the rebellion of 1837, and one of his last official acts was to help to obtain without violence, legitimate, honourable and fair concessions to the just claims of the minority in the province of Manitoba. During the whole of that space of time, Sir Oliver Mowat took an active and ever-growing part in the contests, agitations and struggles which eventually brought about confederation. His was a remarkably successful career. It can be said of him as was said of the Duke of Wellington, that he scarcely ever met a reverse and never lost a battle. Whatever he understood, to whatever task he applied himself, he easily came to the front rank. After having completed his classical studies, he chose the bar as his profession and rapidly rose to the greatest eminence as a lawyer. He entered politics in a time of violent perturbation, and at once took a prominent part as a debater in an assembly composed of men capable of adorning any assembly in the world, and of such ability as to be equal to any emergency. Then he was appointed to the bench, where he was distinguished by all the qualities of an able and learned judge. After a time he re-entered politics, and became the premier of his native province, a position which he maintained for twenty-four years in the face of stirring opposition, and only abandoned at my invitation to enter the Dominion government in order to give us the benefit of his advice, experience and ability in the settlement of very important and irritating questions. During these twenty-four years that he was premier of the province of Ontario, every man must agree that he gave to that province a government which can be cited as a model for all governments, a government which was honest, progressive, courageous and tolerant. If there was one thing in particular which marked his career at this time of life, I think it could be found in the policy which he always maintained of giving a broad, generous and tolerant treatment to the minorities of that province. In this he performed a great service not only to the province of Ontario, but to the whole people of the Dominion of Canada. Still, if I were called on to say what in my estimation is the one characteristic which will chiefly mark the career of Sir Oliver Mowat when it comes to be reviewed by the historian of the future, it seems to me that the one special feature of his character and career, which will stand out in bolder relief than any other, is that of all the men who contributed to shape our institutions and bring them to the degree of excellence they have now reached, he perhaps performed the largest share. I do not believe that this statement can be successfully disputed, for there is abundant authority to justify it. True it is that he did not take as active a part in the preparatory work which eventually culminated in confederation as some of the other men with whom he was associated, for after the principle had been affirmed by the Quebec conference in 1867 he withdrew from the political arena to become a judge, and for some years was removed from political contests. George Brown has the credit of having, by his powerful agitation, forced the issue of confederation; Sir John Macdonald has the merit of having brought confederation into active operation; but to Sir Oliver Mowat belongs the credit of having given it its ultimate character as a federal compact. Shortly after the confederation had been launched, and while its fundamental principle was still on trial, while its orientation was still uncertain, while it was doubtful if the union of the provinces would be in reality as it was in name, a federative union or a legislative union though federative in name, he gave up the quiet and dignity and repose of a judicial life to enter again the political arena and become the leading champion of the federative principle. At that time Sir John Macdonald was the most commanding personality of our national life; perhaps it may be said that he was then in the zenith of his fame and power; and for twenty years his most successful opponent was Sir Oliver Mowat. For twenty years Sir John Macdonald, as the head of the government of Canada, and Sir Oliver Mowat as the head of the government of the province of Ontario, were engaged in a contest which, whether it was on one point or another, always centred around the federative principle of the constitution, and terminated in its actual triumph. It is a well known fact that Sir John Macdonald was not at heart a federationist; he was a legislative unionist. It is a matter of history that if Sir John Macdonald had had his own way at the conference of 1864 at Quebec, the union of the provinces, instead of being federative would have been legislative. It is a matter of history that after he had become the leader of the new government after confederation, his constant efforts were directed towards centralization. It is equally a matter of history that on every occasion it was a part of his policy to claim for the federal administration powers which under the compact of union, seemed fairly to belong to the provinces. On the other hand, Sir Oliver Mowat was a very pronounced federalist, and Sir John Macdonald found, on every occasion, the premier of Ontario before him, determined and resolved to uphold and maintain the federalist principle of the constitution. It is a matter of history that in all those contests, Sir Oliver Mowat invariably came out successful. The interpretation he gave to our constitution was invariably maintained by the courts, and he is certainly entitled to be pronounced the most correct interpreter of our constitution that Canada has yet produced. Of course, on these questions men differ and opinions are not identical. There are men who believe undoubtedly that the views held by the late Sir John Macdonald were the most correct views. There are others who believe that the views held by Sir Oliver Mowat more accurately interpret our constitution. But whatever may be the opinions we entertain, whether we agree with Sir John Macdonald or Sir Oliver Mowat, we must admit that as between the two great men who did so much for Canada, at all events the merit of constitutional ability in the interpretation of the constitution seems to belong rather to the gentleman whose loss we so deeply deplore. There was, however, another point upon which Sir Oliver Mowat and Sir John Macdonald were in perfect agreement. Much as they differed on the question of the interpretation of the constitution and other questions, they were both extremely devoted in their attachment to the land of their ancestors. On every occasion it was their motto to be true to British connection. Sir Oliver Mowat was ever true to the province of which he was the premier, true to the Dominion of which he was one of the architects, and true to the British empire of which we form a part. It is no doubt the wish of every one of us to do what we can to show our respect to his memory. Unfortunately we can do very little in this way. I am informed that his funeral will take place on Wednesday, and no doubt every hon. member of this House would wish to be present if possible. To meet this desire, I move :

That when this House adjourns to-morrow it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, in consequence of the death of the Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, and out of respect to his memory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I consider, Mr. Speaker, the motion which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has proposed to be an eminently proper one, under the circumstances, and I give it my most heartfelt support. In the death of the Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat, a great figure has passed off the stage, a man who linked the present generation with the generation of great men of the past, to whom my right hon. friend has referred. Sir Oliver Mowat truly had a great public career. Great not only in the sense of the unusual success which attended his efforts as a public man, but in this sense also that he has left behind him an honourable name, absolutely unstained. He leaves behind him a name which commands the respect, the esteem and the affection of all his fellow countrymen, regardless of political opinions.

I therefore second the motion which the right hon. gentleman has proposed, and do not think it necessary to speak at greater length, as he has said all, and more than all, that I could say on this occasion.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). If I might be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to add my humble testimony to the eloquent tributes which have just been pronounced upon the passing of Ontario's Grand Old Man, I would say that in Sir Oliver Mowat's death Toronto has lost its foremost citizen, Ontario has lost its most highly honoured and cherished son, and the Dominion a patriot whose fidelity to the interests of Canada and of the empire has never faltered. As one of the representatives in this House of the city of which, for more than threescore years, Sir Oliver Mowat had been a resident, I am happy to know and to feel that on this occasion I speak for all parties and creeds and classes in Toronto, when I say that from the moment Sir Oliver Mowat first entered the arena of public life, as a member of the city council, until at the close of a long and useful and honourable career, full of years and of honours, he was called to enter into his eternal rest, he enjoyed the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. The record of Sir Oliver Mowat's life work will be an incentive and an inspiration to the rising generation, and to future generations of Canadians as well, to strive to emulate his example and to devote themselves to the promotion of their country's interests and welfare. It only remains for me to join most sincerely in the eulogies which have been passed upon the deceased statesman; and on my own behalf as well as for my colleagues, to respectfully tender an expression of our deep sympathy to the bereaved family, whose grief is shared by Canadians from end to end of the Dominion.

Motion agreed to.

LUMBER COMBINE.

Mr. W. SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to be permitted by the House to remind the government that several days ago I laid before the Minister of Justice certain representations concerning an alleged combine between the dealers and the manufacturers of lumber, in consequence of which the price of lumber in the country west of Lake Superior has undergone a very marked increase. The general impression is that the increase is at least partly due to some improper agreement or combine between the dealers and the manufacturers and I would ask the government whether attention has been given to the statements which I myself and certain other members from the west have laid before it?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This matter has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, also by the hon. member for Selkirk, and also by another gentleman connected with public affairs, who waited on me on Saturday. There are two sections of our laws under which the matter might be considered. One is the section in the Criminal Code dealing with unlawful combines. The other is that section of the Tariff Act which makes provision for an investigation in the case of any combine, whereby the price of any article is unduly enhanced, and for a reduction or abolition of the duty in case the charges be proved. I was called on by Mr. Greenway on Saturday, who brought the matter to my notice, and referred particularly to the combine clause. I pointed out that before we could take any action, a fair case should be made out by some responsible party. While the matter was brought to the attention of the House, some one should take the responsibility of making a formal statement of the case. I understood Mr. Greenway to say that he would assume the responsibility, and that he would forward us a letter setting forth the facts. Until we receive that letter the matter is not before us in a shape which will admit of any action. Mr. Greenway said that he would forward such a statement in a few days.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS. (Saskatchewan). I would like to say a word with reference to the matter brought up by the member of West Assiniboia. There is no doubt at all that a combination exists.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the hon. member closed his speech with a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion before the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I will move the adjournment of the House. I was going to say that there is no doubt at all that a combine exists in the west at the present time with reference to lumber. To my mind I do not think that anything that can be done to the tariff will give the people relief, for the simple reason that most of the lumber that is used by the people of the North-west at the present time is of a rough quality and there is no duty on undressed lumber. What the government should do in the future, in granting licenses to parties to cut lumber in the North-west Territories, is to insert a clause in the license which would provide that if it is proven that a combine exists, the party holding that license, and who is known to have entered the combine, shall have his license cancelled. I think if a clause of that kind were inserted in licenses granted by the government to parties who cut lumber in the Territories on Dominion lands, in case any of those parties who cut lumber entered a combine, it would have the effect of cancelling their licenses and they would lose what interest they had in the limits. However, if anything can be done in the way of bringing the matter to the attention of the government and if taking the duty off dressed lumber will remedy the grievance, I am satisfied. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I did not expect this question would be brought up at the present time, but as it is now before us, I think it desirable that certain documents and information which I have in my hands should be placed in the possession of the House. On several past occasions when we have made allegations that a certain condition of affairs existed, we have been met with a demand for proof. For my part I do not think it is any portion of the business of a member of parliament to act the part of a private detective ; it is our business to state that certain conditions exist, and it is the business of those who are charged with the duty of carrying on the affairs of the country to accept that statement or disprove it. However, on this occasion, if there is any question as to the existence of a hard and fast lumber combine, a lumber combine which not only dictates the price at which lumber shall be sold to retail dealers, but dictates who shall sell that lumber and who shall not, and whose jurisdiction extends throughout the North-west Territories—if there is any question, I say, of the existence of that combine, I will take the liberty of reading these papers for the information of the House and of the country. This correspondence passed between a reputable building contractor in Alberta, and the managers of certain sawmill businesses in British Columbia. The paper I am going to read are originals. The letters from the saw-mill men bear their own printed headings, and they are signed by their own signatures ; so there can be no question as to the facts of the case. The correspondence opens in September, 1902. This gentleman writes me to say that he was in business as a building contractor, and had been in the habit of purchasing such lumber as he required to carry on his business, but at a certain stage of the game, when the combine was sufficiently entrenched, he applied to purchase lumber and was unable to do so. I will read the letters in the order of dates :

The Hastings Shingle Manufacturing Co., Limited.

Head Office,
Vancouver, B.C., September 8, 1902.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 23rd ult., addressed to Mr. Austin McNair, was handed to us for reply, as he is out of the shingle business and is now in our employ.

We regret we are unable to make you quotations on shingles as we find that you are not a member of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association, and as there is a member of the association in your town, we regret we are unable to make you quotations.

Thanking you for the inquiry, we are,

Yours very truly,
THE HASTINGS SHINGLE MANUFACTURING CO., Limited,
J. D. McNair.

The British Columbia Mills, Lumber and Trading Company.

Vancouver, B.C., September 24, 1902.

Dear Sir,—We have your favour of the 20th, and note contents. In reply we beg to say we would have much pleasure in continuing to ship you lumber to Cochrane as we did in the past to Banff, but you are now in a district under the control of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association, and we are unable to supply lumber to any who are not enrolled as members of that body. If you can secure admission we will be pleased to quote you. The proper mode of procedure to secure this end would be to write to the secretary, Mr. Isaac Cockburn, of Winnipeg.

Yours very truly,
BRITISH COLUMBIA MILLS, TIMBER AND TRADING CO.,
Hastings Saw-mill branch.
per H. S. Galbraith.

Harrison River Mills, Timber and Trading Company, Limited.

Harrison River, B.C., September 24, 1902.

Dear Sir,—We thank you for your inquiry re lumber, which is just to hand. Please let us know if you are a member of the 'Western Retail Lumbermen's Association.' We cannot sell you down in that country unless you are. If you are not, you might apply to I. Cockburn, Winnipeg, secretary of the association and become a member, then we should be pleased to supply you. Let us hear from you again.

Yours very truly,
THE HARRISON RIVER MILLS, TIMBER AND TRADING COMPANY, Limited.
J. F. Boyd, Secretary.

The Western Retail Lumbermen's Association.

September 30, 1902.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 26th instant, I would like you to inform me of the business that is to be done at Cochrane. How many cars are there sold there in a year ? What stock of lumber is carried by the dealers already there.

Yours very truly,
ISAAC COCKBURN,
Secretary Treasurer.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that the secretary-treasurer of this association, resident in Winnipeg, was assuming to dictate who shall sell lumber at Cochrane, in the district of Alberta. On October 7th, there is another letter from Mr. Cockburn :

From what you state there is no business for two lumber yards. Perhaps Messrs Murphy Bros., would sell out to you. I will write to them the necessity of keeping sufficient lumber in stock for the requirements of the district.

(Sgd.) ISAAC COCKBURN.

That is to say, this man was unable to get lumber at Cochrane from those who were in the business there. He desired to buy it from those who had it, and he was not allowed permission to buy it. He applied to Cockburn in Winnipeg for permission, and was refused it.

On October 14th there is a letter from the Harrison River Mills Timber and Trading Co., Limited, who write as follows :

We are just in receipt of your favour of 10th instant, and regret to hear that you have been unable to obtain membership in the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association. We are sorry that we cannot sell to you even at Morley unless you are a member of the above association. If there is not a member at Morley, why not make application for that point. We will be glad to sell you the lumber if you can just arrange your membership in the association. Awaiting to hear from you we remain,

Yours truly,
HARRISON RIVER MILLS
TIMBER AND TRADING CO.
J. F. Boyd. Secretary.

The British Columbia Mills and Trading Co.

Vancouver, B.C., October 15, 1902.

Dear Sir,—We have your favour of 10th instant and note the contents. It certainly seems to be too bad that the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association should not use more judgment in admitting members if the situation at Cochrane is as bad as outlined by you, and we see no reason to doubt it. We do not think there will be any objection to our selling you at Morley, and we would advise you to write at once to the secretary inclosing your application and fee for membership at that point. We are writing by this mail to our agent at Winnipeg to urge your claims for recognition and authorizing him to state to the secretary that we have always found you reliable and straightforward and so eligible for recognition. We are having a price list for delivery at Morley mailed to you and would be glad to receive orders.

Yours very truly,
THE BRITISH COLUMBIA MILLS,
LUMBER AND TRADING CO.
C. W. Beecher,
Assistant General Manager.

On October 21st, there is a letter from Murphy Bros., Cochrane, Alberta :

Gentlemen,—Yours to hand re lumber, if you let us know the quality you want of each. If we haven't got it we will get it for you. The price will be right. We let you have it as cheap as possible.

On October 23rd, there is a letter from the British Columbia Mills Timber and Trading Company, head office at Vancouver, B.C. :

We have your favour of the 18th, and thank you for contents. We regret very much that we cannot ship you lumber to Morley to be rebilled to Cochrane and at the same time act in accordance with either the letter or the spirit of our agreement with the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association. If you contemplate starting a yard at Morley we will do all in our power to have you enrolled as a member, and will also see what can be done in the matter of you being a resident member at Cochrane. In the meantime with much good wishes for your future prosperity we beg to remain,

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA MILLS,
TIMBER AND TRADING CO.
per H. A. Galbraith.

On October 29th, there is a letter from the British Columbia Mills Timber and Trading Company :

Since our last favour to you we have been advised by our Winnipeg agent, who has been endeavouring to get you put on the list for Cochrane, that he thinks there is no reason why you would not be put on the list for Morley, but that you could not get on for Cochrane. Such being the case we trust you will forward your application and fee for membership at Morley to Mr. Cockburn, and as our agent, Mr. Ovas, has placed the matter before him, we have no doubt you will be admitted for that point.

Trusting that you will then furnish us with your requirements, which it has always been our pleasure in the past and will be in the future to execute to the best of our ability, we remain,

Yours very truly,
THE BRITISH COLUMBIA MILLS,
TIMBER AND TRADING CO.
C. W. Beecher,
General Manager.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the evidence proves conclusively that there is a combine in restraint of trade and for the purpose of increasing prices, bringing it within the limits of the Tariff Act. And, as a representative of the country affected, I ask for action under that Tariff Act; and I ask for action immediately. The case is that the price of finished lumber—dressed lumber, for flooring, ceiling and siding—has been increased by $9 per thousand feet in the part of the country I represent within the past fourteen months. There may have been some reason for a moderate increase in price, but there is no change in conditions in British Columbia within the last fourteen months that would warrant an increase to the amount of $9 per thousand on this class of lumber. I think it is desirable to call the attention of the House to the facts at this time, when there are thousands and tens of thousands of people entering the territories and settling on the plains. As these people cannot secure the slightest shelter for themselves their families or their stock without buying the necessary lumber, an increase of the cost of lumber to the amount of $9 a thousand feet is such a serious matter as to constitute one of the most effective checks to the tide of immigration that could be given. This is a question in dealing with which we cannot afford to lose time. The people are there. They need the lumber. They need it now. And this precious Western Retail Lumbermen's Association is holding them up to the extent I have mentioned for this class of lumber. I may point out, for the benefit of the House, that while these gentlemen have a very strong grasp of their business affairs, they are not altogether destitute of a sense of humour. They have published, not for general circulation, but for private perusal, a list of members of their association. Now, this lumbermen's association is, in fact, an organization of the mill men, who hold the retail dealers under their thumb, as you have seen by this correspondence. But in this peculiar list that they have published, the mill men figure as 'honorary members' and the retail men as 'active members.' So, it would appear as though the dealer, who is at the mercy of the mill man is the active force in carrying out this iniquitous combine. The retailer, of course, comes in direct contact with the unfortunate consumer, but he is the victim of circumstances as the consumer is; and it is the mill man, the honourary member, who is really in command, as this correspondence shows.

I have placed this evidence before the House and before the country. It does not admit of contradiction, and it should not be necessary to place it before the House, because the facts are so patent that there is no gainsaying them in any way, shape or manner. An organization which not only increases the price of such a necessity as lumber at such a critical time as the present, but actually dictates to the people of this country whether they shall do business or shall not do business, is something worthy the immediate attention of this House, and the strongest attention that this House can give it. For my part, I take the liberty of saying that, as a preliminary canter in dealing with the question, the best thing to do would be to take the duty absolutely off dressed lumber, as it was taken off rough lumber some years ago for the same reason.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). I would like to ask my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) a question. If there is a combine, as he says, and perhaps there is, would the removal of the duty, as he suggests, bring about the removal of the combine?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not a prophet or a mind reader. But I believe the removal of the duty would have a most salutary effect. And as the condition of affairs is exactly that contemplated by the clause in the Tariff Act when it was placed before the House and accepted by the House, I ask, as a preliminary canter—as I have said—that that Act be given effect at once. Afterwards, if this does not result in breaking up the combine, other measures may be taken.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) and dealing with the question very briefly, I may say that while in Winnipeg a few days ago, I met several of the independent dealers in lumber who reside in that city, where the headquarters of the combine exist. The members of the combine had promised that, if the matter were investigated before the city council, they would appear and state their case. Subsequently I accompanied the independent dealers to the meeting, but the members of the combine refused to put in a defence to the charge that there was a combine unless their evidence was taken in private—they would not allow reporters or independent dealers to be present, but their evidence had to be kept absolutely secret. Of course, the independent dealers and the city council refused to hear their defence. There is no doubt whatever that there is a combine, a combine of the worst kind, injuriously affecting the west and hampering its development. I produced before the Minister of Justice some twenty-one pages of type written matter showing that a combine exists and that it has existed for the last year or two. I also produced—if not, I have it among my papers—a copy of the constitution and by-laws of the combine. There should not be much difficulty in his arriving at the conclusion that this combine is operating there now and that the situation needs relieving at once. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion one of the steps that should be taken, and taken at once, is to remove the duty from dressed lumber. Now, it is true that may not give all the relief that is desired. I do not think it will, but I am told by men in the business, including Mayor Arbuthnot, of Winnipeg, and other independent dealers, that if the duty is taken off it will largely go to break up the combine. Afterwards the commission can go to work and break up the combine by what ever means are found necessary. I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) to facilitate the movement of this commission as much as possible, and I shall be very glad to place before him all the documents in the original that he may desire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, there will be one difficulty about the course that has been suggested, namely, taking off the duty on all kinds of lumber. The provision seems only to apply to articles upon which there is a duty. I have now before me the section which the hon. minister invokes. That section is as follows:

That whenever the Governor in Council has reason to believe that as regard to any article of commerce there exists any trust, combination, association or agreement of any kind among the manufacturers of such article, or dealers therein, to unduly enhance the price of such article or in any other way to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumers, the Governor in Council may commission or empower any judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Superior Court in any province of Canada, to inquire in a summary way into and report to the Governor in Council, whether such trust, combination, association or agreement exists.

Then follows the provision in regard to the attendance of witnesses, &c. It proceeds :

If the judge reports that such trust, combination, association or agreement exists, and if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the consumers is facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on a like article when imported, then the Governor in Council shall place such article on the free list, or so reduce the duty upon it, as to give to the public the benefit of reasonable competition in such article.

I do not know whether my hon. friends have looked carefully at the schedules of the Tariff Act, and they are so long that I hardly like to trouble the House with them, but the schedule which provides for free lumber is very comprehensive indeed. It seems to me to include almost every kind of lumber that would be required. That particular kind of lumber upon which there is a duty of twenty-five per cent is described as follows :

Boards, sawed boards, planks and deals, planed or dressed on one or both sides, when the edges thereof are jointed or tongued and grooved, 25 per cent.

Then

Lumber and timber manufactured, n.e.s., 20 per cent.

That, of course, is coupled with a provision for free lumber covering a whole page of this book with which I will not trouble the House at the present time. It seems to me that the complaint which comes from the west is a striking illustration of one fact which I have had occasion to mention before in this House, namely, that these combines do not always depend on a protective tariff. We have combines in the United States, we have them in free trade England at the present time, we have them in Canada in regard to commodities the greater portion of which come into Canada duty free. I agree entirely with the hon. gentlemen who have said that it might prove a serious handicap to the development of the west, particularly at this juncture, if the price of lumber were to be unduly raised, and I agree with hon. gentlemen who have said that this matter should demand the immediate attention of the government. But, whether or not a remedy is to be found in the suggestions which have been made by these gentlemen is to my mind quite a different question. I would be inclined to think that the remedy so far as it is to be found under the law as it at present exists, is to be found in the direction mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) under the provisions of the code to which he referred this afternoon.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the only direct remedy we have to-day is to be found in the Criminal Code. Some years ago, when the Criminal Code was amended at the instance of the late hon. member for West York (Hon. Mr. Wallace) and when the clause which I am now about to read was introduced, it was designed for the very purpose and that alone of attacking combinations :

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than two hundred dollars, or to two years' imprisonment, and if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding ten thousand dollars and not less than one thousand dollars, who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company, unlawfully——

(a) To unduly limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity, which may be a subject of trade or commerce.

Then,

(c) To unduly prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof ; or

(d) To unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, transportation or supply of any such article or commodity, or in the price of insurance upon person or property.

In 1899, as a result of the contention of those who had looked into the question, it was found that it was almost impossible to establish to the satisfaction of the court that the price had been unduly increased or that trade had been unduly restricted and I had the honour of introducing a Bill into this House, chap. 65, to further amend the Criminal Code so as to take out the word 'unduly,' which Bill passed this House and the Senate and is now the law, so that the Criminal Code is now much more effective and practical. I noticed the other day that a prosecution which was started against the coal combine of Brantford succeeded. They were indicted for a conspiracy to unduly enhance the price of coal, and they were convicted a few days ago at the assize court. I have no doubt whatever if the present combination amongst the lumbermen is such as has been stated they could be indicted and convicted. Certainly, if the letters read by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) are correct, and I have no doubt they are, these people are clearly amenable to the Criminal Code, section 520 and could be indicted under it. It seems to me that that would be the only direct way of attacking them, because, while the duty may be taken off, so much lumber comes in free of duty that you cannot successfully affect them there. I am very much inclined to believe, from the time at which this is brought to the attention of the House and from the way in which it has been brought, that this is rather an effort to strengthen Mr. Greenway's hands in the coming provincial election than for any other purpose. This has been going on for quite a while. Why did not Mr. Greenway and these dealers and builders in the west invoke the Criminal Code ? Why did they not avail themselves of this direct means of putting a stop to this combination and severely punishing the parties implicated ? I think it is the Criminal Code that they should have resort to in a case of this kind instead of taking the duty off lumber, and if these parties were as desirous of affording relief to the people of the west as they profess to be they would have adopted the course which I have suggested rather than come here to endeavour to assist Mr. Greenway in the way in which they are doing.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). I have looked very carefully through the Trade and Navigation Returns and I am unable to find that a single dollar's worth of dutiable lumber has come into the country during the past year. Therefore, I would say to hon. gentlemen who are seeking relief by taking off the duty that so far as I see no lumber of that class has come into the country during the past year.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to read over the representations which I made to the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) to assure the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the suggestions which he has made and which other gentlemen have made towards seeking a remedy for the conditions which exist up there, were suggested on my representations.

Mr. SPROULE. What date is that.

Mr. SCOTT. My letter to the Minister of Justice is dated the 25th of March.

Mr. SPROULE. Of last March.

Mr. SCOTT. Of last March. After reciting the conditions I say.

> In view of the above statements which can be amplified, I beg to suggest that the government should at once investigate the conditions of the trade with the view to applying, if found advisable, the provisions of section 18 of the customs tariff, 1897, or of section 520 of the Criminal Code, 1892, as amended by the Act of 1900.
> I further suggest that the government should consider the possibility of a remedy for the grievances complained of by amendments to the timber regulations so as to provide for the forfeiture of licenses in case the holders become parties to any such unlawful combination, association, or agreement as aforesaid or otherwise, so as to retain a measure of control over the operations of the manufacturers and dealers.

With regard to the point which has been made, that scarcely any lumber is imported into Canada as a dutiable article, I may say that the consumers and independent dealers who are making these complaints allege, that the classes of lumber which are dutiable are used by the combination practically to put a duty upon the whole of the rough lumber which ostensibly is free from duty. The members of the combination refuse to sell lumber to any person who buys any lumber outside of Canada. The whole of the lumber that the dealer buys must be bought from a member of the combination, or otherwise the dealer or the consumer is refused lumber by the members of the combination. They, therefore, claim that the removal of duty upon dressed lumber is likely to afford a considerable measure of relief. But, as has been said by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and others, if this relief is not sufficient, certainly the matter will be pressed further, and other remedies will be demanded.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I did not understand what answer the Minister of Justice gave to your letter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I regret that the Minister of Justice is not here just now, because he would deal with that point. I think, however, that I can safely go this far, although a layman : That if this matter is to be dealt with under the Criminal Code, the proper party to deal with it is the Attorney General of Manitoba, because it is the duty of the attorneys general in the respective provinces to initiate proceedings under the Criminal Code.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. Any private individual can do it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly ; but through the attorney general. What I mean to say is, that it is not the business of this parliament or of the Minister of Justice to initiate proceedings under the Criminal Code.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say it was.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I merely call attention to that point. With regard to the North-west Territories, that perhaps will have to be qualified because the territories are in an exceptional position ; but I believe the point has been raised that this combination has its foundation in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia.

Mr. SCOTT. It covers the whole country from Lake Superior, west.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The combinations, if combinations exist, are to be found, I believe, in the province of Manitoba and in the province of British Columbia, although their operations may extend into the territories.

Mr. SCOTT. From Lake Superior to the Pacific.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That may be, but I think the combination has its existence, if it has any existence at all, in the provinces, although its business happens to extend to the territories, and there may be a question as to how far you can prosecute in the territories people who are in the provinces and who do not come within the limits of territorial jurisdiction. However, that is getting into the law of it and I do not want to do that. In the provinces at all events the initiation of these proceedings lies in the attorney general of the province, and not in any of us here at Ottawa. Under the combine clause of the tariff, of course, the initiative would be with the government here, but that also is a judicial proceeding and you have to take every formal way of going about it.

Motion (Mr. Davis) to adjourn negatived.

IMMIGRANTS FOR ONTARIO.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin) asked:

Has the government made any efforts to induce any of the immigrants coming to Canada to settle in Ontario?

PARKHILL MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. SHERRITT asked:

Who has the contract now for conveyance of His Majesty's mails between Parkhill post office and the railway station? What remuneration is he receiving per year for the same? Has a new contract been let lately for this work in the future? If so, to whom has the contract been given, and at what figure? Was the contract let by public tender; and if not, why not? Tudor from the 1st of July, 1903, for the service now performed by Mr. Simpson on the same terms and conditions. The statute does not require tenders to be invited for contracts involving expenditure of $85.13 a year. This contract was not therefore advertised. On the termination of the contract with Mr. Simpson, the department is quite free to find a new contractor for the service. Mr. Simpson having no right over others to be selected for the new contract. The department being satisfied that Mr. Tudor would prove a desirable contractor, arranged with him. It is not usual to state on what advice the department acts under such circumstances.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Speaker, I think that I may fairly congratulate my hon. friend the leader of the opposition on having delivered last Friday the very mildest criticism upon a budget speech to which it has ever been my good fortune to listen. I do not at all mean to say that in certain other directions the hon. gentleman was not aggressive enough; but I refer to the budget qua budget simply; and on that I may congratulate him on having delivered himself of an address which could by no possibility have excited in the slightest degree the susceptibilities of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fielding). I am aware that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition had his difficulties. It is, I have no doubt, in the recollection of this House how almost six years ago to a day, the predecessor of that hon. gentleman, in his usual fervent fashion, made the very rafters of this building ring with his denunciations of the desolation, the woe, the misery and the mischief which my hon. friend beside me was about to inflict on the industries of Canada. That hon. gentleman foreheard the wails of the manufacturers of Canada and foresaw the ruin of our industries, and I can understand that the hon. gentleman who now so worthily fills the place formerly occupied by Sir Charles Tupper, bearing these denunciations in his mind, had his difficulties. He must have contrasted the predictions of 1897 with the realities of 1903, and come to the conclusion probably, that the less said about the ruin and destruction which was then predicted as the result of our policy, the better for himself and for his party.

I observe that the hon. gentleman has either developed or inherited a taste for that description of scrap-book literature with which we were so familiar in the time of his predecessor. It is a great honour to me that the hon. gentleman should have devoted so much attention to divers speeches and articles of mine. I hope he reads them constantly; I hope they will do him good, though I fear the good seed is falling on stony ground, where it is apt to be choked by the brambles of protection. However, as Cromwell was wont to say, in spite of his malignancy, I trust the day of grace will yet come; but I would advise him as he has a taste for perusing these curiosities of bygone literature, to read, and read carefully, the speeches addressed to this House by his honourable predecessor in the years from 1873 to 1878 and thereafter. If the hon. gentleman will do that, he will find two things: he will find, first of all, that his predecessor, Sir Charles Tupper, was most emphatic in pointing out to the House during the first period to which I have referred, that a government's first duty was to create and ensure prosperity. In the succeeding period, he will find that hon. gentleman invariably gave credit to himself and the government of which he was a member, for all the prosperity which he alleged, obtained in the country. Were my hon. friend Sir Charles Tupper present, I do not doubt that he would, with equal fervour and energy, with as much loudness and possibly as much consistency and logic explain to the House how it is that, in the eternal fitness of things, credit is only due to a government for the prosperity of a country when that government happens to be Conservative.

As I have said, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition had his difficulties. He was confronted with the very largest surplus our country has ever enjoyed and he was not able to put his finger on one single tax which he considered oppressive or unjust. He was not able to suggest the reduction of the duty on one single commodity, rather the contrary. It is true he did suggest that my hon. friend beside me, on one or two occasions, had commented adversely on some of the taxes which are still maintained, but was most careful to say that he himself had no objection to these taxes and had not the slightest desire to advocate the reducing or removing of any one of them. And in like manner, although he had to deal with the very largest expenditure Canada has ever seen, he was particularly careful to say that, so far as regards our expenditure, the only criticism, the only attack, he would level against us was that in certain directions, which he was good enough to specify, we did not spend sufficient money.

When my hon. friend dealt with the fact that while our expenditure was very large, our surplus was very large, we were likewise able to show a volume of trade and commerce larger than ever before, all the criticism which my hon. friend saw fit to indulge in, on that subject, was that in his opinion he thought the people were getting too much for their money. And he was disposed to cut down the purchasing power of the people and make them pay more for the goods they were purchasing than they were called on to pay under the existing tariff.

We can well understand that the hon. gentleman, in dealing with a tariff such as the hon. Finance Minister has presented to the House, finds himself woefully handicapped by his own previous utterances and those of his party. He might try to disguise his feelings, but I fear it was not pleasant to him to find that my hon. friend beside me was able to point to all the indices of prosperity, on which my hon. friend and his party were accustomed to rely in former times as indicating the prosperity of a country and a great many more important ones which they were never able to produce, but which have attended the administration of Canada under a Liberal government. Sir, it was perhaps small wonder that under such circumstances the hon. gentleman should appeal to me. It was small wonder that he should say to me, as he did almost in so many words: 'Owing to my peculiar position I really cannot undertake to criticise the budget of the Minister of Finance, but you might do it.' And he was good enough to intimate that he thought that I might do it well. I am deeply grateful to my hon. friend for his good opinion. I am half disposed to meet my hon. friend half way and I will go this far to gratify him. I will define for his benefit and that of his friends beside him, the conditions under which I might, to quote his words, sing one of my old songs and indulge in some of the criticisms I was apt to bestow some years ago on the occupants of these benches when I was in opposition. For instance, if we had to-day an exceedingly unfair and oppressive system of taxation, under which we were practically putting two dollars into private pockets for every one that went into the public treasury, I might see my way to deliver myself of some severe criticism. If to-day, I found out trade was utterly stagnant and had been so during a quarter of a century, if it were just at the point where it had started out in 1873, I might concede that there was some ground for criticism. If I found our population growing as slowly as it did in the period of Conservative administration, when, if the truth had been told, it would have been shown that in ten years of Conservative rule the total growth of Canada was less than what I believe it to be in any one year of Liberal administration, I might have had occasion for fault finding. Were we confronted with three or four years of successive deficits I would be disposed to criticise, and very severly criticise, the budget. Does my hon. friend recognize the picture ? Does he recognize the condition of things that prevailed from 1891 to 1896 ? Does he appreciate the contrast between that period and the subsequent one from 1896 to 1903? Does he realize to what condition seventeen years of continuous misrule and maladministration by a Conservative government had brought the people of Canada, and where seven years of Liberal administration have placed it ? Sir, I will relieve the hon. gentleman of a misconception or two. In the public accounts, if my hon. friend will look at the records he will find the following deficits :— In 1894 there was a deficit of $1,210,000; in 1895, $4,156,000; in 1896, $530,000. Let him now look at the record of Liberal administration. He will find in 1900 a surplus of $8,054,000; in 1901,$5,648,000; in 1902, $7,290,000; and in 1903 we will have a surplus of $13,000,000.

And if he will look back to the year of grace of 1873, he will find that the total volume of the trade and commerce of Canada then amounted to something like $217,000,000; and twenty-three years later, in 1896, it amounted to $230,000,000. It had increased in those twenty-three years at the rate of about half a million dollars per year. Let him turn to the Trade and Navigation return, and he will find that from 1896 to 1902, the gross increase in the volume of trade of Canada was to the tune of $184,000,000, and I believe that before this fiscal year closes that increase is likely to be nearly $230,000,000. I do not wish, on this occasion, to say too much on the vexed question of population which I treated about a year ago. But I would say this—that there is the strongest possible ground for believing that since we came into office the exodus has stopped, the tide of immigration has been flowing into our country instead of out of it, in all human probability from 1897 down to the present year, the average increase of the population of Canada has been from 125,000 to 200,000 a year, and will reach, probably, 250,000 in the current year.

Sir, whoever drew the brief which the hon. gentleman expounded to us a day or two ago must have had in mind a certain time-honoured legal maxim which my hon. friend, who is a good lawyer, no doubt has oftimes availed himself of in his forensic experience. It is a well known maxim, I am told, among my legal friends, when you have no case, abuse the plaintiff's attorney. And my hon. friend, if he did not attack or abuse the budget, showed no great hesitation in attacking the adversaries' attorney. There was one statement the hon. gentleman made in which I heartily concurred. He intimated that the tariff, after all is said and done, is only one factor in determining the prosperity of a country. That is true. It is quite possible that a country may, under certain circumstances, prosper in spite of a bad tariff, even a very bad tariff. It is quite possible that circumstances may occur under which a country may fail to prosper in spite of a good tariff. A good tariff may minimize distress, while a bad tariff may exaggerate it. But I do not say, and have never said, that the tariff was the only factor in determining the prosperity of a country. A little later on I propose to review in detail some of our expenditures, and I shall then be glad to give my hon. friend my reason and justification for believing that we are not lavishly or foolishly expending the great surplus which it has been our good fortune to possess, or the great revenues we now receive. I desire also, a little later on, to touch on our attitude towards Germany and the effect of our preferential tariff, as well as on the general policy which ought to be adopted at the present time. Just now, however, I prefer to deal with my hon. friend's speech, and to call attention, somewhat in detail, to a few of the remarks he made. I think my hon. friend was rather disposed—unintentionally, perhaps—to belittle the progress and advance which Canada has made. I have looked with some care over the table he has prepared showing the relative figures of increase for Great Britain, the United States and other countries, as well as Canada. That document, which was drawn up with some skill, either by the hon. gentleman himself or by the party who, as I say, prepared his brief, was prepared with a certain end in view. I defy any man to read the statement of the hon. gentleman, in which he shows that a great many other countries have increased largely as well as Canada during the past few years, without seeing that whoever compiled it designed, when this document was placed—as doubtless it is to be placed—in the hands of the faithful throughout the country, to conceal, as far as might be, the progress that Canada has made relatively to other nations. If hon. gentlemen will consult that table, they will see that the United States have increased $700,000,000, Great Britain $800,000,000, the Australian colonies $145,000,000, France—though I think that is a mistake—$680,000,000, while Canada, he admits, has increased $184,000,000. For the average reader, who is not aware what these figures really represent and mean, the only inference to be drawn—and, I think, the only inference that was intended to be drawn—was that, after all, we need not say so very much about the progress of Canada, seeing that other countries have increased as fast as we have done. I had rather foreseen that something of that kind might come to pass. If hon. gentlemen will do me the honour to turn to page xviii of the last report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as follows :—

They will see that during the six years from 1896 and to the 30th June, 1902, the trade and commerce of Canada increased from $200,000,000 to $329,000,000, or a percentage of increase of 96 per cent. Next to us came Japan, which increased from $135,000,000 to $251,000,000, an increase of $118,000,000, or 80 per cent. Next came the Commonwealth of Australia, whose trade of $276,000,000 increased to $448,000,000, an increase of $171,000,000, or at the rate of 62 per cent. The United States increased from $1,525,000,000 to $2,258,000,000, that is $733,000,000 or 40 per cent. The Netherlands had increased in round numbers from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000, in all $460,000,000, or 43 per cent. Italy increased from $429,000,000 to $596,000,000, an increase of $167,000,000, or 30 per cent. Germany increased from $1,770,000,000 to $2,344,000,000, an increase of 30 per cent. Belgium also increased at the rate of 32 per cent. The Argentine republic increased at the rate of 31 per cent. Next comes the United Kingdom, which increased from $3,128,000,000 to $3,903,000,000, an increase of $774,000,000—an increase for the great United Kingdom of 24 per cent. France increased, according to my figures, from $1,369,000,000 to $1,617,000,000, an increase of $248,000,000, or 18 per cent. Now, what I want to call attention to is that, in the statement presented by the leader of the opposition, though his facts are correct enough, he has so worded it and so placed it that the average reader, unless he were tolerably familiar with the details of these computations, would come to the conclusion that the increase in Canada was no great matter after all. In my table Canada is placed in her rightful place, at the head of the column. The proportion of increases is shown, and that proportion is 96 per cent for Canada against 48 per cent for the United States; 96 per cent for Canada against 24 per cent for the United Kingdom. And it is not altogether without significance, Sir, as hon. members will see if they turn to my report and turn to the hon. gentleman's speech, that Canada stands first in my list and last in his. Now, my hon. friend proceeds to say that we ought to take good care of the manufacturers of Canada, seeing that we produce $750,000,000 to $800,000 of manufactured goods. I would like to know, as a matter of curiosity, what my hon. friend defines as manufactured goods, and what he includes in these large totals.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was a question of that kind before us about a year and a half ago, when everything was defined as manufactured which was produced by motive power. And I think I stated in my remarks that the term included everything so produced.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I find that he does define the term 'manufactured goods' as those produced by motive power. Now I would like to know what he means us to infer. Does he mean us to infer that the $750,000,000 or $800,000,000 worth of goods of which he speaks are what are ordinarily known as manufactured goods; because I strongly suspect that in the list to which he referred he will find a great many things that are not usually included in the term 'manufactured goods.' I find, for instance, in the list which I think he must have consulted, that sawmills are put down for $52,000,000 of the $750,000,000 or $800,000,000 of manufactured goods. I think that grist mills which produce flour are put down for something like $42,000,000. I find that sugar, whereof the value of the raw material is $15,000,000, is put down for $17,000,000 of manufactured goods. I think my hon. friend will find that to take these crude statements which are commonly furnished of the gross amount of manufactured goods, and apply them to a discussion of a policy which we may pursue, will lead him into serious error. The actual truth of the matter is, I believe, that these are taken largely from the census of 1891, and that census certainly includes a vast number of articles which are hardly known as manufactured goods in the ordinary acceptation of the term. If my memory serves me, there are nine or ten millions of cheese included in that list; there are some nine or ten millions of blacksmiths' work included; there are a great many millions included of millinery and dressmaking and a great variety of other things, which no doubt are useful products, but which, under ordinary circumstances, do not fairly fall under the head of manufactured goods.

Then the hon. gentleman goes on to institute an elaborate comparison of the receipts from taxes under the late regime and under the present regime. Here, Sir, I take issue with my hon. friend in toto. I say to my hon. friend that the statements which he makes are wholly misleading, because he is disregarding a cardinal fact. He has paid no attention whatever to the difference between the real taxation inflicted on the people under a protective tariff, and the actual taxation inflicted on the people under a revenue tariff, even if it be a high one. The difference is this, that substantially the great bulk of the taxes go into the treasury under the present tariff, whereas under the administration which preceded ours an enormous percentage of the taxes which the people of Canada had to pay did not go into the treasury but went to swell the profits of private individuals. The people under our tariff have the satisfaction at any rate of knowing that what is taken out of their pockets goes into the treasury, and can be used for the benefit of the whole people. The hon. gentleman appears to be entirely unable to understand—although I fancy certain of his friends, the manufacturers, do understand—that after all is said and done ours is a revenue tariff and theirs a protective tariff. The tariff which ours superseded was a protective tariff, and the best proof of that is the fact that under our regime the exports and imports into this country have grown very largely, especially the imports. The very essence of a protective tariff, as he has shown in other parts of his speech, is to exclude goods and diminish revenue ; the essence of a revenue tariff is to receive goods and to see that such taxes as may be levied upon them go into the treasury and are applied for the benefit of the whole people.

Now, a little later on, I noticed the hon. gentleman made certain statements to the effect that the Minister of Finance at one time or another objected to several of the duties that now exist in our tariff. But the hon. gentleman does not propose to reduce them, he does not propose to abate them, he does not propose to remove one single tax that now presses upon the people. In fact, he tells us that he does not complain of it, he does not propose to reduce it, he considers that the tariff in that respect does not require in the slightest degree any amendment.

Then he proceeds to dilate at some length on what he calls the percentage of expenditure. Now, I have pointed out that if my contention be correct, if as I say, the taxes which we levy differ from the taxes which were levied by the hon. gentleman's predecessors in this respect, that our taxes go into the treasury and their taxes were divided between the treasury and private individuals, then there is no foundation whatever for any comparison to be made between the taxes levied under the two systems. But, Sir, I entirely deny the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's computation so far as it is based on population. About a year ago I had the honour of laying before this House a variety of statements, all tending to show, in my opinion, that the census of 1891 was an impudent fraud. It will be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen here that yonder table was littered knee-deep with evidence proving most conclusively, I repeat, that the grossest and most palpable frauds had been committed in the census of 1891. I have no doubt, from the examination I then made and have since made, that the census of 1891 exaggerated the then population by several hundreds of thousands—how many it is impossible absolutely to ascertain. I have no doubt whatever that during the four or five years of the serious depression which succeeded 1891, the increase of Canada was very slow, if indeed there was any increase at all. If that be true—and I recommend hon. gentlemen who doubt the facts to examine again the evidence—then I submit that the statements made by the hon. gentleman as regards the per capita expenditure are entirely without foundation. I believe the actual facts of the case are these: That in 1895 or 1896 the actual population of Canada had barely reached the nominal figures which were stated in 1891; that since that time, owing to the stoppage of the exodus, owing to the enormous development of the North-west, owing to the tide of immigration that has been flowing into Canada under our administration, the population of Canada has been increasing from 125,000 to 150,000 or perhaps 200,000 a year; and that within these last six or seven years there has been added to the population of Canada not less than 800,000, perhaps 900,000 people. Sir, if the hon. gentleman wishes to go into a computation, I recommend him to revise his statements on that basis, and if he does, he will have very little reason indeed to plume himself on the results of a per capita comparison between the expenditure of 1896-97 and that of 1903.

I note again that the hon. gentleman, in criticising our expenditure, is exceedingly careful to point out that he does not object to a liberal expenditure; he rather desires, in point of fact, that a heavy additional expenditure should be incurred. Well, Sir, he may be right as to some of those matters. It is not my purpose at the present moment to enter into an examination of the question under that head. But I note that the hon. gentleman, when he comes to deal with one phase of the situation, when he deals with the fact that we imported from the United States a very much larger amount of goods than we exported, I note one remarkable thing, and that is that my hon. friend entirely omits all the coin and bullion, all the gold products of Canada that were exported to the United States. Now, I would like to know what my hon. friend's private opinion of that point is. According to our trade and navigation returns we exported roughly $70,000,000 worth of goods to the United States and we imported from them $114,000,000. He arbitrarily deducts $24,000,000 and makes our exports $47,000,000 instead of $70,000,000. Is it the opinion of my hon. friend that Canada is any poorer because Canada parted with a few tons of yellow dust in return for $24,000,000 of valuable commodities of other kinds. I would like to know what my hon. friend's opinion on that head is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was following the example, in making that computation, of a great financier on the other side of the House, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid that my hon. friend misunderstood the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). However, the hon. member for North Norfolk can answer for that matter himself, but I would like to know if he accepts that. I think an hon. gentleman who is posing as a financial critic ought to explain to us: Does he consider that Canada is any the poorer for parting with a few tons of gold dust and getting very many millions of dollars worth of valuable commodities in exchange? I would like to know. Is that his own opinion?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from North Norfolk is going to speak in this debate and he will answer the hon. gentleman most fully on that point.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have no doubt, but, my hon. friend, with very lawyer-like caution and subtlety will not commit himself to an opinion on that point. It bears very materially on the question. To my mind a country is none the poorer because it exchanges a certain amount of gold dust for a large amount of valuable commodities of other kinds. That is my opinion of the subject. I give it without reservation, without fear or favour, without even the fear of the hon. member for North Norfolk. My hon. friend dwelt at considerable length on the fact, which is perfectly true, that there has been a great increase in our trade with the United States, very largely due to the great increase in the growth of our manufactures and in the numerous demands for raw products that our manufacturers have made upon the United States. But, the hon. gentleman ought to remember this, and all hon. gentlemen might well remember it, that when we are dealing with the question of trade with the United States, when we compare the trade which we carry on with the United States with the trade which we carry on with the mother country, it is a question of geography quite as much as a question of tariff. It is plain to anybody, plain to a demonstration, that that in itself if it were not for our reciprocally barbarous tariffs, our geographical position would naturally induce us to carry on a very great trade with the United States, to our mutual advantage. At this present moment, everybody knows, that in a great many matters it is infinitely easier for our manufacturers and merchants to trade with the manufacturers and merchants of the United States than it will ever be to trade with any country on the other side of the Atlantic. In the greater part of the United States, measured by population it only takes twenty-four hours for a letter from any part of older Canada to reach its destination, and a telegraph or telephone message will reach it in an hour. Moreover, the conditions of manufacture, the conditions of the life of the people in the United States and particularly in the northern states are so closely analagous to those prevailing in Canada that it is exceedingly easy for them to understand the needs of our market; whereas, in the mother country it is not by any manner of means so easy to communicate with us or to supply our wants, and consequently it is no wonder at all that our trade with the United States should increase more largely than our trade with Great Britain.

But, the hon. gentleman went on to deal with the preferential tariff. He went on to analyse the effect of the preferential duty on English goods. He says that the tariff on dutiable goods coming from Great Britain is about 24 per cent, while the tariff on dutiable goods coming from the United States is about 25 per cent, and he draws the deduction, perhaps not unnaturally, that our preference to Great Britain is a matter of very little moment, that our tariff is really, substantially, quite as favourable to the United States as our tariff is to Great Britain. This is a question which will bear a little looking into. I have been at some pains to have the actual effect of this preferential tariff of ours with Great Britain properly analysed. No doubt the hon. gentleman was perfectly correct in one sense. The hon. gentleman has taken our trade and navigation returns, he has looked at the dutiable column, and he has deduced from that that the average duty under the preferential tariff is 24 per cent, whereas had the hon. gentleman condescended to look a little more closely into the matter he would have found that there is only a certain proportion of our imports from Great Britain which come in under the preferential tariff. The hon. gentleman would have found that such articles as wines and spirits, and I think, tobaccos, are excluded absolutely from the operation of the preferential tariff. If he had desired to know how that tariff operated he ought to have deducted the value of these articles and the amount of taxation which is levied upon them. He ought, in the second place, to have deducted the amount of goods imported from Great Britain, which, for one reason or another, were not permitted the benefit of the preferential tariff, in all, something like $5,000,000 worth, more or less. Had he done so, he would have found that the dutiable imports from Great Britain which enjoyed the benefit of the preferential tariff amounted to $28,730,000 roughly, that the total taxation on these amounted to $5,395,000, and he would have found this further fact, which I commend to his notice, which I commend to the notice of the House, and which I commend to the notice of our English friends, that under the preferential tariff on these $28,730,000 worth, the average duty levied was not 24 per cent, but 18 8-10 per cent. While I am on the subject, I may just as well say that I think, perhaps, it was an unfortunate thing that at the recent colonial conference that that very able man, Mr. Chamberlain, acting on very imperfect information, in my opinion, rather belittled the effect of preferential tariff. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this fact: The hon. gentleman has recourse to the trade and navigation returns. He takes the average for a number of years and contrasts that with the average for another number of years, and he says: After all is said and done, there has been very little improvement in importations from Great Britain, because, during five years of your administration the average importation has shown very little increase over that of your predecessors. What are the actual facts? If my hon. friend will turn to the Trade and Commerce Report, he will find that in the year 1890 the dutiable goods—which need only enter into our computation at present—the dutiable goods imported from Great Britain were $33,000,000. That by the year 1897, under the operation of the tariff of these gentlemen opposite, had fallen to $20,000,000. That, since 1897 has risen from $20,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Now, Sir, the man who tells me—whether he be an Englishman or whether he be a Canadian—the man who tells me, in the face of those figures, that the preferential tariff had no effect whatever in increasing the importation of English goods into Canada, in my humble opinion, knows very little about what he is talking of. I say that the effect has been very marked and very important, and I say that if you choose to look a little below the surface you will find two very imporant things well worthy of being brought to the attention both of this House and of our English friends and customers. You will find that our trade with England in dutiable goods, although relatively smaller than our trade with the United States, is in all human probability much more profitable than the trade which the United States carry on with us. That was a subject which I had occasion to examine into pretty fully during the period that the Joint High Commission was sitting in Washington, and I make the assertion without much fear of contradiction by those who are acquainted with the details, that it will be found that the profit the English merchant derives from the $35,000,000 of goods which he sells to Canada is vastly in excess of the profit which the American manufacturer derives from the $60,000,000 of dutiable goods which he sells to Canada. More than that, and it is reasonable it should be so, the trade with Great Britain is a natural one, it is not a forced one. The trade with the United States under the peculiar conditions that prevail there is largely artificial and a forced trade, and one thing is very clear about it, that whatever else effect our tariff may have had; whatever effect our tariff against the United States may have had in some respects, it most assuredly did largely diminish the profits which heretofore have been made by American manufacturers out of their Canadian trade.

Then, Sir, there is another matter also worthy of consideration. In looking at the trade returns of the various countries I find this fact which again I commend to the attention of our English friends. We are at present importing of all kinds of goods from England about $50,000,000 worth. The United States, with a population of 75,000,000, were importing in the years 1899 and 1900 a matter of $90,000,000 and a matter of $100,000,000 worth, respectively. I believe they have done a little more during the past two years, largely in consequence of the disturbed conditions of American trade consequent on the steel and coal strikes. But this result remains, and this result is one worthy of notice: that while the average Canadian family will consume about $50 worth of English goods in the course of the year, the average American family will consume—taking the two years I have spoken of as fair samples—about $6 worth of English goods. Per head, Canada consumes something like seven times as much English goods as do the people of the United States.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) made a reproach against my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and against the government of which he is a member, that in all our trade negotiations we have done nothing. That we had attempted to trade with the United States and we had gained nothing; that we had attempted to trade with Germany and we had gained nothing; that we had attempted to trade with France and we had gained nothing. Well, Sir, I will tell the hon. gentleman what this government and what the people of Canada have done within the past few years. They have shown the people of the United States, by the best of all object lessons, that we can live without them ; they have shown them that we can increase our trade and commerce in a much faster ratio than theirs ; they have shown them that we can successfully compete with them in the markets of the world if they do not choose to allow us to compete with them in the markets of their own country. And let me tell the House that that knowledge and, what is more, the demonstration of that fact, was an essential underlying factor before we could hope to to secure any favourable conditions of reciprocity with the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Show the Americans that we can do without them ; show the Americans that we are formidable competitors to them ; show the Americans that Canada is growing in trade and commerce at any rate, and probably in population, quite as fast as they themselves are, and you will find that they will be very much more disposed to trade with us, and very much more amenable to reason than we have found them in the past. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has asked what we will do if Canadian farmers leave their farms and go to the United States to find employment in the factories there ; and he gives us to understand, I suppose, that those things never happened under the regime of our predecessors, the Conservatives. Well, Sir, I think that I remember when every train from Canada, under the blessed dispensation of the National Policy, was crowded, crammed brimming over with men who were moving from Canada to the United States, and our census returns show that in the seventeen or eighteen years that the Conservatives held power, the loss of population to Canada—not counting the immigrants whom they alleged they had brought into the country to the tune of about 886,000—our returns shows that numbered within the ten years from 1881 to 1891, the loss to Canada of Canadians and the direct descendants of Canadians might be counted, not by the ten thousands, but by the millions.

But there are two points on which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) dwelt, and on which I desire to say a word or two. The hon. gentleman was good enough to tell us that it was the policy of his party to protect the farmers. That is a laudable, desirable and most important object in which I heartily concur, and I would like to see how the hon. gentleman proposes to do it. We stand here to be instructed ; we desire to know. We are not above, if the hon. gentleman can show us how, taking a useful hint from that hon. gentleman. Last year the people of Canada produced about 100,000,000 bushels of wheat, and possibly next year they will produce 200,000,000 bushels of wheat—the chance is that in a very short time they may produce 300,000,000 bushels of wheat. We consume in Canada, all told, something like from 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 bushels a year. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) be good enough to show me how he proposes by protection to add one cent to the value of wheat grown in Canada ? I should like to know. I should like to understand under what conditions, if we grow 200,000,000 bushels of wheat and if we require 20,000,000 bushels for our own use, the hon. gentleman is going to protect the growers of the remaining 180,000,000 bushels. I am open to conviction ; I carry an open mind.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why do you keep 12½ cents a bushel on wheat now ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is for the hon. gentleman's predecessors to explain; hon. gentlemen opposite do not complain of it. If the hon. gentleman wants my opinion of the matter, I tell him that it is not of the smallest value to the farmers of Canada. I should like to know in what way the hon. gentleman proposes to protect the Canadian wheat growers. We sell about $20,000,000 worth of cheese chiefly in the English market. I suppose we consume about $2,000,000 worth in Canada. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman would protect us in that. We sell nearly as much bacon and hams. I would like to know how he proposes to protect us in these articles. The actual truth of the matter is this : He cannot protect the Canadian farmer, and he knows it well. He cannot add, by any device or means of his in the way of protection, one cent to the value of the wheat grown in Canada. But he can do something else : He can—and he is ready to do it—enormously diminish the value of the purchasing power of the wheat which the farmer raises. That, I grant, he can do. There his powers for mischief have an almost unlimited field.

Now, Sir, here is an audacious statement—I will give it in the hon. gentleman's own words :

> What is our position with respect to the United States ? We buy from them about $72,000,000 worth of manufactured goods, and we sell to them $6,000,000. We buy from them $28,000,000 of agricultural products and products of animals, and we sell to them of the same articles less than $3,000,000.

Whoever, as I say, undertook to dry-nurse my hon. friend has led him astray. That, while I acquit him of intentionally designing to mislead, is an ill-advised statement. It is quite true, and I make him a present of the fact, that the nominal amount of goods coming under those heads which we imported from the United States in the year 1902 was something like $28,000,- 000; but of what did they consist? I will give the House one item, perhaps the largest. We imported from the United States in 1902 something like $8,663,000 worth of wheat, and we exported some $7,443,000 worth, to the great detriment of the farmers of Canada. We imported from the United States in the same fashion a variety of other dutiable articles, amounting in all to $14,752,000. Of these we re-exported, almost entirely to England, $7,812,000 worth, leaving of dutiable articles which may be said to have entered to some extent into competition with the products of our farmers, a matter of $6,940,000 worth. Now, I want to go over these importations a little in detail. I want to show how terribly the farmers of Canada have been handicapped by this importation of $23,000,000 which my hon. friend speaks of. The first important item, after breadstuffs, is fruits, of which we imported $1,947,000 worth. I observe that of these an exceedingly large percentage consists of oranges, which it was no doubt very much to the detriment of the farmers of Canada that we should import. The next largest item, nearly three quarters of a million, consists of raisins, currants, almonds and prunes, which were also imported very much to the detriment of the farmers of Canada, who, I presume, have of late gone largely into the manufacture of raisins, prunes and almonds. I notice, in like manner, when we come to the free list, that the articles which enter into competition with the products of the farmers of Canada, are of a very formidable character. Of dutiable goods, we imported about $14,000,000 worth, the greater part of which was sent across the ocean. We likewise imported about $12,000,000 worth of free goods. Of these, the first item is broom corn. I candidly admit that I do not know whether it enters seriously into competition with the products of our farmers or not, and I am open to correction. The next item on the list, a very important one, is bananas, of which we imported $714,800 worth; and the next is pineapples, of which we imported about $90,000 worth, doubtless greatly to the detriment of the farmers of Canada. The fact of the matter is, these fruits are not the products of the United States at all. For convenience, we import them through the ports of New York or Boston, as the shortest route to the western markets of the western provinces. Of hemp undressed we imported $669,000 worth. Of Indian corn we imported $2,480,000 worth, of which we straightway exported to England $1,200,000 worth in the shape of Indian corn, and the other $1,200,000 worth a little later in the shape of fat cattle. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that the farmers of Canada were seriously damnified by the importation of this Indian corn which they exported in the two ways I have mentioned? Are the farmers to be worse treated than our manufacturing friends, to whom we allow the full rebate on everything they export on which they show they have paid the full duty? We imported of flaxseed $1,714,000 worth. I do not think that enters seriously into competition with the products of our farmers, though tobacco may, of which we imported $1,900,000 worth. The next item is furs and skins undressed. Do my agricultural friends think they were seriously injured by the importation of $1,000,000 worth of undressed furs? Of hides and skins we imported, chiefly from the South American republics, through United States ports, $2,174,000 worth, and we exported nearly an equal amount. We imported $330,000 worth of raw silk, greatly to the detriment of the farmers of Canada, and $221,000 worth of raw wool and sent out about as much. The actual result is that of the $28,000,000 worth of agricultural and animal products which, according to my hon. friend, we imported from the United States, to enter into competition with the products of the farmers of Canada, if you make a fair analysis, you will find that very nearly one-half were promptly re-exported, giving employment to Canadian ships and Canadian railways, and that the remainder are largely articles, such as bananas, raw silk and the other things I have mentioned, which can by no possibility injure the farmers of the Dominion of Canada.

Briefly, I find that on the $28,000,000 of imports of agricultural products and animals and their products, about five and a half millions, on a fair computation, may go into competition with farm products of Canada while, as the hon. gentleman says himself, we in turn sell the United States about $8,000,000 of similar products. The truth is that along our border of some 4,000 miles, there will always be found a number of places where it is convenient and mutually profitable to interchange products; and were it not for our tariffs we would carry on those exchanges to our mutual profit on a much larger scale, and I fail to see that, on a fair analysis of the case, the farmers of Canada are placed at any such disadvantage, as my hon. friend was, I think, very unfortunately led to suppose. My hon. friend repeats his statement a little later on, and evidently he and his friends intend to use it in their discussions in the country as a proof of the extreme injury done, under this tariff, to the farmers of Canada. But I am convinced that, if a fair examination be made, we will find that we make a reasonable and fair exchange in those products. We do not sell our neighbours anything like the quantity of goods, and it would be to our mutual advantage to interchange with them to a greater extent. But it is manifestly contrary to the facts to say that at this moment the exchange against us is so unfair that we buy $28,000,000 from the Americans while we sell them but $8,000,000 worth. The bulk of those imports are re-exported, and of those that are not, the greater bulk do not enter into competition with our farm products at all, while a large part of the remainder are merely bought from the United States for convenience sake as in the case of hides from South America and bananas and other articles that I have mentioned.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to spend any further time on the speech of my hon. friend. I am afraid that time will hardly permit me to do what I should have liked to do—to analize minutely our expenditure. But I will lay before the House certain facts which, I think, will go far to convince them that we are not after all liable to the charge of gross and undue expenditure and extravagance in the administration of public affairs. Let me take the statement which Mr. Foster laid on the Table of the House in 1896, when he was Minister of Finance. He then computed the requirements of the public service for 1897 at something like $38,300,000 for his main estimates. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) the other day brought down an estimate something like $50,750,000. There is a difference there and a large difference—a difference of about $12,000,000. If the hon. gentlemen were able to show that we have idly and needlessly added $12,000,000 to the public expenditure, then we would justly be liable to severe censure. But when you come to analyse this expenditure, what do you find ? You find, in the first place, that out of this augmentation of $12,000,000 at least $6,000,000 are directly transferred from one pocket into the other. That $6,000,000 is made up of such items as increase in the sinking fund, extra expenditure on railways and canals, which are recouped by the receipts therefrom, and extra expenditure on the Yukon Territory, which Mr. Foster was not called on to provide, and for which we have received from the start to the present hour, full compensation in the shape of the increased revenue derived from that particular territory. That being the case, the gross expenditure, for which we should be called on to account, is reduced to something like $6,000,000. But to what is this increase of $6,000,000 due ? It has been caused, for the most part, by the necessity of largely extending and increasing such services, our light-house and coast service, which everybody who knows anything of the condition of Canadian trade admits to be an expenditure that ought to be encouraged as much as possible, and which, as my hon. friends opposite have urged, ought to be enlarged ? That is one large item.

The second is our increased expenditure on immigration, and I venture to say that for every penny we have expended on that head the country stands to receive—and that too, speedily—a dollar in return. Then there is the expenditure for agricultural purposes in various ways. For that also the country has received and is receiving a large return in the continuous increase in our exports of agricultural products. There is also a heavy increase from North-west administration rendered necessary by the vast influx of settlers into that country. Is that a wasteful expenditure ? And so it goes all through. I shall not dwell so much on this at present, partly because I have scarcely the time at my disposal and partly because the hon. gentleman himself does not assail our expenditure as extravagant and unnecessary. On the contrary, he admits that large and liberal expenditure is needful and declares that he would be prepared, in many cases, to spend more than we are doing.

But, let me call attention to these three things. First of all, when comparing the expenditure of 1896-7 with the expenditure of 1903, you would do well to bear in mind that the population of the country has increased very considerably. There has been, by my estimate, an increase of 800,000, or of 900,000 people. In any case, even admitting, which I never will admit—the correctness of the census of 1901, our population has certainly increased 500,000 or 600,000. Consequently a larger expenditure is justifiable and necessary. In the second place, it is well to remember that the income of the Canadian people to-day is fully double what it was seven years ago, and an expenditure is now justified, when you have a volume of trade and commerce of $400,000,000, which might have been unreasonable and extravagant when it was only $200,000,000, with a revenue in proportion. And in the third place, you should bear in mind that coincident with the extraordinary prosperity of Canada, there has been a great increase in the cost of materials and wages all over the country, so that the works executed to-day by the Minister of Public Works and other members of the government must of necessity require a very much increased expenditure. The increase of wages alone must involve a very large additional expenditure compared to what was requisite in 1896. Therefore, taking these three causes into account, you will see that there is little ground for condemning the government on the score of enormous and unjustifiable expenditure. Population has increased, there has been an increase in the volume of trade, our revenue has increased, wages have increased, there has been a great rise in the cost of materials as compared with 1896, to all of which is due the increased expenditure of $6,000,000.

My hon. friend wants to know what I think about surpluses. I have no objection to tell him. There are three excellent uses to which a surplus may be applied. It may in the first place, be applied to the reduction of taxation. In the second place, we may apply it to paying off the public debt, and in the third place we may apply it to the construction of useful and productive public works. All are good. The question of how a surplus is to be applied is one to be always settled with a due regard to the circumstances of the moment and a due consideration as to which of these particular modes is the best to take. It depends upon a great variety of considerations. You may have a young or an old state. It depends upon the position of the people, whether they are prosperous or whether they are in pinched circumstances. It depends lastly, and very largely, on the possibility of rapid development. I have no hesitation in saying, so far as the government of Canada is concerned, we believe, having regard to the present condition of Canada, that the best way we can use our surplus is to open up our new territory, provide means of communication, cheapen transportation, and so avail ourselves of the great advantages of our position. When the question is put: Which is the best for Canada, whether to attempt to increase population and production by the active aid of the government, or to pay off our debt and diminish our taxes, it is a fair question for debate. But, in this case, I think the House and the country will sustain the government in declaring: Now is the time to use the advantages which are ours and to develop the great resources we possess. Sir, there is a tide in the affairs of nations as well as of men, and Canada is at the crest of the wave at this moment, and Canada will do well to take advantage of the circumstances of her position.

I desire to say a few words with regard to the late conference in London, and the demands which were made on Canada. I have already dealt with the question of the preference and have ventured to express my regret that the British ministers who took part in that conference were not sufficiently well advised of the advantage of the preference to British trade. And I am very glad to be assured, as we were by my hon. friend, that the facts were fully brought to their notice before the conference broke up. And I am glad to know, from recent editorial utterances in England, that they are waking up to the fact that the preference is of very real and substantial value to them. There is another question, incidentally connected with the administration of this country and its finances, on which I would like to say a word or two. The request has been made that Canada should co-operate for the defence of the empire. It has been placed before us in several different ways. We have been asked to say what we will contribute to the navy; and we shall be asked what we will contribute to the army that is necessary to defend the empire. There are two policies before us, and it may not be amiss to say a word or two as to which of these policies is, on the whole, the best, not only for Canada but for the empire at large. One body of our advisers seems to think that the best way for Canada to give aid to the empire is to place a large sum of money at its disposal, and ourselves maintain a standing army of larger or smaller proportions. Now, it is possible for Canada, no doubt, to maintain a small standing army—not a very large one. That is possible. The cost will be great. The advantage to Canada will be small. The advantage to the empire will be smaller still. It will be of very little account to the British empire if we are able to put at their disposal one, two, three or four battalions of a little standing army. But there is, in my opinion, a more excellent way, a way far more suitable to the genius of our people, far more likely to promote the real interest of Great Britain, and far more likely to enable us to afford real assistance to the empire should assistance be needed. That way is for us to lay to heart the lessons taught us by the recent Boer war; to make it, as I would like to see it made, a part of the education of every able-bodied man in Canada, that he should learn some of the elements of drill, and learn how to handle his rifle and become an experienced and trained rifle shot. I believe that for a sum perfectly insignificant, barely half of the cost of the smallest standing army that any one could well propose to maintain, you could have, in a few years in Canada, a body of five hundred thousand riflemen able to give a good account of their enemy at a thousand yards and upwards. And I say that if you but train your people in that fashion you could provide a neucleus of a force through which a most substantial aid could be given to the empire should it ever be imperilled. It is to that I should like to see the energy of the people of Canada and of the Department of Militia devoted. It is an old saying among people of English blood that their first idea, when they have a holiday is to say: It is a fine day, let us go out and kill something. That may be rather barbaric, but it is instinctive. There is scarcely a lad of spirit from one end of Canada to the other, but, if he had the opportunity and the bodily strength, would like to become—would even make considerable sacrifices to become—a good rifle shot. I would avail myself of that instinct and that genius of our people, and would endeavour so to train our people that they might be able, in case of need, to put in the field a force which, if they are to judge from the experiences of South Africa, would render the greatest service to the empire, or to ourselves were we, unhappily, called upon to defend our hearths and homes from an invading foe. There is a mode in which we can, I think, without doing violence to our condition, or without interfering in any way with the habits of our people, prepare to render substantial assistance to the mother country. And I am glad to say that the Minister of Militia (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) is already commencing the work and moving in that direction. Were this done, other advantages, advantages of no slight character, would be likely to flow from it. Every man who knows anything of the training necessary to make a good rifle shot, knows that efficiency is impossible unless one practices the virtues of sobriety and temperance. Moreover, it is one of the things that will go far to instill in our people a spirit of self-reliance, making us respected by other nations as well as by ourselves.

And now, Sir, what is the policy of the opposition, and what is the policy of the government? My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has told you in his speech and in his motion that his policy is taxes, and more taxes, and yet more taxes. I have pointed out, that it is possible for us to protect some, but it is impossible to protect the whole masses of the people. You may give advantages in this way to the few, but you cannot give advantages to the whole population. I doubt very much if the policy which he proposes, and which some of the manufacturers propose—as the hon. gentleman has stated, not because there is any serious difficulty at the present time, but because they dread that at some future day they may be exposed to undue competition from the United States—would really result in producing any of the consequences they hope for. As I read the signs of the times, there is at this moment, beyond all doubt, some danger of over-expansion and overproduction both here and in the United States. There is some danger of a glutted market. And the best advice that I can give, the best advice that any can give in the House or in the country is, that, under the circumstances, it would be well for all concerned, manufacturers and others, to take stock of the situation, to make use of these fat years to make provision for the lean years which must assuredly come sooner or later—not to over-expand, not to overproduce—to pay off debts, if they have incurred them; to place ourselves in a position of having good reserves; to confer (for I am far from objecting to that) with their brother manufacturers and with the chiefs of finance and with the leaders of our banking institutions. They say very truly: Our market is limited, and there is danger of a glut. But the way to avoid a glut is not to go recklessly and without precaution, increasing their productive power, but to make provision in the good times for the possibility they dread that some time or other the slaughter market from the other side may overtake them.

Sir, the policy of the government has been announced by my hon. friend, and it is briefly this: To deal fairly with all, making ourselves the tool of none; to insist upon it that those who come to us for aid should explain openly and in the light of day what they desire at our hands, and why they desire it. My hon. friend did well, my hon. friend deserves commendation in that, when the manufacturers approached him, he refused to have any hole or corner meeting with them, in that he told them: State your case, gentlemen, and it shall have every consideration; but state it openly so that the public may know what you want and why you want it, and that all classes whose interests may be affected may have a chance of being heard before us. Sir, we desire wherever it is possible, to make new territories available; we desire, wherever it is possible, to help forward all efforts by constructing railroads and other means of communication, in making those territories available. We desire to cheapen transport to the utmost extent that it is possible to do so; we desire above all to encourage, as far as lies in our power, agricultural and kindred industries, and all other industries. We desire to encourage a well selected immigration; and I hope and trust—and in that regard I believe that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, has that likewise much at heart—I hope and trust that the immigration which is now pouring into Canada may be as good in quality as it is great in quantity. I have more than once stated on the floor of this House, and I see no reason to conceal my opinion, that immigrants from old Canada, immigrants from the United States, possessed of capital or even without capital, are far more valuable to us, man for man, than any immigrants that can come here from across the sea. I desire to see above all, the exodus from our own country stopped, and to see the people who in former times went to the United States, remain at home and use their energy, use their ability, use their resources to develop the unbounded territory which is now stretching open to us in the North-west.

For the rest, Mr. Speaker, I say to my hon. friends beside me, I say to my hon. friends opposite me: Be content to go on as we have gone; be content to do as we have done; and in the next decade it is no idle flight of fancy to say that the man who holds the postition of Finance Minister in 1913, may reasonably expect to come down to this House and tell them that in place of a volume of trade and commerce of $400,000,000, he has a volume of trade of $1,400,000,000; that in place of a revenue of $60,000,000, he has a revenue of $160,000,000; and it would not surprise me to know that in place of a surplus of $13,000,000, the Finance Minister of the future, if he treads in our footsteps and goes on as we have done, will have an actual surplus of $30,000,000. It is well within the possibilities, it is a thing which has been done again and again in the country to the south of us, in many of the states of the union results equal to these have been actually achieved. Are we Canadians worse, are we Canadians less vigorous, are we less able to make use of our territory than the Americans have proved themselves able, in times past, to make use of theirs?

Now I put it to you, Sir, and to this House, I put it to the people of Canada, which policy do you prefer? Sir, in 1878 the national policy, so-called, was started by these hon. gentlemen, with every conceivable circumstance in its favour. It was coincident with a return of prosperous times, which it had done nothing in the world to produce. Hon. gentlemen had a perfectly free hand. They had able leaders. They had an absolute majority, a huge majority, an unlimited supply of funds, a perfectly submissive Senate at its back, and a largely gerrymandered constituency to deal with. I have shown you where they had arrived in 1896, I have shown you their four years' deficit, I have shown you their twenty-five years of stagnation, I have shown you our depopulation and disgrace. Sir, compare those seventeen years with our seven years; compare our surplus of $13,000,000 with their four years' deficits; compare the million of people we have put into Canada within the last seven years with the miserable showing they had to make in their seventeen years. I say that never since the creation of the world was such an object lesson presented for the consideration of intelligent men as the object lesson which the Trade and Navigation Returns, and the financial returns of the country, show to-day as between the Liberal and Conservative administration. Let us go on in the way we have been going, and I for one, Sir, have no fear whatever of the result.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker—I owe to the courtesy of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) the privilege of addressing the House to-day. He had been charged by his leader to reply to the speech delivered this afternoon by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I asked him whether he would be good enough to give way to me on account of the fact that I have some engagements which will keep me away from the House during the last days of the week and he kindly consented to do so.

The government have resolved to decline to make any changes in the tariff. The hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce have given us the reasons for that decision. There is no doubt whatever that the government feel confident that they are following the proper course. Their motives cannot be impugned. The hon. Minister of Finance, with his usual adroitness and ability, has endeavoured to convince the House that, in point of fact, there was nothing else to be done than what the government are doing. He has told us that the country is prosperous. This is the first reason that he has given us to justify the government in declining to make any general revision of the tariff. He has also informed us that the government have applied for a preference from the British government. The British authorities have not yet replied to that application. The government are desirous of getting a reply before making a general revision of the tariff, so the hon. Minister of Finance has told us. The third reason that has been offered to us is the negotiations that have begun between the United States government and this government with the view of coming, if possible, to a commercial arrangement. These reasons are strong enough in the opinion of the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches to engage them to stay their hands.

Nobody will attempt to deny that this country is prosperous. It would be, indeed, inexplicable that a new country, that a wealthy country like Canada should not be prosperous at the present time. We have had a succession of good crops. There is a wave of prosperity and progress all over the world. We are not the only nation that is prosperous. All the civilized nations of the world are enjoying a great wave of prosperity and progress. The hon. Minister of Finance has proudly told us that by the first of July next, the revenue of this country will have reached the splendid figure of $65,000,000. He also rejoices in the fact that he is in the position to announce a surplus of $13,500,000 on the first of July. There are three main agents of revenue in this country—the customs, the excise and the revenue coming from public works, railways and canals and other works. There are also, to a limited extent, revenues from the sale of lands and other sources. The excise is undoubtedly and exclusively, so to speak, a means of taxation. The customs are a means of taxation when they are applied in a certain way. When they are applied in another way they are both the means of raising revenue and developing the industries of the nation. In 1897, Canada imported for home consumption, $66,220,725 of dutiable goods, $40,397,002 of free goods, a total of $106,617,676. The duties collected on that amount reached a total of $19,891,996. On that amount the average duty paid was 18·613 per cent. In 1902, we imported for home consumption a total of $196,480,190, $118,657,496 of dutiable goods and $77,822,694 of free goods. On that total the average duty collected was 16·466 per cent, while on dutiable goods the average duty paid was 27·265.

There was a total of over $32,000,000 of revenue raised by customs in 1902. This is a very large amount of money. We paid that amount of money because we bought $196,480,190 worth of foreign goods. The total trade of this country in 1902 was $423,910,044. The imports reached the amount of $212,270,158 and the exports amounted to $211,640,286. We imported from the United States $129,794,147 and we exported to the United States $71,197,684—this of course includes bullion, foreign goods and everything else. Therefore the balance of trade against us so far as the general imports and exports are concerned amounts to nearly $50,000,000. As I have said, we imported a total of $196,480,190 for home consumption, and out of that amount we imported from the United States for home consumption $114,774,696, leaving $82,435,494, which we imported for home consumption from other countries. Our total imports from Great Britain for home consumption were $49,022,726, and our total exports of home produce were $196,019,763. The total exports to the United States out of that amount in home produce was $66,607,784; the total exports to Great Britain being $109,347,345. Now, Sir, permit me to call the attention of the House to the composition of the exports of Canadian domestic products to the United States. Out of the $66,607,784 worth that we exported to the United States, there were $33,145,856 of minerals; $4,184,403 of products of the fisheries; $4,139,262 of animals and their produce; $15,517,528 of forest products; $2,555,216 of agricultural products; and $6,024,373 of manufactured products.

Then, we have exported to Great Britain $6,374,877 of products of the fisheries; $14,154,467 of forest products; $52,687,998 of animals and their products; $27,973,503 of agricultural products, or a total of farm products amounting to $80,661,501. We have exported to Great Britain $7,322,602 of manufactured products. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) insisted very strongly this afternoon on the fact that in his opinion the imports of agricultural products to Canada from the United States do not interfere very greatly as yet with the interests of our farming community. That may be so, but we all remember that during the last session of parliament we had a very important and interesting debate in the course of which every one of our friends from the North-west complained bitterly, that the importation of American horses was destroying a large and important industry in the North-west Territories. What is true of that industry is true of others. We are importing large quantities of produce and we are importing large quantities of horses and sheep. We have imported also large quantities of corn. We are all agreed or nearly all agreed that corn is one of those products which should be imported free into a country like this. But, Sir, I ask : whether it would not be a proper policy for this country to adopt to raise the tariff as an average on the farm products of the United States just as high as our American friends have raised their tariff on Canadian products.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it not probable that if the Canadian tariff was on the same lines as the American tariff as far as farm products are concerned, that we would develop our farming industry in a direction where capital is afraid to invest now ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In 1902 our exports of manufactured products to the United States amounted to $6,024,373, and we imported of manufactured goods from the United States to Canada to the amount of $69,536,000. It is an interesting search to look carefully into the American statistics. The last statistics of the United States show that the main bulk of the imports from the United States into this country go to Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, and the North-west Territories. There are $90,935,713 of imports from the United States dumped into these four provinces. Though the same provinces export to the United States products to the amount of only $27,599,746, leaving a balance of trade of not less than $62,333,967 against these four provinces. The maritime provinces import from the United States $7,841,571, while they export to that country $5,496,697. British Columbia is the only province which has a balance of trade in its favour in its intercourse with the United States, its exports to that country being $9,385,720, as against imports from the United States to the amount of $7,011,930.

These figures, Sir, are not new; but I thought that it was necessary for the argument that I am going to offer to the House, that they should be placed before you. They show that in our commercial intercourse with the United States, our American neighbours have the best of us. It cannot be disputed that they are exporting to this country very large quantities and volumes of their goods of all kinds, while we are exporting to them very little. They do not do us any favour in taking our lumber; they need it. Neither do they do us any favour in taking our minerals; they need them. If they did not require these things, they would not take them. We export to the United States a very limited quantity of agricultural products and a very small volume of manufactured goods. I ask whether that is a state of affairs that is pleasing and advantageous to us. I ask whether it would not be to the interest of this Canadian nation to put an immediate end to such a condition of things. Am I very far from the truth in saying that even those who have been brought up in the ideas of free trade or of a low tariff, would agree with us if they had not some pretext for avoiding the issue ? I want to know if there is a Canadian business man, whatever his political persuasion may be, who will stand up and say that it is a sound condition for a country to have always the balance of trade against it. Nobody can say that it is a sound state of affairs, and the hon. Minister of Finance has so well felt the strength of that unanswerable argument that he has offered us reasons why the issue should be avoided at the present time. He tells us that the government hope to come to some arrangement with our neighbours. What arrangement, I ask ? Surely the government do not contemplate lowering the tariff on manufactured articles, so far as the United States are concerned. The government have not intimated such an intention, and I do not believe that any government in Canada would venture, in the face of the high tariff of the United States, to regard it possible for this country to lower our tariff in favour of that country. How could we compete with our neighbours in the manufactures ? The last American census has established that there are ten billions of American and foreign capital invested in American manufactures, that that large capital has produced thirteen billions of manufactured goods in the year 1900, and that the population of wage-earners engaged in those industries is over five millions, or about equal to the whole population of Canada. I ask again how we could compete with such a powerful nation as the United States are to-day ?

But it is represented to us that it will be an advantageous thing for Canada to have reciprocity with the United States in natural products. Let me say first to those who are of that mind, that I do not think they could get it. The protectionist principles and policy are solidly implanted in the minds of the American people—not in the minds of the manufacturers or the workingmen alone, but perhaps more especially in the minds of the farming community. It seems to me that, instead of trying to get reciprocity, our bounden duty to-day should be to adopt a policy of protection for our home products. The United States exported in 1901 $943,811,020 of farm products. How can we compete with a nation equipped, as the American nation is, insofar as its farming industries are concerned. My right hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, (Sir Richard Cartwright) has told us that we are exporting a good deal of agricultural products. The right hon. gentleman seems not to have taken in account, in comparing our position with that of the United States, the fact that a large part of the agricultural products of the United States are consumed in that country. In point of fact, only about thirty per cent of the wheat grown in the United States is exported. Over seventy per cent of that crop is consumed at home. Not more than twenty-five per cent of American corn is exported. The balance is consumed by the Americans themselves, and what is true of corn and wheat is equally true of other agricultural products. Reciprocity with the United States could not, in my humble opinion, benefit us in any way. We could not sell the Americans anything that they do not produce, and if we were to open our gates, they would simply flood our country with the products which they export now to England and elsewhere. In other words, they would destroy many of our farming interests and put us out of business in the export trade. The United States are not a market for our farming community. neither are they a market for our manufacturing community. How much have we exported in manufactured goods during the past year ? In 1901 we exported $16,012,208 worth of manufactured goods. In 1902, we exported $18,000,000 worth. Compare that with the United States. In 1901, the United States exported $412,155,066 worth. In 1901, we exported $24,781,486 worth of agricultural products. In 1902 we exported $37,-152,688 worth. I am indeed very sorry that I cannot agree with the hon. Finance Minister and the government when they give us, as a reason for not revising the tariff, that it is inexpedient to do so while we are awaiting the result of negotiations with the United States. We have done a good deal of waiting. Over and over again, during the last twenty-five years, we have endeavoured to come to some understanding with our friends on the other side of the line. The right hon. gentleman at the head of the government, in a very able address to the Manufacturers' Association last year, solemnly promised that we would send no more deputations to the United States. We are told that this time it is the United States who are coming to us. Well, I have had a good deal of experience in matters of this kind, and I have a notion that, before such letters as have been read to the House were exchanged, some little understanding took place. However, these letters were very convenient this session, and it was undoubtedly the right of the government to give us that excuse—that pretext, let me call it, in all deference.

The other excuse which has been given us is that the government have applied to the British government for a preference and are awaiting an answer. I thought that they had given us a very clear-cut reply. The right hon. gentleman, the Prime Minister, and some of his colleagues took part in the colonial conference. At that conference they tried to come to some arrangement with the British authorities, and the only result we have is the refusal to-day of the British authorities to admit our cattle. And since the colonial conference took place, we have met also with another refusal—the refusal to permit us to compete for the supply of meat for the British army. If we wait for the British government to give us a preference in their markets, I am very much afraid that the revision of our tariff will not take place until we are much older. Let me say that it has been somewhat of a surprise to many of us to find that the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues pledged themselves at the colonial conference to give to the British islands a further preference on manufactured goods in return for some preference to be given us in another direction.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, the language is very clear. There is a clearly expressed intention in the memo. of the ministers that they are prepared to give a further preference on conditions that are not clearly defined. I feel free to speak—more free than I was formerly—my mind on that point. I do not hesitate one moment to say that we have gone very far, we have gone too far, in the British preference. Perhaps, the first preference was justifiable. I shall explain, later on, under what conditions the British preference was enacted. I do not think the Canadian people would be ready to-day to stand any further preference in favour of British manufactured goods than that which has already been accorded. I hope I am not offensive—I do not mean to be—when I say that the reasons I have discussed for not revising the tariffs this year are diplomatic reasons. The members of the government, nearly every one of them, are unfriendly to a protectionist policy. I do not divulge any secrets in saying this; they have made their views public and known. I am only commenting on a fact of public notoriety. The large majority of the government are favourable to a low tariff policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, and it is their right to be so. I grant that they are in perfect good faith. They are in favour of a low tariff, and some of them, if they could, would favour a very low tariff, if not free trade. The real reasons why the tariff was not revised last year, and especially why it was not revised this year, are to be found in the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance. He has told us we should make this country a cheap country to live in. And his sentiments have been echoed by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) this afternoon. The Minister of Finance told us that we must take good care not to antagonize the masses of the people, especially the great North-west. He has invited us to the realization of the fact that the control of the affairs of this country is passing from the east to the west. He has told us that if we wish to invite immigration, if we wish to fill up our splendid North-west lands, we must have a tariff as low as it is possible to make it. He believes that a high tariff is inimical to immigration, is inimical to the masses of the people. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is a student of political economy. And I give him credit for entire loyalty in the expression of his sentiments. Let me say—and it is a pleasure for me to say it—there is no more honourable man than the Minister of Finance. Whatever my differences with him may be on some points, I have always felt, when I was discussing questions of importance with him that I was talking with a man who was always in perfect good faith and loyalty. He thinks, Sir, that a high tariff is inimical to immigration. Will he permit me to offer a comparison to which I would call his attention and the attention of the country. We are supposed to be under a regime of fairly low tariff, under the regime of a revenue tariff, while the United States of America are under the highest protective tariff in the world. The following figures show the number of immigrants entering Canada and the United States respectively for the years given:

IMMIGRATION—CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Canada.
1897 to 1900	141,261
1901	49,149
1902	67,379
United States.
1897	230,832
1898	229,290
1899	311,715
1900	448,572
1901	487,908
1903 (to 1st June)	355,492

And the last week has been a record one so far as immigration into the United States is concerned. And what about the homestead entries into Canada and the United States? In 1900, in Canada there were 7,426 homestead entries; in 1901, there were 8,167; in 1902, there were 14,633. And in the single year 1901 in the United States there were 111,319 homestead entries, covering an area of 15,455,000 acres. In other words, in one year the homestead entries in the United States have been as many as the entire entries in Canada since 1872, and that under the regime of the highest protective tariff in the world.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is convinced that a high tariff is inimical to the agricultural interests. Let him compare the result of a high tariff in the United States, with the result of a low tariff—I call it a low tariff in this country. Our tariffs have always been low; the United States tariffs have always been high. The tariffs of the United States, from the birth of the nation up to to-day, have been, as a rule, twice as high as the Canadian tariffs have been. By the census of 1900 the population of the United States was estimated at 75,997,687. The rural population was, in 1900, 40,364,613, being an increase during the decade of 4,549,605, or an increase of 12·7 per cent; while the total population increased 21 per cent. The exports of agricultural products are also an interesting statistic.

1880	675,961,091
1890	629,820,080
1895	553,210,026
1900	885,858,123
1901	943,811,020

In other words an increase of 132 per cent in exports of agricultural products under the regime of the highest protective tariff in the world. The progress in farms and farm values is also worthy of interest.

PROGRESS IN FARMS AND FARM VALUES.

Farms Nos.

1870	2,659,985
1880	4,008,907
1890	4,564,641
1900	5,781,988
Or an increase since 1890 (in round numbers)	1,200,000

Farms Value.

1870	$ 9,262,803,861
1880	10,197,096,776
1890	13,279,252,649

Live Stock.

1870	$ 1,525,276,457
1880	1,500,464,609
1890	2,208,767,573
In 1890 the total farm values of the American nation was	$15,982,267,689
In 1870 it was	8,899,966,998

The figures of the census of 1900 for the whole country are not available. However, the Agriculture Department reports an increase of more than $350,000,000, in the farm values of the cereals alone in 1900 as compared with 1896. The value of the live stock on the farms of the country which was in 1896 $1,727,926,084 was in 1900 $1,981,054,115.

The exports of agricultural products have been increasing all the time in the United States in spite of the large consumption of their home market:

1898	853,683,570
1899	784,766,142
1900	835,858,123
1901	944,059,568
Every year there has been a large surplus of exports over imports, the last year being	415,718,885

Now, Sir, so much for agricultural products and immigration. What about population, under the highest protective tariff in the world? In 1870 the population of the United States was 38,588,371; on the 1st of June, 1901, it was 77,647,000. In other words, the United States of America have doubled their population during the last thirty years, always under the regime of the highest protective tariff in the world. What have we been doing in this Canada of ours? We have a great country, as rich in minerals, in farming land, and in every other respect as the United States. In 1870 our population was 3,689,255; in 1891, the census gave us a population of 5,371,315. If our population had increased in the same ratio as the population of the United States we should have now 7,378,514. In other words, we are short 2,007,199. In 1891 the population of Canada was 4,833,239. From 1891 to 1901 our population increased by only 538,076. In 1891 the population of the United States was 63,884,000. In 1901 the population of the United States was 77,647,000, or an increase of 13,803,036. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and the hon. Minister of Finance have spoken in glowing terms of the trade of this country. They have told us that we are forging ahead by leaps and bounds. I am glad to say that this is true. This country is going ahead, but would it not be possible to go ahead quicker than we are going now? Because a man is prosperous in his business, is that a reason, if he is a man of ability and of courage why he should not endeavour to do better than even in the past? To judge of the trade of the country it is not out of place to see how the balance of trade lies? The balance of trade is to a very large extent the book-keeping of the nation. The hon. minister of Trade and Commerce reminded us to-day that we have had a balance of trade for some years. He has forgotten to tell us that during the last year the balance of trade has been slightly against us. We imported in 1902 $212,270,158 worth. Our exports were $211,640,286. The balance of trade against us was $629,872. We are losing ground. The hon. Minister of Finance knows it, all students of the blue-books and trade of this country know it. We are losing ground year by year. In 1901 our balance of trade was not as high as during the year previous. It was only $6,072,107. In former years it was more. We are losing ground because we are importing too much, because our tariff is not high enough. Why are we losing ground when we have such vast resources at our disposal? The United States are not losing ground. Look at their balance of trade. I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) to these figures. He is in sympathy with the protectionist policy. He is, I say it again, and he knows it. I know his mind as well as he knows his mind. He is a protectionist as pronounced as I am, not quite as open as I am, but as pronounced as I am. He has done his best to keep the tariff where it is, and I compliment him on his efforts on that account. But it is my special pleasure to call his attention to the splendid results that are achieved elsewhere under a tariff that he would like to see adopted in this country. What are the balances of trade in the United States? In 1897 the excess of exports over imports was $286,263,144; in 1898, $615,432,676; in 1899, $529,874,813; in 1900, $544,541,898; in 1901, $664,592,826; in 1902, less, but still large, $478,398,453. In the last six years the excess of exports over imports in the United States has been over $2,500,000,000. Why is it so? Simply for the reason that the United States are keeping up a tariff which on dutiable goods is 49·83 per cent and on free and dutiable goods 28·91 per cent. While the tariff of Canada in 1901 on dutiable goods was 24·835 per cent, and on goods dutiable and free 12·424 per cent. In 1902, on dutiable goods our tariff was 25·182 per cent, and on our total imports 13·207 per cent. The progress of manufactures in the United States has simply been marvellous. When those who, like me, are believers in strong national tariffs speak of manufactures, we seem to annoy some of our hon. friends who do not share our views. The word 'manufacturer' is obnoxious to them; they are called sharks, they are called thieves, they are called by all sorts of bad names. Let me say immediately that in this discussion the manufacturers of this country enter in a very limited way. There are only a few hundred manufacturers. My hon. friends on the treasury benches have received during the last years the support of as many manufacturers as have my hon. friends on the other side of the House. During the last election in Maisonneuve the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) and his friends made it a point to get the signatures and the names of the manufacturers of the city of Montreal on his nomination paper. This is not a question between the manufacturers and the masses of the people; we are, I hope, but one people in this country. In 1870 the exports of the domestic manufacturers of the United States amounted to $68,279,764 and in 1901 they amounted to $412,155,066, or 28·22 per cent of the total exports of the United States, the agricultural exports being 64·62 per cent of the total. During the last ten years the number of manufacturers in the United States has increased 44·2 per cent. The value of the products of American manufactures in 1900 was $13,019,251,604. The number of people engaged as wage-earners being 5,310,598, and the capital invested $9,853,630,789. The United States has become the leading exporting nation of the world. Last year the total exports of the United States reached the wonderful amount of $1,487,764,991. England comes next with exports amounting to $1,365,048,400; Germany next with $1,338,733,000 and France next with $804,069,800. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is proud of his surplus, and he tells us that by July the first he will have a surplus of $13,500,000; he has had several surpluses since he has been in office. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to know what surpluses they have had in the United States.

In 1900 the total receipts of the United States were $669,595,431 and the total expenditure $590,068,371, leaving a surplus of $79,527,060.

The total receipts of the United States in 1901 were $609,316,530 and the total expenditure $621,598,546, leaving a surplus of $77,717,944; or in two years the surplus of the United States amounted to $157,245,040.

Having given those figures, having compared the result of the relatively low tariff of Canada with the high tariff policy of the United States, I want to ask: What the present fiscal policy of this country is and means? The United States have maintained a tariff, not only for revenue, but for protection. We claim to-day to have a tariff for revenue, and the balance of trade during the last year has been against us. What is our tariff? Is it not a tax-gathering tariff? Is it not a stand-by tariff? Is it not a marking time tariff? Are we not marking time now? The tariff of this country is practically the same that was adopted in 1879.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It has been weakened a little instead of being strengthened.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It has been weakened, let me say immediately, to a certain extent by the late Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster. I was then in the Conservative party, and I know that in the province of Quebec we did not share his views at all when he reduced the duty on certain articles. We thought he was going in the wrong direction then. The Liberal party came into office in 1896, and in 1897 there was a revision of the tariff. A large element of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec especially, had joined the Liberal party. The province of Quebec had been for many, many years a Conservative province; a Liberal-Conservative province. This is not the occasion to discuss the reason why some of us, many of us, thousands of us, after the death of Sir John A. Macdonald, thought fit to part with our former allies in Ontario and to join hands with the Liberal party as then constituted and led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. SPROULE. That's where you made a mistake.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, I don't think we made a mistake then. I do not regret anything we have done. Speaking for myself, I have nothing to regret. I think it was a very useful thing for this country that the Conservative party was defeated when it was defeated. If it had been defeated before, it would have been better for itself and better for the country, perhaps. It is not good that a party should remain too long in office, no matter what party it be.

Mr. CLARKE. Time for a change.

Mr. HOLMES. There is not much consolation for you in that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There was a revision of the tariff in 1897. An inquiry had taken place. The Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues, I was one of them, went into several towns and cities in this country to consult public opinion and to take consultation with the large interests at stake. Some of us were protectionists. I was then a protectionist, as I am now. My former colleagues will not reproach me with not having done everything I could to keep the tariff as high as possible. I carried on the fight to the best of my ability. There was a compromise. The tariff was revised. On the whole, the tariff has not worked badly; it would be going a great deal too far to say that it has; it would not be fair to say so. But I say that the tariff has not worked as well as a stronger and higher tariff would have worked. Of course, if the past utterances of some of my hon. friends of the Liberal party had been carried out, the tariff which is in existence to-day would not be where it is. We would have simply wrecked and destroyed this country. It was out of the question for any government in 1897 to try to carry out the utterances which some public men had delivered in the past. They were the first to recognize this. It was perhaps a little painful to them; but it seems to me that they were wrong in feeling sorrow, because I have yet to find a man who has been in public life for any great length of time who has not been obliged to change his orientation many times. The revision of the tariff of 1897 has placed it about 2 per cent less high than it was before. We did not do more than that. And when my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was this afternoon denouncing the former tariff, the tariff that I supported myself, when he was telling us that the tariff enacted in 1879 and kept on the statute-book up to 1897 had simply allowed the manufacturers to pocket the money of the people, I was saying to myself, if it was so, I do not know what it is now. Because there is not much difference in the two tariffs; the present tariff is about the same thing. We even raised the tariff in 1897 as against the United States on many articles. Open the tariff book and you will find that on many articles we raised the tariff in order to give the English preference. In keeping our tariff as we have kept it, we have been looking on, while many nations of the world with which we are trading have increased their tariffs. The United States have kept their tariff as high as they could. In 1897 they raised it, not for revenue only, but to encourage their home industries. Last year my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in his budget speech said that he would not revise the tariff that session, because there were reasons why he should not do so. The census returns of manufactures were not available, and the London conference was on. But the words of the hon. Minister of Finance, which I read in the House on another occasion, conveyed to the country the impression that the tariff would be revised this year. The business men of the country took those words as a pledge for a revision of the tariff at this present session. The words of the Finance Minister of last year were a great deal more definite on that point than his words of this year. Last year my hon. friend did not argue on principle against a revision of the tariff. He did not argue that the masses would chafe under a higher tariff. He did not point to the people of the west as an obstacle against a revision of the tariff. He simply said, we are not ready now, because of the reasons I have stated; but we realize that conditions have arisen in the world that will make it necessary for us to revise the tariff at some future day. These words, I say, were understood to mean a revision this year. I can appeal to the business men of the country—they took the words of the hon. gentleman as a promise. This year my hon. friend does not make any promise of a revision in a short time, but he tells us that he is afraid a revision of the tariff in the direction of protection would bring high prices; he is afraid the people of the North-west would organize against it. Why should the people of the North-west rise and organize against a national tariff more than the people of any other part of the country? I want to know that. We are prepared to do anything in reason for the people of the North-west. We would be glad to do it in the future as we have been glad to do it in the past; but they must remain Canadians commercially, as Canadian as we are in the older provinces. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance told us that the manufacturers do not need a revision of the tariff in the direction of further protection—that it is not a higher tariff they require, but more labour and more space. Mr. Speaker, give the manufacturers of this country, the industries of this country, a proper policy, and the labour will be on, and the space will be on. Would my hon. friend the Minister of Finance permit me to tell him that this is the weakest argument he has ever propounded in this Chamber. Why, why, why! the industries, the manufacturers of this country could not find labour, they could not find space, in a country like this! They could not find space room in a country like this! The argument is not worthy of the hon. gentleman's great ability. He tells us that the manufacturers are holding the market. How are they holding it? We exported to the United States last year $6,000,000 of manufactured goods, and the United States sent to this country $69,000,000 worth. How then are we holding our own? Where are we? My hon. friend surely has not weighed the figures which he has before him. Because if he had, it would be impossible for him to use such an argument. My hon. friend has given utterance to expressions which will not be easily understood. He said in his speech:

> Later on there might be some changes, that there may be a necessity, at some early day, to make further tariff changes than these which

I now propose, but if so, the extent to which these changes will go and the character of the changes, may, to a considerable degree, depend upon the attitude of certain other countries toward Canada.

What is to be the character of the changes? When some people go to ridings where low tariff ideas prevail, the words of my hon. friend will be read to the electorate as indicating that the changes will not be towards protection, and when such candidates as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) will go before the people, they will say: Now we have a promise of a change towards protection. I say, without any hesitation, that this is not a policy, it is simply politics. This country wants a definite and clear policy on such an important question.

My hon. friend believes that our manufactures are holding their own. He has in his own province a very important industry—an industry, which, if it were fostered and encouraged and developed as it should be, and as a similar industry is fostered and protected in the United States, would become one of the sources of wealth of Canada. I refer to the iron industry. Would my hon. friend permit me to inform him that during the last six months there have been $25,000,000 lost in that industry. There has been a loss of $25,000,000, direct and indirect, in connection with the iron industry during the last six months.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) That is because it is protected. That is the reason it has gone down.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If that be so, how is it that the hon. Minister of Finance is just adding in his budget an item of protection on steel rails. It is largely because the iron industry is not protected as it should be, that the depreciation in the stock has been what I have just stated.

That cannot be denied by any one who knows the state of affairs. There are other industries, which are losing money and which went on with their operations, relying upon the words spoken by the hon. Minister of Finance last year. I would not be a prophet of evil, but I have good reasons for knowing that within a short period, unless my hon. friend the Minister of Finance makes further changes in the tariff on other lines, there will be financial difficulties, there will be losses on some industries which my hon. friend well knows. I know that there are in Ontario and the province of Quebec several industries which cannot live under the present tariff. There is one thing that surprises me. This Liberal side of the House is rather empty to-night. I would like to see it full. But what surprises me is that there are so many members of parliament on this side who have told me that they share my views, who have written me and told me repeatedly that they share my views, and who have not been able to impress their views on the government. I say it openly, I say it from the bottom of my heart, that I fully expected that the Liberal party, with which I have been connected during the last ten years, would carry out the policy it was understood in 1896 they would carry out. I am weighing my words. I know what arrangement, what understanding took place between some public men. I know what took place. I do not divulge any secrets. I know what we did in the election of 1896 in Montreal. I see within the radius of my eye public men who, at our request, came to the city of Montreal, went to the manufacturers, with the knowledge of the leaders of the party, and told them not only would the tariff not be disturbed, but it would be changed in the right direction when the proper time came. There was no secret about that. I shall not give names. There are men who hear me—I am sorry there are not more on those benches—who know that I am perfectly right. I am out of office because I could not stay in office under the present circumstances. I have had only but pleasant relations with most of my colleagues and have for the most of them the greatest respect. But I could not possibly stay in office when I knew that the policy we are following now is not the right policy—when I knew what understanding took place formerly. The tariff has worked as well as it could because we have been passing through years of prosperity. But after all we have not developed so marvellously. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, and my hon. friends from the maritime provinces, should take a lesson from the past. Before confederation they were most of them free traders.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) We are still.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I know that some of them, very respectable and venerable, are still free traders. We respect their views, but may I ask them to consider the position as it is to-day? They are losing representation in this parliament. Why? Because they have lost population. And why have they lost population? Because they have not sufficient industries. They are very proud of their Sydney works, and we are proud with them, and ready to encourage them. But, if we are to carry out those free trade views to which some of them are still devoutly attached, we would remove the duty on coal and we would not consent to have a duty on steel rails. They would object, and yet when we ask our hon. friends from those provinces to be logical, to give protection to some of our industries, as we are obliged to give protection to their special industry, they reply that they are free traders. They are protectionist where their special industry is concerned, but they decline to join us in the preparation of the tariff that would cover the whole country.

I am asked what kind of a tariff I would like to have. In point of fact, before I arose to speak, some of my friends said to me: Are you going to tell us what kind of a tariff you would offer to the country if you were in a position to make the tariff? I have no objection to say what I would do if I were once more 'the master of the administration.' I would have a policy that would favour and protect and foster and develop the manufacturing industries and the farming interest of our country just as effectively as the American tariff protects and fosters and develops the manufacturing industries and the farming interests of the United States. I do not say that that tariff should necessarily be as high as the United States tariff is, but it would be built on the same lines. Let us take a leaf out of their book. It seems to me that it is a very poor consolation for us to hear, in reply to our request for a higher tariff, that the control is passing from east to west. In my humble opinion there should be no east and no west. We should have Canada, and Canada only, in view. The control of the policy of the country must be national, not sectional.

The best markets of this country at present, in my opinion—and it will be so more and more—are the home market and the British market. Let me quote Mr. Carnegie on the value of home markets. This is from his St. Andrew's address:

> In economic circles 'the law of the surplus' as I have ventured to call it, attracts increasing attention. The manufacturing establishments are increased year by year until they become gigantic, simply because the more made, the cheaper the product. By giving men constant employment, and having a reputation of never stopping, the best men are attracted and held—an important point. The manufacturer on a large scale can afford to make many contracts in distant parts of the world, and even some at home, at a direct loss in times of depression, knowing that, upon the whole, the result will be less unprofitable by running full than running short time or stopping. Hence, those possessing the most profitable home market can afford to supply foreign markets without direct profits, or even at a loss, whenever necessary. . . . Politicians give far too much attention to distant foreign markets, which can never amount to much; and far too little to measures for improving conditions at home, which would increase the infinitely more important home market.

Our friends in the United States have progressed marvellously, as a whole, under a high tariff, but the farmers have, perhaps, benefited more than any other class of the community. Let me read a few words from the final report of the industrial commission, page 196:

> Tariffs in the United States have been agriculturally justified on the ground of their indirect influence in furnishing home markets for the products of the farm. Alexander Hamilton, while secretary of the treasury, in his well-known report on the encouragement of manufactures, regarded this relation as a vital feature in his memorable policy. By the creation of manufactures, he pointed out that such a home market was created. By the diffusion of these manufactures throughout the country the consumer was brought nearer the place of surplus production, and the necessity for distant transportation was thereby eliminated and a near-by market secured more permanently than any foreign market could be.

That is common sense.

> Another fact bearing directly on the question of the promotion of agriculture by tariffs is the fact that the level of prices for farm products is determined very largely by the price which the surplus portion of the country's product brings in the world market, where competition with all other countries is active. The retention of an increasing proportion of the farmers surplus for domestic consumption, and the exportation of a decreasing proportion of the crop, would tend to the maintenance of a higher level of prices to the farmer under the conditions of a practically exclusive home market. It is this consideration that encourages rural enterprise to produce less of those articles, a part of which have to be sent abroad in competition with all other countries such as grain, and more of those articles which are in increasing demand for domestic use, namely, small fruits, dairy products, poultry, eggs, &c. This implies that diversified and intensive agriculture is necessary for the improvement of farm prices, without coming into competition with foreign producers for so large a part of the surplus crop as has been the case in the past.

Now I wish to ask who is the hon. member within hearing of my voice who will deny—I appeal to the most pronounced free trader—that great centres of population such as Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Hamilton and others are the best markets for the farming community? Our farmers do not produce for export alone. What pays them better is what they take every day or every week to the market. Who can deny that? If you increase the population of the country, if you develop the industries of the country, you increase at the same time, the home market for the benefit of the farming community. That point cannot be disputed, and still it does not seem to appeal to our low tariff friends. They would rather stand by their theories than grapple with the facts face to face. I have just said a word of the English market. England is the greatest food importing country in the world. We are not alone in the field. The United States, Germany, France, Denmark, in fact all the nations of the world export to England.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S..) Free trade England.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. After having been high protection England. She is now free trade England, it is true, but is it not equally true that free trade England is to-day protecting her farming community against Canada? Is it not a fact that free trade England declines to admit Canadian beef for protection's sake? Mr. Hanbury has told us that openly. I am reminded that England is free trade. Is there a man in this parliament who would venture to say that we could practice free trade as England practices it to-day ? If there is a man ready to do that, let him rise in the House and ask parliament to pronounce in its favour. We can export to England nearly everything of which we have a surplus. Let us build up our agricultural interests by a strong tariff ; in other words, let us strengthen the position of our farming community as the Americans have strengthened the position of their farmers. Let us build up a strong basis for our farming interests, and then let us compete in the markets of the world with all other nations. Two things must go together, transportation and the tariff, and those two things should be organized scientifically. We should not delay, we have in the past only been marking time.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce reminded us this afternoon that we have lost several millions of our population. The United States have attracted them. They have crossed over the line and most of them have become American citizens. The maritime provinces have lost more, perhaps, than any other part of the country; my province has lost a great deal. Why have we lost so many of our children ? Because there was on the other side of the line a nation with a strong national policy that had built up its industries. In 1894 the United States, under Mr. Cleveland's administration, lowered their tariff a little, although it still remained very high. Immediately a depression followed and a crisis was at hand for the American people. The Democratic party was defeated, and in 1897 the United States congress reined the tariff. Let me read the heading of it : 'An act to provide for revenue for the government and to encourage the industries of the United States.' These are plain words, there was no ambiguity as to the object of the tariff of 1897. It was enacted to counteract the evil effects of the tariff adopted under the Cleveland regime. In a very interesting book entitled 'The Elements of National Economy,' Prof. Robert Ellis Thompson speaks in this way of the tariff question of the United States :

> Nine times in one hundred years the American people have changed their financial policy, sometimes carried from protection toward free trade by the influence of specious theories, but as often driven back to the policy of protection by hard experience. The two periods of longest continuance in any policy is the protectionist period which followed the establishment of the government (1789-1801) and the protectionist period in which we are now living. Four times the scaffolding of the tariff has been torn down from the uncompleted edifice of our industrial development, and as often the work has been begun again,—if not from the foundation, yet from a point much less advanced than had been reached under the previous protective tariff. This time it seems to be the nation's purpose that the scaffold shall be kept up till the roof is on.

It is such a policy as that I would like to help build in this country. I would like indeed that the work be started immediately. This session will not close, I am confident, without that vital question being sifted to the bottom. I for one will do my best to achieve that end. The government has made a change or two in the tariff, but that is not a policy. The government is telling us that they do not know when it will be, in their opinion, advantageous for the country to revise the tariff. They tell us that the character of the tariff has not yet been outlined in their minds.

The hon. leader of the opposition has made a motion which is practically a repetition of the motion he made last year. Let me compliment him on the speech he has delivered. On both sides of the House it is admitted to be one of the ablest utterances that have been made on the question of a tariff in this parliament. It is delightful to hear questions of that importance discussed in such an able manner as the tariff is being discussed at the present time. The Minister of Finance has made an able speech. The right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce has also delivered one of those bright efforts for which we always cheer him, even though we do not share all his views. I do not say that the motion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition meets all my opinions and sentiments, though it goes far my way. His speech is clearer than his motion. His motion has the right ring; but if I am allowed to do so, I would like to supplement it and to make my own position clear before the country by proposing at a later period the following motion : In reading it I am giving notice of a motion that will be studied by my hon. friends on both sides of the House. It reads as follows :

> This House desires to express the opinion that in order to assure the permanency and the further progress of the existing industries, as well as the creation of many new ones that only wait the proper policy to spring up ; to inspire greater confidence to Canadian, British and foreign capital ; to secure for the farmers now tilling our soil and those that we invite to share the blessing of our institutions and the wealth that Providence has placed at our disposal, the full advantages of a prosperous home market ; to comply with the legitimate desire of the working classes to see their labour rewarded by fair and uninterrupted wages and by comfort in their families ; to render impossible the slaughtering of our markets by the produce of foreign industries, of foreign combines, of foreign agriculture and of cheap labour countries ; to bring about a quicker development and a more rapid expansion of our vast resources ; to promote closer commercial relations between the different provinces of the Dominion and between this Dominion and the mother country ;
> It is the bounden and imperative duty of the government to revise and readjust, without delay, the present tariff in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to the determination of the Canadian people to adopt and maintain a fiscal policy adequately and firmly protective of the large national interest at stake. And also to carry out an energetic transportation policy which will give to our merchandise and products of all kinds commodious, quick and cheap access to the markets of our country and to those of foreign nations trading with us.

This is the motion that I will offer to the House at a future date. I will not discuss to-day the tariff in its details. In other words, I will not discuss the different industries, which, in my opinion, deserve immediate consideration at the hands of this parliament. I hope that this question will be thoroughly discussed at this session of parliament that we may make our views known and when we have placed them before the country, the country will decide. I hope that the government will come to a better understanding of the position. I still hope that they will do so. I have gone over the province of Ontario. I have addressed Liberal audiences at their request. I have found everywhere a strong sentiment in favour of a higher tariff. The members of the government from the other provinces perhaps do not know the strong feeling of the province of Ontario as well as I profess to know it. I know I will be told that the government has carried by-elections. We all know what by-elections mean in this country. We all know that they are carried on side issues. We know what a large influence the government has. Perhaps I may be told that the policy I am advocating engenders trusts and combines. My hon. friends who are friendly to the policy of free trade England will be good enough to remember that combines in free trade England have more influence than they have in the United States. There are perhaps more combines in England than in the United States. In the United States combines do not control one-tenth of the manufacturing interests. Therefore, that is no argument. Now, all the nations of the world are equipping themselves. I hold in my hand the tariff recently adopted by Germany. It is practically a prohibitive tariff especially from the farming standpoint. I am glad that the hon. Minister of Finance and the government have at last retaliated against Germany. Why did they not adopt the same policy against the United States? The tariff of the United States is just as unfair to this country as the tariff of Germany is. If the principle that they are advocating and that they are asking their friends to sanction is sound, is good as far as Germany is concerned, the same principle should be applied as against the United States.

Now, let me say one last word about the North-west Territories and Manitoba. One of the influences—perhaps the main influence—which has prevented the revision of the tariff comes from the North-west Territories. That I happen to know. Our North-west friends are wrong in their views. We are prepared to give them cheap, easy, commodious transportation. They have never applied in vain to the older provinces. We have voted cheerfully all the money they wanted, and we are prepared to do so again —I am speaking for myself. Knowing the sentiment of the province of Quebec I speak as I do. We are prepared to do everything to develop the North-west Territories. Why should they be anxious to buy from the United States more than they buy from us? The older provinces are manufacturing provinces to a very large extent. If we establish cheap transportation between the west and the east why should we not supply the west with our goods? We are prepared to increase our transportation facilities by rail and by water. Let us bind this Dominion solidly together. National unity follows commercial intercourse. We are settling the west with foreign elements. Let us have as much intercourse as we can with those foreign elements. Let us trade together, let us unite the country solidly together by a strong Canadian tariff and by a scientific system of transportation. There is no reason why the west should antagonize the east, any more than the maritime provinces should not join hands with us. If they had more industries in the maritime provinces they would have more population. There are already industries in the west. I will have an opportunity of asking my hon. friends from the west to vote perhaps on certain industries that have applied to me for some protection from the farming standpoint, and from the industrial standpoint. Sir, there should be no west and no east. There must be a united Canada and a Canada united with the British empire. The British isles are our best market. I echo the sentiments that have been expressed in this regard by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This young Canadian nation cannot be an independent nation for many years to come. We would be gobbled up by the United States; they would simply swallow us at the first difficulty we would have with them. Small nations on the continent of Europe are not in the same position as we are. Because there is a balance of power to be maintained in Europe by the bigger nations between themselves. France or Russia will not allow Germany to swallow up a small nation. But on this continent we would be swallowed up by the United States without any body caring very much for us, if we were an independent nation now. Within ten or fifteen years we may be, we will be I hope, a nation of ten millions or twelve millions people. And unless we have closer relations with England we may have difficulties. Let us begin now the work of making solid the union of this Dominion with the British empire on a commercial basis. Let us bind this Dominion together and let us bind the Dominion with the British empire.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We have great destinies before us. Why do we not have a policy worthy of our future ? Why wait, wait, wait this year and next year ? Waiting is not a policy worthy of a nation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friends on the treasury benches recognize the necessity of revising the tariff and of having a stronger policy, since they tell us to wait for that policy. Why should we wait such a length of time when our neighbours to the south are invading the markets of the world. We are losing power in the commercial world, the balance of the trade was against us last year.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have wearied the House with such a long speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am in a peculiar position. As I have said, my relations with most of my colleagues have been of a most agreeable character. I have confidence in the integrity, in the honour of most of them. I have worked harmoniously with the great bulk of the Liberal party. I have done what I could for them in days when they were not as strong as they are to-day. I remember very well the days when the Liberal party was scattered to the winds after the Mercier episode in Quebec. My friends, the Liberals from that province were not as strong then as they are now. They found allies in the Conservative party, and let me say to some of them that they have never been loyal to those allies. Let me reproach them on the floor of this parliament for their lack of loyalty and sincerity towards some of us. They know that I am speaking by the book. I for one have been stabbed in the back on more than one occasion, but I forgot all that. A public man must forget and forgive, when he has the true interest of his country at heart. I remained in the government knowing that behind me there were men who were stabbing me in the back. My former colleagues know it just as well as I know it myself. I remained in office for loyalty sake to my leader and to those of my colleagues with whom I was working for the best interest of the country. On the question of the tariff, I could not compromise any longer. It may be said that I am not a good party man, and I stand ready to accept that reproach. If I am asked to give up opinions in which I firmly believe in order to remain in office, I cannot do it. There are things on which a public man cannot compromise ; on which he cannot give up his views. The question of the tariff ; the question of transportation, on which I have spoken in the House so often, are two questions on which I hold strong views that I could not possibly give up. I felt that I was no longer in sympathy with several of my colleagues and I went out of office. I have no ill-will towards them. I do not know if I will remain in Canadian politics. I like my country ; I like Canadian politics ; but life is short and I do not know whether I will not trust to my luck on another scene. It would not be a disgrace to the French Canadians ; it would not be a disgrace or a bad thing for the French Canadians to have one of their number sitting in the imperial House of Commons.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have been offered a seat in the English House of Commons, which I have not accepted as yet. I do not know what I will do. If I had money I would go, and I think it would not be going back on my native Canada, I would be able to serve her in the imperial parliament as I have served her here. Well, we shall see later on. I give this explanation because I want to close these remarks by saying that in the position which I take I have no personal ends to serve. My ambition is satisfied. I started very humbly in life ; I had the great privilege of being a member of this parliament and of being a minister of the Crown. I cannot go higher in this country or elsewhere. My ambition is altogether satisfied. The position which I take to-day has no other object and no other motive than to serve my country to the best of my ability. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for having spoken so long.

Mr. LOGAN. At the request of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and on his behalf, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, the financial statement presented to this House a few days since by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, is a statement different in character, in some material respects, from many that preceded it. It has attracted wider attention than any statement of a similar kind in the history of the confederation. It was looked for with interest in foreign countries, and certain features have aroused great interest in the United States, Germany and France. This statement presented to the House and the country the record of a period of unexampled prosperity. It is a record of increasing wealth, expanding commerce and abundant revenues, for which we need to thank divine Providence, and we should not permit ourselves to believe that we created the conditions by which we profit and that a higher power has nothing to do with the shaping our destinies and interests. The statement of the Minister of Finance gave a reflex indication of the thrill that now stirs this nationality with a sense of new born power, and we may approach its consideration in a spirit of thankfulness that the affairs of this country are in such a prosperous condition, and realizing also that we are upon the threshold of an era of great development which will require the exercise of prudent statesmanship and wise direction.

There are certain features in this financial statement which give me great satisfaction indeed. The imposition by Germany against Canada of a discriminating duty, because of a preference given by this country to the products of Great Britain was utterly unjustifiable. The imposition by Germany of discriminating duties against Canada as a punishment for the preferential duties in favour of Great Britain granted by Canada was an act entirely without warrant. The two countries are on an entirely different basis as regards their commercial relations with us. Great Britain is our mother state and we have advantages in her markets not accorded to us by Germany. No duties are levied in the one case, heavy duties are levied in the other, and the assumption by Germany that we should receive discipline because the mother country, which gives us a free market, is treated differently from the German empire by our tariff, was a high-handed and indefensible act. When we take into consideration the state of our trade with that country, the character of this act becomes more apparent. Our imports from Germany last year amounted to $10,919,944. Our total exports to that country were $2,692,578. The percentage which our imports bore to our total trade with Germany was 81 per cent. Our exports of the produce of Canada, however, were $1,298,634, which would leave our percentage of exports to our total trade 89 and four-tenths per cent. Under these conditions, the action of Germany was little short of insolent, and I cannot but approve most heartily of the action of the hon. Minister of Finance in imposing discriminating duties against that country. And the action of the Canadian government in resenting that move on the part of Germany has aroused the attention of the world and won the approval of the world, outside of Germany. It is instinctively felt that, in taking this course, we have simply stated our rights and asserted our honour. I see it stated in the newspapers that the German government propose to impose a prohibitive tax on Canadian imports. This surtax imposed by our government seems to have led to some earnest use of surtax on the part of Germany, and the feeling against us, I presume, is a very strong one. Well, Sir, I should say to the government and to the Minister of Finance : If the German government wishes to embark upon this course of action, meet them upon their own ground ; and if they prohibit the entry of our exports of $1,300,000, and we prohibit the entry of their exports to us of $11,000,000, then, after trying the thing awhile, let the German financiers and economists figure out what the balance of loss or gain is on the transaction. I think we can stand it, and I feel disposed to say that we had better do it and that it is a good time to assert our own sense of propriety, our own sense of the unfair usage to which we have been subjected. I repeat the government's course in this matter meets my unqualified approbation, in fact I admire the courage which has marked the government's attitude.

Now, in listening to the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and also in perusing the remarks of the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte), to which I had not the pleasure of listening, I find that exception is taken to the course of the government in failing, at this juncture, to enter upon a revision of the tariff, and the assertion is made that the condition of our affairs is of a character to render it proper and necessary to enter upon this revision. Now it strikes me, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary that the reasons assigned by the Finance Minister for deferring action upon the tariff, except in the few inconsiderable instances in which he has changed conditions, are good reasons. We do not know, at the present moment what the premises are upon which we shall be called upon to act. As the Finance Minister says we have the question of preferential trade not yet definitely settled. We do not know what may come of it, but the outcome must necessarily have a very material bearing upon the course which we may pursue with regard to tariff legislation. Then we have the probable reassembling of the Joint High Commission and of negotiations with the United States relating to proposals to have enlarged trade relations between these two countries. If these negotiations are successful, of course the conditions of things will be different from what it would be if the negotiations were unsuccessful. We must necessarily predicate our tariff, to a large extent upon the outcome of the negotiations with the United States, and the relations which may be permanently settled between these two countries. For these reasons—without expressing at the moment any opinion as to the abstract propriety of protection or free trade—I hold that it is the part of prudence to refrain, at present, from definite action until we know the terms we shall have to confront and the conditions we shall have to meet.

In regard to the British preference, my hon. friend from St. Mary's division, in his speech last night, if he is correctly reported, held that this question is already closed, that we have a clear and decisive answer from the British government. Well, this may be the case; at all events, I am quite disposed to agree with this hon. gentleman as to what will be the outcome in this question. I do not believe to-day, and I never have believed, that we could obtain from Great Britain preferential treatment in her markets to any material or tangible extent. I think that the experience that we have had with the preference we have given to Great Britain warrants us in the expectation, now, after four or five years trial, that there will be no response to that concession. And I think that when we examine into this case a little more deeply, we shall be warranted in arriving at the conclusion that Great Britain is not in a position to offer us any preference in her market under any conditions whatever. The reasons that lead me to this conclusion are based upon the scrutiny of British trade returns. These returns show the comparative insignificance of Great Britain's colonial trade as compared with her foreign trade. For instance, I find that in the year 1901, the last year for which we have the returns, the total imports into Great Britain were £531,990,000 sterling. Of this total, £416,416,000 were imports from foreign countries, or 79·73 per cent. The imports from Greater Britain, that is, from all the British colonies and dependencies, amounted to £105,573,000, or 20·27 per cent. Great Britain's total imports from Canada, according to these British returns, amounted to £19,854,000, or 3·7 per cent of the total imports. Now, when we take the exports from Great Britain, we find that the total for 1901 was £347,864,000. Of this amount, foreign countries took £234,745,000, or 67·4 per cent, while Greater Britain, that is the colonies and dependencies, took £113,118,000, or 32·06 per cent, while the Dominion of Canada took £9,250,000, or 2·6 per cent. Now, when our trade with Great Britain is so small that the imports she receives from us are only $3.70 for every $100 of her total imports, while, of every $100 of British exports Canada only receives $2.60, it strikes me as being unreasonable to suppose that England will engage in a system of discrimination in our favour against the vast bulk of her trade with foreign nations, and with the certainty that it will lead to retaliation and bad relations with those countries. I do not think, Sir, that we need expect anything of that kind. Great Britain cannot meet our wishes; such a course would be ruinous to her foreign trade and would immediately involve her in a commercial war with foreign countries. Mr. Chamberlain, at the conference last year, put a low estimate on the value of our preference of 33⅓ per cent, and did not consider it equivalent to a preference in our favour on breadstuffs to the extent of even four per cent. That is, a preference by Canada of 33⅓ per cent on all her imports was not equal to a preference of 4 per cent on a partial list of imports into Great Britain. I confess that, when this breadstuff tax was put on in England, I anticipated without doubt that exception would be made in favour of Canada. I assumed, as a foregone conclusion, that we could expect nothing less; and I confess to a feeling of great surprise when the result proved that the English government did not intend to give us that 4 per cent preference on breadstuffs as a return for the 33⅓ per cent preference which we gave on all our imports from Great Britain.

I imagine, nay I am almost certain, that there is a reason which does not appear upon the surface, and that reason is, not that Great Britain did not desire to do this, not that the rulers of that country felt that it would be an undue concession to us; but I imagine the reason is that it was not considered prudent to do so, that it was known that if this were done it would result in hostile action upon the part of foreign governments. And so we had in this small matter of a four per cent preference and England's declination to give it to us in return for a 33⅓ per cent preference, a proof that England will be deterred from any such action as granting to Canada a preference, by considerations outside of the matter of her trade relations with her colonies. Mr. Chamberlain, in the course of his remarks so far as we have them, asserted that our preference had been a matter of small consequence anyway, that it had not to any appreciable extent stimulated trade with England. Well, I beg to differ with Mr. Chamberlain in this matter. This preference has had two effects. In the first place, it has arrested the decline in our trade with England, a decline which was making rapid progress when this preference was adopted. In the second place, it has led to an expansion of that trade, and a brief examination of the returns will prove this beyond peradventure, as the following figures of our imports from Great Britain will show :

Year.	Imports.
1893	$43,148,000
1894	38,717,000
1895	31,131,000
1896	32,500,000
1897	29,412,000
1898	32,500,000
1899	37,060,000
1900	44,789,000
1901	48,000,000
1902	49,250,000

We had gone down from $43,000,000 to $29,000,000 before this preference was adopted, between the years 1893 and 1897 ; and we had gone up from $29,000,000 to $48,000,000 between 1897 and 1902 after the preference had begun to work, showing an increase of $19,000,000, or 40 per cent in those five years, against a rapid decrease in the preceding term which these figures reveal. Now, this proves that Mr. Chamberlain is wrong, this proves that there was a decline in trade with England, that that decline was progressive and regular. These figures prove that the preference, or something else, arrested that decline, and that there set in an expansion, which amounted to $19,794,000 in five years. Surely Mr. Chamberlain should have been satisfied with this record, and certainly he was not possessed of the facts with regard to trade when he made the assertion that the Canadian preference was a matter of small moment to England, and had produced no tangible results worthy of consideration.

The idea of English statesmen, Mr. Speaker, is one that, in my opinion, we can never meet. I assert again that it is my firm conviction that we should never have given a preference, that one in return cannot be given, that the condition of England's trade with foreign countries renders it impossible for her to do it, and regard for her own interest will prevent her doing it. But there is an idea abroad about a zollverein, free trade within the empire. Well, we could arrange matters probably upon that basis, absolute free trade, the admission of all British products to her colonies free of duty. But, if that is a scheme that meets with the approbation of the British people, it is one that cannot be wrought out. In my opinion, we can never accept it, certainly we cannot accept it under present conditions. I do not believe we ever can. It is not a matter, at all events, that looms up in the near future as one that can be arranged.

Now, with regard to the preference on grain, amounting in round numbers to four per cent, I assert, Mr. Speaker, that the free admission to the American market for our wheat and other cereals would be worth more to our producers than an English preference of four per cent. I assert that the free introduction of American competition on the part of American grain buyers and millers with our own grain buyers and millers, to the wheat fields in the Northwest and to other portions of Canada, would result in greater advantage to our producers of grain than a preferencee in the English market to the extent of their tax upon breadstuffs would do. I think that we may conclude that our aspirations for an advantage in the form of a preference will never be realized, that we come up against the hard-headed common sense of English statesmen and public men, who realize that it cannot be given. She will not permit a considerable tax upon raw material. The competition between England and her commercial rivals is too keen ; the competition with Germany, the competition with the United States, is so keen that a due sense of what is necessary in England's interests will deter her public men from saddling upon her people this or any additional burden in the shape of a tax upon raw material represented in the shape of a tax upon bread. We had better dismiss our dreams in this regard, our hopes of realizing what is impossible, and let the preferential question drop, it will drop in my opinion, for under the conditions of trade as they exist, I believe that we can never realize it. The present preference is purely sentimental, it is a sentiment that is not convertible into current coin. We have not even been able, in return for this sentimental preference, to get the cattle embargo removed. We have not the slightest concession granted to us in return for the preference of 33⅓ per cent ; and its one only good effect, if it has a good effect at all, is that it lessens the burden of customs taxation upon certain lines of imports.

I should not, Mr. Speaker, follow to-day the example of the hon. gentleman who spoke last night, and enter upon an extended discussion of the question of protection. I do not think that at this juncture in our public affairs a discussion of that question as an abstract theory will have practical results, because it is nothing more than academic in reality. As I said before, we have the decision on the part of the government to let the matter of revision of our tariff stand over until we know what developments will take place, what the conditions will be when we are called upon to act. That being the case, it is unnecessary, and a waste of time, in my opinion, to enter upon a free discussion of the principles of protection versus free trade or a revenue tariff policy.

I shall have something to say, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, upon the question of reciprocity with the United States. That question has filled a large place in the history of Canadian fiscal discussions, since long before confederation and down to the present time. The desire for closer trade relations led to a treaty securing for us reciprocity in natural products away back in 1854. We enjoyed the benefits that resulted from that treaty until 1866.

It was then abrogated. We know, those of us who will take the pains to look up the history of Canada during that period, what the practical result of reciprocity was so far as it affected the interests of Canada. We might draw from the experience of that period lessons as to what would be the probable result of a similar line of policy if entered upon again. And so satisfactory, in the opinion of the Canadian public, was the result of that period of reciprocity that Canada has earnestly sought for a renewal of that condition of affairs for many years since then. We sought strenuously to avert the abrogation of the treaty in 1866. Emissaries from this country visited Washington a few months after the treaty was abrogated. After the Liberal party came into power in 1874, one of its first acts was to despatch a commissioner, Hon. George Brown, to Washington, who, in conjunction with Lord Thornton, the British minister, negotiated with the State Department a reciprocity treaty which was not ratified by the Senate. Various other attempts were made, and we have only been debarred of late years from making these attempts by the apparent hopelessness of the efforts which have been put forth. The question is one which has sunk somewhat in public estimation as to its importance for the last two or three years, but it is a question which is as important to-day to Canada, perhaps, as it ever has been. It is a question which has probably to receive again the consideration of the government of this country, and the consideration of the government of the United States, and if it does receive that consideration, it will do so under circumstances, in my opinion, more conducive to a favourable result than have existed since the abrogation of the treaty in 1866. The hon. leader of the opposition, in his speech a day or two ago, asked the reason of the enormous expansion of American imports. Well, the reason is quite obvious. We have maintained a moderate tariff policy towards the United States and the rest of the world ever since this Commonwealth, or Dominion, came into existence. Our duties have from time to time been advanced, but they are still at a moderate rate, at a rate which does not materially impede importation from the United States or any other country, at a rate which, of course, has afforded some protection, which has led to the development of large manufacturing interests, but still at a rate which is not at all a prohibitive rate, under which imports may steadily increase from the outside world, and under which they have steadily increased. Now, our frontier stretches alongside of the United States for 4,000 miles. The people of the United States are our neighbours. They have a very thoroughly developed manufacturing system, the most extensive in the world. Although England exports more manufactured goods, the supply of the domestic market of the United States amounts to much more than the total manufactures of Great Britain. They have an enormous manufacturing interest, and they have reached the point where they are capable of supplying their own requirements, and have a large surplus available for export. Now, necessarily, they are seeking foreign markets. Their conditions as to soil and climate and as to the wants of the people are similar to our own, and they have succeeded in making a long list of articles which exactly suit our wants and which cannot very well be obtained elsewhere. The facility for getting goods there is so much greater than across the ocean that this in itself would act very powerfully in the direction of securing the trade to them. Our merchant can call up by telephone, in New York, or Boston or Philadelphia, his correspondent, asking him to make a small shipment of goods, they will be on their way in a few hours, and they will be here in two or three days. To sort up his stock he can buy as little or as much as he pleases. The advantages are so great, because of the facility for placing orders and shipping goods, and because of the juxtaposition of the wholesale man and the consumer that an enormous trade would naturally grow up and for various reasons, these amongst others, we have developed an enormous import trade from the United States. If the Americans had afforded us the same facilities and the same reasonable kind of treatment that we have afforded them there would be no question raised to-day as to whether our trade relations were on a satisfactory basis. There would be no question raised as to whether we should enter upon the kind of policy that they have been pursuing towards us. The hon. leader of the opposition says that our tariff should be put up as a preliminary to negotiations. Put it up and then you will have something to offer the Americans, put it up, and if they do not give you what you ought to have we would then have the very tariff we ought to have. It is my conviction that this course, adopted at this juncture, would have exactly the opposite effect from that which the hon. leader of the opposition supposes it would have. If we were to enter upon a revision of the tariff such as we would perhaps desire to do in case we should get no adequate concessions from the Americans, it would be a tariff of a character which would create irritation, it would be a tariff of a character that would very likely defeat the object we had in view. It would be flouted in the face as a menace, it would be practically saying to them: Here we have done this; you do what we want or we will keep this tariff in force. I do not think that would be prudent or politic. We should approach the United States in a different manner. The time is near at hand when, in my opinion, we are certain to get very material concessions. I am quite optimistic about the matter. I believe that we will get concessions that will be entirely satisfactory, and so I am thoroughly convinced that it would not be .prudent in our interest to enter upon a course such as we might enter upon, in all probability such as we would be justified in entering upon if no concessions were made.

Our relations with the United States must necessairly, largely govern our tariff policy. It is the country with which we have the largest amount of trade, it is the country with which our trade relations at the present time are most unsatisfactory and our relations with that country must largely govern our tariff policy, and the adjustment of this tariff policy is a matter of so much importance that we do not want to enter upon that adjustment rashly without a full knowledge of the conditions. We want to move slowly and cautiously, we want to move with certainty. In regard to my own feelings about this matter, I am pretty well known in this House to be an advocate of reciprocity. I commenced it long ago. I dare say my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember that I was chosen by Mr. Mackenzie in 1875 to defend the Brown draft treaty when the attack was made upon that treaty in this House by the opposition, headed by Sir John A. Macdonald, and since that time I have been undeviating in my support of the policy of enlarged trade relations with the United States. I have always believed, I believe to-day that nothing will secure greater results or greater advantages to Canada than to remove the absurd restrictions which exist between those two countries, and to enter upon a broader and more reasonable policy as to trade affairs between the two great Anglo-Saxon Commonwealths of the North American continent. But, I have felt, and that feeling grew stronger when the Joint High Commission met at Quebec and Washington, and when I, in common with my brother commissioners, was brought more fully into contact with the question of the trade relations between Canada and the United States, that we have not been fairly treated. I realized more fully than ever before the unfair character of American fiscal legislation towards us, and I have felt a sense of resentment at the character of the American policy towards Canada. I have been actuated in the course I have advocated and in the position which I have taken upon this question by the belief that if we could not get what was fair from that country, that if we are to continue to live under the conditions that have existed during the past, we had better set up housekeeping for ourselves, and adopt a policy which we under normal conditions might not deem it advisable to enter upon.

It was not, Sir, that I was in love with protection as an abstract proposition, it was not that I was dissatisfied with the condition f affairs that existed under our present tariff rates, provided that we were met in the same spirit by our customers, it was not this that prompted me to the course that I believed the proper one to pursue; but it was primarily the conditions that existed between this country and the United States. Last session I introduced a resolution in this House. I introduced it for a two-fold purpose. In the first place, I believed that what was set forth in that resolution represented the feelings of the great majority of the Canadian people, and I thought that the formulating of this resolution would have a tendency to demonstrate as to whether my view upon that matter was right or wrong. I thought in the second place, Sir, and perhaps this was the consideration that had the most weight with me, I thought in the second place that if that resolution did represent the feelings of the mass of the Canadian electors, that it would be very well to have the United States public men in a position where they could consider the resolution, make inquiries if they chose as to whether it represented any considerable degree of public sentiment; whether it represented a public sentiment that was likely in the end to crystallize into legislation if they did not meet us with fairer terms. I put this resolution upon the 'Hansard' largely for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the United States the fact that Canada realized that their treatment of the United States was unfair; realized that we had submitted to that treatment for many years without protesting, and proposed in the future to reverse the action we had pursued; and in the event of failing to secure concessions from the United States that were reasonable and just, that we proposed to adopt the policy foreshadowed by this resolution.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. gentleman pardon me. Did the hon. gentleman endeavour to get an expression of this House at that time in order that the United States would know that that was the policy to be adopted.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say to my hon. friend that I did not; that I did not introduce that resolution with the intention of asking the House to give an expression. On the contrary, I definitely stated that the resolution was tabled for the purpose of having mature consideration by the House and by the country; that it was a matter of so much importance that I did not ask hasty action, and that in fact we had not reached a position for action to be taken with that clear conception as to what was the best course under the circumstances, and under circumstances that might develop. The resolution was as follows :

That this House is of the opinion that Canadian import duties should be arranged upon the principle of reciprocity in trade conditions so far as may be consistent with Canadian interests ; that a rebate of not less than 40 per cent of the amount of duties imposed, should be made upon dutiable imports from nations or countries admitting Canadian natural products into their markets free of duty ; and that the scale of Canadian duties should be sufficiently high to avoid inflicting injury upon Canadian interests in cases where a rebate of 40 per cent or more shall be made under the conditions aforesaid.

Or, that our minimum rate of tariff should be high enough to afford as great a degree of protection as was afforded at present; and that 40 per cent to that rate which was sufficient to protect our industries, should be added in the cases of all countries, without discrimination or naming any, that failed to admit our natural products free of duty.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, that resolution outlines in the rough the course that it would be proper for us to pursue if conditions continue as they are. It outlines in the rough the very conditions we have adopted within a few days with regard to Germany, and even if we were to make a reciprocity treaty with the United States, and that country placed itself upon the same footing as England does in admitting our natural products free of duty. I think the same resolution could with propriety still be put on our statute-book, discriminating against other nations that failed to treat us in the manner in which we would be treated by the United States and Great Britain.

And with regard to this position, Mr. Speaker, while I advise, as Mark Hanna said some time ago : To stand pat on the tariff question; yet, I will state that I think 'pat' is inclined to make a move unless things take a reasonable and desirable shape. And while I am a strong advocate of reciprocity; while I sincerely desire to secure a treaty which will be to the advantage of this country and the United States; yet if we fail, if we are to have meted out to us the same treatment that we have had meted out to us in the past thirty years; I go for drastic measures and I think that I may point to the highly significant remarks of the Finance Minister who said : That the government would be governed by existing conditions, and while he believes in free trade yet they must be governed to some extent by what was done by their adversaries—and I give the Finance Minister credit for being too good a politican to resist a great popular movement for the resenting and punishing of a line of conduct perpetrated towards us such as has been perpetrated for many years past.

The repressive policy entered upon by the United States in 1866, I wish to say a few words about. I noticed in the 'North American Review' the other day, an article from the Attorney General of Nova Scotia which gave the exports and imports from and to the United States during the period of reciprocity, which will require some revision by the Attorney General of Nova Scotia before he has them just right. When the reciprocity treaty went into operation in 1854, we had the governments of Prince Edward Island, of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick, and of the two Canadas; four different provincial governments, and I have had the returns compiled from the American sources of information and from the Canadian sources, and in the Canadian returns I found it impossible to secure the returns from Prince Edward Island. This, of course, would be inconsiderable and would not materially affect the result. The import and export statistics for the period from 1854 to 1866 inclusive derived from Canadian sources are as follows :

Imports from the United States, 1854 to 1866 inclusive..	$332,927,000
Exports to the United States, 1854 to 1866 inclusive..	259,875,000
Balance of trade in favour of United States..	$ 73,052,000

The American returns for the same period give somewhat different results. According to the American results the imports from all British America, Newfoundland and British Columbia included are as follows :

Imports from the United States, 1854 to 1866 inclusive..	$343,326,000
Exports to the United States, 1854 to 1866 inclusive..	318,760,000
Balance of trade in favour of United States..	$ 34,566,000

The balance of trade by the American returns is $34,566,000 and by the Canadian returns $73,052,000. Now, the American people in abrogating the treaty in 1886 were governed to some extent by the impression that the treaty was working against them; that the balance of trade was against them and in favour of Canada. This was the case in the last year ; it was the case because the notice of the abrogation had been given a year in advance, and there was great pressure to rush into the United States everything that it was possible to get in during the time that was left, before August, 1866. But the operation of the treaty during all the period it was in force was to the advantage of the United States, and gave to that country during that period a substantial balance of trade in its favour—seventy-three millions, according to our returns; thirty-four millions, according to their returns. No reason was given for the abrogation of the treaty, which was really to the advantage of both countries, and would have been more advantageous as the years went by. The abrogation was an act of folly on the part of the United States and an act of unfriendliness as well, and the policy pursued since that time and up to a recent period has been one dictated, in my opinion, by the belief that the inflicting upon us of a repressive policy would drive us into the arms of the republic.

The truth was, Mr. Speaker, that we were obliged to seek new markets. The truth was that the abrogation of the treaty revolutionized the trade of Canada. The truth was that this act of the American government gave a new face to the history of this continent, and turned aside the tide of the forces that were setting powerfully in the direction of bringing these two peoples together, and put in place of these forces other forces that repelled them from each other, and brought them to the position they occupy to-day. In 1866 our direct exports of farm products to Great Britain were $3,544,000, and to the United States, $25,042,000. In 1902 our direct exports of farm products to the United States were $7,694,000, one-third of what they were in 1866, while to Great Britain they were $80,661,000, a twenty-two fold increase during the same period. And so our whole fiscal history was reversed. Now conditions were introduced, conditions which the Americans were not aware of, which they have only recently become aware of. All this time they have been living in a fool's paradise, supposing that we were dependent upon them for a market and that they could exercise the same influence on sentiment in Canada which they did in 1866. Our total export trade last year in animals and their products was $59,161,209; and in agricultural products, $37,152,688, a total of $96,313,897. Of this amount Great Britain took $80,661,501, or 83·7 per cent of the whole amount; the United States, $7,694,478, or eight per cent of the whole amount; and all other countries, $7,967,918, or 8·3 per cent. So that England last year took over four-fifths of our total export of farm products to all the world. This is a condition of things greatly different from what existed in 1866, when the United States took twenty-five millions and Great Britain less than four millions.

Under these conditions it is not surprising that the Canadian farmer has practically forgotten about the American market. The benefits that he enjoyed by free access to that market during the existence of the reciprocity treaty are largely a matter of history to him. He has had no practical lessons of those benefits. He realizes in a sort of abstract way that two markets are better than one, that it could do no harm to have access to the American market, that it would indeed be quite beneficial to him; but he has not that keen desire for access to that market that he would have if he were aware of the conditions that would exist if the restrictions were removed. So that, in debating this reciprocity question to-day, we have to recognize a certain degree of apathy with regard to it existing in Canada as well as in the United States.

We have opposed to this treaty, I think me may say, the manufacturing interest; we have probably opposed to it the transporting interest; and we have opposed to it the political influence which is represented by the people in this country who believe that nothing good can come out of the United States, and who do not want to have anything to do with the Americans. We have in favour of this treaty a sort of passive feeling on the part of the agriculturists, and keen desire for it on the part of the lumbermen and the fishermen. These are the forces arrayed for and against the proposition to secure better trade relations with the United States.

We have some developments of our trade in farm products—for I am dealing with this question largely from the farmer's standpoint—that are rather singular, rather unexpected to those who have never examined the question, and are rather suggestive. Last year, while we exported to the United States $7,694,478 of farm products, we imported from that country for consumption, according to the unrevised list which I have, and which will not be varied very much by the revised list, $15,437,213, or somewhat more than double the amount we exported to that country. Among our imports of agricultural and animal products where our purchases for consumption exceeded our sales to the United States, were the following articles: Corn, oats, wheat, wheat flour, corn meal, oatmeal, seeds, small fruits, tobacco leaf, broom corn, hemp, flax seed, horses, hogs, poultry, eggs, butter, cheese, lard, bacon, hams, salt beef, salt pork, hides, skins, wool, and so forth. All that list of articles we imported from the United States for consumption in excess of our exports to the United States for consumption in that country. Well, that is rather a suggestive list. Very few people would imagine that this country, which was believed to be dependent on the United States for a market, which was supposed to be a suppliant for access to that market, would show such a condition of trade in farm products. But such is the case; so that if we were to adjust the commercial relationship of the two countries upon the basis of free trade in natural products, the advantages would be by no means all on one side. Upon the basis of free trade in natural products the balance advantages would perhaps not be on our side. We have west of the Rocky Mountains, the great province of British Columbia, a productive mining region, which has its most economical source of supply of farm products in Washington and Oregon. We have in the maritime provinces a million people who would derive their food supplies from American territories if they could sell their lumber, potatoes and other articles free of duty there. We have a great market for farm products in the mining and lumber regions of Ontario and Quebec. If natural products were on the free list, and there was free interchange between the two countries of all the products of the farm, the balance of trade would be very slightly, if at all, in favour of the one country or the other.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman's proposition involve that Dakota and Washington Territory should supply British Columbia rather than our own western provinces ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I spoke about Washington and Oregon, and not about Dakota.

Mr. GOURLEY. With reference to Nova Scotia, we would not have the agricultural trash they raise in the United States if it were given to us free.

Mr. CHARLTON. Patriotism would have a good deal to do, of course, with arriving at that decision. Now, after this period of more than thirty years of trade relation such as I have described, we had a culmination of affairs in 1902 in our trade with Great Britain and with the United States, which I will briefly allude to. Last year our total imports from the United States were $129,000,000. In 1866 they were $28,794,000. Last year our total exports to the United States were $71,177,000, and the apparent balance of trade last year in favour of the United States was $58,592,000. Last year our total imports from Great Britain were $49,435,000, and our total exports to that country were $117,320,000, and the balance of trade in favour of Canada was $67,884,000.

But a revised statement of our trade with the United States and our trade with other countries, taking into account the imports and the exports of precious metals, would vary that statement, and it is interesting to hear how our trade with the United States would stand on that basis. Last year we imported from the United States $6,062,000 in coin and bullion, which left our total imports from that country, less this coin and bullion, $123,732,000, and our total exports to the United States were $71,177,000. Our exports of precious metals were :

Coin and bullion	$ 1,635,000
Gold dust and nuggets	19,677,000
Silver and silver ore	2,055,000

Or a total of precious metals of $23,367,000, which, deducted from the total exports, left our exports of domestic products and products not the produce of Canada, $47,829,000. If we deduct the $2,894,000 of exports not produced in Canada, it leaves our exports $44,825,000.

My hon. friend from South Oxford yesterday afternoon, in criticising the statement of the hon. leader of the opposition with regard to this very point, wanted to know what difference there was between the exports of precious metals and farm products and anything else. It was, he said, an exchange of what we wanted to sell for what we wanted to buy, which was true enough. But all the nations treat the precious metals on a different basis from ordinary exports. We raise wheat, corn, bacon, cattle and all the products of the farm for sale. We have to dispose of them. They are raised for that purpose. But gold and silver are quite different in their character, and all the nations are seeking to strengthen their gold reserve. There is not a nation which does not look with disfavour on the exportation of gold. They look at that in quite a different light from the exportation of what they have raised for the express purpose of selling. We may at least make a distinction between the class of products we raise for the purpose of selling and the precious metals, which it might be in our interest to reserve here as a financial basis—a basis for credit and banking, and the various purposes for which gold is used.

After deducting this export of precious metals and counting the $47,829,000 as our actual exports, we have a balance of trade with the United States against us of $75,925,000. That balance of trade has swallowed up our $67,000,000 of favourable balance with Great Britain and left about $8,000,000 to provide for somewhere else. This is not a healthy and desirable condition of trade. The United States, year after year, have had enormous balances of trade in their favour, and the result is they are one of the wealthiest nations in the world ; $600,000,000 is no unusual balance in their favour. I look upon it as disastrous to our interests to permit the present condition to continue.

These tables then present the following salient points : First, we have an enormous expansion of exports of farm products. Next, we find that Great Britain takes over four-fifths of the farm products of this country. We are dependent from Great Britain for the sale of $83 out of every $100 we raise. Next, we find a great shrinkage in the export of farm products to the United States—a shrinkage of two-thirds of the amount exported in 1866. Then we find there has been nearly a five-fold expansion of our import trade from the United States since 1866—from $28,000,000 to $129,794,000. We find next that we have had a stationary export trade with the United States. If we deduct the precious metals we exported to the United States in 1866 including inland short returns, $44,000,000 worth, not including the precious metals we exported last year of the products of Canada, not including precious metals, $44,825,000 worth. So we have on the one hand an import trade from the United States five-fold greater than in 1866, while our export trade to the United States remained at practically the same amount. We find that in the thirty-six years that have elapsed since 1866, we have increased our imports from Great Britain $9,370,000, or 23½ per cent.

It will be interesting to glance for a moment at our free list, which is a large one. It amounted last year to $84,314,877. Of this amount the United States had $60,879,347, of which $6,000,000 was coin and bullion. Now, we must take from the United States raw cotton, anthracite coal, hides probably, flax seed and some other articles.

But we can reduce that free list by one-half if we desire to do so—reduce it to the advantage of our own industries and to the disadvantage of American industries. The United States had 72 per cent of our total free list with the entire world last year—rather favourable treatment of a nation that has treated us as the United States has done for a generation past.

Now, a word or two with regard to the import of manufactures. The question may be raised—it was raised yesterday—of the classification of manufactures imported. In the tables I have referred to, whether the classification is entirely right or not, it is the same in the case of both countries, so that the comparison must be reliable as though something were taken from or something added to the list for each. The following figures show the amount of our imports of manufactures from Great Britain and from the United States for the years given :

IMPORTS OF MANUFACTURES.

	Great Britain.	United States.
1898..	$26,243,651	$41,510,312
1899..	31,187,387	49,362,776
1900..	37,328,311	60,473,221
1901..	36,469,135	62,643,640
1902..	41,675,602	69,536,613

Now, Sir, in the last year, 1902, the manufactures free of duty from Great Britain amounted to $7,988,819, while the manufactures free of duty from the United States amounted to $21,195,092. This latter sum goes to swell that enormous free list of $60,000,000. The increase in our imports of manufactures from Great Britain in the four years I have quoted, amounted to $15,432,000, or 51 per cent, while the increase from the United States was $28,026,000, or 67 per cent. And this increase has gone on, notwithstanding the operation of preferential duties, and the United States manufacturers are obtaining a stronger and stronger hold upon our market, their natural advantages enabling them to do so. And all this time the United States have refused to give us the consideration which our liberality towards them would naturally call for, liberality which they have availed themselves of to bring about the results I have shown.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Charlton's) argument, but I am not quite sure whether he proposes to reduce the amount of free goods coming into Canada by a system of protection or by a system of reciprocity.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not prepared to say what might be done with the free list under a system of reciprocity. But, under a system of protection, with a system under which we should have to meet the same condtions as now exist. I would cut that free list in two, and take off as much more as would be possible. I would be governed at all times, necessarily, by our own interest. If it were our own interest to admit a class of goods free, I would admit it free. We would look at this primarily from the standpoint of what is best for ourselves, and secondarily from the standpoint of how we could convince the American that he had better be ready to grant fair play.

Now, with regard to the rate of duties, in every respect the United States seems to have had advantageous conditions of trade. The duties paid last year upon United States goods amount to $15,155,136. This is 11·75 per cent upon the total import from the United States, or 12·54 per cent on the imports entered for consumption. The duties paid on the imports of British goods for the same year were 17·04 per cent. The duties on the goods from all other countries were 26·5 per cent. The rate on the goods from all countries, including Great Britain and the United States, was 15·26 per cent. The dutiable goods imported from the United States paid an average of 25·18 per cent; the dutiable imports from Great Britain paid an average of 24 per cent, and the dutiable imports from other countries paid an average of 37·79 per cent. This would make the duty on the dutiable imports from Great Britain slightly lower than on those from the United States. The hon. member for South Oxford reminded us last night—and his statement was a correct one—that not all the British imports that were dutiable were given a discrimination of 33⅓ per cent, but that this applied to only about $28,000,000, upon which the duty amounted to about 19 per cent. This is correct. I have only to say, in connection with that, that the reduction of duties under the operation of the thirty-three and one third per cent discrimination to 19 per cent, is about 8 per cent lower than it ought to be. If the discrimination were abolished the duty would go up 8 per cent and the cry we have from our woollen interests of insufficient protection would be ended. We have developed in our argument about this matter the fact that Canada is an excellent customer for the United States. The truth is she is the third largest customer for the general line of exports from the United States, and the largest customer for manufactured goods exported from that country. If we compare our standing in this respect with that of Latin America with its 60,000,000 inhabitants, we shall be somewhat surprised with the result of the scrutiny. Last year the United States exported to Mexico and Central America, with a population of 14,000,000, goods to the amount of $45,924,000. These are countries almost as closely allied to the United States by geography and nature as Canada is. Last year the United States exported to all South America $38,074,000 worth of goods; and to all the West India Islands, Spanish, Danish, Dutch, British, French—this excludes Cuba and Porto Rico—goods to the value of $17,020,000. That is to say, to all this enormous region from the northern boundary line of Mexico to Cape Horn, embracing every island in the West India group, excepting Cuba and Porto Rico, the United States exported less than she exported to Canada, by no less than $19,796,000. And, excluding the West Indies and including all of Mexico and Central and South America, her exports to these countries were less by $36,814,000 than her exports to Canada. It is beginning to dawn upon the American mind that Canada is a market worth looking after, that it would be well to take into consideration whether they should not examine a little more closely into trade matters between the United States and this most excellent customer to the north of them. We have had a full generation in the life of man of repression, of bad feeling, of hostile tariff legislation—all upon one side nearly. We are now rounding out that period, and we have to see what the culmination of these conditions is.

If these conditions are to continue, what are we to do? First of all, as I imagine, we have to find out whether they are to continue. That is a question of so much importance that we need to make no mistake about it. We want to ascertain what we may settle down upon and rely upon as likely to be permanent conditions; and when we have ascertained that, then our line of conduct, so far as my opinion goes, would be clearly defined. We are either to get fair play from nations now treating us unfairly, or we are to meet them with their own weapons. That may not be profitable for the time being, it may inflict upon us a little inconvenience, it may raise the price of some things a little higher, but in my opinion that is the true policy to pursue. We want to look to ulterior results, and we want to apply ourselves to a line of conduct with something in view that we are aiming for, and that we can only get by asserting our rights.

Again I refer to the significant utterance of the Finance Minister where he states that notwithstanding and whatever his abstract principles may be, we have got to take note of what our customers and surrounding nations do, and have got to be governed to some extent by the course they pursue. Now, as I have said, we have dealt with Germany already. That question was closed up, we knew where we stood, we knew that we had received the most unfair and overbearing treatment from the overlord of that empire. We knew we had to assert ourselves, we have done it, and we have done it like men; and if the overlord wants to adopt a retaliatory policy and exclude our imports from Germany, I would look upon it with serene indifference; we would simply exclude his goods from Canada and inflict eight times as much injury upon that country as we receive in return.

Now, it is necessary to inquire in a discussion of reciprocity: Is reciprocity desirable? Why, if it is not desirable, we do not want to waste any time on it. If it is not desirable we would simply say to the United States when they make us overtures: We don't want to meet you, we don't want any reciprocity. We have decided what we want to do, you go your road and we will go ours; we don't care anything about reciprocity. Would that be a wise course to pursue? Mr. Speaker, this continent, with its seven odd million square miles under the domain of English speaking people, inhabited by 85,000,000 of people speaking the English tongue, this continent has before it vast, almost inconceivable resources of power and possibilities of development. This continent inhabited by English speaking people, will inevitably exercise a potent, if not a controlling, influence upon the affairs of the world. This great region is now in the possession of two branches of that great stock, with an interesting experiment in one branch of it in the fact that one state of its domain is inhabited by people of French extraction. We have most interesting problems before us. There is one thing that we can rely upon, and that is that in the interest of the world at large, in the interest of every man, woman and child, that lives upon this continent to-day, or will live upon this continent in the future, in the interest of all this, it is in the highest degree desirable that the relations between these two states should be amicable, friendly and intimate, and that the seeds of discord that have been sown for the last thirty years should not be allowed to produce their fruit, of disaster, and that influences should be interposed that will avert such result and will bring these two peoples together under conditions of harmony and good feeling.

So much for this continent. Then we have a wider scope of influence for the English speaking people. We have North America with its capabilities of supporting 500 millions of people, and in my opinion it will have that number speaking the English tongue, within the next 150 years. We have in addition the great empire of which we form a part, the empire with its colonies and its influences ramifying the world, the empire upon whose dominions the sun never sets, the empire that stands to-day almost isolated among the nations of Europe. We have the relations of that empire with the United States to take into consideration, a matter of transcendent importance. Sir, the relations existing between Canada and the United States will have an important, and may have a controlling influence upon the relations that will exist between these two great nations. And so when we stand here and say that this is a question of little moment, we don't care whether we have good relations or evil relations, why, we are taking a most shortsighted and purblind view of the great field of future operations. We are taking a view of our own responsibilities which is far beneath the importance that belongs to them. If we can in any way institute and consummate any policy that will bring together these people, that will put an end to this bickering and animosity, the mutual disregard for each other, these mutual statements of a belittling and insulting character which we see in our press, which are even uttered by our public men, if we can put an end to all this, we shall have accomplished something for humanity, something for the liberty of the world. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I stand for reciprocity. I stand for it because I believe that there is something in it higher than the price of cod fish, than the price of wheat, than the balance of trade. I stand for reciprocity because I believe the infinite possibilities of the future will be promoted and developed by bringing together these two peoples. Well, now, what are the prospects ?

Mr. HEYD. Very poor.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very poor, my hon. friend says. My hon. friend from St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that we have been working for reciprocity for twenty-five years. Well, I would remind him that he that waits long finally succeeds. You want to exercise patience in waiting. It is true that our applications for reciprocity have not been met with that degree of favour which we would desire. But I have reason to believe that times are changing ; and when our Conservative friends speak slightingly of this, and when they take a position opposed to reciprocity, when they say : You cannot get it, what is the use of trying—I do not sympathize with that position at all. The condition of public opinion in the United States as regards Canada is constantly improving. Those who know the developments of the Joint High Commission, which I am not at liberty to enter upon in detail, know that even then, there was substantial progress made towards the settlement of questions between these two countries, progress that would probably have given us a treaty that we would have considered at that time as satisfactory. That the intervening Alaska question and the indignation of the British commissioners at the course pursued by the United States, broke off those negotiations for the time being, I think was a very fortunate thing for Canada. I believe that when the commisison reassembles, as I assume it will, we shall reassemble under conditions much more favourable to the securing of a desirable treaty than existed when the commission dispersed. I believe that the condition of things has vastly improved, that the Americans have become disabused of their false impressions in regard to Canada, that they understood this country better, that they know that instead of dealing with a little offshoot of the British empire, with an obscure colony, they are dealing with a country possessing the resources of an empire, with a country that will become a vast and powerful state. They are realizing this now. They have seized upon the facts. They were ignorant of these matters because they had never been brought to their attention. The progress of the campaign of instruction instituted three years ago has been most satisfactory and instead of supposing Canada to be a narrow strip of frozen country stretching along their frontier they know now that it is a country of enormous resources, that the isothermal line stretches to Slave Lake and that there are 300,000,000 acres of fertile land, 3,000,000 of which now only are under cultivation. They understand the potentiality of its infinite resources, that this country is about to enter upon the race of progress and run that race not only with giant strides, but with great rapidity, and understanding this—perhaps I may be competent to judge to some extent of the changes in American public sentiment—in my opinion, the time is more propitious than it has been since the making of the treaty of 1854 for securing a treaty with the United States. My hon. friend from St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) thinks, as I read the report of his speech last night, that it is not best to wait for results. The principle of protection he says is too firmly rooted even among the farmers of the United States, to permit us to hope for reciprocity. I would remind him that the reciprocity sentiment has taken firm hold on the great west; that the Republicans of the great Republican state of Iowa, headed by their Governor Cummings, have taken strong ground in favour of radical tariff revision and reciprocity ; that a large share of the Republican votes in other western states share these sentiments, and that the entire Democratic party of the United States vigorously uphold them. Do not lose time, he tells us ; do not wait to see what may be the outcome of these negotiations that are approaching. Proceed at once to state your policy; assume that you know all about it, get your tariff fixed and go ahead ! He says that the right hon. leader of the government had promised to send no more reciprocity delegations to the United States. I do not understand that the Prime Minister has done that. Canada has maintained a most dignified attitude in this matter. When the commission left Washington in 1899 the assertion was made by the Canadian head of that commission, the premier of this country, that Canada was not going back to Washington asking for reciprocity again. He said : We have been seeking for improved trade relations, we know how desirable it is to have an improvement, we know how much these trade relations could be improved, we have exhausted our patience and our resources in the effort to improve them, and if you reach the point where you understand this question and realize that a treaty is desirable, you can intimate that fact to us. Well, they have done that. My hon. friend from St. Mary's, Montreal, says that Senator Fairbank's letters came very conveniently at this season. What does he mean? Does he mean there is collusion between Senator Fairbanks and the Prime Minister of this country? Does he mean that Senator Fairbanks was employed to write letters to the Prime Minister which give colour to the supposition that the commission might sit again for the purpose of affording the premier and his government a pretext for deferring action on the tariff? Does he mean that? I do not think he does. I do not imagine that he does, but if he does mean that he is entirely mistaken. These advances have come from the American government; they have come from Senator Fairbanks at the instigation of and by the direction of the President of the United States—an intimation and an invitation to the Canadian government to meet the American commissioners again for the purpose of renewing the negotiations that were broken off in February, 1899. Now, shall the commission meet? Is it unnecessary to call this commission together again? Shall we proceed to fix our tariff and ignore the probability, nay, the certainty of this commission meeting when we shall respond to the invitation of the United States. I should say certainly the commission should meet. If the United States have made overtures to us, if they have given us an invitation to renew these negotiations, they have done it for a reason. They have done it because they desire a settlement, they have done it because they realize that the position of matters, as it exists to-day between Canada and the United States, is not desirable and realizing this they ask us to meet them for the purpose of entering upon negotiations looking to the possibility of settlement and adjustment of these questions. We are not warranted in assuming that it is not worth while to accept. The fact that the invitation is given, that it is given in good faith, the very fact that this advance is made by them with the full knowledge of the indignation that exists in this country in regard to their treatment of us, with the full knowledge that we have reason to complain, is a sufficient warrant, in fact an imperative reason, why we should accept the invitation.

Now, if we go down, what should be the proper basis of an arrangement? We might as well discuss this matter pretty fully. What should be the basis of the arrangement we should enter into, because I am sure that the premier would be glad to know something about public opinion as it relates to this matter. What should be the basis of the arrangement in regard to reciprocity between these two countries. I am accused, I have seen the accusation in Conservative papers time and time and again, I have heard the accusation, that in the course of some speeches I made before chambers of commerce, merchants exchanges and bankers' conventions, &c., in the United States, I have made propositions that were detrimental and inimical to the interests of Canada and that I have given away the case.

Mr. GOURLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) says hear, hear. I will tell the hon. gentleman how far I have gone. I have said that reciprocity in natural products, so far as my views go, is an essential feature of any arrangement we may make—no palliatives, no concession upon this thing and upon that but reciprocity in natural products all along the line.

Mr. GOURLEY. It would ruin us in 24 hours.

Mr. CHARLTON. Not at all. If we should get to that point the Americans would ask: What would you give us in return? We will say: We will abstain from changing our tariff so as to apply the process of the strangulation of the import trade in our country. If you give us free trade in natural products we may possibly, in addition to the retention of the moderate features of our tariff, now so favourable to you, abolish the British preference, and make your position under our tariff laws the same as that occupied by Great Britain. My hon. friend can judge as to whether I have given away our case and he can judge as to whether or not we can obtain reciprocity on that basis. It will be advantageous to us. I suppose I may be optimistic on this subject. I have mingled with American public men, with the leading American statesmen, I know the beat of the American pulse, I think the American people realize that they have pursued a fortuitous and absurd policy towards Canada for thirty-five years, they are prepared to adopt a new course, to bring about improved relations between the United States and Canada, and they are prepared to do what is fair to consummate that arrangement. My hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) says it would ruin us in twelve months.

An hon. MEMBER. In twenty-four hours.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, that is rather rapid.

Mr. GOURLEY. That is just a simile, you will understand.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, of course. We fortunately are not left in this matter without some criterion to go by, without some experience to guide us, without some developments in that same line, the results of which may be of service to us, may teach us pretty unerringly what the probable outcome of such a policy would be. When the American union was formed in 1787, it adopted the policy of free trade between the then thirteen states comprising the union and that has continued to be the policy of that nation from that date to this. From time to time new states were added; from time to time new territory was acquired; finally the bounds of that nation stretched to the Pacific and to the gulf of Mexico and embraced the Mississipi valley; and yet, with all the diversity of climate, of production, of interests that existed in that country, and they are world-wide almost; with all the apparent reasons for protecting one section against another; protecting the farmer of New England where he had to struggle to produce crops, against the farmer of Illinois who had but to tickle the soil with a hoe and it laughed with the harvest; notwithstanding all these diversities of conditions which my hon. friend would say undoubtedly required the intervention of the tariff tinker and the protectionist; notwithstanding all this, that country has lived under free trade for a century and a quarter, has prospered under free trade; this great zollverein extending from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian boundary, has prospered as no nation has ever prospered. And to-day the domestic commerce of that country reaches the enormous sum of forty billion dollars, sinking into utter insignificance the foreign trade of any nation in Christendom. That is the result of free trade, of the free interchange of natural products; of all products between all the sections of that nation with all their diversities of climate and conditions.

Now, I would like to know why the same conditions that apply to the forty-five states of the American union cannot be extended to the seven provinces of the Dominion with the same result. Of course we cannot carry it so far; we cannot have absolute free trade—at present at least. We must have a tariff on certain things for revenue, but we can have absolute free trade in the productions of the soil, and to the extent that we reach out towards free trade, to that extent we will share the blessings that that country has derived from the practical operation of this principle.

Mr. CLANCY. That sounds like unrestricted reciprocity.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, it does, and unrestricted reciprocity would bring very good material results probably. We are not ready for it but we will go as far as it is prudent and take half of the loaf, and enjoy the prosperity and the blessings that will come from it.

And now with regard to the mutual interchange of natural products which my hon. friend says would ruin us in twenty-four hours, but which of course is a simile. The interchange of natural products in my opinion would produce only the most inconsiderable effect upon the prices in the United States. We want free admission to the American market for our farm products and our lumber and our ores, and for what reason? It is not that we may depress the American prices to the level of our own, but that we may secure the American prices and put the difference between the prices we get now with the duty taken from us and the price we would get then, into our own pockets. That is what we want it for. Our exportation of natural products to the United States is so insignificant and will be so insignificant in comparison with the great bulk of the products for consumption produced in this country, that very little effect can be produced by it. Take for instance the article of eggs. Last year we exported 11,590,000 dozen of eggs and 237,000 dozen of these went to the United States. One hundred and thirty-nine millions and eighty thousand eggs; quite a lot of eggs. We could not increase that export 50 per cent if we were to try. How much would that amount to in the United States. Why, Mr. Speaker, it would amount to less than two eggs per annum for each inhabitant of the United States; one omelette a year. That would have a very disastrous effect on American prices would it not. Why it never would be known; never. I have no time to go into the entire list, but you may go right through the list of farm products that may be exported to the United States for consumption in that country and their relative volume as compared with the production of the United States in the same line of articles would not be greater than in the case of eggs. The whole thing is a bug-bear. The American farmer is frightened about Canadian competition which he has no reason to fear at all. The Canadian farmer, he need not be frightened about American competition because he is a producer and an exporter.

Now with regard to the question we were discussing a moment ago; about the concessions we might make to the United States in return for free trade in natural products. As I said then I repeat now: That I should strenuously take the ground that we should make no more concessions; that we have made all the concessions that can be reasonably asked for. The only thing I would hold out as an inducement would be, not the promise of further concessions, but the assurance that we will withdraw what we have done if we do not get fair play; that in place of a free list of $60,000,000 we will make it $30,000,000; that in place of buying $69,000,000 of manufactures, we would manufacture $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 of them in our own country, and this would be the inducement that the American would need to convince him that he had better adopt the scheme that we propounded.

Mr. GOURLEY. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. GOURLEY. Why is it necessary for us in this Canadian parliament to be for ever disgracing ourselves by appealing to these people across the way, who have treated us like a lot of desperadoes for the last twenty years?

Mr. CHARLTON. We are not appealing to these people; these people have appealed to us. They have sent us an invitation to meet them; we are talking that over; we are arriving at a decision as to what we shall say when we meet them; how far we shall go and where we will stop.

Mr. GOURLEY. They would kick us from the continent to-day if they could.

Mr. CHARLTON. We have reached that point where they are appealing to us; where they have realized that they are sacrificing their opportunities and have pursued a policy which has not been a just policy, and that the day has come when our own action will deprive them of the advantages they might enjoy unless they give in fair neighbourly treatment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we talk about protection. I am opposed to the sacrificing of any existing interests in Canada. I want to see our manufacturing interests prosperous, and I will go just as far as my hon. friend from Nova Scotia if I cannot get fair play.

Mr. GOURLEY. No you won't.

Mr. CHARLTON. But, I have a broad enough view of this case to realize, that in the United States since 1861 that nation has been constantly and consistently pursuing a policy for building up a home market, and that the result of that policy is that they have created a home market which bears a proportion to their population greater than we could create by the most stringent system of protection in fifty years. Now, Sir, if we could with one stroke of the pens of the commissioners appointed by this country and by the United States, if we could secure access to that market which for fifty years has cost the people of the United States untold millions, would it not be to our advantage to get it. I think it would. I think it would be just as good a scheme as to go through, with all the pain, and sweat, and toil, and blood letting that that nation has gone through since 1861 in creating that market.

And now, Mr. Speaker, a few words about the transportation question and the market situation. We have some very productive wheat fields in the North-west, and a crop of sixty million bushels was garnered last year from less than one hundredth part of the area of that country adapted to the growth of that grain.

Now, we are confronted with the problem, how we are to afford that country an outlet to the markets of the world, and whether we shall throw any impediments in the way of the producers of that country reaching any market they may desire. The western farmer will raise wheat for sale, and, like a shrewd business man, he will want to sell that wheat wherever he can find a customer. He will be able shortly to raise all the wheat that he can find customers for; so that it would be the height of folly to interfere with his efforts to reach any market he desires to reach. We want to secure the carrying trade of that country, but it is incumbent upon us to endeavour to do so by fair competition. We do not want to resort to export duties or other unjustifiable repressive measures, in order to force the volume of the productions of the North-west through particular channels. There are going to be hundreds of thousands of settlers from the United States in that country, and they will naturally resent the idea that they cannot sell wheat wherever they can find a sale for it. They will not have the prejudice which my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) entertains against dealing with Americans. They will know that the friends they left across the line are of the same blood as the people of the country they inhabit, and they will want to trade with them, because it will be to their advantage to do so.

Now, Sir, there are several reasons why we had better let them do so. In fact, we cannot prevent it, unless we impose arbitrary restrictions of some kind, such as export duties. The Americans have the game in their own hand. They can remove the duty on grain, and in my opinion they will shortly do it. The western miller desires access to our sources of supply. I am told that the millers at Minneapolis can handle forty million bushels of Manitoba and western wheat.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you aware that the mills at Minneapolis have stopped grinding ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am aware of that, but the little difficulty about freight rates will be adjusted before long, and if not, they can send the wheat down to Buffalo. This wheat will be wanted by the millers at Minneapolis, or wherever they may be, first, to mix it with the softer grades grown in the United States, because it will be necessary to have a certain percentage of Manitoba hard wheat for that purpose. Then, the American milling interest want access to that market for the purpose of stiffening prices—for the purpose of introducing there the system that is in force in the United States. American millers tell me that wheat from Canada and Argentina, when it goes to market must be sold, as there are no facilities for holding it. They are constantly met by competition of this kind, which lowers prices ; and they want to get into this market with their hundreds of millions of capital for the purpose of competing with the Canadian buyer, for the purpose of buying the grain at higher prices than it would otherwise command, in order that they may hold that grain or the flour into which it is ground until they are ready to sell it ; in that way controlling the market, and preventing repressive bear operations, which tend to bring about lower prices. In both of these cases it is the interest of the North-west and in the interest of Canada that they should get into that market. For these reasons, free trade in wheat and the introduction of American competition in the purchase of wheat in the North-west, would be worth more to the producers in that country than the removal of the British preference of four per cent in their favour.

The present value of the American market, aside from wheat, is relatively small; but its prospective value is almost limitless. Changing conditions in the United States are worthy of consideration. First of all, there is the gradual failure of their wheat lands. I can remember the time when the chief crop of Illinois was wheat, when enormous shipments were made, when the elevators of Chicago were bursting with the products of the Illinois wheat fields. To-day there is not enough wheat raised in Illinois to provide bread for one-half the inhabitants of the state. The farmers have gone out of the business; their wheat fields have become exhausted; their crops are of another kind. The same holds good with regard to Iowa, with its two and a half millions of inhabitants. The same will soon hold true of Minnesota, of the two Dakotas, of Kansas. The wheat production of these states is diminishing, the soil is becoming exhausted; and while the wheat production of the United States is growing less and less, the population of the country is rapidly increasing, and the urban population out of all proportion to the rural population. Take, for instance, the North Atlantic division, as it is called—comprising the states of New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, with a total population, according to the last census, of twenty-one millions. Of this population 13,600,000 are in towns of 4,000 inhabitants and over. In the state of New York, out of a population of 7,268,000, 5,176,000 live in towns of 4,000 inhabitants or over. Here, Mr. Speaker, are these vast centres of population, five millions and more in the single state of New York, thirteen and one-half millions in the North Atlantic division, living in towns of 4,000 and upwards, and the population rapidly increasing, and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec nearer to those centres of population than any other producing region on the continent. To reach these centres the farmers of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa, have either to cross our territory or to go past it on the south side of the lake; and our North-western farmers will have just as good facilities for reaching those centres as the American farmers of the far west. This is a question the importance of which we only begin to realize when we come to study it carefully, in the light of all the facts; not taking the superficial view that some take, or the prejudiced view of those who think it is beneath the dignity of a Canadian to deal with an American at all; but looking at the facts from a common sense standpoint, with a realization of the great possibilities that lie before us in the near future. The United States will soon become a food importing nation, its vast manufacturing interests are being developed with wonderful rapidity, its urban population is increasing out of all proportion to its rural population, and the time is near at hand when that country will require from Canada or other countries, a portion of its food supply. These two countries are geographically one. Our North-west is geographically a portion of the Mississippi valley.

Mr. GOURLEY. I deny that.

Mr. CHARLTON. The province of Quebec is geographically as nearly allied to the New England states as to the mouth of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GOURLEY. The United States is geographically an annex of Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON. The province of Ontario has its nearest route to the sea across American territory.

Mr. GOURLEY. No man who studies the map would make such a statement. Study the map of North America, and you will find that the United States is geographically an annex of Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then the annex has got a little ahead of the main body. The two countries, I repeat, are geographically one.

Mr. GOURLEY. Never.

Mr. CHARLTON. The very boundaries between the two countries for a part of the distance which separate them, by the impediment of physical nature, serve to bind them together as a great highway of commerce from the point where the St. Lawrence reaches the American territory, to Duluth. Our North-west is geographically a part of the Mississippi valley, a part of the same country that sweeps up from the Mississippi to the Arctic ocean, a great continental slope to the north without interruption of mountain range, and which can be reached most conveniently and economically by railway communication from the head of Lake Superior at Duluth and from St. Paul and Chicago. This being the case there are these great natural resources which invite communication, which invite trade, and which invite the breaking down of the barriers that exist between the two countries, and the absurd prejudices, such as are entertained by my hon. friend who interrupted me a few minutes ago. There is in progress at present a great movement for interesting American capital in industrial and financial operations in the Dominion. I have friends in the west. I hear from them frequently, and I learn that the movement which is set on foot for removal to the Canadian North-west promises to become an exodus. I hear that the banks of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and the Dakotas are being depleted of their deposits by men who are investing this money in the Canadian North-west. Those who can sell their Illinois farms for $100 an acre, their Iowa farms for $70 an acre, and their Kansas and Nebraska farms for $40 or $50 an acre, and invest this money in the Canadian North-west in land equally as good or better at $5 or $10 an acre, are appreciating the advantages of that exchange. They are selling their lands and flocking to our North-west by the thousands. They are a class of settlers who understand the conditions and are familiar with the work they have to perform. They have gone through the experience once and can go through it again. And a farmer with a half a dozen sons, can sell his farm in the United States, and with the proceeds give each of his sons just as large a farm in Canada as the one he left. I tell you, Sir, we are having a movement in the investment of American capital in our country of which we do not realize the magnitude. And we want to place ourselves in a position to promote and avail ourselves of the results of this movement, and nothing will promote it more rapidly than the adoption of reciprocity between the two countries. Our vast resources are attracting attention. The period of narrowness and exclusiveness and bitterness and ignorance, which characterized certain portions of the public in both of these countries is passing away, and in place of it is coming a broader spirit, a Catholic spirit, a spirit of toleration, a spirit of mutual conciliation which will bear excellent results in the interests of both countries. New conditions, vast possibilities confront us. We hardly stop to realize their magnitude. When this North-west, where hundreds of thousands are to settle in the near future, with its three hundred millions acres of arable land, of which three millions are now under cultivation, this North-west that can increase its production a hundred-fold—when the resources of this country are developed, when its fields wave with harvests, when its surface is covered by farms and towns and cities, then we will see the fruition of the promise we have to-day, and those who have the prescience to look into the future with a comprehension of what is coming, will see their dreams realized, and a great nation established on the northern portion of this continent. We will then look back to the past—if we live to see that day—and wonder at the narrowness and littleness and bitterness displayed by people in the old days before the broad horizon had opened before them. Nevertheless, so long as the present American tariff conditions continue, this rosy picture will not be realized as soon as it otherwise would. If we cannot get a treaty such as I think we can, we have simply to do what I said would be the alternative. We have simply to mould into shape our own resources, work out our own destiny, and build up as we best may the superstructure of our own nation. And whatever may be the outcome, whether we get that mitigation of trade conditions which we hope for, or whether we find that these trade conditions are to be perpetuated, I do not apprehend that we will find Liberals in this House seriously disagreeing. There is a good deal of latitude of opinion allowed here, and the government, while it permits this, will in my opinion, be confronted by a condition of things that will result in popular demand of such volume and potency in connection with this question of trade relations as will lead the government to bow to the wishes of the people. We will mould our course by the developments that are confronting us, that are near at hand, and I repeat, I approve most highly the course of the government in waiting the development of events, in waiting the few months that will enable us to judge definitely and absolutely what is the proper course to be taken. Canada desires to participate in the commercial activities of this continent. If we can obtain this privilege we shall have to shape a destiny of our own. The parting of the ways is just ahead. Providence will decide the matter. We cannot tell what the decision will be, or upon which of the paths we shall enter, whether upon the path of participation of the benefits of free and liberal trade relations covering Anglo-Saxon America, or the path of exclusion, imitation of the policy of the other country, and retaliation upon them for what they have perpetuated and imposed upon us. Let us await the future calmly, resolutely, if you will, without fear or care as to what the result shall be, determined that we will be governed by those conditions and developments, and will view from a patriotic standpoint whatever, in our belief, the necessity of our country requires from us in the line of action.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, it is now half past five o'clock, and I must ask the right hon. leader of the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to allow me to move the adjournment of the debate, in order that I may be first on Thursday.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 5.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS.

SADDLES AND BRIDLES FOR LAST CONTINGENT.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Who had the contract for furnishing saddles and bridles to the last Canadian contingent for South Africa ?
2. What was the price stipulated in the said contract ?
3. What is the total amount paid to the contractors ?
4. Were any complaints made as to the quality of said saddles and bridles ?
5. Were said saddles and bridles used by the contingent ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) :

1. There was no contract. The saddles were furnished from store, and drawn from the units of cavalry throughout the country.

2 and 3. Answered by answer to question 1.

4. I am not aware of any complaints as to the quality of the saddles.

5. So far as I know, the saddles and bridles were used by the contingents.

MEDALS FOR THIRD CANADIAN MOUNTED RIFLES.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Is it the intention of the government to award medals to the members of the Third Canadian Mounted Rifles, in recognition of their services of loyalty to the empire, in going to Cape Town, S.A., and there received orders to proceed to Durban, where they arrived too late to disembark by the 31st of May, the time set as the medal limit ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). The government has no power to award medals ; medals are awarded by the King. With reference to this particular case, I may say that all the Canadian soldiers who served in South Africa will be treated precisely as the soldiers from the British Islands and from the other colonies are treated.

LOWER AND UPPER GAGETOWN MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

Who is the contractor for carrying the mail between Lower and Upper Gagetown, N.B. ? What is the amount paid the contractor ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). In the absence of the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) I beg to answer the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wilmot's) question as follows : There is no special contract for mail service between lower and upper Gagetown. Upper Gagetown and Gagetown along with other offices are served during the season of navigation by the Star Line Steamship Company plying between Fredericton and St. John. During the winter season upper Gagetown is served tri-weekly from Gagetown, J. W. Dickie, contractor ; also tri-weekly from Oromocto by an extension of the Oromocto and Sheffield route, J. W. Malone, contractor. Lower Gagetown is served daily on the route between Gagetown and Westfield, W. H. Bulyea, contractor.

APPOINTMENT OF DR. C. E. SAUNDERS.

Mr. TALBOT—by Mr. Calvert—asked :

1. Has Mr. C. E. Saunders been appointed to the position of experimentalist at the Central Experimental Farm ?
2. Is he a son of Mr. Saunders, director of the Central Experimental Farm ?
3. When was the appointment made ; and what salary does Mr. C. E. Saunders receive ?
4. Who recommended him, and who appointed him ?
5. What was Mr. C. E. Saunders' occupation up to the time of his appointment as experimentalist ?
6. Has Mr. Saunders given any evidence of his qualifications as a scientific and experienced agriculturist ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) I beg to answer the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Talbot's) question as follows :

1. The Minister of Agriculture authorized the employment of Dr. C. E. Saunders to take charge of the work of cereal breeding and other branches of experimental work in agriculture at the Central Experimental Farm.

2. He is a son of Dr. William Saunders, Director of Dominion Experimental Farms.

3. His regular employment in his present capacity dates from January 1st, 1903, and his salary is $100 per month.

4. His employment was authorized by the Minister of Agriculture, who was personally familiar with the work he had already done in the cross-breeding of cereals and fruits.

5. He was transferred to this work from the exhibition branch of the Department of Agriculture, where he had been engaged in preparing a series of agricultural photographs for the Japanese and St. Louis exhibitions.

6. Dr. C. E. Saunders is an honour graduate and silver medalist of Toronto University in the department of natural science, and a doctor of philosophy of the science department of Johns Hopkins University. For some years past he has been employed at intervals at the Central Experimental Farm to carry on the work of cross-breeding in cereals and in hardy fruits for the Northwest, and during this period most of the new varieties originated at the farm have been the result of his efforts.

IMPORTATIONS OF BAUXITE.

Mr. ROBINSON (Northumberland)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

How many tons of bauxite were imported into Canada for the fiscal year ending June, 1902 ? What country, or countries, was it imported from ? What port, or ports, was it entered at ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). The quantity of bauxite imported into Canada during the fiscal year 1902 amounted to 1,524 tons. The countries from which imported, were Great Britain 234 tons, Germany 639 tons and United States 651 tons. One thousand and thirty-five tons of bauxite were imported at Montreal and 489 tons at Quebec.

SOUTH AFRICA AND THE PREFERENCE.

Mr. McCREARY asked :

1. Has the government received from the Winnipeg Board of Trade a copy of the following resolution, passed by that body, in reference to trade with the South African Colonies ?

'Whereas it has been stated in the public press that a proposal for preferential treatment in the customs tariff of the British South African colonies, in favour of the mother country, was favourably received at the conference lately held at Bloemfontein ; and whereas the Dominion of Canada accords such preference, not only to the mother country, but also to such of the colonies as will accede such preferential treatment to the products of Canada. Therefore, be it resolved, that the Winnipeg Board of Trade desires to impress upon the government of the Dominion the importance of at once opening negotiations with the government of the British South African colonies, with the object of obtaining the benefit of a like preferential treatment for Canada, as may be accorded to the mother country.'

2. Has the government sent any reply to said Board of Trade in reference to said resolution; and what was the tenor of such reply ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes ; the communication has been received and acknowledged.

IMPORTATION OF RAILWAY TIES.

Mr. EMMERSON—by Mr. Calvert—asked :

1. Is the government now importing, or intending to import, hard pine, or southern pine (so-called) railway ties, for use on government railway ? Have any such importations already been made, and when ?
2. If so, what quantity of such ties, and from what country, or countries, have such importations been made, or are being made ?
3. What is the cost of such ties, delivered to the railway, on board cars ?
4. What are the sizes of such ties, either already imported, or intended to be imported ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The government is not now importing, nor has it arranged to import or decided to import, hard pine or southern pine (so called) railway ties for use on the government railways.

COST OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. JAMES J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say a word or two in reference to a question answered in this House on the 8th instant, concerning which, perhaps, the Minister of Railways will make an explanation. On the day referred to the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) asked the following question :

What is the total cost (capital account) of the Intercolonial and other government railways ? What is the total amount of money paid by the federal government as subsidies to railways in each of the following provinces :— Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, North-west Territories, and British Columbia, since confederation ?

To this the hon. Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) answered :

The total cost (capital account) of the Intercolonial and other government railways to February 28th, 1903, is as follows : Intercolonial Railway, $69,418,275.54 ; Prince Edward Island Railway, $5,112,435,27.

The question having been asked in the form it was, I think the Minister of Railways could not answer it in any other way than as he did. But it should be understood that the amounts given here include the amounts spent by the provinces as well as the amounts spent by the government of the Dominion of Canada. Without that explanation, the answer as it stands might give an incorrect impression to the House and the country, and also to the hon. member for Saskatchewan. There was a large amount of money spent by the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia on the Intercolonial Railway before confederation, and this was charged to these provinces at the time of confederation. The Prince Edward Island Railway was built by the people of the island, and paid for by them before confederation, the cost being $3,114,-735.11, and that amount is included in the amount given by the minister in the answer I have quoted. The actual money paid by the Dominion government for the Prince Edward Island Railway was $1,997,700.16. I wish to ask the Minister of Railways to make that explanation, because, as I have said, the form in which the question was asked brought out an answer which, unexplained, might be misleading.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, P.E.I.), is entirely correct in the statement he has made with reference to the amount of money which was expended by the respective provinces through which the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway ran at the time of confederation. I think that must explain why those answers were given in reply to the question. The statement which was read by me was handed to me by the officer of the department in the usual way, and was entirely in keeping with the published capital statements that have been put forward from time to time. This has been the uniform method in which the accounts of what is called the capital expenditure upon the road have been tabulated and have been published in the report of the Department of Railways and Canals from the beginning. It is true, as the hon. member has said, that there was expended upon the Prince Edward Island Railway prior to confederation the sum of $3,114,000. This amount was a portion of the indebtedness of the province at the time it entered confederation. It was allowed to enter confederation with an admitted debt of a certain sum, and whatever might be the difference between its acknowledged existing obligations and the sum which was allowed it by way of credit in debt account, was applied either to new capital expenditure by provinces, or would entitle the province to be paid interest on such difference at the rate authorized in the account, viz., 5 per cent. Practically, I think, the statement as given then and the capital account as published now are correct. It shows just what the total capital expenditure was upon these two different roads. It would be misleading to conceal the fact that there had been this large capital expenditure made before confederation. I do not know how it could be very well stated in a more explicit way than it appears in the published report, because the inference is clear, when you read that the government expenditure prior to confederation was so much, it manifestly could not have been an expenditure made by the Dominion government in a direct way. It was already made by the provinces, and if made by the provinces, of course it would be an account to be adjusted between the provinces and the Dominion subsequently to that date.

THE BRITISH CORN DUTIES.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. the First Minister, if he can give the House any information as to the abolition of the corn duties in the imperial parliament, if the abolition applies to all corn and grain imported into the United Kingdom, or only to grain imported from the colonies. I believe a cable has been received to the effect that some action has been taken in the imperial parliament respecting such duties.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We have received no information up to this moment.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance.

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that it will be necessary for any hon. gentleman on either side of the House to offer any apology for making some criticism upon the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance, nor upon the speeches that have followed by hon. gentlemen opposite in support of the position taken by the Minister of Finance. I confess, Sir, as I am sure almost every hon. gentleman in this House must confess, that the speech of the hon. Finance Minister was somewhat disappointing. True, it was not disappointing in that part of it which relates to successful tax gathering, it was not disappointing in regard to enormous and barren expenditures, it was not at all disappointing with regard to the increasing public debt; nor was it wanting in those respects which drew from hon. gentlemen opposite lusty cheers over the inconsistencies of their leaders.

Before I proceed further, I wish to make some remarks about the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He made a very able speech from his standpoint. The hon. gentleman is well known in this House as an old parliamentarian, a gentleman of admitted ability—I am not quite sure that it has always been well directed. But no one can deny that the hon. gentleman is possessed of great ability. I wish in the outset to congratulate the hon. gentleman on maintaining his splendid record of inconsistency, of facing every way that is known, and in fact of facing ways in advance that no person knows anything of. I am not sure but that the hon. gentleman was selected to make that speech ; I am informed he was selected by the First Minister to speak just at that juncture. I am not certain but that the hon. gentleman was selected on account of his inconsistency. Under the conditions that now obtain in this House it was desirable that an hon. gentleman should speak just then so that no matter what he said members on that side of the House could at least quote him against himself, even if he had said something quite the opposite. But the hon. gentleman occupies a very important position in this country. Next to being a minister of the Crown, the hon. gentleman probably occupies the most important position of any man in this House in that he was selected by his leader as one of the Canadian delegates to take part in the international commission who had to deal with grave and important affairs affecting Canada. The hon. gentleman served on that commission, I have no doubt, with his usual ability. Now, Sir, I repeat that I have the best reasons for knowing, in fact I do know, that that hon. gentleman was selected to speak at that particular juncture at the special request of the Prime Minister. Whatever may be said of the hon. gentleman's inconsistencies, it must be admitted that the hon. member for North Norfolk, who had been a member of that commission, was not speaking his own mind alone when he addressed this House, the statements he made were not merely his own inventions ; and the country will understand that he spoke the mind of those hon. gentlemen who are his associates, including the mind of the right hon. the First Minister.

I shall now, with the permission of the House, have something to say with regard to the hon. gentleman's attitude upon that and some other questions. He started out with a renewal of the old campaign of unrestricted reciprocity. There is absolutely no mistake as to the position he has taken. He has taken the position that will at least appeal to one section of Canada, whether it appeals to another section or not. In order that I may make no mistake, I will quote some of his words. He declared that when the delegates went to Washington on the reassembling of that commission, their object was to secure, if possible, reciprocity with the United States. The hon. gentleman pointed to the advantages of reciprocity with the United States. What was the very first prominent advantage which he held out to the people of Canada ? It was that the province of British Columbia should look to Oregon and Washington as the places where they could get their supplies. Then, the hon. gentleman turned to the east and told the people of the maritime provinces to look to the state of New York, or to the state of Maine, in order to get their supplies. It is not difficult to translate that language into plain English and the true translation is that those two sections of Canada were to look to the United States for a market. The hon. gentleman seems to have two schemes. I have no doubt both of his schemes have been thought out and discussed with his leaders, and I am perfectly sure, from the trend of his speech, that they were well and intimately discussed with hon. gentlemen representing the North-west Territoris. One was that the hon. gentleman was to ask for reciprocity with the United States, and failing in that the next course was to be the adoption of a retaliatory tariff. The House, I am sure, is somewhat at a loss as to which of these the hon. gentleman thought would be the more successful, but the one that seemed to please the hon. gentleman most, himself, was that we were to adopt a system of reciprocity. What else did he hold out to these hon. gentlemen from the west? Let me say here that I have no doubt that of all the speeches delivered in this House during the session, copies of the hon. gentleman's speeches will be printed and distributed amongst hon. members from the North-west and Manitoba and among the western people more than the speeches of any hon. member.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. I hope my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) from down by the sea who says 'hear, hear' and gives his approval to the ideas of the hon. gentleman will go down and apologize for the opinions of his colleague who sits beside him. I am not going to say that all of the members from the North-west are going to take the course which I have suggested, but these speeches are delivered for the purpose of appealing to those who are coming into Canada today. We are told that what the farmers of the west want is access to the American market because they could get the best price for their wheat.

Mr. COCHRANE. Nonsense.

Mr. CLANCY. True, it is nonsense, but nonsense sometimes has an effect. Very often nonsense is more serious than truth because it is more difficult to meet nonsense than truth. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has, nevertheless, made use of such language. He has told the farmers that if they could get reciprocity with the United States the wheat market of the United States would be infinitely better for them than the British market. The hon. gentleman tells us that if we had reciprocity with the United States the question of a market for the farmers of the North-west is solved. He knows perfectly well that that country is rapidly settling and that the greater number of settlers who are going in there now are Americans, a class of men whom we all welcome to this country, a class of men who have been brought up and who have lived under institutions similar to our own, but a class of men who are Americans and not Canadians. Does the hon. gentleman wish to cultivate a Canadian spirit or an American spirit? Does he mean to say that the people of western Canada are to turn their faces towards the United States? He went so far as to say that geographically the west was part of the United States, that it was part of the great Mississippi valley, and he told the people of that country that insofar as they were geographically concerned they did not belong to Canada, but that they belonged to the United States and that they must look to the United States for their supplies, that their wants must not be supplied by Ontario and the maritime provinces, but by the Americans who live adjacent. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, when he is making that appeal to a false and un-Canadian sentiment in this country, when he is endeavouring to tell the people that they are infinitely better off in the United States commercially and politically, perhaps, for all I know, because that is the trend of his argument, what we are improving our waterways for, what are we improving our railways for, what are we spending large sums of money to improve Canadian transportation for, if the great stream of Canadian wheat produced in Manitoba and the North-west Territories is to be diverted to the United States? Is that expenditure to be of any use if the plans of the hon. gentleman are carried out? I have very grave doubts if hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to go so far as to say that we are to have one Canada west of Lake Superior, and another east of Lake Superior. I think no more dangerous doctrine could be enunicated in this country. No man is less affected, perhaps, than I am, by what may be called false sentiment, but, this is no false sentiment; it is a danger to Canada and the hon. gentleman who is giving utterance to such ideas takes upon himself a grave responsibility.

This leads me now to the position of the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in regard to the re-assembling of the International Commission. The right hon. gentleman has given us, in clear and distinct language, what he thinks should be, and what I should judge he very well knows, will be the position of the Canadian delegates when the commission meets. But, is there not a question whether the commission should meet at all? Is the government in a position now to retrace its steps, to violate the pledge which was solemnly given more than once by the right hon. gentleman to this House? What was the pledge which the hon. gentleman gave to this House? Why, Sir, when that commission met and they were unable to agree the House and the country approved of the position which the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues took upon that occasion. These hon. gentlemen took a course that every true Canadian supported and applauded. What was the position which they took? The Americans laid down such conditions for the settlement of the Alaska boundary question and in regard to other questions at issue, and which were discussed by the commission, as to make it utterly impossible for any self-respecting ministry in Canada or elsewhere to accept these conditions. What were the conditions? There were two important and distinct conditions laid down. In one instance the American commissioners insisted that if it were found that by friendly negotiation they were unable to come to a conclusion in regard to the Alaska boundary question, and it was left to arbitration there should be six commissioners, three upon each side, and that there should be no umpire. To that the right hon. gentleman stated in this House more than once that he objected, that he thought, and he gave several reasons for his opinion, that it would be impossible to arrive at any decision or to secure a settlement of the question upon that basis. Another condition laid down by the American commissioners was that in the event of the Lynn canal and the establishments being found by the arbitration to be in Canadian territory they were still to remain a part of the United States notwithstanding any such finding. The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues very properly rejected that proposition. Well, Sir, that condition was so absurd, so absolutely at variance with reason and common sense that no man could entertain it for a single moment on any ground whatever, but we are told by the right hon. gentleman that the Americans have receded from that position and that therefore the question, at least so far as that is concerned, has been somewhat solved. I ask the right hon. gentleman if the recession of the American people from the most absurd proposition that was ever made in regard to any international arbitration is one that will be thought of advantage to Canada in any sense whatever or one that the British government should take advantage of? Such a contention was absolutely at variance with any idea of settling such an international question, and there is no thanks to the American government for having abandoned it, because there was never any rhyme nor reason for setting it up. We are to have an Alaskan boundary commission, and I venture to say in advance that there is no possibility of any decision being arrived at. I believe that the American people are simply temporizing in order to find out what the mind of the Canadian people is. And, as to reciprocity with the United States, what was the position of the right hon. the First Minister upon that question in its earlier stages. In 1899 ('Hansard,' page 1061), he said:

> My mouth is closed on the subject and I cannot speak but there has been a statement made officially by the foreign office coming from the commission itself which has given to the public why we could not agree. The American commissioners did not want to have an umpire. They wanted to have three commissioners on one side and three on the other side. To this we could not agree because such an arrangement would not give us a definite settlement of the question. They also wanted it agreed that if the establishments they made at the head of the Lynn canal were found to be in Canadian territory they would continue to remain part of their own territory. We could not agree to that.

Well, every Canadian will agree in that sentiment. And speaking further the right hon. gentleman said:

> We came to the conclusion after giving the matter our best thought that the only rule which could be adopted in the position of things which existed in that distant part of the country were the rules so recently adopted for the settlement of the Venezuelan question.

The right hon. gentleman was firm in his decision at that date. He went on to say:

> I have only to say this, however, that the attitude which we have taken has the approbation of the people of Canada generally and it is an attitude which must and will be maintained to the end.

I ask the right hon. gentleman now, if he proposes to give away the case of Canada. Does he propose to maintain to the end the policy he announced here. Does he not think that it is giving away the case of Canada when he consents to an international commission on which there is to be no umpire, and which in all human probability cannot come to a just decision. I ask the right hon. gentleman if he and his friends are prepared to go to Washington now to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States when he has already declined in expressed terms to do any such thing. In the face of his declaration, I ask the right hon. gentleman if he thinks there is now any use whatever in going to Washington to try and negotiate a reciprocity treaty. I was going to say that the right hon. gentleman is in a humiliating position. Perhaps there is some truth in the statement made by a member in this House a few nights ago when he said that the letters that have passed between the Prime Minister and Mr. Fairbanks are a mere piece of theatricals, and that the whole thing was arranged for the purpose of impressing this country with the view that the Americans were seeking to have the commission reassemble to discuss reciprocity. Read that statement of the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) in connection with the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and in connection with the position of the First Minister when he came back from Washington disappointed as every Canadian was disappointed—not disappointed with the efforts of our Canadian delegates but disappointed with the barren results which must follow any discussion with a set of gentlemen who seem to have no reason on their side. Let me point to what the right hon. gentleman said about the commission when he came back in 1899. Here are his words :

I have no right to speak of what took place in the commission, but I have a right to refer to what is now in the minds of the Canadian people, and if we know the hearts and minds of our people at present I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling in Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity.

I ask the right hon. gentleman now if he has changed his mind upon that subject. I ask him what he thinks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who has two policies up his sleeve, one for a hostile tariff against the United States and the other for reciprocity, and he is quite indifferent which he gets so long as he gets one of them. Then we have the Minister of Finance facing in another direction and holding out some comfort to the people who are looking for a revision of the tariff. In view of all this, is it not quite apparent to every man who reads between the lines that the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was quite right when he said : That this is all a piece of by play to deceive the public. It is quite evident that the government wants to run an election under two flags. They will go to the people of the west and say : We will give you reciprocity with the United States and you can sell your wheat in the United States so that you need not be troubled about the congestion of the railways which prevents your products from being carried to the market. And then they will make another appeal to the people this side of Lake Superior and they will say to them : There will be no further concessions made to the United States; England will remove the tax upon breadstuffs in our favour and you will get your goods into the British market on better terms than the people of other countries. Is that not a fair reading of the whole subject, that hon. gentlemen stand in the position to-day of refusing to go either forward or backward, but are simply asking the people to wait for a revision of the tariff ? But there is danger of the people of this country being deceived on that subject now as they have been deceived in the past. When we have hon. gentlemen opposite supporting the government in all their contradictory positions, may we not conclude that that will be continued ? We have ministers of the Crown charged in this House by one who was but recently their colleague, with having deliberately gone to the manufacturers in Montreal in 1896, with the consent of the First Minister and his colleagues, and telling them in unmistakable terms that they need not fear any tariff revision that would injure them, but that they would have such a tariff revision as would give them greater advantages than they had at that time. That charge was made by a gentleman who holds not an inconsequential position in this country, but by one who knows the hearts and minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, the late Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). He did not mention names, though he said that some of them were in the House when he spoke, but the names are well known. When that charge of duplicity was made against ministers, what did we find ? We found the right hon. First Minister, instead of rising in his place and repudiating the charge, asking my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to get up and make a speech on reciprocity. Do hon. gentlemen pretend to ignore a charge of so serious a kind ? The hon. member for St. Mary's Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said : There are gentlemen sitting on this side of the House (meaning the ministerial side) who have written me letters, who have discussed the matter with me, who have stated to me that they are in favour of my views. And the hon. gentleman even went farther, and alluded to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson). I am glad to see my hon. friend in his place to-day, and I ask him if he repudiates the charge made by an hon. gentleman who was a few days ago a colleague of his, that he was in league with those who went to the city of Montreal for the purpose of pacifying the manufacturers, and that he was a protectionist and had done everything in his power to maintain the protection which existed when he came into office. I ask the hon. gentleman if he now repudiates that statement, or is willing to stand convicted of having committed himself along with his colleagues to a position which is scarcely creditable to any set of men in this country.

I now wish to direct my remarks to some of the hon. members from the North-west Territories, and I ask what was the position of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) ? Why, Sir, his position was that after these hon. gentlemen had made the bargain that I have referred to with the manufacturers in the city of Montreal, after they had, as it were, secretly sold out the people of this country, he told his people that he loyally accepted the position taken by the government on the tariff. He said they had had a revision of the tariff, but had not lowered it ; on the contrary, they had left it generally where it was before. Yet we find some of these hon. gentlemen from the North-west Territories, like the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) crying out against a possible revision of the tariff, feeling and knowing that it is higher in some respects than it was before. Notwithstanding this these hon. gentlemen have no word to say in denunciation of the present tariff as they did of the tariff of 1896. I ask these hon. gentlemen what they have been doing all the time they have been in this House. Has there been one honest or courageous enough to rise in his place and show that he was earnest or serious on the subject by moving a resolution that the tariff should be reduced ? Not one of them has made any attempt to put himself on record in this way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose, with the permission of the House, to deal shortly with the tariff.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend from West York who says 'hear, hear,' not many years ago thought it would be better to blow up the bridges at Niagara and the tunnel crossing from Sarnia to Port Huron, and to stop all the possible means of comunication between this country and the United States, than to continue the state of affairs that existed when he wanted unrestricted reciprocity. The same hon. gentleman, who is a worthy colleague of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), made an eloquent speech only a few days ago, with tears in his heart and in his voice for the market gardeners and their sufferings under the tariff ; yet we find that hon. gentleman voting religiously against what he had said, and declaring by that vote that he was humbugging the market gardeners, and was just as earnest in that speech as he has ever been. He turned his back on them without any regard for his professions or his utterances.

Now, we are told that Canada is very prosperous. Well, I am sure nobody will marvel at that. Would it not be an astonishing thing if Canada were not prosperous, if Canada were not caught in the whirlpool of expansion which has spread all over the world. Would it not be a wonderful thing if even the evil position taken by the hon. gentlemen opposite could be the means of preventing that ? Hon. gentlemen have taken to themselves credit for having borne some part in bringing about that prosperity; but the fact is that they have been no factor in the case at all ; they have been lost sight of ; they have been as powerless to do good as to do harm. The hon. gentlemen were no factors in it. No matter what position they took, it did not make any difference. But we are told that they have changed the times in this country. We are told by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that we have a new state of affairs and that all the circumstances that once justified his extreme utterances in this House have ceased to exist. There was a time when the hon. gentlemen opposite, who now applaud an expenditure of $64,000,000, cried out against an expenditure of $40,000,000. It is only six years ago, in 1896, when these same gentlemen denounced a Conservative government, which took from the people in round numbers $36,000,000, and to-day they laud to the skies a government which is taking from the people $65,000,000. We find those same hon. gentlemen who, in 1896, bewailed the sad position of Canada, labouring under a debt of $158,000,000, which they described as a national mortgage, now wildly cheering a debt of $271,000,000.

But we are told that our trade has vastly increased. True, Mr. Speaker, it has. But why has our trade increased ? Both sides will concede that Canada is in a prosperous condition. The Conservative party has never put itself in a false position and will never, for the sake of a momentary or paltry party gain, seek to decry the condition of the country. But in discussing the increase of trade, let us compare the record of the two parties. We fortunately are in a position to do so. We had a Liberal government in power from 1873 to 1878 and a Conservative government from 1878 to 1896, and we have had a Liberal government in office in the last six years. And I may preface this comparison by remarking that we should not attach too much importance to the policy of a government—whether Liberal or Conservative—when considering the progress or otherwise of the country in matters of trade. Our aggregate trade—and I want to call the attention of the hon. member for North Norfolk to this—in 1873 was $217,000,000, and in 1878, after the Liberal government had been five years in office, it was only $170,000,000. In other words, our aggregate trade decreased under the Liberal regime, $47,000,000 during five years. Perhaps the hon. member from North Norfolk will find some means of explaining this decrease to the advantage of Liberal administration.

We then had the Conservative party coming into office in 1878 with an aggregate trade of $170,400,000, and we find that at the end of the next five years, that aggregate trade has increased to $221,000,0000, showing an increase of $51,000,000, which I consider was a very fair showing. In 1897, the Liberal party came into office with an aggregate trade of $249,000,000, which in five years was increased to $414,000,000, being an increase of $165,000,000. There have been of course in Canada, as everywhere else, periods of depression. The Conservative party had to pass through two periods of depression during their regime of eighteen years. The Liberal party had but one period while it was in office. If we are to attribute anything to the policies of political parties, we have the record of the Liberal party, which was in power five years, from 1873 to 1878, during which the aggregate trade of Canada decreased to the extent of $45,000,000, and immediately following that we had five years of Conservative policy and administration, during which our aggregate trade increased $51,000,000. We must bear in mind that our aggregate trade is one which does not depend entirely on the policy of the government. The trade within our own country, our domestic trade, is dependent in a great measure on that policy, but our aggregate trade is one over which, save as regards the offering of facilities for transportation—the government has absolutely no control. Let me now take up the question of expenditure. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs, who is an authority on the trade question, if he will, before this debate is through, point to us any great public work in Canada resulting from that expenditure ? We have had immense expenditures in this country and great public works constructed, but not by any Liberal administration. We have nothing to look forward to and nothing to look back upon, to put to the credit of this enormous increase in our public expenditure which has been the result of the present administration. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they can point to any compensation for that immense expenditure ? I have no doubt that these hon. gentlemen will endeavour to evade the point by replying to my challenge in vague and airy generalities. Let me go more into detail. A good deal has been said with regard to receipts and expenditures of the Post Office Department. Our hon. friend the Postmaster General—who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place—has shown an extreme anxiety to convince the country that he is going to balance the two sides of the ledger. His chief ambition sems to be to wipe out a deficit, without any regard to the efficiency of the service. The efficiency of the service seems to be with him a very secondary consideration. Well, I do not think that in a sparsely settled country such as this, where new territories are being continually opened up, there need be any necessity for any Postmaster General to apologize for having a deficit in the management of his department. If he does not show a large deficit, he is not giving the people an efficient service. Let me point out in detail how the hon. gentleman has managed his department. Take the number of post offices, which existed in 1890, just six years before the Conservative party went out of power. In order to be frank and fair, I shall compare the six years' period of Conservative administration with six years under the present government. First let me give the increase under the Conservative government. The number of post offices existing in 1890 was 7,913 ; six years later, in 1896, it had increased to 9,103, an increase within those six years of 1,190. Now, the increase under the present government is paraded as a proof of the splendid administration of this economical minister, this hon. gentleman who wants to balance the ledger. But what is he able to show at the end of six years, in a period of great expansion, when Canada was making greater strides than ever before in her history, when the need for post office expansion was most keenly felt ? Surely, if the hon. gentleman had thought of anything except having eulogiums pronounced upon himself through his own mediums, the labour journals, the percentage of increase should have been infinitely greater than before. But we find that the number of post offices under his administration increased from 9,103 in 1896 to 9,958 in 1902, an increase of 855 post offices. This is all that the hon. Postmaster General can show in a period of unexampled development—an increase of 855 post offices against an increase of 1,190 in the previous six years. The hon. gentleman speaks of having wiped out the deficit. I am ashamed to think that the hon. gentleman was so anxious to wipe off this deficit that he resorted to methods that were neither more nor less than a shameless repudiation of the country's obligations. Taking advantage of the outbust of patriotism which marked the great Victorian Jubilee, the hon. gentleman issued jubilee stamps of large denominations. Under the influence of the prevailing patriotic fervour, men instantly bought these stamps, supposing that they were as good as the bills issued by the Treasury department, believing that they represented so much money and that Canada would redeem them. But the hon. gentleman refused to redeem these stamps, and so wiped out nearly half a million of dollars and came nearer to balancing the ledger than he ever did before. A great deal is made of the pretension that the hon. gentleman has reduced the postage. The Postmaster General tells us that he has given the people great concessions by the reduction of the domestic letter postage from three cents to two cents, and of the imperial postage also to two cents. Now, in the first place, I may tell the hon. gentleman and his friends that this move is not in the interest of the general taxpayer of Canada. There may be a time when the government which happens to be in power, whether Conservative or Liberal, can make the reduction of the postage to the advantage of the mass of the common people. But this reduction which the hon. gentleman has made, as I say, is no benefit to the ordinary taxpayer. It is idle for the hon. gentleman to say that all who choose to do so can avail themselves of this reduction. But to put upon the statute-book a law, or to make any move on the part of the government, is no benefit to the people if the people are not in a position to take advantage of it. Besides, it must not be forgotten that, while the hon. gentleman has made his spectacular reduction in the rate of letter postage, he has made very substantial increases in the rates on other postal matter. The newspapers are a very important element in the life of our people, for Canadians are careful readers. To enable the people to keep abreast of public questions they should have their newspapers furnished them as cheaply as possible. Formerly newspapers mailed from the office of publication were carried free. Under the changed rates brought into force under the present Postmaster General, newspapers sent outside a radius of twenty miles are charged one-half cent per pound. Of course, the publisher of a newspaper cannot afford to pay this, he must add it to his subscription rate. For instance, if my hon. friend from Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Ross) receives a paper from Ontario he must pay postage on it. But he is so loyal a party man that, I venture to say, he will applaud the Postmaster General for this addition to the postal rates.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Not a bit of it.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross) takes that position. What does the hon. gentleman think of the other increases that have been made ? For instance, newspapers and periodicals posted elsewhere than at the place of publication were formerly sent for one cent for four ounces. That rate has been doubled, and now the charge is one cent for two ounces. Newspapers, single copies weighing not more than one ounce, were one-half cent, now they are one cent. Books, printed books of instruction, music and drawing books were one cent per four ounces, now they are one cent for two ounces. Pamphlets, circulars, hand-bills, packages of seeds, plants, grafts, &c., were one cent for four ounces, now one cent for two ounces. Maps, drawings, lithographs, photographs, sheet music, deeds, wills, mortgages, chattel mortgages, insurance policies, voters' lists, assessment rolls, municipal returns, patterns, samples of merchandise, and all that class of matter, which goes through the mails in large quantities, were formerly one cent for two ounces, now they are two cents for four ounces, four ounces being the minimum, a doubling of the rates. What do these increases represent ? We find, for instance, that the increase in the number of newspapers and periodicals posted elsewhere than at the place of publication was from 24,000,000 in 1896 to 34,000,000 in 1901. Circulars, samples, patterns, &c., increased from 3,672,000 in 1896 to 7,364,000 in 1901. The effect of all this is that the ordinary taxpayer in Canada pays more for the postal service to-day than he did in 1896. This is proved by the fact that, whereas the total expenditure on the post office represented an average of 93 cents per head for the people of Canada in 1896, the expenditure in 1901 amounted to an average of 96 cents per head. Notwithstanding the withholding from the people of a proper postal service, notwithstanding that the service is starved in every direction, notwithstanding these professions of reduction in the rates, we find that the people actually pay more for the postal service to-day than they did in 1896. But that is not all. The hon. gentleman is guilty of concealment in the making up of his accounts. He is so anxious to have the ledger balance, so anxious to be able to declare that he has for once wiped out a deficit and gained a surplus, that he has resorted to what I believe to be discreditable tactics and has deceived the public by his manner of keeping his accounts. The hon Minister of Finance told us that there was a surplus, he believed, in the Post Office department. But he felt called upon to make apology and to make known the truth that there was, after all, a deficit. The expenditure for the whole Post Office department, according to the Public Accounts for 1902, was $4,023,000, while the revenue was $3,918,000, a deficit in round figures of $105,000. Why did not the Postmaster General, why did not the Minister of Finance tell the House the truth with no concealment ? But the hon. gentleman says : We had a service in the Yukon which cost us $117,000, and we only received $30,000. There was a deficit there of nearly $100,000, or, to be quite accurate, $87,485. Does the hon. gentleman think the Yukon is no part of Canada ? Why should he make an exception in that case, unless he wished to deceive the House and the country ? I repeat, Sir, such arguments are scarcely worthy a minister of the Crown, and are scarcely such as might be expected by the people of this country.

Now there is another matter, that with regard to the Intercolonial Railway. I do not see the Minister of Railways in his place. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it has been your painful experience to notice that we have no ministers of the Crown in their places in the House upon occasions of this kind when they ought to be here to defend the charges that are made against them. These are not merely empty charges, they are charges sufficiently serious to require that those hon. gentlemen should be present to defend themselves. But they show an utter disregard of these matters, and exhibit a most unedifying complacency when they happen to be in their places and are confronted with most damaging facts. Still, they sit there speechless, and receive the plaudits of their friends sitting behind them.

The Minister of Finance made a reference to the record of the Intercolonial Railway. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I propose with your permission to deal with this question. I want to bring to the attention of the House the records of the two parties in managing that railway. That has always been a difficult business to administer; and I am prepared to admit that it always will be a difficult business to manage, and to manage with success. But the hon. gentleman tried to make the country believe that at last they had found a solution of all the difficulties in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. Now, Sir, I will show you the results of the administration of that road during two periods of equal length, one under the Conservative government and one under the Liberal government. Take the six years from 1891 to 1896 inclusive, and what do we find ? The Minister of Railways in the Conservative government expended $20,651,000 on what is called working expenses; on capital account he expended $2,698,000, or in all for those six years he expended $23,350,000, in round numbers. Now, what was the revenue that came back to the people of Canada during that period? The revenue during those six years amounted to $19,020,000, in round numbers, or a deficit taken out of the pockets of the people—for I am prepared to admit that it had to be taken out of the pockets of the people—of $4,320,000. That was the result during the six years preceding the advent of the Liberal government. Now the expenditure from 1897 to 1902 inclusive under the Liberal regime, was, for working expenses, $26,648,000, and for capital expenditure $13,485,000, or a total expenditure of $40,133,000. The revenue during the six years period was $26,071,000, leaving a deficit that Canada must lose of $14,422,000 as against a deficit of $4,000,000 during the Conservative period. Is that, Mr. Speaker, a record to be boasted of by hon. gentlemen opposite? During a period of great depression in Canada, when business was stagnant, not only in Canada but throughout the whole world, our friends administered that railway at a loss of only $4,000,000; but as soon as hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, during a period of the greatest expansion Canada has ever known, when the Intercolonial Railway and every other road should have been making money, and most of them did make money, we have the spectacle presented by these hon. gentlemen of sinking $14,000,000 of the people's money in the Intercolonial Railway. I ask hon. gentlemen who sit opposite if they approve of a record of that kind?

Now let me go a little further into details. Hon. gentlemen may say: Well, we have something to show for our expenditure, the public are getting a benefit from it, we have made that a paying institution, and the people are going to get their money back. Well, let us see what foundation they have upon which to base such a statement. There must be something radically wrong with the management of that institution. In the first place, we have a gentleman taken from the ranks of the Liberal party, a very able lawyer in the province from which he came, but a gentleman who has not shown any ability as a railway manager, a gentleman who has sunk millions of public money, who has made of the Intercolonial Railway a dismal failure, who has made for himself a record as a railway manager that no man in this country will envy. Now, I want to make a fair comparison, and I think it will be fair to make a comparison between the Intercolonial Railway on the one hand and the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway on the other. What do we find in 1896? In 1896 the earnings per train mile on the Canadian Pacific Railway were $1.40, and in 1901, five years later, the earnings were a little over $1.71 per train mile. On the Grand Trunk Railway in 1896, the earnings per train mile were $1, and this was a time, bear in mind, of great depression. In 1901 the earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway per train mile increased to $1.26. The average earnings per train mile on all the railroads in Canada for 1896 were $1.17; in 1901 they were $1.44. Now, Sir, what do you suppose were the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway in 1896? Why they were 76 cents per train mile, and in 1901 they were 79 cents, as against $1.71 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, $1.26 on the Grand Trunk Railway, and $1.44 on all the railways in Canada.

That is a splendid showing of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that is the return the people are getting for this loss of $14,000,000 to which I have referred. But, there are other tests that I desire to refer to. The proportion of expenses to receipts is another test. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in 1896, had to pay out 60·05 per cent of its earnings for the purpose of carrying on its affairs and in 1901 it paid out 60·08 per cent. The Grand Trunk Railway paid out in 1896, 69·09 per cent of its earnings, while in 1901 it paid out 63·71 per cent of its earnings, or of its revenue. All the railways in Canada except the Intercolonial Railway, paid out 67 per cent of their earnings in 1896, and 65·92 per cent, or 66 cents practically, in 1901. What is the position of the Intercolonial Railway? In this period of great expansion, when railways have had earnings per train mile, in 1896, of $1.40, and in 1901 of $1.71, what is the record which we find in regard to the Intercolonial Railway? Why, Sir, instead of comparing with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, with 60 per cent of its earnings being paid out, or with the Grand Trunk Railway system, with 63 per cent of its earnings being paid out, or with all the railways of Canada, except the Intercolonial Railway, with 65 per cent of its earnings being paid out, we find that the Intercolonial paid out, in 1896, 104·03 per cent, or 4 cents more than it earned, and that in 1901 it paid 110·76 per cent, or 11 cents more than it earned. That is the record of the Intercolonial Railway. Some hon. gentlemen say: Well, the Intercolonial Railway was built in the interest of the people of Canada. We have carried freight at reduced rates, we have given the money back to the people, they have it in their pockets and if there is a disparity between the two sides of the ledger it has arisen by reason of the fact of giving the people special freights and other special advantages. Let me call the attention of the House to this point for a moment, and then I shall conclude: The revenue per ton per mile in 1896 for all freight carried over the Intercolonial Railway, was 1·297 cents, nearly 2 cents, as you will see, and in 1901 it was 1·478 cents. Therefore, the people have not had any compensation for the increased taxation; they have paid higher rates of freight than before and we have the lamentable spectacle of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals having sunk large sums of money and having the credit of having managed the Intercolonial Railway worse than any other railway in Canada has been managed, and I venture to say, worse than any other railway on the continent of America.

Now, we come to the canals. These hon. gentlemen are telling us what they have done for the country. I shall only detain the House for a moment to call attention to the period in which the Conservatives were in power and in which they spent nearly as much upon the canals as did hon. gentlemen after they came into office. During the period from 1892 to 1896 the Conservatives spent $14,828,981. The Liberal government, during the period from 1897 to 1901, spent $17,635,377, or a yearly increase of something like half a million—actually $561,000. We are told of the splendid results, and of the great expansion that has taken place since they came into power. They try to account for their magnificent expenditures, as they call them, by saying: We have gone to work and completed the canals, we have given facilities for transportation, we have aided Canada in every manner possible. What do we find has been the result of the completion of these canals of which these hon. gentlemen speak so much? The revenue from these canals in 1896 was $339,539, and in 1901, $315,426, a decrease in that period of great expansion of $24,113. In that period, when we were all looking forward to our canal system as one which would be of great assistance in the transportation of commodities, when so much was being said about our waterways, we find that instead of our expectation being realized the very reverse was the fact. Let us take the traffic passing through these canals. In the period during which these hon. gentlemen expended this large amount of money, the period which they hold up to our view, we find the traffic returns to be as follows: In 1896 the total number of tons that passed through the canals was 5,033,869. In 1901, 2,408,985 tons passed through, or a decrease of more than one-half, a decrease of 2,624,884 tons. How have these hon. gentlemen compensated the people for these expenditures? I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Finance is not in his place but I shall ask the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) to be kind enough to tell him about the Yukon. When that hon. gentleman was addressing this House and displaying the splendid achievements of the Liberal party in 1901, he had this to say about the Yukon, as given in 'Hansard' of 1901, page 1455:

> Now, it is the policy of the government at the beginning, to use an expression which has become current, to make the Yukon pay for the Yukon, and that has been carried out.

Well, nothing was said about the Yukon paying for the Yukon this year. What have we instead? I will tell the hon. gentleman the secret. I am sure he has been let into it before, because it was so very palpable. However I will tell him again. The total expenditure for 1902 was $2,474,419, and the revenue was $1,559,259, so that there was a deficit of $914,960. That is the reason nothing was said about the Yukon. Some hon. gentlemen will perhaps say: Well, it has gone back but the Yukon has paid for the Yukon. The Yukon has not paid for the Yukon. The total expenditure for the whole period during which these hon. gentlemen have been in office has been $8,437,597, and the total revenue $8,267,826, so that there has been a deficit on the whole transaction of $169,771.

Mr. TAYLOR. Some of them made more than that out of it.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not including the pickings. I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to what will be put forward as the reason for that. We will be told, no doubt, by hon. gentlemen who are to address this House in future that the royalties have been reduced and that therefore by reason of the reduction of royalties the people in that country have had some benefit from the reduction and that if the Yukon did not really pay for the Yukon, at least, the people, have the money in their pockets. Well there was a reduction. The whole revenue from that source in 1901 was $1,237,000, and in 1902 it was $849,720, or a decrease of $387,000. I admit that was a reduction in the right direction. It was a reduction wrung from the government by the efforts of the miners backed up by the strong effort made by the Conservative party in this House, and though the government at first refused to make the reduction they were forced to go back on their policy in that respect, as in many other respects. But although the reduction was $387,000, the deficit was $520,000, so that when the Finance Minister makes his next budget speech he will have to revise his statement that the Yukon pays for the Yukon.

I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not here, because I have something to say to him. We hear that he is attending banquets and wearing pig tails, and having degrees conferred upon him, and hobnobbing with their Oriental Majesties, and that he will leave for home on the first of May. That will prevent him arriving in time to hear what I have to say.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, perhaps the Minister of Agriculture may be excused under the circumstances. We have been told often what the Liberals have done for the farmers in this country in the matter of cold storage, and how when the Liberals came into power they gave life to this system which was allowed to die for want of energy on the part of their predecessors in office. And when the First Minister was recently telling the people what his party had done for Canada, he mentioned this amongst other things:

We have established a complete system of cold storage for the transportation of perishable goods, and in this alone we have rendered people of Canada a singular service. The trade with Great Britain last year in eggs alone reached almost the sum of two million dollars and it is yet only in its infancy.

Last year when the Minister of Agriculture was defending his estimates he was put the following question by a member of this House.

I am sure it would be interesting to the House and the country if the hon. gentleman were able to state approximately what proportion of the Canadian products have gone in cold storage. I will also ask him to state the ordinary rates and the cold storage rates to London, to Liverpool, to Glasgow, to Manchester, and to the West Indies in the twenty-four ships that were equipped last year. And if he can, the quantities of Canadian perishable products which went by cold storage in each ship.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who asked that question ?

Mr. CLANCY. I asked the question myself and this is what the Minister of Agriculture replied, and this is the discussion that resulted from that question:

Mr. FISHER. In a general way the products which have gone forward in cold storage have been butter of which practically the whole export of Canada goes in that way, and poultry meat of which practically the whole export of Canada to Great Britain, not to the United States, goes in cold storage.

Mr. CLANCY. What are the quantities ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not got the quantities. About two hundred tons of poultry meat went last fall to Great Britain by cold storage. Tender fruits, such as pears, peaches and grapes went forward in mechanical cold storage chambers (but these are about all). Cheese has not gone forward to any great extent in cold storage chambers. Some shipments of apples had gone in cold storage, but as a general rule the shippers of apples say, in the first place, that too large quantities go at one time to get the accommodation. And in the second place they do not think it will be worth while to pay the extra storage accommodation.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the value of the small fruits, and the value of the poultry sent forward in cold storage ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not got the figures of the exact quantities or the values of the fruit or the poultry.

The Minister of Agriculture was not able to answer the question as to the value of the fruit or the poultry, but I will answer it for him, and I take my figures from the Trade and Navigation Returns published by the government. For the year 1900, the total exports of poultry dressed and undressed amounted to $210,822 including all in cold storage or not. In 1901 that had dropped to $145,158, and in 1902 it only reached the comparatively small sum of $238,047. Now, let us take the small fruits to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I include what was sent in cold storage and otherwise and I find that in 1900 we exported a total of $59,412 ; in 1901 that fell to $38,326, and in 1902 it had diminished to $26,311. That is the story from commencement to end of the success of cold storage for which so much credit is claimed by this Liberal government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the expenditures and I take the controllable expenditure for which the ministers are accountable. I have made a comparison between the expenditures of the different departments as between 1896 and 1902 and here is the result :

COMPARISON OF EXPENDITURE AS BETWEEN 1896 AND 1902.

Administration of justice	$ 758,270	$ 949,229
Civil Government	1,396,628	1,497,369
Fisheries	427,250	548,894
Geological Survey, &c.	134,368	224,015
Immigration	120,199	494,841
Quarantine	95,247	264,737
Indians	880,408	1,057,130
Marine Hospitals	36,683	51,827
Militia and Defence	1,137,717	2,060,978
Miscellaneous	172,363	1,146,120
Mounted Police	533,014	948,215
Penitentiaries	385,227	438,072
Police	22,703	60,241
Superannuation	311,231	338,764
Customs	896,332	1,176,024
Dominion Lands	119,908	158,843
	$7,427,548	$11,415,299

Here we have an increase in the controllable expenditure of 54 per cent, and mind you these are all expenditures that are under the control of the different ministers, and for which they can and ought to render an account. Where has the money gone, let me ask ? Why this increase of 54 per cent ? What is there to show for it ?

I now come to another question, Mr. Speaker which interests the people of Canada to a very great extent, and that is as to whether the system of bookkeeping adopted by this government is an honest system of bookkeeping under which the people of Canada can really tell what is going on in the service of the government. I address myself particularly now to the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) who is an authority on finances. He has referred to this question more than once in his speeches, and I shall probably have to quote some of his utterances as to what constitutes a surplus in Canada. When it is stated in this House that the Liberal party from 1897 to 1902 inclusive, have had continuous surpluses, aggregating over $27,000,000, I say that that statement is absolutely destitute of a single particle of truth. Now, that is a broad statement, and when I make it I realize the serious responsibility I take as a member of this House, especially one occuping so humble a position as I do. Now, our total receipts and total expenditures for each year since 1897 have been as follows :

Year.	Total Receipts.	Total Expenditures.	Deficits.
1897	$ 37,829,778	$ 42,972,755	$ 5,142,977
1898	40,556,510	45,334,281	4,777,771
1899	46,743,102	51,542,635	4,799,533
1900	51,031,466	52,717,466	1,686,000
1901	52,516,332	57,982,866	5,466,534
1902	58,052,333	63,970,799	5,918,466
	$286,729,521	$314,520,802
Aggregate deficits..			$27,791,281

Every dollar of these deficits which have occurred since hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power, has been added to the public debt. I challenge any hon. gentleman who may reply to me to deny that statement if he can. Hon. gentlemen may apologize for this by saying what about the sinking fund? The sinking fund, as every hon. gentleman knows, is a statutory expenditure which we are obliged to make each year to provide for our loans; and if the sums which we have had to put aside for that purpose are deducted, the result will show that the net debt has been increased by these annual deficits in the last six years by $13,331,657. When I say that the bookkeeping of hon. gentlemen opposite is not right, they will probably say, just as the hon. Finance Minister said, that he has followed the practice of his predecessor. But that does not alter the matter in the least. If a false position was taken by his predecessor or if his predecessor followed a system he found in vogue the hon. gentleman's plain duty, if he wanted to be as fair as he professes to be, was to keep the public accounts in such a way that the people of this country would understand them to be accurate. In this respect the hon. gentleman keeps his books differently from every other civilized country in the world. What is the case in England? Do we find consolidated expenditures and capital expenditures there? No. All the accounts are kept in one ledger and under one classification, so that when they show a surplus, it is an actual and not a visionary one. Then, take the people to the south of us. I am not as fond of taking them as an example as some hon. gentlemen in this House; but what do we find there? I challenge the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), a gentleman who is well versed in these matters, to rise in his place and tell the House and the country that in the United States they have such mixed expenditures as we have; but their ledger contains on one side the whole of the expenditures, and on the other side the total revenues, and the balance of $69,000,000 which was shown last year was no fiction, but an absolute surplus which they could show in dollars and cents. What does the honest taxpayer believe when he is told by the Minister of Finance that for the coming year we shall have a surplus of over $13,000,000? He concludes, as every honest man would conclude, that there will be $13,000,000 in the treasury. He would conclude, from the hon. minister's statement, that it was not a fiction, but a fact, that, as a result of this government's administration for the past six years, there were $27,000,000 in the treasury. I ask if there is one hon. gentleman who can rise and say that there was any such thing in existence, that there was at the end of any of those years a single dollar there. The result is that though we are charging millions up to the public debt, we have had the amusing spectacle of a gentleman, of high standing in this country—I refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce—telling the House what he would do with surpluses. He said, referring to the leader of the opposition:

> My hon. friend wants to know what I think about surpluses. I have no objection to tell him. There are three excellent uses to which a surplus may be applied. In the first place it may be applied to a reduction of taxation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, have these surpluses, which the right hon. gentleman boasts of, been applied to the reduction of taxation? No, and for the very good reason that they have never existed. Our taxation has, on the contrary, been increased. The next purpose to which a surplus might be applied, was the paying off the debt. But our public debt, instead of being reduced, has been increased. And the third purpose for which a surplus could be utilized, he informs us, was the construction of useful and productive public works. But where are these public works? I defy any hon. gentleman opposite to point to any productive public work of any magnitude which they have given the country. The system of bookkeeping adopted by this government is a most wonderful one. I have pointed out that you will find no such system of bookkeeping in any other country under any responsible government. You will certainly not find in the mother country any such deception practiced in the public accounts, and in no other country will you find the people presented with a statement showing fictitious and false surpluses.

On the question of the tariff, Mr. Speaker, I propose to offer a few remarks. You will remember, Sir, that the hon. Finance Minister read into his budget speech the platform adopted by the Liberal party in 1893. This is what he said:—

> Now, as to the manner in which this tariff revision should be brought about, I want to read to you—not because it is any element of novelty, but because it properly fits in at this stage of my speech—the platform adopted by the Liberal party at the great convention held at Ottawa in 1893.

After reading the whole platform he said:—

> Mr. Speaker, the electors of Canada in due course gave their verdict upon that and upon other issues and subject to such changes as changing circumstances may require and as to which I shall have something to say as I proceed. We accept the Liberal platform of Ottawa as the declaration of principle which we are bound to follow on our tariff reform.

The hon. gentleman, in his speech, laid down this principle with regard to the tariff :

That it should be so adjusted as to make free or bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life and should be so arranged as to promote free trade with the whole world more particularly with Great Britain and the United States. We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.

This issue we unhesitatingly accept and upon it we await with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electors of Canada.

This is what the hon. gentleman read into his speech, and later on, addressing himself to the case of the manufacturers, he said :—

Every man who invested a dollar in the National Policy did so with his eyes wide open to certain important facts. He was well aware that from the beginning down to the end the National Policy was condemned by one of the great political parties in Canada. He was well aware that every effort had to be put forth by governmental influences and such influences as the manufacturers themselves are well aware of in order to obtain from the public an apparent endorsement of that policy. . . . . Now the manufacturers knew of this, and they must have known that when they put their money into these factories they were taking their risk. There was a speculative element in this whole national policy business and the men who play the game and gather in the winnings ought to be prepared when the turn of the tide comes to pay the losses and try to look pleasant. . . . .

Mr. GOURLEY. He was familiar with the game.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes. That speech was made after a conference with the manufacturers had been held prior to the elections of 1896. There was in it an implied threat to the manufacturers, but he did not proceed much further before he sang another tune. He said :—

However, I wish to say and emphasize the fact that it has never been the policy of the Liberal party as declared by any member of the Liberal party occupying a responsible position if they came into power to destroy at one movement all the manufacturing industries or to so change the policy as to place them in peril.

What do you think of a Finance Minister who tells the manufacturers that they are playing a game, that their business is in the nature of a gamble, and they might look out and be prepared for what might happen, and then immediately after declares that it was not the policy of the Liberal party to so change the tariff policy of this country so as to injure the manufacturing interests. He went on further to say :—

I hesitate not to say that if we should to-day by some rash step do that which some hon. gentlemen say that we are bound to do but which intelligent men know that we are not bound to do and would not do, we should not only break down the manufacturing interests of the country, but deal a blow to other interests of a wider and more serious character.

The hon. gentleman has always had the faculty of making startling and alarming declarations with regard to the policy he was going to adopt and then explaining away those threats, so that his friends might go to the country and put any construction on his utterances that would best suit the party exigencies of the moment. Hon. gentlemen have always been in a position—and, no doubt, will try to keep themselves in a position—to use these two sides of the speeches of their leaders, one in favour of protection, and the other in favour of the policy adopted by the Liberal party in 1893, of revising the tariff with a view to destroying every vestige of the national policy. But we have now in the House an hon. gentleman—I refer to the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson)—who, according to the statement of his former colleague, the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has tried within the cabinet to maintain the protectionist policy. I have referred to the hon. member for St. Mary's division. If any man has earned the gratitude of the people of Canada for maintaining in the tariff of 1897 a large measure of protection, that hon. gentleman has earned it. If that hon. gentleman told the truth about the hon. Minister of Customs, of which there seems no doubt, it would seem that the hon. Minister of Customs also was performing his part in the cabinet, under the influence of that strong man, to maintain the protectionist policy as this government found it in 1896. If that is the case, the Minister of Customs also deserves credit for the fact that the tariff was left in the form in which we find it to-day. But the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) cannot accept openly the praise that is said to be due to him, because he has put himself under pledge before the country in a different way. He tells the people that he despises the protection, he tells them that protection is an evil. But he tells the people also that the government is obliged to maintain a revenue tariff, a tax gathering tariff—and that it is a tax gathering tariff is proven by the enormous sums it wrings from the pockets of the people—and that, while he would abolish if he could the protection element, yet it is unavoidable that there must be in the tariff some measure of protection. The hon. gentleman has explained more than once the difference of the two parties on this point. He has told us that it is the cardinal principle of the Conservative party to give full protection to the country's industries, while it is the policy of the Liberal party to give barely and beggarly the protection that cannot be withheld. But we are told now by the hon. gentleman's former colleague that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is in favour of protection, and we are left to infer that he fought for that principle in council. Will the hon. Minister of Customs rise before this debate closes and say that that statement is not true? Will he repudiate the utterance of his late colleague? Will he say that he bore no part in the retention of protection in the present tariff? If so, will he be able to reconcile that with his declarations that the government did not want protection, but only wanted a tariff to collect taxes? That was his declaration, and that was what he relied upon for commercial defence against a commercially hostile country alongside which is constantly invading our territory. If the hon. gentleman denies that this was his position I will give him the words of his own utterances. But I know that he will not deny it, and I do not put that as an offensive challenge.

Now, what is the position of the hon. Minister of Finance in asking for delay in the revision of the tariff? He says that the manufacturers are more perplexed to find space and workmen than to find reasons for increases in the tariff, that what they fear is the fierce competition from outside from a period of depression, in the narrowing of our trade that, as everybody knows, must follow the present great expansion—that they are more frightened of what is to come than of what is here now. He tells us that what the manufacturers are frightened of is a condition of things that does not now exist. He tells us that they look to the future and seek to provide against the possible evils of the future. In effect the hon. Minister of Finance tells us that the time to lock the door is not when we are secure, but when the burglar comes and rifles our money boxes, and when he stands there armed and ready to defend himself against attack. We have now a tax gathering tariff. That is the design of the tariff in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite; if it affords protection, according to their cardinal tariff doctrine, that is an evil feature of it. But what of the future? The overflow of American markets is coming into Canada. I am within the mark when I say that the overflow of production of the United States is greater than the whole of our production in Canada. The hon. gentleman tells us that our manufactories are expanding and that the difficulty is anything but lack of orders. But our own manufacturers are not filling more than half our orders. If we had protection, we should find the space and the workmen, and should supply all the wants of our own people. But we have this evil of an invasion from the outside growing steadily, an evil which it may be impossible for us to eradicate by hostile tariffs if we do not act in time. We have immense quantities of American goods coming into Canada; our people are being trained and educated to buy American goods and use them; we have the agents of American concerns in Canada, camping here by the score; we have even Canadians being enlisted in selling American goods who ought to be enlisted in selling Canadian goods. And when the evil ripens under the influence of reaction from the present good times, we shall be without a single weapon of defence against the invaders. The waiting game is the one that the Minister of Finance recommends to us—to wait for possible reciprocity; to wait for something to come in relation to the preferential tariff.

I do not wish to detain the House over this preferential tariff business. If I were to read from the speech of the Minister of Finance, I could only show that he faces both ways upon this question as he does upon the tariff. He tells us that, if the British people do not give some concessions in their market, he is prepared to repeal the preferential tariff. But then he asks, notwithstanding that, whether it would be in the interest of the people of Canada to repeal it. The hon. gentleman always shows the faint heart. He stands at the cross roads and does not know which way to go. He tells us that, if the British government do not take a certain course, he will take the other. But then his heart fails him, and he asks the hesitating question: But would it be in the interest of Canada? He tells us that it is well to use their own tariff weapon against the United States. But when he thinks of our great North-west he asks: But what would such a course cost us? He lays down the principle that in every case, a protective duty is paid by the consumer in the enhanced price of the article. I deny that experience has ever shown anything of that kind, I deny that in Canada, at least, beyond a mere momentary spurt, protection has ever raised the prices of goods. Take machinery with regard to which a mean appeal is made to the people of the North-west Territories, made upon such small things as binder twine, barbed wire and farm implements. Is there an hon. gentleman representing a constituency in the North-west who will say that even if a duty of $10 were put upon farm implements, a farmer in the North-west would find it any serious handicap, such does not follow as a result of the duty. Yet the Minister of the Interior tells us that the tax upon farm implements is a great burden to the people of the North-west. Well, to-day we have the Minister of Finance undoing every particle of the legislation that he put upon the statute-book in 1897, retracing his steps, showing his own blunders regarding binder twine, probably making the proposal of giving a bounty of three-eights of a cent per pound on importations of the raw material, and he thinks that will cause the binder twine to be made in Canada after it has been made free and tax our own people for it. But by whom was it made free? It was made free by a blunder of the hon. gentleman opposite, made free in vain. The people of Canada have never profited by it. We have lost that much revenue, and the American people came into Canada and took possession of our market, and made our manufacturers join the combine. To-day the manufacturers of Canada are in a combine with those of the United States, and we are importing 14,000,000 pounds of binder twine out of the eighteen million pounds we consume in Canada. We are importing 14,000,000 pounds that ought to be made in Canada by Canadian workmen.

What was the position of the Minister of Finance upon that question? Why, it was the most extraordinary declaration ever made in this House, that a minister of the Crown should come down and say, I have not found a remedy for the evil, but I propose, before this session closes, to find a remedy—in other words, giving us to understand that he was going to change the tariff in some way. But what is the shift the hon. gentleman proposes to make? He proposes to take out of the pockets of the people by means of a bounty the sum that is charged by the United States, to take it out of the pockets of Canadians in order to make good that loss that he inflicted upon them by taking away the protection. They not only take away the protection from the industry, but they have made binder twine higher, and they have deprived Canadian workmen of the opportunity of making binder twine that is now made in the United States. There is no mistake about who pays the money that goes in bounties. It comes directly out of our pockets. They take away protection largely from a large class of iron goods. The Minister of Customs declared, when the tariff was being revised, that they gave these bounties in lieu of the protection that they took away from the manufacturers in that class of goods. In other words, money that ought to have been paid by foreign countries, is now placed upon the heads of Canadians to be paid out in the shape of bounties in order to sustain that industy. It is just another one of their procession of blunders. It is the same with binder twine. But who pays the duty? We are told the consumer pays the duty. Why should we seek for reciprocity with the United States, I ask hon. gentlemen, if the American consumer pays the duty? I appeal to the hon. member for North Norfolk, who now wants reciprocity with the United States to sell our wheat there? According to the Liberal doctrine it is the people of the United States who pay that duty. If they do pay that duty, what is the difference between that and a duty on a binder coming from the United States? Why should we seek to get a preference in the British market? Let the British taxpayer pay the duty, we are not paying it, according to hon. gentlemen opposite. How do hon. gentlemen reconcile the two positions? Do they mean to say that every dollar that is put on by customs duties to defend our interests, and for the purpose of giving protection to our own Canadian people has the effect of raising the price?

I ask hon. gentlemen who represent the North-west Territories what compensation they have for the taxes put upon them. In 1896, we collected per head in taxes, $7.57, and in 1902 we collected $10.81. We are collecting $3.24 a head more than we collected in 1896. I ask hon. members who represent western constituencies what they have to compensate them for that. Do they still maintain that the old tariff taxed them to the extent of the duty upon the goods they consumed in this country? If they do, then let them make their peace with their leaders. But not only are we paying an excess of $3.24 a head in taxes in 1902, but we have a prospect of paying $4.23 a head for the year coming.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to consider this reform tariff. The hon. Minister of Customs, who pays great attention to this matter, says the tariff has been reformed. Well, this is the way it has been reformed. We imported in 1902 $118,000,000 of dutiable goods, and of that amount, just $16,615,000 came in under the reform tariff of 1897. That is the extent of the burden lifted from the people, when the taxes went all into the treasury, when it was no longer the case that two dollars out of three went into the pockets of the manufacturers and the favoured few, and the other dollar went into the treasury. We have the tariff reformed to the extent of $16,615,000 out of $118,000,000, or about 14 per cent of the whole tariff was reformed. That has been a splendid reduction. That has been the new policy, if I may call it so, of a revenue tariff, of lifting the burdens, of changing the currents of trade; that has been the new Liberal tariff policy. But it has another side to it, Mr. Speaker. Out of that $118,000,000 that came in last year coming under the general tariff of 1897 of dutiable goods, there were $34,542,000 raised. Is that a reformation of the tariff? I do not think hon. gentlemen will say so. I do not speak at all in regard to the preferential tariff, because I have no hesitation in saying from my place in this House and in the presence of hon. gentlemen who are merchants and who know, that the people never derived one farthing of benefit as consumers from the preferential tariff. We, therefore, speak of the reformation where it existed. if it did exist, of the decreases by that reformed tariff of 14 per cent and the increases of that reformed tariff of no less than 29 per cent. Who got the benefit of the reductions? Was it the general consumer? No, these reductions were made in the interest of the manufacturers generally. The manufacturers got the benefit. I do not object to the manufacturers getting the benefit of the reductions if the amount was not taxed back upon the people in the form of bounties to make it up. The value of the goods on which reductions were made to help the manufacturers, and I do not object to that, was $7,222,632. I shall not enumerate the goods, but if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is sufficiently interested and curious, I will read it over for him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Read the list and it will be on record.

Mr. CLANCY. The list is a very considerable one.

An hon. MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman want it read ?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I shall read it, but I shall ask the indulgence of the House if I do not conclude at six o'clock. I see the hon. Minister of Customs smiling. The first item is one in his interest and it is labels of all kinds.

Then, when we take the goods on which the duties were reduced we will find that these reductions were concessions to the United States. Perhaps the hon. gentlemen opposite want to know what these concessions were. The articles on which the duty was reduced in 1897 were Indian corn, Indian corn meal, wheat and wheat flour.

Mr. COCHRANE. For the benefit of the farmer ?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, for the benefit of the farmer. These hon. gentlemen claimed that the duty was taken off corn for the benefit of our farmer. The duty was lowered on wheat for the benefit of the men in the large centres like Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, and other industrial centres which buy enormous quantities of wheat and while hon. gentlemen opposite were pretending that they were lifting the burden off the consumer they were placing a heavier burden on the Canadian farmers. The value of the Indian corn, corn meal, wheat and wheat flour imported under the reduced duty and which duty was reduced for the benefit also of the people of the United States was $1,898,318. There was another concession made to the people of the United States from which the people of Canada derived no benefit of $878,087 on coal oil. Will any hon. gentleman say that the reduction of one cent a gallon on coal oil inured in the slightest to the benefit of the consumers of Canada ? It resulted in bringing in the Standard Oil Company with which the oil producers of Canada have been forced to join hands, an institution which they dreaded ; but with which they have been forced to join and now we have the oil producers of Canada acting in concert with that foreign combine and putting up the price of oil. Then, there was another concession to the United States in the matter of barbed wire to the amount of $826,846. We have brought in that amount of barbed wire under this reduced duty. The barbed wire factories in Canada are practically all closed up. The workmen who should look to Canada for a day's labour and a means of earning a livelihood have been sent to make barbed wire in the United States. We are not only sending our Canadian workmen to the United States, but we are sending our Canadian money to buy the barbed wire which is now made in the United States. As I have said we gave a concession to the United States in the matter of barbed wire of $826,846. But, we gave still another concession of $1,507,344 in the matter of binder twine. I shall not discuss that again ; I have only to say that this concession was made in the interest of the United States workmen and it was one of those stupendous blunders that hon. gentlemen have made and the country are now paying for this blunder.

Mr. COCHRANE. The people have been paying more for binder twine ever since.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes. I wish now to point out what has been the result of the raising of duties on goods imported into Canada. I appeal again to the hon. Minister of Customs. He does not seem to suffer in this and I shall not have his sympathy so much. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to give the House the list of goods on which the duties were raised under this reformed tariff. They were raised mainly upon the necessaries of life notwithstanding the declaration of the hon. Minister of Finance that he made in this House that he proposed to adopt the policy, or the platform, enunciated at the Liberal convention of 1893 that the duties on the necessaries of life should not only be reduced but that these goods should be made free. Well, this is how they have been made free. The list is as follows :

Hon. gentlemen will see that this list comprises all those little things that make up the outfit of any comfortably furnished house, and are to be found in the homes of the most humble citizens of Canada. Let me give the rates of duty. They were increased all along the line from 25 to 30 per cent, and from 22 to 25 per cent. I do not object to the increase on woollen goods, but while they gave a protection of 35 per cent on woollens they took it away on the other hand by the British preference in order to ruin our woollen manufacturers in Canada. I object in no sense to the 35 per cent, nor would I object to 40 per cent or to 50 per cent if such were necessary to protect our Canadian industries. But the government made a blunder here as elsewhere. They made a blunder by taking off the specific duty. We gave a rate of duty that with the specific and ad valorem combined amounted to 32½ per cent only, and we had an infinitely better protection under that than we have under the higher duty of the Liberal party, which is now 35 per cent. The reason for that is that we have constantly unloaded on this country shoddy goods, and the consumer in Canada unfortunately uses these goods, and to that extent they displace our Canadian goods that ought to be made by Canadian labour in Canada. Out of the $34,000,000 on which the duty was increased, this government has placed that increase upon $24,000,000 of these things that enter into general consumption and upon the necessaries of life.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Who pays the increased duty on woollens ?

Mr. CLANCY. On woollens ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman says that the consumers do not pay it.

Mr. CLANCY. The increased duty on woollen goods has had the effect on the one hand to give the British manufacturer and the British exporter the advantage of the increase, but the increased duty to the people is because the duty has been raised to the people of Canada, who are paying the tax and receive absolutely not one farthing reduction from the retail dealers in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. That is where it is. We were told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the leader of the opposition did not point out one case where there was an oppressive duty. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that all duties and all taxes are oppressive, and the most oppressive taxes are those that we pay without receiving compensation in return, and these are the kind of taxes we are paying to-day in Canada. I am not prepared to say we ought to reduce our duties, but I say that under a better arrangement of the duties we would take less taxes from the people and we would give more labour to the people of Canada. These gentlemen opposite talk of being friendly to a protective tariff. Why they would not know how to administer a protective tariff. They do not understand the aims of a protective tariff ; they understand no tariff but a tax collecting tariff.

In conclusion, Sir, I wish to say a few words in reference to the conditions in western Canada. That country is rapidly being settled, and if properly directed that immigration will be of immense benefit to Canada. But in this connection, I know of nothing so dangerous as the position taken by the Liberal leaders in this country. Unfortunately they are preaching, not Canadian but American sentiment. They are telling the people of the west that they are not to look upon Canada as their home. They are placing such literature as the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) before them, which counsels them to look to American institutions and to trade with the American people. What do the people of the older provinces think of that state of affairs ? We have done what was our duty in voting millions of dollars to advance the west, and I trust this House will not be beggarly in voting generously sums of money to promote the welfare of that country. But I ask the patriotic Canadians who are ready to bear this taxation, what the outlook is to be if we are to adopt the policy propounded by hon. gentlemen opposite. Our railways will cease to be an advantage to the west ; our waterways will fall into disuse ; we will find ourselves a part of the American republic without our consent, and we will find the great west which ultimately will be a controlling factor in this Dominion ; we will find it not a part of British North America, but a part of the United States, if the Liberal government succeed in their policy. These gentlemen have a shifting policy for every occasion. They commenced with a reciprocal tariff, and they end with a preferential tariff, that they now threaten to abandon. They commenced with what they called a reform tariff, and now they are ending with increased taxation. Every policy they have adopted they have abandoned in turn, and their latest policy is unrestricted policy. Let us not conceal it from ourselves that we are on the dangerous ground we were in 1891. We are to be Americanized by this Liberal government. I see gentlemen upon the other side of the House who will go back and appeal to the people of the North-west on the ground set forth by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and sanctioned by the ministers, including the first minister, who asked him to make that speech.

Mr. DOUGLAS. How do yon know ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) because he intends to repeat that speech.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I intend to do nothing of the kind.

Mr. CLANCY. I would be the last to disclose a thing that comes to me in the way of confidence, but I will gratify my hon. friend's curiosity by telling him that the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) told me so himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What did he tell you ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell what he told me. I wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) was in the House, so that he might hear my words. I met him in the corridor and I said : 'When are you going to speak.' He said : 'I am very sorry that I am taking your place, but at the request of the first minister I was asked to follow the Hon. Mr. Tarte.' That is what he told me. Is that specific enough to satisfy the curiosity of my hon. friends opposite, who intend to use that speech in the North-west ?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we cannot have two Canadas; one east of Lake Superior and the other west. If we are not to lose our identity; if we are to be saved from another campaign such as that of 1891, which was frustrated by the good sense and patriotism of the Canadian people, then we must be on our guard. This government on the eve of an election, intends to make such another campaign with the hope of being returned to power on it. But, Sir, our first duty is to cultivate a Canadian sentiment; our first duty is to show to the people of Canada that it makes a great deal of difference whether an article is manufactured by Canadian labour or by foreign labour, and our first duty is to provide home labour for the people of our own country. Well, Sir, how are we to do that? We must do it by cultivating a Canadian sentiment, by giving the first opportunity to Canadian enterprise and Canadian industry. If we prefer our Canadian home trade for Canadians rather than giving it to foreigners, if we prefer, in a word, to remain Canadians rather than to become a part of the United States, we must above all cultivate the sentiment of Canada for Canadians. Hon. gentlemen who fail to do that, who, instead, discuss the question from the standpoint of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) seem to me to be enemies rather than friends of that part of the country. I doubt if they are not playing a false part. I am not sure but that they will be the principle sufferers themselves; but what compensation is that for the wrong done to Canada and the evil effects that will follow the proclaiming of such an evil policy? I indulge the hope, however, that these hon. gentlemen will retrace their steps and follow a course that will unite rather than separate the country, that they will come to advocate a policy for the good of Canada as a whole, instead of different policies for different parts, each contending for itself and against the others. That we should have a united Canada, and not one broken into parts by the principles proclaimed by hon. gentlemen opposite, is, I am sure, the devout wish of every loyal Canadian.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) who addressed the House this afternoon at some length, said that the budget speech was somewhat disappointing. I have not the least doubt that it was somewhat disappointing to members on the other side of the House; but so far as the members on this side are concerned, I want to say that it was not disappointing at all, but was a speech with which we are very much pleased. The hon. gentleman saw fit to read the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) a lecture on patriotism. He told the House that the hon. gentleman, in making a speech on reciprocity with the United States, was speaking to the new settlers who are going into the North-west Territories at the present time with the desire of influencing their votes. He also stated that the hon. member for North Norfolk had made that speech by arrangement with the government. He said further that the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) had made a protectionist speech the other night also by arrangement with the government. In fact, he asserted that members of the government had arranged with their supporters to speak to different parts of the country; that is, one section of the House was to speak to the manufacturers of the east, another section to the farmers of the west, and another section to the new settlers coming into the country, with the intention of influencing their votes. Now, surely the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has forgotten that in days gone by the party of which he is a member were guilty of what he is accusing the Liberals of at the present time. I suppose he has not forgotten that on a certain occasion a gentleman who was Minister of the Interior for a few days, the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, came to the west and advocated a policy of free implements, while the Hon. Mr. Foster, the Finance Minister at the time, and the other leaders of the party, were advocating protection in all other parts of the country. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the candidates of the Conservative party in the North-west Territories previous to the last election went all over the country advocating free implements and everything of that kind; but we did not hear anything of that kind in this part of the country. With reference to the hon. member for St. Mary's, I presume he speaks for himself and himself alone. I presume that the hon. member for North Norfolk, in advocating the policy of reciprocity with the United States, a policy which I want to say I myself believe in, also spoke for himself. I fancy that the policy of the government is laid before the House by the Finance Minister in the budget speech. Every individual member of this House has a perfect right to advocate whatever policy he considers to be in the interest of the country or in the interest of his particular locality, without being read a lecture on patriotism by the hon. member for Bothwell. Of course, the hon. member for Bothwell and his political friends imagined at one time that they had a monopoly of all the patriotism in this country. They used to boast of being the only patriotic party. They kept themselves in power for several years by waving the old flag; but in 1896 their hand seemed to lose its cunning. They lost power, and in the last parliament, although they began by waving the old flag as before, they found that the people did not take any stock in it any longer and they dropped it. The speech made by the hon. member for Bothwell this afternoon was the same old speech that we have heard from him on several occasions during the last seven years. It was an old friend with a new face. It is true, he rubbed some of the corners off it, and put a little varnish on it, and tried to pass it off as a new article; but every member of this House who listened to it knows that it was the same old speech which has been replied to in this House half a dozen times. But I suppose the hon. member had nothing new, and in order to have something to say he had to refurbish the old speech and deliver it once more to the House. The leader of the party opposite, the hon. member for Halifax, dwelt at some length on ancient history. He told us what the Finance Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said and written some fifteen or sixteen years ago. We have heard that time and time again in this House for the last seven years. There has not been a budget under discussion when those same gentlemen did not resurrect something which the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said some fifteen years ago. Let me tell them that the people of this country do not care tuppense ha'penny what the views of these or any other hon. gentlemen might have been long ago. Conditions change, and any statesman who cannot change with them, would be a very poor specimen. A policy that might have been good fifteen years ago might be anything but good at present. Why, in private life, a speculation which might have been a very good one a year ago might be just the reverse to-day. I have seen a gentleman in my town want to swap horses one day, but the next day changed his mind because he thought he could do better by keeping his own. And so with the government. They must keep up with the times and suit their policy to the changing conditions of the country. What our hon. friends opposite did was just the reverse. They stuck to the one policy until they practically drove half the people out of the country and had the whole country in a state of stagnation. The hon. leader of the opposition and also the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) had to admit that the country was highly prosperous, but they made desperate efforts to show that none of that prosperity was due to the administration and policy of this government. Well, Mr. Speaker, while we do not claim that governments make the rain to fall and the sun to shine or the little birds to sing, we do claim that by adopting business methods and applying these methods to the administration of public affairs and by adopting a fiscal policy suited to the needs of the times, this government has brought about a certain measure of prosperity. It is astonishing how, as times change, these hon. gentlemen sing a different tune. In days gone by they claimed every dollar of prosperity was due to their national policy. That policy, they said, made the hens lay more eggs, and they argued that the government which could not bring about prosperity should be turned down. To-day, however, they refuse all credit to the present government for the prosperity which they are forced to admit our country is enjoying. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these hon. gentlemen protest too much. To ordinary people, the business of the country is governed by the same general principles as those of a private individual. If you want to do business to the best advantage you must advertise, you must let people know what you have to sell. If you have lands to sell, you must let the whole world know it. That is what this government has done and what the other government did not do. We have advertised our wares in the British markets and the other markets of the world. We have let the people of the other countries know what we have to dispose of and we have in this way brought about a prosperous condition of affairs. We have taken a leaf from the book of the United States. We have adopted up-to-date methods and applied them to our immigration policy, and in this way we have started a stream of immigration into our unoccupied lands, which is bound to produce the happiest results.

I do not intend to follow the example of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and weary the House with an abundance of figures. If those given by my hon. friend were analysed, it would be found that he was considerably astray in his conclusions. I have, however, here a couple of statements to show the progress this country has made in the way of business during the last few years. Take the foreign trade of Canada and that of the United States and compare the two. I am taking this trade on a basis of merchandise only. In the United States the increase was 38 per cent and in the Dominion it was 81 per cent. Then, take the domestic trade, on the basis of merchandise only. In the United States the increase was 51 per cent, while in Canada it was 84 per cent.

Then, take the per capita of the foreign trade of the United States, on a basis of merchandise only, and compare with that of Canada :

	United States.	Canada.
In 1890..	26·30	44·38
" 1896..	23·66	45·16
" 1902..	28·92	76·47

That, I think, is a pretty fair showing, and you will notice that most of the increase took place under the administration of this government. Let me now give the per capita trade, in domestic imports of merchandise only, in the United States and Canada :

	United States.	Canada.
In 1890..	13·50	17·18
" 1896..	12·29	20·97
" 1902..	17·49	36·04

I submit that the statement made the other evening by the hon. leader of the opposition was misleading, because he gave the amounts en bloc in comparing the trade of Canada with that of the United States. The only proper way to make a comparison is to take the per capita basis.

My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) dwelt at some length on the tariff, which is a question that interests particularly the people of our western country. He is kind enough to tell us that we are going to get the support of the people out there by circulating the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Well, Mr. Speaker, I know something about the people in the west, and judging by the sentiment out there, I should say that there is no necessity whatever to circulate the speeches of the hon. member for North Norfolk—although they certainly are good ones—or of anybody else, in order to get support for this government. The people in that part of the country know that they are prosperous. They can put their hands down into their pockets and feel that they have some money. But in 1896, they would feel in their pockets a long time before they could find a six-pence. It does not require speeches by my hon. friend from Bothwell or my hon. friend from Norfolk to convince them that the country is prosperous. With reference to the tariff, I submit, with all due respect to the hon. member for St. Mary's division of Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte), that the tariff should remain as it is. We in the west, as I have said, expect that we must pay our share of taxes to run the affairs of the country. We are not selfish; we know that the government of this country is a matter of compromise, and that we are not to be exempt from taxation while our brothers in the east are taxed. But the conditions in the west are different from those in the east. Practically everything that we in the west produce must be exported, and our products must be sold in the open markets in the face of the worlds' competition. Even products of ours that are sold within the Dominion are sold on the basis of the English price, so that we get no benefit from any home market whatever and thus we get nothing in return for the taxes we are called upon to pay in customs or excise. There are no industries as in the east and we are not building up a home market. As I have already said, we are contented with the tariff. We got reductions in certain lines, such as in woollen goods that were beneficial to the people, and we are willing to accept the present status. But we do not want to have an increase in the tariff at the present time or at any other time. That is the feeling of the people west of the lakes, and I submit that that feeling will have to be taken into consideration now and in the future in carrying out a fiscal policy for this country. Our hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in discussing this question the other afternoon told us that what we wanted was to have industries started west of the lakes. That may be very true. If gentlemen interested in manufacturing enterprises use some of their capital to set up establishments west of the great lakes to manufacture agricultural machinery, woollen goods or other commodities that we have to use, the creation of a home market will be begun, and we might take into consideration the fact that we are getting some benefit. But at the present time we feel that we are paying enough.

Now, as to the propaganda for an increase in the tariff, as I understand it, those who are most strongly in favour of an increase in our taxes, who have been the prime movers in the manufacturers' association to have petitions signed and delegations sent to wait on the government, are those interested in the manufacture of woollen goods and those interested in the manufacture of cotton goods. I venture to say there are no two industries in this country so well off at present as the woollen industry and the cotton industry. The great point is that they have a raw material on the free list. The class of wool used by the woollen manufacturers comes in absolutely free. The cotton people are in a similar position, for they get their raw cotton free. Contrast this with any other line of manufacture. Take, for instance, the furniture manufacturing interest. They certainly get their rough lumber free, but every other commodity that goes into the manufacture of furniture is taxed. What is raw material to the manufacture of furniture is the finished produce of other lines of manufacture. For instance, varnish, bolts and screws—everything that enters into the manufacture of furniture except rough lumber is subject to customs duty. It does not make any difference for my present argument whether the commodities are imported and pay the customs duty or whether they are manufactured in Canada, the price is increased to the extent of the duty, for the men who manufacture the varnish or the bolts or any of these other things take advantage of the duty and sell up to the limit that it allows. The manufacture of shirts is another illustration. Cambric and cottons of all sorts are the raw material of those who make shirts, and these are the manufactured products of the cotton people. It is true that the shirt manufacturer has the benefit of the duty upon the shirts brought into the country. I have not at hand at the moment a copy of the customs law, but we will say, for the sake of argument that the duty on these shirts is thirty per cent. If, then, the duty on raw material is thirty per cent, the men who manufacture shirts have very little to protect them. All they have is the duty on the value of the labour put into the manufacture of the shirts which must be a small rate of protection. The same thing applies all along the line. It applies even in the case of agricultural implements. Unless the manufacturers in that line have their own paint factory, they must buy their paint, and, whether it is imported or whether it is manufactured in this country, the price is higher to the extent of the duty. And so in all classes of goods used in the manufacture of agricultural implements. When we consider these things, we see what an advantage the manufacturers of woollens have in being able to import their raw material absolutely free. Therefore, it seems to me, that these are the last people who should put up a propaganda in favour of increasing the tariff. The country is fairly prosperous. I know, as a matter of fact that the manufacturers of woollen goods in this country cannot fill their orders. I happen to be in business and know all about it. They are three, four, five or six months behind with their orders. They employ all the men they have room for and are increasing the size of their plants and working over time. We have a right to believe that they are working at a profit—they would not work at a loss, for they are not in this business in a philanthropic basis. In view of the prosperity they now enjoy I think they might very well leave the tariff alone. But they tell us: That is all very well, but the hard times will come. Well, there is an old saying it is time enough to bid the old gentleman good day when you meet him. When the hard times come, if there is necessity for the revision of the tariff, I suppose the Finance Minister will take it into his consideration and will arrange the duties to suit the affairs of the country. For my part, I am in favour of no tariff at all. But, as we must have revenue, I admit that we must have customs duties. But those duties should be imposed so as to bear as lightly upon the poorer classes of the community as possible. My hon. friend from Bothwell, speaking of the woollen trade this afternoon found fault with the government for taking the specific duty off woollens. It appears to me, on the contrary, that taking off the specific duties was a great boon to the poorer class of the community. The hon. gentleman talks about shoddy, I suppose he was alluding to blankets. I might illustrate the point with a case which I have given before, but which will bear repetition. Take a blanket weighing eight pounds and costing say $1.50. There is specific duty of forty cents. Add to this the ad valorum duty, and you make a duty of about fifty-five per cent on the blanket that is bought by the poor man. On the other hand, the better blanket that would be bought by the rich man pays a duty of only thirty per cent. The same point is illustrated by the case of shirts. A dozen shirts of the coarser quality costs $3.05—say $3 for the sake of the argument. There is a specific duty of $1 per dozen or thirty-three and one-third per cent, and an ad valorem duty of twenty-five per cent. That is a duty altogether of about fifty-eight per cent.

Now, if you take the other line of shirts worn by the rich man, which costs $36 a dozen, and spread a dollar a dozen over that, you have five per cent; add to that, 25 per cent, and you have 30 per cent that the rich man will pay on a shirt, while the poor man has to pay 55 per cent. That is the way of raising a revenue that appeals to the hon. member for Bothwell. He says the government should never have done away with the duty. I say the government in doing away with it, did something that is in the interests of the people of Canada.

Hon. gentlemen opposite would like to make the tariff of this country prohibitive, so far as I can gather. I am not sure what they do want. The leader of the opposition has talked about adequate protection. In the west we never can get a statement of what is meant by that; but from the drift of their speeches we must come to the conclusion that they are all in favour of raising the duties right along. Now, if you make a prohibitory tariff what will the effect be? You will enrich a few individuals at the expense of the great majority of the people; you will divert taxation from the treasury where it is going at the present time, into the pockets of a few individuals who will get rich; because if there are no goods coming into the country, if you raise the tariff high enough, so that you will have no importations into the country, of course there is no duty to be paid and nothing to go into the treasury, and men who sell goods to the people are going to get the benefit, and the majority of the people who use goods, although paying high prices, will have to pay taxes in some other way in order to run the affairs of the country, so they will pay taxes twice over.

Now, there is another thing, Mr. Speaker, If you impose a high tariff of any kind you are going to reduce the value of lands all over the country, because a high tariff will increase the cost of the production of every bushel of wheat, and every bushel of oats that a farmer raises, or of every animal or anything else that the farmer of this country has to raise; because he will have to pay so much more for his mowing machine and his rake, so much more for his plough, so much more for anything else he uses on his farm. That is going to increase the cost of the production of his grain and his animals. If you do that, you are lowering the earning power of that farm, and if you lower the earning power of the farm, you are lowering the value of the farm and lowering the value of the land. That is one of the results that would follow from increasing the duties.

Now, what would we get by adopting the policy advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite ? If you put the duties up sufficiently high—and I have heard some hon. gentlemen opposite—I think the member for Bothwell himself advocated putting them up forty or fifty per cent—you would immediately close out all the importations coming into this country and you would leave us without sufficient revenue to develop this country. It is admitted by all classes of people that this country will require money for public works. If we are to keep pace with other countries we must have money to do it with. Now, the only way to have money coming into the treasury is by way of duties, otherwise you will have to borrow the money and pay interest on it. Now, Sir, under the scale of duties existing at the present time our revenue is increasing, it has doubled in seven years. Existing duties already give us sufficient money to run the country with, and this year we have a surplus. But if you were to adopt a high tariff you would simply shut off revenue and leave us without any money. You would build up a few millionaires, a few Rockefellers, you would build up a few trusts and combines such as the hon. member for Bothwell was talking about this afternoon. That has been the effect of high tariff in the United States, and that is the effect a high tariff would have in this country if it was enacted, there is no doubt at all about that. Talk to any hon. gentleman you please from the other side of the line, I don't care if he is a Republican or a Democrat, I don't care how high a protectionist he may be, he will not deny that the outcome of a high protective tariff in the United States has been to build up the trusts and combines they have there at the present time. These trusts and combines have got so strong that they are able to take the people by the throat. There is no legislature that the people can elect in the United States that is able to cope with the trusts at the present time. The trusts have got so strong there that they would simply turn out any government that would interfere with them. If the people were to elect a president of the United States to-morrow who was in favour of reducing the duties, who was in favour of regulating the trusts and combines, they would simply shut up their factories and turn hundreds of thousands of people on to the streets to starve. That would create a panic, and the consequences would be of the most alarming character. Now, we do not need to go to the United States for any patent of that kind. I think the people of this country have sufficient intelligence to frame a tariff to suit themselves, and if they are sensible they will frame a tariff to suit themselves without reference to what their neighbours are doing around them. It does not make any difference to us whether the people of the United States put a dollar a ton on iron going from this country to the United States. We have got to have iron, we have got to have raw material for our manufacturers. If it is a benefit to this country to get that iron in here, we will simply put it on the free list without reference to what the people of the United States may think or may do.

Now, an argument that has been used a good deal in this country, by gentlemen on this side of the House as well as gentlemen on the other side, is in regard to the balance of trade. They tell us that because we buy from the Americans some forty or fifty million dollars worth more than we sell to them, it is a ruinous policy for us to pursue, because the balance of trade is against us. I don't look at it in that way, I don't think there is anything in the balance-of-trade argument at all. We buy from the United States such commodities as we require, we buy raw material from them if we want it. If we want iron we buy it from the United States, simply because we want it in our own interest. If we buy certain other commodities from the United States we buy them because we want them, and if we put up a duty on these articles merely for the purpose of retaliation, we are simply, as the old saying is, cutting off our nose to spite our face. If the manufacturers of agricultural implements in this country, for example, had to pay a higher duty on the raw material which must come from the United States, they would have to increase the price of their commodities, and the people of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific would have to pay that increased price. So I say there is nothing in the balance-of-trade argument at all. I myself as a business man have bought goods for years from a firm, and paid them thousands and thousands of dollars, but they never bought anything of me in return. Still I did not lose any money by it, I made a little money as I went along. When we do buy more from the United States than they buy from us, we sell more to other countries than we buy from other countries, so on the whole the balance-of-trade is pretty nearly even, at the present time I think it is exactly even. Therefore, so far as the balance-of-trade argument is concerned, there is nothing in it.

Now I have something to say of the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on reciprocity. That seemed to trouble my hon. friend from Bothwell a good deal this afternoon. He seemed to think that if that speech was circulated it would have the effect of turning the votes of the newcomers in the west in favour of the Liberal party. Well, setting aside the political question entirely, as a member from the west, as one who has lived in the west for many years, and studied the conditions, and knows something about the feeling of the people there, I would like to see reciprocity brought about. We have a great field in the west for raising sheep. If we can get the markets of the United States for our wool, sheep raising will become a profitable enterprise and millions of acres of very valuable land that is not used very much at the present time because it cannot be used for anything else, would be utilized for the purpose of pasturing sheep. Sheep can be raised profitably in the west and the people would make money out of it. We would also be able to get more for our cattle. We sell a great many young store cattle to the people of the United States. We would also get more for our wheat. I want to say a word in reference to wheat. To those who are acquainted with affairs in the west it is a well known fact that the hard wheat belt is moving northward all the time. Thirty years ago the state of Minnesota could not grow wheat on account of frost. To-day the state of Minnesota is turned into a corn state. They cannot produce hard wheat at all, the climate has changed entirely and they are producing scarcely anything but corn. In South Dakota, where they were affected by frost a few years ago, they are to-day going into the raising of corn. It has been figured down by scientific men that the wheat belt is moving northward at the rate of about five miles per year. The millers of the United States have found that it is impossible for them to run their mills at a profit without getting more hard wheat. They have managed to get permission from their government to mill our wheat in bond, and to-day we find that the Americans are building elevators all over the western country and entering into competition with the local buyers, thus increasing the price that the farmers are getting for their wheat. The Americans must have our wheat, and if we get reciprocity the demand will be greater and we will get a larger price. I claim that reciprocity with the United States would be one of the best things that could happen the people of the North-west. We must take into consideration, in speaking of the west, that the west and the east are practically one. We cannot be prosperous out there without the people of the east feeling it; you cannot be prosperous here without the people of the west feeling it. We are talking about reciprocity in natural products; we are not talking about reciprocity in manufactured articles. You will always have your market for manufactured articles in the west. The more we get for our wheat the more you will get for your manufactured articles. It is to the advantage of the people of eastern Canada to see the people of the west in a state of prosperity. The first step to take in bringing about that condition of prosperity is to secure reciprocity in the products which we raise in the west. I feel confident that we are going to get it. The feeling in the western states is growing strongly in favour of reciprocity with the Dominion of Canada. Anybody who studies the times knows that. There have been meetings held all over the United States to consider the question. We have had pronouncements made by several of the most prominent men of the middle and western states upon that question. The feeling, as I have said, is strong and reciprocity is going to be brought about. One of the reasons for this change of feeling is the fact that the government have advertised this country in the United States and the Americans now know what we have. Eight or nine years ago they did not know what we had. They imagined we had nothing but a country where everything froze up. To-day they know we have the finest agricultural lands in the world and they are anxious to come over and get some of these lands, and notwithstanding the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) I am of the impression that they will make first-class Canadians. In my own district as soon as they put in the three years which enables them to become Canadian citizens, they become Canadians. In one case a state senator from Minnesota in my district, who will have completed his three years next year, is going to take out his papers and become a Canadian citizen, so well satisfied is he with the institutions of the country, and I may say that these people are better satisfied with our institutions than with those which they had in their old homes. The sentiment is growing in favour of reciprocity and we should not do anything to hamper it. If you adopt a policy of retaliation you are merely going to strengthen the hands of those people who are opposed to freer trade between the two countries in the New England states. The proper policy to pursue is to arrange our own tariff to suit our own people and never mind what our neighbours are doing and in a very short time we will find that this feeling has grown so strong that reciprocity will be brought about and when it is brought about it will confer a great benefit upon the people.

Mr. Speaker, I have never looked upon the British preference, from the sentimental standpoint from which a great many people claim to have looked upon it. I have looked upon the British preference as a reduction in the taxation that the people of our part of the country have benefited by. With that preference we have been enabled to buy goods more cheaply, notwithstanding the statement of the hon. member for Bothwell. I think I am in about as good a position, having been in business for over twenty years, being in business at the present time and handling woollen goods, to speak with authority on that question as the hon. member for Bothwell, and I say that the British preference has reduced the price of woollen goods and other commodities of all kinds to the people of the whole Dominion. Not only has it had the effect of reducing the price on all kinds of goods that come from Great Britain, whether they be great or small, but it has had the effect of reducing the price of all commodities that we import from the United States. It has also had the effect in reducing the cost of all commodities that are produced by the Canadian manufacturers, because, if any person who is doing a business can go to a Canadian manufacturer, if he wants to buy a bale of blankets, or a bale of tweeds, make him an offer, saying: Under the preferential tariff of 33⅓ per cent I can lay these goods down at such a price, you are a Canadian I would like to deal with you and if you can supply the goods at that price I will give you the order, but if you cannot, I will get the goods from Great Britain. If the business man can do that, the Canadian manufacturer in order to hold the market, comes down to the price which has been mentioned, the merchant obtains the goods at a lesser cost and the people who consume those goods get the benefit of the reduction in price. Therefore, not only does the British preference apply to what we import from Great Britain, but it applies to what we import from the United States and all other countries, and also to goods manufactured in the country. I noticed this evening, and I have no doubt other hon. gentlemen have noticed, that Mr. Ritchie, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced to-day that the tax will be taken off wheat. I have observed that for some time the opposition have tried to make a point of that. I think it was generally understood by the majority of people that the tax was a war measure, and I think most people were under the impression in this House, as well as in Great Britain, that it would only last so long as they required to have it, for the purpose of getting revenue, that it would be taken off again and we see that it has been taken off. That will exclude some of the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite and some hon. gentlemen no doubt will have to change the speeches that they have written up in view of the statement that has come over the wire to-day. Now, the people in my part of the country, as well as the people in all other parts of the country, are very much interested in the amount of taxes they have to pay. The people in the west are not as partisan as those in the east. The people out there are more independent.

In the west a man may vote one way to-day and another to-morrow, for he is always on the lookout for the best government he can get, and naturally to pay as little taxes as he can. They will vote for the platform that will best suit their views, but they want to know what that platform is. The leader of the opposition accompanied by some of his leading supporters, toured through the west last summer, and I think he must have come to the conclusion that the people whom he counted as Conservatives would not be favourable to his policy; that is if they could find out what it was. Personally I am at sea as to what 'adequate protection' means. It may mean anything, and it may mean nothing. It is like the American pedlar who had but one suit of clothes in his bag, and it was big enough for any man and small enough for any boy. The policy of the opposition at present is intended to suit every body, like the pedlar's clothes. When the Conservatives try to convert us to their way of thinking we have a right to know what their policy is before we take a plunge in the dark. Does the leader of the opposition think that the present duty on agricultural machinery is adequate? He was asked in Manitoba if he thought 20 per cent was adequate protection on mowing machines, and he said it was. We have his policy as to that particular item, but what is his opinion about the duty on threshing mills, fanning mills, disc harows, ploughs, and all that class of machinery? Is it adequate or does he want to raise it. The manufacturer might think that 40 per cent would be about adequate protection, while the farmer might think that 10 per cent is adequate enough. Now, the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) did not give as much consolation to gentlemen on the other side of the House as they expected, but nevertheless he is a high priest of protection, and he says that about 49 per cent would be about a fair rate of duty, and I suppose he voiced the sentiments of the Conservatives in this House when he said that. The people of the west would like to know if the Conservatives think that 49 per cent on farm machinery is adequate protection. What would they consider adequate protection on blankets and shirts and course tweeds and woollens, which the farmers of the North-west use a great deal of, it being a cold country, and all of which they have to import. A farmer does not want to pay 35 per cent more for a piece of tweed than he would otherwise pay, in order that there should be adequate protection. These gentlemen opposite, if they hope to make any headway in the west, will have to come out of the woods and state exactly what they mean by adequate protection. They cannot play fast and loose with the people as they are trying to do. I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who is leading the opposition to-night, that in the west his party cannot run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. He will find that his own supporters in the west, and there may be a few left, are in favour of a lower rate of duty, or at least that they are in favour of leaving the duty as it is to-day. It is certain that they do not want any increase of duty. Now, the leader of the opposition told us that from our standpoint we should have no surpluses at all, but that we should reduce the taxes. That may be true, but does not the hon. gentleman know that it is desirable to have stability of tariff and that it would be a very foolish thing to tinker with the tariff in the middle of a session just for the purpose of dissipating a surplus. A surplus is a good thing in its way. This is a great and growing country, and we must have money to develop our resources, and if gentlemen in the east do not know what to do with a surplus of $13,000,000, I can tell them how they can spend it in a way that will redound to the interests of Canada at large. We are getting a hundred thousand immigrants or more into our North-west this year, and you can with great advantage devote your surplus so as to improve the condition of the people who are flocking into that country. You can equip a winter port in the beautiful harbour of St. John, and you can go to the St. Lawrence and expend money there in improving your transportation facilities. That will get rid of your surplus and it will confer great benefits on the people of Canada as a whole. I am afraid that most hon. gentlemen do not realize what the immense immigration into the west means to Canada. It means that each immigrant, man, woman and child, whom we bring in is assuming $50 of the national debt, and for 100,000 people, that means $5,000,000 a year. These 100,000 immigrants will bring $10,000,000 in wealth in the shape of merchandise and cash, and there you have $15,000,000 to figure on immediately. I submit that in a young and growing country like this, each immigrant is worth at least not less than $1,000, and therefore, if the government would spend $1,000,000 out of the surplus in bringing in say 150,000 people, we would be getting $5 back for every dollar we would expend in that way. Is not that a very profitable way in which to get rid of your surplus ? The leader of the opposition presented a statement to the House which purported to show the money taken out of the pockets of the people when the Conservatives were in power and the money taken out of the pockets of the people as he alleged since the Liberals came into power. He went on to say that when the Conservatives were in power in 1896 the taxation of the people amounted to $27,759,285, and that it had increased in 1902 to $43,389,122, which he said meant that in seven years the Liberal government had practically doubled the taxation of the people. The hon. member for Bothwell said this afternoon that when the Conservatives left office the taxation was something like $7 per head, and that this government had increased it to over $11 per head. I never heard, and no hon. member on the other side of the House ever heard, of this or any other government going to any man's door to collect taxes. Perhaps the hon. leader of the opposition has heard of it, but I never have. The government do not go to collect taxes from any person. The people tax themselves, because they are able to pay taxes. The hon. leader of the opposition the other day undertook to show that the Conservative government in 1891 collected $30,000,000 from the people and in 1894 brought it down to $27,000,000. I suppose he wanted to make out that that meant economy; but what does it show ? It shows that the people in those days of deficits were so hard up that they could not import many commodities. If a farmer buys a binder, and is is imported, he pays a certain amount of taxes. If he buys a plough, and it is imported, he has to pay more taxes. If he buys a suit of clothes made of tweed which is imported, he has to pay more taxes. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, he could not afford to buy a binder or a plough; perhaps he could not buy clothes; and then of course he did not pay taxes. If he is able to-day to dress his family or has luxuries which he could not afford when the Conservatives were in power, and a certain portion of these commodities are imported, he pays more taxes. If he lives more as a human being ought to live at the present time, he of course pays more taxes. The people were not able to pay as much taxes when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. The farmers could not buy binders, mowing machines and ploughs; they were so poor that they could hardly buy a suit of clothes. Now that prosperity has come, and is rolling over the country, they have more money; they can buy the machinery they require on their farms, they can dress their families in a proper manner, and have ten cents to put on the collection plate on Sunday, which they did not have when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. The greatest evidence of the prosperity which is rolling over the country at the present time, is the fact that the revenues of the country have increased by leaps and bounds. This shows that the people are able to buy largely of everything they need, and are consequently paying more taxes. If hon. gentlemen opposite had their way they would put up a high tariff wall, so that this money, instead of going into the public treasury, would dribble into the pockets of some individuals, and the people would get no advantage. That is the policy they want to adopt, but I think it will be a great many years before they have a chance to put into force a policy of adequate protection.

We have a great deal of money in the treasury of the Dominion at the present time; we are told that this year we shall have over $60,000,000. How is this money being spent ? Have hon. gentlemen opposite been able to put their finger upon a single dollar of improper expenditure ? I notice that when the estimates are going through, every member on the other side of the House wants more money spent. One wants a dock, another a post office, another a public building, another a harbour, another a dredge; and after they have all clamoured for more expenditures of every kind, they come down with a mock motion at the end in favour of retrenchment, and claiming that the government have spent too much money. How many of these votes have they challenged ? Perhaps one or two out of millions and millions in a whole session of parliament. Yet they will talk about the increased expenditures. If the money that is coming into the treasury is properly expended—and it is, because hon. gentlemen opposite have not been able to show any wrong expenditure, although they have had their microscope on it right along—the people of the country will be perfectly satisfied. We require a good deal of money to-day. When the Finance Minister took over the financial affairs of this country, he found a pretty serious state of affairs. Mr. Foster, the Finance Minister, under the Conservative government, did not leave very much behind. It reminds me of a story I heard about an Irish undertaker, who was called in to bury a man who belonged to a peculiar sect. After he had prepared the corpse for burial, an elder of the sect to which he belonged gave him a five dollar bill to put into the box along with the corpse. The undertaker asked him what that was for. The elder told him it was to pay the passage of the corpse across the river Styx. After the elder left, instead of putting it in the coffin, the undertaker put it in his pocket, saying to himself, 'Begorra, times is hard, and I need that in my business, so I will let this fellow schwim.' That is exactly what the late Minister of Finance did with the present Minister of Finance ; he took everything in the treasury, and when the present Minister of Finance came in, he had to swim, and in his first year or two he had a good deal of swimming in order to pay off the debts left by his predecessor.

The hon. member for Bothwell referred to the expenditure of the Post Office Department. I was surprised that the hon. gentleman had the audacity to attack the Post Office Department of all the departments in the government. He said that the Postmaster General in the late government had opened about 1,000 post offices while in the same length of time the present Postmaster General had only opened 556—to show that the other Postmaster General had spent more money. But, when the present Postmaster General took over the Post Office Department, he found a deficit in the finances of about $700,000. He took over those thousand post offices, a great many of which I suppose had been opened for political purposes; he had to provide funds to run them, and, according to the hon. gentleman's own argument, he has run them and 556 more, and run them successfully. And with all that he has wiped out the deficit, and given the people penny postage. Then the hon. gentleman said that he had cut off a lot of mail contracts, and had dismissed a lot of people who should not have been dismissed. Any person who will take the time to look into the affairs of the Post Office Department and who knows anything about the inside history of that department, must come to the conclusion that the pruning knife was badly needed when the change of government took place. Look at what was going on all over the country. In my own riding a man was getting $7,000 for carrying the mails ninety miles. He had that contract year after year, but when the present Postmaster General took office, he cancelled it and called for tenders. What was the result ? The same work is now done for $1,000. Six thousand dollars per year have thus been saved to the people and we are getting a better mail service. This man had the contract some ten years, so that $60,000 were squandered of the people's money on this one contract, or sufficient to build a bridge for the people at Saskatoon. Hon. gentlemen opposite can surely not have forgotten the case at Brockville, where a man was paid a certain sum of money for transferring the mails from one platform to another and paid the same amount for watching himself while he did it. Nor can they have forgotten what took place in Nova Scotia, where a relative of the late leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), was getting some $600 per year for carrying the mails from the railway station at Amherst to the Amherst post office. And this man farmed the contract to another, who did the work for the sum of $200. So that this friend of the former leader of the opposition put $400 of the people's money into his pocket as long as he lived and did nothing for it. And when he was about to shuffle off this mortal coil, he bequeathed his contract to another relative of Sir Charles Tupper, who in his turn sub-let it for $200 and pocketed the $400. And when this man was about to die, he transferred it to another relative of the Tupper family, who also farmed it out for $200, and pocketed the $400. When the present Postmaster General came in, he applied the pruning knife to this transaction and let the contract for less than $200. Is it any wonder that with leakages of this kind, there should have been a deficit of some $700,000 which our Postmaster General is now succeeding in wiping out. My hon. friend from Bothwell can talk as much as he pleases about the Post Office Department, it will take a long while for him to convince the people that any change is necessary.

I wish now to crave the attention of the House for a few moments while I discuss a subject which more particularly interests that part of the country I come from, but which of course closely interests every part of the Dominion. We all belong to the same country, and what benefits the one is bound to be of advantage to the others. We have to work together, and our proper policy, as the hon. Minister of Finance has told us, is to build up our western country. Every producer you put on the soil is bound to consume manufactured products. Every one who grows wheat must buy manufactured articles. Let us fill up that country, and the big industries down east will reap the benefit. It is well known that railway construction in the west is not keeping pace with the development of that country. Very little has been done in the past few years outside of the province of Manitoba in the way of constructing railways. We are getting people in there very fast, and if we do not do something at once towards building railways in that country, we may have a reaction and find people going out perhaps faster than we are bringing them in. What are the facts of the case ? The congestion which has existed in that country in the way of accumulated freights during the past two years is well known. I am not going to blame the railway companies. Although I hold no brief from the Canadian Pacific Railway, as everybody knows, I do not blame that company. I believe that its intentions were good. I believe that the $9,000,000 which it was supposed to spend west of the lakes in improving its terminals and motive powers and rolling stock, it intended expending there. But if a man wants a horse and can find no one with a horse to sell, what can he do ? If the Canadian Pacific Railway wants locomotives and could find none to buy, it is difficult to blame that company for not getting any. But the situation is one which demands a remedy. We have spent money on our canal system, but I am sorry to say that it has not proved, as my hon. friend from Bothwell has shown, a success. My hon. friend from Bothwell shows that although a lot of money has been expended on our canals, the tonnage passing through them is decreasing, but he forgot that while business is decreasing on the canals it is growing up by leaps and bounds on our railways. This is a railway age. I have given some study to the subject, and I am convinced that any money spent on canals, except for the purpose of utilizing them as a safety valve to regulate freights, is money wasted. I shall not take into account the people who came into our western country last year and who are coming in this year, because they are not yet producers, but the people who were there up to two years ago have produced about 125,000,000 bushels of grain in round figures. Up to two years, there were not more in that western country than 500,000 people. If 500,000 people produced over 125,000,000 bushels of grain, and if we put people into that country at the rate of 100,000 per year, we will double our production in five years. To-day we are suffering from a congestion of traffic; we cannot get our grain out. What we got to the lake ports we had not sufficient boats there to move, and, even if we had boats, we could not get it all to the lake ports in sufficient time for navigation. Consequently more than one-half of our crop is in the terminals or elevators throughout the country and will have to be kept there a year. Every bushel of wheat which has to be kept over at the close of navigation costs six cents to the farmer. The storage insurance, interest on money and other charges, amounts in round figures to about six cents per bushel. We have 50,000,000 bushels lying on our hands, and if you figure out how much this comes to at six cents a bushel, you will find that our 500,000 people in the North-west have lost enough money to pay the interest on the bonds of railways which would carry that grain out during the winter months. What we absolutely require is some way of marketing our grain every year. We cannot store our grain at the head of the lakes. We have a surplus of fifty million bushels this year, and it is quite within the range of possibility that in ten years we shall have a surplus of one hundred and fifty millions requiring to be stored there. Suppose you throw one hundred and fifty millions of bushels on the market in the spring of the year, you would certainly depreciate the market very seriously. This would be an addition to cost of five or six cents per bushel for keeping it in store and depreciation while there. The only safety for the people is to have a railway built with proper grades, with large locomotives and cars of great capacity such as we have now. We could then market our grain twelve months in the year. This must be done some time, and the sooner it is taken up the better. It will unite the two parts of the country, it will bring the people of the east and the people of the west together and there will be a better feeling. It will make it possible to carry out cheaply the products of the west and to bring in at proportionately low rates the commodities that the people of the west require. You would have no trouble then about bringing in goods from the outside. You would build up a solid country, and this is the only way you could do it. In the meantime, with conditions as they are in the west, something must be done immediately. If some action is not taken in the present session to provide a railway along the Saskatchewan Valley up towards Edmonton to afford railway facilities for the people in that country, some of whom are fifty or sixty miles from a railway, it is within the range of possibility that you may have people going out of the country faster than you can bring them in. We know that a great many of the people going in there are people from the United States, from a country where they have railway facilities—

Mr. MACLEAN. Who built the railways?

Mr. DAVIS. It is the money of the people that builds everything. These people from the United States are accustomed to having railways close at hand, and to everything moving quick. If they stay there two years and find that the government is taking no action towards giving them relief, it is, as I say, quite within the range of possibility that they may pack up and leave the country. What would that mean ? That would mean a depreciation in the value of farm lands from one end of the country to the other. The condition of things is serious, and it is absolutely necessary that this matter should be dealt with at once—the sooner the better for all parties interested. Now, I notice that my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) is very much interested in the railway problem. Judging from the speeches he has made on the question, he is always in favour of government ownership of railways. I may tell him and other gentlemen who are troubled with the disease of government ownership of railways that if he had been in this House this afternoon and had heard the criticism of his friend from Bothwell, he would have come to the conclusion that government ownership of railways is not a paying proposition. But, I am not very particular about how the roads are built. Some people are opposed to giving subsidies to railways. If any person can get capitalists to go in there and build a road in the Saskatchewan Valley, with the necessary branches and do it without subsidies, I shall be quite in favour of it. But before capitalists will enter upon an enterprise of that kind, they must see where the interest on their money is coming from. Except for the business of taking the people into the country you are not going to get any revenue for the first two years, I do not suppose my hon. friend from East York would propose taxing immigrants enough to pay the interest on the cost of the road for those first two years. How, then, is the interest to be provided ? Of course, if you can get the roads built without subsidies, I am with you. But we must have railways, whether the companies build them or whether the government build them. There are people in the west who are in favour of government ownership of railways. But, it seems to me, from the study I have given to it, that it would not work very well with the system of government we have here. Put the railways under control of the government, I do not care whether it is a Liberal or Conservative government, and the result, it seems to me, would be dangerous. In place of government ownership of railways, I think it would be government ownership of people. I think my hon. friend from East York and the people of his way of thinking will find, that if the railways were in the hands of the government, it would be difficult to move the government from power, whatever the occasion for doing so might be.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) to the fact that there is an amendment before the Chair moved by the leader of the opposition concerning the tariff. According to the rules of parliamentary procedure, when an amendment has been moved the discussion would be confined to that amendment. I find that the hon. gentleman is now discussing the question of government ownership of railways. The amendment as he is aware, deals with the tariff question.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not read the amendment. I did not think it worth my while.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment reads as follows :

> This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians ;
>
> And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session.

I would invite the hon. member to confine his remarks as much as possible to the question of the tariff.

Mr. DAVIS. I am glad to hear the amendment. I had not taken much notice of the wording of it, but I understood that it was generally in favour of adequate protection. It seems to me, that the discussion of railways is quite germain to the subject. A vigorous railway policy is necessary for the welfare of the agriculturists as well as for the healthy development of trade. I do not see how the railway question is to be omitted from a consideration of the financial affairs of the country. The hon. member for Bothwell, this afternoon, discussed the Intercolonial railway and every other question from Dan to Beersheba and if there had been anything outside of that that he could have got after, he would have brought it in too. I am under the impression that the subject I was trying to discuss is as important as those covered by the hon. member for Bothwell, and it has a direct bearing upon the welfare of the country and on the question of the tariff, for, as I have shown, if you build up railways between the east and the west you are going to keep trade within ourselves, and it will not be necessary to go outside the country to buy the commodities we require.

Mr. SPEAKER. I thought the hon. gentleman was discussing the question of ownership of railways, which was, perhaps, going a little outside the question.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I am in the wilderness, I was led there by the hon. member for Bothwell. He was in the wilderness all afternoon. He gave us the track mileage of I don't know how many railways and all sorts of details on railway questions. I was going on to say that we need railways from the east to the west. I was not going to discuss the question of government ownership of railways—I leave that to my hon. friend from East York who appears to have a patent on that kind of thing for this country. I keep well within the lines of the trade question when I say that if we are going to build up the country and keep the trade of the west for our home industries, whether the tariff is high or low, we must build railways so that the people may be contented with their lot, and so that the people of the west and the people of the east may exchange ideas and everything else.

Now we must have railroads built. As I said before, it does not make much difference to the people of the west in what way they are built. We have some people up there in favour of government ownership. But how is the government going to construct those railroads ? For my part I believe that the time for giving subsidies to railways has passed. I think there is a better way than by giving cash subsidies, and that the majority of the people of this country are coming to that opinion. We cannot at the present time have government ownership of railways because it would not be practicable under our system of government. It would not be practicable unless you took over all the railroads in the country, because you cannot run a government railway to compete with an independent line, the government railway has got to go to the wall. So I say it would not be wise for us to build government railroads at the present time. But there is another way of doing it, and that is by guaranteeing bonds.

Now I want to say a few words with reference to the state of feeling in the province of Ontario at the present time. I find that certain delegations of farmers have been waiting on the government protesting against giving bonuses to railways. I find that such papers as the 'Farmers' Sun,' and perhaps the Toronto 'World,' are also opposed to granting cash subsidies to railways at the present time. That feeling seems to have taken strong hold of the people of Ontario. But the people of Ontario seem to forget that every man in the province has a railway at least within five miles of his own door, and they seem to forget that those railways were built with money out of the public treasury of this country, and if it did not come out of the treasury it was money borrowed on the credit of the whole people, who have to pay interest on that money. The other day I asked a question about how much public money had been given for building railways. I find that $69,418,275.54 have been spent on the Intercolonial Railway ; I find that $5,000,000 odd were spent on the Prince Edward Island Railway. I find that subsidies have been granted to railways to the extent of $1,872,000 in Nova Scotia, and $1,292,000 to New Brunswick. I am not complaining of anything that has been given to these provinces, I think they are entitled to it. I find that Quebec got $10,000,000 and over by way of railway subsidies, and I find that Ontario got $18,750,000, money that was borrowed on the credit of the whole people of Canada towards constructing her railways. And to-day, after every man has got a road at his own door, he says : Well, it is time to stop giving subsidies. It is like a man sitting down to a free dinner, and after eating a good hearty meal himself he pushes the dishes away and says : No more meals to be given away. This money that has been spent on railways all over this country, has been borrowed on the credit of the people. Now let me go a little further. I find that $3,000,000 odd were spent on railroads in Manitoba, principally on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; in the North-west provinces, $7,000,000, on main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; British Columbia, $9,000,000 odd on main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now it is often said that the Canadian Pacific Railway was built for the people of the west. I take issue with that statement. Where did the $25,000,000 given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the west, come from ? It was not paid out of consolidated revenue, it was borrowed on the credit of the people of Canada. The people of the west have got to help pay the interest on it, and it is within the range of probability that in the near future, judging by the development up there, we may be called upon to pay the greater part of the principal. When they tell us that they are building railroads for us in the west—it is nothing of the kind. Every railroad in the west has been built out of our own land, granted without stint. More than 80,000,000 acres of the most fertile lands in the world have been given away for railroad construction ; in my own district, 10,000,000 acres of land, have been given away to subsidize railways. How many miles of railway do you think we have in Saskatchewan ? About one hundred miles. We have given $50,000,000 worth of land and have got one hundred miles of road. We are not complaining about that, because after all I do not think it will matter much to the people of this country in thirty years from now whether that land is given away to railroads or to settlers. The land is of no value until you get some person to buy it and begin producing, then it becomes valuable. But the argument still remains that we in the west, who have contributed to build all the railroads in the east for the last eighteen years, think it is not unreasonable now to ask the people of the east to assist us in opening up and developing that country.

I was going on to say that there was a better way of building railroads than by granting cash subsidies, because I think the age of cash subsidies is past. Now a railroad should not be built at all unless it is built in a section of country that will support a population. If a tract of country will not support a population, there should be no railroad built there. If you build a railroad through a fertile tract of country that has passed the experimental stage, and where the people are coming in and settling, there can be no risk at all in the government guaranteeing bonds to the railway under certain conditions. I claim that the government would do well to guarantee the bonds of a railway company to build that road through to Edmonton, or further if it is found necessary, at a certain figure, and take a first mortgage on that road, so that we may have something to show, and that we may get interest on the money. And in order to satisfy the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) and gentlemen of that school, let us insert a clause in the agreement that the government will have a right to purchase. If you do that the gentlemen who build that road will be able to go into the money markets of the world and borrow money for 3 per cent and less, on a government guarantee. That being the case, if you put $13,000 or $14,000 a mile into a railroad at 3 per cent, it must necessarily follow that the fixed charges and the interest on that money every year are going to be less than if it was built with 6 per cent money that a corporation would have to pay if they had to borrow money without a guarantee. You would have double the amount of interest to pay every year if you built the road by a private corporation without a government guarantee. If the government guarantee the bonds, they should also take the right of supervising the rates to be charged on the road. As soon as the country settles up thickly, as soon as development takes place, as soon as production takes place, the road becomes more valuable. If the government do not wish to purchase the road in the meantime, the company can get other parties to take bonds without a government guarantee. After the country is settled, the government can release the mortgage and the railroad will not cost the people of the country a cent. Bonds were guaranteed on railways in Manitoba eight or ten years ago, and the government of Manitoba have never been called on to pay a dollar, because the profits after the opening up of the road were sufficient to meet all the charges on the road.

I think, if the government takes this question up, and there is an urgent necessity that it should be taken up at once, by guaranteeing the bonds and taking a first mortgage on the road, inserting a clause to suit the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) if it is necessary, we will get the road built this year, and we will be enabled to hold not only the people we have, but we will be enabled to get hundreds and thousands of more people to come into that country. We have a boom on now, we are bound to get the people, we have the land, the climate is all right, but we must be alive, we must act quickly, we must show that we are alive, because, if we do not, people are not going to stay here and let the moss grow upon them. Now, I think I have taken up, perhaps, too much of the time of the House. I may be transgressing the rules of the House in bringing this question of railway construction in the west to the attention of the government, but in doing so I am only doing what I feel is right, not only in the interests of the people of the west, but in the interests of the people of the east. I know what the conditions up there are. I know people forty and fifty miles away from a railway, and I know that a man cannot farm with profit fifty miles away from a railway. If a man has to haul his wheat a thousand miles by railway and fifty miles by land, it will cost him more to haul it fifty miles by land than to pay the freight for 1,000 miles by rail. We must secure cheaper freight rates for the people in that country. These people who are waiting year in and year out for railways will get tired and leave the country. I know people in my district who have been for twenty years fifty or sixty miles away from a railway, and if they do not get some relief they will feel like moving out. If the newcomers see old settlers going out, they will not look with favour upon the country. I hope the government will take this question up and deal with it. We have a large surplus and we will have large surpluses in the future, because, having a government which carries on the affairs of the country on business principles, we are bound to have surpluses. I do not claim that this government have made all this prosperity, that they have made the rain to fall or the sun to shine, but they have done something in the way of building up the country by adopting business methods in the conduct of public affairs. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that while prosperity exists in Canada today all the world is prosperous, and that we are only getting our share. I will say however, that there is a possibility that if the government had not risen to the occasion while other countries were carrying on an increased business and enjoying a large measure of prosperity this country might not have been prosperous. If a man is running a business in a town and he does not advertise his business, look after it and apply modern methods to it, he might set on his counter and do nothing, while every other merchant of the town was doing a rushing business. I claim that this government are a first-class business government, that they are conducting the affairs of the country upon business principles, and I am certain that when the appeal is made to the country again, the people will think twice before they return to what they had seven or eight years ago—periods of depression, stagnation, and people going out of the country faster than we could bring them in.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, in continuing this debate, I may refer for a very few moments to some of the points taken up by the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Davis) who has just resumed his seat. The notes which I have taken of them are something like the following, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not do as they often do on that side of the House—get up and run out of the House as soon as they deliver themselves of their speeches. First, he says: 'surpluses are a good thing.' I may have something to say in regard to that later on. 'The government never collect taxes.' I will refer to that as well, because I am able to refer him to very good authorities on that side of the House—the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding). 'The Postmaster General, when he came to power found a deficit of $700,000. He wiped out the deficit by saving on contracts for carrying the mails.' I will refer to that as well. 'The railway problem of the west; we must have some way to market our grain. If the railway is not built this year, people will move out.' I imagine the influx of settlers to that country will be the best market the people will have for their surplus products for a year or two whether they have railways or not. Therefore, I do not think there is any great danger in that respect. It is said in the section of the country from which the hon. gentleman comes, that they have occasionally what they call chinook winds that come through the crevices of the mountains. They are dry, they are higher in temperature than the average temperature of the atmosphere, and out of that condition has grown the saying whenever a scheme is floated upon nothing, that it is a hot air scheme. I must confess that the logic that the hon. gentleman presented to this House to back up his convictions was largely of the hot air character, and I do not wonder at it because he comes from a section of the country where they know something about hot air.

The hon. Minister of Finance made his statement in this House a few days ago in regard to the condition of the country financially, commercially, and industrially. Its treasury, he said, was overflowing with wealth. The incoming revenues of the country were not only ample for its needs, but there was a large surplus every year, the largest, expected at the end of the present year, would reach about $13,000,000. The expenditure, he said it was true, had been heavy, but we had the money, the country required the expenditure, and if the expenditure was wisely made no one could object. The people, he said, are industrially employed to their fullest extent at good wages, and the country is becoming wealthy, so the banking and financial operations up to the present indicate. The financial statement in the line of bookkeeping which he gave us showed that the country was in a prosperous condition so far as its revenue went, and that the government were expending lavishly so far as their expenditures went. He said the revenue was overflowing and going up every year. In round figures we find that it is something like the following:

Year.	Revenue.
1897	$37,000,000
1898	40,000,000
1899	46,000,000
1900	51,000,000
1901	52,000,000
1902	58,000,000

Well, this was a large revenue, very much larger than Canada had ever been accustomed to before these last few years. But, while the revenue was large the expenditure also was large. The statement is as follows:

Year.	Revenue.	Expenditure.
1897	$37,000,000	$42,000,000
1898	40,000,000	45,000,000
1899	46,000,000	51,000,000
1900	51,000,000	52,000,000
1901	52,000,000	57,000,000
1902	68,000,000	63,900,000

The people of Canada cannot complain of the parsimony of the government in expenditure, nor of their slowness to collect heavy taxes. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) told us that the government does not collect taxes, but it is quite plain that they get a very large amount of money from one source or another, including customs and inland revenue. The Minister of Finance told us that from 1897-8 to the present he had had, not only enough money to expend for the requirements of the country (not including capital expenditure) but that he had $40,900,000 of surpluses besides. Does it not seem passing strange that if the government could collect a surplus of $41,000,000 in six years, they did not succeed in reducing the national debt by more than $6,000,000. If a farmer has a mortgage on his farm and he has seven years of prosperity and a surplus of $2,000, what kind of a farmer would he be if he did not pay his mortgage. If he spent his money extravagantly and recklessly and neglected the mortgage would not any sensible man say that that farmer was a poor financier, and that he was not acting in the interests of himself and his family. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) told us that a surplus was a good thing, and I asked him why should this extra money be taken out of the pockets of the people—

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to the rule that when an amendment to the motion for ways and means has been moved the debate should be confined to the subject matter of the amendment. The hon. gentleman is now discussing the question of the expenditure of the country. Does the hon. gentlemen think that is relevant to the amendment?

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that it is relevant to the amendment. I am endeavouring to show that by their system of taxation the government is taking more money out of the people than is needed for the requirements of the country, and that what we want is adequate protection and a fair revenue. But while I bow to your ruling Mr. Speaker, I will give another reason. I hold in my hand extracts from the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce who spoke after the amendment was moved and he dealt with exactly the same question as I am dealing with now. I respectfully submit that since he was allowed that latitude I should not be refused the right of a reply. I would point out also Mr. Speaker that for the last two years the amendment has been moved at the commencement of this debate, and therefore if you confine yourself closely to the rule and not permit a reply to the budget speech, it will lead to a great deal of inconvenience.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Speaker, while I recognize that your ruling is absolutely correct and that the amendment being moved at the beginning of the debate shuts off general discussion, still Sir, on behalf of the government I would desire that with the consent of the House you should allow debate on everything comprehended in the financial statement. Beyond that I do not think we should travel however. That is our desire Sir, if you can see your way clear to waive the rule.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is clear on the question but I am anxious to be guided by the feeling of the House and that is why I mention the matter. It is better that there should be some understanding on the question. Personally I have no feeling on the matter, and if the House wishes it I have no objection.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The rule has been already departed from and it is only fair that we should have the same rule applied to us all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I believe Sir, that if we are allowed to discuss the question treated of in the financial statement generally, it may have the effect of shortening the discussion rather than that there should be a new debate on the financial question and on the trade question as well.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a motion that the Speaker do leave the Chair and there is an amendment to that motion, and the rule is that the debate should be confined to the amendment. It would not be in order to speak on the expenditure of the country or on the railway policy as was done by the last speaker (Mr. Davis), I call attention to the rule and it is for the House to come to an understanding upon the matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The rule is a very proper one but if it were applied here it would lead to a double debate upon the same question, and I think we might all agree to avoid that.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite satisfied Mr. Speaker that your only desire is to preserve the rules of the House, but when you intimated to me some time ago that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) was travelling outside of the rule I said that if the rule were insisted upon it would be very inconvenient. I believe that it would be an economy of time to permit a general debate now. Let me Sir, direct the attention of the House and particularly of the last speaker (Mr. Davis) to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said with reference to surpluses a few years ago. Here it is

> If the surpluses were created by government in some magic way there might be in them a cause for thankfulness, but they are not. But when it is considered that every dollar of a surplus is money taken out of the pockets of the people without a shadow of excuse ; money not even required by the reckless expenditure of the government, there is not as much cause for rejoicing.

I commend that language of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) to the attention of hon. gentlemen on the other side as peculiarly appropriate to the condition of things now existing. Even under a reckless system of expenditures, the Minister of Finance tells us that at the end of the present year he will have for the number of years the Liberals have been in power aggregate surpluses amounting to about $41,000,0000. Then I say apply to the present system the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce's own logic of a few years ago, and it is the strongest proof that that system is burdening the country, is taking money out of the people that is not needed, and is indicative of very bad government. He went on to say :

> That millions of dollars should be taken yearly from the consuming classes of the country, and this without being absolutely necessary, is a cardinal principle of the Finance Minister to which even his best friends could not unreservedly assent.

I wonder how that applies to the present Finance Minister. The hon. gentleman said :

> A surplus of so many millions is so much money drawn from the trade of the country. How long can the Dominion stand the drain ? Certainly not many years longer.

This was said at a time when the aggregate surpluses of eighteen years amounted to $9,800,000. How much stronger will the application of this language be to-day, when in seven years the government have taken $41,000,000 from the people more than they required ? Do I require to comment on it ? I say comment is unnecessary. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is noted for his direct reasoning, his strong adjectives and his logic; and if these ever applied with special force to a party in power, they apply to the party in power at the present time. Why was this extra money taken out of the people ? Not because it was demanded by the needs of the country, because hon. gentlemen admit that they do not require to spend that much. Then, why not do as the Conservative party did when in power ? When we found that there was a surplus of revenue over expenditure, we threw off that amount of taxation. In 1894, when the surplus was going to be largely increased, we threw off $3,500,000 of that taxation, so as not to take more out of the pockets of the people than was absolutely necessary for the needs of the country as economically governed.

We are told that we have good times to-day. We have not attempted to deny that. No people in the country are more grateful and thankful for it than we are. But what wonder is it that we have good times ? Before 1896 we had a cycle of hard times, the hardest times that we had for many years. Then a cycle of good times started up all over the world, and Canada shared in those good times as well as every other country. But look at the expenditures of the government during the last seven years. How much have they spent in that time ? They have spent $314,500,000, while in the seven years previous, the party that was declared by these same hon. gentlemen to be reckless spendthrifts only spent $251,000,000. Is it to be wondered at that this large expenditure helped to make good times for Canada ? They were spending all that their predecessors spent each year, and over $10,000,000 a year more. In these seven years they have spent $63,000,000 more than their predecessors did in the same time. That expenditure helped to make good times, there is no doubt whatever. Add $10,000,000 to our expenditure every year, and think what it means to the people of Canada. Now, with this heavy revenue, this large collection of taxes, and this heavy expenditure, I ask, what great national undertaking has been accomplished by the present government ? What national highway have they built ? What great national good have they secured for the people of Canada ? I answer none. There is not to-day a living monument to their management of the country during the last seven years. The Minister of Finance says that every department of the government has been wisely and economically managed, from a business and financial standpoint. He referred to the Post Office Department as an illustration, claiming that the present Postmaster General found a deficit of $700,000 when he took charge of the business, which he reduced from year to year, until last year there was a deficit of only $105,221. But the hon. Postmaster General stated in Toronto a few months ago that there was no deficit at all. Which statement is correct ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he knows that the hon. Postmaster General did not say that. He said, omitting the Yukon and the Atlin districts, there was no deficit.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to explain that. Omitting the Yukon district, there was no deficit; but the unfairness of omitting the Yukon must be clear to any one, because it is part and parcel of the post office system. If you deal with the whole post office system under the late government, you must do the same under the present government, otherwise the comparison is no comparison at all. You cannot compare things that are not comparable. You must compare things that are comparable. The hon. Minister of Finance said that there was a deficit of $105,000, including the Yukon. The hon. gentleman who took his seat a few moments ago said that the hon. Postmaster General had wiped out that deficit by saving on the contracts for carrying mails. What has the Minister of Finance to say of that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did effect large savings.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the hon. Minister of Finance :

Is that deficit reduced out of the revenue of the post office ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So far as I am aware, it was. I do not quite see the point of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. SPROULE. Simply this, if I may be allowed to explain. I understand that the old deficit of $700,000 was wiped out by an item put in the estimates for that purpose, but it was not revenue from the post office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not quite see the difference ; the fact remains that at the close of the year 1896 there was a deficiency of some $700,000, just how it was paid is of little consequence ; and if under the circumstances which I have described, my hon. friend has reduced that to $105,000, I think that is a record which even my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) should receive with satisfaction.

Now, was that the way the deficit was wiped out ? I say it was not.

Mr. COWAN. Well, you are wrong.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) is to the fore again. He is usually noisy when any one else is speaking.

Mr. COWAN. I have been pretty patient to-night.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do I say it was not wiped out in that way ? For this reason :

At the close of the fiscal year of 1895-1896, the parliamentary appropriation for that year had been exhausted and large sums were still owing by the department. With the view of ascertaining the true financial position of the department, two accountants, Messieurs Cross and Munro, were appointed to make certain inquiries, the result of their investigations being set forth in the aunual report of 1897.

What were they to inquire into ? One of their inquiries was to ascertain the exact amount of the unpaid debts or liabiliaties of the department on the first of July, 1896, over and above the appropriation made to parliament for the fiscal year 1895-6 and classify the same. They were to inquire about several other things as well. They then made this report. They said that at the close of the fiscal year 1895-6 the liabilities of the department, in excess of all parliamentary appropriations applicable thereto amounted to the sum of $685,449, increase of these liabilities during the year 1895-96 made it $68,734 more, which made in all $781,152. That was the actual deficit the auditors found.

I asked whether that was wiped out by the savings, and I understood from the reply and the process of reasoning of the Finance Minister that it was. But what do the estimates of 1897 show? An item was proposed for the Post Office Department of $685,447, or just what the auditors found was the deficit and for which there was no appropriation. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was then looking after the estimates of the Postmaster General, said in explanation of that item:

> The Postmaster General is not here at the moment. But I can state briefly what this is. They are the accumulated deficits of the post office for the last twenty years. It appears that they have always been out running the constable in that department, and that they have been constantly paying out of one years appropriations, sums which were due in the last year and adding thereto from time to time. They have finally run up to this large sum and the Postmaster General thinks that it is time that should stop.

And he proposed an item of $685,447 for that purpose. And we voted that amount. Was it by any saving in the department that this amount was wiped out? Not at all. That should for ever set at rest the contention that the Postmaster General, by any exercise of economy, wiped out this deficit. What more did the hon. Postmaster General do? He sold that year $444,000 worth of Jubilee stamps, which were not redeemable by the post office except you used them by way of postage. A large portion of them were never used at all. I sent two sets to Kansas and had an application for more, but could not get them. It was a disgrace, I contend, to this government to take that money out of the people and give them nothing in return. Ordinary stamps were redeemable in cash, but not these stamps. When we find this item of $685,447 voted to wipe out part of the deficit and when we find the Postmaster General realizing $444,000 out of Jubilee stamps, are we to conclude that he is entitled to any great credit? I do not think it. And I do not think that any gentleman on that side should be inclined to give him credit for great economy in the administration of this department. I am not saying a word against the hon. gentleman for what he has done. Many of the things he has done I approve of. I approve of the reduction in the postage, but while he reduced the postage on letters he increased it on papers. While he reduced on the one hand he raised on the other. But what I find fault with is that he should take credit to himself for good management and for wiping out the deficit and making the department self-sustaining. Whereas, as a matter of fact, as I have shown, he did nothing of the kind. What did Mr. Foster say in reply to the explanation I have cited of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce? He said:

> We will accept that explanation. We knew that the hon. gentlemen opposite were going to bring down enormous appropriations, and we suppose that we will have to let them pass.

It passed off at that. That is the history of how the post office deficit was wiped out.

We are told that there is economy in every department. We are told that the Intercolonial Railway has been economically managed, but that question has been already dealt with and will be dealt with at greater length by hon. gentlemen on this side in the future.

I would ask: Has the Department of Public Works been wisely and economically administered? I could readily give a dozen items as illustrating the very reverse. Take that vote which was given last year for a public work, the Grand Vallée pier, which will be found in last year's 'Hansard,' page 1585. A public work was started there which is going to cost the country $63,000. It was started in a place where there were not a dozen people, where no boat heretofore ever called, where no trade was done, which was nothing but a wilderness. And for what purpose was it started? Simply to benefit a member of this House who had invested in a timber limit there a short time before. The place, as the hon. member described it the other night, was when this work was begun, a perfect 'terra incognita'—no boats at all, no population, no village, no post office. That wharf, when finished will cost the country, according to the Minister of Public Works, $63,357. If time permitted I could give a dozen examples which would show just as effectively as this does the lack of wisdom and economy which characterizes the administration of this important department. There is no extravagance, we are told; every department is managed wisely and well. Let me take one example from the Department of Agriculture, and it is quite as striking as the other I have given. The present government had a work to do that their predecessors did several times—the taking of the census. This government took the census in 1901. The census was taken by their predecessors in 1891, in 1881 and in 1871. The first time the census was taken in 1871, the cost was $511,330. In 1881, the cost of taking the census was $456,904. In 1891, the expense of this service $570,000, only once under the Conservative regime did the expense of taking the census go above half a million. What did it cost this government to take the census in 1901 ? So far they have spent $1,130,000, double what it cost in 1891. This is the record of this government which we are told is a government of economy and ability. But they tell us that there was much more work in taking the last census. Well, they had nine schedules in the census of 1891 and eleven schedules in the last census. But the expense has already been doubled, all but $10,000, and that amount and more will be spent this year. Will the people of the country regard this as wise expenditure ? Will they regard it as an example of strict economy ? I do not think they will.

What has the government accomplished in the way of national statesmanship since they came into power ? What great thing have they accomplished for the benefit of the people ? Before coming into power they said they would negotiate a trade treaty with the United States. Have they done so ? No ! They tried to negotiate a treaty with France to establish better trade relations between the two countries, but so far they have not succeeded. They tried to improve our trade relations with Germany, and they have brought about a trade war with that country, so that we are shut out of its markets. They tried to negotiate a treaty with the United States, but it was a failure. They tried to negotiate a treaty with the little island of Trinidad but failed. They told us that at the late intercolonial conference we would get a treaty with the Australian colonies. They told us that the granting of the preferential trade with England was a great achievement. We have had that system a few years and what is the effect of it ? Taking up to-day's paper, I find the following :

London, April 23.—Mr. Harold Cox, secretary of the Cobden Club has written to the Westminster 'Gazette' with regard to the Canadian tariff policy as follows : 'The main tariff of Canada was deliberately framed to shut out English manufacturers and English goods. It gives greater encouragement to the manufacturers from the United States than from Great Britain. There is no reason commercially, for British gratitude to Canada. The boot is on the other leg.'

That is what the secretary of the Cobden Club says.

Mr. HEYD. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) believe that ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying now, what I believe, but I am telling the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) what the great free trade Cobden Club of England thinks. This is written by the gentleman who pinned the medal on the premier's breast a few years ago because of the granting of the preferential tariff, which, they thought, was a move in the direction of free trade. I am afraid the premier will be humiliated by being compelled to send the medal back to the Codben Club to be kept for some future free trader.

Mr. GOURLEY. I heard he had sent it back after the surtax was put on German goods.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt he would feel very uncomfortable in keeping it. We have preferential trade, and what has it given us ? Members of this government were at the interimperial conference last year, and they went there saying they were going to establish better trade relations with the Australian colonies and New Zealand. Moreover they were going to try and get some consideration in the British market over the foreigner. But they gained nothing. But, while they gained nothing in the way of better markets, they humiliated Canada by declaring that Canada would not consider the question of imperial defence. And Canada stands as the laughing stock of the world, because, notwithstanding our wealth and position and loyalty and everything else, our premier, who was in the band wagon of the great jubilee of our late beloved Queen in 1897, refused to even discuss, on the lines desired, the question of imperial defence. They said Canada was not prepared to pay her share for the defence of the empire. I say this is a humiliation to Canada. We are doing less than we ought to do and are the laughing stock of the world.

Have hon. gentlemen opposite materially cheapened the transportation ? They are always talking of the transportation problem ; have they actually done anything in connection with it ? If so, I do not know where to look for the record of it. The fast Atlantic service question was really settled when they came into office, the contract having been practically made. But they cancelled it, saying they could get a better one at less cost. But they have made no contract yet. A few years ago we were going to have the bottle-necked ships that would accomplish so much. But it was only hot air from the west. Then, we were to have had a contract at very much less than the old one. They worked away at that for years. At last they declared that they had failed, and nothing has been ever accomplished. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) says : Oh, we have done a great deal for the people of Canada ; we have changed the system of taxation, giving them a revenue tariff instead of a protective tariff. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, in commencing his address, twitted the leader of the opposition with being inclined to resort to scrap-book literature—with dealing with history of the past. If there was one member of this House who ought to be afraid of scrap-books, it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He seems like Banquo in the play of Macbeth. When he hears of a scrap-book, his previous record will not down. Like Banquo's ghost it will come up to confront him. That was why he displayed so much dread of scrap-book literature, because he is confronted by his utterances of the past. In dealing with the system of taxation, he said :

Under our system the great bulk of the taxes goes into the treasury, under the old regime the great bulk of it went into the pockets of the manufacturers.

Now I ask the people of this country if that is so ? He says :

If we have to-day an exceedingly unfair and oppressive system of taxation under which we were practically putting two dollars into the private pockets for every one that went into the public treasury, I might see my way to deliver myself of some public criticism. There are the strongest possible grounds for believing that since we came into office the exodus is stopped and the tide of immigration has been flowing into our country to the tune of 125,000 to 200,000 a year.

Where are they now ? Referring to the leader of the opposition he said :

He has paid no attention whatever to the difference between the real taxation inflicted on the people under a protective tariff, and the actual taxation inflicted on the people under a revenue tariff, even if it be a high one. The difference is this, that substantially the great bulk of the taxes go into the treasury under the present tariff, whereas, under the administration which preceded ours, an enormous percentage of the taxes which the people of Canada had to pay did not go into the treasury but went to swell the profits of private individuals.

Is that so ? Now, I take up the Trade and Navigation returns, and let me give one illustration of the working of the tariff called protective under the old government under which, as he says, for every dollar that went into the treasury two dollars went into the pockets of the manufacturers. Now I take the importations of those lines in which the farmers are interested : Cultivators, drills, seed drills, harrows, harvesters, horse rakes, mowing machines, ploughs, reapers and such like. These are manufactured in Canada. Under the old system, if the Minister of Trade and Commerce is right, for every dollar of revenue that went into the treasury, and that was collected by customs duties, two dollars went into the manufacturers pockets. Now, take the last year the Conservative government were in power, I find that 9,321 articles were imported on which a duty of $70,000 was paid. In 1902, under a tariff exactly the same in every particular, the same duty as in 1896 on every article, this government took out of the people of Canada $417,000 in duties as against $70,000 by the Conservative government—the same system, the same duty, the only difference being that one was called protective, while the other is called a revenue tariff. And yet the Minister of Trade and Commerce says that under the Conservative government for ever dollar that went into the treasury two dollars went into the manufacturers' pocket, whereas in 1902 nothing goes into the manufacturers' pocket but all goes into the treasury. How can any one believe that ? If a duty of 20 per cent and 25 per cent in 1896 was a protective duty, is it not a protective duty to-day ? If it enabled the manufacturer to put two dollars into his pocket for every dollar that went into the treasury, does it not enable him to do the same thing to-day ? Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce think the people of Canada are so stupid or so gullible as to believe such a statement ? Is that logic or is it not ? I need not deal with corn and other items. I merely give this as an illustration, as an example, of the hon. gentleman's style of reasoning.

Now he says : We have stopped the exodus from the country by our system, and we have done a great good in that respect. Is it true that they have stopped the exodus ? How do we know whether the exodus is stopped or not ? We know it by the Trade and Navigation returns of the United States, which show the value of settlers' effects going into that country every year from Canada. Now, if the exodus was stopped there would be no settlers' effects going in there, because it is only goods taken in by men who actually settle there that are taken account of by the Trade and Navigation returns of the United States. I find by those returns that in 1897, $1,275,000 worth of settlers' effects went into the United States accompanied by people who went there from Canada to settle. In 1898 there were $964,000; in 1899, $1,037,000; in 1900, $1,144,000; in 1901, $1,042,000; in 1902, the very last year, at a time when the exodus has all been stopped, according to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there were $1,278,000 worth of settlers' effects crossing the frontier from Canada to the United States, accompanied by Canadian citizens who went over there and settled in that country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Would that not include effects of settlers who come to our ports from England and other places ?

Mr. SPROULE. They say not. Only from Canada. Now I find that this very year there is a considerable exodus going on, largely to the New England States, where manufactures are plentiful. Very naturally they go to a country that has varied industries and which offers employment in so many lines. If our protective tariff was accomplishing for Canada what we think it ought to accomplish, provided it was high enough, it would build up our own industries and keep our operatives at home.

I want to ask, what helped the exodus. We are told that we have 125,000 to 150,000 immigrants coming into Canada, and that we had a very heavy exodus when the Conservative party were in power. What helped to make that exodus ? The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the loss of Canada in those eighteen years during which the Conservative party were in power amounted to millions. Every train going to the United States was crowded with settlers and their effects. Why was every train crowded with settlers and their effects ?—because every Reformer in Canada became an immigration agent for the United States, with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce at the head of the bureau. Am I justified in saying so ? I think I am. Why do I say so ? When I look at the 'Economist' and read that letter written by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce years ago, to tell the people of Europe what a bad country Canada was, how heavily it was taxed, how the people were bled white by taxation, that it offered no inducements for people to come and settle, that it was the place above all others in the world for them to avoid, is it any wonder that people were deterred from coming ? At that time the Conservative party had eleven principal agents at work to get immigrants to come to this country and they spent $120,000 during the last year they were in power on immigration. To-day the government have no less than forty-four principal agents drawing from $1,000 to $4,000 a year, most of them receiving large amounts for expenses in addition and they have also 275 agents in the United States on commission working in the interests of Canada. When we were endeavouring to get immigrants to come to this country we had every Reform member of this House acting as an immigration agent for the United States, saying that the people of that country were happy and prosperous and that they were getting rich while we were getting poorer and poorer. It was not enough to confine their operations to the continent of America, but the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce had to write about the condition of Canada to the 'Economist,' so as to prevent immigrants coming to us from Europe ; and what did he say :

But it is not equally well known on your side of the Atlantic that it has become painfully apparent for some time back to every one who has been at pains to examine the evidence which has accumulated on the subject, that, even in that comparatively short space of time, this most ill advised policy has resulted in a tremendous exodus of the very choicest portion of the population of Canada.

Talking to the people that we were trying to get to come here, he told them that the people were leaving the country because of the policy of the Conservative party.

And in a very grave depreciation in the selling values of farm lands and of town and village property throughout all the older sections of the Dominion, including Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

This has been accompanied, as is usual in such cases, by an immense increase in the aggregate indebtedness of the Dominion in the shape of large additions to its federal, provincial and municipal debts, and also to the mortgage debts incurred by private individuals and liabilities incurred for the construction of railways—by far the greater part of all which obligations are held abroad.

Briefly, in these thirteen years, there has been a great displacement of wealth, caused mainly by artificial legislation, but (as regards the older provinces) absolutely no increase at all in the collective wealth of the community. Two or three cities, and perhaps a score of towns, have increased considerably, and a few hundred individuals (who have been privileged to tax their fellows for their private advantage) have grown rich by this system of legalized robbery ; but the great mass of the population, and notably the agricultural class, are distinctly poorer and less prosperous than they were twelve years ago.

This he was saying to the farmers, mechanics and labourers of England, that we were trying to get to come here, and whom we were telling that there were greater advantages here than those which they enjoyed in the old country. Is it any wonder we did not get immigrants to come to our country ? I think not.

In one word, if the assertions and official statements of the present government are to be relied on, and these 900,000 immigrants, did really come to Canada as they assert, what between immigrants who came to Canada and who have quitted it chiefly for the United States, and the loss of its own natural increase which has disappeared in the same direction, the Dominion has lost not less than one million and a half of people in the last ten years.

As to the amount of taxation, the agricultural class has been simply bled white.

This is told to the farmers of England whom we were asking to come over here that they might better their condition.

Over and above the taxes actually paid into the Dominion treasury to be expended for so-called federal purposes they have been mulcted during all these years under the proctective system of at least an equal amount which is either totally wasted or goes into the pockets of a very small number of protected manufacturers.

The exact amount levied, or to speak more accurately, pilaged, in this way can hardly be estimated ; but it is known not to be less than a sum fully equal to the entire amount credited to the treasury.

Such an amount of taxation levied for thirteen years is a very formidable burthen for a country like Canada to bear.

It would be well if this were all, but unfortunately, the economic results of protective system adopted by Canada in 1879, grevious as they are fade almost into insignificance compared with the moral and political pollution it has brought in its train.

No moral or political pollution to-day—not at all. Then, to continue this article :

It is not merely the policy but the fixed determination of the Liberal party in the Dominion of Canada to overthrow this system at all hazards ; and, after very full deliberation, they have come to the conclusion that the best and probably the only really available method which presents itself for the purpose lies in introducing the system of perfect continental free trade or unrestricted reciprocity with the United States.

Compare that with their statement lately, giving the reasons why they made a reduction in the duty on British goods.

That is what they were asking for then. Look at their loyalty to England to-day. Out of goodness of our heart and out of generosity we give that preference to England in recognition of the splendid freedom she has given to us. We did it out of the generosity of our heart and because of our overflowing loyalty. Then, they wanted unrestricted reciprocity that Hon. Mr. Blake said if adopted, would lead to annexation. It goes on to say :

> One thing, I think ought to be clear to all intelligent Englishmen, and that is, that it is utterly impossible that Canada can prosper under her present conditions—isolated and in danger of being still more completely isolated, from trade and commerce with the entire continent to which she belongs geographically, losing her population at the rate of one million and a half in ten years (if the official statements of the present government are to be relied on) and subject, at the same time to a system of taxation and of organized political corruption such as you have happily been strangers to since the days of Walpole or Charles II.
> The Liberal party of Canada and, indeed, the great bulk of the people of the Dominion, wish well to the mother country, and it is very far from their desire to do anything which in the long run can injure her interests ; but their duty in the premises is plain. As Canadians they must consult the advantages of Canada first.

And he declared for a policy of unrestricted reciprocity or continental free trade with the people of the United States. That was written to the 'Economist' by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, written to a country where we were trying our level best, with a very small expenditure of money, to get immigrants to come out to this country, when we were endeavouring to show them that we had a better country, and that it offered better opportunities for battling with the conditions of life than any other country. Yet, the hon. gentleman, in this article, declares that such is not the case. Is it any wonder that we did not get immigrants to come to this country ? Now, I take up the writings of the hon. gentleman to the 'North American Review' declaring that the country is so burdened with taxation and debt that no man can succeed in Canada and that the United States is the only place where people can succeed. What was the situation during the time that the Conservative party were in power ? I say that at least there were seventy-five immigration agents in this House who were immigration agents always for the United States and never for Canada. They went about preaching the same doctrine and they had thousands of their friends outside. The bureau was here headed by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Hon. Mr. Blake, whose portrait adorned an immigration pamphlet that was distributed in the state of Kansas with his speech in the House of Commons added to show the people of that country that Canada was the last place in the world to go to. This pamphlet contained speeches of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce decrying Canada, saying that Canadians were bled white and that Canadians were kept in bondage worse than any slavery they ever had in that country. It was then said that there was an exodus, and that the people were fleeing from the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why are immigrants coming to Canada to-day. It is because every member of this House is an immigration agent in the interest of Canada. There never was a Conservative, who in power or in opposition, would decry his country. In power or out of power, the Conservatives stand up for Canada, and you will not find in the 'Economist' or the 'North American Review' or in any other publication, an article from a Conservative decrying his own country and telling the people to go to the American republic where they could amass wealth, rather than to Canada where the farmers were bled white and the inhabitants kept down by heavy taxation. It was left for the Minister of Trade and Commerce and for other Liberals to denounce their country in that way. I repeat, Sir, that every member of parliament to-day has a good word to say for his country, and that amongst the people of Europe and amongst the people of the United States their object is to create the impression that Canada is a happy country to live in. I know it to be a fact that in many Reform constituencies in this country the Reformers believed their member when he told them that Canada was the last place in the world to live in, and taking him at his word they left in such large numbers that many of these Reform members got defeated when they returned for election. That was notably so in South Grey, which was a Reform constituency, but which at the last two elections went Conservative for the reason that the Liberals, believing their member that Canada was a bad place to live in, cleared out to the states and left the Conservatives who had faith in their country, in the majority. Every Canadian member of the parliament, I repeat, is to-day an immigration agent for Canada, whereas before 1896, every Reform member of parliament was an immigration agent for the United States, with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) at the head of the bureau.

We were told, Sir, when the Liberals came into power that their fiscal policy was going to be that of a revenue tariff. But what is their policy to-day. It is a very peculiar policy indeed. In the budget speech of 1897 ('Hansard,' page 1,111) the Minister of Finance said :

I shall have something to say which will show that in respect of our relations with Great Britain, and in respect of our relations with any other country, that is willing to meet us on equal terms, we shall be prepared to offer a measure of tariff reform, of the most substantial character, which is not contained in this tariff I am going to read.

He told us here that he would read two tariffs, one not much different from the tariff of the Conservatives, but as they were pledged to tariff reform they would give a substantial measure of tariff reform in relation to those countries that would trade freely with us. Further, in answer to a question by Sir Charles Tupper, the Minister of Finance said :

I stated that the tariff I am about to read to you is the general tariff, but that before I conclude, I shall be prepared to make a statement in relation to a special tariff that will apply to Great Britain, and any other country which is prepared to accept the conditions that that tariff imposes.

There are men, well meaning men in Canada—Liberals, some of them, let us admit—who say that we should meet the Dingley Bill on the principle of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a dollar for a dollar. Such is the demand of many men in Canada to-day, but we submit it would not be wise to adopt that policy. We submit that it is a wiser policy to wait and see what shall be the outcome of the present uncertainty in the United States in relation to their trade policy and of the negotiations which we are willing to enter into with respect to reciprocity. We submit, that pending such negotiations, and pending the settlement of the American tariff question, and a clear understanding of what will be the effect which their policy may have upon the affairs of Canada, it is the part of prudence that we should to-day hold our hands and not extend to that country the measure of tariff reform which we would be anxious to extend if they would meet us on liberal terms.

But there are those who say that if we do not care to deal with the tariff in its relations with the United States to-day, we ought not to disturb our existing tariff at all. I have heard it argued that what we should do is to let our own tariff stand as it is to-day. I cannot subscribe to that doctrine. The Liberal party has pledged itself to give tariff reform and the country expects the Liberal party to fulfil that pledge. And if the events across the border have taken such a course as to justify us in withholding action in relation to our trade with that country, that is no reason why we should not proceed to deal with tariff reform in its relation to those countries which are prepared to deal with us. . . . . I have to tell the House that it is not the intention of the government—speaking of the question generally, and not, with reference to any particular article—to propose any great reduction in the tariff as applied to those countries which are not disposed to trade with us. We propose, therefore, to have a general tariff, and that general tariff will be, to a large extent, the tariff of to-day—but the tariff of to-day freed from some of its enormities.

His tariff reform or the reform part of his tariff was the preference clause, and he offered it to every country in the world who would accept it. He told us afterwards that it only applied to England and to-day he threatens to take it away from England. He tells us that his general tariff was to a large extent the then existing tariff of the Conservative party, and if that be the case, it is the tariff of to-day because there have been practically no changes made in it since. If, as the Liberals claimed before 1896, the tariff policy of the Conservative government put $2 into the manufacturers' pocket for every dollar it put into the treasury, how can our fiscal policy of to-day be a revenue tariff, when as the Minister of Finance has told us it is practically the same tariff as that in force during the Conservative regime. In 1902, the Minister of Finance said :

There are several reasons which operate in our minds against entering a policy of tariff changes to-day.

That is what the Minister of Finance said two years ago. This government gave us the preferential tariff and that was the only substantial change they made in the tariff, and let me ask what has been the result of that, England says it has done her no good; Canada finds it has done her no good and to-day the Minister of Finance threatens to repeal that great measure of tariff reform. As a reason for not changing the tariff in 1902, the Minister of Finance said : That the census was not taken; that he hoped to get a better treaty with France, and that he thought Germany would change her mind and give us better treatment in her markets. Well, Sir, we have seen that Germany has not changed her mind. Another is the present position of our trade relations with the mother country and her colonies. Two important conferences are to take place ; one on the question of trade and commerce, affecting the empire ; and, second, a conference with New Zealand, Australia and Canada. For these reasons we postpone for the present the question of tariff revision. That was in 1902. We come down to 1903, and he still does not propose to give any more tariff reform. What reason does he give to-day ?

Coming now to the question of the tariff. I have two clauses to propose which will affect the tariff in certain directions, and I shall ask for some amendments to the free list. Of these I shall speak presently. With these exceptions —and they are important exceptions as respects the clauses referred to—we do not propose any change in the schedule rates of dutiable goods. We are not unmindful of the fact that there has been some agitation for a general revision of the tariff, but we think there is nothing in the present circumstances of the country which calls for this, and there are some strong reasons why any extensive changes in the tariff schedules would be inopportune.

That is what he says to-day. Now, what has been the tariff policy of hon. gentlemen opposite ? The only substantial change they made was in giving the preference to England. But that has resulted in a commercial war with Germany, which may extend beyond Canada and even to England. It has resulted in our being shut out of the German market and our trade with Germany being circumscribed. It has done England no good, it has done Canada no good, and now hon. gentlemen opposite threaten to repeal it. That is their trade policy for the present. What is it for the future? The Finance Minister has stated it: no change. What has it been all along? It has been procrastination, and it is procrastination to-day. They know that some of the industries of the country are waning for want of encouragement, but they are doing nothing.

The great beet-root sugar industry, which is rapidly springing up in Canada, wants more protection, wants a little bounty. That is an industry above all others for the farmer—why? Because $60 out of every $100 spent in that industry goes direct to the farmer. But those who are engaged in that industry want an increase in the tariff on sugars coming into the country, and for the want of this they are handicapped in carrying on their business. We are told that unless they get some consideration in the tariff their industry is likely to go down instead of becoming one of the great established industries of the country. There is a large amount of money invested in it to-day, and there is going to be much more in the future if it is given the assistance it requires. Canada is admirably adapted to that industry. There are hundreds employed in it to-day, and there will be tens of thousands in the future if it is granted proper encouragement. But procrastination is the thief of time, and the present Minister of Finance will give that industry no consideration beyond allowing its machinery to come in free for another year.

Then, look at the lead industry of British Columbia, in which there were over 1,000 people employed last summer. The men engaged in that industry declare that unless something is done for them, it must be closed down. I was in British Columbia last fall, and I saw there some of the most valuable lead mines, I suppose, in the world, one with over 300 men employed; but they had to shut down because there was no profit in the business. If the government would put a duty on lead and give them a small bounty, that industry would go on and flourish. The 1,000 men and more indirectly employed in that industry must be thrown out of employment, or turn to some other occupation, or go across the line to find employment in the lead mines of the United States which they ought to find at home.

We are told that the government are going to put a duty of $7 a ton on steel rails, but I think they are going to do it in such a way that it will not do any good. I think that duty is right, and I commend the Finance Minister for it. I was up through the factory at Sault Ste. Marie last fall. It is a most valuable factory, and I for one would go farther than the Finance Minister. He says:

> We will give this duty if the quantity is sufficient to supply the demand and the quality is as good as can be got from other countries.

Even if the quality were not quite as good, I would give the duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who would buy the rails if the quality were not as good?

Mr. SPROULE. The Canadian people would buy them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will not. They have refused to buy them.

Mr. SPROULE. Who?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is within my knowledge that the quality of rails made has not given satisfaction, and the railway companies have objected to them on that ground.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the price was pretty high, but I saw that they got a contract for the Temiscamingue Railway only a few weeks ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope they will do better, and I think they will.

Mr. SPROULE. The rails I saw them turning out at Sault Ste. Marie last fall seemed good; but, I am no judge of rails.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Lest I might be misunderstood, I believe they are taking steps to improve the quality of the rails, and I have no doubt they will make good rails in the immediate future.

Mr. SPROULE. I hope they will, and I commend the Minister of Finance for offering to give them this assistance. That is what we like to see. That is what will build up Canada; and this is a suffering industry that cannot continue unless it gets some support.

Then, the hon. Minister of Finance says he is going to assist the binder twine industry, he has not told us how. I hope that whatever means he advises will be effective. A few years ago, he took the duty off and helped to kill the industry without doing any good to the Canadian farmer.

Then, he proposes to license foreign-built vessels. I do not object to that.

With regard to certain lines of industries the government are not giving the relief they should give. We are told that the woollen industry is suffering very much to-day. I believe it is, and a change in the tariff would tend to build up that industry, and enable it to employ hundreds and thousands of operators which it cannot employ to-day. Procrastination is killing it.

But the Minister of Trade and Commerce says: You cannot do anything with your tariff to help the farmer. He says, speaking to the leader of the opposition:

We sell about $20,000,000 worth of cheese, chiefly in the English market. I suppose we consume about two million dollars worth in Canada. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman would protect us in that. We sell nearly as much bacon and hams. I would like to know how he will protect us in that.

Let me tell the hon. gentleman how we could protect the Canadian farmer. The late government protected him by passing a tariff law which shut out the spurious cheese of the United States. This cheese was coming into our country and being shipped over to England as Canadian cheese, and in this way it was destroying the reputation of our product, but the late government put on a high tariff.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You could not do it by putting on a tariff, because it came through Canada in bond.

Mr. SPROULE. We put on a tariff which was prohibitive.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was done by regulation. No matter how high you make your tariff you could not prevent American cheese passing through Canada in bond, without paying any duty.

Mr. SPROULE. We charged a duty on the cheese that came in, and if we did not put the tariff high enough to keep out the ordinary cheese and pass regulations to prevent spurious cheese being branded as Canadian, our cheese would not enjoy the reputation it does in England. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce says we cannot add any value by our tariff to what our farmers raise. Is that a fact?

Mr. HEYD. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for South Brant says yes. Let me tell him that in 1890, we found that the Americans were supplying Canada with fresh meats. They sold in 1890 in Canada 33,062,979 pounds of fresh meat, or $1,729,603 worth. Have we not farmers enough in Canada to raise meat and pork to feed Canadians? The late government believed that we had, and raised the duty to two cents a pound on fresh meats. What was the result? In two years we reduced the importation by 20,000,000 pounds of those meats. Did not that benefit the Canadian farmers? Will the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce say that that was of no use to our farmers? If not, why does he not take the duty off to-day? I defy him to do it. If he should attempt anything of the kind, our farmers would soon send this government to the right about. What was the result of our giving our Canadian farmers the control of our own markets? In 1890, we only exported $895,817 worth of meats. That was before our Canadian farmers had control of their own market. But when we raised the tariff so high as to shut out Armour and Company and Swift and Company, and the other Americans who were dumping their meats into Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston and Montreal, every week in the year, our exports of meats increased. In 1902 we exported meats to the extent of $41,122,071, and at the same time supplied our own markets, whereas in 1890 we only exported $895,000 worth and our markets were in the hands of the Chicago men. As soon as our Canadian farmers were given control of their own market, they at once began to raise a greater quantity of meat, and they sent out in 1902, after two year's experience of the higher tariff, $41,122,071 worth of meats, and at the same time supplied their own market with 20,000,000 lbs. a year which had been formerly supplied by Armour and Company and Swift and Company, of Chicago. Would any man, in face of these figures say that you cannot help the farmer and enhance the value of his products? But I find that we are beginning to import meats again, and if I were Minister of Finance, I would again raise the duty. Last year we imported $1,787,920 worth. Changed values have given the Americans an opportunity to place their meats in our market again. But whenever changed conditions and value give foreigners the advantage of our markets, I would put the duty up and keep them out. If the hon. Minister of Finance were doing his duty to the farmer, he would raise the tariff again, keep out the Americans, and reserve the Canadian market for our Canadian farmers.

But we can not expect much from the present government. The only real act of statesmanship they ever attempted was the preferential tariff, and that is a rank failure. They admit themselves to-day that it is a failure. The Cobden Club, through its secretary says that it is a failure. England says that it is a failure. Every one condemns it. It has brought about a commercial war with Germany. It has shut Canada out of the German market. It has got England into trouble. The government have not succeeded in getting any treaty with the United States. They have not succeeded in getting any improved trade relations with France, Trinidad, Australia or New Zealand. And our Canadian farmers have no other markets than they had before this government came into power. Every act of statesmanship they have attempted is stamped as a failure, and now they have decided to rest on their laurels, and be thankful so long as the Canadian electorates will allow them to remain in power, and enjoy themselves travelling over the country. They will not make any material changes in the tariff but remain in power and draw their salaries and take their excursions all over the world. Let me refer to what has become a growing evil ever since this government has taken office, and that is the absence of the heads of departments. Whenever parliament is called together we find two or three ministers absent. Not only have we had four or five absent all summer, enjoying themselves in Europe—France, Italy and elsewhere, but we have two important ministers absent to-day. One of them is in Japan. I see that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has been visiting the college where they train the Geisha girls over in Japan, no doubt with a view of ascertaining whether it would not be wise to introduce such colleges here in connection with our experimental farms to train girls in this country. He is feasting and enjoying himself with the Mikado. But he is not here to answer the questions we require him to answer. The hon Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) is away. It is sometimes said that these ministers are purposely and conveniently away for fear embarrassing questions may be asked, questions that they would not like to be called upon to answer. So, I say this has been a government of pleasure trips, a government by deputies. It has been so for years, and it is so to-day. Five or six ministers are away every summer, and two or three are away every session of parliament. touring over the world for pleasure. They might as well allow the government to go on by deputies, for it will do just as well as when they are present. This government have done nothing. Procrastination is their only policy. They dare not touch the tariff, for fear that in revising it they might offend their free trade friends on the one side or the manufacturers, whom they have promised not to injure, on the other. So long as they can travel over the country on pleasure, so long as Providence is kind enough to give them good health and enjoyment, they will hold their offices and draw their salaries.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Would not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) do the same ?

Mr. SPROULE. If I did, I would want to get out as soon as possible. If I were in office with no other purpose than that, I should consider myself the most mercenary creature in the country. I hope we shall never see the day when there will be a Conservative government that will have no higher aim than to draw salaries, to 'rest and be thankful' as long as the people of Canada allow them to remain in office. There are things to be done for the country. We have heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) from the west telling us that there is a crying demand for railways in the west. We must have transportation equal to the requirements of the people. Is the government giving it ? They have done nothing and are doing nothing. They give us no outlook for the future, any more than they have given us achievement in the past. We can come to no conclusion but that their only policy is a policy of procrastination, to remain where they are, to draw their salaries, so long as the people will allow. They have not reformed the Senate, though they promised to do so; they have not reduced the number of cabinet ministers, though they promised to do so. They will remain in office, draw their salaries, travel over the world for pleasure, and enjoy themselves as long as the people are willing to allow them to remain in office.

Mr. HEYD moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright) moved :

That the third report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the official Report of the Debates of the House during the present session ; which recommends a gratuity to the widow of the late N. H. Beaulieu be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). Mr. Speaker, I rejoiced, in common, I presume with most citizens of Canada, when I heard the speech of the Finance Minister setting forth the financial affairs of this country. The satisfaction I experienced was doubtless felt by all on this side of the House as well as by our friends on the other side, though perhaps their satisfaction was dampened a little by the fact that such magnificent progress had taken place in our country during the term of a Liberal administration, and that it had never obtained while they had control of our affairs. It was also a matter of satisfaction to learn that the government had discharged their duties while they were lately in Great Britain in endeavouring to obtain a preference in the British market. That they were unsuccessful was not their fault. They evidently did all they could to obtain what our friends on the other side, at least, want for Canada, but were unsuccessful. It was also a matter of satisfaction for us on this side of the House to learn that the government did not fail to do their duty, when it was forced upon them by the action of the German government, by retaliating in adopting a surtax on German goods. There is a misconception as to how far this surtax will operate; but if it prevents, as I believe it will, the importation of German goods made in England,which has been going on for a long time past, it will go far to remove the difficulties under which some of the manufacturers of this country labour at the present time. As I understand it, if 51 per cent of the price of a finished product represents the German portion of the work, the article comes under the operation of the surtax, and is placed on the general list to which an addition of 33⅓ per cent is added. Therefore, if that surtax is applied as it should be applied, it will prohibit from entering into this country the German goods that are made in England, and almost prohibit the importation into this country of goods that are made in Germany.

Now, I am quite willing to admit that our hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) may feel hopeful of some reciprocity arrangements being entered into with the people of the United States. That, apparently, has been the one object of his life. Personally, I am not so hopeful as he appears to be, because in my own mind I have not the slightest idea that anything will ever come of our attempt to have reciprocal arrangements with the people of the United States. From their public men, who have a right to speak with authority because they know the opinions of the people for whom they speak, we have never yet heard one utterance which would justify us in believing that they would concede to Canada any reciprocal arrangements that it would be in our interest to accept. President Roosevelt, for instance, has distinctly laid down the conditions upon which a foreign country can have reciprocity with the United States. This reciprocity must not interfere with their manufacturing, their industrial, and their commercial interests. The late Mr. McKinley also laid down the same doctrine in a clear and emphatic manner. He said that if by lowering the duties that are at present of no use to the people of the United States as a protection, they could increase their trade, by all means let them reduce the duty. But, Sir, a preference of that kind offered to us that will not interfere with any of the protected industries of the United States, would be of such limited value to us that it would be impossible for us to accept it. The idea that the United States will ever allow us reciprocity in natural products, for a right to sell their manufactured goods in Canada under the present tariff, is expecting entirely too much. I am therefore confident that there will be no reciprocity arrangement made with the United States, believing that they will never offer reciprocity on such terms as it would be our interest to accept.

Nor do I believe that what has recently taken place in the House of Commons of Great Britain gives us any reason to expect that we will get a preference in Great Britain for many years to come. We did hope that the imposition of the duty upon flour and wheat would give the British people an opportunity to grant us a preference without putting a tax on the British people, but I understand that that duty has been wiped out, so hostile was it to the feelings of our friends across the ocean. I see no prospect in the immediate future, either for a reciprocity treaty with the United States, or for a preferential treaty with Great Britain; and now that the grain duties have been removed, I see no reason why this government should not be able, when the necessity present itself to rearrange the tariff of this country in such a way as will be in the best interests of all classes of the people. It may be that under present circumstances courtesy demands us to wait, because Mr. Chamberlain has not had an opportunity of exerting his influence in favour of the preference. It may be judicious as well as courteous to our American friends also not to anticipate the deliberations of the commission that has been appointed, seeing that the first move towards reciprocity has emanated from our friends across the line. But after we shall have found that our hopes in obtaining reciprocity with the United States, or a preference in Great Britain, are in vain, one of the principal reasons will be removed which have made us unwilling to interfere with the preference that has existed in the past; and the government has promised us that they will exercise a free hand in that matter, and that they will abolish the preference if it is seen to be needed in the interests of Canada.

I am also gratified to learn, from the papers that were brought down, that the efforts of the government to prevent the scheduling of Canadian cattle in the British market, were put forth with force, with skill, and with earnestness, and their failure to get that embargo removed was due, as I believe, and as all the members of this House believe, to a desire on the part of the British people to protect the raising of animals in that country. With all these facts before us, we have a right to assume that we will be able in the near future to rearrange our own tariff, if it is necessary, entirely in the interests of our own people. I can assure the Minister of Finance and the government that their desire to build up in this country the industry of the manufacture of steel rails, and for that purpose to give a substantial bonus, meets with the enthusiastic support, not only of their supporters on this side of the House, but also of our friends on the other side.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have been treated to a few addresses on the budget speech, and on what I will call for courtesy's sake, the amendment that is before the House. I regret to say that the hon. gentlemen who have spoken so far have not even alluded to that amendment, although it is one of considerable importance; but they have criticised the financial administration of our affairs, which, as was clearly pointed out last night by Mr. Speaker, is contrary to the rules of the House, but which, by the courtesy of the Minister of Finance, we are to continue to-day.

Our hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was the last speaker last night, and he was terribly exercised over the fact that we have had a surplus amounting to some $40,000,000 during the period of our administration. He asked: What did we do with it? What would he expect a wise and judicious administration to do with a surplus of some $40,000,000, but to invest it prudently in the interest of the people of Canada? He instanced as a parallel case the farmer, who, after seven years of plenty had not succeeded in paying off the mortgage on his house, and he asked what would be thought of such a person. He went on to say that this would be a very foolish farmer, but that would depend upon conditions. If the farmer had taken the surplus of his labour and invested it building new barns, in draining his ground and in improving the productive power of his farm, he would have done much more wisely than to have applied it towards paying off the mortgage, which, in the case of the Dominion of Canada, only costs about 3 per cent. The government were wise in not reducing the debt, but in judiciously expending that money. But, he goes on to ask: How long can the people stand this tremendous expenditure? He predicted that the day of reckoning is soon to come. Let us look and see how the people have stood it during past years, and if the present conditions obtain, how long they are likely to stand it. The best evidence of that is to ascertain what effect this large expenditure and these large surpluses of ours have had upon the welfare of our people. I presume it would be fair to direct the attention of the hon. gentleman to the amount of deposits the people have in the large chartered banks of this country. In 1890 they amounted to $128,000,000. Six years after the time they were not so profusely bled as they say we are bleeding people now, the deposits had increased to $183,000,000, or in six years, only $55,000,000 had been added, while, during the last six years, while they have been paying such a tremendous tribute to the country, the deposits of the people increased from $183,000,000 to $382,000,000, or an increase of $199,000,000. It strikes me that the people are standing it, and at the same time improving their own condition very perceptibly. I am quite content, myself, to believe that they are quite willing to continue such a state of affairs. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to think that a surplus is an insuperable obstacle to the country's progress. They must remember that they also have had surpluses in times past. In 1882 and in 1883 they had a surplus amounting to $14,000,000. We have to go a long time back in order to get a surplus of that kind. After seventeen years experience, we do not find any more, but in these two years they had a surplus of $14,000,000. But, compare the conditions of the country then with the conditions of the country to-day. While they had a surplus of $14,000,000, the savings of the people in the banks of the country diminished from $97,000,000 to $95,000,000, so that the people were $2,000,000 poorer during their period of surpluses, while they were $199,000,000 richer during our period of surpluses. I think the country need have no special anxiety about these surpluses of ours. I owe my hon. friend from East Grey a slight apology for last night stating that the duty upon meat was of no benefit to the farmers of this country. I understood him to say wheat, but he was talking about meat, and I am quite willing to confess that it was of great benefit to the people of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. There is another thing I would like to draw your attention to, Mr. Speaker, and it is the few remarks that were made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that were not replied to by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). The hon. member for Bothwell alluded to the period of deficits. He appeared to feel proud that there had been deficits amounting to $5,694,758 in the three years ending the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, and he made it a charge against us that we had $20,994,445 to our credit at the end of the last three years, and in order to get over that difficulty he condemned the system of bookkeeping. He said our system of bookkeeping was all wrong. Well, it is the system we have inherited from the old government, the system that has been carried down since the period of confederation, and though the hon.

gentleman has been a member of this House he never before raised his voice to find fault with our system of keeping our books. But, I can readily understand why he should find fault with our system when it shows quite clearly that our surpluses amounted to $20,994,445 in the last three years, while hon. gentlemen opposite had three years of deficits. In order to get over the difficulty, he takes the expenditure, both consolidated and capital, and says: See, they had no surplus because they were behind at the end of their period of time and actually increased the net debt of the people of this country. Well, that is true, but I claim still that the present system of keeping our accounts is correct, that it has always been correct and it never has been objected to except by the hon. member for Bothwell and the late Minister of Finance, who also found fault with it when it continued to show surpluses as a result of the good management of the Liberal party. But, if this contention is true to-day, where would the Conservative party be a few years ago? Their receipts in 1884 were $31,000,000, their expenditure $57,000,000, showing a deficit of $26,000,000. Where would they have been in 1885 with a deficit of $16,000,000, where would they have been in 1886 with a deficit of $28,000,000, or a deficit of $70,000,000 in three years, and with an increase in the national debt of the people of $64,691,000? No system of bookkeeping can get over that. We are obliged to keep our books that way, but if the hon. gentleman is right now, they must have been wrong then, and these expenditures must be explained. Hon. gentlemen opposite say they are easily explained. The old government were building the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was necessary to exceed the income of the country. This has been the case and this is our excuse to-day, that notwithstanding that we have been in receipt of large revenues we have engaged in large capital expenditures. But, our hon. friend goes on to say that the national debt is the true balance of the account when the final summing up takes place. I say that too. I say it is quite immaterial whether you charge the expenditure to consolidated account or capital account except for certain purposes, and that in the end it all comes to the increase in the national debt. Let us look at that for a short period of time. Our friends opposite increased the national debt in the three years ending 1896 by $17,000,000. We increased the national debt in the three years ending 1902 by $5,556,000. If we take the debt as it stood in 1897 at $261,538,596, which was the time when we got absolute control of our affairs, and take the actual debt on the 31st March, 1903, which was $261,620,000, we find that it was only $82,000 more than it was when we got control of the affairs of this country. That is the position to-day in connection with the national debt. Our hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) had a great deal of fault to find with the tariff duties, and he tried hard to convince the country that the people of Canada were not paying the duty, and that the raising of the tariff would not increase the burdens on the people. If that be true, then all our efforts to remove the preference are absolutely of no use. But we have been told time and again, and we know it is true, that the preference in favour of Great Britain has reduced the price of goods in Canada, has brought disaster upon the woollen mills, and that the manufacturers want the preference removed and the full duty restored. Do they want that in order to still further increase their tariff; no, they want it to stiffen prices and to remove the tremendous competition that they are subject to because of this preference. It is of no use at this late date to try to make people believe that by increasing the tariff you do not increase the price of goods.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. The gentlemen who spoke on the other side have kept a long way off from the amendment that is before the House. I desire Sir, to confine my attention particularly to that amendment and to see just what it means. But let me say Sir, that the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) owes an apology to the leader of the House as well to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) for the statement he made last night to the effect that Mr. Charlton was inspired by the Prime Minister to make his speech and that the sentiments entertained by Mr. Charlton are those entertained by the leader of the government. The member for Bothwell told us that he got this information from Mr. Charlton himself. I deny that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) was told by the member for North Norfolk that he would speak at a certain time at the request of the premier, but to hold the premier responsible for the utterances of Mr. Charlton and then to say that Mr. Charlton himself was the author of the story, is something that we on this side will not believe.

Mr. GOURLEY. I thought it was the devil and not the Prime Minister that inspired the speech of Mr. Charlton.

Mr. HEYD. Well, you will admit at all events that the Prime Minister is not the devil. Now the amendment which has been presented to the House is couched in very ambiguous terms as are all the statements with reference to the tariff which are formulated by gentlemen on the other side. I have taken considerable trouble to ascertain what the meaning of the word 'adequate' is. I find in the dictionaries that the words 'sufficient' or 'enough' are very fair equivalents, but when you begin to apply words to a thing of vast importance like the tariff of Canada, it is well to be definite. In order to find out just what the Conservative party means by the word 'adequate' we have to go to a little town in Manitoba to illustrate it in a practical way. The leader of the opposition and his friends were in Manitoba last summer and a poet in that country hearing what they said, although he might have applied himself with much better advantage to something else, got off this version of adequate protection.

> Through a western town called Morden
> Passed a famous man called Borden
> Who, in a tone articulate
> The problem tried to demonstrate > That duties, that were adequate
> Would be a boon, as sure as fate,
> To the merry men of Morden
> If they'd only bear the burden.
>
> But the men in Western Morden
> With contempt refused the burden,
> Though he did his best to stimulate,
> They thought he did but simulate,
> So they more and more do hesitate
> To believe that duties adequate
> Would relieve the men of Morden
> Of the heavy useless burden.

That is an interpretation of the word 'adequate' as used by the leader of the opposition. We all know that Mr. Hugh John Macdonald had promised the people of Manitoba that if the Conservative party were returned to power they would have free agricultural implements and while the leader of the opposition was delivering his speech in the town of Morden some one asked: What about free agricultural implements. The Winnipeg 'Telegram' which I presume gives a fair report has the following account of what happened. The leader of the opposition replied as follows to the question:—

Question: What about free agricultural implements promised by Mr. Macdonald?

Mr. BORDEN. I will answer my friend's question before I sit down so definitely that there will be no question about it. I will answer on behalf of the Liberal-Conservative party which has no Sifton at one end and Tarte at the other.

Question: Will you raise the duty?

Mr. BORDEN. We will make the duty adequate and if it is now high enough, 'as I believe it is,' to enable manufacturers to make implements in Canada, we will not increase it. I am informed that implements are as cheap in Canada as in the United States. So the duty seems high enough.

The leader of the opposition tells us that 'adequate' means to enable manufacturers to make goods in Canada. It is to that interpretation of the word that I shall address my remarks. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) tells us that 'adequate' means to enable manufacturers of cotton or wool or steam engines or anything else to make them in Canada if the duty is high enough to secure that, and that there is no Tarte at one end and no Sifton at the other end to preach a high tariff or a low tariff as the case may be. He told us that the word 'adequate' meant a duty high enough to enable manufacturers to make implements in Canada, and that he believed the duty on agricultural implements is high enough. Do the Conservatives intend that the plough makers and the binder makers and the agricultural implement makers of Canada should believe that 'adequate' means the ability to manufacture in this country. Is it for that that the manufacturers' associations are giving banquets and inducing the Hon. Mr. Tarte to make speeches. Do they not mean something else by the word 'adequate.' That word 'adequate' is the crux of the whole question.

If the leader of the opposition is right that the word 'adequate' means a tariff that would enable the manufacturer to make goods in Canada reserving to himself a reasonable and a fair profit; then we are all adequate protectionists. I do not think you will find on this side of the House even the most pronounced free trader who would object to that kind of adequate protection. But concealed behind that word 'adequate' is something that we do not understand. The manufacturer believes it means high tariff, so high as to secure Canada for the Canadian manufacturers. That is what we think is meant by that word 'adequate,' and with that catch phrase, hon. gentlemen opposite will not raise the duty on agricultural implements; they say that is high enough. They go from one end of the country to the other, and, with such an amendment as is presented to this House, vague and meaningless, they fool the people, as they attempted to fool the people away up in that western town of Morden.

Now, let us see what that resolution means in its practical application. It reads as follows:

> This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians;

The hon. gentleman's first proposition is to protect labour. Well, I want somebody who has more ability than I have to devise some plan whereby labour can be protected. Labour is as free as air, and gravitates to the points where wages are most remunerative. It leaves the points where wages become less than is necessary for the maintenance of the labourers; it is constantly shifting; and it cannot be protected or, if it can be, then, what I hold in my hand is absolutely meaningless. I have here the proceedings of the Trades and Labour Council of the Dominion of Canada at their annual meeting held in the city of Berlin and attended by the representatives of one hundred and two organizations. Are these men entitled to speak for labour, or is our friend who leads the opposition? That meeting passed the following resolution:

Whereas the Manufacturers' Association has declared its intention to seek an increase in the tariff, and, whereas, the injury and oppression of industry comes not from the various industries offering to exchange riches for riches, but from the extortions to which labour is subjected by the holders of the land, the forests, the mines and other natural opportunities, therefore this congress would condemn any increase in the tariff, and would urge that taxes be removed as soon as possible to those values which now enable non-production to impoverish industry.

That is the opinion of one hundred and two labour organizations, met for the purpose of considering how they could advance their own interests. That resolution passed unanimously, and I say that these representative labour men in convention assembled are more entitled to say what will conduce to the interests of labour than even the hon. leader of the opposition, and this whole House along with him. I, therefore, say that the hon. gentleman's resolution, in its application to the first part of the population whom it proposes to protect, is absolutely ineffective, but, on the contrary, is injurious.

Now, let us see to what other classes it applies. In our trade returns we divide the interests of Canada into about six classes: Mining, fishing, forests, animals, agriculture and manufactures. Let us take the miners first. The exports of our mines last year amounted to $34,947,575. The resolution proposes by adequate protection to benefit them. How can the miners out in the Yukon, who have everything to buy, and who have to take their returns out of the soil, be protected by increasing the prices of their tools and their food, while in no way providing them with a market? They are a class who cannot be protected no matter how much we try. It is true, the lead miners in British Columbia are just now subjected to a terrible inconvenience; but this is not particularly for the want of protection. It is because an organized trust in the United States will not buy their ore. If they could secure a market for their ore, they would not ask for protection; but they are asking for protection for lead ore, because they have no foreign market for it; and so far as I am personally concerned, I will endorse the action of the Minister of Finance if he will put such a duty on everything into which lead enters as will enable these men to live, in the particular circumstances in which they are placed. At the same time, do not let us try to persuade ourselves that we can, by a policy of adequate protection, advance the interests of the miners of this country.

Can we do it with our fisheries? They exported last year $14,143,294 worth of fish, besides supplying nearly the entire requirements of the country, and they were subjected to a competition of how much? Six hundred and twenty thousand seven hundred and six dollars, consisting of: Oysters, $240,000; fish bait, $101,688; anchovies and sardines, $107,000; and forty-three other items, amounting to $172,018. Therefore, it is impossible for adequate protection to advance the interests of our great fishing industries.

Let us now turn to the lumbering industry, which is sufficiently large to warrant us in devoting a little time to its consideration. Our exports of forest products last year, amounted to $32,119,420, and our imports to $4,242,358, including $941,000 of oak and $665,000 of logs and round timber. Add the imports of fancy woods, such as we have not got in this country, amounting to $1,000,000 or $1,500,000, and the lumber required for the people of the North-west who are many miles from a lumber yard, and you have all the foreign lumber brought into Canada. Have we had any delegations from the labour interests, the mining industry, except the lead miners, the fishing industry or the lumber interest, asking us by means of a protective tariff to better their conditions? Not at all.

The greatest industry which we have in this country is that of animals and animal products. That has taken on a wonderful development during the last few years. Our exports of animals and their products last year amounted to $59,161,209. Let us look at this question in an honest, candid way, and ask ourselves if we can improve the condition of the farmers by giving them adequate protection. The leader of the opposition tried the other day to show that they are subjected to a tremendous competition. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce showed that out of the $28,000,000 of agricultural products that were imported, not more than $6,000,000 came into competition with the products of our farmers. Of the actual imports of last year which our cattle-growers had to face, amounting to $3,000,000, there were $1,064,988 of animals, $1,716,747 of food products and $375,515 of stock for breeding purposes, while we exported $59,000,000 worth of our surplus product, after supplying the requirements of our own people. How can you protect that great industry by increasing the protection of the farmers. They have no competition now. You might raise the duty to 100 per cent, and it would be of no benefit to the farmers, except that in an indirect sense it would produce a home market for some of their surplus products.

Take our agricultural returns, take last year we exported $37,000,000 of our surplus products and our exports of these products are likely to increase in much greater ratio than they have done in the past. But what competition were our agriculturists subjected to? We must not forget that it is not the amount we import into this country which comes into competition with our own products, but the amount consumed in this country. It is the quantity imported for home consumption which competes with our own products, and the hon. leader of the opposition seeks to create a false impression when he says we imported some $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 worth of wheat last year. What we imported from the west went out of this country by the east. It merely passed through this country, yet the hon. gentleman would have us believe that that importation of wheat came into competition with what was raised by our own farmers. Out of $489,000 worth of grain which came into this country, the actual amount that did enter into competition with our own products was $89,000 worth. If we included corn, which we imported at the request and for the benefit of our farmers, the whole amount of agricultural products that came into competition with the products of our own farmers was but $5,700,000. When we consider these facts, must we not conclude that the resolution of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition goes a good deal further than the circumstances justify, when it calls on us to declare that our agricultural industry requires to be stimulated by an adequate tariff. It seems to me perfectly clear that, with the exception of a few manufacturing industries, there is no industry in this country that could be stimulated by an increased tariff, and during the past six years the output of our manufacturing industries has increased from $9,365,000 in 1896 to $18,462,000 last year. Even with regard to our manufacturing industries, the word adequate production has no significance, because, with the exception of a few, they are in a fairly prosperous condition, and when such a condition obtains they evidently enjoy what the hon. leader of the opposition calls an adequate protective tariff.

The hon. gentleman read an extract from an interview with certain miners, in which the miners contended that the duty on wheat of twelve cents, on oats of ten cents, on hay of $2 a ton, and on eggs, three cents a dozen, bore very heavily upon them. The hon. gentleman was not suggesting that the protection given the farmers was too high. On the contrary, he thought it was not high enough. He believed that on certain agricultural products the duty should be increased so that a country like Canada, possessing agricultural capabilities second to none in the world, should not be obliged to import from the United States nearly $28,000,000 of agricultural products and produce of animals. But, if he had said that out of this $28,000,000 of imports from the United States, $22,000,000 consisted of bananas and oranges and other articles in which our farmers are not interested, he would have presented a truthful statement. In declaring, however, that our imports of agricultural products amounted to $28,000,000 and then proceeding to base the argument he did on that statement, he produced a false impression. In order to obtain an accurate idea of the facts, I have looked into the Trade and Navigation Returns and I find that our imports were as follows :

Animals..	$1,064,000
Grain..	489,000

And so on down, giving them the benefit of free corn and every conceivable thing that could possibly come into competition with the products of our Canadian farmers. The total importation amounts as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, to about $6,290,000. How does this compare with the total products of the Canadian farm ? It is estimated by the Bureau of Industries of Ontario that our agricultural products last year amounted to $214,000,000. It was estimated years ago by the Dominion statistician that the agricultural products of the Dominion amounted to over $500,000,000. I believe he was over the mark but now we have probably reached that stage. I put the question. If we raise $500,000,000 worth of agricultural products, how can an importation of only $5,000,000 worth affect our market—an importation of only about one per cent of our whole product ? To say that such a small percentage of imports could affect the prices of our gross production seems to me a patent absurdity.

Let me see how this thing works out when we apply the figures. The hon. gentleman says that we allowed wheat in subject to a duty of 12 cents per bushel, well, last year we imported $89,000 worth and this country raised $100,000,000 worth. How much benefit would accrue to the farmers by increasing the duty on wheat ? On oats the duty is 10 cents per bushel and the hon. gentleman wants that duty raised. But, I find that the total quantity of oats we imported was but $71,000 worth and that the province of Ontario alone raised $28,000,000 worth. What proportion does our importation of oats bear to the quantity we raise ? It is almost infinitesimal and microscopic. We might almost call it a specimen of bacteria which we are called on to consider in connection with this question. On hay, the duty is $2 per ton, and we imported $121,000 worth, the bulk of which I presume went into British Columbia or some of those distant territories which our Ontario farmers cannot reach. Our production of hay in Ontario alone last year amounted to $37,000,000, and we are asked to believe that this importation of $121,000 worth of hay comes into competition with the entire production of hay of this Dominion, and that to keep it out of this country would be a great service to our agriculturists. Then take potatoes, we imported last year $102,000 worth. But Ontario alone raised $7,000,000 worth. and included in that importation of $102,000 worth are sweet potatoes and yams. Are we to believe that by raising the duty from 15 to 45 cents a bushel, our people would be enabled to raise sweet potatoes and yams, and that we would thereby introduce a new industry into Canada ? My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, even spoke of the advantage which increased protection would give our milk and cheese. Well, we imported milk to the extent of $55,000 worth, and cheese to the extent of $42,000 worth, and we are asked seriously to believe that this importation is a danger and a menace to the dairy industries of this country, which last year fed our own population of five and a half millions, and exported $19,000,000 worth of cheese and $6,000,000 worth of butter.

I do not see anything in that resolution which throws out much encouragement to any of our industries. But I agree with the hon. the leader of the opposition on the importance of the home market to the people of Canada. I am of the opinion that that is a market which may be cultivated and developed, and which the government can cultivate and develop by—I will not call it a protective tariff for that term might be offensive to some of my friends—but by a tariff for revenue. I believe that a tariff of revenue to a greater extent would be useful to the people of this country, and I shall try briefly to show by the trend of our trade during the past few years, that an absolute necessity for successful farming in Canada is the establishment of a home market. If we take the two great branches of the farming industry—agricultural products and animals—we will find that we have got two countries in the world to sell to and almost three to buy from. Of our entire exports, no less than 90 per cent goes to Great Britain and the United States; and of our entire imports we get 85 per cent from Great Britain and the United States. Germany supplies, of our imports, something over $10,000,000 and takes of our exports about $1,300,000. So, we cannot get hurt very much if they put a prohibitive tariff on our goods. We can eliminate the world in considering what the future has in store for us. With only 15 per cent of our imports coming from countries other than Great Britain and the United States, and only 10 per cent of our exports going to the other countries, the proportion is so small as to have practically no effect. I have here a short summary showing some features of our export trade to Great Britain and to the United States in 1896 and 1902. I take these years because they are a little more convenient :

COMPARISON OF EXPORTS TO GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES, 1896 AND 1902.

After seven years, we find that we have increased our exports to Great Britain by over $38,000,000, while our exports to the United States have increased only a little over $1,000,000. Now, let us look the facts in the case from the farmers standpoint, and consider, in view of the limited market in the world at large and in the United States, what chance we have in the British market and in the market we can create for our own products among our own people. That is the proposition the farmers have to meet. It is no use for them to say to themselves : We want to sell in the dearest market and buy in the cheapest market. That would be an ideal condition, and may come when the millennium comes; but it is not here just now. The nations of the world simply say : We will not buy from you. That is what the United States tell us. It tells our farmers, with their surplus of $100,000,000 : We will only take five or six millions of certain qualities of your goods and the rest you can do what you like with. The question naturally arises, a question of considerable importance —is the market of Great Britain an unlimited market; can we continue for all time to send our export products to Great Britain ? Is there a time likely to come in the near future when we shall reach the limit of the demand for consumption in that country ? With the United States markets closed against us, with Germany, France and all the nations of the world with highly protective tariffs, our outlook as farmers is simply the outlook upon the British market and the home market—and the local market is of even more importance than the British market. Now you will bear in mind that Canada, at the present time is an agricultural country. The proportion of farmers to the rest of the community is as three to two. It has been changing, and changing rapidly, during the past ten years. Owing to the influx that has taken place of people going to our North-west, the present condition of affairs may continue and we may remain an agricultural community. But it is changing in the United States. That has ceased to be an agricultural country and has become a manufacturing country, for the proportion of farmers to others there is ten to twenty-one. Now, we are in the peculiar position still of being an agricultural country, capable for years to come of supplying far in excess of our wants, with the markets of the world, except Great Britain, barred against us. Therefore I say the development of a home market is a matter of great importance to the people of Canada. And the only way it can be done is by the application of a tariff for revenue purposes. The productive power of our farms last year was $500,000,000. We exported $100,000,000 worth, leaving $400,000,000 worth at home, of which, I presume, the rural population consumed at least one-half. It must not be forgotten that during the past year the rural population in old Canada has decreased by 112,000, while the urban population has increased by 364,000. In the province of Ontario, the farmers have decreased by 48,000, while the inhabitants of the cities, towns and villages have increased by 116,000. How much of our prosperity must be attributed to this change of population it is hard to say. It is commonly said that our prosperity is due to our export of farm products. But then, we consume in old Canada twice as much as we export. There are two or three ways open to us to enlarge the home market. Hon. gentlemen on the other side would say: If you have a highly protective tariff, that will cause all the goods required in this country to be manufactured in the country, and so you will increase the urban population to such an extent that the farmers will have a population for their surplus products. Is that likely to be the case? The United States tariff of 50 per cent meets us when we seek to enter their market. In relation to grain, there is an unlimited market for many years in Great Britain. The imports of grain and flour into Britian last year, was $150,000,000. We have a long time to develop even the North-west before we can overtake that market, so that my present remarks do not apply to Manitoba and the North-west. But the old Dominion of Canada has ceased to be an exporter of grain. We hardly raise more than we ourselves consume. So, we are compelled to build up a different system of production in order to have an export trade. We have developed in a wonderful degree during the past few years the cheese industry, the bacon industry and the cattle industry. These are the three largest. Are we likely to overtake the consuming capacity of the British market in these lines? Of cheese last year we exported to Great Britain $20,000,000 worth. The entire import into Great Britain in that year was $31,000,000. We have reached 65 per cent of the cheese trade of the British market, and it is the opinion now of men engaged in this business that we are exporting as much cheese as we are likely to do, unless, by improving the quality of the cheese, we may improve the desire to consume our cheese by the English people, in which case that increase will be held by the Canadian makers of cheese. Take bacon, the next in importance of our exports last year, amounting to $12,400,000, whereas the consuming capacity of hog products in Great Britain was represented by an importation of $68,000,000 last year. There appears to be a big margin between $12,000,000 and $68,000,000, and people assume that all we have to do is to go in and capture that market. But that is a delusion. Mr. Flavelle, the head of the Davies Pork Packing Company, in an address that he recently made before the Pig Breeders' Association of Canada, says that that is an entirely erroneous impression; that we have already reached the extent of our bacon producing capacity; that while the English people import some $68,000,000 worth of hog products, a large proportion of that is of the heavy, coarse hogs in which we cannot compete with the people of the United States, who can sell that class of hogs cheaper than we can; so in that market the United States is supreme. With Denmark, England and Ireland as competitors, we may hold our own, will hold our own, and may capture any further increase that may be developed for Wiltshire bacon. In cattle we exported $9,000,000 worth out of a possible $44,000,000 worth. I am not a cattle man, I do not know what prospects there are for further developing that trade. We have competitors in the United States who can produce cattle as good as we can, and a little cheaper, because their corn is cheaper. We have competitors in Argentina and other places, where food is cheap and labour is cheap, and I have grave doubts whether we can materially increase even our exports of cattle. Therefore, the question presents itself with force to the farming community. Are these things true, and if true, wherein is the remedy?

Mr. GOURLEY. The hon. gentleman says that hogs cannot be raised in this country as cheaply as in the United States. Would he state the reason why?

Mr. HEYD. Mr. Flavelle says that more than one-half of the entire imports of Great Britain are composed of heavy, fat meat that can be produced cheaper in the United States than we can produce it in Canada, and that we cannot hope to be competitors with them.

Mr. GOURLEY. Does the hon. gentleman know the reason why they can be produced cheaper there?

Mr. HEYD. I am not in the hog business; but Mr. Flavelle, who is the manager of the Davies Pork Packing Company, the largest house in this country, and being himself the best informed man in this country on that question, says so, and I am willing to take his statement.

Mr. GOURLEY. Where can I get that information ?

Mr. HEYD. Any farmer in the House can tell you. I am not a farmer.

Mr. GOURLEY. I can understand that they would have some advantage over us.

Mr. HEYD. There are two or three theories, but I do not know. Now what alternatives have our farmers got ? First, they have the important one of developing the home market. Every additional consumer in Canada is a benefit to the farming community. If, by a rearrangement of our tariff, our industries were injured so that the urban population that is now the principal consumers for our farmers were compelled to leave this country, at once the farming industry would be depressed. But if, by a judicious and wise system of tariff reduction, this urban population can be increased, the manufactured goods that we get abroad in many lines would be made in this country, and that would help to build up our home industries. The only other alternative is for the farmer not to produce his stuff. He has got to face one of two propositions, either our own people must buy more of his surplus products, which will be the case if we increase the consuming capacity of the home market, or he must stop growing those products.

Now then the question for him to consider is, how much will it cost to secure that home market. The farmers recognize that the protective tariff now in force in this country is in their interest. We have no farmers' deputations down here asking for a reduction of the tariff. They are willing to submit to the present tariff in order to develop the home market. But they have a right to ask themselves, recognizing the benefit of the home market: How much is it going to cost to secure immediately that home market ? That is the crux of this whole question. Now the opposition say : Put on a prohibitive tariff, that will do the business. It will also reduce the great revenue enjoyed by the government. They will no longer have occasion to quarrel with the Finance Minister if they introduce a prohibitory tariff as a remedy for our present ills. The Finance Minister will no longer be able to say that he has a surplus of $13,000,000. That evil, if it is one, will certainly be done away with. The present tariff, while it encourages the home market, also provides a revenue for the government and secures a paying market for home manufactures, and general prosperity for all. That is the stand taken by the government, and the farmers accept these conditions.

Some manufacturers are content with the present conditions, while some want more protection than they now get. While I am not prepared to say which class is entitled to an increase in the tariff, I do believe that there are industries in this country that are being injured by the preferential, that have been injured in the past from the want of a surtax on German goods ; and there are industries that are being injured by under-valuation from the United States. Those industries that are being made a slaughter market for American goods should be considered, and their welfare should be looked after by the government of this country. I believe that the government is now alive to the situation, and recognize that under-valuation has been taking place for a number of years. They are appointing more officials on the customs staff in order to prevent that evil, and they are getting the machinery into good working order. I know some industries that are likely to be closed up from this very evil of under-valuation. Still, we must admit that the manufacturers as a whole, with the exception of a few, are in a highly prosperous condition, there is no question of that. I believe that the government will be alert, and will be able to meet any changed conditions that present themselves. I believe they will have to be on the alert for that slump which the manufacturers fear on the other side. We do not fear it in this country, because we have not got our money all invested in the business. But we have to realize the tremendous development that is taking place in manufacturing interests in the United States, the terrible trusts and combines that have been formed there, which are more powerful even than the Senate and House of Representatives. It behooves us to realize that one company controls $140,000,000 worth of capital ; that there are nearly two hundred trusts controlling over $3,500,000,000 of capital, and producing nearly $1,661,000,000 worth of goods ; that the manufacturers of the United States produce about $7,000,000,000 worth, nearly $8,000,000,000 worth of manufactured goods properly so-called, or $13,000,000,000 worth if you include the products of the hand trades and reduplications. If you take the hand trades alone they amount to $8,500,000,000, of which not 3½ per cent, but 12 per cent, is exported to the markets of the world. We find that the product amounts now to $800,000,000 more than the people of the United States consume: They have agents the world over selling goods at less than it costs to produce them, recouping themselves in the highly protected markets at home in order that they may make sacrifices in the markets of the world. Our manufacturers say there is a danger. As soon as the consumption in the United States for these manufactured goods cease, the productive power, which will not cease, will go on producing, they must immediately find markets and the question which presents itself to their minds is this : Is the Canadian tariff high enough, under the conditions which are sure to obtain in a short period of time to preserve for us what we have spent years in accumulating and in developing—the manufactories over which we have control ? No wonder that they are asking for an increase in the tariff. If I were a manufacturer and had the same interests at stake, I think I, myself, would shout for higher protection, louder than I am doing to-day, but, I have faith that the government that in 1896 assumed the helm of affairs and directed the ship of state to the haven of prosperity, are still able and willing when the conditions change, once more to listen to the voice of reason and to continue to guide that ship in the future as in the past along prosperous lines.

Now, there is one industry in particular that we ought to feel thankful the government have done something for, though they have done very little for it. The binder twine industry is a peculiar industry, separate from all others and it bears a peculiar relation to the other industries of the country. It has to compete for trade in Canada alone against an organized body of twine manufacturers, which controls 90 per cent of the entire output of the United States. The International Harvester Company is the octopus that they have to fight against and against their onslaught they are absolutely powerless. Many people have been induced to go into the manufacture of binder twine. The hon. Minister of Finance stated the other day that many have gone into it, but they have gone into it under a false impression. They were under the impression that because the Brantford Binder Twine Company in three years earned dividends amounting to 200 per cent, all they had to do was to get a company of farmers to put their money into the binder twine business and they would likewise be able to declare dividends of 40 per cent, 60 per cent and 100 per cent. It is not always that we have manilla wars. It is not always that raw manilla jumps from 3½ cents a pound to 13 cents a pound. A company has to have on hand a large quantity of raw material in order to enable it to make a profit of nearly $150,000 on the increase in the value of its raw material alone. That accounts for the 200 per cent dividends declared by the Brantford Binder Twine Company, but last year, in the face of a first class consuming demand in the North-west Territories it made 8 per cent, the Ontario Farmers Company made 5 per cent, the Consumers Cordage Company, which did not happen to have on hand $150,000 worth of raw product, has made 2½ per cent per annum during the last seven years. The Chatham Binder Twine factory is closed up, and the Richelieu Cordage Company has closed its factory. Nearly all the binder twine factories in this country are owned by farmers who have gone into the business to prevent monopoly and that is the reason why the Farmers Binder Twine Company of Brantford was started. It has been successful because some 8,000 farmers became the agents and distributing centres for the institution. It costs the company nothing to sell its goods and it is able to keep on making binder twine. But the others are in dread. They do not know where they stand to-day. The United States market is closed against them by a duty of 45 per cent upon all binder twine of which manilla is a component part. With an octopus there controlling 90 per cent of the entire output, with the ability to begin in Texas and follow the markets up and when they reach the latter part of the season with a remnant of their supplies on hand, Canada is the dumping ground. The menace is not to the binder twine companies alone, but it is to the farmers of this country. The independent binder twine companies which we have in Canada are absolutely at the mercy of this foreign corporation which can charge what they like and when they like. The farmers of Canada are absolutely at their mercy if they have a glut of grain, as they are likely to have this year, that may reach to the producing power of the binder twine companies, and when they come to take the crop from the golden wheat fields they may find themselves left in the lurch for want of binder twine. The binder twine manufacturers met members of the government. They said : If you will give us a protection of 12½ per cent on binder twine we will undertake to produce all the people of Canada want. We have producing power sufficient to meet the requirements of the Canadian consumers. We will agree to fix our price at the price quoted by the International Harvester Company to the people of the United States and if we exceed their price you shall have the power by Order in Council to wipe out the duty so as to prevent us from getting a monopoly or extorting money from the consumers of the country. A proposition of that kind may be very difficult to deal with. Our farmer friends do not realize the importance of this question. We have the ability to make binder twine in Canada to-day. We have the factories, we have the labour to make all this country demands and we will make it and sell it to the consuming public as cheaply as the International Harvester Company sell it to the people of the United States, if we have a certain amount of tariff for revenue applied to the binder twine industry. It is these industries which are being injured that I have the greatest solicitude for. It is not the establishments that are developing and increasing beyond all reason. It is those that are being injured and which do not know what to do. They do not know what to do because the price of manilla had not until recently even been fixed. If it should turn out that they have too much binder twine in the United States there is nothing to prevent the International Harvester Company from saying that the price in Canada shall be 12 cents per pound. Our price is 13 cents. The price of pure manilla is 13 cents. But, to suit their own purposes the price of the International Harvester Company can be put down to 10 cents per pound for the purpose of wiping out every binder twine industry we have in this country. They are at the mercy of the trust. I would make it a little harder for the International Harvester Company to sell their goods in Canada. I would like binder twine to contribute by a revenue duty to the coffers of this country. Why should they have been singled out. If a revenue duty is the policy of the government it should apply to binder twine as well as to reapers and to mowers.

Now, Sir, I hear already that some industries that have been subjected to the preference; some that have been subjected to the slaughter, are being hard hit. I have letters from some which say that it may force them to close up. I have one letter from the Cutlery Company, who think they will not be able to wait until the government finds out whether Great Britain is going to give us a preference or the United States reciprocity. They cannot wait another year and fight against the present conditions. There are many industries in that position, and I do hope, and I hope with confidence, that the present condition will not last much longer; and that those people who have been hoping against hope as the binder twine people have been for five or six years, will be relieved from the tension to which they have been subjected, and at least put upon the plane that is occupied by the ordinary manufacturers of this country. I trust, Sir, that when this slump which is sure to come, manifests itself, the government will be on the alert, and if specific duties are needed or if anything else is needed to secure the manufacturers of this country from that invasion, they should be so secured. It is my opinion, Sir, that cheap goods to the consumer for a year or two, will never pay Canada for the loss of these magnificent manufacturing industries that have developed so wondrously during the last few years and are to-day the pride of this great Dominion of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker. I wish to join with the other members of the House in the expression of gratitude for the splendid prosperity that reigns throughout Canada at the present time. I will, however, have to differ from my hon. friends on the other side of the House, as to the cause of that prosperity, because I believe that a very large measure of our prosperity at the present day is due to the splendid national policy that was inaugurated by the Liberal-Conservative party in 1879.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. I listened to the lengthy speech of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and I was not surprised that the Speaker had to draw his attention to the fact that he was not keeping to the amendment before the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) said in answer to Mr. Speaker, that he had not read the amendment, but even that ignorance of the subject did not deter the hon. gentleman from criticising the leader of the opposition for promulgating a policy which he (Mr. Davis) had to admit he knew nothing about. Well, Sir, the policy of the Conservative party is adequate protection for home industries. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) told us that he could not understand the term 'adequate protection,' because it was not definite enough. As to that, it may not be amiss for me to give him the authority of a gentleman of high standing in this House; a gentleman whom he has supported for the last few years; a gentleman who stood so high in the estimation of the Reform party that he was selected by the Prime Minister to take the most responsible portfolio in his government when he came to power in 1896. I refer to the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Let me in the first place read the amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition. It is :

> This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians ;
> And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session

Now, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) does not understand that, let me read to him what the Hon. Mr. Tarte said about it the other evening, and perhaps that may illuminate the mind of the member for Saskatchewan. The Hon. Mr. Tarte said :

> Let me compliment the hon. the leader of the opposition on the speech he has delivered: On both sides of the House it is admitted to be one of the ablest utterances that have been made on the question of a tariff in this parliament. It is delightful to hear questions of that importance discussed in such an able manner. His motion has the right ring.

That illustrates the difference between the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and the member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that there is a demand from the people of the North-west for local self-government as we have it in the other provinces of the Dominion. Travelling through the territories last fall, I found that Liberals and Conservatives were agreed that the time had come when they should have local self-government. And, is it not a surprise that a gentleman coming from the territories as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) does, should have addressed the House for two long hours and make no reference whatever to this all-important question to the people of his constituency. On this subject let me quote what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said in 1895—not since the Liberals came into power but before they came into power, and that makes a great deal of difference with these gentlemen. Referring to the $277,000 that the Conservative government was voting in 1895 for the North-west Territories Mr. Charlton said :

> We could save the whole of that expense by allowing the North-west Territory people to manage their own concerns. Give them self-government, do not lead them around as infants with a string, but let them manage their own business like free British subjects.

What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) think about the condition of things now ? Does he think that because the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) advocated free trade on agricultural implements and now favours a revenue tariff of 20 per cent on them, that this same hon. gentleman will give his adhesion to anything which the government proposes ?

I listened with some pleasure to the speech of the member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), but I am unable yet to determine whether he is a protectionist or a free trader. I could not make out whether he was advocating a revenue tariff or protection; probably he was arguing for both. But for the information of the House let me quote something the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) said last year and which is to be found in 'Hansard,' page 299. He said :

> I am in favour of increasing the protection on the woollen industry of this country.

Notwithstanding that he held this opinion last year, he is ready to stand up in the House to-day and to support the existing tariff, and to say that he is in favour of a revenue tariff, and to say further that the present tariff is all right. Why did he not tell his leader this year that he was in favour of increasing the protection of the woollen industries of this country. Again, he said last year :

> I am willing to protect even to the extent of extreme protection.

What has changed his mind since. Further he said :

> I am opposed to any kind of reciprocity with the people of the United States.

This is what he said last year, but to-day he stood on the floor of the House to tell us, that he warned the government that the day is coming when the British market will in some measure be closed to us and that we will not be able to supply it to the extent that we are supplying it at the present moment. What does he ask ? He says the government is called upon to provide a home market for the farmers. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, or the government themselves, how it is possible to have an increased home market without having increased manufacturing establishments ? Every man knows that it is an utter impossibility.

The hon. Finance Minister, in his budget speech in the session of 1901, stated that he believed in a policy of stability of tariffs. The right hon. Prime Minister has made the same statement on several occasions. That is their policy as a government and a party. I think it is a very good text for the people of any country, so far as it can be lived up to. Would it not be well for us to look into this government's record to see if they have lived up to that splendid text ? The Liberal-Conservative party were defeated in 1896 ; the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power and formed his government ; and at the session of 1897 that government introduced what they called the Fielding tariff, and announced to the world : We present this to the people of Canada as a stable tariff ; stability of tariffs is our watchword. That tariff was adopted in 1897 ; but how long did these hon. gentlemen live up to their doctrine of stability of tariffs ? Not very long, for in the following session, that of 1898, the hon. Finance Minister stood up in his place in the House and said to the manufacturing industries and to the people of Canada : We are going to alter the tariff and make a radical change. What was the change ? He announced a preferential reduction to British goods of 12½ per cent ; nay, it was supposed to be world-wide. How long did that last ? Not very long. In the next session, in 1899, the hon. Finance Minister again stood up in his place and announced another reduction. I suppose he said, discussing it in the Cabinet: This tariff is not satisfactory yet ; we will have to forget that stable tariff doctrine, and put away the 12½ per cent preference to goods coming to this country from England, and adopt a 25 per cent preference. And he announced that change in the House. Stability of tariff, do you say ? In the meantime, the manufacturers came to the government and said : We cannot continue our manufacturing if you continue this reduction of the tariff. Yet in the next session they came along with another sweeping change. They said : We will put away that 25 per cent preference and adopt a 33⅓ per cent preference on goods coming from England. Would you call that a stable tariff ? Would it be called a stable tariff by men intending coming to this country to engage in agricultural or manufacturing pursuits ? Not a bit of it. In 1897 the government looked for something further. They said : There is to be a large development in the railways of Canada, and we will adopt some legislation to enable steel rails to be manufactured in this country. In November, 1900, just before the general election, the government sat down in Council and entered into a contract with the Clergue Company of Sault Ste. Marie, not by open Act of parliament, but by a special secret contract, given without competition, to supply the government with 125,000 tons of steel rails. The contract was to extend over a period of five years. I heard the Finance Minister stand up in his place in the House and say: We are having a splendid steel rail industry established in the province from which I come, and it will soon be in operation. But that contract was not lived up to—why? Because it was made in secret. Every man in this country should have had an opportunity of tendering for those steel rails. Speaking for myself, I am opposed to this kind of class legislation. Coming to the session of 1902 and keeping before our minds that promise to the people of Canada of a stable tariff, we had a discussion of the tariff in this House. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) the other evening, referring to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance on that occasion, said:

Last year my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in his budget speech said that he would not revise the tariff that session, because there were reasons why he should not do so—the census returns of manufactures were not available, and the London conference was on; but the words of the hon. Minister of Finance, which I read in the House on another occasion, conveyed to the country the impression that the tariff would be revised this year. The business men of the country took those words as a pledge for a revision of the tariff at this present session. The words of the Finance Minister of last year were a great deal more definite on that point than his words of this year. Last year my hon. friend did not argue on principle against a revision of the tariff, but we realize that conditions have arisen in the world that will make it necessary for us to revise the tariff at some future day. These words, I say, were understood to mean a revision this year. I can appeal to the business men of the country—they took the words of the hon. gentleman as a promise. I know that there are in Ontario and the province of Quebec several industries which cannot live under the present tariff, and there is one thing that surprises me. This Liberal side of the House is empty to-night. I would like to see it full. But what surprises me is that there are so many members of parliament on this side who have told us that they share my views, who have written me and told me repeatedly that they share my views, and who have not been able to impress their views on the Liberal party. I say it openly, I say it from the bottom of my heart, that I fully expected that the Liberal party, with which I have been connected during the last ten years, would carry out the policy it was understood in 1896 they would carry out. I am weighing my words. I know what arrangement, what understanding took place between some public men. I know what took place. I do not divulge any secrets. I know what we did in the election of 1896 in Montreal. I see within the radius of my eye public men who, at our request, came to the city of Montreal, went to the manufacturers, with the knowledge of the leaders of their party, and told them not only would the tariff not be disturbed, but it would be changed in the right direction when the proper time came. There was no secret about that. I shall not give names. There are men who hear me—I am sorry there are not more on those benches—who know that I am perfectly right. I am out of office because I could not stay in office under the present circumstances.

What do hon. gentlemen think of that kind of a statement? Is that a statement which should be made on behalf of a government that advocates stability of tariff? What are we to think of hon. gentlemen, who advocate a policy of tariff stability, going secretly to the manufacturers, prior to the general elections, and saying to them: 'You need not be disturbed about our utterances. True, we have advocated reciprocity; true we have promised free trade; but do not be alarmed, we tell you in secret—because we do many things in secret—that if the tariff be changed at all, it will be changed in the interest of the manufacturer.' Is it a matter for surprise that when we find a government, which pronounced itself in favour of stability of tariff, making important changes in that tariff every session, so that no one can tell exactly what may happen next, our capitalists and manufacturers should refuse to invest in manufacturing industries. This session the government have introduced a new feature into their so-called policy of tariff stability. They have inposed a surtax on goods from Germany. Well, Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion such legislation is anything but wise and prudent statesmanship. I do not wish to be misunderstood. In saying this, I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to increased protection? On the contrary, I am in favour of increasing protection to all our Canadian industries which require it. But at the same time, I do not think that it is wise or politic to single out any special country and say to that country: 'You shall not bring in your goods under the ordinary tariff, but you shall pay one-third more than the rates charged other countries.' If for no other such a policy is impolitic and inadvisable for this reason. We have in this country a large German settlement. We have particularly in the central part of Ontario—in Waterloo and in the surrounding district—many German settlers who are among the most prosperous and enterprising citizens to be found in this Dominion. We are inviting the surplus population of Germany to come in and settle on our unoccupied lands. We are holding out great inducements to good citizens from every part of the world to cast their lot in with us. But when a German immigrant takes up a location in our Northwest, what will happen? He may find beside him a Russian and along side the Russian a settler from some other foreign country, and when he takes up our tariff he will be confronted by this fact; that goods from every foreign country in the world except Germany are admitted on the same basis, but on German goods a special tax is imposed, and that is a condition of affairs which will naturally excite his resentment and prejudice him against the laws and institutions of his newly adopted country. That is why I am opposed to this policy of discrimination against the goods of any particular country. What I maintain is that the government should look carefully into the subject of imports from Germany, and if it came to the conclusion that the goods we import from that country could be and should be manufactured in Canada, then it would be perfectly justified, in the interests of this country, in making its tariff sufficiently high to keep out such imports and similar imports from every country in the world. But I do not think that it is wise to apply any special tariff to any one foreign country which is not equally applicable to every other.

My hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) spoke a good deal about the farmers. He pleaded both for and against them. He argued that it was in the interests of the people that we should have protection, but he immediately proceeded to warn the people against too high protection. He at first said that our imports from the United States did not hurt us and then he dwelt on the necessity of our imposing a higher tariff on some American products, especially barb wire and binder twine. Let me refer to that binder twine question. When we had a Liberal-Conservative government in power, that government put a duty of 12½ per cent on binder twine imported into Canada, no matter from what country. The Reform party took issue with the Liberal-Conservatives in that tariff and claimed that, in the interests of the Canadian farmer, binder twine should be admitted free. If that were done, they said that our farmers would purchase their binder twine at cheaper rates. They applied the same argument to barbwire, which was protected by the Liberal-Conservative government. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Reform party came into power and took the duty off binder twine and barb-wire. This gave the Canadian people an opportunity to compare the results of the two policies. What has been the result of taking off the duty? Why, the result has been that every year since then we have had a large quantity of binder twine and barbwire manufactured by foreigners coming into this country and sold to our Canadian farmers at higher rates than formerly were the rule, when these two industries enjoyed the advantage of protection. And we have today that devoted Liberal, my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), lifting up his hand and appealing to have the tariff raised again because at this moment our binder twine factories are closed down.

Which of the two great parties, Mr. Speaker, are entitled to the support and confidence of the farmers of Canada? Both sides are in accord on this point, that our farming community is the most important in this country. I am one of those who believe that the farmers of Canada can be protected.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. GOURLEY. Most of all.

Mr. BLAIN. Most of all, as my hon. friend says. Let me go back to 1878, when the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was in power as First Minister of the Liberal administration. Taking up the tariff of the Reform government of that day, what do I find? I find that wheat was admitted into this country free of duty. Let me give a list of the farm products admitted free of duty into this country under the Reform government. That list was composed of wheat, barley, peas, oats, rye, eggs, wheat flour, oatmeal and cornmeal. There was at that time a great political issue between the two great bodies contending for the mastery. The Liberal-Conservative opposition, headed by that distinguished statesman, the late Sir John Macdonald, said that if returned to power they would inaugurate a national policy, not for the benefit of the manufacturers alone, but for every class of people, including farmers. They were elected in 1878, and in their tariff of 1879 they showed how they looked after the interests of the farmers. In that tariff the following duties were imposed on agricultural products:

Wheat	15	cents per bushel.
Barley	15	" "
Peas	10	" "
Rye	10	" "
Eggs	5	" per dozen.
Wheat flour	50	" per barrel.
Rye flour	50	" "
Oat meal	½	a cent per pound.
Corn meal	40	cents per bushel.

There were some changes made by the Liberal-Conservatives from 1879 down to the time they went out of office in 1896.

Some slight reductions were made in these duties, reductions that, speaking for myself, I do not approve of. If I may be permitted to say so, I think the Liberal-Conservative party made a mistake on that question. The Liberal party came into power and found this tariff on farm products—a duty on everything the farmer sells, showing the belief on the part of the Liberal-Conservative party that all classes of people should have protection. And are those duties still in existence under this free trade government that used to declare that the farmers could not be protected? That is what they told us in this House and what many of them still tell us in the country. They promised the country free trade. Why did they not carry out that promise and strike off this list of duties? Why does not my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) or my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) advocate such a course? Why does not the government, if it believes that protection does not protect the farmer, strike off these duties when revising the tariff? This should be made a test question between the parties, so that the people of Canada may understand it.

I have a list here of farm and market-garden produce imported last year into this country, all of which, in my opinion should have been grown in Canada :—

Wheat	$7,217,137
Rye	239,404
Pease	20,748
Oats	131,818
Wheat flour	155,544
Beans	21,333
Tomatoes, fresh	54,047
Apples	90,307
Blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries	94,192
Potatoes	88,017
Horses	570,651

A very large part of these goods came from the United States. And, if hon. gentlemen opposite would like to know my opinion of 'adequate protection' and the opinion of my honoured leader and the Conservative party, I may tell him that 'adequate protection' applied to that list would mean such protection as to cause these goods to be grown in this country. But, is there any difference now between the two parties on this question. There was a motion moved in this House last session by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard), as follows :—

That it is greatly in the interest of the market gardeners and the farmers, that the duties on our Canadian garden products be so adjusted as to guarantee the Canadian farmer an effective protection against foreign competition.

That is 'adequate protection' put into a resolution. And how did this resolution fare with this government and with this House ? Where were these hon. gentlemen who are now seeking for the farmers' votes ? I take up the list, and I find that the right hon. leader of the government himself, every member of the government and every supporter of it recorded his vote against it.

Mr. CLANCY. How about the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) ?

Mr. BLAIN. He voted with his party of course, and made a speech on the subject.

Mr. GOURLEY. That must have been a mistake.

Mr. BLAIN. Not at all. What the hon. gentleman said was : Wait till you see us next year. And this year the opportunity has gone by and nothing is done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the motion we voted on ?

Mr. BLAIN. I read it; was the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) asleep ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We did not vote against that motion.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, we didn't.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is the record :—

House divided on motion for adjournment——

And among those who voted was the hon. member for West York.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a very different thing.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman stand up in this House and say that he did not vote against it ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. Of course he would. I could not expect anything different, for the hon. gentleman promised the electors of West York when he was seeking their votes, that he would represent them before this government and said he was the man to do it. He said : What is the use of sending an opposition supporter if you want protection on the farmers products ? They voted for him, and the first thing he did when he got to the House was to stand up and speak against this motion. And not only did he speak against it, but he voted against it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read my speech, and you will find it in favour of the motion.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman spoke one way and voted the other.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read my speech.

Mr. BLAIN. What does the hon. gentleman say about it now ?

An hon. MEMBER. He will tell you next year.

Mr. BLAIN. As the hon. gentleman says he spoke for it last year, would it be unreasonable to expect, if he is an honourable representative, that he would vote for it now ? But I will not pursue that further.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Better not; you won't make anything out of it.

Mr. BLAIN. Of course, I could not make anything out of the hon. member (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) will have to reckon with the electors of Peel.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not at all afraid of that reckoning. I will be able to invite my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) over to give us a few speeches in favour of protection and vote for free trade, or in favour of free trade and vote for protection. No doubt he will be generally welcome, because he will be a useful man on either side of the question. But I was speaking of the farm products imported into this country that should have been produced by our own farmers, and I read the resolution which shows the distinction between the two great political parties in this House. One thing at least will be plain—that the Liberal-Conservative party has spoken in favour of a protection and voted for it. Throughout the country, whether east or west, it stands for adequate protection in every province. That is the record of our leader, and behind him he has an ardent following who, though few in numbers, are all in favour of adequate protection to the farmers of this country. Not quite so much can be said for hon. gentlemen on the other side. During last year they lost a member of the government who, on the floor of this House gave us his reasons for leaving that he could not concur with the government in their trade policy.

Now, I wish to give a list of certain articles and duties imposed under the Canadian tariff and under the American tariff, and to ask the House how they can expect that a people of five and a half millions can compete with a people of eighty millions, when there is such a tariff advantage in favour of the American farmer. Here are the figures of the Canadian tariff :—

Canadian Tariff.—Butter, 4 cents a pound ; cheese, 3 cents a pound ; eggs, 3 cents a dozen; barley, 30 per cent equals 12 cents a bushel ; wheat, 12 cents a bushel ; oats, 10 cents a bushel ; pease, 10 cents a bushel ; hay, $2 a ton ; potatoes, 15 cents a bushel.

American tariff.—Butter, 6 cents a pound ; cheese, 6 cents a pound ; eggs, 5 cents a pound; barley, 30 cents a bushel ; wheat, 25 cents a bushel ; oats, 15 cents a bushel ; hay, $4 a ton. potatoes, 25 cents a bushel.

Now then, I have another partial list which I wish to present to the House, showing the manufactured goods that were imported into this country last year, every dollar's worth of which should have been manufactured in Canada :

Boots and shoes	$701,383
Barb wire	826,846
Farm wagons	95,512
Buggies	71,192
Portland cement	861,751
Wheel barrows, trucks and hand carts	44,894
Box and flat cars	443,931
Harness and saddlery	82,137
Furniture	489,306
Gloves	653,234
Scales	103,592

Now, Mr. Speaker, applying to this list of goods the resolution of the hon. the leader of the opposition, demanding adequate protection, every dollar's worth of these goods would be manufactured in this country by Canadian workingmen. That is the difference between the tariff policies of the two parties at the present time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What was the importation of agricultural implements that had adequate protection, according to the leader of the opposition ?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman may deal with that himself when he comes to speak. But I would remind him that when he was in opposition he went up and down this country stating that agricultural implements ought to be admitted in this country free. Now he comes forward as one of the leading spirits in retaining a tariff of 20 per cent on agricultural implements, the very tariff the Liberal-Conservative party put on when they were in power. If I were permitted a reference to his own business, I would ask him to look up the tariff and find out to what extent the business in which he is engaged is now protected, whether he is not enjoying protection as well.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I advocated free agricultural implements ?

Mr. BLAIN. I say that the hon. gentleman spoke to the farmers of Ontario condemning the Liberal-Conservative government for keeping a protective duty on agricultural implements. Does the hon. gentleman deny that ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend say that he did not support a party in the country and on the floor of this House which opposed the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party in imposing a duty on agricultural implements, as being against the interests of the farmers of this country ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Stick to what you said.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, the hon. gentleman is a little worried, and I will leave him alone. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is stated by some supporters of the government that protection increases the price of agricultural implements to the farmers. That statement has been made in western Canada, and it is made on the floor of this House. Now, it would be fair to inquire from people in the United States, the highest protective country in the world, how the farmers fare in that country in that regard, whether they are paying more for their agricultural implements by reason of living under a highly protective tariff. I made it my business to write a few letters to gentlemen, entire strangers to myself, inquiring the price of binders in the United States. Here is one of the letters that I received in answer, dated Milton, North Dakota, February 28, 1903 :

Richard Blain, Esq.,
Brampton, Ont.

Dear Sir,—At the request of Mr. John McCowan, we give you herewith the retail cash price of McCormick and Deering binders for 1902.

McCormick, 6-foot	$125
" 7-foot	130
Deering, 6-foot	125
" 7-foot	130

I have another letter from Horton & Co., of Mayville, North Dakota, dated March 14, 1903 :

Richard Blain, Esq.,
Brampton, Ont.

Dear Sir,—McCormick six-foot, right or left hand binders, were sold by us in 1901-2 for $115 ; seven-foot, $5 more or $130 cash.

That is what farmers are paying for their binders in the greatest protective country in the world. Contrary to statements that we have heard on the floor of this House, I affirm that farmers in the United States are paying as low a price for their binders as the farmers of any other country in the world. Now, what are they paying in Canada? This morning I telephoned to the Massey-Harris Co., Ottawa, asking the manager the prices at which he sold his binders to the farmers in the vicinity of Ottawa in 1902, and this is his reply: Six-foot Massey-Harris binder, $120 cash; seven-foot Massey-Harris binder, $125 cash. So you will see, Mr. Speaker, that there is very little difference in the prices of agricultural implements in Canada and in the highest protective country in the world. The farmers in both countries are buying their agricultural implements very cheap. I also wrote to Senator Jones, a well-known gentleman recently appointed to the Senate, asking him to name the three countries in which farmers could purchase their binders the cheapest. The first country he named was the United States, the most highly protected country in the world, in which farmers purchase agricultural implements cheaper than in any other country. In his letter he said there was very little difference between the two countries, that the farmers of the United States and the farmers of the Dominion of Canada purchased their binders at about the same price. So, I will submit that to the House, and I will submit Senator Jones' name who wrote me a letter saying that the farmers purchased their binders in the United States and Canada cheaper than in any other two countries in the world, both of these countries being under something of a protective tariff. Now, I wish to say just a word or two in conclusion. I am informed that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) is to follow me, and I want to refer him to the matter about which I am now going to speak.

Mr. HOLMES. I might inform the hon. member (Mr. Blain) that the arrangement has been changed, and that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) will speak.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for West Huron will speak at some time, and when he does speak he will be good enough to answer this, I am quite sure. I have a letter from the town where he lives addressed to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, M.P., Minister of Finance. It bears date Clinton, Ontario, 30th March, 1903, and it is written by Mr. John Ransford, of the firm of R. and J. Ransford, manufacturers and dealers in salt, Clinton, Ontario. I shall read just one or two paragraphs from this letter. He says:

> The salt industry is a most important one. It gives employment to a large number of workmen, and is a direct benefit to the farming class, in that large sums are paid annually for all barrel material.
>
> Many works are shut down and capital unproductive owing to the present conditions of the tariff. There is ample capacity to supply the requirements of the Dominion if Canadian salt makers were permitted to have possession of their own rightful market.
>
> The quality of salt produced in Canada compares favourably with the production of any other country
>
> There is a duty on salt imported from the United States of 5 cents per 100 pounds in bulk and 7½ cents per 100 pounds in packages.
>
> There is a duty imposed on salt going into the United States of 8 cents per 100 pounds in bulk and 12 cents per 100 pounds in packages.
>
> There is no duty on salt imported into this country from any other source than the United States.
>
> The imports of salt from Mediterranean ports and Great Britain amount approximately to an average of 100,000 tons or 700,000 barrels per annum.
>
> The annual consumption of salt in Canada may be calculated at 1,000,000 barrels or 150,000 tons.
>
> Practically two-thirds of the market is therefore filled with foreign made salt admitted with the package entirely free of duty.

He says in conclusion:

> In view of the foregoing it is asked that a duty similar to that existing in the United States be imposed on all salt coming into Canada, viz.: 8 cents per 100 pounds in bulk and 12 cents per 100 pounds in packages.

That illustrates the condition of a large number of manufacturing establishments in this country that are suffering under the present tariff. The woollen industry is suffering. My hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) has stated that the binder twine industry is suffering. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the cotton industry is suffering. The farmers are suffering in many instances because there is not a higher protective tariff on their produce. I should like to make one further statement on the farming question. There were in 1879, duties placed on butter, cheese and eggs coming into this country. These items have been protected continuously whether the Liberal Conservative party were in office or the Reform party were in office. These three industries that are entirely farming industries have been protected ever since 1879, and I wish to say, and I make this statement on high authority, that there is no animal in this country considering its value, that produces so much profit for the farmers as the hen. The egg producing industry, the cheese industry and the butter industry that have been protected continuously by both political parties all these long years are in a prosperous condition. The farmers of Canada are supplying the butter that is used by the people of Canada. The farmers of Canada are supplying the cheese that is used by the people of Canada, and the farmers of Canada are supplying the eggs that are consumed by the people of Canada. Now, a considerable quantity of these commodities come in under the present tariff, from the United States, and I submit that adequate protection should be applied to these articles, that in accordance with the principles enunciated in the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the tariff should be placed sufficiently high so that the United States farmers could not send to this country one dollar's worth of these goods in competition with the product of our own farmers. In conclusion I wish to say that I am in favour of the amendment submitted by the hon. leader of the opposition, that I believe in a higher protective tariff for the industries of this country, that I think the market gardeners and the farmers of Canada should have received better treatment at the hands of this government than a promise, that I am in favour of and will support legitimate and adequate protection for the farming industry, for the manufacturing industry, on every article that can be grown on Canadian farms and on every article that can be manufactured by the Canadian people. That is the policy I am prepared to support. I will support it if it comes from the Liberal side of the House, and I will support it if it comes from this side of the House. So soon as a resolution is introduced into this House adopting protection that will measure up to the standard I have laid down, I will stand up in my place and support that resolution, because I think it is in the best interests of the farmers of the county I have the honour to represent, and in the best interests of the people of Canada from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the discussion on the amendment, and on the budget propositions that have been presented, I would like to state my position in regard to the amendment by congratulating the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) on the fact that his budget, as presented, turned down fairly and squarely the insolent and absurd demand made a few days before the session opened by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for the application of a prohibitive tariff to Canada. I may say when the campaign on behalf of this demand was in progress during the past year, the result was looked to with some degree of doubt. It may be said that those who doubted had not proper confidence in the minister, or in the ministry. But there are many sides to the question and when it is remembered that the minister has always been careful not to take an extreme position on the tariff; that he has always held that the tariff is rather a compromise than a finality; that it does not, as did the tariff of the preceding government, represent the acme of human wisdom; and when besides and beyond that it is remembered that this association was actively organized for the express purpose of forcing tariff concessions, backed as they claim by some $400,000,000 of capital, and being in a position to enforce their demand if such demands could be enforced, it was not wonderful if we should look for some changes and some effort to satisfy these gentlemen to a degree. I say, Sir, that it is with extreme satisfaction the country has heard that these demands have not been acceded to in any degree; and that the tariff stands to-day, without concession, as it did a year ago. I do not claim, nor is it claimed by any one, that the tariff is perfect, that any tariff can be perfect; or that changed conditions do not necessitate from time to time changes in the tariff. We all agree to that, but when a straight demand, a bulldozing demand was made upon the government for concessions which in my humble estimation at any rate, and I believe in the estimation of the large majority of the people of this country were absolutely unreasonable, it is a satisfaction that they simply were not acceded to in any part. It was the only answer that could properly be given; it was the answer that was given, and the government is to be congratulated upon that answer. I believe that had there been any tampering with the general tariff at this session—I say this for the information of the government—I believe that had there been any tampering with the tariff at this session looking towards increases, it would have been taken by the country at large as a surrender on the part of the government to those demands of the manufacturing association, and that there would have been created a lack of confidence on the part of their friends towards the government that would have had serious if not actually disastrous results.

While we have to congratulate the minister upon the stand taken in regard to these demands, it appears to me, however, that throughout the course of this debate, there has been a lack of appreciation of the respective magnitude of the various interests involved. I do not know whether the government is in danger of being finally stampeded into a policy of protection by the continual outcry that is made from, not only the other side of the House but also from this side of the House. But it may not be out of order in any case for me at this stage of the debate to present in some degree the case for the Canadian consumer, who seems to have been entirely forgotten up to the present moment.

We have heard of this, and that, and the other industry which is suffering for more protection. Now, for my part, I am a protectionist; I believe thoroughly in protection. I am no theoretical free trader. I believe that it is the business of the government of the country to take any means that may be necessary to advance the interests of the country whether it be by tariff adjustment or by any other means. The difference between myself and the gentlemen who have already spoken here on this subject seems to be, that they recognize a high tariff as the only method of protection, and they recognize the manufacturing industry as the only interest that is worthy of protection. I decline to accept the proposition that high tariff is the only method of protection, and I much more strongly deny the proposition that the manufacturing industry is the only one worthy of protective consideration. What proportion does the manufacturing industry of Canada bear to the other industries of Canada ? If we take the exports of Canada we find : That the mines export $16,000,000; the fisheries, $10,000,000; the forests, $21,000,000 ; agriculture, $93,000,000; and manufactures, $18,000,000. We find that by the last census the population of Canada was in the neighbourhood of 5,000,000, and the number of people actually employed in what are generally considered to be manufactures, amounted to about 100,000. Now, as a large number of those who are employed in manufactures are not adults, it would not be fair to give the usual count of five persons dependent upon each operative ; but allowing four, it would appear that there were about 400,000, people out of our population of 5,000,000 who are directly interested in manufactures, or practically one individual as compared with nine individuals interested in the other industries of the country. I say that any legislation which looks to the protection or the advantage of the interests in which only one-tenth of the people are concerned, ignoring the interests and advantage of the nine-tenths, is not properly a policy of protection. It will be conceded by all, that those industries of the country which are the exporting industries, the price of whose product is necessarily regulated by the export market are not susceptible of benefit from a protective tariff to anything like the same degree that is an industry whose prices are regulated by the home demand rather than by the export price. You can, by raising the duty, raise the price of a manufactured article, so long as that article depends chiefly on the home market for its consumption. You cannot raise the price by increasing the duty on an article whose price chiefly depends upon the export market. That is the position as it exists as between the manufacturing industry and those other creative industries of the country, and the policy which undertakes to advantage the one-tenth at the expense of the nine-tenths is a policy which cannot be recognized as a protective tariff, and which I do not think this country at this time and in its present condition will recognize as a protective policy. We have no quarrel with the manufacturers of Canada ; we have no wish other than they should prosper. Our objection is that the manufacturers of Canada desire to prosper by reason of tariff adjustment rather than by reason of their own exertions, energy and ability. We who depend on agriculture are left to our own resources. We must necessarily maintain our position in the markets of the world, let those markets be high or low, and all we ask is that the manufacturing industries be left in the same position approximately. It was said by the preceding speaker that the agricultural industry is protected. I think the hon. leader of the opposition said the same thing. They both want it to be more protected, and they argue that those who do not believe in a high tariff should declare for no tariff at all on agricultural products. Would they please remember that, in the first place, the tariff does not exist for the puprose of protecting any industry.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend will pardon me, I think he expressed himself on one occasion in favour of a duty on oats, saying that it had a good effect in protecting the western farmer. I remember seeing an article of that kind in the very able journal over which he presides.

Mr. OLIVER. I intend to come to that. These hon. gentlemen argue that as we are not in favour of a high tariff, we should therefore hold that there should be no tariff on agricultural products. Now, the tariff is imposed for the purpose of raising a revenue by customs taxes, and there is no reason why that revenue should not be raised by a tariff on agricultural products as well as on anything else. There is no reason why the farmers should not have the benefit of the incidental protection which results from a revenue tariff. That is all the protection the farming industry has, and we certainly demand our share of that incidental protection. But while that is true as regards agricultural products in isolated cases, it does not apply to the general output of agriculture. On the great export products of wheat, cattle, butter, eggs and poultry, a protective tariff is practically of no use at all in the way of increasing prices. Do my hon. friends deny that ? Do they say that the agricultural duties do increase the general prices of these products to the farmers ?

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman permit me ? I think that may be answered by the course of the government in making a reduction in the duties on corn and wheat and corn meal.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not asking about the policy of the government. I was asking the question of the opposition.

Mr. CLANCY. That answers the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not want that answer. I want the answer from the opposition, not from the government. If they could advance the prices of agricultural products by increasing the duties, why did they not, during the agricultural depression which existed previous to 1896, increase those duties and thereby increase the prices of the farmers' products ? Either they were not able to increase the prices by increasing the duties, or they were not willing to. They can adopt which inference they like. If they were able to and did not, they were not friends of the farmers; and if they were not able to, they should not stand before this House and claim that it is possible to increase the prices of agricultural products by increasing the duties.

Our position, then, as representing agriculture, is this : We accept the position as to raising the duties by means of a revenue tariff. Having accepted that position, we are entitled to such a measure of incidental protection as is afforded by a revenue tariff, and we demand that every other industry in the country shall be put on the same footing. That is where we take issue with our friends of the Manufacturers' Association.

Just what does the demand of this Manufacturers Association amount to ? There may be people who imagine that it is simply a demand to revert to the so-called national policy tariff of 1878. But there was all the difference in the world between the so-called national policy of 1878, and the demand of the Manufacturers' Association. The national policy of 1878 was placed before the country on the plea that the manufacturers needed assistance—that if they were given assistance, it would benefit the country at large, and that in the end the prices of manufactured goods would come down. The demand of the Manufacturers' Association is that the tariff shall be raised for the purpose of preventing goods from coming in. It is not the demand of an industry that wants assistance; it is the demand of an industry which, having grown and become strong, demands to be relieved from competition. In 1878 it was a request to help the manufacturers, in order that the country might be helped; but the demand of to-day is that the manufacturers shall be protected so that, no matter what happens to the country, they will be all right. That is the position put before the House by hon. gentlemen opposite during this debate. I think it was the hon. leader of the opposition who argued that, as we see hard times ahead of us, when Canada may become a slaughter market for imported manufactured goods, we want a prohibitive tariff against those times. On what grounds of justice do the manufacturers make this demand ? When the hard times come, the purchasing power of the people is decreased. Are they then to be compelled, under stress of a tariff law, to pay more for the goods they shall have to buy, in order that our friends the manufacturers shal be lifted above the general depression ? I hope not. I do not agree with any such contention. I think that of all the unreasonable demands that have been made on behalf of the manufacturers, that is the most unreasonable. We are willing that they should share with us in the general prosperity, but we ask that they should also share with us in the general adversity when it comes. When we have only 50 cents to buy a dollars worth of the goods we require, we do not want them to be placed in a position to charge us a dollar for only 50 cents worth of goods.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ATLANTIC QUEBEC AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé) moved that the House go into Committee on Bill (No. 28) respecting the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company (amended).

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier asked that that Bill do be allowed to stand over until next week.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sorry to say that I cannot allow it to stand over until next week, because the promoters of this railway are already hard at work in the interests of the company. There is a survey going on and the works will be started shortly during this session and besides I may inform my hon. friend that this afternoon I was told by the hon. member from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) who takes a deep interest in this Bill that he did not intend to make any objection to its being reported and read the third time.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I wish to explain why I do not raise any objection to this Bill as now framed. My instructions were first to oppose the Bill because the promoters intended constructing the road through the interior of Gaspé, some sixty or seventy miles from the shore, which would not suit the people of that country, who live almost exclusively along the shore. Both the Quebec and Dominion governments have expended a million and a half dollars to help in the construction of the Baie de Chaleurs railway, which extends 100 miles from Metapedia down to Paspebiac. Public interest requires that this road should be completed before another road is undertaken through the interior of the peninsula, where as yet there is no population. It was my intention to oppose the Bill before the House if the company had not bound itself to build the shore line concurrently with their line in the interior. The Quebec legislature granted a charter two years ago and revived it this month, so that the company could proceed with its work, in the interior regardless of any legislation here. But in view of the fact that it is willing to build the shore line at the same time as the line through the interior, I have concluded that there is no objection to the measure. The conditions are most reasonable. The company has to build ten miles of its road from the terminus of the Atlantic and the Lake Superior railway within one year, or else its charter will lapse for both the shore line and the line through the interior. It is a fair compromise in the interest of both Bonaventure and Gaspé counties. The peninsula has been sadly in need of railways for many years. The change in the policy of the government about 1884 prevented the people there having the railway which they might have had if the original Baie de Chaleurs road had been constructed as part and parcel of the Intercolonial Railway instead of being handed over to a private railway company, and we would have been spared the long series of scandals connected with the Baie de Chaleurs road. At present the English bondholders are in possession of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, the company having transferred to them the road on account of its inability to pay the interest on the bonds. Had the trustees of that company come forward with a reasonable proposition and undertaken to continue the Shore line, I would have given them the preference. But, in the absence of any such proposition, and in view of the fact that there are $300,000 owing by the company to the farmers and labourers in the county of Bonaventure, the only option left me was to give the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company a fair chance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I concur in the remarks of my hon. friend from Bonaventure. If the promoters of this company had agreed to build only the line through the interior, I myself, as representing the county of Gaspé, would not have supported the Bill. But I induced the company to add to its Bill a clause in the nature of a compromise, by which the company is obliged to extend its railway from Gaspé Basin at the extremity of the peninsula as far as the terminus of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company. This company has given further evidence of its bona fides. During the last two months it has made a complete survey of the interior and the reports so far are most favourable. The survey of the interior line is now completed and Mr. O'Sullivan, a well known surveyor from the province of Quebec is now en route to survey the coast line from Gaspé Basin to Paspebiac. I am pleased to say that within one year from the sanction of this Act we will have at least ten miles and perhaps more, constructed along the shores of Gaspé and the county of Bonaventure. This Bill, has given rise to some discussion in the press and I am sorry to say that those who wrote in the newspapers were far from being well informed. This Bill represents public opinion in the county of Gaspé and Bonaventure and I shall not attempt to inflict on the House a reading of the numerous petitions which I hold in my hand. But, I may say that, with the amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), to which I have agreed, and which I seconded with pleasure in the Railway Committee, a new era has dawned on the county of Gaspé and the county of Bonaventure.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the Bill.

On section 3,

Mr. SPROULE. That would shut out all other claims. As I understand it, as a matter of law, when you specify some claims, the others are excluded. There may or may not be other claims, but, if there are, this would prejudice them.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I may explain that this principle was adopted by the House last year on the Bill for the Gaspé and Western Railway. This section is to cover the claims of labourers, boarding house keepers, those who supplied material, and local merchants. Of course, the bondholders are guaranteed by the possession of the road and the bonds, and those having judgments are guaranteed by their judgments.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, the bondholders can take care of themselves.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This section is put in only in case this company should buy or lease the other railway, which they do not intend to do. It is only a measure of precaution which my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) deems it proper to take.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that these are unusual proceedings. Judging from what you have read, Mr. Chairman, so much has been added to the Bill, or so many changes have been made, that, in all fairness to the House, the Bill should have been reprinted, so that we might have an opportunity of studying the changes proposed. I presume there are very few members, perhaps not more than two or three, who really have any intelligent knowledge of the character of this legislation. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who, no doubt, has more special knowledge on this subject than the rest of us on this side of the House, has made a request that the Bill should lie over. I think it is only reasonable that that request should be acceded to in order that we may have some person to speak for us with respect to these changes. I would not raise any objection to hurrying this Bill through the House were it not for the fact that no person is here to represent the government in this matter. I regard it as the duty of the Minister of Railways to be in his place when private Bills of this character are being passed through their various stages, so that we may appeal to him and ascertain whether he has pronounced upon the Bills and whether, in the opinion of his department they ought to pass. The minister is absent, and there is no one here to represent him or to represent the Department of Railways and Canals. We are in utter ignorance as to the character of this legislation, and this is especially true since the Bill has been altered to such a very large extent as would appear from the amendments you have read. I think that, in the absence of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, we are entitled to express the desire that the Bill should be laid over. The delay will be very slight and no inconvenience, so far as I can see, will result. I understand the measure would come up again on Monday. I think it is only fair that this request should be acceded to that we may have an opportunity of studying the proposed amendments and dealing with the Bill on its merits. Otherwise we may regret that the Bill was allowed to go through in this hasty way. There may be wonderful revelations. We have heard a great deal about this railway. The old Baie des Chaleurs Railway once created a great sensation in this House. In fact we look with a great deal of suspicion on anything connected with railways down in Gaspé. I think it was well that the members of the House should have every opportunity of informing themselves before this legislation is allowed to go through. I again ask the leader of the House to consent to granting the request of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I want to say that the Minister of Railways and Canals has an urgent engagement for to-night, and in speaking to me concerning these Bills, he said that each one of them had been fully considered and dealt with in the Railway Committee, and there was no objection to any of them, otherwise he would have cancelled his engagement and would have been present to-night. But in view of the thorough discussion these matters had in the Railway Committee, he said they might go through, and he accepted his engagement. But it is only fair to him that I should make this statement on his behalf. I was not present at the meeting of the Railway Committee, though I am a member of it, and I have no personal knowledge of the matter. But I am quite willing to accept the assurance of the Minister of Railways and Canals that the matter was fully discussed in the committee, and I understand that the particular amendment to which the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) refers was drafted by the Minister of Railways and Canals himself. Therefore, I think the House may reasonably accept the conclusion that the judgment of the Railway Committee was deliberately reached, and that we will probably make no mistake if we follow that opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. In view of the exceptional nature of the amendment that has been proposed, and of the fact that if there were other claimants, as there very often are, this would shut them out in the event of that railway being sold, and in view also of the fact that the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) expressed a desire to be present when this Bill was considered, I think it would be only right to let it stand over. It would not in the end delay the passage of the Bill, nor jeopardize its passage in any way. There is no doubt that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had some strong reason for making his request. It may be that he is representing some other interest, and his absence here to-night is a reason for asking for delay, not that we desire to interfere with the passing of the Bill, but for the purpose of enabling him to express his views on it. I think the hon. member who has this Bill in charge would consult his own interest by allowing it to stand until the member for Jacques Cartier is present.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The member for Jacques Cartier attended the Railway Committee meeting, and merely pleaded for delay in the absence of the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). The member for Jacques Cartier admitted himself that he was not conversant with the matters dealt with in these Bills. The Minister of Railways and Canals declared that he had taken up the Bill and found no objection to it, that the principal of the payment of these claims had been recognized last year. In Bill (No. 102) concerning the Gaspé and Western Railway, in subsection 4 of section 9, the same principle is to be found, that is, the payment for labour, board and material. A vote was taken in the Railway Committee, and this present Bill was passed by a majority of 30 to 9. Now, when we come to the House we are met with the same objection, that the member for Jacques Cartier is absent. The member for Montmorency was here to-day and left at four o'clock, knowing that this Bill was on the Order paper. So far as the amendment is concerned, the Minister of Railways and Canals drafted it himself.

Mr. INGRAM. One of the objections that the member for Jacques Cartier took in committee was that he wanted a certain senator to be present as well as the member for Montmorency. The senator was not present.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier alluded to Senator Casgrain in the Railway Committee, and to the member for Montmorency. If the hon. gentleman will take my word, I saw Senator Casgrain this afternoon in the lobby, and the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) saw me, and I understood from them that the Bill would pass this evening.

On section 7,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This section is amended in the second line by inserting after the words 'telephone lines' the words 'upon and.' It will then read: 'The company may construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines upon and along.'

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that in bygone years we have taken strong exception to that provision permitting a union or connection with other telegraph lines. Practically we are giving authority to a new telegraph company to do business from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. That will be the effect of it, because this company will have power to connect with lines of any other telegraph or telephone company. By such connection they can form a through system of telegraphing and telephoning across the continent. Exception was taken to words like these some two years ago, and several Bills were altered for that reason, so as to restrict the broad sense in which power is taken in this Bill. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this whole Bill requires a good deal of consideration yet. This clause which has been incorporated in the Bill, if I recollect aright, was disapproved of by the House some few years ago, and was altered in order to prevent a company from getting the extreme power that was not contemplated at all under the operation of a special charter. I think we had better let the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance make the explanation he did with reference to the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals. No doubt he had sufficient reason for being absent, and I think we may also make the same plea on behalf of the member for Jacques Cartier, that he also has sufficient reason for being absent. If we allow the consideration in one case we should allow it in the other. I hope the promoters of the Bill will not press it further, but will wait until it can be discussed fully by the only gentleman on this side of the House whom we think has any knowledge of the facts.

On section 9,

Mr. SPROULE. What is the length of this line ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The line in the interior from Causapscal to Gaspé basin is 140 miles long, and from Gaspé basin to Paspebiac 80 miles.

On section 11,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 11 is amended by striking out the word 'five' in the third line and inserting the word 'seven.'

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it usual to say that 'one or more of whom may be paid directors ?' We might as well say that all should be paid directors.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no objection.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the committee rise and report the Bill ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest that before this Bill comes before the House for the third reading it should be reprinted.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be better to have it reprinted.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that about one-third has been added and two-thirds expunged and there is almost nothing of the original Bill left. I hope the House will consent to the reprinting of the Bill so that it will come before the House in an intelligible form.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Macdonald from the Committee of the Whole reports that they have considered Bill (No. 28) respecting the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company and have ordered him to report the same without any amendment. When shall this Bill be read the third time ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Now.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not want it read the third time now. It can be left to the next sitting of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Now ?

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) insists upon the third reading of the Bill now, all I can say is that we do not propose to allow it to go in that way. We have been very moderate in our requests and very reasonable and if it is going to be forced through in that way we will have to raise the objections that we think are necessary to the Bill and endeavour to have it delayed until we can have some better consideration of it than we can have to-night. The request made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) was a very reasonable and fair one. A large portion of this Bill is new matter that has never been considered by many hon. members of this House. The request to have the Bill reprinted before it is read the third time is something that should be generally conceded. Why is it not allowed in this case ? It is not going to interfere with the passage of the Bill and therefore I say it should be conceded at once. But, the disposition which hon. gentlemen have shown to force the Bill through against the will and the wishes of every person is rather strong presumptive evidence that there is something behind it unknown to the House and which the House ought to know before the Bill is pushed through in that way. I hope the hon. gentleman will allow the Bill to remain and let its third reading take place at another sitting of the House and in the meantime allow the Bill to be reprinted.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Speaker, in case an hon. gentleman takes exception to the third reading of a Bill is that objection not well taken ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a question for the House to decide whether the Bill shall be put on the Order paper for the third reading now or at the next sitting of the House.

When a Bill is reported without amendment, as in this case, from the Committee of the Whole it is a question for the House to decide whether the Bill should be put on the Order paper to be read the third time now or at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. INGRAM. Do you hold, Mr. Speaker, that there have been no amendments to this Bill ?

Mr. SPEAKER. No amendments in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, it is only a quarter to nine now and—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I do think in view of what has been stated the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill had better not press it now. Any hon. member can prevent it getting through and probably the Bill will make just as much progress if we let it stand until the next sitting of the House instead of attempting to press it to the third reading now.

Mr. SPROULE. Quite as much.

Mr. SPEAKER. At the next sitting of the House.

Order allowed to stand.

NIAGARA GRAND ISLAND BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 57) respecting the Niagara Grand Island Bridge Company.—Mr. German.

On section 1,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In line 23 the word 'three' is inserted in the blank so that it reads :

Provided, however, that if such consent is not obtained within three years after the passing of this Act, &c.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Mr. Chairman, I beg to move by way of amendment that the word 'three' which you have just read be struck out and that the word 'five' be inserted in lieu thereof. This matter came up before the Railway Committee the other day and the word 'three' was suggested and put in. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) in whose name the Bill stands was not present and the facts were not thoroughly well known, but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that in three similar Bills which we passed last session, all of them dealing with the cases of International bridges, the term was made five years instead of three and it is merely desired to put them on an equality in that respect. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was seen since the Railway Committee reported and he has no objection to making the change.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Chairman, I beg to verify the statement of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) that in these Bills the term was made five years so that we have a precedent.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY.

Mr. COWAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 102) respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). This Bill looks like an old familiar friend that we disposed of twelve months ago, and has been resurrected again. I do not know whether the statements made by the Minister of Finance with reference to what the Minister of Railways had said about those Bills apply to this one as well as to the others. I would like to know whether the minister has taken into consideration the fact that this Bill carried with it a very large land grant. This Bill proposes to revive a charter that lapsed about the first of July, 1902, and before we accept the principle of the Bill it is important for us to consider whether or not we are going to adopt the principle of subsidizing railways by large land grants. If we revive this charter we adopt the principle of giving to this railway what has been refused to others, namely, a very large subsidy to a line through a section of the country where there ought to be very little trouble in constructing a railway. Possibly the Minister of Finance may be able to say that the Minister of Railways has had his special attention drawn to the fact that this land grant is associated with this Bill. If this charter is revived under this Bill, will the land grant also be revived ? If the land grant is not revived, I will offer no objection to the second reading, but if the Bill carries with it this large land grant which it is alleged would construct two railways, the House should be very careful indeed before accepting the principle of the Bill. I hope the Minister of Finance will be able to give us some information on that point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The remarks I made on the part of the Minister of Railways had reference to Bills which had already been before the Railway Committee and had there been fully considered. This Bill is standing for its second reading; it has not yet been before the Railway Committee, and of course, the remarks which my hon. friend alluded to cannot have any reference to it. It is not usual to affirm any principle on the second reading of a private Bill. The almost invariable practice is to allow these Bills to pass their second reading and to go to the committee. I am informed that this Bill does not carry the land grant spoken of by my hon. friend.

However, that point can be considered in the committee, and I do not think we shall be prejudicing the public interest by allowing it to go to the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the Order in Council expired ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not say.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year the hon. Minister of Railways stated that the Conservative government were responsible for the land grant to this company. We would like to know whether this government intend to assume the responsibility of extending that principle ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will come up in due course, when we shall be prepared to answer.

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill in question relates to a railway project in the constituency I represent, and while I have no intention of opposing it at this stage, I feel bound to say that the opposition which I felt compelled to give to the Bill last year I still feel compelled to give, and for the same reason. It is the avowed policy of the government in the North-west that no more land grants shall be given to railways. I understand that this Bill involves a large land grant to a railway, and I as a supporter of the government policy in the North-west cannot support it. I would mention one fact further, that the latest report which I have received from the North-west is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have increased the price of their lands to $6 per acre.

Mr. SPROULE. In this particular instance I have a distinct recollection that there is a very large interest involved. I do not know whether the second reading of this Bill involves an assent to the principle of the land grant; but if it does, I for one, am distinctly opposed to it.

Mr. COWAN. You supported it before.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not, and the hon. gentleman has no right to make that statement. I say most distinctly that I did not support the land grant connected with this railway. I opposed it, and for the same reason I am opposed to it to-day. It includes not only an ordinary land grant, but one of the important coal mines of the North-west, which is within a reasonable distance of Calgary, and it is for the purpose of getting control of that coal mine that this company are desirous of reviving this Bill, because if they did, they would get control of something twice or three times as valuable as the whole railway. It was got at a time when there was not the same value put on coal or on land in that country that there is at the present time. When an effort was made last year to revive this Bill, it was opposed, and strongly opposed, and the Committee was not disposed to grant it. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and other members from the North-west, strongly opposed it, and I opposed it as well. I take the same position to-night. If it in any way involves an assent to the principle of land grants to railways in the future, I am opposed to it. I think we have reached a time in the history of Canada when we should stop giving land grants to railways. In every portion of that country I found that where there was a demand for a railway, it was where a considerable settlement existed. The need of a railway was great because the produce to be handled was great, and therefore the earning powers of the railway ought to be sufficient to make it pay. When that is the case, there is no reason why we should give a land grant.

Mr. COWAN. Having made the statement that I did make when the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was addressing his few imperfect remarks to the House, I must just say that I made the statement that the land grant provided for in the charter was supported by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. SPROULE. Last year.

Mr. COWAN. I did not say last year. I reiterate that statement here and now. I say that not only was the charter supported by the hon. member for East Grey, but I would be very much surprised if the land grant and the charter were not both supported by his vote and his voice; because, so far as observation can be a teacher, I think hardly anything has ever passed in this House in which the voice of the hon. member for East Grey has not sounded loud and long. Last year this company asked for a renewal of the charter; but when the hon. member for East Grey sat on this side of the House, when the government which he supported was in power—and I may say that among its supporters he was a bright and shining ornament—he voted for that charter and he voted for that land grant. It was only last year and not before that the voice of the hon. member for East Grey was heard against it. I have not anything to say at this particular juncture with regard to this matter. It seems to me to be a little out of the ordinary. It is a question that ought to go to the Railway Committee I have no doubt the voice of the hon. member for East Grey will be heard in the Railway Committee on this question, as it is heard on everything, relevant and irrelevant, and if he has anything to say against the land grant or the charter, let him say it there.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a right to rise to an explanation. When I made the denial

I made it emphatically. When the Bill was before the committee last year—

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman did not say that last year.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that when this Bill was up before, that was last year, I opposed it, I referred to the fact that the hon. member for Alberta opposed it and I said I opposed it as well—

Mr. COWAN. What about the time when it was first granted ?

Mr. SPROULE. And I deny the statement made by the bleached Ethiopian that I supported it.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, this Bill cannot pass its second reading to-night, because it is not printed in French.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. Speaker, in that case, I will not move the second reading, because I would like the hon. member for East Grey to have another opportunity to make a speech.

Order allowed to stand.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance.

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). When the House rose at six o'clock, I was making a comparison between the requests made in 1878 and the demand made in 1903 by the manufacturers of Canada. That which was in 1878 a request, became in 1903 a demand. The plea that was then made for assistance to a struggling industry has now become a threat on behalf of a self styled dominant interest. What was asked in the general interest in 1878 is demanded in a special interest in 1903. The difference between the request of 1878 and the demand of 1903 is just as wide as the difference between the conditions prevailing then and now. And it is just as well that we should recognize the difference in those conditions, so that we may appreciate the injustice of the present demand. The promises that were made to justify the request for increased protection were the retaining of our population at home, the increase of our general wealth and prosperity, and the lowering of the price of manufactured products. At the end of eighteen years' experience of that policy, carried out by those who had every opportunity to put it to the test in its entirety, what has been the result ? Although during those eighteen years we had a national expenditure of six and a half million dollars per year over the national revenue, although we had the building up of a number of millionaires in the country, at the end of that period we found ourselves in a condition of commercial and industrial stagnation. Contrast that with our present position. To-day, after an experience of some seven years of a change of policy and a change of tariff, we have a prosperity in trade, commerce and finance such as this country never before dreamed of. In 1878 we were asked to give protection to the manufacturers because they and the country were not prosperous. Now these manufacturers are demanding more protection because they and the country are prosperous. In 1878 they asked for protection because they needed it. Now they demand protection because the country is rich enough to stand it. The moral of this is that the manufacturers have thriven because the country has prospered—that the manufacturers depend on the farmers, and not the farmers on the manufacturers. We had eighteen years of effort to make the country prosperous by protecting the manufacturers, and that experiment resulted in dismal failure. We have had since then seven years' endeavour to make the country prosperous by increasing the facilities for agriculture and trade generally, and we find both the country and manufacturers prosperous to a degree they never were before. All of which shows that the policy of restriction produced the result that should naturally have been expected. In 1878 we voted for restriction of trade. During eighteen years we carried out that policy, and at the end of the eighteen years we had the natural result. In 1896 we voted for expansion of trade, and, for seven years we have had an increase of commerce, an increase of industry and prosperity. And to-day we are asked, practically, as it appears to me, to commit commercial, industrial and financial suicide, by reverting to the conditions which failed in the period from 1878 to 1896, and which, I believe, will fail again if the attempt is made to revert to them. It is the highest tribute that can be paid to the policy of protection to manufacturers at the expense of the community, to the policy of building up tariff walls and restricting trade, to say that it was in the highest degree successful and that trade was restricted. The fact that the country was not prosperous was entirely another matter, and did not affect the theory or the success of the experiment. Just as with the surgeon who performs a very difficult operation, is able to announce that it was very successful; adding, as a mere detail that the patient died.

Now, as to the policy of a prohibitive tariff, there can be only one opinion from the standpoint of those who have to bear the burden of that tariff. I suppose there is only one opinion from the standpoint of those who get the benefit of it—that we take for granted. Among those who have to bear the burden of it there certainly should be, and reasonably can be, only one opinion. As those who are to have the benefit constitute only one-tenth of the community, and those who are to bear the burden constitute nine-tenths, it seems to me only one answer is to be given to such the demand for such a tariff from the standpoint of the welfare of the nation. The fact that the demand comes from both sides of the House, to a certain degree does not affect the condition at all. I would like to say to the Minister of Finance that, however, desirable it may be to please everybody, that is beyond the limit of success; but that the effort to please everybody generally results in pleasing nobody. If I understand what liberalism means, it stands for progress, but it stands for principle as much as it does for progress. Liberalism stands for principle, or it stands for nothing, and if it shall ever be that the impression goes abroad that Liberalism has become mere opportunism, then, no more can the Liberal party expect, and no more will it receive, the confidence of an intelligent and progressive country. I give all credit to the government for having withstood these demands, these united demands of the Manufacturers' Association—these dangerous demands, demands which, if acceded to, mean, as I contend, commercial and financial ruin to this country. And as these demands have not been acceded to, I take it for granted that the government must face the absolute, unquestioning and determined hostility of that same Manufacturers' Association and of every interest which they can bring to bear in their support. I take it for granted that the fight is on, as a matter of fact, between the present government and those interests which stand for a high tariff, whether they are in one province or the other and whether they call themselves Liberals or Conservatives. I, therefore, give the government all credit for the stand they have taken and for having accepted the challenge which was thrown down. But, for fear that there might be any misunderstanding with those of us who represent portions of the country the industries of which are not susceptible of successful and profitable protection, I will go a little further and will challenge some of the propositions laid down in the budget speech.

I said a while ago that I was a protectionist. Beyond that, I believe in retaliation. But, I believe in retaliation only as a measure of self-defence, and when you are sure of hurting the other fellow more than you hurt yourself. Now, I am not so sure, on looking into the matter a little carefully, that our proposed retaliation against Germany is altogether favourable to ourselves. I notice that that policy was applauded on both sides of the House, and particularly on the other side. Perhaps if we look into the matter a little carefully, we shall not see quite so much reason for applause. Looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, to-day I found that we imported last year 371,000,000 pounds of sugar, at a value of about $7,500,000, upon which the duty would amount to about $2,750,000. The duty on the low grade sugar is 62½ cents per hundred pounds, and on the high grade it is $1.25 per hundred pounds. I found that we imported from Germany about 183,500,000 pounds of sugar, about half of our total import, of the value of about $35,000,000, the duty on which was about $1,750,000. If we import an equal amount of sugar from Germany next year under that retaliatory system which was so strongly applauded on both sides, but particularly on the other side, we shall pay into our treasury an additional amount of $445,000 over the amount paid in last year. This, perhaps, will change a little our satisfaction with the idea of retaliation. Let me repeat that I do not object to retaliation —not at all ; I quite approve of it; but I do not like retaliation which costs us half a million of dollars a year in taxation on an article the taxation on which almost more than the taxation of any other article lays the burden chiefly upon the people least able to bear it. A tax on sugar is essentially a tax on the poor. A family of moderate income will use probably, about as much sugar in the year as will the family of a millionaire. This means that the family of small income will pay more towards the national revenue in proportion to their ability to pay than will the family of the millionaire. The same is true of the taxes on all articles which enter into general consumption. A tax on sugar when it goes beyond a reasonable point is essentially objectionable from the point of view of the agricultural and of the general population of the country, not excluding those who are employed in manufacturing industries. I take the liberty of saying that if it was desirable to retaliate against Germany—and I agree that under the circumstances it was desirable—I do not think it was desirable to retaliate by hitting ourselves to the amount of half a million dollars a year. It seems to me that if the cost of our sugar is likely to be increased by the amount of half a million dollars a year by the retaliatory duty against Germany, it would have been fair and right to follow the example that was instituted in the case of the preferential tariff, and to have reduced the general tax on sugar so as to even up to consumers generally the increased cost that results from this surtax upon German imports. At this time when we have a swelling revenue and a large surplus, we might very well have a reduction of the duty on sugar rather than an increase, for that is really what the German retaliation amounts to in respect to sugar.

In regard to the proposed duty upon steel rails, I also take issue with the proposition laid own. Of course that duty does not take effect immediately. It may never take effect. Possibly it was never intended to take effect. But if not intended to take effect, it should not appear upon the statute-book, because it commits the House to the principle of protection for protection's sake. Now, if there is one thing that is more necessary than another in the development of this great country of magnificent distances, it is railways, and the great part of their cost, at any rate on the prairies, is the rails, and a duty which increases the cost of rails in this country is to that extent a bar to development. I have read in the papers that we have an estimated consumption of 150,000 tons of steel rails per year, the duty upon which, at $7 per ton, would amount to $1,050,000. That is really a hindrance to the extent of $1,050,000 to the construction of railways at a time when we are voting from year to year millions of dollars of subsidies to aid in the construction of railways. Now, I am aware that the steel rail industry has its rights the same as any other industry ; but I claim that in this case, as in some other cases that I will mention, the general interest overrides the special interest. I believe that where the interest of this country from one ocean to the other is so largely bound up in railway construction, it is in the general interest that the steel rail industry should be sacrificed for the general interest of the country. I do not know any way yet to give everybody everything that they want, and it is not possible in all cases to do so. We have frequently to give in order to get, in fact, I think that is a rule of life. If we want cheap railways we have to buy rails at the lowest price that the world's market will afford. I would be glad to see the iron industries of Canada developed. At present we are paying considerable bonuses on the production of iron in order to aid in that development. It is, I believe, under the circumstances, a proper policy, a fair policy. For my own part, and speaking as I believe, for the people I represent, we have no objection to that. When we pay bonuses we know how much we are paying, what we are paying them for, and what we are getting for what we are paying. But in the case of a duty we do not know how much we are paying, and we do not know what we are getting for what we are paying. There is all the difference in the world between the two cases. Now, I think that in having bonused the iron industry to the extent that it has been bonused, we have gone quite far enough in that direction. One of the greatest reasons for the revival of manufactures under the present tariff has been that the protective duties on raw iron which prevailed up to 1896 have been reduced or abolished. Now I think it is universally admitted that these iron duties practically strangled Canadian manufactures which used iron. I would be sorry to see that policy reverted to in any degree, and particularly I would be sorry to see it reverted to in the case of such an actual necessity as steel rails.

I believe in giving all industries such incidental protection as a fair revenue tariff will afford them. I have no objection to the protection which is afforded to many of these industries, but there is one which belongs to the class of universal necessities, and which means a special tax on the poorer people and on the industrial classes which, under the tariff as it stands to-day, is anything but a revenue tariff. It stands there absolutely as a protective tariff quite as much as the duty on steel rails—I allude to the duty on coal oil. That duty at the present time is 5 cents per gallon, which I think amounts to about 75 per cent protection. I claim that is absolutely an unreasonable duty. No industry in this country has a right to such a measure of protection. I would be willing to concede to the coal oil industry a fair measure of protection, a 2c. per gallon duty, if you like; although I consider that in the case of an article which enters so generally into consumption as coal oil, it should be under an absolutely minimum tariff instead of under a maximum. At a duty of 5 cents per gallon we are paying $50,000 in duty on every million gallons of oil that we import. I presume I am safe in saying that we are paying just as much in the extra price on every million gallons of oil produced in Canada. So that the trade returns do not show the amount of taxation that we are paying on coal oil, by any means. Admitting that 2 cents a gallon of a specific duty on coal oil would be a fair revenue tariff, the difference between what we are paying and what we would be paying under a revenue tariff, amounts to about $30,000 a year on every million gallons of oil consumed in this country. I say that is too much, it is not reasonable. It does not come under the lines of a revenue tariff, it is a burden laid especially upon the agricultural classes of this country, and it is one that I for my part shall vote against on every opportunity that I get.

I will take the liberty of alluding to another protective measure that has been accorded under the present tariff, a protection which can be justified on the grounds I have already mentioned. It was of special advantage to the agricultural industry that binder twine, barbed wire and cream separators were placed upon the free list. That is a measure of protection, I admit, to the agricultural industry. It is justifiable on the ground that that which is the farmer's raw material, a necessity of his occupation and calling, which enters so largely into his every day work, should be subjected to the least possible tax. It is only natural and right that the duties upon such articles should be reduced to the lowest possible point. In the case of binder twine and barbed wire, industries representing rather raw material than labour, in which the value of the material which goes into their production is so much greater than the amount of labour, the actual labour of the country is not seriously injured by the duty being taken off, it was an eminently proper thing that these articles should be made free of duty. The removal of the duties on these articles has been of special advantage to the agricultural classes, an advantage which they appreciate and one in which in all fairness they are entitled to, because, on many of the articles which they have to buy, for which they are the principal customers, they are paying, even yet, under this present tariff, the maximum duty of 35 per cent. If the farmer has to pay 35 per cent on what he has to buy, when he has only a protection of 20 per cent tariff on what he has to sell, it is only fair that he should have these great and recurring necessities absolutely free of duty.

I have said that there were points in the tariff propositions of the hon. Minister of Finance to which I took exception and to which I think the agricultural interests at any rate do take exception. They take exception to the increase in the duties on sugar, to the excessive duty on coal oil and to the proposed duty on steel rails. Now, there is only one way to make the dissatisfaction of a member against the government felt and that is by voting against the government; and if it were possible on this present occasion to express my disapprobation of those points of the policy of the government by my vote on the resolutions before the House I would have great pleasure—no, I would not have great pleasure, but I would feel that I was under the necessity of casting my vote in that way. But, unfortunately, this is not the case. We are here confronted with the proposition of the hon. Minister of Finance to consider his budget as brought down and with the appeal of the hon. leader of the opposition to support his amendment. The amendment offers no satisfactory alternative. Rather, if there is anything contained in the budget proposition of the hon. Minister of Finance which is objectionable to the agricultural interests, that objection is intensified tenfold by the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition. In the remarks that have been made from the other side of the House one note has run through them all and that is that the agricultural and other duties are not high enough. The protection on steel rails is not high enough, the retaliation against Germany was not begun soon enough. There is apparently a sentiment behind the amendment that even the demands of the Manufacturers' Association are not too much to be conceded. It will not answer for our hon. friends on the other side of the House to sneer at us who support the government, to some extent, under protest. It will not do for them to say to us: Vote with us because the government does not do as you wish, for if we voted with them we would be travelling much farther afield from the position which we desire to see maintained. They say: 'The government is a protectionist government, and has chastised you of the agricultural classes with whips; put us in power and we will chastise you with scorpions.'

We are in a somewhat unfortunate position in that we cannot approve in all particulars of the proposition of the government and at the same time we cannot approve in any particular of the proposals of the opposition. There is, it seems to me, something lacking in both the propositions of the hon. Minister of Finance and of the hon. leader of the opposition. There is a new condition of affairs arising in this country in finance, in transportation, in commerce, and in manufactures, a condition which is not recognized, of which no note has been taken by either one or the other. I allude to the rise of combines in every line of life. There was a time when we thought that the abolition of duties would prevent the formation of combines. Unfortunately, that is not the fact. On the other hand we are fully of the opinion that the levying of an improper duty certainly tends to the formation of combines. I believe that what this country wants in the way of protection is protection against combines—combines of capital, combines of industry, combines of transportation, and the policy which is brought forward and which will deal successfully with these combines is the policy which this country needs and which this country calls for. It is not sufficient simply not to recognize that this condition of affairs exists. It is not sufficient that it did not exist ten years ago or twenty years ago; the fact is that it exists to-day and we are feeling the effects of it. To-day, as was said before, in the North-west Territories, we are paying $9 per thousand more for lumber than we were paying fourteen months ago as a result of the existence of a combine in lumber. That means $9,000 on each million feet of dressed lumber used in that country. It means an exorbitant tax upon the new settlers in the country, it means a check to immigration, it means a check to prosperity, it means that this government is in duty bound to take measures to break up that combine, and to bring things to their natural condition. The combines are not confined to lumber. A year ago the paper trade combine was tried in court and convicted and a reduction in the duty on paper followed. But that is not a sufficient remedy. The evil still exists. I am not able to say what the remedy is, but I say that a remedy is necessary against these combines in the interest of the people. The first step towards helping combines is a high tariff, and the first step towards breaking them up is a low tariff, or the removal of the duty altogether where a combine is proven to exist.

I wish to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the British preference. I have noticed that this preference is an object of serious attack from the other side of the House on nearly all occasions. Although sometimes it is covert, yet it is continuously made. I regretted very much to hear from the Finance Minister that there was a possibility if not even a probability, that the British preference would be abolished or reduced. Since the budget speech was made circumstances have altered so that the conditions which then existed do not exist now. The duties on grain imported into Britain have been abolished, and we have not now the same claim upon preferential treatment in their market as we had a few days ago. But I am not looking at the British preference from the standpoint of retaliation on Britain, or from the British standpoint at all. I am looking at it strictly from the standpoint of a Canadian consumer. I find that the most important imports from Great Britain are cottons and woollens, which are the wear of the masses of the people; and that which increases the cost of cotton and woollens to the masses of the people is an injury to the people; that which cheapens the cost of these articles is a benefit to the people. We imported last year $7,000,000 worth of cottons and $10,000,000 worth of woollens from Great Britain. Taking the average duties at 25 per cent, and that is rather below the mark, we find that the saving to the Canadian consumer by the preference on the goods actually imported from Great Britain, amounts to $580,000 on cottons, and $830,000 on woollens, or a total of $1,410,000 by reason of the British preference on these goods actually imported in one year. I say, Sir, that this is an advantage to the Canadian consumer which no government can afford to ignore. We cannot afford to tax our industrial classes to the extent that is demanded by the cotton and woollen manufacturers of Canada. We are benefiting nine-tenths of the people by the reduced duty on cottons and woollens imported from Great Britain, and if you like to put it in that way, we are injuring the cotton and woollen manufacturers in Canada. But what do these industries amount to. The last census shows that there were 4,000 woollen mill operatives and 6,000 cotton mill operatives in Canada. We are not interested so much in the capital invested in these mills, as we are interested in the operatives in these mills. Put the case in its worst light, and say if you wish that the continuation of the British preference will shut up every cotton and woollen mill in Canada, and even then I will say that Canada cannot afford to carry on the mills at the price demanded by the cotton and woollen manufacturers. But, Sir, this price which they demand is not founded on fact. The truth is that the cotton mills of Canada were never as prosperous as they are to-day, and never were turning out as much goods as they do to-day. As a matter of fact the mills at Valleyfield have doubled their capacity since this government came into power and the British preference was put in force. The cotton industry is one of the strongest evidences of the advantage resulting to manufacturers by reason of the increase in the general prosperity of the country. They have been hardest hit by the lowering of the tariff under the British preference, and still they have achieved that measure of prosperity.

In considering the demands made by these special interests, I would desire to impress upon the government now and henceforth that there are national interests, that there are universal interests to be considered which are entirely paramount to these special interests of the manufacturing concerns. We do not grudge the manufacturing industries all the protection that is coming to them under a fair revenue tariff. They are more than heartily welcome to it; we wish them all prosperity, but when they are singled out for special protection and advantage; when they are put in a position whereby they are to be protected from the stress of commercial depression, while every one else must in the nature of things suffer that to its extreme degree, then it is something that we cannot agree to and that we cannot support any government in agreeing to. It may be possible that on account of the widespread territory covered by agriculture, by the lumbering, by the mining and by the fishing interests, that it is impossible to secure that concentration of pressure which we see exercised in the case of the manufacturing industries. But it will be well for the government to remember that it is there, and that so long as right is right, so long the public interest should be maintained against the demand of any special interest no matter how strongly that demand may be worded or how strongly it is backed up by pressure. It should be remembered that the manufacturing industry has the ear of the press of the country. The manufacturers are in a position to make their voice heard all over the country as the voice of the farmers cannot be heard. They are organized, as the farmers and fishermen are not, but it will be a mistake for this Liberal government to forget the principles upon which they have obtained power and upon which they have been supported in power by yielding in any degree to the demands made upon them by special industries for special protection. If Liberalism means anything, it means that general interests shall prevail against special interests; it means the masses against the classes, and we look to the present government to maintain Liberalism in this sense.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the House is loosing interest in the budget debate. When Mr. Blain spoke this afternoon I counted just fifteen members on the government side of the House, and when Mr. Oliver rose to speak there were only sixteen. It seems to me that all interest is being lost in the debate, and that an adjournment would perhaps be in order. However, I understand there are a number of gentlemen who wish to speak and I would like to say a few words myself on the question. It is quite possible that I may not throw much light upon the subject, and that I will have to differ from the hon. members who have spoken before me. However, they cannot blame me if I do not thoroughly agree with them.

In the first place, I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance on his excellent showing in his budget speech. I am sure every man in Canada will be pleased that the government though not instrumental in bringing about the present prosperity, have been at the head of affairs while the country has been progressing so favourably. His showing is certainly a much better one than that of last year. Last year several millions of dollars were added to the national debt, while this year it seems that about $13,000,000 will go to pay off the national debt. Now, Sir, I wish to say a few words from a non-partisan point of view, neither Grit nor Tory, neither Liberal nor Conservative, but from an independent farmer's standpoint. We will try to hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may. I have always held the opinion that trade between all nations and all classes of people should be as free as possible, and with as little restriction as possible. Nearly all nations resort to the system of tariff, or duties on goods to raise the revenue required to support the government and to meet the expenditure of the country. Adequate protection we have had pretty well defined by nearly every hon. gentleman who has spoken. I understand it to mean a higher protective duty than we have at the present time, and that all classes and conditions of the people of Canada are to have a share of protection measured out to them. Now, Sir, I am at a loss to know how my hon. friend the mover of that amendment is going to protect the farmer. That is what I am here to learn. A high protective duty on such commodities as the people require, gives a few individuals an opportunity to tax the community without giving anything in return either to the government or to help the consumer. For many years past 'Hansard' has been loaded down with this question. We have heard the same ideas and about the same language that has been used in this debate, and the country has profited but little from the discussion. Men invest their capital to manufacture such things as the people want, and then expect the government to allow them to tax the people at their sweet will.

Mr. COWAN. While the lamp holds out to burn.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity; he is aching for it. For one, I do not object to the government giving a measure of protection when we have the facilities for the production of the raw material in our country; and when our friends and neighbours are anxious to work that raw material into manufactured goods, I think they should have an opportunity to try to produce the things we require. Therefore I think the government would be justified in lending assistance to our infant industries.

Mr. COWAN. What particular industry is infant ?

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). You will have an opportunity, my friend.

Mr. COWAN. I know, but I would like to have your idea as to what industry is infantile ?

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). We want to put them well upon their feet, but after they are well upon their feet, they ought to be able to stand alone.

Mr. COWAN. Is eighteen years long enough ?

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin). That chap is not very well ; you had better give him a job down cellar. The farmers and the working people are willing to pay their fair share of the taxation of this country, but they are not anxious to make millionaires of a few at the expense of all the rest. Canadian manufacturers are able to take care of themselves, and I think I can show you that by bringing in the best evidence we have in this country. 'Industrial Canada,' in its April number says :

> Slowly but surely, a Canadian export trade is being built up. Though confronted by many obstacles, the men who are establishing a demand for Canadian goods in foreign markets are gradually making headway amongst the competition of the world. Steamship lines are being acquired by Canadians. Other lines are being subsidized by the Dominion government. Agents are prospecting in distant lands, and manufacturers at home are directing their attention towards foreign conquests. . . . .
>
> Many of our firms to-day are self-satisfied. Recent years have been so prosperous that the majority of our manufacturers have been kept busy with Canadian orders. . . . .
> We believe that a number of Canadian firms do not even take the trouble to answer inquiries from the foreign field. One instance which has recently come under our notice is that of a large firm in Birmingham whose representative was about to visit Canada, and previous to his departure addressed an inquiry to more than thirty Canadian firms asking them to address him at Toronto, advising him whether they were prepared to undertake export trade and to what extent. To these thirty inquiries only eight answers were received, the firms favoured with the opportunity not having shown even the courtesy of a reply. Such an attitude injures the whole prospect of Canadian trade and our firms would do well, even if they cannot undertake the execution of orders at the present time, to look ahead and retain always the confidence of foreign buyers.

That proves most conclusively that the manufacturers of all classes of goods have no reason to complain. It is useless to attempt to build up industries without natural advantages. We have the raw materials, we must have coal and electric power or water power, otherwise we cannot compete successfully in manufacturing with other nations who have these advantages. But if we have these advantages and cheap food and money, our Canadian industries should be able to hold their own, even if not protected against foreign producers. Our farmers and other classes of Canada are willing to assist our manufacturers, but are not willing to pamper and pet them for ever. We are referred to the high protective system of the United States, and I might say that one half of the discussion on the present budget has been taken up with what has occurred in the United States. It seems to me that we have enough to do at home and would do better to confine our own attention to our own business and leave the United States alone. But since the United States are pointed to as an argument in favour of protection let me point out that the protective system in that country has been the means of making many millionaires and some multi-millionaires, but has not made the average people of that country any better off than the same people in other countries. It has certainly not done anything for the farmers because they are poor men. In Canada we do not want any tyrants, we do not want any one-man power, but we want wealth distributed fairly among all classes and conditions of men. A very large minority of the American people are opposed to a high protective tariff, and were it not for the fact that the United States enjoy free trade among fifty commonwealths, comprising 84,000,000 people, their system of high protection would have exploded long ago. The manufacturers of the United States and Canada are selling their goods cheaper abroad than to their own people. Take the manufacturers of machinery, in which every farmer is interested. Some time ago a number of binders were smashed up in a railway accident, and the manufacturers sued the railway company for damages. During the hearing, the evidence showed that the cost price of these binders was less than $40, and yet the retail price to the farmers was $110. If our manufacturers are making such immense profits, I do not think it reasonable for our government to entertain any proposition to raise the duties. When discussing this question with a friend of mine some time ago, I told him that every machine I had on my farm was made in Canada, I said that there was sufficient loyalty about me to buy everything in Canada. Well, he replied, I do not see where the loyalty comes in. Had you bought that machine in the United States, you would have had to pay $20 into the revenue of this country. Which is the most loyal—the man who pays $20 to the government, or the man who pays $20 to the manufacturers ? I leave that nut for my hon. friends around me to crack. We sometimes lay the flattering unction to our souls that we are very loyal, but when we hear the other side we begin to doubt whether our patriotism will stand washing.

We have heard considerable about this German treaty, and I felt rather pleased when the hon. Minister of Finance told us that he was about to retaliate on these people who had tried to injure us by refusing to give us the benefit of the favoured-nation clause. But when I come to think the whole matter over, it begins to dawn on me that I might be in the position in which I used to be when younger. I have read a good deal of Scripture and have tried to live up to it. One Scriptural advice is that when struck on the right cheek, we should turn the left. I have lived up to that as much as I could, but whenever I turned my left cheek and was struck on that, then my hand was ready to strike the aggressor down if possible. That is just the way I felt about this German treaty. But when we begin to question whether there is not too much muscular force on the other side and that we might suffer in consequence, another aspect of the case presents itself. We have to think before we act. However, whether we have sufficient muscular force or not, it is worth our while to test it and teach the nations of the world that Canada dare say her soul is her own.

Another strong point made by the hon. Finance Minister was concerning the question of preferential trade. We held the whip hand over those Britishers, and if they would not give us preferential trade in grain we might at some time consider the advisability of abrogating the preferential clause in our tariff. What about us poor Canadians ? Ain't we in it ? I think we are. Take the case of a widow with a family of little children. She has to clothe them—that is as necessary in this country as feeding them. She goes to a merchant tailor for a suit for her five year old boy. The merchant understands the case. He shows two suits, both the same price, $5, and both fitting for the boy's wear. Here, says the merchant, is one suit, which was made in England. Here is another, at the same price, but it may not be quite so good a class of cloth. If you buy the English suit, you pay a dollar into the Dominion treasury—if you buy the other one, you pay the dollar just the same, but it goes into the manufacturer's pocket. There is patriotism again. The poor widow says : Surely, I don't have to pay a dollar into either. But the clothier answers : Madam, remember that if we had not the preferential trade that Mr. Fielding gave us, you would have to pay sixty cents more. Then it begins to dawn upon her that preferential trade is a good thing for her as a Canadian. I am not sure that I have made the case clear to some of the obtuse-minded gentlemen I see about me. Some fifteen years ago, I was in North Britain. I do not care to tell all the little incidents that have happened in my life; some of them might be against me. I was in Glasgow, and as my business was done for the day, I went with a friend to the extensive Coatbridge iron works. Every one who knows anything about that section knows of this great industry. It was wonderful to go through the works at night with the furnaces in full blast. The foreman was very kind—a canny Scot. He learned that I came from Canada, and that may have made him all the more courteous to me. Since that time, we have had the King's coronation, and more Canadians have been seen in Great Britain of late. But, at that time we were quite a novelty. The foreman said : You come from Canada ? What business brought you over? I told him that I had come with some cattle. Have you sold them ? Yes, sold them on Glasgow market. He said : I was reading in the papers this morning that the Canadian government has raised the duty on bar iron—the stuff that they were rolling out there in immense quantities—to $13 per ton. I said I was sorry for that, and if I had been in the Canadian parliament I would not have voted for that. That made him think I was somebody of importance, I suppose. He said : Now, my friend, you brought some cattle from Canada ; did you have to pay any duty to bring them here ? No, sir. You don't know how badly I felt to think that we placed a duty on the product on their industry, while they allowed my finished product to go into their country free. I told him I would do all I could to remedy that when I got back—and I have been a long time trying to do it. I would commend this illustration to those who are harping on the idea that Great Britain does not give us a preference. Why is she not giving us a preference all the time ? Has she a duty on anything coming from Canada except tobacco—and we don't have much of that to sell—and whisky ? It is true, they have the embargo on the cattle, but I believe that will be removed when we can show a clean bill of health.

Another thing that we have heard for the last twelve months is 'Canada for the Canadians.' It sounds splendid at first—you would think everybody would throw up his hat and hurrah for it. But when you examine it and think the matter over, you will find, as in the other case, there is nothing in it. Suppose that the British people who are our best customers, were to say that as we are crying Canada for Johnny Canuck, so they would cry Britain for John Bull, and were to turn their deer parks and pheasant preserves into grazing lands and raise their own stock. I tell you, to-morrow we would be begging those people to take our stock. What would be the value of our lands if we had not a market there for our cheese, beef, apples and all our surplus products ? It is our duty as Canadians to try to keep that British market open, and to see that no foe shuts us out from it. That is where we get our income from. That is the goose that lays the golden egg, and we must see to it that she is not killed. Do you think that when you sell your stock or your cheese to Great Britain, they are going to pay you gold. You need not expect it; Great Britain will not send gold either in bullion or in dust. She wants to sell you her products, and, if she cannot do it, she will buy stuff from the nations that will buy from her. You are handicapped if you do not trade with the nations that trade with you, because the law of trade is not goods for gold but goods for goods. It is our duty to trade with our best customers. Our country is progressing by leaps and bounds, and the government must move with it. It is the duty of the government to use every means in its power to help all those who are trying to help themselves. And they say that the best way to do that is to leave the farmers alone and not put a duty on what they need to buy and reduce their purchasing power. By helping the farmers you are helping every other class. So, be very careful what you do. Explore and exploit all our new domain where there is iron, pulpwood, nickel or anything else. Lend a helping hand to those who are willing to put money into these things. But do not pamper them for ever. Help them at the start, and they will soon be able to help themselves.

Now with regard to this steel rail question I feel somewhat like my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). These railway companies that are asking for subsidies from this government will need to double their request if you put a duty on steel rails. They will have to pay $7 a ton more duty. For myself, I am opposed to giving subsidies to railways. I believe the time has come when capitalists have got sufficient money to build their own railways. If we give them money, we should see that we have security, we should take first mortgage on the road, and have a voice in its management, and make it carry our mails and do our work for the money that we grant it. Now, Sir, it is a question to my mind, when we give them $7 duty and $6 in bounty, whether $13 a ton would not be too much to give for the purpose of starting a steel rail industry. However, if it is decided by the wisest men in this country that that would be the best plan, I am not going to object; let us try it for a while.

The next point I will touch upon is the question of binder twine, in which all the farmers are interested. That also is their raw material. It takes 45 cents worth of binder twine to bind an acre of good wheat, so that on every acre we have to spend 45 cents, whether we get anything back or not. Now it is the manufacturers of binder twine who are asking for protection, I understand. I was pleased when the duty was taken off binder twine, because I believed that our Canadian manufacturers were able to compete with the United States manufacturers. But if it is true, as has been stated, that the Americans get a rebate on their raw material, that there is a monopoly of manilla in that country, and that our people cannot get the sisal used in the manufacture of binder twine, then it will be a matter for consideration as to whether we should give them a duty or not. But, if we do, we must see that the duty is not so high as to prevent the Americans selling our farmers twine so that our manufacturers may not have a monopoly. The binder twine people are no better than others, and they will form a combination if they are able, and make the farmers pay higher prices. I do not believe in bonuses, but there are times, perhaps, when they are necessary. Now, Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for having spoken so long, though the apology may not be so much needed, because there are so few here. But those who are absent will be sorry in the morning that they were not here.

Mr. A. E. VROOMAN (South Victoria, Ontario). Of all the questions mentioned in the budget speech, perhaps the financial question is the most important to this country. All other questions treated in the budget speech are more or less affected by the financial position. When the revenues of the country are buoyant, when the treasury is overflowing, it gives an impulse to all the departments of the government, and the public machinery moves on easily. I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that when times are good, people are satisfied, and are disinclined to a change, in fact they like to leave things as they are. There is a disinclination for experiments. I think this government have taken full advantage of these conditions, and have decided to leave things pretty much as they were before. In fact, when we look around and ask ourselves what they have done, we cannot find an answer; especially are we puzzled to find out what they have done after having made such large expenditures. Perhaps, after all, judging from the little things they have done, it is better that they should have not attempted great things, because if they had, they would probably have injured the country. I was pleased to listen for the third time to the story the Finance Minister had to tell us about prosperity and good times. I was ready to make some allowance for the ring of exultation in his voice when he announced that wonderful surplus, the largest surplus we have ever had in the Dominion of Canada. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the Conservative surpluses, though not as large, were more creditable to the government under the circumstances in which they were gathered.

I have always thought, Mr. Speaker, that this government was in many respects very fortunate. They came into power contemporaneously with good times. That statement does not need any proof. If we look up the statistics of those days, we will find plenty of evidence to show that before they came into power good times had begun to revive. We all remember the times of depression from 1892 to 1896. The world over there was financial depression and stagnation. Under those circumstances, we were fortunate in having at the head of our financial affairs a very able man, who succeeded in conducting the ship of state through financial storms, while on the other side of the line, many monetary institutions tottered or went to the wall. In Canada our banks and corporate institutions all weathered the storm, with, I think, only one exception, a little bank up in the city of Winnipeg. But what was the course of the opposition in those days? The opposition thought it was a good time to make an onslaught on the government, they thought the time had come when they might possibly attain to power. They made various specious promises that I need not detail to this House They threw into the arena of public discussion, a very troublesome religious question, and owing to the discontent thus created, and the prevailing hard times, the Liberal party succeeded in attaining to power. But we have discovered, after looking back over the six years that they have been in power, that the Liberal party made a better opposition than they do a government. I do not say even then, very much for their opposition when they were on this side of the House. During their long occupation of seats on this side of the House they inculated to perfection the science of criticism and of faultfinding. They arrived at a perfection in that regard that we on this side of the House do not hope to emulate. But since they have been occupying the treasury benches, we have not discovered in them any evidence of constructive statesmanship. Now, while the Liberal party were in opposition, and especially during those hard times, they were wonderfully alarmed about the financial condition of the country, and in a resolution adopted at the Liberal convention in 1893, in this city, they expressed their alarm in this way. Mr. Speaker, you will indulge me if I recall a little ancient history. Perhaps the House has never heard of this resolution before:

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion, and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878; and we demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.

They really deserve our pity when we consider that during all these long years they lived in this constant state of alarm. As a practical professional man, I understand the wearing nature of that condition of the nervous system, that constant state of alarm. From 1893 to 1896 we had that party constantly affirming that position, and I will draw from ancient history the expressions of some of these hon. gentlemen. The present hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> I say that it is a disgrace and a shame to the government that have been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of $38,300,000 a year for federal purposes. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

The present Postmaster General (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) said in 1895:

> There is nothing to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38,000,000 except the fact that we are burdened down with debt and with office-holders, great and small.

I have not heard that these office holders have been dismissed, or if they have been dismissed, deserving followers have been put in their places. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said:

> The Liberal party, if in power, could at once reduce the public expenditure and effect other savings to the extent of five million dollars per annum, without impairing the efficiency of the service.

The right hon. the present leader of the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

> If we get into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie; and I say that, although we may not be able to bring the expenditures to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three millions of dollars per year.

Well, they came into power and in six years we find an annual expenditure of $64,000,000 which is just $20,000,000 more than the expenditure when they came into power. We find that in the last six years of their rule they spent $101,417,000 more than was spent during the last six years of Conservative rule. This is an immense amount of money. We have been told that there have been great public works undertaken in this country. The hon. Minister of Finance said the other day that they had provided liberally for public works. I have been trying to think what has been done in this country with this large expenditure what great public works have they built, and I am not able to settle on anything of importance that has been done. They have a public debt of $271,000,000 as against a debt of $258,000,000 when they came into office. They levied taxes last year to the amount of $43,389,000, whereas, when they came into office they found taxation to the amount of $27,759,000. During six years of rule by these hon. gentlemen we do not find that they have manifested any particular alarm. The alarm subsided when these gentlemen achieved power and we now find that they have passed into a state of quiescence and rest. We do not hear any expressions from these hon. gentlemen now about the unjustifiable expenditure of the government; in fact, I sometimes think that members of the opposition are very lax in applying the proper epithets to that kind of thing. I do not wish to burden the House with statistics, because, in this debate, we have had a good many statistics. But, I would like for my own purpose to refer to the taxation imposed upon the people of the country. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), gave us the particulars of the taxation for the last six years of the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite and for the last six years of the administration of the previous government and he was answered in that regard by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. If hon. gentlemen will look at the record of taxation from 1891 to 1896 they will find that taxation was not increased but that it was actually decreased. During the period from 1891 to 1896 there was a falling off in taxation, but from 1896 to 1902 we find taxation rapidly increasing. The present government found the taxation at $27,759,000 when they came into office, while in the last report, we find that the taxation imposed upon the people has been increased to $43,000,000. In the last six years the government have taken out of the people in taxation $44,600,000 more than the taxation imposed upon the people during the previous six years. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook to explain that away and this is the way that he did it. He said :

That is the hon. leader of the opposition—

Has paid no attention whatever to the difference between the real taxation inflicted on the people under a protective tariff, and the actual taxation inflicted on the people under a revenue tariff, even if it be a high one.

I have tried to understand what a revenue tariff was and what a protective tariff was, but I have never been right in my conclusion if the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is an authority upon the subject. We have the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) saying this in his speech :

The tariff of this country is practically the same that was adopted in 1897.

Now the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce further said :

The difference is this, that substantially the great bulk of the taxes go into the treasury under the present tariff, whereas under the administration which preceded ours an enormous percentage of the taxes which the people of Canada had to pay did not go into the treasury but went to swell the profits of private individuals. The people under our tariff have the satisfaction at any rate of knowing that what is taken out of them goes into the treasury, and can be used for the benefit of the whole people.

The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works said :

The revision of the tariff of 1897 has placed it about 2 per cent less high than it was before. We did not do more than that ; and when my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was this afternoon denouncing the former tariff, the tariff that I supported myself, when he was telling us that the tariff enacted in 1879 and kept on the statute-book up to 1897 had simply allowed the manufacturers to pocket the money of the people, I was saying to myself, if it was so, I do not know what it is now, because there is not much difference in the two tariffs ; the present tariff is about the same thing. We even raised the tariff in 1897 as against the United States on many articles.

It seemed to me when I heard that sort of argument coming from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that it was a very fallacious argument. I could not help but believe that the hon ex-Minister of Public Works was right in this matter and that, as is practically admitted by the government supporters, the tariff is the same as that which has been in force since 1879 with some few slight exceptions and the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works says that the government even raised the tariff against the United States in some particulars. What is the principal reason why taxation fell off in the last six years of Conservative rule ? Here is what the ex-Minister of Finace (Mr. Foster) said in 1891 :

In 1891 we remitted taxation on sugar—it came into effect the latter part of that year—to the extent of $227,477, and we had a surplus of $155,977. In 1892, the remission of sugar taxation, calculated on an equal consumption, was $5,200,000, and still we had a surplus of $1,354,555. In 1893, calculated on the consumption, the remission of taxation on raw sugar and other sugar amounted to $4,000,000, and we had a deficit of $1,210,232. In 1894, the remission of sugar taxation was $4,821,000, and we had a deficit of $4,153,875. And in 1895, after which we placed again the duty on raw sugar, the remission of total taxation was $5,603,521, and the deficit had come down to $330,551. What is the summing of the matter ? It is that in that period there was taxation remitted to the tune of $19,800,000, but there was a net deficit of $4,184,227. So that consequently there was given back to the country, in the remission of taxation, over and above the deficit which had to be provided out of capital, the sum of $15,000,000.

That is the reason there was no increase in the taxation. But with all the large surpluses that this government has had we do not find that they remit any taxes to the people. On the contrary, they continue to take money out of the pockets of the people, and to take all that they decently can. Last year the expenditure for all purposes was $63,970,000 against an expenditure of $44,000,000 in 1896, when the Conservatives were in power, or an increase of $19,874,000 under Liberal rule, and on the top of all that the national debt has been increased as well. It was unfair for the Finance Minister to compare eighteen years of Conservative rule as to expenditure with the six years of Liberal rule, because we all know that during the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power vast public works were undertaken and completed. I shall take the liberty of reading from the 'Monetary Times' an article on the budget speech of last year, which applies equally well to the conditions that prevail this year, and I assume that the 'Monetary Times' is not a party paper. It says:

The Finance Minister has been most fortunate in taking up his story at the beginning of a cycle of prosperity and expansion, which succeeded the world-wide depression of the previous five years, and drew to its close in 1895; and in having had five full and growing years for succeeding recitals. We may also say that he was fortunate in having had as his predecessors in the government, men who spent largely and builded wisely in preparing the ground, without which no such results as called forth his and our congratulations could have been possible.

The budget speech shows an almost dizzying progress to have been made in other respects than in trade, and throws into bold relief the striking change in faith and practice since 1896. Never in the history of Canada were such vast figures dealt with by a Finance Minister in point of revenue and expenditure. Receipts from taxes $38,743,000 in 1901, compared with $27,759,285 in 1896. Total revenues, which of course all come out of the people's pockets, $52,500,000, as against $36,600,000. Total expenditure $57,900,000, compared with $41,700,000, and a net public debt of $268,000,000, as compared with $258,000,000—mark the change in five years. For 1902 it is stated that the total to be gathered for the treasury will be $57,000,000, the total expenditure $65,000,000, and the addition to the debt will be $6,000,000.

This fairly takes away one's breath, the sums are so vast, and the increase so rapid. Yet it is not recorded that Sir Richard Cartwright either swooned or swore, or that any of the old advocates of economy and reduction did else than cheer the minister as he placidly made these announcements on the authority and with the sanction of a Liberal government. And yet, apart from the change of front indicated in the party, these figures challenge the serious attention of every thoughtful citizen. Granted that the country is prosperous, is it wise to set so rapid a pace, and raise to such a height the scale of expenditure, which once raised it will be found almost impossible to lower? It is well to remember that as the prices of staples rise—and there have been marked advances in price in many lines of recent years—the amount recived from customs taxation rises, for it is largely ad valorem. Then, when prices fall, the amount of customs revenue falls. In prosperous times, with a buoyant revenue, is it prudent to spend it all and add so many millions besides to a debt already too large? For $13 per head or $65 per family for one year's government is a tremendous charge. Giving all due force to the contention that we are a growing country, and must needs provide generously for the public service, this headlong rush forward in taxation and expenditure, seemingly unchecked by bit or bridle, invites reflection on the part of business men and thoughtful citizens. These piping times will not always continue, and the overdrain of to-day hastens the exhaustion of to-morrow. We cry a warning and a halt before the rush has become a rout in which moderation and prudence lose their meaning and their force. At this rate we know not where we shall end, for, though the minister hints at limits to the tide of prosperity, he apparently sets none to the volume of expenditure.

That article from this respectable journal speaks better than I can of the present financial condition of the country. We are well aware that in a new country like this, expenditure must increase and the people of Canada are perfectly willing to meet that increased expenditure, but there is a limit to everything. When our expenditure increases by leaps and bounds as it has done in the past few years, we naturally want to know what it is expended for, and when we come to inquire into the details we find that there is a wholesale waste of public money. Take the expenditure for the census as an example. We have had four censuses since confederation. The census of 1871 cost $511,000; the census of 1881, $552,000; the census of 1891, $549,000, an average for each of the three censuses taken by the Conservative government of $540,000. But in 1901, under a Liberal government, the census has cost $1,121,513, up to date. The Minister of Agriculture told us last year that the reason for this was because they asked so many more questions and elicited so much more information from the people. That may be true, for we all remember that the government issued a circular to their enumerators, instructing them that they were to get the ages of all the young men who were about to become twenty-one years old, and likely to support the government, so as to have them ready to put on the voters' list for the coming election. I asked the Minister of Agriculture what was the cost of taking the census in my own constituency, and that is a fair sample of what has occurred everywhere else. The fact of the matter is that they have uselessly spent double the money that the Conservatives did. The Minister of Agriculture told me that the population of my riding in 1891 was 20,455 and in 1901 it was 19,953, or about 500 less. But there were seventeen enumerators in 1891 and 39 enumerators in 1901. In 1891 the expense of taking the census in my riding was $1,253, and in 1901 it was $2,663. The Minister of Agriculture further told us that in 1891 the enumerators were allowed nothing for transportation but in 1901 they received $1.50 a day for horse hire. The cost of taking the census in that small riding in 1901 was just double what it was in 1891, and that increase can easily be explained when we find that every sorehead of the Liberal party and every party heeler in the constituency was appointed as an enumerator at the expense of the country, in order to get him back into the traces before the election. That is an illustration of where the money goes under this Liberal government. The fact is that this government, and to some extent they are justified in it, have not been disturbing the trend of things since they came into power. Times have been good and the revenue bouyant, and they have been allowing things to float along, as it were. But there is one thing which they have been very active about, and that is in looking after the party interests and placing their friends in good safe positions. As to the general interest of the country they are doing nothing. As a competent authority for that, I will quote from the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister, delivered at the Toronto Fair banquet on the 27th of August, 1901. He was replying to the toast of the parliament of Canada, and he said :

At the present time the government was in the happy position of having little to do. It had been said, 'Happy the man who has no history,' and it might with equal truth be asserted, 'Happy the nation that has no history.' He was in the peculiar position of a reformer who had nothing to reform. There had been a time when he had wanted to reform everything, but nowadays, added Sir Wilfrid, 'I find that I am very much of a Conservative.'

This, though somewhat of a confession, was part of the common history of mankind ; the young man is ardent for change and thinks the world is out of joint ; but as a man advances in life he feels as do the majority of men in parliament, that this is a good world to live in after all, and things run on very well if they are let alone.

So, Mr. Speaker, I had just occasion for saying what I did about this matter. The sentiments expressed there are quite praiseworthy ; I do not take any exception to them, though I doubt very much about his being a Conservative, and have they been lived up to ?

Now, looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns, we see that our total imports for home consumption last year amounted to $202,791,595, and our total exports to $211,640,286, which I take to include coin and bullion. As we analyse these figures, keeping in mind the preferential features of the tariff, they are somewhat interesting. We find that we imported from Great Britain $49,206,062 and from the United States $120,814,750. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) says these large imports from the United States are due to geography. I am ready to admit that geography has a good deal to do with them. We import a great deal from the United States that we would not perhaps import if the two countries were not in such close proximity ; but that fact does not account for the whole difference. We have this broad fact, that while a preference has been given to English goods in our market, we imported only $49,000,000 from Great Britain, while we imported $120,000,000 from the United States. We get a better idea when we consider the increases. Since 1898, the increase in the imports from England was $16,705,145, while the increase in the imports from the United States was $42,109,160. The history of the British preference must be a source of great humiliation to hon. members on the government side of the House. When that preference was granted to English goods in our market in 1898, we remember with what a blowing of horns and beating of drums it was ushered in. We could not hear the last of it ; it was one of the greatest triumphs of statesmanship. And I remember that when the Finance Minister was asked if he would dare to abolish it, his supporters cheered him to the echo, when he declined to answer the question directly, but simply said that there were some things which, when once granted to a nation, could not be taken back. Yet, in his budget speech of this year he intimates that the abolition of the preference is in contemplation. I take it that that is one of the results of the last colonial conference, because we have evidence that at that conference the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain did not show any great appreciation of the preference, and the members of our government who were there were probably put a little on their mettle, and almost threatened to take that preference away from England. Here is what the Finance Minister says in his budget :

But if, after further consideration, they come to the conclusion that our request is not a reasonable one. If, owing to their adherence to certain views they cannot grant us the preference, we shall be free to take our own course. Whether, in such a case it would be wise, in the interests of Canada, to modify or change the preferential tariff, would be a question to be considered. But, putting aside other considerations, if the British government and people do not show any appreciation of the value of the preference, then, so far as the British government and people are concerned, they cannot complain if we see fit to modify or change that preferential tariff.

He does not say positively that he will abolish the preference, but he intimates as much. The other night the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. John Charlton), who has been advancing the interests of reciprocity with the United States lately, said this about the preference :

I beg to differ with Mr. Chamberlain in this matter. This preference has had two effects.

Mr. Chamberlain had been saying that the preference was of no use to England. In fact, the imports of British goods into Canada under the preference had decreased in comparison with those under the general tariff. The hon. member for North Norfolk went on to say :

In the first place, it has arrested the decline in our trade with England, a decline which was making rapid progress when this preference was adopted. In the second place, it has led to an expansion of that trade, and a brief examination of the returns will prove this beyond peradventure, as the following figures of our imports from Great Britain will show.

And what figures do you suppose he quotes in support of his argument ? He begins with 1893 and he gives the figures for the ten years following, comparing these of the four or five years of great financial depression with the last five or six years, during which there has been the greatest boom, and he says :

These figures prove that the preference, or something else, arrested that decline, and that there set in an expansion, which amounted to $19,794,000 in five years.

Yet, curious to say, while the hon. gentleman gives the preference the credit for increasing our expansion of trade, he is willing to give it away to the Americans. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says the preference has been of no value to us. I am not ready to take either position. I think it would be a mistake to abolish the preference. Here is what 'Industrial Canada,' the official organ of the Manufacturer's Association, says on that point:

It has been alleged that the government contemplates the abolition of the preferential tariff in favour of Britain. It has been stated that the attitude of the Canadian representatives at the last colonial conference was intended to prepare the way for this. It is hardly credible that the government intend to do anything of the kind. Whatever may be said about the wisdom or unwisdom of granting the preference in the first place without any compensation, to withdraw it now would create a very unfavourable impression in Britain. It is true that the present tariff hits some of our manufacturers very hard and will injuriously affect many others when hard times come, but the way to remedy the evil is not to abolish the preferential tariff, but to so increase the general tariff that even with a British preference of 33⅓ per cent the minimum tariff will be high enough to safeguard Canadian interests.

That is what the organ of the Manufacturers' Association says about the withdrawal of the preference, and I think myself that the preference having been once given, it would be a very ungracious thing to withdraw it. Last year we exported to Great Britain $117,320,221 and to the United States, $71,197,684. Since 1898 the increase of exports to Great Britain has been $12,321,403, and to the United States, $25,492,348. You will remember that the government, when they introduced the preference, told us that they did not want a British preference in return. They claimed that we had it already. According to their view, our preference was a free gift to the mother country; and the people of England, when they saw our goods on their market, would be tumbling over each other to get them. Canadian goods would be bought in preference to any others. Yet we find that during this great boom in business our exports to England have only increased $12,000,000 while those to the United States have increase $25,000,000.

The point I wish to make is that we import from the United States $65,000,000 worth of manufactured goods which we could make in our own country. We have the raw material, the skill, the capital and the intelligence. Why then should we not make these goods at home? We took from the United States $54,000,000 worth of goods last year more than they took from us, and $71,000,000 more than we purchased from Great Britain. We are told by the hon. Minister of Finance that there is to be no revision of the tariff, with a few slight exceptions, but surely there is no reason why the great bulk of these manufactured goods which we import from the United States should not be made in this country. The hon. Finance Minister has decided to put a small protection of about three-eights of a cent per pound on binder twine to neutralize the effect of the rebate given the American manufacturers. Well, Mr. Speaker, that little item of three-eights of a cent on binder twine illustrates to me very clearly the timid way in which this government deals with great questions. They are afraid to do what is right. This question of binder twine is an important one. Last year we imported from the United States 15,000,000 pounds of that article which was charged, at invoice price, about ten cents per pound. We imported more than we manufactured, and I find by an answer given to a question put by an hon. member the other day, that the price quoted of the imported article is about the same as what is charged at home by our manufacturers. We might as well make all this binder twine in this country, and then keep at home the $1,700,000 which went out of this country last year for its purchase.

The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has resurrected an old question. In 1891 the party opposite went to the country on a policy of unrestriced reciprocity. It seems to me that after the last conference with the United States authorities, that question should have passed away into the limbo of the rejected and forgotten. But now the hon. member for North Norfolk is coquetting with it again, and it is said that this government intends going down to Washington and talking this matter over. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we recall a little bit of ancient history, we will see what some of those hon. gentlemen said about reciprocity a few years ago. Here is what was said by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce:

To say the least of it, enormous stores of raw material of great value to the United States are stored up in Canada, and it should be our pride and our work to get out our raw products as quickly as possible and send them down to be converted into manufactured products by the skilled labour of the United States.

Truly a wonderful policy. It should be our pride and work to become hewers of wood and drawers of water for our American friends. We were advised to use our labour and our skill in taking out the raw material and putting it into barges and railway trains and shipping it to the United States in order that our American neighbours might convert it into manufactured products and then sell these products to us. That was the policy of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce when in opposition. But what did he tell us the other day on this very question. He has another policy now. He said:

Sir, I will tell the hon. gentleman—he was replying to the leader of the opposition—what this government and the people of Canada have done in the past two years. They have shown the people of the United States, by the best of all lessons, that we can live without them, that we can grow in our trade and commerce in a much faster ratio than they, that we can successfully compete with them in the markets of the world.

Why, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is on this question twenty-five years behind. He is preaching the doctrine that we taught twenty-five years ago. He has only begun to realize now what he should have realized a quarter of a century ago. Here is something else which that hon. gentleman said :

One United States customer is worth to us in Canada, half a dozen customers of any other nationality.

Then we had the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) saying—

There is a market at our very door for 40,000,000 bushels of wheat. If we have free intercourse, Canada will be a market from which these states will draw the 10,000,000 barrels of flour they need per annum. They need every product our farmers have to sell.

And the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) said :

If my leader comes into power it would not be rash prediction to say that within six months of that day, by a scratch of the pen, a treaty of reciprocity would be put in force between the people of Canada and the United States.

There was an election in 1891, and hon. gentlemen opposite went to the country on a policy of unrestricted reciprocity, but the people turned them down. They do not seem, however, to have learned anything from the lesson, for we have the right hon. gentleman who leads that party saying :

And I say the only policy which would benefit this country is unrestricted reciprocity and continental freedom of trade. It is absurd to suppose that, situated as we are, the interests of Canada will always be identical with the interests of Great Britain. . . . . Some day must come when these interests will clash, and whatever the hon. gentleman may be, for my part whenever it comes to that, and however I may regret the necessity, I will stand by my native land. I, for one, when I made up my mind in favour of this policy of unrestricted reciprocity looked first and last to the interests of Canada and not to the interests of England. Let the British subject that sits in the British parliament look after the interests of England. I do not believe in the principles of the United Empire Trade League, for the reason that that scheme limits trade to allegiance. It proposes to make allegiance the basis of trade, whilst we desire to make trade interests alone the basis of trade. . . . . Our duty is to Canada and not to England. Just as the British government teaches this government that the first duty of the British government is to England and not to Canada, so I insist that in all these matters, it is for any self-governing colony to look to its own interests, first, last and always.

Just then we were not fighting for home rule. That was the attitude at that time of the party now in power, and to-day we have the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) the apostle of reciprocity, bringing up this argument again :

We should approach the United States. The time is near at hand when, in my opinion, we will certainly get great material concessions. I am quite optimistic about the mater. I believe that we will get concessions that will be entirely satisfactory, and so I am thoroughly convinced that it would not be prudent in our interest to enter upon a course such as we might enter upon, in all probability such as we would be justified in entering upon if no concessions were made.

For my part, I agree with the statement of the leader of the opposition, that we should legislate for ourselves and not wait for any proceeding on the part of the United States. That is the dignified position to take. We ought not to legislate here with one eye always on Washington. It would appear that the government are going down to try and court favour with the United States. This government, it seems, will never have done with that kind of thing. But a singular thing in the hon. member for North Norfolk's position is the illogical nature of his utterances. He says :

Our importation of natural products into the United States is so insignificant and will be so insignificant in comparison with the great bulk of the products for consumption produced in this country, that very little effect can be produced by it. Take for instance the article of eggs. Last year we exported 11,590,000 dozen of eggs and 237,000 dozen of these went to the United States. One hundred and thirty-nine millions and eighty-thousand eggs ; quite a lot of eggs. We could not increase that export 50 per cent if we were to try. How much would that amount to in the United States. Why, Mr. Speaker, it would amount to less than two eggs per annum for each inhabitant of the United States ; one omelette a year. That would have a very disastrous effect on American prices would it not. Why it never would be known ; never.

He says also :

If we should get to that point the Americans would ask : What would you give us in return? We will say : We will abstain from punishing you as you deserve, we will abstain from changing our tariff so as to complete the process of the strangulation of the import trade into our country. If you give us free trade in natural products we may possibly abolish the British preference, a thing which in my private opinion we ought to do, anyway, and which will be such a concession as you ought to get.

When the American authorities read that speech, if the hon. member for North Norfolk is one of the commissioners, what sort of a bargain are they likely to make ? Why do the Americans wish to deal with us ? Do they wish to buy our products ? That this is not the case is proved out of the mouth of the hon. member for North Norfolk himself. It is our market they are after, and there cannot be any question about that. The hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) says there is a growing feeling in the United States in favour of reciprocity. I believe there is. Not long ago, there was a convention at Detroit to discuss the subject, and some of our Canadians were there making speeches. But I have come to the conclusion it is our markets the Americans are after, and I agree with the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) when he says :

Reciprocity with the United States could not, in my humble opinion, benefit us in any way. We could not sell the Americans anything that they could not produce and if we open our gates to them they would flood us with their products.

That appeals to my judgment. I would be very careful about the kind of bargain made with the United States. If our commissioners go to Washington again, I am willing, as a representative of the people that they would make a bargain. But I am not willing that they should give away everything to the United States. What we want is a fair bargain. But we have it from the mouth of one of the commissioners that there is no intention on our part to give anything. In that case, the Americans must concede everything. That is the most absurd position that could be taken.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss briefly a question which has not been dealt with in this debate. Our discussion on this occasion has centered round the financial question and the trade question. These are very important subjects. But since I have been a member of this House, and for years before, the transportation question has received great attention from the members of this House, and from the people of the country. Long before I entered this House the matter had been discussed by the press and on the platform by the ministers and members of this House. And since I have had the honour to occupy a seat in this Chamber, I have listened to many instructive discussions on the subject and have received a great deal of information. But, hitherto, I have had nothing to say on the question. I have listened to the hon. ministers discussing this question. As on everything else, they have expressed a great variety of opinions, but they have done nothing. We are just where we were. In the session of 1900, the hon. member for East Simcoe formulated a resolution in this House like this :

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when a fixed and definite line of action should be undertaken on the question of the transportation of the grain and other commodities of the North-west Teritories, Manitoba and the Western States, with a view to centreing the same to the greatest possible extent in Canadian channels.

In the course of a learned discourse on this subject, the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) of that time, speaking for the government said :

We all agree with the principle enunciated in this motion that the time has arrived when some definite line of action should be taken on this subject.

So, it would appear that, four years ago, the time had arrived when some definite action should be taken. And yet, nothing has been done up to this hour. It seems that the government have arrived at the sage conclusion that they are hardly able to grapple with the question, and they are going to hand it over to an irresponsible body of men. This is only a convenient way of shouldering aside a question of great importance. While I give a great deal of credit to the ex-Minister of Public Works for the energy he has shown, the information he has acquired, and the schemes he has promulgated in connection with this question, yet, in watching his course, I could not come to the conclusion that his judgment should be followed. His mind was burdened with the idea of constructing canals. Without speaking at length, I wish to put myself on record on this subject. I have come to the conclusion—and I see that the Minister of Finance expresses himself in much the same way—that our system of canals is completed. I take it that the hon. gentleman does not agree with any of these expensive schemes of the ex-Minister of Public Works. So far as the St. Lawrence system of canals is concerned, including the Welland Canal, and all the others, that system is equipped as perfectly as possible, and whatever expenditure is necessary to equip that waterway and fit it to carry the trade that may come to it should be undertaken. I would spend money enough on the lower St. Lawrence to make it safe and to lower the rates of insurance. But as for the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay canal, building a canal from Lake Nipissing to French river and North Bay, I am opposed to that scheme, it is utopian. I do not believe in it. While the St. Lawrence canal system has the effect of keeping down the rates, I think it is altogether too late in the day to start an enterprise of that kind. We know that it takes an immense amount of money to build canals in the first place, and then they are frozen up half the year. Transport over them is slow, and the canals are closed much of the time when the products of the farm are seeking a market. Therefore, I would not advocate spending any money on canals. It has been proved in the United States that with a good roadbed and large locomotives, the railways will transport freight at about the price of canals. Therefore, I would object to any utopian scheme like the Georgian Bay canal.

It is true that we may need another transcontinental railway. But I am satisfied that if the Canadian Pacific Railway were well equipped with plenty of rolling stock and locomotives, its carrying capacity could be increased two or three times over, and we would not have these blockades that we have to-day. When blockades of freight take place I think the government should approach that great corporation and urge them to improve their equipment. Now this transportation question is to a great extent an agricultural question, because it is the agricultural products that have forced this question to the front. These products are increasing, and the farmers are becoming greatly interested in this question of transportation. But the farmer does not care very much how his goods get to market, whether they go through this route or that, so long as he gets them to market in good season, and gets good returns. A good deal of fault has been found with the Grand Trunk for making its terminus at Portland. We have the ex-Minister of Public Works declaring that there is no patriotism in money or business. He said he did not blame the Grand Trunk for making its terminus at Portland, because Portland was its natural port. The shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway have a right to expect the best possible dividends, and Portland being the natural port, the Grand Trunk carry a large quantity of grain to that port. It is the same with the farmer. He does not care which way his grain gets to the market so long as it gets there by the cheapest and safest route. His chief desire is to get his goods on the market in the best condition.

Another important question I wish to discuss is that of assisting the construction of railways by subsidies. Up to this time there has been an immense sum of money spent on the construction of railways. This country has spent $230,000,000 in money subsidies to railways, besides land grants and freedom from taxation. According to the last Statistical Year-book, we have now 18,140 miles of railway. The Dominion government has contributed toward their construction at the rate of $9,083 per mile; the provincial governments have contributed $1,771 per mile, and the municipalities have contributed $892 per mile. So our railways in Canada have been subsidized at the rate of $11,746 per mile. I think, Mr. Speaker, the day has arrived when this expenditure is becoming unnecessary. We certainly have reached a state of development when railway corporations should build their own roads. But as long as it remains the policy of this government to give subsidies, just so long will private enterprises refuse to put money into them. It seems inconsistent that we should talk about railway subsidies and freight blockades in the same breath. With freight waiting to be carried such as we hear about and we know to be the case, surely those ventures ought to pay. It ought to be considered a great concession to secure a charter to build a road in this country, and the government ought not to be asked to contribute. What is the history of railway building in the United States?

The people there have had to meet much the same conditions as those existing in Canada, and it is natural to inquire as to the policy they have pursued in reference to this question. So far as the United States government is concerned, it has never given a single cash bonus; all the aid it has ever given has been confined to assistance to transcontinental lines. The moneys advanced to them were secured by mortgage bonds which, with few exceptions, have been paid off, so that it has received back in interest and principal far more than the original amount advanced. In addition, the United States government has made large grants in public lands. The Western States, though, had a different policy, and gave so largely that several of them became practically bankrupt; but to-day no railway bonuses are given in the United States. In the Eastern States no bonuses in money or land were ever given. At the present time the railways constructed in Canada, with scarcely an exception, have been subsidized by the Dominion government to the extent of $3,200 per mile, but latterly the Dominion subsidy has been increased, so that if a road costs over $15,000 per mile it receives an additional subsidy of 50 per cent of the excess of the cost until the total Dominion subsidy reaches $6,400 per mile. The usual subsidy given by the provinces is $3,000 per mile, and is in addition to the Dominion subsidy.

The difference in the Canadian policy regarding railway construction and the United States policy, is well illustrated in the bridge built at or near the town of Cornwall, Ont. That part of the bridge lying in Canadian territory received subsidies from the Dominion and provincial governments to the extent of $125,000, and is practically free from taxes; while that part lying in American territory received no subsidy and contributes a substantial tax to the State of New York. The New York and Ottawa Railway was bonused on this side of the St. Lawrence, but received no bonus in the United States. Yet over the subsidized line in Ontario the fare is three cents per mile. And over its entire length on the other side the fare is two cents per mile. The passenger rate in New York is two cents per mile, and in the State of Michigan two cents. The Grand Trunk Railway has given a two-cent rate over all its lines in Michigan. If the subsidies that we give to railways had the effect of reducing rates, there might be a good deal to be said for them, for we would then receive back in the form of cheap rates at least a part of the outlay. But unfortunately the subsidies that we pay are not applied to any such purpose. They are realized on at once by those who receive them, and the road which is built is mortgaged and stocked to its limit.

Now, I would like to quote from a speech delivered by Mr. W. D. Gregory to the farmers of North York, as reported in the 'Farmers Sun':

Let me quote you some of the rates which prevailed last year between the Western States and the seaboard, and between Ontario points and the seaboard, and the prices which at the same time the Ontario farmer and the farmer in the United States received. In May last year the Grand Trunk Railway carried grain arriving by lake at the town of Midland, from Midland to Montreal for 4½ cents per bushel, including terminal charges. At the same time it charged 8 4-10 cents per bushel for carrying from Midland to Montreal grain raised in the county of Simcoe and loaded on the cars from the local elevators. In October last, the rate on grain from Duluth to Montreal via the Canada Atlantic Railroad was 8⅓ cents per hundredweight, and the rate from Fort William to Montreal via the Midland Railroad 10 cents per hundredweight.

At the same time the rate from Markdale, Ontario, to Montreal, was 16½ cents per hundred-weight, or almost double the rate charged for the carriage of grain from Duluth to Montreal over a road heavily subsidized by you. At the same time the rate from Buffalo to Liverpool via New York was 11¾ cents per hundredweight, and the rate from Toronto to Liverpool 17½ cents per hundred-weight. Is it, therefore, surprising to find that at this time No. 2 red winter wheat was selling at Chicago for 69½ cents per bushel, and at Milwaukee from 68 to 69 cents per bushel, while in Western Ontario the price was from 65 cents to 65½ cents per bushel, and at Toronto 66 cents per bushel, the latter price being the highest then paid in the province?

It has often been wondered why wheat sells at a little higher price at Chicago than at Toronto, but the freight rates do the whole thing. It is explained easily in that way:

Another aggravating feature of the situation from the farmers standpoint is the frequent difficulty of securing sufficient cars for the local shipments. We all know the Midland railway; yet at one time not very long ago local grain buyers had to wait for weeks before getting a car to ship the produce of Ontario, while train load after train load of cars loaded with American grain rolled by the local station on their way to the seaboard. A large portion of this American grain had been accepted by the railroad subject to the condition that it should be delivered at the seaboard at a certain time, and in order that it might be delivered, Canadian shippers were deprived of the cars they might otherwise have received. The scheme of diverting American grain to Canadian routes did not work to your advantage on that occasion.

In my opinion it is not in the interests of the country that we should subsidize railways any more unless for colonization purposes and then there should be a lien taken on the road. I just want to give the answer to a question asked by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) the other day which was given by the hon. Postmaster General. The hon. member for West Elgin asked:

Has the government made any efforts to induce any of the immigrants coming to Canada to settle in Ontario?

I think the hon. Postmaster General made rather a curt reply to that hon. gentleman, and I do not consider that he gave a proper reply at all. This is the answer that he gave:

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock). The government in promoting immigration into Canada leaves it to the immigrants themselves to select the places in the Dominion where they desire to settle.

These poor immigrants are in the hands of an agent. If the agent were instructed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture as to the necessities of Ontario it would be an easy matter for him to switch off a number of these people and direct them to locate in Ontario. I want to bring this matter to the attention of the hon. acting Minister of Agriculture, because the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not here. I regret he is not. I hope he may be at work where he is for the advantage of Canada. I understand he is cultivating very friendly relations with the Japanese. I am told that he is rapidly assuming the manner and even the appearance of these people and that he would be very easily mistaken for one of that nationality now. I hope the government will not risk losing permanently the services of that valuable minister. We have been spending half a million of dollars on immigration agents abroad, and we have coming into this country to-day an immense number of immigrants. It seems like the irony of fate that the government hardly know what to do with the immigrants now coming into this country when only a few years ago these hon. gentlemen were declaring that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not pay for the axle grease. I think under the circumstances that the money spent on agents in Europe might be brought home and used in providing accommodation for these immigrants here. I believe that the tide of immigration which has set in will continue and that the expenditure in foreign fields may be reduced, or that it may be brought to this country and used in looking after the comfort of these immigrants. I do not know that I would advocate the reduction of the expenditure, but there is no occasion for increasing it. The hon. Minister of Agriculture must know that this is an important question in the province of Ontario. It is becoming a matter of concern to the farmers in that province. The tenant farmers and labourers have gone to the west and a farmer cannot rent his farm, he cannot sell it and he cannot work it for want of labour. I have heard farmers in the province of Ontario make that statement again and again. They say: Are we to turn our farms into commons and allow the cattle to run over them? This condition is brought about by the fact that there is no labour to be had in the province of Ontario. I think it would be very easy for the immigration agents to divert some of the stream of immigration into the province of Ontario. We have had deputations of farmers from the province waiting upon the local government and asking them to do something. There has been a promise made, but, owing to fortuitous circumstances, the government at Toronto has not had time to do anything. This is a matter that I desire to impress upon the attention of the government. This is the condition of affairs in the province of Ontario and I want to bring it before the government in the interest of the farming community because I represent a farming constituency and I am a farmer myself. I think I am a practical farmer because I was born on the farm, and in fact, I have lived off the proceeds of the farm all my life.

Now, I want to say something for the benefit of the hon. Postmaster General. I do not want to discuss that vexed question of his surplus at all. It seems clear that the reports are all askew in regard to this matter. They will not agree. The Auditor General's Report says one thing, the Public Accounts say another thing and the Postmaster General's Report, which would be expected to put the most favourable light upon it says another thing. There is one thing that I want to call to the attention of the House and it is the inferior postal service that is given in the province of Ontario. I know men engaged in mail carrying who are not getting as much as they should; yet, the hon. Postmaster General is supposed to look after the wages that labouring men get. There is another point that I want the hon. Postmaster General to take a note of. If this were not going down in 'Hansard' I might as well be talking to a vacuum, or to vacancy, because——

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Hear, hear.

Mr. VROOMAN. I hope the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Ross) is enjoying himself. I did not know he so considered himself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Surely you would not call 'Hansard' a vacuum.

Mr. VROOMAN. In Ontario the question of free mail delivery has become a real live issue. The farmers are asking for the free delivery of mails at their own homes. When you come to investigate this question you will find that it is a very important one. We know that farm life in Ontario, as elsewhere, is a hard life. I have no doubt there are many farmers who are well to do, who make a considerable amount of money and who have a good time, but the average farmer is not in that position. He works hard and his life is a monotonous one, so much so, that the boys and the girls leave home. The farmer, when his sons leave home cannot get help and anything that will make farm life more comfortable and enjoyable is going to do a great deal to improve the condition of the farmer. What I want to see is the adoption of a system of free mail delivery that will bring the farmer in contact with the outside world every day, so that, the boys insteads of going down to the village to hear the latest dirty stories and other trash in the evening he will have some inducement to remain at home. I want every farmer in Ontario who can afford it to have a telephone. That telephone question is coming to the front and I was glad to hear it discussed the other day at the Railway Committee. If the farm home has the telephone in it, if the farm home has the daily paper in it, then, the boys, when they come in from their work will be perfectly willing to stay there and if we can get them these comforts and other modern facilities such as the electric car, I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree with me when I say that the attractiveness of home life on the farm will be much enhanced.

There is no use arraying class against class as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis) did. We are enjoying prosperity and peace and plenty in Canada to-day, and what we want to do is to make the home happy. This is an agricultural country above all and it is my opinion that the interests of the farmers are kept too much in the back ground. It is true that the tariff is an important question, but the Minister of Finance told us that he was going to take the tariff out of politics and it occurred to me that if his supporters didn't talk tariff in this House they would have not much else to talk about. I know something of the condition of the farmer in Ontario and I take it that in other provinces his condition is about the same. I blame the educational system in Ontario that many of our young men are leaving the rural districts and seeking the cities, in many cases to their great loss. They are told too much about the advantages of professional life, and the advantages of agricultural life are neglected and ignored. Let us spend more money on agricultural colleges and experimental farms and send our boys and girls there to learn scientific farming and modern methods so that they can make farming pay. Sir, it seems strange that there should be such a discrepancy in the reports concerning the Postmaster General's account—the Postmaster General's Report, the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report all differ on this matter. I believe, Sir, that in the minister's endeavour to secure a surplus the service in some of its branches is being starved—the letter carriers and the mail carriers are in many instances not half paid. These cases have come under my own observation, and when we are in the estimates I intend to draw the minister's attention to it—I think this is a satire on the Minister of Labour. But, Sir, I wish to say that the farmers of this country are expecting an expression of opinion from the Postmaster General on the question of free mail delivery. This is a question that is growing in favour, and the people, the agriculturists, will soon demand it as a right. I believe, Sir, that the day is near at hand when we shall see the farmer have the daily paper delivered, when the farm house shall have its telephone, and when the electric car will be within easy reach—then home life on the farm will be enjoyable, the boys and the girls will not be discontented and want to go to the city; it will tend to make farm life more attractive, a thing much needed to-day.

This government has been fortunate in many respects but there is one thing left for them to be fortunate in and that is that the people of Canada should turn them out of power before the bad times set in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

WOODMEN OF THE WORLD.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 31) respecting the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World.—Mr. Calvert.

On section 3,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the attention of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has been directed to the wording of this clause. I thought possibly he might have some criticism to make as to whether it was justified or not. I observe it permits the order to invest in the bonds of any company incorporated in Canada whose bonds are adequately secured by mortgage to trustees.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. Minister of Finance is not here just now, but I have no doubt the clause has been considered in committee and that he is satisfied with it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I imagine he is satisfied.

Bill reported; read the third time and passed.

QUESTIONS.

TORONTO LABOUR COUNCIL.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. Has any protest been received by the government, and if so, on what date, from the Toronto District Labour Council, respecting the following cablegram, which apeared in the Toronto 'Telegram' of Wednesday, 8th of April:—

'NO MECHANICS AVAILABLE.

'(Special cable to the 'Evening Telegram.')

'London, April 8th.—In an interview given to a representative of the 'Pall Mall Gazette,' Mr. W. T. R. Preston, the Canadian emigration agent, stated that mechanics were simply unobtainable in Toronto, owing to the great demand for skilled labour in that country.'

2. Has any reply been sent to the protest received from the above council; and if so, when was it sent, and what was the nature of the reply?

3. Have any instructions been sent to Mr. W. T. R. Preston respecting the protest of the above council; and if so, what is the nature of the instructions?

4. Have any protests been received from labour organizations, other than the Toronto District Labour Council, respecting the statements alleged to have been made by Mr. W. T. R. Preston, in the interview above quoted ; and if so, from what labour organization ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. On the 23rd instant a communication was received from the secretary of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada on behalf of the Toronto District Labour Council, with reference to a telegraphic despatch in the Toronto 'Evening Telegram' of the 9th instant, with reference to an alleged interview of Mr. W. T. R. Preston, with the representative of the 'Pall Mall Gazette,' wherein Mr. Preston is alleged to have made the statement in question and requesting that inquiry be made as to whether Mr. Preston has been accurately reported.

2. The communication was acknowledged on the 25th instant, and Mr. Preston has also been communicated with as to whether he has been correctly reported.

3. Instructions have been sent to immigration agents to confine their efforts towards promoting the immigration of agricultural classes.

4. A communication on the subject has also been received from the Federated Trades Council of Toronto and vicinity.

IMMIGRANTS FOR THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. EMMERSON asked :

1. Are any efforts being made by the immigration officers of the Dominion in Great Britain and Ireland to secure immigrants to settle in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island ?

2. Have any efforts been made to induce any of the immigrants who have recently reached our maritime ports, to settle in either of the said provinces ?

3. If any efforts have been made, or are being made, to secure such immigrants for the maritime provinces, or either of them, what is the nature thereof ? What means are exercised, and what methods adopted ?

4. Are any pamphlets descriptive of such provinces, or either of them being circulated, and to what extent ? What particular pamphlets are being circulated ; and by whom were they respectively prepared ?

5. Have any immigrants, as a result of any such efforts (if any), settled in any of the said maritime provinces ; and what number in each of said provinces ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The work of the immigration officers is directed to securing immigrants for the Dominion, leaving it to settlers to select the parts of the country where they desire to locate. Immigration literature, in describing the Dominion, incidentally refers to the various provinces. During the calendar year 1902, 3,161 immigrants arriving at a Canadian port declared their intention of settling in the maritime provinces, and 1,879 have done so for the first quarter of 1903.

COST OF DREDGES.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

What was the cost of the following dredges when built new :—'St. Lawrence,' 'Prince Edward,' 'Nipissing,' 'Canada,' 'Sir Richard,'? What number of yards capacity for each lift has the dipper attached to each dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

The 'St. Lawrence,' cost $114,911.23, has 33 buckets of 8 cubic feet on ladder.

The 'Prince Edward,' acquired from the Prince Edward Island Government at the time that province entered confederation, on payment of $22,000 ; capacity of bucket, 1½ cubic years. Original cost, $23,582.

The 'Nipissing,' cost $15,501.57, including two scows ; capacity of bucket, 2¾ cubic yards.

The 'Canada,' cost $41,300.19, has 24 buckets of 5 cubic feet on ladder.

The 'Sir Richard,' cost of hull and installation, $12,934.74. Her machinery is that formerly used on old dredge No. 7 ; and, as altered, it is valued at $3,000, making the total value of this dredge $15,934.74.

PUGWASH, N.S., LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. Who is lighthouse keeper at Pugwash, N.S.?

2. Is he allowed to engage in any business ?

3. If so, what is that business, and why is he allowed to absent himself from his post ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. Murdock A. McLeod.

2. Yes.

3. The business of a stevedore in Pugwash harbour. At some stations where keepers are not paid sufficient salary to entitle the government to the whole of their time, they are allowed to engage in such private occupations as will not interfere with a proper performance of their work as lightkeepers. Mr. McLeod receives only $250 per annum, and has, therefore, been permitted to supplement his salary by work as a stevedore in Pugwash harbour. This permission was given with the proviso that it should not interfere with his personal discharge of duties as lightkeeper at night, and that when he is absent during the day he leaves some responsible person in charge of the station.

SPRINGHILL, N.S., ARMOURIES.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. Who is caretaker of the regimental armouries at Springhill, N.S.?

2. What is the age of the caretaker ?

3. Did Major Potter, of Springhill, resign his commission in the 93rd Regiment ?

4. If so, what action has been taken on his resignation ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden):

1. Joseph Wylie Potter.
2. Not known.
3. He tendered his resignation.
4. It was not accepted.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. What are rates over Intercolonial Railway for live stock, coal, lumber and for classification 1-10, between Stellarton and West River ; and between Stellarton and Antigonish ; and between Stellarton and Pictou Landing, at present ?
2. What were rates for same classes between same points in 1897 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair): The answer to the hon. gentleman's question would require quite an array of figures, and if he will kindly move for a return, I will furnish him with the information forthwith.

CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM—SALE OF BUTTER.

Mr. MONK—by Hon. Mr. Haggart—asked :

1. What is the total amount obtained from the sale of butter at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, during the past year ?
2. Is any portion of said butter disposed of gratuitously ?
3. If such gratuitous distribution is made, in favour of whom is it so made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. The total amount obtained from the sale of butter at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, during the year ending June 30th, 1902, was $703.80. The total quantity of butter produced during that period was 3,646 pounds. The above sum is the proceeds of the sale of 3,284½ pounds. Of the remaining 361½ pounds, a part was on hand on the 30th of June, 1902, and the proceeds of the balance sold during that month were not received in time to be included in the returns for said fiscal year.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend that the advisers of His Excellency believe that we have a sufficient number of public holidays in this country, and therefore it is not their intention to add another one to the list.

RIVER NAVIGATION IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Has the following report of a committee of the Winnipeg Board of Trade been submitted to the honourable the Minister of Public Works ?

'Winnipeg, 18th March, 1903.

'The President and Council,

'Winnipeg Board of Trade.

'Your committee appointed to report on the Assiniboine river as a navigable stream, beg to report as follows :—

'1st. That all the bridges now existing on the Red and Assiniboine rivers, east of Portage la Prairie, have been constructed with swing spans.

'2nd. That the population along the banks of the Assiniboine is becoming dense enough to provide traffic on the river.

'3rd. That with the completion of the St. Andrews locks and dam, it is believed that an impetus will be given to river traffic.

'4th. That the extra cost of providing for a swing span is inconsiderable.

'5th. Therefore, the committee recommend that the board should use every means to have the Assiniboine and Red rivers retained and held as navigable streams ; and to that end, that representations be made to the Minister of Public Works.

'All of which is respectfully submitted.

'ANDREW STRANG,
Chairman.

2. Will the minister refuse to authorize the construction of any permanent bridges on the Red and Assiniboine rivers, unless such bridges are provided with swing spans ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes—on the 7th April instant.

2. It is the intention of the department to preserve the navigability of this river.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). Mr. Speaker, the splendid financial showing of the budget speech, on which the hon. Minister of Finance and the government received such well deserved congratulations, was received on this side of the House with unqualified approbation; and indeed it seems to have been received also with approbation on the other side of the House, because our hon. friends opposite are, like ourselves, Canadians, and could not but for the moment forget their party feelings in the pleasure and satisfaction which they felt at the splendid showing of the hon. Minister of Finance on this occasion. In this respect they gave an apt illustration of that sentiment so well expressed by a Canadian poet—the 'love of country soaring far above dull party strife.' But there is something more important than the spirit in which the budget was received in the House and that is the way in which it was received by the people of Canada at large. And if one can gather from the sentiment expressed by that exponent of public opinion in Canada, the public press, the facts set out in the budget speech have been greeted with approval from one end of Canada to the other and have aroused the greatest possible satisfaction—a satisfaction which will no doubt find vent in new trade activity among our people.

Before addressing myself particularly to the matter in hand, I desire to offer a word or two of sympathy to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). Three years ago he was elected to the honourable and responsible position which he now holds, and shortly afterwards the debate on the budget was announced. At once my hon. friend began to look around among his followers to find one best capable of filling the role of financial critic. His eye fell on an hon. gentleman who enjoyed a great reputation as a financier, and who was naturally expected, when he entered the House, to become an able financial critic. That hon. gentleman essayed to follow the hon. Finance Minister in his first budget speech of this parliamentary term. Did he come up to the expectations formed of him by his leader at that time and the party opposite ? Did he answer the requirement of a financial critic, in the opinion of his friends on the other side ? Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the fact that since that time that hon. gentleman has not been asked to repeat the performance is abundant evidence that he did not. In the year following, 1902, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition again looked around among his followers for some one competent to take up the mantle dropped by Hon. Mr. Foster when he left this House. It was rumoured that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) had been qualifying for the position. And so eager was his desire to lead the attack, that he sprang to his feet no less than sixty times during one afternoon and evening of the first session of this parliament. It was also reported that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was girding up his loins for the same work. And evidently there was no lack of foundation for that report, because our hon. friend from East Grey went the hon. member for Bothwell one better by rising to his feet about ninety times on another afternoon and evening of the same session. Then came the session of 1902, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition found himself compelled to take up the task himself because he was unable to find any hon. gentleman behind him to whom he could safely trust it. I am bound to say that the hon. gentleman acquitted himself very well, but how he relished the duty we can judge by what happened between the session of 1902 and the present one. Between 1902 and 1903, a chorus arose from the Conservative leader, members, party and press, the burden of the song being a request to the hon. Mr. Foster to consent to be returned to the House. Hon. Mr. Foster did not turn a deaf ear to their pleadings and consented to present himself as a candidate in North Ontario. But North Ontario was obdurate, and instead of answering the prayer of the Conservative party to elect its financial critic, answered the prayer of the Liberals by returning Mr. Grant to this House. Again the leader of the opposition was compelled to search among his followers for a financial critic, but despite his most vigilant search, he was unable to find one. It really seems to me that out of sympathy for their leader, who has so many other duties to discharge, some hon. gentleman on that side should qualify for the position and relieve his leader from this one which usually devolves on the first lieutenant of the party in opposition.

In reply to the budget speech this session, the hon. leader of the opposition made some very sweeping statements. On page 1479 of 'Hansard' he is reported to have used these words :

> I think we all pretty well know what was done; goods coming to us from the mother country had the duty increased upon them in 1897, and then the merchants of the mother country were presented with a preference which left the rate of duty practically the same as that which is paid on the imports from the United States, even if you take into consideration dutiable goods alone.

I submit that is not in accord with the facts. I submit that, as a general proposition, it is entirely inaccurate; and if it be, then I think it is pernicious, coming as it does from so prominent a member of this House as it will tend to lower the good opinion the British people will have in reference to integrity, good faith and reliability. It may be true and it is that the tariff was slightly raised on a few articles of cotton, and some of wool, but with the 33⅓ per cent off the rates of duty on even these are substantially reduced under the preferential tariff to what they were under the tariff prior to 1897. I submit that there is not an hon. member opposite who can point to a single item of the tariff which under the preferential rate is equal to or higher than it was under the former tariff.

While I am anxious to give every credit to the hon. leader of the opposition for frank and honest criticism, it seems to me that he was far from displaying these qualities in the language I am about to quote. He said, as reported on page 1475 of 'Hansard' :

> Is there not some attraction to a certain class of people in this country when a surplus of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 is announced ? There are people in this country as well as in every other, whose chief concern about the public revenue is to appropriate some of it to their own use under the guise of a parliamentary vote.

That is a statement which, I submit, is not creditable to the hon. gentleman. He could not have ignored the fact that the hon. Minister of Finance had stated explicitly that the surplus was to be applied not in improperly assisting party friends but in a manner most gratifying to the people of this country, namely, to the reduction of the public debt. Not only is the public debt to be reduced, but it is to be reduced by about $6,000,000, which makes this the best financial record in the history of Canada. Hon. members opposite invariably, when dealing with the question of surpluses, refer back to statements made in other times and under other conditions by leaders of the Liberal party. But the people of this country are not so much concerned with what the certain members of the government may have said ten or fifteen years ago, as with what they are doing in the present day. What particularly interests the people is the manner in which the business of the country is being carried on. I do not agree with those who blame the government when they have a surplus, who find in a surplus nothing but an occasion for adverse criticism. In my opinion, there are several ways in which a surplus may be a matter of usefulness. When there is a large surplus, as at present, it can be used to reduce the public debt. That is what the hon. Finance Minister has told us he intends doing. In the next place, the fact that we have a large surplus of itself attracts the attention of other countries to Canada and gives Canada a higher position in the world at large. Then there is another advantage arising from a large surplus, and that is the effect it has in stimulating trade and commercial activity, opening up every avenue for progress and expansion. The knowledge that our public finances are in such a condition that we have a surplus of $13,000,000 inspires public confidence.

The leader of the opposition seems to be very much concerned about the fact that we are buying so much more from the United States than we sell to them. That is something we would all prefer to see a little different. But, if he sympathizes with us in that respect, he must sympathize with the efforts of Mr. Chamberlain to sell more British goods to Canada. But he seems frequently to give forth this idea—that we should deal with our brethern in Great Britain practically as he says the United States deal with us; we should seek to keep them out of our market. This, I suppose, is another sample of the Conservative patriotism we hear so much about. The policy of the Liberal government is to admit the British goods under a tariff which admits of reasonable competition, while that of the Conservatives seems to be to leave to our British brethern only such small crumbs and pickings as they can gather under a high protective tariff. A good deal is said by the Conservatives about the preference and about the probability of our getting a preference in return. This matter has been somewhat changed, perhaps, even since this debate began. But Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. Foster and the present leader of the opposition seem to have moulded their policy on the belief that a small preference should be given to Great Britain for which we should get a small preference in return. But we know that it has been declared clearly that no small preference will be considered as of importance by the British statesmen. Mr. Chamberlain and others have said so, and have even gone to the extent of saying that a preference of 33⅓ per cent was not of much value. So, whatever chance the Liberal party, with the preference now afforded, may have had to get a preference in return, the Conservative party, with its declaration that the preference is too high and should be lowered, have no chance whatever.

Beyond this, I desire to consider, for a moment or two whether or not the preference has been of any considerable benefit to our British brethren. One would think at the outset that the matter was scarcely worth discussing. It would seem quite obvious that an advantage of 33⅓ per cent would be a wonderful advantage to such merchants and manufacturers as those of Great Britain. But hon. gentlemen opposite criticise it, and even our friends across the water criticise it as of very little importance. It strikes me that if representatives of British and American manufacturers were to come to Ottawa and seek to sell to one of the merchants here the same class of goods, the merchant realizing, as he must and does, that, buying goods from Great Britain under the preferential tariff, he will be charged 33⅓ per cent less duties on bringing them from Britain than from the United States and this will be a great inducement to buy from the British manufacturer, as it will be such an aid to him in selling to the Canadian purchaser. It has been said that this preference is of no consequence, but we see cases in which it must have been and has been of a great deal of consequence. It would have been of more consequence if our British brethren had realized its possibilities and seized upon it as they ought to have done. But in this, as in other matters, they seem not to have the necessary knowledge of the conditions in this country, and so they are handicapped as compared with the manufacturers of the United States. Now, I do not know where the position is put so well as it is in the colonial conference blue-book 1902, in a memorandum prepared by our own commissioners in answer to the memorandum prepared by the representatives of the British Board of Trade. At page 121 of this book, our commissioner deals with a couple of the conclusions in the British memorandum. Section 13 of that memorandum is quoted as follows:

> We should not expect to find any material effect exerted by the preferential tariff in the case of heavy and bulky goods in which freight bears a high proportion of total value, and it is precisely in these classes of goods in which the main increase of Canadian imports has recently taken place. It is also in these classes of goods e.g., coal, grain, raw cotton, timber, iron and steel, and heavy manufactures thereof, such as bridges, girders, rails, engines, &c., that the United States, by geographical contiguity as well as wealth of natural resources is to a large extent beyond reach of any competition from the United Kingdom in the Canadian market even if aided by a greater preference than that now accorded.

Then they quote also from section 14 in the British memorandum :

The articles stated are :—Metals and manufactures thereof, coal and coke, grain and breadstuffs, meat, dairy produce, and fruit, wood and manufactures thereof, raw cotton.

Having quoted these, the Canadian commissioners then deal with and criticise these statements in the following practical and forcible way. At the same page :

If we eliminate the dutiable imports of such articles in which it is admitted that Great Britain cannot compete in the Canadian market even if aided by a much greater preference than that now accorded, and compare the progress of trade in the balance of dutiable imports, it will be found that the preference has been of substantial advantage to Great Britain.

Then they proceed to give this statement :

THE following statement shows the net dutiable importations for consumption after deducting these articles.

Then, at the end of page 121 and the top of page 122, they summarize in this way :

These figures are instructive.

Briefly stated they show, first, that between 1893 and 1897, the imports from Great Britain declined by 33 per cent as compared with an increase of 22 per cent from the United States, and an increase of 81 per cent from other countries. But a change took place during the following four-year period when the preference was in operation. During that time British imports increased 59 per cent, United States 49 per cent, and other countries 29 per cent. The increase in the total from all countries was at the rate of 47 per cent.

Then they summarized the whole thing on another page, 125, in the following words :

It might be remarked here that if any doubt exists in Britain as to the substantial nature of the preference granted by Canada in favour of British goods, certainly none exists in the United States. The manufacturers there have found it necessary to reduce their prices to Canada to offset the preference.

To conclude and to summarize it is respectfully submitted :—

1. That the preference is a substantial and genuine one.

2. That it gives British merchants a material advantage over foreign competitors in the foreign markets.

3. That the preferential rates are not too high to shut out reasonable competition with the Canadian producer.

4. That the preference has resulted, not only in arresting a continuous decline in British trade but in stimulating the trade. If it had not been granted it is not very likely that the volume of British imports into Canada would be as large as it is to-day, to say the least.

5. That the advantage given by Canada to the British manufacturer is proved beyond all question. If he has not fully availed himself of it that is not the fault of the Canadian government, or of the Canadian fiscal policy.

Surprise is sometimes expressed at the trade we are doing with the United States, but there are reasons why that is not unnatural. We are lying alongside that immense country for thousands of miles, and the nearness of the Americans to Canada enables them to become vastly better acquainted with the people of Canada than are the British people across the water. One of the things that we complain of from time to time is the fact that the British people do not seem to acquire, as quickly as the Americans, a knowledge of Canada and of Canadian wants and interests, and as a result they are not able to compete with the Americans in our market. It appears from the statistics quoted in this blue-book beyond doubt that if Mr. Chamberlain, before making his speech, had had before him the facts and figures which were set out in that memorandum of our Canadian commissioners, he never would have said what he did about the preference, and certainly he would never have attempted to belittle it. The preference which we have given Britain over the United States is a real and true preference, it is a preference which the condition of things between Britain and the United States on the one hand, and Canada on the other, makes perhaps not as effective as we would like it to be, but makes it one which helps the British manufacturers and minimizes the consequences of the fact that the United States manufacturer is closer to the Canadian market than the British manufacturer.

Now the leader of the opposition has made, in a moment of candour, a significant statement, as a former leader of the Conservative party made once in a moment of weakness. On page 1471, the leader of the opposition, speaking of the large expenditure made by this government, said this :

> I do not pretend for a moment that these increases are all unjustifiable. On the contrary, I regard some of them at least as entirely justifiable ; indeed, I should be glad to see the increase larger in some cases.

Now the criticism of the leader of the opposition amounts to this : The expenditures are very large, and I criticise them on that ground ; but I cannot and do not point out a single instance in which they are too large. I would point that out if I could, but I cannot. Indeed, if I were Finance Minister, there are some cases were I would make expenditures larger. I do not think a criticism of that sort will appeal very strongly to the people of this country. He is the watchdog on the opposition side to whom the public is looking to see that the government does not make an extravagant expenditure ; and when the people of Canada are looking to him, all they can find is the statement that although the expenditures are large, he does not know in what respect he would reduce them ; that while the expenditures are large, in some respects he would make them larger. I think the people will see in that statement one more testimony to the efficient and business-like administration which this government is giving to the country, one more testimony to the fact that the opposition cannot complain of the existing condition of things.

Another ground of complaint that we hear from across the floor during the progress of this debate, is that the government is taking too large a revenue from the people. But the obvious answer to that is that if hon. gentlemen opposite had their way, if they were able to introduce the higher protective tariff which they had in vogue prior to 1897, millions of dollars more would be taken out of the pockets of the people, that is to say, millions of dollars more in revenue would be collected, of course assuming that the same amount of imports would have come into the country under the late tariff as under the present tariff, which is very questionable. Again, there is a consideration arising out of this budget debate which strikes us as peculiar on this side of the House, and must strike the country in the same way, and that is the question as to what is the real tariff policy which hon. gentlemen opposite would introduce if they had an opportunity of doing so. We hear a great deal of general talk from the other side, but we never hear an exact definition of the tariff policy which they would bring down to the House, stated in such precise terms as that we could discuss it and see in what respect it differs from ours. It seems to me that the present government, when they created this tariff, were guided by a principle of moderation that must always be followed in conducting the affairs of this country. Very recently a book was published in this country which gave the following estimate of the character of the leader of this government :

> Moderation is the keynote of his career, and the secret of all his achievements.

It seems to me that this characteristic, along with the splendid abilities which have made the present Prime Minister so successful in his administration, also belonged to another great Canadian, perhaps the greatest public man that Ontario has yet produced, Sir Oliver Mowat, who has recently died, and is now being mourned by all true Canadians, moderation was the great characteristic of his magnificent life, and was the secret of his wonderful success. This same moderation is required in the government of this Dominion, in view of the varying conditions of the people, and of its varying industries and material wants, and no fiscal policy can be successful in this Dominion which is not based on the principle of moderation, and which does not have as its keynote the intelligent compromise which characterized the tariff policy introduced in 1897. Rightly or wrongly, the public have thought that the Conservative policy was one of high protection for a few interests, and that any measure of protection which might be given to the great farming interests would be merely incidental. That seems to have been the impression which the people of Canada have got.

Now we have five great sources of national income upon which we do our national housekeeping. Some of our industries, particularly manufacturers, it is generally admitted require some protection ; but the real question is how far can we go in protecting manufactures and at the same time deal fairly with the other great interests that require consideration at our hands. I believe that the true policy was inaugurated in 1897 by the present government. We can judge by results as to whether that tariff was a good one for the manufacturing interests or not, and under that tariff the manufacturing interests of this country seem to have progressed and prospered in a remarkable degree. I am one of those who believe that when the time comes to revise this tariff, we can safely leave the work to the government that has dealt so successfully with the various large public interests in the past, feeling assured that no interest, manufacturing or otherwise, will be sacrificed or jeopardized by them.

I believe heartily in the care of the manufacturing industries of this country, because wherever large manufacturing concerns arise success and prosperity follow in their train. The very construction of a large manufacturing building gives employment to various sorts of artisans. The moment a manufactory is started wages are paid out with which to rent homes or build homes, money is distributed amongst the merchants in the various parts of Canada, and in one way or another all along the line a great manufacturing establishment is a very useful thing for the people in any locality in the country. But while that is so, the interest of the agricultural class is a matter of equally great concern as that of the manufacturing class of the country. If we make the farms of Canada attractive, if we seek to do what we can for the farming interests, if we encourage men to go upon the farm and stay there, if we take care of the immense numbers of people who are coming into Canada to take up lands, we are going to help create that great home market which we all appreciate and which our manufacturers are particularly anxious to have, and to my mind the best thing we can do, not merely in the interest of the farmers themselves, but in the interest of the manufacturers as well, and in the interest of every other class of the community, is to do all we can to aid and assist the farmers. This government has been seeking to do that in various ways, by assistance in transportation facilities, by assistance in the way of providing cold storage facilities, by diffusing information and the results of experiments among the farmers, and thus making them, I believe, more intelligent than their competitors in other countries. This work has been aiding and assisting the agricultural classes very much, and in the railway commission which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) proposes to pass this session we will have railway rates attempted to be remedied, we will have the cattle-guard question dealt with, we will have drainage across railway property provided for, and in these ways the agricultural classes will be still further benefited. On the other hand, in the revision of railway rates, in the power taken by the government of reducing duties on raw material, in the increase of the home market that the government is concerning itself about—in all these respects the manufacturer will be benefited as well.

Now, one would think at times, although that story seems to be getting a little weaker, that, in the opinion of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, under the existing tariff, manufacturers could not exist or prosper, and that new manufactories could not be started. Is that true? Do the facts warrant any such view as that? Is it not the fact that the existing manufactories of the country are for the most part, and as a general thing, very successful and prosperous at this time? I think that I can appeal confidently to almost every hon. member when I ask him to look upon the manufactories in his own immediate locality to bear testimony to the fact that in the main the manufacturers are prosperous. The introduction of large manufacturing concerns into this country proves that under the present tariff business men are not afraid to invest their money in these enterprises. In this connection I desire to read a couple of extracts, which, coming as they do from unbiased authorities, are extracts which I regard as being more forcible and effective than the mere statement of an hon. member of this House. On the 14th October, 1902, the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, presented a statement to the meeting of the shareholders of the company for the first six months of that year, and in presenting that statement he made use of these remarkable words:

> A very interesting return had been prepared by the traffic department. During 1901 no fewer than 115 new industries comprising many large works and manufactories were established or put in course of establishment along their line in Canada, representing a capital of $5,541,000, and 51 industries along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway in the United States with a capital of $1,985,000. It would be difficult to afford a more practical illustration of the prosperity of the times and of the increased carrying capacity of the Grand Trunk Railway arising therefrom.

It seemed to me, when I read it some time ago, a most remarkable statement, that along the line of one railway in Canada no less than 115 new, and many of them large, industries and manufactories in one year were commenced or in course of commencement representing a capital of $5,541,000. It is a complete answer to those who say, or who attempt to say, that under the present tariff manufactories are not being started and are not prospering in this country. But there is another citation which seems to me to be a very important one. In the Montreal 'Gazette' of November 27, 1902, there is a statement which Major John L. Bittinger, Consul General of the United States in Montreal, furnishes to his own people on the other side of the line. It is not at all likely that this United States officer is going to exaggerate the facts in this report, a report sent to his own government, and which reads as follows:

The people of the United States are aiding largely in the development of Canada. Within the last year, millions of dollars have been invested here in agricultural and timber lands, mining and manufacturing industries.

Canada is also showing wonderful enterprise in self-development. People are throwing off their conservatism.

I do not know whether that refers to the election of 1900 or to the previous election.

When industrial openings are presented to them they no longer take a year for consideration, but investigate promptly, and when satisfied, invest liberally.

Many American syndicates have been looking over the ground in Canada during the last few months. A significant fact to those connected with the paper industry is that the largest of these syndicates, the Gres Falls Company, is controlled by men prominent in the International Paper Company. The Gres Falls Company was organized in April last, and owns water power and extensive spruce limits at Three Rivers. The company is capitalized at $500,000, and it is said to be the intention to develop the industry at once.

LAND PROJECTS IN WEST.

The investments made by Americans in agricultural, grazing, and timber lands amount to many millions of dollars. Only recently, a Columbus, O., syndicate purchased 600,000 acres in the North-west Territory. A Minneapolis and St. Paul syndicate has purchased a much larger area, and is promoting emigration from the western states to the Canadian North-west, to which over 50,000 settlers have gone during the present year.

The consul-general then specifies the following industries, either recently established or about to be started and financed wholly or partly by American capital.

Louis B. Jennings, New York, has recently organized the Canadian Steel and Coal Company, capitalized at $6,000,000. His properties consist of 4,000 acres of iron ore, and 3,000 acres of coal lands.

Claus A. Spreckles and W. W. Cool, of New York, have made application for the incorporation of the Federal Sugar Refining Company, Limited. The capital of the company is $6,000,000. The refinery will be located in Montreal.

Theodore P. Burgess, president and general manager of the Burgess Sulphite Pulp Company, of Berlin Falls, N.H., has closed a deal with the Quebec Department of Lands, Forests and Fisheries, for the purchase of 600 square miles of timber on the Upper St. Maurice river.

BIG PLANT FOR TORONTO.

Another large American industry has decided to evade the duty of 25 per cent on agricultural machinery, and establish itself in Toronto. The new firm will be known as the American Abell Engine Thrasher Company; it has taken over the Toronto Abell Works. Behind it are two of the largest thrashing-machine manufacturers in the world. Their agents have already placed orders for 1,000,000 feet of hard-wood lumber. The new company is to have $1,000,000 of capital stock, and it will employ about 400 men. The company will erect a large warehouse and machine shop at Winnipeg.

The Westinghouse Company, of Philadelphia, the Ingersoll Sargent Drill Company, of New York, the Port Huron Thrashing Machine Company, of Port Huron, Mich., and the Deering Harvester Company, of Chicago, are engaged in the location of great plants in Ontario.

The Oil Exploration Company, of Canada, a new concern, has been incorporated with an authorized capital of $200,000, with the head office at Walkerville, Ont.

The Canadian Coral Marble Company has been incorporated, with the head office at Toronto, with an authorized capital of $500,000, of which it is said, the largest amount is American.

AMERICANS AT ST. JOHNS.

It is stated that as a result of the investigation made by American capitalists in St. Johns, Que., an extensive plant for the manufacture of porcelain enamelled baths will be established there.

The Locomotive and Machine Company, of Montreal, has just been incorporated to carry on business. The capital stock is $1,000,000, largely American.

Letters patent have been issued incorporating Robert Stuart, of Chicago, Walter Donald Douglas, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and several Canadians as 'The Northern Cereal Company.' The capital stock is $2,000,000, the majority of which is American.

The meat-packing firm of Swift & Co., of Chicago, recently purchased the property of the Fowler Canadian Company, of Hamilton. A new pork-packing plant is to be erected, which will be larger than any like establishment in the Dominion.

The Haines Piano Company, of Rochester, N.Y., has purchased the old Hess factory, at Toronto Junction. It is enlarging the plant, and will employ 200 hands.

A charter has been granted the Clover Leaf Mining Company, with a capital of $1,000,000. The head offices are at Toronto. A majority of the capital is American.

The Buffalo Forge Company, a $1,000,000 corporation, has declared its purpose of establishing a branch factory in Canada.

MONTREAL GETS A PLANT.

A New York Company has in operation in Montreal a large plant which makes lumber fireproof.

The American Bridge Company, of New York, has been licensed to carry on business in Ontario at a capital not to exceed $100,000.

The Globe-Wernicke Company, of Cincinnati, manufacturers of school supplies and special lines of furniture, is to establish a plant at Stratford, Ont.

A party of Americans is preparing to erect in Ottawa a factory for the manufacture of spades, shovels, and garden tools. The capital stock is $100,000. The company will employ 100 hands.

John Critchley, representing the American Actinolite and Asbestites Company, of New York, says that his company has commenced operations in Hastings, Ont., by working some actinolite properties. Mr. Critchley intends to establish works in Canada to refine the actinolite, which is used in the manufacture of heavy paints.

The Stohl Wagon and Farm Implement Company, of Harrisburg, Pa., will be removed to Toronto within the next month.

Letters patent have been issued for the Northern Aluminum Company, with a capital of $500,000, organized for the manufacture of aluminum and other ores. The company has erected a building at Shawinigan Falls, and is already at work. The capital is largely American.

The Montreal Novelty Company has been established here by New York parties.

Letters patent of the province have been issued incorporating the Imperial Pneumatic Tool Company, with a capital stock of $25,000. The capital is nearly all American.

TO MAKE PNEUMATIC TOOLS.

Premier Peters, of Prince Edward Island, has announced an agreement with a firm of Canadian and American capitalists, which insures for the island the most complete and modern outfit of cold storage appliances that can be obtained. The capital of the company is $1,000,000.

An important tobacco firm in Pittsburg, Pa., has written the Dominion statistician for details respecting the cultivation of tobacco in Canada, with a view, if circumstances are favourable, of establishing a large factory for the manufacture of cheroots and 'stogies.'

The International Harvester Company erecting a plant at Hamilton, will employ 1,500 hands.

The Altman-Taylor Implement Company, of Peoria, Ill., will soon establish a branch in Canada.

The Canadian Woollen Mills Company, at St. Hyacinthe, has passed into the hands of American capitalists, who will hereafter operate the industry.

The Laurentides Pulp and Paper Company has an immense plant, and has built up around it the thriving town of Grand Mère.

The latest announcement in connection with the incoming of foreign industries is the news that the International Paper Company, a gigantic concern, is about to utilize the areas it has secured in the Three Rivers district and establish pulp mills in that portion of the country.

This, Mr. Speaker, is on the whole a splendid testimony as to the manner in which capital is being attracted to Canada. This report shows that level headed business men are prepared to risk their money in Canada; it shows that Canada is prosperous under the present tariff, and it shows that few if any countries in the world are so prosperous.

Now, Sir, in my estimation, the policy of the present government has been a most skilful, statesmanlike, sane and manly policy; and, in various ways. In the first place preferential tariff was a very great stroke of political genius for not only did it reduce taxation to the Canadian consumers and assist British trade, but it also struck somewhat of a blow at the United States, and some of us are not adverse to a little of that sort of thing if the United States do not treat us somewhat better. And, Sir, the preferential tariff strengthened the ties of the empire and increased Canada's national status. In the second place the reductions in duties were with respect to goods chiefly imported from the United States and were made for our benefit. The Liberal party draws the line against a policy of retaliation or conservatism which would simply cut off our nose to spite our face. In the third place the preference in favour of the West Indies showed a commendable disposition to help a weak member of the empire and to recognize the responsibilities of the empire. In the fourth place, the opposition were prepared to allow their resentment to cause them to go right at Germany at once without conciliation or negotiation at all; but the policy of the government was quite the reverse. The government tried conciliation, they tried correspondence, they tried every reasonable, sensible, and moderate means, and when they were not able to induce the Germans to do what was fair and right, then the Canadian government adopted a policy of retaliation which all Canadians have heard of with the greatest satisfaction. Instead of starting out with fisticuffs as the opposition wanted, the government started with correspondence and negotiations, and when that would not do we ended up with a little fisticuffs on our own account. Now, in addition to all this, and in view of the fact that Great Britain does not appear to think very much of this preference; in view of the fact that she is not very well informed as to this preference and seems to look this gift a little askance, Great Britain is now told: If you do not think the preference is any good; if you are not prepared to deal with us on a little better terms then you deal with countries which give you no preference, then we will have to consider what we will do with the preference. It is also true, Mr. Speaker, that this government has made all reasonable and fair efforts to induce the people on the other side of the line to adopt a little more friendly and favourable trade policy towards the people of this country, and they are given a slight intimation by this government that if they persist in doing as the Germans are doing, one of these days they may have something of the same sort happening to them. All and all, Mr. Speaker, the policy adopted by this government is in the truest and best interests of the people of the country at large. And why should we change from this policy? Why should we change from the prosperous conditions which prevail under this policy to go back to the conditions which existed under the national policy. The national policy was reported at the start to be a wonderful policy. We were told that it would cause manufactures to start up in the most marvelous way, and would bring work and wages, comfort and prosperity and happiness to the people of Canada. But we tried it for eighteen years and with what result? Why, at the end we had made practically no progress; our population had scarcely increased. In one way and another we found that that policy was a failure. When we contrast the period before 1896 with the period from 1896 to 1902 we see in the former period a stagnant trade, an impoverished treasury, an exodus of the very cream of our population, manufacturing going on in a very slow way, and the Conservative government too busy with its own strifes to do much for the country. But since 1896 we see a most wonderful reverse policy; a most wonderful reverse picture. We see trade going ahead in the most wonderful way at a greater ratio than that of any country in the whole world. We see a bouyant revenue; an overflowing treasury; lower taxation; reduction of the public debt; immigrants pouring into the country; the North-west being rapidly developed; factories working up to the limit of their capacity and railways projected in all directions. Surely no man, no patriotic man who desires the best interests of the people of Canada would want to recede from this present splendid condition of the country and go back to the conditions that obtained prior to 1896. Time and again in days past, eminent men have spoken of the possibilities of Canada. They have made predictions as to the future of Canada; they have pointed out that with her resources and the intelligence and pluck and enterprise of her people she was able to make extraordinary progress. But that progress did not come until the accession to power of the Liberal party and the inauguration of their policy. But now, when the east has commenced to know something more about the west, when the older parts of Canada are commencing to know more about the west and the North-west; when the various parts of Canada are being brought together by railway and other transportation facilities; when the people are beginning to understand the great resources of this country; when we are commencing to be advertised at home and abroad; when we are begining to attract population and capital; now, these pictures that others have presented in times past are being realized. One eminent man who was Governor General of this country has spoken perhaps more beautifully than almost any other man of this magnificient young country of ours, and of its great possibilities. Fortunately he lived to see the day when some of his predictions were to an extent realized. He had travelled all over Canada; he had come to know our people and to understand their intelligence, enterprise, and pluck, and he pointed to the future. I refer to Lord Dufferin who used these words :—

From its geographical position and its peculiar characteristics, Manitoba may be regarded as the keystone of that mighty arch of sister provinces which spans the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It was here that Canada emerging from her woods and forests first gazed upon her rolling prairies and unexplored North-west and learned as by an unexpected revelation that her historical territories of the Canadas, her eastern sea-boards of New Brunswick, Labrador and Nova Scotia, her laurentian lakes and valleys, corn lands and pastures, though themselves more extensive than half a dozen European kingdoms were but the vestibules and anti-chambers to all that tell them their undreamt of Dominion whose illimitable dimensions alike confound the arithmetic of the surveyor and the verification of the explorer. It was hence that counting her past achievements as but the preface and prelude to her future exertions and expanding destinies she took a fresh departure, receive the afflatus of a more imperial inspiration and felt herself no longer a mere settler along the banks of a single river but the owner of half a continent and in the magnitude of her possession in the wealth of her resources, in the sinews of her material might the peer of any power on earth.

I believe, Sir, that if the splendid policy commenced and perpetuated by this government is carried on for some years to come; if members on both sides of this House do their duty to this young country; the glowing predictions made by Lord Dufferin and others will soon come to pass and Canada will take that high rank among the nations of the world, which her resources and the character of her people entitle her to take.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman from Essex (Mr. Sutherland) in his opening remarks extended his sympathies to the leader of the opposition, because that hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) had himself undertaken the task of making a reply to the speech of the Finance Minister. Well, Sir, as an humble follower of the leader of the opposition I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) that the leader of the opposition is not at all in need of his sympathies. The hon. leader of the opposition undertook the task of replying to the Finance Minister and he acquitted himself in a highly creditable manner; in a manner which won encomiums from political foe as well as from political friend. And when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) says that the leader of a party should be relieved from such a duty, I can quite understand that if the position of parties in this House were reversed, how anxious, nay how eager hon. gentlemen opposite would be to relieve their leader from that duty because they would find him scarcely big enough to fill the bill. The hon. leader of the opposition has always been equal to the occasion when called on to speak, whether in reply to the budget speech or at any other time. We feel proud of him, and he has received encomiums from all parts of the Dominion upon having made one of the best speeches in reply to the budget speech ever delivered in this House. This is but the third session that the hon. member for North Essex has occupied a seat in this House, and I think it came with rather bad taste from him to attempt to lecture the hon. leader of the opposition as to who should or should not undertake the duty of replying to the budget speech. It is true, those who have the honour to follow the leader of the opposition in this House may not be possessed of the transcendent abilities of the hon. member for North Essex; they may not be imbued with the same amount of egotism or conceit; but they have endeavoured to acquit themselves creditably by talking from a business standpoint, unlike hon. gentlemen opposite, some of whom have spoken as free traders, some as protectionists, and some as revenue tariff men, each one catering to the narrow view of the particular constituency he represents.

The hon. member for North Essex has referred to the prosperity which Canada is enjoying. This is a favourite theme of hon. gentlemen opposite. As lovers of our country, as men who put country before party, we on this side of the House also rejoice in the evidences of the country's prosperity, and at the fact that Canada has not yet entered on that down grade towards a period of depression which is bound to come in the natural course of events. The hon. Finance Minister himself admitted that two years ago, when in his budget speech he prophesied the return of a period of depression. This prophecy, he says, has been somewhat delayed in its fulfilment, and he rejoices, as we all do, that the trade of Canada is still on the upward grade. It is a fortunate thing for Canada in one respect that the Conservative party at present occupy the opposition benches. Were the positions reversed, were a Conservative government in power, and were we taking from the people the large amounts of revenue now being taken, imposing upon them the large taxation now being imposed, and piling up the spurious surpluses which hon. gentlemen opposite are gloating over, we would never hear the end of these things from hon. gentlemen opposite, who, when it suits their purpose, do not hesitate to go the length of libelling their country and prejudicing her in the eyes of the world. This has been their history in the past, and, unless they have changed greatly, it will be their history in the future. Now, you do not see Conservative speeches ornamenting American immigration literature to the detriment of our country. You do not find Conservative leaders playing the unpatriotic part of visiting the American republic and advising the statesmen of that country how best to put the screws on Canada, in order to make her subservient to American interests. Nor do you find them lauding American states as fields for settlement to the detriment of their own country, nor advocating a policy that would result in our tariff being made at Washington. We have, however, witnessed these and other things of a like character when the opposition benches have been occupied by the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, in their despair, have resorted to every expedient to reach the goal of their ambition, the treasury benches. We trust that the good example set by the loyal and patriotic Conservative opposition may prove beneficial to them, so that when again, in the course of a short time, they come to occupy their proper places on this side of the House, patriotism will be a more prominent feature of their conduct, and that in this respect their past record will not be repeated.

The hon. leader of the opposition has so well acquitted himself in that able address of his, in which he dealt with everything of importance touched upon by the hon. Finance Minister, and he has been so ably followed by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, that little remains to be said of an original character. But it is the duty of an opposition to indulge in legitimate criticism of the government's policy and record, past and present, even at the expense of a certain amount of repetition.

Now, if there is any body of men, in the history of this or any other country, who have laid themselves open to adverse criticism and to charges of inconsistency, duplicity, double-dealing and want of statesmanship, it is the hon. gentlemen who now constitute themselves the representatives of the Liberal party of Canada and the so-called government of Canada. Why, Sir, there is scarcely a promise which they made to the Canadian electorate, and on which they secured their support, that they have not shattered ; there is scarcely a profession which they made that they have not openly abandoned ; there is scarcely a policy which they formerly advocated that they have not turned their backs upon ; there is scarcely a principle to which they formerly gave their allegiance that they have not ignominiously violated or repudiated. This is the second parliament in which I have occupied a seat in this House ; but the time has been long enough to enable me to witness an amount of political acrobatism on the part of these hon. gentlemen to which the past history of the parliament of Canada has not afforded a parallel. Lines of policy advocated on this side of the House which at the time met with the jeers and the strenuous opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite, have been adopted by them ; and the very men who formerly belittled and decried them now uphold and applaud resolutions, clear cut and decided, setting forth the policy of the Conservative party of Canada. Questions of great national importance which formerly met with the gibes and sneers of hon. gentlemen opposite, have since, in almost identical words, been put forth at the intercolonial conference as the expression of the views of the government of the day, in their attempt to obtain that which they formerly described as absurd and impossible. We all remember how the desks were pounded and how this chamber rung with the plaudits of the government supporters when a member on that side of the House rose and said how absurd it was to expect that England would impose an import duty upon or tax food stuffs, and how they cheered when members accused the Conservative party of want of loyalty and patriotism for even daring to ask that England should give to Canada a preference in her markets. We have seen that tax on food stuffs imposed. We have seen hon. gentlemen opposite not merely asking, but demanding that Canada be given a return preference in the British markets; and these same gentlemen have applauded to the echo, not the mere request, but the threat of the government that unless this preference were granted, Canada would hold herself free to withdraw the preference accorded to England in our markets. With so docile and subservient, though none the less inconsistent a following to the puzzled Conservatives, the skill of these hon. gentlemen as political acrobats and humbugs can scarcely be over-estimated. To the old-time Liberal, who in years gone by was led to believe that when Canada had an expenditure of some $38,000,000 or $40,000,000, the country was fast drifting on to the shoals of bankruptcy, it must come as a rude shock and surprise to be now told by these former prophets of evil that an expenditure of $65,000,000 is justifiable and commendable and deserving of their support. Party lines are pretty strongly drawn in this Canada of ours, and the average follower will forgive his political leaders a great deal, but still I think to the honest Liberal it must be with many an inward gulp and an extra prayer for forgiveness that he attempts to mark his ballot for those who have betrayed his confidence, secured his vote under false pretenses, and who now in their pharisaical manner attempt to justify and condone that which they formerly denounced as ruinous and inexcusable.

The policy laid down by the late Sir John Macdonald that a government should not rush into huge expenditures of public money merely because we had a buoyant revenue but should rather prosecute the necessary public works in periods of depression, when labouring men are more in need of work, is, in my opinion, a wise and judicious policy. The hon. gentlemen on the government benches seem to have reversed this policy. They are heaping huge burdens on the people and leaving to posterity the trouble of paying in periods of depression the large debts they are creating. These large surpluses which they were wont to declaim against in days gone by as an evil, they now laud as evidences of statesmanship. But these much-vaunted surpluses are really not surpluses in the proper sense of the term. They are simply moneys wrung from the people for the most indefensible purposes and to suit political and party exigencies. These hon. gentlemen will find it far easier to incur large expenditures, to pile up our debt and increase our taxation in a period of prosperity than to reduce these expenditures and come back to a normal condition in a period of depression. I need only quote an authority which will be acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite to back up my opinion. I refer to that authority, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, in criticising the budget speech delivered by a Conservative Finance Minister, used the following expression:

Now it is quite true so long as we continue having this prosperity the mischief of this may not be so apparent, but even the hon. Minister of Finance will hardly venture to say that he has any patent that will enable him to secure a continuance of this prosperity for ever, and the moment the check occurs, the moment times become in the slightest degree hard, then, Sir, our surplus will disappear, but unhappily our taxes will remain. And the scale of expenditure which the hon. gentleman is now fixing will remain too; there is no more difficult task than to cut down, or materially reduce the expenditure of any country, when it has been allowed to attain a certain figure.

If these words were true and applicable at a time when our expenditure was only $40,000,000, they are doubly true and applicable to-day, when our expenditure amounts to the enormous sum of $65,000,000. Since these words were uttered, we have had an addition to our annual expenditure of $23,000,000, an addition to our taxation of some $16,000,000, and an addition to our public debt up to the 30th of June, 1902, of about 13,000,000. Or, in other words, to the burdens of each family of five there has been added an increased expenditure of $19 per year, an increased taxation of $15 per year and an increased debt of $13 per year, or a total increased burden of $47 annually. If public men are to be allowed to hold one set of opinions and views out of office and another set in office, then responsible government becomes, in the words of the Finance Minister, a farce. And if the words I have just quoted are true, when applied to an expenditure of some $40,000,000, how much more forcible are they when applied to an expenditure of some $65,000,000?

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition visited last fall our western country. He met the people from the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia and from the North-west Territories, face to face, and learned for himself, at first hand, their wants and requirements. The hon. gentleman was welcomed by all the people irrespective of politics, for if there is one characteristic for which the average westerner is noted more than any other, it is his hospitality to the stranger. Our western people admired the practical and outspoken sentiments of the leader of the opposition. They appreciated his candour and honesty. They realized that they were not being addressed by a mere vote-hunter, but by a gentleman who was appealing to them on broad and national lines, who was not trying to secure their support on any sectional issue, who was not endeavouring to set one class against another, who was not seeking to persuade the farmer that his natural enemy was the manufacturer, but who was appealing to the people on a broad national policy which he believed to be in the best interest of the country. In fact the Toronto 'Globe' was rather surprised and shocked that the leader of a great party should give evidence of what that journal considered a tactical blunder. The display by a public man of so much candour and sincerity came upon it as a revelation. It was something which the 'Globe' was not accustomed to witness in either the leaders or the followers of the Liberal party. Hence its surprise. Contrast the frankness of the hon. leader of the opposition with the subtlety displayed by the right hon. leader of the government. The right hon. gentleman visited that country in years gone by and proclaimed himself out there as the apostle of the new gospel of free trade. He almost made the farmers of the west weep, as he recounted to them in graphic language the great burden under which he declared they were groaning 'Death to protection,' was his battle cry, and the sonorous tones of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), as that hon. gentleman took up and repeated the cry, rolled across the verdant prairies and reverberated through the distant hills and gorges of that western country. The right hon. gentleman promised to strike off every shackle that fettered the tiller of the soil and to make this country a cheap one to live in. How was he to accomplish that purpose? By giving the farmers free raw material, by lowering the duties on the necessaries of life, by reducing expenditure and by divers other methods—all of which would only be put into effect if the Liberal party were returned to power. Well, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman, in the course of time, reached the goal of his ambition, and he has now been some years enjoying the sweets of office. Has he kept faith with the people? Why, there is not one promise on which he has not turned his back. His broken pledges confront him on every hand. Is it then to be wondered at that the people of that western country should have welcomed with open arms the leader of a party which has been consistent with its principles from 1878 down to the present, which has invariably been true to its policy of preserving our Canadian markets for our Canadian people.

The Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) stumped Brandon in 1896 in the interests of the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. From one end to the other, that county was placarded with the motto: 'Vote for McCarthy and free agricultural implements.' He told the people that they were being robbed in order that the manufacturers of agricultural implements might amass huge fortunes. He touched their hearts and their pockets by appealing to them to return the Liberal party to power and put an end to this deplorable condition of affairs. Let me contrast this appeal with the speech made by the hon. gentleman for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). He said that the people of the west are perfectly satisfied with the tariff as it stands.

Now, what has occurred in relation to the tariff to change the hon. gentleman's opinion since 1897? If the hon. gentleman will look up his speech in 'Hansard' in 1897, when the present tariff was submitted to the House he will find that he declared against the tariff and stated that the people would not be satisfied particularly with this duty on agricultural implements, and that he himself was not satisfied with it. The tariff was the same then as it is to-day. Why, then, does he state that he is satisfied?

The hon. gentleman said speaking of the farmer, in case of an increase in the tariff——

> —he will have to pay so much for his mowing machine and his rake, so much more for his plough, so much more for everything else he uses on his farm.

Now, these were the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatchewan. The Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) during the Brandon campaign of 1896, preached the same doctrine. He told the farmers they were being discriminated against by the manufacturers sending their machines to England, Australia and elsewhere and disposing of them at $90, whereas the Canadian farmer had to pay $140 to $150. The Minister of the Interior has somewhat changed his tune. He tells the farmers now that not only is this not a protective tariff, but the duty of 20 per cent on agricultural implements is not even an average revenue tariff. Reduce it, he says, and what condition of things will be brought about?

Nine thousand workmen now engaged on Canadian soil will make their homes across the line, there to swell the population of the American republic and buy the products of the American farmer. And, for a while, there must be a reduction of the price of machines by the slaughtering of American goods. But, afterwards, up would go the price of machines, and the last stage of the Canadian farmer would be worse than the first. Good Conservative doctrine. What a wonderful effect the responsibilities and emoluments of office have had in changing the hon. minister's opinion. He tells us now that if you reduce the duty you will increase the price of goods. But the hon. member for Saskatchewan tells us that if you increase the duty you increase the price. I would advise these gentlemen—both of whom were in the Lisgar campaign—to get together and have a little rehersal, so that when they address the people they may tell the same story. But if this is true as applied to agricultural implements, may it not be equally true as applied to other industries? Why draw the line at agricultural implements? Take, for instance the very few articles upon which there have been a reduction. They have been mentioned before, but they will stand repetition. Take the case of barbed wire and binder twine. Barbed wire was reduced in duty; but that which was promised did not come about—there was no reduction of price. On the other hand, the farmer is paying more for his barbed wire than he did when the Conservative government was in power, notwithstanding that the duty has been reduced. The simple reason is that the Canadian barbed wire industry has been crushed out, the Americans have a monopoly of our market and we are now under the domination of the American combine. Binder twine was placed on the free list by this government, although the duty was only 12½ per cent. And binder twine is higher in price than it was under the Conservative government. Thus the very thing that the Minister of the Interior now tells us will come about if there is a reduction in the duty on agricultural implements has come about in the connection with barbed wire and binder twine. Now, some of our opponents, especially the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) declared that we cannot protect the farmer. However, there is a member of the cabinet one of the hon. gentleman's own colleagues who does not agree with him. I refer to the Minister of Custom (Hon. Mr. Paterson). That hon. gentleman is at heart a protectionist. We have had a good certificate of character given him by a gentleman who ought to know the facts. 'Birds of a feather flock together'—and the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has been working in harmony with the Minister of Customs for years, and now he thanks him for having stood up in favour of keeping the tariff as high as it is. The Minister of Customs thinks the farmer can be protected, unless he has fallen from grace in recent years—which could hardly be the case in view of what we have been told about him by the ex-Minister of Public Works—but he makes his own views subservient to party interest. The hon. Minister of Customs said :

> The administration should protect our agricultural interest. Such a duty would not in any way bear upon the consumer and would be of great advantage to the interests concerned. The small duty on grain would benefit the farmers of this country. It is well known that we pay a bonus to the inhabitants of other countries to come into Canada and settle in our midst. I believe, by a defensive tariff, that you would not have to pay to bring those men here. Adopt it, and you will find that the steam whistles of our factories will be the call for them to come. The other year, the Finance Minister, in revising our tariff, gave some encouragement to one industry which it never had before. The result was that one thousand men who were engaged in that industry in Germany, were literally transported by the change in the tariff to Canada and set to work here. The cost of the article was not increased one iota, and Canada got all the benefit.

So, the Minister of Customs advocated protection not only to the manufacturing industries but to the agricultural industry as well. But some of these hon. gentlemen take the ground that because the farmers dispose of their products in the markets of the world it is impossible to protect them. No greater fallacy could be propounded. When it is realized that not less than 80 per cent—I think that is a fair proportion—of the farmers' products are consumed in Canada, will any intelligent man pretend to say that the home market is not the most valuable market ? Keep that market for our farmers, shut out the unfair competition of the products of the American farmers coming in here, and you will secure better prices for our farmers. I do not think anybody will gainsay that proposition. The home market is the best market. Selling in the home market does away with a great deal of the expense necessary to place our products in the markets of the world. It does away, to a large extent, with freight rates, insurance charges and other charges incidental to the shipment of our grain to a long distance. If we can protect our market properly by adequate duties we shall, as I say, afford a better market to our farmers. There were imported into Canada from the United States during the last year, of the products of the farm, as follows :

Animals	$ 751,623
Breadstuffs	7,432,530
Fruits	2,433,974
Provisions	2,257,183
Seeds and roots	1,205,435
Vegetables	370,419
Total	$14,451,164

Will any man say that these cannot be grown on our Canadian farms or that they should not be ? These importations displace Canadian products which would have been sold here had they not this unfair competition to contend against. Take also the following list of articles that came in from the American side last year :

Butter	$ 179,479
Cheese	245,489
Bacon and hams	656,024
Beef (salted)	123,242
Pork, barrelled	587,784
Meats, dried	193,328
Other provisions	565,366
	$2,550,712

We have sent our money over there for these articles to enrich the American farmers, that we should have kept in our own country to go into the pockets of our own Canadian people. Now what is the key to this position ? If we compare the duties imposed by the Canadian tariff to those imposed by the American tariff upon the same articles, you will find a solution to this difficulty :

Article.	American Tariff.	Canadian Tariff.
Wheat	25 cents a bush.	12 cents a bush.
Oats...	15 cents a bush.	10 cents a bush.
Barley	30 cents a bush.	12 cents a bush.
Pease..	40 cents a bush.	10 cents a bush.
Hay....	$4 a ton.	$2 a ton.
Apples	75 cents a brl.	40 cents a brl.
Potatoes . ..	25 cents a bush.	15 cents a bush.
Beans..	45 cents a bush.	15 cents a bush.
Butter.	6 cents a lb.	4 cents a lb.
Corn..	15 cents a bush.	Free.
Wheat flour.	75 cents a bush	60 cents a brl.

Is is at all surprising that, with this discrepancy in the tariff duties, we have so large an importation of staple articles coming into our country from the American farmers ?

But, Mr. Speaker, if there is one feature of the trade policy of the present government upon which, through their erratic course, they have left themselves open to ridicule, it is their action with regard to preferential trade with the mother country. They came into power on the promises of getting a mutual preference, promises sacredly made to the people of Canada, promises made in addresses delivered by the Prime Minister prior to the election of 1896, wherein he lauded the advantages to be derived by Canada if the products of our farmers were admitted into the English markets on a preference over the products of other countries, when he pledged his word to the people of Canada that one of the first acts of his government upon their accession to power would be to send a commission to England to negotiate a basis for preferential tariff with the mother land. The hon. gentleman was returned to power in 1897, and the Minister of Finance propounded his tariff policy, which he himself and those who followed him declared not to be a preference to Great Britain alone, of which any other country in the world could avail itself by complying with the conditions of our Canadian tariff. But the tariff was an illegal one, and though its defects were pointed out by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, the government would not be guided by our advice. The matter was carried to the Privy Council and was there decided against them, and were it not that England came to their relief and denounced the German and Belgian treaties, they would have made themselves the laughing stock of the world. When the Prime Minister visited England, in the very first speech he delivered after landing upon English soil, did he attempt to impress upon the people and government of England the necessity of granting Canada a preference in her markets ? On the contrary, he told them, in those brilliant phrases of his, that Canada did not take into consideration at all any preference to be granted in turn by England to Canada, Canada's action was taken out of the fullness of our heart, we did not ask or desire a preference. The people of Canada were astounded when they read these remarks of their Prime Minister. They could not understand how that hon. gentleman, coming so recently from the electors, who was sacredly bound by his word that he would endeavour to obtain a preference, immediately on arriving in Great Britain, betrayed his country and went back upon the policy he had formerly advocated. The hon. gentleman when he was in England made use of the following expressions :

> Now, Sir, this is what we have done deliberately, and for this let me tell you, gentlemen, the Canadian government and the Canadian people ask nothing in return. They have done it out of gratitude to the motherland. They do not ask any 'quid pro quo' ; they do not ask for the pound of flesh ; they do not require a price for their loyalty.

Language calculated to tickle the ears of the particular audience he happened to be addressing at the time. Now the people of Canada took him to task upon his return to this country, but still the members of his government scouted the idea of our seeking a preference in the old country market. Resolution after resolution introduced by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in favour of a mutual preference, was voted down. The Liberal press of Canada stated that if the Conservative party were returned to power one of the first things they would do would be to repeal the British preference, this one bright and shining act of their administration, although in the performances of which they had sadly bungled, this one feature which has since been denounced by its own friends. British statesmen like the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain have denounced this preference as entirely worthless to Great Britain. At the Intercolonial conference, Mr. Chamberlain spoke with no uncertain sound, and stated that the authors of this preference to England were themselves disappointed with it; and speaking as a member of the British government, he and the English people were disappointed at the results. Well, the English people had evidently been humbugged with regard to this preference; they did not realize that a confidence game was being played upon them by our Canadian ministers when this tariff of 1897 was submitted, raising the duties upon importations that came over from England before applying this preference of 33⅓ per cent in favour of English goods. The English people were deceived by the spurious cries of loyalty on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite and by their press. The members of the British government were particularly pleased when the Prime Minister stated that he was giving them a cut of 33⅓ per cent on their general tariff, but they failed to understand that the Canadian government had already raised that tariff before doing so.

Now after what has taken place, what must the British statesmen think of our Canadian statesmen, so-called, when they compare these high sounding phrases of the Prime Minister in 1897 with their statements committed to paper in black and white at the colonial conference? After the Prime Minister had stated that Canada had granted this preference out of the fullness of her heart, and that she desired nothing in return, we find it laid down in black and white, in a memorandum submitted to the British statesmen by our representatives to the colonial conference, that unless a preference is conceded by England to Canada, Canada will hold itself free to abolish the British preference. This is the only intelligent interpretation that can be placed upon that declaration. Very soon, no doubt, we may hear the Prime Minister reiterating his sentiments of 1892, when he declared:

> Our duty is to Canada, not to England. Just as the British government teaches this government that the first duty of the British government is to England and not to Canada, so I insist that in all these matters it is for any self-governing colony to look to its own interests, first, last and always.

Those were the notable words of the Prime Minister when he was advocating unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, and which probably we will hear again in the near future.

Consider once more the government's position with regard to Germany's treatment of Canada since the abrogation of the German and Belgium treaties. Time and again hon. gentlemen in the Conservative party have pointed out the unjust discrimination to which Canada was being subjected at the hands of Germany by having the maximum tariff levied upon the products of Canada that were imported into that country, whereas German goods were imported into this country under the guise of the British preference to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth. Immediate action was urged by gentlemen on this side of the House, but the government refused to take our advice. In fact the hon. Minister of Finance, as recently as last session, attempted to defend and justify the action of Germany in its treatment of Canada. The Liberal press of Canada attempted to establish the extraordinary claim that Canada was not being injured by this discrimination. It condemned the Conservative party for advocating what it said was a policy of retaliation, and it upheld the government for not protecting Canadian interests. But, as in other respects, the government was forced to yield to a growing public opinion, and the coon came down. The government has abandoned its former position, and now we see it levying on future importations from Germany a one-third higher tax than that under the general tariff of 1897, as a result, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says, of its own blunder. Now, we will hear, and we do hear the Liberal press and Liberal speakers applauding the recent action of the government, showing that there is no corner so sharp that they cannot take the turn. Take, again, the government's position in regard to the question of reciprocity. Prior to 1896, prior to the Liberal government's accession to power, it was, they said, the easiest thing in the world for the people of Canada to secure a fair reciprocity treaty with the Americans by those whose hearts were in the business. That able luminary of the government, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) stated that if his leader were in power the feat would be accomplished by the mere scratch of a pen, and that within twenty-four hours he and his friends could secure a fair reciprocity treaty. The ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Sir Louis Davies) followed in a similar strain and claimed that any honest man could secure this treaty. We, therefore, watched with increasing interest the negotiations that were carried on by these gentlemen for six months with the statesmen of the American republic. We thought, surely, that if in the words of Sir Louis Davies, one honest man could secure a treaty, this aggregation of honest men, representing the government of Canada, would be able to secure a treaty. What was our surprise—I will not say surprise, but it must have been a surprise to those who pinned their faith to the government's declarations—when these hon. gentlemen announced their failure to secure a treaty of reciprocity with the people of the United States. The only legacy we have of the attempt of these hon. gentlemen is an account for $34,000 for the high jointers expenses. Then, we had the right hon. Prime Minister rising in his place a very few sessions ago, and declaring that after all Canada is not anxious or desirous to secure a reciprocity treaty with the United States. Now we have the negotiations again pending for a reassembling of the joint high commission in the near future, and we have this announcement following closely upon the heels of the notice that has been served on the home authorities that unless they grant a preference Canada will abolish her preference to the mother country. Can it be that we are once more to have the American dollar preferred to the English shilling? Are we once more to hear from the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) that Canada owes nothing to Great Britain save Christian forgiveness for the bungling she has done? Are we to hear him raising the issue again—give me the seventy million market that lies right at our doors? I would rather that we should be excluded from the markets of the world than that we should be excluded from the markets of the American republic? The right hon. leader of the government told us upon one occasion:

> It is absurd to suppose that, situated as we are, the interests of Canada will always be identical with the interests of Great Britain. Some day must come when these interests will clash, and whatever the hon. gentlemen may be, for my part, whenever it comes to that, and however I may regret the necessity, I will stand for my native land. I, for one, when I made up my mind in favour of this policy of unrestricted reciprocity, looked first and last to the interests of Canada and not to the interests of England. Let the British subject who sits in the British parliament look after the interests of England. I do not believe in the principles of the United Empire Trade League, for the reason that that scheme limits trade to allegiance. It proposes to make allegiance the basis of trade, whilst we desire to make trade interests alone the basis of trade.

It was rather a different kind of song that the right hon. gentleman sang when he was in England, and when he based his whole policy on the question of sentiment and on what we owed to Great Britain. Stranger things may come to happen than to see these hon. gentlemen falling back upon the policy which they advocated in years gone by. These hon. gentlemen, with their devious records, have become experts in the accomplishment of turning somersaults, and they will stop at no policy in order to cater to political party exigencies. Now, we have to-day, a balance of trade against us with the United States of $67,000,000 per annum. It is true that we purchase from Germany seven times more goods than Germany purchases from Canada. Last year we exported in settlers effects to the United States, notwithstanding the stopping of the exodus referred to by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Sutherland), $1,502,265, and this has been steadily increasing every year since the Liberals came into power. We imposed on British imports, dutiable and free a tax of 17·18 per cent, whereas, we imposed on United States imports dutiable and free a tax of 13·20 per cent, notwithstanding the British preference. This, in days gone by, would have been seized upon with avidity by our opponents as evidence of gross discrimination against the mother country. The government have extorted from the people by way of this spurious surplus, upwards of $13,000,000 during this present year more than was necessary to meet the exorbitant demands of this most extravagant government. The hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) has been starving his service and his department in his vain efforts to make a little political capital for himself at the expense of his employees, who are over worked and underpaid. We have seen the administration of justice prostituted in the interest of party ends; we have seen political criminals released from the consequences of their crimes. We have seen members of the government resorting to all sorts of legerdemain in their efforts to create a fictitious surplus by charging to capital account that which was formerly and properly charged to ordinary expenses. We have watched with interest the declaration of the hon. Minister of Finance year after year to see if he would implement the pledges of the preceding year, but all we have seen is that he has been jollying us, to use the street vernacular, and no intelligent man can say what the policy of the government is. These hon. gentlemen are always ready to trim their sails to catch the popular breeze, no matter how contradictory their course may prove to be. We have, to-day questions of great national importance to grapple with, and questions which should be grappled with in the near future, questions such as the granting of local autonomy to our great North-west Territories, so as to allow them to be more self governing and not to be hampered by unnecessary restrictions. We have the great transportation question to solve, a question of national importance, particularly to the great west, whose productions have already assumed gigantic proportions, and for the moving of which it is necessary that we shall have improved transportation facilities. We have these and other important questions to grapple with, but the present government seems not to have the courage or capacity to cope with them. On the other hand, the record and history of the Conservative party are a safe guarantee to show that it has within its ranks sufficient statesmanship to cope with and carry to a successful issue these great important questions involved in the building up of a great and thriving nation.

The Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald and his able and distinguished colleagues of the past securely and firmly laid the foundations of our present prosperity, notwithstanding the opposition they met at the hands of their Liberal opponents, and the criticisms and carpings they indulged in at that time. And, Sir, now that we are reaping the benefit of his statesmanship, now that we are having the great west filled with an incoming population—the country that was referred to in years past by Liberals as being a wilderness that it would be a doubtful benefit to open up to civilization—now that Canada is reaping some of this prosperity that is universal in its character; we find these hon. gentlemen opposite attempting to take to themselves all the credit as being the originators and authors of it, thus stamping themselves as political mountebanks, whose professions are as foundationless as they are absurd.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not intrude further on the attention of the House, but will simply say in conclusion: It is my intention to support the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition; first, because it is definite in its policy and cannot be misunderstood; it is based upon the underlying principle of protection that has done so much to make Canada what she is to-day. Second, because I am convinced that the people of Canada prefer and desire that a party aspiring to govern this young country should have some policy that cannot be misunderstood; some principle underlying that policy—though certainly our amendment will be misrepresented by hon. gentlemen opposite, as would any declaration of policy on our part. And in the third place, Sir, because the government, though they have been in office for seven years and have had ample opportunity to formulate a definite policy, have lamentably failed to do so, and have simply been actuated by political expediency, and political expediency alone.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, those fortunate mortals who had been summoned to a banquet of the gods, on their return reported that the bill of fare was very scanty, and that the nectar had made three or four rounds of the table before they were called upon to take a sip. My hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Sutherland) made an allusion to my hon. colleague the leader of the opposition which was of a highly complimentary character. He said that several other gentlemen on that side had been selected to criticise the statement made by the Minister of Finance and that they had not been found adequate to the task. He said that the leader of the opposition, not having anybody behind him capable of ably criticising the speech of the Finance Minister, took that duty upon himself. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) intended it as a compliment and in no way as disparagement of or a flaunt at the learned leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition was well within his rights when he challenged the speech of the Minister of Finance, but he incurred a great responsibility in doing so. No living mortal could fathom what was the intention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax). Perhaps he was actuated with the desire of heading off some of the divergent opinions of his supporters; perhaps he wished to prevent the policy of the Finance Minister from being too largely expatiated upon or too much explained before he promptly presented his amendment. Now, let me ask: What has the learned leader of the opposition left out by his resolution? His amendment is, that after the word 'that' the whole of the motion should be struck out, and his amendment substituted. Now, Sir, the leader of the opposition has left out of consideration our gross trade of $423,000,000, the largest trade enjoyed in the history of Canada; he has left out a revenue of $58,000,000, the greatest in our history; he has left out a surplus of $7,000,000; he has left out a reduction of $5,000,000 in the debt; he has left out of consideration also the generous provisions for all the services of the country and for all the public works throughout Canada—a more generous and sensible provision than ever was made in the history of the Conservative party. That the statement of the Finance Minister was satisfactory to the country, we have the opinions of bankers, of capitalists, of investors in stock companies and savings banks, of merchants, of labourers. The manufacturers of Canada have generally admitted that they are prosperous and that their warehouses have grown in order to provide ample space for the goods which they produce. All this was admitted, even by the speakers on the other side of the House. In connection with this state of affairs we have a tariff comprising schedules of duty with exact sums set against certain articles, definite and intelligible.

Now, Sir, those gentlemen of the opposition who contended that the tariff was not exactly that which they would approve, and those who contended that the tariff was not the cause of the prosperity, did admit that the country was prosperous. If the tariff was not the causa causans of prosperity it certainly was not hurtful; it certainly was not powerful enough to counteract the growing trade of the country and its rising prosperity. If the tariff did not assist that prosperity; if it did not conserve that prosperity, it was certainly harmless to prevent the energy of the country exerting itself and achieving beneficial results. But what did the leader of the opposition give us as a substitution for our present fiscal policy? He gave us an exceedingly nebulous and indefinite resolution. He gave us no statement of specific duties. He did not give any tariff rate that he would have levied upon articles if his motion were to prevail, but he simply submitted that very stretchable policy, which might mean something in the west, and could be stretched to mean something else in the east. He gave something to awaken the hopes of manufacturers and others in order to obtain votes, it may be—although I believe he has not the slightest hope of obtaining votes by it. However, he gave us a policy which might be made so flexible and so adaptable to certain localities that it might be supported by his followers and declared to mean something in one direction and the very reverse in another. Now, Sir, we on this side of the House prefer that there should be a policy definite and intelligible, and we also realize the acceptance of the poetic lines in their application to this case:

'Tis better to bear the ills we have, than fly to others we know not of.

My ethymological and orthoepical and philological friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd) when he read the resolution of the leader of the opposition, and the term 'adequate protection,' in it referred to that source of consolation on this and every occasion, the dictionary. There he found that the term adequate meant something that was equal to the occasion, something that was enough, something that was sufficient. Now, we all know, without the dictionary, the acceptation of the term adequate. We know that it is something operative, something that answers the expectation, or the purpose, what is effectual, what is conclusive. What does that term adequate mean when interpreted in this way ? Does it mean a duty of 20 per cent or of 30 per cent, or a duty within any moderate limits ? Does it not mean, when interpreted in its entirety, that if a duty of 20 per cent, or 40 per cent, or 50 per cent, or 100 per cent, is not sufficient to keep out the goods on which this tariff is levied, it shall be made effective to the utmost extent of the word, and that a prohibitive tariff must be put in force in this country ?

The learned leader of the opposition is under no obligation to me whatever. I do believe that I have never given him any of my votes in this House, and therefore I have no right to call upon him for information or for anything else. But I think he intends by his resolution to gather together the votes of all those behind him, and I believe also he wishes to appeal to the ingenuous band of moral reformers on this side of the House, and endeavour, if possible, to secure some of them for the support of his resolution. Besides, and outside of the Conservatives and the Liberals of the House, amongst the Conservatives and amongst the Liberals, there are plain men ; on their behalf I call on the learned leader of the opposition to make an explicit declaration, not in legal or metaphysical phrases, but in plain and sufficient language, what specific duties he will apply, if his policy is carried out, to the articles enumerated in the tariff, so that merchants, business men, and plain men of all classes throughout the country, may know what they are to expect and may give their approbation or disapprobation to the proposals of the hon. gentleman.

The tariff is a complex instrument. It goes much further than mere verbiage, because it applies itself to various interests and various articles throughout the country. It has not an arbitrary application, but it is a system of balances, adjustments and allotments of certain duties to certain articles, with regard also to the localities in the country where those articles are consumed, so that the taxation will not bear more heavily on one quarter of the country than on the other. A tariff of that kind cannot be summed up in general business phrases; but to have a general understanding and comprehension of it, it is necessary that its elements should be specifically mentioned, so that the people at large can understand what they are, and judge whether it is an acceptable and proper tariff, or something that ought to be rejected. The learned leader of the opposition, by the terms of his resolution, is not to wait for anything; but he has proposed his resolution as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, in order that the House may take up his proposal to revise the tariff and put a new tariff into operation, without any delay, without any time being given for consideration, without any reference to men expert in the construction of tariffs, without any regard to the present interests of the country, without any reference to what the future interests of the country may be. But, my learned friend the leader of the opposition may say : I am not a trader; I have no right to mention articles and to state what duties may apply to those articles; I am not conversant with mercantile affairs; I am not a buyer or a seller of goods, my duty in this parliament is to gather up the opinions of those behind me, and express them in the most forcible and telling way as parliamentary questions; I have framed my resolution so that its corners cannot be cut off, so that it cannot be headed off. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has behind him gentlemen who are skilled in the work of analysis, in the decomposition of tariffs, in the enumeration of goods and of the duties that should be laid upon them. He has behind him my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) with his encyclopedic mind; and he has behind him the gentle and insinuating revealer of truth, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). If these gentlemen were not sufficient, he has behind him a gentleman who has taken the ground that a tariff of 17 per cent must have been a protective tariff, and who two sessions ago delighted the House with a list of all the articles under the sun and everywhere else, which read like the inventory of a Newfoundland store. He could have informed my hon. friend the leader of the opposition precisely what articles ought to be charged with certain definite duties, and how those duties would bear with reference to other duties. He could have given him all that information with cheerful power and persuasiveness, with the comprehension and approval of members on this side of the House who are supposed to have protectionist proclivities, and with the cheers and support of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are so ready on every occasion to pay a tribute to his parliamentary skill on all other subjects brought forward from time to time. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition did not present his case in this way. Therefore, because of the indefiniteness of the resolution of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I shall be compelled to vote against his proposition. We have heard a great deal of argument, in this House and out of it, to the effect that a tariff higher than 17½ per cent, or at any rate, higher than 25 per cent, must of necessity be protective. But I think that I can demonstrate clearly that the present tariff, while giving sufficient protection, is mainly a tariff for revenue. Exigencies may arise under a revenue tariff which call for the imposition of a higher scale of duties. Exigencies will arise of a public nature which can only be met by a large revenue than would be obtained under an ordinary protective tariff, so then the rates levied under any tariff is no indication of its being purely protective or purely for revenue. Such a tariff must be judged by the intentions of those who put it in force. On the other hand the national policy although intended to be protective to some industries, although professedly protective, was really the highest conceivable grade of revenue tariff and the highest amount of excise which could be extracted from the people to meet the requirements of the government. This is proved by the increased importations of goods and the increase in our revenue following the introduction of that policy.

Hon. gentlemen opposite complain that we pay too much attention to the argument derived from the increase of exports and imports, as indicating the beneficial character of the policy of the government. But you will remember, Sir, that in days gone by, the Conservative government and its followers always pointed to the fact that under its regime, our exports and imports were increasing. This they pointed to as an indication of our growing prosperity, and this they gave as a reason why the electorate should retain them in power and reject the appeals of dishonest free trade Liberals. In addition to that argument, they urged that the Liberals were utterly incapable of administering the affairs of the country and moulding its destinies. They said that the Liberals had not the requisite experience, that they were not men of proved business abilities, that they had not a sufficient acquaintance with public affairs to control the business of a great country like Canada, and that if they should be returned to power, one calamity after another would arrive as the result of their mismanagement, and the country would very soon hurl then from their places again. They dilated on the disappearance of the tall chimnies and the sorrowful wail which would arise from the poor starving children and wives of the labouring people deprived of work. They predicted all sorts of direful calamities which would follow the election of the Liberal party to office. When we remember these prophesies, are we not justified in pointing to the increased prosperity on every hand, to the factories running over with orders, to labour abundantly rewarded, to merchants and traders prosperous to an increasing public revenue, to the service of the government amply provided for, and to the smiling, content and satisfaction prevailing throughout the land, as a flagrant contradiction to these dismal forebodings. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond of crediting my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce with certain utterances made by him on previous occasions. Well, Mr. Speaker, my memory runs back a little further. I remember when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the late Alexander Mackenzie had to contend against the charge of woeful extravagance and wastefulness of the resources of this country, levelled against their administration. I remember how they were denounced for taking $23,500,000 out of the hard won earnings of the consumers of this country. Put us back into power, they cried, and we will conduct the affairs of this country economically, we will make ample provision for all our public works and requirements, and we will do it on $22,000,000. Well, Sir, the people took them at their word and put them back into office. What then happened? Did they confine themselves to an expenditure of $22,500,000? No, Sir, they did not. In the first year of their administration, they spent $24,500,000, in the next, $25,000,000; in the next, $27,000,000; and in the following year $31,000,000. And so their expenditure kept on swelling and soaring ever since. Such were the promises against which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce had to contend in those days, and it were well that hon. gentleman opposite should remember those broken pledges. Let me remind these hon. gentlemen that the phrase they are so fond of using: Wrung from the pockets of the people,' is neither novel nor original.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, the method of argument used by the leader of the opposition reminded me of the method of the Rabbins. They did not give an authoritative statement of their own upon which to found an argument, nor did they state any facts positively; but they said: I, M say, on the authority of N that so and so is so and so; and on that they based an argument. That is the method pursued by the leader of the opposition. He takes, for instance, an extract from the speech of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and on that he proceeds to build up a scale of figures, tables or elaborate argument to prove to a demonstration or to his own satisfaction on that hypothesis that certain things are untrue and that certain things are condemnable. The hon. gentleman should not take the statements he quotes from the Minister of Trade and Commerce as being absolute ones, definite and limited, and complete of themselves. He should give the accompanying circumstances. He should give the context of the speech and the circumstances under which the speech was delivered, the contentions made and the position taken which he was rebutting. Then we could understand the full force of the argument. But why base it upon the hypothesis of the statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Why does he not go back to the foundation of the matter and establish what is the first truth; establish his proposition as a universal one and then go on to make his argument. By these tables which he has submitted the leader of the opposition hopes to make out his case that the tariff is unsatisfactory to the country, and he gives certain quotations from the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce as tests by which we would acquire a knowledge of popular opinion on this subject. Now, I would be content that we should rest our case entirely upon the speech and upon the tables presented by the Minister of Finance, taking in addition to the very excellent speech and very conclusive tables which have been submitted by my hon friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd). But the leader of the opposition when he gave his tables and when he arrived at his conclusion, lest he should be taken to task for having opposed votes for some of the services which make up the total of the vote, said that as to some of the details, he approved of them and wished that the expenditure under these headings had been greater. So, his argument that these expenditures were excessive falls to the ground. And so, whether he relies for his argument upon the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or upon the tables prepared by himself his argument that the government have taken too much money from the people will not stand.

In the course of his very excellent speech this afternoon, my hon. friend and namesake from Marquette (Mr. Roche), condemned the government for not negotiating, at the time when the preference was established in this country, for a similar reference to be extended to Canadian goods when brought into the British market. A great deal of ridicule has been thrown on the government for its course in huckstering, now, when before, they were so very open and generous in allowing British goods to come in under the preference, exacting nothing in return. Now, a number of those opposed to the government in this House have plumed themselves on that fact, as they allege it to be, that the preference tariff was a failure. Some of them contend that it was futile as a means of introducing British goods. I do not understand exactly their attitude with regard to preferential tariff, whether they wish British goods to be introduced or whether they wish the British goods to be kept out. But, however, if they wished the British goods to be imported under this tariff the resolution proposed by the leader of the opposition is against that end, because he proposed to lay heavy duties on the goods imported so as to practically prohibit them and give the market to the producers of Canadian goods. So, I count that the leader of the opposition is against preference treatment. The examination given that tariff is entirely superficial and entirely inadequate. You cannot, by contrasting the amounts of money set forth in columns of figures say exactly what articles might have been brought in or the quantity of articles there were brought in. You have to examine the cost of these articles that you may learn whether there were more brought in. That of itself may not in this case make a very essential difference. But certainly, the mere inspection of a column of figures will not show you whether the preference tariff had an influence in bringing in these goods and allowing them to be consumed in Canada. But what is the fact? These imports from Britain are the precise qualities of goods, the veritable articles which are duplicated by the manufacturers of Canada. The Canadians have aimed at manufacturing such articles as were brought in under the preference tariff. Therefore, as our manufacturers increased, as they improved the quality of their goods, more and more of British goods have been kept out. It is a proof of efficacy in the preference tariff that, where the amount of British goods imported into Canada was declining by a regular process, after the introduction of the tariff, the amount of these imports which had fallen from $43,000,000 to $22,000,000, a decline of $21,000,000, rose again. Thus the preferential tariff checked a decline of importations and changed it into an increase. But how much would have been the decline of importations without the preferential tariff? How far would the manufacturers of Canada have displaced these British goods, and how much would the manufactured goods of the United States, made of a similar material and perhaps of better quality, perhaps with finer adaptation for our wants have displaced these goods, if the tariff had not been such as to lower the price in our markets of the British goods and so prevent the American goods entering? If I had been in this House when the preferential tariff was introduced I do not know that I would have voted for it. I do not know that Canada was bound at that time to pass a measure which favoured the introduction of British goods. But the tariff, including this preferential feature being in force, and desiring that British goods should be introduced, desiring to cultivate British trade, certainly that preference had a good intention and it was effective in carrying out the object by preventing the decline of British importations and converting it, on an ascending scale, into increased consumption in our markets of these articles. Now, I do not know that it is the function of the Liberal government to stand by inactive when a movement takes place by a combination of manufacturers in a foreign country, or when, by any legal enactment of a foreign government any industry in the country is menaced, I do not think the Liberal government will stand by and say it has no duty to discharge to manufacturers or the people in the encouragement of any energy which was overborne by any adverse influence outside of the ordinary competition of one manufacturer with another. If there be governmental action, if such action is needed, government is erected for the purpose of controlling these combinations. The people have entrusted the government with the function of regulating these matters. It is one of the duties and powers of government to interfere in questions of that kind, and to aid struggling manufacturers, struggling industries or struggling interests, to overcome obstacles so far as governmental action can do so.

Now so far as my opinion goes, I believe that a revenue tariff, by its uniformity, gives such proper inducement and such proper attention to the various interests of the country, that they all flourish and are all equally treated under it. But if the government should think it necessary to encourage any of the industries of the country, if the government should think proper to develop any of the manufactures of the country, I think it ought to be done along economic lines. If encouragement is afforded, it should be to industries which are beginning. I do not think that an economical policy should specially favour those industries that are well established, after their products have obtained currency in the country, after they are well known. I do not think that such industries should be assisted by increased duties on competing commodities imported from other countries. I think that goods made from the raw material of Canadian origin might be a subject of this protection and this ecouragement, so as to spread the benefit over a larger number of people, that producers of the raw material might benefit as well as the manufacturers, and that the business of transportation might also partake of the benefit which is given by the government. Such public contributions ought not to be monopolized or absorbed by the capitalist who runs the factory, irrespective of any other interest or industry which may exist in the country.

Secondly, when government aid is afforded it should be in favour of those goods which have an economic value. It is no advantage to make goods that require an enormous assistance so great as to deplete or exhaust the country; there is no public advantage in giving such assistance to manufacturers, industries or employments of any kind which have no natural hold upon the people, and which cannot be economically managed or carried on to the advantage of the people. It would be better to employ the people in some other industry; because in imposing enormous protective duties we are fighting against the arrangements of Providence, we are fighting against natural laws, we are fighting against the diversity which nature has established in the productions of the various countries, and against the natural law that the productions of one country should be exchanged for those of another, all tending to that end so much condemned by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), the brotherhood of man. Now, Sir, there are compensations to be considered when manufactures are encouraged and assisted by government funds or by tariff arrangements, there should be compensation given to other industries and to other localities where those industries do not exist, because if one locality is benefited by money taken from the whole country, and if there be no counter-balancing advantage to the various sections who contribute to the individual section, evidently there would be injustice.

I think that under the present conditions in this country, due encouragement should be given by the government to the manufacture of iron, because iron enters into the manufacture of the machinery used in all the various industries of the country. So many employments, so much mechanism depends upon the cheapness of iron that any encouragement that is given in that direction is certainly justifiable and is part of the duty of a paternal government. Another thing that might be done is to improve the style and quality of the fabrics, to introduce artistic excellence, to patronize artistic schools of design whereby the nature and symmetry of the articles produced might be improved. The quality of all our Canadian manufacture ought to be improved so that they may be equal to the best productions of other countries which enter into competition with ours. Our Canadian manufactures should not be made out of shoddy, should not be made of adulterated or inferior material; but all the articles that are made in Canada should be stamped 'made in Canada,' and that stamp should be a guarantee of the excellence of the material and the artistic nature of the workmanship. In the next place, provision should be made that all the benefits should not inure to the capitalist, or to the manufacturer, or the company that owns the factory; but the workmen should equally enjoy a portion of the benefit of the protection afforded by the government, either in the encouragement of new industries or in the sustentation of old ones.

Some hon. gentlemen on the other side in talking to us about suffering industries which ought to be the subject of public assistance, have mentioned the article of woollens. Now woollens is a very general term, and comprises a great deal. I would like to be instructed on the subject of woollens. I think there are some gentlemen in this House who are familiar with woollens. But what is comprised in that article? Ought not any woollen factory which obtains benefit from the tariff, or any encouragement from the Dominion treasury, enter into a stipulation that the product of that factory should be made from Canadian wool alone, so that the Canadian raw material may be entirely used in the composition of the article? Would Canadian woollens thus made be as good as those made of imported wool? Would they be as enduring, would they be as acceptable to the people ? Now what do we mean when we speak of woollens ? Do we mean that every woollen factory, every industry in that line, should receive benefit by the tariff ? There are cloths, for instance. Now we know that the cloths made in Canada are made to the appearance of English cloths. Are they as good in quality ? For instance, there is the article of underwear, shirts and similar articles that are comprised under the name of woollens. Then there are carpets, and a great variety of similar articles. Now we ought to trust to Canadian sentiment to some extent to patronize goods produced in Canada. If the articles are of equally good quality as those imported, I have no doubt that they would be extensively used in Canada. In my own province, those woollen factories which make cloths and other articles, have more orders than they can fill, and the reputation of those articles is very high. They are made of good material, they are well made, and they are durable.

Then again we must remember that in Canada these articles of Canadian tweeds, Canadian cloths, &c., have displaced the imported clothing which formerly came from England and as the taste of the people has now moved in the direction of accepting these articles which are made in Canada, great care should be taken that in their manufacture they reach the very highest artistic perfection and that they be composed of genuine materials made in Canada. There is another article, which cries out, I believe, for protection, and I ask this House and particularly hon. gentlemen opposite : Should protection be accorded to it ? I refer to the article of cotton. There are gray cottons and printed cottons. The printed cottons come from England, and, to a very large extent, from the United States. We know this is not an article that is grown in Canada. Should cotton printers and those who manufacture cottons have the same assistance as those who manufacture woollens ? Again, taking this as an illustration, should not the line be drawn between those factories which work up American and foreign goods and those which work entirely upon goods or material of Canadian growth and which articles are used by the Canadian people ? I think there are other articles the manufacture of which should be encouraged. I refer to manufactures of wood. Wood largely grows in this country, it is very useful in the manufacture of furniture and other products and an advantage might be given to these articles under the tariff. To me it seems that the articles most susceptible to the application of government favour should be those in the manufacture of which iron enters, because, this is one of the greatest industries of the new and the old worlds and is an industry in which Canada should participate and which Canada could pursue with great advantage. The raw material is here, the refining can be done here, the application of the arts can be made here and all the combinations into which iron enters can be readily carried out in Canada. Therefore, I think it should receive government assistance. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not think it mock modesty in me if I announce to you, in confidence, that the right hon. the premier has not called upon me to speak. If I could gather anything, not being exactly a mind reader, from the indications of the government I sometimes imagine that they often say : I wish to gracious he had never got up, and when he is going on, I wish to gracious he would finish soon. It was a very interesting incident in which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) figured the other day. The gentle and insinuating way in which the hon. member for Bothwell extracted from the hon. member for North Norfolk an intimation as to whether or not he was to speak was highly amusing, and also the efforts of each to get before the other and make his little pirouette before the footlights. I have to say that if the policy outlined by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) should be carried into effect, if we had a strong prohibitory tariff, if we should think it would be to the advantage of Canada, to adopt the enactment that the hon. leader of the opposition has proposed, it is quite manifest that a heavy loss would be inflicted upon some portions of the country. I think a very large proportion of the loss would be suffered by the extreme west and the extreme east. No doubt if a prohibitive tariff were adopted against the United States they would retaliate against us. How do you contemplate the compensation which ought to be given to the lower provinces for the loss of the lumber trade which might follow ? That amounts to the sum of $7,000,000 annually. Then, again the American tariff might be elevated so highly that the American people would not take the fish which are caught in the lower provinces of a valuable character and that mainly find a market there. They might prevent our fish from being admitted to the United States and if we suffered the loss of that market it might be that we would look to the government for compensation. Suppose that the duty on coal, which is now suspended in the United States, should be reimposed and increased, suppose we should lose the market that we at present enjoy in the United States and the coal owners of Nova Scotia be compensated for the loss which they would sustain through this tariff ? Suppose we were to lose the market of our plaster in the United States which is at present a large one, would we be compensated for that ? Suppose, for instance, that a duty should be placed on the salt which is used in the fisheries, and I understand there is a movement on foot to place a strong duty on salt, should not the maritime provinces be compensated for that? Suppose that we should lose our market for deals in England? A very large amount of lumber, both timber and deals, is shipped to England. We have only a market on the west coast of England, the Norwegians and Swedes have the market on the east coast of England, they are penetrating more and more to the central parts of England, and they are likely to come over to the west. They are also competing with us in pulp wood. Large mills are being erected in Norway and Sweden, and they will place pulp on the English market in enormous quantities and probably at better rates than we can supply them. Suppose a high tariff should prejudice the British people against us, suppose that we should lose that market, suppose that the additional cost that the lumber men have to pay on their supplies and provisions would make the cost of lumber higher than that at which it can be produced in Norway and Sweden and with the lower freights and shorter distances to carry the Norwegians and Swedes should exclude us altogether from that market and thus destroy to a great extent the lumbering industry which is one of the largest industries in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces—suppose these things happen, I would like to know if, under this scheme which is being proposed, parliament would be prepared to impose a duty of a dollar a ton or more on the anthracite coal which is imported into the province of Ontario. I want to know if the manufacturers of Ontario, as compensation, would submit to pay the increased cost of those articles which we are told enter so largely into the cost of these products. If we were to lose the American market and if we are to be put under the disadvantage of the increased cost of the production of the article of coal, the coal miners will naturally look to an increased market in western Canada. Are the farmers, the manufacturers and the coal consumers in any part of western Canada prepared to pay a very large additional amount for that necessary article?

Again, Sir, the loss of the carriage of these articles to Europe would cause an increase in the price of freight, and the reduction of the quantity of articles brought to the west from Europe, would cause an increase in the price of freight charged for carrying these bulky articles from the place of production to the place of consumption. England and other parts of Europe. I want also to know what compensation would be given to the labourers who handle these goods which are brought into this country. Would there be any provision made for them; would there be any scheme of superannuation when they grow old; would there be any scheme of weekly allotment of wages to compensate them for the loss of the employment which they have all along obtained? Would the miners, the exporters, the steamboat men and all others be content that their employment should suffer, and that they should lose their great industry, lose their great employment, lose the labour of their people, their wealth, their maintenance, for the sake of charging an additional tariff on goods in order that the consumption of these goods may increase. These questions are quite crude, as I have put them down, they need elaboration, and they might be elaborated by the skilful mind of the leader of the opposition. At all events, they would have to be considered. They are of living interest in the country; there are a large number of people who are concerned in them and they want to know. We are told by gentlemen on the other side that the tariff is unsatisfactory, but is it not true that with the adverse conditions which an increase in tariff would bring about, there would be a great deal more dissatisfaction. My hon. friend from St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) compared the United States with Canada, and he said in effect: that the United States had been built up by a high tariff; that it had become a manufacturing country mainly, that Canada could imitate it, that Canada would become a second United States if the tariff was increased and if we were to become a manufacturing people. Well, there is no analogy between the United States and Canada. There can be no just comparison formed between them. The United States front on two oceans; it is almost a square block of territory; it is intersected by great rivers; it has the most wonderful productions in the soil and it has all kinds of minerals in rich profusion. It has a great quantity of cultivated land; a great quantity of rich soil. It has advantages which Canada does not possess in that it is a part in the semi-tropical regions; the greater part of it, of course, being in the temperate zone. Furthermore, it is a continent, it is a continent in itself. It enjoys free trade throughout the whole of it; it enjoys its own market. There is no legislative restriction on the interchange of goods between one state and another. They have every facility of transportation; they have cheap transportation by river and canal and quick transportation by railroads and every such appliance that can be invented. The United States cannot repeat itself. It was brought into being at the most favourable epoch. The manufactures of the United States, its agricultural interests, its resources were built up in the trying times of the Napoleonic wars. They were matured and encouraged by circumstances which can never be paralleled. They obtained their vast extent, their predominance, simply because the rival nations were engaged in cutting each others throats, and destroying each others resources, and the United States at that time went on to build up her resources and to flourish. There is no comparison possible. Canada must now enter into competition with the most highly developed nation in the world. If we take the line, not of utilizing our natural resources in which we excel; not of cultivating the design of being a great user of raw material; if we take the line that we shall not aim at sending our grain, our cattle, our deals, our fish, all our products to these highly cultivated countries in Europe, and if we are to aim at rivalling them, we have undertaken a great contract. My contention is, Sir, and it is the contention of this side of the House, that we should largely follow the lines of developing our natural resources. We should not destroy ourselves by emulating our rivals or by competing with them in things in which they have a great predominating advantage. On the contrary, we should use our own resources in which we have advantages and use them for the benefit of the whole people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, you will remember that a short time ago when you and I were boys, there was a very popular economic work called 'Poor Richard's Almanac,' and Richard complained that his trade of almanac making was very much interfered with by a rival almanac-maker. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is a constructor of tables and he has great rivals in the construction of these very useful implements. There was some time ago a very interesting discussion in this House, and my ears were wringing with the eloquence of the member for Simcoe, who announced in very emphatic terms that this government had increased the duties on the articles which were consumed by the poor—cottons and other fabrics—while they had reduced the duties upon the silks and ribbons of the wealthy classes. Our rival table-maker from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) in making up his list of the articles which formed the necessaries of life on which duties were increased by the tariff in 1897, charges the government in the opposite direction, for he says: That the duties were increased from 30 to 35 per cent on ribbons of all kinds. Well, I do not think that ribbons are necessaries of life. And then, as a further necessary of life, he quotes $7,000,000 of sugar on which the duty was increased from 50 to 66 cents. I quite well remember the exhaustive and learned argument of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) on the establishment of the sugar industry, in which I believe he went the length of saying that the duty on sugar should be very much increased for the benefit of the sugar industry; while the table-maker from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) denounced the taxes which were levied on the necessaries of life by this wicked government. Mr. Speaker, we send $107,000,000 of our productions to Great Britain. How are the British people to pay for these enormous quantities of goods which they import for consumption, if the countries which send those articles do not take in exchange the products of British labour? How are they to continue to be the great absorbing market of the world, if they can give nothing in exchange? Their money would soon become exhausted. They would either have to abstain from importing those articles or they would have to convert their surplus land into wheat fields and produce for themselves many of the things which they now import. How could they find employment for their vast and teeming population if the products of their factories could not be sent to all lands with which they trade? Unless they are treated with reciprocal fairness, how can their resources continue? How long can England continue to take freely our wheat, our timber, our cheese, our cattle and everything else we choose to send, if she cannot pay for these articles with the productions of the labour, the skill and the enterprise of her own people? We know, Sir, that the great resource of England is not her army or her navy. These are her outside defences. We know that Great Britain has often in war perpetrated great blunders. At the commencement of many of her campaigns, from imperfect strategy or from lack of preparation, she has suffered defeat and discomfiture, and her resources have sometimes been reduced to a very low ebb by the military successes of other powers. But through all her wars, the war with Napoleon, the American war, the Peninsular war, the war with Russia, the resources which Great Britain accumulated from the labour of her mechanics, from the produce of her mines and the savings of her people, have carried her through all her struggles, and have brought her out triumphant at the last. Not alone her armies or her fleets, but the subsidies she was able to give to the other countries of Europe, enabled her to come through with unimpaired resources, and to spread her power and influence to all quarters of the globe, the triumphant, respected, venerable empire to which we pride ourselves to belong. And will Canadians now refuse to take a portion of her goods? Shall we put up a prohibition against British goods? When the British people take so much from us, shall we take offence at the rebuff we have had from Mr. Chamberlain, or from any one else who knows nothing about our circumstances or our affairs? Or, shall we act in a generous spirit as children of the empire, and aid Great Britain in her great financial problems? The lion is at bay, beleaguered by all the nations of Europe, ready through their protective tariffs or their governmental arrangements, to snatch the bread held in his hand. They are gathering around him, but he can fight them all; he can meet them all and vanquish them all, provided America does not combine with the nations of Europe in commercial rivalry or military operations to destroy the prestige and power of the empire. I wish my hon. friend from North

Victoria (Mr. Hughes), the Wallenstein of Canada, were here. I would ask him, although he feels himself to have been grievously treated by the British government, if he would stand up and vote for such a resolution as that proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition, knowing that the effect of it would be to aid the enemies of Great Britain in refusing to receive British goods, and to minify the resources of that great empire which depends on the labour and accumulations of her people during many years of peaceful industry.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I have had a great deal of pleasure in listening to my hon. friend and fellow countryman (Mr. Roche, Halifax), but I find it somewhat difficult to determine which side of the question he is on. I was glad to know that so far as protection to all the native industries of Nova Scotia is concerned, he was sound, and I presume that, generally speaking, he will be found not to be a local politician, but a gentleman of breadth, who is prepared to support not only the industries of his native province, but those of the Dominion generally. I was inclined to think that he was a little severe on the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) in passing over the argument which I understood him to say the hon. leader of the opposition cited on the authority of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, as to what was the proper rate of expenditure for this country, so carelessly and lightly as he did. We are inclined on this side of the House to regard the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce as a very weighty authority; and I was a little surprised to find my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) disposed to pay very little attention to that authority. As I said, I am somewhat at a loss in attempting to reply to or criticise the speech of the hon. member, because I failed to grasp very clearly what his attitude on the question of protection was. From what I heard, I rather supposed that he was inclined to support the amendment moved by his colleague from Halifax, the hon. leader of the opposition; and perhaps for that reason we should not criticise him at all, but rather welcome him to our ranks as an ally. The discussion which we have had in connection with the budget has been, as usual, one which has taken a somewhat wide range. I suppose, strictly speaking, we should confine our arguments in this debate entirely to the amendment of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition; and while I shall no doubt be permitted to avail myself of the same liberality and kindness as the House has extended to other speakers, I shall endeavour to do so as closely as possible. It is somewhat difficult to fasten oneself down to what is more particularly the object of our debate at this moment, and it is almost inevitable that one should wander more or less over the whole range of subjects introduced by the Minister of Finance in the course of the speech.

Generally speaking the result of the discussion so far has not been to emphasize any great difference of opinion between the opposing parties. I do not think that any one at all speaking from the government benches, with the exception probably of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has pronounced any strong opinion in favour of free trade or a reversion to a low tariff. Generally speaking the trend of the speeches made from the other side has been not to declare for any present increase in or revision of the tariff, but rather to discuss when is the proper time to make that revision. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance certainly did not very definitely lay down any opinion on the subject of protection or free trade. I know of no one in this House who, during this debate or at any time, has advocated what is strictly free trade. While the hon. Minister of Finance did not announce himself as opposed to the revision of the tariff, either this session or last, neither did he in either session advance any reason why this tariff revision should not be made at the proper time. Naturally he used the opportunity given him to bring prominently to the notice of the country—which I think it was perfectly legitimate for him to do—the fact that Canada is to-day in a highly prosperous condition. I now repeat what I have said on every occasion when we have had the pleasure of listening to a budget speech made in the exceedingly prosperous times in which the lot of this government has been cast, that we are as delighted as are our hon. friends opposite over this prosperity. In fact we are more so because it enables us to demonstrate to any reasonable audience that the abundant prosperity now prevailing in this country is due entirely—so far as it may be said to be due to the legislation or the efforts or the foresight of any administration—to the foresight and the wisdom of the administration which preceded the present one. Generally speaking, the country is much interested in the facts and figures given on the occasion of our annual stock taking. As a rule, the average citizen looks more particularly to the facts and figures showing our trade and the ratio in which that trade is expanding. The average citizen looks to the general impression prevailing in his own mind and to be found in the opinions of the people as well, as showing the existence of good or bad times. But he does not, as a rule, make as close and careful an estimate of our circumstances in exceeding good times as he does in those which are less cheering. He is not disposed to be so critical when times are prosperous, work plentiful and wages good, as he is at other times. Still if he will give his attention to the condition of affairs in the country generally, he will find every reason to admit that while the government has its lot cast in prosperous circumstances, on the other hand this prosperity is largely offset by the fact that he is contributing to a very large extent to the revenue and the resources of the government. Our population is increasing at a fairly good rate. It is estimated by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and no doubt fairly, that we had in Canada in April of this year about 5,500,000. At that time we were collecting from those 5,500,000 some $65,000,000. A year ago we were taking from the same people—or some 50,000 less—some $58,000,000. A year ago these 5,450,000 people had expended for them by the government nearly $64,000,000. In the course of this year, as nearly as I could estimate the expenditure for the current year—the hon. Minister of Finance did not give the exact figures in his speech—the expenditure of this country will be something like $58,500,000 down to the 30th of June. That is to say, to put it into the form in which it will come home to every man, our revenue of 1902 was $10.55 per head of the people and in 1903 it will be $12 per head. Then our expenditure, which in 1902 was $11.80 per head will this year, 1903, be $11 per head. If you multiply these figures by five and a half—taking five and a half to be the average number of a family—you will arrive at the exact amount, or nearly so, which every head of the family contribute in taxation, in one form or other, to swell the revenue and resources of the government. And on the other hand, you will find, by the same process of calculation, just about what this government is expending per head of the population. The result shows that in good times the amount of money which the government collects from the individual citizen, in one form or other, is largely increased, and that the amount which our paternal government is expending for him is still more largely increased. The net result is that just as in the case in a period of inflation, the business of the whole country is approaching the point where depression is bound to begin, so this increasing expenditure is bound, in the course of a few years, to bring about that change when the individual citizen will begin to realize that the times are not so good and that he is being taxed too heavily.

Now, though, two years ago the Finance Minister expressed the opinion that we could not always have good times, that we could not always be upon the crest of the wave of prosperity, that, under the operation of natural laws, hard times would follow the good times, yet I do not find any evidence in the financing of the present government of any great preparation for these hard times which they say they expect and which we know they must expect. We have the fact that this year there is an attempt, or a tendency to prepare for a rather more limited expenditure. But I am inclined to suspect, and I think my suspicion will prove fairly well founded, that this is not so much an evidence of a change of heart with respect to the matter I have just referred to as it is an evidence, which we may well take to heart, that the country may expect to be in the throes of a general election at an early date. It seems to me that the tariff bears evidence in several particulars to convince any disinterested person who looks at its provisions that this government will appeal to the country before long, probably before another session. I may be mistaken in my judgment, but I do not think I am. Therefore, I do not attribute to any desire on the part of the government to relieve the burden of taxation upon the people, any diminution of the tariff that we may see; but I look upon it, rather, as the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said in drawing a distinction between the ways a government may manage its business, as politics, not policy. Now, the reasons assigned by the Minister of Finance for not favouring the country with a revised tariff at this time were three. First there was the prosperity of the country, which he said was a sufficient reason why matters should not be disturbed. The second was that this government had made application to the British government for preferential treatment. The third was that negotiations were to be resumed with the United States with a view to negotiating a reciprocity treaty with that country. We have to admit, and we admit with pleasure, the fact that we have prosperity in the country. We must admit that we have rather abnormal prosperity in this country. If we look back over the years the government has been in power, we must see that this is a government that has had an exceedingly great share of good fortune. There was a series of years, when the late government was in power, when we had not one good harvest. In that I speak particularly of my own province. On the other hand there has not been a year since this government came into power when we have not had a good harvest. And, if my hon. friends opposite want an argument, an argument such as I have heard them use in the past, they have it in this fact. They may ask, as they have asked : What can be said against a government so blessed by Providence as never to have known a bad harvest ? But not only have we had exceedingly large increments of wealth from the hands of Providence in the shape of large harvests, but we have had the special advantage that, almost uniformly, we have been able to sell these large harvests at high prices. Since 1897, we have had good prices. But we are not willing to allow the government to use the argument that these good times, these great harvests and favourable prices, are to be attributed to the fact that they are in power. We are quite willing that they should make these statements to their friends. They may form themselves into a mutual congratulatory society for that purpose. But we cannot allow such a statement to pass here unchallenged. We must recall to the minds of the people the fact that while times are exceedingly good in Canada, times are exceedingly good everywhere throughout the world. To this, I presume, we may, to a certain extent, attribute the fact that we have good prices. Not only have we customers abroad who can buy what we want to sell, but those customers are in easy circumstances and can pay good prices. A good deal of time has been spent in this House arguing as to the effect of the British preference. But that preference is about to undergo the experience which generally comes to every visitor who outstays his welcome. It looks very much as though the British preference, which was hailed by the friends of the government as one of the most cherished and beloved of all the products of the brains and heart of this administration, is to have its face turned towards a cold outer world and the door closed behind it. There has been, however, a great deal of argument addressed to the consideration of this very matter. It has been argued upon the government side that the British preference has resulted in increasing British trade with Canada. And the speakers upon the government's side point to the fact that, while British trade with Canada had sunk to a point when the imports amounted to only $29,000,000, those imports have increased to $42,000,000. And as this has synchronized with the period of the British preference, so they have assumed and stated very freely—led by no less a person than the Minister of Trade and Commerce—that this very desirable result of increasing the trade of Great Britain with Canada is due to the operation of this preference tariff. Unfortunately for that argument, British trade with Canada began to increase just at a time when not only the British preference was introduced but Britain's trade with every other country commenced to increase. And, while I think it would be idle to argue that the British preference has had no effect in increasing British exports to Canada, yet, when we see an increase in the volume of Great Britain's business with every other country going on regularly from 1897 to the present time, we see that it is absolutely impossible to hope that the Canadian preference was the cause of the increase that has actually taken place in Great Britain's exports to Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that Canada's purchases in Great Britain since the preference tariff was introduced have increased, and, following that form which has always been held as a model of defective reasoning, post hoc ergo propter hoc, they say that the fact that this increase follows the introduction of the preference is of itself proof that the increase was due to the preference. The history of the trade of the world goes to show, I think, conclusively that this is not a sound contention. Nevertheless I am not at all disposed to say that the British preference has had no effect whatever in increasing the trade of the mother country with Canada. We on this side of the House, I think, looking upon it as a compliment, looking upon it as an act of grace, and kindness, and friendliness, are not disposed to find fault with that preference; but in view of what is likely to be the treatment of that preference by the government, we are disposed to repeat what we said many times in the past, that in respect of this preference the action of the government was hasty, without due consideration, and that we are not unjustified when we assert that the government of 1897 blundered into the British preference, and will probably now, in some ungracious fashion, blunder out of it.

Now, the question whether we should revise our tariff, the question whether we should increase our protection, must largely be finally decided by considering what it is that makes times so good in Canada to-day. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance holds that because we have prosperity in Canada, the tariff requires no interference. That is to a certain extent a fairly workable theory on the old principle that you should let well enough alone. But if you look carefully into the conditions which are making trade good in Canada to-day, and I suppose are making trade good elsewhere as well, you will find that a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the course of his speech the other day, was, I think, absolutely erroneous. He cited as an instance of the good working of the present system, which he described as a revenue tariff system, the fact that the imports of this country were increasing out of all proportion to the exports—if I did not misunderstand him, and I looked over his remarks again. Now, what have been the distinctive features of the trade of Canada during this period of prosperity since 1897? Whereas, during the whole history of Canada, from 1867 onwards, the imports of this country exceeded the exports by an average sum of about $14,000,000, during the present period of the regime of this government, for the most part the exports of Canada have largely exceeded the imports. We are not living in a normal condition of affairs. We are not living in Canada to-day as is the mother country habitually, in a condition of affairs in which our imports are equalled by our exports with some other resources. On the other hand, we have a condition of affairs in which the prosperity, activity and industry of Canada are producing commodities, largely natural commodities, but in some cases manufactured commodities, and in others what we might call quasi manufactured commodities, the products of the farm, largely in excess of the average imports; and we are therefore building up for ourselves a credit upon which we may draw for some years to come, and which will help us to tide over that period of depression which I think is undoubtedly in front of us, in common with all the other countries of the world.

Now, in addressing himself to the consideration of this question of protection, the Minister of Trade and Commerce confined himself altogether to a consideration of the condition of the agricultural industries, and he thought he had made a sufficient argument against protection when he said: You cannot protect the farmer. He said, The farmer ships his wheat to Great Britain, where he has to sell it in an open market in competition with farmers in every other part of the world. He has to take the market price, and we cannot protect him in the price which he receives for his wheat; and therefore, as he assumes, the whole argument is complete, and protection must be condemned because in respect of this one of the smaller items—certainly not one of the larger ones—you fail in that specific instance to protect the farmer. But how about all the other products that go to swell these exports? How about all these other products which go to constitute that enormous stream of exports which fill the treasury of Canada, enabling us to buy from the world abroad all that we require for our comfort and luxury? What about the products of the mines, the products of the fishery, the products of the forest and the manufactures of this country? In respect of every one of these you will find that between the years 1901 and 1902 there were large increases, except in respect to the mines, which show a diminution, owing to a curtailed output in the Yukon:

	1901. Millions.	1902. Millions.
Mines	41	35
Fisheries	11	14
Forest	30	32
Animals and products	55	60
Agricultural products	39	48
Manufactures	18	21

I maintain that in so far as these are concerned, there is room for a good government to do a great deal to benefit the condition of the producers, and to help them. I am not willing for a moment to limit the great principle to that one line of protection in respect of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has told us that we cannot protect the farmer. I think you can protect the farmer in assisting him to send his grains abroad to the most open market in the world. All the expenditure that Canada is making for purpose of improving the mode of farming in this country, of expediting the passage of the crops to the seaboard, of assisting the farmer in the preservation of his perishable products, in teaching him and showing him how best to place those products on the market in order to acquire the highest possible price—all that work is of the nature of protection, and it is done for that one class at the expense of all the other classes of the country. Now, that kind of work can be greatly increased. Who is there in this House that would raise his voice against a policy of the government to double or treble the expenditure made in this country to-day to enable the farmers to produce their products at a lower price, to market them at a less cost, and to attain, by any reasonable government expenditure, the highest possible price in the market? No one, I am sure. But that would be protection in the proper sense of the word. There are two ways in which you can benefit the producer and the man who has goods to sell. First of all, you can help him to get the highest price for his products. Or rather before that, perhaps yau can help him most of all by assisting him to reduce the cost of his products. That work has been done in this country, and is being done to an enormous extent, by the assistance which the government of to-day, following out the course laid down by the government of yesterday, is affording the farmers of Canada.

Now there is another cause to which are largely due the good times that we are enjoying to-day. That is, putting it in a more concrete form, the matter to which I referred a few moments ago, when speaking of the general prosperity. It is measured by the prices at which the commodities of this country and of other countries as well were selling in 1896. Take breadstuffs and other leading commodities. The prices in 1896 were 67 per cent of an assumed normal price represented by 100. In 1902, in March of that year, these prices had advanced from 67 per cent of the normal to 85 per cent. They have made an advance of 27 per cent, or nearly one-quarter above the point at which they stood in 1896. That was a time in our history when we had reached a low point of depression, a point in our history at which the government of the day were not in a position to say that their lot was cast in very happy times, and scarcely a time when the sunshine of prosperity was shedding its rays very fully upon them. But, we must remember that while we have a tremendous increase of products from the mines, our forests, and our agricultural lands, that our prosperity is not altogether owing to this great mass of products which is being placed at our disposal for sale, but it is to the favourable condition of the market to-day, and we must realize that we cannot always have plentiful harvests or good times, and that when the bad times come, when shrunken and shrivelled harvests occur, we will have shrunken and shrivelled prices as well. It should be the policy of the government not to live up to the full income which is given to it by the favourable times we are in at present, but to a certain extent, to be prepared for the bad times which unquestion-ably will be ours before very long. Generally speaking, the manner in which the people of the country ought to estimate the advantage of their position, ought to measure whether or not they are being favoured by the government, ought to estimate whether it is a good government, is to measure it by the way in which it touches themselves personally. It is in the end inevitable that the general prosperity is represented by the individual, that the wealth of the country is the wealth of the individual, that if too large drafts are being made on the individual purse, in the end it will be found that the common purse is depleted, and that the country, instead of being as prosperous as it thought itself, has not maintained and has not the power of maintaining the standard to which it has, to a certain extent, grown accustomed. Measuring it by the individual experience, you will find that these good times in which we are at the present time, have been accompanied by a tremendous draft upon the resources, the patience and the patriotism of the tax-payer. In 1896 the average taxation for customs and excise, the branches from which the government derive the largest part of its revenue from the people directly, was $5.46 per head. I am only taking the figures to be found in the official books, so as to leave the matter beyond criticism. In 1901 it had risen from $5.46 per head to $7.19 per head, or an increase of $1.73 per head, or over $10 per family.

Mr. COCHRANE. They are bleeding the people white.

Mr. BELL. I am sorry to find that one of my hon. friends on this side of the House (Mr. Cochrane) is recalling one of those old speeches which I think we in all charity should try to forget. He is reminding us of a speech in which an hon. member of the government spoke of bleeding the people white. It seems to me that the contrition which the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) must have felt hundreds of times in this House when this speech has been referred to ought to have produced for him a certain amount of forgiveness and a charitable desire to forget the old, unhappy words, and while they never cease from rankling in that hon. gentleman's mind and heart, it would be a kindness on our part not to remind him any further of them. There is, I must say, a certain amount of justification for my hon. friend who recalls that remark, because, in so far as the government of the country is concerned, the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce does not seem to make very ardent efforts to stop the process of bleeding. He does not seem to be so much opposed to whitened countenances as he was at one time. It almost seems that he had become a patron of vivisection, and was rather enjoying this bleeding process in order to ascertain how much bleeding a Canadian citizen could stand without absolutely expiring. The expenditure per head, which was $7.26 in 1896, and that was a time, when, according to our friends opposite, it was $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 too much for the good of the country, had increased in 1901 to $8.70. The revenue has gone up from $7.20 per head, to $9.55. Measured by these figures, which are put in such a form that every citizen, every householder, every head of a family, can decide for himself what was the relative advantage which he received from that protection loving government, that government which was said to favour combines and combinsters, which was said to be impoverishing the poor man and enriching the rich man, which was said to have nothing in its conscience or in its convictions, to check it from carrying Canada along on a course that was bound to end in its destruction, and what are the benefits he derives from the present government? He now has an opportunity of measuring by these simple figures, by this yard stick, that I am putting before the House, which government has been the more satisfactory, and of determining to what extent one party or the other is more deserving of his confidence. Let us, for a few moments, see what results from the process which this government is carrying on. It is not economizing, it is spending money more freely, it is not reducing taxation, it is rather increasing taxation. It is not content with being a protectionist government, as it really is, but it is a revenue tariff government as well. It cannot get enough money out of the people with a protectionist tariff alone, and therefore it adds to it a revenue tariff as well. In the mother country, today, the government levies taxation for revenue and it does not exact anything out of a protection tariff. It takes its tax upon sugar and tea, and it, in a great emergency, took a tax upon corn, and it collects in general a large amount of money from these indirect sources, but it is a revenue tariff government, and it does not take protectionist rates as well. In that respect our friends in Canada have learned not only from the government of the mother country, but from the United States, and to-day, while they are maintaining tariff rates of from 35 to 40 and often a higher percentage, they are in addition, maintaining in full force and effect every one of those great imposts which they placed upon the people when they came into power in 1897, and they are doing it in the face of the fact that they do not require it according to their own showing for the use of the country, and are simply undertaking to extract these vast sums from the pockets of the people in order that they may be able to wave over their heads a flag inscribed with the figures of the great surplus that they have heralded in order to mislead the citizens of this country as to the source from which that surplus has come, and which gives the present government the credit of being the greatest tax gathering government that Canada has ever known. The surplus in 1902 was $7,291,398, and the hon. Minister of Finance was proud of it. He has not for the first time boasted of his surplus. Two years ago he and his friends in this House were cheering and jubilating over the fact that they had the largest surplus that Canada had ever known. It was my duty on that occasion to recall to the mind of the hon. Minister of Finance and his friends the fact that they were shouting before they were out of the woods. I reminded these hon. gentlemen that they were not in possession of the largest surplus ever known, but that away back in 1883, when Canada was a comparatively small and poor country compared to its condition to-day, Sir Leonard Tilley had a surplus of $8,060,000, considerably in excess of the boasted surplus of to-day, and considering the condition of the country, if not in excess, it must be considered quite equal to the surplus which these hon. gentlemen anticipate at the end of the current year.

Our friends opposite are inclined to forget these things, or perhaps they do not take the trouble to know them. They do not seem to think, as has been well observed, that there is much profit to be derived by them from any study of the history of the parties in this country. For a time after they came into power, it was their fashion to devote all their ability to pointing to the prosperity of Canada and to citing this as evidence of the heaven born statesmanship of the gentlemen in power. All their speeches in this House year after year contained nothing of argument, contained nothing but a simple vaunting and glorification of the fact that these gentlemen were in power, that they had a tremendously increased trade and a tremendously increased surplus. To some extent age is bringing to them wisdom and experience is correcting the pruriency of youth in this respect. Latterly there has not been so much evidence of a constant desire on their part to call attention to the fact that times are good and to claim the credit for it. But to my great surprise and regret, the Finance Minister—and I take a great deal of pride and interest in him, he being a fellow-citizen of mine from Nova Scotia—much to my regret, the Finance Minister, in his budget speech, lapsed most fearfully into the old fault. In his speech he takes the four greatest years of expansion of trade that this country has ever known; he adds together the surpluses acquired in these four fat years, and he boasts that he is able to show in these four immensely prosperous years a net reduction in the debt of Canada amounting to $94,000. I suppose that the Minister of Finance may be admitted to be at least, if nothing else, a good politician, and I presume that he thinks that the recital of such figures as these, added to the fact that a Liberal administration has been in office during the time that all these good things are happening, will be a sufficient reason for the people of Canada to want to keep that particular brand of politician in office as long as possible. I presume that is his intention and purpose. Well, I do not know that it is a very convincing argument so far as I am concerned, and I do not know that it will be a convincing argument with the country. I can scarcely believe it possible that in our province of Nova Scotia, where the schoolmaster is abroad, and where we enjoy the blessing of the parish school which the Scotchman used to boast of; I can scarcely believe it possible that the Minister of Finance will be able to persuade the people of Nova Scotia at all events that because there has been a large trade in the last four years, and because the government has been unyielding in extracting the last drop of blood in the shape of taxation, and thereby rolling up an immense surplus; I can scarcely think it possible I say that that will pursuade any reasonable Nova Scotian to be thankful for the fact that he has been ground under the force of the wine press to such an extent as to enable the government to boast of the fact that out of the taxes of the people the government has reduced the debt of Canada by $94,000 in these four abundant years. But even if our education in Nova Scotia were not so advanced as it is, I think that in the Scotch county of Pictou, or in the Scotch county of Victoria, whence my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) comes, our knowledge of Scripture would help us to give an answer to the boasts of a government with such a record as that. We would be able to avail of the instruction we received in the Sabbath school and at our mother's knee, and we would recall the experience of Pharaoh, whose Finance Minister had administered fat years and lean years. If Pharaoh's Finance Minister would come to him and say: Look what a wonderful Finance Minister am I; in these four fat years I have actually cut the expenditure of the country down by $94,000 under the receipts; I have accumulated a genuine surplus of $94,000, or about $23,000 a year; what do you think Pharaoh would answer to such a Minister of Finance? In the face of the fact that Pharaoh and the rest of his people knew that the four fat years would unquestionably be associated with four lean years, Pharaoh would say to such a Finance Minister: Surely thou takest me for a sucker.

Mr. KENDALL. He would vote all right, though.

Mr. BELL. I cannot believe he would vote all right. I cannot believe it possible that the people of my province would not be saved either by their knowledge of Scripture or by their knowledge of arithmetic, and that they would not agree with Pharaoh that the Finance Minister should have been able to report something better than that. If in a condition of things which has been unparalleled in Canada, and during a time when there were no great public works to construct, no unusual demands made upon the treasury; if during these times which are absolutely unexampled in their prosperity, and when conditions exist that might have justified the claim of this government to being the greatest administrators Canada has ever known; if in the presence of all these things they can only keep the expenditure of this country under the revenue by $23,000 a year, I say, Sir, that they have failed to establish the fact that they are an able, or a competent, or an economic administration.

Now, Sir, the amendment which has been moved by the leader of the opposition is to the effect that we should at once proceed to change the tariff; not to change it radically, because to my mind that is not necessary. We are to-day, on both sides of this House, either supporting or opposing, as the case may be, an administration which is a protectionist administration. I cannot for a moment see how my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) can sit with any kind of comfort or quiescence on his side of the House at all, because he is undoubtedly, as he takes occasion to let the House know, an ardent free trader.

Mr. NORTHRUP. He used to be.

Mr. BELL. How can my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) content himself to sit under the administration that is now in power, and be content to believe that he is a free trader?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Where would I go?

Mr. BELL. Well, if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ross) is going to support a protectionist government at all, he should support one that has the proper brand of protection to offer. Let him come to this side of the House and assist us in getting a little more protection—not a bit more than this government professes to be willing to give—but to get it at such a time as it will serve the interests of the country. Then, if my hon. friend is anxious to know where he must go, I would suggest that he must form a government of his own. My hon. friend is very fond of telling stories. I remember one which I think would fit his case. A preacher was telling about the two great roads—the narrow one which led to salvation, and the broad one which led to perdition—and a coloured brother who was listening said: 'In that case, this coon must take to the woods.' My hon. friend, I think, will have to take to the woods to get comfort, for in my opinion he has not a very happy home on the side of the House where he is now.

The motion before the House is substantially that the protection which we have in Canada to-day is not adequate or sufficient, and we should at once adopt increased protection or modify or change the protection which we have in such a manner as to make it more effective. There is no doubt that the Finance Minister is right when he says that at present a great number of orders are coming to the manufacturers, and that their difficulty is in procuring labour and in filling orders. He is not as entirely right in that respect as he was a year ago or two years ago; because any one who is in contact with the manufacturers in this country must know that the day is comparatively past when orders were thrust upon them, when it was not a matter of price, but how to get the goods. If I am not mistaken, the time has come when the old forms have to be gone through, when the producer has to seek the customer instead of the customer chasing after the producer. The fact is, judging this matter entirely from an economic standpoint, it is impossible to deny that this government is logically in a position to give the country more protection. It is impossible to doubt what their duty is to-day. There is no reason why they should balk at or shrink from giving the country protection. To my mind the rather apt expression of my hon. friend from St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) applies to the whole position of Canada to-day, when he said that the course followed by the administration did not represent policy, but politics. Why should the government hesitate to give the country a little more protection? The government of Canada is in a far better position to give an increased rate of protection to-day than it was in 1897 to give the rate of protection which we have now. This government came into power in 1896 fully pledged to do away with protection. It had gone through a great many changes of mind as a party. It had wooed the public of Canada under a great many guises. It had been a commercial unionist, it had advocated unrestricted reciprocity, it had worn the clothes of the advocate of continental free trade, and finally it approached the last election, at which it was victorious, in the garb of an advocate of a revenue tariff of the brand they have in England. When the government came into power in 1896, it was pledged so far as a party could be pledged by the utterances of its leading men, to do away with protection in Canada. There could be no question about those utterances. The right hon. leader of the government, when he visited Winnipeg, told the people of the west that he was there to preach to them the gospel of free trade, that it was the message that would bring them relief from bondage, that it was not an imaginary bondage, but as real as that which had existed in the United States, and that he would lead them out of that bondage to a land flowing with milk and honey, the land of free trade. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, too, exhausted the resources of the language in pronouncing the protective system as one which was not human, as one which was inhuman, and he posed as the St. George who was going to pierce the dragon of protection with his spear. If we wanted examples to place in our school books and to put into the hands of our children as everlasting warnings against a disposition which was irrational, insincere and unsound, we could do nothing better than take extracts from the speeches delivered by the Finance Minister and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and other members sitting in the government of Canada to-day. These hon. gentlemen came into power in 1896 pledged to abolish protection. Did they abolish it?

Mr. COCHRANE. Not much.

Mr. BELL. I think that is a very good answer; it exactly summarizes the situation. They could easily say that they had no mandate from the people to abolish protection or to introduce free trade, and we are bound to say that that is true. They were not elected in 1896 upon their tariff policy. It was not a decision of the people that they wished to turn from protection and revert to free or freer trade. Hon. gentlemen opposite were put into power largely as the result of an agitation and a movement which drew a line across the tracks which the two parties had been following, and which had created the most extraordinary alliances, and out of the action of those extraordinary alliances the present government came into power. Therefore, I feel grateful that they did not give us free trade in 1897. Between the contending forces in the government, some for free trade, some for revenue tariff, and others for common sense and protection, if I were not convinced that common sense and protection would be successful, I would regard the hon. gentlemen as benefactors, because they have failed to do what they pledged themselves to do. They might have taken the reverse course; they must have said: We must be consistent; there are people who supported us because we professed ourselves ready to bring about free trade.

I do not, in my own heart, believe that they had a mandate from the people, when they were elected in 1896 to change our policy. They had ample excuse for doing so. They had claimed for years that the Conservative policy was a mistaken and damaging one which they were going to change. They did not change it in 1897. On the contrary they gave us the same policy that came down form the Conservative party since 1879. All they did was to make some small reductions in the tariff. According to some statisticians on the other side, the reductions they made ranged from one to one and a half per cent—not very far from one per cent. Contrast this with what was done by previous administrations. The Conservative administration, which previously held office, never for a moment denied that they were protectionists, yet they often made greater reductions in the tariff, when they thought it was in the interests of the country, than have been made by the present government. So that so far as regards the extent to which they have reduced the average taxation of the country, these gentlemen had every example from the Conservative government to warrant them in going to the extent they did. But now when there is undoubtedly a demand from the country and from the manufacturers for greater protection, this government hesitates to give that for which the people are clamouring. How is it that this government, which did not hesitate to incur the charge of shameless inconsistency by keeping intact in spite of all its professions, the system it had denounced for years in opposition as one of oppression, ruin and tyranny, which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was wont to stigmatize as responsible for all conceivable ills, real and imaginary, refuses to-day to act one way or the other. We now find the hon. Minister of Finance resorting to any and every kind of argument as an excuse for not doing anything. My own opinion is that in this case hon. gentlemen opposite, if without a policy, are not without a following. You will find to-day that the forces of this country are making for increased protection. Go over the proceedings of parliament since 1879, and you will find that there has ever been a conflict between the partisans of a high and a low tariff. You can see it in our debates and in our legislation. The live question which divided the two parties has always been the question of protection to our industries. That question is still paramount. There is still a great demand for increased protection, and that demand is largely due to the fact that in 1897 the government plunged into the British preference. If they had not thrown that little sop to the free traders—for that is what it was—the people and the manufacturers to-day might have been fairly well content. But the result of the operation of that one feature, in respect of which they departed from the protective system, is the trouble they now suffer. I was not much amiss last session when I compared the government to Sinbad the sailor staggering along under the weight of the old man of the sea whom he had unwisely taken upon his shoulders and of whom he could not get clear. What is the position of the government to-day on this question? No one can tell. Last session there was agitating in the country, delegations were here waiting on the government, but the Minister of Finance shelved the question for the moment and gave the country to understand that the tariff revision would take place this year. He never said that tariff revision would never take place. All he said was that the time was not yet opportune. And he left the impression that in another year he would revise the tariff. What do we find to-day? We find a change of wording but the very same plea used for doing nothing. The policy of the hon. Finance Minister is a do nothing policy. His policy is to borrow another year from the future. He is not pressed at the moment very hardly, but he might be if he undertook to decide the question. Therefore his argument to-day is exactly in the line of his argument a year ago. He furnished reasons why nothing should be done now, but he does not say that he will never do anything. Just look at the beautiful position in which this policy leaves the government. When in opposition these hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches had the support of the free trade element and also the support of those who were in favour of reciprocity with the United States, as well as of those who advocated reduced taxation and cheapened living. And we have the authority of the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that, at the last moment, in 1896, they also secured the support of the manufacturers by giving them the promise that if returned to power they would keep faith with the manufacturers and break faith with the free traders and those who favoured reciprocity. Viewed from the standpoint of a politician, the position of the government is an admirable one. If politics were statesmanship, if evasion of resposibility were the crowning mark of a statesman, I would say that the budget speech was exceedingly clever, and that the situation created for the government, with the assistance of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is an admirable one. Here we have the Finance Minister practically promising protection. He says there is no reason why I should not give you protection but I will not give it just now. But as an assurance of my intention, I give you $7 a ton protection on steel rails, which surely is an ample measure coming from a free trader. Then comes the Minister of Trade and Commerce who makes a speech in praise of free trade. He has the audacity to tell the people that the present tariff is not protective at all but a free trade policy. He has the assurance to declare to the people that all the evils which existed under this tariff, while the Conservatives were in office, disappeared the moment the Liberals took charge of the administration. He said that the tariff previous to 1897, which we all know is practically in existence to-day, drew $2 from the people for every one that went into the treasury, and then he proceeded calmly to argue that ever since 1897, by some mysterious mystical working out of a similar tariff, the extraction of the $2 from the pockets of the people has ceased—that while the government gets its one dollar, there is no tribute of two dollars to the manufacturers. This is arrant humbug—if I may use that expression without violation of parliamentary rules, Mr. Speaker—it is asking the people of Canada to believe something which is manifestly absurd. To say that a tariff of 35 per cent previous to 1897 passed two dollars into the pockets of the manufacturer and one dollar into the public treasury, and that that same tariff of 35 per cent in 1897 ceased altogether to have that effect and that the two dollars are now left in the pockets of the people and only the one dollar taken out which was taken for the government by the Conservative government, is arrant humbug. If such assertions as that can be accepted by any rational creature as argument when given forth, as they are, with all the fluency and assurance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, they may have some effect. But, to my mind, the only effect is to make every citizen wonder that any man can have the audacity to stand up in the parliament of Canada and seek to establish such a proposition. Now, you will see that the government has two strings to its bow. The Minister of Finance is ready to oblige the manufacturers at the right time, while the Minister of Trade and Commerce appeals to the farmers. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce tells the people that, though they pay increased taxation on their sugar and tobacco, and the same taxation on cottons, woollens, and many other manufactures, there is no longer a protectionist tariff in existence but that they are living under a free trade system, those who believe in the Minister of Trade and Commerce and in free trade will naturally be prepared to vote for the maintenance and continuance of such an admirable policy, a policy which, by some mysterious process, keeps the old system in force and yet gets rid of its bad effects. But, to make the thing complete, and to make an ideal condition for a government going to the country, they are not satisfied with the manufacturers and the free traders, but they are going after that class, no matter how few or how many they may be, who believe in reciprocity. And, so we find the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who came last year and propounded a big, manly policy—so far as words went—of meeting hostile tariff with hostile tariff and extending a measure of good-will and favour to the country that showed good will and favour to us—we find that hon. gentleman, at the beck of the government, ready to assure the people of the country, as the Minister of Finance is doing, that the time for increasing the protection against the United States, the time for setting up a tariff that will admit of a 40 per cent reduction has not come. It will come—when? Next year? May be next year or in two years hence. But, at the moment, the hon. gentleman who argued so strongly and conclusively last year that it was essential to the people of Canada to assert their independence and manhood by meeting the hostile act of the American administration with a tariff that would put our manufacturers, farmers and other producers in a position of independence and equality, is induced to use his great authority with those who hold that particular brand of opinion to say, with the Minister of Finance, that that time has not come to follow this particular policy. So, you have a policy announced and advocated by the government and its supporters that will allow everybody, no matter what his opinions and hopes and wishes are, to vote for the government. And, no matter what his opinions may be, he has as good a chance as anybody else of getting what he wants. I think that a government that can take such a position as that is very fortunate. The only drawback that may cause us to say that they are not fortunate is that the people of the country may see through it and express the opinion which I have always thought was held by the people, that the government to administer the affairs of this country ought to have a clear, decided policy and express it honestly, that a government that would try to ride even two horses, much more a government that would try to ride three horses, would be sure to come to the ground. And, for my part, I feel that, by the course they pursue, they forfeit all confidence and all claim to the vote of every man who has opinions upon public questions and desires to see in control of Canadian affairs a government with a declared policy, ready to stake its existence upon the success of that policy.

There is one thing about this government which I think is very admirable from an educational point of view—it is a government that can learn. As I have said, they came into power pledged to free trade. They were only in power a few months when they learned that that would not do, and they adopted protection. They threw a sop, as I have said, to the free trader in setting up the British preference. I do not know anything that was ever so vaunted and magnified in this country as that alleged concession to the British people, the so-called British preference. They felt so strongly on the subject, that one time, their only course, when any objection was raised, was to challenge hon. gentlemen on this side with the question: Would you repeal it? Manifestly, it was one of the most sacred things in the house of their gods. They could not believe that any man on this side would have the audacity to touch the sacred thing. But hon. gentlemen on this side were not slow to give their opinion. They said: There is nothing in the British preference so dear to us as the prosperity of the Canadian producer, and the Conservative party cannot be frightened by a bugaboo of that kind. You cannot silence us by saying that the Conservative party is not loyal to Great Britain. The record of the Conservative party was too good, too manifest, too consistent, to give members of it cause to fear. The Conservative party was in a position to act upon its judgment, it was in a position to say: No, we will not bind ourselves to support the British preference, unless it can be shown that it can be maintained without injury to Canada. Even up to two years ago, hon. gentlemen on the other side were ready to stake their existence upon the maintenance of the British preference. Where are they to-day with reference to that subject? There can be no doubt that in the correspondence and proceedings of the conference of colonial premiers there is a threat—it may be a veiled threat, but it is a distinct one—addressed to the British government, that if the government of Canada does not receive a quid pro quo, if it does not receive concessions in return for the concessions it has made, it will know how to act. So, this government is one that can learn—it has learned. It has learned from its Conservative opponents to become protectionist, to maintain a protectionist system in force, and it has learned that the criticism directed by its opponents directed against this so-called British preference, was sound. Hon. gentlemen on this side, even when this so-called British preference was proposed, declared that it was not a British preference, but involved a preference with any country that had a treaty with Great Britain, having in it the most favoured nation clause. They laughted at this assertion, but they learned that it was right in the course of time. This so-called British preference was decided by the British courts to be a preference to be applied to every nation in the world that had a treaty with Great Britain calling for most favoured nation treatment. They were very fortunate then in the fact that the British government, in order to help them out of what was unquestionably a very awkward situation, incurred a certain amount of odium and ill-will from the German people and the Belgian people by denouncing the treaties which caused that state of affairs. And it was not the wisdom of this government of Canada, it was not their foresight, or their knowledge of the conditions that would ensue upon the establishment of the British preference, that kept them out of trouble, it was the kindness and assistance of the British government which got them out of trouble after they got into it.

Now these gentlemen are in a very awkward situation indeed. They have as usual talked far too much. The right hon. the Prime Minister who leads the government, and other gentlemen as well, have assured the British people over and over again that the preference was not given in a huckstering spirit, that we wanted nothing for it. The Prime Minister definitely told the British people that it was given in return for that splendid freedom which we enjoy in Canada. Now we still enjoy that splendid freedom. Why, then, do the present government propose to withdraw the British preference? The manifest objections that existed when it was first given, involving the same concession to some twenty other countries in the world, had been removed by the assistance of the British government; there is not the same objection to the British preference to-day that there was then; why, then, is it not to be maintained? How is it that this government, which has been in power for six years, and which began with such magnamious declarations, such broad and kindly views, with such a complete absence of anything like chaffering, or bargaining, or huckstering—how is it that this administration to-day, after having assured the people of Great Britain that this concession was not given for a price, are now prepared, so far as we can judge, to withdraw that concession from the British people? To my mind they are at last convinced that that British preference has been carried too far, has been raised to such a point that it is really inflicting a certain amount of injury upon certain branches of manufactures in Canada; and seeing no other way to relieve those branches of manufacture from the injury they are now receiving, the government has made up its mind to do a disagreeable and unpleasant duty. They are going to do that in the interest of the manufacturers of Canada, and if we can judge at all from their words, they are going to repeal that British preference.

Now they have to a certain extent repealed it already in connection with the surtax which they have imposed upon importations from Germany. They have to a certain extent deprived the preference of the value which it had in the minds of the British merchants. The British manufacturer is one man, and the British merchant is another. The British people are perhaps almost greater as merchants than they are as manufacturers. They gather into their markets the products of the whole world, and distribute them again to the whole world. Now the concession made to the people of Great Britain by Canada in the form of a preference, had a large part of its value from the fact that it permitted not only the British manufacturer but, the British merchant as well to send into this country the goods which he had purchased in the marts and workshops of the various countries of Europe. That part of the value of the preference is all wiped away. They have not made a formal withdrawal of the preference, but you will find, in connection with the imposition of the surtax of one-third upon the duties levied upon German goods, that all goods imported from Great Britain, of which the major part of the value is derived from work done in Germany, are to be subjected to the surtax; the British merchant will find that, instead of getting on those goods a reduction of one-third, he will have to pay an increase of one-third. So that, so far as the products of German workshops are concerned, the preference has already been withdrawn from the people of Great Britain.

Now there is apparently a very strong opinion in the mother country that that preference is either of no value, or is not of sufficient value to warrant them in making any concession to us. They have refused within a few months to give to the people of this country a concession in respect to the cattle trade, which the people of this country feel they ought to receive, and which would be of great value to them. They have within a few hours repealed the corn duties, which were somewhat unexpectedly imposed upon grain last year by the British parliament, and which gave us the only hope we ever had that we would get a preference in the British markets. That hope has gone. There is, I fear, a certain amount of danger that a little ill-feeling may grow up between ourselves and the mother country in respect to this matter. In my opinion, now that the preference has been given to the mother country, I think it would be better, if any other way in the world could be found in which we could obviate or prevent the injury that is being suffered by certain manufacturers in Canada without repealing the preference, I would say that would be a preferable course to adopt. The Canadian government has not formally repealed the preference, though it has to a certain extent, as I say, repealed it so far as the German goods are concerned. But there is absolutely no necessity why the Canadian government should repeal the preference. They can continue it. All it has to do is to follow the course that has been advocated and adopted in every country in the world that has a tariff in existence to-day, that is to say, where the tariff is an important matter, and where it has had to be changed to meet changing conditions and to meet friendly and unfriendly legislation on the part of other governments. All that is necessary for this government to do is to raise their general tariff, the very thing we are asking them to do. At this moment, by raising their general tariff, they can continue to give the people of the mother country that same preference which they now enjoy over every nation in the world. And this is what the mother country might expect of us, and it is, I think, a thing that we ought if possible to do. For my part I should be very sorry indeed to see the preference struck down or taken away in such a manner as might cause a great change in that feeling of kindness and good-will which it excited when it was given, and which it drew forth in large measure from the people of the mother country.

Now there were several other matters touched upon by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his speech on the budget. I have already referred to his extraordinary declaration as to the effect of the tariff. Now the Minister of Trade and Commerce has again this year referred to a subject which he dealt with largely last year. He deals in striking assertions, and he has again this year repeated an argument which he used last year when he wished to make capital for his party out of the prosperity of the country. He argued that because Canada is prosperous under the present tariff, the present tariff is the cause of prosperity. In connection with that argument he referred last year to the census of this country. In order to maintain his argument that Canada has made no progress during the last years of the Conservative administration, he asserted that the exodus from this country had been completely stopped. If all these things were true, I suppose we would have to admit that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had furnished certain reasons why things were well enough and we should not ask for a change. But the fact of the matter is that there is no warrant, so far as I can discover, for these assertions. They rest upon the bare affirmation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I think a little examination will show that probably he is entirely mistaken in what he says in that regard. He asserts that the census of 1891 was absolutely wrong, that the figures were largely concocted; while at the same time he argues that the figures of the census of 1901 were correct.

Now these two censuses have been made by two different administrations. If one of these censuses be wrong the chances are that the last census is not the accurate one. The census of 1891 was made by trained enumerators. It was made by the same gentlemen who had made the enumeration in 1881. They were, to a certain extent experienced, while in 1901 the enumerators came to the business new and without previous experience. The enumerators had more to do, they had a larger number of schedules to fill in, and the chances are that the errors correspondingly increased. Taking the estimated population of Canada as made by a mathematical calculation from the census of 1891, and when the estimated population came in 1901 to be corrected, by the new census, the possible error in the original estimate in 1891 could not have exceeded 1 per cent, and it may not have exceeded it at all, because the error was more likely to occur in 1901 than in 1891. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce says the exodus has ceased altogether, that it was very active and that a great number of people were going out of Canada under the national policy as administered by a Conservative government, and that it had ceased under the national policy as administered by a Liberal government. The figures which I read in the House last year are still available to any one who wishes to see them. A census taken by the Comonwealth of Massachusetts goes to show that the exodus, instead of diminishing after 1896, rather increased, and that more people actually went out of Canada and into the United States after the incoming of the present government than before the incoming of the present government. Therefore, that argument advanced by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to persuade the people that the country is prospering at the present time and that the cause of this prosperity is a revenue tariff, falls to the ground as far as the census is concerned. The census is rather an important affair in the history of Canada, and possibly a few moments of consideration may not be out of place. Last year one of the reasons advanced by the right hon. Minister of Finance why we should not have a revision of the tariff at that time was that the schedules relating to manufactures in the census were not completed. It is a rather singular fact that they are not completed yet. Two years have elapsed since the census was taken. Apparently the government laid the greatest possible stress on the importance of these schedules of manufactures. It was apparently waiting to obtain all the information in order to settle upon its policy, and although this service is entirely under the control of the administration, a remarkable fact exists that up to the present moment, two years after the census is taken, the members of the House of Commons have not seen one of these manufactures' schedules, and so far as I can discover, they are not likely to see them. We are practically told that the expenditure on the census is completed. Still all these important schedules which would reveal the advancement being made by this country in the matter of manufactures are still unclassified and untabulated and useless to the people.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister of Finance said they had been completed.

Mr. BELL. The enumeration may have been made, and the other day I received the schedule relating to the agricultural condition of New Brunswick, but, as far as I know, no progress has been made in the preparation of the schedules relating to the manufactures of Canada, and judging from the amount set down in the estimates, and the assurances we received the other day that only $10,000 more was to be expended on the census, it looks almost as if that work is not to be completed at all. Now, this is a very extraordinary thing. The hon. Minister of Finance was waiting last year for these particular schedules. He was not in a position to revise the tariff last year, and after waiting a year, we find that he is still disposed to wait another year, and not at all disposed to find fault with the fact that this census, which has cost as much as the last two censuses, and twice as much as the last census, and is probably the worst census that has ever been taken in Canada, has not been completed. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he gets up to assure this House and the people of Canada that the census of 1891 deserve to be looked upon with suspicion, and to be criticised as inaccurate, is probably entirely wide of the mark.

Now, I do not wish to detain the House much longer, but I really feel as if it would not be amiss to call attention to a few things which were not in the budget speech. We find that there is a certain amount of protection. We have a tax of $7 per ton to be imposed on steel rails, but there are a great many things which are generally looked upon as proper and which generally find a place in the budget speech that did not find a place in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) drew a very amusing contrast between Canada and the United States, the most amusing contrast I have ever listened to, for in every thing he said, except in one or two items, the circumstances of the two countries were practically the same. One of these exceptions was the tropical or subtropical section of the United States. We were told that the United States fronted upon two oceans. Well, Canada fronts upon two oceans. We were told that the United States had enormous resources and rich lands. Canada has these. But, in speaking of one of these matters, I think he did make out a case. He pointed to the fact that Canada had no tropical or subtropical region. Undoubtedly, Canada has not, and in respect of that matter it is not probably as well rounded out as the United States, but I do not know that we would be willing to exchange our present climate and northern mining regions for the subtropical regions of the United States, which will not produce as good citizens as the hardy men of our high lands. But, there is a chance for a progressive and able government that is willing to stake its existence on the policy which it may enunciate to secure for Canada a tropical region in the West Indies. Two or three years ago the hon. Minister of Finance did seem to be making a little effort to secure trade relations with the Island of Trinidad, in respect to which, however, I fear he was not very successful. Although this is one of the most important questions from a national standpoint that could engage the attention of the government, no progress has been made, and apparently no attention has been given to this subject. It would be of the highest importance that all the British possessions on the American continent should be gathered together under one government. It would round out our nationality, it would make of Canada a microcosm, it would make a complete world in itself, and give a market for the produce of our fisheries in those islands, and a market for the sugar of those islands in this country. It would be worthy of the statesmen of Canada to undertake to bring these islands of the Carribbean sea under the flag of Great Britain that waves over Canada, but although this is an important matter, and although attention is called to it from time to time, alhough it is mentioned in this House year after year, we find, so far as we can judge, that the government has not even attempted to deal with the subject, and has nothing to report in connection with it. There is another matter of even greater importance. There is the island of Newfoundland, the oldest British colony in the world practically, outside of the home island, and the oldest British possession in America. There is an island whose possession at some time or other is absolutely essential to the welfare of Canada. It commands the great sea approach, the gulf of St. Lawrence, in such a fashion as to make it impossible for the citizens of Canada ever to contemplate without shrinking, the idea that it should pass into the possession of any other power. It ought to be part of the confederation of Canada, and the work of bringing it into the confederation is the only work left to be done, because the statesmen of the Conservative party have completed the rest of the work so far as the northern part of the American continent is concerned. The work of bringing that last outlying post of British population within a Canadian nationality, is one that lies unquestionably at the door of this government. And yet we find that towards this question of the very highest national importance, this question that is so urgent that one must think it calamitous should the object not be accomplished; towards this question our government is apparently indifferent. So far as we know, they entirely ignore its vast importance. It may be that there is correspondence, and we will, perhaps, get it some time, but so far as we can judge, no progress has been made towards bringing in Newfoundland, nor is there in the mind of the government of Canada any aspiration in that direction.

Then again, this government has made no effort to secure new markets for this country. The only action they have taken is in regard to our trade, is to impose a surtax on German products, and that I consider an exceedingly proper course to adopt. But that is in the direction of curtailing our markets and not of increasing them. It is, however, the right course to follow, and I was rather surprised to find that two years ago, speaking in the budget debate, when I took occasion to recommend the very course that has been followed, namely, that increased taxation should be imposed on the products of Germany, the Minister of Finance answered me by saying that the government had already imposed a preferential tax against Germany, and he argued that in so far as they had given a preference to Great Britain they had imposed a disability on the German empire, and they were disposed to rest satisfied with that. I am glad to say that in this respect as well as in others, the government has shown itself willing to learn, and that it has bowed to the suggestion of the opposition, and in respect to that its action in that particular it has the support and the good wishes of every man who sits in His Majesty's opposition in this House.

I believe, Sir, that the great question that is uppermost in the minds of the people of Canada is: Are we going to have a more active and a more positive realization of the purpose of keeping Canadian trade for Canada and the Canadian people? It has been argued by the Minister of Finance that a policy of Canada for the Canadians would mean the disintegration of Canada; would mean the separating of the west from the east, because he alleges that the west and the east have such diverse interests that they cannot be harmonized. If that were the case, we would have no nationality. If you could not get the inhabitants in one section of Canada to be willing to co-operate with those of another section in order to maintain a common policy for the common good, you would have no nationality and you would have no Canada. Such a suggestion coming from the Minister of Finance shows that he is not telling us seriously what he thinks on that subject. There is no country in the world in which the inhabitants living in different sections have not diverse interests. The people of the British Isles, two or three hundred years ago, were further apart, more divided by race, as much divided by religion, more divided by interests, and most of all divided by the want of intercommunication, than is the case with Canada to-day. But all this did not prevent the development of the home land, and it should not prevent the development of any part of the empire outside of the home islands in which there are the advantages that we in Canada possess. The existing conditions in Canada should not prevent us looking to a homogeneous population, all of the same education politically, all of the same aspirations, and all with the same dream of a great imperial federation in which Canada is to occupy a foremost part. If it were possible to have in Canada a people who were so local and so selfish that they could not realize a national policy for the common good, and could not be filled with a common desire for the welfare of Canada, then we would not be the people that we are. But with such a population as we have, there is every reason to believe that there should not be any trouble in persuading the people of every section of this country to join in a policy which would be for the good of all. In opposition to that idea of a harmonious Canadian nationality, we had the speech of the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who was put up to advocate the cause of reciprocity with the United States. That hon. gentleman advocated a policy, which if it could be enforced, would break Canada up into three or four sections. You would have on the Pacific coast a commonwealth composed of two or three states of the American union, and the province of British Columbia. You will have in Ontario a people who had no care for their fellow-citizens of British blood in the east and west, but whose whole trade and whose whole sympathy would be with the people of New York, and Ohio and Indiana. And the people of the maritime provinces living under the idea involved in the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) would carry on their commercial affairs with the people of the United States, and on the whole you would perfectly destroy for ever that Canada which is in existence to-day. The fact that we have a Canada; that we have a national policy; that our statesmen in the past have found it possible to persuade the people of Ontario to submit to a tax on coal and the people of the maritime provinces to submit to a tax on flour and cornmeal, because in doing so they are giving vitality to a national policy; all these facts accomplished in the past are a guarantee that they can be continued and should be continued with much more ease and much greater facility in the future. It is a very short-sighted policy, to my mind, to endeavour to persuade the people of Canada that the interests of the west cannot be harmonized with the interests of the east. It is quite easy to show that the interest of the arable west is at present very largely in the one direction. They are producing wheat. It is said you cannot protect the farmer. Well, the western farmer cannot be improved so far as his conditions are concerned as a farmer, because his conditions are absolutely perfect to-day. He has a magnificent soil, a perfect climate. He has seed time and harvest, and he is not subject to the interruptions which come to us in the lower provinces from the broken seasons we have there. He has an ideal condition of farm life, but he has one disadvantage—he is out there on the plains producing wheat and the farmers about him are producing the same crop; they are competing with one another; his disadvantage comes when he goes to market, because the wheat which is grown by himself and his neighbours who are his rivals, is to be sold on the other side of the Atlantic ocean, thousands of miles away. He has to go five or six thousand miles before he can sell his wheat. Will you not protect that farmer when you can build up at Brandon, at Winnipeg, at Sault Ste. Marie, at all the towns of Ontario and Quebec, large manufacturing and commercial centres? You can protect the western farmer in the most effective and complete fashion by giving him consumers in Canada. But more than that, I think it would be anything but statesmanlike to admit that the people of the west are to be for ever limited to the productions which they have now. To my mind the salvation of the people of the west is involved in their ceasing to be wheat growers exclusively, and in becoming mixed farmers. They are doing the best they can at the moment; they are doing that which is ready to their hands; and the conditions are so favourable that they are producing wealth to an enormous degree, and the whole of Canada is reaping the benefit of it. But any one who knows what the best conditions for the development of our race are, knows that the man who is living in a small house, and is merely a producer of wheat on an open plain, is not living under conditions tending to develop his highest characteristics as a man. These can only be realized by bringing to the prairies the mixed husbandry of the older provinces, and to that end the policy of the government must contribute as rapidly as possible. Not only is this important to the western provinces, but to the east it is absolutely essential. Though we are greatly interested in the west, we must not forget the east. We have not in the eastern provinces the great perfection of soil and climate that they have in the west. Our conditions in the east are such as to make it out of the question that the people there shall become great producers of grain. They cannot, in fact, realize the conditions of the west. In the east we can realize the condition of the husbandman who pursues mixed husbandry. But in spite of the assertions of the Finance Minister, the exodus in eastern Canada has not ceased and the people who are leaving are not going to the west; they are not tempted even by those marvellous lands of the Saskatchewan valley and the great plains; but they are going to the United States, to a highly protected country, to the manufacturing cities of the New England states, and it would be impossible to change the character or the disposition of those people. They are not disposed to be farmers; they are not convinced that the highest condition of life would be realized by their becoming farmers; but they wish to live a life of greatly diversified interests in which the manufacturing interests should occupy a very prominent and important place. These men do not want to live on a thousand acre farm without a neighbour within a mile and a half of them. They want to live in cities where you can enjoy not only all the conveniencies and comforts and pleasures available in cities to men with reasonable incomes, but where they can share the luxuries and refinements of life, and indulge their taste for the graceful and the beautiful. The disposition of these people is not only to go to the cities of the United States, but to build up cities in our country as well; and no policy would be the best for Canada or can secure the approval of the Canadian people, which does not recognize that there are in the country great and varied possibilities entirely outside of the production of wheat even on the most fertile acres in the world. We want to build up in this country a state with great industrial resources. Who are the people who are taking the lead in the world today? They are the great manufacturing peoples; and with our vast country capable of supporting two hundred millions of people as rapidly as they can be put into it, with the skill and energy of our people, with our illimitable and varied resources, we should aim to develop the highest possible state of civilization, and to realize that ideal we must have not alone an agricultural population, but a people trained in all the varied pursuits that are to be found in countries which at this moment stand in the van of civilization. Therefore, while it may be good politics and good tactics on the part of the administration of the day to so shape their tariff and so control their discussions as to let the public of Canada feel that they will not be unfavourable to them, whether they are lovers of free trade or a revenue tariff or reciprocity or protection, it is not a position that stamps it as an administration of clear convictions, but rather as a do-nothing, opportunist administration, and one which cannot and ought not to have the hearty and earnest support of the people of Canada.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Mr. Speaker. On account of the agitation which has been going on throughout the Dominion, particularly during the past year, with reference to the tariff question, I think it is the duty of every member of this House to place himself on record as to what he considers is the best fiscal policy for this country. There are certain deterent influences, Sir, which might prevent a person not much accustomed to public speaking from addressing this House at this time. I mentioned last year, and the same thing applies this year, that one very deterent influence especially for young members, is the lack of attention which is paid to speeches in this House, and the very few members who remain in the Chamber while the debate is going on. There is another influence which may perhaps deter some members from speaking much in this House of Commons. It is this. If the mathematical calculation of our friend from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) is correct, the expense of running this House is $28 a minute, and some of us may be afraid to score up a very large bill against the Dominion, for fear our electors may call us to account for it when we return home. For instance, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who closed the debate last evening ran up a bill of $3,380, if the calculation of the hon. member for Elgin is correct. Some of us may have some doubt as to whether the speech was worth it or not, but that is a matter for the hon. member to settle with his constituents.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). I have not had sufficient time at my disposal to figure up his account.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He would have a big bill.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). This debate has gone on for several days and some twenty members have spoken. Some of them have done what I intend to do before I sit down, namely, to give my own views regarding the best fiscal policy for this country, but in the case of a great many of them it would be very hard to ascertain just what their views were. I am free to admit that every member of this House must be to a certain extent influenced, it may be imperceptibly, by the environment in which he is placed. I do not mean by this that I think it is the duty of every member to try and square himself with his constituents, although probably there may be a temptation to do that. It is my idea, but of course I may be wrong, that one of the objects which a great many members of this House must have in speaking at such length as they do, is in order to get their speeches down on 'Hansard' and circulated through the country and in their constituencies. Apart from that I cannot see very much use in a great many of these speeches which are delivered, probably late in the evening, when there is barely a quorum present, and when those who are present pay little attention to what is being said. What I have said with regard to the environment of members, is based upon the fact that I live in a purely agricultural community. We have not in the county of Huntingdon any manufactures of any importance; not more than would supply the local demands. Our farmers are principally engaged in dairying and pork raising which is a by-product of dairying. Our farmers are to a large extent free traders, or low tariff men at all events. The principle products of the county of Huntingdon are butter and cheese the price of which is fixed by the market in England, and I suppose the same rule would to a large extent apply to our product of pork and hams. The trouble with our people, as with a great many agricultural people is, to know where the compensation comes to them for the increased price they have to pay for manufactured goods by reason of a high tariff. I came to this parliament with my own idea as to what was the best tariff for this country, and that idea was that a low tariff fills the bill. You may call it a revenue tariff or whatever you please, but at all events I am decidedly against any increase in the tariff, and so are a great many people throughout Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). My feeling is that we should try to legislate for the masses rather than for the classes. As I have said I came here with my own idea as to the best fiscal policy for the country, and I suppose every member of the House has come here with his mind made up on that question to a greater or lesser extent. But while that is true, I came here also with an open mind ready to be convinced and ready to change my views if the arguments brought forth should lead me to believe that my own ideas were wrong. I must say that so far that I have not changed my mind, but that I have continued to believe that the best policy for this country is a low tariff, or what may be called a revenue tariff. Another thing is that I came here a new member; one who probably had not taken that interest in these public matters which he ought to have taken. My principle business in connection with political matters heretofore was simply an anxiety to see that the man of our choice was elected and we generally succeeded in doing that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). The word 'statesman' is bandied about here, but I must confess that I yet do not know exactly what it means. Some people have a different idea of as to what a statesman is or ought to be, from others, but be that as it may, my opinion is that for a person to make a success in public life it is necessary for him to come here in early life. As the saying is, he ought be caught young. I am afraid that quite a number of members of this House came here when it can hardly be expected that they would be in a position to qualify as statesmen.

I consider, Sir, that the agriculturists of this country have their rights; so does everybody. But, one difficulty in connection with the agriculturists asserting their right is that the manufacturers are organized and they are not. That is no reflection on this government because it would equally apply to all governments, and the fact remains that those people who can bring their views most directly before any government are most likely to get their grievances redressed, or, to get what they want. It is natural to expect that. If you see a particularly well dressed, well groomed, well fed body of men about the Russell House or around the corridors here, and you ask who they are, in nine cases out of ten you will be told that they are the representatives of the Manufacturers' Association or some kindred organization of that kind, who have come here to place their views before the government, and to try to worry the government into granting their requests. I might say just here, that before I came to parliament I never had as much sympathy with the ministers of the Crown as I have had since. I think that they are a much abused lot of men. I think that they have to stand a great deal, and it does make my blood boil when I hear some of the members of the opposition taunting them for the salaries they receive, and for drawing salaries for doing nothing. Why, Sir, I believe that if the ministers were paid according to the annoyance they have to put up with, they would get double their present salaries. Now, Mr. Speaker, the farmers are in an altogether different position from the manufacturers with regard to placing their views before the government. I have not had much to do with manufacturing interests myself, but judging from appearances the manufacturers are pretty well off. The farmers are different. The farmer cannot come to Ottawa to state his case. He has got to stay at home looking pretty closely after his farm and his stock in order to make ends meet, and there is not much junketing around for him in special cars to come here to interview the government. In that way the manufacturers have a great advantage over the farmers, and seem to get favours which the farmers and the great consuming classes consider are inimical to their best interests. The Manufacturers' Association we have heard so much about appears to be a wonderful combination. Wonderful resolutions they passed at their meeting at Halifax. They were so wonderful that even the Tory 'Gazette' of Montreal spoke about them adding hypocrisy to folly. These men are organized, and they are in a better position to bring their views before the government than the farmers and the great purchasing classes.

Since I have come to this House, I have heard a great many figures and statements quoted to show the condition of the country. I do not take much stock in these things, because it appears to me that the same figures are quoted on both sides to support different arguments. I would rather be guided by my own experience and observation in a matter of this kind. I know that so far as my own county and the adjoining counties are concerned, there is no question about the prosperity of the country. Everybody admits it. Eight or ten years ago the farmers had mortgages on their farms, and were paying 6 or 8 per cent interest on them. These are all wiped out now, the farmers are able to get money at 4 or 4½ per cent to pay them off, and the men who a few years ago had to borrow money, have now money to lend. I would rather judge of the prosperity of the country from my knowledge of such facts than from all these statistics.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) who spoke last night, was figuring up what it cost per family and per head to pay the annual revenue received by the government, and he, very pessimistically, I think, came to the conclusion that if the present state of things continued very much longer, the hard times would return, and the people would be in want just as they were when our hon. friends opposite were in power. I know that at present the people have enough to pay their way, and something left over. The deposits in our savings banks and other banks are increasing greatly, which is a sure evidence that the country is prosperous.

What I am going to speak of may be considered ancient history; but hon. gentlemen in the opposition have been going so far back that I think I have a right to follow suit. Our hon. friends opposite are in a kind of dilemma. When the present tariff was brought in by the hon. Minister of Finance, we all remember the howl that went up from the Conservatives, that it was going to ruin the country. They claimed, as they have always done, to be a highly protective party. In 1878, when the national policy was introduced, they prophesied that it was going to do many wonderful things which it did not do, and they intimated that if they got into power again they would reintroduce the national policy, and give the country that prosperity which they failed to give when they were in power. You remember how they promised that industries would spring up all over the country, and that population would flow in and occupy the vacant lands of the North-west, and the farmers would have a fine time raising food to supply the millions who were to work these industrial establishments. We were in fact going to have something approaching the millenium. Such did not turn out to be the case, however. In the census of 1891 there was a great deal of padding in regard to the number of industrial establishments in the country. Some of the padding was done in my own county. Eighteen or twenty squaws who were engaged in making baskets in their cabins were put down as so many industrial establishments. A woman working at a hand-loom in her home, was put down as another industrial establishment. The cobblers working at their benches were enumerated in the same way. But notwithstanding all that padding, the Conservative party failed to show the results which they had promised to bring about under the influence of the beneficent national policy. Now they are obliged to admit that under the tariff policy of this government, the country has not gone to ruin, as they prophesied it would. I will not say they are sorry for that; I think they are glad that the country is prosperous, though they do not like to admit it. But it is remarkable what a different tone they take now from what they did in 1897, when this tariff was introduced. You remember what a doleful story was told about the ruinous state of things that would ensue under this tariff, and how it was to do away to a certain extent with the beneficent results of the national policy. What is the fact? Listen to this from a speech by one high in the ranks opposite, our hon. friend opposite:

> Now what is the result. The result is that this tariff goes into operation and the hon. gentlemen know that the industries of this country are already paralyzed in consequence, while hon. gentlemen gloat, vindictively gloat over the destruction of Canadian industries. I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail in the Montreal 'Gazette,' where one manufacturer after another declared that their industries were ruined, that their mills must close, and that they saw staring them in the face, a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House was in charge of the fiscal policy of the country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted on Canada.

I fancy it is not necessary for me to give the name of the speaker. The older members of the House will recognize, from the strong language, who he was. The same speaker made another statement as to what was to happen; but he was not wholly disheartened. He saw that some good was likely to come out of all this wreck and ruin; but he felt that the new policy would so dishearten and disgust the people of Canada that they would soon turn out the Liberal party, and return the Conservatives to power. Here is what he said:

> I feel that far from rejoicing at it, from a party standpoint, I deplore from the bottom of my heart the ruin that is going to be inflicted upon the best interests of Canada and upon its great industries. Still I hesitatingly say that from a party point of view they are doing our work, they are showing the people of this country that having obtained power, which was all they worked for, they are now prepared to use that power at the cost of the sacrifice of the industries of Canada.

This was very pathetic and very magnanimous on the part of the speaker. How his heart must have bled for poor Canada. Even the thought that the tariff as framed by the party in power was going to drive the Liberals from power and was going to be the means of placing himself and his friends once more on the treasury benches, was not sufficient to assuage the grief he felt as he thought of the battered and bruised condition in which his beloved Canada was to be left if the fiscal policy as set forth by the party in power became law. The sweets of office were nothing to him compared to the grief he felt that all these magnificent industries which had arisen all over the land under the fostering care of the national policy, were, by the iniquitous tariff now introduced, to be blighted and scattered. We had the same kind of attack on the tariff from the ex-Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster. He went more into particulars. He foresaw, with the keen sight of a seer, the complete destruction of the woollen industry, that the Canadians were to be driven out of the confectionery business, and that there was to be complete and wholesale desolation in the homes of the makers of shirts, collars and cuffs. This is what he said:

> I can take him (Mr. Davies) down to the French constituencies in and around Montreal, and I can show him one of the most widely spread industries you will find in Canada, which is to-day distributed among hundreds and thousands of habitants, homes where the women add to the daily fare, and keep their homes by working on these articles at a moderate rate. I say that with simply an ad valorem duty that business will go to Troy or to Germany and Belgium, or to England. No person in this country feels the impost added to the cost of his shirt and collars compared at all with the derangement and destruction of an industry which goes into the homes of hundreds and thousands of people in the rural districts around the cities and villages of this country.

It seems to be a favourite pastime of some speakers to set up a man of straw in order that they may have the pleasure of knocking him down again. The same speaker made a further prophecy with regard to the woollen industry.

> Why should they imperil the great and widely distributed woollen industries of this country which are spread from British Columbia to Cape Breton. My firm belief is that with five cents a pound off and only 35 per cent left on we may bid adieu to the greater part of the widely distributed woollen industry of this country.

I could keep you almost any length of time with quotations of that kind, showing you the opinions of the Conservatives of that day regarding the effects which this amended tariff would have on the destinies of the country. These are not the opinions of the rank and file of the Conservative party—that is if there be any rank and file—but of previous leaders of the Conservative party ? These are the words of Sir Charles Tupper and the hon. Mr. Foster, ex-Finance Minister, the acknowledged leader of the Conservative party. Both of these hon. gentlemen predicted that ruin and desolation were certain to come upon Canada if the Liberal party persisted in enforcing that tariff. But what positon do our hon. friends opposite take now ? The tariff in existence to-day is practically that which came into force in 1897. The same tariff which was introduced in 1897 has practically been continued down to the present day, and is the tariff which was so fiercely denounced by the Conservative party and its leaders. Has all this desolation, has all this ruin, so freely predicted, come upon the country. Why, Mr. Speaker, no one can deny that the country is prosperous. Our hon. friends opposite have to admit our prosperity, but they strive to account for it as being due to causes completely beyond the control of the government. Well, Sir, I am not one of those who say that our prosperity is due wholly to the policy of any one government. I do not think that any body on this side takes that position. I have certainly not heard any statement of the kind made in the House. But while we acknowledge that the prosperity of the country is due, in a large measure, to other causes, we also claim that there is something due to the policy and administration of the government. The fact remains at any rate, that the Liberal party are in power and that the country is prosperous, and surely the government is entitled to some credit for that condition of affairs, just as the government would be held responsible for an opposite condition. There is no lack of precedents for coming to this conclusion. Some of the older members in this House will remember the position taken by the Conservative party during the regime of the Mackenzie administration. They charged against the government all the hard times then prevailing. I cannot personally vouch for the fact, but, according to the tradition which has come down to us, they even held the Liberal government of that day responsible for the plague of grass hoppers and the entrance into Canada of the potato bug. Surely then the Liberal government now in power is entitled to some credit for the prosperity we are now enjoying. In what way have they contributed to that prosperity ? They have contributed to it, Sir, by the lowering of the tariff, by the active work they have done in connection with transportation, and the good work they have done in connection with agriculture. Our agriculturists have certainly benefited to a considerable extent by the cold storage system. Of course, hon. gentlemen opposite say that that system was introduced by our predecessors, but even if it were no one can deny that it has certainly been enlarged and perfected under the administration of the present Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher). It would be difficult indeed to over estimate these advantages our agricultural community at large derive from that system which enables them to put their products on the British market in perfect condition. At any rate we cannot fail to admit that the Liberals now in power, are entitled to at least as much credit for the prosperity we are enjoying as the Conservatives claim was due to themselves for the much lesser share of prosperity which prevailed during their administration. That our country is prosperous is evident by the better condition of the people, by the large increases in bank deposits, by the paying off of debts and by the general satisfaction and contentment displayed on every side. There is an old saying of that wise man, the late President Abe Lincoln, concerning the folly of swapping horses when crossing a stream, and I think that saying is particularly applicable at the present moment. It would certainly be a bad time for the country to change its fiscal policy when the country is so prosperous under conditions that now exist. These hon. gentlemen opposite are playing the pessimistic role of croakers. They are continually predicting hard times and telling us that we ought to prepare for them by reducing our expenditure. Well, some of my constituents think that the present government are too lavish in their expenditure. I myself would like to see the expenditure curtailed in some respects. However, the main thing to consider is are the expenditures made on necessary works, and do the government get good value for amount expended. In one word, Mr. Speaker, I consider the policy of this government should be to as far as possible make Canada a cheap place to live in. There is a large immigration flocking into the country ; we need more. What we want is population to occupy the vacant lands of the North-west and other parts of Canada. These immigrants are mostly persons in very straitened circumstances, and should be able to get their implements, clothing and other manufactured articles at the lowest possible price.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to take up very much more of your time because I have always present to my mind that mathematical calculation of my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), and if I speak much longer there will surely be a very serious charge of wasting the public money rolled up against me. But there is one other word I wish to say. A great deal has been said by hon. members opposite during the session, more particularly by the hon. member from East Grey against hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches. He said that they were nothing but procastinators, and that they had not performed one statesmanlike act during their whole administration.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Well, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend be correct in his estimate, we on this side of the House must be a poor deluded lot, far inferior to that hon. gentleman and to those who share his views. Have we really been deluded all these years in believing that we have a business administration at the head of affairs ? According to that hon. gentleman we have, but we enjoy this one consolation that we are superior in numbers, and I think, to put it mildly, equal in intelligence to himself and his friends. We have believed during all these years that we have had our country's affairs administered by the best men the country could afford. I am not saying this for the purpose of flattering hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches, but simply in vindication of myself and hon. members on this side. Is it possible that when, after the election of 1896, the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier chose the members of his administration he blundered and was utterly mistaken in his choice when, in forming his cabinet, he associated with himself men who made their mark in local and Dominion politics ? And when these men, in after years, appealed to the country on their record and when they were approved by a large majority, I do not believe that the people were misled or deluded. I believe, on the contrary, that the estimate put by the people on these men is the correct one and not the estimate of these hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side and who speak disparagingly of those who are their superiors. I believe in praising the present government for what they have done. I believe in expressing my high opinion of the abilities of those men who have held their own with the best British and colonial statesmen and the best statesmen of the United States. Such men can well afford to be sneered at by crude and unsuccessful politicians, and we delight to honour them notwithstanding the disparaging remarks of that illustrious statesman from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the sneers of other hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclaren, Huntingdon), was not good enough to tell us any one thing that they did, all the same.

Mr. M. K. RICHARDSON (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House, I am conscious that the subject of debate has been already so fully discussed as to leave very little room for the introduction of new facts or new arguments to be adduced from the facts. But I avail myself of the opportunity given, of the privilege afforded, to each member of the House to place on record his views of the financial situation and of the government's policy. I also join in the general congratulations that the country is enjoying a measure of prosperity. And, indeed, Sir, looking out on the civilized world and considering the plenty that has blessed the world during these seven years, it would be somewhat surprising if Canada did not share some of that general prosperity. I congratulate the government on the happy circumstances under which they are placed in holding the reins of power at such a time. It will be conceded on all hands by any who have given the matter attention that the reverse conditions to these—adversity, depression from whatever cause arising—have been the cause on many occasions of leaving even good governments a very precarious hold upon the confidence of the country. I say I congratulate the government as well as the country. From whatever cause our present prosperity arises, whether from the general wave of confidence throughout the civilized world with the expansion of trade resulting from it, or whether from a series of bountiful harvests, or whether, still better, it can be traced in any degree to any policy initiated and put in operation by the government—the government are to be congratulated. And, if any connection or relation can be traced between the prosperity of the country and their policy, they are welcome to all the credit they can claim and all the adulation they can crave from their supporters on that account.

But, here we may fairly ask to what extent they have changed the policy of the government which they supplanted, that policy which they had so persistently condemned before their advent to power, and which they had pledged themselves if given the power, to destroy root and branch ? What have they done towards carrying out these pledges and promises which they gave to the country ? It is true that when they came into power they gave a new name to that policy, but without importing into it any new principle. And they would now hold up that new name as sufficient to satisfy the public that they were honest in their professions and to prove that they have been consistent in their acts. But, when the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) tells the House and the country that the protective policy of the former government put two dollars into the pocket of the manufacturer or merchant for every dollar of taxation that was put into the treasury, and that the revenue tariff of this government puts every dollar of taxes into the treasury, he draws too heavily upon the credulity of the people and banks too much on his own reputation as a statesman of long and wide experience. I think it demonstrates that it is possible for a man to outlive and out-talk a fairly good reputation for honesty, consistency and good sense. If when he counsels merchants and manufacturers to avail themselves of these fat years to lay up reserves for the lean years sure to follow, to retrench, to pay off their debts if they have any while they have the revenue coming in—if he would give such advice to the government, that, while they have a buoyant revenue they should be prepared for the adverse conditions which are sure to follow, which always do follow a period of expansion and of great prosperity, if the hon gentleman would apply this advice to the government and to his own department of the government, it would perhaps redound more to his credit than making such manifestly absured statements about distinctions in tariffs which differ not at all in principle and the differences in the application of which are so infinitesimal that they are really differences in name only.

The country was led to expect a revision of the tariff this session. But, whatever, need may exist for revision the Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) says there will be no revision at present. The government are looking at present to Great Britain for a preference in that market, and to the United States for some arrangement for a reciprocal tariff. But since the budget speech has been delivered, all hopes for British preference have been dispelled by the abolition of the corn tax. I quote from a London paper of last week as follows:

No Preference Now Possible.

The budget is remarkable also because it retraces the step which Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was induced to take last year alone what radical critics then called the 'slippery slope of protection.' It is far fetched to suggest that Mr. Ritchie deliberately set himself to answer the Canadian Finance Minister's threat to withdraw the British preference in the Canadian tariff, unless Canadian products shall have a preference in the British markets; but it is quite certain that if the colonies had accepted, instead of rejecting Mr. Chamberlain's suggestions for free trade within the empire, with duties against foreigners, Mr. Ritchie would not have abolished the cereals tax from which the Canadians desired exemption. England now is on the way back to Mr. Gladstone's free breakfast table and, even if Canada refrains from withdrawing her 33 per cent preference for British goods anything like tariff unity for the empire, except on a free trade basis, is less probable than ever. In these two respects the budget is a budget of Radicalism, not of Toryism.

Sir William Vernon-Harcourt, M. P., Liberal, said:

I am glad the grain tax has been repealed. It was an infamous impost.

Mr. George Toulmin, Liberal, M.P., for Bury, Lancashire, said:

The repeal of the grain duties makes it impossible for any future Chancellor of the Exchequer to initiate a preferential tariff on colonial wheat.

So, that even since this debate commenced, and since the hope expressed on the part of the Finance Minister all hopes of such an arrangement with the British government are, for the present, at an end. Any satisfactory arrangements with the United States are equally hopeless. We have given to both Great Britain and the United States all we have to offer in exchange for any concessions from them. To-day we stand with empty hands, having nothing to offer them. Our government has been one of great claims and great purposes, great promises also, but both promises and purposes have come to nought. Chasing bubbles they have grasped at nothing. A government failing so often is always changing, facing now this way and now that. This is still their condition, and they have no fixed, determined, proclaimed policy for the country, but stand Micawber-like, waiting for something to turn up. Yet, because we are buying more goods from other countries than formerly, we are asked to jubilate that our products, and frequently our money go freely to pay for our heavy purchases in the markets of the United States and other countries.

At the opening of this debate, the House was given an instructive lesson on the wisdom and astuteness of the government in giving a preference in tariff to Great Britain without any advantage being asked in return; for while it would have been a very difficult thing to induce the British government to impose a tax on breadstuffs, exempting the colonies only, now, having given the prefernce so graciously, and Britain having since that put on a corn tax, it would be much easier for Britain to reduce that taxation by exempting the colonies from its operation. But while we are still in this debate, that hope has been dispelled, Britain has abolished her corn tax, and Canada has nothing to expect in that direction. Oh, but, say they, we can do away with our preference to Britain, and an implied threat to that effect closed the Finance Minister's speech. And so our pretended gratitude for the splendid freedom that Britain gave us will stand in history as a mean and servile hypocrisy, seeking to obtain by subterfuge what a self-respecting nation should have sought for honestly, on a sound business basis. So our attitude to Britain to-day is hostile on trade relations.

But how do we stand with Germany? Our relations were friendly, our trade growing, but how is it now? We have considerable settlements of Germans, both in the older provinces and in the new territories. They form no inconsiderable portion of our best citizenship. In arts and manufactures they bring to bear that intelligence and that application that challenge competition with the world. In agricultural pursuits they are not excelled and rarely equalled by any other nationality in Canada. We want emigration from Germany, but our bungling over preferential trade with Britain has aroused such a feeling of resentment against Canada in Germany, that we are singled out of all the world as the country to which a higher prohibitive tariff must be applied. We are no longer to have the German market for our products on the same conditions as other nations. Our Finance Minister announces that we are accepting the German challenge to a tariff war; it is on now, and may embroil Great Britain as well. Our attitude to Germany is hostile.

France is another country with which we are endeavouring to cultivate better trade relations. So far our relations have been of a friendly character with that country, but now it appears from correspondence which our government has had with that country that the overtures for improved trade offered by Canada, have met with but slight response from France. Our treatment of Great Britain and our treatment by Britain, do not seem to have inspired respect for and confidence in our methods by other countries. Our relations with France, if not hostile, are not particularly amicable.

But there is our great natural market in the United States, that country that has snubbed us at every turn; that country that deserves from us no friendship in tariff relations, that country that has treated all our approaches to reciprocal trade with contumely and insult, the country that we were told in this House last session would never again have the opportunity of turning us down, the country towards which in future we were going to stand on our dignity—no more High Commission junketings to Washington for bettered relations; they must be the seekers not we. What is our attitude to them to-day? Why, we are informed that our government are again making their bow to Washington, and interchanging letters regarding resuming negotiations; and any needed change in our tariff must wait, wait till we see what our American friends will do for us; and possibly we may see more summer trips, pic-nics, banquets, and in the end, a big bill—that, and nothing more.

This negotiation is like chasing a bubble which, when caught, is less than nothing. Mr. Speaker, we have learned, or should have learned by this time, or long ago, that we have nothing to expect from the United States. It is not for us to be surprised that the United States statesmen should regard it a patriotic duty to trick and trip Canada at every turn. Why should they lend their support to any policy that might by any possibility help to a more rapid development of a neighbouring state, that is destined not only to be their only rival on this continent, but will rival their supremacy in trade, commerce and manufactures in the whole world. Such, I believe to be the undoubted destiny of Canada if we be true to ourselves, and to the best interests of this country.

The first unfriendly blow given to our young commonwealth by the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty was intended in no friendly spirit for Canada. It was intended to be a knock-out blow to the aspirations of our young nationality. I well recollect, and it must be within the memory of many members of this House, the feeling of dismay that spread through the country when it was announced that the United States had abrogated and would not renew that treaty. There were hundreds, possibly thousands of business men throughout Canada, who felt that our chances of success in competition with them were so small that we might as well, to use the common expression, throw up the sponge, that we would have no chance with them. But that which was intended to be a blow to our national aspirations proved indeed a blessing, because out of it sprung the first feeling of self-dependence, that first feeling of national sentiment which was so much needed by Canada at that time, and which is sometimes needed by Canada even at the present time. Not only then but on every subsequent occasion when we have received similar repulses from the United States, the consequence has been to strengthen and intensify that spirit of self-reliance which is a more valuable asset than the most favoured treaties could possibly be to this country. There is no fear that Americans will waste any sympathy or sentiment on Canada. We will never get any trade treaty with them, advantageous to ourselves, even though we sought for it, until they find that they need our markets. I advocate no spirit of enmity or animosity to the United States, but we have had a surfeit of such nostrums as commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity. Let us have no more coquetting with a nation ostensibly unfriendly in every trade relation with us. I would recommend the adoption of that aphorism from a popular American book, David Harum. He says: 'When you go to trade hosses do to the other feller as he intends to do to you, only be sure you do it fust.' We should, as a self-respecting people, have a declared policy framed for Canada, a policy of protection for the toilers on our farms, our forests, our fisheries, for our miners and artisans in mill or shop, that there shall be for every man, as far as government can secure it, a fair return for industry and enterprise, and a certain and safe investment for capital. A weak, vacillating, uncertain, waiting policy, such as may be described in the old distich.

We can and we can't, we will and we won't,
We'll be blamed if we do, and condemned if we don't.

Is not a policy for a great, progressive country like Canada to pursue. Mr. Speaker, let us once more glance at our foreign relations—to England hostile, to Germany hostile, to France not friendly, to the United States temporizing with the only nation that merits our contempt, we are waiting for a dicker or a deal. To such humiliating conditions the present Liberal government have brought us. The United States will never give us reciprocal trade while they have our market without it, at the same time shutting us out of theirs.

But, we are told we have a big surplus. If we ask where it is we shall probably be told that it appears in the Public Accounts. But if it had any real, tangible existence, we might use the hon. Finance Minister's own argument and blame the government for taking so much more taxes from the people than they require unless it was to be used to pay off our indebtedness. It is folly to expect an uninterrupted continuity of increasing revenue any more than the increase of our population will create a corresponding increase in expenditure. I said if there be a surplus such as stated, but if it has no real existence as a convertible asset, if it is a visionary, attenuated, intangible ghost of figures created by a system of arithmetic not yet introduced or taught in the common schools, where they still believe that two and two only make four, and still believe that four from four leaves nothing, then the government have no right to take credit for it.

We are doing a large trade, but buying more than we sell. We buy from the United States in dairy products and meats $2,550,712, and in grain $14,451,461. Our total imports of agricultural products amount to some $28,000,000 from them, and we export to the United States only $8,000,000, leaving in agricultural products alone an enormous balance of trade against Canada, our total imports from the United States in 1902 being over $129,000,000, our exports $71,000,000, leaving the total balance of trade against us nearly $50,000,000. They set up a tariff wall against our products, and it is no wonder, with such a balance of trade in their favour, that they do not wish for much change to be made in our trade relations. Just let me give a few figures illustrating the character of our relations with the United States. I have not introduced much in the way of statistics. I have avoided statistics, because so many have been quoted during the debate so far, but the few figures which I will give will not be out of place as contrasting their tariff with ours in relation to agricultural products. Against wheat they put up a tariff of 25 cents a bushel. Our tariff against their wheat is only 12 cents, the United States tariff against our oats is 15 cents, ours against theirs 10 cents, against our barley 30 cents, ours against theirs 15 cents, against our pease 40 cents, ours against theirs 10 cents, against our hay $4 per ton, ours against theirs only half that amount, $2 per ton, against our potatoes 25 cents per bushel, ours against theirs 15 cents per bushel, against our beans 45 cents per bushel, ours against theirs 15 cents, against our butter 6 cents per pound, ours against theirs 4 cents per pound. Our apples have to pay a duty of 75 cents per barrel, while theirs only pay 40 cents per barrel coming into Canada. Their tariff against our flour is 75 cents per barrel, ours against theirs is 60 cents per barrel. Their corn comes in free, but for every bushel of corn we send to the United States there is a duty under the tariff of 15 cents. These figures illustrate the unfair trade relations existing between these two countries, and I think we can scarcely expect anything in the way of reciprocal trade while we are placed in this position. Our only hope for reciprocal trade will be in placing our tariff in such relation to theirs as to make it their necessity to seek to obtain our market by a mutual lowering of tariffs. They need our trade and our market and cannot well afford to lose them.

The expenditures of the government have been running up to an alarming extent. I do not wish to enter much into statistics, as this question has been gone over repeatedly during this debate, but I shall refer to just one item of expenditure. For immigration in 1896 the expenditure was $120,196, while in 1902 the expenditure was $494,842, an increase of $374,643. I do not complain of that increase in expenditure if the results warrant it, but I think our immigration agents have gone far afield to find settlers for the great territories now opening up for settlement and taking no note of the fact that thousands of our young men have been leaving our older provinces for the United States, and they have neither made intelligent effort to stop the drain nor replace the loss by directing the stream of immigration to the older provinces. I believe it is well that a portion of the immigration coming from the old country, and especially from Great Britain, should be absorbed by the older provinces. Farm labour is very much needed, and I believe that immigrants will more quickly become accustomed to the different life from that which they left in the old country if they settled in the older provinces, as the difference between conditions in the old country and the older provinces would not be so great as the difference between life in the old country and the western part of Canada. Had the immigration department afforded the same aids to settlement to our own people that were given to Doukhobors and others, thousands of our people who have drifted to the United States might have remained citizens of our own country. When the farm is too small and will not bear further division, the necessity for change becomes pressing. It may be desirable to hold the family together, and as many people may not have the amount of money that is required to transport themselves and their families across the great distance separating the older provinces from the west, some of our annual expenditure on immigration purposes might be profitably employed in assisting the settlement of such people in the west. We need something more to bind the west to the east than railway lines and telegraph wires. We need more even than the bonds of commerce. We need the stronger bonds of sentiment and kinship, and for our farmers, compelled by growing families to move, it were infinitely better to assist them to settlement in our west than permit them through our indifference to drift across the line. I do not wish the government to enter upon a scheme of granting assistance to drain the older provinces of population, but there are individual cases where assistance might very wisely and profitably be given to settlement, assistance equal to that given to people from the older countries in Europe, who are not nearly as desirable citizens as our own Canadians are. One farmer's son from the older provinces of Canada settling in the Northwest would be worth a dozen such men as the Doukhobors, the Galicians and others.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after making these few desultory remarks I shall conclude. But let me ask: What is our attitude to-day with regard to the nations of the world. Is it that self-respecting, self-dependent position that a young country like Canada with all her wealth of natural resources with all the intelligence and enterprise of her citizens; is it, I ask, that self-respecting position which Canada should occupy. Should the government of such a nation as ours have such a policy as is characteristic of the government of to-day. Should we have a waiting policy; waiting on the wishes and whims of other countries. Should our policy not be rather a recorded policy, a pronounced policy for Canada, one that will preserve for all the citizens of Canada that fair return for labour, for enterprise, for toil, for investment that is to be found in other countries that have not the resources of Canada. It is due to ourselves, Sir, that while we shall be friendly to all, we shall be determined that we will be servile to none. I have much pleasure in supporting the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised that the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) should have in the course of his remarks, endorsed that statement credited to David Harum, that: If you are doing business with another fellow you should try and do him up. It seems to me, Sir, that this quotation applied to individuals would also apply to nations if it is possible to put it into practice, and I do not think that it would be either wise or commendable to adopt the spirit of the quotation there alluded to, and endeavour to do the other fellow up. All the more is that the case when in doing so we would obtain no advantage to ourselves. It has not surprised me, Mr. Speaker, that not alone the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) but the majority of members on the other side, are endeavouring to depreciate as far as they can the magnificent showing that has been made in the budget speech delivered from the treasury benches. If I am not mistaken, the hon. leader of the opposition, in a speech made during the recess, when regretting the absence of a certain gentleman from this House of Commons and pleading with the people for his re-election, admitted that the opposition needed that gentleman's presence in order that they might avail of his services as a critic of the government. That admission was not very complimentary to the gentlemen who sit behind the leader of the opposition. It is equivalent to saying, that these gentlemen, able as they are, are not competent to criticise the actions of the government, or else it means that the actions of the government were so far removed from fair and honourable criticism that the opposition required some man in the House who would resort to extreme measures in order to base a criticism on the conduct of the government. That is the logic to be drawn from this statement of the leader of the opposition.

Now, Sir, while I agree with the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) when he stated that to a certain extent this debate had lost its interest, yet, I think there are a good many features in connection with the budget that might be emphasized. Although to a certain extent it is true that when the leaders on either side have spoken, they have said practically all that can be said on the question. I do not suppose, Sir, that I shall say anything new, and I certainly shall not say anything that will be remarkable, but I shall endeavour to try to impress upon the House one or two facts that stand out very prominently in connection with this discussion. I am satisfied that if our friends on the opposition benches had been able during any of the eighteen years they were in office, to present so magnificent a showing as has been presented by the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), they would have cried it from the house tops and reiterated it in black face type in all the Conservative newspapers of Canada. It seems to me, Sir, that the object of this government and of any government, should be to propound such a policy as will be for the general well-being of the country at large, and not for the well-being of a few manufacturers alone. And, while I do not claim that this government in its administration is entitled to all credit for the remarkably satisfactory record during the time they have been in power, I do claim that they are entitled to some credit for it. In making that claim I am simply doing what our opposition friends did for eighteen years, because during the time they were in office, they claimed credit for any progress which was made, they claimed credit for, and attributed it to the beneficent influences of the national policy. Now, in order to show the general prosperity of Canada, I desire to quote for the benefit of the House, and more especially for the benefit of the country, some figures in reference to our trade returns. It will be remembered that the national policy was introduced with the object of especially developing our industries and increasing our trade. In 1893, after a long experience of the national policy, our total trade reached $247,000,000, which was the highest it ever reached during the Conservative regime. In 1896 our total trade was only $239,000,000. During the twenty-three years preceding this, our total trade had only increased by a little over $60,000,000, or an average of less than $3,000,000 a year. Be it remembered that during all that time we had what our friends on the other side of the House called a policy of adequate protection. We had what they believed to be a policy of sufficient protection; what they believed to be the highest perfection so far as legislation is concerned, that could contribute to the well-being and advancement and prosperity of the country. How well the national policy accomplished that, or how well it failed, may be shown by comparing our trade returns during the Conservative administration with our trade returns during the Liberal regime. In 1896, as I have said, the total trade of Canada amounted to $239,000,000. The Liberals had no sooner taken hold of the reins of office; they were no sooner installed apparently, than our trade began to advance at a marvellous rate. Here is the record:

TOTAL TRADE OF THE DOMINION.

Year.	Amount.	Increase of one year over the preceding year.
1896	$239,000,000
1897	257,000,000	$18,000,000
1898	304,000,000	47,000,000
1899	321,000,000	17,000,000
1900	381,000,000	59,000,000
1901	386,000,000	5,000,000
1902	422,000,000	35,000,000

I have given these figures in round numbers, and they show that during the six years of Liberal government, our total trade increased by $163,000,000. Now, our total trade for the current year shows an increase along the same lines, which increase will probably amount to $40,000,000, so that the total increase for the seven years of the Liberal government will amount to $200,000,000, or an average yearly increase of nearly $30,000,000. I am not surprised that in the face of these figures our friends on the opposite side should endeavour to underestimate the prosperity which this country is enjoying. I am not surprised that they should endeavour to explain away as far as they can, the prosperity which exists and attribute it alone to the general prosperity prevailing all over the world. I am not prepared to admit, Sir, that our prosperity is due solely to the fact that other nations are prosperous. If we accept that as a suitable argument we are thrown back upon the proposition: That during the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power the other nations of the world were not making that progress which they relatively should, and it also follows, that this policy of protection in which the Conservatives place so much confidence now, did not produce the good results which they claimed it would during the years they were in power. Nor am I surprised that the gentlemen on the other side of the House endeavour to underestimate and depreciate the remarkable financial record which was proclaimed in the speech of the Minister of Finance. Had our Conservative friends been able to show the very large surpluses which the Liberal government have been able to show, they would have extolled it as a renewed evidence of the statesmanlike policy of their party. When the Conservatives were in power they claimed credit for all the good things that were going. Not only did they claim credit for the prosperity of the country, but they claimed credit whenever they had a surplus. They did not claim credit for having deficits, but while they were responsible for the surpluses, nevertheless they left the deficits out of the reckoning when they were glorifying themselves. I have here some figures which have already been submitted to the House, but they will bear repetition. They say that a good story cannot be told too often, and acting upon that principle, I desire to submit some figures bearing on our present financial standing.

In 1896-97, the Liberals, on entering office, having assumed certain responsibilities and obligations which had been incurred by their predecessors, found themselves face to face with a deficit of $519,000. In the following year they had a surplus of nearly $2,000,000, in 1898-9 they had a surplus of nearly $5,000,000, in 1899-1900, a surplus of $8,000,000, in 1901-2 a surplus of $7,000,000, and this year they will have an estimated surplus of $13,350,000, or a total surplus in the seven years of nearly $41,000,000. The average annual surplus during the seven years of the Liberal administration has been $5,569,275, while the average annual surplus during the eighteen years of Liberal-Conservative rule—and our Liberal-Conservative friends used to boast upon the housetops and everywhere else of the great success of their administration—amounted to $544,000. Now, I am not specially concerned about the increase of the debt. I think the people of this country will not quarrel with the administration about any increase of debt provided it is a legitimate increase, by virtue of the construction of various public works of a productive character, and provided that the money is properly and honestly expended, as it is under the Liberal administration. Our friends on the opposition benches may naturally take exception to an increased expenditure; but they have been unable so far to point to any expenditure that has not been in the general interest of the country at large; and I am satisfied that the people will endorse an increased expenditure so long as it is consistent with the development of the country, and in its best interests. But there is this fact to be borne in mind, which would have afforded unbounded glory to hon. gentlemen opposite if they had been able to report it in their time, that there has been an actual reduction of $5,000,000 in the debt of the country. The government has carefully looked after all the public works required and the various matters calling for expenditure, not only without any increase in the public debt, but with an actual reduction of the debt.

Now, our friends on the opposite side of the House have taken the members on this side and the government to task for having no declared policy on the question of protection. I have listened to almost all the speeches which have been delivered by members on the other side of the House, and so far I have failed to hear any specific declaration as to what they think should be the amount of protection afforded to the various industries of the country. They do not define it in their resolution. They state that there should be some declared policy of adequate protection. Members on this side have asked the hon. leader of the opposition himself as well as those who follow him, to define or specify what they mean by a declared policy of adequate protection, and so far no member on the other side of the House has given any definition thereof. As a matter of fact, the amendment before the House is a negative amendment, because it proposes actually nothing at all. It simply states that there should be adequate protection; but none of the hon. gentlemen opposite apparently are able or willing to state what in their opinion may be regarded as adequate protection. What might be adequate protection for one industry might not be for another, and what might be adequate protection in the mind of one member might not be adequate protection in the mind of another. Therefore you may realize the difficulty of arriving at a definite conclusion upon an indefinite term of that kind, in the absence of anything specific in the resolution. Looking over our tariff, I find that it runs all the way from 20 to 40 per cent; and it seems to me that a tariff offering 40 per cent or even 35 per cent protection should be sufficient under normal conditions for our manufacturers. It simply means that if a manufacturer under ordinary conditions produces and places on the market $100 worth of goods, the present tariff, which our hon. friends say is not adequate, enables him to charge for those goods $135. It gives him an advantage of $35, which it seems to me should be sufficient for all practical purposes, and I am not one of those who think that this protection should be increased very materially. I notice that I am quoted by the hon. leader of the opposition as being a protectionist. In his speech he did me the honour of including me with some others as being in favour of protection. Well, Mr. Speaker, I assume that we are all more or less protectionists, according to local circumstances or conditions; but as to being a protectionist in the ordinary sense of the term I have to deny the soft impeachment. I am not a protectionist, but, I believe in freedom of trade, so far as we can have it consistently with the needs of our revenue.

As to the marvellous development which has taken place in the trade of the country under the Liberal regime, our friends of the opposition claim that that is due to world-wide prosperity—that it is because there is prosperity in all other nations. We might ask, what is the reason that other nations of the world are enjoying prosperity? I think they will find, if they inquire, that the reason is not because of an artificial system of protection, which would go to the upbuilding of manufactures, but that it may be—I will not say must be—due to natural causes. If it be true that the prosperity of other lands is largely due to natural causes—and I believe that is the case in the United States—while our friends opposite cite the United States as an example of the benefits of a highly protective policy, they forget that within themselves the United States are a free trade people. Having various kinds of climate, and soil, they are not in a position to be compared to the Dominion of Canada. But if it be true that the prosperity of the world is due to natural causes, and that the general progress and prosperity of Canada is due to the same causes, then I contend that it is the duty of this government, as far as lies in its power, to look to the development of our natural resources, whereby we may increase the wealth of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite want that to be done by a higher tariff. I believe it can be done by a lower tariff. I believe that it has been done by a lower tariff, and if we seek to develop our natural resources, as far as we can, without putting oppressive burdens on the people, it will be better for the prosperity of our own country. The hon. member for North Grey referred to the action of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. It is South Grey and not North Grey.

Mr. HOLMES. I am much obliged to the hon. member for East Grey for the correction. If I understood the argument of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson), rightly, he condemned the government for its attitude with reference to Germany. He did not do so in specific terms, but the inference to be drawn from his argument was that he was opposed to the action of the government. He went on to point out that the effect of this would be to prevent immigration from Germany, which we should rather encourage, and that consequently, the putting up of a protective wall against Germany was an unwise policy. But in the very next breath he condemned the government for not having done precisely the same thing with regard to the United States. He argued that we should raise our tariff wall against imports from the United States, but that we were acting unwisely in raising our tariff against Germany. While the government were unwise in raising the tariff against Germany for one reason, they were equally, for another reason, blamable for not raising our tariff against the United States. The position he takes is illogical. If the government is to be commended for adopting any measure of protection, surely it is not to be condemned for the course it has taken towards Germany. It seems to me that we must adapt our tariff to the existing circumstances as far as we can; and if the government think it wise to put a surtax on German imports. I am not going to find fault. And even if it be a policy of retaliation, I think that retaliation, under the circumstances, is justifiable and in the long run will bring about beneficial results.

A number of hon. gentlemen opposite have contended that we should put up our tariff so high as to practically exclude imports from the United States and also practically prevent any importations from Great Britain. Well, Mr. Speaker, that may sound very nice as an argument on the hustings, but what would be the practical operation of such a policy? It seems to me self-evident that if we do not import, we cannot export, that if we do not sell to foreign countries we cannot buy from them, and we might just as well at once put a stop to our improvements in harbours and terminals at Quebec and other points where we expect to make tremendous shipments to the old country. We will simply be throwing away money, because if we are going to put up a high tariff which would prevent importation, we will of necessity by the same means prevent exportation.

Another argument advanced is that a prohibitive tariff would not only create new manufacturing industries, but contribute to the well being of those already established. The hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said that our cotton industry was languishing owing to insufficient protection, and his statement was applauded by hon. members opposite. Well, Sir, I hold in my hand a pamphlet, issued by the cotton manufacturers, in the interest of the Canadian manufacturers, and which no doubt has been circulated among hon. members of this House. In that pamphlet I find a paragraph headed 'Canadian goods cheap to the consumer,' and it goes on to say:

> There is not the least doubt that the Canadian consumer saves nothing on imported goods.

If that statement be true, if our cotton manufacturers can convince our wholesale and retail merchants that they have nothing to gain by importing cottons, then this particular Canadian industry at least has nothing to fear from outside competition. Then we have this further argument:

> An illustration of this fact recently came to light. A wholesaler imported a line of fancy shirtings and laid them down at 8½ cents per yard. He sold them to the retailers at 11½ cents, who resold at 17 cents. A Canadian firm duplicated the pattern, sold it at 8 cents, the wholesaler sold at 10 cents, while the consumer got it at 12½ cents, meaning a saving of 4½ cents per yard to the wearer of the shirts.

I commend that Canadian manufacturer for his ability to manufacture that article apparently cheaper than it could be manufactured in the old country. But while I commend him for so doing, is it not evident that this very fact contradicts the position taken by our manufacturers, that they are absolutely in need of the highest protection in order that they may retain the Canadian market? A good many of the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite are practically of the same character. When you come to analyse them, you find that they are not only able to hold the Canadian market but are doing remarkably well in connection therewith. I have no desire whatever other than to see the Canadian manufacturers prosper to the fullest extent. I am a Canadian from the sole of my foot to the crown of my head. I have been born in Canada and I live in Canada and I expect to die in Canada. I am just as desirous as my hon. friends opposite to see our manufacturers enjoy the fullest measure of prosperity, but I do not think it is right and fair to ask the consumers to put their hands in their pockets to a greater extent than at present. There is a feeling among the people in Canada that they are willing to stand by what may be called a limited protective policy for the benefit of the Canadian manufacturers. They are willing to allow our manufacturers a moderate amount of protection. That protection they are enjoying under the present policy, and I do not think that it should be materially increased except under some special circumstance, when some particular industry may be suffering from unfair competition which may be removed by a change in the tariff. While I do not agree with all my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said regarding the question of reciprocity with the United States, I am in favour of reciprocity provided we can get it on fair and honourable terms. I cordially agree in the opinion expressed by the right hon. the leader of this House when he said: I think it was in the city of Quebec—that the Dominion would never again go to Washington and get down on its knees and ask for reciprocity. But while that statement meets with my fullest approval, I am in favour of securing reciprocity on fair and equitable terms. I believe that if we had reciprocity in natural products, our Canadian manufacturers would be able, with their well known energy, enterprise, force of character and determination, to compete with our American neighbours on equal terms and under equal conditions. I have the assurance of manufacturers to-day that, if the American market were thrown open to them they would not fear the competition of the manufacturers of that country, but that they are perfectly willing to enter the American market if they are given access thereto—

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. HOLMES—And that statement, I take it, is endorsed by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor)—

Mr. SPROULE. But will the American market ever be thrown open to our manufacturers? Until it is, we have a right to look after our own.

Mr. HOLMES. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) may be correct, or he may not. But he must bear in mind that, for all time to come, we remain the neighbour of the country to the south of us; and so, for all time to come, we should try to secure the most workable and favourable trade relations with them that it is possible for us to secure. Our destinies may not be bound up with theirs, and yet, to a certain extent we are one nation, speaking the same tongue. And I do not wish anybody to assume from what I say that I am in favour of annexation, for I am not in favour of that at all. During visits I have made to our American friends, when opportunities have presented themselves on public occasions, I have publicly repudiated the idea that any feeling in favour of annexation exists in this country. I do not believe that any such feeling exists, but I believe a strong feeling exists in favour of good trade relations with our neighbours to the south. And I say that, situated as we are, it would be almost—suicide, I was going to say that that would be rather a strong term, perhaps, but it would certainly not be in our best interests to erect a high tariff wall between ourselves and our neighbours to the south. Our friends on the other side of the House advocate the erection of a Chinese wall. They would have us trade absolutely within ourselves. Anybody who knows anything about trade knows that that would be impossible. If we were able to secure concessions from our friends to the south—and the indications point that way notwithstanding what my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says—it would be in the interest of Canada for the government to entertain any proposition looking to that end. I listened to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) the other night, and was more than surprised that a man living in the neck of land that my hon. friend lives in, the south-western part of Ontario, should take the stand that he took in opposition to closer trade relations with the United States. He has a right to his opinion, as I have a right to mine, but I have conversed with many men who live in that section and have come in contact with a large number of them, and I say without fear of successful contradiction—a man may contradict and yet not contradict successfully—that that neck of land lying west of the city of London, if we had closer trade relations with the United States, would increase in prosperity, and its land would rise in value to a marvellous extent. Hon. gentlemen opposite seek to make it appear that we have no trade with the United States, or rather that we are buying from the United States and not selling to them. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) quoted the American tariff to show that their tariff was higher on certain lines than ours, and therefore it was wiser for us not to seek better trade relations with them or to do business with them. There is no force in saying that their duty on grain is 25 cents a bushel while ours is lower. It would make no difference if their duty were 50 cents a bushel—it would not affect the price of the Canadian farmers' grain, and, those hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are farmers, know that this is true. But, to show the House and the country that we do trade with the United States notwithstanding their hostile tariff—which trade would be larger, then, if they had not a hostile tariff—I wish to quote a few figures. These relate to agricultural products, and they are not all the figures that might be quoted. Hon. gentlemen opposite never tire of seeking to convince the House that our farmers suffer by the competition of the people to the south of us. The fact is that there are no articles that have been mentioned that come into competition with the articles produced by the Canadian farmer. The figures I shall quote show the exports from Canada to the United States of certain articles notwithstanding the high rate of duty they have to pay:

Horned cattle, year old, $124,497, duty of $2 per head; horned cattle, over year old, $699,178, duty of $3.75 per head; horses, $652,303, duty of $30 per head; sheep, year old or less, $803,701, duty of $1.50 per head; sheep, over year old, $118,436, duty of $1.75 per head; swine, $81,516, duty of $1.50 per head; poultry, $55,862, duty of 3 cents per pound live, 5 cents dressed; animals, all told, living, $2,535,493.

Barley, $9,499, duty 30 cents per bushel—(Dingley) ; beans, $185,921, duty 45 cents per bushel ; buckwheat, $2,141, 15 cents per bushel; oats, $62,322, 15 cents per bushel ; pease, $145,-102 ; grain, all told, $446,712.

So, we sell living animals to the value of over two millions of dollars notwithstanding that our American friends are producers of the very class of stock that we produce. It will be seen from the figures that we find very little market now in the United States for our barley. That market was nearly cut off by the Dingley tariff—nobody disputes that. The beans, of which we sent $185,000 worth, notwithstanding the duty of 45 cents per bushel, were the product, very largely, of the province of Ontario, and of that section of it represented by my hon. friend from Bothwell, a section which, he intimated, would receive no advantage from reciprocity with the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) if all these goods he has enumerated were entered for home consumption in the United States, or are they goods exported in bond and re-exported ?

Mr. HOLMES. These goods are not all re-exported.

Mr. TAYLOR. But in part, and greatly.

Mr. HOLMES. The figures I quote relate to agricultural products that are entered for home consumption in the United States. It may be that there are exceptions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HOLMES. I am quite free to qualify the statement. I have compiled the figures carefully and I do not think there is an exception, but there may be.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman furnish me with the statistics ?

Mr. HOLMES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) can have them and welcome. Some I got from the American returns and some from our own. I declare myself in favour of reciprocal trade relations with our neighbours to the south. I say I am in favour of it because I believe that it would aid to the well-being and advancement of this country. I am glad that our government has taken the wise step of either lowering the duties or taking off the duties upon certain articles of the produce of the United States. I think the present government have conferred no greater benefit upon the farmers of the Dominion of Canada than by taking off entirely the duty on corn. Notwithstanding what has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite, I am satisfied that the government conferred an inestimable boon upon the farmers when they removed that duty, and I am satisfied that that opinion is held by the farmers of the Dominion irrespective of their political predilections.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman think that the Western Ontario peninsula, of which he has spoken, will endorse that ?

Mr. HOLMES. I feel sure that the section of which my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is one of the representatives will endorse it, for the reason that the corn that comes in does not enter into competition, to any appreciable extent, with the corn grown in the district represented by my hon. friend. I have had Conservatives come to me, men of pronounced political convictions, men who have no sympathy with this government but have done everything they possibly could to prevent the return of its supporters—I have had these men come to me and endorse in unqualified terms the action of the government in removing the duty on corn. I have heard them commend the government because of its attitude on this matter, declaring that if in no other respect the government was worthy of commendation, it was worthy of commendation in this. What does it do, Mr. Speaker ? It enables the Canadian farmer, to a greater extent than he ever could under former conditions, to finish his Canadian cattle and to put them on the English market in competition with his American friends, almost upon equal footing. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) knows perfectly well—he poses as a farmer while I do not—that the Canadian farmer was handicapped in the fact that he was compelled to fall back upon his own coarse grains for feeding his stock, and therefore it cost him more to feed his stock than it would, under ordinary conditions, if he could have secured American corn. There are years when he cannot secure American corn, when it is too high, and it may be more profitable for him to use his own coarse grain. But the Canadian farmer knows to-day that it has paid him better to sell his coarse grains in the open market, and buy corn for the purpose of finishing his cattle, which he can then send to the English market in competition with the American farmer. My hon. friend may laugh; but I am prepared at any time to go on any platform in the country, and face him in advocacy of that position. Then I say that I am in hearty sympathy with the idea of obtaining reciprocal trade with our neighbours to the south of us, assuming, of course, that it is possible to get it. If it is not possible to get it, then I would do the best I could in the development of our own interests in some other direction. But I think it would be to the advantage of the Dominion at large to have reciprocal trade relations with the United States, to some extent at any rate.

Fault has been found and is found with our immigration policy. But it does not lie in the mouths of our hon. friends on the opposite side of the House to point to what they claim to be the shortcomings or defects of our immigration policy. We know that the policy pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite did not enable them to get immigrants to come to this country, at least we know in how few numbers they came when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. On the other hand, whether it is due to the marvellous prosperity and progress of this country or not, immigrants are now coming in by the thousands and tens of thousands. Moreover, our Conservative frieds say, why does not the government take more interest in Canadians and do something for Canadians instead of spending their time and money on foreigners? Why did not our hon. friends do it when they were in power themselves?

Mr. BROCK. That is no argument.

Mr. HOLMES. It may not be a very good argument. The hon. member for Toronto does not regard it as a good argument because it happens to hit his own party in a tender spot. If the argument is good in the one instance, if it is right now that the government should pay special attention to Canadians, it was right during the eighteen years when our friends opposite were in power; and they should be honest and candid enough to acknowledge that they did not do during those eighteen years what they claim now we ought to do. I say this, Mr. Speaker, that while I am perfectly willing that the government should do its utmost for Canadians who are within our land, and while I believe firmly that Canadians would make better settlers in the North-west than quite a few who are now coming from foreign lands, still I am not hostile to foreign immigrants, a term that I suppose will embrace the Doukhobors and Galicians, and men of that kind. I have conversed with people in the North-west, as I presume some of my hon. friends opposite have done, in reference to the Doukhobors, and notwithstanding their mistake of last year—and for that I think they are perhaps entitled to a certain amount of consideration in view of their circumstances—the people of the North-west will tell you that there are no better settlers, taking them all around, there is no community in the North-west that gives better promise for the future than the Doukhobors.

An hon. MEMBER. All bosh.

Mr. HOLMES. Perhaps it is all bosh. The hon. member for Halton knows how easy it is to say, it is all bosh. But that is no argument. As the hon. member for Toronto said himself a moment ago, that is no argument. My hon. friend who makes that remark cannot go into any town in the North-west adjacent to a Doukhobor settlement, and repeat the ejaculation that he throws across the floor of this House.

Mr. BROCK. I made no remark at all about the Doukhobors.

Mr. HOLMES. I did not allude to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BROCK. He said the member for Toronto.

Mr. HOLMES. I alluded to the hon. member for Halton, who was using an argument similar to that which had just been used by the member for Toronto.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman by a single word.

Mr. HOLMES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I thought it was he who made the remark.

Mr. HENDERSON. There was a good deal of bosh in what he said, but I did not interrupt him.

Mr. HOLMES. I am sorry to attribute to the hon. gentleman any views he does not hold, I accept his disclaimer, and I hope he will have the forbearance to accept my apology. When two or three members opposite are making ejaculations it is not always easy to tell where they come from. But I do not wish intentionally to wound the feelings of the hon. member for Halton, and if he did not make the remark some other hon. member opposite did make it. I think the present government is entitled to commendation for its immigration policy. In order to develop our country we want population, and if we can get population of a more or less desirable kind, I think the government is entitled to credit therefor. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be a picayune policy indeed to take exception to this, that, or the other nationality who are coming here, although in due course of time they will no doubt take the oath of allegiance and become good Canadian citizens, just as good as any other people we have. If we go back to the history of this country we will find that it has been settled by men of different nationalities, Germans, Irish, Scotch, and perhaps some heathen. But in course of time they have developed into good, industrious and reputable Canadian citizens. I do not think it becoming in hon. gentlemen opposite to throw stones in the way they do at the different nationalities. I have no special love for any particular nationality, but when they come to our shores and assume the responsibilities of citizens, and take their due part in building up this country, they are entitled to every credit and consideration.

Now what should the government do for Canadians? How many Canadians are there who go to the North-west who would be willing to accept government aid and government assistance, even to the limited extent that we give it to those who come to us from foreign shores? Very few Canadians indeed. The spirit of independence in the heart of Canadians is so strong that they are unwilling to accept what may be for the time being reasonable assistance in order to help them move their homes to other portions of the Dominion. But I say that the Dominion government to-day offers the very same facilities to any residents of the older provinces that they offer to residents of foreign lands. There is no hindrance whatever to native Canadians obtaining for themselves a home in the North-west; they have the very same privilege which is given to incoming immigrants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, reference is made in that resolution to the protection of the farmer as well as to protection of the labourer. Some hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to convince the House, though it seemed to me they were arguing against their own convictions, that they believed in a policy that could protect the farmer. Well, the protection that the farmer can get from any policy of adequate protection or from the indefinite protection advocated by the hon. gentlemen opposite, is so infinitesimally small that, to use a common phrase, it does not amount to a hill of beans. The farmers were hoodwinked in Canada once by the promise of increased protection. A man came into my office immediately after the adoption of the national policy and he said to me: 'We are going to have a higher price for our wheat now.' I said: 'I am glad to know that you are going to have a higher price for your wheat. How are you going to get a higher price.' He said: 'We have the national policy and it is going to give us a higher price.' I asked: 'How are we going to get it?' 'Why,' he said with confidence in his face, 'Didn't Sir John go over to the old country and arrange, himself, that they should give us a higher price for our grain?' He went away with the conviction that Sir John, the old hero and chieftain of our hon. friends opposite, had actually arranged with the authorities of the mother country that they should pay a higher price for our grain. Our hon. friends opposite know that it is absolutely impossible to protect the farmer. They know perfectly well, notwithstanding their own statements, that no matter how high we put the tariff it cannot protect the farmer, because, when the farmer is compelled to find a market for his products in the market of the world, his products are subjected to the competition of the world, and no amount of protection can remedy that condition. What the government can do, what the government has done, and what the government desires to do, is to relieve as far as possible the burdens that were oppressive so far as the farmers are concerned, and in this way it is doing everything possible to promote the development and prosperity of the country. Then, I would like to ask our hon. friends to define, or declare in some specific way, how they are going to protect the labourer of this country. The labourer was once misled. He thought that if the national policy was adopted, as it was adopted, he would enjoy a larger measure of prosperity than ever before. Yet, the experience of the labouring classes was not in harmony with that belief. Under the policy which we have at the present time, under the policy condemned by our hon. friends opposite, under the policy which they say does not give the manufacturer his home market and does not contribute to the prosperity of the mechanics and labouring classes generally, there is such a demand for skilled labour that not long ago a lot of men in the city of Toronto went to the Ontario government, a thing that never occurred during the eighteen years' regime of our Conservative friends, and asked the government if they could not make some arrangement whereby additional skilled labour could be brought to this country. They said they could not get enough skilled labour, that the demand is so great, that under this policy, as was stated by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. MacLaren), at the present time the industries are so thriving, so prosperous, that they cannot secure the amount of labour that they require at the present time. There is undoubtedly a great demand for skilled labour. But, my hon. friends opposite say that the government has done nothing, that we are not enjoying any marked prosperity, but at the same time they want to introduce a policy which would take the labourer from one class of labour and put him possibly at another, while there is a greater demand for skilled labour as compared with unskilled labour than there has been at any previous time in the history of Canada. One speaker on the other side of the House, I think the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) in his eulogy, made the statement that a lot of the credit was due to the splendid national policy that was introduced eighteen years ago and established by the present opposition when they were in power. He said that a great deal of our prosperity was due to that fact. Well, if the prosperity that we enjoyed, such as it was, was due to the national policy, the prosperity we are enjoying now, such as it is, is also due to the administration of affairs at the present time. One is as logical an argument as the other. Then we are told that we ought to manufacture every dollar's worth of goods that we import at the present time. This is an important statement, but it is no argument, because, if we manufactured every dollar's worth of goods we import now we would have to resort to direct taxation for revenue or raise the revenue in some other way and, therefore, the policy we are pursuing at the present time is the best policy that we can pursue in harmony with the existing state of affairs. I was glad to notice that the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in his admirable speech the other night, brought out the fact that the development of the foreign trade of this country amounted to 96 per cent, while the development of the foreign trade of the United States only amounted to 46 per cent, which in itself is a contradiction of the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not want to take up the time of the House, because I am simply going over matters that have been gone over before, but if necessary I could go through the various departments and show the excellence of the administration in connection with these departments which has contributed to the general prosperity and general well-being of the country. I am not surprised that our hon. friends opposite sometimes almost turn green with envy at the magnificent showing that has been made in the different departments. Take the Post Office Department, the Railways and Canals Department, the Department of Agriculture and any other department that you might name and you will find that the administration has been far superior in its results at any rate to that in vogue under the regime of our hon. friends opposite, and the results have been so striking that I am not at all surprised that they endeavour to minimize them as much as possible. But, the people of the country who are intelligent, notwithstanding the misrepresentations which may be thrown abroad at different times, know perfectly well that we are not alone enjoying prosperity, but that we are enjoying a greater degree of prosperity in the various departments than under the old regime. It was said by the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and it has been stated by speakers on the other side of the House, that no country can be prosperous with a large balance of trade against it. When the hon. gentleman made that statement and supported it by figures without end, our friends on the other side of the House applauded the statement as if it were a fact. What is the fact? If no country can be prosperous with a large balance of trade against it, will our hon. friends opposite tell me how it is that Great Britain has always had a balance of trade against it? The balance of trade has been against Great Britain for almost all time and if the argument used by the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal, and endorsed warmly and applauded by hon. members opposite, be true, then Great Britain must be almost in a state of national bankruptcy. We know that to be entirely contrary to the fact. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to look at a country where there is disclosed, perhaps, the logical results of a high tariff, they have simply to look at Germany, where they will find a state of affairs existing which is one we would not like to copy in this country. I do not think the labouring classes or the farming classes in Germany are enjoying that measure of prosperity that we have been enjoying. Germany has a high protective tariff, but it has not the prosperity which hon. gentlemen opposite claim we would have if we adopted that tariff. My hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) informs me that it has a large balance of trade against it; therefore, it cannot be prosperous. There are one or two other matters I want to allude to and then I shall take my seat. I agree with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in one respect, that the government might have gone farther than it did so far as the reduction of the tariff is concerned. I do not know why the tariff on coal oil is kept on. It is a small amount. It does not look to be very large. It is true that the government has reduced it and I think they were wise in reducing it. I do not know perhaps that it would make very much difference if the duty was taken off altogether so far as the price is concerned to the consumer, under the existing circumstances. But insignificant as the item may appear, there are a good many people in rural sections especially who wish to see the duty taken off coal oil. I would have been glad had the government seen its way clear to do what apparently would have been in the interests of the consumer, and I do not know that any existing industry in Canada at the present time would have suffered in connection therewith.

I stated at the outset of my remarks that all men were more or less protectionists according to local considerations and conditions. I stated that on general principles I believe in freer trade, though not absolute free trade, because we can not have free trade. And yet at the same time, I am to a certain extent a protectionist. There may be exceptional cases in which protection would be advisable—I use the term in a qualified sense. Sometimes I have thought that hon. members on the other side of the House produced strong cases for exceptional treatment, and the government apparently took that view in connection with some of its own legislation. Notwithstanding the fact that the government stands for tariff reform or a tariff for revenue, (and a tariff for revenue is protective to that extent at any rate), the government took the view that on certain lines they would be justified in increasing or readjusting the tariff. They may be right; I will not say they are wrong. To that extent I am a protectionist, and I am a protectionist by virtue of local surroundings and circumstances——

Mr. CLANCY. What were these articles?

Mr. HOLMES. I do not call them to mind at the moment, but it did suggest itself to me when I heard some of these gentlemen opposite speaking.

Mr. CLANCY. Salt for example?

Mr. HOLMES. I am going to allude to salt. Even at the risk of my hon. friend calling me inconsistent, I think I can show that the tariff on salt is not just what it ought to be, and I will point out to my hon. friend and to the House why I think so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HOLMES. The government thinks that special treatment should be accorded to beet root sugar. That may be right and it may be wrong. I am not a very strong supporter of the beet root sugar argument, because I am a little inclined to think that we will never be able to successfully establish a beet root sugar industry in this country, unless it is done by subsidies or bonuses or something of that kind. I think that is the experience of our friends on the other side of the line, and I am not satisfied in my own mind that the beet root sugar industry can be permanently established here. If it can, well and good. If we can make it a permanent success without it costing our people too much, then I am not prepared to find much fault with it. But, if we believe in a tariff for revenue as we advocate, then I say that the tariff should be so adjusted as to produce the revenue that is necessary. Then the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) called attention to the circular placed in the hands of members of this House by a firm representing the salt industry in my own town—it not only represents the salt industry in my own town but it largely represents the salt industry in the province of Ontario. Because all the salt industries in the province of Ontario are under the direction of two or three individuals, and one of these firms has its office in my own town. Now, the government believes it was wise and prudent to extend special consideration to the beet root sugar industry.

Mr. CLANCY. In what way ?

Mr. HOLMES. In providing especially that machinery might be introduced free of duty in connection with the beet root sugar industry.

Mr. CLANCY. A great concession, that.

Mr. HOLMES. Nevertheless it is a concession, whether it is great or otherwise. The government took the same view with regard to steel rails. I presume that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) with equal force and logic will say that that is a great concession also. At any rate the government took the ground that with reference to steel rails certain consideration should be shown to the manufacturers of steel rails.

Mr. CLANCY. What do you think of putting a duty on steel rails ?

Mr. HOLMES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) would like to lead me astray by drawing a herring across the track.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HOLMES. I am a little afraid that the duty on steel rails will not turn out in the end as some of the gentlemen on the other side think it will. That is my opinion with reference to steel rails. At the present time the manufacturers of salt have a duty of seven and a half cents per hundred on salt in packages, and five cents per hundred pounds on salt imported in bulk. The manufacturers of salt would not find fault with that if they were not handicapped in a way in which perhaps other industries are not handicapped. It is not for me to advise the government as to its trade policy, but while others have expressed their opinion on this side of the House, I presume that I may express my opinion also. I think it would have been a wise thing on the part of the government to have met our American friends in the matter of the remission of the duty on coal. Where the Americans have taken the duty off coal I think it would have been a wise thing on the part of this government to remove our duty on coal. I believe it would have been a concession to the manufacturers all over the Dominion. It would have been equivalent to a certain amount of protection, and to that extent the salt manufacturers think that it would have been especially to their advantage had the duty on coal been removed. The salt manufacturers are handicapped in this way : they do not complain alone about the competition from the United States, but they also object to the competition from the old country, and they claim, I think with a great degree of force, that believing as we do in a tariff that shall be a revenue producing tariff, there should be a tariff upon salt the same as there is upon any other article. Binder twine was singled out by the government for special consideration, and the government takes to itself power to deal with binder twine in case they find it advisable and necessary to do so.

Mr. CLANCY. No, they do not.

Mr. HOLMES. Our salt manufacturers complain of two things. They complain of the free importation of English salt, and they complain generally of the importation of American salt. The English salt comes in here free of duty by virtue of being used in the fisheries, and if you take the returns of trade and commerce you will find that it is not alone imported from Great Britain but it is also imported to a certain extent from the United States under this head. The manufacturers of salt think that when they are handicapped by taxes of various kinds, that English salt manufacturers should be placed in the same category as they are, and should contribute a certain amount to the revenue of this country. They do not see why even the maritime fisheries should enjoy the benefits of free salt, while people in the upper provinces are called upon to pay an increase cost by virtue of the tariff if they import salt. If the English salt was used for the fisheries alone, there would not be so much force in my argument in asking for a duty upon it, but unfortunately for the manufacturers of Canadian salt, English salt also enters into commercial competition, because it comes westward and is sold in competition with Canadian salt. To that extent the Canadian manufacturers are handicapped in that direction and are unfairly and unjustly dealt with.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) For whose benefit ?

Mr. HOLMES. Presumably for the benefit of the fishermen of the lower provinces.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Yes, and for the farmers also.

Mr. HOLMES. Of course, if my hon. friend assumes that position he should throw the duties off entirely, and make all things equal. But the salt manufacturers are called on first of all to pay a duty on coal which amounts to the equivalent of 4 cents on every barrel of salt. That may seem to be a small amount, but when they manufacture a great quantity of salt any one can see that in the aggregate it would amount to a great deal. The salt manufacturers are exceptional with respect to their use of coal, for there is no industry which I am aware of in the prosecution of which it requires such a large quantity of coal to produce a given amount of manufactured goods as it does in the manufacture of salt. The coal tax presses particularly heavy on the salt manufacturers, because it takes a ton of coal at least to make two tons of salt. I do not think a similar condition prevails in any other line of manufacture. Our salt manufacturers ask, and with a certain degree of reason and force, that our tariff should at least be made equal to the American tariff, or if not, that it should be logically called a revenue producing tariff, because the English salt, which comes in and enters into competition with Canadian salt, should bear a share of the burden which the latter has to bear. The salt manufacturers are also taxed for their bags, taxed on iron, and on a variety of articles used in connection with their business. It seems to me, free trader as I may be, that there is a great amount of force in the contention that our salt manufacturers are unjustly dealt with by being taxed on their raw material while they are not in a position to compete on equal terms with foreign producers. Our American friends have this advantage, that they are endeavouring to force the small manufacturers of the United States into a large combine, and, in order to do that, are selling salt at low prices. The Americans have the further advantage of cheaper transportation than we have in Canada. In all these respects our salt manufacturers are placed at a disadvantage, and for the reasons stated I think are deserving of consideration at the hands of the government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said practically all I want to say. I say unhesitatingly that the general policy pursued by the present administration is a policy that very largely meets with my approval and endorsation, not simply because I sit on this side of the House, but because it seems to me to be the policy best adapted to promote the development of the country at large, and the interests of all classes of our people. Somebody has said—I think it was my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), with whom in private conversation I have sometimes a controversy on these questions—that this country should not be an agricultural or pastoral country. On this point there is one fact that must be borne in mind. We may develop our manufacturing industries to the fullest extent possible, whether by virtue of the development of our lands or by virtue of increased protection ; but, first and foremost, this country must be for all time an agricultural country. We cannot help it. Let any man travel over the Dominion of Canada, from the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, and he will come to but one conclusion, that with the large agricultural area which we possess, and the vast extent of territory yet undeveloped which must inevitably come under the farmer's hand, we must first of all give attention to the development of our agricultural interests ; and with the development of these will come the development of our manufacturing interests. One is a sequence of the other. Therefore, I contend that it is our duty first and foremost to see to the well-being and prosperity of the largest class in the community. The farmers are by all odds the largest class ; and if by legislation, or in any other way, we can contribute to the prosperity of that class, if we can make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, it is our duty to do so. Then and then only will come the true and solid development of our manufacturing industries—a development that will stand for all time to come. We have a noble heritage ; we have a grand country, and I am glad to see that hon. members on both sides of the House wish it to develop and prosper. Unfortunately, we are not all of the same opinion as to how that development and prosperity can be best brought about. There is no reason why we should not agree to differ on questions of policy ; but in our legislation and in whatever action we take, we should have in view the interest and the welfare of the masses and not the classes, of those who bear the burden and heat of the day, of those who sweat and toil, of those who are not in the fortunate circumstances of the men who have the advantage of protection, of those who have not as luxurious homes or as many of the luxuries and comforts of life as most of our manufacturers. I do not say that this is true of them all ; but relatively speaking, the manufacturers enjoy a greater degree of wealth and prosperity than the farmers, and I do not say this in any way as reflecting upon this important class in the community, but it is the duty of this House to legislate in such a way as to contribute to the development and well-being of the greatest body in the community.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, representing, as I do, one of the largest agricultural constituencies in the province of Ontario, I think I am simply doing my duty in voicing what I believe to be the opinions of the large majority of my constituents. Before I address myself particularly to the budget speech made by the hon. Minister of Finance, and to the amendment thereto moved by the hon. leader of the opposition, I want to say a few words in regard to the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes). That hon. gentleman has travelled north by south, east by west. He is a protectionist, a free trader, a revenue tariff man ; anything that the government may adopt he will follow and cheerfully support. He quotes a number of statistics of agricultural products which he claims are exported to the United States for home consumption ; but in the short time that I have had to look into the matter, I am satisfied that the great majority of these exports have been bought by speculators and exported in bond through the United States to other foreign countries. Then, in discussing the position of the manufacturers in this country, he told us that one of them had said to him that he would be quite willing, if the United States would throw down their tariff wall, to meet the American manufacturers on fair ground. I am satisfied that that statement is true. The hon. gentleman cannot find in this country a manufacturer who would not be willing to meet the United States manufacturers in a fair field, but he is not willing to meet them with one hand tied behind his back, as he is by the Canadian tariff being so much lower than the American. But give us a fair field, and the manufacturers of Canada are prepared to meet those of the United States in the open market. So are our farmers ; but we do not want the United States to be pouring their free corn into this country when we have to pay duty in the United States on the grains which the free corn displaces. My hon. friend asked : How are we going to protect the farmers of this country ? The farmers, in my opinion, are fairly well protected now, thanks to the Conservative government and the National Policy. Let me point my hon. friend to one industry which has grown up in this country within a few years. I was the first one in this House, I think it was in 1885, to advocate the placing of a duty upon pork. I proved to the government that in the year previous we had imported into this country $12,000,000 worth of pork, beef, and the products of beef and pork. I asked the government to come down with a protective tariff on pork, and I predicted that in a very few years this country, in place of sending $12,000,000 to the United States for beef and pork, would be raising plenty to feed our own people and have a large export beside. We used to send $12,000,000 to the United States for pork and beef with which to feed the people of this country, and when the pork and beef was gone the Americans had our money and the Canadians had nothing but the bone and muscle which that beef and pork produced. The late government came down with a protective tariff on those articles, and what has been the result ? Every farmer in Canada is a manufacturer and is manufacturing sufficient pork in this country to feed our people, and is exporting annually millions of dollars' worth besides. That is an object lesson of how our farmers can be protected. In the same way we could secure for our farmers the absolute control of our home market for vegetables, which to-day are imported to a large extent from the United States. But my hon. friend is evidently a trimmer. His sole object seems to be to make a speech which will enable him to proclaim himself a free trader in some portions of the country, and then go to the salt manufacturers and others and declare himself in favour of protection.

Let me now address a few words to the government. It is well known that this government came into power in 1896 over the corpse of the Manitoba school question. The right hon. the Prime Minister promised the people that, if returned to power, the first thing he would do would be to send out a commission, headed by the hon. Sir Oliver Mowat, to Manitoba to investigate the facts of the school question and that he would then settle that question at once and for ever. Did he carry out that solemn promise which he then made to the people ? No, Sir, he did not send Sir Oliver Mowat, but sent another emissary, and managed by some manipulations and manoeuvres, to have the school question smoothed over temporarily and then said : 'Now the question is settled.' Let me ask whether the people of the province of Quebec will take the word of the Prime Minister as against that of the high dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church ? What does the Archbishop of Manitoba say on the question ? He declares positively that it is not settled, and the Archbishop of Montreal, who has just returned from Rome where he had an interview with His Holiness the Pope on this very question, also declares that it is not yet settled. Well, for my part, I am prepared to believe the dignitaries of that church rather than the right hon. Prime Minister on this point.

The right hon. gentleman made a promise to the temperance people. He said to them: 'If you elect me to office, I will submit a plebiscite to the people on the question of prohibition.' And I will give effect to the will of the people. He did submit a plebiscite, and then sent down to the province of Quebec three or four of his ministers to tell the people there that if prohibition were carried, it meant an extra two dollars a head of taxation on every man, woman and child in the country, and as every French Canadian family is very large—pretty near 15 being the average French family.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the French Canadian voter of the province of Quebec said to himself : I do not drink any whiskey, but if this prohibition is going to add $2 per head to our taxation, it means that I will have to pay about $30 per year more on my little family, and I will vote against it. The present Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), then Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) asked the people of Quebec to vote against prohibition on this ground, but notwithstanding all their efforts, the result of the plebiscite was a large majority in favour of putting an end to the liquor traffic. Did my right hon. friend give effect to the will of the people ? Why, that question stands to-day exactly as it stood before the plebiscite was taken.

Then he promised that if returned to power, he would take the duty off agricultural implements. Did he carry out that promise ? He found a tariff of 20 per cent on agricultural implements. That rate still exists on these articles to-day. Did he not also, during the elections of 1896, promise the people free coal oil ? Why, we saw posted on every barn and fence throughout the country the placard : 'Vote for Laurier and free coal oil.' Has he redeemed that promise ? My hon. friend, who has just spoken, would like to see the government redeem that pledge, but how many years is he going to wait for them to redeem it ? All they did was to reduce the duy one cent a gallon on coal oil, which, I must say, is removing it in a very infinitesimal degree.

The right hon. the Prime Minister likewise promised reduced expenditure. Put me in, he said, and I will surround myself with a cabinet of business men, and we will run this country on economical lines. If elected, we will reduce the expenditure $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. The Hon. David Mills said that they would reduce it $5,000,000, but the right hon. gentleman would not go that length. He said he was not prepared to promise a reduction to that extent, but that certainly he would reduce our annual expenditure some $3,000,000 or $2,000,000. Have the government redeemed that pledge? Instead of reducing the expenditure they have increased from $40,000,000 to $63,000,000. They have increased our annual expenditure by about $23,000,000.

The right hon. gentleman promised to reduce the national debt. Has he done it ? Sir, he has put a mortgage on every farm in this country, which in the aggregate amounted to $13,000,000 taking the whole Dominion, since he came into power. My hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), when in opposition, used to work out how much every extra million dollars of increased national debt amounted to on every farm in the country, and he would exclaim : That is the mortgage put on your farm by this corrupt Tory government. Put us in and we will redeem that mortgage. Have they redeemed it ? On the contrary, although we have the largest revenue this country has ever had, they have run the country into debt, by their extravagant expenditure, on another $13,000,000.

The right hon. gentleman further appealed to the country : 'Put me in and I will abolish the national policy.' Both the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce made the same pledge. Put us in, they exclaimed, and there will be no more protection. Have they carried out that promise ? We had the statement of the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) a few nights ago, that the tariff to-day is practically the same as that which Mr. Foster left. These hon. gentlemen made a few changes, but their tariff is the same old national policy, and the ex-Minister of Public Works stated this much more forcibly than I can do it. Let the members of the government settle with their former colleague as to which is right. The people will have no difficulty in deciding between them because there is the tariff. In the one column is set forth the old rate and in another the new rate, and out of a hundred items, not more than probably one or two are changed. Some are changed up and some are changed down.

The next promise made by the right hon. gentleman was that he would reduce the number of cabinet ministers. Has he done that ? Instead of doing that, he took two who were only door keepers in the Conservative government and made them full pledged Cabinet ministers with increased salaries.

Mr. BENNETT. And back pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, antedated—away back. Then he promised the people : We have one chamber of the Dominion legislature filled with old women. We will abolish that or reform it. Has he redeemed that promise ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is reformed.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is there just as the Conservative party left it, except that a few of the Conservatives have died.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) shakes his head and says it is not quite the same. The only difference is that a few of the Conservative members have died and their places are filled with partisans of the present government.

Mr. SPROULE. Old women too.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, for instance the gentleman who used to represent North Wellington is there. When the Conservative party were in office and that gentleman was in this House, he used to speak of the Senate in no complimentary terms. But he is now a venerable and distinguished member of that body. Then, the Prime Minister promised the people : Put us in and we will reduce the taxes on the necessaries of life and put them on the luxuries. I would ask the right hon. gentleman now on what necessary of life have the taxes been reduced, with the single exception of corn, which may be regarded as a necessary of life? And on what luxuries has he increased the taxes? On the poor man's luxuries and his alone—tobacco and sugar. Before I sit down I shall give some figures to show the enormous sums that hon. gentlemen opposite have taken out of the pockets of the poor farmers and labouring men of this country by increased taxes on sugar and tobacco last year as compared with the year 1895. Then, while promising the people of the country generally in his speeches that he would abolish the national policy, the premier went to the manufacturers, closeted himself with them, and assured them that they need not be afraid, that his party would not interfere with the national policy. Ask the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) whether that statement is true or not. He made the statement on the floor of the House, declaring that it was not a cabinet secret, that there was a private, secret bargain made with the manufacturers, that if the Liberals got into power they would not interfere with protection. And so we still have the protection, notwithstanding the promise given to the farmers that it should be abolished and the duties removed. I could go on for a long time setting forth the promises made and broken by the party now in power. But I can quote words more forcible than any I could use, from the utterances of one of their most prominent supporters, a gentleman who has done more, given more time and spent more money in the interests of the Reform party than any of those I see before me. This gentleman wrote a letter, after negotiating with his friends. He thought he had just claim, considering all the time and money he had spent in their interest, to a seat in the Senate. But he found he could not deal with them, as the price was too high. He wrote an open letter, and this is what he said:

It would be utterly wearisome to review in detail all the ugly record of promises made and broken by the present government. I can only glance at some of those not already noted. We declared that the number of paid ministers in the cabinet was too great under the late administration; we have the same number still and their aggregate salaries are $4,000 per year greater, one-half this sum going into the pocket of the minister who recently declared that every pledge has been kept. We denounced the expenditure on account of superannuation and pledged ourselves to wipe it out; it was greater by $14,331 in 1899 than it was in 1896. We denounced as useless the creation of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The 'useless' department has been continued. We promised to abolish the Senate or radically change its constitution; by affording that body an opportunity to save the country from the consequences of extravagant and corrupt deals, the government has enabled the Senate to demonstrate its usefulness, almost its indispensability. We denounced the development of monopolies, trusts, and combines as a consequence of the policy of our opponents; not a single one of those which were in existence in 1896 has been destroyed or put out of business——

He refers to the coal oil monopoly.

—while others have been created and given a foothold in the country by the direct action of the government. We declared that the expenditure for the administration of justice was too great. Sir Wilfrid Laurier even going so far as to say that thousands of dollars paid to counsel had been improperly if not corruptly paid; the expenditure of this department has been increased by $353,000. We denounced the expenditure of $120,000 for immigration purposes; we have more than doubled this expenditure, increasing it to $255,000.

Mr. MONK. It is $500,000 now.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, it has doubled up again.

We condemned the granting of public lands as bonuses to railways; only by the opposition of the Senate was the government prevented from consummating a deal by which twenty-five thousand acres of gold-bearing lands, to be selected by the beneficiaries, was to be given per mile for the building of a narrow-guage tramway, a transaction so flagrantly improper that several government supporters refused to vote for it, and it is doubtful if any one would now be willing to defend it on its merits. We denounced the granting of cash bonuses to railways, declaring it to be 'a fruitful source of jobbery, peculation, and corruption'; we have well nigh out-Heroded Herod by the reckless way in which we have granted cash bonuses to railways, giving in one instance for the same railway two millions more than we had condemned our opponents for offering, and in another actually granting a bonus to a road for which no charter had been granted and which was not even projected. We condemned all corruption; yet our leaders have made us responsible for the Crow's Nest job, by means of which the directors of the leading government organ were permitted to practically grab a quarter of a million of acres of coal lands, and the country is saddled with a totally unnecessary payment of two millions of dollars. We promised purity of administration; the history of the notorious Drummond railway job shows what regard our leaders had for such a promise.

But why go farther?

He stops, as I felt compelled to stop, for it is impossible to cover the whole list.

The record of our party while it has been in power under its present leaders is one long, shameful story of promises unfulfilled and pledges broken; of reckless extravagance; of jobbery and corruption; and of utterly disgraceful betrayal of every principle for which as a party we have stood.

I could not use such strong language if I tried, nor could I draw a more faithful picture of the present government than this that one of their own prominent supporters has drawn up—and he knew the inside workings of this government.

For the purpose of securing themselves in office the men who have been entrusted with positions of leadership have brought disgrace upon our party and dishonour upon the name of Liberalism. What then is our duty to our party and to our country? Again I repeat that only by repudiating these leaders, by disassociating ourselves from them——

They are going fast. One honest man has gone out, the ex-Minister of Public Works. He could not swallow it all:

—and by doing all that may be in our power to punish them for their falseness and treachery, by driving them from power and from the offices which they retain as the price of their treason to principle, can we as individuals and as a party avoid sharing their guilt and participating in their shame. In no other way and by no means short of this can we hope to regain or retain as a party the respect and confidence of a patriotic and decency-loving public. It may be said that this can only be accomplished at the expense of a return to power of our political opponents; a party opposed to the political principles in which we believe. I do not dispute this, nor do I shrink from this alternative. Neither do I believe that any true man or any man who has an abiding faith in the truth of Liberal principles or in the ultimate triumph of truth will shrink from it. We are bound to assume that the Conservative party is permeated and guided by a genuine belief in the truth of its political ideals and in the correctness of its principles. At any rate we cannot truthfully charge that party or its leaders with having betrayed or abandoned its principles to get or retain office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I could not use stronger language than that used by Mr. H. H. Cook, the writer of that letter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When did he write it?

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) knows well when the letter was written, as he knows the contents of it. It was published in all the papers in Canada. But I can find it by looking up the files of the 'Globe' and 'Mail,' and I will give the date to the hon. gentleman when the House assembles after recess.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, just before the House rose, at six o'clock, I was reading to the hon. gentlemen opposite the opinion held of them by one of their supporters, a gentleman who supported them strongly in the election of 1896, a gentleman who perhaps gave more time and spent more money in the interests of the Reform party than any other man in Canada. I was reading this gentleman's opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, and of their conduct since they came into power. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) asked me when this letter that I read was written. I could not answer him just then, but said that I would do so after six o'clock. I tell him now that that letter was written by Mr. H. H. Cook about the 1st of October, 1900. After the hon. member for West York had asked me that question, the Minister of Customs, whom I am glad to see just now entering the House, said that we had had an election since then. It is true, we have had an election since then. The hon. gentleman sat in his seat while I was making accusations against the government, and while I read this letter of condemnation, written by Mr. H. H. Cook; the Minister of Customs, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce all sat in their seats, and not one of them dared to dispute a word, either of the statements that I made or of the statements made by Mr. Cook. In fact the Minister of Customs practically admitted that the statements were true, because he said: 'We have had an election since then.' As if to say, that wipes out the whole thing. It is true, all that Mr. Cook has said but we have had an election since then, and we are here and you are over there. How will the Minister of Customs make good the statement so far as it applies to the province of Ontario? Whose word was accepted in the province of Ontario, the word of my hon. friend or the word of Mr. H. H. Cook? Why, the Reform party came near being swept out of existence in the province of Ontario, and the Conservative party came back with a majority of over twenty. Where were the Reform party in that province of Ontario where Mr. Cook's letter was circulated, and where the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite had been ventilated on the platform? Manitoba, that great province, also sent a majority to support the Conservative party in this House. But we know how the majority supporting the government in this House came to be elected. They did not come from the province of Ontario.

Now, we have here a government conducted by some fifteen ministers, including the Solicitor General. We have a cabinet composed of fourteen members and a Solicitor General, each of them drawing a sessional indemnity of $1,500 a year, and the most of them a salary besides of $7,000 a year. How are these hon. gentlemen earning the salary that this country is paying them? Have they been sitting here since the Finance Minister made his budget speech? How many of these ministers that are being paid $7,000 a year by this country and $1,500 a year as sessional indemnity—how many of them are sitting in their seats to answer the charges that may be brought against them? Why, Sir, the other night the constitution was fairly wrecked when the Finance Minister moved the adjournment of the House, and looking round to find one of his colleagues to second the motion, there was not one of them in his place, and he had to ask a private member to second the motion to adjourn. That is how little these gentlemen think of attending to their duties. Why do we find so many of these ministers scattered to the four corners of the earth, enjoying themselves and having a good time? Why are they not sitting here like honest men, earning the salaries paid them by the people of this country as civil servants to administer the affairs of this country ? They go off on jaunts and pleasure excursions at the expense of the country. Look at the Auditor General's Report, and see the vast sums charged for the travel of ministers on their jaunting tours. Where are they to-night ? The Prime Minister, it is true, is not in his place, but he is to be excused, because his health being poor, the members of the House, particularly on this side, would not expect that hon. gentleman to be in his place any evening during the entire session. But where are the other hon. members whom the people are paying $8,500 a year ? They ought to be sitting in their places to answer the charges that are made against them by members on this side of the House in respect of their conduct in administering the affairs of the country. Why are they not here earning their money, the same as members on this side of the House, and those who sit behind the ministers themselves on the other side ?

Let me imagine a large incorporated company, a manufacturing concern that employs a president, a secretary, a treasurer and superintendents of different departments. Similarly we have in this country running the government, in the Prime Minister, a president, we have the Secretary of State, and we have the Finance Minister as treasurer ; then we have superintendents of the different departments. We have the Minister of Trade and Commerce occupying that position which he said there was no use for when he was on this side of the House, and which hon. gentlemen opposite said they would abolish if they ever got into power. But he is sitting there now as a looker-on, drawing his $7,000 a year and his $1,500 indemnity. Why is he not here to-night to answer the questions that I intend bringing up shortly in reference to the trade and navigation returns ? He is not to be found. He is the superintendent of that branch of the business. Then we have the Minister of Inland Revenue, to whose department I intend to refer before sitting down. Where is he ? Earning his $1,500 indemnity and his $7,000 salary. Is he here to answer to the people of this country for the way he is conducting their affairs ? The Finance Minister is the treasurer ; as is his duty, he has generally been in his place since the debate commenced. But he is practically the only minister out of the fourteen whom we have seen here. My hon. friend sits smiling opposite me, the Minister of Customs, who is the packhorse of this government, he has been pretty generally in his place also. My hon. friend the Postmaster General is here tonight, but we have not seen much of him since this debate commenced.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I guess they are attending receptions.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of the Interior, I have no doubt, is attending a reception across the sea. Well, he should be here attending to the duties of his office, managing the affairs of his department. Why did he find it convenient to clear out just when the session was coming on, going over there to look after the Alaskan boundary ? Could not some other man out of his department have gone over there to do the work that he is doing Is it because he is afraid to face the ex-Minister of Public Works that he is absent There must be some cause for it. Is he afraid to come into the House and face the jobs going on in his department, some of which we have heard of lately from the Yukon. The Minister of Public Works is the other pack horse of the government. He and the Minister of Customs have practically been the representatives of this government during the entire season from the time the House adjourned last spring until within a few days of meeting here, late in March. These two gentlemen are the pack horses of the whole cabinet. They remain here holding the fort, each of them acting for his own department and half a dozen other departments, whose heads were away spending the peoples money and drawing the salaries that I have mentioned. The Minister of Railways and Canals—why is he not in his seat He is paid $1,500 sessional indemnity and $7,000 besides. Why is he not in his seat ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I guess he is at a reception.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, yes, the hon. gentleman and his colleagues are great for receptions. If there is a reception given, either in Japan, or in England, or in any place in Canada, these gentlemen neglect their parliamentary duties and their other duties which they are sacredly charged to perform as the civil servants of the people of Canada. They desert their duties and go away to enjoy themselves and attend receptions. Then there is the Minister of Militia and Defence, we have only seen him in the House a part of two days since this discussion commenced. He should be here to defend his department for conducting which he is paid a heavy salary besides his sessional allowance. Then there is the Minister of Agriculture—where is that hon. gentleman ? Is he another one of those whom the ex-Minister of Public Works referred to as those of his colleagues with whom he was on terms of intimacy ? Is he one of those who are afraid to meet the ex-Minister of Public Works on the floor of parliament ? He is away over in Japan. We saw an account in the papers a day or two ago about his attending a reception over there with the Geisha girls. Is that what the Minister of Agriculture is paid for doing in place of being here attending to his department ? That hon. gentleman is at the head of the most important department of this whole government, yet we have not seen him in the House during the entire session. How long are the people going to put up with this kind of thing ? Would any business concern allow its president, its secretary, its treasurer and the superintendents of each of the departments to absent themselves from their positions of trust without leave and not bring them to book ? Not an institution in this country would do it. Will the people of this country, once their eyes are opened to the conduct of these hon. gentlemen say to them: You have done well; you have performed your duties faithfully and we will return you to power ? I think nay. They will say that they have been unfaithful stewards and they will make them walk at the next election, come when it may. The hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) has been fairly faithful in his attendance in the House but he is not here to-night. We have two hon. ministers out of the fifteen sitting in the House to-night during this debate when every minister ought to be in his place. We have the hon. Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Carroll). Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were on this side of the House and when the late Conservative government appointed a Solicitor General, found a great deal of fault with that appointment, but the excuse is made now, that, that having a Solicitor General, a large amount of fees that formerly went to lawyers for transacting the affairs of the country will be saved because the work will be done by the Solicitor General's Department. Look at the Auditor General's Report and you will see that there is not a town or village in this country in regard to which there is not the record of some heeler of a lawyer having been paid large sums of money for attending to the affairs of this country when we have the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Solicitor General paid large salaries to look after these matters. We find that the amount paid out in fees for legal services is double and treble that which was paid out under the late government. The hon. Minister of Finance, in introducing his budget, suggested some changes, but very few. I am satisfied that the changes that the hon. minister proposes in the resolutions now before the House are very disappointing to a large class of people in this country, to the manufacturers, the agriculturists and the labouring men. The hon. Minister of Finance, in his budget speech last year, led the people to believe that at this session of parliament there would be a revision of the tariff and that relief would be granted to many important industries in the country. But, the hon. Minister of Finance made no changes on the lines that he had intimated he would adopt at the last session of parliament. Ask the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) He said and said plainly and above board that there would be changes, that the hon. Minister of Finance had promised them, he stated so publicly and for having made these statements the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works was walked out of the cabinet. But, the hon. gentleman who succeeded him in the cabinet and who occupies the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) when appealing to the electors in the election following his admission to the government, made statements stronger than those of the ex-Minister of Public Works; yet, he supports a government that has repudiated the statements he made when he was seeking the suffrages of the electorate. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) moved the following resolution. He said :

I beg to move the following amendment to the motion of the hon. Minister of Finance :

That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be left out, and the following substituted therefor :—'This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians ;

'And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session.'

This is the amendment that is now before the House. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) and others who have spoken have found a good deal of fault with the word 'adequate.' What is the meaning of the word 'adequate.' If I understand the English language it means sufficient.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). For what ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Sufficient protection to secure to the manufacturers, to the agriculturists, and to the labourers of this country the work of manufacturing or producing all the articles that we can produce and manufacture in this country by our own labour and keep the money in our own country. Make your tariff sufficiently high to do that.

Mr. HOLMES. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) allow me to ask him a question. He has defined the meaning of the word 'adequate.' Would he tell us what he means ? Does he mean twenty-five per cent, thirty-five per cent, of forty-five per cent ? Specify it.

Mr. TAYLOR. No I will not.

Mr. HOLMES. He cannot do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend was willing to go as high as thirty-five per cent. Now, I am willing to go to the amount sufficient to protect the industries of the country even if it is one hundred per cent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One hundred per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, one hundred per cent, and there are articles under the tariff to-day that are practically placed at one hundred per cent. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is away above thirty-five per cent on the lines he manufactures. Adequate, in my opinion, means sufficient, and sufficient, in my opinion, and in the opinion of hon. members on this side of the House means that the tariff should be so adjusted as that it will protect our industries without respect to figures. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) will call thirty-five per cent a revenue tariff, or he will call it a free trade tariff, or anything to suit himself, but he will not admit that it is a protective tariff. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to a few figures which I have taken from the Trade and Navigation returns and I think they will be found correct in every particular. I will just name eight different articles that were imported into this country in 1895 and the same articles imported in 1902. In 1895 we imported the following articles :—

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS IMPORTED IN 1895.

	No.	Value.	Duty.
Cultivators	1,796	$ 12,283	$ 2,456 45
Drills	1,235	15,825	3,164 84
Harrows	1,819	15,418	3,003 57
Harvesters and binders	1,045	82,094	16,418 80
Horse rakes	295	4,450	891 90
Mowing machines	1,451	48,113	9,612 80
Ploughs	1,661	29,814	5,964 99
Reapers	19	952	190 40
Total	9,321	$208,949	$41,783 75

These were the numbers and values of these articles imported in 1895 together with the duty paid. Now, Sir, what has been done by these hon. gentlemen ? Have they given the manufacturers of these articles sufficient protection or not ? Have they given the workingmen sufficient or adequate protection to keep these goods out of Canada and have them made in this country ? They have not done so. Notwithstanding that the increased population of the country required these implements no sane man after the statements made by the right hon. leader of the government and by the hon. Minister of Finance threatening free trade and threatening to abolish the duties would put his money into a manufacturing industry of this kind to make more of these implements to supply the needs of the country. What is the effect this year ? The following table will show the number of articles imported this year; their value and the duty collected on them.

1902.

	Number.	Value.	Duty.
Cultivators	2,755	$ 22,863	$ 4,566 80
Drills	2,014	50,243	10,018 40
Harrows	2,472	36,755	7,343 60
Harvesters and binders	9,230	894,474	189,035 80

1902—Con.

	Number.	Value.	Duty.
Horse rakes	9,798	181,581	36,131 60
Mowing machines	17,658	600,743	119,810 00
Ploughs	10,092	214,193	42,838 60
Reapers	786	37,879	7,265 80
Total number	54,805	$2,038,731	$417,010 60
Total for 1896	9,321	208,949	41,783 75
Increase	45,484	$1,829,782	$375,216 85

Thus, we sent to the United States last year nearly two million dollars to purchase these implements. In a very few years there will be nothing left of them but a heap of scrap iron, and the Americans will have our two millions dollars, whereas if we had a government that would have given adequate protection, every one of these articles would have been made in this country, employment would have been given to our workingmen, Canadian farmers would be supplying the home market, and we would have these two million dollars in Canada as a national capital to help on our progress and development. But the only benefit we have out of all this business is that $375,216 in the shape of duty have gone into the treasury for this government to squander extravagantly, as they have been squandering the millions of money which they are getting from other sources.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) allow me to ask him, if these were not the very articles that the leader of the opposition is reported to have said were adequately protected now ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not responsible for anything the leader of the opposition said, and further, I don't believe that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Paterson) heard him say it, and furthermore, I do not believe that the leader of the opposition did say it, because he has explained last year and this year, that adequate protection means sufficient protection to have these goods manufactured in this country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is reported that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) said it, and it has not been denied.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, there are lots of reports, and I could give some reports about my hon. friend's (Hon. Mr. Paterson) industry up there, too. The contention of this side of the House, and it is the argument of every man who has the interests of the agricultural and labouring and manufacturing classes at heart; the argument on our side is that every article I have enumerated there should be manufactured in this country so as to give employment to the labour that would consume the produce grown in Canada, and would keep our money at home as national capital instead of sending it to a foreign country.

But let me call the attention of the House to another matter. These gentlemen on the treasury benches promised that when they got into power they would give free trade and in order to hoodwink the people on the free trade question, they put corn on the free list. What has been the result of that ? In 1896 we imported into Canada 1,485,980 bushels of corn, which paid a duty for all purposes, whether for manufacturing into liquors or otherwise, and we imported free corn to the amount of 262,680 bushels, or a total of 1,748,660 bushels. What was the result last year under the policy of this government ? The duty collected in 1896 was $207,301.29. In 1902 we imported 474,-950 bushels of dutiable corn that went into the manufacture of whiskey, I suppose, and paid a duty of $35,609.62, but we imported free corn to the amount of 4,485,372 bushels, a total for the year of 4,959,987 bushels against a total importation in 1896 of 1,748,-660 bushels, or a total increase this year in dutiable and free corn over 1896 of 3,211,217 bushels. What does that mean ? It means that these 3,211,217 bushels of foreign corn have displaced the Canadian farmer's products of peas, oats and barley, that would otherwise have gone to feed the pork and the beef that was raised by the Canadian farmer. And in consequence the product of the Canadian farmer had to find a market elsewhere on account of being displaced by American corn. My hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Holmes) says that the people of his county want free corn. I can tell him that I represent a constituency in which there are as many well-to-do farmers as there are in West Huron, and I do not think that you will find a farmer in my county who will not vote against the importation of free corn. If the farmers of this country would sink their political feeling and speak their minds they would say, that they can grow all the corn and coarse grain needed in this country to supply the market. There is another matter I want to call attention to. The Prime Minister, and the Minister of Customs, and every member of the cabinet, promised that if they got into power they would take the tax off the poor man and put it on the rich man. They announced that the necessaries of life should be free and that luxuries should be taxed. Let us see what this government did in relation to some of the necessaries of life. Let us see what happened in connection with sugars and syrups. In 1902 we imported of refined sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard, 51,379,-428 pounds, on which a duty was collected amounting to $642,278.53; we imported of sugars not above 16 Dutch standard, of all kinds, 318,696,019 pounds, on which a duty was collected amounting to $2,107,149.64. These are the raw sugars brought in to supply the manufacturers of this country, and that is the amount of duty the government collected from that article. Of syrups we imported last year 1,355,552 pounds, on which a duty was collected of $10,104.09. On molasses a duty was collected amounting to $423.84; on sugar candy a duty was collected amounting to $54,-248.23 ; on glucose a duty was collected amounting to $38,177.16, and on sacharine a duty was collected amounting to $64,573.80. On all these articles I have mentioned the duties collected in 1902 amounted to $2,916,-955.29, whereas on the same articles in 1895 the duty collected amounted only to $365,-796.23, or an increase of duty on the poor man's sugar amounting to $2,551,158.06. Here was over two and a half million dollars wrung out of the pockets of the poor men of Canada, in order to swell the treasury for the government to squander it corruptly. What becomes of their promise that they would take the taxes off the necessaries of life. Sugar is a necessity of life, and yet this government have collected two and a half million dollars on it, more than was collected under the Conservatives in 1895. And the government do this in order to swell their surplus to $13,000,000. Why was it that the Conservative government had not a surplus in 1895 ? It was because the then Conservative government took the taxes off sugar and let the poor people of this country have free sugar. But these hon. gentlemen on the raw materials of the sugar manufacturers of this country collected taxes amounting to over $2,000,000, and the refiners can only take it out of the pockets of the people who consume sugar.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then the hon. gentleman is not in favour of a duty on sugar ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am in favour of a duty on manufactured sugar, but not on the raw sugar. I am in favour of admitting the raw sugar free and giving our manufacturers a chance to employ labour in refining it. This is what I am in favour of, and evidently the hon. gentleman is not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You forget that you put a duty on raw sugar again after you had taken it off.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have given the figures showing what we did in 1895, and what hon. gentlemen opposite have done in 1902. Let the hon. gentleman contradict the statement if he can ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You left a duty upon a certain grade of sugar in 1895.

Mr. TAYLOR. And if the Conservative party, when they went out of power, left a duty on any article, our hon. friends opposite pledged themselves that when they came into power they would remove it. They pledged themselves that they would remove the taxes from the necessaries of life. Have they carried out their promise ? Is it an excuse to say, we will not do as we agreed to do because the bad Tories, when they were in power, left a duty on a certain article. They think as much of their promise as a bird does of its song.

Anything will do, so long as they can say, we are here and you are there.

Let us see how the matter stands with regard to the excise duties. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite will say that tobacco is a luxury, and the people who use it must expect to pay for it; but this is the way they have soaked the poor man on his tobacco. The total excise duties collected by the Conservative government on liquors, cigars and tobacco in 1895-6, as compared with those collected by the Liberal government in 1902-3, were as follows:

In 1902-3..	$11,130,348 67
In 1895-6..	7,801,671 94
Increase..	$ 3,328,676 73

On tobacco alone the excise duties collected were as follows:

In 1902-3..	$ 3,505,214 79
In 1895-6..	2,369,830 84
Increase..	$ 1,135,383 95

This shows how much more this government has taken out of the pockets of the poor men in this country who happen to use tobacco than the Conservative government took; and yet they promised to relieve the taxpayer. They required this money so that they might be able to boast of a surplus of $13,000,000.

I hope my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Campbell) is now in his place, because I am going to deal with fruits and vegetables which are imported into this country to come into competition with the products of the market gardeners for whom he promised to obtain protection. Last year we imported from the United States fruits of all kinds, such as apples, berries, &c., on which a duty of $765,771.70 was collected; and vegetables, such as potatoes, tomatoes, &c., on which a duty of $86,074.02 was collected; making a total tax collected from the people of this country who consumed these articles of $851,845.72. In 1895-6 there was collected on the same goods $573,732.86. There was collected last year $278,002.86 more than in 1895-6. These figures are taken from the Trade and Navigation Returns at pages 95 and 132. Surely the farmers, the fruit growers and the vegetable growers of this country, if they were given the adequate protection which the hon. member for West York said they ought to have, could produce these articles in this country. The $278,000 of money which went into the treasury would have been deducted from the surplus which the Finance Minister boasts of, and not only that, but $851,000 of our Canadian money would have been kept in Canada instead of being sent to the market gardeners of the United States, to pay for fruits and vegetables to feed the people of Canada on. When the fruits and vegetables are gone, there is nothing left to show for what has been sent to enrich the farmers of the United States. Will the hon. member for West York carry out his promise and see that sufficient protection shall be given to the market gardeners of this country, so that they should be able to produce and sell all the articles of this kind that we may require in the country?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would my hon. friend have any objection to read, or is he going to hand to 'Hansard' the different items to make up these imports?

Mr. TAYLOR. They are all here in my statement.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will the hon. gentleman read them now?

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister want any one to make a whole tariff for him?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I was merely asking the hon. gentleman to read the items which make up those imports.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give my hon. friend the page in the Trade and Navigation Returns, where he can find them and work them out for himself. I have read the tables, and my hon. friend will see them in 'Hansard.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Unless they are read, they cannot go into 'Hansard' except by consent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have read them; I have given the quantities and the amounts; and I think there will be a good deal more of the hon. gentleman's speech not read that will go into 'Hansard' than of mine. I wish to ask why this government have collected these large amounts of taxes from the poor people of this country on sugar and tobacco and on fruits and vegetables, to put into this overflowing treasury? It is only for one purpose, that they might squander this money among their supporters. They have spent the largest amount ever expended in Canada in any one year. Where can they point to any large or important work that they have built during the past year? It is true, they can point to some wharfs and piers down in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec and to a few in Ontario, and to a few public buildings scattered here and there. Some days ago I asked the question: what was the cost of taking the census in 1871, in 1881, in 1891, and the amount paid on account of taking the census of 1901 up to the 1st of March, 1903. The return brought down gave the cost as follows: In 1871, $511,330.40; in 1881, $456,904.19; in 1891, $570,115.54; and in 1901, up to the first of March, 1903, $1,112,900.20. More than double, on the average, what it cost the corrupt Tory government, as my hon. friends opposite used to call them, for taking the census in 1871, 1881 and 1891. And all this increased expenditure was simply to give a place to a lot of party friends who wanted a job. I do not know that I can do better than read an article published in the 'Weekly Review' of April 17th, 1903, which came to my observation a few days ago. The article is as follows:

THE CENSUS FRAUD.

The Auditor General's Report under the head of Dominion census throws some light on the subject of the expense being doubled, while the publication has been delayed and the returns are less accurate. The process seems to have been to appoint double the number of officials from their party office seekers, and to give each of them the same pay as their predecessors, who did twice as much work.

One expenditure to which the Auditor General objects is that of $1,486, incurred by the census branch investigating the census of 1891. Several men were employed at high salaries to endeavour to ferret out ex parte information that might seem to discredit the former census. For instance, diocesan records were procured, giving lists of the faithful in the various dioceses, and these were shamelessly used in the House as being enumerations of the total population. This expenditure of $1,500 would have an indirect value if Mr. Ross was not a traitor to his province, for he could urge it as a precedent of 1901, which, being fraudulent on the face of it, requires investigating far more than that of 1891.

But the most objectionable expenditure is that for the salary, $2,500, and travelling expenses, $1,032, for Mr. Thomas Coté, assistant special commissioner. This is only from June, 1901 to June, 1902, so it does not include the amount before then, or since, if he is still drawing pay. And we in Ontario have to contribute to this expenditure incurred for the purpose of manipulating the Quebec enumeration so as to defraud us out of our rightful representation in the House of Commons. No excuse can be offered for this appointment. There was no more reason why there should be an assistant special commissioner for Quebec than for Ontario or indeed for any of the other provinces. If the language difficulty were alleged it would be a flagrant false pretense. Mr. Blue, the special census commissioner, already had an assistant commissioner, Mr. E. H. St. Denis, an experienced census official, whose tongue is French though he is equally at home in English. Thus there was already ample provision for the instruction of the French-speaking chief census officers, for correspondence with them, and the county commissioners, and for any other duties requiring a proficiency in French. The only possible reason for the appointment of this unnecessary official is the obvious one of securing an over-enumeration of the population, while no such efforts were made on behalf of Ontario and the other provinces. The object was gained by such an unfair exaggeration of the figures for Quebec as compared with Ontario that we have been defrauded of six members. To arrive at this conclusion it is not necessary to suppose that Mr. Coté was dishonest in the execution of his official duties. It would answer the purposes to instruct him and to impress upon his mind the importance of making the best showing possible for Quebec and the propriety of giving the most generous construction to the confessedly doubtful application of the de jure system to non-residents. He would pass this on to the county commissioners and they to their enumerators, who would one and all be ready and willing to carry out such agreeable instructions. With another instructor for the Ontario chief officers and their subordinates, laying stress upon the necessity of being very careful not to count any persons as to whom there was the least doubt, the relative proportion of the provincial populations could easily be affected. We have no hesitation in charging the ministers who made this improper appointment with having done so with the deliberate intention of robbing us of our rightful representation in the House of Commons.

As we have seen there has been an expenditure of $1,500 to investigate the census of 1891. If Mr. Ross was not so busy with his efforts to cling to his unusurped power instead of looking after the interests of his province, he would demand that a similar amount should be expended in investigating the census of 1901 in this direction. A beginning might be made by examining special schedule A in which the names of non-residents were to be inserted by the enumerators. This might throw some light upon the subject.

That article, coupled with the return I have just read, shows how this $63,000,000 was expended by this government last year. Everything they touched, every job they did, cost double what it should. Money has been squandered in every direction just as it has been in the taking of the census, on which $1,200,000 has already been expended, and the work not yet nearly completed. We find that the cost of taking the census in Ontario was double what it was in 1891. That is a fair example of the manner in which everything is conducted. Take up the Auditor General's Report, and you will find that the same vile system was carried on last year, which was in force the previous three or four years—the system of buying goods from party friends and paying two or three times their value. The government buy coal oil at retail price. They pay 32 cents a gallon and $1.25 for the barrel, and last year bought some twenty or thirty barrels. I find that every dollar of public money paid out has been paid out without competition to political supporters, and two or three times the value of the goods paid. Why does not the government do, as any business man would, have all the buying done, after calling for tenders, and see that the money of the country is fairly and honestly expended?

Mr. Speaker, I have occupied more time abusing this government than I intended to do and yet I have not said one-half what I could say and which I would be justified in saying.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monk). I regret, Mr. Speaker, that owing to a business engagement which I was forced to keep, I was unable to hear the first part of the speech of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Taylor). For this I am very sorry indeed, for what come to my ears has given me a keen appetite for more. With several of the hon. gentleman's statements, I am able to agree, but with others I must disagree. Let me first pay some attention to the remark with which he started after dinner when, referring to the result of the last general election in Ontario, he said that that great province had returned a majority of twenty Conservatives to this House, and concluded with the very pertinent inquiry: Where were the Grits of Ontario? I can tell the hon. gentleman; the Grits of Ontario are to-day doing business in those dives where he and his friends had put them by legislative enactment. But I can tell the hon. gentleman also that there is a great singing and buzzing of wings in those hives, that many of these bees are taking new wings, and that at the next general elections the Conservative party will be very lucky in that province if they break even.

Mr. TAYLOR. Their majority will be increased to forty.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monk). But if I cannot agree with my hon. friend on this point, I can agree with him in his heart-felt sorrow that more members of the cabinet are not in their seats when such hon. members as the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) undertake to address the House. On both occasions, we should have the fourteen cabinet ministers, and the Solicitor General as well, in their places.

Reducing the matter to a cash nexus which the hon. member for South Leeds seems very fond of doing, I have to commiserate him upon the fact that while he made the major part of his speech only $14,000 worth of ministry, qua ministers, were in their seats—though I am glad to say that to listen to me I have about $21,000 worth of ministers.

An hon. MEMBER. The leader of the opposition is not present.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monk). That is quite true. But I can understand that the leader of the opposition knew who was to occupy his place in the matter of speech-making and he felt that it was in safe hands.

I was surprised to note during the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Taylor's) speech that it had not come to his knowledge where the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) is. I followed his remarks rather carefully, and I am glad to inform the hon. gentleman that the Minister of the Interior is now in England, in connection with the Alaska boundary commission, where he will do good work, for the Hon. Clifford Sifton has never undertaken anything that he has not carried through with remarkable success. The hon. member for Leeds speaks as if the work in connection with this commission was work that oculd be very well done by any third-class clerk in one of the departments. I differ with the hon. gentleman on that point; that work is so important that we can well afford to send one of the ablest Canadian public men to look after it. There will always be some other ministers to take his place during his absence, and see that the work of the department goes merrily on.

I do not intend to deal at length with the charges of extravagance and squandering which the hon. member for Leeds has made against this government, but I wish to congratulate the hon. gentleman on having introduced something entirely new into this debate. Having listened to many of the speeches in the debate, I had about come to the conclusion that there was nothing new to be said. But it filled me with admiration when the hon. gentleman introduced an entirely new point. Speaking of the importation of agricultural implements he said: In a few years they will be nothing but scrap iron, and the Yankees will have our money. I wondered that he did not follow his argument further and run it down to its logical conclusion. When he came to deal with the importation of free corn, why could he not have said: We have imported hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of free corn: the hogs have eaten the corn and the Yankees have our money. The argument is quite as good in one case as in the other. The hon. gentleman has overlooked the fact that, while it may be true that the Yankees have our money, we have got some little benefit out of the articles we have bought, while we are converting them into scrap iron or into bacon as the case may be.

Coming to the main part of what I have to say—and I shall be as brief as possible—I note that the hon. leader of the opposition, whose remarks I read carefully after having listened to them with equal attention, did not attack with any force the financial record of this government. He did not make the wild charges of extravagance which many of his followers have made, including the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. But his leading organ in the province of Ontario, in many editorials, has gone so far as to dub the government 'the Ottawa prodigals.' So, it seems I shall do right if I undertake to show wherein the expenditure has increased between the days of the Conservative government and the days of the Liberal government, by way of proving that the charges of extravagance are entirely without foundation. To do that, I would take the Conservative expenditure of 1895, not the year 1896, and for a very evident reason. In 1895, the Conservative expenditures reached their height; in 1902 the expenditure reached its height with the Liberals. The comparison then is fair. But there is another reason. We know that in 1896 the Conservative expenditure was purposely kept down because the government was going to the country and was desirous of making as good an appearance as possible before the country. Therefore, many public services were starved, with the result that the year following when the Liberals were in power the entire forgetfulness—if it were forgetfulness—of the Conservative government of the good adage that a stitch in time saves nine, brought it about that the people had to pay for the nine stitches where they ought only to have paid for one. Therefore, I compare 1895 with 1902. Now, in 1895 the total expenditure was a little over $38,000,000, and in 1902, it was $50,759,000. I have a difference of $12,627,000 to account for, and this is a task I assign myself here tonight. First, I come to the increase on account of interest on the public debt, and half a million disappears in this item. In the year 1895, our Conservative friends added to this debt $6,891,000, and in the year 1896 $5,422,000, or a total of $12,314,000, on which they did not have to pay a single cent by way of interest in the year 1895, but on which we had to pay interest in 1902. This accounts for almost $400,000 of this increase of $500,000 in interest on the public debt. As for the balance, we admit we have increased the debt somewhat—of which more anon—but the main part of this amount, that is, $400,000, was the work of hon. gentlemen on the other side for which we should not in any way be considered responsible. Next, we come to the increase in the cost of management. This item is comparatively small, but sometimes such items have to be carefully dealt with, because it is in small rather than large items that slipshod methods creep in. We find that the increased cost of management is $48,000 odd. Of this about $37,000 was increase in the cost of printing new bills, cancelling the old, signing the new, &c. The fact is that the old bills had become worn out and dirty and we thought that clean currency should accompany clean government. I am not going to apologize for spending the money in this way, although there is an increase of $37,000 on this account. Then there was an amount of $6,598 for stamps in excess of the expenditure of 1895. This was an expenditure in England over which we have no control, a tax which we must pay, because, in common with other nations we go to England as our money market. And as to the balance of the account—and I have accounted for practically the whole $48,000—where it could be kept down it has not been increased by one solitary cent under this government compared with the expenditure of 1895. In the matter of brokerage, commissions, management of the debt in England, the charges are identical in one case and the other. Then as to the expenditure of managing the savings banks throughout the Dominion, if hon. gentlemen will compare the two records, they will find precisely the same in each town in which these banks exist, although they are being reduced in numbers and eventually will be wiped out. There is an increase in the sinking fund of $567,069. We know that we have spent that much more money than the Conservatives did, but it was spent in only one sense. We bought securities with it, and when the time comes to redeem our indebtedness, we shall realize on these securities and shall have that much money to reduce the debt. It is an expenditure in one sense, but not in the other. It is simply taking the money from one pocket and putting it into the other. And so half a million of the twelve million is accounted for in less than two minutes by the clock. Next, we come to the item of arts, agriculture and statistics. Here we find a very large increase of $1,058,049. No less than $793,365 has been spent on the census. Now, I am not going to discuss the subject of the census. No doubt, later on, there will be a debate on the subject, and I believe the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), when he comes back from Japan, will be able to explain that matter and take his own part. But as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has taken up the subject and referred to it in the most disparaging way, I may say that the census of 1891 was clearly shown by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) to have been a fraud—and I use the word because I believe the word. The present census is all wool and a yard wide—a good census—and you have to pay a good deal more for broadcloth than for shoddy. But, leaving this item, which should not be charged to agriculture, we come to Liberal expenditure on exhibitions—about $90,000 more than that of our friends opposite. The Conservatives did spend $26,000 on exhibitions in 1895. But, of this, something over $24,000 was spent on exhibitions in the North-west Territories, and, if all be true which we have heard about that exhibition, there was indeed a feast of reason and a flow of souls, though whether it promoted the interests of Canada along commercial and agricultural lines is open to doubt. But, even allowing that we expended in exhibitions $90,000 more than hon. gentlemen opposite did, it must be remembered that this included the Glasgow, Paris, Cork, Wolverhampton and Buffalo exhibitions, accounts for all which will be found in the statement for 1902. I will admit that there is some excuse for hon. gentlemen opposite in having taken no part in exhibitions in various parts of the world during 1895, for so far as I know in those dark days of Conservative rule, there was nothing in Canada of sufficient magnitude and nothing wonderful enough in workmanship to deserve an exhibition, unless it was deficits, and so far as I know, no prize was offered for these in any of the exhibitions of the world.

Next we come to the subject of cold storage. There has been an increased expenditure in connection with agriculture by way of cold storage and dairying, amounting in all to $136,000, and on experimental farms, $23,940. These items taken together, coupled with the census item I have mentioned, will go far to make up that $1,058,000 of increase in arts, agriculture and science with which I started my statement on this head. With regarfd to that cold storage, I, as a farmers' representative, coming from a county largely agricultural, coming from a county that has no large towns, am free to confess that the farmers of this country have reason to thank the Liberal government for that expenditure upon cold storage. I note the fact that in 1895 the Australians were getting in the markets of England for their butter from two to three cents a pound more than the Canadians were getting. And why ? Because they had good cold storage when we had poor cold storage, or none at all. They brought their butter across the Pacific, then across this great continent, and when they got it into the English market they got that much more from it than we did for our butter, though having to ship it a far less distance. I know that some money was being spent at that time by the Conservative government along these lines. But my charge against them is that when Australia had a system so perfect as that, by which butter could be transported that long distance in perfect condition, it was nothing to the credit of the Conservative government that we could not transport our butter a shorter distance, and that we got the price we did, although we are now getting a better price for the butter than the Australians. Therefore, I am not going to apologize for that part of the increase of $12,000,000 which hon. gentlemen opposite have dubbed extravagance.

The next item is immigration. Well, I am sure you will admit that not much need be said on the head of immigration. True, we are spending $299,000 more than our opponents spent, but with what result ? We are all rejoiced to see the influx of settlers from the United States and England. Do you suppose they would have come here entirely of their own accord ? No, our immigration agents have been doing excellent work among them, have been sowing the seed, and the harvest time is now upon us, and we are gathering in as a result of their labours. I think that our friends opposite might better have described the movement under their regime as an emigration movement from Canada, judging from the cancelled homestead entries and other evidences. So I am not going to apologize for that item.

For quarantine there is an increase of $163,000 over the expenditure by our opponents in 1895. Now, it is necessary to keep disease out of the herds in this country, and when I tell you that a large part of this expenditure has been to indemnify Canadian herdsmen for the slaughter of their diseased cattle and hogs, and in order to preserve Canadian hogs from the hog cholera, you will admit that in the interests of our farming population this was an increase at which nobody can cavil, and I believe hon. gentlemen opposite have made no objection to it. I will not go extensively into the subject of what this government has done in the way of reopening a splendid market in the United States for our live cattle trade. But we do know that in the days of the late government there was such an embargo upon our cattle going into the United States that trade with that country practically failed, and for four years and a half we shipped into that country less than 4,000 head of cattle, and we got back scarcely $50,000. But after the energetic action taken by our new farmer-Minister of Agriculture, through whose agency the restrictions were removed ; this trade went up by leaps and bounds, and one firm, the Ironsides Brothers, among the largest dealers in Canada, is my authority for the statement that the action of the government in getting that embargo removed added $10 a head to the value of the live stock in Canada. When I tell you that we are a beef-eating people in Canada, that we devour something like 100,000 head of cattle per month, the consequence of that statement is readily apparent. If we eat 100,000 head of cattle per month, we devour 1,200,000 head in the course of a year; and at $10 per head that would mean $12,000,000 extra added to the wealth of the farmers of this country by this farmers' government. You cannot get away from the fact, you may say the figures are extravagant, but you will admit that there is but one market price for cattle, that if the American buyer comes in and gives a certain price for a two-year-old to take over the line, the local butcher has got to give as much for another two-year-old in the same market. So when you raise the price of our export cattle you raise the price of our cattle for the home market; and we have a right to claim that millions upon millions per annum have been added to the wealth of the farmers of this country by the energetic action of the Minister of Agriculture. Having recaptured this market, is it strange that we should be willing to spend more money to retain it ? We know why the Americans put that embargo on in the first place. They did it because they said that disease existed in our herds. Well, suppose that disease broke out again and became widespread, back goes your embargo, and you would have as hard a time to remove it in the case of the United States, as you are having now in making an unsuccessful attempt to remove it in the case of England. Therefore we cannot consider any expense too great to ward off such a disaster as that coming upon the farmers of Canada. No one will object to the government spending on quarantine fully as much as that service requires.

Now, Sir, I come to militia, and this is a subject in which, as you know, I take considerable interest. But it does not follow that for that reason I should burden you long with a discussion of that part of our increased expenditure. Suppose we say the increase is $486,694. Analysing it, there is an increase in pay and in wages, and the increased pay to the permanent officers and men and to the militia civil servants amounts to $76,000. Well, Sir, we know that wages have increased all along the line, in every walk of life; and instead of accusing this government of extravagance in the matter of the militia, I would rather charge them with parsimony of the most extreme kind, in that year after year they take our young fellows to the front and pay them fifty cents a day, when at home they might make $1.50. I ask hon. gentlemen to note how independent I am, how I criticise the government when there is occasion for it; therefore when I support the government hon. gentlemen should give more weight to my remarks when they see how fair-minded I am. Next we come to military property. There is an increase of $141,000. We found the military properties which we took over from hon. gentlemen opposite were all tumbling down. I know whereof I speak, I am not taking the blue-books for my authority. I have been an enthusiastic militiaman for nearly twenty years, I have kept in touch with this subject, and I pledge my personal knowledge that these buildings were in a wretched condition. Indeed they are in none too good a condition now, but they are infinitely better than they were when hon. gentlemen opposite had them in charge. So once more I will not apologize for that increase, but I rather blame the government for not having made it a little larger. In military stores the same remark applies. There is an extra expenditure of $48,000. I think it well to have good rifles in this country, we have very few of them, but they are quite useless without cartridges to place in the chambers of those rifles. Especially would you find yourself in an awkward position if you were standing at 2,000 yards opposite another fellow who had ammunition and you had none.

Then we come to the matter of clothing. where there is an increase of $110,000. And that leads me to say that in the old days of the Conservative regime only half the militia was drilled every year. That was a most disastrous thing. The fellows went down for twelve days at a time, and as two years had to elapse before they were turned out again, they forgot practically in the meantime all that they had learned in those twelve days. Wiser counsels have prevailed with this government in this matter, with the result that we now drill them yearly. Now, would you expect us to go to drill every year and wear out as little clothing as we would if we drilled only once in two years ? We have spent $110,000 more in clothing; in addition to that our stores are in better shape so far as supplies and clothing go than they have been in many a long year past.

Then we come to the Dominion cartridge factory. Gentlemen, I would not have you think for a moment that I am one of those loud mouthed jingoes who wish to see a large standing army in Canada, who would like to see this country borne down by military expenditure. I believe my views are pretty much the views of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House as I have heard them expressed many and many a time. I agree that we should as far as possible encourage the practice of rifle shooting in this country, but you cannot have rifle shooting without cartridges. The cartridge factory at Quebec has been enlarged and increased in order to deal with the new situation created by the civilian rifle clubs which are in existence and which hon. gentlemen opposite never inaugurated and as a consequence of that the factory has been improved to such an extent that now it will be able to turn out three times as many cartridges as in times gone by. If you take these items you will find that they more than account for the total increase of $468,000. Then, we come to the mounted police. The increase is $302,090, but as more than that amount of money was actually spent on the force in the Yukon, and the Yukon as we all know, taking it from the first until the present, has practically paid for the Yukon, there is no increased burden on the people. With an expenditure of a little more than $8,000,000 and with receipts of a little more than $8,000,000, the receipts are less than the expenditure by about $200,000, covering a term of years. So, I make the broad statement that the Yukon has paid for the Yukon and having paid for the Yukon it has paid for the mounted police in the Yukon. This apparent increase of $302,000 is not really an increase because the money has come back. Next we come to public works and here is the largest individual increase we have except in the case of the collection of revenue of railways and canals. We find that the increase in this department came to $2,478,976 but what more do we find ? The only way to proceed in analysing matters of this knd is to compare them with the doings and the expenditures of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in the government. I have heard the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) time and again say : We refuse to be bound by those old comparisons. Let the dead past bury its dead. But if we do not make this comparison what are we to do ? We cannot compare anything with the Conservative party's present because it is not charged with the expenditure of money, we cannot compare it with its future because we are not sure it will have any future. So, we are bound to compare it with its past. If we proceed on this principle we find simply this : that the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) in 1896, in his main and supplementary estimates, and I will admit that he did not bring down the supplementary estimates but they were drafted by the government, they were found and read—in his supplementary estimates he was willing to spend the sum of $3,998,- 610 for public works. We have spent on public works $4,221,293, or we have spent more than he was willing to spend only about $225,000. But, mark you, in that year he had a revenue under $34,000,000 with a deficit of $4,000,000 and in this year we had a revenue of $58,000,000 with a surplus of $7,000,000—a very different case indeed. But, I need not have gone so explicitly into this argument because I think this is one of the increases that no one can object to. Liberals cannot attack it because this expenditure has been made by a government in which they have every confidence and hon. gentlemen opposite should not attack it because this is the expenditure of a man to whose virtues for many years they were blind, but their eyes have been opened and they have discovered that that hon. gentleman was the brains of the Liberal cabinet. Will these hon. gentlemen cavil at the expenditure of the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) ? I take it that they will not. Therefore, I pass to the next item. It is mail subsidies and steamship subventions $111,688 of which I need say little. We have been opening up new trade channels, and establishing new lines between Canada and South Africa, and the requirements of the country are such that the increase is justified. The next we come to is ocean and river service in which there was $291,997 of an increase. This is almost wholly accounted for by the purchase of two new steamers and the balance by the increased cost of wages and supplies which we meet all along the line and which we all know in every walk of life has advanced considerably since 1895. Coming to fisheries, we have an increase of $105,000. I do not find that any of our friends from the maritime provinces objected to that. I imagine that cold storage for the preservation of bait has something to do with this increase but when we take into consideration the benefit it has been to the fishermen of the maritime provinces I am sure hon. gentlemen will admit that there is ample justification for it. Then, coming to subsidies to provinces, we find an increase of $151,423. This is a matter that is statutory. We know very well that as population increases, these provinces getting so much per head, their subsidies must increase and that accounts for the whole amount save except a small item we saw fit to pay the province of Prince Edward Island and which one of the hon. members on the other side, at present in his seat, will, I think, not dispute, was a just and honourable payment to that province. And so, we come down to Indians. The increase in the vote for Indians is $101,726. There was a time when we sang with the poet 'lo, the poor Indian.' But we do not look very much to the poor Indian just now for the good reason that he has lost his franchise. I ask hon. members of this House as practical politicians and as great statesmen if they will not agree with me when I say that in the disbursements for Indians, politicians are not under the temptation to give the Indian more than his due. The increase in the expenditure from the government of the North-west Territories is very easily dealt with. There is an increase of $188,297. It is an increase certainly, but they are our wards and as the country fills up we have more services to perform until the time comes when they set up housekeeping for themselves and then this expense will be replaced by a subsidy. It is just as broad as it is long. I wish the increase had been $1,000,000 instead of $188,297, if it had been warranted by an increase in the population and prosperity of that part of the country, because, I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition when he says that far from cavilling at this increase he thinks the amount should be further increased. Then, we come to the interesting increase under the head of miscellaneous $928,910. In the miscellaneous column are stowed away all those expenditures which cabinet ministers, by any kind of process of reasoning, can manage to eliminate from their own expenses. No cabinet minister likes to swell his expenditure, and so, if there is any excuse for him to say : Well now, that is not properly in my department, they put it under the miscellaneous head with the result that there is great comfort for the souls of some of the cabinet ministers. The first item is $462,881. for the royal tour, I had hoped that this would be passed over in silence and no attention paid to it, but very recently I read in the columns of an Ontario newspaper an article criticising this expenditure. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me when I say that not only was that criticism in bad taste but it showed a lack of the knowledge of business principles as well. After the Prince and Princess had been sumptuously entertained in New Zealand, Australia and even in South Africa, I think it would have been unfitting if Canada had brought up in the procession at the tail end without a few brass bands and a little bit in the way of fireworks. If you were to come down to the cash basis to the mere question of advertising, and recollect that the heir apparent to the Crown was accompanied on that tour by some of the brightest newspaper correspondents in England, that they were cabling reports every day to the old land, that these reports were being copied throughout the British Isles in the provincial press—if we are to come down to the patent medicine argument, to the question of advertising, considering, the advertisement which Canada got, the money was well spent. And next we come to the Ottawa Improvement Commission which gets $60,000. Well, we got something in return for that; we get fire protection and free water, and I am told that is worth $15,000 or $20,000 a year. But suppose we got nothing in return; has the time come when we have not sufficient pride in Canada as a nation to be willing to expend a comparatively small amount like that each year to beautify our capital in the north. Shall we follow the example of other great nations; although we may not in strict accuracy be a great nation yet; we are on the way to it and as sure as the sun rises and sets so sure we will be a great nation.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Shall we let the time slip away from us, and not beautify this magnificent city which nature has beautified so much, and which is given to us as our capital city ? Hon. gentlemen opposite have made no complaint of it. In many matters of this kind when it comes to a particular item they are broad-minded and fair as we are, but when it comes to a matter of aggregates, why then they say : The government is extravagant, the government is spendthrift; behold the Ottawa prodigals. But gentlemen you cannot do that in the aggregate if you don't do it in the details, and unless your votes in committee show that you object to this, that and other item, you have no right to go before the country and to say that this government is extravagant and is squandering the money of the people. Then we have the assay office in British Columbia, which cost us $19,424. Why, in the days of the old Conservative regime we hardly had gold in this country, but shortly afterwards it was discovered, and so we find that we now have some occasion for an assay office, whereas before there was little or no necessity for it. Then we come to the Department of Labour and there we are spending $31,963. Is that in excess of what the Conservatives spent when they were in power for this puprpose ? Not a bit of it. That is an entirely new expenditure. When these hon. gentlemen were in power, having so much the interests of the country at heart, and being the champions of the manufacturers in this country—and these manufacturers let me tell them include the labouring hands working in the factories although these gentlemen opposite do not always admit it—when these hon. gentlemen opposite were in power they never thought enough of the labour problem in this country to organize a Department of Labour. But let me say to them, that should the government change to-morrow—which heaven forbid—should the government change to-morrow, hon. gentlemen opposite would not abolish the Department of Labour, but they would keep it right on in its old track and possibly spend as much or even more money upon it than we are doing now. Then I come to the expenses of the coronation conference in London; that conference about which there is so much argument; that conference at which hon. gentlement opposite say little or nothing was done. And yet, Sir, I maintain that $20,000 is money well spent, if it decided nothing more than this : That taxation without representation will not be tolerated in Canada any more than it was tolerated in the thirteen colonies in the olden days.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). I consider myself as good a Britain as any of you, but I am that and more too—I am a good Canadian. And when the British government, or some of the British statesmen had made up their minds that Canada would collect money to hand over to them for expenditure, then I say that it is a good thing for Canada, aye and for Britain, too, that they should not be kept in the dark, that that matter should be at once set at rest, and that they should know over there that we in Canada enjoy a self-government, one tittle or particle of which we do not propose should be taken from us; and, that any money we collect for imperial objects or otherwise will be spent through our own channels.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Then we come to the purchase of the Plains of Abraham. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me that that is perhaps the most interesting landmark in the country. We knew that the Plains of Abraham were about to be broken up into building lots, and this government came to the rescue and paid $80,000 for that historical landmark. And we know, Sir, that that was done by our generous French Canadian premier, supported by the French Canadian members of this House, who are broad enough and good enough Canadians to feel that in that battle on the Plains of Abraham, there was no disgrace for either race, and that the column erected to the joint memory of Wolfe and Montcalm in the city of Quebec, typifies the feeling of union that now exists in the descendants of those men who locked arms on these very Plains of Abraham.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). Then we pass on to the grant given to Marconi, amounting to $70,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). $80,000 in all, but $70,000 expended in 1902. Why, it only shows the enterprise of the government ; that is all. Marconi's scheme was poo-poohed; capitalists interested in cable companies and all that gave him the cold shoulder; he was thwarted in every way. But whether or not his discovery be perfected for the transmission of trans-Atlantic messages, it will be immensely useful to commerce, and it is a feather in the cap of this enterprising government that it should have taken up this friendless man and supplied money in aid of genius. More than that, this government did not do it for nothing. The idea of thrift came into the transaction; there is a streak of canniness in it; the Scotch members of the cabinet look after that. They said: Yes, Mr. Marconi, we are willing to help you, and if this thing comes to be successful we would like a little help in return. And so the cabinet arranged that if the matter does come out all right they are to get the services of Marconi's various offices at a greatly reduced rate; at a rate so much reduced that in a few short years the amount of the expenditure will be recouped to the government and we will be money ahead. Then we come to the banking service in the Yukon which cost $53,169. That is merely money spent in connection with the collection of the dues on gold mining in the Yukon. It all came back from other sources and it cost the people of Canada nothing. Then we spent $50,000 to aid the unfortunate sufferers in the West Indies. I believe that the hon. gentlemen opposite raised not one dissenting voice as to that item. I do not think there is a man in the House who would raise a dissenting voice against it. I believe we are all united in doing something for these unfortunates so heavily visited by the hand of God, and although they were our brother colonists I believe Canadian generosity would go even further than that, and that in the case of any great national calamity, whether the sufferers were brethren within the empire of some time enemies without the empire, we would be willing and glad to give them our assistance in some small degree to alleviate their sufferings. Next I come to an item so small that you will almost wonder why I am quoting it. It is the expenses of the half-breed claims commission, amounting to $10,161. The half-breeds in the North-west had some grievances, had presented these grievances to the government, and what did the government do? It sent out a commission and the cost of that commission is a little over $10,000. It is the association of ideas and not the amount that leads me to mention the sum. In the early eighties the half-breeds of the North-west had some grievances also, and they petitioned the government again and again but the pigeon-holes yawned for these petitions. Petition after petition was forwarded to the government only to meet with the same fate, and as a result we had a North-west rebellion, which cost the people of Canada $5,000,000 and scores of valuable lives, against a bloodless expenditure of $10,000 by the present government. It is things like these that cause me and other men of the rank and file in this House, to be proud to sit behind the men who fill the treasury benches.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). And now in that large increase of $928,000 for miscellaneous expenditure I have given you items which total $827,000, and the remaining $100,000 is composed of items so minute that it would take at least an hour to go into them, and I cannot weary the House that long, but if you refer to the books you will find that there is as good justification for every cent of the increase as there is justification for the items I have given to you. The expenditure on the Yukon provisional district was paid for by the Yukon, and it did not cost the people of Canada one cent. And yet the 'Mail and Empire' published an editorial in connection with a late interesting election contest in a constituency called North Ontario, in which it stated that the Yukon is running us behind, that there was a large deficit and that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) was trying to qualify for cabinet rank because he was trying to out—well, I won't use the word, because it would be unparliamentary—but at all events, to outstate the other cabinet ministers who had been in the riding, when he said that the Yukon had paid for the Yukon. That editorial in the 'Mail' contains a half truth, and nothing more or less. It is true that during this last year there will be a deficit if we include public works in the Yukon, but if you take the expenditure and receipts 'from the beginning of the world unto the day of the date of these presents' the Yukon has paid for the Yukon. That is what has occurred in the Yukon. Now, there is an increase in the customs of $258,391. Well, is that probably rather a questionable increase? As a matter of fact, having known the Minister of Customs since I was a very small boy, I have had a good deal of confidence in him throughout all that time, and frankly I must say that I never knew him as an extravagant man in any sense of the word whatever. He has carried his methods of economy into his department, and I have heard many business men who are not Liberals in politics, say that a better Minister of Customs Canada never had. When you consider the immense increase in revenue which the hon. minister is called on to collect, you will readily see that he cannot hope to bear the expense of his department with the same amount with which it was borne in 1895. But this he can say and prove, that so far as percentages go, he has collected every $100 of duty at far and away less cost that our Conservative friends did in 1895, even if he shows a total increase in the cost of that department of $258,000.

Next we come to the Post Office Department, in which the increased expenditure is $429,989, and I touch on this subject with some diffidence, because it is a subject on which I feel that I am sitting at the feet of Gamaliel. Yet in talking about the Post Office Department I feel that I am on safe ground, and I propose to take up the cudgels for a few moments. And here I wish to pay a compliment to the hon member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), who, I am sorry to see is not in his place to-night—a fact to which I call the attention of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) because in the event of a change of government, the hon. gentleman would be slated for a cabinet position, and if he does not stay in the House he is not training very well for the place in which he expects to earn a salary of $7,000, besides getting $1,500 indemnity. I have always entertained a feeling of respect for the hon. member for Bothwell, and to this feeling I must now add a degree of admiration for his courage in attacking the administration of the Post Office Department; because in the splendid galaxy of ably administered departments which we have in this government, there is no bright particular star more bright than that department. It is a subject on which we all like to talk when we are discussing administrative economy, and I will take up the statement of the hon. member for Bothwell and examine it. One grievance of the hon. gentleman is that the jubilee stamps which were issued by the hon. Postmaster General and were bought largely by the people of Canada, cannot now be redeemed in the currency of the realm. I wonder if the hon. gentleman is largely loaded up with this non-negotiable security. The hon. gentleman said that the Postmaster General took advantage of a loyal wave that was sweeping over the country to sell those stamps at the time; and, I suppose to complete the argument, now that the loyal wave has subsided, he will not buy his stamps back again. I think the hon. member for Bothwell must have invested a large sum of money in those stamps when his loyalty was at the boiling point, and now that it is simmering down, he has a grievance against the hon. Postmaster General because he will not relieve him of his investment. But what is astonishing to me is that the hon. gentleman, belonging as he does to the party of loyalty, cannot find some one in the party whose loyalty has not cooled, and who will relieve him of his purchase made at an unwary moment. The consequence is, the hon. gentleman says, the minister got half a million dollars by the trick, and that is the way he reduced the deficit. True, he did, and I think he was pretty clever in doing so. But he did it in one year only; he did not repeat the offence. What has that to do with the receipts and expenditures for this year? Nothing whatever, and yet he has an absolute surplus this year, when you make a fair comparison, of over $5,000. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. Postmaster General eliminates the Yukon and the Atlin districts, and were they not parts of Canada? What a splendid headline it would make for some of the Dawson papers, that the Postmaster General is insinuating that these districts are not parts of Canada! But this is poor argument for the hon. member for Bothwell. Of course, they are a part of Canada, but they were not until this government discovered that they were; that is the point. The Conservatives were not spending money on the Yukon and Atlin districts in 1895, and when the hon. Postmaster General wishes to make a comparison between his administration and that of his predecessors, why should he not eliminate what cost them nothing? When he does that, he has a surplus for this year of $5,000. But there is a discrepancy between the report of the hon. Postmaster General and the Public Accounts, and the 'Mail and Empire,' with briny tears in its eyes, asks who cooked the accounts; and it makes me a very flattering offer which I cannot refuse to accept. Referring to a speech I made in North Grey, it says:

> Sir William Mulock publicly announced that he had scored a profit of $5,000; but the post office report reports a loss of $82,375, while public accounts show a loss of $105,221.

And here, Mr. Speaker, is where I have hopes of future greatness:

> If Colonel Thompson can explain away these unfortunate discrepancies he is an excellent calculator.

Think, Mr. Speaker, what it would mean for me if I could go back to my constituency with the ipse dixit of the 'Mail and Empire' that I was an excellent calculator. It is worth making the attempt, and that attempt I wish to make now. There is that discrepancy between the report of the hon. Postmaster General and the Public Accounts, but that discrepancy will be found to exist where a similar discrepancy was the year before; and if you take the receipts and expenditures of the two years and work them out together, you will find that they work out dollar for dollar. The hon. Postmaster General did actually expend $105,000 in excess of his receipts, including the Yukon and Atlin districts in this particular year; but part of that was for expenditures incurred during the previous year; and therefore, adding the two years together, you will find that while his statement makes him about $28,000 better this year than do the Public Accounts, his statement of last year makes him that much worse off than they make him. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping. The hon. Postmaster General's administration of his department is such as would be a credit to any man, and hon. gentlemen opposite in cavilling at it, only expose themselves to ridicule.

Coming to the Public Works Department, the increased cost in the collection of revenue was $346,815. But the Atlin and Yukon telegraph lines and the telegraph lines in connection with the gulf service account for almost the whole of this amount, especially if you add $48,000 which was expended for the cable vessel the 'Tyrian.'

Then we come to the largest individual increase, the Railways and Canals, in which the increase cost of collection of revenue was $2,804,350; but the increase of revenue amounts to $2,751,531; so that if hon. gentlemen will note the two amounts they will find that the money comes rolling back into our coffers within $50,000 of the whole amount. Therefore the people of Canada must not be led to believe that we are spending money to that extent. We are operating more railways and canals, that are not supposed to pay directly, and next year the discrepancy may be still greater, because the government have announced their intention of making the canals as free as the ocean itself. This will, of course, involve an increased cost to the country, but the results in the form of a reduction of freight rates will redound to the advantage of the shippers and farmers of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that you are taxing the people more, because in this particular you are taking more out of their pockets than you are giving back. But the reverse is more likely to be the case, and the argument is as fair one way as the other.

The cost of the administration of justice in the Yukon last year increased $115,526, but it has come back to us in the form of Yukon royalties. It is not fitting that I should pass this matter over without saying a word on the administration of justice in the Yukon. I believe that our administration of justice in that distant country is one of the proudest incidents in the national life of Canada. We all know the enormous difficulties which must be met in maintaining law and order in such a distant and sparsely settled country, and we all know that law and order is maintained there as well as it is this night in the city of Ottawa. We know that no murderer can go unpunished there, that though it may cost $100,000 to hunt him down—and I believe in one case it did cost more than that—Canadian justice has an arm long enough and strong enough in the Yukon Territory to seize him and make him pay the penalty. So far from our increased expenditure on this head being a disgrace to us, we can take credit for it.

Now, I have accounted—and I believe fairly and reasonably accounted—for more than $12,125,000 of increase. What remains over is little indeed. I could even account for that but to do so would compel me to go into items of very small expenditure with which I must not weary the House. But the general argument applies, even if I refrain from the particular, with regard to these few items, and the general argument is that with an increase of trade in the country such as we are now enjoying, you cannot expect to carry on public business with the same amount of money as before. This reminds me of an epigramatic saying of the great Napoleon, which is particularly applicable to the point I am making. When, after a famous battle his soldiers reported very heavy losses in killed and wounded, his invariable reply was, with a shrug of his shoulders 'on ne fait pas d'omelette sans casser des œufs.'

Five minutes more, Mr. Speaker, and I think I can finish. The increase in our public debt, if we can take the estimate of the Minister of Finance for the expenditures of the current year—and we are now so used to find his estimates correct that we can have no hesitation in accepting them—the increase in our national debt will be $7,681,657 at the close of the current year, or a little more than $1,000,000 per year since this government has taken office. Can we not account for some of this increase? If we take the South African war and the Halifax garrison, which was of course part of the expenditure on the South African war—that garrison having been made a Canadian garrison to relieve the British soldiers—we find that the expenditure on that head amounted to $2,830,965. That is an expenditure which certainly nobody can complain of, but it forms a considerable portion of the increase in the public debt. Then there is the discount on the Fielding loan of 1897, amounting to $826,317. But we can offset against that discount the benefit which my hon. friend the Finance Minister obtained for Canada by succeeding, for the first time in its history, in floating a loan at an interest of two and a half per cent, and thus establishing a rate for investors in the case of future loans. This loan is generally conceded by financiers to have been an extremely good piece of finance. But inasmuch as we have to charge that loan against our capital debt at par and did not obtain par for it, we have to take that discount of $826,317 as one of the items which account for the increase in the public debt. But it is an item against which no possible objection can be raised, because we get the benefit of a lower rate of interest, which in a number of years, will more than offset the discount. It is an expenditure in one sense, but it is an expenditure which comes back to our pocket in much the same way as does the sinking fund. Then there is the cost of the expenditure caused by the eastern extension railway award, namely, $671,836 in Nova Scotia and $280,692 in New Brunswick. This expenditure was the result of an arbitration arising out of the complications incurred by the late government and wiped out by this government. It represents therefore an increase in our debt for which the present administration cannot be held responsible. Then take the purchase of the Drummond County railway, which cost $1,464,000. But we have the railway and we have by this means brought the Intercolonial railroad into Montreal. That certainly is an expenditure for which we have abundant justification and in return for which we have good value to show. The next item to which I will call the attention of the House is the arrears of the Post Office Department amounting to $685,000. When my hon. friend the Postmaster General took charge of that department, he found that not only were there yearly deficits but a large amount of old debts actually remaining unpaid, and which were carried over from year to year. Being desirous to make expenditure and revenue balance each year, so that we could tell exactly where we stood, my hon. friend asked parliament for a special vote of $685,000 to pay the debts incurred by hon. gentlemen opposite. Had hon. gentlemen opposite paid off these debts, the expenditure in their time would have been increased to that extent and also the public debt, and therefore we are not fairly chargeable with that amount of increase. I find next an item of $745,964 paid for arms contracted for by the late government, and for which they left us to pay the piper. This too should not be charged against the present administration. Then there is the sum of $500,000 paid in the settlement of claims in Manitoba, which were left unsettled by the old government. This certainly can not be charged against the present administration. Adding all these items together, they aggregate over $8,000,000 and hundreds of thousands more might be added in the same way of moneys expended because of circumstances extraordinary and unique in their nature or because of the necessity to pay debts incurred by Conservative governments. So that if we eliminate expenditure caused by the South African war and the debts which hon. gentlemen opposite should have paid but did not, you will find that we have not added one dollar to the public debt of the country, and more than that we have poured out millions like water in developing our canals and railways and making proper provision for the public works and general service of the country.

I must apologize, Mr. Speaker, for having detained this House so long listening to figures at this stage of the debate, when everybody is tired. I have no more comments to make on the budget beyond congratulating my hon. friend the Minister of Finance on the excellent showing he was able to make to the people of Canada and on the increasing prosperity which the country is enjoying under the able administration of this government.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a few remarks on the very important subject we are now discussing, but at this late hour, I do not wish to detain the House, and I would therefore beg to move that the debate be adjourned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The evening is still quite early and if my hon. friend desires an adjournment I do not wish to press him to go on.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of the Postmaster General, House adjourned at 9.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 29, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 131) to incorporate the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada, Limited.—Mr. McIsaac.

Bill (No. 132) to incorporate the Père Marquette International Bridge Company.—Mr. McCreary.

ANTI-CIGARETTE BILL.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of cigarettes.

Mr. G. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Explain.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Bill provides practically what is contained in the resolution that the House, by a very large majority, recently adopted. The Bill is founded on that resolution. It goes so far as to prevent the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes. I understand that this Bill may not be strictly regular, but I would ask, if necessary, that the House would suspend the rule, so that we may get the first reading. If there is any further explanation that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) requires I would be very glad to give it to him.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not take exception to the Bill being presented, nor do I raise any point as to the rule, but if I understand the resolution that was passed in this House a short time ago, it demands that the government, and not a private member, should introduce this legislation. This Bill, as I understand it, somewhat affects the revenue, and it is only the government that can deal with it. In view of that, the government should accept the responsibility for this Bill and see that it is passed into law. Either the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) should hand it over to the government and let them carry out the mandate of the House of Commons contained in that resolution, or else the government should now declare that they will take the responsibility for it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is somewhat in error when he wants to minimize the powers of the members of this House. A member of this House cannot introduce a measure which would put any burdens upon the people, but a member of this House can always introduce a measure which will decrease the taxation and take burdens off the people, and, as I understand it, in this case the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) does not apply. I would also remind my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that the government was not unanimous when the vote was taken on that resolution. It was looked upon as a question upon which the government were not called upon to formulate any policy.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the government are simply the servants of this House, and when the majority of this House commands the government to introduce legislation the government should not attempt to shirk the responsibility which is cast upon it by a large majority of the members of this House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

THE NATURALIZATION ACT.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the government to cause to be printed in pamphlet form the Naturalization Act, with the regulations and forms, for the guidance of officials and aliens in general ; the need of which is now so widely felt in Manitoba, and throughout the Territories ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock). In answer to the hon. gentleman, I have to say that the subject is engaging the attention of the government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Hear, hear.

SUPERANNUATION OF F. X. CHABOT.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. Has F. X. Chabot, Inspector of Weights and Measures, been dismissed from his position ?
2. If so, for what reason ?
3. Has a successor to him been appointed ?
4. If so, what is his name, where does he reside, and what is his salary ?
5. By whom was that new official recommended ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. Mr. Bernier) :

1. No, he has been superannuated at his own request.
3. Yes.
4. Louis Joseph Bourget, he resides at Lauzon, near Quebec ; his salary is $500 per annum.
5. By a person in whom the department has confidence.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to call your attention and the attention of the House to a paragraph that appears in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of April 27th. It reads thus :

MR. MITCHELL SCORES DOMINION MEMBERS.

Last night in Erskine Presbyterian church, the pastor, Rev. Mr. A. E. Mitchell preached an eloquent sermon, taking his text from 1 Corinthans, xvi. 13 : 'Watch ye ! Stand fast in the faith. Quit ye like men. Be strong.' He made a touching reference to the late Sir Oliver Mowat and said that he was one of the cleanest and best politicians Canada had ever seen. Continuing, the minister said, 'that the kind of men who were wanted in public life to-day were manly men, brotherly men and Godly men, not men of the Gamey-Stratton type, but men who were not afraid to remain in the House of Commons during prayer. It is a shame,' said the speaker, 'that only thirteen members out of two hundred and thirteen would be present in the House and the Speaker waiting for a quorum to open parliament. The other members were living at ease on their $1,500 a year and travelling around the country on passes enjoying themselves. It is robbing the country.'

Now, Sir, I call attention to this because I do not think I have missed prayers more than once. I can count noses on the other side of the House—I cannot do so as well on this side—and I notice that there are always on the other side during prayers more members than this gentleman says were in the House. I hope, therefore, that ministers of the gospel will take his advice, and be not only God-fearing men, but truthful men, who will tell the truth on all occasions, whether in the pulpit of out of it. I call the attention of the House to this matter also because I think that even this paragraph may induce more of the members to be here on time.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. A. C. LARIVIERE (Provencher). I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior to a motion which I made on the 16th of March last for a return of the report of the half-breed commissioners. It is a very important document, I have received many letters with regard to it, and I would like to have it brought down as soon as possible.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I will give the matter attention to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I moved some time ago for the correspondence between this government and the government of British Columbia with respect to the disallowance of certain Acts. I do not know whether it has yet been brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It has not been brought down, but I have placed it in the hands of the Minister of Justice.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (West Prince, P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few observations on the important matters now under discussion, I may have to traverse a good deal of ground which has already been gone over ; but I feel it a duty incumbent upon me, representing an important constituency in Canada, as well as in justice to myself, to make some remarks on this all-important question. We are discussing, Sir, the fiscal policy of our country, the expenditure of the country, the taxes of the people ; and, therefore, I feel that it is the duty of every representative of the people to state his views in parliament, and state them with candour and frankness, in order that the public interests may, if possible, be advanced. What we want in Canada is a well-defined policy, not a shifting or mixed-up policy. We have been listening during the last few days to speeches by hon. gentlemen who have commenced those speeches, by announcing themselves as free traders or tariff-for-revenue men, but have ended by proclaiming themselves to be great protectionists. There is no sincerity in that. What we want is a well-defined policy, such as that propounded in the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition, a policy of protection in aid of industries, in fact, a policy of Canada for the Canadians.

What have we heard from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ? We had the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) the other evening, in a very long speech, stating that he was pleased with the tariff of this government, that he was a tariff-for-revenue man, while towards the end of his speech he asked for more protection for iron and coal, which are very important industries in the province of Nova Scotia. Then, we had yesterday a very long speech from the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes), who also declared himself to be a supporter of a tariff-for-revenue, or if possible a free trade tariff ; but he wound up by saying : There is an industry in the riding I represent which should be protected --the salt manufacturing industry. Note the inconsistency and contradiction of his first statement. He said that to protect the salt industry in West Huron the government should tax the fishermen's salt, which now comes into this country free. Sir, I represent a district in which there reside a large number of fishermen, toilers of the sea, who follow the most precarious industry in Canada, going out on the water in their vessels and small boats to procure a living for themselves and their families. When the national policy was introduced in 1879, I had the honour of being a member of this House, and it was regarded as a policy of compensation, so that if the fishermen of the maritime provinces had to pay a duty on flour coming from the province of Ontario, the residents of Ontario had to pay a duty on coal from the maritime provinces ; but the only protection given to the fishermen was in having free salt. Free salt is a most important commodity to the fishermen, and it has been free ever since the introduction of the national policy in 1879 until to-day, when the hon. member for West Huron, a supporter of the present government, comes out and advocates its taxation. I want, for a moment or two, to say a word in connection with the speech made by the hon. member for Haldimand. That hon. gentleman, I must say, spoke fluently and ably, but there was one element absent from his remarks, and that was the element of sincerity, and the absence of that quality completely destroyed his argument. In referring to the administration and policy of the Conservative party from 1878 down to 1896, and speaking more particularly on the subject of exhibitions, he said :

I will admit that there is some excuse for hon. gentlemen opposite in having taken no part in exhibitions in various parts of the world during 1895, for so far as I know in those dark days of Conservative rule, there was nothing in Canada of sufficient magnitude and nothing wonderful enough in workmanship to deserve an exhibition, unless it was deficits, and so far as I know, no prize was offered for these in any of the exhibitions of the world.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we had deficits but we had surpluses as well, to which I will refer later. But what I want at present to call the hon. gentleman's attention to is the Columbian exhibition, held in Chicago in 1893, at the time when this country was enjoying the benefits of Conservative rule. What do we find, Sir ? We find that at that exhibition the greatest in the past century—the greatest on this continent at least during this past century—Canada made a splendid showing and carried off large prizes, both in cash and other awards of merit. In the fine arts, horticulture, agriculture, live stock, dairying—in fact in all the departments at that exposition, Canada bore away numerous prizes, and yet we have this hon. gentleman say that there was no exhibition made by Canada in those days except one of deficits. Let me refer more specially to a letter which we find in the report of our commissioner, Mr. Lark, and which was written to him by a gentleman from Austria :

Brunn, Austria, December 20, 1893.

I have examined very carefully all the exhibits of Canadian textiles, and I am full of admiration of nearly all those beautiful exhibits which show the enormous progress the Canadian industry has made. The textiles exhibited were highly creditable as well in the department of cottons and woollens as in silks. Canada has, in my opinion, made most wonderful progress in the sixteen years which have elapsed since the Centennial Exposition, and I can candidly say no other nation which exhibited, has shown such progress as Canada.

Here we have this letter from an exporter of textile fabrics residing in Austria, stating that no nation in the world had made such progress in manufacturing as Canada had during the sixteen years between the holding of the Centennial and the Columbian expositions—could any one require a more convincing contradiction of the statement of my hon. friend from Haldimand? For my part, it seems to me that when an hon. member rises to address this House, when he speaks for his constituents to an intelligent, deliberative body such as this, he should state the facts.

Another matter to which the hon. gentleman referred was our public expenditure, and in this connection he put down to the credit of the government the amount of increased subsidy paid the province of Prince Edward Island. That expenditure, he said, pointing to myself, is one to which that hon. gentleman would at least not object. Sir, two years ago in this House, when that increased subsidy was proposed, I approved of it, but at the same time I said to the government: You are only giving a sop to the province of Prince Edward Island; you are not giving that province a tithe of what is due it and what was solemnly guaranteed it on its entrance into confederation. This money was not given the province which I represent as an increase in its subsidy, but as some slight compensation for the loss sustained by it through its lack of communication with the mainland during the winter season.

In another matter to which he referred was the relieving of our canal system of tolls. The government, he said, were making our canals as free as the ocean. Well, Mr. Speaker, that may be all right to western and central Canada, but what is the government doing for the people of Prince Edward Island? Making the canals free as the ocean will not advance one iota the carrying out of the terms of confederation entered into between the Dominion and Prince Edward Island in 1873. The hon. gentleman boasts of the surplus of $13,000,000 which we are going to have this year. Well, we have the estimate of the most celebrated engineer in the world, Sir Douglass Fox, that $12,000,000 would be sufficient to construct a tunnel between the province of Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and if this government desires to find a place in which to appropriate its surplus to advantage, it will at once enter into a contract to have that tunnel constructed between the island, and the mainland. In this way it will not only carry out its contract with the province and relieve the people of that province from the disadvantages under which they are suffering, but will benefit the people of Canada from Vancouver to Halifax.

Mr. HACKETT.

The hon. Finance Minister, in his budget speech spoke of the prosperous times we were enjoying in Canada at present, and gave all the credit to this government, but it seems to me that while he was making that statement the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce made a rather wry face. During the administration of Canadian affairs, while that hon. gentleman was Finance Minister, we had not the prosperous and growing times which we have to-day. On the contrary, from 1873 to 1878, was the era of the greatest depression that ever prevailed in Canada. We have the Finance Minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) taking credit to the government for our present prosperity, but we had in those days the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) trying to escape responsibility for the bad times then existing by saying: We are only flies on the wheel and can do nothing to assist the country. But the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald brought forward the policy of Canada for the Canadians and protection to Canadian industry. We will no longer, he said, submit to our country being made a slaughter market for the merchants and traders of the United States, but will adopt a tariff that will protect our own manufacturers. That policy was approved by the people and was followed by the most beneficial results. If we have prosperous times to-day, are we to attribute them to this government? Not at all, Sir. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to show one act of legislation or administration introduced by them that has in any way been the cause of prosperity. If we are enjoying prosperity, it is not due to any legislation of this government, but to the fact that times are good the world over. Those hon. gentlemen opposite have not done anything, they have not initiated a single measure that in any way has contributed to the welfare or prosperity of our people. On the contrary, I believe that if a Conservative government were in power at Ottawa, a government that could take advantage of the situation, a government that would have made the most of the prosperity which was just beginning to dawn the world over, when these hon. gentlemen opposite took office, Canada to-day, instead of only being fairly prosperous, would be a beacon of prosperity for all the nations of the world. In this connection, let me call your attention for a few moments to a comparison between the United States and Canada in order to show you that during the eighteen years that the national policy was in force in its entirety, before it had been emasculated and partly destroyed by hon. gentlemen opposite, the increase of exports from Canada was in greater ratio than the increase of exports from the United States. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not ventured to go the full length of their pledges. They have retained a part of that protective policy, and had they not done so they would have been long since forced from power. But, having retained part of the national policy, though they destroyed it in part, Canada has gone on and prospered fairly well. Reference has been made to exports. I have here the figures showing the increase of exports of Canada in comparison with the increase of exports of the United States from 1878, to 1896 and from 1896 to 1902 :

UNITED STATES EXPORTS.

Total exports, 1878.. .. ..$	694,865,766
Total exports, 1896..	882,606,938
Total exports, 1901..	1,487,764,991
Increase for five years ending June 30, 1901..	605,158,053
Increase in previous 18 years..	187,741,172
Percentage of increase in 5 years..	58·56
Percentage of increase in previous 18 years	27·10

CANADIAN EXPORTS.

Total exports, 1878.. .. .. $	79,323,667
Total exports, 1896..	121,013,852
Total exports, 1901..	196,487,632
Increase for 5 years ending June 30, 1901..	75,473,780
Increase in previous 18 years... ..	41,690,185
Percentage of increase in 5 years..	62·36
Percentage of increase in previous 18 years..	52·55

Thus, the percentage of increase in Canadian exports for the eighteen 'national policy' years was almost twice as great as the percentage of increase in the exports of the United States, the Canadian percentage having been 52·55, and the United States percentage having been 27·10; whereas, in the five years following the adoption of the Fielding tariff, the percentage of increase in the value of United States exports was slightly greater than the percentage of increase in the exports from Canada, being 68·56 per cent as compared with 62·30 per cent. About the same time that the present tariff was introduced in Canada the Congress of the United States made large additions to the protective duties under the Dingley law, and the result was that the United States exports increased even more rapidly than our own. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that Canada is prosperous, that she has gone on by leaps and bounds. It is true, but our prosperity has gone on only in concert with that of the rest of the world. What has caused that prosperity ? It was caused by the policy of the late administration by the statesmanship of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and his associates. I remember the occasion in this House, in 1879, when Sir Leonard Tilley brought down the national policy. That policy was opposed by every hon. gentleman on the treasury benches who was then in the House. But that policy was put in force, and became the policy of the country. And it has remained the policy of the country ever since, though as I say, it has been emasculated and its usefulness to a certain extent taken away by hon. gentlemen opposite. But if those hon. gentlemen would go to the country with the fads they had at one time—free trade as they have in England, Commercial Union, unrestricted reciprocity—instead of wearing the leavings of the clothes of the Conservative party, they would not have the slightest chance of returning to power.

Hon. gentlemen opposite boast that the immigration into Canada has increased. We know that there is large immigration into the North-west, and we are proud of it. We have in that country the most fertile wheat fields in the world, tens of millions of acres awaiting to be occupied. When, in 1880, Sir Charles Tupper brought down to parliament the project to build the Canadian Pacific railway how was that project met by these hon. gentlemen opposite ? They opposed it, as they opposed the national policy, by every means fair and foul, even to the extent of getting up bogus syndicates to take the place of the syndicate that had been given the charter to build the work. Yet, in the face of all their opposition, the contract was let and the work completed. And, if we are enjoying prosperity in Canada to-day if there is a large immigration going into the North-west, it is largely due to the ability of the statesmen who were then in control of the destinies of Canada. I had the honour of being a member of this House when both these great measures, the national policy and the Canadian Pacific railway contract were introduced. I well remember the stand, the unmanly, dishonest stand, taken by hon. gentlemen on the other side, then in opposition. Now, they boast of the prosperity of the country, but that prosperity is due, as I have said, to the statesmanship of the Liberal-Conservative party, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, with Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Leonard Tilley as his lieutenants.

We have had some changes in the tariff. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they assumed power, declared themselves opposed to specific duties and in favour of ad valorem duties. They made the change, and what has been the result ? Values have increased and the taxpayers of Canada are paying more to-day for goods purchased under this ad valorem system than ever before. We have the taxes of the people increased from $28,000,000 to $38,000,000, as was shown by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who addressed the House last evening, these taxes being levied on the necessaries of life in many instances. Hon. gentlemen opposite introduced the preferential tariff, and their policy was lauded to the sky. It was said to be a great thing for Canada and for the empire for it would draw closer the bonds which bind the parts of the empire together. But what did the right hon. Mr. Chamberlain say at the conference of colonial premiers ? He declared that the preferential tariff was of no service to Great Britain. And I have no doubt that it is disappointing to the gentlemen who introduced it. It has proved a failure, and the Finance Minister stated the other day that it was only a matter of time when they would probably repeal the preferential tariff.

Now, Sir, I must return for a moment to the hon. member for Haldimand. He referred to an increase of $100,000 in the fishery service of this country, and he said it was mainly due to the erection of cold storage buildings and for the benefit of fishermen in the maritime provinces. Now, I have in my hand a statement which shows that so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned that money was not expended in any such manner; no part of that increase was due to any assistance rendered to the fishermen, but it was due to the extravagance, and perhaps worse, of the fishery officers in that province. I have here a statement of the expenditure on fisheries in the province of Prince Edward Island for the last three years of the late administration :

1894, total..	$ 3,078 35
1895 "	3,796 58
1896 "	3,555 87
Total for 3 years..	$10,430 80

Or an annual average of $3,476.95.

Now, what do we find with regard to the next three years under the present administration :

1899..	$ 6,832 85
1900..	7,364 20
1901..	7,934 00
Total for 3 years..	$22,131 05

Or an annual average of $7,377, showing an increase per year under the present government of $3,901, or over one hundred per cent of an increase on an average for the three years.

Let me now give the House a statement of the travelling expenses and outlay of the inspector during three years under the late administration :

1894..	$204 98
1895..	236 86
1896..	391 12
Total for 3 years..	$832 96

Or an annual average of $277.65.

Now, let us see what were the travelling expenses and outlay of inspector under the present government :

1899..	$392 71

1901..	666 46
Total for 3 years..	$1,517 89

Or an average of $505.83 per year, an increase annually of $228.18 for three years of the present government.

Now, let us look at the travelling expenses and outlays of overseer for the last three years of the late government, and for three years under the present government :

THREE YEARS OF LATE GOVERNMENT.

1894..	$164 51
1895..	273 14
1896..	323 90
Total for 3 years..	$761 55

Or annual average of $1,627.29, an increase of $1,374.77 per year over last three years of Conservative rule.

Now, what were these gentlemen doing ? They were supposed to be looking after the fisheries, they were supposed to be collecting revenue, they were supposed to make some returns to Canada for the money expended. Well, let the following figures speak for themselves :

REVENUE FROM FISHERIES, P.E.I., FOR LAST THREE YEARS OF LATE GOVERNMENT.

1894*..	$ 980 15
1895..	3,312 30
1896..	2,161 85
Total for 3 years..	$6,454 30

*This year no license fee was collected from lobster canners.

REVENUE FROM FISHERIES, P.E.I., FOR THREE YEARS OF PRESENT GOVERNMENT.

1899..	$2,242 24
1900..	2,187 12
1901..	1,525 30
Total for 3 years..	$5,954 66

Or $500 less in three years than was collected by the overseers under the previous government for one-half the expenditure made by these gentlemen at present. But the strange part of this showing is, what becomes of the money ? How do they expend it ? I remember when the inspector of fisheries, in 1900, came up to West Prince on what he called a sporting trip, shooting partridges if you will, in the month of October, but actually for the purpose of canvassing votes against the gentleman who now represents West Prince in this parliament. It was apparently proper for him to travel at the expense of the people of this country, and to run up this tremendous bill which I have read to you for his travelling expenses and outlay, so long as he was doing the work of the machine that is operated by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to occupy much longer the time of the House.

The hon. gentleman from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) made a calculation yesterday that it costs the country $28 a minute to run this parliament. As I wish to save the people's money, I think it would be only right to make my speech as brief as possible. We hear a great deal about the wonderful resources of this Canada of ours, with its wealth of forest, as yet untouched by the axe of the woodman, with mines of gold, silver and coal, with fertile lands unequalled in any part of the world, with fisheries of unexcelled and vast wealth, with an enterprising population, energetic, industrious and virtuous. Why should we not go on and prosper? Why should hon. gentlemen opposite endeavour to tie the hands of this young giant that is now beginning to put forth his strength? All that is required to guarantee our progress is to give proper encouragement to the people of Canada. Do not let us drive them off to the United States to look for employment in a foreign land. In the province from which I come, there was a falling off in our population from the census of 1891 to that of 1901, of over 5,000. Whether the latter census was taken correctly or not, I will not say at present. But these young men and young women have gone away because they could not find employment in Canada, because avenues of industry were not afforded them at home; and they went to seek their fortune in a foreign land and beneath a foreign sky. Sir, the great national policy inaugurated by the Liberal-Conservative party in 1879 is the policy that must stand for the people of this country. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition is in the right direction. It is an amendment to afford adequate protection, which means sufficient protection—hon. gentlemen opposite understand the meaning of the word quite well enough—it means sufficient and proper protection for the interests of the people of Canada, for the labourer, for the manufacturer, for the fisherman, for the miner, for all the industries of Canada. That is what we need for Canada, and holding those views, I shall have much pleasure in voting for the amendment moved by my hon. friend for Halifax (Mr. Borden.)

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). Mr. Speaker, during the progress of this debate some very important statements have been made which have brought out some situations worthy of notice. The hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) in delivering his budget, stated clearly, I think, the reasons why he has decided that there should be no changes in the tariff at the present time. He did not say that there should be no changes for one year, or two years, or for a number of years, but he said at the present time. He gave as a reason for this decison the buoyant condition of the general business of the country. Last year the cry of the opposition in the matter of the tariff centred almost entirely upon the one item of woollens. Not one specific statement has been made, not one special complaint has been delivered by the opposition, but they have confined themselves to general questions and they have not indicated so far any particular line of trade or commerce that is suffering at the present time. The surtax proposed to be imposed on German goods will probably meet to a large extent, if not entirely, their objections, so far as the woollen trade is concerned. Now, we do not hear any specific complaints so far as any other line of manufacture is concerned. It is no more than fair in criticising the budget speech that statements should be specifically made. Yet, the opposition have so far not even contended that there are any special lines of trade requiring changes in the tariff in order to ensure their success and prosperity. If we take note of the reports of the annual meetings of the cotton companies which have been lately held we will find that they state business to be good. They have declared fair dividends. Some of the companies have declared dividends even so high as 9 per cent. That would indicate that there is really no cause for serious complaint as regards cottons. Any man who has been in business for the last few years knows thoroughly well that in almost every line of business the only difficulty has been that the manufacturers have not been able to supply goods in sufficient quantity to meet the demands of the people of the country. Scarcely any line of business furnishes quotations which are not subject to withdrawal at any moment and a large number of manufacturers, especially in the iron lines sent out quotations which are not standard quotations. This has been the case for several years. It is not a question of holding Canada for the Canadians, but it has been absolutely impossible for the Canadian manufacturers for the last few years to fill the orders offered to them, and the result is that the people of Canada have been obliged to go abroad to buy a lot of the goods which they require and which have been brought into this country. That statement is borne out by the fact that there is scarcely a manufacturing concern in the Dominion of Canada but is adding to its plant to enable it to get out the orders offered to it. Manufacturing plants are being increased all over the Dominion. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) stated again his position in regard to adequate protection, but he did not deign to go into details or to make any specific statement as to what he meant by adequate protection. So far as he is concerned this House has been left entirely in the dark and we have had to get our information otherwise, and that information has been forthcoming from several quarters. When the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) made a statement of his position, and he said that he believed he was speaking to a large extent for the people of Canada, he said that the duties should be raised to an average of 50 per cent upon dutiable goods coming into the country. When he made that statement it was loudly applauded on the opposition side of the House by hon. members generally and by the leaders particularly. That indicated that the hon. gentlemen had expressed their position upon that matter. They agree with the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal, that the tariff should be upon the basis of an average duty of 50 per cent and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has gone so far as to say: Yes, and even 100 per cent, if necessary. Upon this point the position of the two parties to-day are well defined. The position is definitely stated upon the Liberal side of the House in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. He has indicated that the tariff as it stands to-day shall be the tariff for the future. He has indicated that the tariff stands to-day and as it has stood for the last four or five years, shall not be interfered with, at all events at present. On the opposition side of the House the position has been taken, not definitely by the leader, but practically definitely by the party, that the average rate of duty must be from 50 per cent up to 100 per cent. I am pleased personally that the issue has become so plainly defined. So far as I am concerned, and so far as the county which I represent is concerned, I am pleased the definition is so plainly before us. I am satisfied with the plain definition before us. I should be pleased to have the hon. member for South Leeds travel over the county of Glengarry and address meetings after the style he was indulging in last evening, and I think, so far as Liberalism in Glengarry is concerned, he would fix it sure and fast for many generations to come. The opposition wish to raise the tariff wall so high that all the goods required in this country shall be manufactured in this country. Now, if all the goods required in this country were manufactured in this country where would we get the revenue ? From what source will the country draw its money to carry on the public affairs ? Will the public debt be reduced or be paid off if such a policy as that is in force ? If we were to manufacture all the goods in this country we could have no revenue and if taxation is to be at the rate of 50 per cent to 100 per cent then we have the right to ask where shall we get the money to carry on the business of the country. If we look back to the Conservative regime of eighteen years previous to the advent of this administration we find that to a certain extent they did carry out this policy. We find that they were not able to scrape revenue enough together to carry on the business of the country then without increasing the public debt. We are all well aware that the debt was increased during that time by over $150,000,000. That is the policy they proposed to put in force if they should come back to power to-morrow. And what is to be done with the money obtained from this increase of duties amounting from 50 to 100 per cent ? The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) told us that the manufacturers of Canada numbered two or three hundred individuals.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not say two hundred; I said several hundred.

Mr. SCHELL. Well, we will say that they number a few hundred. But I would remind the House that not all the manufacturers of Canada have asked for increased duties. I doubt if half of them have asked that the duties should be increased. Suppose there are two hundred manufacturers all told, and that half of them want the duties increased, then if their request is acceeded to, this half of the manufacturers of Canada will have the privilege of taxing the farmers and the workingmen from 50 to 100 per cent more than at present, and where will that money go. Will it go to pay the debt of this country or to develop our resources ? Not one cent of it. These manufacturers are not asking that that increased taxation shall go into the business of the country, or go to pay the running expenses of the government, but they ask that it shall go into their own pockets, and that the success of their business and their profits shall be guaranteed by Act of parliament. That is what they want. I well remember the change of government in the year 1896, and I remember how the Conservatives claimed that it was a mistake of Providence to put the Liberals in power. After the elections of 1896 the leaders of the Conservative party and many of their supporters still retained their seats here, and they proclaimed in this House that the instinct of government was with the Conservatives, and that in 1900 Providence would rectify the mistake made in 1896, and again call on them to direct the destinies of Canada. But it was not to be. In the four years from 1896 to 1900, the people of Canada had come to realize the success of the policy of the Liberal party in the development of their business, and in the extra profits they had gained from their business, and they saw at once the difference between the successful policy of the Liberal party and the defective policy of the Conservative party. And after the elections of 1900, the Conservative party came back to this House bereft of all its great leaders who had made that party famous, and many of their supporters met the same fate. The Liberals had a greater majority in 1900 than they had after the elections in 1896, a testimony that the people of Canada were able to appreciate good government. I remember that in 1900, in the town of Alexandria in my county, Sir Charles Tupper, the Hon. George E. Foster, the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, Mr. Bergeron, Mr.

R. R. MacLennan, Mr. Quinn, Mr. Broder, and a half dozen other notable Conservative started a tour which they wound up in the North-west, endeavouring to electrify the people to rally to their standard. They made a great flourish of trumpets in Alexandria; they had a street procession and a hippodrome worthy of any circus. The Liberals of Glengarry felt that they were taken by storm when this great galaxy of ability and talent invaded our town. But what was the result? The people of Glengarry are canny Scotch and they can count the dollars well. They had lived under four years of prosperous government, four years of careful administration which gave to the manufacturers and the consumers each their just share; four years of prosperity such as up to that time this country had never known and when the votes were counted the people of Glengarry declared that they would support the Liberal party rather than return to the policy of the Conservative party under which they had made little or no progress. Glengarry is not a manufacturing county. We have only one large manufacturing concern within the limits of the county, and I may say now that that concern does not ask for any increase in the duty. The men who control that manufacturing institution come of a stock who believe that they can stand upon their own merits, their own ability, and their own capital, and they do not ask for an increase of duty on the goods they are manufacturing. They are prepared to meet any competition in the country and they are succeeding enormously well. The people of the county of Glengarry are largely farmers and labourers. They realize full well the benefits that have been derived and are to be derived from a tariff such as has been maintained by this government. Where in the history of this Dominion has there been greater strides made during the past six years than in the industry of mixed farming and dairying in which the majority of the people of my county are engaged. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) spoke about cold storage and he took credit that the Conservative party had inaugurated this system. To hear him talk you would think that the Conservatives of Canada had invented cold storage. Why, Mr. Speaker, cold storage was in successful operation years before the Conservative party had anything to do with it. There was a perfect system of mechanical refrigeration carrying perishable products from South America and Australia and landing them in good condition in England, years before it was tried in Canada. What did the Conservative government do? They put in a few ice boxes and called them a cold storage system, and the unfortunate people who undertook to utilize them had their goods landed in Liverpool in a rotten and useless condition. In order to prove that this cold storage system was a good one the Conservatives bought butter at 20 cents a pound throughout the country and the result was that the butter was landed in England fit only for wool grease, that it never was put on the market and sold as butter, and that it brought only 10 cents a pound in England notwithstanding that the government paid 20 cents a pound in Canada. When the Liberal government came into power they realized that some better system must be put in operation; they realized that they must inaugurate a cold storage system commensurate with the importance of the agricultural industry, and to-day we can send our butter and fruits and all perishable articles to the old country markets and deliver them there in proper condition. There is where the present government has scored one success. The county of Glengarry consists of four townships, and is probably as small a county in area as there is in the province Ontario. That small county exported last year $1,000,000 worth of dairy products, according to the statement compiled by the secretary of the Dairymen's Association of the county. That explains the reason why the people of the county of Glengarry have such a strong regard for the present government. Nor do they believe in paying taxes that go into the pockets of two or three hundred individuals instead of paying them to build public works and promote the progress of the country as a whole. I have never yet heard any of the electors of Glengarry, whether Conservative or Liberal, say that they were not willing to pay their proper share of taxation required to properly administer and develop this country. I believe that both the labouring classes and the farmers in any part of the province of Ontario or in this Dominion are willing to pay their full share; but they do object to paying into the pockets of the manufacturers 50 or 100 per cent taxation on the articles they consume simply because the policy of the opposition is in favour of protection in the shape of high duties. No, Mr. Speaker, protection does not mean high duties; it means protecting the interests of the masses of the people.

I do not intend to discuss the mass of figures which, during this debate, have been read and reread, iterated and reiterated, and upon which the changes have been rung so many times. As has been said, figures can be made to prove anything; but there is one thing remarkable in the figures which have been laid before us. With all the extravagance charged against the government by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), with all the large expenditures charged by members of the opposition, with all the large revenues which the government are charged with having taken from the people, which the opposition now call taxes, though they did not do so in the old days, there is one thing that we should remember, that is, that the present government have administered the affairs of the country, have constructed large works, have developed the Yukon, have paid the cost of the South African contingents, have put the Intercolonial Railway on a proper business basis, and have done all this from the revenues derived from the low tariff as it exists to-day, and without any large increase in the public debt, such as their predecessors made. Looking at the 'Canada Gazette' of April 25th, you will see that this government have been able to do all this, and still leave the public debt within $80,000 of where they found it in the year 1897.

The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) almost shed tears over the per capita taxation imposed on the people of this country. That is something like a man who has been farming or doing business all his life, at the end of a prosperous period or at a successful turn in his business, going out and buying some more property. He has the money and is able to pay for the property. Is there any reason why such a man should be commiserated because he is obliged to pay $1,000 or $2,000 for additional property which he chooses to buy? No. And we find that in the prosperous times which the people of Canada have been enjoying under the present government, they have been able to buy two or three times as much of the dutiable articles they required, and pay for them; and the bank returns show that they have not only been able to do that, but have large balances to their credit in the savings banks and other monetary institutions of the country, such as we have never known under the administration of the Conservative party. A per capita tax, Mr. Speaker, is the best evidence that can be brought to show the state of prosperity of the people. If the per capita tax increases from year to year, it shows that the people of Canada are progressing and increasing their wealth, and that the factories of the country, though taxed to their utmost to provide the requirements of the people, have not been able to supply them all, and so the people have had to bring in imported goods. Such has been the prosperity of the country during the last six or seven years under the administration of the present government. But the opposition propose to change all that. They say: No; bring in nothing; but because the people of Canada are prosperous to-day, because they are able to stand some more taxation, we will filch from their pockets 50 or 100 per cent for the benefit of one hundred, two hundred or three hundred of our friends.

As the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said, the fight is on. Let the fight be on. If the proposition of the opposition in this House is that for the sake of a few hundred manufacturers of this country the rest of the people should be taxed 50 or 100 per cent, I say let us know that the fight is on, and I am satisfied that the next time we appeal to the country the majority in this House, as it stands to-day, will be returned 40 or 50 or 100 per cent larger than it is to-day, if that were possible. Under Conservative rule the manufacturers of this country were continually looking to the government to assure them profits and stability of business conditions—to make enactments by which they would feel safe and secure in their business enterprises. But under the system of looking to Ottawa for all the efforts that should be looked for at home, the business of this country was steadily going down. While the people were simply living on one another, the exporting business of the country was not increasing as it should have done. Under the fiscal change which was brought about in 1897 by this government, the manufacturers of this country came to feel that to be successful in their business they must depend upon themselves more than on the legislation of this country, and the result has been that many of those manufacturers who were looking to the government to guarantee their profits backed by parliament, got strictly down to business and conducted their industries on business principles, as they should have done years before, with the result that they have been able to make probably higher profits under a lower tariff than in the previous years when they were depending more on the government than on themselves. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) last night used these words:

> Notwithstanding the increase in population of the country required these implements, no sane man after the statements made by the right hon. leader of the government and by the hon. Finance Minister, threatening free trade, and threatening to abolish the duties would put his money into a manufacturing industry of this kind.

The hon. gentleman evidently forgot that that statement was not in accord with the facts. He said no sane man would put his money into a business of that kind. Why, Mr. Speaker, to-day in Hamilton there is being erected a greater concern than has been in this Dominion for the manufacture of these identical articles, in the manufacture of which the hon. gentleman said, not twenty hours ago, no sane man would put his money. Hon. members may have noticed in the newspapers a few days ago a statement made by Major Bittenger, the United States consul, that the money of the American people was pouring into this country. What for, Mr. Speaker? Are we to conclude it is because the Americans are insane? No, it is because this country to-day, under its present revenue tariff, has more possibilities for the investment of capital, more avenues for profitable trade, than are to be found in the United States. Speaking of agricultural implements, the hon. member for Leeds said further that they were not adequately protected. Well, Sir, the hon. leader (Mr. Borden) declared in Manitoba that they were. That is just a small difference of opinion between these two hon. gentlemen. However, we must not take the hon. member for Leeds too seriously. He told us last night that he was simply abusing the government. He was simply out for abuse, and evidently the facts were but a secondary consideration. It must be well known to the hon. gentleman, as it is to most members of this House, that the demand for agricultural implements was so great throughout this country that our manufacturers could not supply them. He must have known that in July of last year there was not one agricultural implement in the establishment of Frost & Wood, which was not sold ahead and that in fact that firm could not begin to fill all its orders. He must have known that the Massey-Harris people were sold out of their binders, reapers and mowers, a month before the spring trade actually opened. So great has been the progress of this country, and consequently so great have been the demands in these lines, that the calculations of the manufacturers fell short of the requirements, and it was absolutely impossible for them to furnish our farmers with the implements that they required last year, even with all the advantages which these concerns enjoy for turning out the goods. That is one reason why our farmers bought from the United States, and why our importation of agricultural implements were increased last year. Just for the same reason have our imports increased in nearly all lines of manufacture throughout the Dominion. These are facts that are well known, and which prove that at present there is no need at all for protection in this country, even to the Massey-Harris people. There is no need for further protection for the manufacturers for agricultural implements, either in Toronto or in Brantford.

So far as I am concerned, I am content to take the issues as laid down by the hon. leader of the opposition and his lieutenants I am quite satisfied that we should go before the people upon these issues, and I have no doubt that when we do, the people will decide in favour of the policy of the present administration. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) like the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) spoke last night under the impression that a general election is near at hand and that this might be the last session when he would be able to make statements of any kind in this House. I believe myself that my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) will have another opportunity before this parliamentary term closes, to indulge in his abuse of the government and to define what he and his friends mean by the word 'adequate.' I hope he will address the House in the same lines as he did last night and as his hon. leader did a few days ago, and I should ask no better issue on which to appeal to the country than the policy laid down by the hon. Minister of Finance and that proposed in opposition to it by the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in this House.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). It is time, Mr. Speaker, I should say a few words with regard to the speeches we have heard and particularly with regard to the budget speech made by the hon. Finance Minister. I must say that I thought it hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to make the comparisons he did between the large revenue he has been handling and the small revenue received by the previous Conservative government. We all know that the comparison is not one from which the hon. gentleman can draw the conclusions he did. Take up the public accounts, and you will find that in the year 1868 our revenue was some $75,000,000 and our expenditure about the same. Then turn to 1873, when Mr. Alexander Mackenzie was head of the government, and you will find that our expenditure and revenue reached a little more than $75,000,000 each. If you take 1896, you will find there was a larger revenue and expenditure, and, if you come to the last year, still larger. And so it will be for years to come—probably for ever. Therefore, I do not think it is fair for the Finance Minister to critcise as much as he did, on the basis of a comparison of the figures of 1896 and 1902. But we cannot expect much else, for every year since 1896 we have heard such talk in this House. But we have heard more than that. I heard a gentleman who was then Mr. Laurier, now Sir Wilfrid Laurier—very well, all right—I heard that gentleman say right in my own county, in 1895, on the 5th of September: If you elect me to power, I will do so and so. He had five good words to give us. One of them was: Elect me to power and I will reduce the price of coal oil. Another was: Elect me to power and I will reduce the price of farming implements. Another: Elect me to power and I will reduce the price of goods generally. Another: Elect me to power and I will reduce the public debt. Not one of these things has come to pass yet. There was another promise which he made, which I shall not mention, for, the other day I heard you, Mr. Speaker, call an hon. gentleman to order because he had wandered beyond the subject before the chair, and I do not wish the same thing to happen to me. The present leader of the government told us at that time that it was a shame for any government to have expenditures more than from thirty-eight to forty millions a year, and he declared that if he were in power he would show that the country's affairs could be carried on for that amount. Very well, what have we seen since? We see expenditures of forty-five, fifty and sixty millions of dollars a year. Then, that right hon. gentleman said: If you elect me to power I will reduce the public debt to eight or ten millions of dollars. When has he reduced that debt one cent? Never. Instead of being reduced, it has been increased, unfortunately. In 1896 the total debt was $325,000,000, in round numbers, now it is up to $366,000,000, an increase of $41,000,000. The net debt, which was $258,497,000 in 1896, is now $271,829,000, an increase of $13,322,000. Now, we heard the Finance Minister in all his glory laughing and joking and showing himself very glad about his big income. But what does that amount to, I would like to know? It only means that the more money he has the more pleasure he has in counting it up and paying it out. That is all that is shown by this book that the government gave me, a book that there is no denying. It speaks for itself and for the administration. Now, looking at this matter in the right light, what would the Finance Minister do if his revenue were like that of twenty or thirty years ago, while his expenses were as high as they are now? Where would he land? The fact is, he gets in so much money and spends so much money and does not reduce the public debt a single cent. He talks about the surplus he has and the surplus he is going to have. We have heard a great deal about such things, and that is all there is to it. He does get a big pile of money, but where is it? The Conservative government had surpluses in the same way, but where is the money? All this talk about surpluses reminds me of a story I heard. A slave was in the barnyard with his master, and all at once he said: 'Massa, de preacher's a-comin'.' 'I don't see him coming,' said the master. 'But he's comin all right.' 'How do you know?' 'Why, don't you see de chickens flying.' The Minister of Finance speaks of the big income he is receiving and is to receive, but what is it all for? It is to hoodwink the people over the next election? We have heard such talk over and over until I have got tired of it—there is nothing in it.

I hear a great many of my friends on both sides of the House talk about protection. But I would like more than talk—I would like to have some practice of protection. We talk about the American people, how industrious, how intelligent they are. Knowing them as I do, I say the same. But why is it they have become such a great nation? It is all on account of protection. What were they up to in 1776? They were a colony, working hard for a living, and making no headway. But after they threw off the yoke, they started right up, they established protection, and practiced it.

Now, here we are, talking about our American friends being so intelligent. We talk about what they do, and yet we do not follow their example. After praising them so much, why should we not follow their example? I think they deserve to be praised. We hear a great deal of talk in this House about Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Chamberlain; we hear his name mentioned three or four times too often. Mr. Chamberlain may be a very good fellow, indeed I think he is a little too good. We have given him $2,648,495 last year under the preferential trade arrangement. I do not think that pays at all. I would sooner say more about Mr. Chamberlain and give him less money. We are the ones to be protected first—that is my doctrine, anyway. But some of our friends have a great deal to say about Mr. Chamberlain, and yet they do not want to look after themselves.

Now I would like to say a few words about the government's intention to go back to Washington. Some years ago we voted $30,000 to pay their trip to Washington; I suppose pretty soon we will be called upon to vote another sum to pay another trip. Now I wish to give the government a little advice. They talk about going to Washington to make a treaty in regard to the Alaska boundary. I would be very glad if they would stay at home. They must know very well what the result was some four years ago. Mr. Speaker, let us look at the facts of history, and you will understand how little the United States are willing to give us. After the treaty of 1784 the boundary line was run from the St. Lawrence river to Madawanpec Point in the state of Maine. Well, two years after that, our American friends were not willing to live up to that treaty, they wanted to gobble up a big portion of what now forms the state of Maine. About the same time another treaty was made according to which the line was to be drawn from the head of Lake Superior to Puget Sound. What did they do later on, in 1813? They took a strip of land from us one hundred and fifty miles wide from Duluth to Rainy River, and thence to Puget Sound. Then in 1848 or 1849 they were still unsatisfied, and they took another strip of land from us along the St. John river. True, it is not worth much, there are scarcely any settlers on it. These facts show you what we can expect from them. I have resided in that country for thirty-five years, and I have had many discussions with their people in regard to these questions. They are always willing and ready to take, but they are never willing to give. They are not even willing to give what they ought to give, and what does not belong to them. If our government go down to Washington again, the only result will be that they will spend the public money, and the Americans will laugh at them as they did at the last meeting. I spent two months last summer down in the States, and I had talks with congressmen, judges and lawyers on public questions, and they just made fun of us Canadians. They say: You Canadians come over here expecting to get a strip of land away from us, but that is all in your eye. My advice to this government is to stay where you are. That is all I have to say for the present.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (South Ontario). I feel some delicacy in taking part in this debate on account of the deep interest which is manifested by members of this House, and the large numbers present to listen to the discussion. It is very encouraging to hon. members who wish to participate in this debate to find the House so full, indeed I may say overflowing, as it should be at this particular time. This is a time when the finances of the country are in a particularly good shape, everything is buoyant, and under these circumstances we could expect nothing else but that the House should be well attended during the budget debate.

April 16th, 1903, will be memorable in the annals of this country. It was on that day that the hon. the Minister of Finance moved the following resolution :

That the House resolve itself into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

This resolution whilst moved by finance ministers for many years, gave added pleasure to the representatives in this House from the remarks which followed on that particular occasion. As loyal representatives of the people we are pleased to accede to the wishes of the advisers of His Majesty, and while it is our privilege to criticise the expenditure, we do so with a knowledge of the facts, as recorded in the public documents and as told us by the hon. the Finance Minister, and shown by the abundant trade of the country.

Perhaps before I go further in the remarks which I propose to offer to this House, I may refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin), who seems to have forgotten the facts. He said that the Liberals in opposition had promised that if they got into power the duty would be taken off coal oil, and that they had not done so. I beg to assure him that the duty has been taken off coal oil. He also said that this government promised to reduce the public debt. Well, we have the assurance of the Finance Minister that the indebtedness which has been incurred by this government will be very materially reduced, and nearly wiped out next year. The budget shows clearly that the system of taxation inaugurated by the present government in 1897 was a good one. It has made for every stability, that under its benign influence, the trade and prosperity of the country has expanded by leaps and bounds.

The revenue for 1900-01 was..	$52,514,701
Net increase..	$ 5,536,088

Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable showing. Our revenue has increased to such proportions that it is a matter of rejoicing to every true and loyal Canadian, because of propositions with which we are confronted in the building up of this vast country. But, Mr. Speaker, although the net increase of last year was very large, the best is yet to come, and the hon. minister informs us that the year closing June 30th, 1903, will be much better, indeed far ahead of the best we have ever witnessed, with the extraordinary estimated surplus of $13,350,000. We are speaking of the present, but I would remind the House that this state of affairs, this growing time has existed since this government has been in power.

The revenue since 1896 has been as follows :—

1896..	$36,618,591
1897..	37,829,778
1898..	40,555,238
1899..	46,741,250
1900..	51,029,994
1901..	52,514,701
1902..	58,050,790

I claim it is a remarkable showing for the present government that has been so much belied. If you will look over the statement of revenue as presented during the years which preceded 1896 you will find that the revenue was almost stationary, that it did not increase at all, that as soon as this government took hold the increase became permanent and rapid, and that it went up from $36,000,000 in 1896 to $58,000,000 in 1902. The opponents of this government are apt to belittle efforts to promote trade and commerce and to attribute the growth of Canada's trade to everything and anything else than the present administration. They point to the increased trade of all the world, and then go so far as to say that if there has been prosperity it is because we adopted the protective plank of their platform. If shown different by the fact of so many items being put on the free list and radical cuts made on scores of dutiable goods they then say : It must be a miracle for none but Conservatives could have accomplished so much. I am reminded of a story of a lawyer who was examining an expert witness to ascertain if he exactly understood what a miracle was. The lawyer said to him : Suppose you find yourself in a window of that twelfth story building opposite and the next moment you fall to the pavement and find yourself uninjured—what would you call that ? The witness said : I would call that an accident. Well, that was not just the answer that the lawyer expected and he repeated the question. He asked him, if a second time, he found himself uninjured what he would call that. The witness said : I would call that a coincidence. He was getting the matter down pretty fine but the lawyer repeated the question, and said : Suppose you should find yourself upon the pavement a third time uninjured, what would you call that ? The witness replied : I would call it a habit. These distinctions are very fine. It was purely accidental that this government was able to get into office and conduct affairs, it was coincidence that they continued to do so and it is now becoming a habit. They acknowledge first, second and third, and finally they say it must be a miracle as such a thing was never known or seen for a Liberal government or party in Canada being able to properly direct the affairs of the country. People like these must surely be blind for we have the largest surplus—except one—that Canada has ever known and that was two years since, and under Liberal rule. The Finance Minister assures us that the revenue for the ensuing year will be far larger and that he expects the revenue for this year, 1902-03, to reach the handsome total of $65,000,000.

Amongst the causes which have contributed to this remarkable state of affairs must be counted the just, and wise expenditure and administration of the departments. The Post Office Department is one, which, notwithstanding the efforts of the opposition to explain away its very wise administration by the Postmaster General, makes a record. They cannot conceive that the best and most modern methods have been adopted and abuses done away with. And it is entirely beyond their conception how a deficit of $700,000 in 1896 was reduced to a deficit of $105,000 in 1901-2; nor do they seem to realize that the postal services were extended and enlarged during that period. The number of post offices has increased as follows:—

1897	9,191
1898	9,282
1899	9,420
1900	9,627
1901	9,834

An increase of 855 post offices during the seven years of Liberal rule. What does this mean? It means an increase in the expenditure of the department and if anything could account for an increase in the expenditure I think it is this statement which I have just read showing the extensions which have been made in the post office service. It costs money to open new post offices. Postmasters have to be appointed, mail routes have to be provided for; these are expenses which the government cannot well get over and of course they are included in the large expenditure of this department. It was stated by one hon. member the other night, I think, by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the Postmaster General had wiped out the deficit in his department by a public grant of money. That is no doubt true, but I am informed that the reason was this. I have a statement of the post office revenue, expenditure and deficits since confederation:—

There was a deficit as shown by the public accounts for the year 1896, but when the new Postmaster General came into office he found that there was an unpaid expenditure to the 30th of June. He considered this a handicap and it was provided for by a special vote. This expenditure amounted to $685,447.03, so that, in addition to the deficit as shown by the public accounts of $700,997.07 there was this expenditure of $685,447.03 which had not been accounted for. The hon. Postmaster General said: I do not care to take upon myself that enormous liability in connection with the Post Office Department. I wish parliament to take that difficulty off my hands and parliament took the responsibility of providing for the unpaid accounts amounting to $685,447.03 and they were paid out of the general funds of the country. Notwithstanding all the improvements which he has made in the service these deficits have been considerably reduced. In 1897 the deficit was $586,539.92; in 1898, $47,602.39; in 1899, $410,021.57; in 1900, $552,479.45; in 1901, $489,941.08; and in 1902, $105,221.27. I think this is a remarkable showing. The Yukon service has been inaugurated at a net total additional cost to the department up to June 30, 1902, of $283,162.86. The rate on foreign postage was reduced from five to two cents, the inland postage rate was reduced from five to two cents and who says that the department is not efficient? I think I am justified in saying that the administration of the hon. Postmaster General has been exceedingly good and that the service of the country has not been starved. I know it has not been in my riding or in places where I have travelled. I say that the post office is more efficient now than it has been at any time in the history of Canada.

In a large department doing a business of $4,000,000 some friction to accomplish this will naturally arise; but with stiff-bent, careful, business-like and modern methods employed—and I claim that they have been so employed, and, that if there is any one branch of the public service of which the people of this country should feel proud it is the Post Office Department. I might go on to mention the extension of the railway mail service, the inauguration of the postal note system in 1898, the increase in the money orders, and other improvements, but hon. gentlemen will find these in the reports and I do not wish to take up too much of the valuable time of the House.

Mr. BROCK. Twenty-eight dollars a minute.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Twenty-eight dollars a minute, as my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) remarks. There is a matter of public interest to which I am sure, in due time, the Postmaster General will direct his attention: It is the matter of free rural deliveries. I will admit that the conditions existing in this country on account of its great extent and sparse settlements are not ideal ones. But there are some of the older settled portions of the country where it might well be introduced. It will be acceded that there has been no time in the world's history when enlightened governments have made such efforts to ameliorate the conditions of life which contribute and conduce to the happiness of the people as in the present. And our government, I am sure, will not be behind in matters which are so vital to the welfare of the great farming community. I can speak with some authority on this matter, as I come from a constituency where the greater number of our people are farmers.

The recent census taken in Canada, as well as that in the United States, go far to show that city life has its attractions over the young people in the rural districts of the country. And that wherever the great centres of population are increasing the country portions are lessened in population. In my opinion the post offices, and telephones, are to play an important part in making the lot of the farmer more congenial. And if, as is expected, the farmer has his free mail delivery, bringing his letters and daily papers with news of the outside world, a telephone in his house with which he can communicate with his neighbours and friends, and even with the more distant cities and great markets, the life of the farmer would take on a different aspect. Lonesomeness would disappear and the farmers' view would be thereby greatly enlarged.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where is that?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Free rural mail delivery; you are too late. It is easy to see how this will elevate the standard of intelligence and promote the welfare of the country people. The people of England have practically a free delivery throughout the country. The first test of rural free deliveries was made in the United States in October, 1896. if I remember rightly, the first appropriation being in the neighbourhood of $10,000. The appropriation for 1901 had grown to $1,750,000, for 1902 to $3,500,000, and I am not informed what the exact appropriation for this year is. But I am told that it is increasing and that the people of that country are delighted with the results which have been accomplished. Under these circumstances, with the knowledge I have gained regarding the working of the system of free rural deliveries, I have no hesitation in urging that at least a trial be made in this country.

Let us for a moment, Mr. Speaker, examine the management of the Intercolonial Railway. True, the revenue and expenditure account of the government railway has shown no startling surplus. But on all sides it was admitted that when the present government came into power the road was in an impoverished condition. All this has been changed, and under the able management of its present Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) it is no more a reproach, and I have been informed by commercial travellers and tourists from foreign countries that there is not a more comfortable and up-to-date railway in Canada today.

Living in Ontario, to which province the road does not extend, it was always very difficult for me to understand how a railway running through the old settled provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, having a live business population, rich in natural resources, and carrying freight to all our great seaports of the Atlantic, did not pay. The present minister undertook to extend the road to Montreal, the great eastern inland seaport in Canada, and then a change occurred. And if the surplus has been small for some years of his administration this fact coupled with efficiency and economical management accounts for the better and changed condition of the road.

If by the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal such results have been accomplished is it not fair to, at least, hope, that if the Intercolonial Railway were extended further west, to the great lakes, where it could enjoy a share of the great traffic which comes from our boundless wheat fields, greater results would follow.

In connection with the very great interest which the public are taking in railways which will span the Canadian portion of this continent, one proposition is that the government should extend the track of the Intercolonial Railway at least to Winnipeg and allow any railway wanting access to the western country from the east to have wheelage rights over this government roadbed and it appears to me that his proposition has some merit. We have an example of a successful venture of this kind in the Wabash Railway, which owns its own rolling stock and using track privileges over the Grand Trunk Railroad running from St. Louis, Missouri, through Canada by way of Detroit to Niagara Falls. And if this be successful with a private company, why not with a government-owned system. Besides such an arrangement would not prevent the government from having a share of the trade of the western portion of our country over these lines in the east.

That the Intercolonial Railway is able to bring this efficiency was abundantly shown during the past few months. The action of the British government placing restrictions on the shipping through the United States or from United States portions, especially in the states of Maine and Massachusetts, enabling the other roads to hand over their live stock to the Intercolonial Railway, which they did with much hesitation. But the Intercolonial Railway demonstrated that they were able to transport cattle to St. Johns in good condition with satisfaction to shipping and some hours less than rival railways.

The increase on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway is no doubt justifiable because it was necessary to bring the road to a state of efficiency. Other railways are adding to capital account by issuing bonds, stock, or other security to better their trade. Why not a government road? I can see no inconsistency in the expenditure of capital on the Intercolonial Railway if it is done as has been by this government so wisely and so well.

The Department of the Interior which has such a wide field of usefulness has been well and ably administered by the present minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton). I would like to speak on the question of immigration in connection with the events which are at present occurring in this country. For years the Conservative government had been utterly unable to cope with the task of peopling this great heritage of ours, and the results at best were most discouraging. There is an interesting fact in connection with the expenditure on immigration by the Conservative government which should not be overlooked. That government did not appear to have any settled policy on immigration; and there was no regular expenditure of public money. In some years the expenditure was very large, abnormally so; in other years it was very small, as will appear by the following figures:

" 1884-85	423,000
" 1885-86	357,000
" 1886-87	341,000
" 1887-88	244,000
" 1888-89	202,000
" 1889-90	110,000

These figures show a constantly decreasing expenditure on immigration from year to year. From that time the expenditure increased slightly again, until in 1895-96 it was $120,000. This shows that the expenditure for immigration under the Conservative government was intermittent; it was not regular. Now, let us see what this government have expended on immigration during their tenure of office:

In 1897-98	$261,000
" 1898-99	265,000
" 1899-1900	434,000
" 1900-01	444,000
" 1901-02	494,000

Showing that the expenditure has been increased from year to year. From that increased expenditure there should be some result, and I appeal to hon. members of this House if there have not been magnificent results. Why, the newspapers of both the west and the east are every day full of accounts of hundreds and thousands of immigrants coming into the country. We know that some 80,000 came in last year, and the prospects are that this year 100,000 or 120,000 will come in.

This department undertook a vigorous policy, asking parliament for large and regular grants for these purposes, and the results are as anticipated. People are flocking to the land of promise; steamships are engaged months ahead and bringing British and foreign immigrants to our shores to settle on our productive soil; railways are at their wits ends to handle the people and the traffic which is offered them. It was even a question with our opponents whether the money which was spent on immigration offices in the United States was justifiable; but the results which followed the policy of this government are satisfactory. The neighbouring republic is furnishing its quota to the great North-west. Canadians who left Canada in the eighties and the nineties are returning and bringing thousands of Americans with them. We welcome them. People who are in comfortable circumstances, and understand the conditions of farming and life on the prairies make the best of settlers, and they will find that under the flag of this free Dominion, and with the protection afforded by its just and righteous laws, they will make for themselves homes of peace and contentment beyond their fairest dreams.

With regard to the foreign immigration, I am not one of those who think it is of no value. I travelled through the west last year, and spoke to people who knew the Doukhobors, the Galicians, the Swedes and other foreigners, and they informed me that when these people got settled they made fine settlers. We know that a number of foreigners settled in this country about 1878, and the children of these people are now among the best Canadians we have.

Under these circumstances, I think I am justified in supporting a department of this government which has made such a splendid record for itself as the Department of Immigration. And, Mr. Speaker, this policy has been carried out by this government in the face of stinging criticism, and amid predictions that the country would be ruined by the importation of foreigners. The result is now that the name of Canada is on every lip, and that this country is perhaps the most-talked of nation in the world. It surely must continue in this 20th century, that a land so fair, with such immense resources, cannot be overlooked, and that, with the vigour and energy characteristic of this government, we shall continue to see immigrants coming into Canada by tens of thousands and by hundreds of thousands if not by millions. In talking with a gentleman who had returned from a three months' cruise around the Mediterranean, I asked him if the people over there knew anything about Canada. He said: 'They know very little, but they want to know more; it is surprising to hear people talking about Canada everywhere.' This gentleman told me further, and I have heard the same thing from immigration agents in the United States, that there is an impression in the minds of many foreigners that Canada is practically dependent on Great Britain, and pays taxes to Great Britain. That idea should be dispelled, and the fact made known that Canada is a free country, freer in fact than the United States, and that we pay no taxes to Great Britain, and no taxes of any kind that we do not impose upon ourselves. This is one of the points to which I would call the attention of the Immigration Department. To my mind what this vast country needs is population; and speaking for myself, as a representative of the people, I think the expenditure for immigration purposes should be kept up and increased by moderate amounts from year to year. If our population does not increase rapidly enough by natural means, we must import more people to occupy our vast areas of fertile soil with productive farms.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken a longer time than I had set for myself; but it would not do for me to conclude my remarks without referring to the good work that has been done by the Department of Agriculture. The Agricultural Department of the government is not one which brings in a revenue directly, but like the Immigration Department, it is an indirect producer of revenue. I think that the expenditure of this government in agriculture has been fair and liberal. It amounts to some $600,000 per year which cannot be called excessive. It is difficult to ascertain the exact amount, as the cost of taking the census is included in the expenditure of that department. Taking everything into account in connection with the census, I fail to see why these returns could not have been completed before this. Two years, it seems to me, ought to be long enough to have these returns before us, but when we look to the record of the former government I find ample precedent for the delay. Comparing the two census of 1891 and 1901, I find the following record:

First volume census of 1891 issued March 28, 1893.

Second volume census of 1891 issued November 25, 1893.

Third volume census of 1891 issued February 20, 1895.

Fourth volume census of 1891 issued February, 11, 1897.

First volume census of 1901 issued December 27, 1902.

The first volume of 1891 contained 424 pages, with introduction and index, and consisted of seven tables.

The first volume of 1901 contains 560 pages, with introduction and index, and consists of eighteen tables.

The second volume of 1891 dealt with (1) vital statistics, (2) occupations of the people, and (3) occupiers of land and land occupied; the third volume dealt with manufactures, and the fourth with agricultural statistics, products of the forest, and ratios.

For the census of 1901 the whole of this work is well advanced, and all of it excepting tables of occupations and ratios should be in the printers' hands in August next.

I might go on and tell you of the good work done by the Agricultural Department in connection with the removal of the quarantine by the United States against Canadian cattle. The trade between Canada and the United States in live stock had sunk to nothing. If I remember rightly, the number of animals going out of this country every year to the United States was only between 500 and 600. The hon. Minister of Agriculture determined that this should be corrected, and he opened negotiations with Washington, the result of which was that the doors were let down and the quarantine restrictions against cattle entering the United States was removed. In consequence of this, instead of our shipping only 500 or 600 cattle to the United States, we are sending upwards of 60,000 per year into that country. That is one of the good things which the Department of Agriculture has been able to perform.

Another was the extension of cold storage facilities. The late government undertook to do something in the way of cold storage but did not accomplish very much. Our government asked for larger grants for parliament to perfect that system. These grants have exceeded $100,000 in some years, but, this expenditure has been the cause of a great increase in our production and shipments of bacon, cheese, butter and eggs to the old country, resulting in great profit to our farmers. I have no doubt my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) could inform the House what the government has done and what it has failed to do in this connection, as I have heard him make some very able addresses on this subject in his speeches on the budget in former years. But, to this government must be given the credit for having developed the cold storage system to a great extent. Our ocean steamers to-day are well equipped with cold storage facilities, and we have forty-five railway routes, centreing largely at Montreal equipped with these facilities. For instance, we can load a car at Port Perry, where I reside, with produce on Monday morning and have that produce put in an iced car, and the government will pay any shortage of freight there may be in connection with that car. That produce will then be delivered to its destination in as good order as when shipped.

By this means our producers have the advantage of shipping their products at various points and having it delivered in perfect condition either for the local trade or for export. What this means in the case of butter and cheese and eggs and other perishable products, it is hardly necessary to tell our farmers.

Coming to the question of public debt, not only have we a surplus revenue, but we are reducing our public debt, which is practical evidence that the surplus is a real one. Although we have been compelled to incur a large expenditure in order to meet the needs of the country—an expenditure which is perfectly justifiable—it is very gratifying to have our Finance Minister announce that practically all the additions made to the public debt by this government would be wiped out in another year, and that the net debt of our population will be $48 per head, as compared with $50 per head in 1896. He also stated that there will be loans maturing in Canada to the amount of $2,800,000, which are now bearing 4 per cent interest and that these loans will be refloated at 3½ per cent. I hope that the people of this country will subscribe to the new loan to be voted in payment of our maturing obligations. I believe that the practice of floating government loans among the people of this country is one that should be encouraged. I think it would tend to increase a man's patriotism to know that he is holding a $100 or a $500 or a $1,000 bond of this government. What safer security can he have? If everything else should go to ruin, we still have the country left, we still have the land, and we still have ample guarantee for our government bonds. There can be no security so safe as a government loan, and the people of this country might very well invest some of the $60,000,000 which they have in the Government Post Office Savings Banks in their own national securities. For these reasons I believe that a popular loan in this country would be one issued by the government of a moderate amount, bearing interest of three and a half per cent, say for twenty years, and in denominations of $100 or $500. Such a loan would encourage national sentiment. I am a great believer in allowing our people all the privileges we can give them, and I think the privilege of investing a small amount of money in a popular loan is one which those who have money to invest would appreciate. It is gratifying to note the abundant prosperity existing throughout Canada. It would be idle to contend that the government has created all this prosperity. But is it not fair to concede some credit to the government? Former governments sought to impress the people in a general way with the idea that the country could not do very well without them and that it would certainly go to ruin under Liberal rule. But what is the condition to-day. Our railways are not able to handle with any degree of despatch the freight that is offering. And indeed, during many months, they have been paralyzed and conjested with traffic. I saw last night a report in one of our newspapers—the Toronto 'World,' I think it was—that the railways were not able to handle the traffic, that there were over five hundred cars in the Toronto yards waiting to be unloaded. Of course, that might be the fault of the railways not having enough labour to take care of the freight. But the same is true all over the country. I have seen it stated, time and time again, in the newspapers of the day, that the railways have plenty to keep them busy. Indeed, I was told recently by a man from the west that even if there were no crop in the west this year there was sufficient grain in the country, there were enough people going up and sufficient freight being carried to supply them, to keep the railways fully employed. This is the condition of affairs in relation to the railways, which are the pulse of the country. Banks have been doing an enormous business and showing fine yearly statements of earnings, and their record is that the deposits are larger than ever before in the history of the country. The demand for government currency has been abnormal, reaching $30,000,000, or perhaps $35,000,000 per year. Factories have sprung into existence everywhere, and the general testimony is that many of them have more orders than they can complete for months to come. Large industries employing thousands of men, especially in iron and coal, which are the great staple productions, have been established. The farmers of this great Dominion have grown wealthy, and there is no class of the community but have improved their earnings. It is needless for me to speak of the prosperity of other classes. But I do say that these conditions exist in my own section of the country. Everything is thoroughly prosperous, and the prospects of all never were so hopeful. If we consult the trade returns, we find that the total trade of the country has increased by $200,000,000 since 1895, or over $28,000,000 per year on the average. And of this increase about half was in the export trade, which is of the greatest benefit to the country. I wish particularly to congratulate the government on its proposal to place a surtax on German goods. The press throughout the country have approved of the government's action, particularly because of its departure from antiquated methods. I notice by the cable reports that the press of outside countries has commented favourably on the government's policy. If we are to believe the reports of many writers on trade relations, the coming years will witness a great struggle for commercial supremacy, and the action of Germany, which provoked our government to reprisals, may indicate in some measure the correctness of this view, and shows that we must take care of ourselves. No doubt, this government will be able and always willing to take care of the trade of Canada. It is satisfactory to observe the buoyancy of the revenue derived from customs duties. For, after all, this is the chief source of taxation. Though we pay for the support of government in other ways, the chief source of the government's revenue is the customs. One can idealize and theorize on a tariff and can frame a tariff in his mind which, to all intents and purposes, will be a perfect one. But it is a difficult thing to enter practically into the trade of the country and collect a revenue from the vast number of articles which are brought in and, at the same time, not materially injure or oppress any interest. Now, in a general way, I think this government has done this, and that Canada never had a tariff which could meet all the requirements of the people so well. It is not correct to say that it is a perfect tariff, but it has done the greatest good to the greatest number, and that is right. There are inequalities in the tariff, as we must all admit, and some of these inequalities I see exemplified in the affairs of some people in my own riding. But I am sure the government will take these things into account when the proper time comes for the readjustment of the tariff. It is not fair to say that this government has vacillated and has no policy. Our opponents have stated over and over again that their policy has been adopted. But, to my mind at least, a tariff is largely a compromise, and I repeat again that the task of harmonizing the various interests of the country has been well performed by this government. In view of what I have said, and of a good deal more that I might say, and in view of the progress of the country, I cannot support the amendment of the leader of the opposition. He asks us to declare that the present tariff is unsatisfactory. I do not believe that it is unsatisfactory ; I believe it is satisfactory ; that it has, in a great measure, created prosperity in the country. I presume I have the right to my opinion, and that is my opinion—that the present tariff has in great measure contributed to the success and welfare of the Dominion.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I sympathized with the opening remarks of the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) when he drew the attention of the House to the fact of the very small attendance which he had to speak to. He had before him one Minister of the Crown. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) who, so far as all outward appearances were concerned, was fast asleep. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), however, came in shortly after he commenced his speech, and although I am not honoured with his presence, it is evident that he intends, himself, to make a speech and was desirous of getting some pointers from the hon. member for South Ontario. The hon. gentleman, I noticed, listened very attentively to the observations to the hon. member for South Ontario, until that hon. gentleman commenced to read from the blue-books of the various departments when he took occasion to leave the chamber in order that he might take a long breath of fresh air. In listening to the hon. member for South Ontario I noticed that he did not touch on the preferential tariff. He avoided a reference to that very important matter. He, however, touched gingerly on the question of protection. He, I believe, has, in his constituency, some industries which are troubled with the slaughter of American goods in this market and therefore I can understand why he has, to some extent, been converted in regard to the question of protection, or, at least, why it is that his observations on the question of protection were not quite the same as when he first came to this House in 1901. I would just like to read for his benefit in order that he may be on his guard in making speeches what he said in that year :

I have not departed from the principles of free trade, but, as I engage in the business of the country, I try to find out the necessities of the country and see what is best for the country, and, under the circumstances, I have come to the conclusion, that, if this tariff should be changed at all, it should be changed in the direction of lowering the duties.

He also said :

I do not mean by that altogether, a changing policy. That seems to be a contradiction, but, it seems to me, that, in looking at the tariff and in studying it, the English tariff is the ideal one. It is a certain tariff continuing for several years, and it is only for revenue.

The reason I refer to that is not only to draw my hon. friend's attention to what he said a year or two ago but to draw the attention of this House to the fact that we are undergoing an education, that the supporters of the government appear to be getting light on this all important question of protection and it is interesting to watch their antics and to see how they can manage to throw a little protective talk into their speeches from time to time. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) preceded the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin). He appeared to be rather a Rip Van Winkle. His sentiments were such as those which were uttered by supporters of the government when they were in the greatest political darkness in regard to the question of protection. They were more like the observations which the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) made in 1897 when he was discussing the budget. We have got away from those times and I was a little surprised at the darkness which prevailed in the mind of the hon. member for Glengarry. However, we must have patience with these hon. gentlemen. I feel satisfied that they are improving in regard to this all important subject. In listening to the speeches of hon. gentlemen in discussion of the budget, I have felt that it was a great boon not only to Canada but to the whole world that this administration came into power in 1896. Our foreign trade has not only increased under this administration, but, if the observations of hon. gentlemen in discussing the budget are to be taken at their face value, this government must have been the means of increasing the trade of nearly all the civilized nations of the world for the trade of the civilized nations of the world has been greatly increased and we can take it for granted that the same conditions which caused the increase in our trade have caused the increase in the trade of the nations of the world. Therefore, it is fair to assume that it was all owing to the wise tariff legislation of the present administration. My hon. friend from South Ontario referred to the great amount of money which is flowing into the treasury of this country and he seemed to be rather satisfied with the condition of affairs which exists. In the year 1896 the revenue of this country, as he stated it, was $36,618,590. The revenue, according to the figures of the hon. Minister of Finance, for the current year, ending June 30, 1903, is estimated at $65,000,000. That shows that for the current year the people of this country will pay into the treasury $28,381,410 in excess of what they paid into the treasury in the last year under the former administration.

I take issue with my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross) on that. I think this government is pursuing a wrong principle in taking that amount of money out of the pockets of the people at the present time. We have no need for it. The people are being unnecessarily taxed ; the treasury is overflowing. This invites demands for all kinds of subsidies and grants and unnecessary public undertakings. The time has come, Sir, when we should have some kind of defined policy as to what manner of public enterprise will be undertaken by this government, and what their extent will be. The tariff is now principally on an ad valorem basis and the value of goods being high it necessarily produces this condition of affairs. It is called, rightly enough I think, a revenue tariff; its aims and object is to raise revenue. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) refers to the surplus of $13,350,000, but in my opinion that money had better be left in the pockets of the people in as much as we do not need it for the requirements of government. The hon. gentleman selected for his special praise the Post Office Department and the Department of Railways and Canals. He was pleased to know, as he alleged, that the Intercolonial Railway was well managed and that it was producing good results. He pointed to the fact that private railway companies were enlarging their capital, and he did not see why the Intercolonial Railway should not increase its capital if the government so desired. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the amount of money which the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island railways wrote to capital account during the past year was $5,146,588, and I would remind him that the Intercolonial Railway is not like other railways, in that it does not pay dividends. The Intercolonial Railway for the most part runs through a country where the freight rates are profitable and where there is so much traffic that I have heard that it is the intention to double track some portions of the system. I contend, Sir, that the time has come when we should not only carry a very small amount yearly to capital account in connection with the government railways, but that we should be able to appropriate a certain amount for a dividend. That is a reasonable proposition and if the Intercolonial Railway was as well managed as other railways it could be easily done. On the whole, we have no cause whatever to congratulate ourselves on the management of the Intercolonial Railway. For my part I look upon it as being a sort of a sink hole which swallows up the revenues of this country and I think we might very well economize in its administration.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) refers to the Postmaster General's Department; and here is were the two extremes meet, when we compare the lavish expenditure of the Minister of Railways on the Intercolonial Railway with the tremendous economy of the Postmaster General. It is quite evident that the Postmaster General is economical in some directions for hardly a day passes that members of this House do not receive letters from the employees of the Post Office Department throughout Canada, complaining of their treatment and pointing out that although the cost of living has greatly increased, their salaries have not increased in the same proportion as have the salaries of employees in private concerns. That, I believe, to be the case.

The Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, made reference to Germany and to the German tariff and he read the correspondence which took place between this government and Lord Strathcona, and between this government and the Imperial German Consul. Let me say, Sir, that in the session of 1901, I asked for any correspondence which had passed between the parliament of the Dominion or the British government, or the government of Germany with reference to this question. At that time demands were being made upon this government by boards of trade throughout Canada, asking them to do something in the line of passing retaliatory legislation if necessary in order to off-set the humiliating position in which Germany had placed Canada. The Prime Minister replied in answer to my question: That there was no correspondence on the question to be brought down. Well, Sir, in looking over the correspondence which has now been placed before the House I find that on June 27th, 1898, Lord Strathcona sent a cable to the Minister of Trade and Commerce to this effect: Shall I enter protest against Germany's action; and he followed that cable up with a letter. Let me point out to the House the very dilatory manner in which the Canadian government treated this very important question. This cable was on June 27, 1898, and on August 2, of that year the Department of Trade and Commerce replied, thanking Lord Strathcona for his prompt action in connection with the matter, but giving him no further instructions whatever. That is the only letter so far as I am able to discover in this correspondence, which passed between the government and any party or parties in respect to this question until the Prime Minister took the matter up with the German Imperial Consul at Montreal, November, 1901. Lord Strathcona, on September 17, 1899, asked of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be favoured with instructions by the government on this subject, and remarkably strange to say the Canadian government gave no reply to that letter. Again on May 8, 1901, Lord Strathcona wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce telling what he was doing and adding: I trust it will meet with the approval of the government. As in the former case Lord Strathcona received no reply or acknowledgment to this letter. Again on August 1, 1901, Lord Strathcona addressed a letter to this government which was treated in the like manner, and that brings us down to the correspondence of November 4, 1901, in which the Prime Minister asked the German Imperial Consul to call upon him in order that they might discuss the matter. What I claim, Sir, is, that the correspondence which was then in the hands of the government should have been brought down when we asked for it. The government treated the correspondence as though it were of a serious nature, but there was nothing secret or private about it. In the session of 1902 my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) again asked for this correspondence and it was again refused. It is very easily seen from the correspondence itself that it is of a comparatively trifling character, and my only explanation as to why the government refused to bring it before the House is, that they were ashamed to show how little attention they had given to this German business. It is only when we on this side of the House moved in the matter and forced the hands of the government that they really took the question up seriously. However that may be, I am prepared to endorse the action of the government in the stand they have taken towards Germany. I take no stock whatever in the attitude of Germany or the German press towards us. In discussing this question with shippers of grain and cereals in this country, since the Minister of Finance brought this question to an issue, they have assured me that Germany has already done all she can do against Canada.

If Germany or any other country institutes against this country a tariff which is almost prohibitive, what difference does it make how much they increase that tariff—whether they double or treble it? Whatever it is, it cuts us out of the German market; and I think we can afford to let other countries know that on fiscal questions we are independent and can do as we desire, though being a dependency of Great Britain. The answer that I would give to Germany, if she continues to attack us, is simply this: Why should the German tariff on our products be more than it is upon the products of the United States? That is a simple way of putting the case, and I venture to say that there is no answer to it. We need not go into a discussion of the Belgian and German treaties or favoured-nation treatment. This country imports more proportionately from Germany than the United States, and our tariff is very much lower than the tariff of the United States. Therefore, I think our government have taken the right stand, and I do not anticipate any further legislation from Germany, of a character that will hurt us. I really cannot understand the attitude of Germany. We are on a par with the United States in everything. Does Germany choose to treat Canada in this way because it is a dependency of Great Britain? Is it because of the easy-going methods of the British people on trade matters that Germany undertakes to discriminate against us in this way? At any rate, I feel that we are on safe ground, and I am pleased at the stand the government have taken in regard to the matter.

I do not propose at this stage to discuss the very important question of protection which has been so much discussed in this House. I hope I shall have an opportunity at a later date to express my views on the very important subject. I may say, however, that I shall heartily support the amendment which has been placed before the House by the hon. leader of the opposition.

I would like, however, for a few moments to take up the time of the House in regard to the question of preferential trade. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that a year ago we had a discussion in reference to the invitation which was sent to the government to attend the coronation ceremonies and the colonial conference in London. We on this side of the House expressed the opinion that the government had replied to that invitation in a way that was entirely unwarranted. The invitation stated that it was desirable that the colonial conference should discuss three matters: Political relations existing within the empire, the question of defence, and the question of commercial relations. The reply of the government to this invitation stated that the only question which gave promise of useful discussion was that of commercial relations. We on this side of the House took the position that the government should go to the conference with an open mind, willing to discuss any question which might come before it. At the bottom of their reply to the invitation the government did say that they would be willing to discuss any question which came up, but it did not appear to me that that statement qualified their main position to any great extent. The position I take in regard to Canada not being able to secure from Great Britain a preference on our cereals, which I think we should have secured under the grain tax, was due to our attitude on the subject of defence. Hon. members will know in regard to this important question what my views are, as I put them on record last session and they are not too radical. As this question has not been considered to any great extent since the abolition of the war tax on grain in Great Britain, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the very serious way in which the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Chamberlain, discussed the question of imperial defence at the colonial conference. As I want to place his views before the House, I will take the liberty of reading what he said on the subject in his opening address:

As regards imperial defence, I propose to lay before you, for your information, a paper which will show the comparative amount of the ordinary naval and military expenditure of the United Kingdom and of the different self-governing colonies. You will find that in the case of the United Kingdom the cost of our armaments has enormously increased since 1897. That increase is not entirely due to our initiative, but it is forced upon us by the action of other powers who have made great advances, especially in connection with the navy, which we have found it to be our duty and necessity to equal. But the net result is extraordinary. At the present moment the estimates for the present year for naval and military expenditure in the United Kingdom—not including the extraordinary war expenses, but the normal estimates—involve an expenditure per head of the population of the United Kingdom of 29 shillings 3d.—29s. 3d. per head per annum.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is the military and naval together?

The SECRETARY OF STATE. Military and naval together. In Canada the same items involve an expenditure of only two shillings per head of the population, about one-fifteenth of that incurred by the United Kingdom. In New South Wales—I have not the figures for the Commonwealth as a whole, but I am giving those as illustrations—and I find that in New South Wales the expenditure is 3 shillings 5d.; in Victoria, 3 shillings 3d.; in New Zealand, 3 shillings 4d.; and in the Cape and Natal, I think it is between two shillings and three shillings. Now, no one, I think, will pretend that that is a fair distribution of the burdens of the empire. No one will believe that the United Kingdom can, for all time, make this inordinate sacrifice. While the colonies were young and poor, in the first place they did not offer anything like the same temptation to the ambitions of others, and, in the second place, they were clearly incapable of providing large sums for their own defence, and therefore it was perfectly right and natural that the mother country should undertake the protection of her children. But now that the colonies are rich and powerful, that every day they are growing by leaps and bounds, their material prosperity promises to rival that of the United Kingdom itself, and I think it is inconsistent with their dignity as nations—that they should leave the mother country to bear the whole, or almost the whole, of the expense. Justification of union is that a bundle is stronger than the sticks which compose it, but if the whole strain is to be thrown upon one stick, there is very little advantage in any attempt to put them into a bundle. And I would beg of you in this relation to bear in mind that you are not asked—your people are not asked—to put upon their own shoulders any burden for the exclusive advantage of the mother country. On the contrary, if the United Kingdom stood alone, as a mere speck in the northern sea, it is certain that its expenditure for these purposes of defence might be immensely curtailed. It is owing to its duties and obligations to its colonies throughout the empire; it is owing to its trade with those colonies, a trade in which of course they are equally interested with ourselves, that the necessity has been cast upon us to make these enormous preparations. And I think, therefore, you will agree with me that it is not unreasonable for us to call your serious attention to a state of things which cannot be permanent. I hope that we are not likely to make upon you any demand which would seem to you to be excessive. We know perfectly well your difficulties, as you probably are acquainted with ours. Those difficulties are partly political, partly, principally, probably, fiscal difficulties. The disproportion to which I have called your attention, cannot, under any circumstances, be immediately remedied, but I think that something may be done—I hope that something would be done—to recognize more effectually than has hitherto been done the obligation of all to contribute to the commonweal.

All the other colonies which were represented at that conference, had each a definite statement to make on this question and did make it. The first minister of New Zealand made a definite statement, and the first minister of Australia submitted a very elaborate statement to the conference. The First Lord of the Admiralty was asked to report on the question of defence, and in due course did so. He endeavoured to ascertain from each of the representatives of the British dominions what they were prepared to carry out with regard to this matter. The only colony which had no definite plan, which had nothing to suggest, was this country. But we find that the right hon. the First Minister stated, as set forth in the report of the First Lord of the Admiralty:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed me that His Majesty's government of the Dominion are contemplating establishing a local naval force in the waters of Canada, but that they were not able to make any offer of assistance with regard to those enumerated above.

In the memorandum with regard to defence which the Canadian ministers laid before the colonial conference, they practically reiterated this statement. Let me read the report:

In conclusion the ministers repeat that while the Canadian government are obliged to dissent from the majority, they fully appreciate the obligation of the Dominion to make expenditures for the purpose of defence in proportion to the increasing population and wealth of the country. They are willing that these expenditures shall be so directed as to relieve the taxpayer of the mother country from some burdens which he now bears; and they have the strongest desire to carry out their defence schemes in co-operation with the imperial authorities, and under the advice of experienced imperial officers, so far as this is consistent with the principle of local self-government, which has proved so great a factor in the promotion of imperial unity.

London, 11th August, 1902.

I have taken up the time of the House in referring to these matters because, in my opinion, the manner in which our representatives treated this question of defence—which was the most important question before the colonial conference—is due the failure of this government to obtain preferential trade within the empire and the little prospect there now appears to be of our obtaining it. I have for many years considered that preferential trade within the empire would be most beneficial to this country, and in my opinion, the reason given by the British government for putting a duty on grain, namely, that it was for the purpose of raising more war revenue, was merely a pretext. The British government could have raised all the money it required by other means and did not raise very much from the grain duty. My own belief is that this duty on grain was thrown out to Canada as a bait, but our government failed to rise to the occasion, and consequently a preference in the British market is further away than it has been for many years, which I very much regret. The statements put before the colonial conference at the instance of the British government, show clearly the tremendous expenditure for naval and military purposes under which the British people were labouring. Comparisons were drawn with such independent countries as Holland and Argentina, and estimates were made to show what Australia, Natal, Cape Colony and other British colonies would have to pay if they were independent nations. The matter was gone into very fully and earnestly. It was discussed in the press and we were very severely criticised for the attitude our representatives had taken. The question of preferential trade was also discussed, and a full report of what took place is printed so that we have an exact record of what happened. We know that our representatives, after trying to engage the mother country to grant us a preference, threatened to withdraw the preference which we had granted the mother country. This preferential tariff was differently explained, when first brought down, in different parts of this country. It was declared to be a measure of tariff reform in certain places and on certain occasions. But in other places and on other occasions we were told that the government gave it in payment for the debt of gratitude we owed to Great Britain, for which we did not want anything in return.

In his budget speech in 1898, the hon. Minister of Finance referred to it as a measure of tariff reform and the hon. Minister of the Interior, in the House in 1901, said :

When we give preference, if it is to be at any one's expense, it is at the expense of the manufacturer and the workingman of Canada. We go a little further, and say that it is the policy of the Liberal party of Canada to reduce the duties and to remove to some extent the burden of the excessive tariff which was imposed on imported goods by the late Conservative government.

These are the views of two of the ministers of this government. The right hon. Prime Minister, however, said something different. In interviews and speeches in 1897, he said :

I have too great a belief in British common sense to think that they will do any such thing——

He was referring to the adoption of protection by Great Britain.

What we have done in the way of tariff preference, we have done out of gratitude to England.

Therefore it can easily be seen that this government were using this preferential tariff as a sort of a political weapon which could cut any way they chose.

But when we come down to the present session, we do not see in the reply by the right hon. First Minister to the speech from the Throne any reference to the scheme which he propounded at that colonial conference with reference to a Canadian naval force. On the contrary, the government have studiously avoided any reference to that important question, which was discussed at the conference. I do not find that the hon. Minister of Finance, in his speech on the budget, made any reference whatever to this statement which was made at the colonial conference, but he held out the hope to the country that when the British budget came down, we would find in it a return for what we gave in the shape of a preference. The British budget has since been brought down; and I am at a loss to know how the Minister of Finance could have expected, after what I may term the bungling way in which this question has been treated, any such preference from Great Britain as he anticipated. The British people, realizing what had taken place at the conference and the vacillating way in which the question of defence has been treated, knowing that we were the only country that had given a preference and had been asking a preference in return, feeling that we had not assumed the obligation which we ought to have assumed, hearing of our overflowing treasury yet, knowing that we were not ready to do anything on behalf of the British navy, or the establishment of a navy of our own they swept the whole thing out of existence and thus declared that they would do no more. When you think of the teeming thousands coming into this country from the United States, is it not easy to see that one of the greatest benfits this country could have offered to these Americans who, we hope will become good Canadians, would have been to say to them: You can get a preference of from four to five cents a bushel on your grain grown in Canada. That would have satisfied them and would have had a good effect upon their minds in regard to the advantage of living in this country. But, what do we find ? For instance, what do we find to be the position the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has taken in regard to this question ? He has coined a phrase, and expects to escape under it. I think it runs, 'Canada must keep free from the vortex of European militiarism.' I do not think that, when the question is sifted to the bottom, that phrase will be accepted in place of what the government should have done by the people of this country. I do not think there was any danger to any course of a magnanimous character that we might adopt with regard to this question of defence, that would lead us into the vertex of militarism. Why could we not have said something of an encouraging character to the British people, why could not our representatives have been resourceful enough to have suggested some way whereby our own vessels might relieve to some extent the British war vessels that patrol our coasts and protect our commerce ? We shall be willing to face these responsibilities that all other nations must face, and I claim that we are occupying a humiliating position, a position which we cannot very long occupy, and which the British people have stated very plainly, through Mr. Chamberlain, that we cannot expect to occupy in not being willing to face the responsibility and perform this duty. We do not want the British taxpayers to protect us. We are in the same position as the most helpless, most significant British colony. We might have retained all our rights and yet have done something to satisfy the British people. I repeat that I am surprised that the Finance Minister expected to get any consideration when the British budget was brought down. Various unfavourable comments have been made on our attitude by the British press. Sir William Vernon Harcourt has said in speaking on the recent British Budget :—

The colonies ought to contribute to the navy. No sober-minded man could justify the enormous expenditure of the government.

So, we know what the feeling is in regard to this matter in Great Britain. But what is to be done in regard to this preference ? The government gave it as a measure of tariff reform and as a tribute of gratitude to the mother country. But when the Minister of Finance, the other day, brought in his budget, he almost repeated the words which were in the memorandum laid before the conference. He said :—

But, putting aside other considerations, if the British government and people do not show any appreciation of the value of the preference, then, so far as the British government and the people are concerned, they cannot complain if we see fit to modify or change that preferential tariff.

I was in the House when the hon. gentleman uttered those words, and nearly every hon. gentleman on the other side applauded. Is not this a notable thing when we remember that when the preference was introduced in 1897, hon. gentlemen opposite sang the National Anthem. Now we see that the government is in a most peculiar and erratic position, an inconsistent position, with regard to this matter. They have charged us with huckstering in regard to our policy on the preference. What have they been doing ? Huckstering of the very worst kind. When, from time to time, we have criticised this kind of a preference, and condemned the government for bringing it into effect, they have sought to meet us with the challenge : Move a resolution to do away with it. Our reply has been that it was not our affair. We have criticised it on what we consider a sound basis. What we have always advocated is what we call a mutual preference throughout the empire, and nothing short of that would be satisfactory. I contend that the government made a mistake when they did not proceed along the lines proposed by the opposition in this House. We are anxious to know what their policy is. Now is the time to state it. The Minister of Finance has excused himself for not changing the tariff this year. One of his excuses was the hope of a British preference to be announced in the British budget. We now have the British budget before us and know where we are. Now we ask, and reasonably ask, what the policy of the government is going to be in regard to this important matter. We have finished, I trust, in sending delegations of this character to Great Britain. In 1897 we sent a delegation to attend the Jubilee, and again, in 1902, we sent a delegation to the coronation. So far as I am concerned I should be ashamed to face the British nation or to go to Great Britain at the present time, after what we have done. I hope the day is not far distant when we shall take up this question of defence and decide what our policy is to be. We have had enough frivolity in regard to the lavish way in which our statesmen have been entertained on the other side of the water. We have had enough court dresses; we have had enough cocked hats; we have had enough garden parties; we have had enough excursions; we have had enough reviews; we have had enough after dinner speeches; we have had enough Cobden club medals. Let us now get down to our serious duties ; let us discharge our obligations

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Yale and Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the speakers who have preceded me on this side of the House in congratulating the hon. Minister of Finance and his colleagues upon the splendid showing detailed in the budget speech so ably delivered by that hon. gentleman, a showing which, I believe, has never been equalled in the history of Canada. It must be a source of gratification to every Canadian to know that his country is in such a prosperous condition as it is, to know that our finances are being ably administered by the Finance Minister and that those finances are in a healthy condition. I know that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are wont to attribute much of the prosperity Canada is enjoying at the present time to a beneficient Providence. We on this side of the House equally recognize that Providence has been kind to Canada. But while we recognize this, we claim and I think we justly claim, that Canada should feel herself fortunate in having an administration at the helm capable of turning these beneficient gifts of Providence to good account. Now, I listened with considerable pleasure to the speech of the Finance Minister. I followed him closely throughout his speech, and I may say I listened to it with considerable pride. However, there was one thing that I did not like. It seems there is no cup so replete with sweetness that some person may not find therein a little bitterness. The sweetness lasted, so far as the people I represent are concerned, pretty nearly until the end of the minister's speech. The little bitterness that crept in came when the minister dealt with the question of adjusting the tariff on lead products. We were told that the government could not see their way clear to grant the request that had been made to them by the silver lead miners of British Columbia.

Now I may say that in British Columbia the people have always been an uncomplaining people. I have lived there myself for the past seven years, and before that I had lived for some fifteen years in the city of Winnipeg and west of that towards the coast, and I am well acquainted with the western people. We have always paid taxes in British Columbia by way of duty, either directly or indirectly, on every product that was brought into that country. We pay a duty direct or indirect on all we consume, on all we wear, on all our mining machinery that is not manufactured in Canada, practically on all our mining supplies; and yet I do not think that this government or any other government has ever heard any serious complaint from British Columbia on that score. But when the conditions of lead mining became such that it absolutely required assistance in some way, then the people of British Columbia came to this parliament. Delegations waited upon the government, and their representatives in parliament have urged their cause. We hoped therefore that so far as lead was concerned there would be a readjustment of the tariff.

Now let me contrast the duties on lead with the duties on other products which we have to buy in British Columbia. I think I am safe in saying that probably the duties will average nearly 30 per cent on the articles that we consume and use in daily life in British Columbia. In regard to lead, let me first take the article of pig lead. We find that on pig lead there is a duty of 15 per cent; with the preference of 33⅓ per cent deducted from all lead sent from London, that duty amounts to 10 per cent. Now probably every member in the House knows what pig lead is, but as possibly some one may not, I will explain that the lead ore is first smelted, and with the lead silver is frequently found. The smelted product of lead ore is called bullion. That bullion is then sent to the refinery where it is desilverized, and assumes the form of pig lead. Now note that the tariff of 15 per cent is levied on lead which has reached that state; and as I said before, with the preference of only 10 per cent as against London. Now we go further and take up the question of corroded lead, or what is known as white lead. Now note the anomaly. On corroded lead, which is lead advanced a further stage, the duty is only 5 per cent. Taking that fact into consideration, it is no wonder that we have no lead corroding works in Canada. That duty of 5 per cent would also have to be reduced by one-third in case the corroded lead came from England.

Now what is our position to-day? Canada is consuming to-day of lead products in various forms, such as sheet lead, white lead, shot and corroded leads, something in the neighbourhood of 15,000 tons. This consumption is rapidly increasing from year to year, and in view of the great immigration coming into Canada at the present time it is certain to increase very rapidly in the future. Therefore we should not be surprised to find that within a very few years Canada may be using 20,000 to 25,000 tons of lead in all forms. We have in British Columbia, particularly in the district I represent—indeed I think I represent most all the silver lead mining interests in Canada, certainly all those in British Columbia—we have there at the present time mines capable of producing 30,000 tons of lead, and even more. As I have already said, Canada is consuming at the present time some 15,000 tons. Now how much of that lead is produced in British Columbia? About 4,000 tons, or at the outside, 5,000 tons. You may ask me how that happens. The reason is that we are thrown into competition with Mexican lead. As I have shown, we are protected by no existing duty that is of any practical benefit to the mine owner or the producer; certainly the existing duty is no benefit to the producer of lead as it stands to-day. Therefore we are thrown into competition with lead that is sent in from the United States, although not by any means produced in that country. But the United States have what is called a bonding privilege with Mexico, where there are large lead mines and where a great quantity of lead is mined. That Mexican lead is sent into the United States in bond, is treated by United States manufacturers in bond, and then shipped out of the United States into Canada. That lead is very cheaply produced. The cost of labour employed in producing that lead is only 50 cents a day. I understand the miners are paid 50 cents in the Mexican mines. Against that we have to pay our miners $3.50 a day. You can readily see under these circumstances that we cannot possibly compete with the Mexican lead, unless some protection is afforded our miners in one way or another. If that lead is sent to London, or if Spanish lead is sent to London and refined there, and then sent out to Canada, that cheap lead comes in here with this preference deducted from the duty of 15 per cent on pig lead and 5 per cent on corroded lead.

Now, I wish for a moment to contrast the conditions of the United States miner and the Canadian miner of lead. For that purpose, I will take one of the western states, which has the greatest lead producing camp in the world, the Cordellaines, in the state of Idaho, which is some 200 or 300 miles south of us. I select that because the conditions there are very similar to the conditions in British Columbia, where we are operating our mines. I find that in the United States at the present time the mine owner receives for his lead in ore $3.90 per hundred. In Canada I find that the mine owner receives for his lead in ore $1.90 per hundred. That is based upon this: We receive and are settled with on the basis of the London price. The price of lead on the London market varies from time to time, varies probably every day, or few days, a few points, but at the present time the London price is $2.90 per hundred pounds. The mine owner receives only $1.90, the other dollar being taken for freight, treatment and what are called marketing charges. So that, as contrasted with the mine owner in the United States who receives $3.90, the mine owner in Canada, 200 or 300 miles north of him, receives only $1.90. Now, taking pig lead in the New York market, we find that at present the price is about $4.37 per hundred. In Montreal they buy pig lead (not the United States pig lead), and the price of pig lead in Montreal is $3.07 per hundred. I am quoting these figures to come to the point that I do not see why the charge to the Canadian consumer of mixed paints should be as much as the charge to the American consumer of mixed paints and yet we find that such is the case. Pig lead in New York is worth $4.37 and in Montreal $3.07. Then, we find that corroded lead in New York is worth $4.75 per hundred and in Montreal $3.75 per hundred, but when it comes down to mixed paints we find that they are quoted in both countries at about $6 per hundred. One thing is sure, that the mine owner does not get the benefit of that. Why when there is such a difference in the price of pig lead and the price of corroded lead in Montreal and in New York the price of mixed paints is the same, is something that is difficult to understand. When it is mixed in with the oil and becomes mixed paint we find that, although the American paint mixer has to pay much more for the corroded lead that is used in the mixing of the paint than does the paint mixer in Montreal, practically the consumer in the United States pays the same as the consumer in Canada. This is something the government might look into.

I wish to place before the government and the House the importance of this lead industry in British Columbia, to show what it was when the conditions were favourable to mining operations there and to contrast the conditions then with the conditions to-day and with the conditions that have prevailed for some little time. These figures have been carefully compiled by men who made it their special business to arrive at the figures in order to be able to present them to the government when they came here as accredited delegates from British Columbia. There has been invested in silver lead mines in that district over $20,000,000. That is the actual purchase price of the mines. It does not include any stock dealings or anything of that kind; it is the actual purchase price of the mines and money expended in developing these mines. In connection with that, there have been railway and steamship lines built, and they were built very largely for the purpose of conveying these ores, because there were practically no other industries in certain parts of the silver lead mining district. There has been expended in that direction by the Great Northern Railway Company some $3,000,000. There has been expended by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for a similar purpose some $10,000,000. In Slocan district, which is entirely dependent on silver lead mining, we find that in the various mining camps and small towns the assessed value of improved property amounts to about $1,750,000. The assessed value of the city of Nelson, outside of that amount, is placed at about $2,500,000. There has been invested in smelters for the reduction of these lead ores some $750,000 or $1,000,000, this investment being represented by the smelters at Pilot Bay, at the city of Nelson and at Trail. I will take the year 1900, because in that year the mines were working under favourable conditions and were working to their normal capacity. In that year, while working to their normal capacity, these lead mines gave employment to 2,500 miners. This does not include men who might be employed in cutting trails or in cutting wood in connection with these mines, but actual miners, and the wages paid to these miners amounted to about $2,750,000 in that year. The value of the ores shipped from these mines in 1900 was about $5,000,000. These mines were supporting a population of some 20,000 people, I may say, almost absolutely dependent on the successful operation of the mines. Take the conditions two years later, and what do we find? We find that the value of the ores shipped from these mines had dropped from $5,000,000 to $1,154,000. We find that the population of 20,000 people that were being supported by these mines had dwindled to some 10,000 people, and that number to-day is greatly decreasing. We find that the 2,500 men who were employed in 1900, when conditions were favourable, are reduced to 500 men, and consequently, instead of having 2,500 men working in our silver lead mines, as in 1900, we have 500 men. Instead of having $2,750,000 expenditure in the shape of wages, we have now only about $500,000. You will readily see, Mr. Speaker, the great necessity there is for something being done to help this industry. It is an industry which is not only of great value to my district, but it is an industry which is of interest to all of British Columbia, to the North-west, to Manitoba, aye, and to Eastern Canada as well. If I were urging something that was only local in its character, I would not have such a strong case in coming to this House and to the government to ask for assistance. But, Sir, this is an industry which concerns the whole of Canada, and in which all Canada has deep concern.

Now, Sir, this falling off in the production of the mines is not due in any sense to the fact that the mines have petered out. The silver lead mines of the Slocan and of the East Kootenay are in a more advanced stage of development to-day than they have been in any period in the history of lead mining in British Columbia. They have ore in great quantity, and the ore is just as valuable as ever it was. It has been suggested by some that the falling off might be attributed to exorbitant freight charges on the railways and exorbitant treatment charges by the smelters, but I can assure the House that such is not the case. The mines are as productive as ever; the ore is there to be taken out, and the railways and smelters have made cut after cut in their rates in order to try and keep that industry alive. There was a two day's session in the city of Nelson, last fall, where the representatives of the silver lead mining industry met the smelter people and the railway people, and threshed the matter out. The representatives of the silver lead mines in British Columbia satisfied themselves then, that they were receiving fair treatment both from the railway companies and from the smelters. In fact I am told that the rates charged were even better than the rates given to our neighbours across the line. It may be asked: What then is the cause of this slump in lead mining in British Columbia. Well it is due to more causes than one. In the first place, a good deal of our lead carries silver with it, and the price of silver and lead in the markets of the world is low. The second reason is, that owing to the conditions that prevail we cannot get any appreciable amount of the Canadian market for the Canadian product of lead. We are thrown into competition with cheap Mexican and Spanish lead which is foisted into Canada through the United States and through Great Britain. Another reason, and a very strong reason is, that during 1900 and prior to that for some years we were shipping our lead ores into the United States first, under the old Wilson tariff of three-quarters of a cent a pound, but afterwards the Dingley tariff raised the rate to one and a half cents a pound against us. When we had the American market for our products, our mines were going ahead, everything was prosperous with us, and we were able to carry on our works to their fullest capacity. But suddenly what is known as the American Smelting Trust was formed, and so soon as that trust came into existence all the smelters gave notice that at the expiration of the contracts which they then had with the mine owners of British Columbia, they would take no more Canadian ore. Therefore, the American market has been shut off to Canada by the action of that trust. Now when these conditions got to be practically unbearable, when it was seen that unless something was done to relieve the lead miners, that industry would perish; we in the lead mining district, got together to devise some scheme which we could present to the government for our relief. As the member for the district, I caused notices to be inserted last fall in the papers, asking that a meeting should be called at some stated place to discuss as to the best means of bringing about relief. That notice was heartily responded to and a meeting was called at Sandon which is probably the centre of the lead mining district. That was a very representative meeting and all the lead mines of any importance in British Columbia were represented. The managers, or engineers, or superintendents, as the case may be, met at Sandon, and after carefully discussing the question, action was taken. I may say that the men who attended that meeting were men whose daily avocation is the operating of mines; men who should be, to my mind, in the best position to judge of what would grant the most relief to that industry in its depression. It was unanimously decided at the Sandon meeting that a delegation should be sent to Ottawa to present the facts to the government, and to ask them to give us a duty on our lead that would be sufficient to place our miners—not exactly in the position of the American miners, because we felt that we could not get that—but at all events to place them in a position so that they would be able to work their mines to advantage.

Mr. BIRKETT. What do you think a sufficient duty on lead would be?

Mr. GALLIHER. What was asked was practically the Dingley tariff, which is two and one-eighth cents a pound on pig lead, and two and seven-eighth cents a pound, I think on corroded lead.

Mr. KEMP. Would that be adequate?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, that would be adequate, but I have some hesitation in using the word adequate after the explanation of its meaning given by my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd). As I have said, that was the decision arrived at at that meeting. The Sandon meeting was afterwards followed by a meeting at the city of Nelson where these industries were again represented, and at the meeting in the city of Nelson the resolution of the meeting held in Sandon was practically endorsed. That was followed up, as I said before, by a meeting between the mine owners and those representing the railway and smelting interests in order that the mine owners might be convinced that the railways and smelters were dealing fairly by them both in regard to railway rates and smelting charges. The meeting ended by the mine owners being perfectly satisfied on these points. It was followed by a third and last meeting in the city of Sandon, where again all these interests were represented and the original resolution was re-endorsed. At that meeting certain delegates were appointed to come to Ottawa to interview the government with regard to that resolution; and I may say that the men who composed that delegation were all practical men, men whose daily avocation was the operating of mines and the treatment of ores, men who understood the A B C of mining, and were capable of presenting the case to the government in a proper light, and who did present that case to the government in a much abler manner than I am presenting it to the House to-night. These delegates were assisted by Mr. Buchanan, who represented the federated Boards of Trade, a gentleman who probably has given more time to this question than any one else. So that our case was very strongly presented to the government, and we hoped that the government, if it could not see its way clear to go to the extent we asked in adjusting the duties, would at all events give us what we all claimed was our right, and what I claim to-night on the floor of this House is the right of our people—to have the tariff on our lead industries so adjusted that it should be placed upon a parity with the other industries of Canada. That, I claim, the people and the lead mining industry of British Columbia are entitled to. The government have intimated, through the Finance Minister in his budget speech, that they do not see their way to interfere at all at this session of parliament with the tariff respecting lead notwithstanding the great anomaly that exists.

I was pleased to see that the government have asked for power, if certain conditions arose, to impose a duty on steel rails. I think that principle is right. The manufacture of steel rails is a new industry in Canada ; it may become a very important industry ; and when we have the raw material and the means of converting that raw material into the finished article, I believe in the principle of encouraging all new industries of that description. Such, I claim, is our position with regard to lead. When the present tariff was framed, we had no such industry as lead mining in Canada ; therefore, lead was practically put on the free list. Now that we have demonstrated beyond a question the value and importance of the industry and the fact that it can more than supply the demands of Canada, surely we should be placed in a position at least to control our own markets instead of seeing the lead in the different forms in which it is used in Canada come from the cheap Mexican or Spanish article, while our mines of British Columbia are shut down.

Now, I take it that the government, in asking power to place a duty of $7 a ton on steel rails, have placed themselves on record as willing to assist a new industry under special conditions. There could not be a stronger special case made out than has been made out on behalf of our lead industry. It is an exceptionally special case ; but the hon. Minister of Finance stated, as the reason why he had practically differentiated between the steel rail industry and the lead industry, that to have afforded the relief asked for the lead industry would have necessitated interfering with a great many other items in the tariff. That may be true ; but let us see if that is a good reason. Having once placed themselves on record as adopting the principle of assisting a new industry under special circumstances, and having applied it to a certain case, under special circumstances, I contend that they should apply the same principle to the second case of special circumstances. The fact that the application of the principle to the second case may involve a little more trouble in working it out, does not, to my mind, affect the question. The point is, is the principle established ? If it is, they should apply it in all similar cases, even if one case involves a little more difficulty than another.

In a country such as Canada is—a growing country, a country of great possibilities, a country where the conditions are changing with wonderful rapidity from year to year, and even in shorter periods—I think no government should lay down any hard and fast policy that must govern everything. I think there should be elasticity in the policy of every government. I think special circumstances should be dealt with specially, apart from any fixed principle or policy. If there is justice in the demand, justice should be done. It is all very well for an old country like England to adopt hard and fast rules of policy. It is different in Canada, where conditions are not settled, but where they are constantly changing, and those conditions should be met by any government in power, be it Liberal or Conservative.

Taking into consideration the sums of money which have been invested in that industry in that country, considering the importance of that industry, not alone to British Columbia but to the North-west Territories as well, it seems to me to call for some energetic action on the part of the government. There is no other industry, not even the mining of other precious metals which so effects the entire province as does the industry of silver lead mining. Not only does the whole province feel the evil effects of the condition now prevailing, but those evil effects are also visited on the North-west Territories. No doubt the territories are prosperous at present, and I hope that they will long continue so. There is a large immigration pouring into them, but we must not lose sight of the fact that, right at their threshold in the province of British Columbia do they find their natural market for their agricultural products. That province furnishes a very good market for the products of the farm and the ranch. We require large quantities of butter, cheese, hay, oats, cattle, hogs and various other products of the farm and the ranch, and these we get from the North-west Territories. Thus the territories find in our province a remunerative market, and they are backing us up in our application. We have received endorsation from numerous boards of trade throughout the territories and also from the boards of trade of the city of Winnipeg and other places in the province of Manitoba. Aye, Mr. Speaker, we have even received the support of the boards of trade in many parts of Ontario. So that we are not standing alone. We alone are not affected, but other provinces share in our loss, and that surely ought to appeal to the favourable consideration of this government. Seven years ago I found this silver mining district, which, a very few years before, had been a solitary wild, a business centre and hum of industry. The bustle of life and business was evident everywhere. Prospectors, miners, investors, business men were pouring in from all quarters, putting their capital into the country, either in mining or business venture. Mining camps, villages, towns and ambitious cities were springing up with incredible rapidity. Times were good, everybody was prospering, and the people naturally looked to a continuance of this condition. All the indications pointed to that district as being a profitable one for the investment of capital, and the people invested largely. But if the present conditions of affairs is to continue, if there is to be no help for us, what does it mean? It means ruin to every one of those business men who invested their money there, and there are numerous towns in that silver lead district in which vast sums have been invested. The mine owners may close down their mines and leave the country. But the merchant, the man who has his money invested in business, cannot do that. There are bills to meet, and there are vast sums of money sunk in stores and buildings, which, if abandoned, will be irredeemably lost. It was suggested, however, by the hon. Minister of Finance—and that I confess is a ray of hope to me—that there would be some readjustment with regard to bounty and that a bounty would take the place of a duty. Well, I was pleased to hear the hon. minister say so, and I hope that the bounty will be a liberal one. An adequate bounty would tide us over our difficulties for a time until the government could see its way clear to give us at least a fair, proportionate and reasonable adjustment of duties, so that our lead products, at all events, would be on the same basis as other products of Canada.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. If the government decides to grant us a bonus, I wish to point out that if it is to be of any practical value, it will have to be an adequate one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. A sufficient bonus, a liberal bonus.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. There are two things we should not lose sight of in this connection. I wish you, Sir, to bear in mind that the province of British Columbia contributes to the Dominion treasury more per capita than any other province and three times as much per capita as the average of the other provinces. I would also point out that it contributes in revenue to the coffers of this Dominion some $2,000,000 per annum more than is expended in that province. I do not mention this to say that it should be the policy of the government to expend in any one province all the money paid into its treasury by that province. But I merely wish to show that in asking for a large bonus, the province of British Columbia is not drawing from the revenue or resources of any other province of the Dominion. Some two years ago there was an Act placed on the statutes providing for the payment of a bounty for refining lead. The purpose of this was to have our home product refined at home, that it might not be sent abroad to San Francisco or some other point, and freight charges and smelting charges paid upon it. That bounty ran for five years, and was $5 per ton for the first year, $4 per ton for the second year, $3 per ton for the third year, $2 per ton for the fourth year, and $1 per ton for the fifth year, but in no year might the bounty exceed $100,000. In order to gain the whole bounty the first year, it would have been necessary that 20,000 tons of lead should be mined in Canada. That bounty, so far, has cost very little to the country from the fact that the establishment of refineries cost considerable money. The only parties who took advantage of it was the Canadian Pacific Refining Company at Trail, a town near the silver lead mining district. They have expended some $40,000 or $50,000 in a plant, and in an experiment in refining lead which was then tried for the first time outside a laboratory. The system experimented with has been demonstrated to be successful. It is known as the electrolytic system. The plant at the present time is capable only of turning out some 8,000 or 10,000 tons per annum. When the mining conditions again become normal in British Columbia, that plant will have to be largely increased. In view of the fact that the company have shown enterprise and have introduced this new system which is successful, and is in furtherance of science, and in view of the fact that probably only about $10,000 of the bonus for the year ending 30th June, has been earned, I would ask that the time be extended for a year, within which they may earn bounty at the rate of $5 per ton. Now, this bounty that already exists and the bounty that we propose asking must be treated separately. It will not answer the purpose of the producer of lead for us merely to have a modification in some way of the existing bounty paid to the refiner. What we will ask for, what we shall require in order that this industry may be stimulated by way of bounty, will be a bounty payable directly to the producer of the lead. Here is the man to whom, we claim, if we are to receive assistance, by way of a bounty, that bounty must be paid. Taking the average price of lead for the last twenty years, and taking our settlement at the London prices, it brings to the producer about $1.75 per hundred weight. By the closest and most careful figuring, the gentlemen who have had the matter in hand have decided that it is impossible for the mine owners in that district, outside of a very few whose quota would be small, to operate their mines successfully for less than a return of $2.50 per hundred weight for their lead. So, allowing for the price of $1.75, the bonus should be such as would give to the producer the difference between $1.75 and $2.50, or 75 cents per hundred weight, or $15 per ton. That is the bonus that will be asked. I may say that, since the speech of the Finance Minister was published throughout the country, I have received numerous telegrams, and resolutions from boards of trade both in the territories and throughout the entire province of British Columbia, urging upon me that I should ask the government to reconsider the question of the adjustment of duties, so far as lead is concerned. I am only a young parliamentarian, and I do not know whether this can be done or not. I see no reason why not. At all events, I am going to ask that it be done, that the Minister of Finance reconsider the question in regard to the readjustment of the duties and the bonus to be given us. As to duties, I will only ask them to touch one item, this item of corroded lead. We are assured by two separate concerns that, if a duty of 30 per cent is put on corroded lead, they are prepared to establish corroded works in the east here. If they do so—and they are responsible people—it means the establishment of a new industry in Canada, the expenditure of money in Canada, and the employment of labour in Canada ; and it means the securing the white or corroded lead market for the Canadian producer of lead. It is something, I think, worthy of consideration. And if it is possible or in accordance with the rules to reconsider that and bring it down by way of what we may term a supplementary budget, I would ask the Finance Minister and the government to do so. We in that country are placed in a position where, if adequate relief is not afforded us, either in one way or another, we can see the destruction of those erstwhile live businesslike towns that have sprung up in that country. We do not want that to occur. The people of my district are extremely excited over the matter as it is now ; and I urge in all earnestness upon the government and, if the government bring in any measure of relief I will urge in all earnestness upon the members of the House, to give this matter all due consideration. I hope I have made it clear enough that we are in dire need of assistance in one way or the other in regard to that great industry. We do not wish to see an industry of such magnitude perish ; we do not wish to see our country supplied with the products of other countries while we have within our own border an industry of this kind more than capable of supplying our wants. I care not how the government reach it, so long as they reach it.

Now I have done with the lead question, and before closing I wish to call the attention of the government to another matter. We have in my district, in what is known as the Kelowna valley, along the shores of Lake Okanagan, in Yale county, one of the finest tobacco growing districts in Canada. It has been demonstrated that we have in that district 10,000 acres of tobacco land, capable of producing 8,000,000 pounds of tobacco leaf, an article equal in every respect to the best tobacco grown in the United States and imported by Canada. In respect of that matter, I am asking the government to do two things. First, repeal an Order in Council which was passed in June, 1901, allowing factories importing foreign leaf into Canada a rebate of ten cents per pound on foreign leaf cuttings exported from Canada. The meaning of that is this : When factories using foreign leaf import quantities of the same into Canada there is a duty payable thereon, and when they export from Canada the cuttings of this foreign leaf they receive from the government a rebate of ten cents per pound. Now that is all very well if you want to encourage the importation of foreign tobacco, or if you want to discriminate against Canadian grown tobacco. But when we have demonstrated that we grow in that Kelowna valley tobacco equal to the best imported from the United States, and that that industry is not expanding simply because we cannot sell a pound of our tobacco to those factories that import the foreign tobacco, then something should be done ; and we call for the repeal of that Order in Council, that iniquitous order, which discriminates against our own product and hampers our own industries. They will not buy from us, because if they do they will not get a rebate on the cuttings. Why should we close the door of these factories to the producer of the home grown article ? This question affects the county of Kent, the county of Essex, and all other counties in Canada that grow tobacco. Our tobacco leaf has been pronounced by experts, both from the United States and from Toronto and Montreal, in fact all the leading cities of Canada where tobacco is used, equal to the best grade of American tobacco. Last year I think something like 60,000 pounds only was grown in our district ; between 60,000 pounds and 8,000,000 pounds there is, as you will see, a good margin to work on. I, therefore, ask that this Order in Council of 1901 be repealed, so that we may be in a position to sell to all the factories in Canada. I will read an extract from a letter of one of the largest tobacco growers in the Kelowna valley :

> Samples of the tobacco I now have in stock have been shown to all the largest manufacturers in Montreal, London, Toronto, &c., and declared by them to be equal to anything grown in the United States, but in face of this Order in Council I am unable to sell to any foreign leaf factory. To one firm, an actual sale of 6,000 pounds at excellent prices was made, provided it could be taken into the factory free of duty. They ascertained that this could be done, but if they took it in, the rebate on their cuttings would be lost. As their annual rebate amounted to more than the value of the tobacco, the deal of course fell through. I have tried factory after factory with the same result. In no case has any exception been taken to the quality of the leaf, its exclusion is due solely to this Order in Council, and as long as it is in force we shall practically be debarred from selling to foreign factories.

Now, I say there is something that can be remedied without interfering with the tariff, and the remedy should be applied at once.

It is an injustice to our tobacco growers in Canada, it is a discrimination against our tobacco growers in Canada, it is an encouragement of the importation of the foreign product, when we can produce the leaf of equal quality in our own country.

The next thing I want to ask is that only one license stamp be used, allowing all manufacturers to use the domestic and foreign leaf in any proportion they please. I understand by a ruling of the Department of Inland Revenue that the domestic leaf is allowed into factories free of duty. So far so good. But I would ask that this distinguishing stamp be taken off. Originally there were two licenses issued, one for factories in which nothing but foreign leaf was used in the manufacture of cigars. That particular license was accompanied by a gray stamp. A gray inland revenue stamp was the distinguishing mark, showing that that tobacco had been imported from some foreign country and was manufactured solely from imported leaf. The other license was what was known as a domestic license for domestic factories, in which cigars were manufactured entirely from domestic leaf, the distinguished stamp being green. But as Canadian growers gained experience, after they had brought their tobacco leaf up to a high standard, a third license was issued for combination factories, which allowed the manufacturer to make cigars partly from the domestic and partly from the imported tobacco, so long as not less than 25 per cent of the one was used in it. This amount of 25 per cent was afterwards reduced, and is now ten per cent of either domestic or imported, the distinguishing stamp being red. Now what is the object? We have in Canada a tobacco leaf equal to any that can be imported from the United States. What is the necessity of having a different coloured stamp on our cigar boxes? Some claim that the stamp merely marks it as Canadian tobacco, or as combination tobacco, or as all imported tobacco. I do not think one smoker in a hundred knows anything about that. He knows what brand of cigars he likes, he buys them and he smokes them; and I claim that the use of this distinguishing mark is practically black-eying our own products, and encouraging the public to buy an article imported from foreign countries.

Now, if the object is to protect the smoker, as it more nearly affects him, do these distinguishing marks in any way protect the smoker? We all know that there are as many grades of imported cigars as there are of domestic cigars. They range in price all the way from probably $20 or $30 per thousand to $120 per thousand. There are all these different grades and they all bear the same stamp. Is there any protection in it for the smoker? No. You buy a certain brand of cigar and smoke it and if you do not like it you try another brand. The smoker is perfectly capable of taking care of himself and if the using of these different stamps has the effect of stamping the Canadian product as inferior in any way to the imported product, then, these stamps should be removed and we should have a uniform stamp placed on all cigars manufactured in Canada. Now, I discussed this matter with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) and he seemed to anticipate that there would be some difficulty in bringing this about; there may be; still I leave the matter to the consideration of the government. I think, myself, and I think any man who will reason it out will come to the same conclusion, that we should not either stamp our goods or exclude the sale of our goods in any factory in Canada to the betterment of the American product and the encouragement and building up of the industry in the United States or any other country.

Mr. WILSON. Come over; we will take you.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not travelling.

Mr. WILSON. You might as well.

Mr. GALLIHER. Let us consider for a moment the effect which this system has. Hon. gentlemen know how great the industry is in the United States. I do not know much about the conditions in Essex, or Kent, or in other counties in the east where tobacco is grown, but I do know what we are capable of producing in the west. I know the area that we have that is available for the growing of tobacco and I know that so soon as the conditions are made such that the people have a free hand and can act freely that industry will be started and will be prosecuted to the fullest extent. I, therefore, Mr. Speaker, leave these two matters to the consideration of the government. The more vital one is certainly that of the lead ore mining industry. The other, I consider, also, of great importance and I hope that if the government decide not to in any way interfere in regard to the adjustment of the tariff on lead at the present session they will not allow another session to go by without giving us the relief that we ask for.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher), who has just taken his seat, is entitled to the fullest sympathy of both sides of the House. He has made, certainly, a very strong appeal on behalf of British Columbia industries. He has pointed out to the government the mistakes they have made in dealing with that province, and so far as I am concerned, I must say that I deeply sympathize with him in the position in which he finds himself placed. When the hon. gentleman began his address, or very shortly afterwards, I noticed that not a single Minister of the Crown was to be found in the Chamber.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was here.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not so. The hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is very rarely absent indeed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding). It is not very important, but I may say that I was not out of the Chamber at any moment when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) was addressing the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister was in the gallery.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know quite well where the hon. minister was; he was concealed behind a post in the upper gallery feeling quite sure that the bullets of lead with which he knew the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo was loaded would not hit him because the pillar was between him and the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COWAN. He was in good company.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo tells the House that the budget speech was very nice, that it was very rosy, and that he was delighted with it. No doubt, when he heard of the enormous surpluses that we had during the past year and in prospect for the current year he fully expected that British Columbia would receive some kind of fair treatment, but, lo and behold, he said that at the end of that speech there was a bitter pill for British Columbia. Well, Sir, that hon. gentleman does not seem to be alone in finding bitter pills in the budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. We find yesterday the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) bewailed the fact that the salt industry in his town had received no consideration from the government. He was a protectionist on salt but possibly on nothing else. I do not like to characterize the hon. gentleman as a parish politician, but I have not very much regard for those protectionists who are simply protectionists in a local way. I believe that we should have the same policy for the whole country and for all the industries in the country. If the hon. gentleman was right in his contention that the salt industry should receive the paternal care of the government, why would he refuse that paternal care to other industries which were all of just equal importance and perhaps of very much greater importance? The hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) stands along with the hon. member for Yale in his constituency. Thousands of people are engaged in the production of vegetables for the market in Toronto and elsewhere. That hon. gentleman, when last returned to this House, I believe, secured his election by his pledge to secure for those people additional protection for that important industry. Yet, we find him here, to use an expression of his own, like a bump on a log, saying nothing at all and leaving his constituents to suffer whilst the government takes no action in regard to the matter. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has become a protectionist for the cream separator manufacturers. Where is he going to be when the resolution moved by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is voted upon? Is he going to declare that the cream separator manufacturers of Guelph are not entitled to adequate protection. I question very much if he would not prefer being outside of the Chamber when the vote is taken, even if he should only be in the gallery. Then we had the member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) appealing on behalf of the town of Brantford and its industries. Binder twine has given him a large amount of trouble, and the government thinks they have fairly met him, with the slight aid of three-eights of one cent a pound, whilst if our Brantford factory would send a pound of twine to the United States they would be met with a duty of two cents a pound. Then we had the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Galliher) appealing on behalf of the lead industry and the tobacco industry in his section of the country, for some material assistance. If I remember aright, we had the member for Alberta (Mr. Davis) anxious that a duty should be placed upon horses or at any rate that an increased valuation should be put on horses so that the duty as it at present exists could be made effective in protecting the horse breeders of the west. But I was rather amazed at the member for Yale (Mr. Galliher). I was amazed at how well he enjoyed the bitter pill that was given him by the government. He said he had hopes. Well, there is an old saying about living in hope and dying in despair, and I am afraid that will be the lot of the member for Yale. It is no new thing to hear this appeal from British Columbia for assistance to the mining industry, but year after year goes on and the government declares that there is no necessity for doing anything for that province, because they know perfectly well that the member for Yale and others of his kidney will give them their support through thick and thin.

I was much pleased indeed at the reference which the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) made in his budget speech to the postal revenue of this country, and there was probably a good reason why the Minister of Finance should refer to it. His duty is to give a fair statement of the revenues and expenditures and I was pleased at his reference to that service because to a certain extent it corrected the statement that had gone abroad in the country—not with the intention of misleading any one I must suppose—that the Post Office Department had been so well administered that it actually showed a surplus of revenue over expenditure. The friends of the government throughout the country spoke of this with great delight and great pleasure. It was the one department that showed anything like economy, and they held it up to the people as an evidence on the part of the government of a desire to fulfil their pledges as to economy. Be that as it may I fail to see why continued reference should be made to it in a budget debate. My opinion, and I think that opinion is well founded because I have carefully investigated the matter; my opinion is that any decrease in the deficit of the Post Office Department has been brought about simply by starving the service. Men are to-day performing duties under the Postmaster General at starvation wages. It is unfair in a country like this that men should be called on to discharge such duties for the miserable pittance they receive. I refer more especially to the country postmasters, and to the mail carriers as well who have arduous duties to perform and who as a rule are not sufficiently paid. I have said, and I am prepared to back up my statement with substantial proof, that this starvation of the service alone is responsible for the alleged saving in the Post Office Department. On June 30, 1891, there were 8,061 post offices in operation in Canada, and in 1896 when the Conservative government left power there were 9,103 or an increase in the five years of 1,042 post offices, or an average yearly increase of 208. Let us compare this with the conditions under the present government. On the 30th of June, 1902, there were 9,958 post offices in Canada or an increase of only 855 over the number in 1896, as against an increase in the last five years of Conservative rule of 1,042. There was an average increase during the regime of the Liberal government of only 142 per year compared with 208 per year during the last five years of the Conservative government. We have heard of the new areas that have been opened up recently to settlement in the North-west and in New Ontario, and during these past five or six years there must have been much more numerous demands for increased postal facilities than there were during the previous five years, but notwithstanding that, we find that the people of Canada are left without postal conveniencies simply in order that one member of the administration may be able to say that he had administered his department with only a small loss. Had the same rate of increased accommodation been given to the people of Canada during the last six years that had been given during the last five years of the Conservative regime, we would have to-day 400 more post offices opened in the Dominion of Canada than we have at present. Now, Sir, if we have large surpluses; if we have money to burn, how could we spend it better than in providing comforts, conveniencies and accommodation for our people, and I know of no way in which public money can be spent to better advantage than in giving the people of the country better post office facilities.

With reference to the financial statement of the Minister of Finance I intend to have very little to say. I congratulate hon. members who have preceded me, during the latter part of the debate especially, on the new policy of short speeches in this House, and I intend to-night not to break that, which I regard as a very wholesome rule.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Therefore, any references which I shall make to the finances of the country shall be brief. We were told by the Finance Minister that during the current year he expects to have a revenue of $65,000,000. That seems to be a very large sum, and yet I have no doubt that the estimate is fairly correct. Last year the revenue amounted to about $58,000,000, so that we are to have an increase of about $7,000,000 during the current year. The minister's anticipated expenditure on consolidated revenue account for the current year is $51,650,000, leaving, as he says, a surplus of revenue over expenditure of $13,350,000. I have said before in this House that I do not like that style of putting the matter, because it goes to the country that the government have a surplus of $13,350,000, and I venture to say that there are a large number of people in the Dominion of Canada who actually believe that the government will have a surplus of that amount for the current year after meeting all the expenses of the country. However, the hon. Minister of Finance did not mislead the House in that respect, because he informed us that he anticipated that the capital expenditure of the country this year would be about $10,000,000. What I object to is the system of keeping two accounts instead of only one. I believe that the time has come in this country when it would be better in the interest of all concerned—better in the interest of the government, better certainly in the interest of the people, by enabling them to have a fairer understanding of the real condition of our finances—that the capital account should be expunged from the public accounts of the country, and everything should be entered in one ledger.

Speaking of this surplus reminds me that not only is there a division among the hon. gentlemen who sit behind the government, but it seems to me there is a great difference of opinion between the hon. gentlemen themselves who form the government. Why have we had no tariff revision this year? I apprehend that a very strong reason is that there are some very ardent free traders in the cabinet, and also some pretty strong protectionists; and it was quite impossible for the First Minister to get these two discordant elements together, and consequently they concluded that it was better to do nothing and allow the country to suffer.

The hon. Minister of Finance boasts of the surplus. Well, what do his friends say about it? I turn up the 'Hansard' of 1883, when Sir Leonard Tilley had a large surplus. Hon. gentlemen opposite were at that time on the opposite side of the House from him, and they very fully and very freely expressed their opinions. I find that the present hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) made a statement which, if applied to the position of the hon. Minister of Finance at the present time, would indicate that these two hon. gentlemen are divided in their opinion on the question of the surplus as well as their friends behind them on the question of protection. The hon. Minister of Customs said then :

> When the government find that they have beyond a doubt a surplus, when they can calculate with certainty on having one, it is their bounden duty to reduce taxation.

That was the opinion of the hon. Minister of Customs in 1883. Has he changed that opinion? Was he wrong then, or is he right to-day? He has not expressed himself yet. Possibly, when he addresses the House he may repeat his speech of 1883, because we have reason to believe that there are divisions in the Cabinet, and they may possibly come to the front, as have those existing among the hon. gentlemen who sit behind the Cabinet. The hon. Minister of Customs also said in 1883 :

> It is no part of the duty of a Finance Minister to extract more money out of the pockets of the people than is absolutely needed to carry on the affairs of the country.

What does the hon. Finance Minister think of his colleague? There is no doubt that he has been able to extract a very large sum from the pockets of the people, for which he has no possible use in carrying on the affairs of the country. He boasts of having a surplus of $13,350,000. What does that mean? It means that he has been tax-gathering, that he has been taking all the money he could get from the people without considering whether it is necessary or not. The whole machinery of the Finance Department seems to have got out of gear. It just runs haphazard ; it apparently runs itself ; there is no check on it. If it grinds out a surplus, all right ; if it grinds out a deficit, all right. The minister seems to have no comprehension of what will be the result ; but come good or come ill, of course his friends behind him cheer and applaud.

Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that during the latter years of the regime of the Hon. Mr. Foster he had a deficit. That is very true ; but Mr. Foster was a financier, and considered the interests of the country. It was not necessary that Mr. Foster should have had a deficit—not at all ; he could have avoided it. In 1891, by a single stroke of his pen, as it were, he struck off $20,000,000 of duty from raw sugar, which would otherwise have been collected during the five years from 1891 to 1896, in order to enable the country to tide over the depression that was setting in at that time. Of course his action left him with a deficit ; but it was wise legislation, because it was better that that $20,000,000 should be left in the pockets of the people during those five years than that Mr. Foster should have extracted it from the pockets of the people simply to enable him to boast before the country that he had a surplus.

Last night, while the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was speaking, the hon. Minister of Customs interjected the statement that Mr. Foster had put back the sugar duty. Very true ; he did so to a slight extent. Mr. Foster took off the entire duty from raw sugar ; but he found during the course of the five years that he had overstepped the mark, and in order to restore the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure he put back half a cent duty on raw sugar, and had Mr. Foster remained Finance Minister of this country, he would no doubt have removed that half cent, because the policy of the Conservative party was that we should have free raw sugar. That was a part of the National Policy, and it was only departed from when the necessities of the country called for a duty for the purposes of revenue. We all know that a duty was never put on raw sugar for any other purpose than revenue. It was not put on for a protective purpose ; it would be absurd to say so, because we had no raw sugar in this country to protect ; and I say still that the true policy at the present time, while the revenue is buoyant, and while we have no need of these enormous surpluses, is that the people of this country should be given cheap sugar—cheaper than it is at the present time. We have no right at present to take $2,000,000 per year out of the pockets of the people, by a tariff on raw sugar, when such a tax is not called for. But you may say : What about the beet root sugar industry which is calling for protection? If you remove the duty from raw sugar, you interfere very materially with that young industry started in Ontario more particularly, which province is especially adapted for the growing of beets. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest a remedy which, I think, will be far more effectual than any duty or increase of duty on raw sugar. The quantity of sugar that would be produced in Canada in years to come would be a comparatively small quantity compared with the large amount of 400,000,000 pounds consumed in this country. The total produced in this country would not be more than a tenth of that, and I would say : Give the people their raw sugar free, but give to every farmer who will grow the beets, a respectable bounty per ton, in order to aid this growing industry. I believe that that would be the true policy to adopt, and that a bounty on the one-tenth part of the sugar consumed in this country would be very small compared with the tax we are paying on the 400,000,000 pounds which we are consuming at present. I would give the people cheap sugar, but I would assist by a bounty the farming community in the districts where beet sugar may be produced; the growing of which has ceased to be profitable in the province of Ontario. Our farmers will tell you that. In our province we do not eat bread made from the flour ground from our own wheat, but largely from the flour we import from Manitoba. Consequently the growing of wheat in Ontario is not as profitable as it was. The cattle industry is also showing signs of failure, and practically our Ontario farmers have now only two industries on which they can rely—dairying and hog raising; and they are attempting to supplement these industries by the introduction of a new one, that of producing their own sugar. I, therefore, hope that the government will see its way clear to give an adequate bounty in order that this new industry may be assisted and become a success in the province of Ontario, and the other provinces where it may be started.

We have heard a great deal in this debate about the reduction of taxation, but I must confess that, in my examination of the tariff and its results, as shown by the Trade and Navigation Returns, I am at a loss to find where this boasted reduction in taxation comes in. I find that the average rate of taxation is just about what it was under the Conservative regime. I do not consider that there is one-hundredth part of a cent difference to-day between the average rate of taxation in the first five years of Liberal rule and the last five years of Conservative rule. Any one who will take the trouble to investigate and make a fair comparison will find such to be the case, and that is just what the hon. Minister of Finance intended. He told us three years ago that he never intended to reduce taxation. Let me quote his own words:

> It was of the utmost importance that we should maintain a strong financial position and in view of the uncertainties as to the amount of revenue that might be produced by this lower rate of taxation it became necessary that we should take some steps to make good any possible loss that might result. It was thought that it might fairly be met by providing for the raising of some additional taxation in order to balance, or make good, the loss occasioned by the reduction of duties. . . . . It was necessary to have an increased revenue in certain directions when we were to lose revenue in other directions.

That policy the hon. gentleman carried out. He simply has taken off something here and put something on there, but unfortunately he has upset the trade of the country by the unfair way in which he has balanced up the revenue. For example he taxes the workingman heavily on sugar.

Mr. TAYLOR. And tobacco.

Mr. HENDERSON. And enormously on tobacco. Perhaps those who use tobacco may not receive very much sympathy, but they are as much entitled to fair treatment from the government as any other class.

Then, under the operation of the preferential tariff, many industrial institutions of this country have been very seriously injured, but apparently the only object which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has in view is to raise a revenue, irrespective of the interests of the country. To-night, for instance, we had the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Galliher) charging the government with paying no attention to British Columbia and not caring how the mines of that province might suffer so long as the government collected 30 per cent on everything the people used out there. I might give you any number of figures to bear out the facts I have stated, but I shall confine myself to giving a recapitulation of the average rates of taxation in the various years:

In 1892	the average taxation	was..	17.56
In 1893	"	"	.. 17.38
In 1894	"	"	.. 17.13
In 1895	"	"	.. 16.99
In 1896	"	"	.. 18.28

In the five years, the average rate was 17·46 on goods coming into this country, dutiable and free.

Compare this with the first five years of Liberal rule. I shall not take the table set out in the Trade and Navigation Returns, because the Minister of Finance has told us that he disagrees with the Minister of Customs, and that that table is not correct. I have therefore corrected it so as to make it conform with the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. The hon. Finance Minister told us some years ago that it was only fair we should eliminate from our imports the amount of corn which passed through this country in transit. And in order to make the calculation fair, I have done so, and I find this result:

The average rate of taxation on goods entered for consumption was as follows:

In 1898..	18.34
In 1899..	18.14
In 1900..	16.96
In 1901..	17.25
In 1902..	16.60

And the average for the five years is 17·46 against an average of 17·46 for the last five years of Conservative rule. So that the Finance Minister has not reduced taxation one whit. It remains just where it was except that there is this difference. Under the national tariff, the taxation was so arranged as to benefit the industries in this country, whereas now it has the opposite effect. Now the duties are so adjusted as to press the harder on the people, because while a man has to pay a higher taxation, he does not receive the help of the government in order to enable him the better to prosecute his business.

The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) I thought, went somewhat out of his way this afternoon to show what the government has done for the farmers. I say he went somewhat out of his way, because the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) told us that it was absolutely impossible for the government to protect the farmers. So here is a queer difference between these two gentlemen, one holding strongly to the opinion that the farmer cannot be protected, the other holding as strongly to the opinion that the government had been protecting the farmer. I turned up the report of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) for 1897, the first year of the Liberal government. The report was written and printed very shortly after hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. I turned to this report in order to find out for myself practically who it was that established cold storage in this country. I think it is only fair that I should read an extract from that report, for I am under the impression that many people in this country are a little mistaken on this question. This report gives what the Minister of Agriculture had to say in 1897, before he became contaminated with these extraordinary ideas which seem to prevail on the other side. This is when he came in fresh from the farm. For you know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture is a farmer, a practical farmer, an innocent youth, who, at this time was just off the farm and did not know how to misrepresent a thing, but told the facts as he found them. An hon. gentleman beside me remarks that he was green. I did not think he was. I think he was all right. He came from the farm and showed the honesty of a farmer. It is somewhat remarkable, after all the boasting I have heard of the Minister of Agriculture being a farmer that, a very short time ago, he called to his assistance, as chief executive officer of his department, a lawyer. Has the hon. gentleman lost confidence in himself ? Has he lost confidence in the ability of a farmer to administer that department ? Has the department given him a great deal of trouble ? Or what is the difficulty that has caused him to call in a lawyer in this way ? I have here what he said in his innocent youthful days when he was fresh from the farm and could not tell anything but the truth.

A cold storage service for the safe carriage of butter was begun in 1895.

Who were in power in 1895 ? Why the Conservatives.

Arrangements were made whereby refrigerator cars for carrying butter were run during the summer on the main lines of railways leading into Montreal. These cars were used to pick up small lots of butter as offered at the different railway stations. Shippers by these cars were allowed to ship butter at the usual 'less than car-load rates,' without any charge for icing or special service. As far as space permitted, merchants were allowed to use these cars for the shipment of dairy and creamery butter between points at which the cars touched. During 1895 cars were run for at least part of the season on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways.

Arrangements were also made for the chilling of fresh-made creamery butter at the warehouses of the Montreal Cold Storage and Freezing Company, Montreal.

Arrangements were made for the fitting up of insulated and refrigerator chambers on steamships from Montreal to Avonmouth, Liverpool and Glasgow. The chambers were constructed to thoroughly insulate——

Observe the word 'thoroughly' and contrast it with what the hon. gentleman said :—

—their contents, and thus prevent them from being heated during the voyage by any rise of temperature outside the chamber. Galvanized iron cylinders were filled with ice to cool the interior of the chamber and the outside of the packages of the butter, in so far as they were heated during the cartage from the cold storage warehouses to the steamships.

And I find that, during the shipping season of 1894 there were exported from the port of Montreal 32,055 packages of butter. In 1895 the shipments were 69,664 packages and in 1896, 157,321 packages. And yet we listened this afternoon for upwards of half an hour to the hon. member for Glengarry trying to convince this House that the present government had established the cold storage system. I wonder that if, even today, after seven years, when the cold storage system is much better understood than in 1895, they have a very much better system than was established by the former government. I think that Dr. Montague, the former Minister of Agriculture is entitled to the credit of establishing that boon to the people of this country—cold storage. It is like everything else that has been inaugurated for the benefit of the farmers—it emanated from the Conservative party. Now, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) is willing that the farmers should pay an increased price for salt in order to benefit the town of Clinton where he chances to reside, because he wants adequate protection on salt. But I do not know whether it is for the manufacturer he wants it or for the farmer. It is the farmer who must pay the increased price if there is an increase; but, he would not need to pay it, because he could still buy his Canadian salt. And I have no doubt that he could get that salt just as cheaply if the duty were doubled. In fact, I believe that if the duty were doubled the Canadian farmer would buy his salt cheaper. In that respect, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) is a sound protectionist, he has the right principle; but he does not want to apply it to anything but salt. If he would apply it to woollen goods and cotton goods and others, we would welcome him on this side, and would be glad to see him advocate so sound a policy for this country with that ability which does him credit. We are told by some hon. gentlemen opposite that the farmers cannot be protected. My opinion is that the farmers are protected. Some may have different ideas of protection from my own. But in my opinion to protect an industry does not mean to put it in a position to demand a higher price. To protect the farmer or to protect the woollen or cotton manufacturers is to give the market of this country to the farmer or to the manufacturer. You protect the farmers of this country when you give them the market of the country. For instance, we put a duty of thirty-five per cent on mutton, and that keeps American mutton out. Last year only $2,879 worth of mutton and lamb came into this country. The whole market of Canada with this exception was kept for the farmers of this country. That was 'adequate protection,' if hon. gentlemen opposite want to know what adequate protection is. Of fresh meats other than lamb and mutton we imported $38,198 worth. On this article there is a duty of three cents a pound.

Well, I think that three cents a pound is fairly adequate protection on an article that costs about six cents a pound. It is very good protection, and that is the protection that we believe in giving the farmers of this country. Not that we say for one moment that we are going to help the farmer to get two prices for his article, that is not the meaning of it; but we say we will put a Chinese wall right round this country, and we will not allow these Americans to come in here and monopolize the markets of this country when they do not contribute anything towards the expenses of this country. The Canadian farmer is entitled to this market, and we put that duty on to enable him to get this market, and to retain it. Pork, two cents a pound. I do not think that is adequate protection, because there were $561,414 worth of pork brought in. I believe the minister will be wise if he increases that duty to three cents and gives the Canadian farmers adequate protection. Pickled beef or barrelled beef, $77,554 worth imported. The farmers are fairly well protected on that article. The market is fairly well held by the farmers of this country. Bacon and hams, only two cents a pound. I do not think the protection is adequate. If it were made three cents we might exclude a very large amount of this $635,831 worth of bacon and ham that came in, and which we could produce in this country just as good, and, I believe a great deal better than that we get from the other side. Butter, $160,459. The farmer of this country is protected to the extent of four cents a pound. That is the duty put on to prevent the American farmer from coming into this country, and it is fairly successful in giving the farmers of this country the market of Canada. Of cheese, $31,368 worth came in under a protection of three cents. If three cents a pound is not sufficient, I would say add more. It will not increase the price of cheese in this country, because what signifies $31,368 worth compared with all the cheese that is consumed in Canada and all that is exported out of the country. That three cents a pound on cheese has no effect whatever on the price of cheese to the consumer. It does not enhance it to the thousandth part of a cent, but it does give the farmer in this country all the market we have for cheese, and that is what the farmer has a right to ask. Flour, $144,714 worth at 60 cents a barrel. I regret that the present government when they came into power to revise the tariff, interfered with the duty on flour. Formerly it was 75 cents a barrel, and they reduced it to 60 cents, and it remains at that figure still. Wheat, formerly 15 cents, reduced to 12 cents, and yet $89,470 worth of wheat came into this country. What, bring American wheat into this country? Cannot Ontario and the great North-west furnish all the wheat that is necessary to feed the people of Canada? Why should we even admit this small amount of $89,407 worth. I say the duty should be high enough to give the entire market to the people of this country. Oats, $67,223 worth came in under a protection of 10 cents a bushel, a fairly good protection. Pease, 10 cents a bushel, $15,119 worth came in.

Now, going over the list, I take it that the farmers of this country are fairly well protected so far as holding the market of Canada is concerned, and that is one of the objects of agricultural protection. No man ever dreamed that you were going to give the farmers $2 a bushel for his wheat, no man ever dreamed that you were going to give him 50 cents a bushel more than it is worth. No such idea ever prevailed. But it has occurred in this country, and it may occur again, when farmers do receive more than a normal price for wheat. I remember in 1895, in the month of June, when there was a short crop of wheat in this country, that wheat sold in the city of Toronto for 20 cents a bushel more than it sold for in the city of Liverpool. The advantage that a farmer would get in price is only when a short crop occurs, but as long as there is an abundant supply—which we always hope there will be in Canada—no farmer will expect to get an increased price by slightly raising the protection. But he does get the market. Let me give an illustration how he controls the market. In Manitoba we have enormous grist mills, I think there is one mill in Winnipeg turning out about 3,500 barrels a day. In Minneapolis they have an enormous grist-mill grinding the same quantity of wheat, No. 1 hard. The flour from Minneapolis is shipped to the seaboard, possibly it goes to Boston. The flour from Winnipeg is also sent to the seaboard, and is possibly exported by way of Boston. Suppose a vessel goes down from Halifax loaded with fish and wants a return cargo. The owner goes to the flour dealer and he says: How do you sell flour, or what flour have you got? He says: I have American flour from Minneapolis, and I have Canadian flour from Winnipeg, both made from No. 1 hard wheat, which will you have? Well, says the shipper, I will take Canadian. Why does he take Canadian? Because he knows too well that when he returns to Halifax the Canadian flour, having been shipped through in bond, comes in free of duty, but if he took American flour he would have to pay 60 cents a barrel to the revenues of the Dominion of Canada before he could get a market for that flour. The duty of 60 cents gives the Canadian farmer the benefit of that market, the benefit of the markets of the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec. It does the same thing in Ontario, because as I told you, in Ontario we do not consume now the products of our own farms.

The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) says: Absolutely it is impossible to protect the farmer. Well, what do the farmers say themselves? Let us take a look around this House. In 1900 we had a general election, and the tariff was the leading question in the province of Ontario. I am prepared to submit that question to the farmers. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is an example of what the farmers think of the principle of protection. North Middlesex sends a supporter (Mr. Sherritt) of the Conservative party, instead of a supporter of the hon. gentleman opposite. East Lambton sent another Conservative (Mr. Simmons), who, I regret to say, has not been able, through illness, to be in the House for some time. He replaced a Liberal who formerly sat on the other side of the House. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Thomson) is a living evidence of what the farmers think about protection. My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Richardson) is also an evidence that his constituents favour the same principle. The riding of Lincoln has sent in our friend (Mr. Lancaster), another evidence of what the people of the west think about the principle of protection. South Wentworth (Mr. Smith)—why, you find them all over, the House is filled with them. South Waterloo (Mr. Clare), another evidence. West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) also, he replaces one of the most inveterate Liberals we had in the House, and though he may not perhaps, be just what we would like him to be in the way of protection, I believe that his feelings are with us. But he represents a very critical constituency, and he thinks it is just as well to be fair to all sides. However, I hope that when the vote is taken, his conscience will dictate to him what is right, and I am quite sure he will follow his conscience. East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), another evidence of what the farmers of Ontario think of protection. Stormont, I believe, is another. South Victoria (Mr. Vrooman) is another. What shall I say of West York (Mr. Campbell)? Had it not been for the principle of protection, I do not believe that the present representative would be in the House. Here is what the farmers themselves say. They say the farmer can be protected and they are going to support the party that endorses the principle of adequate protection. Well then, how are you going to protect the farmer? I have been endeavouring to tell you that you protect the farmer by protecting his market. You give him the home market for his commodities. In that way he receives the protection that this parliament can extend to him. So long as we keep the home market for him, we do a great deal. It is our duty as well to find foreign markets for his commodities, but in seeking the foreign market the farmer has to enter into competition with countries, such as Argentina and other wheat producing countries where they have cheap labour, thus placing our famers at a disadvantage. If we can secure the home market in Canada for 80 per cent of the products of the farms of this country, we are doing a great deal for the farmers. It is estimated that the entire product of the farms of Canada is worth about $500,000,000. We exported last year of animals and agricultural products, $100,000,000, in round numbers; therefore, we consumed in Canada $400,000,000 worth of the products of the farms, or 80 per cent were consumed in our own market. Is it not a matter of importance that we should protect that home market that consumes 80 per cent of the products of the farms even if we cannot secure the same character of a market for the other 20 per cent? I say the true policy is to hedge around this country with adequate protection for the farmers and give them all the benefits that can possibly accrue to them by retaining their own market for this large percentage of their output. The city of Montreal has a population of about 267,000 people.

Mr. CASGRAIN. 300,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I take the last census. Perhaps it is 300,000 now. If we consume in Canada $400,000,000 worth of the products of this country we consume on an average $70 per head worth of the products of the farms. Seventy dollars worth of the products of the farms is the average consumption of every man, woman and child in this country. I do not mean to say that each man, woman and child eats $70 worth of food, not by any means, but there are many things that are not produced on the farm such as horses and cattle, hay, and such things that are not being consumed. The average consumption in one year or another of every individual is $70. Let us look at the value of the city of Montreal with all its varied industries. I need not attempt to enumerate them as there are hon. gentlemen who know them better than I do. That market is worth to the farmers of this country on that basis $18,000,000 and the city of Toronto is a good second. What would the farms of this country be worth if these industrial institutions were blotted out or were hampered or hindered in carrying on their operations? It would simply paralyze this country and destroy its value. I was in the city of Winnipeg in the month of October last. I admired that growing city. I believe it is destined to be a great city. I do not know the present population, but, according to the last census, it was some 42,000. I dare say it is now 50,000, or perhaps more.

Mr. EARLE. 60,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. And I suppose in five or ten years it will have a population of 100,000. I wonder if the people of that country have any fair estimate of the value of the city of Winnipeg to the province of Manitoba? According to the calculation I have made 42,000 people would consume each year $3,000,000 worth of the products of the farms of Manitoba. In five or ten years I believe the population of that city will be doubled, and instead of $3,000,000 worth they will consume $6,000,000 worth of the products of the farms of Manitoba, affording an enormous market. What would the farmers of Manitoba do without a city like Winnipeg and without the other towns that are growing up in that country? They would be compelled to ship out of the country all of their surplus products. They would be compelled to ship out yearly nearly a half million more of their wheat and enormous quantities of the other products that are consumed there. Is it not better to encourage the growth of industries in a place like Winnipeg and encourage the bringing in of a consuming population which is not a producing population, but which will consume the products of the farms of that great province? I may say the people of Manitoba are not alive to their best interests if they for one moment would hesitate in supporting a party that would give them adequate protection, and that would give to every industry that might grow up in Winnipeg adequate protection. Why should these people not make their own agricultural implements, why should they not make their own harness, why should they not make their own boots and shoes, why should they not make their own clothes, why should they not make their own furniture? These are all possibilities and if industries of this kind were instituted there, were supported and were maintained there is no doubt at all that that city would become a very great city and become an enormous market for the products of that province and so enhance the value of every farm within range of that crowded centre. If the people of Manitoba say that they approve of that sort of thing let them send to this parliament representatives who will support the principle of adequate protection, and in due time the capital will go into that country that will be requisite to establish these industries and to give them that market. We have been asked across the floor of the House to state what was meant by adequate protection. I am surprised, I confess, that hon. gentlemen cannot form an adequate opinion of what it means. I think it is very simple indeed. Now, there is an article made in the city of Guelph which is known as a cream separator. There is a very large number of them sold in this country. That article is admitted absolutely free into this country. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) wants protection on salt. Why should he say protect the salt industry and refuse protection to the cream separator industry? To my mind the cream separator industry is just as important to be protected as the salt industry, or as the lead industry. There were imported last year $487,734 worth of cream separators into Canada. There are only two factories, both of them in Guelph making that article. Let me say that the cream separators made in Guelph are equal in every respect as to finish as the foreign made article and taking the same capacity they are as low in price as the article brought in from the United States, or Germany, or Sweden. They are sold alongside of each other. One man buys one, another man buys another. They simply buy a certain separator because a particular agent sells it. There is no particular choice, but, as a matter of fact, there were last year imported into this country about 10,000 cream separators. Let us consider what an advantage it would be to the city of Guelph if the trade of Guelph were extended by the additional labour that would be required to bring about the manufacture of these goods. Ten thousand cream separators will require a very considerable amount of labour. The money that would be paid for the construction of these machines would be paid out again to the workmen of the city of Guelph. These workmen in turn would pay it out to the farmers for their beef, butter, eggs, cheese, potatoes and flour and all the products of the farm. The money goes back to the farmer and he buys his cream separator and pays for it. The money simply keeps circulating; it does not go out of the country and you never see it again, as it would if the farmer bought an American separator, or a German separator, or a Swedish separator. The farmers are alive to this fact and they are beginning to see that their true interests lie in the protection of the industries that brings protection to the farmer. That is one of the ways to protect the farmer. If you want to give the farmer true protection, and all the protection you can give, you will have to surround the industries of this country with a tariff that will force largely the manufacture of goods in this country, so that the markets of Canada will be increased by the addition of an industrial population who must of necessity live on the products of the farm, and thus enhance the value of the farms.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. That argument applies not only to the cream separator, but it applies to the woollen industry, to the cotton industry and to every industry in this country as well.

Mr. TAYLOR. The agricultural implement industry to ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, the agricultural implement industry as well. The trouble in this country at the present time is that we have too much taxation and too little protection. We simply want the Finance Minister to reverse the order—give us a little more protection and less taxation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Many hon. gentlement in this House seem to think that high protection means high taxation. That is a most absurd idea. I do not believe that you will get the Finance Minister to propound that doctrine. I do not think that he would sacrifice his reputation and standing by getting up here and telling us that high protection means, of necessity, high taxation. Why it is the reverse. They tell us that their tariff is a tariff for revenue only. Well, it is not that. It is neither one thing or the other. They have a duty of three cents a pound on fresh meat and very little fresh meat comes into Canada. If they want a tariff for revenue only, let them reduce that duty to one cent a pound, and I will undertake to say that they will get three times more revenue than they get now at three cents a pound. If their tariff is a tariff for revenue only why do they not put a duty on tea and coffee ? We cannot produce these in Canada. If they are afraid of protecting or helping the people of the country; if they are alarmed that any industry would be benefited by their fiscal policy, let them raise their revenue on tea and coffee and other articles which we cannot produce, and which would not interfere with any industry, and that would be a tariff for revenue only. But that is not their policy. They adopted the old Conservative tariff to the extent that they still give us free coffee and free tea. I have said, that what we want is more protection and less taxation, and that if we had that we would not be troubled with these enormous surpluses which the Minister of Finance scarcely knows what to do with. Adequate protection does not mean higher taxation; it means lower taxation. I go further and I say that adequate protection does not mean higher prices. I know that there are gentlemen in this House who will not agree with me when I say that adequate protection does not of necessity mean higher prices, but I can tell them that if there was 25 per cent put upon cream separators to-day, the farmers of Ontario would buy them for $5 less, and if the minister does not credit it, I will undertake to procure for him a bond from those manufacturers that they will do it. If the minister will give a protection sufficiently reasonable to protect these men and give them the large market of this country, I will undertake to say that the farmers of Canada will benefit to the extent of from $5 to $10 on every separator they buy. And this is the reason. The manufacturer in Guelph sends out his agent to sell cream separators, but he meets agents from the United States, from Germany, from Sweden, from England, all selling cream separators. The country is flooded with the foreign article, and the agent of the Guelph manufacturer is possibly not able to sell more than one machine a day, whereas if he had the whole market within his reach he could possibly sell three times as many. Therefore the manufacturer's agent could sell three machines for the same expense which it now costs him to sell one. In this way the Canadian manufacturer could afford to sell a machine to the farmer for $5 or $10 less, and the manufacturer would have just as much money in his pocket as he has now. That is an example and it is an example that will apply in very many things. When I was going out to Manitoba last year a manufacturer in my own town said to me : You can tell the people out there that if I were given adequate protection so as to secure the market in this country along with those who manufacture the same article in Canada, I will undertake to reduce my prices 10 per cent; and he could do it if it were nothing more than his saving on the cost of his travellers who would sell double the quantity they do now at the same expense. I am not one of those who believe in that bugaboo that high protection means high prices. Of course if you make it exclusive, it is another thing, but that is not adequate protection. We are not asking for exclusive protection; we are not asking that everything be excluded. All that we want is adequate; just enough to accomplish the purpose of giving the markets of this country to the Canadian manufacturers and Canadian farmers so that they can make a reasonable living profit. I have said that adequate protection does not mean higher taxation, and does not mean higher prices, but I tell you honestly that it does mean higher prosperity. If you want evidence regarding that you can get it from the speech of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) yesterday. He gave us a quotation from a pamphlet which he said came into his possession, and did not doubt the correctness of it. It was a pamphlet he said that was sent out by the Canadian Cotton Goods Company, and in the pamphlet I find a paragraph headed 'Canadian goods cheap to the consumer,' and he goes on to say :

There is not the least doubt that the Canadian consumer saves nothing on imported goods.

The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) quoted that as authority. But he gives this as an illustration, and his illustration is a very good one :

An illustration of this fact recently came to light. A wholesaler imported a line of fancy shirtings and laid them down at eight cents and a half a yard. He sold them to the retailers at eleven and a half cents, who resold at seventeen cents.

A pretty good profit by the way :

A Canadian firm duplicated the pattern; sold it at eight cents, the wholesaler sold at ten cents, while the consumer got it at twelve and a half cents, meaning a saving of four and a half cents per yard to the wearer of the shirt.

That is a pretty good showing for Canadian goods. Who says that Canadian goods cannot be produced just as cheap as foreign goods ? The Canadian manufacturer was able to compete with his foreign competitor, he was able to reproduce that article at a price below the imported article which he was able to undersell. But what advantage was there in that ? Suppose he was able to do it, where was he going to sell it ? The importers had flooded the country with that class of goods, everybody had been supplied, and when the Canadian turned out his product, he had no market for it. He might sell it at half a cent less, or even at two cents less, yet he would not find the demand for it, because the demand had been filled. That is the case with very many commodities. Let us take the case of coloured cottons to show how the Canadian manufacturer is handicapped as against the British. The latter has a market in cold climates and in warm climates. The calico printer makes his plates. In the first year the product of those plates is sold in England ; the next year it finds its way to Canada and the United States ; the third year it goes to Australia, possibly to South America ; the fourth year it is sent to South Africa, and some other distant countries ; and the fifth year it is sold in India and Japan, where the latest fashion is not so much thought of. The English manufacturer can turn out goods from the same plates for five years, and turn them out all the year round, because he has markets in colder climates and in warmer climates in various parts of the world, while the Canadian manufacturer has a limited market in Canada, and can only produce one impression from the same plates. There is no doubt that he is handicapped to a great extent, and an industry of that kind ought to have the help of the government. We have the evidence of the hon. member for West Huron that the Canadian manufacturer is able to produce these goods at half a cent less than the importer could buy them for in the old country. But he had not fair treatment; he had not adequate protection. It was immaterial whether he produced them or not. If he did, they simply lay on his hands, because the market had been monopolized by the larger producer in the old country. If there had been adequate protection to keep the English goods out, the moment the Canadian manufacturer produced his goods, he would have been able to get a fair price for them, and the Canadian consumer would have been able to get his goods at four and one-half cents less than he had to pay for the imported article. You cannot expect men to risk their capital in large industries of that kind, unless they are given to understand beforehand that they are going to have the paternal care and protection of the government to guarantee them a fair return for what they produce. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been telling us all along that these goods would be dearer under protection, and we find that statement refuted.

There is one question which I never could solve in listening to hon. gentlemen opposite. They said : Take down the tariff wall and let us get into the United States, and we shall be able to buy everything cheap. Take down the tariff wall of 20 per cent, and we shall get our agricultural implements from Chicago and other places on the other side of the line a great deal cheaper than we get them now. The strange part of it is the people who talk in that way want to get their goods in the most highly protected country in the world. To get cheap goods, they want to go to the highly protected United States, or to highly protected Germany. If these hon. gentlemen reflected for a moment, would they not see the propriety of joining with us and giving a policy of adequate protection to the manufacturers of Canada, so that we could have cheap goods without going out of Canada ? If high protection in the United States makes cheap goods, high protection in this country will make cheap goods as well. I have demonstrated that high protection does not mean higher prices. I think I can safely make this statement without fear of successful contradiction, that we never had cheaper agricultural implements in Canada than we had under the 35 per cent tariff, when the national policy was in full swing. We took 15 per cent off, but there was not a drop of 15 per cent in the price. I do not say that a binder or a mower may not cost more money to-day than it did ten or fifteen years ago ; but it is a very different implement from what it was then. It has various improvements and attachments which were not on it at that time, and it is worth more money. I also say, as a practical business man who has been handling goods for many years, that we never had cheaper cottons than we had under the national policy. We never had better or cheaper woollen goods than we had under the national policy. We never had cheaper coal oil than we had under the national policy. What do we pay for it now ? If you want to buy a barrel of Canadian oil in the part of the country where I live to-day, you have to pay 19½ cents a gallon for it, whereas we used to pay 12½ cents, a difference of 7½ cents, although a cent a gallon has been taken off the duty. Barbed wire was cheaper under the national policy than it is to-day, and I understand it is free.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Labour was cheaper too.

Mr. HENDERSON. Under the national policy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly ; cheaper than it is to-day ; wages were lower.

Mr. HENDERSON. And wages will be lower again, perhaps, and wages were lower before the national policy was inaugurated. The hon. minister will remember the days of the soup kitchens under the Mackenzie government, when the labouring classes were praying for a national policy, and when the government were turned out of power because they would not give it—just what this government will come to if they do not give this country adequate protection. Binder twine is nearly double the price to-day that it was under the national policy. It is no better, I suppose. Labour is dearer. How much labour does it take to make a pound of twine ? Seven and a half cents of labour to make one pound of twine ? Great heavens ! It is a big industry. Is it the labour that makes the difference ? Why, I understand that it is made in the penitentiary, where the labour does not cost anything; and yet the price is away up. It cannot be the labour, Mr. Minister; you must be mistaken. I will take a common article now; we will come down just to what any gentleman can understand. Take a common article like sewing thread. Under the national policy, in 1895, a farmer's wife got two spools for five cents, each spool containing 200 yards of the thread. But now she has to pay five cents for one spool. I suppose it is the difference in labour which is the cause. I believe it is the difference in duty. The government destroyed the protective principle applied to the thread industry, and the manufacturers were compelled to join the English combine, which they did and the prices went up. Then take sugar. Why, I remember when we used to shovel out 30 pounds of sugar for a dollar under the old national policy. No doubt the labour again is at fault. Why, I was almost going to say that I was grateful to the government, as a business man, for having made the change, because the labour we had to hire to weigh it out made the business almost unprofitable. I regret very much that my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has gone out. I was going to submit to him a proposition. No doubt, when he gets up to address the House on this question, he will repeat the old story that high protection means high prices and that the more duty you put on, the more you will enhance prices. The hon. gentleman himself is engaged in a legitimate business, the manufacture of biscuits—a commodity which is practically a spot cash article and for which there is a very large demand throughout the country. There is a duty of twenty-five per cent on common biscuits, not sweetened, and twenty-seven and a half per cent on biscuits sweetened. The hon. gentleman is not responsible for putting that duty on biscuits, for that is just the tariff we left him. We considered that that industry was entitled to that amount of protection. We considered that an adequate protection and the hon. gentleman has never thought fit to change it. I believe that if he thought for one moment that the object of that tariff was to enable him to raise the prices and extort more money out of the pockets of the consumer, he would reduce it. The fact that he has not done so is proof that he believes these duties are perfectly legitimate. If he believed that they were too high, if he believed that they enabled either his firm or any other to extort undue prices for a spot cash article, which enters into the consumption of every family in the country, I am convinced that, as an honest man—which I believe he is—he would reduce that duty. And if he does not do so it is no doubt because he considers it a fair protection, which gives him and the others in that line the market of Canada. That is what these duties are for, and not to enable him or any other manufacturers of biscuits to get extortionate prices. That was not the intention of the Conservative party which imposed the tariff. But what we wanted was to give our Canadian market to our Canadian manufacturers as much as possible. That they have got. I find that we only imported $14,496 worth of sweetened biscuits.

Mr. SCOTT. Where from ?

Mr. HENDERSON. That was the entire importation of sweetened biscuits.

Mr. SCOTT. Where from ?

Mr. HENDERSON. One half came from England.

Mr. SCOTT. Under the preferential rate ?

Mr. HENDEDSON. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Then one-third was taken off the duty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then the Minister of Customs did reduce the duty. A moment ago you said he did not.

Mr. HENDERSON. He did not reduce the general duty. And the infinitesimal amount imported from the old country had no material effect at all on the prices in this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite would not surely take the position that if $100,000 worth of goods of any kind are consumed in this country and $1 worth comes in from England at a reduced rate, the reduction of duty on that $1 worth is going to affect the price of the whole. That is too absurd. That shows how small are the ideas of some of those hon. gentlemen.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman not think that water will find its own level.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, and I think that the hon. gentleman has struck his level. Let me tell the hon. gentleman how many of those common biscuits came from the old country, and no doubt he will argue that because we imported $2,189 worth of biscuits from England, that importation reduced the price of the $1,000,000 manufactured in this country. I intended making a short speech, and if I have trespassed more than I intended on the time of the House, at any rate I have introduced a new feature into the debate. I have endeavoured to go along the line of adequate protection and show this House and country the advantages of a system of adequate protection and dissipate the absurd idea that because you protect an industry you of necessity enhance prices, and that high protection means high prices or high taxation. It does not mean either, but what it does mean is higher prosperity. If you want high taxation, reduce the duties. Put them down 10 per cent, and instead of a surplus of $13,500,000 the Finance Minister will be able to show a surplus of $20,000,000. Import more goods and you will collect more duties, but that is not what the people want. We want to make our goods in this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman think that increased protection will increase the price of lead. He says that increased protection will not increase the prices.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Ask Mr. Galliher.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a pretty heavy question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Lead is a pretty heavy article to deal with. Suppose it does—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE—that is enough.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not saying anything about that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend says that it does not.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that it will. It depends a good deal on the kind of protection you give. If you give it adequate protection, I do not know that it would. But if you give it an excessive protection, I have no doubt it would. I think it depends a great deal on the kind of protection you give. I have no doubt that the hon. Finance Minister will settle that point with the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Galliher) who seems very disturbed to-night.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has helped me to settle it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very glad indeed to help the hon. gentleman, and if he will meet me on fair ground, I am sure we can settle the whole fiscal policy of the country in the interest of the country.

Mr. GRANT moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THE DISASTER AT FRANK.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). I would ask the government if they have received any report respecting the subject of the startling rumour which has been in circulation, of a volcanic eruption in the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I regret to say, Sir, that I am not in a position to add anything to the information given in the public press. The Prime Minister received a short telegram concerning the matter this afternoon, and instructions were at once given to inquire for further particulars. We hope that by to-morrow's sitting we may be in a position to give further information.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 30, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 128) for the relief of William Francis Schooley.—Mr. Boyd.

Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Erie Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 135) to incorporate the Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railway Company.—Mr. Logan.

Bill (No. 136) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 138) to amend the Pilotage Act.—Hon. Mr. Préfontaine.

INSPECTION OF TEXTILE FABRIC.

Mr. W. SCOTT (West Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 137) to regulate the sale and provide for the inspection of textile fabrics. He said: The object is to prevent the sale of shoddy as pure wool. Provision is made that all shoddy shall be accurately marked or labelled and penalties will be levied for the infringement of this provision. The Bill is of considerable importance to the woollen manufacturers and wool-raisers, and on a second reading there will be ample opportunity for full discussion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

2. By whom and when have such applications been made ?

3. Has there been any correspondence between the town council, or the mayor, of the town of Digby, or any member of the said town council, and the government, or any member thereof, in relation to the above matters, or any of them, or between Albert J. S. Copp, M.P., and the government, or any member thereof, with respect to an appropriation of public money for the above purposes, or any of them, during the year 1902, or the year 1903 ?

4. Is it the intention of the government to make any grant, or ask for any vote, during the present session, toward wharf and harbour improvements at the said Port of Digby, N.S. ? If so, to what extent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). In reply to questions 1 and 2, I beg to say that an application was made for improved facilities at the port of Digby, in a letter to the chief engineer of the Public Works Department by Mr. Copp, M.P. In reply to the third, there is no other correspondence. In reply to the fourth, the sum of $2,000 is already included in the main estimates for 1903-4 now before parliament for repairs only to this wharf.

OFFENSIVE CARTOON.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria)—by Mr. Fowler—asked :

1. Is the organ of the Canadian army, the 'Military Gazette' and 'Canadian Gentlemen's Magazine,' an official publication of the Canadian government ?

2. Does the government endorse the spirit of the offensive cartoon on page eleven of the issue of April 7, 1903, in which the citizens of Canada (of North of Ireland origin) are insulted ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). In answer to both questions, I have to say that the government has nothing whatever to do with the publication of the 'Military Gazette' and 'Canadian Gentlemen's Magazine.'

TOBACCO DUTIES.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of duty collected on tobacco for the year ending 30th June, 1902 ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

2. How much of this amount was due to the additional duty imposed in the session of 1897?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) :

1. Four million four hundred and forty-two thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars and fifteen cents.

2. One million three hundred and thirty-five thousand seven hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents.

NEGLECT OF PARLIAMENTARY GROUNDS.

Mr. G. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House and particularly of the Minister of Public Works, to what I think every hon. member will consider a grievance. I am not going to say anything with reference to the city of Ottawa—I leave it for the electors of the city to deal with the corporation at the proper time. I understand that this government is paying a large sum annually to the city of Ottawa for the purpose of carrying on some permanent improvements, and in return, they are to receive all the water required for the use of the parliament buildings and grounds, together with other considerations that may not amount to much. What I would like to ask is why the government are not making better use of the water by having the grounds sprinkled. To-day it is only at the risk of a man's life almost, that he goes from this House to the main gate of the grounds. As I passed down just before dinner, some of the new loam which has been put on the roads, but which is now turned into dust, came in a cloud and practically blinded me. If the government are entitled to use all the water they require, there are certainly men enough around the departments idle who could use that water to sprinkle the roads and lay the dust. I know that it is only necessary to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to this matter and he will see that the necessary steps are taken.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). All will admit that we have a dust nuisance on the grounds at this time. Moreover, I should be glad to take any action I could to remove the dust from the eyes of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) for he needs light very badly. But, seriously speaking, I know that, for many sessions, we have suffered here owing to the conditions of the grounds in this respect. Not only is it very disagreeable, but it does great harm in the House, and in the government offices, as well as injuring the beautiful grounds.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. minister give us any temporary relief in the meantime ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As soon as I noticed the condition of the grounds, the water carts were put on, and they are at work this afternoon. I think it would be better if we had an appropriation and could provide some better cover for the roads immediately around the building, in place of the sand and dust we have there. Even the sprinkling that is now going on seems hardly to afford relief. I will bring the matter to the attention of the proper officials and have the difficulty remedied, I hope.

MARITIME PROVINCES AND DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.

Hon. Wm. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the attention of the government to a matter which seems to me of importance. We see it stated in the press that in August next, there is to be an excursion party of seventy-five members of the imperial parliament and twenty-five Peers who will arrive in Quebec and work their way westward through Canada. I would like very much if these public men could be notified that there is a section of Canada which we know as the maritime provinces, and if some of our visitors could be led to turn their faces eastward as well as westward. I am well aware that the government cannot control the movements of these distinguished visitors. Still, certain influences might be used which would lead to some of them finding their way to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. If things go on as they are going at present, the public mind will be so exclusively directed to the west that people will forget that this Dominion has an eastern portion at all. I hope the government will succeed in using such influences as will induce some of these distinguished personages to visit the maritime provinces.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With regard to the question put by the hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross) that the party composed of members of the British parliament, Lords and Commoners, who are to visit Canada in the month of August next, should not forego a visit to the maritime provinces, I would suppose that the maritime provinces required no advertisement. I should presume that they would not visit Canada without going to the maritime provinces also. The government, as my hon. friend knows, has nothing at all to do either officially or unofficially with this visit. But if by any word of mine or of my colleagues, we can further the end of my hon. friend, I would be glad to do so.

THE DISASTER AT FRANK.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw the attention of the government to the very remarkable rumours that have been in circulation during the last twenty-four hours as to earthquakes and volcanoes in the vicinity of the town of Frank, in the district of Alberta. Apparently, these rumours of disturbances of that nature are absolutely unfounded, as also the reports of the immense destruction of life and property. I take the liberty of putting the matter before the government and the House in this way, because the circulation of such unfounded reports disturbing the public mind and causing anguish to relatives as well as doubts as to the values of property is a crime which should be punished. I would suggest to the government that, if it is possible to fix the responsibility for the circulation of such reports, measures should be taken to fix that responsibility and mete out the proper punishment. I would like further to draw attention to the fact that, although the reports were so greatly and unpardonably exaggerated, there still has been a serious loss of life arising from such a cause and under such circumstances, as, it appears to me, would very well warrant thorough investigation. Apparently, according to the latest reports, a landslide occurred which had the effect of displacing the drifts in the mine in actual operation. Before the mine should properly be put in operation again, it seems to me, means should be taken to satisfy all concerned that another slide of like nature or worse is not likely to occur. That is to say, I would respectfully suggest that an investigation should be held on the ground, as to the cause of the trouble which did take place, as to its results, and as to the probability of further trouble occurring.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The information which the government has received on this subject is of such a character, unfortunately, as to convey to us the fact that the disturbance which has taken place at Frank, though not as bad as at first reported, still, is very serious, and has had very serious consequences. My attention was first drawn to the matter by a telegram that I received yesterday, as follows :

Frank, N.W.T., April 29, 1903.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa, Ont.

Terrible catastrophe here. Eruption, Turtle Mountain devastated miles of territory. One hundred killed. Must have government aid quick to clear passage for river which is dammed hundreds feet high, and danger to life and property from flood most imminent. Not over one day distant at most. Answer quick.

(Signed) S. W. CHALMERS,
MARK DRUMM,
President and Secretary, Board of Trade.

Upon the receipt of this telegram, we gave orders at once to the Mounted Police and the Department of the Interior to send such relief as it was possible to send, and we exchanged the following telegrams with our officers in the west :

Ottawa, April 29, 1903.
3.30 p.m.

Major A. B. Perry,
Regina, N.W.T.

Serious disaster reported eruption, Turtle Mountain, near Frank, Crow's Nest Railway. Number people killed and river blocked by matter thrown from mountain. Instruct officer commanding McLeod to proceed there at once with all men he can take and arrange for up to strength of twenty-five drawn from most convenient detachments to follow with extra tents and facilities for rendering assistance. Further instructions later. There will likely be a special train from Calgary to McLeod by which police from there would travel. Instruct Sanders to communicate with Mr. Pearce.

(Signed.) FRED WHITE.

Mr. Pearce is the inspector of surveys in the North-west.

Regina, N.W.T., April 29, 1903.
Received 7.30 p.m.

To Comptroller,
North-west Mounted Police,
Ottawa.

Instructions re accident at Frank being carried out.

(Sgd.) A. B. PERRY.

Ottawa, April 29, 1903.
8.30 p.m.

Major A. B. Perry,
Regina, N.W.T.

Conditions at Frank much more serious than at first reported. Mr. Pearce goes to Calgary to take charge of government relief work. Keep yourself in touch with requirements and render every possible police assistance.

(Sgd.) FRED WHITE.

At the time, Mr. Smart, the deputy minister of the Interior put himself in communication with the Canadian Pacific authorities. This morning, the following communications were placed in my hands :

Frank, N.W.T., April 30, 1903.

James A. Smart,
Ottawa.

Eighty-three killed, of which about fifteen women and fifteen children. It is thought there will be no trouble from damming of river. Rock slide about 4,000 feet long extending to highest point of Turtle Mountain westerly; end of slide thirty-three feet west of mouth of tunnel extending across the valley, and up opposite bank for one and one-quarter miles from front of Turtle Mountain, and spread out fan shape so that at extreme end slide it was nearly two miles wide. No trace of river for one mile, but water now going through rock as fast as coming down. Place very orderly this morning. Not probable there will be further slide of any consequence. Twelve police and two officers here, plenty to maintain peace and order, necessary purposes. No earthquake or volcano, all working in mine except two escaped.

(Sgd.) WM. PEARCE.

Then Mr. Smart received from Mr. McNicoll, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the following telephone :

The trouble on the Crow's Nest branch at Frank was caused by a huge rock slide. There was no explosion, but the slide was of such large dimensions that the cloud of dust was taken for smoke. Minor slides coming down were taken for inside explosions. The whole east end of the mountain extending from the mouth of the French mine has slidden into the valley. The mountain was 4,400 feet high, and the slide blocked the entire valley, about three quarters of a mile wide and a mile and a-half long.

A waterway is being cut so as to avoid flooding. The loss of life not yet estimated. Thirty miners said to be in the mine but every reason to think that they are alive. Party now trying to remove rock from the mouth of the mine. About ten houses in the east end of the village destroyed, some entire families. One of them were Mr. Leech's, three of his children escaped, parents and four children killed. The youngest child was thrown out of the house in some miraculous way and not injured. All passengers too and from the Kootenay are being forwarded by the old route via main line and Revelstoke.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy also received the following telegram which he placed in my hand :

Report from Frank is that there is a huge slide, no explosion. Was of such large dimensions that cloud of dust taken for smoke and minor slides coming down taken for explosions. Whole eastern end of mountain extending from mouth of mine has gone out. It was 4,400 feet high and slid across entire valley blocking our track to the Frank mine track which is forty feet higher than our track. The slide extends from a point 200 feet east of Frank station, one and one-half miles and is three-fourths of a mile wide. The track is covered with rock of all sizes up to that of a double deck boarding car. Out of question to transfer trains at present. Loss of life not yet estimated. There are 30 miners still in mine and every reason to think they are alive.

Parties trying to remove the rock from the mouth. Ten houses in east end of town destroyed, some entire families. Taylor reports no reason why more of the slide of the mountain west towards Blairmore should not come down. Many new slides coming down. Only place now where line could be run quickly is from mouth of mine down the creek, but so many new slides coming down there men will not go near it. Taking passengers back to Macleod and Nelson to work via Revelstoke. McHenry and Dennis will be there this forenoon to report fully.

(Sgd.) D. McNICOLL.

It appears from these telegrams that they have explained the rumour which was spread yesterday that there was an explosion. No doubt the rumour was spread in good faith, with no malicious intent. With regard to the advisability of having a further investigation upon this subject, perhaps it is premature to give any opinion. We have some very able men on the scene of action. Mr. Pearce is a very able man, as those who are acquainted with him will testify. Major Perry of the Mounted Police is also a very able man, and so is the agent at MacLoed a man of superior ability. It is probable that when these men have cleared away the debris and performed the duties with which they are now entrusted, they will give such a report as may make it unnecessary to have any further investigation. Then we will be able to decide whether it would be advisable to follow the suggestion made by the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I wish to call the attention of the government to the incompleteness of the return made some days since of the papers in connection with the establishment of the Ross factory at Quebec. The return laid before the House does not contain a petition by some of the prominent citizens of Quebec against the granting of the site. I would like that petition to be included in the return.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will look into that.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance :

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty ; and the proposed motion of Mr. Borden (Halifax) in amendment thereto.

Mr. GEORGE D. GRANT (North Ontario). Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House at this stage of the budget debate, I do not expect to say anything of a very novel character. But I desire to present to the House what I believe to be the opinions and feelings of my constituents on the subject of the tariff and such other matters as are properly the subject of observation. Having recently emerged from an election contest, which perhaps was not wholly unsatisfactory to the gentlemen who are seated around me on this side of the House, I may perhaps be permitted to voice the verdict of my constituents in this place. This Dominion is to be congratulated heartily on the splendid showing which our Finance Minister made in his annual financial statement. Never before has our material prosperity been so great. I think the country is to be congratulated, not only on the splendid prosperity which has attended our efforts commercially and otherwise during the past year, but it is to be congratulated on the fact that the government has evinced its determination to adhere to that sound economic policy which I believe lies at the foundation of our commercial success. Let me assure the members of the government that the determination they have announced, (which we never for a moment doubted), meets with the fullest approbation of the people of this country. There is no blinking the fact that during the past year or year and a half there has been a formidable agitation on foot in this country for the increase of our customs tariff, and practically for a return to high protection. That the administration has expressed its refusal to accede to the extraordinary, and I may say, selfish demand of a small section of the community, is a matter of satisfaction to the country at large. To my mind, the present was an especially inopportune time for starting an agitation for a return to high protection. This campaign has not only been quite formidable and aggressive, but it has attracted a good deal of newspaper attention. But, Sir, the endeavour to persuade our people that they can enrich themselves by taxing themselves I think will altogether fail. Whilst the great majority of our factories are employed, whilst they have more orders than they can fill, and are paying on an average higher wages than have ever been paid at any time in Canada, whilst our producing powers are enormously increased, whilst our purchasing power too is growing at a tremendous rate, surely I am right in saying that this is an inopportune time to change our fiscal policy. If I may be permitted to refer to the town in which I reside, I may say that there is in that town one of the largest carriage factories in this Dominion. I am told by those who manage that concern that never before in their business history have they had so many orders and never before has such success attended the management of that business. In addition to that, in the same town, there are building at the present time two or three large factories. I have never heard that the gentlemen who are interested in promoting these industries are appealing to the government for further protection for them, nor have I heard that they have embarked upon these undertakings with the idea that higher protection will be granted. I, perhaps, am right in saying that this agitation has been begun and fostered by a small section of the community. Let me express the hope, and I am sure that in this I am voicing the opinion, broadly, of the agricultural interests in this country, that no disturbance shall take place at the present time. Now, Sir, I would depreciate any antagonism between the agricultural and manufacturing interests. I do not know that there is any occasion for antagonism of that sort. These interests are so interdependent, that, broadly speaking, what injures one injures the other and what benefits one benefits the other. I subscribe to that opinion, and yet, who can impute blame to our agriculturists if they strongly express their opinion on trade and tariff matters, when they are face to face with these well organized and financially well equipped gentlemen strongly urging the adoption of higher customs duties? Now, in the recent by-election in North Ontario which, Mr. Speaker, you will perhaps allow me to refer to without being open to the charge of being vain-glorious or boastful. the fight was forced on this very tariff issue. My hon. opponent made that point strongly at one of his first meetings in his campaign at Uxbridge and these were his words :

There is not the least shadow of doubt that the Conservative party believes in a protective tariff.

The issue then was defined and upon that the contest was fought out, and if reference be had to the newspaper published by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) it will be found in several of its February issues, under great head lines, that the tariff was the great issue in North Ontario, so also in other journals supporting the opposition. I hope they will abide by the result expressed by the electorate in that constituency. North Ontario is entirely an agricultural constituency. There is not, I believe, a factory in it, from the south to the north, and that, I may tell you, by way of parenthesis, is a very long distance in North Ontario. In every municipality of that riding and in almost every subdivision of it an increased vote was given for the humble man who carried the Liberal standard on that occasion. From that I wish to make it plain that the people of that riding, largely, as I say, an agricultural riding, have spoken on this matter of the tariff and that being the paramount issue, their verdict should be accepted as indicative of what the average agricultural constituency in Ontario, and, I believe, in the whole Dominion will say when they are appealed to on the issue of a moderate and fair tariff versus high protection. I do not for one moment believe that there is any desire on the part of the agricultural classes to unduly hamper or sacrifice the great manufacturing interests of this country. Quité the contrary. We cannot but feel that on both of these interests the future of this splendid Canada of ours depends. But, I believe, I am speaking for the great majority of the farmers not only of this province, but of this Dominion, when I say that, irrespective of party, they are firmly and unalterably opposed to the special treatment of any particular class by way of the imposition of customs duties. Speaking of that recent contest, I may say that I was glad to make the acquaintance of the very courteous gentleman who leads the oposition in this House (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I found him so in that contest. He brought to North Ontario not only that courtesy and sauvity which distinguish him, but he brought also the policy of adequate protection which he proclaimed to the electors of the riding ; but I must say that it was so carefully wrapped up to shield it (I presume from the rigour of that northern clime), that we could not make out what the term adequate protection meant. I find that on coming into this august assembly, hon. gentlemen in this House on both sides are not much more apt, or much more successful in ascertaining what the meaning of that expression is. I fear, Sir, however, that policy, whatever it may be, proved inadequate to the occasion as regards North Ontario. In this connection some of the hon. gentlemen who spoke from the opposition benches during the progress of this debate were more frank than others and, to speak colloquially, they let the cat out of the bag and intimated to us in a measure what this term adequate protection really means. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), I think it was, said that inadequate meant insufficient, and that insufficient meant not high enough. Therefore, by an easy process of logic, I conclude that the term adequate protection means, according to the dictionary supplied by the hon. member for Pictou, higher duties. Personally I have suspected that was the meaning ; I am now confirmed in that opinion by what fell from the lips of that hon. gentleman and of another hon. gentleman who must find that in this matter of the tariff, at least, his position is not quite comfortable on the benches opposite. I refer to the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson). He came out flat-footed and said that he opposed the amendment in favour of adequate protection on the ground that it meant high protection and that he was against high protection. Beyond these two expressions of opinion, or these two translations of that much debated word, I have not been able to find out directly what the term really means or what the policy is which it indicates. However, I noticed in reading the Montreal press the other day that a banquet was tendered in that city to the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition. I read, and such literature is always interesting, the inscriptions on the bannerettes which floated in the hall on that festive occasion, and according to the report in the newspapers, which I take to be correct, one of these inscriptions read : 'The same policy, 1878 and 1903.' That perhaps may give us an index as to what the Conservative policy of 1903 is. I presume that the inscription was inspired, and so the Conservative policy of 1903 really means the policy of 1878; a policy twenty-five years old, a policy utterly discredited, a policy now twice denounced at the polls. Another inscription on the bannerettes read: 'The swing of victory.' The swing of victory, Mr. Speaker ! I do not know quite what it means for the Conservative party, but they had it inscribed on their banners at the banquet tendered to the leader of the opposition ; a banquet which the hon. gentleman I have no doubt well deserved from his followers.

Another feature of the protectionist policy of which we heard a good deal recently, is its retaliatory phase. We are advised that it is in the interest of Canada to institute a retaliatory tariff against the United States, or in the more catching fashion in which it is put, they call it reciprocity of tariffs, and its adoption is urged in our dealings with the United States. Well, in so far as retaliation or reciprocity of tariffs may redound to our own gain and to our own advantage, I am an humble advocate of it; but, Sir, to my mind, retaliation simply for the sake of retaliating is an idle and feeble policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GRANT. And strange to say, the advocacy of retaliation comes very largely from those who are constantly holding the United States up to us as the model upon which we should form our fiscal policy. It is patent to every reasonable man, Sir, that a fair analogy cannot be drawn between Canada and the United States in regard to the tariff question. We know that the American union is an aggregation of populous and resourceful states, embracing at once both tropical and temperate regions. We are not similarly situated to them. Anyway, if we were looking for instruction or guidance in fiscal or in constitutional matters generally, I for one would prefer to look across the Atlantic to the motherland for sound teaching in fiscal policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GRANT. I was amused Mr. Speaker, at the elaborate effort made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) in his endeavour to convince the farmers of Canada that protection would be a splendid policy for them. I fear that the hon. gentleman will fail in his mission. I feel confident that he cannot convince the farmers of this Dominion; aye, nor even the farmers of his own historic county of Halton, that his views are sound in that regard. The United States has perhaps the most highly protective tariff of any country in the world, and yet if we compare the condition of the American farmer with the condition of the Canadian farmer, I think the comparison will show that the Canadian farmer stands in a much better position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GRANT. I shall not weary the House by quoting statistics at any length, but I have a few figures here which show conclusively that high protection has not been of material assistance to the farmer of the United States, and arguing by analogy, if high protection has not been of assistance to the United States farmer, it cannot be of assistance to the Canadian farmer. In the twelfth census of the United States I find that there were in 1880, 4,008,000 farmers in the United States; of these 2,984,000 were owners of the soil they tilled and 1,024,601 were tenants of the land they occupied. Twenty years after that, in 1900, there were engaged in agriculture in the United States 5,739,000 farmers and of these 3,713,000 were owners and 2,026,000 were tenants. The logical conclusion from this is, that the proportionate decrease of freeholders and the increase of tenant farmers is indicative of the fact that agriculture is not prosperous in the United States; else, the increase would be in the opposite direction and there would be comparatively more freeholders and fewer tenant farmers. In 1880 for every one thousand male persons at work on farms there were 422 of them owners, and in 1900 out of every one thousand male persons at work on the farms there were but 423 owners. In 1880 for every 1,000 farmers there were 145 tenant farmers and in 1900 that proportion had grown until there were 231 tenant farmers in every 1,000. In other words, the farm owners remain stationary and the number of tenants increased by about sixty per cent. Sir, that should be an object lesson to the Canadian farmer not to be gulled by the specious arguments of the high protectionist. In 1900 there were engaged altogether in the United States in agricultural pursuits 8,771,000, persons as against 7,075,000 in 1880; this was a remarkable small increase when compared with the enormous increase in the general population of the United States which took place in the two decades between 1880 and 1900.

Now, Sir, let us look for a moment at the position of the American farmer from another point of view. Let us look at the capital he has invested in his industry, and let us compare his return from his investment with the return which the manufacturer of the United States gets from his investment. I find from the census of the United States recently published that the capital invested in agriculture, including lands, buildings, improvements and live stock, amounts to about $20,514,000,000. The income returned to the farmers of the United States on the amount of the capital invested was $3,764,000,000. The manufacturers had an invested capital amounting to only $9,874,000,000, and from that amount, after having the full benefit of $4,800,000,000 of cash and stock on hand, their returns were $8,370,000,000. Let us deduct $2,000,000,000 of disbursements for labour, working expenses, &c., which the compiler of these statistics, says is a reasonable amount, and we have a net return to the manufacturers of the United States of $6,370,000,000 from an investment of scarcely ten thousand millions of money. Compare the revenue from their investment with the revenue earned by the agriculturists of the United States and I do not think any candid man will contend that in a highly protected country such as the United States, the farmer has an even show with the manufacturer.

I have been unable to obtain complete figures for Canada as a whole, but I have taken those relating to the province of Ontario as giving a fair indication of conditions in all parts of the Dominion. I find, according to a recent bulletin issued by the department of Agriculture in Toronto, that the amount of capital invested in Ontario farms is $975,000,000, which yielded a return in 1900 of $160,000,000, not including what was fed to stock, which amounts to $60,000,000 more. So that hon. gentlemen will see that the revenue of the farmers of Ontario has been higher than that of the United States farmers considering the capital invested.

Now, I find that the average income of the United States farmer is $288 a year. I am quite willing and anxious to say that that is not a fair indication of his condition, nor would it be a fair figure to set in comparison with the income of an Ontario farmer, because it includes many small holdings of negroes and involves other conditions unfavourable to such a comparison. But let us take some of the states along our own borders, which are not only adjacent to us, but which are very similar as to soil, climate and other conditions. In the state of Ohio according to these statistics, which bear every evidence of care in their preparation, the average income of the farmer—in Ohio—is $312, in Illinois $425, in Michigan $239, in Minnesota $465, in North Dakota $755, and in South Dakota $605. I think a comparison may fairly be drawn between Ohio, Illinois and Michigan on the one hand, and the province of Ontario on the other. In the year 1900 the Ontario farmers raised $160,000,000 worth of products, and we have in that province in round numbers from 175,000 to 200,000 men engaged in the industry of agriculture. Take the larger figure, 200,000, and by the simple process of dividing that number into the $160,000,000 produced by our farmers, we find that it nets to the Ontario farmer an average of $800 per annum. I think that is a fair statement, I think it is logical, and I think it must lead us to the conclusion that the Ontario farmers, and I doubt not the farmers of Canada generally, are getting a greater return from their labour and their capital invested than their fellow-husbandmen to the south of the international boundary, who are not thriving, but groaning, under the load of taxation which a high tariff imposes. I think hon. gentlemen opposite have a task of great magnitude in attempting to convince the agriculturists of this Dominion that a high protective tariff or adequate protection, term it what you will, is a policy which is conducive to their best interests.

The agricultural community of this Dominion are lacking in one respect, and it is natural that it should be so. They are not well organized. They have not the benefit of combination, which other interests possess, and therefore are unable to make known to the government and those in authority what their views on these matters are. They are only able every five years, or it may be in a by-election occasionally, to express their ideas on what should be the policy of this country. I feel, Sir, that it is only natural that there should be an anxiety on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to convince the farmers and the other primary producing classes of Canada that they are as much interested in high protection as those industries which at the present moment are chiefly clamouring for such protection. Stripped of all pretense, Sir, the real purpose of protection is to lessen competition and thereby increase prices. I was considerably interested in the very elaborate attempt which one of the hon. gentlemen opposite made—I think it was the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson)—to prove that the price of the farmers' produce will be enhanced by the policy which he advocates. I followed the hon. gentleman very closely, but I must confess that I was totally unable to find that he followed up his argument in that respect to a successful conclusion. True it is that he was somewhat confused by the lead question, which unfortunately for him, was introduced into the debate, and he found the matter which he had in hand almost as heavy to handle as the lead issue, because he dropped it very suddenly after the interpellation of the hon. Minister of Finance.

I do not know of what value are the opinions of newspapers on matters of this kind; but if the farmers of Ontario have an organ which may be regarded as speaking their views on tariff matters, I suppose the 'Weekly Sun,' issued in the city of Toronto, may be so termed. I have here a small clipping from a recent issue of that newspaper with regard to the present agitation for high protection, which reads as follows :

> One of the pocket pamphlets sent out by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association as a part of their protection campaign appeals to farmers to support a higher tariff on the sole ground that farmers have done so in the past. It cannot be denied that many farmers in the past have been sufficiently innocent to support a protective tariff in Canada, nor that many of them are still prepared to vote for the protection system. But this merely shows that they are not yet as keenly alive to their own interests as are the protected manufacturers. They have been deluded into playing into the hands of a favoured or privileged class. But they are gaining wisdom quite rapidly.

In this connection, the very absurd argument was advanced that the prices of farm produce would be increased by the adoption of a protective policy. But if increased duties will raise the prices of our farm produce, if increased protection will give our farmers a better return for what they have to sell, then I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite how is it that in the years 1891, 1892 and 1893, when their party was in power, grain and other agricultural products were sold at lower prices than at any other period in the history of this country. Will they explain how it was that their policy was so utterly ineffectual during those years, not only in raising the prices of farm products but even in obtaining paying prices ?

The question of surpluses is one that seems to vex exceedingly hon. gentlemen opposite just as that same question has for many years, in the province of Ontario troubled the opposition in the legislative assembly of that province. I am not aware that our hon. friends opposite can be accepted as very competent authorities on surpluses. I am not aware that surpluses ever graced their regime to an extent that would entitle them to talk very learnedly on the subject. However, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has described this administration as the great tax gatherer, I would like to know what the result would have been, had the policy which he advocates been in force during the year 1902, for instance. Had the same degree of prosperity obtained—which is not at all likely—there would have been collected in duties or taxes, if you will, some $15,000,000 more than were actually paid into the treasury. If the resolution of his hon. leader (Mr. Borden) means anything, it means that hon. gentlemen opposite, had they been in power, would have extorted, to use a pet phrase of theirs, this much larger sum from the consuming public of this Dominion. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was moved almost to tears the other night when he spoke of how this government wrung taxes out of the mass of the people. There was a wail in his voice, there were tears in his tones, which reminded one of the lamentation of Jeremiah. But when we come to compare the speeches of these hon. gentlemen with one another, we find most singular inconsistencies and contradictions in their comments on the budget. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) saw fit to criticise the expenditure of the Post Office Department. Did he criticise that expenditure on the ground that it was unwise ? Not at all, Sir. What he criticised the hon. Postmaster General for was because he did not spend sufficient money last year. He used these words, or words to this effect :

> If the hon. minister had generously recognized the increased needs of this country for post office accommodation, his deficit would have been as large as the Conservative deficit was in 1896.

The expenditure of last year, 1902, was $3,883,000. If we add to this the $781,000 deficit of 1896, we have a total of $4,664,000, which is an increase of $999,000 over the expenditure of 1896. This would be an expenditure of over 25 per cent in one department above the actual expenditure. Now, in order to meet the needs of the country, there should have been an increase of expenditure in one department of 25 per cent, that same remark of the hon. gentleman would apply to all the departments. Twenty-five per cent on our total expenditure would be $12,500,000, or the total expenditure of this country, which the hon. gentleman implies would be warranted by its increased needs, would amount to $62,500,000. The hon. gentleman in fact replies to his own colleague from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who criticised the expenditure of the government as injudicious, extravagant and altogether burdensome for the country.

In my opinion, the majority of our people are convinced that a protective tariff would prove wholly inadequate to enhance the prices of our agricultural products. Another objection which, I believe, the people of this country will take to the amendment of the leader of the opposition is that the policy he advocates will increase the cost of the necessaries of life. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) argued against the proposition last night. He said that if we would only impose a protective tariff, those whose business was protected would be so patriotic that they would not increase the price of their commodities. Well, Mr. Speaker, human nature is human nature wherever you find it, and in my opinion, if we gave the opportunity, by protection, to raise the prices of manufactured goods, there is not much doubt that an increase in prices would inevitably follow. To show that in expressing this opinion, I am not talking rank heresy, let me quote from the speech of an hon. gentleman, whose authority our hon. friends opposite will not question, especially on fiscal and trade matters. On the 27th March, 1894, as reported on page 198 of 'Hansard' the Hon. Mr. Foster, the then Minister of Finance, used this language :

> Another objection that has been made to the national policy and to the protective principle in it: that the cost of many manufactured goods has been enhanced to the consumer on account of the rates imposed. Now, Sir, I grant that argument at once to a certain extent. I say that in the initial years of a national policy with a protective principle in it, it will have the effect of enhancing the cost of goods and that at the first the cost of goods will be very closely up to the measure of the protection which was given.

And he went on to make this remarkable statement, which, I think, fully answers the argument of the hon. member from Halton (Mr. Henderson) :

> If it does not have that effect, why should it ever be adopted at all, and what is the good of it ?

That was his opinion on the effect of protection in enhancing the values of the commodities we use. I give the opinion for what it is worth. I am not speaking now to the supporters of the government, but I would ask hon. members opposite whether they do not accept the opinion I have just quoted as a very definite and authoritative one ?

Mr. Speaker, an hon. gentleman who spoke yesterday, whose name I do not know, but whose face is quite familiar to me, because, I think, I saw him in the northern part of this province some weeks ago, said that the agricultural constitutencies of this province of Ontario would support the protective policy. In proof of this he stated that these constituencies had returned a majority of those sympathizing with protection and supporting the opposition in this House. Speaking numerically, it is true that the elections of 1900 had this result as regards the province of Ontario. But since the general elections of 1900, there have been appeals to rural constituencies both in Ontario and in other provinces; and I find sitting around me on this side of the House gentlemen elected from rural constituencies since the general election of 1900, and those constituencies, I think, expressed their opinion on this question with no uncertain sound. I think the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) represents a rural constituency and has been elected very recently. So does the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Christie) and the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Law). And, speaking more particularly for the province of Ontario, I think that verdicts have been given on this subject by such rural constituencies as West Durham, West York and Russell. An hon. friend reminds me that I must not omit the signal victories in Terrebonne, Two Mountains and Maskinongé. I believe I am quite within the mark in saying that the rural constituencies of Ontario and of the Dominion are unalterably opposed to the re-enactment of high protection, and I believe that they will be strongly re-enforced by their brethren in Manitoba, the North-west and British Columbia. To sum up, I conclude as I began, that it would be entirely a mistaken policy for us, at this moment, when prosperity is high within the Dominion, when our factories are working overtime, when our workmen are getting a better return than they ever did for their labour, when our finances, as disclosed by the annual statement are in such a magnificent position, to change our fiscal policy. And, for this reason I am constrained to vote against the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition. And I have this further reason, that, if this resolution means anything, it stands for an increase of duties all along the line, and for an increase therefore of the burdens the great consuming public—and to that I am opposed.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Mr. Speaker. No doubt any hon. member attempting to speak, on the budget at this stage of the debate will find it difficult to make his remarks interesting to the House. In the first place, I wish to congratulate the hon. gentleman (Mr. Grant) who has just taken his seat on his maiden effort; and I am sure all here will agree with me in saying that experience will do him good, as it has done most of us. The hon. gentleman made some reference to the condition of things in his own locality, and I will take the liberty of dealing with this briefly before I proceed to the general discussion of the question before the House. The hon. gentleman instanced the condition of a certain carriage factory in the adjoining county to his own, at a place called Orillia. But he did not tell you that this very class of manufactures have had increased protection from his political friends. He did not tell you that the duty on cutters and sleighs had been increased by 5 per cent since the hon. gentlemen opposite came into power and that the duty is now 35 per cent on carriages as it was previous to the assumption of office by this government. He could not take great credit for the tariff under control of his friends, and that to admit, as everybody admits, that this class of goods does not come in under the boasted preference. The hon. gentleman also referred to the verdict of the people in sending him to this House. It may not be a very kind comparison to say that his presence here shows the mistakes the pepole often make ; when his constituency might have had a better man—there is no doubt about that. Now, in reference to the polling section in his own county that made the greatest change in its political complexion during the late contest, it is to be remembered that there is a certain company there making wood alcohol, who sell their product to the government for $1.40 per gallon when it can be bought in the open market for $1 per gallon. These parties had a protection from the old government of $2.25 per gallon, and they have had this increased by hon. gentlemen opposite to $2.40 per gallon. Another feature of it is that this company had a five-year's contract which was about to expire at the time of this contest. These gentlemen naturally went into the contest with a great deal of vigour on behalf of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Grant), and, since the election they have been down to get their contract renewed. But the minister, under the circumstance, dare not renew it yet. The five year's contract they had they got without tender. The poll there, in the previous election gave a Conservative majority of five. This was changed to a Liberal majority of fifty—by alcohol. So much for the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Grant's) reference to his own locality. There is one other point which I must as well refer to, when dealing with the hon. gentleman's remarks. He referred to the flags around the room when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) whom I am glad to follow as my leader was banqueted. Well, there was nothing indefinite about those flags; everybody knew what they were and what they meant. But no man under heaven could tell what flags to put up if hon. gentlemen opposite were being banqueted. What about the legends of ten years ago ? Would that be around the fences and on the barns and on the big stones along the road, if hon. gentlemen opposite were appearing to the people to-day ? No, we hear no more of them.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Oh, oh.

Mr. BRODER. They might be heard of down in Nova Scotia where my hon. friend lives—he has not heard of the change. But, Sir, there is not a man in this country who can tell what kind of flag to put up if hon. gentlemen opposite were being banqueted. Why, what do you find? One man stands up and he wants the leaden sky in his constituency lighted up by the sun of protection. Another wants his political loins girded up with a stronger binder twine. Another one gets up and says: Salt won't save me if you don't do something for the salt business. That is what is going on in this country, and there is not one minister who has had courage enough to get up and defend the citadel from the attacks of their own friends. Not a particle of cohesion or unity of purpose among hon. gentlemen opposite. A stable tariff—that is what they say they are giving to this country, a stable tariff, something that is hung up between heaven and earth, and no one knows what it is. They take away from this House the right to control the taxation of the people and give to the executive the right to say whether they shall tax this concern or the other, behind the backs of the people. Seven dollars a ton upon rails—that is to be decided when the ministry is satisfied that somebody is capable of making these rails. That contrasts strangely with the position taken by the Minister of Railways when he proposed to let a contract for a large quantity of rails to a company before they had any plant ready to make them. What was the statement of the ministry? They were satisfied that Mr. Clergue was in a position to manufacture all that they were giving him a contract for. Now, Sir, after the plant is on the ground and another plant is being built down in Nova Scotia, they are afraid they cannot carry out their contract, and they are holding it above their heads—for a purpose. Why don't they carry out the policy that they pretend is in the interest of the country? A stable tariff! If there is anything in this country about which there is a doubt, and has been a doubt, and will be a doubt so long as hon. gentlemen opposite occupy the treasury benches, it is the tariff of this country.

They talk about revenue tariff. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us when he was in opposition that the then tariff took $2 out of the people's pocket and put it directly into the pockets of the manufacturers, while only $1 went into the treasury. I would like that hon. gentleman or or any of his friends to explain how it is that where, for instance, the duty is 25 per cent on a wagon, and was 25 per cent on a wagon when he made that statement, how it is that same tariff to-day does not put $2 into the manufacturer's pocket and only $1 into the treasury. If the tariff did that before it does it to-day, because it is the same tariff. The western gentlemen were clamouring for less duty on agricultural implements. Where are they to-day? They want the tariff to remain as it is. Twenty per cent on mowing machines, on reapers, on binders, put there by the Conservative government in 1894. These gentlemen and their friends were then clamouring for less duty; now they want it to remain as it is. It was a curse in the hands of the Conservative government, but it is a blessing in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite.

This tariff reminds me of a story—and I can tell a story once in a while, Mr. Speaker, as well as any other man. There is a gentleman in Montreal who was in the grocery business, and he used to sell sugar, but he used to sand the sugar pretty freely. One of his customers went to him one day and said: See here, I don't think I will buy any more sugar of you. What is the trouble, asked the grocer? Why, he says, there is not enough sugar to sweeten my tea and there is not enough sand for building purposes. Now that is the tariff we have to-day from these hon. gentlemen. There is not enough sugar in it to sweeten our tea, and there is not enough sand in it for building purposes.

The preference, there is a great deal said about the preference. If there is one mistake the hon. gentlemen have made for which they are sorry, it is the preference—thrown to their friends as you throw a plank into the river to a drowning man upon which he may get to shore. They met their friends here in solid phalnax as they came back from the country, after they had been preaching free trade for years, and they were brought face to face with the responsibility of making changes in the tariff according to their professions and their promises. Their friends said, we must have something, and the mountain was in labour and brought forth—a preference, that is all. And they threw it to their friends to get to shore upon, and they have been sounding its praises ever since. Now what has been the effect of the preference? England says it is very little benefit to her. Why does it give England very little in comparison to the small trade of Canada, it means very little to England, but it means a great deal to us. That is the reason.

And the effect of it has been to raise a squall with Germany. Germany takes the position she does to-day, because of that preference. When that preference was put upon the statute-book, although England had been previously urged to change the duties giving to Germany and other nations the favoured nation treatment, when that law was put upon the statute-book, England immediately notified Germany and those other countries of the abrogation of that treaty, under the notice. Germany blames the preference particularly for the present condition of things, and she retaliates, and will retaliate. This surtax that it is proposed to put upon German goods shows the extent of the wisdom of that undertaking; because of all the exports of Germany we only take about three-fourths of one per cent; in other words, for every $100 that Germany exports Canada takes seventy-five cents. And, Sir, this surtax is the outcome of the mistake the hon. gentlemen opposite made in putting that preference upon the statute-book. They cannot withdraw it now, because if they do it will be misunderstood in England, and will do a great deal of harm. Much better if it had never been put upon the statute-book.

Now I wish to say that the government have failed to study the conditions and requirements of this country. Anybody who looks out into the history and commerce of other commercial nations will see that whenever one country is in a position to take commercial advantage of another country it invariably does so. As the outcome of that principle, we find Germany invading the English market, the United States invading the English market. And what about the position of Canada? Our conditions are such that we are left largely at the mercy of foreign countries. The government have failed to study our conditions, and to give to the people of this country that remedy which ought to be within the reach of any executive in this country.

Now, I wish to refer to another matter, and the strange thing about it is that not one of the members of this government has made any allusion to it. I refer to the statement made by the ex-Minister of Public Works, who charged certain men, with his knowledge and with his consent, and who were within the range of his eye in this House, with going behind the backs of the people to the manufacturers of Montreal, and making an agreement with them that their interests would not suffer, that they would be protected, if they would give them their support, and they did give them their support. Now, Sir, that statement is made of public men who go around the country preaching free trade as they did, and free trade as it is in England. I heard the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, in my own constituency, make the statement that the goal was free trade as it is in England, right in face of the fact that they had gone behind the backs of the people and made a direct bargain with the manufacturers of Montreal. Not one of their supporters on that side of the House condemned that sort of thing in a public man, not one minister has dared to get up and dispute that statement made in the House several days ago.

That is a condition of things that ought not to be possible at the hands of any government in Canada. That is why we have seen so much wabbling and swinging about on this tariff question. These hon. gentlemen are tied hand and foot to one set of men and they have promised the other set. We ought to have a stable tariff and a stable lot of men, not a set of men without a settled principle, or without any cohesion in their party, not men of the kind who get up and defend the policy that suits their own localities, men who get up and condemn protection and yet want it before they sit down. This government is all things to all men. This man and that man must be satisfied. They go back and tell their followers that it is all right that they made such and such a statement in the House and that the government did not dispute it. They will be able to go back and fool the people if possible, without any settled principle or policy, and Sir, if there is one thing more than another they want to get rid of it is their past history. I would if I belonged to them. If I had a past history like theirs there would not be anybody gladder to see the book closed than I. There will be no mile stone to mark the spot where it lies after the close of that book. The time ought to come in this country when public opinion will not condone such treatment at the hands of any set of public men. I wish to refer to a matter which implements the question we have been discussing. There has been a great deal said about the farmers interests and about the manufacturers interests and it is a strange thing that hon. gentlemen opposite hold up these two classes of men as being distinct in their interests and in their endeavours to do some thing for the country. The man who stands up and says that the interests of these two classes are one is, as a Canadian, doing his country more good than the man who tries to create discord and strife between them. The interest of the farmer lies in the success of the man who by his enterprise provides a market for the consumption of the farmers product. The city of Toronto alone consumes more of the agricultural products of Canada than Canada ships to the United States. If you take the western and south-western states you will find that where there are the largest centres of population, built up largely by the manufacturing interests, the farmers in the surrounding localities are more prosperous than in localities where there are not these centres of population. If we are to repeat in any sense the history of that country in opening up our west we must have a policy which will build up centres of population. I am quite willing to admit that the conditions are not exactly the same. They have factors in their make up in the United States which it is impossible for us to have. For instance, the great corn belt in the south western states never can be repeated in our own North-west but we have a soil the fertility of which has never been equalled in any country in the world. I refer to its capabilities, to its lasting qualities, not being exhausted by cropping, and while they have been able to build up the great business of the farmer of feeding his cattle and hogs and exporting them to the foreign markets of the world we ought to be in a position to largely repeat the experience of those people in our western country. I see no reason why hon. gentlemen opposite, or some one who will take their places, should not have a policy to build up large centres of population in that country. The government are failing to see the importance of developing the great resources of that country and putting them solidly into national channels as they ought to do. What do you find when you go west of Lake Winnipeg ? Between Lake Winnipeg and the Pacific coast there are no less than eleven railways leading directly out to the United States. This question of transportation, a question which we should have some definite plan in order to carry out the development of this great country, ought to settled by the executive. It is impossible to overlook the fact that there is no settled policy in reference to the transportation of that country. Some hon. gentlemen may say, and some of them have said, that it makes very little difference in building up that country whether a railway runs through the United States or where it runs so long as it handles our business. That is not the proof of history. Take little Holland, for instance; the transit trade of Germany has made Holland what it is and if Germany were to divert that traffic Holland would be at her mercy. Little Holland cannot compare with our great west but this country ought to have a well defined plan in reference to transportation and this plan ought to lead to a general result in the interest of the people instead of a continuance of the practice of diverting trade to a foreign country. It is rather a strange thing but it is true that of every dollar earned by a railway seventy cents of that dollar goes back to the people in labour and material and thirty cents goes for other purposes. Will any one tell me that the carelessness of the government in allowing railways to have their outports in foreign countries is not injurious to Canada ? Most decidedly it is. Hon. gentlemen have no policy on that question nor have they any policy of the tariff except the Macawber like policy of waiting until something turns up.

There has been a great deal said about the cold storage business. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) ought to be here now. It is rather significant that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) and the hon. Minister of Agriculture are out of their seats just now. The census business is not in a very satisfactory condition and the results of the cold storage system have not been so satisfactory as they might have been. If there is one thing more than another that should have been characterized by careful and judicious guidance it was the cold storage business. What ought to have been a great blessing to the farmers of this country may be easily made otherwise. To hear hon. gentlemen talk in the country you would imagine that every farmer in the whole Dominion had been made prosperous because there is cold storage controlled by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. They have frozen the poverty out of the poor fellows and they are all rich. I have taken the following figures from the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. They show that the exports of poultry, dressed and undressed, were as follows :—

1901	145,158
1902	238,047

We heard a great deal about what was going to be done with small fruits. Well, here is the result of the exports of small fruits :—

1900	$ 59,412

I venture to say there will be less this year. It has not been the success it should have been. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, as reported in 'Hansard,' said a year ago that the bulk of the cheese went by ordinary freight and not in cold storage. Now why? One reason is that freights are higher. Another reason—and underlying this reason is a most serious question for the farmers of this country, and I in all honesty call the attention of the government to it, for I do not think the Minister of Agriculture is able to grapple with it—another reason is that they take our cheese comparatively green, but a few days old, and the government propose to put it into cold storage. If they put cheese in cold storage while the process of curing is going on they check that process by the too low temperature, and instead of the cheese curing as it ought to cure, the acid permeates it and the cheese becomes bitter. The cheese business in this country is in a very precarious condition on account of the manner in which they propose to handle cheese in this cold storage outfit. Any reasonable man would say that cheese of that nature should not be put in a too low temperature, but that it should be put in a higher temperature in order that the process of curing may go on. When it is sufficiently cured, then it is possible to put it in a lower temperature. That is the reason why the shippers of cheese are not willing to risk cold storage. Butter, of course, is in a different position, because that process has not the same effect on butter, but rather the contrary effect, because it stays the process of decomposition that takes place, and the butter is kept sweet. I want to call the attention of the government and of this House to the fact, that cold storage is not accomplishing what it ought to accomplish in the interests of this country. It is merely experimental. The government have no settled policy for instance as to what to do with apples or small fruits, or cheese, or butter ; and, Sir, the great increase in the revenue, and the great increase in the business of this country lies more at the door of the energy and dominant purpose of the business community of Canada than it does to the government.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear—or any government.

Mr. BRODER. Yes, or any government.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. Particularly the government we have now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. Let me refer to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) said some years ago. It is a matter of history but you cannot stop us from reading history whether you like it or not. The hon. gentleman said that the government were flies on the wheel, and they are flies on the wheel now.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I was quoting Sir John Macdonald's speech in Halifax.

Mr. BRODER. You were in good company once in your life.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. We used to hear much about the exodus. The hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) himself used to talk about the exodus until you would think he belonged to the children of Israel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. Yes, Sir, you would think he was Moses himself. Now let us see—that exodus is going on unfortunately. According to his own books last year there were $1,538,186 worth of settlers effects went out of this country. There were a good many times that came in, but if you turn to the returns, that was the case even when the minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) was saying that everybody was leaving the country. What are the facts? The facts are simply these: That the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Quebec largely go to the United States when they leave home instead of going to our North-west, and the population of Ontario, if it is depleted any has been depleted by the removal of the people from Ontario out to our western country. Now, the hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) used to take that as an argument against the policy of the government that he was opposing in these days. What has he got to say in justification of the policy that his own government has adopted. If what he said then was true; it is certainly true yet.

I want, Sir, to look this matter squarely in the face. What do we find? We find that notwithstanding what we are told the Minister of Agriculture and the government are doing for the farmer, that when the boy grows up he leaves the farm. I would be the last man to propose to proscribe the boy's liberty in that respect, or to check his ambition, but I say this: That if there is one economic question for this country more important than another, it is the question of keeping the people on the soil. The policy of the present government has not had that effect. There are less men on the soil to-day in Canada than there were when they came into power. We know that when people go into the towns and cities, they become more restless; more likely to leave the country or to change their position; and what we want to do and what the government should do, is to try and grapple with this question. I throw out the hint that the Department of Agriculture should take up questions of this kind; they should try to make the home of the farmer more attractive to the boys. Perhaps that more than anything else will cause the boy to stay at home on the farm if he finds there comforts suitable to his desires. The Minister of Agriculture should try and make the farmer's home more comfortable. I suppose the Minister of Agriculture does not know much about family affairs, but he ought to or he should not be a minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. It is serious to relate that enough people are scarcely staying upon the soil in Canada to attend to the ordinary avocation of agriculture. The tendency in this country is to send the boys to the professions. Perhaps the well to do farmer is anxious to have one or other of his boys in a profession, and having a little spare money, and that sort of thing, he wishes to educate his boy, and that leads to some extent to the present condition of things. But what I want to say is this: That if the Department of Agriculture takes up this question, and through an educational process makes the farm home more attractive, there will be less young men leaving the farm. We look too much at the farmer from the standpoint of whether everything pays or not. But there is this I will say on his behalf: There is no class of people who are as sure of employment for themselves and their families as are the farmers. That is the first great consideration. There is no other profession in which employment is so sure. And while our friend (Mr. Grant) yonder was talking about the farmer's income from his investment, and the manufacturer's income from his investment, he lost sight of this very significant fact: that when the balance of the account is made up the farmer has lived about the best of any man in the community. He and his family have lived well; they have had the best butter and eggs and cheese and bread, and the best of everything—they sell you fellows the rest.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. That is a consideration that is too often lost sight of by our hon. friend and others. The farmer has had his living, and we cannot take that away from him. That is a very important matter, but still we want to make the farmer's home more attractive. Encourage the boys to stay on the farm. The Department of Agriculture professes to instruct the farmer how to raise oats and wheat, and potatoes, and turnips, and cattle and all the rest of it, and when a farmer comes here and goes to the Experimental Farm he finds that our Experimental Farm looks just about as bad as the one he left at home. The drains are not much better, the cattle are not much better. The outcome of this is, that the old farmer begins to say: What does this mean; the government at Ottawa do not know very much more about this business than I do. I say to the government: Don't send a man among the farmers who does not know his business. There is no class of people in Canada that will find out his weakness as quickly as the farmers will. That is a piece of advice I am giving especially to the premier.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODER. Now, I want to touch up our reciprocity friend a little. Last year he was after the Americans with a club in his hand; now he is after them with a feather. Last year it was retaliation, tariff against tariff, away up high; now he is waiting for reciprocity. Does any man pretend to say that under the conditions described by the hon. gentleman who took his seat a few moments ago (Mr. Grant), with the farmer and everybody else worse off in the United States than in Canada, reciprocity with such a people would be of any advantage to this country? You have to trade with somebody better off than yourself if you want to get any advantage. If there ever were conditions which would favour this country for reciprocity, they were those which prevailed under the reciprocity treaty from 1854 to 1866, because there was a war going on in the United States at that time, and enormous prices were obtained for agricultural products of all kinds. Yet what occurred? During the twelve years of the reciprocity, under the most favourable conditions, we traded with the American people to the amount of $150,000,000 more than they traded with us.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) We would do so again.

Mr. BRODER. Oh, I dare say you would make mistakes all your life.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Come again.

Mr. BRODER. In 1874, when there was a proposition made to bring about reciprocity with the United States, the late Hon. George Brown went to Washington, where he found American statesmen, no matter how prominent they might be, so ignorant of Canadian affairs that he undertook to give them some instruction, and he compiled a lot of figures from their own records, which were published in London, England, and I have a copy of the document in my possession at home—showing that during those twelve years we traded with the Americans to the amount of $150,000,000 more than they did with us. And in the black days of 1857, when our commercial interests were bound up with the American people, when the crisis of the year came in the United States, this country suffered beyond measure; and we should never be put in that position again.

The hon. gentleman is talking reciprocity because he sees a break in the clouds; he is likely to go to Washington again and have a bit of a time with the Americans. Well, Sir, you will not make any bargain with them unless you give them the best of it. These hon. gentlemen went over there before, and they were like the boy whose father sent him off to do business and learn something. He was a good-looking, well-preserved boy, and his father was well off. I am an advocate of a boy making some of his mistakes while his father is with him. We let our boys grow up and leave them to make their mistakes after we are gone. I am afraid that is the way with our hon. friends. This gentleman sent his boy away to look after a bit of business, and gave him some money. The boy was gone for several days, and the old gentleman got very uneasy looking for his return. The boy came back at last, and the old gentleman said to him, 'Well, my son, what have you brought back?' 'Nothing,' answered the boy, 'but I had a good time.' 'Well,' said the old gentleman, 'it costs a good deal of money, but if there is one thing I am glad of, it is that you did not do any business.' That is just the position of the Joint High Commission. The country had not entrusted them with any business before; it was the first business they had attempted to do. They went to Washington, where they were well cared for, and had a good time, and spent a good deal of money; and when they came back the people of Canada said, 'If there is one thing for which we are thankful, it is that you did not do any business.' Now, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is blowing his horn—he wants them to come to dinner again.

It is time we left this American business alone. Canada for the Canadians in the fullest sense of the word. Instead of letting any of our boys leave this country to better their condition in the United States, as hundreds of our boys have done who have been brought up by poor parents fighting the battle of life as best they could, and who are better fitted for the climate and conditions of Canada, let us spend a few dollars in keeping our own boys in the country instead of bringing out Doukhobors. There are many families in the north country who have followed the lumber business over the rocks and the sand hills, whose wages are now gone, and who are unable to get away from that part of the country. The government had better help these men to go to the North-west and to create a Canadian sentiment which will aid in assimilating the masses of foreigners coming to our shores, and help to make this country what it should be, a country for Canadians to live and prosper in.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Perhaps it will not be inopportune for me on this occasion to say that, having listened to a number of the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, it does strike me as rather extraordinary that, with the weakness of the present government, the state of feeling in the country which these hon. gentlemen describe, and the desire of the people at once to oust them from office, hon. gentlemen spend so much time discussing the ways and means of the present government. One would suppose, from what we have heard, that the country is now so instructed and so determined that when the time comes there can be only one result, the complete destruction of the government. Yet, day after day we have heard from these gentlemen, talking in dolorous tones, until the rather farcical effort of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Broder), who has just left the House—an attempt to give a backwoods, everyday election speech in the House of Commons, to provoke a laugh, when they could say nothing else.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, we heard something.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman would laugh if there was not much to laugh at, if it was a party matter.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is why I am laughing at you.

Mr. FRASER. I think it was rather unkind to the member who preceded him for him to say that North Ontario might have sent here a better man. I think a modest man would have said that he is a good man, at any rate. If I am not mistaken, the hon. member himself went to North Ontario to try to defeat the hon. gentleman and failed; and it is a commentary on the present state of the opposition that the ablest man in their ranks on financial questions, or if you believe them, on anything else——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria)—was buncoed out of the election.

Mr. FRASER. Was defeated, and was defeated largely because the hon. gentleman who has just spoken was there. I understand from good Conservatives that if he had not gone there, there would have been some chance for Mr. Foster. The fact remains that the ablest man they had, going into the constituency, with 518 in his favour and with all the power that was brought to assist him, including the leader of the opposition, and the mighty fighting colonel from Victoria, failed to break the vote of the electors. And I am sure that in the hon. member who has just spoken, the constituency of North Ontario has sent to this House a representative of whom it may well be proud. But the hon. gentleman mentions a particular district where he said the Conservatives had five majority at the previous election and now the Liberals have fifty. And this he charged to the account of alcohol. Are we to conclude from the hon. gentleman's statement that sixty Conservatives could be made to vote for the Liberal party by giving them rum? It seems to me we have in that an exhibition of the moral condition among the supporters of the hon. gentlemen opposite which is not very much to their credit.

I would like to know from hon. gentlemen opposite whether the present tariff is, in their opinion, the same as the tariff of the Conservative policy. Will hon. gentlemen opposite say that it is? I pause for a reply. Not one will venture to give an opinion. I want to know where we stand and where hon. gentlemen stand, because I want to be fair.

Mr. COCHRANE. You are on the floor.

Mr. FRASER. You are not an authority. Will hon. gentlemen opposite say that the present tariff of the Liberal party is the same as the tariff of the Conservative party when they were in power?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. FRASER. Of course it is not. Is it higher or lower? Again there is no reply. An attempt was made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Broder) to show that the present tariff is higher than the former one, but if it be, I cannot understand why he had anything to say against it. He also spoke of the surtax as being all wrong, and yet before he sat down, he wanted a high tax imposed against American goods, which after all would be only going on the same lines as the surtax. For my part, I think that the surtax is economically wrong but politically right. It was the only thing the government could do. A gentleman will fight with his fists, and no man who is a gentleman will fight any other way, but even a gentleman, if he finds his opponent throwing a stiletto or dirk or using a derringer, will take the first thing handy and knock him down. And in view of the action of Germany against Canada, we had no other resource than to act as we have done.

Another thing the hon. gentleman said was that the conditions in Canada put us at the mercy of the foreign manufacturers. It seems to me that the reverse is the case. The manufacturer in Europe has in many cases to import the raw material before he can manufacture it, then he has to face an average duty of 17 per cent and pay the freight and other charges, and if a foreigner can do all that and still have the advantage over Canadians, it speaks very little for the enterprise and energy of the manhood of Canada. What does the hon. gentleman think of Canadians who cannot compete under these conditions? Is it any wonder that before he closed, he should have suggested to the government, apparently in all seriousness, that one of the great duties of a government was to make the home attractive to the boys. How is the government to do this? By showing the wife how to keep it clean. By showing the farmer how many lickings he should give the boy? By showing the girls how they should dress in order to make themselves attractive to the neighbouring boys? What can be thought of an hon. gentleman, who, speaking in the interests of the farmers, gets up and says that the business of the government is to make home attractive to the boys? Is it any wonder that he should have followed this up by saying that you must trade with some one better off than yourself, if you want to make your business pay. Just fancy the absurdity of saying that before your trade can pay, you must trade with a man better off than yourself. A farmer, for instance, never can make farming pay unless he sells his products to some one richer than himself. And a merchant could not possibly make money, if he purchased from a farmer who was not as well off in this world's goods as himself. Why, Sir, trade knows no distinction. If it pays better to deal with a man who is worth $10,000 than with another who is worth $100,000, do you think he would not give the preference to the poorer man? The absurdity of these two propositions that the government should instruct the farmer how to keep his boy at home and that nobody should trade except with some one better off than himself, shows the depths to which a lack of knowledge of political economy will bring even a clever man like the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder).

I am sorry that the hon. leader of the opposition has gone because I wish to make a passing reference to him. This budget debate opened, so far as he is concerned, with a very funny incident. He spoke about certain ministers going to sleep while the Minister of Finance was speaking. That I thought was hardly a remark becoming the dignity of a leader of a great party. But swift judgment followed. Hardly had the hon. gentleman began his reply to the Minister of Finance, than that wide awake member of the opposition, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), fell sound asleep, lulled into somnolence by the sound of the voice of his leader right beside him. But I must, in justice to the leader of the opposition, say that he did not retaliate, but remained awake while his colleague from East Grey had the floor.

What does the amendment mean? First of all, the amendment declares the present tariff unsatisfactory. Why is it unsatisfactory? Is it because the tariff is not high enough or because it is too high? Why, Mr. Speaker, from one end of the Dominion to the other, during every election since the present tariff has been put into execution, we have been charged with stealing the clothes of the Conservatives. In this House, on the platform, in the newspapers, everywhere they say: 'You have stolen our tariff; you have made no change; you said you would but you did not.' Well, if it be the same tariff and is unsatisfactory in the present conditions, how comes it that it was satisfactory up to 1896, when our conditions were far worse? Let them explain how that tariff, which at that time they considered the acme of perfection, and an image to be worshipped, a juggernaut at whose shrine they should lay everything precious, should be unsatisfactory to-day. I appeal to any hon. gentleman opposite who reasons, how he can explain the two things? The first statement is that there is an unsatisfactory condition. Does that condition arise from the tariff? Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the tariff is unsatisfactory. I believe it is, and I am glad of it. It is unsatisfactory to some people who want to gain something for nothing at the expense of others. But, if the tariff is unsatisfactory, there is one point I would like some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to explain to me—is the tariff unsatisfactory as compared with the tariff in force under the Conservative government or is it unsatisfactory as compared with the tariff they would make if they were in power? There has been no explanation of this.

Mr. CLANCY. Ask the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes).

Mr. FRASER. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) cannot tell me. I am asking hon. gentlemen opposite. I am asking the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and it will not do for him to shoulder the question off upon some other person, because he finds himself in a dilemma. Reams of paper have been used in preparing speeches for this debate, and volumes have been spoken in it. But no hon. gentlemen opposite has shown why the tariff was unsatisfactory. They are only able to say two things. The first is: You made a promise that you have not fulfilled. And the second is: The prosperous condition of the country is due to the kindness of Providence. And when these two things fail them, they do as they have invariably done ever since 1895—aye, ever since 1891, when I first came here—they fall back upon one expedient, which they use with enthusiasm, they abuse the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Do not hon. gentlemen opposite see that they are but adding each year to the laurels of that distinguished statesman? The only effect of attacks made by every one of them from the highest to the lowest—in ability not in character—is to convince the people that they themselves feel that if by a chance arrow they can hit this target of the hon. minister's reputation, it would bring them distinction and glory.

Now, for my part I am not so particular about being consistent as I am about being right. It is much better for a man to be right than to be consistent. Hon. gentlemen when in power, declared that they were going to reform the tariff. Were they inconsistent in that? I do not think they were; for, if they grew at all, I could well understand that they would grow wiser.

The second thing is that this is to be a declared policy. Well, dear me, is not everything declared that is said? Who is to 'declare' the policy? And when is it to be 'declared'? Hon. gentlemen tell us that the protection must be adequate. Here, it seems to me, is the crux of the whole question. Who is to say what is 'adequate' protection—is it to be the manufacturers or is it to be the leader of the opposition and his friends? I know very well that if it is left to the manufacturers, they will make it 'adequate' according to their own opinion. Herein is the whole of the amendment which we are discussing. It is an amendment to deceive; it is an amendment intended to hold out to every manufacturer the hope that if hon. gentlemen opposite get into power, they will give him adequate protection. And every manufacturer says to himself: 'Adequate,' that is just what I want. The manufacturer of cotton will say: 'Adequate' protection for me is so and so, and I am to have it, for here is the resolution; the party voted for it; and I have heard them say that they are the same yesterday, to-day and to-morrow—therefore, I am to have 'adequate' protection as I understand it. Will hon. gentlemen opposite tell us who is to be the judge of this adequacy? My own opinion is that they thought that by using this word 'adequate' they would gain the same end as their former leader Sir John A. Macdonald did in 1878 when he said that the change in the tariff that he proposed would not be an increase but a readjustment. That took. Surely, a lot of people who do not understand this phrase—'adequate protection' will be led to understand that it means something in their interest. I said that hon. gentlemen opposite must believe that the present tariff is either the same as or different from the last tariff. I believe it is different; I know it is different; and, if hon. gentlemen opposite would utter their true thoughts, I think they would acknowledge that it was different. If it were not different, of course, every speech made on the other side would be a waste of time and energy. The only thing for hon. gentlemen opposite to do, if they think the present tariff is the same as the last, is to show that they were wrong in their last tariff and that the present government is wrong in the existing tariff and ought to have gone further, and that if they get the chance they will go further.

Mr. CLANCY. Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER. Surely that is as plain as anything in the world can be. But let me repeat it for the sake of the hon. member for Bothwell. If hon. gentlemen opposite say that the tariff of the present government is the same as the previous tariff, then they must show that this 'adequate' protection means to go further than the late government went and further than the present government has gone. Because, if the protection given by the present government is not 'adequate' and their tariff is the same as that of the late government, there must be something——

Mr. CLANCY. Nobody said that.

Mr. FRASER. Now, I have got my authority. So, this tariff is not the same as the tariff of the late government. Therefore, the present government has made a reduction. So, let us not hear anybody else say anything about our having stolen the clothes of the hon. gentlemen opposite. We have the hon. gentleman for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), for whom I have the highest respect, declaring that the tariff of the late government is not the same as ours. If the tariff is to be changed, is it to be lower than that of the present government, or is it to be as high or even higher than the tariff before 1896? We know pretty well that hon. gentlemen opposite do not propose to go back to the old tariff, for the manufacturers will not accept that, as they want more. Now, if this is a lower tariff than the former one, that matter is settled.

Mr. CLANCY. But it is not settled that it is a lower one.

Mr. FRASER. Well, I have heard of repudiation, but never of repudiation within so short a time. I never knew a man to repudiate himself within five minutes. I distinctly cited the hon. member for Bothwell as an authority. But now, when he sees the effect of his admission, he wants to go back on it. But I know he will not go back on it in quiet moments when he talks it over with me, but will feel as bad as any man can for the wretched position in which he finds himself. I wish to emphasize what the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) says. We had a crusade inaugurated by the manufacturers and assisted by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). But I venture to say that never was there a movement more ill-timed. Why, you cannot talk to people now of changes in the tariff with any hope of gaining their attention. They know, and all the statistics show it, that they never received as good wages before. I want to make the statement distinctly, and any hon. gentleman who lives in a place where it is not true can say so far as his locality is concerned, that never in the history of Canada was labour so difficult to obtain, and never in the history of Canada did labour receive, one man with another, as high a wage as it does to-day.

Now, how are you going to help them to do any better ? Is the labourer, or the farmer, or the fisherman, or the lumberman fool enough, when he knows he is better off than he ever was before in this world, to go and take the plunge that hon. gentlemen want him to take in order to find something better ? Men take a plunge when they are so bad off that they cannot be any worse ; but sensible men who know that they are in a better position than ever before will let well enough alone, and will say : We are not going to take the plunge, even though these distinguished statesmen run the risk of being found shivering, cold and naked on a foreign shore, as they were up to 1896. The time is all wrong for any such a change. I read a letter the other day from a Mr. Wilson, I think his first name is Thomas, who sent me, with the letter, a paper that was designed to teach the farmers of Canada. He also wanted to teach me, because he said : Here was a paper he was issuing to teach the farmer. They start out to instruct the farmers. Very well, North Ontario gave them the first answer. We also had an election down in Yarmouth, where one of the most tremendous majorities ever given in Nova Scotia gave them another answer. Do you think, Mr. Speaker and hon. gentlemen, that we are to be taught the truth by men who believe in that which is not the truth universal ?

Now, protection may be a good thing for one man. It may be an admirable thing for me, if I am a manufacturer of hats, and if I can get the whole market for hats in Canada. That is only protection run mad. That is a good thing for me if I am making hats. But surely it is not a good thing for every man who has to buy a hat. The truth of the matter is that we are joined together in this country, as people are in every country, in such a manner that the interests of each must be respected and conserved, so that what I give to assist one man should be repaid to me from another man, or by any number of men that are assisted. That is equity. They never made a bigger mistake. They were going to give this information to the farmers, but the farmers were too busy at work, and laughed at them.

For myself, I want to say distinctly that the present policy must be maintained. It may require some changes. Taxation ought to be adjusted to suit all, and where one manufacturer has an advantage over another, or one consumer pays more than another, an equitable adjustment must be made. I care not whether we have a protective policy or a revenue tariff policy, no one manufacturer has a right to an advantage over another, and no purchaser has a right to purchase to the disadvantage of another. We must move, but no advance should be made to give protection to one class over another. We must move in an opposite direction. Let each man start fair in the race for life. As much as any other man, I want to see our manufactures increased, I want to see improvement in the character of their goods, in the enlargement of their output, but it must not be by making others contribute to that end. I would as strongly oppose the farmers, the fishermen, the lumbermen or any others getting an advantage over the manufacturers. We are building up a mighty west. This year a population as large as four constituencies will be added to this great land ; and I commend the words of the Minister of Finance to our energetic friends the manufacturers in that connection. If they spent their time in improving their method—increasing their skill—enlarging their outlay and securing every available market, instead of paying for costly delegations, illogical speakers and ineffective attempts to teach farmers wiser than themselves, they would find a better disposition among all classes to assist them and more tolerance for their just claims. They have, by their unwise course in raising this issue at a most unreasonable time, done more to discredit themselves than they can repair in the near future. Those who tell them, kindly but firmly, these truths, are their best friends, and have their and the country's interests at heart more than the men who seek to gain the impossible by loudly proclaiming that with the nearly 17 per cent advantage they have, they still must call on the country to implement, by subventions, what, if rightly utilized by energy and skill, would be able to meet every competition and overcome it. I am satisfied the crusade so loudly proclaimed had not the sympathy of a large number of our best manufacturers.

I know hundreds of these men who come up here thinking that this government could be imposed upon, and that their loud cries might be taken as representing the actual condition of things in the country. At the same time the largest manufacturers in the country were doing better than ever they did before, and saying as plainly as possible that this unwise method of attempting to rush protection at such a time as this would be fraught with the disaster that it met, and well met. Now, I am accused of being against the manufacturers because I firmly say what I believe is in their best interests. No such a thing. We have manufacturers in Nova Scotia and in all the provinces, but if after all the protection that was said to be given by the hon. gentlemen opposite, after eighteen years of that protection, and from 1896 to the present—take it as you will, either the same system or a very small change made, some gentlemen say a certain percentage of one per cent—if after all that time they have not gained the experience, as I believe the largest number of them have gained, to conduct their business with profit to themselves, I do not think a large majority of the people of this country should be compelled to contribute to increase their gains. Why, Mr. Speaker, I was talking to one of the greatest manufacturers of Canada who was asked to go to a meeting of the men engaged in the trade in which he was himself engaged. He laughed and he said : Why, there will be nothing given. I am a protectionist, but they cannot get anything ; and do you know I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to get anything, and I will tell you why. Each one got up at that meeting and said : We want such and such protection. Immediately another gentleman sprung up and said : What, would you kill my business ? For that would kill my business. Then a third got up and said something else. We were all engaged in the same business, or utilizing the same article in different directions. Now, that showed me that these men are not agreed among themselves. I know nothing of what these delegations said or wrote. But I have a little evidence myself of a man who joined a delegation to come here to get protection and who, when he went home, wrote a friend of mine, not in this House, saying that the very thing he had to ask for by coming with the others, to make them think he was with them, would be the very thing he did not want. Oh, for a sensible condition of things, under which we would cease this attempt to make it appear that a country 4,000 miles in extent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and running close to our neighbour's for all this distance, is going to become a greater country by imposing more duties. If we must impose duties, let it be to pay for the benefits we receive. I object, Mr. Speaker, and I will object so long as I live, that the government shall be asked to give its sanction to any other man, excepting our regular tax-gatherer, who pays the money into the coffers of the government, levying taxes on the people of Canada. I will object that any man should have the authority to, in his own interests, take that which belongs to the people. The amount of it makes no difference. It is worse, of course, as it gets larger, but even if it is only a cent, it is wrong. I know that no human being can make a tariff that is uniform. I know there is no government in the world that can be perfectly equitable, but there are lines upon which we can go. Just fancy the farmers, who are at least from 65 to 70 per cent of the whole population of Canada, going to be made rich by feeding less than 15 per cent of the population, which represents the whole number of manufacturers who are engaged in manufacturing in Canada. Is that not a nice proposition ?

The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), a farmer of the farmers, spoke the other day. Fancy sixty-five such men as that—practical, good farmers—becoming wealthy by feeding fifteen manufacturers. There is one thing certain; either the sixty-five farmers are not good farmers or the fifteen manufacturers eat too much—that is all. One or other of these two things must be true. Now, the hon. member who spoke last said that he wanted all Canada joined together, and he did not want one class to be against the other. Did he not see that the very position he was taking of calling for more protection for the manufacturers had all the elements of setting class against class ? Do you think the farmers, the fishermen, the lumbermen and the miners are going to sit down quietly and permit the government to grant benefits to one class which they belive are going to be injurious to them ? No, the present tariff has worked well. Frankly, I think we might have gone further.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Just explain about the $7 per ton on steel rails.

Mr. FRASER. Well, the explanation I give of that is this : If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) had heard the last speaker he would have got his answer, when he said he never thought it was intended to be given. I do not say that. But the hon. gentleman has his answer from his own side of the House. It ought to be a more satisfactory answer than I could give. I happen to come from a country where the people are largely fishermen, farmers, miners and lumbermen. I do not want for them special advantages and they do not want them. They have never asked me either individually or altogether to see that they receive protection for lumber or that their fish should receive special protection, or that their farm products should receive special protection. The truth of the matter is that the farmers themselves are to blame. If I were inclined to set farmer against manufacturer I could easily do it. I could say, for example, that if the farmer will permit delegation after delegation to importune members of parliament on both sides of the House while he sits still this clamour may be more successful than he imagines. I do not say that the farmers should come here, and they do not come here, and ask that there should be largely increased duties imposed upon the articles which they produce, but they should see that they should at least be treated so as not to be made to contribute a dollar more than they ought to in order to pay for carrying on the business of the country. The position of hon. gentlemen opposite is a marvellous one. Hon. gentlemen invariably say that the present tariff has nothing to do with the Liberal party's being in power and that the result is all due to Providence. I believe that it is largely due to Providence. I believe, that, except and in so far as the government can make the conditions of life such that the products of labour shall receive the greatest reward, by the least possible tax, the government cannot bring about the condition of things that makes a country prosperous. But, must we go into ancient history, as hon. gentlemen have done, I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite speak about the time of Mr. Mackenzie, and I have noticed that they have gone back to the time of confederation and waded through the whole of our history. What about the time when they invariably described everything good in this country as being due to the national policy. The national policy was the only thing that made this country what it was, and if the national policy were destroyed disaster would result. Is there an hon. gentleman in this House who has not heard an argument of that kind ? I have been a little on the political platform and I do not remember ever having met with a Conservative who has not used that argument. One of the principal sinners is the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), who took a leading part in that same direction. If it was not a good argument then it is not a good argument now, to say that the government does everything for the country and that everything in the country depends upon the government. I am down on that kind of paternalism, and I think we are weakening the respect for government by looking to it to do everything. Hon. gentlemen ought not to have said a word about the present condition of things, or they ought to have made a repentance worthy of the occasion. They should have said : We were wrong before and we are right now, or we were right before and we are wrong now. I care not which. If they say that the government has nothing to do with the large increase in the prosperity of the country they were wrong before and they should repent. I am glad that the government has withstood the movement for higher duties. Oh, the cheers that would have greeted us from the other side of the House if the government had capitulated and allowed itself to be stampeded into protection. Hon. gentlemen would have given us no assistance. If this is the same tariff that they had why should they be against the government ? What is the meaning of their opposition, of their attempt to defeat the government if the government has accepted their tariff and is carrying it out ? If hon. gentlemen opposite have settled the whole tariff and if the prosperity of the country is owing to their tariff why do they complain ? A more unsatisfactory state of things could never exist. If protection has been adopted by the Liberal party why should the Liberal party have their opposition ? Why not say : Now, you have been converted to our views, let us all join together because we all think the same as to the policy of Canada ? Will hon. gentlemen opposite say that ? Do they not perceive that the country must see through them ? Do they not see that they cannot impose upon the people by any artifice of that kind. One word more, before it is six o'clock. There was a good deal said about the surplus. Now, in a perfect condition of things, when there is no debt there should be no surplus, because if there is no debt and no interest to be paid, the people should not pay a dollar more than is required for the purposes of paying the expenses of the government. But a surplus in rich years such as we have had, when used by the government as it has been used, it is all right. Instead of borrowing six million dollars a year as the Conservatives did, this government is spending a great deal more money for the good of the country and they are using the surplus for that, so that we will not need to borrow that money and pay interest on it for all time. Another thing is that the government are paying off this year $5,000,000 of the debt and we will never have to pay it again.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that include the sinking fund ?

Mr. FRASER. The sinking fund goes on, but there is a difference. The present government put money in the sinking fund, but the late Conservative government was a sinking fund altogether, until they sank out of sight in 1896.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FRASER. At the risk of repeating myself, I wish to state distinctly again, in order that it may be answered by hon. gentlemen opposite, the difference between the present tariff and the tariff of the past. Is the present tariff the same as the tariff of the late government ? Is it less or is it more? If it is less, would the Conservatives bring it up to where they left it, or would they advance it further ? It is no use talking about what this man or that man on either side may have said ; it is the existing tariff that we are discussing now. Reference has been made to the United States, and surely if there is any country in the world which might indicate that prosperity can spring from a high tariff the United States would be that country. But here is a curious condition of things. What is the condition of things in the New England states, the home of manufacturing on this continent. I hold in my hand a monthly paper called the 'New England Illustrated,' published by George H. Chapin, of 257 Washington street, Boston. It gives a description of farms that are for sale in New England, the home of the highest protection that any country ever had. I will read this choice description of a farm which is 'No. 22,472' and the numbers go up to 40,000. Here it is :

Quarter mile lake front ; 160 acres ; 1,000 cords wood ; cuts 18 tons hay ; 150 apple trees; 25 varieties grapes ; pears ; plums ; cherries ; cranberries; aqueduct spring water ; good seven room house, newly painted and papered, piazza ; barn 40 x 40 cellar ; open and box stalls, double boarded ; carriage house ; blacksmith shop with bellows, anvil and tools ; good repair ; high location ; 400 sugar trees ; salmon and trout fishing ; could sell lake front cottage lots.

What do you think all that cost in the chosen home of protection ? Why $900 part cash. If there is any country in the world where you would expect farms to sell well, it is in New England, but the heading on this list is 'Abandoned Farms.' Where is the home market ? I may be told that the growth of the western part of the United States has made it impossible for New England farms to keep up, and there may be some truth in that, but in the older provinces of Canada the same rule would apply, for we are now being fed from the west. But do you think you can get a farm like that in any part of Canada for $900. Now what is the condition of the labourers in the United States ? John Burns, who is the highest authority on the question of labour in Great Britain, has recently described the industrial conditions in the United States as 'hell with the lid off.' Is that where the hon. gentlemen opposite want to go ? John Burns knows more about the labour question in Great Britain, and I think in the world, than any other man, and that is his idea of the industrial conditions in the United States. Every one knows who has read about the strikes, and the industrial wars and the trusts that there exist conditions in the United States which have made thoughtful men fearful of the future, and some of them have predicted that within a quarter of a century or less there will be such an industrial war as can be wiped out only by blood. We do not want such conditions in Canada.

The position which I take on reciprocity, Sir, is the position taken by this government. I believe that reciprocity would be a good thing under proper conditions. I am not going to seek reciprocity from the United States, or make them think by word or deed of mine that we need it more than they do. The truth of the matter is that the question of reciprocity is up to the Americans now. I remember being in Boston last fall addressing the lower province men's society, at which there were three members of Congress and two senators present, and I took the opportunity of telling them that they need not expect to have Canada, because we would not go with them, but that they could have reciprocity. I speak for the lower provinces when I say that we want reciprocity, but we do not want their wretched fiscal system which hon. gentlemen opposite want to copy. They forced us into looking for markets in other parts of the world by their treatment of our products, and now we have, by the British preference, these markets, and so they have to come to us looking for reciprocity. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) talked about our going to Washington to get a banquet. Well, two reciprocity delegations went from Canada to the United States, Joseph Howe, the brightest man that Nova Scotia ever produced, and probably one of the brightest men that Canada has ever produced, spoke in reference to the very thing the late government did as a 'comedy of errors.' Then, Sir John Thompson went. The hon. member said that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was going to a dinner. When the late leader of the Conservative party went there, he did not stay long enough to get his dinner, because he was only there three minutes.

One of the most amusing features of this discussion was brought out by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart), who joined protection and transportation together. Now, that is something that I cannot understand. How are you going to have very much transportation if you are going to exclude foreign goods ? You spend millions in providing the best means of transportation in the country to take goods out ; what are you going to bring back ? Are you going to bring back a shipload of money ? Every one knows that money will not come back ; every one knows that goods must be exchanged for goods. If you put a tariff wall high enough, nothing will come in, and if nothing comes in, nothing will go out. One of the most absurd ideas possible is to join protection and transportation. What is to become of the great granary of the west, which is to be Britain's future granary, be our transportation facilities ever so good, if we put up a tariff wall high enough to keep all foreign goods out ? Transportation goes with a moderate tariff ; transportation and a revenue tariff will go together, but never transportation and protection.

I need scarcely say that I was very much pleased with the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. I was pleased with it for a number of reasons. I felt proud that he was able in so lucid a way to place the financial condition of the country before us, favoured as he was with conditions such as have never existed in Canada before I was proud of him as a Nova Scotian. I was proud of him as Minister of Finance, instead of having to apologize, as the late Minister of Finance had to do for our little business capacity, he was able to show what splendid things this country was doing. I may say also that my pride in him was increased by the fact that when our opposition friends found themselves in a dilemma, they had to go to Nova Scotia to get a man to save them from utter ruin, though I do not think that the high standing of even that hon. gentleman can prevent that ruin.

We are spending more than we did before —why ? Because we can afford it. Does any man blame the farmer whose condition is twice as prosperous this year as it was last year, for spending more ? Is he not going to have a better house, provided with all those appliances which will make it a more comfortable home for his wife and family ? The merchant who makes 20 per cent this year, where he only made 10 per cent before, can make an addition to his house. As it is in business, so it is in the country. While we are spending more, the people can pay that much more easily than they did the lesser amount that was paid under the late government. The people know that, and they do not feel it ; and when the increased revenue is being applied to the building of great public works and to the reduction of the debt, the people are willing to contribute. But even while we are getting a greater revenue which we are spending in the interests of the country, the taxation which is producing that revenue is 10 per cent less than it was before, taking one article with another. The late Minister of Finance himself said that the tariff was only reduced one per cent, from 19 per cent to 18 per cent. That is not a fair way of putting it. The tariff rate was reduced from 18 per cent to 16 per cent, a reduction of two in the rate of duty, which is really a reduction of nearly 10 per cent.

It may not be out of place for me to say something about the present conditon of the country and the condition in which it was left by hon. gentlemen opposite. The marvel to me is that these hon. gentlemen do not consider the changed conditions. The present government found the country with deficits and almost in the throes of a revolution—class against class, religion against religion, and everything that would make for the worse condition of Canada rather than for its better condition What happened ? We are to-day exporting nearly $100 per head for all the people of Canada, besides living much better than we did before. These are the conditions that exist to-day, and every man sees them. I was told by a manufacturer not long ago, one who only wants what is fair, living in a city of 40,000 or 50,000 population, that he actually cannot get men to work. Is that not a state of things for which everybody should be grateful.

Mr. PUTTEE. What city is that ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Except the farmers would buy more.

Mr. FRASER. Of course they would buy more if there were more manufacturers ; but how does the ex-minister suppose that sixty-five people are going to be made rich by feeding fifteen people, the proportion between farmers and manufacturers ? I say that the more men you have consuming things produced on farms the better ; but I deny these things are going to be brought about by protection, because while admitting that you may aid a few men, you are hindering the great body of the people. Canada for the Canadians, I hear ; but every time it is Canada for the few. I am in favour of Canada for the Canadians. I am in favour of laying tribute on every country under the sun, in order that Canada may be made greater than it is. But I refuse to acknowledge that Canada for the Canadians means Canada for the favoured few. They wish to build up a wall by which the Canadians are fleeced. Is that Canada for the Canadians ? Give every man a fair show, and then the best conditions will be realized.

One thing I wish to say to the right hon. leader of the government, and I say it with all the more ease because he is absent. If he has done nothing else, he has since 1896 done more to cement together all the races and creeds in Canada than all the men in Canada before him. I venture to make this observation, that the Protestants of Canada understand our Catholic fellow-citizens, and have a better and higher idea of them than sometimes in our narrowness we had before, and our Catholic fellow-citizens, I think, understand us better and hold better relations with us than they did before. We talk of protection to help the few ; but the men who can bring Canadians together, whether they be English, Scotch, Irish, French, German, or any other nationality, and cement them together as Canadians, does more than any other man or combination of men can do by any other method. Is there not to-day a better feeling among our people ? I venture to make the statement, Mr. Speaker, that hereafter it will be impossible to raise the racial and religious cries that formerly prevailed in Canada. I think the good sense of the people of Canada will frown down any attempt of that kind. It may be that some would-be politicians will have to go out of business. Thank God if they do go out of business, when the general community is coming to understand better what will lead to the higher development of Canada. I wish to say this as a Protestant, that the right hon. leader of the government will leave a name for thus doing that will be green in Canada so long as men worship at different altars or trace their families back to the various nations of the world.

The hon. leader of the opposition made a western trip. I was not invited to go with him nor can I speak of what happened from personal observation. But four things followed, which we all know. We know that from the extreme west the first answer that came to that movement which was going to result in the defeat of the government, was the election in Burrard of a government supporter without opposition. The opposition there, even after this visit of their leader to the west, could not muster among them a candidate. Then there came an answer from central Canada, given in the election in North Ontario. Everybody knows the result of that election. Following that came the voice of the far east, in the Yarmouth election, where the Liberal majority of 250 at the general election was raised to the overwhelming one of 800 or 900. These are the results which followed the preaching of the Conservative gospel by the leader of the opposition. But perhaps my hon. friend was unfortunate in his choice of the gentlemen who accompanied him and they may have spoiled the good he must otherwise have done. The hon. gentleman had occasion to attend a banquet in his own province in the town of Sydney. Here let me say that, and as a rule, Mr. Speaker, we run local politics in Nova Scotia on the same lines as federal politics. On his way to that banquet, my hon. friend passed through the county of Antigonish, where a local election was being held, and despite his presence the Conservative party there could not find a candidate to present himself in their interests. There are the four results which followed this remarkable tour. How can we explain these results? I would venture to suggest that the condition of the people was such that they were too busy to turn out and take part in politics. Go to a farmer, when he is busy gathering in the products of the soil or putting seed into the ground, and ask him to attend a political meeting and you will find that he will prefer remaining at home, where he is contented and happy, doing labour that is going to bring him in profits, than to go and listen to the arguments of hon. gentlemen who want to make him dissatisfied with his lot. With the sun shining, with the blessing of Providence in his work, with every man busy, he will take no chances, he will not seek to change his present condition, and that is why my hon. friend cannot get followers.

Mr. Speaker, this is a country of vast extent. The conditions that exist in one locality should not be allowed to colour our views of the conditions that prevail generally throughout the Dominion. I made the calculation, and was able to make the statement in Boston, which I now repeat. They were surprised to learn, but it is perfectly true, that neither in ancient nor modern times was there ever a people of the same population as the Canadians, who did as much trade per head as we have done in the last six years. No nation, not even the nation from which we have sprung—the land of all lands, Great Britain—can compare with us in that respect. We have discounted our neighbours to the south, for in those six years we have done 75 per cent more business per head than they. That is the condition of the country, and that being its condition, should not wise men draw from it the conclusion as to what is going to be best for this whole country. I heard an hon. gentleman opposite say: 'I know no west and no east.' I am glad of it, Mr. Speaker. I do not want any question interjected into the politics of Canada which will disturb our happy relations with one another, but so soon as you propose a policy which will give advantages to certain people in Canada at the expense of others, you break away from that policy, which recognizes no east or west but takes the country as a whole. But when we learn the important lesson that every interest in the east and every interest in the west are joined, that no man liveth to himself as no man dieth to himself, then we will have laid down the golden rule in Canada and will perpetuate a different order of conditions to that which exists in the country to the south of us.

Men on both sides ask where is all this prosperity we are now enjoying coming from? Even Liberals are surprised that these conditions should not only continue, but increase. Hon. gentlemen opposite are unable to explain, they are lost in wonder, and their wonder is no doubt mingled with regret. But the answer to the question is easy. All the prosperity we are now enjoying comes from the soil. Everything comes from the soil—God's only foundation for a country's wealth.

When we properly appreciate that fact, we will, irrespective of party, do what we can, not to hurt the manufacturers or any one else, but to increase the general prosperity of east, west and middle. We in the east must understand that the wealth of the country, as well as its population, is going in the next twenty-five years to be centred in that mighty west beyond Lake Superior. Shall we do anything that will injure the new settler going into that country or tend to make his burdens too heavy? Shall we not rather see that while he pays a fair share of taxation, he shall have every advantage that ought to be given him. The future is partly in our own hands, under the beneficient power which rules over all. But let us at least join in this sentiment, that while Canada remains as she is—and long may she so remain—that while Canada remains connected with the mother of heroes and lions we shall follow in the footsteps of our motherland rather than deck ourselves out in the wretched, effete garments worn by the republicans in the country to the south of us. I fear not for the future of this country. With better ideas of our relations to one another as fellow-citizens, with more moderate and broader views of the religious and racial sentiments of the people, with every man at work the best he can to make this country prosperous, Canada is bound to go ahead with greater strides even than in the past few years. We can never suffer, as other countries have suffered, because while there is not more than 5 per cent of our good agricultural land now in use, we will be always able to supply these products which men must have, whether times be good or bad. And as the good work and policy of the present government become more and more appreciated, as the beneficial effects of their administration become more and more felt, our hon. friends opposite will find that not even the magic lantern displays of the hon. member from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) in an election campaign will enable them to lead the Canadian people away from their loyalty to that noblest Canadian, the right hon. Prime Minister, and those who are glad to follow his leadership, and who at the same time are quite ready to tell him when he is wrong. We have refrained from doing that, because there was no occasion. And join with all the members on this side—and I am sure that the members on the other side will join with us too in their heart's best sentiments—in believing that the interests of Canada are safer in the hands of the present government than they have been in the hands of any government that has ever held power in this country.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, in view of the amount of industrial unrest and strife in the country at this time, I think that one remark made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) should not be passed unnoticed. He has asserted that labour is harder to obtain in Canada to-day than ever it has been before, and that wages are higher in Canada to-day than ever they have been before. I will not deal with that saving clause, for we could come to no agreement on that, at all events. But I do say that labour is not scarce in Canada to-day, and that wages are not comparatively high. The man who earns wages estimates those wages by their purchasing power ; and to-day wages purchase far less than they did two years ago. This is not simply an assertion of my own, for financial concerns have declared it and proved it all over the country. Dunn & Co. published the fact last fall that, in the last two years, taking the country over, the prices of commodities—that is, the cost of living—had increased from 25 to 35 per cent. That is practically a reduction of the earners' wages to that extent. So far as the west is concerned, the increase in the cost of living is even higher than that, and with the influx of immigration and the general prosperity, it is no exaggeration to say that the cost of living is 40 per cent more than it was three years ago. Then, I say that wages are not relatively high. As to the matter of labour being scarce, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), in his remarks on that point, simply voiced a general opinion in this country at the present time, an opinion which has been encouraged and generally accepted, but which is not in accordance with the facts. In this House we have had a proposition to increase the salaries of judges, the higher cost of living being recognized ; and in the other House, among other labour matters, they have been discussing the matter of raising the wages of the lieutenant governors. One of the senators, in urging this increase, gave it to be understood that he was not encouraging or promoting a strike on behalf of the lieutenant governors in Canada. Now, if that hon. gentleman should be unsuccessful ; if there should be a strike or a walk-out on the part of the lieutenant governors of Canada, this government will see whether the labour market is over-crowded or not. I am sure it will put them in a very different position from any they have been in before, if they have trouble in finding men to fill these offices.

In this debate, as in other similar debates in previous sessions, the question of what constitutes a surplus has been brought up. There seems to be a great variety of opinions on the subject. In some years there has been a question of whether we have had a surplus or not. Owing to the matter of bookkeeping it can be argued in either way. Sometimes our revenue has been less than our ordinary expenditure. But sometimes our ordinary expenditure has been less than our revenue, though the whole expenditure is greater than the revenue ; yet we are told on such occasions that we have a surplus, because some of the expenditure has been charged to capital account. For my part, I see no great objection to having a capital account for the Dominion apart from the consolidated account. But if we are to have a capital account, then the items that are to be charged to it in all the departments should be specified and known and thoroughly understood. It is now at the option of the heads of the departments to say what expenditures of their departments shall be chargeable to capital and what to consolidated account. And of course, the heads of our departments wish to make as good a showing in the House as possible. While this state of affairs exists we are bound to take the total expenditure of the country and call that the expenditure. Whatever revenue there is above that may be called a surplus. But, even on that line of reasoning, we have a surplus this year. I can see no room at all for arguing that matter. But there is one point I have not seen brought up before, and that is that if we have a surplus we have no proposal for reducing taxation. And this brings up the question of the government's fiscal policy. If it were a policy of high protection for the industries of the country, the matter of surplus would not make much difference, for surpluses would not often exist. But if we have a revenue tariff, then I say this matter of surpluses demands attention. There is one course for the coming year every time there is a surplus. The imperial government have had their budget brought down since ours. Finding that the war expenditure having ceased, they have a surplus, the announcement of that fact is immediately followed by statements of the reduction of taxation. We have not received any such promise as that. And I draw the conclusion from this that the fiscal policy of Canada is not in the future, even if it has or has not been in the past, to be established on any principle either of protection or revenue tariff. That means that the government are going to be guided by the forces or influences that are brought to bear upon them in framing their policy. And that is why it seems to me very important that the members of this House, as representing the several constituencies of the country, should make their statements of where they stand on this question of protection or revenue duties. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), in speaking early in this budget debate, made this reference to the North-west :

> Now let me say one last word about the North-west Territories and Manitoba. One of the influences, perhaps the main influence, which has prevented the revision of the tariff comes from the North-west Territories. That I happen to know.

Mr. Speaker, I look upon that as a very valuable statement, and one that should be gratifying to the representatives and to the people of the North-west ; and I think the other parts of Canada can put that on the credit side when they are considering the matter of expense in connection with the North-west. I am free to say that last year when this subject was under debate, I feared that this year there was going to be a different story to tell, and that we were going to be face to face with a demand for higher duties ; and if the west has been the main cause, or a material cause, in restraining that sentiment, I think we can well be satisfied, and we can say that we have done something for the good of the country as a whole. That brings us to a consideration of the influences that are going to guide the policy of the government in the future. Naturally, as has been pointed out before in this debate, those influences and those interests which make the most profit out of a protective tariff are the very ones that are the most in evidence, and that are the most persistently and powerfully before the government. The producer, the farmer, the worker, naturally cannot get his views nor his influence easily before the government. In view of these facts, it seems to me more important than ever, for the sake of good government, in order that the sentiments of the whole people may be carried out, that representatives of the people who come here should get up and state exactly what they think themselves of this question, and what they hope for in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were some announcements made in the budget speech which I cannot help looking upon but as of a protective character. I cannot form any other conclusion. I regret most that anything in the nature of a threat should be held out to Great Britain that probably the British preference may be repealed. Sir, I always was a supporter of that preference, I believed in it. I thought there was a good deal that was right and sound in that position. I did not consider the preference was made for Britain's benefit, though I knew it might have some effect there, that it might commend itself to the people of Great Britain ; but I believed that it was adopted primarily for our own benefit. I believed it had an effect beneficial to our own people. I believe that the operation of the preferential tariff with Great Britain has been a distinct advantage to this country, and that we should retain it, and retain it for that purpose alone. And it would seem to me somewhat ungracious now to make a threat to Great Britain to repeal it in certain eventualities. Probably there was not sentiment in the first place that dictated that preference, I prefer to believe that there was not. I accepted it myself as a Canadian business proposition, and as such I intend to stand by it.

Then, Sir, another thing of a distinctly protective character is the German surtax. I regret very much that its effect will be probably more disastrous in the immediate future to the Canadian consumer than it will be to Germany, though in the long run as a retaliatory measure, Germany will suffer the most from it. But in view of our considerable imports of sugar from Germany, and our rapidly growing imports of structural iron, the imposition of this surtax will not be to the benefit of the Canadian consumer in the near future. Both as regards sugar and structural iron, the surtax will have a protective effect. Then another announcement in the budget speech was that a duty would be put on steel rails. Two years ago the Finance Minister announced a bounty on steel. Previous to that we had a bounty on iron, and I believe that the bounty system is the most honest protective system. When the country deliberately hands over cash to any company or individual as a bounty, the people know what it costs, what it is, and what it is worth, and just how much the tax amounts to. To that extent I think a bounty system in regard to these industries is far preferable to an import duty, which becomes a tax to the consumers. But, Sir, I cannot see any warrant or any necessity for offering $7 a ton on steel rails. When the industry gets into a position that it can supply the market the duty will go into force, and the effect will be to increase the cost of steel rails to railways. Seeing that it has been the policy of the country to assume to a great extent the burden of the construction of railways by granting bonuses the result will be that we shall be asked to grant larger bonuses. It would have been a more honest and straightforward proposition to give a straight bounty. In regard to binder twine, which at first appears to be a protective proposition, I think there can be but little objection to that. I would myself have preferred to see the burden placed upon our binder twine manufacturers lifted by a straight bounty given to them, equal to the amount of the rebate given in the United States on all twine manufactured there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the amendment that has been moved to the motion. It states that the operation of the present tariff has been unsatisfactory, and that what is wanted is a declared policy of such adequate protection in Canada to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures, and industries, as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians. There is a difference of opinion as to what is meant by adequate protection, mutual preference, and all these propositions that we hear so much of in this House. I see no need of quibbling over the meaning of the words at all. I think the men who make these motions give us clearly to understand what they mean. Of all the amendments that have been moved to the budget since I have been in this House, they mean this one thing, higher tariff, more protection to the manufacturers. I am bound to deal with it as such and I am bound to vote on it as such. This amendment states that it would give protection to the labour, agricultural products, manufactures and industries, although it has been pretty fairly demonstrated on both sides of the House that protection to the agricultural industry is something that is beyond us and that it is an illusion. It is just something to talk about and nothing more. If the industries of this country were to be so much protected that from very shame an attempt was made to protect the farmer in the same way, I say that his last state would be worse than his first, I think the proposition to protect the farmer by absolutely debarring from this country all kinds of products that are in any way similar or identical to our native products is a proposition that is an absurdity. The fact that agricultural products are imported into this country means that there is some vital necessity for them in some parts of the country. Let us take the example of bananas and the like, for instance. They come into this country. Nobody wants to exclude them ; all we want to do is to cheapen them. If hay and the like is imported it must make for the benefit of the farmer, as the importation must be made to supply a shortage in some district at a particular time. The very fact that he needs hay badly enough to make it necessary to import it would indicate that he should be allowed to import it to the full extent required. Such an exchange of products must be a benefit to our farmers as well as to the people on the other side of the line who trade with them. Now, I come to protection as regards labour. I listen always very attentively in this House when I hear the apostles of high protection approach this subject. I have never heard them do more. I have never heard them go into the subject. I have heard them assert that protection does benefit the labourer. I have never heard them explain how or point to any instances where it has really done so. My conclusion is that it does not and that it is not calculated so to do. The statement though of all hon. members who stand for this policy is that protection is for the benefit of the labourer. It was perhaps put as pithily as it has ever been in one sentence uttered during the debate of last year by one hon. member who said :

> The basis of the national policy is to give our industrial classes work.

I am prepared to admit that, but that is very nearly its limit. What is there in this proposal merely to provide work ? Is it more work that a man wants ? We want, they say, to give him lots of work, and long hours of work. Apply that logic to the farmer and see how its suits his case. The protectionists say to the farmers : Work is a good thing, you want work, you are fortunate that you can work, what you want is work, go and work—work—work. You are fortunate for you do not have to get the permission of another man to work. You can employ yourself. Do not come here bothering about legislation, transportation and tariffs, leave that to us and go to work—we have given you lots of work. How does that sound as applied to the farmer ? It is just the same when you apply it to the workingman. When you tell him that all he wants is work he replies that it is the conditions, made to a certain extent by governments that affects the results that he gets from his work. He does not want so much work, he wants a better living and a better opportunity to enjoy life. After all that is the furthest extent that hon. gentlemen who support protection for the benefit of the worker can go. They say that the national policy provided work for the industrial classes. Then, they say : We want the reservation of the Canadian market for the Canadians. However, that sentiment may be approved, however nice the sentence may sound, what they mean when they introduce a protective resolution to that effect is to reserve the Canadian market to the Canadian manufacturer. What is there in that sentiment to appeal to the farmer ? He wants a great deal more than the Canadian market. This country needs a great deal more than the Canadian market. I have heard it said that without high protection it would be made a slaughter market. If this tariff wall is put up it will be a slaughter market for the Canadian farmer and the Canadian workingman all right enough. I am aware that in this country as well as in other countries there are some men who are entitled to and do speak for labour who believe in protection. I often wondered how this was so, and what reason they could give to themselves for their opinions. I have followed this cry in Canada for protection on behalf of the manufacturers very closely. I have followed all their assertions that they are interested in the workers who work for them, and I have found that there is only one time when the manufacturer as a rule displays his interest in the workers, and that is when he wants more protection. Outside of that everything that the workingman goes into, that he puts time and his money into, in order to improve his own position, is looked upon coldly by the manufacturer and he has then no help or assistance or sympathy for the labourer. Yet, in this one matter that means so much to the manufacturer, the worker is told to believe that the manufacturer is looking after his interests. The story is not plausible enough to stand investigation. It does not stand the wear when it is on the statute-book. It is not in the interest of the worker to have high protection to give to the man who has to pay him practically absolute power to fix the price of all things he has to buy. It is not good logic and it is not good business for the man who works in the factory, or on the farm, or in the mine. But, the manufacturer is a wise man. He has two strings to his bow. It is generally supposed to be evidence of wisdom to have an alternative route. It reminds me of the darky whose business was coon-catching. He had traps set both ways and when asked the reason for this he said it was to catch them both coming and going. That is what the manufacturer does. He wants to catch the workers both coming and going. He wants protection for the article he manufactures and he wants the fullest freedom in the employment of his labour. He wants the privilege not only to bring in labour but he wants the government to spend more money yet to import labour. He wants the freest of free trade and he wants a bonused trade in the one thing he buys, the labour of his fellowman. He wants a bonus against the one thing the workingman has to sell; that is his labour, and yet he wants to have protection for the article he is going to make and going to sell. It is a scheme that works both ways; the traps are set both coming and going there, Mr. Speaker, and for my part I think that these extremes in both ways make for his undoing.

I want to deal for a little while with the form and extent and methods of our present immigration system. There is a great deal of immigration at the present time; there is a tremendous call for it; prosperity seems to need many immigrants. A few days ago, the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) prompted by the action taken by the Toronto Trades and Labour Council, put a question to the ministry, the gist of which was: Whether Mr. W. T. R. Preston the Canadian immigration agent in England stated that mechanics were simply unobtainable in Toronto owing to the great demand for skilled labour in that city. In reply to that question the acting Minister of the Interior (Hon. Sir William Mulock) stated: Instructions have been sent to immigration agents to confine their efforts towards promoting the immigration of agricultural classes. Now, Sir, I have been interested in this matter and I have gone to the minister, and I know that the policy of this government is to encourage the immigration from foreign countries of agricultural labourers and those who till the land. But I want to state most emphatically to the government and to the acting Minister of the Interior, that this agent in London is not in sympathy with that policy of the government to encourage only agriculturists to come to Canada. I know as a matter of fact that that is the policy of the government, this year, last year, and for years, and the minister has told us emphatically that the government would not adopt the policy of encouraging mechanics to come to Canada. I know as a matter of fact that instructions to that effect have been sent to the government agents in the United States and more especially in England.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these instructions ignored ?

Mr. PUTTEE. I do not know whether they are ignored or not, but I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the government immigration agent in London is not in sympathy with that policy, and therefore he certainly exceeds the instructions if he does not go contrary to them. Since the question was answered in this House, I have noticed that Mr. Preston has answered it in London also, and it seems to me he has answered it in a way that is hardly respectful to the government and to the minister. Before the question was asked in this House and when the new government offices were opened in the centre of London, the newspapermen were invited to the opening and they got interviews with Mr. Preston. I quote from the London 'Daily Mail' of April 17:

> Already well over twelve thousand people have left England this year to settle in the far west. Mr. Preston declares that he can find work at once for 40,000 men, and that the rush, great as it has been, has not yet met requirements for labour there.
> The number leaving this country would have been much greater but for the fact that there are no assisted passengers.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is hardly in keeping with the government instructions to their agents, that these agents should be publicly regretting that there are no assisted passages.

> Thousands of people have applied and been stopped by the want of the eight or nine pounds necessary for the journey. If they can manage to get there, and land without a penny in their pockets, plenty of work is waiting for them, said Mr. Preston; 'but it would never do for the government to pay the passages of people who in a few months, if they settle, will have votes. Philanthropic agencies do a little, but if I had £20,000 to-day I could spend it well in helping good people out—people who have little chance here and who are wanted and would do well there.'

Some of the stories Mr. Preston tells are pathetic.

I know, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Preston can tell pathetic stories.

One family, by selling everything, raised just enough to pay their journey from Liverpool. They bought their tickets, but then had no money for the fare between London and the seaport. Many manage to raise all but a pound or two, and then come to a dead stop. The experience of Canada in the past has shown that often enough the poorest men in the end make the best settlers. A party of prosperous farmers once compared experiences to learn how much each of them had on landing. It was found that the richest had three pounds.

The Canadian government is anxious to contradict the stories that have reached this country telling of congestion at Winnipeg. 'There is nothing,' Mr. Preston says, 'in the situation which should cause intending emigrants to postpone their departure.'

Now, Sir, I want to say that we should have no agents in London, in Britain or on the European continent telling the people that all they want to do is just to land on our shores. I say that it is nearly criminal to get families to leave their homes in England, to go on our prairies to encounter conditions which they know nothing about, and to induce them to do this by telling them that if they get to Canada without a cent, work is waiting for them. It is not a fact. It means suffering, it means loss to them ; it means a bad name for our North-west and for Canada, and it ought to be absolutely and instantly stopped. The only people that should be told that it is safe to come to Canada with only enough money to pay their passage or a little more, are the young people, and they should be young people from the farms. Whatever volume of immigration there is from the old countries a large proportion of it will go to our large cities, and this immigration comes into very serious competition with the labouring men in these cities. It causes wages to be broken down at the very time when prices are increased as they are in the city of Winnipeg to-day. And as to the prosperity why prosperity is simply a curse to the man who is earning the same wages as he did before and has to pay higher prices for the goods he consumes. A few years ago the city of Toronto used to be flooded time and again by immigrants, but now the mecca is Winnipeg and a large portion of the old country immigrants who come there stay right in the city. There is always bound to be a large portion of these immigrants in the cities when everything possible is being done in Great Britain to encourage the emigration of the knock abouts from the English towns who are unaccustomed to any kind of farm labour. It should be insisted upon at once, that our European agents should stop, and stop by instructions from the government, telling people that all they want to do is simply to have money enough to pay their passage. It is criminal to bring wives and families out here on such representation as that. A great deal of the immigration work done to-day is being done in large cities. I have never yet had a proper explanation of why it was that about eighteen months ago it was necessary to open up an emigration office in the city of Birmingham. Why there is hardly a green blade of grass within twenty miles of Birmingham; it is the centre of the Black country. To go there to secure immigrants is positively absurd. You might as well go to Whitechapel, and as a matter of fact they do go to Whitechapel. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) was curious to know whether the mechanics of other cities were protesting in the same way as were those of Toronto. I have here a circular that has been drafted for the Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council, and instructions have been issued to have it sent out as widely as possible over Great Britain, to the large national organization headquarters, and to all the newspapers with a request that it should be published. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this circular is substantially correct, and I had it in my mind when I referred to the remarks of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) when he said that wages were too high and labour too scarce in this country. This circular was drafted by men who, I admit, are right in the very hot spot of the circular that has been sent out :—

In view of the prevailing conditions in this province, the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg has decided to lay before the British public certain facts concerning the present 'boom' in immigration to Canada. The glowing and highly coloured statements and reports sent from this country give an entirely misleading, not to say mendacious, account of the prospects for immigrants, and mostly emanate from interested sources. The steamship and railway companies naturally desire passengers ; the business classes hope to profit by the influx of people ; the employers seek to intensify competition in the labour market, while the government itself is not above suspicion, as it is entirely representative of those various interests. There is thus a gigantic conspiracy to promote and welcome the tide of immigration that has set in towards this country.

More dangerous still is a certain class of individuals, of which the Rev. I. M. Barr is typical, who seeks to exploit the immigrants by forming colonies, &c. This reverend gentleman has just arrived with a 'colony' of 2,000 people, in the promotion of which he has amassed a tidy little fortune, variously estimated from $10,000 to $35,000, and is already being bitterly denounced by his disillusioned dupes, many of whom find themselves stranded, practically without resources or employment, in a strange land. What are the facts ? It is, no doubt, true that there is a prospect of success, for any man with a little experience, in farming ; but he must have capital. Any one intending to go farming, even on a homestead, should have not less than from £200 to £300. Young men are in demand for farm servants, but the demand is now almost filled, owing to the enormous influx. In the cities the demand for artisans will be, in most cases, fully met by the supply, while there is over-supply of unskilled labour, except in cases where strikes are pending. Wages, no doubt, seem high, compared with those prevailing in England, but this is not because of any scarcity of labour, still less does it show that the labourers are particularly well off. It is due to the high cost of living, especially in the matter of rent and fuel. Living has gone up 25 per cent in the last year or so and numerous strikes are pending in all parts of the country in the attempt to raise wages to subsistence point.

Under the conditions we would advise intending immigrants to exercise the greatest caution before coming out, especially those with families, unless they have capital. With a view of preventing English workingmen from being duped or victimized, the Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council send this warning and hope that you will give it due publicity.

It is signed on behalf of the council by the president and the acting secretary. Now, I submit, knowing some of the facts, that that is a fair and fairly moderate statement; but if the gist of that should be telegraphed across the ocean, it would be denied by the government agent in London to-morrow, as other statements have been recently.

Now, Mr Speaker, in connection with this question of protection, I wish to refer to the speech of the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte). It will be in the recollection of the House that he touched upon more really interesting matters than most of the other speakers have done since ; but at the same time, a most peculiar strain to be heard in a Canadian parliament ran through his whole speech. The greater portion of the speech was a glorification of the United States, and by the same reasoning a condemnation of the national policy of Canada. If his theory was right, what condemned the national policy was that it was just one-half too low down, so far as protective duties were concerned ; and he referred to some authorities on the other side of the line in justification of his remarks. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I in no way follow him in the deductions he draws from the policy followed in the United States in its effect on the workers. I say again, and he did not prove the contrary, that the protective tariff does not necessarily, and even does not at all, affect the standing or the standard of life of the worker. One instance of that is very pronounced in the United States to-day. Their cotton industry is protected by about 50 per cent. During the last two years there has been a great movement in that industry. Villages and towns in the state of Massachusetts and the adjoining states which depended entirely on the cotton mills, are now closed up. The cotton mills have gone What did they go for ? Not because they wanted more protection ; they got about all they could get. They went because they wanted cheaper labour, though it was as low as would maintain a decent standard of living in the northern states. They left almost in a body; but before going they sent their emissaries to several of the legislatures of the southern states, and secured the repeal of their laws against child labour and their factory laws. The cotton industry is now centered in the southern states, and in that industry there is to-day a condition of child labour that is almost incredible. All through the states as well as through this country there is quite a movement on against the dirty little cigarette ; but this question of child labour in the cotton mills of the south is not attracting the attention or getting the assistance of these people who are so interested in the children and the workers. The manufacturer does not necessarily seek protection for the sake of benefiting those who work in his factory ; not by any means. The hon. member for St. Mary's division referred to a speech made by Mr. Andrew Carnegie at St. Louis. I think it was very unfortunate for that hon. gentleman's argument having the object of commending protection to the worker of this country, that his first quotation should be made from a speech by Andrew Carnegie. That gentleman has profited well from protection in the United States ; but his workers cannot say the same. Industries that were under his control in the states not many years ago, under a tremendous protective system, were selling armour plate to build the American navy at three times its cost. That is the kind of protection Andrew Carnegie believes in. It has been wonderfully successful from his point of view, and the hon. member for St. Mary's division quotes his opinion in this House as an argument for Canada adopting as adequate protection as they have in the states. Mr. Carnegie says :

> The manufacturer on a large scale can afford to make many contracts in distant parts of the world, and even some at home, at a direct loss in times of depression, knowing that, upon the whole, the result will be less unprofitable by running full than running short time or stopping. Hence, those possessing the most profitable home market can afford to supply foreign markets without direct profits, or even at a loss whenever necessary.

That is a nice doctrine.

> Politicians give far too much attention to distant foreign markets, which can never amount to much ; and far too little to measures for improving conditions at home, which would increase the infinitely more important home market.

Yes, the home market bound up and delivered absolutely to men of this stamp. That is the policy of Andrew Carnegie. Even though you sell cheaper outside, even though you sell at a loss outside, take it out of your own people, take it out of your own workmen. Of course, where else could it come from ? Sell cheaper to foreigners and make all you can out of the people at home, and in this way, within the last thirty years, immense fortunes have been amassed in the United States by means of the highest possible protective tariff. What has protection done in the United States during the last thirty years ? It has built up a plutocracy. It has enabled a few to amass fortunes, it has created an aristocratic class in that short time more powerful than the ruling classes in Great Britain. What it took centuries to do in Great Britain has been done in thirty years in the United States. High protection has taken from the American people the heritage of that vast continent which should belong to them. It has enabled the wealth produced by the people to be used for the enrichment of a class which is fast becoming all powerful, and which to-day is not only running industries, but owns the government from the bottom to the top. I do not know that we need that kind of aristocracy in this country. But that is what we have been developing, and what we would develop much faster, if we were to adopt the tariff of our prosperous neighbour to the south.

My hon. friend asked me what about the lead duty. I am glad he put that question, because I had omitted to refer to it, in dealing with the effect of the western settlement on this question, as it was put forward by the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Of course in the west and other districts, there will always be some industry that wants protection. But I submit that, as compared with the mass of the people, those interests are very small, and this very item that my hon. friend has referred to is unimportant compared to the general interests. The lead men are asking for protection. What do they base their demands on ? That they cannot produce lead ? No, not at all. But they base it on this plea. They say : You have increased by protection the prices of everything we consume. You practically have burdened our trade, and we want equal protection with these other people. Sir, go on that line and you will never see the end. You will finally attempt to protect the farmers, and the farmers' last condition will be worse than the first.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of an increased duty on lead ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman would not think I was a politician if I gave him a direct answer.

Mr. BLAIN. I am in earnest. And I ask the hon. gentleman if he is in favour of an increased duty on lead.

Mr. PUTTEE. All through this debate I have noticed that on one side of the House and the other, these straight questions have been put in order to try and get a man to commit himself. When I started to speak, I said that I did believe it was the duty of men representing constituencies to commit themselves on these questions, but they have not done so. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I am not in favour of the duty on lead and shall vote against it, if proposed.

Mr. GALLIHER. At the same time, you want your miners who mine that lead to be paid exceedingly high wages ?

Mr. BENNETT. He wants Chinamen.

Mr. PUTTEE. I have found out in my experience that it is not a protective duty which enables mine owners, any more than others, to pay higher wages. They do not pay higher wages on that ground. The workingmen and miners have found out that labour organizations alone have the power to increase wages. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman. That is a fact, and in view of the matters that are in the public mind at present, it would be well for hon. gentlemen to digest that fact. When certain Bills come down from the other House, that will be a good time to discuss those matters. Before I leave this question of the manufacturers double traps—traps that catch coming and going—I want shortly to refer to a further lesson which shows the whole-hearted goodness of the manufacturer when he comes to deal with the worker. I refer to the lesson we had during this last week in the city of Ottawa. I have heard the most extravagant, unreliable and unwarranted statements—as statements tending to make trouble between the workers and the employers, statements that should properly be called demagogic—made in Ottawa by men who want higher protection. I have been astounded at the statements and the speeches made and the spirit shown in this city by the Manufacturers' Association last Monday. They showed very plainly their attitude towards the workers, they told the government that they wanted free immigration. They want the government to spend more money bringing in more immigrants. They said : We want you to understand that we want an immigration policy for the cities. That was the statement made by these men who want protection for the benefit of the worker. Is not their pretension of interest in the worker a piece of hyprocrisy ? Not only are they desirous of having traps to catch both coming and going, traps that give them power to tax and power to intensify competition in labour, but they want to spike the guns of the labouring men. They are seeking to have our labour organizations practically outlawed. They are endeavouring to have these organizations divided in order that they may the better crush them. Why are they doing this ? Because we have the power to increase wages and the manufacturer, though he asks for protection, does not want to increase wages and does not intend doing so unless he cannot help it.

Now, I wish to deal a little more closely with the matter of protection to the workmen. Can it be done ? It has never been expounded by the men who ask for protection for their industries ; but can it be done ? Now, I take it that as a matter of fact the imposing of protective duties is not a simple matter. Of course it is simple enough for a deputation to come to Ottawa and wait on the government with the request that the taxes be increased to a certain figure on certain articles, with a view to giving protection to that line of manufacture. But to actually fix the duties is not nearly so simple a matter as that. If you were to get the experience and opinions of those who have held the position of Finance Minister in this country, I fancy you would find that, in the matter of fixing duties they have to go very minutely into all these matters, they have to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the details of the private business of the parties interested, in order to learn the proper and equitable way to arrange those duties. I suppose there was something of that in it when the Manufacturers' Association wanted to submit their schedules to the government in private. There were matters in connection with their business which they did not wish to make known to everybody. Now, can you protect the labourer with your protective tariff ? Well, yes, you can. Whether it is wise to do so, or not I do not discuss at this stage. But I for one will never believe in the honesty of the manufacturer or other person who asks for high protective duties for the benefit of the worker, unless he is willing to have included in the schedules a minimum wage in the industries concerned ; so much protection, so much wage ; so much increase in protection, so much increase in the wage. If protection is for the benefit of the people, let it be so arranged that the people shall secure that benefit. Of course there will be trouble in so arranging it. You will have to go thoroughly into the man's business. As I have said, a man does not object to it as interfering with his business when inquiry has to be made with a view to making good his demand for increased protection. But when you come to ask for a minimum rate of wage, either through the union or through the government, he wants to run his own business, and does not want to have outsiders prying into his affairs. But, in a protective tariff, it is only when there is a properly digested scheme providing that, in every industry which the tariff is calculated to protect, it shall really protect the people and give a minimum wage with an increasing rate according to the amount of taxation, that I would be prepared to say that you have applied protection to industry for the benefit of the worker. Then, we shall hear from the farmer in a different strain.

Now, the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) dealt with this question as widely and as fully as he could, and put forward his policy. He put forward a proposition that I knew him to have entertained in the past, and that is outlined in this excerpt from his speech :

> If we give cheap transportation between the west and the east why should we not supply the west with our goods ? We are prepared to increase our transportation facilities by rail and by water. Let us combine this Dominion solidly together. National unity follows commercial intercourse. We are settling the west with foreign elements. Let us have as much intercourse as we can with those foreign elements. Let us trade together, let us unite the country solidly together by a strong Canadian tariff and by a scientific system of transportation.

The hon. member takes his stand as an easterner, and speaks to the west and says : Help us to get absolute control of this market—Canada for the Canadian manufacturers—and we will give you railway facilities. What is the method adopted by the government of Canada in giving railway facilities ? It assumes a good proportion of the cost of construction by giving a bonus to the railway companies. So, what does this proposition mean ? It means : You give us power to tax you on everything you buy, then all of us will join to give money to the railway promoters, and then we shall all be better off. Certainly the people of the west will not be better off. There is nothing in that for the west. That is not a proposition that need be made at all. The west does not want transportation facilities as a gift or as a toy ; it has got to have transportation facilities for the benefit of the east, as well as for its own benefit. It must have transportation facilities, if this country is to progress. And so the question comes : How are we to get these facilities ? Are they to be provided by bonusing again ? Are we going to accept this proposition to give the eastern manufacturers the power to tax us on what we buy, and then all of us give more in bonuses to the transportation companies or rather to the promoters of transportation companies. No, Mr. Speaker. I believe with the hon. member for St. Mary's division, that the question of transportation is one that demands immediate attention ; I believe that it is high time that the government of this country should take hold of this question, no longer leaving itself to be the shuttlecock of circumstances, but with a firm hand direct the preparation of the channels in which the export and import business of the country is to run. I believe that this country would heartily endorse and support a policy that was inclusive, that was strong, that was wide and big enough to meet the whole circumstances, a policy of government construction and ownership of a transcontinental railway. I believe that the situation could be met now by the extension of the Intercolonial Railway through to the coast, or by the construction of an independent line, constructed, owned and operated by the government from ocean to ocean, and with a policy for business purposes, and large enough to meet all the wants of the west in the matter of branch lines. And I am reminded that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) dealt with this question, speaking in the same way in this debate as he has dealt with it in the west. He has avowed himself in favour of the government road, if we could only get it. But he said that we could not get it, and proceeded to drop tears because our government is based on wrong principles and because we are not fit to own and operate railways. There is too much corruption. So, much as he regrets it, he has to part with his principles of government ownership, and, perforce, must favour the bonusing of other railways.

Now, I admit, I insist even, that this question of control must be attended to before we undertake a system of government ownership. That is necessary in the interest of the public undertakings we have at present in hand. It is a reflection on the power of the people of Canada to govern themselves that this question of patronage and corruption should enter into all our undertakings. The present railway system and other public utilities operated by this government would all be better operated if they were taken altogether out of the influence of members of parliament, so that it would be useless for any man to approach a member of parliament to get a situation on the government road or in any government enterprise. What could be accomplished has been shown in Great Britain, where there is no connection at all between members of parliament and patronage. We have had lately in this country one or two illustrations of how this matter could be arranged ; and, though I am no great admirer of the present party system, at the same time I believe it could be made a benefit to both parties in this country if they would get together and come to an agreement in the matter of a commission. Both sides of this House could get together and formulate a scheme that would put the Intercolonial, the customs, the post office, the printing bureau and every other public institution out of the influence of members of this House. I say that some such arrangement as that must be arrived at before we can undertake government ownership of railways. I believe that a system of government ownership could be successfully undertaken, and the more comprehensive it was the more heartily it would be supported by the people.

We are going to have more transcontinental roads. They are not going to be built for colonization purposes, but for purposes of profit as business enterprises. All sorts of statements will be placed before this government by the promoters of those roads who will ask for aid. I imagine that there are good grounds for believing that public moneys are paid to promoters that do not go into the construction of roads. But the roads that are going to be built hereafter will not be for colonization purposes, but for business purposes. Every cent of money that goes into the construction of roads in the North-west will return a profit as a business undertaking. Now, as the producers are going to pay the dividends on those roads, let them be owned by the government. We will have to pay the freight and the interest, why not take the operation of the roads into our own hands and guide this business for the public advantage ? It seems to me that once the idea was grasped by the people of this country that these great public services could be put beyond the reach of political influences, the people would eagerly accept the scheme. What would be better to overcome and end the many grievances that are recurrent in the North-west with this tremendous increase in the business of grain transportation, than for the government to own the roads and handle all the grain directly, doing away with the private elevator system altogether ? Last year the Minister of Railways expressed his regret that his best year had been spoilt by a combination of the coal mine owners, and that he had to pay exorbitant prices for coal. The surplus he expected had been reversed in consequence. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were lost through the combination of the coal men. You get a transcontinental road owned by this government, and you would then have your own coal mine in the east and your own coal mine in the west. I advocate this because these men who advocate higher protection tell me that they are doing it in the interest of the man who works, that they want to ensure him steady employment, good wages, a good standard of living. Well, this is the way to procure him those benefits. If you want to guarantee to the workers of this country steady employment, good wages and fair conditions, let the government take hold of the business for the general benefit.

Then, what about the binder twine question ? That has been up every session I have been here. I think it has been wisely dealt with at the present time. But why should we not manufacture all the twine that is going to be needed in this country ? It is going to be needed in increasing quantities, it is already a big item. We manufacture already a portion of it in the penitentiaries, but why should not the government take hold of the entire business ? We find the manufacturers telling the government this session that they are face to face with ruin. Buy them out, and put in plant extensive enough to supply the demand of the whole Dominion from year to year, and I will dare to say that the consumer will get it cheaper, and get it better in the long run, than the farmers get it in the United States. Mr. Speaker, these things are not impossible, they are not impracticable. We have some very good institutions already in this country, but over in the old country these matters are carried on successfully. There is no better, and I think no bigger, institution in the world than the royal arsenal at Woolwich, carried on absolutely by the government, entirely divorced from political influences, with good wages and eight hours a day. It is not impossible for the people of this country to do the same thing if they take hold of it in a proper way and in a proper spirit. This is my answer to those gentlemen who want more protection for the sake of giving steady employment, better wages and better conditions to the working people.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I intended in the course of this debate to speak in my own language, but as the debate has been so protracted, I think I should not weary the House by a long speech in French, nor do I intend to speak in English more than a few minutes. I thought this evening, after hearing the very able speech made by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that I should reciprocate with him. After listening to the noble words which fell from his lips addressed to the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) I thought I should thank him in English, from the bottom of my heart, for the very kind feelings he uttered. My hon. friend the hon. member for Guysborough said, in concluding his speech, that the right hon. Prime Minister had done more for the peace, union and harmony which should reign in a mixed community like ours than any other public man in the past. Indeed Sir, he spoke the truth. It was said a few years ago by that great statesman, Mr. Gladstone, that the Manchester school in England had given the world what was termed by a literary genius Pax Britannica—British peace. May we not say that with the conciliatory policy which has been pursued by the right hon. premier since 1896, he has given to the Canadian people what I may term Pax Canadensis—Canadian peace. I may add this, before referring to the questions which have been discussed at such length by the speakers on both sides, that no man in this country, no man in my province, and I am proud to say it before my English fellow-members, has done more to root firmly in our soil the love of British institutions than the present right hon. leader of the government. Now, I also pay my respects to the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). We have been gratified with his visit during the last few months in the province of Quebec, and I am pleased to state that this distinguished gentleman has spoken with eloquence the language of the minority. It is a great example which he has set to his party and to our party, in fact, to all public men in this Dominion, by learning and speaking with grace the language of the minority. I have listened with particular attention to the speech made by my hon. friend the whip of the Conservative party Mr. Taylor). I was under the impression that the issue which he discussed had been settled long ago. For instance, he spoke of the Manitoba school question, and with no uncertain sound he raised his voice and addressing himself to the members of the government, he asked : Have you settled the school question ? Let me say that I have grave doubts as to the sincerity of my hon. friend. I well remember the attitude he took in 1896 when the Remedial Bill was brought before this House. The then whip of the Conservative party was very anxious that the Remedial Bill should not pass, although he was saying to his friends from the province of Quebec that he favoured the measure. Indeed, the question should not have been put to the members of the government. He should have turned to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and to the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and he should have asked my two distinguished friends, where since 1896, have the friends of the Manitoba minority been. They, in the province of Quebec have agitated that question year after year in the public press as well as in their speeches, in fact they made the whole campaign of 1896 on this question—and yet they have raised their voices in this House to ask the government for the settlement of that unfortunate question.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) allow me to ask him if he states that the Manitoba school question has been settled to the satisfaction of the minority.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will answer like a good Canadian. I will not speak as my hon. friend does, that is by stating one thing in the province of Quebec and another in the province of Manitoba. In the province of Quebec my hon. friend says that the question is not settled, but we hear of him speaking at a banquet in the city of Winnipeg in the presence of his leader and of his friends of the Conservative party there, and reading his speech as carefully as I can, I find nothing concerning the Manitoba school question. But I will now answer his question. To my mind the question is not fully settled, but I will add, and he knows I am speaking the truth, that in a mixed community like ours, life is made up of honourable compromises and honourable concessions. I will say further that time is a great healer, and if to-day, the Manitoba school question is not settled, at least from what I have heard with the exception of the city of Winnipeg the school law works fairly well. I trust that the majority in the province of Manitoba, when the time comes, and without any trouble, without raising any racial or religious issue, will bring a settlement that will satisfy the minority as we, in the province of Quebec have acted towards the Protestant minority, and as our friends in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have acted towards the Acadian minority. But my friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) also raised another old issue. He spoke of the plebiscite and asked the government if they had settled the question of prohibition. I would be very sorry for one that prohibition should exist, because I believe with the majority in my province, that things should remain as they are. But, I wish to protest against the remarks which fell from his lips. The hon. gentleman stated that we in our province, had been brought to the polls under the dictation of two or three members of the cabinet and that if we had been left free, probably we would have voted in favour of prohibition. In the province of Quebec we are against all excesses, the vote which was taken on the plebiscite was the true expression of the popular sentiment. We do not believe in prohibition by the statute-books, in the province of Quebec. But, let me say this to my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), and if he does not take my word for it, he can have the word of his leader from the province of Quebec (Mr. Monk). In Quebec, with the exception of the large cities, the municipal councils are at liberty to grant licenses for hotels and restaurants. and in three-fourths of the municipalities this privilege is not used, and though we are against prohibition by statute, we are nevertheless in favour of temperance by moral suasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the popular verdict is the criterion by which the policy of the government is to be judged, then, Sir, this government enjoys the full confidence of the Canadian people. Since the last session of this House, we have had by-elections in Maisonneuve, a manufacturing constituency, in Terrebonne, in Argenteuil, in Maskinonge, and in Two Mountains. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) made the fight of his life in these constituencies. He fought bravely, as he usually does. He came surrounded by his friends of the Conservative party and the issues or rather the 'issue,' for there was only one—was the tariff question. In these constituencies of the province of Quebec, as in the constituency of North Ontario, the electors declared themselves in favour of the fiscal policy of the government. Sir, I think that the defeat of that remarkable man, Mr. Foster—one cannot deny his ability, and he would have been an ornament to the House had he been elected—the defeat of Mr. Foster proves that this country is not in favour of any change in our tariff policy. The hon. leader of the opposition went to that constituency and he travelled from township to township making speeches, but notwithstanding all his efforts, in that Conservative stronghold, my young friend (Mr. Grant), whom I was pleased to listen to and to applaud this afternoon, carried the county by a very large majority.

We have been told that the Liberal party had played a mean trick on the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). We have been reminded several times during this debate, that we did not carry out the policy which we promised in 1896, and some one hinted—I think it was my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder)—that during the elections of 1896 some work was done behind the scenes by the leaders of the Liberal party, and that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte), together with the premier, went to the manufacturers and gave a pledge that the tariff policy then existing would remain in force. Well, I was perhaps too young to know what was going on behind the scenes, but I went around the province of Quebec with my leader and with the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and I can say boldly that they fully agreed on the tariff issues of the day. But let me refer to this book ; it is the report of the Liberal convention of 1893, and I find that so far back as 1893, the hon. member for St. Mary's was present at that convention, being sent there by his then electors of the county of L'Islet. Opening this book at page 71, I read this :

The Tariff—We the Liberal party of Canada, in convention assembled declare :—

That the customs tariff of the Dominion should be based, not as it is now, upon the protective principle, but upon the requirements of the public service ;

That the existing tariff, founded upon an unsound principle, and used, as it has been by the government, as a corrupting agency wherewith to keep themselves in office, has developed monopolies, trusts and combinations ;

It has decreased the value of farm and other landed property;

It has oppressed the masses to the enrichment of a few ;

It has checked immigration ;

It has caused great loss of population ;

It has impeded commerce ;

It has discriminated against Great Britain ;

In these and in many other ways it has occasioned great public and private injury, all of which evils must continue to grow in intensity as long as the present tariff system remains in force.

That the highest interests of Canada demand a removal of this obstacle to our country's progress, by the adoption of a sound fiscal policy, which, while not doing injustice to any class, will promote domestic and foreign trade, and hasten the return of prosperity to our people.

That to that end, the tariff should be reduced to the needs of honest, economical and efficient government.

That it should be so adjusted as to make free, or to bear as lightly as possible upon, the necessaries of life, and should be so arranged as to promote freer trade with the whole world, more particularly with Great Britain and United States.

We believe that the results of the protective system have greviously disappointed thousands of persons who honestly supported it, and that the country, in the light of experience, is now prepared to declare for a sound fiscal policy.

The issue between the two political parties on this question is now clearly defined.

The government themselves admit the failure of their fiscal policy and now profess their willingness to make some changes ; but they say that such changes must be based only on the principle of protection.

We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound, and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.

This issue we unhesitatingly accept, and upon it we await with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electors of Canada.

To this programme, to this resolution, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) assented, and the battle of 1896 was made under this resolution, which was approved of by the electorate. But, Sir, I do not blame the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) for what he will allow me to qualify as his inconsistency. There is such a thing as inconsistency in the world, and even my English friends have the well-known dictum : Inconsistency thou art a jewel ! Inconsistency is like opportunism, and opportunism in fiscal matters is honest when it is sincere. The philosopher has said, 'vita in motu ;' life exists in action, and I can well understand that on fiscal matters a man may shape his opinion according to circumstances. We find that in modern political history there have been many examples of inconsistency. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has only to read the book I hold in my hand—it is a book written on the many inconsistencies of a great modern parliamentarian and a British statesman, the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary. His adversaries have published a pamphlet entitled 'Before Joseph Went to Egypt ;' that is to say, before he became an imperialist, at the time he was a little Englander. He was inconsistent; still he makes no bones of it. We also find that Gladstone himself once belonged to the school of the stern and unbending Tories,' and afterwards became the leader of the Liberal party. D'Israeli himself, when he made that famous speech in the House of Commons in which he said that the day would come when he would be listened to, was a Radical amongst the Radicals; and M. Thiers began as a Royalist and ended as the chief of the Republican party in France. Therefore, inconsistencies are to be met with in political life, and again I do not blame the hon. gentleman who represents St. Mary's for having changed his opinion on this fiscal question.

But, Sir, if it is alleged that the Liberal party has not been faithful to the promises it made in 1896, I say that the people who make that assertion are not well informed. In 1896, when the hon. leader of the government was going around the country, preaching his political gospel, he received one day a letter from a good Canadian, who for some years sat in this House, and whom I am sorry not to see here any more. I refer to the hon. member who represented Centre Toronto, the late Mr. George Bertram. Mr. Bertram wrote to the hon. Premier, then the leader of the opposition, and I have here his answer to Mr. Bertram as to the tariff policy of the Liberal party :—

Whether a policy of absolute freedom of trade would or would not be injurious to the manufacturing industries of this country is a question which I will not stop to discuss here. There is no occasion for such a discussion, as the intention of the Liberal party is not and never was to establish free trade in this country. The question was discussed at Ottawa, but, after anxious consideration, while fully recognizing the superiority of the British system of freedom of trade as an abstract principle, the convention came to the conclusion that, under the existing conditions of our country, the fiscal policy best adapted to its requirements, its economic situation, its enormous financial obligations, is a revenue tariff ; that is to say, a tariff levying our revenue from customs duties, the basis of which would be the amount necessary to carry on the business of the country.

I submit also that, apart from the community as a whole, the manufacturers have not only not to suffer, but much to gain from the substitution of a revenue tariff for the present system. A revenue tariff, being based upon the fixed charges of the country, and not, therefore, subject to fluctuations and alterations made to suit and please now one interest and now another, would establish those conditions of stability and permanency which, experience has shown, are essential to the security and prosperity of manufacturing interests. Moreover, I think I can confidently appeal to the experience of the business community that, with the exception of monopolies and combines, all manufacturing interests would welcome a change of policy on the lines which I have indicated above.

I entirely concur with you in the hope and belief 'that the advent of the Liberal party to power would place political parties in Canada in the same position as political parties in England, who have no tariff issue distracting the country every election.'

The moment a tariff had been framed and enacted which would not be subject to variations, under which manufacturers would know that their invested capital would operate regularly, according to the conditions calculated upon by them ; under which their conditions with regard to foreign competition would not be arbitrarily jeopardized ; under which the burdens of taxation would be reduced to the lowest degree compatible with the exigencies of the revenue ; there is reason to hope that such a system would ingratiate itself in the confidence of the people, and that therein the manufacturing class would find the security, which it needs, and the consuming classes that relief which they must have.

This is the agreement arrived at between the leader of the Liberal party and one whom I may term the leader of the manufacturers of that time. This is the covenant, if I may use the word, which was made between the Liberal party and the manufacturers during the elections of 1896; and to that agreement the Liberal party have stuck firmly.

Well, Sir, after having entered into that engagement, the Liberal party came into power. An investigation was held during the years 1896 and 1897, and the Fielding tariff was put into operation. Coming back to my hon. friend from St. Mary's, I find in the first volume of the debates of the House of Commons for 1897, the speech delivered by the Minister of Finance; and, Sir, I find no dissent from that speech by the hon. member for St. Mary's who was at that time his colleague. Therefore I say we have kept faith not only with him, but also with the country, with the manufacturers, and with the consumers as well.

Now, what has been the result of that tariff ? Has it brought good to our country ? I could take the speech delivered the other day by the hon. Minister of Finance, I could use his words, I could quote his figures. But I will not. I will quote another authority. I will take the words of the president of the Canadian Bankers Association, Mr. Clouston, who, at their last annual meeting spoke as follows :—

The year that has elapsed since our last meeting has witnessed a further remarkable expansion in all branches of Canadian trade and commerce, in which the business of banking has had its due share. It has been a year of no untoward incident in the domain of mercantile affairs. The prosperity enjoyed in bountiful measure since 1897 continues unabated, and no clouds are yet perceptible on the horizon, save perhaps an undue and speculative desire for financial expansion to anticipate the profits that still lie in the future. On the contrary, the signs from which encouragement and hope spring are abundant. A bountiful harvest has been safely gathered, particularly in our North-west, and is rapidly being carried to market, thanks to the liberally increasing facilities provided for its transportation. The last returns show that the amount of grain moved to date this year exceeds by nearly 40 per cent the total for a similar period in 1901. Labour is fully employed ; manufacturing industries are working well up to their capital ; immigration is increasing at a rate which prompts the hope that we are at last succeeding in solving the problem of populating the North-west ; new markets for our products are being exploited and old markets enlarged ; means of transportation are being supplied and improved. Indeed, were one disposed to dwell on the possibilities of the future in the way of material development and prosperity, the field would afford a vast scope. Railway earnings, clearing house returns, figures of foreign commerce, the failure list, bank statements, in a word, all the tests by which the material conditions of a country are judged, indicate that Canada is experiencing an exceptionally high degree of prosperity.

Sir, these are the words of a Conservative occupying a high position in a most Conservative institution, the Bank of Montreal; and we have from him the statement that this country, under its present tariff, enjoys a prosperity unequalled before.

Mr. Speaker, the government has announced a surplus of $13,000,000. I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance upon his intention to wipe out $5,000,000 of our public debt. Indeed, Sir, if we were going before the electorate, as has been hinted in the Conservative press during the last few weeks, we would make a splendid showing. What could our opponents say, when the Liberal party, after seven years of power, after having spent liberally for our transportation facilities and for our public works, after having passed through the expenses of the Transvaal war, and after having provided for all the public services, could thus go before the people with a clean sheet. But the elections are not at hand. The prosperity of the country is too great. There is no necessity to ask the people now if they are satisfied with the Liberal regime. The government, I repeat, has a large surplus. I hope that the government will continue to expend our revenues wisely in improving out transportation system. I think that the commercial future of this country depends largely on the betterment of our transportation facilities. I am a believer in this route which is marked, one might say, by the hand of Providence on the map of Canada, between the Great Lakes and the cities of Montreal and Quebec. I believe that it is the route of the future, over which will be sent all our grains and cereals to the European markets. Yes, we have a great future before us if we know how to solve this transportation problem. After all, the old French Canadian voyageurs who used this route to reach the vast prairies, which they were the first to colonize—and I would ask my hon. friends from the North-west never to forget that fact—knew its value. They were the first to bring the good news to the Indian tribes and to plant the flag of civilization and liberty in those fertile plains. But there are other ways in which this government can also make use of a surplus. While I approve the policy of the government in bringing to this country foreigners of all nationalities to settle on our unoccupied lands, I also am of opinion that they should not neglect to repatriate the Canadians who left the country years ago and now reside beyond the frontier, and who, if properly looked after, would come back in considerable numbers to their native land. I know for a fact that there are nearly one million French Canadians in the western and eastern states. Many of them would, I am sure, come back to this country, if given the facilities and opportunities which are afforded by the Department of the Interior to other immigrants. And although I have much admiration for the enterprise of my western friends and the great patriotism they display with regard to their own western country, I would respectfully ask the government to take into consideration the older provinces and not forget New Ontario and New Quebec, because after all, if we have confederation, we owe it to the old provinces. And when considering this surplus, I would also ask the right hon. the First Minister and his colleagues who took part in the conference of 1887 for the readjustment of the provincial subsidies not to forget that the provinces to-day are looking towards the federal government to lend them a helping hand. If confederation is not to end in legislative union, we must give the provinces the ways and means to exist. It is admitted to-day, after the conferences which took place in 1887 and 1902 that the provinces with their present limited revenue are hardly able to meet both ends. I listened with much pleasure to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) yesterday. He spoke of the preferential tariff and blamed the government for having given Great Britain a preference. Sir, let bygones be bygones. We, in this country, enjoy a responsible government. and the electorate is the supreme judge. We went before the country in 1900 and the country replied that it was satisfied with the preferential tariff. But my hon. friend says that if this government had been willing to accept the responsibilities which arise from naval defence and our participation in the wars of the empire we would probably have had the mutual preference which we were seeking.

Mr. KEMP. I did not say that I desired this country to participate in the wars of the empire outside Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understood my hon. friend to have said so, but of course I am ready to accept his word to the contrary. At all events, after the colonial conference which was held last summer, having read the manly answer given by my hon. friend the premier, to the proposals made by the colonial secretary, I think we should all agree that our representative did his duty. Sir, we are loyal to England. We give her the benefit of a preferential tariff. We have asked for reciprocal concessions. Whilst Mr. Chamberlain appeared to favour such a policy we find that in that respect he is somewhat isolated among the public men in Great Britain. If I were not afraid to weary the House I could quote Mr. Morley, Mr. Bryce and Sir Michael Hicks-Beech on this point. It is admitted to-day that we cannot have, on the basis of protection any reciprocal trade with Great Britain. If we cannot have that mutual preference, we must fully concur in the language used by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. If Great Britain will not give us a preference then we will consider what action we shall take in the interests of Canada. Again I say that we must all approve the answer given by my right hon. friend the premier at the colonial conference. We are not ready to accept all the burdens which Mr. Chamberlain and some of his friends would like to impose on this country. As I said a moment ago, we are loyal. We are ready to do our duty to the empire, but we shall do it of our own volition. We shall do it ' proprio motu.' We will never sacrifice any of our political rights and we will never barter our political independence to suit the purposes of some ultra-Britishers. In a word we are and intend to remain good British subjects, but before all we are Canadians, and I may add that Canada belongs rightly not to a favoured few, but to all Canadians.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the hon gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) takes his seat, I wish to make a personal explanation. I know we would not wilfully misrepresent me. I understood him to say that I had opposed the Remedial Bill. I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that such is not the case. If he will read ' Hansard,' he will find that I both spoke and voted for the Remedial Bill. More than that, I stayed up night and day trying in every way to have the Bill passed. I always contended that the minority in Manitoba had constitutional rights, and that those rights should be recognized. By the settlement which has been made, they did not secure a recognition of those rights to which they are entitled under the constitution of our country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am pleased to accept the words of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor). He may have spoken and may have voted in favour of the Remidial Bill. But it is a fact well known to every one, that, while the whip of the Conservative party, he canvassed against the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. That statement is not correct, and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is probably to follow me to-night, so I shall not detain the House at any great length. I have been undecided whether to take part in this discussion, and notwithstanding your kind indulgence extended by request of hon. members permitting the whole broad subject to be discussed, taking in the financial as well as the trade question, I shall confine myself to a few words with reference to the amendment before the House. Had I desired to say anything with reference to the financial statement, I feel that it would be out of place. The statement speaks for itself. The concise, plain manner in which it was put by the hon. gentleman who delivered it, and the matter that was contained in it, render any enlargement on my part unnecessary. But if enlargement were necessary, it has been supplied by hon. gentlemen on this side who examined in more detail than did the Finance Minister the expenditures of the country. And I must say that there have been speeches delivered in this debate, and now to be found in ' Hansard ' which will be of the utmost value to me, as they will be to other hon. members, refreshing our memories for the discussion of public questions. I suppose we all feel, when we have to engage in an election contest, after a period of rest and quiet, how very soon we seem to forget the questions that engage our attention here.

I proceed to consider, for a few moments, then, the amendment. And it is an extraordinary position in which I find the debate on this occasion. We have an amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) which reads as follows :

> That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be left out, and the following substituted therefor :—'This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labours, agricultural products, manufactures and industries as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians ;
> 'And that the financial policy of the government should include a measure for the thorough and judicious readjustment of the tariff at the present session.'

Now, why do I say that it was a remarkable discussion that has taken place upon this amendment ? We are asked by the mover of this amendment to declare that the House regards the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory. I do not think that I can bring myself to vote for the amendment. But there are some hon. gentlemen in this House who can induce themselves to do so. Some of these hon. gentlemen have spoken, and have spoken at length ; but I have failed to hear any explanation as to how this tariff is unsatisfactory—not merely why it is unsatisfactory to the House, but why it is unsatisfactory to themselves. When the hon. member for West Toronto rises, I would like him to tell me what there is unsatisfactory in the working of this tariff. Is it unsatisfactory in that there has not been sufficient revenue raised to carry on the affairs of the country? The hon. gentleman will not say that, for there has been enough revenue raised under it during the years it has been in operation to more than pay the ordinary expenditure, and almost enough to pay, up to the end of the present year the ordinary and the capital expenditure. The tariff can not be unsatisfactory in that regard. Then, is it unsatisfactory in its effect upon foreign trade? I do not mean to give you many figures tonight, but I am trying to find out what is unsatisfactory in this tariff requiring the thorough revision and readjustment in all its parts called for by the amendment. Why, if the tariff requires this thorough and judicious readjustment throughout its hundreds of articles, is it not a strange thing that we have not had the defects pointed out by these hon. gentlemen. I have sat in my place patiently. The other night when the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was lecturing the ministers for not being in their places, I did not feel guilty. I have sat here patiently and listened to what was said. And now, when hon. members are asked to declare by their votes that this tariff is unsatisfactory and that it requires readjustment in all its hundreds and hundreds of articles, I say I shall expect the hon. member for West Toronto, who follows me, and whom I consider one of the ablest members on that side of the House, to state what has been lacking hitherto, to tell us the items in this tariff which are defective, and how they can be improved. I think we are entitled to ask that. I have asked the question whether it was unsatisfactory with reference to securing revenue and have concluded that no hon. gentleman will affirm this. Now I ask, has it been unsatisfactory as regards the promotion of foreign trade ? I have already said that I shall not give many figures, but I have here a short table in which I have divided into four six year periods the export of the produce of this country, and another in which I have divided into four six year periods the aggregate foreign trade of the country. Why did I take four six year periods ? Because, commencing with 1878 and running down through the eighteen years when the national policy came into operation, and into the six years when this tariff has been in operation. I propose to contrast the foreign trade and the progress made in building it up in three periods under the operation of the old tariff and the increase under the six years of the present tariff.

Now, the percentage of increase in the export produce of Canada for the four six-year periods between 1878 and 1892 is as follows : From 1878 to 1884 the increase was 17 per cent ; from 1884 to 1890 the increase was 7 per cent; from 1890 to 1896 the increase was 29 per cent; from 1896 to 1902 the increase was 78 per cent. Is the tariff unsatisfactory, I ask hon. gentlemen, through you, Mr. Speaker, who will follow me ? Is this tariff unsatisfactory in so far as its operations have had an effect on the exports of this country ? Well, what about the total foreign trade of this Dominion ? There are gentlemen in this House who would confine Canadian trade to Canada. They do not take views broad enough. We want Canada for the Canadians, but we want all the other countries in the world besides to sell our goods to. I do not understand that trade is a bad thing if we know how to trade. My hon. and genial friend, one of the merchant princes of this country, doing one of the largest businesses in this country, representing the city of Toronto (Mr. Brock), he does not conduct his own business on the principle that an extension of trade outside his own family would be a bad thing for him. He sends his travellers north, south, east and west. Possibly, if he confined his trade within his own family circle it might enrich the members thereof a little, but he would not do much business.

Mr. BROCK. That is an absurdity.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, I see the hon. gentleman is coming to take our view of it, that trade is not a bad thing. What is a nation but an aggregate of individuals, and if it is good for an individual to trade with his neighbours, must it not be good for a nation to trade with its neighbours? Will the hon. gentleman say it would be an absurdity? Now, what trade have we done with other nations? From 1878 to 1884 our total foreign trade increased 20 per cent; from 1884 to 1890 it increased 5 per cent; from 1890 to 1896 it increased 9 per cent; from 1896 to 1902 it increased 77 per cent. I ask my smiling friend opposite, when he rises to speak, to say if the tariff has been unsatisfactory in the way of promoting foreign trade.

Mr. CLARKE. What has the tariff had to do with the increase of the export trade of the country?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The tariff has had this to do with it, that when this tariff was introduced, and it was known that it was in the hands of a government who held, as one of their fundamental principles, that changing circumstances might require in time a revision of the tariff, and that they held as a fundamental principle that the greater stability you could give to a tariff the better, from that moment the country commenced to move forward. Then I want to tell him further that by reducing the burdens of the people, immigration was promoted into this country. I want to tell him that there are more people in his country. I want to tell him that the administration of government, combined with the operations of the tariff, have had much to do with the exports. The fact that you have a cold storage system has had much to do with it; for, say what you may, you had not a cold storage accommodation to compare with the Australian, under the Conservative regime. You have it to-day, it is well known, and the figures prove, that since this government came into power the article of cheese has taken its proper place in the English market. though I do not say that it had not a good place before under hon. gentlemen opposite. But I do say that butter and other perishable products have swollen the aggregate export of the produce of this country, so far as its money value is concerned.

Mr. BROCK. What did we do with our products before you came into power? What did we do with our grain?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A great deal of it was consumed by the people of Canada, and the balance was exported.

Mr. BROCK. We had poor crops.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, I don't know about that. I have spoken of the eighteen years under the regime of the hon. gentleman's party. Are we to understand that if the Tories came in again we are to look for another eighteen long years of bad crops?

Mr. BROCK. Whooping it up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is getting a little irritated—

Mr. BROCK. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS—but I have not given him any reason; I simply point out a fact. He explains the difference by saying they had poor crops. Well, now, I say there were eighteen years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and that the Giver of all good blesses Canada, whether under Tory or Liberal rule, we must not forget that. And during the eighteen years they were in power, Providence smiled upon this land, as Providence has smiled upon this land since we took control of its affairs. But if it be a fact that Providence blesses this country and has blessed it, whether under Tory rule or Liberal rule, if you find an increase so vast under the Liberals that you did not find under the Tories, the same Providence being equally kind to us all, what is the inevitable inference? Simply that while Providence blessed Canada under whatever rule it may be, the Liberals know best how to use the blessings of that Providence. That we claim for the Liberal party, and that we claim alone.

Now, Sir, I have given the facts. I have stated that there has been an entire lack of instances given us wherein this tariff is unsatisfactory. I again prefer the request that we be told how it has been unsatisfactory. It has struck me as strange in this debate that hitherto when we have had arguments upon the tariff, the old question of protection and free trade has been debated, which is not a question in actual existence in this country at all. We have been told that in certain lines the manufacturers were suffering. We had them venturing to say that certain lines were suffering, but this year, strange to say, with the resolution that these gentlemen, I presume, are about to vote for that declares that we should have a thorough and immediate revision of the tariff, we have heard very few complaints about the manufactures. What manufacturing concerns are suffering? What manufactures do you propose to lay a duty in favour of and how much do you propose to lay. I have noticed that, leaving the manufactures alone, hon. gentlemen opposite have centered their interest upon the farming community and that it is the poor farmer they want to protect. These are the parties to whom their sympathies are extended at the present time. We have had the whip of the party, the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), we have had the leader from the province of Ontario, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), we have had the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and others appealing largely to the farmer and their whole argument seems to be this: The Americans send in here a few million dollars worth of farm products, crushing the farmers out of their market and therefore they say put up the tariff and shut the Americans out. If hon. gentlemen will bear with me for a moment I will read over the list of articles that our farmers are particularly interested in and I will show you that while the Americans do sell a few million dollars worth of their farm products, the American nation takes as large a quantity from our farmers and there is nothing to find fault with in that respect. I will just give the chief products that the farmers of this country are interested in. There are swine, horned cattle, horses, sheep, all other animals n.e.s., barley, beans, Indian corn for distillation, oats, pease, rye, wheat, bran, mill feed, &c., corn meal, oat meal, wheat flour, all other breadstuffs n.e.s., butter, cheese, hay, potatoes, turnips, vegetables canned, vegetables all other n.e.s. and eggs. Now, I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that I have gone over pretty much at any rate the important articles in which our farmers are interested and what is the result of that? While the Americans sent into our market $2,973,098 worth in the aggregate of these articles we sent to the United States, not to other countries, but to the United States, $3,917,878 worth. They bought a million dollars worth more from our farmers of farm products than this country took of the produce of their farms, or to be exact, $944,780. But hon. gentlemen opposite will say: You have left out Indian corn, and so I may as well anticipate that there may not be any side issue in reference to it. We will take in Indian corn which we hold is on the free list for the benefit of the farmer. We think that when the manufacturer gets his raw material free, when used in the goods which he exports, the farmer and the cattle man has the right to have free corn to finish their productions. But, if we take the ground that these gentlemen take that it is an interference with our farmers and if we look at the figures we find that there were $2,480,397 worth of Indian corn imported but there was exported of that $1,036,090 worth, leaving $1,444,307 worth, and if we take the $944,780 into account we have a balance of only $499,527 in favour of the Americans. Now, I say there is not much ground for our friends to appeal to the farmers with any degree of success in that. But, they have looked into the thing very particularly and they have discovered that there are some products of the farmer that ought to be protected. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) dwelt upon that. He gave us, the other night, a list of fruits that came in here and he was determined to have these fruits excluded. These Yankee fruits coming in here, monopolizing our market and lowering the prices of our own fruits was something that was not to be tolerated. He said that there was $765,771 in duty levied on these fruits that came from the United States. I had a little curiosity to look into that list and what do you think I found? Why, that on all kinds of fruit that are grown here at present there was only a duty paid of $157,204, instead of $765,771. What did he include in the list of fruits upon which he wanted a prohibitory tariff placed?—dried currants, dates, figs, prunes, raisins, almonds shelled, almonds, not shelled, pecans not shelled, shelled peanuts, walnuts not shelled, all other kinds of nuts, oranges, lemons and limes. Now, we must have a tariff placed upon these and it must be adequate. There is no use saying that oranges and lemons cannot be grown in this country. They can. I saw one in the hot house myself. It can be done and adequate protection, which means prohibition, if placed on oranges will tempt some people to grow a tree or two for the glory of the thing under glass. It is an outrage upon these farmers that they should be subjected to these Yankee importations of dried currants, dates, figs, prunes, raisins, almonds shelled, almonds not shelled, Brazil nuts not shelled, pecans not shelled, shelled peanuts, walnuts not shelled, all other kinds of nuts, oranges, lemons and limes. The farmers want to get even with these people and they are asking this government to put $15 more duty on the reaper that is made by the Yankee so as to get even with him in that way. That is the proposition of hon. gentlemen opposite. These Yankees send in pecans and limes and they send in some agricultural implements and it will benefit the farmer to have an additional duty of $15 placed upon his binder. Then, the hon. gentlemen took up the item of vegetables and he said that there was a duty of $86,074 laid on vegetables. He was right. That includes potatoes, tomatoes, and several other articles. I find that if it be a grudge we have against the Yankees that they took from us $327,046 worth of our potatoes while we only took from them $87,212 worth. If there is anybody who has a right to get mad about that it is the Yankees. The total value of the imports mentioned under that head were $417,407, while the people of this country exported to the United States altogether $994,410 worth, so that we sent $2 out for every one we brought in and yet this hon. gentleman is for having us engaged in a commercial war with the United States in reference to the matter, and he is going to see that these vegetables and fruits are produced in this country. Well now, if he asks my opinion, I will give him my answer. I see the smiling face of my late colleague the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) opposite me and he was good enough to say in the remarks he addressed to the House, that while he perhaps did not view me in every respect more friendly than he did some others of his late colleagues that, at any rate, there was one question on which we were nearer perhaps than on some others.

Of course I cannot allude to these things, and I am not going to talk about ancient history. There was a speech of mine read here the other night by the member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) which I made away back in 1876, twenty-seven years ago. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) is ever here that long it will be an honour to him if he can have a speech of his quoted which is twenty-seven years old. I was pretty young in parliament in 1876, but it is significant that the sentiments expressed at that time are those embodied in this present tariff. I said then that I did not see how a duty on wheat would help the farmer much so long as he grew a surplus and exported it, but nevertheless I said that there might be perhaps a month in the year, if the farmers were sold short and before the new crop came in, when a home demand might be required and if the farmer could import wheat under circumstances like that, then he would get the benefit And we have a duty on wheat now, and there is a duty on other grain. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) will see, therefore, that even as far back as 1876 I had sound views on the tariff, and that ought to give him confidence in any tariff that I approve of. I do not know that I would pin much faith on arguments that were used years and years ago and under different circumstances, but it just happened that in this case I announced some views about the tariff, and those views are embodied in the tariff which is in existence to-day.

Just a year ago when the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) made his motion to the effect that it was in the interest of the country that there should be an increased duty placed upon certain vegetables, the hon. the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) replied to that motion, and I commend that reply to the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and other gentlemen on that side of the House. The hon. gentleman from Laval moved as follows :

> That it is greatly in the interest of the market gardeners and the farmers, that the duties on our Canadian garden products be so adjusted as to guarantee the Canadian farmer an effective protection against foreign competition.

I will read to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) the argument that was delivered upon that motion by my late colleague (Hon Mr. Tarte) and I think that answer will be sufficient ; I think it will show him how strange his proposition is that we should go on and increase duties on these articles because some of them are imported. The Hon. Mr. Tarte said last year :

> I entertain considerable doubts as to the increase of duties on those products imported from abroad being likely to result in something practical, if you take into consideration the fact that our farmers cannot supply that foreign market, because they do not produce those vegetables all the year round. Many articles, amongst those just mentioned by the hon. gentleman, are imported from the United States, to which country a little later in the year many similar products of our own are exported. If we raised the duties on those products as asked for by the hon. gentleman we should incur the risk of retaliation on the part of the United States as to products coming from Canada. We carry on, for instance, a considerable trade in melons with our neighbours, and our duty on that article is 25 per cent, whereas it is on the free list in the United States. What would my hon. friend say if the American government should decide to impose on that article a similar duty to ours ? At any rate, it is of public notoriety that the greatest number of the articles, upon which we are asked to increase the duty, are not produced in the winter months. We should thereby be increasing the prices of those products to the great mass of consumers without our market gardeners being benefited thereby. My hon. friend wants us to raise the duties upon lettuce, cucumbers, tomatoes, asparagus, celery, beets, onions.

I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is keeping in mind these articles, because they are the very articles which he has spoken about. The hon. gentleman continues :

> It is well known that in the winter months we do not grow cabbages nor cucumbers. We are also aware that it is extremely difficult to raise tomatoes in the winter season. We had to pay, last winter, 50 cents a pound for tomatoes of Canadian growth, whilst American tomatoes were being sold on the Montreal market at 20 cents a pound.

That is the condition of things which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) wants to bring about.

Mr. INGRAM. Read what Mr. Tarte said after that to the effect that he was no free trader.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am glad that my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) is following me, I have that very passage from the speech underscored here and it is curious that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) should think that I was going to miss it, because it is far more conclusive than what I have read. He says :

> I am no free trader——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is a pretty well known fact.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is true.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Now here is the point the hon. gentleman thought I was going to miss reading, and when I read it he will see that I certainly would not omit it, because it is one of the richest things in the whole speech :

> I am no free trader, but it is necessary to use common sense in our transactions in this world, and I declare here and now that I object to paying 50 cents a pound for Canadian tomatoes, when I can have American tomatoes for 20 cents. It is really going too far.

Mr. INGRAM. Read on.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will read on :

This shows conclusively that tomatoes cannot be grown here with advantage in the winter months. So with asparagus and cucumbers. We do not produce asparagus nor celery in the winter season. There is not to be found one single gardener in the whole island of Montreal, or around Ottawa or Toronto, who can grow lettuce as good as that imported from the United States in the winter.

Don't think you are going to get the ex-Minister of Public Works to vote for any such amendment as is before the Chair in favour of adequate protection, when it involves as the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says it does, the putting on of duties that will make twenty cent tomatoes cost fifty cents.

Mr. MONK. I ask the Minister of Customs, if the government is opposed to an increase of duty on these articles

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no increase provided for in the tariff that is brought down this session, and as to future tariff changes of course we never announce them before the budget speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My ex-colleague (Hon. Mr. Tarte) continued to say:

It is idle to appeal to prejudices. There are enough people buying tomatoes and lettuce, for let it be known that I am speaking the plain unvarnished truth. Cauliflowers are not grown in the winter months in Canada. I agree that during a certain season of the year they can be kept, perhaps during two or three months. The cauliflowers we buy in the winter are imported from the United States.

Yet they want to put on a tariff of adequate protection to force you to pay a higher price under the circumstances which my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) describes and he seems to know whereof he was speaking :

The market gardeners around Montreal receive just as much protection as any other class of the community does, and I may further say that those gardeners are the most prosperous people in the country.

And yet it is demanded that we should have an immediate revision of the tariff in order to benefit those poor gardeners. Here is the testimony given a year ago by the ex-minister, that these gardeners were very well off, and I am sure they have not suffered this year. The argument used by the ex-minister is an argument to show that the Liberal party in framing the tariff looked upon both sides, whereas our Conservative friends, judging by their policy and their amendment, look at only one side. They say : Put the duties so high that it will be prohibitory. Prohibition is the principle of their protection. That is its essence ; that is its final result and our friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is not one of that kind because he looks at the other side of the question as we do on this side of the House. He says :

Should I be disposed, nevertheless, to add something to their happiness, would that be conducive to the happiness of other classes of the community much more numerous than the market gardeners are.

There is where he looks; there is where the Liberal party look. They look at all classes and all occupations; they have regard to the producer and the manufacturer, but at the same time they do not lose sight of the consumers :

To my mind, the consumers of Montreal should not be forced to pay extravagant prices for these products.

The consumers would be forced either to deprive themselves of vegetables or to pay exorbitant prices for them. Should we impose additional duties, consumers would have to pay 25 or 30 per cent more, nor could we hope thereby to increase the production of those articles which cannot be grown to advantage in this country.

Sound sense. If, in forcing an unnatural production in this country, it should be done at the cost of raising the prices of the articles above what the people ought to pay, there would be less of them consumed, and the whole benefit would be neutralized. My hon. friend saw that clearly. He says he sees eye to eye with me on many things. He goes on to say :

There are seasons when we must import vegetables from the United States, because they can there be grown more easily and much more cheaply.

Then the hon. gentleman, who moves the resolution, interjects this sentence :

There is this great difference, that the climate of the United States is favourable to the production of vegetables, whereas the Canadian climate is not so advantageous. And that is why our farmers ought to receive more protection than is given to the farmers in the United States.

To which the reply is made by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works :

My hon. friend knows very well that, even if additional duties were imposed on pease, tomatoes, cucumbers and other vegetables, that would neither improve the climate nor enable us to grow those vegetables to advantage during the winter months. The increase in the duties asked for by my hon. friend would only result in forcing the consumer to pay more for those products, without improving the condition of the Canadian producer.

He winds up by dismissing the subject in the following words :

To my mind such a proposition is preposterous.

Now, my hon. friend from South Leeds would do well to ponder over that answer. There is a great deal of sense and good argument in it. There is in it the grasp of a gentleman who is considering the question, sincerely desirous as we all are that all classes in this country should prosper. But when asked to impose duties, which, if imposed, would be of doubtful benefit even to those for whose benefit they were asked, he insists that they might so enhance prices as to lessen consumption, but if not, they would be an unjust burden placed upon those who are forced to buy the goods.

Now, I pass on to notice very briefly that when hon. gentlemen opposite ask us for a thorough and entire revision of the tariff, we should have seen a spectacle of greater agreement among themselves. I do not want to be captious. I recognize that there will be differences of opinion among hon. gentlemen opposite as to a particular rate of duty that should be placed upon a particular article. Wherever men think, you will find such differences of opinion. But here is a case in which it appears to me professions and contradictory statements are made involving more than particular duties. For instance, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) say that they want the duty wiped off raw sugar. The hon. member for Halton said that, speaking over the head of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), who has a refinery in his town that wants the duty on raw sugar increased. My hon. friend the leader of the Ontario opposition members in this House, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who I take it is nearer the fountain-head, if I may use that expression with reference to the hon. leader of the opposition, says that we ought to increase the duty on raw sugar, instead of taking it off. Will the hon. leader of the opposition tell us what he would do with his policy of adequate protection in that case?

Mr. SPROULE. I want to correct the hon. gentleman, and say that I have no knowledge of ever having made such a statement in the House. I understood that the beet-root sugar manufacturers desired to have the duty increased on sugar, but I did not specify raw sugar at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They came with a deputation asking it to be increased on raw sugar.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Here is what the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said:

> I am in favour of a duty on manufactured sugar, but not on the raw sugar. I am in favour of admitting the raw sugar free and giving our manufacturers a chance to employ labour in refining it. This is what I am in favour of.

Then, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said:

> We have no right at present to take $2,000,000 per year out of the pockets of the people, by a tariff on raw sugar, when such a tax is not called for. But you may say: What about the beet-root sugar industry? That is calling for protection, and if you remove the duty from raw sugar, you will interfere very materially with that young industry started in Ontario more particularly, which province is especially adapted for the growing of beets. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest a remedy which, I think, will be far more effectual than any duty or increase of duty on raw sugar.

The proposal he makes is to wipe out the duty and give a bounty.

An hon. MEMBER. Read the whole of it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have given the sense of it. He said he advocated taking the duty off raw sugar and making that up by paying a bounty.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman ought to be fair enough to say that the proposal was to give it to the farmers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Whenever a bounty is given by the Ontario government, they do not give it to the farmer in his own hand, but they so arrange it that the farmer through the manufacturer would get it; and I suppose that any government would take care that the grower of the beets would have the advantage. When the hon. member for East Grey came with that deputation, they did not ask, so far as I remember, that the bounty should be given to the farmers who grew the beets. Must I ask the hon. member if they did?

Mr. SPROULE. I said there were different ways in which it could be done.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What did the deputation ask?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know, because I was not present until the interview was pretty well over, and therefore I did not hear many of them speak. But I said that there were two or three ways of arranging the bounty. One was by providing that the farmers should get so much a ton for their beets. Another was that there should be a bounty paid on the sugar produced according to a sliding scale: for instance, one cent per pound the first year, three-quarters of a cent the second year, one-half of a cent the third, one-quarter of a cent the fourth, letting it run out in that way. I was not aware in what particular way the deputation wanted the assistance, but I said that the government should help them in some way, because the farmers were very much interested in the matter.

Mr. COWAN. You made a speech three years ago advocating a bounty to the manufacturers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman will bear me out in this, that while he suggested that the bounty might be given, he did not suggest that it might be given in the way of wiping out the duty on raw sugar. He wanted the duty kept on raw sugar at the same time.

Mr. SPROULE. No. I pointed out that the American manufacturer had a higher duty on his sugar than the Canadian manufacturer, and therefore it was unjust to the Canadian manufacturer. I did not say in what way I advocated help, but I advocated that it should be given in some way.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am only pointing out the difficulties incident to all tariffs, when you come down to particular items. Let me give the views of the hon. gentleman. He said :—

> But those engaged in that industry want an increase in the tariff on sugars coming into the country, and for the want of this, they are handicapped in carrying on their business. We are told that unless they get some consideration in the tariff——

Mark you, Sir, this. Not by way of bounty.

> —their industry is likely to go down instead of becoming one of the great established industries of the country.

That is very plain. The hon. gentleman wants an increased duty on raw sugar. You do not give bounties in the tariff.

An hon. MEMBER. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Because you must have a separate Act of parliament in order to do it. You do not do it because you cannot. I shall not take up longer time on this point. I merely wish to show that you cannot expect unanimity with respect to the various items in the tariff. Hon. members opposite may be able to point out that some gentlemen on this side, giving their individual views, have thought that the duty on some particular item might be raised or lowered. But those are merely personal views with regard to particular items, and these men, when asked to pronounce themselves on the tariff legislation of the country, will declare in favour of carrying out our present policy. Each hon. member recognizes that he is only one in this House, that others have their views, and he judges the tariff, not from any particular item, but taken as a whole.

Let me now say a few words on the surtax on German goods, concerning which there are as many differences of opinion among hon. gentlemen opposite as there are on the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition. Some hon. gentlemen opposite commend us for taking the power to levy the surtax and say that it is right. Others condemn us and say that it is wrong. Others say that we should have done it a year or two ago. Well, I hold that we were right in not doing it a year or two ago. We stand now in this position, that we have made representations to the German representatives of the German government, that we have made personal representations through our Prime Minister to the representatives of the British government, and having waited years, having given the German government ample time to turn the matter over, and they having continued to treat us as they have done, then we put on the surtax. And the civilized world recognizes that it is a just act on the part of Canada, done at the right time.

With regard to the preferential tariff, hon. gentlemen opposite say that my hon. friend the Finance Minister, after having granted a preference, now proposes to abolish it. My hon. friend has done nothing of the kind. He has not said that he would abolish the preferential tariff. He is aware, as is every member of the government, that that is a large question in which great interests are bound up, and concerning which no hasty action should be taken. But what my hon. friend pointed out was that when in England, conferring with Mr. Chamberlain, he pointed out that while we gave a preference to Great Britain, we hoped, on the other hand, that Great Britain in return would give an exemption from the corn tax then in existence, to the colonies, but that if British statesmen continued to view our preferential tariff as of no value in itself, except as a sentiment, then we should be free to guard our own interests or to take such action as might be in our interest. There is where the preferential tariff stands.

My hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) has put in my hands a resolution in which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) moved that there should be a bounty given to free sugar. In that resolution I find the following :

> And also to encourage the establishment of beet sugar factories, a bounty should be offered for all beet root sugar manufactured in the Dominion during the next ten years and that the machinery necessary for such plant, not made in Canada, admitted free of duty.

But he forgot about the farmers there.

Mr. SPROULE. That is exactly what I said when I was with the deputation, and that is still my opinion.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has given so many contradictory opinions, some of them must be right. I say that the preferential tariff is not interfered with. There is no proposition from the Finance Minister for the abolition of a preference, but my hon. colleague has put himself in the position, as did my right hon. friend the First Minister, in that note to Mr. Chamberlain, that in view of the fact that the corn tax is now abolished, and it will not be competent for the British government to make an exception in our favour, we are at liberty to take what course we may think proper. As my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has said, the English people recognize this and would have no reason to complain if we should come to the conclusion, in our own interest, to modify, alter, amend or change that preference. There are several reasons which might prompt us to do this. We have not considered propositions from other nations. So long as the preferential tariff is in existence, if any nation should demand equal preference with Great Britain, we would not consent to give it, but if Great Britain does not consider the preference of any value to her she could not complain seriously if perhaps we desired to place ourselves in the position of being able to obtain trade preference from other nations.

My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) spoke in rather a scoffing way of the little we had accomplished when we went over to the mother country and asked for the preference. He seems to think that the position taken by this government on this question had something to do with our failure in that respect. At any rate he spoke in this strong language with reference to it:

> But they gained nothing. But, while they gained nothing in the way of better markets, they humiliated Canada by declaring that Canada would not consider the question of imperial defence. And Canada stands as the laughing stock of the world, because, notwithstanding our wealth and position and loyalty and everything else, our premier, who was in the band wagon of the great jubilee of our late beloved Queen in 1897, refused to even discuss, on the lines desired, the question of imperial defence. They said Canada was not prepared to pay her share for the defence of the empire. I say this is a humiliation to Canada. We are doing less than we ought to do and are the laughing stock of the world.

There he commits himself. He says that our Canadian representatives humiliated themselves by not acceding to the views of the imperial government on the question of imperial defence. If he feels that this country was humiliated because the Prime Minister and his colleagues took that stand it is upon him now—and I call his attention pointedly to this—to bring up a motion in this House censuring the ministers for not having committed themselves to a policy of imperial defence upon the lines suggested by the imperial government. Now, I emphasize that, and call the attention of the country to it. The hon. gentleman as leader of the Ontario section cannot afford to say that the country is humiliated, and leave it there. We want to know where the members of Ontario are upon this question ; we want to know if they feel in that position, and we can only ascertain it by a vote. The hon. gentleman may smile, but he may be in a very awkward position if he does not propose such a motion.

Now, I turn to speak of another matter and I am very glad that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has done me the honour of being present while I am speaking, because I wish to ask him, in all sincerity, some questions. For it has been intimated that our Conservative friends are about to bring on an election this fall. If there is an election, it is possible I may speak in one or two places, and I would like to know where we are on this question. I know where I am and where the government are, and hon. gentlemen opposite know, and so does everybody else, for the tariff and all its items is printed, so there is no mistaking where the government stands on that point. But we have not the views of hon. gentlemen opposite; we have only this resolution which speaks of 'adequate protection.' Now, if it is not wearying the House and if the hon. leader of the opposition will not consider me unduly inquisitive—for it is in the interest of the country and of fair discussion on the platform that we should understand one another—I would ask, and ask in no carping spirit, but in all sincerity, what this means ? He will not be offended, for he has asked as direct questions across the floor. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) read from the report in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of a meeting in Morden, where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was asked what 'adequate protection' would signify in reference to agricultural implements. I have no doubt that what appears in 'Hansard' is a correct copy of what appeared in the 'Telegram,' which, I believe is the organ of the Conservative party in Winnipeg. This is what is given :

> Question : What about free agricultural implements promised by Mr. Macdonald ?
>
> Mr. BORDEN. I will answer my friend's question before I sit down so definitely that there will be no question about it. I will answer on behalf of the Liberal-Conservative party which has no Sifton at one end and Tarte at the other.
>
> Question : Will you raise the duty ?
>
> Mr. BORDEN. We will make the duty adequate and if it is now high enough, 'as I believe it is,' to enable manufacturers to make implements in Canada, we will not increase it. I am informed that implements are as cheap in Canada as in the United States. So the duty seems high enough.

There is a definite item on which the mover of this amendment has spoken and I ask him, in all sincerity, if that is the view he expressed at that meeting—for he has told us that he has spoken the same in Manitoba as elsewhere.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) like me to answer now ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman pleases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the first place I would like to ask the Minister of Customs a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that if questions are to be asked at all, they are fair on both sides. Has any application been made to the government to raise the duty on agricultural implements ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Now, I will tell the hon. minister what I stated. Two questions were asked me on that occasion, and not one only. I was asked, in the first place, whether or not I proposed to abolish the duty on agricultural implements, and I said that I did not, because I regarded the manufacture of these implements as a great Canadian industry and I believed the duty imposed upon implements of that character had not had the effect of increasing the price in Canada, that I had been informed by gentlemen who had investigated the subject that the price of agricultural implements was no higher—at least was not materially higher—in Canada than in the United States. I was asked another question—whether or not, if the Conservative party came into power, they would be prepared to raise the duty on agricultural implements; and I said that if it were necessary to preserve that great Canadian industry, I would be prepared to raise the duty on agricultural implements. I am not responsible for any report which appeared in any newspapers. I noticed the next day after the meeting that it was not reported as I have stated, and I spoke to the gentleman who represented the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of the imperfect report of what had taken place at that meeting. The questions were proposed to me in writing, and I made exactly the answers I have stated to the House to-night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So, we have that statement, and I think it is well that I gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the opportunity to make it.

Mr. BALL. You know where you are now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If hon. gentlemen opposite are taking the position that a statement appearing in their organ is to be treated as untruthful, that may be all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) will pardon me—I am not attributing any untruthfulness, but merely saying that an imperfect report of my remarks was made, and am not casting any reflection either upon the newspapers or upon the reporter. Every one knows that where one's remarks are not written down in shorthand, they are sometimes reported in such a way as not to convey the exact meaning given. But I may tell the Minister of Customs that there are probably six or eight gentlemen here to-night who heard my remarks on that occasion and who would be prepared, if he has any doubt about the accuracy of my version, to inform him that I have stated exactly what took place. Further than that, if I had adopted the argument of the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) I might safely disregard the report of this meeting, because it had not appeared in the 'Canada Gazette.'

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I certainly shall not appeal to the hon. gentleman's colleagues who were with him, for I accept the statement he has made. But he will pardon me if I say that I do not quite understand where he is now. Has he ascertained whether these implements can be made in Canada or not? He is asking for a thorough revision and readjustment of the tariff, and must have given close consideration to this point. Is this one of the items that he wishes to have amended?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think that is a fair statement. Hon. members are going to vote on this and they want to known what they are voting on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is perfectly right that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) should ask across the floor of this House what the policy of the opposition is. That is his position, as I understand it, that it is perfectly fair to ask what the policy of the opposition is.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, let me tell him his own colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), took an entirely different position years ago, because he said that a physician should not be asked to prescribe until he had been called in to attend the patient. And Mr. Chamberlain, whom my hon. friend recognizes as a pretty high authority, took exactly the same view. Now, I am not going to shelter myself behind any such consideration as that, and I have not done so to-night. The hon. gentleman seems to think that he cannot understand our position. Well, perhaps that may be more his misfortune than his fault, I am not sure about that. I thought I had made myself pretty plain. I said that I would not take off the duty on agricultural implements, and I said further that if it were necessary to preserve this great Canadian industry I would be prepared to raise it. Now, is that not plain? Sir, if it is necessary that an opposition should announce its policy to the country, surely it is ten times more necessary that the government should announce their policy. Now, we have in the House to-night the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Customs has the floor, and he has the confidence of his colleagues. Will he answer as frankly as I have done what the policy of the government is with regard to agricultural implements? He has told us that an application has been made to the government for an increase of duty on these implements. The government have therefore had this matter under consideration. Will the Minister of Customs now, speaking for the government to-night, tell this House and the people of this country what the policy of the government with regard to that matter is? It will not do, Mr. Speaker, to put this answer in any evasive language. Here is a government charged with the duty of giving a tariff to this country, and I invite my hon. friend the Minister of Customs to declare to this House and to this country, as he has seen fit to introduce this question, what the policy of the government is with regard to this application respecting agricultural implements, which he says has been under the consideration of the government ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the slightest objection to tell the hon. gentleman, and I will tell him in such definite terms that I think his own supporters will admit that he has failed to answer my question. He has not told us whether it is necessary to preserve this industry or not. I want to tell him that the propositions that the Finance Minister proposes to make are on the Table, those with which he proposes to supplement the present tariff, in which agricultural implements, binders, &c., are at 20 per cent duty, and they remain at 20 per cent. Now, that is the kind of answer he ought to be able to give me on one item out of hundreds in the tariff ; and the evident evasion, this trimming, this cutting round, are made to enable the opposition, so far as it can, to go to the country and to say one thing here and another thing there. To say 'if it is necessary to preserve the industry'—that is not the language of gentlemen who sit behind him. It is not necessary to have more duty on to preserve the industry in the country, because there are firms making these articles.

Mr. PRINGLE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? The constituency which I have the honour to represent, being vitally interested in the woollen industry, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he considers that the protection now afforded the woollen industry is sufficient or adequate protection ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is evident that the conclusion at which the ministry have arrived is that it is sufficient, as there is no change in that respect, except the German surtax. Now then, let me go on, if I am making this speech. An hon. gentleman who offers a resolution declaring that there is a necessity for an immediate and thorough revision of the tariff, when one particular item of that tariff is brought to his notice, and he is asked to give a statement, his answer was that it was dependent upon circumstances. He seems to have had that question ringing in his ears ; he must have seen that that was a question in which the people were interested, and he should have his mind made up on it and ascertain whether that industry could be maintained in this country or whether it could not. If he has made up his mind it cannot be maintained in this country under the present tariff, then he would say that 20 per cent on agricultural implements is not adequate protection. But I point out to him that the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) the other night read a list of iron goods that were imported from the United States amounting to some millions in value, and when he finished reading it I ventured to ask him : Why do you not read the importations of agricultural implements ? He was too wise to do that. He had heard, I fancy, something about the conversation that took place in Morden, therefore he left that out. But the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), honest soul that he is, blundered right into it ; he read all these, and showed where there had been an increase of nearly $2,000,000 in the importation of these articles, and he said that their policy was to make the tariff so high—and in response to one gentleman he said he didn't care if it was 100 per cent—he would make the tariff so high that every one of these articles would be made in this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Ought to be.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He did not say that, because when I called his attention to what his leader said he replied : I don't care what my leader said, I am not responsible for that. The hon. gentleman is going to have a duty put on so that every one of these $2,000,000 worth of agricultural implements should be made in this country. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and the hon. member for Peel tells us—and I think these are gentlemen who accompanied the leader of the opposition in his trip west—have laid it down that adequate protection means that such a duty shall be put upon whatever articles that are produced and made in this country as will shut out every single article of that line coming in from another country. I want to tell the leader of the opposition that if he reads the utterances concerning the meaning of adequate protection as defined by the speeches of his lieutenants, it is beyond cavil that adequate protection means a prohibitory tariff, and nothing else. It will not be a question on the platforms of this country, if we are going to the country this fall—it will not be a question as between protection and no duties. The Liberal party never proposed to do away with all duties. The platform that was read by the hon. member to-night distinctly states that we were to raise our revenues by a tariff of customs duties. Have a tariff, but have a tariff adjusted in such a way as to weigh less heavily upon the people, and do not adjust it in such a way as to do any injury to any class. We framed our tariff upon these lines, we carried it out, and what is the use of hon. gentlemen talking about having violated our promises and our pledges ? We went to the country, and what was the result—50 of a majority.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. What about Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I want to tell hon. gentlemen that to-night we are insisting that we shall have the information. Unless the hon. leader of the opposition gets up now, as this is the time when this question is to be settled, and says that those were not his views that were given utterance to by his lieutenants behind defining what 'adequate' means, then, Sir, they are committed to it and what do these hon. gentlemen say? The hon. member for South Leeds was asked a question and he said:

Sufficient protection to secure to the manufacturers, to the agriculturists, and to the labourers of this country the work of manufacturing or producing all the articles that we can produce and manufacture in this country by our own labour and keep the money in our own country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (reading)—

Make your tariff sufficiently high to do that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Now, by inference and by what they have said I have a kind of idea what the duty will be on agricultural implements when they come in. They are all to be made in this country. Nearly $2,000,000 worth were imported last year; that $2,000,000 worth of agricultural implements is to be made in this country and this is to be brought about in this way. There is $20 of a duty on a binder coming into this country now. Prior to 1895 there was a duty of $35 instead of $20, or $15 more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was $15 more duty on binders at one time and therefore we have positive proof of what is required to keep these implements or some of them out of the country, and mark you, every one is to be kept out. Binders came in and ploughs came in under a 35 per cent duty. Put the duty at 50 per cent and perhaps it will do but I question if 50 per cent will do it. They stand pledged to that. That is where they are.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) allow me to ask him a question?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does the hon. gentleman claim that by raising the duty on an article he would raise the price of that article by the amount of the duty?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I want an answer from the hon. Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says he knows my mind as well as his own. In all cases he might not do so, but he knows as well as I do what the object of raising the duty is—and he is leading away from the question we are discussing as to what adequate protection means.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. This is on the question.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Do not take me off this. In the case of agricultural implements 35 per cent would not shut them out of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Answer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Answer what?

Some hon. MEMBERS. The question.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I answered the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I answered the question.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would like to get a straight answer. My hon. friend has understood me. I have put to him that question to which he has given an answer already many times in my presence. Does he claim now that by raising the duty on agricultural implements we will raise the price of agricultural implements?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not making that argument at all.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If my hon. friend does not contend that I have not one word to say.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not arguing that now, but I will say this to him that in many cases circumstances come in. These circumstances arise in individual cases and they modify—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If hon. gentleman want to laugh they may think that they can discuss this question a great deal better than I can. I have been in business myself since I was a boy. I have been actively engaged in business all my life either as an employee or an employer. I have been in this House for thirty-one years and for twenty-seven years I have heard this question discussed, and I claim to know as much as some hon. gentlemen upon the subject. But, from the position I occupy through the kindness of the right hon. the Prime Minister in the Customs Department where I am brought into contact with the active working of the tariff and where I am brought into contact with business men I would be utterly unfit for the position, and I venture to say it myself without any egotism on my part, if I did not understand the workings of the tariff as well as any other hon. member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has asked me a question. I want to tell him this: When you impose a tax you have to be very careful that the incidents of that taxation is not going to be put upon the people. I am free to tell you that, and I do not hesitate a moment to say it, that there are people in foreign countries who, in their desire to sell their goods, will sell them in this country, as they will in any other country, at a lower price than they will sell to the people in their own country. That will happen to us here and happening in this way if you have a tariff the money goes into the revenue, but, that will only go so far, but if you levy too high a tax then the consumer must pay.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We know all that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well then, why do you ask me ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have just asked a question that the hon. Minister of Customs has answered over and over again. He said a minute ago that by raising the duty on agricultural implements we would raise the price of agricultural implements. He is wrong.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not say that. I ought to tell the hon. gentleman that he never heard me speaking that I know of anywhere in any different manner to that in which I am now speaking.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. minister will not deny that publicly—I do not speak of cabinet secrets—he has advocated the raising of duties on many things and the hon. gentleman cannot stand in his place to-night and say that he is not anxious to have a higher tariff.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says that he is not speaking about something that transpired in the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, no.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly not. If we were, of course, I would be utterly precluded from saying either yes or no, because, inferentially, I would be divulging the secrets of the cabinet and I would be unworthy of occupying a position in the cabinet if I violated my oath. I think I would not so far forget myself as to violate my oath, because, if I did, credence would not be put in any statement I made. Now, he says that I did it openly and publicly, and if I said it openly and publicly every one knows what I said, and I stand by what I said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I stand where the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) stood in reference to that fruit matter. We stood in a great many other things together.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We don't stand together now. I stand, but my hon friend (Hon. Mr. Paterson) does not stand where we stood formerly.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, my hon. friend did stand a good long time. I don't want anything personal, but I may say that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was able to stand it a long time. I am standing it a little longer apparently.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am standing by the principles on which we were elected.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not want to have any words with my hon. friend, but if he desires any personal encounter he will find me perfectly willing to meet him either on the platform or on the floor of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I grant that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has some views on the tariff. Yes, and when he was under my tuition he got on pretty well, but when I was taken by the Prime Minister to England, he must have got playing with some bad boys in my absence—Georgie Taylor, for instance, and they must have been reading Willie Maclean's paper and so he got a little off the track.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was playing with my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross) and some of my friends all around the government benches. I see a lot of them there, and I played with them. They would like to play again the same game if they were free to do so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What is the matter ? Some persons seem to be uneasy. I do not interrupt any one. However, Sir, I think it is desirable that we should keep close to this question and know what this 'adequate protection' is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. minister does not wish to be interrupted of course we will not interrupt him from this side of the House But he will be good enough to bear in mind that he began this game of asking questions.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not finding fault. I am pointing out to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that while he is a little indefinite in his own speech, and while his resolution is indefinite, he does not come out as clearly as his lieutenants have done on this matter. He heard what some of them said ; he perhaps did not hear what they all said, but unless he repudiates what was said by his lieutenants, then he must accept the responsibility of having his term 'adequate' interpreted by the speeches of his followers. I want to know what 'adequate protection' is, and what it means. I have pointed out that the chief Conservative whip (Mr. Taylor) has taken the ground that every agricultural implement should be made in this country, and that he would put the tariff up so high as to secure that. I put it that there was a greater increase in the imports of that particular manufactured article than in anything else, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) apparently has not been able to satisfy himself whether that industry could get along or whether it could not get along. But carrying out the policy announced by his lieutenants, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) ever has to put his 'adequate protection' policy into operation, he will have to put the duty on agricultural implements so high that every one of them will be made in this country and none come from the outside. I have told the hon. gentleman (Mr Borden) that we had 35 per cent on agricultural implements for years, and still they came in. Thirty-five per cent may not be adequate; it will take more, probably 50 per cent, and I question if even that would do. You take any other industry you like, and if you were to produce every article in this country then you have to have a rate of duty that would give adequate protection; adequate protection being the prohibition of the entry of these articles into Canada. Mr. Taylor says:

My hon. friend was willing to go as high as 35 per cent.

He said that to a Liberal member who intervened in the debate.

Now I am willing to go to an amount sufficient to protect the industries of the country even if it is 100 per cent.

Then speaking of the imported agricultural implements he said:

Thus, we sent to the United States last year nearly two million dollars to purchase these implements. In a very few years there will be nothing left of them but a heap of iron, and the Americans will have our two million dollars, whereas if we had a government that would have given adequate protection, every one of these articles would have been made in this country, employment would have been given to our workingmen, Canadian farmers would be supplying the home market, and we would have these two million dollars in Canada as a national capital to help on our progress and development.

Then, according to the chief Conservative whip, under this term 'adequate protection' there is to be a duty on agricultural implements sufficient to exclude every single one of them from being imported into this country. I pointed out that the former 35 per cent duty did not accomplish that, and he says he is willing, if it be 100 per cent, to go it. I say, Sir, that the leader of the opposition sitting there, who has assumed the responsibility of asking this House to pronounce upon this amendment, must accept that interpretation of the words 'adequate protection' or else he must denounce it and disclaim it now. He cannot escape from it. We must know where we are in this thing. We have an open policy; our policy is printed; it is in the hands of the people; it is to be changed somewhat by the resolutions laid upon the Table, but the people know all about it. They have the right to know, if we go to the country this fall, that that will be the policy followed by us. The people know what our policy is, and they are entitled to know what the policy of the Conservatives is. Now then, there are some other gentlemen amongst the Conservatives who have put an interpretation on this amendment. If I mistake not the member for Peel (Mr. Blain) accompanied the leader of the opposition in his journeyings west The member for Peel says:

A considerable quantity of these commodities come in under the present tariff, from the United States, and I submit that adequate protection should be applied to these articles that in accordance with the principles enunciated in the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition, the tariff should be placed sufficiently high so that the United States farmers could not send to this country one dollar's worth of goods in competition with the products of our own farmers.

Mr. BLAIN. Hear, hear. I believe that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but the hon. gentleman said more than that. He said:

That is in accordance with the principles enunciated in the amendment that Mr. Borden has moved.

Mr. BLAIN. Hear, hear. I stand by that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There now, we have it. The leader of the opposition has seen his lieutenant rise in this House and say: I have declared that the principle enunciated in the amendment of the leader of the oppostion when he declares for adequate protection, is a duty so high that not one single dollar's worth shall come into the country. The leader of the opposition must either acknowledge that or requdiate it. If he does not repudiate it it stands there as an explanation that the policy of the Conservative party is a prohibitory tariff.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) asking me a question.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I am making a statement. When I am through the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) can rise and say whether or not he repudiates the statements of his lieutenants.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want the hon. gentleman to understand that I am ready to answer any question he puts.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Very well. The hon. gentleman does not require any question to be asked. I have read what the hon. member for Peel has said in regard to certain articles coming from the United States, of which he holds that not a single dollar's worth should be allowed to come into the country, and he says that is in accordance with the principle of the amendment which the hon. leader of the opposition has moved. Therefore we are forced, in view of the vagueness of the language of the hon. leader of the opposition, to learn the meaning of this adequate protection from the speeches made by his supporters in the House.

Then, the hon. member for Halton is one of the old members of the House, one of the staunch old Conservatives. He told us in his speech last night:

> But we say we will put a Chinese wall right round this country, and we will not allow these Americans to come in here and monopolize the markets of this country.

That is what he understands by adequate protection—a Chinese wall around this country that will admit none of those products.

Thus we have arrived at the real meaning of adequate protection; we have learned what the policy of the Conservative party under the leadership of the hon. gentleman is to be. If not, it must be denied. It is not the old national policy; not at all. It is to be an adequate policy that will exclude everything from this country. It is to be a prohibitive tariff as interpreted by the speeches of hon. gentlemen who are following the hon. gentleman in the House, one of whom at least in his presence has reiterated his belief that that is the true meaning of the term.

But why go to the trouble of framing a tariff with hundreds of items in it to accomplish their purpose of prohibiting the importation of foreign goods? Why not at once pass a simple Act and say: It shall be illegal from this time henceforth to introduce into this country any goods of which a like kind are produced in Canada. They have not thought of revenue; there is no expression in the resolution with reference to revenue. The only thing is protection—adequate protection—which is defined to be protection high enough to exclude everything, even if it should require a duty of 100 per cent.

Well, I am glad that we have been able to have this discussion. My remarks have been a little broken up by the friendly interruptions which we have had, but I, of course, must share the responsibility of that. The hon. leader of the opposition was courteous enough to give me an answer when I asked him a question, and I endeavoured to return a like courtesy when any questions were asked of myself. I have my views on the tariff, and perhaps, like some other members in this House, I may not get what I think the very best duty on every one of the 600 or 800 items in the tariff. I am quite sure that when the hon. gentleman forms an administration in the far distant future, he will find among his supporters, possibly among his colleagues, a difference of opinion on some items, because of different interests, and so on. But we are now getting down to a principle. Hon. gentlemen are not fighting for the old national policy. What they are fighting for is away beyond that. It is for a prohibitive tariff that will shut out everything, while we on this side stand where we always have stood, for a revenue tariff, and a revenue tariff is what is now enacted. It is the kind of tariff that we were instructed to frame by the great Liberal convention in 1893. We were to raise our revenues by means of a tariff, and in arranging the tariff we were to take care to do injustice to no class. We have endeavoured to do that. It is a mere play upon words to talk about protection and free trade in this country. Where you have a tariff with hundreds of items produced in the country, where you have a constant tariff on these items, you of necessity have protection as an incident of that tariff. It cannot be otherwise, unless you put a corresponding excise duty upon the articles manufactured in the country, which no one has ever proposed. What we have contended is, that under that tariff so aranged, we had to care for every interest. We have secured a tariff for revenue. We have obtained money from the people which I believe the people have not felt the burden of to any great extent. You do not hear murmuring in the country. We are carrying on the public business, developing this country at a rate never before known. The manufacturing and farming industries especially are prospering under the operation of that tariff, as they never prospered before. And this is the time, when the country is in that prosperous condition, that you are solemnly asked to declare that it is the bounden duty of the government to have a thorough revision and readjustment of the tariff, and to have it this session.

As the hon. Finance Minister has said, under the operation of the tariff, under changing conditions, which change very fast in our time, not shutting our eyes to what is being done in the course of legislation in other countries, tariff changes may be necessitated. When the time comes when, in the opinion of the government, those changes should be made, they will be made, I believe, in such a manner, as will promote the best interests of the people of this country; and I think the vast majority of the members of this House, and the majority of the people of this country, will feel that when the revision of the tariff becomes necessary, either in whole or in part—I believe the manufacturers themselves will feel so—that it will be safer to leave that revision in the hands of the men who completed the last revision, than to entrust it to the hands of men whose only policy, as enunciated in their speeches, is to put the duties so high as to shut out every article the like of which is produced in this country. It would be ruin to the manufacturers as well as to all other classes in the country. Every person conversant with the intricacies of a tariff levied on such a vast multitude of articles as our tariff comprises, knows the interdependence of trade, the relation of one article to another; and in the framing of that tariff it is necessary not only to provide for securing revenue, but to see that you are not crushing out one class of manufacturers, while unduly helping another class. It is no simple matter, and I venture to express the belief that the manufacturers of this country would feel that it would be safer to have the revision of the tariff, when the time comes for it to be made, whether in whole or in part, accomplished by the men who six years ago, with the aid of their supporters in this House, put in force the tariff that has stood from that day to this, without any material change; and during those six years there has been such prosperity in this country as never existed in it before. I have not spoken about that prosperity. It has been alluded to; but every one knows the prosperity of this country. Our Conservative friends admit it, and claim credit for admitting it. What credit is due for admitting that the times are good? Do we not know that hon. gentlemen opposite are men of truth, and being so, how could they say anything else, than that times are good? We could not have maintained that character if we had said that the times were good when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power.

The hon. leader of the opposition has told us that we have not done a single thing to promote the prosperity of this country—that this prosperity is outside and beyond anything we have done—that it is simply an incident of the prosperity of the world at large. Well, if my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, thinks that the policy of a government has nothing to do with the prosperity of a country, if that is his view of the action of government, why does he want any change? Why does he propose any change of policy? But the very fact that he proposes an amendment to the policy of the government, of necessity indicates that, in his opinion, a change of policy would produce greater prosperity and advancement, otherwise his resolution is meaningless. If it be true that under our present tariff policy, the country is prospering, as it never did before, surely some credit is due that policy. But if governments have nothing whatever to do with the prosperity of a country, then my hon. friend is singularly inconsistent in advocating a change of policy. When pressed to explain what really his amendment meant my hon. friend sheltered himself very jocularly, on one or two occasions, behind what other hon. members had said. He was evidently unable to explain what the word 'adequate' in his resolution means. He has replied more than once by saying: Well the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), down in Montreal, said that he was in favour of legitimate protection. He seemed to think that 'legitimate' and 'adequate' are synonymous terms, and that we must ask my hon. colleague the hon. Minister of Public Works to explain them. Well, I do not agree with my hon. friend. I do not consider the two expressions synonymous. 'Adequate protection,' as defined by the speeches of the lieutenants, as I have pointed out, and as one of them re-affirmed in his presence, means a tariff that will exclude from this country the importation of every kind of article that is manufactured in it. I would call that illegitimate protection. That is a protection which the government have no right to impose. Legitimate protection is not my phrase, but I accept it as a very good one. It is such a protection as, by a judicious arrangement of the tariff, gives the requisite encouragement to our industries and at the same time furnishes the revenue required to carry on the business of the country. Such a protection we now enjoy, and if my hon. friend's predictions should be true, and we should have an election this fall, the issue will be between legitimate and illegitimate protection. If that be the dividing line, I am for legitimate as opposed to illegitimate protection. I am for a tariff so adjusted that it will secure the requisite revenue and give every legitimate industry in this country the assistance it requires, as opposed to a tariff prohibitory in its nature, and which would exclude every article of foreign manufacture from the country.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I ought to apologize to the House for rising at this very late, or rather early hour, to attempt to follow the speech just delivered by the hon. Minister of Customs. It seems to me that I am displaying a good deal of temerity in attempting to follow him at this hour and in the present circumstances. I had not the privilege of being in the House when he began his speech, but I came in very soon after, and the first words that caught my ear were his statement that there was no dissatisfaction with the tariff at present, and his invitation to us to point out when any dissatisfaction existed. Why, has the minister been asleep during the past twelve months? Has he been dozing during the past two weeks since this discussion began? Has he turned a deaf ear to the statements of several of his own followers as to the amendments they thought necessary? Has he forgotten what was said about salt? Has he forgotten what his hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) said about lead, and what an hon. member, heading a deputation of his constituents, said not long ago about vegetables? Has he completely lost recollection of the statements made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) with regard to the necessity of protection against servile labour? Have the statements made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia regarding the necessity for further protection against inferior horses coming into this country passed from his recollection ? And the statement of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) regarding the necessity for protecting lumber and lead ? Has he forgotten the statement of his own colleague from Brantford (Mr. Heyd) as to the necessity of revising the tariff with regard to the duty on binder twine ? When the hon. minister challenges hon. members on this side to point out where the dissatisfaction exists with regard to the tariff, we need only refer him to his own followers. I am astonished that the hon. gentleman should ask such a question because 'Hansard' bears the indubitable evidence that, not only from this side but from the other side, since this debate has begun, again and again objections have been taken and amendments pointed out and changes suggested with the object of making the tariff more suitable to the needs and interests of the people. Let me recall to the hon. gentleman the statement made by an hon. member who takes second place to no man in this parliament as an authority on trade questions. I refer to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Has the hon. Minister of Customs forgotten the statements made by that hon. gentleman twelve months ago in this House when the budget debate was progressing ? Has he also forgotten the reasons he gave the other day why a tariff revision could not now be entered upon ? Has he forgotten all these things ? If he has not, I fail to understand how he can rise in his place and invite hon. members on this side to point out where dissatisfaction exists with regard to the tariff.

Sir, the hon. gentleman referred to the wonderful progress which has been made during the last few years, and he pointed with pleasure to the increase in the export trade of this country. We join in the congratulations offered the people of Canada on the substantial increase which has been made in our exports during the past five or six years. But to what is that increase due ? Will the hon. gentleman say that the tariff has had anything to do with giving us the bounteous crops with which Heaven has blessed Canada during the past five or six years ? Would our exports have increased, as they have done, if Canada had been cursed with meagre crops instead of being blessed with abundant harvests ? Will the hon. minister have the temerity to say that the tariff, the particulars of which he has at his finger ends, has had anything to do with the increase in our export trade ? When I took the liberty of asking that question, what did he attempt to say ? He attempted to say that the perfecting of the cold storage system under the benign influence of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) had helped to promote the export of our surplus products. And when I asked how much of our products had been exported under this cold storage system he did not answer. He was not frank enough, I regret to say, when he referred to cold storage, to admit that that system had been introduced by the predecessor of the present Minister of Agriculture in order to carry the perishable products of our country across the ocean. The markets of the United States being closed to them, our farmers were enabled by their industry and perseverance and pluck to find across the sea a better market than that of the United States; and the administration of that day, realizing the importance of favouring that trade and giving every facility for carrying it on, made provision for cold storage so that these perishable products might be placed in the markets of the old land in the best shape. Now, if hon. gentlemen opposite take credit for the increase of our exports that has resulted from the cold storage system it is surely not unreasonable for us on this side to expect that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) would have done simple justice to his opponents by pointing out that they and not this government were the originators of this system, and that if it has been an advantage to the exporters, they as well as this government should receive some credit. The hon. gentleman went on to discuss duties on beets, tomatoes and other vegetables, and to lay down the policy that the Liberal party intend to follow with respect to the tariff on these products. He explained the position of the Liberal party, and quoted from the speech of the late Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) stating that that speech contained common sense ideas. Was it because that hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) gave utterance to these common sense ideas that he was compelled to separate himself from the present cabinet ? And if his speech declaring against additional protection to the market gardeners of this country enunciated the policy of the government, what does the hon. gentleman think of his colleague from West York (Mr. Campbell) who appealed for the suffrages of the people of West York and the market gardeners who are an important element in that constituency upon the ground that he would advocate and strive for a change in the tariff which would give additional protection to the men whose suffrages he sought ?

Sir, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) wants to know every particular of the policy which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would adopt if they were called upon to administer the affairs of this country. Has he any right to ask for that information in view of the experience which the Liberal Conservative party has had during the last six or seven years ? I do not think it would be advisable for the leader of the opposition to give further particulars. 'Once bitten twice shy' is a good old adage. The gentlemen occupying the treasury benches coming into office six or seven years ago, after denouncing the national policy which had been established by their predecessors in 1879, realized they could do nothing better than leave the national policy as they found it, and the only change, practically, that they made in the tariff was whatever change resulted from the introduction of their so-called British preference. And why should they expect hon. members on this side, who are not charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of the country, to give particulars of every change which they would make in the present tariff if they were called upon to assume the responsibility of carrying on the affairs of Canada? The hon. minister is very anxious to ascertain the position of the leader of the opposition respecting the duty on agricultural implements. He dwelt long, he even laboured to get this information, and challenged the statements that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was alleged to have made in his recent tour in the North-west. It was my good fortune, Mr. Speaker, to accompany my leader on that tour, and I well recollect the meeting at which these questions were asked him. It is unnecessary for me to corroborate the statements that the hon. gentleman has made, for the word of the leader of the opposition will be taken anywhere throughout the Dominion. But if it were necessary I could corroborate every word that has fallen from the lips of that hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) tonight. It seems to me that it was most unfortunate for himself that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) should bring the question of the duty on agricultural implements before the House in this debate. It was fresh in the minds of many of those with whom we came in contact during our recent tour in the west that when the Liberal party were appealing for their suffrages to that particular portion of the Dominion, their rallying cry was 'vote for McCarthy and free agricultural implements.' Was that part of their policy in 1896, and if so, has it been carried out? Have they fulfilled the pledges they made to the electors of that part of the Dominion, and given them free agricultural implements which they declared would be such a boon to that portion of the country? No, they have not; but, on the contrary, they have increased the protection which the manufacturers enjoyed. They have given them additional protection by minor changes which they have made in the duties on articles coming into this country which enter into the manufacture of these implements. The hon. gentleman declared that since the Liberal party came into power they have been fulfilling their pledges of reducing the burdens resting upon the people. By what method or policy have they succeeded in reducing the burdens of taxation which they found resting upon the shoulders of the people? I shall not weary the House at this late hour by reading many figures. But let me draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the increased taxation imposed upon the people, the taxation derived from the customs and excise, during the past six years, as compared with the previous six years has been equal to twenty-six per cent per annum. And the end is not yet. If we compare the taxation of the people in the first year of the Liberal administration, 1897, which amounted to $28,648,626, with the taxation levied during the last year, 1902, which amounted to $43,308,111, we find that the increase of taxation in these five years, notwithstanding the pledges which these hon. gentlemen made again and again to the people of this country, has been no less than the enormous sum of $14,740,485, equivalent to an increase of fifty-one per cent. And this is the way the hon. gentleman and his colleagues have fulfilled their pledges to the people and reduced the burdens of taxation. I shall not follow the example which has been complained of by the hon. gentleman by quoting from statements which he made as far back as 1876. But, with his permission I will make a quotation from a speech delivered by him in this House in 1894. I need not apologize for making a quotation not quite ten years old. The quotation is valuable because it clearly proves that the hon. gentleman had then some idea how best to measure the taxation which was being imposed upon the people by the government of that day. He is reported in the 'Hansard' of 1894, volume one, page 356, as follows:—

> The hon. gentleman said that the taxes we had in 1878 were heavier than they are now. That is a very strange statement for any one to make. I want to give hon. gentlemen opposite what I consider is a true way of measuring this, because the mere assertion made on one side of the House or the other will carry no weight. I would ask those hon. gentlemen to turn to page 11 of the Trade and Navigation Returns, prepared, not by Mr. Laurier or by the member for South Oxford, but prepared by the government themselves, and what is that statement. One of the columns shows the amount of customs duties paid per head of the population. That is the way to measure your taxation. Take the taxes of 1878 and see how much was paid by the population then. You will find it was $3.13 per head. Take the sum this last year, and it was $4.26 per head.

That is the statement made by the minister as to the best method of ascertaining what burden of taxation was being laid upon the people by the imposition of the customs and excise duties. In 1893 the customs taxation was $4.26, as the hon. gentleman then stated, but in 1896 that taxation had fallen to $3.90. What has been the record since then? The taxation under the administration of these business gentlemen has increased, in customs from $3.90 to $5.90 per head; and in excise from $1.56 to $2.05 per head. Sir, the average taxation per head per annum during the past five years shows an increase of no less than 17½ per cent. The taxation per head in 1897, the first year of the Liberal administration, amounted to $5.57; the taxation per head last year, 1902, was no less than $7.95, an increase of $2.38 per head, or 42½ per cent. This is one of the ways in which hon. gentlemen have fulfilled their pledges and have relieved the taxpayers of this country of some of the burdens which they found resting upon them.

I do not know that there is much more to refer to in the speech of the Minister of Customs except his reference to the preferential tariff, and also to the German surtax, which I will refer to a little later on, with the permission of the House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will you finish with me now, as I wish to go out ?

Mr. CLARKE. No, I want to come back to the hon. gentleman later on, I want to keep the good wine and the best wine until the last. In making his budget speech, the Minister of Finance congratulated the country upon the prosperity which exists at the present time. We do not dispute that prosperity, we congratulate the hon. gentleman upon being able to make such a good statement, and we hope that that prosperity will continue for a great many years to come. But there was one statement made by the Minister of Finance in his opening sentences to which I would like to draw the attention of the House. He said :

> Two years ago, after several years of rapid progress, there was anxiety in the minds of many observing men. Some indeed, thought we had already entered upon a period of depression. Others, and among them I count myself, felt that while we were not likely to have any period of severe depression, we might reasonably experience a check upon the very great prosperity of recent years. However, as it turned out, all these fears were unnecessary.

Sir, if these gentlemen can lay any substantial claim to credit for the creation of prosperous times in the Dominion, would they not be grossly derelict in their duty to the people of Canada if they did not perpetuate a policy which would give us a continuation of that prosperity for years to come ? Why did the hon. gentleman hesitate ? Why did he fear that there might be a set-back, why did he fear that this prosperity might not continue ? He intended to make no change in his tariff when he made that statement; and if that tariff was the perfect instrument he claimed it was, if that tariff has contributed to the prosperity of this country, if it has been one of the main causes which have promoted its prosperity, why should the hon. gentleman have any forebodings as to a period of depression following in days to come ? The position which we have taken, which we have had no hesitation in taking, is that the splendid, the phenomenal prosperity, if I may use the word, which has obtained in this country for the last six years, has been due primarily, and practically speaking, entirely, to the revival of business the world over, notwithstanding what the Minister of Customs has said, and also to the abundant crops with which Canada has been blessed during that period.

In the course of his speech, the Minister of Finance made reference to what has been accomplished by the Postmaster General in his administration of the Post Office Department. We have no desire, certainly I have no desire, to rob the Postmaster General of any credit to which he may be entitled for his administration of the affairs of the Post Office Department; but I have this to say, and I say it without hesitation, that in no department of the public service to-day is there so much dissatisfaction existing among the employees, in none does a feeling so strongly prevail that they are not getting fair-play or justice, as in the department of the Postmaster General. I say, Sir, that occupying the dual position which he does, the position of Minister of Labour as well as that of Postmaster General, he is especially bound to see that every grievance, every reasonable complaint which has been made to him, and which is being constantly made to him, shall be inquired into and redressed. It is a matter of greater importance to the people of Canada that we should have the benefit of an efficient postal service, than that the hon. gentleman should be able to make the two sides of the ledger balance to a cent at the end of the year. If the hon. gentleman has accomplished that feat, if he has made the receipts balance the expenditure, how has that been done ? It has been done, as has been pointed out, by special efforts ; it has been done also by the enormous increase which has taken place in the correspondence of this country, due to the general prosperity which has obtained. But the hon. gentleman has not hesitated to levy upon the newspaper proprietors of this country a new tax. He has compelled them to pay a tax which was not in existence when he assumed office. That tax, which is certainly a burden upon the readers of newspapers as well as upon the makers of newspapers, has undoubtedly been a reactionary measure, and a burden upon the people of this country. He has also lessened the privileges which the people enjoyed by raising the parcel post and the book post. Where four ounces were formerly sent for one cent from one part of Canada to the other, now only two ounces are sent. So when the Finance Minister gives credit to the Postmaster General for the administration of the affairs of the post office, we ask him to state how it has been accomplished, and we ask him to tell frankly the story of the additional burdens which have been placed upon the shoulders of the people to enable the Postmaster General to do what he has done.

The Minister of Finance made a reference in the course of his budget speech, to the prosperity which obtained on the railway system of the Dominion. He referred to the fact that there was a small credit balance in the operating expenses of the Intercolonial for the past twelve months. Sir, during the past five years every railway in the Dominion of Canada, every railway on the continent of America, has substantially improved its position. Every railway company has been practically at its wit's end to find power and to find cars to handle the freight which has been offering. Notwithstanding the fact that the times have been propitious, notwithstanding the fact that business has largely increased in the maritime provinces owing to the development of the steel and coal industries, what is the position of affairs in regard to the administration of railways by hon. gentlemen opposite? Is it one that the hon. Minister of Finance can point to with any degree of pleasure or satisfaction, notwithstanding the fact that there is a small credit balance at the end of this year's operations ? Let me make a comparison, Mr. Speaker, of the last six years of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway with the operation of these roads during the six years previous. The past six years have been fat years ; the previous six years were lean years Yet, notwithstanding this fact, these roads were operated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and the showing which they make at the end of these six years' operation is one that hon. gentlemen ought not to take any credit for. It is one that they ought to be heartily ashamed of. What are the facts ? From 1897 to 1902 inclusive, the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial road reached the enormous sum of $13,041,282, and on the Prince Edward Island railway the capital expenditure for the same period amounted to $849,260. The expenditure on both these roads on capital account during the past six years amounted to $13,890,542. What were the operating results of these railways ? From 1897 to 1902, the net loss on the Intercolonial Railway was $487,971, and on the Prince Edward Island Railway $398,792, making a total net loss for the past six years in the operation of these roads of no less than $886,763. Notwithstanding this period of prosperity, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the traffic during the past six years, these two roads did not earn enough by $886,763 to meet the operating expenses. Is that a condition of things that the government can felicitate itself upon or compliment the country upon ? I repeat that it is a most disgraceful condition of things, and one that ought to be put an end to as soon as possible. Compare the figures of the previous six years with those which I have just presented. From 1891 to 1896, the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway was $2,827,391, and on the Prince Edward Island Railway $8,300, making a total expenditure on capital account for that period of $2,835,691. The operating results were a net loss on the Intercolonial Railway of $519,287, and on the Prince Edward Island Railway of $430,497, or, for the two roads, a net loss of $949,784. The country was burdened by an additional debt through the operation of these roads and through the expenditures made on capital account during the period from 1891 to 1896 of $3,785,475. What is the net result to the people of Canada from the operation of these two roads for the past twelve years ? We have an indebtedness placed upon our shoulders of no less a sum than $18,562,780, and four-fifths of that burden has been laid on the shoulders of the taxpayers of this country by the hon. gentlemen opposite. Is that a satisfactory condition of affairs ? I say it is not and that it is one which the hon. Minister of Finance cannot derive any pleasure from or compliment the country upon. That is one phase of the transportation problem which these hon. gentlemen have not attempted to solve. That question appears to have dropped out of sight notwithstanding the fact that it is one of the most important problems awaiting solution at the hands of the people of this country. Since the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) abandoned his colleagues, practically they have given up the idea of making an attempt to solve that problem, and some statements have recently been made that they propose to refer the matter to a commission. They have not attempted to solve it, or they are not capable of solving it, or they would try to solve it ; but they are appointing a commission to try and solve it for them. The suggestion was made two or three years ago from this side of the House, and made in all humbleness and respect, that there should be a commission appointed at that time to make a thorough examination as to the best means of perfecting the transportation facilities of the country and report to the government upon it. Nothing has been done up to the present time, except to make the announcement that the government propose to appoint a commission, which means practically that they cannot solve this problem, that they have not the ability to deal with it, and so they have asked a commission of gentlemen to take the matter out of their hands, to relieve them of the responsibility of dealing with the transportation problem and of making a report to them as to what is best to be done in the interests of the country. That is the way this question is being solved by these hon. gentlemen. They had a solution of the fast Atlantic project in their hands when they assumed office in 1896. They abandoned the contract which was then awaiting their signature. They refused to sign it. They refused to call the fast Atlantic line into existence. They told the people that they were going to give them a new type of vessels, bottle-nosed or bottle-necked vessels which would be much steadier boats and by which they were going to save to the people $250,000 per annum in the subsidy to this line. But what have they done towards giving the people the benefit of this fast line across the Atlantic? Nothing. I believe there was an announcement made two or three months ago that the government proposed to call for tenders for this fast Atlantic line; but, I presume, a commission will need to be appointed to tell these hon. gentlemen how they should establish the line.

But, they have some desire to pose as a naval administration. They propose to do something to establish their record as men of light and leading respecting naval affairs; for the announcement has been made that, instead of giving a reasonable and moderate contribution towards the maintenance of the imperial navy whose ships are on every sea to protect our commerce, they propose to establish the nucleus of a navy on their own account. They propose to place cruisers on the lakes and on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. If they do not succeed better in the administration of this naval force than they have done in carrying on the business of the country it will be a very serious matter; and the taxpayers will look with alarm if the affairs of the proposed naval department are placed under the control of my Lord High Admiral Préfontaine, who occupies the position of hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The hon. Minister of Finance took credit to himself for the enormous surplus which he hopes to have on the credit side of the ledger at the end of the present fiscal year. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) very naively and very suggestively asked if it is a revenue tariff that is in force in this country, why it is that no suggestion is made, nothwithstanding this enormous surplus which the government will have at its credit at the end of the fiscal year, for reducing the burdens of the people? Surely, when this business administration have a surplus of $13,000,000 at their credit the taxpayers of this country have a right to expect some reduction in the burden of taxation which has weighed so heavily upon them during the past twelve months and as a result of which this enormous surplus has been raised. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce had something to say in days gone by regarding surpluses. The hon. gentleman is quoted in 1900, as follows:

> I ask how it (the surplus) was got? $1,000,000 was derived from two of the most odious and oppressive taxes which were ever imposed in any civilized country before, under similar circumstances at least—the taxes on breadstuffs and fuel. If he really wants to relieve the people let him remove the taxes on breadstuffs and coal.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce and his colleagues have an opportunity of proving that they meant what they said when they declared that the tax on breadstuffs and fuel was the most oppressive and the most odious tax that coulld be imposed on a civilized community. From the report of the Trade and Commerce Department of last year, we find that no less than $437,496 was raised by a tax on breadstuffs, and that $1,652,993 was raised by a tax on coal. Of this $13,000,000 of surplus, not less than $2,090,490 was raised as a result of the tax on breadstuffs and coal, and yet not a suggestion has been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) or by any of the ministers that this odious and barbarous tax should be removed and that the consumers of this country should get the benefit of its remission.

This afternoon the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) was told by one of the ministers that by reason of the increased duty put upon tobacco in 1897 by this Liberal government, no less than $1,335,753 additional taxes were collected from those who use the weed during the past twelve months than would have been collected had the Conservative tariff remained in force and the same quantity of tobacco been consumed. Tobacco is solace and comfort and consolation of the working classes after their hard day's work, and would it be an unreasonable thing for them to expect that a portion of this extra tax which this government (whose pledge it was on coming into office to make Canada a cheap country to live in) placed upon tobacco, should be remitted to them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Customs made reference to the enormous expansion that is taking place in the trade of this country. I do not admit for one moment that the fact that the imports and exports have increased, is of itself an infallible test as to the prosperity of a country. It seems to me that if we manufactured some of the goods which we import and thereby reduced the volume of our imports; and if we exported less than we did, because of a market for our produce, the prosperity of the country would be greater although the volume of its trade might not be so large.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. And if the trade of this country has increased, we may also remember that the trade of the United States has increased, that the trade of the other colonies has increased, that the trade of other nations has increased, and that the trade of the motherland has substantially increased during the past six years. Again I ask the gentlemen on the treasury benches: What changes have they made in the fiscal system which they found in operation in 1896, which have caused this large development in our export and import trade? Sir, the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) in his eloquent advocacy of the policy of protection to our legitimate industries, made a statement on the floor of this House that has not been answered; a statement that the Minister of Customs has not attempted to answer; a statement that no minister who was a colleague of the Hon. Mr. Tarte has attempted to answer; a statement that no member supporting the government has attempted to answer; a statement that they cannot answer, and will not answer, because it is known far and wide to be a fact. This is the statement of the Hon. Mr. Tarte to which I refer:

I say it openly, I say it from the bottom of my heart, that I fully expected that the Liberal party, with which I have been connected during the last ten years, would carry out the policy it was understood in 1896 they would carry out.

I draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to this language of the ex-minister:

I am weighing my words. I know what arrangement, what understanding took place between some public men. I know what took place. I do not divulge any secrets. I know what we did in the election of 1896 in Montreal. I see within the radius of my eye public men who, at our request, came to the city of Montreal, went to the manufacturers, with the knowledge of the leaders of their party, and told them not only would the tariff not be disturbed, but it would be changed in the right direction when the proper time came. There was no secret about that. I shall not give names. There are men who hear me—I am sorry there are not more on those benches—who know that I am perfectly right.

Has any hon. gentleman who has been a colleague of the ex-Minister of Public Works during the past six years anything to say about that statement? Is any one of them prepared to contradict it? Are they all dumb? Is that statement a fact, or is it not? I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. I say that the same tactics which the ex-minister tells us were adopted in Montreal, were pursued in the manufacturing centres of the province of Ontario. Were these the tactics of honourable public men; were they the tactics we would expect to see adopted by gentlemen who made the professions which these Liberal ministers made? What has the Minister of Customs to say to the allegations of his late colleague? Are they correct? Is it a fact that the men now on the treasury benches who rung the changes from end to end of this Dominion, denouncing the national policy, declaring that the people of this country were being bled white as a result of this policy—is it a fact that these men went into the centres of industry throughout the Dominion and taking the manufacturers to one side, gave them assurances, that should they come to power no changes would be made in this much maligned national policy; but that instead, in the course of time, additional protection would be given them if they only voted for and supported the Liberal party?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. They appealed to the people as the great tax reducers, and they pledged themselves to the people that if they came into power they would wipe the last vestige of protection out of the tariff that was placed on the statute-book in 1879. Has the Prime Minister or his colleagues anything to say regarding this allegation which has been made in parliament by an ex-minister, respecting their laches, respecting—shall I use the word—their perfidious conduct towards the great body of the taxpayers of Canada?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it not a perfidious course to pursue, to tell the horny-handed sons of toil from one end of Canada to the other, that the national policy was inimical to their best interests; that they were groaning under the burden of taxation which that policy imposed upon them; and, at the same time, that these Liberal statesmen should go from factory to factory and pledge themselves to the captains of those great industries, that if they got on the treasury benches no change would be made in that abominable tariff which would in any way hurt the manufacturing industries of this country?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. And, Sir, if this government can take credit to-day because our industries are prosperous, is not the secret of this prosperity found in the statement made by the member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte)? And if our industries are prosperous, it is because the government forgot or ignored the pledges they made to the people of Canada. They declared in favour of free trade; they declared in favour of the abolition of protection, while in the same breath they gave assurances and pledges to the manufacturers, pledges that they have since fulfilled to the letter, namely: that the manufacturing industries would have their first consideration. If our industries are prosperous, Mr. Speaker, surely then it is because these hon. gentlemen, if they had any convictions, had not the courage of their convictions, and were afraid to destroy that principle of protection which they found in the tariff and which they denounced as the national policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. But the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) went further. He said:

The revision of the tariff in 1897 has placed it about 2 per cent less than it was before.

That tariff averaged about 30 per cent in 1896 and these gentlemen who were to cut out every vestige of protection, had the temerity to reduce it to 28 per cent:

The revision of the tariff of 1897 has placed it about 2 per cent less high than it was before. We did not do more than that ; and when my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was this afternoon denouncing the former tariff, the tariff that I supported myself, when he was telling us that the tariff enacted in 1879 and kept on the statute-book up to 1897 had simply allowed the manufacturers to pocket the money of the people, I was saying to myself, if it was so, I do not know what it is now, because there is not much difference in the two tariffs ; the present tariff is about the same thing.

And the hon. member for St. Mary's is right, because the duty collected on dutiable goods in 1896 was 30 per cent, while the duty collected last year was 27·33 per cent ; and this reduction of 2·67 per cent includes the goods brought in under the so-called British preference. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery ; and these hon. gentlemen, while professing to be revenue-tariff men and free traders, paid the greatest possible compliment to their predecessors by adopting their tariff as soon as they had the opportunity of doing so.

If I may trespass on the indugence of the House a litte further, I would like to say a few words on the operation of the British preference and as to its effect on our imports. At the opening of the Colonial Conference in London last summer, the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain made the following statement in reference to the British preference given by Canada :

> So long as a preferential tariff, even a munificent preference, is still sufficiently protective to exclude us altogether, or nearly so, from your markets, it is no satisfaction to us that you have imposed even greater disability upon the same goods if they came from foreign markets, especially if the articles in which the foreigners are interested come in under more favourable conditions.

Was Mr. Chamberlain justified in making that statement, or was he not ? What are the facts ? In 1902 all imports from Great Britain entered for consumption in Canada had a duty of 17·12 per cent levied on them. In the same year all the imports from the United States entered for consumption had a duty of 12·54 levied on them. In other words, the duty levied on all goods imported from England was nearly half as much more as the duty levied on all the goods imported from the United States. The duty levied on dutiable goods imported last year from Great Britan was 24·02 per cent, while on dutiable goods imported from the United States it was 25·18 per cent. That is all the advantage the British manufacturer got in the markets of Canada, while he had the disadvantages of distance, insurance and time. That is the extent of the preference which these hon. gentlemen have made so much ado about during the past five years ; and I have shown the appreciation in which the preference is held by the gentleman best qualified to speak on it. The officials of the British Board of Trade also made a statement respecting the operation of the preference in which they endorsed the position taken by the Colonial Secretary. This is what they said :

> The period which has elapsed since the first application of the preferential tariff has not been long enough to enable any certain inferences to be drawn as to its effect in encouraging or diverting trade, especially as the period has been an abnormal one, marked by great general revival of trade throughout the world, accompanied by large oscillations of prices of some of the principal articles which figure in the Canadian import and export tables—notably coal, iron and steel, and corn. There has also been a rapid growth of gold production in the north-west of Canada, practically the whole of which, so far as it is exported, goes to the United States.

The hon. Minister of Customs, in the course of his speech to-night, flippantly referred to the statements that had been made about the general revival of trade throughout the world ; yet here is a high authority on that matter, which I think he will hardly dare to call in question. Further, Sir, this remarkable statement is made by these same officials :

> We may look at the figures in another way, i.e., by comparing the percentages of the total import trade of Canada which came from the United Kingdom before and after the introduction of the preferential tariff, respectively. The result is to show that the continuous decrease which has been taking place in recent years in the proportion of imports from the United Kingdom into Canada has not been arrested by the operation of the tariff. The percentage proportion in the year 1900-01 (during which the preference of one-third was in force) was 23½. In the three preceding years 1897-8 to 1899-1900 (during which there was a preference of one-eighth, to 30th June, 1898, then one-fourth), the percentage was 24½.

These are statements which have not been, and I think, cannot be gainsaid by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Now, Sir, let me go back into what my hon. friend the Minister of Customs would call ancient history. I do so merely to show that history is repeating itself. In the first years of confederation, during the period from 1868 to 1874, inclusive, our average imports for consumption from Great Britain amounted to $50,709,791, and from the United States they averaged $34,759,154. During the five years that the Liberal party were in office, from 1874 until the introduction of the national policy in 1879, what was the trend of our trade as between Great Britain and the United States ? The imports from the United Kingdom decreased during their period of office by no less than 17½ per cent per annum, while the imports from the United States increased 38 per cent per annum, as compared with the imports from those countries during the period from 1868 to 1874, prior to their coming into office. Now, take the whole national policy period, the period about which so much has been said in the course of this debate, and what is the fact ? Taking that whole period of seventeen years, from 1880, when the national policy came into force, until 1897, when it was abrogated by hon. gentlemen opposite and replaced by their tariff, the average annual imports from the United Kingdom were $40,826,435, as compared with $41,805,689 for the period when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office, and the imports from the United States had increased from $48,089,257 to $50,123,811. Taking the entire national policy period, from 1880 to 1897, inclusive, the imports from the United Kingdom declined 2⅓ per cent, while the imports from the United States increased 4¼ per cent, as compared with the imports from those countries during the period from 1875 to 1879, when the Liberal party were in power. In this connection it may be pointed out that the average decline in imports from the United Kingdom and the average increase in imports from the United States, both occurred during the years from 1894 to 1897, inclusive, a period of unusual depression in Canada and the United States; for from 1880 to 1894 the average annual increase in imports from the United Kingdom was almost 3 per cent, while the average annual increase in the imports from the United States was less than one-sixth of one per cent, as compared with the imports for the years from 1875 to 1879.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be said that Canada was not making any very great progress, if its progress was to be measured by its imports from the United States and from the United Kingdom respectively. But, Sir, Canada was in a formative period at the time. The national policy had been pronounced the policy of the Conservative party and placed on the statutes; and if our imports from the United States and England were practically stationary during that period of seventeen or eighteen years, we were consoled by the fact that we were laying the foundation of great industrial institutions, and that during that period the yearly output of those industries had increased some $200,000,000 or $300,000,000. If our imports from the United Kingdom and the United States were stationary, I repeat we had the consolation that we were establishing permanently our industries in Canada, that we were developing our own resources, and providing, to a certain extent at least, a home market for our agriculturists, and giving steady employment at good wages to an ever-increasing body of artisans from one end of Canada to the other.

Now, look at the record of the last five years since this so-called British preference has been on our statutes. From 1898 to 1902, the average of our imports from the United Kingdom was $41,314,999, and from the United States, $102,571,378. From 1898 to 1902, the period during which the so-called British preference has been in force, our imports from the United Kingdom have increased 1·18 per cent while those from the United States have increased 105 per cent as compared with the period 1880 to 1897. That is the record which the tabulated statements of the Trade and Navigation reports present. Is there anything in that picture which the hon. gentleman has any reason to proud of? Does the increase of 1·18 per cent in the imports from the United Kingdom justify the statements made from year to year on behalf of the government, as to what they have accomplished in arresting the decline in our importations from the United Kingdom, especially when we consider that in the same period our imports from the United States increased by more than 100 per cent? Whatever consolations hon. gentlemen can take from the figures I have quoted from the public documents, prepared by the officers of the government, they are certainly welcome to them. If time permitted, I could make statements respecting the exports of British and Irish produce during the last fifteen years, which would show conclusively how misleading it is for hon. gentlemen opposite to make comparison between the trade of Canada in the period from 1896 to 1902 and the preceding period from 1891 to 1896. The condition of things which existed in the Dominion and throughout the world from 1891 to 1896 was an abnormal one. It was a period of general depression practically world wide. In 1894, the magnificent country to the south of us, the United States, was in the midst of a commercial upheaval—a commercial revolution and depression—and we had the spectacle of an army of unemployed men marching on the capital to endeavour to get some relief by legislation. Is it fair to take the trade of the country during such a period of depression and compare it with its trade during the period of buoyancy, expansion and prosperity now existing, not only in Canada, but throughout the civilized world? I am sorry that time will not permit me to refer to the statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) regarding the necessity of our seeking privileges in the American market by a renewal of reciprocity negotiations with our neighbours to the south; but I wish to refer for a moment to the question of preferential trade. Let me remind the House that those who are competent to speak on the subject—the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) who has been a consistent protectionist all his life—have both declared that the only change made in the old tariff by the present government amounted to not more than 2 per cent, and that was accomplished by the granting of the so-called British preference. The hon. Minister of Finance said in the course of his budget speech:

> Hon. gentlemen opposite have frequently endeavoured to assure themselves and others that the imperial authorities were ready and willing to give us a preference.

That is what the hon. Minister of Finance said in his budget speech, and he went on to say :

We remember how it was stated that Mr. Chamberlain practically offered us a preference and that we had declined to have it.

If that view was entertained by the people of Canada, who was responsible for it ? If that was a misconception, upon whose shoulders are we to lay the blame ?

Let me quote three or four sentences from what was said by the right hon. the First Minister, at London, Ontario, in June, 1896, which will explain, better than I can do it myself, how this misconception arose :

Now, the statesmen of Great Britain have thought that the governments of the colonies have come to a time when a new step can be taken in their development. What is that ? That there shall be a commercial agreement between England and the colonies. That practical statesman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible to have within the bounds of the empire a new step taken, which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such a step if it was taken ? We sell our goods in England. We send our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products, but there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia, and from other nations. Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada, if the wheat, cheese and butter, which we would send to England, should be met in England with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

In the paragraph just read Mr. Chamlain is called a practical statesman. In this one he is called the new and progressive secretary of the colonies :

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the new and progressive Secretary of the Colonies, has declared that the time has come when it is possible to discuss that question. But, Sir, if England is going to give us that preference, England would expect something from us in return. What is it she would expect ? England would expect that we would come as closely to her own system of free trade as it is possible for us to come. England does not expect that we should take her own system of free trade, such as she has it ; but I lay it before you, that the thing the English people would expect in return is that, instead of a principle of protection, we should adopt the revenue form of tariff, pure and simple. These are the conditions on which we can have that boon.

I repeat that if there is any misconception in the public mind as to what the situation was with respect to the mutual preference between the colonies and the empire, the responsibility rests entirely on the right hon. gentleman, who made statements such as I have quoted when campaigning throughout the country in 1896. He went to England, but unfortunately got no preference. We gave a preference to England in our market but got no preference in the English market in return. This is his explanation. He said:

There is a class of our fellow citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for quid pro quo. The Canadian government has ignored all such sentiments. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England. The colonies had already granted certain concessions to the mother country, but they asked for no quid pro quo, no pound of flesh. What we give you by our tariff we give in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we have prospered. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation. Protection has been the curse of Canada ; we would not see you come under its baneful influence—for what weakens you must weaken us.

Again the right hon. gentleman said :

It would be a boon for a time, but how long ?

He was referring to a mutual preference.

But how long will it last? Would it be an advantage in the long run ? That is what men who think beyond the passing moment have to ask themselves. Suppose England did such a thing and abandoned her free trade record. She would inevitably curtail the purchasing power of her people and do you not think we should suffer from that, we who alone have natural resources enough to feed your millions from our fertile lands.

I have too great a belief in English common sense to think they will do any such thing. What we have done in the way of tariff preference to England we have, as I said, done out of gratitude to England, and not because we want her to enter upon the path of protection. We know that the English people will not interfere with the policy of free trade, and we do not desire them to do so. We know that buying more goods from England she will buy more from us and so develop trade, and the moment the trade is developed Canada is benefited.

So, after all, the First Minister believed—for he would not make a statement he did not believe to be true—that notwithstanding the fact that we got no direct benefit as a result of this preference, we got a substantial indirect benefit and Canada, after all, would be the gainer by giving the preference. I am trying to interpret accurately the statement the right hon. gentleman made. He emphasized that statement in Bowmanville in 1899, after the preference had been two years in operation. This is what he said :

The merchants of England, the men who have to buy articles in the markets of the world, no longer go to the United States to make their purchases. They come to Canada, and this is the direct result of our preferential tariff.

Now, we have good reason to compliment hon. gentlemen opposite if this statement can be borne out, if our trade has enormously increased and Canada has been benefited. But we have the right to hold them to account, if that preference has brought us great benefit, if, for no good reasoa, they have abrogated it. The government claim to have shown that this preference was beneficial to Canada, and, that being so, they must give good reason why they have decided, as shown by the statement of the Minister of Finance, to absolutely abandon that policy—for that is what the resolution of the Minister of Finance means, if it means anything. Having quoted the First Minister, I am going to take the liberty of quoting somewhat extensively from a speech delivered by the Minister of Labour, the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock). This speech has been very nicely printed, and I believe it was sent by thousands through the mail under frank during the by-elections in the different constituencies.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). That speech was never franked through the mails except during the session of parliament.
