ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, whereas the appointment of the new chairman of Canadian National Railways should not go unnoticed by the House, I move, with apologies to, but seconded by, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That in the opinion of this House:

The cowboy from Crowfoot called Jack,

Went through the House doubled-tracked,

Trudeau's his protector

But CN directors

Are saddled with Jack, and the flak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to observe that, in the light of certain appointments and selections regarding architects and railroads, the Prime Minister's office has assumed the roles of placement agency, hiring hall, staffing commission, and veto authority over public service recommending agencies. You do not need merit when you have friends in high places. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey):

Once upon a time, to get the job you needed merit;

Now all you do is join the Grits and wait and grin 'n bear it.

Plums and pork don't usually mix,

But they do when friend Pierre handles the fix!

Madam Speaker: There could be no better time for poets in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEMAND THAT MINISTER MEET MANITOBA INDIAN LEADERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, whereas since Wednesday of last week Indians from the Peguis reserve in Manitoba have been demonstrating peacefully outside the DIAND offices in Winnipeg to protest the long-standing critical housing shortage on their reserve, and whereas more than half of the Manitoba bands have now joined the demonstration in support of the Peguis and to protest their own housing needs, I move seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House direct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to reverse the answer he gave to me privately two days ago and go immediately to Winnipeg to meet with the Indian leaders involved to solve this matter before frustrations turn to anger and then anger to violence.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, in view of the statement of the Minister of State for Economic Development in the other place earlier this week, to the effect that the Minister of Finance speaking on behalf of the government at the Summit meeting in Ottawa, expressed "the deep concern that this government has for the distress it is creating," I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the government adopt measures, such as withdrawing the budget of November 12, 1981, and presenting a new one in its place, in order to alleviate the distress it is creating.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

GOVERNMENT VOLUNTARY ACTION POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Undersecretary of State amazed the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture by describing the Secretary of State as the "advocate minister to the voluntary sector". The minister, however, for the second time failed to meet the committee to discuss his departmental estimates on this subject, and has been silent on the government's intentions regarding Canadian volunteers.

Since the consumer price index is 11.3 per cent higher than April, 1981, and Canadians therefore have less money available to support vital charitable and voluntary programs, and since the Undersecretary of State confirmed yesterday that departmental work has been completed for cabinet on the comprehensive federal government voluntary action policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government announce immediately its long-awaited policy with regard to the voluntary sector, including the acceptance of the give and take tax proposals.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

COMPOSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) is quoted in a news story today as saying, "When you have people all the way from Genghis Khan to Karl Marx, you cannot expect them all to stand up behind the leader and support him." I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That since it is fairly simple for anyone to pick out a Genghis Khan, that the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River rise in his place and identify which one of his caucus colleagues he would classify as a Karl Marx.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSES TO "OBSTACLES" REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Secretary of State responsible for coordinating the implementation of the "Obstacles" report on the disabled and handicapped, indicated on March 23, in response to a question from the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), that he planned to table further responses from various departments within 30 days. As of tomorrow 60 days will have passed since that commitment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House urges the Secretary of State to table forthwith any further responses now available to the report, "Obstacles".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED MERGER OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE AND LIBERAL PARTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, as has already been noted this morning in the press, a very distinguished member of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), revealed that the Conservative Party lacks coherent principles, and that the average political science student could not tell the difference between a Conservative and a Liberal. Therefore, and in light of the cynical appointment of "Jumping" Jack Horner, the most famous Liberal-Conservative of them all, as chairman of the CNR, an act which is the epitome of a lack of principles, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That the PCs and the Liberals move to rationalize the political system through a merger of their parties, thus saving money, lessening confusion, and making clear who really are the fellow travellers in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Western Arctic.

FINANCE

ESTIMATED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, as the Liberal recession worsens it becomes evident that the predictions made at the time of the last budget will be way out of line. Public revenues are much lower than expected, expenditures are higher, and economists are now predicting a $17 billion deficit for this fiscal year. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That the Minister of Finance table the latest departmental estimates of the expected financial requirements of the government which will likely exceed twice those forecast in the budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR FROM LIBERAL PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that another distinguished Liberal, one of a vanishing breed, Senator Cook, has resigned from the Liberal party because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has acted with great impropriety in going directly to the Supreme Court of Canada with a reference on the offshore issue at a time when it has been referred to the Newfoundland Supreme Court of Appeal, thereby insulting the Newfoundland court, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House congratulates Senator Cook for his courage and dedication to the public good, and for his defence of our federal system, and further that this House encourages other distinguished Liberals, if such there be, to follow suit.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF EX-MEMBERS OF WARTIME RESISTANCE MOVEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the War Veterans Allowance Act does not apply to ex-members of various resistance movements, and that omission does a gross disservice to many individuals who actively fought for the allied cause during World War II, and who now live in Canada, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House requests the Minister of Veterans Affairs to bring forward amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act that would give full recognition to those individuals who gave so much of themselves to the allied cause during World War II, and who now require financial aid in their retirement years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OUTLINING NEW GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns today's inflation figures which show that Canadians are suffering all the grief from the minister's policy but are getting none of the relief that he has been promising for the last 12 months. The anti-inflation policy of the government is simply not working. We are stuck at the 11 per cent to 12 per cent inflation rate. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are losing their jobs because of the minister's policies. Thousands of businesses and farms are being destroyed. The confidence level of the Canadian people has been completely shattered by the government. Canadians are desperate. Will the minister give a commitment today to the people of Canada to make a statement outlining some new economic policies before the middle of June?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member ought to have acknowledged that there has been a drop in the year-to-year inflation rate. It is the lowest year-to-year increase for 16 months. I believe that is something which ought to be acknowledged. The peak inflation rate for this country was 13 per cent which occurred in July, 1981, I believe. The rate has dropped, and I think the hon. member ought to acknowledge that year-to-year drop recorded in today's statistics. It is a hopeful note. As well the month-to-month increase is the lowest since last September.

The hon. member, in dealing with the very serious problem of inflation, which is undoubtedly serious, should acknowledge at least that there has been a continuing downward trend, not only on a month-to-month basis, but on a year-to-year basis.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the minister did not answer my question again. I am getting used to that, however. He never answers questions. But the minister should also acknowledge the fact that in the United States over the same period we have seen the inflation rate drop from about the same level to the current level of approximately 6.5 per cent. Clearly things are not working here in Canada, and we are suffering the same pain and the same problems as they are in the United States, without any of the benefits.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the minister responsible for housing. In this field also the government's policy is not working. The mortgage renewal program has been used only by about 1,000 Canadians. The incentive program for new rental units is simply inadequate. That fact has been expressed to us by many people in the country. In the early part of this year, single family housing starts, as I said yesterday, have dropped 58 per cent. Housing construction is the most labour-intensive industry in the country. I have a simple question for the minister. Does he not realize the damage his lack of housing policies are causing? Will the minister encourage his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to include some changes in housing policy if, as, and when, he brings in a new economic program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the contrary, I believe the government's policy on housing is working.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: As a matter of fact, the announcement by the government of $30 million going into rehabilitation housing was so successful that the demand for that program was taken up in one week. That program not only put $30 million into rehabilitation but drew $60 million from the private sector. We have encouraged Canadians to take money out of the banks. We know that Canadians are putting money into banks in unparalleled amounts. This program will take $60 million out of the banks to be matched by $30 million from the federal government. It will be used to get Canadians working in the trades that have been hit by unemployment in about 50 centres across the country.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I notice there is only scattered applause on the other side. I think there is a very good reason for that. Single-family housing starts are down 58 per cent. That is a fact. That statistic comes from the minister's own department. He said that it is working. If it is working according to his objectives, we must wonder what are his objectives.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. member must be reasonable and go to his question; he is making speeches.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I am frustrated. I think many, many Canadians are frustrated.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Wilson: All the members of the minister's caucus are also frustrated.

Madam Speaker: Order!

REQUEST FOR CONFIDENCE INSTILLING POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since so many members of the government caucus, the group of ten and the economic development committee, have gone public with their concerns and have gone to the Parti Québécois for advice, would the Minister of Finance explain to Canadians why he will not say today that he will bring in some new economic policies to give Canadians some hope and some sense of confidence that there is direction in the Government of Canada to lead us out of the problems we are facing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, because I disagree totally with the preamble to the hon. member's question. I do not see its relevance at the present time.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTANCE TO DOME PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Now that the government has destroyed the Canadian oil and gas industry by virtue of its disastrous National Energy Program, could the minister tell the House whether it is the government's intention to provide financial assistance to Dome Petroleum? Has the government made any commitment, or is it in the process of considering any commitment to provide financial assistance to Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the problems relating to the oil and gas industry are obviously under constant consideration by the government, as are problems relating to other sectors of the economy. When any decisions arising from these considerations are made, I assure the hon. member that they will be announced in the regular way.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, when will the Minister of Finance answer a simple, straightforward question in the House? When on earth can we obtain an answer? Let me just put my question to him one more time. I would like a simple answer. Will the government provide financial assistance to Dome Petroleum, or will it not? It is a simple, straightforward question. Will the minister please answer it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the same answer stands. If and when a decision is taken on the matter, it will be announced.

Miss MacDonald: Conditionally.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not intend to fall into the obvious trap which the hon. member is attempting to set.

HEALTH

FORMALDEHYDE GAS LEVELS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns a very serious health problem which is becoming more and more evident. Recently a study released by Dr. Yves Alary, who is head of the School of Environmental Medicine at the University of Pittsburgh, indicated that the level of formaldehyde gas in homes established at 0.1 parts per million was far too high. His figures indicated that there was serious health damage with a level as low as 0.03 parts per million. Is there any indication on the part of the government that it is willing to reduce to this established level of 0.03 parts per million as the safe level in homes? Of course the minister must realize that this would dramatically increase the number of Canadian home owners with urea formaldehyde foam insulation who would qualify for the government's program if it were to do so.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the scientific data used by my department to determine what UFFI gas level is harmful to a person's health are in our view extremely sound and very much on the conservative side, since ample allowance is made for the individual's state of health, even for those suffering from allergies. We have therefore no reason to change or lower the standard we have set.

• (1125)

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Unfortunately, the evidence gathering on this subject indicates to the contrary. The study by Bruce Small, the study by Alfred Nantel, and now the study by Yves Alary indicate clearly that there is a problem and that those norms were set too high. The Ontario Department of Health study also indicates that those norms were too high.

DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would ask the minister whether or not the government would be prepared to consider conducting studies that would either confirm or at least shed more light on the matter. Will she be prepared at this time to tell the House what studies her department is doing to determine whether or not this norm of 0.1 parts per million is adequate? Also, has she looked into substantiating the work that has been done by three other competent individuals in this field?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, studies are constantly being done on the alleged effects of urea formaldehyde foam. The hon. member is referring to newspaper articles about certain studies that were published very recently. A number of conclusions were made, and they should be considered and compared with many other studies which do not necessarily support these results. As for the Canadian studies I have just approved under the National Health Research Development Program, I would have preferred to receive notice of his question, in which case I would gladly have given him the information verbally. In the circumstances, I shall send him a letter with a list of the approved studies and a brief description of the field covered by each study.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Certainly I believe the common knowledge of what is being done is one matter, but I express deep concern about the health question involved.

PROVISION OF DISASTER EMERGENCY FUNDING

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. There is information which comes from statements by officials of the Government of Canada indicating that where a province is willing to avail itself of the provisions available under national disaster programs to put up moneys to assist victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation, the federal government would come forward and add an equivalent amount. There are groups who are now talking to provincial governments about this matter. There has been no clear statement from the federal government on whether it was serious, or whether this was just another off the wall comment. Would the minister clarify whether or not there has been serious consideration given to discussing, with the provinces and home owners, a method of implementing that particular idea?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, that is a matter which was administered by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On a couple of occasions he indicated in the House that he had already contacted the appropriate ministers in the provinces and asked for their co-operation. My recollection is that the co-operation from the provinces has not been forthcoming. However, I will take the hon. member's question under notice, discuss it with the minister, and perhaps he can get back to the member.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—REPORTED LANDINGS BY BRITISH FORCES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the very serious situation in the Falkland Islands. I call them the Falkland Islands, not the Malvinas, or Falkland-Malvinas like the government does. Can the minister bring us up to date on what is happening in that area?

We understand that United Kingdom forces are landing at various points in the Falkland Islands. Will the minister tell the House what we have done since April 2 to assist in that situation, either to get a negotiated settlement in accordance with the United Nations resolution, or to assist Britain in carrying out this action on behalf of world order and the principle of resisting armed aggression? What have we done in a negotiating sense? What have we done to assist in reaching a conclusion? What have we done to assist the United Kingdom? What is the present situation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, to begin, I should emphasize that we had absolutely no advance or private knowledge of the military aspects of the British position. The newspaper reports which I have seen indicate that the actions which are occurring are probably not an invasion, as such, but perhaps preliminary actions that are being taken.

With respect to what we have been doing in the last two months, the record is almost entirely available to the public. We have met every request which Britain has made of us. We have engaged in extensive consultations with the United Kingdom. I spoke to Mr. Pym this week. I had a meeting with Lord Moran, the British High Commissioner, last night. We have been in very close consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and we have made offers of service and offers of facilitation. We gave tentative approval to a peace initiated by Peru, which was stillborn, overtaken by events and by actions of the Secretary-General before it became operative. I would add for the information of the hon. member that, in this bilingual country, he might want to note that in French the term for the Falkland Islands is Les Malouines. It is that term we use in describing, when we want to do so in a bilingual form, a place to which we are having reference.

Mr. Crosbie: This is an English release I am looking at with "the Falkland-Malvinas Islands" on it because the government will not state that the Falkland Islands are a United Kingdom dependency. It is an English release.

NATURE OF SUPPORT FOR UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, last Friday the Prime Minister said finally that the government is giving the United Kingdom 100 per cent support. What does that support consist of, and what steps are we taking? I am not asking what did the United Kingdom seek. The United Kingdom is trying to enforce a world principle to resist armed aggression. The British are not invading the Falklands. They are re-occupying their own possession, not invading. The invading was done by Argentina. What steps are we taking to give materiel assistance and, in particular, are we now going to stop business as usual on the Argentina Candu reactor contract and stop the sending of nuclear fuel bundles while the conflict is under way in that area?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. member knows, we are not engaged in business as usual with Argentina.

Mr. Crosbie: We certainly are.

Mr. MacGuigan: The import restrictions which Canada and other nations have imposed are an important part, I believe, of the international action of making Argentina realize that the rule of force is not to be tolerated in international law. We have, of course, imposed a ban on the shipment of military materiel, as is well known to Argentina.

The hon. member knows that the reason we have not imposed a ban on past contracts is that no country that I know of has done so. In our case, we have extra reasons for not doing so because, first, there is no relationship between the fuel bundles and the present conflict. Second, we have an agreement with Argentina which provides, on one side, that we will complete our obligation and, on the other side, that they will observe their obligation that they will not use any Canadian nuclear technology or material for non-peaceful purposes. We value the provisions of that contract. We do not intend to depart from it.

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary question—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Crosbie: You would have sent it to Hitler during World War II as well. What tripe! Give it some backbone. What kind of government is this?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

REFUSAL OF LICENCES TO EAST COAST FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Following the imposition of the 200-mile limit, we in Atlantic Canada were promised that once our over-fished stocks had been restored, only fish that was surplus to our needs would be allocated to foreigners. Since the minister has stated that the main problem in the industry is the over-expansion of fish processing capacity, why is he refusing licences for inshore and offshore Canadian ships, which would provide fish for the existing plants and, if the resource will not stand increased fishing pressure, when is he going to implement his promise and allocate to foreigners only those fish that are surplus to our needs?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I do not have the statistics at my fingertips, but surely the hon. member knows that the vast majority of the species in which we have an interest are very much taken by Canadian fishermen. In the case of the European community, to a number of countries—Spain and Portugal come to mind—we have allocated very small amounts in recognition of other advantages, especially some presence in their markets. This was done following consultation and discussion with the industry. For the hon. member to say that some fish plants are having trouble because of the allocation of a very modest amount of fish to other countries is really stretching the truth.

Mr. Crouse: When it comes to the truth, Madam Speaker, I do not need to take any lessons from the Minister of Fisheries.

QUERY RESPECTING PROTECTION OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): The Minister of Fisheries knows that the state of the industry is a direct result of his mismanagement over the years; 23 million pounds of capelin allocated to the Russians last year, 11 million pounds of squid to Cuba, and 33 million pounds to Japan, while Russia only bought something like $4 million worth of fish from this country. Let us have a little truth from that side. Since the minister stated on May 5 that Ottawa will step in, and those are his words as quoted in the press, to save the east coast fishery—that is what he said—and since fish quality and marketing are two of our major problems, what steps does he plan to take to present this valuable resource-based industry from going down the drain, aside from his statement that some of the fish processing plants in Atlantic Canada must be allowed to fold, as they are now doing?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the hon. member illustrates one of the real difficulties we have when we discuss fisheries matters by wanting to have it both ways. On one hand, he takes a dog-in-the-manger attitude that there should be no allocation of fish to any foreign country. On the other hand, he complains that we cannot break our way into the markets of the world. I simply ask him what he intends to use as currency to try to get access to markets where we have traditionally not been successful? It is for that reason, when there is fish surplus to our needs—the hon. member knows very well that Canadians will not take all the surplus that there is in squid or capelin, for example—if we allocate it and in exchange try to get commercial advantages like access to markets, I would at least expect support from him.

AIRPORTS

TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN DORVAL AND MIRABEL—ANNOUNCEMENT DATE OF MINISTER'S DECISION

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, my question is another in a long line of questions which my hon. colleagues have put previously to the Minister of Transport, and it of course concerns with the future of Mirabel. Since July 1980, the minister has been giving us the assurance that following a report by his departmental officials, a decision would be made and announced in a matter of months. Not long ago, last February, he gave 33 mayors from the Montreal area the assurance that a decision would be made and announced on May 18 of this year—in other words, last Tuesday. Therefore, I would like to know what the minister intends to do to protect the credibility of his department and when he is going to make a decision on the intended use of Mirabel.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that some direction should be given and indicated. I am prepared to give that direction in the very near future to my cabinet colleagues. The issue is extremely complex, as everyone knows, and it is one of those questions where the minister himself has to penetrate the issue from within. In doing so, I have collected a tremendous mass of material, facts, impressions and perceptions, and it will take me a few days to boil all this down into a comprehensive paper. During the long weekend I will have an opportunity to give my undivided attention to this subject.

HEALTH

TESTING OF PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the minister knows, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in a random sample of 10 per cent of their pharmaceutical testing facilities found 127 laboratories in the United States to be in serious violation of regulations. It also found that 43 doctors were suspended and another 234 are under investigation. The minister knows that the Edmonton Journal has revealed serious deficiencies in the chemical trials of at least 16 drugs which are also used in Canada today. Can the minister give us the assurance that faulty tests are not the basis for registering pharmaceutical drugs or pesticides and other chemical products in Canada today?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Madam Speaker, to my knowledge I can give that assurance. The problem about which the hon. member is questioning me today has been thoroughly discussed in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of the House, and I have written to the hon. member confirming that the Americans have found that the rate of deviation from adherence to good investigation protocol is about 25 per cent, but in practice the rate of serious deviation is considered to be 10 per cent. The same type of deviation probably exists in our country, but mechanisms are in place to control that and to withdraw immediately products from the market with which we learn there are specific problems.

I have also assured the hon. member of the link we have with the United States respecting information on specific problems regarding certain chemicals, which is passed on to us as confidential information.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TESTING PROCEDURES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I appreciate what the minister is saying, but the minister also knows that an Oakville woman almost died because the Upjohn Company in the United States knew, five or six years before we in Canada did, that the particular drug she took caused serious side effects. It took five or six years after it was known in the United States for us to hear about it. Surely the minister must admit that the time is long overdue to re-examine the whole process of testing chemicals and their registration in Canada. Will she at least agree to a review of this whole process?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the case concerning Clindamycin and the woman to whom the hon. member refers who almost died after taking this product, put on the market by the Upjohn Company, is at least 12 years old. All the facts were given to the hon. member in detail in a letter. Since that time changes have taken place in all procedures. I thought we had explained that.

Two problems remain. The hon. member wants every chemical to be fully assessed before it reaches the market. This is not the case in any country. I have explained often to the hon. member that I am not sure any country has found a solution to this problem. On the other hand, the hon. member, like many of us, presses for the eventual development of a project of great interest to Canada, and probably to western Canada in particular, namely, the development of one or more centres for toxicological studies here in Canada. That surely will be a very happy development, but in the meantime our procedures in Canada assure the safety of products for Canadians to the maximum extent possible.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in the House in answer to a question by the hon. member for Halton the minister stated that the change in the business development bond had made available $100 million in loans to the agricultural community. He advised the CFA of this, but that federation advised him of the fact that in the period 1978-81 interest charges alone as a cost to agriculture rose by $1.25 billion.

In view of the fact that the $100 million represents 8 per cent of the three-year interest increment for agriculture, and represents less than 5 per cent of the total agricultural interest cost, would he now agree to adjust the business development bond so that he can use the word "significant" in a meaningful way when addressing himself to farmers, rather than assisting them with less than 5 per cent of their interest costs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member misunderstood, obviously, the purpose of the Small Business Development Bond when it was initially introduced by the hon. member for St. John's West. It was never intended to achieve the purpose the hon. member now seems to think was its purpose. However, I am aware, as he is, that the impact of high interest rates is affecting a portion of the agricultural population of Canada in a very difficult way. It affects all, of course, but some are much more hard pressed than others, and it is to that group that the revisions of the small business bond were directed and the provision that was made in the last budget to make lower interest rates available through the Farm Credit Corporation. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture made some proposals at its meeting with me last week which I undertook to consider in conjunction with the problems the Federation laid out.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. The same document presented by the CFA made the statement that the FCC proportion of long-term lending is down from 70 per cent to less than 20 per cent of the farm requirement. In view of the authority recently granted to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money on its own, and in view of the total lack of concern and understanding of the Minister of Finance, would the Minister of Agriculture explain to this House how he plans to use the new borrowing capability of the FCC to provide money to the agricultural community at the 10 per cent interest level which the Federation feels is the maximum producers can afford to pay under existing economic circumstances imposed by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture made a presentation to myself and several of my cabinet colleagues, and I stated at that meeting—as I state to the hon. member now—that even if we financed some producers at 10 per cent, there is no light at the end of the tunnel for some of the operations in which they are involved. We have to have better marketing programs, etc. We are moving as fast as we can with the Farm Credit Corporation. I am surprised that the hon. member is so concerned because the bill was waiting in this House for two weeks while the bells rang, and nothing was done. We could not go ahead with the bill.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF PEACE RIVER TAR SANDS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I would like to address my question to his parliamentary secretary. In the past few weeks the department has received several telegrams from people in the Peace River country who are concerned about the development of the Peace River tar sands project. I would like to know what the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is doing to see that this particular program goes ahead.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member's concern about that particular project, yes, the department has received the telexes. At the present time it is considering the purport of the suggestions made in those telexes, and when we complete our consideration of this particular problem, the hon. member will be notified in due course.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, Canadians desperately need jobs right now, and this particular megaproject would provide several thousand jobs for Canadians.

TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the parliamentary secretary. How quickly can we expect some kind of response?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to be able to give a response today; however, when the consideration is completed, the hon. member will be notified in due course.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

FILING OF PRESS RELEASE WITH REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT ON OWNERSHIP OF HIBERNIA OIL FIELD

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, if he will stop hiding behind the curtain and come into the House.

An hon. Member: Here he is.

Mr. Cousineau: Go ahead.

Mr. Nielsen: My question to the Minister of Justice concerns the propriety of the government in the filings it made before the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the reference by the governor in council concerning the Hibernia field off Newfoundland. I have in my hand a copy of the notice of motion filed May 20, which sets forth that an application will be heard next Friday or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard. Together with that notice of motion, for which no provision that I am aware of exists in the rules of the Supreme Court of Canada, is filed a government press release which sets forth the government's propaganda on why it is taking this action.

Under what authority did the government file a copy of its press release with the documents usually permitted for filing in the Supreme Court of Canada, and what purpose did it have in filing the press release? Does the minister not now think that the contents of that two-page press release may well prejudice the hearing of the notice of motion when it comes before Mr. Justice Ritchie?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of this detail. As way my duty as Attorney General of Canada, I filed the petition in the Supreme Court of Canada. On the question of the sustaining documents, if there is an explanation of why it is called a press release—I do not know if it was filed but I will check that. I think it was very important to proceed in that matter. Now the court will decide, so I have no further comment to make.

As to the remarks of the hon. member, everyone knows that he likes to engage in dirt so I will not speak at his level.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I will overlook the intemperate remarks of the minister.

REQUEST THAT PRESS RELEASE BE REMOVED FROM COURT DOCKET

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the press release dated May 19, cited at St. John's Newfoundland, bearing the stamp of the Supreme Court of Canada and filed May 20, 1982, under number 17096, which is the number of the Supreme Court of Canada docket.

In the absence of any provisions in the rules of the Supreme Court of Canada for filing such documents, does the minister not think that the action the government took in filing that press release was highly improper? Even at this late stage, will he not issue instructions to whomever does his filing for him in his department, to have that document removed immediately from the Supreme Court of Canada docket?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Supreme Court judges can handle these matters quite properly and it is not for me to debate them in front of the House of Commons. I said I was not aware of the filing of that document and I will inquire about it. If there is something improper about it, I am sure the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada know the rules and do not need the advice of the House of Commons, especially from this member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—REPORTED SUSPENSION OF LAND REFORM PROGRAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he tell us whether the government is concerned about the fact that the Constituent Assembly of El Salvador, under the presidency of the notorious right wing Major Roberto d'Aubuisson, decided on Tuesday to suspend the long-promised land reform program for up to four years? This would cut half the peasant population off from opportunities promised to them. If this is the case, has the government expressed its concern to the Government of El Salvador and the Government of the United States and, if so, what is their response?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as yet we have only the same newspaper reports on which I presume my hon. friend's question is based. We have not received an analysis of what actually happened in the El Salvador Assembly. We are concerned about the preliminary reports and are trying to find out the exact implications of what has happened. When we have that analysis we will be in a position to make any representations which we believe to be appropriate.

UNITED STATES ARMS SHIPMENTS TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the background to the suspension of land reform, namely, the decision of the United States government to send more arms to El Salvador. In light of the fact that both the Canadian and the United States government's policies toward El Salvador were based partly on the promise of land reform, and in light of the fact that the reported decision to suspend land reform followed only five days after a United States decision to send $60 million worth of arms to the government led by Major Roberto d'Aubuisson, is the Canadian government now prepared to reconsider its policy? Will it condemn the farcical right-wing elections held in El Salvador on March 28? Will it condemn the rising violence under that new government? Will it condemn the increase in the supply of U.S. arms to Major Roberto D'Aubuisson, and will it condemn this brazen betrayal of the promised land reforms?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, we have long been opposed to the supplying of arms by the United States to countries in that situation, just as we have been opposed to the supplying of arms from countries on the left.

I am sorry that my hon. friend's remarks are so intemperate. They indicate a bias which I think is unworthy of him and his party with respect to a democratic election which has taken place in El Salvador, and which everyone else in the world has widely accepted as the genuine voice of the people in El Salvador.

FINANCE

REQUESTED REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. I know that the minister and his department have been intensively studying the tax cuts passed by the United States government which will come into effect on July 1. There has been a great deal of publicity about the tax cuts on the personal side, but I understand that there are also significant tax cuts on the business and corporate side.

Will the minister arrange a reference for the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and would he and his officials appear before it with their documentation, so that over the summer the committee may study the relative rates for personal tax and corporate tax before budget bills come down in the fall?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is obviously of interest. We have been examining the relativity or comparability of corporate rates in the United States and Canada. Obviously it is of importance to the Canadian economy to ensure that relative tax burdens are in line as much as possible. It is our conclusion that our taxing regime for corporations is as favourable as that in the United States.

The hon. member added a request for a special reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I know that committee has a great deal of work before it at the present time. I am not sure whether it would be possible for it to handle a new reference when so many burdens have already been laid upon its very capable members.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF SUMMER STUDENT JOBS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As he will be aware, this weekend is graduation weekend for many thousands of students across Canada. Many of them, and many still in the school system, will be unable to find jobs this summer. They face a very bleak summer. The situation is reaching crisis proportions.

Given that an estimated 200,000 Canadians students will be unable to find jobs this summer, and given that this will very seriously impair their chances of returning to university in the autumn, will the minister tell us whether the government considers the situation a crisis situation, which it really is? In that event, has the government prepared contingency plans to deal with the situation and, if so, what are they over and above the measures already announced?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the government has always considered the employment of young people to be a major concern and a major priority. I would point out that well over 50 per cent of the people who use the wide variety of services that my department provides are under the age of 24 years.

In terms of special efforts for students this summer, we have not only established the Summer Youth Employment Program which will employ well over 55,000 students, but we have also established a network of close to 400 offices across Canada operated by students themselves, and which are designed to provide areas where students can register and where job placements from the private sector can be entered.

My plea, Madam Speaker, to all members of this House is to co-operate with us as we try to encourage businesses and individuals to put their job applications in those centres to provide the maximum opportunity for students. We are undertaking a major advertising campaign and making major public appeals, but if members of this House joined us I am sure we could develop a broad range of job opportunities for students.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, what I want to register with the minister is that there are 200,000 students who are going to be out of work this summer, a great many more than last year. Student summer unemployment has increased from 11 per cent last summer to an estimated 16 per cent this summer. In my own constituency there are 2,000 students unemployed, up considerably from last year.

In the face of this crisis, Madam Speaker, I ask the minister if he would consider calling together his provincial counterparts in an all-out effort to design new job-creation programs for students this summer so that students will not have to face returning to university this fall—if they can—with higher tuition fees and costs which they cannot possibly meet because they have been unable to make the necessary money this summer?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to provide one caution in terms of the remarks of the hon. member, which is not to predict what the unemployment rate will be until we have made an honest, sincere and effective effort to develop jobs for people this summer. If we start prophesying beforehand, that will defeat our purpose. At this point in time we should be maximizing our efforts to have job openings placed in those centres. Certainly I regret that many provincial governments have in fact cut back on their job efforts when the federal government has gone ahead and added job requirements through the federal public service and community groups. We will continue our efforts, but rather than harbouring great prophecies of doom it would be far more effective if members of this House got together and talked to businessmen in their constituencies to find jobs for their students.

PRIVILEGE

MISS MACDONALD—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT OF MR. OUELLET

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have given you notice of a question of privilege based on the remarks of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in the House on May 19. I am prepared to go ahead, Madam Speaker, but in the absence of the minister I was wondering if it would be preferable to file another notice of privilege on Tuesday when he would be back in the House?

Madam Speaker: I would prefer that the hon. member expose her question of privilege. If I feel a reply or rebuttal or some other intervention on the part of the minister is required, I can defer my decision. A question of privilege is, in essence, a very urgent matter and would prevent the House from proceeding to other business, so it has to be heard at the earliest possible time. Therefore, I will hear the hon. member and I may defer my ruling or judgment on it.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, it is my contention that the House has been misled by the minister's reference at page 17592 of Hansard where he referred to a two-year delay in imposing jail sentences on operators of small retail food stores who have not adopted metric measurements. That has to be compared with the letters being sent out to those same small food store operators by officials from the weights and measures section of his department. I presume they are being sent with the authority and approval of the minister. There is no mention in those letters of a two-year delay in the imposition of a jail sentence. Such a letter was sent to a Mr. and Mrs. Menikefs of Kingston which states that the conversion period for their store was from January 4, 1982 to March 3, 1982. It goes on to say:

> It is now an offence in this location under Section 7 of the Weights and Measures Act and Section 339 of the regulations to use a weighing device that does not measure in metric units of measurement.
> This department will enforce the Weights and Measures Act which provides for penalties of a fine not exceeding $1,000 and/or imprisonment up to six months for each offence.

There is absolutely nothing in that letter, Madam Speaker, about a two-year delay in the imposition of a jail sentence. It states instead that the recipient of this letter must contact the district manager of that department as soon as possible to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to the hon. member for about five minutes and it seems to me that she might have a grievance. She might have found some discrepancy or lack of clarity in certain instructions as compared to what the minister has said in the House. That is a matter which the hon. member might want to clarify in the future through other means at her disposal, but it certainly is not a question of privilege and I have to rule on the basis of what the hon. member has been telling me for five minutes.

MR. DE JONG—REPLY OF MISS BÉGIN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), in a reply to me during question period, suggested that Mrs. Stavro was dead. To the best of my knowledge, the lady is alive. In fact, she settled out of court with the Upjohn company in March—

Madam Speaker: Order. Whether someone is dead or not is not very much a matter of debate, but the hon. member is debating the question and it is not a question of privilege.

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY RESPECTING DOCUMENTS FILED WITH SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to be alive sometimes! I want to give notice of a question of privilege arising out of question period. There has been a most serious lapse of propriety by the government through the Department of Justice and—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, this is a matter which deals with the administration of justice.

Madam Speaker: There is no need to give oral notice of a question of privilege. The hon. member can raise a question of privilege which arises from today's proceedings, but the hon. member rises and says he is giving notice. I have said several times in the House that oral notice is not appropriate; I must be given written notice of a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege, of which I am not giving notice, arises out of question period. There has been an apparent serious interference with the judicial system of this country which just came to our notice this morning when we had a search made at the Supreme Court registry to see what documents were filed in connection with this offshore reference. Three documents were filed: a notice of motion on May 20 by the Department of Justice; an order in council on May 19; a political press release of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) dated May 19 in St. John's, and filed on May 20. It is headed "Statement by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, on the Newfoundland offshore reference".

It then gives a series of alleged reasons why the government is filing this reference before the Supreme Court of Canada. It gives arguments why the federal government is ignoring the fact that the provincial government had recently filed a reference to the provincial Court of appeal dealing with the same series of matters, saying that they are too complex and much broader, and giving the alleged reasons why the government is proceeding as it is.

It is totally improper to file a document in the Supreme Court of Canada containing a series of political arguments by a minister who is a politician, where the judges can see the document. I know the hon. gentlemen opposite do not think there is any impropriety in this or that the matter is a question of privilege, but in any event I will make my point.

This is an interference with the judicial system by a member of the government. It is a breach of the privileges of members of this House. The matter has to be dealt with by this House. This kind of impropriety has to be stopped either on the instructions of the Speaker, the House or someone else.

In all my years as a lawyer, I have never experienced such a blatant attempt to influence a court by filing political press releases in the court docket in a place where judges could see them if they ask to see the file, as no doubt they will. The docket number is on the document as well; the number is 17096.

I put this matter before the House. In my view, it is a breach of privilege and it should be referred to a committee, although I am certainly prepared to hear other suggestions as to what should be done about it.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it cannot be denied that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has failed to abide by the rule so clearly put in Beauchesne, which says that questions of privilege are to be raised very seldom, and then only in exceptional cases where the freedom of expression and speech of members is at stake. In the circumstances, I feel it is clear that the message he has given us today if purely political, namely, that he is not happy about the fact that certain documents have been submitted to the highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of Canada. In fact, the proceedings before a court are totally independent of the proceedings in this House. The justices of the Supreme Court are quite able to determine what is acceptable and what is not, in the case of documents that are submitted to their tribunal. It is not up to us to tell them what to do, and I feel that the attitude of the hon. member for St. John's West is an insult to the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada. It is certainly out of place as far as Parliament is concerned, since the documents in question have been submitted to a court, where members' privileges are absolutely irrelevant.

Madam Speaker: I have the clear impression that the question, as it was put to me, falls within the purview of an entirely different authority, and certainly not mine. I am not convinced that a member's privileges have been breached. Hon. members may have comments and even grievances regarding the situation over which the Chair personally has no control and, above all, should not be asked to rule. I do not believe it is a question of privilege, and consequently, I declare at this time that I cannot accept it as a question of privilege. Perhaps the hon. member would like to seek redress from other authorities.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, we will, Madam Speaker. We will not allow the judicial system to be interfered with. It is jackboot justice and it is an interference with the courts. It is disgraceful, and I say to members opposite that they must clean up their act.

BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS ON PROPERTY

Madam Speaker: Introduction of bills. Mr. Yurko, seconded by?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are confronted with a rather unique situation here where the only independent member of the House of Commons is attempting to introduce a private member's bill, which is not going to be discussed in any event until this session prorogues and we commence another one.

It has been a tradition in the House that private members on all sides nevertheless have their business introduced, at any rate; whether or not it arises for discussion is another matter. I think if you were to request it, there might be a disposition, on the basis of that tradition—that is, the right of every private member—to give unanimous consent for the introduction of this private member's bill.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Mr. Yurko, seconded by Mr. Kempling.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-655, to amend the Bank Act to provide a minimum one-year period of notice in the event of foreclosure proceedings on property that is the principal place of residence.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the reason I rose on a point of order was to provide the facility through unanimous consent to dispense with the seconder that is normally required. I suggest that the record be allowed to show that there was no seconder but that there was unanimous consent in order to facilitate the right of any private member to have his matters presented to the House. I emphasize that it is a private member's right. Simply because we have a single independent member sitting here, regardless of his politics, where he sits or what are his beliefs, the tradition is that every private member should have a right to introduce private member's business. It was on that basis that I was seeking the consent of the House.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, enough of this procedural nit-picking. We are willing to let the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Yurko) introduce his bill. I feel this kind of discourse is totally useless and wastes the time of the House.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I am in a bit of difficulty because one hon. member indicated he would second the bill.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, once upon a time many years ago Mr. Allard, who I believe was a member of the social Credit party, was caught in the House one day, and I seconded his motion to introduce a bill for debate in the House. Somehow or other I survived that experience. I believe I can survive the experience today. Therefore, I am prepared to let my name stand as the seconder of the hon. member's bill.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, may I draw to your attention that the motion has already been seconded by the whip of the Conservative party.

• (1220)

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I should like to observe on this Friday that there was a seconder. We were prepared to give unanimous consent and in fact we did. We have had a seconder in the initial case, and now we have a second seconder from the Conservative party. Therefore, I think that the bill of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) is not only introduced, but it is seconded and thirded.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Yurko: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank all hon. members of the House for being so generous on this Friday afternoon with regard to the seconding of my bill. It is a very important bill and I want to take a few minutes to tell the House what it is about.

Basically its intent is to amend the Bank Act as follows. A bank has no right of action by virtue of a mortgage or hypothec held on the principal residence of a debtor who is in default of payment, unless it gives at least one year's notice in writing to the debtor of its intention to exercise its right of action.

Second, a bank shall give notice of its intention to exercise its right of action to the debtor in default of paying the sums owing by registered letter sent to his domicile.

It is a very simple bill. It provides home owners a period in which they can recover from a debt structure which indeed imperils their homes. I believe all hon. members would wish to give serious consideration to this type of legislation when, as a result of mortgage renewals, mortgages are coming in at 18 per cent to 21 per cent and a substantive number of home owners across the nation will be in danger of bankruptcy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY RESPECTING DOCUMENTS FILED WITH SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): I think Madam Speaker is aware of some questions which were raised in the House of Commons about the filing of the order in council in the Supreme Court of Canada. I checked with the Supreme Court of Canada a moment ago and found out that the only document which the government filed with the Supreme Court of Canada was the order in council and that the communiqué which the hon. member had in his hand was not filed by the government. There was an error made by a clerk at the Supreme Court of Canada, and I should so like to inform the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker: Order, I have already ruled on that particular question of privilege and therefore cannot accept any further interventions.

Mr. Chrétien: Well, I think he should apologize.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHRÉTIEN—ALLEGED IMPROPRIETY RESPECTING DOCUMENT FILED WITH SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I wish to rise on a matter of personal privilege at this point, because with respect to the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), you said there was no case for a question of privilege. On the other hand, the hon. members for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and St. John's West stated several times in the House that the Minister of Justice of Canada had done a specific thing, and I am not referring to what happened at the Supreme Court. I feel that my privileges were breached because I was accused of doing something which I did not do. They accused the Minister of Justice, and not the Supreme Court. Therefore, my personal privileges as a senior government official and a member of this House have been breached by the member for Yukon and the member for St. John's West.

And since the charge that there was some negligence on my part has no basis in fact, I feel, Madam Speaker, that my privileges have been breached and that the hon. members who made the charge should apologize, because they wanted to create the impression, with great fanfare, that I had made a mistake on behalf of the government. So I called the Supreme Court on the telephone, and the Registrar of the Supreme Court informed my deputy minister that the only document the government had filed was the order in council, and that if another document was put in the file, this was done by an official who made a mistake at the Supreme Court. So instead of accusing me of not having done a good job, I feel that if the opposition members have any feeling for the honour and dignity of this House, they will admit that they made a mistake. I do not accuse them of doing so deliberately. If they had inquired at the Supreme Court, they would have found out the reason. However, there are rules and sometimes mistakes are made or things are said, not always deliberately, but if the member for St. John's West or the member for Yukon had been more thorough, they would have tried to find out exactly who filed the document before accusing the Minister of Justice.

That is why I feel they breached my privileges as a member of this House and a member of the government. The document was filed by the Clerk of the Privy Council, as is customary, and not by the Department of Justice on the instructions of the Minister of Justice. No press release was put in the file by the Government of Canada. So, in view of these facts, I demand that the member for Yukon withdraw his accusation and that he agree—if he refuses to take me at my word, what can I do? I asked my deputy minister, Mr. Roger Tassé, to get in touch with Mr. Hofley at the Supreme Court, and Mr. Hofley confirmed that the only document filed was mine, namely, the order in council, and that we did not file a press release. So I would ask the opposition members to withdraw their charges and apologize.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the minister has a very weird idea of ministerial responsibility. He is responsible for the actions of his deputy minister and all public employees in the Department of Justice.

Mr. Peterson: But not those of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: He is asking us to believe that the Supreme Court of Canada somehow manufactures press releases on the letterhead of the Department of Justice about a filing.

Mr. Chrétien: How ridiculous can you be?

Mr. Nielsen: He is asking us to believe that that press release on the stationery of the Department of Justice somehow magically found its way into the hands of a clerk of the Supreme Court of Canada who then made a mistake. I am willing to accept that a clerk of the Supreme Court may have made a mistake, but let the minister not ask us to believe anything other than it was an official of his department or counsel retained by his department who transported that departmental press release to the Supreme Court of Canada where it was accepted. Otherwise it would not bear the stamp of the Supreme Court of Canada dated May 20, which it does, and it would not bear the docket number. That is, the press release has on it the Supreme Court stamp and the docket number. The only way that press release could have got there would have been on the minister's instructions.

Mr. Chrétien: You accused me of filing it.

Mr. Nielsen: It has been filed. It has been filed either at the direction of the minister's department or by the neglect of the minister or his department officials. It found its way on to the docket and it is on the docket very, very improperly.

I am willing to accept it if the minister tells me that there has been an admission by the Registrar of the Supreme Court that a mistake was made at their end; but I am also suggesting to the minister that there was a mistake made at his end for that press release, which is entirely government propaganda, ever finding its way on to the Supreme Court file in the first instance.

Madam Speaker: I believe we have had a debate; that is quite clear to me. I think the House will agree that both parties have made their point, and the House will also agree that I was wise in letting it take place.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 3,462?

[Text]

*CANADA POST CORPORATION

Question No. 3,462—Mr. Young:

1. Does Canada Post intend to move the location of its philatelic services from Ottawa to Antigonish?

2. How many employees currently employed in the unit are (a) physically disabled (b) mentally handicapped?

3. Are measures being taken to place such employees in other employment and, if so, what are such measures?

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I apologize but the parliamentary secretary with that answer seems to have disappeared. Perhaps it can be answered next week.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Smith: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, consultations have taken place between the parties and I believe there is agreement to go to Bill S-25 and deal with it in all stages today.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there is consent of the House to go to Bill S-25, but one very vital element was left out by the parliamentary secretary. We have consented to deal with all three stages of the bill today on the basis of one speaker per party.

Mr. Smith: That is correct, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to proceed to Bill S-25?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved that Bill S-25, to amend the act of incorporation of the Association known as The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Madam Speaker, fellow members, I have the honour of presenting Bill S-25, an act respecting the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, for debate here in the House of Commons. As presented by the hon. Senator Jack Marshall, Bill S-25 will receive all-party support here in all three stages. This is not a controversial bill; in fact, just the contrary is just the case.

I would like to begin by giving my most sincere congratulations to the four witnesses representing The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans at the Senate Health, Welfare and Science Committee. Stan Stillwell of Winnipeg, who is president of Dominion Command of The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada; Albert Bianchini of Edmonton, who is the vice-president of Dominion Command; John C. McArthur who is secretary-treasurer of Dominion Command; and Shannon Howard Martin, their legal adviser, all made excellent contributions to the deliberations.

The purpose of this bill is simple. It makes amendments to the act incorporating the association known as The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada. Its purpose is to allow those people supporting the purposes and objectives of the association to become eligible for membership. This expanded eligibility is necessary in order to maintain membership levels and will also serve another very useful purpose. It will allow the continuation and perhaps the expansion of the many noteworthy projects undertaken by The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans across Canada. I will expand on this in a moment.

The belief that this bill will mean that The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans would cease to be a veterans' organization is simply not true in the spirit of the proposal. The admirable work carried out by this group represents a united veteran brethren working on behalf of others who are less fortunate than themselves. Would this noble goal be lost just because others of the same mind would be permitted to aid in that endeavour? I do not think so. Would the participation in hundreds of local events such as parades, community barbecues and bazaars be lost because those who wanted to help but were not veterans were admitted to the army, navy and air force team? I do not believe this would happen. Would the canteens in place across Canada suddenly close their doors, or would the feeling of patriotism ever present in this collection of individuals diminish as a result of the entrance of people who agreed with the aims and objectives of the veterans' association? None of these events would happen.

It is my belief that the veterans who are now running the show would pass on the traditions, the practices and the spirit to new members, just as a grandfather passes on old stories to his grandchildren. The legend would be enhanced in the telling and the example set would be a goal to be strived for.

New members would not detract from the tradition set by veterans' organizations. They would be expected to live up to and even improve upon it. The witnesses assured the Senate committee studying this bill that all persons applying for membership are subject to a careful screening process. They made it clear that it is unlikely that former veterans would tolerate the membership of men and women who had fought against Canada, or who were known to be opposed to the principles and objectives of a free, democratic society. What this bill does is legalize what is already a policy enforced by The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, as it did in the case passed last year of the Royal Canadian Legion.

The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association in Canada has a rich history and I would be remiss in not mentioning it. Some Canadians may think that there is only one organization representing veterans in Canada, the Royal Canadian Legion. There are, however, several organizations and The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association in Canada holds the distinguished position of being the oldest veterans' organization in the country.

Documentary evidence shows that the organization was in existence in 1840 under the title of "Army and Navy Veterans." There is reason to believe that units of the association were active even before that time. Membership in the earliest units were recruited from the ranks of veterans of the war of 1812-14 and migrating veterans of the navy and Wellington's army. It is even possible to assume, therefore, that some form of this organization was in existence in the city of Montreal in 1840 and that date is abitrarily accepted as the time of its founding.

Soldiers who served in various campaigns abroad, such as the India mutiny of 1858, along with other battles during that period, formed through their achievements a sense of comradeship borne of dangers faced together. Ever-increasing membership grew from this comradeship in the oldest of all Canadian veterans' organizations.

When the country was confronted by the grave crisis of August, 1914, members of the army and navy veterans in Canada of that day were foremost in volunteering their services and in aiding the authorities to recruit men for the first contingent. As an instance of this effort, reference was made to the history of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry which, as everyone is aware, was a famous regiment that served in the wars fought by Canada.

The activities of the association in World War II are of recent memory. Added to the numbers of those who served in the army and navy from the outbreak of hostilities to the eventual collapse of Germany and Japan was the very large contingent which fought in the RCAF. By act of Parliament passed in 1946, the name of the association was changed to the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

Veterans of the Korean conflict and those who served in the special forces in peace-keeping missions have added to the membership of the association. There are now 40,000 members across Canada and there are units in most major and minor communities throughout the country. One in which I have the honour to be a member is Unit 283.

I would like to say a little about Unit 283 in my home constituency of Winnipeg-Assiniboine. I am very proud to have been a member of this unit for the past 17 years. Its president, Joe Henderson, and his executive have done a great deal of invaluable work in co-ordinating the units activities on behalf of the community. Also, the manager of the club, Bob Delaney, and his staff have done an excellent job over the years. The club is lucky to have them.

The ladies' auxilliary also provides valuable services. They have dinners for senior citizens at the club. They provide Christmas hampers for needy people and give donations to high school groups. The ladies' auxilliary president, Mrs. Anne George, should be heartily commended for her co-ordinating work.

The army, navy and air force veterans also make regular visits to Deer Lodge hospital, one of the few veterans' hospitals left, to give candies and cigarettes to the residents. We are also proud to have the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association national president, Stan Stillwell, as a member of Unit 283.

It would take me more time than is available to a member in a debate of this sort to list all the unit's activities, but here are just a few examples. This coming Monday, May 24, Victoria Day, will see Unit 283 participating in Manitoba's annual Buffalo Barbecue and parade. Each year the unit enters a band which invariably adds to the parade's habitual success.

Here are other examples of the work of some of the unit's community work. Local 283 has financially assisted the following organizations: students attending citizenship courses; the Lions telethon; the Deer Lodge Hospital day care patients; the Manitoba Lung Association; St. Amanth Society; the shut-in fund on CJOB Radio; the variety club which raises funds for crippled children; the Girl Guides; the Timmy dance committee at Portage la Prairie; the Oddfellows; the Navy League; and the Manitoba Heart Foundation, to name a few.

Another program the army, navy and air force veterans are actively involved in is the citizenship training program which is designed to assist the youth of Canada to accept the challenge of leadership and acquaint them with responsibility and to gain a valid concept of the operations, goals, ideals and functions of the government.

Another is the leadership training program at the Royal Military College in Kingston, Ontario in which youths sponsored by the army, navy and air force veterans are taught to be the patriots and leaders of tomorrow. They are taught through the method of learning by doing.

The association belongs to the National Council of Veterans' Associations of Canada which is comprised of most of the leading veterans' associations and which makes representations to the government on behalf of all veterans. This group makes these representations even on behalf of those groups which do not belong to the association, such as the National Prisoners of War, the War Amputees, the Hong Kong veterans, the Jewish veterans of Canada and the Dieppe veterans.

The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association can be proud of its membership in the National Council of Veterans' Associations. Just recently, for example, the national council presented an excellent submission to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Among the many recommendations made in the submissions, three are of special note and importance to all Canadian veterans. First, the council expressed concern that there was an inequity in the way in which pension increases do not reflect the principle of parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of public servants or the increase in the consumer price index, whichever is greater, and that this principle is not entrenched in the Pension Act.

Second, the council proposed that the phasing in of WVA-CWA rate increases for single recipients under the age of 65 be abandoned and that the benefits be increased immediately to the proposed income support level identified in Bill C-40.

Third, but not the last of their recommendations, the National Veterans' Council felt that a complete review should be carried out of the eligibility requirements currently in place which veterans must meet in order to take advantage of the aging veterans' programs.

These are just a few examples of what this group presents to the government each year. The many groups including the army, navy and air force veterans which make up the National Council are responsible for persuading the government to introduce much of the legislation it does. As a team, the National Veterans' Association, together with the Conservative party, have pressured governmental action, such as Bills C-40, C-82 and C-79. We are hoping for even bigger and better things in the future. I correspond with thousands of veterans each year and can safely say they appreciate the work being done on their behalf by the veterans' associations and other advocates.

Internationally the association is also a member of the World Veterans' Federation, which consists of veterans' associations from every continent and has a total membership running into the millions. Among the principal aims of the federation are the establishment of permanent relations between associations of veterans, aid to veterans through the exchange of information on legislation and rehabilitation, and promotion of international peace and security through support of the United Nations Charter.

Working individually, through the National Council of Veterans' Organizations and on an international level, The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association deserves much credit. Without a doubt, work will be continued after the passage of Bill S-25. The government has been making slow but steady progress in dealing with the special needs of veterans. There is always work left to accomplish and new ideas to consider. The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association can and does contribute substantially to this process. Passage of this bill will guarantee that this constructive input both to community and veteran needs will continue.

This bill is simple in terms of legislative complexity, but it signifies a great deal to the army, navy and air force veterans. Their future depends on the passage of this bill. All Canadians will benefit from the continuation of this organization's fine work.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to say a few words on behalf of the members of the New Democratic Party caucus on this bill.

As the House knows, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is in the House today and who wanted to be here because he knew this bill was being brought forward, has been a formidable fighter on behalf of veterans over the years to improve not only pension benefits for veterans, but to improve the lot of those individuals who fought so hard on behalf of Canadians and their families.

Veterans are a constant reminder to all Canadians of what true patriotism is all about and, in fact, what the meaning of Canada is. It gives me the greatest of pleasure to give unanimous consent on behalf of my caucus to this piece of legislation.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the explanation given by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). I would point out that Senator Marshall, in his eloquent presentation, called for the passage of Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), on behalf of the government, is enthusiastically supportive of Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada. I assure hon. members he would very much have liked to be present to express his personal support for this bill, but because of various motions, questions of privilege and so on, he unfortunately had to dash away to catch a plane. However, as his parliamentary secretary it is my pleasure to speak on his behalf and to try as best I can to express his support for this bill and his views on it.

I think the purpose of this bill is, above all, to broaden the conditions of eligibility for membership in this association, which makes it possible for people to join and support the purposes and objectives of this organization for generations to come.

This bill is more important than just another bill which brings about a change of name or extends membership. In reality, it is a bill which would assist us to hallow and enshrine the sacrifices of those who fought, as well as those who died, in wars throughout Canada's history. By passing this bill we are ensuring that membership in this association will be open to those who will carry on the name, the work and goals of this association as well as its memories, and also make us sensitive to our past and our future.

We know that we must do many things to ensure monetary respect, recognition, reparation and protection for our veterans. This is done through various efforts to ensure that pensions are provided and to ensure that there are war allowances.

We also know that the minister and the government have sought to test a new program entitled the aging veterans program. This new program is designed to take still one step further to promote awareness of the important fact that we have duties to aging veterans. We must make sure they are given the considerations and comforts necessary to allow them to remain in their homes so that they will not have to be institutionalized.

I am sure this kind of program and any other program we could undertake would be valuable. There are things we can do with money, but much more important than merely providing money is that we remember. That is why this bill is so important. It is a recognition that we remember those who fought as well as those who died. By widening the terms of eligibility for membership in this organization, The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, we are making sure others may join the organization and that others will help make sure we remember. When a society no longer remembers, it is a society which is beginning to die. It is a beautiful thought to know that we can be part of this today and vote for this bill so that we can recognize and remember the work of our veterans, both those who have died and those who are with us today. That, as well as recognition for their families, is ensured by making certain this organization can continue and that its purposes are widened.

There is a phrase "Lest we forget". By passing this bill we will take one more step in making sure we will not forget; and on behalf of my colleagues in the government and in the Liberal Party, it is my pleasure to support the passage of this bill today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is aware that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might like to make a few brief remarks. Is there unanimous consent for him to do so?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to support the statements which have been made by the representatives of each of the other parties, but I would like to let the House know that I am pleased to be here today, and I am very happy to support this bill which is being passed today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-91, to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-91, which we have before us today, provides for minor amendments to important statutes administered by the Department of Public Works, namely, the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

Before discussing the technical aspects of the amendments, I want to touch briefly on a couple of points. First, I describe the amendments as housekeeping measures. I say that because they relate more to procedures of Parliament than to the policies and practices of the department. The main reason I say that is that in part they provide a general authority in a statutory way for departmental procedures which have been in use by the department from time to time over recent years. They were formerly executed under the authority of individual vote word changes as each case arose.

I am sure hon. members will recall a ruling of Madam Speaker approximately a year ago pointing out that these procedures were, from an administrative and House point of view, not acceptable, and it is as a result of that ruling that the changes we have before us were prepared in the form we have them here today.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the minister has it available, I wonder if he could cite the ruling so that I might look at it.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, as the debate on the bill progresses, I would be pleased to provide the hon. member with the ruling to which I am referring. I thought the reference I was making was commonly recognized by hon. members, but I will obtain the specific date of the ruling and make it available.

Having pointed out the context in which this legislation is introduced, I want to deal briefly with the proposed legislation. While I have said that, from a parliamentary perspective, they have been introduced—

Mr. Speaker, it appears that I should call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2:00 p.m.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, in debating Bill C-91 which is before the House, a question was raised about the ruling of the Speaker to which I referred and a request was made that it be identified. I would refer hon. members to Hansard for June 12, 1981, at page 10546, where Madam Speaker said that Agriculture vote 30 and Department of Public Works vote L-70, among others, were not properly before the House and they were thereby ordered to be deleted therefrom. The effect of that ruling was that the vehicle for legislative support for the work which, as I have indicated, has been done for a number of years by the Department of Public Works had to be properly authorized by the House. Hence the amendments which are sought in this legislation before us today.

Before one o'clock I indicated that I was prepared to talk about the main body of the amendments that are sought. The amendments are minor from a parliamentary perspective, but they are nonetheless important to Public Works. They will ensure continuing progress in activities and projects affected by the legislation, and I hope without undue delay.

The first amendment to Section 9 of the Public Works Act will permit the department to perform work for other government agencies, including those which have statutory management of their own properties but may wish to use the services of Public Works. Although the department has for many years worked in such a capacity with many agencies, the incorporation of Canada Post highlighted a specific need, hence the legislation to clarify the role of Public Works. In order to allow Canada Post management and employees to concentrate on their particular mandate of efficient service, the corporation intends to have Public Works manage and operate real property assets under an agreement between the two.

The second amendment to Section 9 of the act, Mr. Speaker, will permit the department to perform work on all properties adjacent to properties which are the subject of attention by the department and other ministries of the Government of Canada. It covers property not belonging to Canada but which, for example, may require an access road to a property in order to permit work and expenditure of moneys by Canada on those properties not owned by Canada. It goes without saying, of course, that such work would have to be with the consent of persons involved. This legislation demonstrates the need for continuing operational flexibility essential to the execution of contemporary complex commercial developments. I can think of many developments by the government in large urban areas where it is necessary to enter into arrangements with adjacent property holders in order for work to be done.

The third amendment affects both the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. The amendment permits the department to dispose of property which may still be required for public purposes under a lease-purchase arrangement. The federal government has since 1974 used lease-purchase on a very limited basis as a means of providing accommodation. Its use has been questioned on two occasions by third parties involved in the transaction; that is, in the financing. Doubt has been expressed as to whether land could be leased when it was still required for public purposes. In both cases the doubt was overcome by a special vote wording in the estimates. Our purpose in coming forward at this time is to comply with the ruling which I identified by page number in Hansard.

The lease-purchase process is an important tool of real estate development. It is widely used internationally both in public and private sectors. As I indicated, Public Works has used it since 1974, with good results based on a comparison of costs per square metre of space. But this is only one aspect of lease-purchase. Also important is the fact that lease-purchase is a means by which the department can harness the skills of the strongest real estate development firms in the country—Canadian firms, Mr. Speaker. They are recognized internationally as the best in the business, and we need them to assist us with part, but an important part, of the evolving program of accommodation plans by Public Works. In most cases this involves complex projects in commercial and central core areas.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Do you use the tender system?

Mr. Cosgrove: The repeal of Section 39 of the Public Works Act and paragraph 4(1)(a) of the Public Lands Grants Act, and the substitution of the new provisions set out in Bill C-91, would enable the government to use federal property in order to facilitate lease-purchase of federal accommodation. I have already outlined that, although procedurally what gave rise to the legislation before you is in my opinion housekeeping, it does give an opportunity to talk about the development of the very complex and always changing area of commercial construction, especially in the cities. I thought I should touch briefly on the thinking behind these two department policies, how they are necessary in the context of the department's responsibilities, why they benefit the taxpayer, and how they fit into this rapidly evolving field of real estate development.

The office accommodation policies and practices, including lease-purchase and adjacent property improvements, which have evolved over the past ten years must be viewed in the context of the department's mission, which is a varied one. First of all, it must manage the existing realty interests of the federal government, both those which it owns and those leased from others. Secondly, it must arrange for new accommodation for federal departments and agencies. Third, an integral part of its mission is the responsibility to contribute to social, economic and environmental objectives. I think, for example, of the leadership Public Works has shown in the conservation of energy in public buildings, which has resulted in the benefit of haiving this expertise transferred to the private sector. This aspect of our mission distinguishes us, perhaps, from the more straightforward responsibilities of a private sector real estate operator.

However, as a provider of federal accommodation we must also operate as part of a larger framework—the real estate industry and its markets, customs, constraints and evolving commercial practice, in particular the fast changing downtown office building side of the industry. The reason is that part of our requirements involve the provision of space for agencies and departments which must be located in these areas of major metropolitan centres to better serve Canadians. This side of the industry has experienced rapid change in recent years, as I am sure many members know.

For a long time Canada has been an international leader in downtown redevelopment, starting, of course, with Place Ville Marie in Montreal almost 30 years ago. That was among the first and largest projects of its kind since the war. I might note, Mr. Speaker, that this innovative project was executed under an instrument called an emphyteutic lease which shares some of the features of the lease-purchase I talked about. For a variety of reasons Canada has had the good fortune to have the strongest and most sophisticated real estate development industry in the world. A small number of firms, perhaps two dozen, some of them giant enterprises internationally active and recognized, are world leaders in their field.

I say all of this not necessarily in praise of the real estate industry and certainly not as my main motive, but I do not mind saying that it is an industry of which Canada is proud and it deserves recognition and credit. But as it relates to the fact that we are a partner in this complex and developing industry, we must move along with our techniques, modify them and be able to compete and co-operate in a varied and complicated developing industry. Our department, Public Works, has had to keep up with the technical changes brought about by the industry generally. It is this evolution which is the root of at least one of the amendments to the act proposed in the legislation before hon. members this afternoon.

In conclusion, I would like to indicate again that the reason for the changes that are before the House today, from a procedural point of view, stem from the ruling of the Speaker to which I referred, as reported in Hansard for June 12, 1981. The opportunity does permit me to talk about the fast-evolving complex but specialized and successful industry, of which Public Works has been a part.

I would like to point out that Public Works has been moving with the changing industry. Indeed, there are projects in ridings from coast to coast where this legislation will be of assistance, not only to the ministry and to the clients we serve, but as well to Canadians in metropolitan areas and in smaller communities. I hope that will be recognized by members on both sides of the House as they entertain discussion in examination of the legislation.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be here today. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) and I were scheduled to be in my riding today, but I would much rather keep him here than allow him in my riding. There are not too many Liberals left in my riding and I would hate to have any pollution. As a consequence, I am delighted this bill came forward today.

First, I want to comment on a few of the minister's words. He talked about minor amendments. In my view, it is sad if the minister cannot read the legislation that is before us. However, I will deal with it. The minister talked about this bill being a housekeeping one. He said also that it was strictly a procedure for the chamber, and that we should get it right out of the chamber. That is the whole point. This bill removes the right of this chamber ever to get involved with these portions of the act. This bill takes the matter right out of the chamber. It is on this topic that I will be speaking very strongly.

The minister talked about Canada Post and having to get consent from Canada Post. There is no problem getting consent from Canada Post. All you have to do is tell the people they will not be getting their cheques next month. When it spends $600 million a year rising to $1 billion a year, they cannot say no. Therefore, that is a pretty poor argument of the minister's.

The minister got into a subject that we have been discussing here in the House the last few weeks. I thought it was amusing. The minister talked about how these lease-backs were building up the private sector. That reminds me of building up the architectural sector. I wonder if the same methods are used for selection of real estate companies, such as Bob Campeau's, as are used for architectural companies, such as Mr. Erickson's. It strikes me that the build-up in the private sector is nothing more than political pay-off. What it is is Liberal friends, Liberal pay-off. I cannot get too excited unless the minister can explain to us how the selection was made, whether it was done by tender or whether it was reviewed by committee and not cancelled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

We have lost a great deal of faith on this question of helping the private sector. It is not helping the private sector, it is just helping friends of the Liberal government. I was shocked that the minister would stand up in this House and state that; I think it is just a joke.

The minister talks about spending money to help the taxpayers. The taxpayers today are fed up with federal spending. They have had it right up to the eyeballs and more. This federal government has spent so much money that Canadians have been put in debt forever, including future generations of Canadians.

I will now deal directly with what this bill states. Clause 1 is an absolute disgrace. The minister knows my point of view about this. He agreed to an amendment and then backed off from it. The first clause reads:

> 1. Section 9 of the Public Works Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:
> "(3) The Minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to
> (a) properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction; or

Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that that clause removes the need for expropriation? Let me expand on that point. I happen to come from a riding which was partially destroyed by this government several years ago. It expropriated land to build an airport which has never been built and will never be built. This government has really resolved the problem. It spent a lot of money buying the land at Pickering. This government can pick any site in Canada and build an airport on it. It is just tough bananas to the guy who happens to have an interest in that land.

The minister has acknowledged this and I would have thought he would have made a change with respect to that. The minister talks about consent but there is no consent in this bill. If I had a piece of property, I would have no rights. That is a good point because it begs the question: Does this follow through from our charter of rights where our government has not included property rights? When I see a bill like this it makes me very nervous. I think it is part of the government's plan. The government has put this bill before the House which says that the government can build anywhere, that it does not need to expropriate land. In other words, the government can build towers, airports, recreational centres, it can do anything, and the owner of the land has no rights. That coincides completely with the lack of property rights in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is a very dangerous clause and our party will be voting against it.

The minister asked if we could get this bill through the House in one day. I asked him how could we, on behalf of Canadians, agree to pass this bill in one day? We cannot do that because it is a dangerous piece of legislation. It is giving far too much power to the monstrous bureaucracy in the Department of Public Works. This bill goes beyond all the realms of possibility. It goes beyond the wildest dreams of Socialist International. It is taking away people's rights and property rights.

I get very upset by this type of legislation. Over the last two years I have sat in this chamber saying no many, many times. I have said no because every piece of legislation that goes through has a nasty, rotten thread running through it. It is a socialist thread to put all responsibility into the hands of the bureaucracy, to remove all responsibility from the House and, in turn, to remove all rights of the citizens of the country. This is a serious error. I pray to the Almighty that there will be an election soon and that we rid the country of that rotten mess which is destroying it.

Mr. Fennell: I hear laughing and joking on the other side. Wait until they are on this side of the House; they will see the results of what they have done. Perhaps it is only three or four of them who are trying to destroy the country, but when they are on this side of the House they will realize what they have done. The country is a ship without a rudder; no one is running it. There is a triumvirate—Michael Pitfield, Ian Stewart and Mickey Cohen—who are running government. Backbenchers opposite are in no worse a position than the second row of cabinet ministers; they are being run by a bureaucracy which is destroying the country.

Clause 2 of the bill deals with Section 39 of the act. If we vote for it, we are not representing the people of the country. I feel very strongly about it. The argument of the minister was not factual. I have checked up on titles and mortgages and have found that his argument is not factual. I maintain that this clause was included in order to give the Department of Public Works total control. In part Clause 2 reads:

—the proceeds of such sale or lease shall be accounted for as public moneys—

We do not know where public money goes. When it is mixed up in the general accounts, we lose track of it. We no longer have the ability in Parliament even to challenge ministers or to find out the facts. Public accounts have become somewhat a farce. We receive part of the truth and there is a whole battery of bureaucrats to protect the ministers' butts. There is no justification in that clause alone. It continues:

—but such public work shall be so sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement—

This is reasonable, but then it goes on to indicate the classic inclusion in every bill—that Michael Pitfield can authorize with a rubber stamp. It reads:

—unless it is otherwise authorized by the governor in council.

That wipes out everything.

We have a problem in the country today about which I am worried. There is a shortage of money, there is a shortage of cash. Dome Petroleum is bankrupt. It cannot pay its bills, so the federal government will set up a Crown corporation and inject $1 billion to save Dome. Government members may need to find that $1 billion. They could travel around Canada and pick out particular office buildings—and there are hundreds of thousands of square feet of office space which could be sold—to be sold to Bob Campeau, at a very attractive price to him, and then lease it back. Some people would argue that that is a good solution, but it will increase the cost of government spending. It will increase the estimates, it will increase the debt, and it will get the country into more trouble.

I maintain that they cannot include such a clause and remove the one saving grace that they may not sell or lease land which is otherwise required for public purposes. If a piece of property is required for public purposes, it should be kept and used. They may be inefficient in the way they operate it, but we are straddled with that problem now. They should continue to use it. We should not give them the permission to sell any building they want, whether or not it is required; that is absolutely immoral and against the beliefs of every Canadian citizen. Heavens, the next thing they will do is go to the U.S.S.R., sell the Parliament Buildings to Russia and then lease them back. That could happen, that is their attitude; then we would be truly working in a communist hall. I am really worried about this. If a building is required for public purposes, I believe it should be retained by the government of the country.

Bill C-91 also refers to paragraph 4(1)(a) of the Public Lands Grants Act, the pride of the country. We are talking about all the national parks which have been built over the years and all the land rights under the Parliament Buildings. We are also talking about Dorval, which I want to use as an example. There is nothing in the bill to prevent the government from going out and selling the land rights at Dorval. No one would know anything about it. There could be a one-year lease, and then the government would announce in the House that the problem with Mirabel had been solved because Dorval had been closed and all airplanes were going into Mirabel. This is how broad the legislation is. This is an indication of the kind of damage the government could do. Perhaps it is not such a bad idea because Mirabel is a white elephant.

Government members tried to impose the same thing on my riding, but fortunately there was the group known as POP, People Or Planes, to fight these monsters. They did not get their way and the land is still in its original state. I should like to touch on that question later.

I plead with the minister to pay attention because there are 700 farmers in Quebec and I have calculated—believe me, it is difficult to figure out government estimates—that it is costing somewhere between $250 and $500 per year per acre to maintain the 80,000 surplus acres in the area. Most of that land was bought for $80 per acre, and it is now costing somewhere between $250 and $500 to maintain it. These farmers were thrown out of their homes, thrown off their land. They pleaded with the minister. They sent delegations to Ottawa to see the minister and to see their Member of Parliament. They have had absolutely no co-operation. Their first ray of hope was when they attended the tenth anniversary of POP, of which, incidentally, the minister used to be a member. They had spoken with people in my riding who told them to talk with me because I had solved their problem.

I feel as dedicated to those farmers as I do to my own constituents who were ill-treated and mistreated by government. The government should do something for these farmers; I may lead them down here. The land should be sold back to them; they should be given the first opportunity. It should not be sold to corporations set up by the federal government under DREE grants. It should not be sold to friends of the government, and the money should not be lent by the government. There is an inequity in that area and the government had better start to realize that. My friends around Mirabel are starting to realize it. Just like the people in Pickering, they did not want the airport. Unfortunately, the people of Mirabel were not as well organized. If I had been around at that time I think I might have been able to help them.

While I do not believe in expropriation, it is preferable to what is provided for in Clause 1 of this bill where expropriation is not required. The reason I do not believe in expropriation is that families who have lived on farms for up to four generations, whose ancestors were the pioneers of this country, are removed from their homes which results in destruction of a whole sector of our culture. Not only does the government expropriate the land from those people but it taxes them for the right to expropriate their land. It is immoral.

More specifically, it is the attitude of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) that the government can simply grab cash. The government's whole attitude is to get cash. it does not care about Canadians. The government only cares about itself and its friends in the ivory towers.

This bill is a typical example of a whole series of disastrous legislation. I hope we can get a large enough majority to wipe it all out. We will do it as quickly as possible under any means we can use.

This legislation gives the civil service a blank cheque with unlimited sums of money to spend. The reason there is an unlimited amount of money is that it comes from our cheques and will come from our children's and their children's cheques.

The people who are getting the power are those who have never had to earn an honest dollar. They have never had to get their hands dirty. We can use the people in Energy, Mines and Resources as an example. We have the finest experts in the oil industry sitting in Ottawa. They have never been in an oil field, have never been involved in the dirty work on the rigs and have never got their hands dirty. They are in their own esoteric world, learning the philosophies of the oil industry. They may have all the chemical and economic terms—which, incidentally, are all wrong—but they have never got their hands dirty.

My philosophy has always been never to ask someone to do something that I would not do myself. There are many members opposite who are asking many Canadians to go broke when they have never had to go broke themselves. This legislation only returns to the unacceptable legislation that those three who are running the country are imposing upon Canadians.

Mr. Nystrom: And now Jack Horner.

Mr. Fennell: That is one of the best examples. I could not agree more with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I must admit that I agree on occasion with the hon. member in particular. We now have three examples to boot around the hall; Erickson, Horner and Campeau.

At this time the government has only one choice to make, and that is to resign. It should resign and call an election because there is no question in my mind that the government has lost its mandate. It has lost the mandate given to it by the citizens of Canada. If this situation becomes any worse the government will never return to power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Hon. members may laugh, but just talk to the people. They are hurting. They are going bankrupt. There are many people in the ridings of these members opposite who are being seriously affected by the National Energy Program. Those Liberal members signed their name to the document.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Many are employed by Petro-Canada.

Mr. Fennell: Fine. There are many other people who do not work for Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada is a good example of people who have not really worked and got their hands dirty. I would like to see the chairman of Petro-Canada work on a rig in the west. That would be quite a joke. I do not think a rig would carry him, in the first instance.

Since the hon. member talks about Petro-Canada, I will stray from the subject of debate for a minute. We talk about Petro-Canada as the great benefactor for all Canadians. I suggest to hon. members that they talk to the small drilling contractors and the small service contractors to find out how much drilling Petro-Canada is doing in the west. That huge company of Petro-Canada is drilling three minor wells. I have nothing against the concept of Petro-Canada.

I would like to return to Clause 2 of this bill. I refer to the phrase "sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement, unless it is otherwise authorized by the governor in council". I would call that phrase a pacifier with a hammer over your head. That is exactly how the government operates. It gives the people a pacifier and then suddenly hits them over the head with a hammer.

This legislation has gone too far and I do not know how much further the minister plans to go with respect to land. I know that many tourist operators would be delighted to purchase Parks Canada. There is nothing stopping the government from selling that land to Americans, Germans, Russians or whoever may want to buy it, because this bill does not contain the proper language and has been improperly drafted. So we can sell our parks to the highest bidder. Possibly it may be an improvement to have them run by private enterprise, but the fact is that the parks belong to Canadians.

As evidence to show just how much even the provinces need more money, it costs more to go to a provincial park than to any privately-owned park in the United States. Therefore, it is my hope that the government does not use this legislation in the way I can see it being used, which would be to bail themselves out of the forthcoming economic disaster, unless the United States bails them out.

The government keeps saying that the United States has caused all our economic problems. However, when the United States interest rates go down the minister will not say that our interest rates will go down as well. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has used other people as scapegoats when he needs to, but he is not consistent.

I would like to make a couple of suggestions to the minister at this time. I realize that I could also make them to him in committee; however, I would like to relate them now for his consideration.

I originally made a suggestion in a letter to him and his department co-operated. There was a consensus on the suggestion that no services or work may be performed in relation to properties not belonging to Canada without the consent of the owner thereof. I can accept that and he accepted it, and he indicated that if he has a one-day debate he will put it through.

I have a second amendment which I would like to introduce to Clauses 2 and 3, but I will not move it right now. I am simply proposing it to the minister in the hope that he will deal with it in the proper vein. I would accept his choice as set out in what would be Section 39(a), that it be referred to the public works committee—and not to the House. The same clause under Section 4(1)(a) could be an extension of that, that it be referred to the Public Works committee. We are not being unreasonable. We are being reasonable in this instance. That is only one suggestion. I may come up with other ideas, but I would like the minister to consider this one as it is very important.

I have one other question to address to the minister. The minister's predecessor, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), almost had in place an arrangement whereby the Department of Public Works could be turned into a profit centre. Isn't that exciting? It would no longer be a drag on the Canadian public. The Department of Public Works would assess rent to all other departments for the cost of service. It would have a zero budget.

A lot of the load in the budget and the cost of this government is landed on this minister's head when he is really only a maintenance manager. Therefore, I believe he should proceed with this proposal. The expenses should be charged to other departments and the Department of Public Works should have a zero budget.

The department could make a profit by charging a little more than the actual cost. This minister could say to other ministers that if he can show a profit, why can't they? Canadians would be very proud of him. We would finally have a department making money.

I would appreciate if the minister would consider and follow through what was started. Many members of the Department of Public Works are very positive toward this as they are always being criticized for being big spenders. Therefore, they would accept this proposal.

I could continue talking; I understand my time is unlimited. I think I have tried to stay with the subject, as I always do when you are in the Chair, Mr. Speaker. I think I have done an excellent job. I thank you very much for this opportunity.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this bill. I am not the Public Works critic for the party; our critic, the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), had to be in his constituency today. I just want to flag one or two of the concerns we have about the legislation before us.

Before doing so, I cannot help but respond to my congenial friend from Ontario (Mr. Fennell). A number of the ideas he put forward in his remarks were not that bad, but he hurt his argument by using some very extreme rhetoric. He said that with the bill before us today, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) would have the authority to sell the Parliament Buildings to Russia and then lease them back and we would all end up working in a communist hall. That kind of rhetoric is very damaging to all of us as parliamentarians and to our type of political system.

Mr. Cosgrove: It makes him look like a clown.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister said it makes him look like a clown. My principal concern is that these kinds of extreme arguments do not do any good at all to help win a case, to endear people to this institution, to get people to put more faith and trust in the political process and Parliament as an institution.

The other argument that concerned me was the whole connection of the purpose of the bill being tied to the property rights in the Constitution of Canada and that it is one of the big, sinister plots. I remind the hon. member for Ontario that I was on the Constitution committee. I was there for the property rights hearings and heard the arguments of the provinces. I saw very clearly in the Constitution of Canada that property rights are under the authority and jurisdiction of the provinces.

It was the provinces, led by Premier Lougheed, as well as the Conservative Premier of Prince Edward Island and Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan, who wanted to maintain property rights under provincial jurisdiction in the Constitution of Canada. It has nothing to do with the crap he is trying to spread about this being a sinister plot.

If the hon. member wants to look at some authority, he should look to Premier Lougheed. Mr. Lougheed is now going around Alberta saying that kind of thing in response to the Western Canada Concept, the separatist rhetoric in Alberta and other parts of western Canada. It strikes me as rather strange that the member for the riding of Ontario would be using western separatist arguments to try to discredit a piece of legislation which has holes in it. You do not do that by resorting to some kind of nincompoop argument that does not hold water, even with prominent Conservatives in Canada such as the Premiers of Alberta and Prince Edward Island.

My good friend from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) muttered a second ago that this legislation goes beyond the wildest dream of Socialist International. Certainly it goes beyond the dream of Socialist International because democratic socialist parties are democratic. We want to have open government. We want government to be accountable to the people. We want to bring government closer to the people so that people can have a say about what happens in their lives. He said there is a socialist thread. I do not see a socialist thread. I see a Conservative thread. This legislation is basically set up for the contractors, the Campeaus of the world, the big boys, the big corporations.

My friend from Spadina (Mr. Heap) said to me privately a few minutes ago that, if anything, this bill is set up for the contractors, the big boys; it is very Conservative. If you look around the country and talk about centralized bureaucracy, I know of no province in this country with a bigger bureaucracy than Billy Davis in Ontario. He has a huge bureaucracy. Peter Lougheed has a huge bureaucracy.

Maybe that is why the Conservative Party defeated us in Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan government had a lean, fit, fighting and trim bureaucracy and a balanced budget that started back in the days of Tommy Douglas. We had a party that came in and promised the moon, the stars, the sun, no gas tax, free phones for senior citizens, a four-lane trans-Canada highway, a mortgage of 13¼ per cent, etc. How do you get the money? You will probably have a huge deficit. Bill Davis has a huge deficit and a huge bureaucracy. Therefore, it strikes me rather strange that when we have a bill that shows some of these Conservative tendencies of huge bureaucracies, deficits and so on, we have these kinds of distortionist arguments made by the Conservatve Party of Canada.

It strikes me as a strange that they would see this kind of bill as a terrible, radical measure when one of the most eminent and sincere members of that party, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), one of the more principled, forthright and honest members of that party, and he has been here for ten years, said, as reported in The Globe and Mail:

> There is, Mr. Oberle says, no intellectual basis to his party's policy. Tories talk only to Tories and very, very seldom to outsiders. The average student in the average political science class could not tell you the difference between a Conservative and a Liberal.
> The Conservatives' motto is "Don't offend anybody with policy or principle, and try to be all things to all people," but that's not working. For those who feel Joe Clark does not measure up to Pierre Trudeau, there is no alternative attraction in policies or principles.

He goes on—and this is very interesting; it was pointed out in the House today by my good friend from Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

> —"when you've got people all the way from Genghis Khan to Karl Marx, you cannot expect them all to stand up behind the leader and support him."

I wonder if my friend from Yukon is a Genghis Khan or Karl Marx.

Mr. Rose: "Erik the Red".

Mr. Nystrom: It strikes me as very strange, and belittling of the parliamentary process, when we hear the kinds of arguments we have heard today in light of the fact that the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party are the same. One of their most prominent members, one of the people who will be in an important leadership role in the years to come, said they are the same in principle as the party across the way.

That was proved yesterday with our good friend, "jumping Jack Horner". He was one of the most famous Conservative MPs to sit in the House of Commons. He was a leading spokesman for that party. He was the transport critic of that party and the chairman of the transport committee of the House of Commons for that party. He made a run for the leadership of the Conservative Party. He might have been leader of that party, and perhaps even prime minister. The Liberal Party named Jack Horner chairman of the CNR.

Mr. Cosgrove: A great westerner.

Mr. Nystrom: It is very hard to understand the song and dance we heard from the hon. member for Ontario. I do not at all think it was a reflection on the people of Ontario when he said today that this bill is dangerous because the government can now sell the Parliament buildings to Russia, lease them back from Russia and we will all be working in a communist hall.

Mr. Kristiansen: Sounds like Bill Bennett.

Mr. Nystrom: It might sound like Bill Bennett. I am not sure, but I would not want to reflect on the Premier of British Columbia.

Mr. Rose: You wouldn't? I would.

Mr. Nystrom: I think we should take this bill seriously. For that reason I am looking forward to our members on the committee putting questions at the committee stage and speaking about this bill later on around the theme of making sure Parliament makes the government more accountable and makes sure ministers across the way will not have as much power as they have today to govern by orders in council.

I cannot recall how many orders in council we have, but I know that compared with other parliamentary democracies we have literally thousands and thousands more orders in council.

Mr. Kelly: Why?

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know why. Perhaps it is arrogance. Perhaps it is because we have a government which has been in power too long.

Mr. Kelly: We waste time in this chamber.

Mr. Nystrom: Hon. members opposite have forgotten that they are responsible to the people. They think they govern by divine right, and perhaps it is time the party across the way was booted out of this House and booted out of Canadian politics forever. I think it is a sign of arrogance, but no matter what signals hon. members opposite get, they go on appointing jumping Jack Horners and appointing Arthur Ericksons to build embassies in Washington against the recommendations—

Mr. Pepin: How do they do it in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will have an opportunity very soon to rise and make a speech.

Mr. Kelly: Answer his question.

Mr. Nystrom: Of all ministers across the way the Minister of Transport knows of what I speak. A few years ago the Minister of Transport and John Robarts produced an excellent report about the future of our country and the unity of Canadians. They made many recommendations about bringing this country closer together and making sure that politicians and institutions are more accountable to the people of the country. That minister's ideas have been slammed down time and again by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). He is losing many battles in the cabinet and in the country. I wish him very well in trying to get the Prime Minister to come to his senses with respect to making this place a truly democratic parliamentary institution.

Our main concern is that we have more accountability and a strengthening of parliamentary committees so that we as the people's representatives can make sure that billions of taxpayers' dollars are spent properly. We as parliamentarians should not be here just as a bunch of people screaming, hollering and bellowing; we should have some input and legislative power over the direction of the government.

I know these ideas are really radical to hon. members opposite and to my right, radical because they are democratic ideas, but I think those are the ideas which will keep our country together. I noted yesterday a Gallup poll result, reported in the Toronto Star, which showed that confidence in Canada in terms of keeping our great nation together and in terms of Canadian unity is at a 37-year low. Gallup asked the question: "Do you believe Canada will stay together or break up?" Some 27 per cent of Canadians said our country will break up. That signals a warning politicians should take seriously. We must do whatever we can to try to bring the government to the people. The government must reflect the wishes of ordinary people. I believe that the Canadians values of equality, sharing, democracy and liberty exist. I believe those values are felt by the overwhelming majority, and I believe it is time the Government of Canada recognized that and governed for the people. In its contracting and leasing of government buildings the government should be more democratic and allow us as Members of Parliament to have an input so that the institutions of Canada, including the Government of Canada, could be a mirror and reflect the great people of this country.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in favour of this bill on three grounds. First, I will touch briefly on the need, in general terms, for assuring that the Department of Public Works can enter into and continue to carry out the types of activities described in the bill. These activities are a general requirement in order to execute its mandate, and I think it is prudent to set out its powers to do these things on a clear and explicit basis.

I shall then discuss more specifically the major role played by one of these activities, namely the lease-purchase arrangements, in the National Capital Region in establishing four major federal complexes on a solid economic basis.

[English]

Third, I will refer to certain of the authorities set out in the bill in so far as they relate to the Rideau Centre project—of which all of us in the Ottawa region are certainly very proud—by way of example, as another demonstration of why the bill should be favourably considered in this chamber.

I think the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has provided a good outline of the technical aspects of the bill, the legislative need for casting these departmental authorities in a statutory form and the background of Madam Speaker's ruling on vote word changes. Some of my colleagues will set out the desirability of making explicit the statutory authority of Public Works Canada to assist the new postal corporation in the administration of its property and premises. I will just add that I think the logic is clear for Public Works Canada to continue the real property services which it formerly provided to Canada's postal service when that agency was a department. Surely it is advantageous for Public Works Canada to continue these services rather than impose on the new Crown corporation the responsibility of immediately forming a large real estate management unit within the corporation. This is particularly true at a time when it has only just been formed and is more than fully occupied with upgrading postal delivery and with its labour-management relations concerns. If Canada Post were required immediately to assume management of its 2,000 buildings and 800 leases, this could obviously be an unnecessary diversion from its main task, unnecessary in the sense that Public Works Canada, as the long-time manager of these properties, already has in place this realty management capability and organization.

Certainly we have to say that Canada Post's prime objective at this point in time has to be the improvement of postal service, and it is well on the way to achieving that goal.

I would now like to come back very briefly to the first subject I mentioned, namely the general need for the department of Public Works to obtain, through a clear, explicit and unequivocal mandate, the power to undertake and carry out the various property activities covered in this bill. Without discussing each of them in detail, I would like to make a few comments. There has been a considerable evolution since the time when the Public Works Act was passed, some 114 years ago, Mr. Speaker. No major amendment has been made to this legislation since. Of course, there has been a general evolution, but the changes which have occurred in the last 15 or 20 years only in the area of commercial or office buildings have been quite simply revolutionary. These changes include rehabilitation of urban centres, rational development of large areas with shared-ownership, the need to protect through new legal instruments ownership rights for new complexes, as well as the control by the owners, the wish to regroup multiple use premises in these complexes, such as offices, retail outlets, housing units and recreational facilities. These changes finally include the undertaking of marketing studies by promoters.

Because of the needs of the federal government for office accommodation, much of it in downtown and commercial areas, Public Works Canada is thrown squarely into the midst of a great variety of real estate activities which were never contemplated by the drafters of the department's statutes over a hundred years ago. It is not surprising, therefore, that many activities, now necessary for its mandate, are not explicitly provided in the legislation. We on this side want to ensure that these activities, even if not specifically precluded by the current legal provisions, are clearly authorized and set out in the legislation.

Having said that, let me illustrate the importance of using these new development techniques for the Department of Public Works and show how their use has already produced substantial measurable benefits. I refer to the four lease-purchase buildings in the National Capital Region: Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, L'Esplanade Laurier, the C.D. Howe Building on Sparks Street, and Place du Centre.

I will not go into detail on the principles of lease-purchase, its structure and its place in the spectrum of real estate development tools. I will leave that to my colleagues on this side.

Rather, I would like to focus briefly on these four cases. Part of my interest in them, like that of a number of other hon. members, goes back about five years when these projects and the method of lease-purchase received a great deal of attention in this chamber and also in the other place. There was much debate about these projects and their economy, as a method of providing federal office accommodation.

[Translation]

I recall that the debates were then rather stormy, and this, for several reasons. One of these reasons was that those buildings or complexes had not yet been operated long enough to make a proper assessment of their economic trend and their annual cost per square metre. Given the lack of sufficient data, doubts could only worsen because when the doors were thrown open these buildings did in fact cost more than if comparable "A" category accommodation had been leased through the conventional leasing procedure. Mr. Speaker, such was the situation a number of years ago. Nowadays the volume of evidence at our disposal is much more significant, based as it is on actual events drawn from the practical experience gained by Public Works Canada in the management and the actual costs of those buildings or complexes. It is important to compare those costs with the rates which Public Works must pay for accommodation leased in the usual manner, rates that have been recently under review. In 1981-82, the average cost of the four buildings or complexes built under the hire-purchase formula was $134 per square metre, whereas similar accommodation on the market can be leased for about $200 per square metre. If we apply the average savings per square metre to the total floor area of the four buildings or complexes, we find out that the annual savings amount to $23 million, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I was glad, Mr. Speaker, to learn of this, because I was personally a bit uncertain about the merits of the lease-purchase system five years ago when we discussed this matter here at some length. Much of the confusion then, as I said before, arose from the fact that the initial couple of years under a lease-purchase were generally more expensive than the conventional lease market in the Ottawa-Hull region. I understand that the reason for this is that the cost structure of lease-purchase is more akin to ownership, and ownership costs are more expensive in the initial years but are cheaper in the long run, compared to leasing.

My third point is the Rideau Centre project, because it is a clear example of the complex aspects of present day real estate planning in general terms, and more specifically, of the participation of Public Works Canada in complex development projects. In fact, it demonstrates that the present act does not, but should, authorize Public Works Canada to operate in such situations. Mr. Speaker, I suppose a great many members of this House are well acquainted with this interesting and important project. However, it might be useful if I gave a brief overview of the project's background, structure and present situation.

[English]

You do not have to be an urban planner, or a retail market analyst to see that the central core of the Rideau Street area is badly in need of redevelopment. All you need to do is to have a look. This has long been recognized, since the early 1960s, going back to the study by John B. Parkin, the distinguished Toronto architect. This is the eastern downtown core, bounded on the west by the Chateau Laurier and the National Conference Centre, and it had been going downhill for probably a generation—a fate it has shared with many downtown core areas around the world.

For those who would require economic and statistical support for the evidence before their eyes, I have retail sales figures which demonstrate this trend in sharp terms. They show that since 1966, the downtown Rideau Street area's share of regional retail merchandise trade has declined steadily from 21 per cent 15 years ago to approximately 10 per cent today. This 50 per cent decline in the area's share of trade, needless to say, is reflected in the general lack of prosperity of the area, which in turn affects rental income, levels of maintenance, upkeep and so on, in a cycle of gradual deterioration over the years. The causes of this decline lie partly in the North American suburban migration of the last 20 to 30 years and the advent of shopping centres. There were 16 new major shopping centres built in the National Capital Region since 1971. The relocation of the Ottawa Union Station to Alta Vista also deprived the area of important trade.

Planning for the Rideau Centre took a number of years because of the scope and complexity of the project and the need to obtain the co-operation of various representatives of the public and private sectors. From the time cabinet approved the conceptual plan in 1973 until construction started last summer, eight years had passed, eight long years during which the project was sailing on very rough seas, appearing to be at times completely out of reach and at times a reality with a tremendous potential. From the very outset I have supported and promoted this project, and it was with great satisfaction and a sense of relief that I saw the concrete realization of this long process, when construction finally got under way last summer. The Rideau Centre is undeniably one of the most important projects undertaken in Ottawa since the war.

• (1520)

It will consist of four major elements, the first one being a 500-room hotel to be built and operated by Western International Hotels. The second element is a 250,000 square foot department store by Eaton's; the third, ancillary retail space totalling approximately 400,000 square feet; and the fourth major component is a full service convention centre, with a capacity of 4,000 people, to be built by the city of Ottawa. In addition to these main features, there will be a vast array of malls, pedestrian accesses, underpasses and bridges, parking garages and landscaped open areas and gardens.

If the physical scope and dimensions of the project are impressive, then the complex structuring of the over-all transaction is perhaps even more remarkable, that is, the order and disposition of the large array of interests and participants, both private and public, and the blending of retail and hostelry expertise, financial power and federal leadership.

I feel that it is necessary to stress the leadership role played by the federal government. It is, in fact, a federal project and has been since the very beginning, from the planning stage until its implementation. Public Works Canada and the National Capital Commission, who orchestrated the project since the beginning, are to be warmly praised for their work. As planning progressed, co-operation between the various levels of government, namely federal, provincial and municipal, proved to be a vital factor. Essential to the project and the initiative taken by the federal government was the innovative use Public Works Canada has made of twelve acres of property it owned in the area, the department acting as a catalyst to bring about the participation of all parties concerned in creating this vast integrated complex. The property in question was transferred to the principal promoter, Viking Rideau, Eaton's real estate branch, and to the municipal government of Ottawa and the regional municipality, for the purpose of carrying out the project.

[English]

In addition, it was necessary for the Department of Public Works to contribute to the project its share of the cost of infrastruture improvements. Since the land on which the infrastructure was to be built had already been transferred to the developer, the Public Works contribution was in relation to improvements to the property of others. Because the statute does not explicitly provide for such expenditures by Public Works, the amendments contained in Section 1 are designed to ensure that they are specifically authorized.

As far as economic benefits are concerned, at the construction stage the project will create 2,000 person-years of direct employment in addition to 1,000 person-years of indirect employment, which is greatly needed by the Ottawa area. As I said before, the project will revitalize the downtown core, since the central section of Rideau Street is expected to recoup most of the losses it suffered in retail sales. But more important still, the project will create a vital and dynamic downtown core.

[English]

I have described this project in some detail for two reasons. First, it illustrates the complexity of contemporary real estate development and shows the necessary involvement by Public Works in such complex projects. More particularly, it illustrates the necessity of ensuring, in an explicit way, that Public Works has the statutory authority to participate in such projects. Section 1 of Bill C-91 as it now stands does not give explicit authority to the Department of Public Works to provide its share of the federal contribution to the project. This amendment is required in order to set out such authority clearly.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that hon. members consider this bill favourably and expeditiously. Delay is clearly our enemy in relation to such important projects as Rideau Centre.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak this afternoon on Bill C-91, an act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. The bill is very small, some four pages, so there is no excuse whatsoever for members not to have had the time to read it. However, after doing so I could not help but be appalled at the horrendous power which this bill seeks to transfer to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove). For example, in Clause 3 we see these words:

"(3) The Minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to

(a) properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction; or

What a colossal fraud this bill hopes to perpetrate on the people of Canada! The government is now seeking authority to sell or lease any property, whether or not the government owns it and whether or not it is required for public purposes. This action reminds me of my air cadet training days when one of the men in our squadron had difficulty in landing without damaging the wheels or the tips of the airplane. On being reprimanded by our instructor, he replied, "Thank you, sir, but I am not worried. I do not own it and I am not going to buy it." That is about the way it is with this government in this bill. We do not own the property, we are not going to buy it, but we are going to claim the right to sell it.

My own concern is not so much with sales and lease-backs per se, but rather with the blanket authority granted in this bill to sell any land. It has already been said this afternoon what a horror story scenario that is. While the possibility of selling all the government property and any private property they fancy to foreign investors and then renting it back is highly unlikely to occur, in my opinion there still remains the need for parliamentary control. Unfortunately, this bill, if passed as it stands, is completely devoid of any parliamentary control. I say this because in Clause 2 it says that Section 39 of the act is replaced and the following substituted:

Notwithstanding anything in this act or in any other act, any public work may be sold or leased, under the authority of the governor in council, and the proceeds of such sale or lease shall be accounted for as public moneys; but such public work shall be so sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement, unless it is otherwise authorized by the governor in council."

I want this House and the people of Canada to know that in one brief paragraph the words "governor in council" are repeated not once but twice. There is no mention in what I just read of the Parliament of Canada. Oh, no, it is simply the governor in council. I submit to you, sir, that this is simply too much power to place in the hands of one minister of any government. But then orders in council are, of course, the golden rule of this Liberal regime. For those Canadians not familiar with the term, an order in council is a device used by cabinet to approve certain regulations without subjecting the rule changes and new appointments to public debate. This device, if used properly and responsibly, can make the operations of government much more efficient. However, if it is used irresponsibly, the order in council method of government, I submit, can wreak havoc on parliamentary democracy. Three recent examples of improper orders in council usage are the VIA Rail cutbacks, the conversion to the metric system of measurement and the emergency planning order. These orders in council, unilateral government actions, have caused substantial public resentment and even anger. But since they were implemented through order in council, neither the public nor Members of Parliament had any recourse. I submit this is most important. People have no way of making their case at a public hearing or through parliamentary debate. The only way the government actions can be challenged is through the courts.

In my opinion, Canadians did not vote for a government that requires them, if they wish their views heard, to sue that government in a court of law. This would not be necessary if this government had any respect whatever for parliament and its members who are the people's representatives. However, this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues have shown and are still showing a contempt for Parliament through the excessive use of orders in council. This has already been referred to this afternoon. I checked on this matter and I found that in the years under the present right hon. Prime Minister's administration, there were 39,048 orders in council passed. Just let me repeat that number, 39,048 orders in council, which is an average of 3,254 a year.

I say to the people in Canada, through you, sir, that Canadians should be wary of any government that abuses Parliament by misusing the order in council. But then we must remember that it was the present Prime Minister who held this entire institution up to ridicule when he said, referring to members of the opposition, "When they are 50 yards from Parliament Hill, they are no longer hon. members; they are just nobodies." I remind the Prime Minister of the words, "If you want to be respected, you must show respect." Unfortunately, his fuddle-duddle statements and his pirouettes in high places over the years would indicate that respect for anything is not his long suit.

And speaking of arbitrary rulings, I am pleased to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in his seat this afternoon, I received only yesterday another disheartening piece of news from the Department of Transport. It indicated that 136.60 miles of CNR tracks will not be used after August 1 to provide service between Liverpool and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Obviously, no consideration has been given by this government to the enterprises and employment opportunities of the citizens along the south shore of Nova Scotia who will be affected by this retrograde, reprehensible action, and I must protest the destruction of the CNR service in my riding in the loudest possible voice. However, we have no recourse. It is an action that has been taken by the Canadian Transport Commission, obviously with the agreement of the minister. This government cares only about the people of Nova Scotia when their members are down there seeking votes. But now, picture if you will, an entire area from Liverpool, Queen's County, to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia with absolutely no rail service. This is frightening. For the life of me I cannot understand what those people and the industries affected will do. In that particular area there is a tremendous amount of heavy industry which requires the use of flat cars and the CNR service.

Let me return to the bill. As I read it, I cannot help but note that it will provide the government with authority to perform works on property not even owned by the government. What does this power do to the rights of private citizens? Is there any haven left where the average Canadian can stand and say, "Though a large part of my earnings and savings have been taxed away by this government, at least my home and this land upon which I stand is mine"? The answer is it is not any more, Mr. Speaker, not if this bill is passed. If you doubt that statement, I will put on the record the explanatory note covering Clause 1 of the bill, which reads:

This amendment would empower the Minister of Public Works to be involved with properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction, and also with properties not belonging to Canada.

Many Canadians own property which, I submit, does not belong to the Government of Canada. As to the passing of this bill, their title to land will be as fragile as the fog which sometimes surrounds my native province of Nova Scotia. Speaking of Nova Scotia, where is the Minister of Public Works? I note that, unfortunately, he has had to leave.

Mr. Cullen: He left temporarily.

Mr. Smith: He is lucky.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member over there says he is lucky, Mr. Speaker. I suppose it is a joke. He is laughing, sitting in his seat. Is it a joke that two years ago this September a fire destroyed a wharf in Riverport, Nova Scotia, the only place where the big fishing fleet can land its fish? This government has been dilatory in taking any action to rebuild it. That is a joke to that member over there. It is a joke to all the Liberals over there because they have taken absolutely no action to make the repairs and to recognize the needs of those people. That is a joke to them.

Mr. Smith: Keep your blood pressure down.

Mr. Crouse: My blood pressure is fine and it is under control. But I tell the hon. member not to sit there and make interjections from his seat when I am speaking. I do not even interrupt him, and I ask him not to interrupt me at any time because I will not tolerate it.

Mr. Cosgrove: What about your party?

Mr. Crouse: I do not interrupt any member when he is speaking. My record stands for 25 years. I am glad the Minister of Public Works has come back because I want to ask him, since he is responsible, when he is going to take action to build a federal public building in the town of Bridgewater, a building that was promised by the Hon. George McIlraith in 1968. He is now a senator, but he promised that building when he was minister of public works in this House.

Mr. Kelly: Spend, spend, spend.

Mr. Crouse: He promised that to me in writing in 1968. We on the south shore know the meaning of Liberal eternity. I notice the hon. member on the other side is enjoying himself and he is interjecting again. I say to him, do not do it. It is not acceptable in the House of Commons. The hon. member should learn some gentlemanly tactics and not be so rude. I am sorry, I will not name him but he knows very well to whom I refer.

I hope the Minister of Public Works will take my request seriously and take some action on a promise that has been delayed for 14 years. We have had no action for 14 years.

Generally, the powers of the federal government relating to the ownership of property are controlled by the heads of powers set forth in Section 91 of the constitution act of 1867, formerly known as the British North America Act. For example, the federal government, in the exercise of its power over navigation and shipping, something with which I am quite familiar, having operated a fleet of three deep-sea ships for 20 years. Under Section 91(10) could expropriate property in order to permit the erection of works for navigational purposes. It would seem to me that any federal ownership of land would have to be justified in relation to some head of federal power. If, therefore, the federal power to deal with land is limited to the subject headings in Section 91 of the constitution act of 1867, then the powers which are to be exercised under Clause 1 of Bill C-91 should also be limited by the subject headings of Section 91. However, as it is arguable that there may be a general federal land holding power unrelated to any of the subject headings in Section 91, it is possible that under this section the federal government would attempt to find the authority to make expenditures outside of the field of federal power, and by so doing possibly encroach on the provincial land-holding powers.

The powers given to the minister under Clause 1 seem to have no set criteria for their exercise. The decision of the minister is an arbitrary one and could have either a positive or negative effect upon properties not belonging to Canada. Because of the fact that it is a discretionary power, the property owner who would be the recipient of the services or work has no opportunity at all to contest the exercise of this power, and he has no forum in which to register a grievance. Furthermore, as no hearing is required, no complaint of the denial of natural justice can be made. This would seem to place a severe limitation upon the rights of the private property owner. His right of ownership could be interfered with in a negative fashion by the minister, and the owner has no recourse to a hearing under the amendments in question. This is considerably different from the case of the Crown interfering with ownership rights under the Expropriation Act. Under the Expropriation Act a public hearing may be requested by any person objecting to the intended expropriation, and the minister is under an obligation to order a hearing into the nature of the objection.

The implementation of this clause of Bill C-91 is an attempt—I do not want to impute motives—to circumvent the long proceedings required under the Expropriation Act, so that the minister may do as he wishes with a piece of property which is privately owned, without the necessity of complying with the provisions of the Expropriation Act. It is also important to consider whether the newly-enacted Charter of Rights and Freedoms would have any effect upon this proposed legislation. There is nothing specific in the charter about the right to own property. However, Section 26 reads:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada.

If it is interpreted that the right to own property is a right which existed in Canada at the time of the adoption of the charter, I suppose it could be argued, therefore, that that right is protected.

The problem which the non-inclusion of property rights in the charter creates is that anyone suffering as a result of the infringement of these rights would not have the opportunity to utilize the enforcement section, Section 24 of the charter, or have the benefit of the courts interpreting the new law in accordance with Section 1 of the charter, which reads as follows:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

If property rights were specifically set out in the charter, the courts would then have to consider whether Clause 1 of Bill C-91, which gives the minister unlimited discretionary authority, is a reasonable limitation upon the right to hold property. At present, the only way in which property can be disposed of under the Public Works Act or under the Public Lands Grants Act is for the governor in council to declare that the public work or the public land is no longer required for public purposes. There are no criteria, as far as I can determine, as to how the determination will be made and under what circumstances property which is still required for public purposes will be disposed of.

Again, this is in direct contrast to the lengthy justification procedure to which the federal government is subjected if it desires to expropriate property for public purposes. The two major methods by which the government acquires property are through outright purchase and through expropriation. It seems unbelievable that the government should have to prove the necessity of acquisition for a public purpose after having made the acquisition through expropriation and then be entitled to dispose of the property, even though it may still be needed for public purposes, simply through a ministerial order.

On the information which is available to me and to the House at the present time, it is extremely difficult to determine the purpose of this particular bill. From what I have already stated, it is obvious that there are many matters contained in it which really deserve very, very close scrutiny. As I have stated, Clause 1 could be viewed as an invasion of provincial powers in relation to property and civil rights. There is absolutely no criterion in the exercise of the power contained in Clause 1 of the bill. Under this clause the minister can act in a total arbitrary fashion, as he is exercising a highly questionable discretionary power and there is no forum provided for the hearing of any objections which are made to the exercise of that power. If there is to be a forum in which a person aggrieved by the exercise of power as contained in either Clause 2 or Clause 3 of the bill may be heard, it would seem that the final authority for the exercise of that power should at least be given to Parliament. The people's representatives should have some say. It should not be done by order in council.

Perhaps the problems related to the bill could best be resolved by the establishment of a standing committee which could then examine and make recommendations concerning the exercise of power by the minister under the act. When Canadians realize the power the government is seeking through the passage of the bill, I personally feel certain that any confidence they may have left in Canada after the disastrous effects of the National Energy Program and FIRA will be wholly and totally shattered. Let us face it—the recession which led to the present depression has been triggered and intensified by a succession of federal measures and, to a lesser extent, by the provincial responses they evoked. Of course the breaking point came with the National Energy Program. When I hear the soothsayers of government attribute the present depression to the collective downturn of the business cycle in the developed countries of the world or, as we hear day in and day out, attribute it to high United States interest rates, I ask why they ignore the dominant role of energy among our natural resources.

Before the government brought in its National Energy Program, the strongly rising volume of investment in gas and oil exploration and development had been driving our whole economy forward. Every dollar invested by the petroleum industry multiplied two or three times through the economy in purchase of equipment and of services. Since the National Energy Program, the industry's investment in Canada has been drastically reduced by 30 per cent or 40 per cent through 1981 and by at least that much again this year. These are now unrecoverable funds which have either been committed outside Canada or absorbed by government.

For the better part of the last ten years the government has been reaching out to capture key elements in our economy and to transform them into Crown corporations for implementing its vision of what I call the "corporate state", a country in which political authority is ensured by control over investment and production. Of course in another way this is what is happening under Bill C-91. It is putting further power and control into the hands of a limited number of people—the executive and, in this instance, the Minister of Public Works.

If one wants to see an example of the corporate state toward which the government is working, one has only to look back to Mussolini's Italy of the late 1920s and 1930s. I should not have to remind the House of what happened to the individual rights and freedoms of those unfortunate people, but today we can consider what the confiscatory policies of government have so far cost us in forfeited economic growth. In the 25 years until 1971 Canada had an average annual real growth in gross national product of 5 per cent. We were the envy of all western nations, with the possible exception of West Germany and Japan which at that time were rebuilding their economies. Canadian growth during those 25 years was achieved with an inflation rate measured by the consumer price index of an average 3.3 per cent per year. Unemployment, in spite of four recessions, averaged only about 4.3 per cent.

In the 1970s, as the numbed and befuddled hands of government extended deeper into our economy, average annual growth began to decline. During the last five years real growth has averaged only 2 per cent. As growth has slowed, inflation and its shipmate—a term we use in Nova Scotia—unemployment, has increased. In the last five years inflation averaged 10 per cent. It reached 12.5 per cent in 1981.

In the last five years unemployment averaged something like 8 per cent. Today it stands at around 9 per cent, with approximately 1¼ million Canadians unemployed. The number is rising daily.

Many explanations for Canada's fading economic performance were given throughout the 1970s. The most persuasive was that the economy, having passed through its development phase, has now reached maturity and that policy emphasis should be put on redistribution of wealth rather than on creation of new wealth. In other words, instead of making more pies this government has been busy cutting the pie we have in ever smaller pieces.

Some credence was given to this concept by the impact of rising oil prices and the desperate vision of a world rapidly exhausting its oil reserves. What was completely ignored, at least by this government, was the greatly enhanced economic value such a vision imparted to Canada's own resources of oil and gas. In fact, growth was slowed by other clearly recognizable and acceptable developments. One of these was the growing rift in confederation and the enforced reduction of first private and then government investment in an effort to bridge them. In my opinion, if investment had been free to flow to where it would have attained the maximum return, the benefits to all parts of the country could have been greater than the costs since incurred by present government policy. The government has not learned. It still brings in bills such as the ones we are debating today. As I say, these are bills which seek even more power. Instead of realizing that centralization, confiscation, controls and bills such as C-91 are destroying confidence in our economy, our Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) daily blames high American interest rates for Canada's depression. I sometimes sit here and wonder if the Minister of Finance actually believes what he is saying, or are his statements comparable to those he made in the last election when he said, as he campaigned throughout Nova Scotia, "Vote Liberal. You will not have to pay the Tory 18 cents per gallon on gasoline." Well, I suppose this was the Liberal way of telling the truth. What he really meant was that the 18 cents which we proposed in the Crosbie budget was too little. What he really meant to say was, "Vote for us and once we get back in power we will lay it to you to the tune of 75 cents a gallon or more." That is what we are paying today. That is the Liberal way of deceit and deception in order to get back into power.

Just for the record, Canadian interest rates had stopped well short of the high American rates during the early changes in American policy. But that was before the National Energy Program diverted foreign investment away from Canada and domestic investment fled this country.

The introduction of the National Energy Program in the budget of 1980, followed by the fuddle-duddle method of closing loopholes in the budget of 1981, did more than simply cause investment to flee from Canada. It strengthened this government's control over the uses to which any remaining investment funds could be applied.

However, none of this was mentioned by the Minister of Finance when he was raking the Reagan administration's economic policies over the coals when he addressed the Conference Board in New York. Like the mother watching her son in the army marching past, "everyone seems to be out of step but my Allan." It was quite all right for our Minister of Finance to go down across the border and raise Cain and condemn the Americans, but he was incensed when an American diplomat tried to put his views on the record as they applied to Canada's economy. It is all right for us to go down there but we do not want to have them coming up here to say how we should run our country. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

In the opinion of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the rest of the Liberal cabinet, they are right to pursue the policies of a corporate socialist state but, in their view, the rest of the world is entirely wrong if it does not try to help.

The emerging of the American economy from its recessions used to be the springboard for Canada's recovery. The United States is Canada's best market for our resources. Strengthening demand in the United States translates into new employment opportunities for our forest, mining and fishing industries whose products still constitute the largest proportion of our exports. However, I submit that strengthening American demands will not be enough this time to restore growth in our Canadian economy. What is needed are infusions of new capital in order to provide for new plant expansions, new machinery and new ships which are the sinews of development. It is something with which our people can work, and that is what is required.

Where will this capital come from? It certainly will not come from Canadian corporations. Those which can still afford to do so are diverting their capital into the United States. Others cannot divert their capital because they no longer have any reserves. Taxes and inflation have taken too heavy a toll.

Every day this government is looking to the United States recovery to initiate our own. The government forgets that the channels through which renewed American growth are diverted into Canada have since been blocked by the Foreign Investment Review Act and by new ownership provisions. More than anything else, this depression in Canada was brought on by the constant and continuing extension of federal intervention by this government in the Canadian economy. The depression is now becoming the justification for still more intervention, still more intrusions and still more involvement by the government under terms such as those we see before us today in Bill C-91.

In conclusion, I cannot support this bill for the reasons I have given. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that neither can my colleagues support it. At this stage I can only express the hope that my views will be given serious consideration and that this government will give serious consideration to withdrawing this particular bill, because if it is implemented it could be one of the final blows to one of our basic freedoms, namely the inalienable right to all Canadians to own property in this country.

May I call it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is obviously in the hands of the House. If it is the intent of the House to call it four o'clock, we should ascertain whether the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) is calling it four o'clock with the intention of continuing his remarks.

Mr. Crouse: No, Mr. Speaker, I have finished my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps the Chair could extend the courtesy to the hon. member whom I see rising of recognizing him. Perhaps if I recognized the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), that will be indicative of the fact that he will have the floor on the next occasion.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

SUGGESTED IMPLEMENTATION OF HALL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

The House resumed from May 2, 1980, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of implementing the Hall commission report, including major recommendations, to increase use of ports at Churchill and Prince Rupert, guarantee the Crow rate to the farmer, extend the Crow rate to the processed equivalent of raw materials, pay the railways directly for their losses, make the railways fix up their tracks and buy hopper cars, and give the Canadian Wheat Board more power to control grain movement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) had the floor, but since he is not present, the Chair will look to such other hon. members who wish to speak.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the debate being resumed today from May 2, 1980, calls upon the government to consider the advisability of implementing the Hall commission report, including major recommendations, to increase use of ports at Churchill and Prince Rupert, guarantee the Crow rate to the farmer, extend the Crow rate to the processed equivalent of raw materials, pay the railways directly for their losses, make the railways fix up their tracks and buy hopper cars, and give the Canadian Wheat Board more power to control grain movement.

As I said, the debate was begun more than two years ago. It is a simple motion calling on the government to implement the findings of the Hall report. As hon. members will recall, that report was written after one of the most extensive reviews of the grain-handling and transportation system in western Canada. It was prepared by former chief justice Emmett Hall, a man who has the respect and trust of Canadians across this country. This study more than any other previous study managed to tap the real needs and aspirations of users of the transportation and grain-handling system in western Canada. His recommendations are the most straightforward and realistic of any contained in the many reports and studies done before and since.

In reviewing what he said and what has gone on in the past few years, we note, as stated at the beginning of the motion, that some dredging has been carried out in the Port of Churchill. CNR tell us that within the next year the track will be upgraded to 100 pounds per foot rail. The problem of permafrost, which has always been a problem with the line to Churchill, is being studied. They think they may have some solutions and they propose to implement them within the next year or two.

In the interval since this debate began, there have been some developments at Prince Rupert. A site is being prepared at Ridley Island. We are presently awaiting the final decision of the consortium of grain companies which is proposing to add terminal space at that site. The Hall report recommended increasing the capacity at Prince Rupert to six million bushels of storage space so that it could become the second large grain port on the west coast.

The grain port at Prince Rupert is accessible throughout the year. It is fairly easy to get to that port which is at the end of the railway line. The mountain passes there have fewer snow slides. The weather permits year-round rail traffic service into Prince Rupert.

Some moves have been made with regard to building a tunnel through the Rogers Pass. Here is where we begin to see the difference between what Hall proposed and what this party supports and the approach that this government and the Tories before them appear to be taking.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) pretends that the New Democratic Party is reactionary when it comes to transportation and grain movement in western Canada. I want to compare what he is proposing and now doing with what we propose, and the listener can decide which is reactionary and which is forward thinking.

We agree with Hall that an electrification process should be carried out on 10,000 miles of mainline trackage in western Canada, particularly through the mountains. There are a number of reasons for this. We are in an era of fuel shortages. Petroleum fuel is in short supply. Electricity could be generated from the waters in the mountains of British Columbia. The surplus there could be used to power trains.

The advantages of electric trains for mountain transportation are fairly numerous. The mode of power would be lighter. It would reduce the amount of energy required to move a unit up a grade. The generators and fuel would not be part of the engine and the train unit. The fuel is water or other forms of generating electricity, and the generator would be located elsewhere. The electricity is transferred to motors on what are now diesel units.

Another reason for using electric power, especially in mountain work, is that the unit travelling through the passes would be lighter. In places where they have been used, it has been proved that the speed increases by up to 50 per cent. Instead of a unit travelling at 20 miles an hour through a mountain pass, an electric unit could travel at 30 miles an hour.

By using electricity, it would be possible to gain a benefit on the downgrade. The force of the train going down the grade could be recycled through the drive motors of the engine. Reversing an electric motor makes it into a generator. It could be used to pump power back into the system to be used when going uphill. Approximately 40 per cent of the power requirement could be recovered by that method and result in further savings.

There is maybe an even more important benefit when it comes to the digging of long tunnels through mountain passes, something that we are now in the process of doing. The use of electric trains would do away with the problem of ventilating diesel fumes. A tunnel nine, ten or 12 miles long requires a very expensive ventilating system. This is necessary for the survival of the train crew. The system being put in the Rogers Pass requires a large ventilator stack. The most logical place for that stack cuts off the view of Rogers Pass from the highway. A stack will be in the way.

This ventilating system will require a continuously operating 11,000 horsepower fan, which will require more power than is required to move a train through that tunnel. In order to ventilate the tunnel, it will require a great amount of energy. This could have been avoided by a more sensible, forward, modern approach of electrifying the trains on the mainline through the mountain passes.

Instead of taking a progressive, modernistic kind of approach, the government has opted for a neo-capitalist approach. It intends to go back to the old days, making the current technology limp along for a few more years.

The railways have been insisting on a cost formula which Hall found quite unacceptable. They have been insisting on a recovery of costs which will give them many times the current Crow rate, and in some cases the figures which have been generated would even exceed the current so-called competitive rate.

As Hall said in his report, we are also saying that any public funds pumped into the railways should be accounted for as part of the public contribution. That seems to be fairly straightforward and to make ultimate common sense, but that is not the route the department and the government seem to be following when they put forward their cost survey and cost formula.

We note that branch line rehabilitation has continued. The purchase of hopper cars by provincial governments, farmers and the federal government has continued, and we note with some pleasure that the switch to hopper cars will increase rail capacity by about 40 per cent. The limiting factor on current trains is not the amount of weight transferred but, more properly, the number of cars being pulled. If we can put 40 per cent more grain or any other commodity on a car, we are increasing the total capacity of the train. The move to hopper cars and the enhanced ability of branch lines to handle those hopper cars will increase grain hauling capacity by 40 per cent. We are saying that on top of that we could add another 50 per cent to the rate of rail movement by electrifying the trains.

We note that there has been a lot of delay in the progress of implementing the Hall recommendations. The government has chosen not to implement a subsidy program so that the railways can cover the so-called losses they are encountering. There has not been a policy to consider as equity financing the public funds which have gone to the railways. They are always considered by the railways as just gifts from the government. The people of Canada have contributed money to the railways to enable them to build up their hopper car fleets, to improve their locomotives a number of years ago, to rebuild branch lines, to build tunnels through the mountains and to upgrade the track in that area of the country. At no time have the railways considered that as equity financing, but we think that would make very good sense. We think it is a progressive idea for those government funds to be considered as equity financing so that when dividends are declared, those funds become part of company dividends, and the country receives financial benefits. In addition, the country would have more influence on the boards of directors of the railways, particularly the CPR, of which we have little control now.

In spite of the moves which have been made on the Crow rate over the past winter and the implementation and setting up of the Gilson inquiry—I suppose we could call it a process—and in spite of the leaks which have come out of that process which indicate that there will probably be a very vast change in the rate structure farmers in western Canada will have, if we can believe the news reports which came out of Saskatoon yesterday, implementation of the Hall report would still be a progressive move for Canada's transportation and grain handling system.

In line with the motion presented by my friend, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), we say that Churchill upgrading should continue, that the storage capacity of Prince Rupert should be upgraded to six million bushels and that an increase in output by a multiplier of two to three should continue. We say that the branch line upgrading program should continue to be part of the system and that the hopper car fleet should be brought to its full complement of required cars. That process should be completed within the next three years if we continue to build 1,200 to 1,400 cars per year.

We also think that the Hall recommendation of developing the northern section of the railway system, particularly in northern Alberta and British Columbia, should go ahead. We particularly like the idea of electrification and the continuation of financing of the project, but on an equity basis so that the people of Canada who have done the financing will have some ultimate control over what happens to that financing.

As far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned, the main recommendation of the Hall report was to retain the Crow rate as it is. There will be a shortfall after the modernization of the railways is complete, but we must remember that modernization will make possible a 40 per cent increase in carrying capacity. Had the move to electrification been implemented, it would have increased by 50 per cent the volume of traffic moving through the mountains. The increase in efficiency would have been enormous had all of the recommendations of the Hall report been carried out.

Together with public financing, the increased efficiency which would have resulted had the recommendations in the Hall report been carried out would pretty well have covered the actual costs of moving grain. Instead, the government chose to go the old route, to stick with current technology and current economic thinking, which is simply to pass the costs on to the consumer, and to pay no attention to increased efficiency and reduced cost but, instead, to add the costs on to the charges the producer must pay. We think that is unfortunate. We still say it is not too late. The government still has time to implement the Hall report. Today we call on the government again to do so. We ask that the vote be taken immediately and that this motion be accepted by the House.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is a very wide-ranging one which covers a number of issues concerning grain transportation and is important not just to western members but to all Canadians who are concerned about the economy in general. The motion also has implications for the Ontario manufacturing sector.

This particular motion was debated just over two years ago, and what I intend to do today is to demonstrate that some of the recommendations in that motion have already been acted upon.

In the past two years record volumes of grain have been moving to export, and this crop year gives every indication of being the best yet. Unfortunately, international prices are down, but volumes are currently running significantly higher than at any time in the past. In recent weeks record unloads of cars have been achieved on the west coast. This is even more impressive, given that most cars now are the larger, more efficient hopper cars. Currently, export and domestic grain clearances from our principal ports are about 1.5 million tonnes above last year's levels. This is good news for the western farmer but also for the Canadian economy in general. So is the recent announcement by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat board of the largest long-term agreement for wheat sales ever entered into. This is with the People's Republic of China, and it is valued at over $2.25 billion at today's prices over the next three years. Some of these results are being achieved through the collaboration of all participants in the grain transporting and handling system. I am pleased to say that this spirit of co-operation is also being reflected in meetings that have been taking place in Winnipeg during the past several weeks on the Crowsnest Pass rate. It appears that progress is being made toward reaching an acceptable solution of the long-standing and vexing problem of the statutory rates. This will not be easy, but the framework in which the meetings are proceeding offers the potential for protecting the interests of producers and it also provides sufficient flexibility to reach a broad agreement.

There has been a lot of talk about guarantees at these meetings and there has been some criticism that the guarantees being offered favour the railways but not the producers. It may be useful, therefore, to look at those guarantees.

The government is prepared to offer the following guarantees to the producer. First, an expenditure of $3.2 billion related to the movement of grain for the four-year period 1982-86; second, a minimum $700 million branch line rehabilitation program begun in 1977 and continuing to 1986; third, a guaranteed rail line network of over 15,800 miles until the year 2,000; fourth, a legislated commitment to pay annually from 1986-87 an amount equal to the 1981-82 railway revenue shortfall for moving grain or about $600 million; fifth, to provide 11,280 Government of Canada hopper cars for the movement of grain and grain products; sixth, a basis in legislation for determining future rate increases; seventh, no variable rates unless sought and accepted in negotiations by producer representatives; eighth, specific railway performance and service guarantees negotiated by producer representatives related to grain transportation; and, finally, specific railway commitments related to investment programs to be undertaken to guarantee sufficient capacity to move grain to market.

This is a most impressive commitment and it clearly demonstrates that the government not only cares about the interests of the western producer but is prepared to make real efforts to ensure that western Canada, and the nation as a whole, will have an efficient rail transportation system appropriate to its needs, and especially the very specific needs of getting grain to the coast.

The announcement made on February 8, 1982, in Winnipeg by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) outlined a number of areas which this committee is charged with examining, including the future responsibility for paying grain transportation costs, the manner in which the government will spend its own contribution either to the railways or to the producers, the kinds of performance guarantees that should be sought from the railways and how they should be monitored, and the means whereby the economic distortions within the agricultural sector stemming from the statutory rates can be reduced.

The consultations are reaching a critical stage and I know that all members of the House will wish those involved well as they move toward achieving a just solution.

By implication the motion also referred to the branch line rehabilitation program insofar as the wording of the motion asks the government to "make the railways fix up their tracks". One of the most significant grain transportation programs is the branch line rehabilitation program. This ten-year program began in 1977-78 with a $30 million expenditure followed by allocations of $70 million per year until 1981. One of the concerns expressed at the time was that the work program only covered one year at a time and that this made it difficult to do sufficient planning.

Last year a multi-year work program was developed by departmental officials in consultation with the elevator companies and the railways. This should greatly facilitate advance ordering and preparation by the railways of ballast, ties, rail and other materials.

Last August the Minister of Transport announced that the government was prepared to enter into a three-year program of branch line rehabilitation work. Under this program the government has spent or will spend $77 million in 1981-82, $84.7 million in 1982-83 and $93.2 million in 1983-84.

The standard and quality of the rehabilitation work undertaken by the railways is being monitored in a number of ways. Under the direction of the Canadian Transport Commission, independent engineering consultants were engaged to review and inspect the work completed to 1980. The 1981 work program was also inspected and assessed under the guidance of the Canadian Transport Commission using both in-house and contracted engineering sources. The Department of Transport recently received a report it had commissioned from the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport of Queen's University. This study provides an assessment of operating and construction standards for the rehabilitation program. It found that the operating and construction specifications are for the most part appropriate for the lines involved but should be applied flexibly to account for local variations. This is in line with the findings of the CTC-engaged consultants and confirms that the work is being carried out to appropriate standards for the moneys involved.

In addition, a firm of auditors was engaged to carry out a comprehensive audit of the expenditures incurred under the first three agreements. This is now in the final completion stages.

When the present agreement terminates at the end of 1983-84, some 3,780 miles of line will have been worked on, of which 1,840 miles should be fully rehabilitated out of a total of 5,675 miles currently eligible under this program.

The motion also asks the government to buy hopper cars, and the hon. member who spoke ahead of me also referred to hopper cars. The government certainly supports this idea. During the seventies the Government of Canada purchased 8,000 hopper cars and it has a long-term lease on an additional 2,000 cars. These investments reflect the government's ongoing commitment to ensure that sufficient rolling stock is available to meet our growing export demands.

With the addition of 2,000 Canadian Wheat Board cars and 1,000 cars each provided by Alberta and Saskatchewan, there was an adequate supply of cars to meet requirements. However, with the growing volume of exports, and with normal wear and tear and aging, additional hopper cars will be required in the future. The office of the grain transportation co-ordinator assessed the need for additional hopper cars, and advised that an additional 1,280 cars should be purchased this year. These orders will be useful to the western grain producer, but will also give a needed boost to the car manufacturing industry in eastern Canada. It is expected that this order will create 2,250 jobs.

Another issue addressed during the past two years was that of abandoned railway rights of way. In 1977 the then Minister of Transport and the railways entered into a gifting agreement which transferred to the Crown the rights of way following the abandonment to that time of certain prairie branch lines. There are about 26,500 acres of land covered by the gifting agreement. In August, 1981, the Minister of Transport signed agreements with the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba transferring land to those provinces. Prior to the recent election in Saskatchewan an agreement appeared near, and one must hope that such an agreement could be signed with the new provincial government in the near future.

There was reference, Mr. Speaker, to the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert in the motion before us. The motion calls for increased use of these ports. The government's commitment to the Port of Churchill has been well demonstrated. Capital expenditure commitments of $20 million made for port development at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in 1973 have been fulfilled through two Crown corporations, the National Harbours Board and the Northern Transportation Company Limited. Grain branch line subsidies paid on the Churchill line between 1971 and 1980 amounted to $11.75 million. By the end of this railway construction season, approximately $21 million will have been spent on the CNR-Herchmer subdivision with a further $10 million committed to 1983 under the branch line rehabilitation program. CN is now determining the feasibility and costs of building the rail line to carry fully laden hopper cars, following completion of research into the particular problem of supporting a railway over discontinuous permafrost.

In utilizing the grain terminal in the Port of Churchill the Canadian Wheat Board is cognizant of its responsibility to producers to export grain in the most economic way possible. Exports through Churchill during its short shipping season present particular problems in grain assembly. The preference of the board's customers for type of grain and port of loading has to be respected in what is now a highly competitive world grain market. In recent years, with the exception of 1980, Chuchill has handled some 500,000 tonnes of grain annually. The Canadian Wheat Board's over-all export target for 1981-82 is 26 million tonnes, increasing to 30 million by 1985. Churchill should therefore at least hold its traditional grain tonnage. Every effort has been made to seek assurances from the Canadian Wheat Board's producer-elected advisory committee for the continuous support of Churchill through the export of grain. It appears essential, however, that other traded commodities should be handled through Churchill if the port is to become viable. Prairie provincial governments have been asked to encourage the movement of any traffic under their control through the port, for example, Saskatchewan potash and Alberta sulphur.

Turning to Prince Rupert, Ridley Island in the Port of Prince Rupert is being developed as a major ocean bulk commodity port, including a grain terminal. Three of four construction contracts let to date are completed. They were for waste disposal site containment dikes, a rail embankment test fill, and site clearing. The contract for site grading and rail embankments was awarded in August, 1981, and is scheduled to be completed by February, 1983. British Columbia and the Government of Canada, through DREE, are cost-sharing the construction of an access road scheduled for completion in June, 1982. Design of other infrastructure is being done by the National Harbours Board whose financial involvement in site development for the grain terminal is estimated at $37.3 million. The consortium of grain companies which will build and operate the terminal is now evaluating the construction contract bid.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, since this motion was last debated two years ago great progress has been made in the development and improvement of the grain transportation and handling system. The Government of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board, the railways, elevator companies, grain handlers and producers together have performed extremely well over the past two years in producing, transporting and marketing Canadian grain. With the promise of higher prices the future looks bright indeed.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important debate and for that reason I would like to take this opportunity to refresh the memory of the House by reading the motion.

Mr. Nickerson: You couldn't think of anything else to fill up the time with.

Mr. Wilson: You have 22 minutes.

Mr. Kelly: It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of implementing the Hall Commission Report, including major recommendations to increase use of ports at Churchill and Prince Rupert, guarantee the Crow rate for the farmer, extend the Crow rate to the processed equivalent of raw materials, pay the railways directly for their losses, make the railways fix up their tracks and buy hopper cars, and give the Canadian Wheat Board more power to control grain movement.

Mr. Nickerson: Now read it in French.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, this omnibus motion has several interpretations. It could apply specifically to the Hall recommendation relating to the Crow, or it could apply to all the recommendations of the Hall commission. Let me assume the former for the purposes of this debate.

• (1640)

As you undoubtedly know, the Hall report has very little to say on the statutory rates: there is just over a page, found on pages 336 to 337 in Chapter 10, and four lines in summary on page 545. With such a small coverage, the actual conclusion is not clear. On page 336 of the report, it reads:

> Regardless of what rate may be set for the transport of grain to export position that rate must be statutory not variable.

There is nothing in the February 8 announcement that would contradict this, although it is not clear if the whole interpretation of the term "variable rate" is the same as is used on the prairies today. I am sure the House could use the guidance of hon. members opposite to help us clear up that misinterpretation or differences of interpretation. On page 336, we find the following:

> How the difference between the new rate and the Crowsnest Pass rate will be apportioned between the government and the producer is, of course, a matter for government decision. The Commission feels that the government must continue to subsidize the transportation of export grain and that the full cost, as deemed by the Commission on the Costs of Transporting Grain by Rail, must not be imposed on the producer.

Again there is nothing in the February 8 announcement that would contradict this. It should be noted that the commission implies that the producer should pay more than he is paying at the moment. The government does differ from the Hall commission in one important respect, however, in that it has opened a dialogue with the producer for determining how the additional costs will be apportioned rather than impose them without consultation.

I would hope that last statement of mine would give the lie to some of the claims we have heard in earlier debates this afternoon by members opposite who accuse this government of ignoring the interests or the wishes of the electorate. This is an excellent example of how this government tries its very best in all issues to seek the guidance of the public and in particular of the interests affected by the decision before that decision is made.

On page 337 of the Hall report, it states:

> The Commission recommends that the difference between the Crowsnest Rate and the rate determined through costs found by the commission on the costs of transporting grain by rail should be paid directly to the railway, and not to individual farmers.

Let me ask the hon. member who spoke this afternoon on behalf of the New Democratic Party and who asked us to implement the recommendations of the Hall report, is that a conclusion he would support? Is he asking us by implementing the Hall report, to pay the subsidy directly to the railway companies and not to the farmers? I would ask him, if this debate is reintroduced in the House at a later time, to clarify his position on what I think and others believe is the seminal issue of this re-evaluation and reshaping of the Crow.

If I may continue to quote the Hall report, it reads:

> The very idea of sending out cheques to 160,000 farmers is appalling.

Mr. Althouse: You have got it.

Mr. Kelly: The hon. member says that I have got it. I assume then that the money should be paid directly to the railway and not to the farmers.

Mr. Althouse: Let the farmers set the rate.

Mr. Kelly: I would point out that the west does not speak with one voice on that issue. There are others in the west who would disagree with the decision of the member opposite.

In an editorial which is found on the last page of the Alberta Report, written by Mr. Ted Byfield, who, I am sure, is as authentic a spokesman for the west as the hon. member opposite is, the author argues the very reverse. He argues that we should not be paying any money to the railways but we should be paying the money to the farmers. He believes that as adamantly as does the hon. member opposite believes in his argument. I quote now from the Alberta Report, dated May 10, 1982, as follows:

> —Mr. Pepin could choose instead to pay the subsidy, not to the farmers, but to the railroads, requiring them as a condition to leave the old Crow rate in place and thus continue working the ravages it has wrought in the past. This, of course, might appear politically attractive. But it would remain economically calamitous.

I have several other points on the Hall commission report. In an earlier section of the Hall report the statement quoted earlier from page 337 appears at variance with the suggestion that the producer should pay more to move his grain. Second, the question of payment to the railways or payment to individual farmers is again one that the government feels should be decided jointly with the producer, and this is another reason for establishing the Gilson process, the process I hope the hon. gentleman opposite will support whatever the conclusions might be.

We believe on this side of the House that potentially it is not a difficult task to send out cheques to a large number of people. It is not an option that we should disregard before the Gilson process has rendered its decision. We believe that because the Canadian Wheat Board already does this in the form of final payments, while family allowance cheques represent another good example of multiple mailings to many households.

Finally, the summary on page 545 of the Hall report indicated:

> The commission recommends:
> (1) The retention of the Crowsnest statutory rates.
> (2) That the difference between the statutory rate and the cost of transporting grain be paid directly to the railways.

This supports the statement on page 337 which, as has already been noted, is at odds with the earlier comments on the subject.

Depending upon the interpretation given to the Hall commission comments, it could be argued that the government is taking account of its recommendations in its policy on grain transportation as announced on February 8. The government has already stated clearly, precisely and firmly, that there will be statutory guarantees. The government will continue to subsidize grain transportation. Variable rates will not be allowed unless the producer agrees that they will not be prejudicial to his interest. Whether payment is made to the farmer or to the railways will be determined following consultation and negotiation with the parties involved.

Everyone in the House would agree that the comments of the Hall commission must be read taking into account the purpose of the commission. The terms of reference of the commission make it quite clear that the primary purpose of the inquiry was to examine the prairie railway branch line network and to make recommendations as to its disposal—either to be retained, abandoned or otherwise disposed of. The bulk of the commission report addressed this issue, and the Hon. Emmett Hall and the other four commissioners should be congratulated, having carried out such a comprehensive and exhaustive examination of the prairie rail network.

It has even been suggested that the comments on the statutory rates were in effect outside the terms of reference of the inquiry. This could be a somewhat harsh interpretation, although an examination of the terms of reference would suggest that the only part which could be used for comment on the statutory rate is No. 8 on page 11 which reads as follows:

> Without limiting the generality of the foregoing the commission may make supplementary recommendations which could relate to:
> (8) other matters which could relate to other matters relevant to the inquiry.

The Hall commission report contained a good chapter on economic development and pointed out the effect of a number of transportation distortions. It did not link these directly to the Crowsnest Pass rate, however. The conclusion and recommendations reached by the commission—and again they should be read in relation to its terms of reference —were by no means clear. For example, page 534 dealt with the flour milling industry as follows:

> —that the flour milling industry in Canada be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in western Canada.

Page 535 dealt with the rapeseed crushing industry as follows:

—that freight rates on rapeseed and its derivatives be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie rapeseed crushers.

—that inequities in freight rates, such as those that exist on the movement of rapeseed meal through Vancouver and Thunder Bay be eliminated.

It should be noted that the federal government has a program which partially assists rapeseed crushers in the amount of $3 million annually. Page 536 dealt with the livestock processing industry as follows:

The commission recommends that freight rates on livestock and meat be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie livestock producers and processors.

Unfortunately it is not clear what this means. There was no indication of the cost of this proposal, which could be extremely expensive and would not solve the root cause of the problem.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Skelly) would permit a question.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I would enjoy very much answering a question, but I ask the hon. member to wait until I have completed my remarks. If there is any time remaining, I will certainly do my best to answer his question, in the full knowledge that I have of this particular topic.

Finally, page 536 dealt with the malting industry as follows:

The commission recommends that:

—the malting industry be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in prairie Canada.

That is the point I wanted to make, and that is why I illustrated my argument exhaustively with these examples. Each one of the foregoing recommendations is related, to some degree, to the statutory rate. They are wide-ranging, and it is difficult to identify exactly what the Hall commission had in mind. In any case, I would suggest to hon. members that it would not be prudent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. If there is unanimous consent, the hon. member could complete his remarks.

Mr. Nickerson: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If there is not unanimous consent for the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) to continue his remarks, there may or may not be consent for the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) to pose his question. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I had only one more sentence before concluding, and once I have done so, I would gladly answer the question of my colleague, if I have the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Nickerson: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but perhaps, as he has noticed himself, he does not have unanimous consent of the House. I assume that he does not have unanimous consent to answer a question by the hon. member for Châteauguay.

Mr. Kelly: The hon. member opposite wants me to answer the question.

Mr. Nickerson: No, I do not. Question.

Mr. Kelly: The only way the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) can obtain an answer is if I am allowed to continue my remarks for the next minute or two. Would that be possible?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I appreciate the point of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre, but the fact of the matter is that he has at least twice been refused unanimous consent either to continue his remarks or to answer a question. The Chair is bound by the decision of the House in that regard, and I do not think it would be fair to put the question to the House again.

Mr. Kelly: Would the hon. member not relent?

Mr. Nickerson: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Should I put the question? The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to extend my congratulations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) for being willing to undertake an attack on this historic perennial weakness in our railway system. It seems to me that the minister is bringing an extreme illness in the system under control and is providing a rail service which will offer a moderate costing service to Canadians throughout the west, regardless of the commodity they produce.

I should like to carry on with my comments a good deal further, but I see the day has ended. When the motion comes back before the House, I should like an opportunity to develop my argument further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, May 25, at two o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1). Best wishes for a good weekend.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CONDEMNATION OF NAVAL EQUIPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Recently the Royal Canadian Naval Association held a convention at which the considered opinion of the delegates was that the equipment of the Canadian navy was nothing more than a joke. In view of this opinion, expressed by the 1,500 delegates to the convention, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House congratulate the Royal Canadian Naval Association for its forthright assessment of the Canadian navy, and further urge the Prime Minister to pay as much attention to the Canadian navy's need for ships as he does to his own need for ego tripping on the world stage.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL TO ESTABLISH CANAGREX CROWN CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Bill C-85 will establish a Crown corporation called Canagrex, and the present bill gives this corporation such broad powers that it could, subtly, take over all export business and monopolize same to the detriment of producers and the private sector that is doing a good job and which is capable of expanding to do anything necessary; therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House requests the Minister of Agriculture to withdraw the bill or alternatively to delete the clauses proposed in Section 14 and elsewhere in the bill which provide the opportunity for this corporation to become a complete monopoly in the export business.

Canada is a free enterprise country and free enterprise can do the job better than any Crown corporation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR CERTAIN LIBERAL MEMBERS TO JOIN NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Four months ago the first signs of the dissolution of the Liberal Party surfaced when ten Liberal MPs wrote an open letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) urging him to adopt new job-creation measures. Then another 15 MPs in a caucus economic development committee sharply criticized the government's economic policy. Now La Presse has revealed that the following Liberals have broken ranks: the hon. members for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), Gloucester (Mr. Breau), Laval (Mr. Roy), Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), and York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni). Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

That this House call on the above-named Liberal MPs to stand by their convictions and criticisms by joining the New Democratic Party in terminating the government's budget legislation and thereby terminating the government itself.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order

43. It is now a month since the all-party report on the Northern Canada Power Commission was tabled in this House. So far no response has been forthcoming from the government to the recommendations which would substantially reduce the horrendous cost of electricity in northern Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development immediately move to implement the recommendations contained in the sub-committee report on the Northern Canada Power Commission.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT INELIGIBILITY OF FRESHWATER FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is unjust that freshwater fishermen, who are obliged to pay into the unemployment insurance fund, cannot collect UIC benefits when unemployed. Thousands of freshwater fishermen are not only unable to collect UIC benefits, they are now unable to find work during the off season as a result of the government's total and complete mismanagement of the economy, which is causing severe unemployment across Canada and unbelievable hardship. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House be directed to remove immediately this discrimination against freshwater fishermen and amend the necessary section of the Unemployment Insurance Act so that freshwater fishermen who must contribute to the unemployment insurance fund may become eligible for UIC benefits when necessary.

ADVICE GIVEN BY MEMBER FOR GLOUCESTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the criticism of the Liberal government expressed by the member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), who was quoted in La Presse on the weekend as saying:

In defending our policy by relying on the international situation, we don't really impress many people.

—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to heed the advice of the member for Gloucester and stop blaming others for his own economic incompetence.

SUGGESTED EXPANSION OF RESERVE UNITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter relating to youth unemployment. Unemployment among youth aged 15 years to 24 years, currently running at 16.6 per cent seasonally adjusted, and actually at 18 per cent, is one of the most serious concerns for Canadian society today. This represents nearly one fifth of the nation's vibrant potential lying unnecessarily idle and unproductive. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the government institute a program, funded by the resulting saved unemployment benefit funds, to expand special summer armed forces reserves by at least an additional 25,000 recruits, thereby encouraging service to one's country and reducing unemployment in a sector that desires and requires productive employment.

REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY TWO LIBERAL MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the statements in La Presse this weekend by the Liberal hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should stay at his post for the moment as long as the economic storm continues and then should pass the mantle on to someone else, and also the criticism voiced by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Frith) that the country cannot endure another winter like the one we have just been through, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House urge the Prime Minister not to put us through another winter like the one just past, but to pass the mantle on to someone else quickly, and further that the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare live up to their statements by voting against the government's inadequate and destructive policies, or resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PRESSURE APPLIED BY LIBERAL MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, 17 Liberal members of Parliament met on May 18 with a sense of urgency to pressure the government into adopting a realistic interest rate policy for Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this group of Liberal backbenchers and other dissidents broaden their objectives to urge upon the government not only a realistic interest rate for Canada, but also a realistic transportation policy, a realistic energy policy, a realistic foreign policy, a realistic housing policy, a realistic economic policy, and a realistic social policy.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that media reports indicate that unemployed Canadians are still running into bureaucratic foul-ups under the unemployment insurance plan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House instructs the Minister of Employment and Immigration to speed up processing of unemployment insurance claims for unemployed Canadians.

THE JUDICIARY

POLICY GOVERNING COMMUNICATIONS BY CABINET MINISTERS WITH JUDGES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would reiterate or reconfirm that it is his government's policy that cabinet ministers should not attempt to communicate with judges about matters or persons coming before the courts.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the policy was stated several years ago, and it is along the lines repeated by the hon. member. I cannot recall the exact wording of it, but I could dig it out and make the hon. member aware of it, if necessary.

INTRODUCTION OF LETTER IN PEEL COUNTY COURT CASE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware that last Thursday in Peel County Court in Brampton, Ontario, defence counsel tried to introduce a letter from the Solicitor General about a former campaign worker about to be sentenced for two armed robberies in a federal penitentiary under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General. Does the Prime Minister share the judge's view that the introduction of such a letter was, and I quote, "in poor taste"? If so, is the Prime Minister going to discipline the Solicitor General in any way?

• (1415)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is putting me in an impossible position. He wants me to say whether the judge was right or wrong, and if I said the judge was wrong, then surely the hon. member would take me to task.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I think it is fundamental in our political system that there be a separation of the judiciary and the executive.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE RESIGNATION BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, we have had instances where Prime Ministers have accepted the resignation of cabinet ministers, Mr. Drury for one, and the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for another.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lawrence: I ask the Prime Minister has the Solicitor General submitted his resignation? If not, has the Prime Minister demanded that resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member made a loud speech in his preamble about separation of the judicial, executive, and, presumably, legislative powers. He then asked me did I think the judge is right or wrong. Surely he is asking me to set aside that concept of separation of powers by asking for my judgment on the judgment of the judge.

Mr. Lawrence: I am asking about the Solicitor General.

CHARACTER REFERENCE GIVEN BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General who, as a lawyer, will know that the purpose of calling character evidence is to lend prestige to the accused through the person or office of the character witness. Will the Solicitor General please confirm that he sent a letter to the lawyer representing Mr. English to be used as character evidence in this particular case, and will he acknowledge the conflict because, as Solicitor General, he and his department are responsible for Mr. English who is now in a penitentiary?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): The hon. member indicated quite clearly in his question that my representation was not made to the judge. I know the individuals concerned and my letter was sent to their lawyer. I told the lawyer that I would be prepared to give evidence on behalf of these people whom I know, and it was on that basis that the letter was put forward. Certainly there was no telephone call, private representation, or off-the-record representation to any court. The representation was made frankly, on the record, and on behalf of people whom I know.

Mr. Speyer: There is no doubt that it was on the record, and there is no doubt that the judge said it was in poor taste given the Solicitor General occupies the position he does.

CONDUCT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is: does he approve of conduct where a Solicitor General, who is responsible for a person sentenced to penitentiary on two counts of armed robbery, makes written representations in order to minimize the sentence? Will he not now ask for the Solicitor General's resignation in light of all the miscues he has made?

Mr. Nielsen: He is responsible for the parole board, too.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is trying to make a clear case of one which is not very clear to me. Surely a minister, like anyone else—

An hon. Member: They are not like anyone else.

Mr. Trudeau: —should be entitled to give character references on behalf of someone he knows in order to ensure that justice is tempered with mercy. That does not seem beyond the limits of any human being.

Surely it is up to the judge to decide whether he wants to receive such representation or not. Apparently the judge did not. I think this is certainly not the case of a minister trying to influence a judge—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —in any way that any citizen is asked to give a character reference.

Mr. Nielsen: He is not any citizen.

An hon. Member: He is the Solicitor General.

Mr. Trudeau: He is also a human being.

Mr. Nowlan: Then he should not be in that cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: If the judge does not want to take into account the testimony of this human being on behalf of one of his fellow Canadians, that is the judge's prerogative.

• (1420)

APPROPRIATENESS OF SOLICITOR GENERAL'S ACTION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister does not acknowledge that there is a distinction between a person acting in his own private capacity and when he holds the position of Solicitor General, my question to him is this: since the Solicitor General is responsible for everyone coming into the penitentiary system, and because the Prime Minister knows that the purpose of good character evidence is meant to minimize sentence, does the Prime Minister not acknowledge that it is inappropriate for a Solicitor General to be giving good character references on behalf of anybody?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, all I can say is that this is not a clearcut case as far as I am concerned. This is not a minister trying to, once again, in an inappropriate way influence a judge. This is a minister offering his opinion as a human being. It might have been, in view of the temper of the opposition these days, that he should not have done that, but I am not prepared to say this.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since February of this year there have been ten Liberal members from the Montreal area who have indicated that they think that the economic direction of the government is a disaster, 16 Liberal members of the Liberal caucus economic development committee who have expressed a similar concern to that of those ten Liberal members, the Solicitor General who wrote a letter saying that the government's economic policies were a disaster, and we now have the Minister of State for Economic Development reported in today's Le Devoir as indicating that the economic policies being followed by the government are a disaster.

Given that there now appears to be a sense within the Liberal party that what is happening in this country with respect to the economy is heading us in a direction which will cause untold chaos and hardship for tens of thousands of people, can we expect to see a policy put forward by the government before the end of this current session—before the end of June—that will begin to address the problems that confront the one and a quarter million to one and a half million people who are currently unemployed, and the tens of thousands of people who are presently looking to their jobs with considerable trepidation mainly as a result of the government's inability to implement an economic policy which is not a disaster?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, what surprises me, frankly, is that the opposition seems to be showing great interest in the views of this caucus with regard to the economic situation in Canada.

An hon. Member: Everybody is.

Mr. Trudeau: Indeed, as the hon. member from the opposition says, everybody is. It would be surprising if members of this caucus, Liberal as they are, were not showing great concern for the rate of unemployment, the high rate of inflation, and for the economic difficulties that the country is going through.

I appreciate the solicitude shown by opposition members for the views of members of this caucus. I have great interest in those views myself. They are made known to me several times a week, and certainly in caucus every week. Indeed, that is the way this government operates, by soliciting the views of our caucus members and trying to adopt policies which would be beneficial to the country.

REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, would the Prime Minister care to respond to the statement by the Minister of State for Economic Development, the Senator in the other place? Does he agree with Senator Olson when he says that the major economic thrust of the government was megaprojects, that the high interest rate policy of the government has been the primary factor that undermined the megaprojects, and that there are tens of thousands of jobs which have been lost as a result of the high interest rate policy of the government? If the Prime Minister does agree with him, will he now take steps to bring forward a new policy or, failing that, will he replace the minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would challenge the hon. member's accuracy when he quotes Senator Olson as talking about high interest rate policies. The Senator knows, as does everyone in the House, that there is no high interest rate policy. There is a high interest rate. That high interest rate is due to the fact that Canada is an open market as far as capital is concerned, and its interest rates cannot be dissociated from the interest rates which prevail on the money markets of the world. That is the reality. It affects Canada, it affects France, it affects Britain, it affects Germany, it affects Italy, it affects Japan—it affects all countries. That does not mean that all of these countries are all seeking to have high interest rate policies; on the contrary, these countries are trying to fight against that high interest rate by having anti-inflation policies.

ALTERNATIVE POLICIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Is the Prime Minister suggesting that the people of Canada should believe that there is no action which can be taken by the federal government, or by any other government in Canada, to bring down the level of interest rates and thereby safeguard the jobs that they must have in order to provide their livelihood? Is the Prime Minister honestly telling the people of Canada that the policy which has brought about high interest rates and which has destroyed the very opportunities for those people is the only policy the government could follow?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, I am not saying that, Madam Speaker. I challenge the hon. member to say whether he was quoting Senator Olson accurately or not.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I am.

Mr. Trudeau: Apparently, he was not—

Mr. Deans: I am.

Mr. Trudeau: —because he went on to some other subject. He referred to the people of Canada and no longer to Senator Olson.

As far as the people of Canada are concerned, there are other policies which can be followed. The premiers of most of the provinces proposed such a policy last February. It was that we lower the value of the dollar, perhaps to 75 cents, perhaps lower—who knows? That might temporarily bring down interest rates. It would certainly be only temporary; but, anyhow, that debate is open. I have not heard the views of the hon. member from the New Democratic Party on that matter.

Mr. Deans: Oh, yes, you have, many times.

Mr. Trudeau: Is he proposing a 75-cent dollar or a 70-cent dollar? Which is he proposing?

LIBERAL SUPPORT FOR MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister knows that an increasing number of members of his own caucus are abandoning their support. The Prime Minister has just said that the reason is that they are as Liberal as they are, and I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the reason is that they are as scared as they are. In any event, can the minister tell the House how many Liberal MPs and Liberal cabinet ministers no longer support the finance minister? In other words, could we have the latest count?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not go around applying a loyalty test, as must be the practice in the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member asks how many Liberal members support the policies of the government. I refer him to the rather numerous votes which have been taken when motions have been moved by the opposition condemning government policies, and which have been joined in by Liberal members. That is the latest count. Every motion that is brought forward is defeated by Liberal members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, we are not interested in the very significant difference between those Liberals who do not agree and those Liberals who vote for it anyway.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY LIBERAL CAUCUS MEMBERS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. On February 3, in a public letter, ministers and members of the Liberal caucus stated that measures must be taken as soon as possible as they are necessary right now. In April the minutes of a meeting of the ministers' own caucus were headed, "A sense of urgency", and stated the need to act quickly, and last week there were more comments urging action. Can the minister advise whether any of the recommendations from the Liberal caucus will be acted upon? It seems a shame to find that they are just wasting their time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is really the hon. member's business to inquire into the business of the Liberal caucus, and it is not the business of the House of Commons to inquire into the business of the Liberal caucus.

QUERY RESPECTING LIBERAL MEMBERS' SUGGESTION ON INTEREST RATE POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the embattled Minister of Finance, who finds that he has as many critics behind him right now as he has in front of him.

Some hon. Members: Not so.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to ask the minister about the group of Liberal dissidents who met on May 18 and advocated, at that meeting, the adoption of a realistic interest rate policy. Since they obviously feel that the present interest rate is not realistic, has the minister called them in and asked them what they mean by a realistic interest rate policy? When will he take steps to introduce a realistic interest rate policy?

• (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I really want to make a point of this. It is not appropriate for members opposite to inquire about the business of the Liberal Party or how the government and members of the government relate to their supporters. That is not an appropriate subject matter for questioning on the orders of the day. I do not mind answering the question, but I do not think in principle it should be acknowledged that these members opposite, who apparently have no ideas of their own, have to come to our caucus to get ideas to ask us questions about what our members are discussing with us.

DATA SUPPLIED TO LIBERAL CAUCUS MEMBERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Liberal Minister of Finance who is ashamed of the fact that his backbench members are spewing their comments about his economic policies all over the public press. It is from the public press that the information comes.

I would like to ask him about this latest group of dissidents who had data made available to them which shows that the unemployment rate in Canada will probably be increasing this year. That is a matter of grave concern, given the present disastrous jobless rate in the country. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether that data which shows that the unemployment rate will be going up this year has also been made available to him. If so, what programs is he prepared to introduce that will prevent the jobless rate from going up this year? Will he introduce them this afternoon during the opposition debate on unemployment among youth to match the employment measures that we will be putting forward so that we can see if the government has any measures to combat unemployment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wants to ask about the unemployment rate, and trends in the unemployment rate, I would be glad to answer, but when she asks me questions about the Liberal caucus I want to make a principle of it; I am not going to answer.

FUTURE OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will address my question to the Prime Minister. I must say that the sophistry in the answer of the Minister of Finance—

Madam Speaker: Order. I did say before that comments on previous answers are not justified in the question period, and all the more so if it is a new questioner taking the floor. The hon. member of Annapolis Valley-Hants, on a question.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, Madam Speaker, on a question, after we have heard the most insulting sophistry in this House from the Minister of Finance.

My question to the Prime Minister is on an issue that has been debated by members on all sides, an issue that has got into the public press, and not just from the Liberal caucus, whose members have taken positions on Mirabel and Dorval. In the decision that is about to be taken by his colleague in cabinet, the Minister of Transport, will the interests of all Canadians be taken into account on any shift of air traffic from Dorval to Mirabel and not be just a tug of economic war between those who live close to Dorval and/or the Minister of Communications, and members who have an interest in Mirabel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can give that assurance. I am pleased to see that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants is taking an interest in this very important question.

Mr. Nowlan: I am taking a very real interest in it. I certainly hope that the Prime Minister, who is a member from the Montreal area as well as the Prime Minister of a national government in name only, continues to take an interest in it.

MINISTER'S APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister assure the House that when the Minister of Transport appears before the Standing Committee on Transport he will in his open way, and sometimes very frank way, give some of the reasons both pro and con why he is even considering such a move from Dorval to Mirabel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot comment on the proceedings in a committee, let alone predict what will happen at that committee and what questions will be asked. I can give the hon. member the assurance that the minister will answer with his usual honesty and competence.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Over the weekend the very distinguished Liberal member of Parliament for Thunder Bay-Atikokan said in an interview with La Presse:

Our monetary policy is disastrous . . . it overestimates the effects of inflation. We can adjust to inflation, but not to . . . high interest rates. They're too much of a burden for the budgets of families and businesses.

In light of the opinion of that hon. member and of the overwhelming majority of people in this country, will the Prime Minister now follow that advice and change the government's monetary policy before the economic conference in Versailles next month?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan is, of course, right in deploring the high interest rates. The hon. member can be sure that we are taking into account his advice and that of all caucus members in establishing the posture we will be taking in Versailles.

PRIME MINISTER'S REPLY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister just said that the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan is right in his analysis that the monetary policy of the government is a disaster. If the member from Thunder Bay-Atikokan is right, I want to know why the Prime Minister is not changing the monetary interest rate policy of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know whom the hon. member is trying to fool, but I said that the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan was right when he said the interest rates were too high. If the hon. member reads what he said as a comment on that, he will see that it is completely inaccurate and false.

LAW OF THE SEA

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON CANADA

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the monumental agreement on the Law of the Sea which was recently achieved by the United Nations, would the minister advise this House of the major effects which this agreement will have on Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as with every agreement of this kind, the achievement is based on a series of compromises which do not entirely satisfy the national interest of any country. However, for coastal states such as Canada, the gain of the 12-mile territorial sea and the 200-mile economic zone, and especially for a country like Canada with the recognition of the continental shelf, there will be, when the treaty is in effect, an enormous leap forward in our control over our offshore resources.

I might say that the greatest importance of this treaty is not what it does for a single country like Canada, however meritorious our claims may be, but the fact that especially in the law of the deep-sea bed we have for the first time the recognition of a common heritage of mankind, and the setting up of an institution which can act for the benefit of all mankind.

POLICY GOVERNING MINISTERIAL COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of his earlier answer on the matter of Claude English, would he object to any of his ministers writing to any judge in similar circumstances about anybody in the future? Would he object to having them write to the parole board or to the Commissioner of Corrections? Does he have any policies with respect to conflict of interest matters such as the one that was raised here this afternoon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is hypothetical in nature. I was asked about a specific case. I gave the answer as best I could. I would have to consider any other questions in light of the circumstances when they are posed.

Mr. Kilgour: The Prime Minister is unbelievable on this and many other issues.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, specifically would the Prime Minister object if his Solicitor General wrote a letter to the parole board or to the Commissioner of Corrections, who in effect is his employee, about this matter now that Mr. English is in a federal institution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, my recollection of the guidelines is that they do not cover cases of that kind. The guidelines indicate that no minister of the government should try to influence a court of record by dealing with it in a surreptitious way or in a way which was generally outside the presence of lawyers or of the other party involved.

My recollection of the spirit of the guidelines is that it was precisely to prevent a minister from trying to influence a judge toward one side presumably without the other side being present to make the countrary case. If that is the spirit of the guidelines I think the Solicitor General acted within that spirit by doing something overtly which the other lawyer and the other party were presumably prepared and disposed to challenge, the result of which was an opinion of a judge which I heard quoted across the aisle—but I am not aware of the details of this case.

Once again I am not prepared to make an over-all statement beyond those guidelines that were issued some years ago stipulating that there should be no attempt by a member of the government to influence a judge in one direction on a case behind the back of the other party to that case. It seems clear from facts that have just been made known to me by questions from across the aisle that the Solicitor General did not attempt to do that.

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN PAROLE ISSUE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, this is a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not agree that the Solicitor General, in his capacity as the responsible minister in this House reporting with respect to the operations of the parole board, the decisions of the parole board, has totally compromised himself, in the sense that, when the application for parole of Claude English comes before the board, as it eventually will, together with the Solicitor General's letter, no doubt, whatever decision that board makes, whether it is to grant parole or not to grant parole, the accusation will be made that the board's decision has been influenced by the Solicitor General's action? Whether or not that be the fact, does he not agree that that perceived compromise, that perceived conflict is there?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is talking about a hypothetical case some time in the future when the parole board looks at the dossier of this person. It seems to me that the parole board will be looking at the conduct of the prisoner during the time when he was in prison. I do not see that the parole board will be looking at some previous document, produced or not produced at the trial. When the hon. member asked me if it is not more important, I think, to save the appearances, was the effect of his question—

An hon. Member: Perceived.

Mr. Trudeau: To be perceived—my answer, and I have given it many times before, is that I think it is more important that justice be done than that it appear to be done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SCOPE OF GUIDELINES GOVERNING MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have one further supplementary, Madam Speaker. Are we to take it from the Prime Minister's answer that the Solicitor General in his ministry, as the minister responsible for the penitentiary system and as the minister responsible for the parole board, is at perfect liberty to provide written material, knowing full well that it is going to be used as evidence in the fixing of sentences before our courts of law and the criminal justice system—that he is perfectly at liberty to do so? If he believes that, does he not believe that that is a radical departure from the rather rigid guidelines governing the conduct of ministers of the Crown, which were originally laid down by his predecessor, Mr. Pearson, and re-endorsed by himself as Prime Minister at a time when he was having difficulties with other members of his ministry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes the point that the minister is responsible for the parole board. But he is not responsible for the courts of justice. The document which is being referred to is apparently a letter sent by the lawyer to the courts of justice, not to the parole board but to the courts of justice.

Once again I am referring to the information I have received from the members across the way. I have not had any notice of this case until the first question was asked this afternoon. I repeat, the minister is responsible for the parole board, not for the courts of justice. My recollection of the guidelines—I will be happy to refresh my mind and refresh the mind of the hon. member for Yukon on the contents of those guidelines—is that no minister should attempt to influence, in a one-sided way, a court of justice. But a minister remains a member, a citizen of this country, a person who is interested in the fair application of justice. I can see no part of a guideline which would be contradicted by the act of the hon. minister. Once again, let us look at the guidelines and let the hon. member refresh his own memory and indicate to me what part of the guidelines is covered by the question we are discussing now.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INVESTIGATE CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING MINISTER'S ACTION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, this is a supplementary to the Prime Minister. The case we are discussing is not a case which is the responsibility of the opposition. It is the responsibility of the Prime Minister as head of the government to see whether or not in this case there has been a contradiction of the guidelines. I am sure if the Prime Minister looks at the guidelines he will see that, aside from the specifics of the guidelines, there is a general disapprobation of behaviour that might be inconsistent with the holding of public office.

What the House would like to ask the Prime Minister, who has responsibility in this matter, and who said that he has not seen it until just today, is whether or not, now that he has had it raised in the House, he himself will undertake an investigation, and chat with the Solicitor General, to see whether ot not the circumstances are such that the Solicitor General ought to remain as a law officer of the Crown or ought to be moved to some other responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: Or out entirely.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure you that from the time the first question was asked this afternoon it was my intention to refer to the guidelines and then to ask information about exactly what was done. I can assure the hon. member that in any discussion I have with the hon. minister, with the hon. member or anyone else, I would still hold it is not a bad thing in our society for justice to be tempered with mercy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—POSSIBILITY OF FAVOURITISM

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The question is not whether justice should be tempered with mercy; the question is whether or not there should be any favouritism with respect to justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think it should be obvious to the Prime Minister that a letter from a Solicitor General intended to be part of the legal proceeding in a court does not have that sense of evenhandedness about it, and that ought to be obvious to anyone. Will the Prime Minister undertake that he will approach this from the point of view of the appropriate administration of justice, because that is what is at issue here?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member makes his case around the question of whether there was favoritism or not. I can assure the hon. member, as I know the Solicitor General, that he would be prepared to intervene on behalf of anybody who deserved intervention, whether he be a minister or whether he be—

An hon. Member: A campaign worker.

Mr. Trudeau: —or whether he not be a minister. The question once again is one that I am sure all members of this House must ask themselves when they are asked to intervene on behalf of anyone. The fact that we are a Member of Parliament, let alone a minister, is in a sense lending our authority to a particular case.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Exactly.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure that members opposite lend their authority—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Not in the criminal courts.

Mr. Trudeau: —whether it be intervening as character references or whether it be by approving the application of some citizen or some student for a bursary; we are all lending our moral authority. I do not think that in doing that we have a feeling that we are using favouritism.

In this particular case, once again if I refer to the first question asked this afternoon, it appears that the judge discounted that.

An hon. Member: He said it was in poor taste.

Mr. Trudeau: He said that it was in poor taste. He did not say it was improper. He said he thought this should not have been done. That shows that the courts have not been influenced in this case. Once again, let the hon. member refer to the guidelines. I will do it myself and I will discuss this question further.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROCESSING OF PENSION APPLICATONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The minister has said that he has no objections to the implementation of a six-month time limit for the processing of veterans' pension applications, including the appeal process, except that this time limit might hinder the retrieval of medical records from veterans. Surely the new computer system being phased in by the department would eliminate any such information transfer problems. Assuming that the department can establish a means of gathering the necessary medical data in time, will the minister now commit his department to a six-month time limit?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised the question of the processing of pension applications on a number of occasions. We commissioned a study to look into the administrative process by which pensions are handled by the Pension Commission. We have made very definite progress in terms of reducing the time limit. I set six months as an objective, and I will continue to work until we achieve that goal.

INTRODUCTION OF TIME LIMITS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, it seems improbable to me that the minister would choose to ignore recommendations made by the Public Accounts committee, by the Senate Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, by many veterans' organizations, and by the Conservative Party, that the processing period must be drastically shortened and that this period be set at six months. If the minister is not ignoring this backlog of advice, what is he planning to do about implementing firm time limits so that veterans can at least live with the knowledge that they will receive an answer at a given date?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the hon. member did not listen to the answer to his first question. I said that I agree with the six-month time period and will work until we achieve that.

LIBERAL MEMBER'S REPORTED STATEMENT ON LABOUR CONDITIONS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The Liberal member for Laval was quoted in La Presse this weekend as follows:

—it is clear that our policies now seem stale. We have no comprehensive program for job creation to propose, we have only crutches.

As more and more Liberal Members of Parliament abandon their party's economic ship, will the Prime Minister now admit, as do his backbenchers, that they do not have a clue about what is happening in the long-term the short term, or what to do about the unemployment crisis in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if anybody does not have a clue it is members of the New Democratic Party who have spent the whole afternoon quoting members from this side.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, the quotations go on. The hon. member for Sudbury said, "The country cannot endure a winter like the one we've just been through". On behalf of all members on all sides of the House I ask the Prime Minister if he will not go to the people at this time, when can we expect his resignation as leader of the Liberal party and as Prime Minister of this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that proves what I just said; the hon. member does not have a clue.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION OF WASHINGTON EMBASSY BE POSTPONED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government or the Prime Minister considering postponing the design and construction of the embassy building in Washington because of the economic hard times facing Canada, with unemployment at an all time high, farmers going bankrupt, and small-business men going bankrupt and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I seem to recall that that very same question was asked last week. The government has not changed its position on this in the past week. If the hon. member is going to ask the question next week, maybe he could suggest other buildings in other countries that should be postponed, because Canada is proceeding with construction across this country and some other embassies in other countries. I will be happy to hear the question next week and see if there is anything new.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONSIDER SPENDING EMBASSY FUNDS IN CANADA

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, at a time when literally every businessman and every farmer in this country is postponing capital construction, the Prime Minister comes out with an answer like that.

I ask the question again, Madam Speaker. Because of the economic difficulties facing people in Canada would the Prime Minister consider saving that $30 million and spending it in Canada where it might do some good?

I will ask again next week.

STATUS OF WOMEN

QUERY RESPECTING PAMPHLET ON BATTERED WIVES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could she inform the House of the month in which there will be an insert in family allowance cheques regarding the rights and resources available to women who become battered wives? Which month will that insert be included with the cheques?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, given prior notice I could have answered the hon. member's question right away. Unfortunately, I do not have the information in my head but I could send him an exact list of future inserts and their subject matter.

PROVISION OF SHELTER FOR BATTERED WIVES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works. When will vacant Crown buildings be made available to groups who wish to provide shelter for battered wives?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, there is a program and provision under Section 56(1) of the National Housing Act which deals with co-op and non-profit housing. On a number of occasions that provision has been used by some organizations in some areas of the country to provide shelter assistance to wives who are looking for shelter on an emergency basis.

NATURE OF CHARACTER REFERENCE PROVIDED BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, as a result of some questions being asked about the Solicitor General's intervention in the Mr. English case, I want to ask a short question. What pertinent facts, if any, could the Solicitor General provide that would not have been available from some other source?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I know the young man. I felt that having known him and having worked with him for a short period of time I was in a position to put evidence forward that, if he was given a break in life, he could turn out to be a decent and contributing member of Canadian society. In the part of Toronto that I represent, unemployment among teenage blacks is a very serious problem. I felt that he is a decent kid who had made a mistake but still deserves a break.

INTERPRETATION OF GUIDELINES GOVERNING MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. We are talking about the integrity of the Canadian courts. In view of his reply to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona I want to ask the Prime Minister if it is his interpretation of the guidelines that it is now all right for ministers of the Crown, including the Solicitor General, to try to influence judges if they do it up front. Is that the position he is taking in this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has heard my answer. I did not say "You can influence judges if you do it up front". I said there is a difficult question as to whether a minister can act as a human being or whether he must dissociate himself from that position when he is intervening in a case like the one mentioned by the hon. member. Surely this is not a case of one side fighting against the other. This is the Crown trying to establish whether a man should receive a longer or shorter sentence. It is a known judicial practice in this country that character references are given by citizens. The more distinguished the citizen, the better from the point of view of the lawyer and from the point of view of the accused.

Once again, without refreshing my memory on the guidelines I cannot answer this question with finality. I undertook earlier to look at them. I cannot see that it is against the spirit of the guidelines to try to help a human being who is going to be sentenced by saying, "I know this man and he deserves to be treated with mercy".

POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, if the guidelines were not breached, does the Prime Minister accept the proposition that the Solicitor General, in intervening a pre-sentence hearing by way of counsel—it was an intervention—was in serious conflict of interest given the fact that the person before the courts was convicted of not one but two violent crimes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would be interesting to find out from the hon. member what interest was in conflict with another interest. I cannot see any personal gain which would accrue to the minister by giving a character reference. In that sense, what was the conflict of interest? He may have been acting in a way which was unusual; he certainly was acting in a way which does not have the approval of many of the opposition members. But whether that was against the guidelines or not I will only say when I have read the guidelines again. All I say is that my recollection of the guidelines is that they are not offended by this act, and that the minister has sought no personal gain. I repeat for the third time, he has just sought to ensure that justice be tempered with mercy, which is a good Liberal attitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. PATTERSON—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and forty-eighth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

MR. DOMM—ENFORCEMENT OF METRICATION—QUESTION DEFERRED

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, last week a number of things happened during proceedings of the House which prompted me to serve notice in the normal way that I intended to rise today on a question of privilege. On returning to the House, having had the opportunity of reading Hansard from last Friday, I learned that you ruled the question of privilege I wished to raise would be considered a grievance over a commitment by a minister and the carrying on of the affairs of his ministry through his civil servants, namely, the enforcement of metrication.

For that reason I will defer my question of privilege, and I am now exploring the various ways you have suggested where this matter might be raised as a grievance in the House or through other means. If you would bear with me until I have an opportunity to explore those opportunities, I will defer my question of privilege.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows:

(a) and (b) Luncheons, food services—working groups	$7,813.38
Luncheons, food services—hospitality	21,059.90

There were no contracts for $2,000 and over.

(c) Luncheons, food services and hospitality are provided by the council when discussion on official matters are held with persons who are not employees of the Government of Canada, by persons who are members of national or international committees or organizations.

Question No. 2,953—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology under the Scientific and Technical Information Program—the National Research Council at page 32.31, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to catering and quartering services (a) what was the name of each type of service (b) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (c) for what reason does the council require these services?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows:

(a) and (b) Luncheons, food services—working groups	$1,637.57

There were no contracts issued in excess of $2,000 each.

FEES PAID TO TRUSTEES IN BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 3,553—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,330, was a similar question dated July 23, 1975 answered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, if so, on what date and for what reason was the statistical system changed?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, a similar question was answered. The changes to the statistical system were made in 1976 when the department realized that the amount of trustee fees were of very little use to the users of the data and not very representative without the other costs of administration.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Question No. 3,556—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. With reference to the Auditor General's statement on page 167 of his report that over 40 per cent of the investigations commenced were not completed within the target date of 18 months and that some investigations are now behind by as much as 43 months (a) which investigations were not completed in 18 months (b) who were the persons being investigated (c) which persons were investigated in excess of 43 months (d) for what reason did it take so long to investigate these people?

2. What are the guidelines given by the minister to the Bureau of Competition Policy to make investigations?

3. How many persons are employed in the bureau of Investigation?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. In keeping with the provision of Section 27 of the Combines Investigation Act, which stipulates that any inquiry under the act shall be conducted in private, the policy tradtionally followed by the director has been not to give any indication nor disclose any information with respect to inquiries under the act. The public is informed about the administration of the act through the periodic reports of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, special inquiries, court proceedings and the annual report of the director which has to be submitted to Parliament. Accordingly, no details can be given on the questions asked in paragraph 1. except for part (d) which relates to the reason why it takes so long to carry out the investigations. Inquiries are often interrupted by court proceedings initiated by those who are under inquiry for the reason that the director or the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission has no jurisdiction in the matter. The dimension and size of many investigations, the technical complexity of the economic or legal questions involved require a substantial portion of the limited resources.

2. None. The law sets out the guidelines for initiating inquiries.

3. Two hundred and thirty persons are employed in the Bureau of Competition Policy, 184 of which are assigned to the direct enforcement of the act.

NUU-CHAH-NULTH LAND AND SEA CLAIM

Question No. 3,896—Mr. Miller:

2. What (a) procedure and criteria (b) specific information sources did the Department of Justice use to ascertain the legal merits of the claim?

3. What were the results and recommendations the Department of Justice forwarded to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning the legal merits of the claim?

4. What information and documentation were the Nuu-chah-nulth claimants asked to provide to the Department of Justice to support the claim?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Justice as follows: 1. Yes, February 1981.

2. A review of the claim was made on the basis of the 1973 policy on comprehensive claims and of information supplied by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

3. Any advice provided to the department of IAND would be confidential.

2. How many employees currently employed in the unit are (a) physically disabled (b) mentally handicapped?

3. Are measures being taken to place such employees in other employment and, if so, what are such measures?

[English]

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the answer to the question is:

1. Yes. In response to the federal government's decentralization program, the Canada Post Corporation is now planning the move of its philatelic services from Ottawa to Antigonish.

2. (a) five, (b) two.

3. Yes, the measures being taken are: (a) preferred consideration for any positions at an equivalent level that become vacant elsewhere at the head office of the Canada Post Corporation in Ottawa; (b) preferred consideration for developmental assignments to positions in other sections to try to enhance the qualifications of the employees concerned; (c) registration of the names of the employees with the Public Service Commission's placement bureau for handicapped employees for transfer to positions in government departments and other federal agencies. If the employees have not been relocated to other positions between now and about nine months before the move is scheduled to occur, action to transfer them to other positions will be intensified at that time.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I rise concerning two questions I have on the Order Paper, one of them being No. 4,072 from February 25. The question deals with Department of Transport directive No. 2080-1, which in turn deals with "Francophone participation—Ontario region", which establishes special recruitment teams to go into universities and schools in Ontario and Quebec to hire Francophones for employment in the federal civil service. My question deals with whether or not other language groups such as Polish, Ukrainian, Italian and Portuguese will be receiving these same privileges. This aspect of the government's bilingualism policy has never been brought out in the open and explained to the Canadian people, especially the 40 ethnic groups and the Anglophones who are not receiving this preferential treatment.

In addition, there is question No. 4,175 which I placed on the Order Paper on March 24. This is not an unusually long period of time, but it is extremely important that we find out what is going on in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs because a senior official, Mr. R. W. Bailey, has written a letter to the assistant deputy minister stating that there are rumours circulating in the patent office that the hiring team presently seeking examiners has been instructed to limit their search to Francophones, particularly unilingual Francophones.

It has been further alleged that academically qualified Anglophones have been rejected for employment. Mr. Gagnon wrote back to Mr. Bailey that this was correct, that this is the policy. So I would like to impress upon the parliamentary secretary the importance of having these questions answered as soon as possible. Nothing like this has ever received all-party approval and there has never been any discussion in this House or anywhere else about preferential hiring policies of the government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am not aware of what stage the answers are at right at the moment, but I will be pleased to look into the matter for the hon. member. At such time as the answers are available in the two official languages of this country, they will certainly be tabled.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker moved:

That this House condemns the government for the economic mismanagement which has led directly to the loss of 300,000 jobs since August, 1981 and produced a crisis situation for students seeking summer or permanent employment, and calls on the government to accept its responsibility for this tragic mess and promote the private and public sector hiring of Canada's youth so that those attending school can afford to continue to acquire needed skills, and those graduating can immediately become productive members of the work force.

He said: Madam Speaker, you have just read a motion which sets forth that since August of last year some 300,000 jobs have been lost, the bulk of which is borne by the youth of this country.

This motion of condemnation is well deserved by the Liberal government. It is moved on behalf of all Canadians, but especially on behalf of our youth. Liberal times are becoming truly lousy times. Young Canadians are being forced to pay for the accumulated blunder of the government, and for the ignorance and plain stupidity of its policies. The fault lies directly with the cabinet but also with Liberal backbenchers.

At the time of each vote in this House they choose to protect their personal incomes rather than choosing to vote against cabinet schemes which aggravate and cause problems rather than solve them.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) I believe has committed a trangression of the rules of this House by imputing motives on the part of members on this side of the House. He said that we vote in the House of Commons for a particular motive, that is, to keep our jobs. That, Mr. Speaker, I submit is out of order. It is a question of privilege. I demand the hon. member withdraw those remarks immediately.

Mr. Cosgrove: That was a low blow.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to see how sensitive Liberal members opposite are. They should be sensitive because they bear personal responsibility for the conditions which the young of this country face. This government has mortgaged the future of the young people of this country. What our young people will face in one year, five years or ten years from now is a lifestyle that is substantially diminished because of the personal actions of Liberal backbenchers who are continuing to keep an evil and corrupt cabinet in power. Young Canadians are standing in soup lines today while Liberal backbenchers keep this corrupt and evil government in power. When the government attacks the youth of this nation, it attacks the very future of the nation itself. This Liberal government must be defeated because the future of this nation is at stake.

There is an alternative set of policies which will return Canada to a position of strength and where social justice for all can prevail. I will set the scene of Canada's current plight which has been caused by the Liberal government. Other speakers on this side will elaborate on regional problems, on specific industry problems and particularly the problems faced by the youth. We will deal with and we will totally smash the weak and futile arguments which Liberal members put forth. Their pathetic attempts to blame the opposition, to blame the Premiers, to blame the United States and, indeed, to blame Canadians themselves, will be exposed for the hollow and shallow arguments they really are. The fault lies with the Liberal cabinet and Liberal backbenchers. The solution lies in their defeat.

Why is it that today 1.2 million Canadians are unemployed whereas in 1968 only 300,000 people were unemployed? Why is it that youth unemployment today is at 17.5 per cent whereas in 1968 youth unemployment was virtually nil? Why is it that inflation today is at 11.6 per cent whereas in 1968 it was a mere 4 per cent? Why is it that interest rates today are at 15.3 per cent whereas in 1968 they were at 7.5 per cent? Why is it that federal spending is at $74.2 billion whereas in 1968 it was a mere $12 billion? Why is it that the federal deficit is at $50 billion for this year alone—it may be greater—whereas in 1968 it was a mere $500 million? Why is it that the gross national debt is $140 billion whereas it was approximately $30 billion in 1968?

Why is it that we as a nation are paying interest on the national debt of some $16.7 billion this year as compared to $1.4 billion in 1968? Why is it that the federal government has to advertise to the tune of $250 million to tell people how good the nation is, whereas in 1968 the advertising budget was a mere $29 million? Why were we a strong and vibrant nation in 1968, a nation that had the sense of climbing the mountain and building a future for our young people? When we came out of university at that time why did we have no thoughts of despair and no thoughts of the nation going backwards? We were building a great nation them. That is how it was in 1968.

How did we achieve full employment in 1968? How was it that we had a universal medicare system available to everyone, the poor included? How was it that we had a hospital insurance system that was sound and well funded? How was it that we had a post-secondary education system for our youth who found jobs immediately upon completion of that education? None of us ever thought of unemployment when we came out of university or college in those days. There were five or six jobs for every graduate upon completion of post-secondary education. Even though we had all of these benefits in 1968, we had balanced budgets, we had low taxes and we had true social justice.

The answer to all of my questions is simple. Before 1968 we were not governed by a bunch of socialists. Before 1968 both the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party believed in individual enterprise rather than state enterprise. We believed in minimal government intervention, government as a regulator rather than as a participant and major player. We believed in capital investment by Canadians and by people from other parts of the world. We knew, and we in this party know today, that capital investment means jobs. When there is no capital investment, there are no jobs. Both of the major parties in those days believed that people should be compensated for the risks they take rather than for the position they held, patronage or prior wealth. Only our party believes that today. The situation has changed since 1968. We have a government that has been in power since 1968 and has abandoned individual enterprise for state control and management. The result is exactly the same as in every other country in the world that has tried state centralized control—loss of individual freedoms and loss of choice, which lead to personal despair.

Why is it that Roumania, Poland and the Soviet Union were all massive exporters of food in the early years, but from the time they took to central decision-making and started to get Crown corporations involved they have lost even the capacity to feed their own people? Their people now stand in food lines. That situation is happening here in Canada. We will see more of it. The people who are bearing the brunt of that penalty are the youth of this nation.

Unfortunately, since 1968, and especially now, compensation depends upon prior wealth. You know, Mr. Speaker, the interest to service the national debt is some $16.7 billion. That means people who have wealth in the nation have concentrated into their hands an additional $16.7 billion, which means the rich become incredibly rich. This leads to a class society, which can be seen in other countries that have fabulously rich people and extremely poor people. We know, too, that deficits lead to inflation and with extra money around the value of land goes up. As a result you have a land class and a class without land, the tenants. That is a return to feudalism. What kind of a Parliament and what kind of a government would impose feudalism on the youth of this nation? Our youth will be faced with being tenants and serfs rather than being owners, able to exercise their individual enterprise.

Since 1968 compensation under the Liberal government has depended upon political patronage. One needs only to look at who heads up the Crown corporations, who heads up the advertising and consulting agencies, and who are the heads of boards and commissions. All of these people are paid fabulous salaries and have great indexed pensions. Who are the senior civil servants? All of them have a close tie-in with a small group of men and women who have been running this country since 1968. They are all Liberal party hacks. Most of them were actually turfed out by the electors of the nation. The electors looked at them in their individual constituencies and said that they did not want that man or woman to lead them. They were defeated and then the Liberal government appointed them to very lucrative positions. This is how one gets ahead in 1982 under the Liberal government! It is wrong. It is not what we want for the youth of the nation.

Who suffers under these conditions? Who bears the penalty of inflation or of political appointments? It is ordinary working Canadians—small-business men, farmers, fishermen, senior citizens, and last but not least, it is the future of the country, namely, our youth. We can say goodbye to the just society under the Liberal government.

I will now give some details of the youth situation, which will be followed up by other hon. members on this side. Unemployment in April was some 1,233,000 people, for some 9.6 per cent of the work force. As well there were almost 100,000 men and women who have simply given up. They have just gone home and they are sitting there, awaiting better times, because there is no sense even going out into the market. But more importantly, since August, 1981, over 300,000 jobs which existed then have disappeared at the rate of tens of thousands each week. This will continue for the foreseeable future. Of these 300,000 lost jobs, over 53 per cent were held by young people. Over-all youth unemployment today is 18 per cent.

What is the situation faced by college and university students who need jobs to finance their next year of education? There are simply no jobs available for them. Approximately 190,000 students come out of colleges looking for jobs in the summer and approximately 463,000 out of universities, a total of three-quarters of a million young people looking for jobs to finance their next year of education, so that they are ready, educated and skilled when they complete their education in some two, three or four years. If they cannot find jobs and thus cannot return to school, they sit at home. Their whole attitude toward life is changed or they emigrate to countries where there are jobs available. This is certainly not in the best interests of Canada.

Beyond the students in universities and colleges, who amount to only 20 per cent of the total youth who start in the school system, 80 per cent of the young people are going out into the work force with grade 12 or less education. What kinds of jobs are available to them? The facts show that the government has reduced research and development so that there are not as many positions available in universities for research or in private corporations because they do not obtain proper tax credits for research and development.

Why are there no jobs for the youth? The answer lies in a long policy—at least since 1968—of state or government intervention in the economy of the nation. I refer to recent policies such as the National Energy Program, which is a nationalization program not a Canadianization one; policies which confiscate wealth from existing corporate enterprises and from individuals who own oil and gas interests; a budget which attacks investors and individual enterprise, whether it is small-business men, farmers, fishermen or individual workers trying to balance their budgets.

The result of these policies within the last few months has been $10 billion of Canadian money flowing out of the country in order for people to purchase shares in companies of other countries. Originally these people may have lived in other lands but they had shares in companies in this country. Approximately $8 billion over and above the $10 billion left this country so that people could purchase shares in United States businesses. They decided that the country was not worth it and that the business climate was wrong. They took their money and purchased shares in United States businesses, in United Kingdom businesses and in businesses around the world. This means that the related jobs are in these various countries rather than here.

Then we can look at the $5 billion to $6 billion each year which leaves the country to buy imported oil. This means that our oil wells in the west, primarily in Saskatchewan and Alberta, are closed in and shut down. Approximately $6 billion flows out of the country to Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, Nigeria and Mexico, which creates jobs in those countries rather than here. We could have $10 billion still working for us here, we could have another $8 billion still working for us here, and we could have $5 billion to $6 billion each year to create jobs for the youth of the nation.

It makes me weep, coming from Alberta, when I return to my riding and observe the oil industry. It once was an industry which created jobs for young people, not for Alberta's youth—there are many jobs still available for them—but for many young men and women from Newfoundland, from the rest of the maritime provinces, from Quebec, Ontario, and in fact from the rest of the country. It was a vibrant industry. Over 700 companies were creating jobs. Well over 90 per cent of the staff of multinational corporations were Canadian men and women, including the upper management of those companies. Indeed, Albertans and other Canadians have gone on to the parent companies of multinational corporations and are holding great positions of influence and power. We were truly Canadianizing the oil and gas industry because most young people would go into a multinational corporation, learn the skills and then leave in order to set up their own companies. This is where the 700 oil and gas companies got their start. We must remember all the service industries, the people in the mud companies and the welders. What about people who provided food or were involved in the entire infrastructure of the oil and gas industry? It was totally Canadian.

Then the National Energy Program killed it. It brings tears to one's eyes when one realizes that hundreds of thousands of jobs have been lost because of an ideology which directly attacks the young people of the nation and deprives them of a future they deserve. It is smashed, and it just makes me weep.

It also weeps when I look at the automobile industry and see tens of thousands of young people not obtaining jobs in Ontario. They are not obtaining jobs because in 1972, when the world price of energy was rising, the government decided that it would not be subject to any blackmail by an Arab nation and it held down the price. This immediately started the hemorrhage; money flowed out of the country to pay for imported oil and sent a signal to buyers to continue purchasing large cars and to manufacturers to continue producing them. Meanwhile, Japan and Germany, having to face the world price for oil, immediately trained engineers and skilled people to produce smaller and more energy efficient cars. The result is that some eight years later they are whipping us in the automobile sales industry. Why not? It goes to show that the government in making its decision did not really understand the ramifications of it and genuinely hurt people. Young people across the nation need to know that they cannot obtain jobs today because of Liberal government decisions of some eight to ten years ago.

How do we create jobs? First, we need a country with resources. Clearly we agree that Canada has plenty in the way of resources. We have oil and gas beyond the wildest dreams of other countries. We have potash, coal, forests, minerals, electricity and a resource we have not even tapped—water. More water flows into the Arctic Ocean than we could use in a million years. It is our ace in the hole.

Second, we need not only a nation with resources, we need people. Canada has the people. We do not have too many people, unlike many other countries with limited resources. For example, Japan, with 122 million people sitting on a rock in the middle of the sea, has some problems. India, with 600 or 700 million people and limited resources, has real problems. In Canada we have 24 million people spread over the assets of an entire half continent. Clearly people are not the problem.

Third, we need educated people, and we have them as well. We have an infrastructure of colleges and universities second to none in the entire world.

Fourth, we need a stable society. It is crystal clear that Canadians are a stable people. Canadians are far more stable than the Liberal government, which has been able for a number of mysterious reasons to con them into letting it stay in power. Canadians are greater than the Liberal government that governs them at this moment.

The fifth and prime reason why we are in trouble and have this much unemployment, in spite of our resources and people, is the lack of the business climate which we need. When you examine each individual cabinet minister, you will find that they have no comprehension of business climate, the need for a certain tax structure and for stability in taxation and government policies. The Liberal government has failed miserably. Clearly, the solution is to defeat this government.

The youth of this nation are beginning to discover that this is the remedy. As the youth spokesman of our party, I am absolutely delighted to find as I travel through every province to provincial conventions that the youth are beginning to realize that while a slave is someone who is taxed 100 per cent of his economic value, which then passes into someone else's hands, they are 55 per cent slaves in Canada. They work hard but 55 per cent of their worth goes into the hands of other people who decide how their money should be spent. They are not happy with this fact and it is a great sign of hope for Canada. The youth of Canada must understand that they need to organize. They will join this party, as they are by the tens of thousands, and we will throw the Liberal backbenchers out riding by riding.

We need a new government which will limit the growth of government and government intervention for reasons other than the ideology that a small group of men and women in Ottawa want to control this nation. It cannot be done. It has never been done in any other country, including those much smaller than Canada.

We need a government which will stress education. When one sees our party's policies, one can see that they are tremendous policies for the development of education. We need to stress research and development and to stress certainty in a solid business climate.

It can be done. A Progressive Conservative government will do it. The youth of Canada are not to be blamed for our problems today, Canadians are not to be blamed and the United States is not to be blamed. It is the Liberal cabinet and individual Liberal Members of Parliament who are responsible for the problems of this nation. Truly, Liberal times are lousy times.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, while Mr. Deputy Speaker was in the Chair a few moments ago at the beginning of the speech of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I rose on a point of order and subsequently on a question of privilege to draw to the attention of the Chair that, in my view, the member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) transgressed the rules of the House by imputing motives to members on this side of the House.

Unfortunately, Mr. Deputy Speaker was engaged in a private conversation with the Clerk of the House at the time and did not hear all the words that were uttered. I advised Mr.

Deputy Speaker privately—I assume he has left the chamber for a few moments and has been delayed—that I would raise this matter after the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills had finished his speech as, in all courtesy, I felt he should at least be allowed to finish.

I would ask Mr. Deputy Speaker and yourself to undertake to look at the record of the early part of the speech by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills, wherein he stated very clearly that members on this side of the House were voting on legislation and other measures in the House solely to protect their own jobs.

After reviewing the precedents during the last few minutes, this is clearly a breach of privilege of members of the House and it would cast a reflection not only on members on this side but on all members if statements such as that are allowed to continue. I draw your attention to Beauchesne, Citation 316(e) and 316(i). Citation 316(e) states:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in SO 35, it has been sanctioned by useage that a member, while speaking, must not—
> (e) impute bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged to a member;

And Citation 316(i) states:

> —reflect upon the past acts and proceedings of the House.

If you proceed to Citation 319(3), it states:

> In the House of Commons a member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any member or any members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case; or to use any profane or indecent language; or to question the acknowledged or undoubted powers of the House in a matter of privilege; or to reflect upon, argue against or in any manner call in question the past acts and proceedings of the House, or to speak in abusive and disrespectful terms of an Act of Parliament.

This last point is extremely crucial. It is outlined and documented in Erskine May, I believe page 153; there are many cases in British parliamentary history where members may not reflect upon votes which have already taken place in the House of Commons.

Finally, I would draw to your attention page 424 of Erskine May, where it states under the heading "Reflecting upon votes of the House":

> The objections to the practice of referring to past debates apply with greater force to reflections upon votes of the House, unless made for the purpose of justifying a motion that the vote be rescinded. Those reflections not only revive discussion upon questions already decided, but are wholly irregular, inasmuch as the member is himself included in, and bound by, a vote agreed to by a majority.

I sincerely feel that this kind of abuse of the rules cannot be allowed to continue if this place is to function in any serious way. We are guilty on all sides of the House of using extreme rhetoric at times to make our case. That is fully acceptable no matter how tiresome it may seem to hon. members and certainly to the public who view us on television each day. However, if this place is to continue to exist and hold the confidence of all Canadians, we must ensure that the rules, procedures and Standing Orders of the House are upheld.

I know the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills and I am sure he did not intend to break the rules of the House or reflect upon the procedures of the House. Therefore, I would ask him, with all respect, to withdraw those remarks immediately.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the whole basis of the case by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) concerned some allegation I made about their jobs. I did not say one word about their jobs or trying to retain their jobs. The Deputy Speaker, who was in the Chair immediately prior to you, considered the case and treated it with exactly the disdain it deserved. He made no ruling and just sat down because I had the floor. The objection by the hon. member for York East has no basis in fact, and since it was dealt with by the prior Speaker, I would also claim the privilege of autrefois acquis.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. ex-parliamentary secretary should pay a little more attention to the language that is used in Beauchesne and the other precedents he cites. I do not intend to prolong the debate on an opposition day on a spurious question of privilege, but if you look carefully you will find that while it is improper for a member to refer to the vote of another member—singular—there is nothing improper about referring to the vote—collectively—of a party or members belonging to a party.

On a point of order now Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a general disposition, if you are to inquire, that apart from the lead speakers in each party, speeches by members be limited to 15 minutes throughout the remainder of this debate.

Mr. Collenette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that you allowed the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to inveigle another point of order totally unrelated to the question of privilege. That being the case, perhaps I should explain. I thought I was clear earlier in my remarks that Mr. Deputy Speaker did not actually hear the words because he was engaged in conversation. I told him that I would raise it after the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills spoke. At the time I made the original intervention, Mr. Deputy Speaker had no other recourse than to make the decision he did because he did not hear what was being said.

I submit and would ask you, Mr. Speaker, not to resolve the matter at this time, but to look at the "blues" and the record and perhaps consider this matter in due course.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will recognize other hon. members if they see fit to seek the floor on this question of privilege. Obviously, I did want to recognize the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) who raised it and the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who properly wanted the occasion to comment on it. It is obvious that as the present incumbent of the chair I am in no position to make any decision now, not having heard the words used and not having access to either the "blues" or Hansard. Consequently, the Chair will take the question under advisement. If it appears appropriate to have the matter raised again, either by other hon. members or by the Chair tomorrow, then that can proceed.

The hon. member for York East has raised the point and has therefore protected his views in so far as having raised the matter immediately upon its occurrence. As I have said, I think it is self-evident that the present incumbent could not handle the matter without access to Hansard and so forth. If there are other hon. members who want to address themselves to the question of privilege and put their thoughts on the record with regard to the matter, I would certainly recognize them for that purpose. Otherwise, I will go to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). To avoid confusion, perhaps hon. members who seek the floor on the question of privilege might indicate to the Chair that that is what they wish to do. Otherwise, I will move on to the point of order.

I will recognize the hon. member for Yukon on the question of privilege. I might and should note that the hon. member has already spoken on the question of privilege and it is not customary to hear an hon. member twice. I have seen that happen in the House. I will recognize the hon. member for that purpose, but I would hope that we will try to keep to one intervention per hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong in allowing hon. members to speak more than once on a question of privilege, and our practices have allowed this for the 25 years I have been here. Those new innovations of interpretation have the unfortunate habit of becoming precedents when they have been imposed more than once.

I rose simply to say that the disposition of 15-minute speeches, which will allow more than the usual number of hon. members to participate in this very important debate, might very quickly disappear if we embark upon extended and doubtful questions of privilege.

Mr. Collenette: Blackmail!

Mr. Nielsen: It is not blackmail at all. In my view, the hon. member for York East just used an extremely unparliamentary term when he accused me of blackmail. Perhaps the Chair might take that under advisement, too, when considering this exchange.

Mr. Smith: Have we now reverted to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would like the House to do so, if that is agreeable.

Mr. Smith: Yes. This side of the House is agreeable to going along with the request of the opposition for 15-minute speeches.

Mr. Nielsen: "Suggestion".

Mr. Smith: I think the understanding was that the 30 minutes would apply to the mover of the motion and the first hon. member responding for the government, which is the norm under Standing Order 58. I do not believe it would apply to the hon. member speaking for the New Democratic Party, but I understood that we had agreed that that hon. member would be allowed 20 minutes—

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct.

Mr. Smith: —and that everyone speaking after the first three would then be limited to 15 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair sees some indication by hon. members that the suggestion of the hon. member for Yukon, which has been referred to in some detail by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), is agreeable to the House. I do not think I need summarize it further. Is the proposal of the hon. member for Yukon acceptable to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I was a bit unsure whether I would ever get the chance to speak to this motion. With all of the notices of privilege from the other side of the House, I just began to wonder whether or not there was some sort of privilege which would disqualify us from criticizing government policy.

The opposition motion before the House today is a very important one because it is an attempt to focus public attention upon the problem of unemployment among youth across the country. While it is important to discuss unemployment among youth across the country, we cannot, of course, do so in isolation. We must deal with the whole question of unemployment as it affects everyone and which is at such record levels today. When we deal with the question of unemployment among youth, we must deal with the fact that the government of the day is really abdicating its responsibility to manage the economy in a humane and just fashion.

I noted with interest that the first hon. member to speak for the Conservative Party really seemed to indicate that he was in favour of the government continuing to wash its hands of responsibility for economic matters. I guess that is why, when the recent Gallup poll came out asking Canadians whether or not there would be any difference in matters of economic policy if a Conservative government were in office rather than a Liberal government, the majority of Canadians indicated they recognized there would really be no difference. So while it is obviously time to defeat the Liberal government of the day, Canadians will have to look elsewhere for new economic policies and not to the PCs.

The economy today is in one horrific mess. We simply have to remind ourselves of the fact that bankruptcies are at a very high rate. Small businesses are closing daily. Large enterprises are threatened by the present economic recession. Lay-offs continue unabated. These are announced quite regularly and just seem to continue to mount. Mortgages are extremely expensive, so that only a very small percentage of Canadians can afford to buy a home. Those who presently own homes or who have mortgages are struggling to keep those homes. Many people are having to sell homes for which they have worked and dreamed about for very long periods of time. Government revenues are down because of the present economic recession, and with these revenues down, we begin to get threats to public service salaries. The quality of services which government provides to people is threatened, whether it be in the area of education, health, or in the amount of unemployment insurance available to people. New services are put on hold, whether it be adequate pensions for people or adequate daycare across the country.

The general economic malaise really cuts across all kinds of economic indicators. The one which stands out most, of course, is the fact of unemployment, which is at its highest level since the depression of the 1930s, with over 1.25 million people unemployed today. Things are so bad that even the Liberal caucus seems to begin to recognize the severity of the situation, and not only backbenchers, but also even some cabinet ministers. We recall, for example, the letter from the Quebec MPs who called upon the government to stimulate the economy. I bring to mind the recent document of the Liberal party caucus committee on economic development, which recently became public, pointing out the need for "radically alternative ways of revitalizing the economy and of offsetting the current hard times".

It is in the midst of all this political, social and economic trouble that young people today are graduating from universities, seeking employment and not finding it. Other young people are out of universities for the summer, seeking employment so that they can afford to go back to university in the fall, and are not finding that employment. It is not only those young people who have chosen to go to university who are out of work and who need to work, but, as well, young people who are simply out of work today and who are looking for jobs. We should consider that, of the total number of Canadians unemployed in Canada today, close to half are under 25 years of age. For example, in April's statistics, there were 1,233,000 people unemployed and 508,000, or nearly half of them, were between the ages of 15 and 24. Last month, the seasonally adjusted general rate of unemployment was 9.6 per cent while, on a seasonally adjusted basis, youth unemployment was significantly higher, at 16.6 per cent. If one looks at the unemployment rate among youth on an unadjusted basis, one finds that it was at 18 per cent.

If we take into account the hidden unemployed across this country, those who have simply given up looking for work and who are no longer actively looking for jobs because the jobs are not there, we find that the unemployment rate among young people in this country jumps up to the astronomical figure of 25.1 per cent. We have some 777,000 young people looking for work today. When we add to that the summer students looking for work so they can return to university in the fall as well as the new graduates, the situation is clearly intolerable.

We are threatening the future of this country, making it so difficult for young people today that we are going to rob them of any hope of participating in society in a positive manner. We will rob people of the opportunity to return to university in the fall. Young people are being robbed of the opportunity to contribute to society in a positive way.

Given the severity of the youth unemployment situation, we expected some real innovative and tough action by the government. Instead, we have a government which is clinging to the economic strategy outlined in last November's budget. That budget as an economic instrument is clearly and totally ineffective as we look at the present circumstances, with over a million unemployed as well as the large number of youth who are unemployed.

I wish to review the budget of last November. I think it can be quite fairly described as a tax grab, in the name, ironically, of social justice. It has hurt many ordinary Canadians. It even attempted to tax dental and health plans. The budget had an economic strategy based on energy megaprojects which have now fallen to the ground. They are not going to be the driving force in the economy which the budget anticipated. However, the government has not yet replaced those megaprojects with any other major and important economic stimulus.

The budget of last November cited inflation as the number one problem. Today inflation is continuing to go up and unemployment along with it. In citing inflation as the number one problem, the budget outlined a fiscal and monetary arrangement which would keep interest rates up and ostensibly restrain public expenditures, thereby failing to stimulate the economy. There is no help in the economic policy of the government for the unemployed of this country. There is certainly no real help for those young people who are unemployed.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) made a number of announcements with regard to job measures. I want to highlight one of those announcements. On March 11 this year the minister announced the addition of some $20 million to the summer Canada program, the federal government's student employment program. This was to add 10,000 young people to the employment rolls. It was to bring the total under the federal job employment program this summer up to 53,000 young people.

If we are generous and accept the figures of the government with regard to employment, we should compare that measure with the real need. I wish to refer to a recent article in The Globe and Mail, a well-known, respected and objective journal in this country, dated May 19, 1982. It deals with the question of youth unemployment. The measures of the government pale by comparison with what is needed. I quote from the article:

> Employment counsellors and economists cannot remember when the job outlook for students was as dismal as it is this year, and they are predicting that about one-sixth of all students in the labour force this summer will be unable to find work.

One out of every six students will be out of work this summer!

A Globe and Mail survey of federal and provincial government forecasters indicates that an estimated 1.2 million students across Canada will be in the labour force in July and that about 16 per cent, or 200,000 of them won't be able to find a job.

In contrast, the jobless rate among students was 11.5 per cent in July, 1981.

The article recites some of the specifics of the situation leading to the fact that this summer there will be 200,000 students out of work. It refers to some of the largest Canadian companies, which together usually provide thousands of summer jobs, which have either eliminated or sharply reduced their hiring of students this year. There are specific examples given. I quote:

Noranda Mines Ltd., which usually employs about 2,500 students, will probably hire only about 1,000 this summer.

Stelco Inc. usually hires about 800 students at its steel plant in Hamilton, but none will be employed this year because of lays-offs in the regular workforce.

Dome Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary will employ about 100 students, compared with 500 last year.

Bell Canada will have about 200 fewer summer jobs for Ontario students. Last year, it hired 750 students.

The number of plant jobs for students at Alcan Smelters and Chemicals Ltd. in Jonquiere, Que., will be cut from 275 to 50, and the company's smelter in Kitimat, B.C., will employ 80 students compared with 200 last year.

Both Abitibi-Price Inc. and British Columbia Forest Products Ltd. will hire only a small fraction of the several hundred students each employed in past summers.

Hawker Siddeley Canada Inc. will not be hiring any students this summer. The company usually employs about 500.

Inco Metals Co., which hired 414 summer employees in Ontario last year, does not plan to hire any students this year.

Major employers who normally in the summer months would hire significant numbers of students have either cut back considerably or will not be employing any students at all. The article indicates the basis for the statistics for this prediction of 200,000 students being unemployed this summer. I quote:

The Globe survey was based on private estimates by senior officers of the various provincial departments of labour and regional economists with the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

These people, who are professionals and know the employment situation, have reached a conclusion, and it is given in this article as follows:

Patrick O'Rourke, manager of employment programs with the B.C. Department of Labour, said there will be few jobs for students in the west coast forest industry this summer because of lay-offs and production slowdowns—

An economist with the CEIC in British Columbia said the jobless rate for students in the province could be between 18 and 20 per cent this summer. The rate was 9.6 per cent last July.

Barbara Deters, communications director for the Department of Advanced Education and Manpower in Alberta, said she has heard stories about companies withdrawing earlier job offers to students.

Those students who previously had employment offers are now having them withdrawn.

A research officer with the Saskatchewan Department of Labour estimated that the unemployment rate for students in the province could reach 12 per cent this summer. It was 9.1 per cent last July.

Marion Leavens, youth consultant with the CEIC in Manitoba, said the commission has had to lower its projections of student placements this year. "We were hoping for 10,000 placements this year, but now we are expecting about 8,500."

• (1600)

So whereas Manpower itself seeks to place students in jobs, we get predictions from the same Manpower officials that placements this summer will be down. Of course, that is not surprising considering that we are in a very deep recession. The article continues:

Roger White, a spokesman for the Ontario regional office of the CEIC, said placements through student employment centres also will probably decrease in the province this year to 125,000 from 134,400 in 1981.

So it is not only in Manitoba but in Ontario that we are getting predictions of fewer placements this summer than last summer. The article goes on:

An economist with the Ontario Manpower Commission said the jobless rate for students in the province could be 16 per cent, compared with 11.9 per cent last July.

So in Ontario we are talking about an unemployment rate among students of some 16 per cent. This is the industrial heartland of the country where we would normally expect unemployment would be at its lowest. Here it is projected at some 16 per cent. Again:

An economist with the CEIC in Quebec said the unemployment rate for students in the province could be 17 per cent.

So it is even higher in Quebec, some 17 per cent of the students. There is this general comment with regard to the level of unemployment:

Estimates of student unemployment in the Atlantic Provinces are: 30 to 35 per cent in Newfoundland, about 18 per cent in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and between 13 and 15 per cent in Prince Edward Island.

So this regional survey which was done by The Globe and Mail has indicated that for all of the regions in the country, after going to professional people and asking for their predictions, unemployment among students this summer is going to be severe and specific companies which normally would hire large numbers of students have reduced their hirings or are no longer hiring at all. The general over-all prediction is for some 200,000 students to be unemployed this summer.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this is an intolerable situation. It is a situation which is in no way answered by the announcements that the minister has made for youth employment thus far. I hope that if he speaks today he will be able to announce some further activities in terms of youth employment for this summer so that these very severe needs can be met in a much better fashion.

Let me use just another example of the inadequacy of the government's actions to date. In each federal riding for each member there is money provided under the Canada summer program for local community projects. In my riding, for example, some $79,000 was allocated while the need was for some $409,892 for these kinds of projects. The students were there, they needed the jobs, the work was needed to be done in the community, yet we got less than one-fifth of the amount of money that was needed by that one riding.

If you look at those statistics for each region across the country, I am sure each member can demonstrate how the money that is being provided by the government for youth employment and to meet local needs is just nowhere of the magnitude that will meet the need.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, what the government is doing for student summer employment this summer is just too little. We need further action and we need it now. What the government is doing in regard to unemployment in general is inadequate. With one and a quarter million people unemployed, nearly half of whom are young people, the economic situation is disastrous.

It is time for a new economic strategy. It is time for a new budget. It is time for an adequate program of employment for students. It is time to moderate interest rates. It is time for some economic stimulus so that we can get out of this recession. It is time to stimulate consumer demand which is at an all-time low. It is time, finally, to put in place a long-term industrial strategy that will see Canada processing its natural resources, rather than just selling them off on international markets and leaving Canadians as hewers of wood and drawers of water, and at this time as simply unemployed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the opportunity to debate this resolution. It deals with a concern that everyone in this House shares, that there is a serious problem relating to the job market for young people. I hope that during the course of this debate we will all be able to come to some resolution, some shared purpose, some shared direction, as to how we can deal with it.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, we did not start out too well. I listened with great care to the contributions made by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper). Once again we were caught between two extremes. We heard from the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills give the classic textbook analysis of what is wrong with the world, the analysis that we have been hearing from the Conservative Party for some 50 or 60 years; that is, if only you get government out of everything, all problems will be solved.

I suppose the hon. member's own enthusiasm has been cured by the recent conference in Toronto of the Conservative Party. From what I read, it seemed to endorse and adopt those policies being followed by President Reagan in the United States and by Prime Minister Thatcher in England. They have led to such wonderful economic results! We know how well the policies endorsed by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills and carried out in practice by the Conservative Party in Great Britain are working—they have a 12.6 unemployment rate! So, Mr. Speaker, I suppose if we were to follow with some degree of fidelity the purposes and objectives set forward by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills, we could look forward to a much higher unemployment rate; because that is what he is endorsing.

I know we cannot take it too seriously because I am sure that does not reflect the position of the Conservative Party. But we have no way of knowing, because at the party convention less than 5 per cent of their delegates managed to get to the workshop on unemployment questions. That shows that their commitment to and their interest in the subject leaves something to be desired.

We do not know exactly where the Conservative Party stands because in an important moment in our economic history, when we are all seized of the degree of severity and the degree of concern expressed by Canadians about the issue of unemployment, the party which sees itself as the alternative to government and which has been instructed by its leader to sit in congress and come up with solutions, could get only 38 members to that convention. Only 38 members out of 800 managed to find their way to the workshop to deal with these matters of great importance. So although the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills indicates that the represents the future and that the young people are flocking to their banners, they were simply not flocking to that Saturday workshop because less than 5 per cent of them could be found. We have to assume that the particular orthodoxy and theology of the right that the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills has once again put forward is his point of view. We accept it as that, but it is worth examining what he really means by it. It leaves a strong antagonism towards increased government expenditure and intervention.

It is important for Canadians watching this debate in this House to ask whether, in effect, he is advocating that the 70 per cent of the expenditures of the federal budget which goes to transfer payments should be cut back. In other words, should we cut back on help to the elderly for their guaranteed income supplement and their old age pensions? Should we cut back on provincial government aid to education, which I have heard him espouse from the platform should be increased? Should we cut back on the aid that we could provide under the CAP program to the disabled, to the people on social assistance? Is he advocating that we cut back all those transfer payments that represent about 70 per cent of total federal expenditure?

We presume that we cannot take him as meaning that in that area; he would not want to cut back on those forms of assistance. So we must say, look at the other part of the budget which may be discretionary. Would he want to cut back on the aid that we provide to Mitel Corporation to establish 2,000 jobs in New Brunswick through the economic development program? Does he want to cut back on aid to the Export Development Corporation to help provide 20,000 jobs in the province of Quebec through export assistance? Is that what he is advocating? We never hear what hon. members opposite would do differently. What would they cut out?

Mr. Taylor: Cut back on advertising and cut back on metric.

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member says cut back on advertising. The hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) was a member of a parliamentary committee that advocated more advertising in the training area. Now he has changed his mind. That committee said that one of the important objectives of the federal government should be to encourage young people to develop higher skills and that we should make our programs more widely known.

As a responsible minister, I took that advice. We provided the programs and now he is against them. I guess it amounts to a matter of what they recommend on Tuesday they forget on Thursday. They have no consistency.

Let me examine the positions put forward by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills on behalf of his party. What he is saying, basically, is that they should do nothing—cut back government expenditures, cut back everything, have no government intervention, do nothing, stand still and shrink the budget. That is what he was saying but now he denies it. If he denies it, that means he is contradicting what he said before. Now we are more confused than ever about the position of the Conservative Party. What he said initially he now says forget; he wants to say something else. Perhaps he wants to correct himself and say we should expand government programs and put more money into projects. I suppose we have to conclude that the Conservative Party does not really know where it stands.

Now let me come to the contribution of the New Democratic Party. I compliment the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James on his fine reading of the article in The Globe and Mail. He repeated word for word the article in what he called that "objective journal of opinion". That is a contradiction in itself. I was very pleased to hear what The Globe and Mail had to offer but I was curious to hear what the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James might have to offer. But there was nothing—the cupboard was bare.

When we got down to the hard reality of what the New Democratic Party would propose in order to deal with the issue of unemployment among young people, all we heard was: "Let's have a new industrial strategy; let's spend more money; let's stimulate and restrain at the same time". That is a fine set of resolutions to come from a party which steeped itself in trying to develop the image of what they think is the intellectual, political, leading edge of Canada. We heard about a new industrial strategy. No content, no details, no fine tuning except a large rendition from The Globe and Mail and then some very vague suggestions that we have a new industrial strategy.

Mr. Paproski: They are waiting for Dennis McDermott.

Mr. Axworthy: I guess they have not received their marching orders because the convention is not yet over. We will have to wait until next Thursday to find out what the NDP is thinking.

Mr. de Jong: You are getting boring, boring, boring.

Mr. Axworthy: Nothing could be more boring than having to listen to a reading from The Globe and Mail for the second time and then hear nothing but a number of very general, vague, amorphous suggestions that what we need is a new industrial strategy.

I will try to point out the things that we are attempting to do and then suggest things that the members of the House, in unity, might do to deal with the problems faced by young people in the job market. Large numbers of young people are unemployed and that is something that this party does not tolerate any more than the other party. Early today hon. members opposite chided Liberals for making suggestions, but this just shows that the opposition cannot be very serious about wanting a full and open debate.

Perhaps the most useful and important suggestions have come from members of this party, who have looked at the problem seriously rather than repeating articles from The Globe and Mail or from the Friedman textbook ad nauseam. Members of this party have discussed the matter in great depth and have consulted with experts across the country. They do not follow orthodoxies. They do not pick up a textbook from a chamber of commerce meeting and repeat it in the House. They are trying to come to grips with the problem in an honest and intelligent way. Surely they should not be chided and the government should not be chided for listening to them. They are Members of Parliament doing their job, trying to come to grips with a serious problem and present answers to the minister. That seems to be the obvious, rational and proper thing for a Member of Parliament to do.

I would have to say again that it is curious and passing strange that the opposition finds, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in question period, that the only things they can offer are things that members of this party have developed. I compliment members of this party for being so generous and charitable in sharing their ideas with members of the opposition so that they may have something to say in question period. We would be a lot better off if hon. members opposite would forget for a moment their entrapment in their own orthodoxies, in their own theologies and come to grips with the same kind of honest appraisal of the situation, using real facts and dealing with real problems, rather than trying to deal with a world that they have conjured up within their own little crystal balls.

Mr. Thacker: Socialism is the problem.

Mr. Axworthy: Now we have the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills saying that socialism is the problem. In his speech he was using the standard of 1968 when everything was good. He kept asking the rhetorical question, why? The reason is that we had Liberal governments before 1968 which had brought in all the measures he thought were so good. I would amend his comments to say that from 1968 until this year this country has had the strongest record of job creation of any country in the industrial world. We created more jobs for more people than any other country. We were creating jobs at the rate of about 4 per cent per year, or 350,000 jobs per year. During that period the government that is now being chastised was creating more jobs than any other country in the world.

This simply points out what we have had to repeat time and time again. It is not the commitment of this government to job creation that has changed. We are dealing with very different economic conditions. We are dealing with conditions which affect every single country in the world.

We are not here to lay blame. I know there is deepseated paranoia on the part of the Conservatives. They always want to see conspiracies in everything. There always has to be someone to blame. That is the way their minds work. They go around pointing fingers at who is to blame. We are here to debate solutions. We are not interested in trying to waggle the finger and say, "We caught you doing something nasty". We are here to find creative solutions. We are here to debate what might be done to help young people. We do not deal in this world of paranoia that hon. members opposite seem to enjoy so much.

Since 1968 we have been responsible for creating far more work than other countries. Now we are saying that we should deal with the reality. That paragon of countries which the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills so honours and thinks is doing all the right things, the United States of America, with all its policies of cut-back and restraint, now has an unemployment rate well over 9 per cent. It faces the same kind of problems we do. The hon. member uses, if I may be allowed to say so, some of the most ludicrous examples to say that somehow they are doing things right and we are doing things wrong. For example, he said the Canadian government made a serious mistake in the energy field by keeping consumer prices low. The Canadian people obviously did not think we made a mistake because they kept voting for this government which is committed to keeping prices low.

He also says the problem is that we did not know what we were doing and that is why the automotive industry is facing the problems it is. That is an interesting proposition, Mr. Speaker, one that deserves some analysis. If that is the case, then the United States, which went to the world price for energy about three and a half years ago, should not be facing problems in the automotive industry. If one follows his logic, you have to say the U.S. is charging world price, we kept ours below world price; therefore their automobile industry should be healthy and ours should be sick. But the reality is somewhat different, Mr. Speaker. We know that the U.S. industry is really sick because consumers' preferences have changed and, what is more important, the large automobile manufacturers—those wonderful managers which the hon. member likes to put on a pedestal—made serious managerial mistakes by not increasing automation and developing new products in order to compete. That is the reality of the situation. We say this kind of argument, Mr. Speaker, is simply not based on fact and reality. It is based on theory, theology, orthodoxy, which we cannot share because we want to come to grips with the real problems.

What are we doing to help young people in these circumstances, Mr. Speaker? My own department will be spending close to $800 million this year to deal with a wide variety of measures directed toward young people in the labour market. Of the three million young people coming into the market, 2.5 million will get jobs virtually immediately, within the first 30 days. The others have available to them counselling services, mobility grants and training programs in order to provide for the upgrading of skills and placement in jobs. We have 50 employment centres in universities to provide specialized counselling and placement services for young people. We have opened 400 special youth employment centres across Canada which will have provided placements for over 300,000 Canadian youth this year and last. We did not hear members of the opposition talking about the valuable service provided to young people by those centres.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: We are spending a great deal of time and effort going to employers and asking for their assistance, asking them to use those centres as the forum in which young people can be given assistance to find jobs in the private sector. The government has made that commitment.

In addition, as I have said several times, we have concluded that perhaps the most useful and effective support the government can give to young people coming into the job market is to provide them with training which is relevant to their job needs. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills wants to know what we are doing. We are prepared to spend over $1 billion on training programs which will affect over 300,000 Canadians, 70 per cent of whom are young people. If that is one of the programs which the hon. member wants us to cut back, if that is part of his "pull in the belt" philosophy, then he flies in the face of the opinion of young people themselves. What they want most sincerely is an opportunity to be trained in a skill for a job that will be there. That is exactly what we are doing. We are putting in place a new training program.

If members of this House want action, if they want something they can do immediately to help young people obtain employment, then I have a suggestion for them. They can agree today in this debate to accept the training legislation we introduced for first reading last Friday and have it passed within a day. We will then have hundreds of thousands of young people going into new training positions. Are the members of the opposition prepared to follow through on that recommendation? They want action; well, here it is. If we get their agreement, the bill can be debated within one day, go to committee, come back and be passed, and we will provide thousands of new job-training positions for Canadians. They can co-operate with us rather than standing up and raising vague questions about industrial strategy. I say to the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), and to others who are here, discuss it in caucus tomorrow; give us a chance and we will have tens of thousands of young people being trained for new jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Why did you cripple the oil and gas industry?

Mr. Axworthy: We would like to have the help and assistance of members opposite, and we are asking for it. They can make a major contribution to the employment picture for young people. I think we can go beyond that, Mr. Speaker. We have to recognize that we are in special times and special efforts need to be made. I see the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) in her seat. I think she made a very valuable contribution last week in question period when she said that we should undertake special activities to try to obtain more jobs for young people. I agree with her, so we are putting in place a special communications program for young people. In particular, we are going out to talk to the employers of this country.

Mr. Keeper: But not hire them.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James. Does he give it a chance, is he prepared to go back to his own riding and talk to employers door to door, as I have been doing, and tell them that students need their help, will they register their jobs in our employment centre? Oh, no, he does not want that kind of thing. He is prepared to deny it before he even gives us a chance.

An hon. Member: You made the same speech three years ago.

Mr. Axworthy: With that kind of negative attitude, how do hon. members expect us to be successful when we cannot get Members of Parliament like the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James—

Some hon. Members: Get serious.

Mr. Axworthy: —to go into his own riding and ask employers to make a special effort to ensure there are jobs for students? I do not think the students in his riding are going to be too pleased at his attitude.

I agree with the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands; I think the effort should be made, and we will do our part. We will undertake to see what we can provide in the way of additional jobs in government departments. I will personally undertake to write to major employers across Canada and ask them to re-examine the situation to see what they can do to provide additional jobs. I would ask Members of Parliament on both sides of the House to do the same with business people and employers in their own ridings. I think we have to make a special effort and that we can combine our efforts in this area and show Canadians this is not a partisan issue which divides us. We can show that we are prepared on behalf of young people in this country to work together in seeing what we can do to develop new job opportunities. We have provided a network through our employment centres, and we are prepared to work with Members of Parliament in their own ridings so that we can mount a special campaign to bring in new jobs for young people.

Members of Parliament can go back to their ridings to work with provincial governments, many of whom have cut back in their own job-creation programs. I would point out that we have added to ours; provincial governments have cut back on theirs. There are two provincial exceptions, and in this connection I would like to compliment the government of Ontario for its budget last week which added a few additional dollars for youth job creation. But many other provinces have cut back. Again, I suggest that Members of Parliament talk to their provincial counterparts in their ridings and ask them for some special effort on the part of their governments, rather than having to suffer these cutbacks. The federal government has made that effort.

We are saying in this debate that there are a number of things the government can do and that members of the opposition can do. They can pass the training bill and hon. members can work with us to provide new recruitment and job placement. We can begin to look at ways in which we can open up the job market for Canadians and develop an economic policy, one that has not fallen into the trap of the orthodoxy of the right. In other words, to cut back on social programs and programs that help people. We have maintained ours and retained them. At the same time we must recognize that we must not have a wild spending spree as advocated by the NDP, which would force up inflation and force up interest rates even higher.

We are trying to do what the Liberal Party has tried to do for generations, and that is to undertake a balanced approach, not one with simple, easy panaceas but one that is based on constructive, rational and useful thinking.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate with respect to youth unemployment. I was particularly impressed by the speech of my colleague, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). He dealt with the government's global economic policies, to which I will refer, but I want to talk also about the government's policies with respect to job training. I want to speak about what I consider to be the government's feeble efforts concerning unemployment.

About three or four weeks ago a study was submitted to the government of the province of Ontario and to metropolitan Toronto. This study is entitled "Youth: The Forgotten Generation". The minister and others may be aware of this study. It has to do with skill training and apprenticeship programs in metropolitan Toronto.

It is too early yet for any of the recommendations to be acted upon, but in my opinion this study was important because it clearly identified youth as a group or sector in our society who are suffering far more than we have heretofore understood. We all assumed that certain policies had been carried on by the federal government and by the provincial and municipal governments for a number of years, and we assumed that by and large programs were in place to look after the youth of the country. Therefore, in the natural course of events our youth would be able to enter the labour market and compete well for jobs, not only in this country but throughout the world.

This study, and I commend it to the minister, shows that none of that has happened. Despite the minister's huffing and puffing about how well he and his colleagues in cabinet and the federal government do, those things are just not happening. I will read three paragraphs from this study which show exactly what it means to these people. They are as follows:

> To want to work and be unable to find it is painful at any age, but youth unemployment has particular effects, both on the individual and on society. A lengthy period of frustration and enforced idleness when a person first enters the labour force can disable him or her psychologically and in terms of experience for later employment . . . those who encounter serious difficulties in their formative years (from 16 to 24) fail to acquire the experience, training, competence and credentials that would earn them a regular job yielding a reasonable income in their adult years.
> In the past society looked to its youth to be the future strength of communities. But even then too many youth were left behind. Now the problem has grown worse. The aged and aging, the training of high-tech workers and other special needs groups gain most of the attention.
> Today's youth are being forgotten as we are distracted by continual economic crises and rapidly changing technology. Personal alienation and the risks of social unrest have become substantial and appear to be worsening.

That is a report of four weeks ago. Statistics, particularly as they relate to young people, bear out the grave comments in that report. Youth unemployment rates in this country are double—not just some minor percentage higher—the national average. Unemployment rates are now running close to 18 per cent for people between the ages of 16 and 24.

In 1981, although people between the ages of 16 and 24 made up only 26 per cent of the work force, they accounted for 46 per cent of the unemployed. A total of 238,000 jobs were lost between February, 1981, and March, 1982, and 52 per cent, on 118,000, were jobs held by people between the ages of 18 and 24.

When we talk about youth unemployment, it cannot be dealt with glibly by simply accusing other people of not doing the right thing. Before I outline what I think ought to be done—the minister has heard this before, but despite this he keeps saying that no one puts forward suggestions and continues not to listen—let me say that when we talk about youth unemployment we are not talking about some strange breed of people who do not belong to our society. People between the ages of 16 and 24 do want to work. They want to work for exactly the same reasons that women in our society want to work, for exactly the same reasons that handicapped people in our society want to work and for exactly the same reasons that everyone in our society wants to work.

There are three reasons. They are simple enough that even the minister can understand them. First, people need money to purchase the things they need in order to carry out their responsibilities. Second, people want to make a contribution that is not to be lost. Let me expand on that point. If you find at your very first attempt as a young person entering the work force that no door is open to you—it is not only a question of money because we have social programs which offer some money when people are unemployed—and you find there is no contribution you can make, a scar is formed which lasts a long time. Third, a first job opportunity provides a strong force in the shaping of a human personality.

People want to work, not only for money, not only to make a contribution, but to know who they are. Anyone who raises kids between the ages of 16 and 24—if I could call them kids—knows that. Outside of the question of money and contribution, the most important thing they need to know is what kind of people they are. It is probably not appropriate for me to bring in three of the Crombie children who are in that age group. But when young people are looking for employment this summer or looking at what kind of jobs they will get into in their first job in the work force, the single, most important thing they need to know is whether or not they will be able to get a job which will tell them a little bit about who they are. The kind of employment one has determines in large part the kind of person one becomes.

When we talk about youth unemployment, we are not talking about another one of the minister's statistics, nor can the question be dealt with by another one of the minister's announcements. We are dealing here with something very important because we are talking about the first time a person tries to make a connection with the community in terms of contribution, the making of money and the finding out of what kind of a person he or she is.

What is the problem with youth unemployment? It is not complicated. I might say to the minister that there are two elements to it. First, there are not enough jobs. It is that simple, and that is the first reason. There are not enough jobs in this country. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills made it clear that the first thing the minister and the government should understand is that the reason we have youth unemployment is the same reason we have unemployment in every other sector of our society—there are not enough jobs.

People need jobs. That people need jobs is not a complicated theory. The record of the minister's government does not have to be recalled by me. It has been recalled by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills and it will continue to be recalled by every other speaker. It is recalled in the question period daily in this House of Commons and it is mentioned from podiums right across the country. We have a government with an economic record which is the worst we have had in most people's memory, certainly since the depression of the 1930s.

The first problem with youth unemployment is that there are not enough jobs because the government has created an economic climate in which people will not invest. We should not miss the point that people will not invest because they do not trust the goverment to look after their investment. If people do not invest, we will not have jobs. The government's energy policy brought the energy industry to its knees. What it has done in the west it will now do in the east.

The manufacturing sector, which affects employment opportunities in the heartland of the country, in Ontario and Quebec, is also on its knees because of the government's record. I will not go through all the indicators. The minister wishes the boy upon the stairs would go away, but he will not until the government decides that it is not good enough to put its head in the sand waiting for the Americans to come along with a solution. Also it is not good enough to deny the fact that there is a problem.

Until the government decides that there is a problem, that there are not enough jobs or a climate for investment, we will continue to have the problem faced by the youth of the country; that is, there will not be a sufficient number of jobs for people between the ages of 16 and 24. Also we will continue to have an unemployment rate of 18 per cent. The minister should hang his head in shame.

Mr. Tousignant: What suggestions do you have?

Mr. Crombie: I hear a noise over there about suggestions. I have some suggestions. My first suggestion deals with the kinds of jobs which should be related to the educational system. This is a 15-minute debate and I only have four minutes remaining, so I will make five suggestions. The first is that the minister ought to consider a change in his understanding of the educational system so that there is a more flexible system of training. Last Friday he brought forward and tabled a training bill. Of course, we will support that bill which deals with training, particularly because the minister and his department have spent so long considering the matter. First there was Bill C-23 and then there was Bill C-67. They are still on the Order Paper, and now we have a new bill. We have not been holding it back; it is the minister. We need to bring back the link between training and work which was lost in the 1960s and 1970s. I might add that it was never brought back together by the federal ministry when it funded all the community colleges in the country. It is time that it was.

Second, we need an apprenticeship program so that there are more in-service rather than pre-service programs. We need to expand, not simply nudge along a little, counselling services in the country. If the minister brings forth anything on counselling he will do good because counselling has failed every neighbourhood, town, village and city in Canada. The link between work and training has been lost as educational systems and schools built up bureaucracies.

Third, there must be co-operation between the federal government and the provinces and municipalities. I should like to refer to an example of what can be done. A certain municipality, a fishing village in Denmark, was faced with a situation where it had some unemployed people. Rather than pay out the amount it would pay for the jobless, it created various jobs. Rather than import the boxes needed to pack fish, it began to hire people between the ages of 18 and 23 to manufacture the boxes. Then they became involved in repairing furniture and toys for schools, particularly for kindergarten classes. They did carpentry work, gardening, recycling projects, painting, and odd jobs; they worked with old people and so on. The point I want to make is that the national government of Denmark did not become involved in the actual operation of the program. It provided some funds which allowed local talent to figure out the best way to do it. This is why time and again we on this side of the House have insisted it does not matter how much money the minister says he will put into a program, the billions in figures which he uses or how many announcements he makes. He can do it only by co-operation with the provinces and the municipalities. The training bill which he brought forward will only be used in a useful way if the government understands that it cannot be done from Ottawa. The only thing Ottawa can do well is to create an environment within which those who can do the job do it.

Finally, if the government and the minister would announce less, think a little more and try to co-operate a little more, not only would other people trust him but even the minister's department would begin to trust him. Then he would not have to run around trying to figure out where to put ombudsmen to look after their mistakes. We have a situation now where the minister no longer has the support of his own department. He needs to do something soon to re-establish his credibility in the country and certainly in the House. Those of us who represent the rest of the country look forward with anticipation to the debate on the training bill.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the proposals made by the previous speaker, especially concerning in-service or on-the-job training and apprenticeship programs, and I shall be elaborating presently on those very valid proposals which are, in fact, included in the recommendations of the report prepared by the Special Committee on Employment Opportunities for the '80s, under the title "Work for Tomorrow."

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I may point out that it is fairly obvious our present economic situation cannot but have a disastrous effect on youth employment. When the unemployment rate rises among the labour force as a whole, logically, and unfortunately, there is a directly proportional increase in unemployment among young people. In fact, now that the unemployment rate for young people up to the age of 25 revolves around 16.5 per cent, which is twice the national average, it is entirely appropriate that the House should have an opportunity to discuss this extremely important subject.

Not long ago, a Montreal newspaper, following a recommendation by the Quebec Minister of Education that the passing mark in schools be raised from 50 to 60 per cent, reported that young people who were protesting against the minister's recommendation were doing so simply because they had lost confidence in the system and therefore did not see why they should make the required effort at school to obtain a diploma in order to get a job, since they assumed no jobs would be available anyway. I think all this is a reflection of the difficult times we are experiencing today, and that the passing mark debate in Quebec schools—which has a direct connection with today's subject—demonstrates how distressed these young people are about the economic situation and especially about prospects for employment once they finish their schooling. That being said, I believe we must see these things within their general context. It is true that youth unemployment is excessively high, but perhaps it would also be useful to make a distinction between the percentage due to the economic situation and the percentage due to the very nature of youth unemployment. I may point out that in a study it was shown that between 1976 and 1979, youth unemployment averaged 13.7 per cent, while during the same period, the percentage was 7.2 for adult women and 4.7 for adult men. Furthermore, the turnover rate was 5.9 per cent for young people, but 3 per cent for adult women and 1.8 per cent for adult men. What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that, although youth unemployment today is twice the rate observed among the labour force in general, this is, in fact, merely a continuation of a trend that was observed earlier and is an indication of the specific labour market adjustment problems found among young people. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the same report by the Dodge task force pointed out that 50 per cent of youth unemployment was concentrated among 10 per cent of the youth labour force. In other words, 10 per cent of this population, because of the difficulty they experienced in finding work or adjusting to the labour market environment, represented 50 per cent of the total number of unemployed youth. We have no reason to believe that the situation has changed much today, because the percentages were averaged over five years. And furthermore, when these young people succeeded in finding a job, in 90 per cent of the cases they lost it after a few months.

Now, what conclusions should be drawn from these few statistics I have just given you, Mr. Speaker? I can see two. First of all, in today's debate, we must, and I have said this before, see these things in their general context, and second, young people are experiencing unemployment and they are being adversely affected by the economic situation, but also by structural problems, namely, the labour market adjustment problems of young people. Consequently, it is imperative that we take this opportunity to find ways of taking corrective action and to seek appropriate solutions to help young people with specific learning problems to enter the labour market. The previous speaker mentioned there were not enough jobs in Canada. That is true but, paradoxically, we have a shortage of skilled manpower, a problem that was already identified in the report by the Special Committee on Employment Opportunities for the '80s. In the House, much has been said, and much more will be said about training, since last Friday the minister tabled Bill C-115, the purpose of which reads as follows, and I quote Section 3:

> 3. The purpose of this act is to establish a national program to provide occupational training for the labour force and thereby to better meet the need for skills created by a changing economy and to increase the earning and employment potential of individual workers.

I referred just now to the Dodge report, which had ordered a study made in Ontario. It said that out of a sample group of 100 businesses—the study was prepared by the Ontario Ministry of Colleges and Universities—61 per cent of the firms had in-house training programs. The firms in question indicated they had no trouble recruiting employees and also that their training programs paid for themselves, because they filled the firm's requirements for skilled manpower. However, of the remaining group of firms included in the study, 84 per cent indicated they had trouble recruiting skilled manpower, 61 per cent indicated they had trouble recruiting employees and finally, they indicated that the only reason why they had no training program was that they did not have the financial resources to do so. In addition, they indicated that they would agree to establish such programs if government assistance were provided. The obvious conclusion is that if the government were to shift the emphasis from its institutional training program, which has been a spending priority to date, to business—as we have started to do, for instance, in the microelectronic sector, and as will probably be done once Bill C-115 has gone through the legislative mill—it would probably be much easier to deal with the labour market entry and adjustment problems experienced by young people who lack the required skills, instead of resorting to direct job-creation programs which are temporary by nature, although certainly useful in the present economic situation, since they provide summer jobs at least for tens of thousands of young people.

In conclusion, we have, on the one hand, a structural breakdown of youth unemployment, and on the other, a functional breakdown of the situation among business firms, namely, the firm that does provide courses or on-the-job training opportunities and the firm that does not. On the one hand, we have a group of young people—the exact present percentage is not available, but according to the study covering the years from 1976 to 1979, this group represents the 10 per cent of unemployed youth which had continuing problems in obtaining employment—which in 1976-79 represented 50 per cent of unemployed youth, and on the other hand, we have businesses that are either reluctant to set up on-the-job training programs or do not have the financial resources but would agree to receiving government financial assistance in setting up such programs. All of this should be seen within the more general perspective that Canada is suffering from a general shortage of manpower for skilled blue-collar-type jobs. To fill these jobs, for many years we have had to import skilled workers such as bricklayers, masons and others from European countries. In fact, if we could manage to train young people for jobs where shortages exist, we would be killing two birds with one stone, namely, filling jobs now available and providing appropriate training for young people who are in desperate straits because they do not have the skills they need to find a job.

Mr. Speaker, I felt these comments were necessary in order to provide a more balanced picture of the unemployment situation, and especially of youth unemployment. To get back to my earlier example which showed young people in Quebec as having lost hope and expressing their bitterness in the passing mark dispute, I want to say that there are jobs for young people who have the required training or who have an opportunity to obtain it. Perhaps not any job because, here again, we must still allow for the economic situation. This afternoon, I would have liked to have been able to give a list of all the government programs which this year will provide jobs for more than 55,000 young people. In any case, we must still put the situation into its correct perspective, so that our young people will not give up on the labour market. They must be given a chance to seek training in areas where opportunities for steady jobs do exist. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read two relevant recommendations from the report of the Special Committee on Employment Opportunities for the '80s, and herein I support the views of the previous speaker. Recommendation 3 reads as follows:

Governments and the private sector should take steps to correct negative attitudes toward blue-collar trades; to place a high priority on on-the-job training; to provide more instructors (including older workers) for technical training; to make available up-to-date machinery and equipment for training; to reallocate resources to courses offering the greatest employment opportunities; and to establish a continuing education system where an individual can retrain and upgrade throughout a lifetime.

Recommendation 6 reads as follows, and I quote:

Apprenticeship programs should be modernized and expanded to provide for entry at an earlier age, geared to the meeting of standards, not to a time frame open to women and changed to assure completion of course and provide transferable skills.

Mr. Speaker, I support these two recommendations without reservation, and I am convinced that tens of thousands of young people would agree wholeheartedly to take advantage of the opportunities for on-the-job training which could be provided if Bill C-115, tabled in the House by the minister last Friday, is assured a quick passage through this House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Thacker:

That this House condemns the government for the economic mismanagement which has led directly to the loss of 300,000 jobs since August 1981 and produced a crisis situation for students seeking summer or permanent employment, and calls on the government to accept its responsibility for this tragic mess and promote the private and public sector hiring of Canada's youth so that those attending school can afford to continue to acquire needed skills, and those graduating can immediately become productive members of the work force.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on a subject which is very important to Canadians, and certainly to our young people. I listen to the minister on a fairly regular basis because of my interest in the subject of employment and employment opportunities in Canada, but as I listened to him today I could not help but realize just how much time he spent during a 40-minute speech in referring to the Conservative Party, the NDP and all sorts of situations and difficulties other than the real problems which he has been asked to address in his particular ministry. For example, I noted today that he was 20 minutes into his speech before he got to any of the substance of the problem or the solutions that we want to consider.

He suggested that if all parties co-operate and work together, we can come up with some great policies which would go a long way toward solving the unemployment situation of our youth in Canada. That is probably a reasonable and rational suggestion, but I find it very interesting that when we look at what often happens, we find that that simply does not happen. Bill C-48, which was before this House a few months ago, was probably a very good example. In the committee stage, the government introduced over 100 different amendments and we introduced over 50. Every one of the government's amendments was accepted, but not one of ours was accepted. So that shows Your Honour what happens when we refer to co-operation between parties.

The minister asks us to support Bill C-115 to which he referred. As the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) has indicated, we are prepared to do so. But what is significant is that we have to depend on the minister and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to introduce that bill in the House. It is not for us to call it; it is up to them to do so. They like to attach all sorts of blame to other people and parties in the House of Commons, but in fact the situation rests squarely on the minister's shoulders.

I do want to discuss the serious social and economic problem of youth unemployment. It is something which has been largely ignored by the government. It is a problem which is not being solved. In fact, if we look at what is happening in Canada today, we find that not only is it not being solved, but it is also worsening. It is an historical problem. It has been around for a long time. If we look back to 1966, we find that youth provided some 24.2 per cent of our labour force. The unemployed in that youth labour force made up 40.6 per cent. If we bring that into more modern times, into 1980, we find that the youth share of the labour force increased somewhat to about 26.8 per cent. Its share of the unemployed in Canada also increased to around 47 per cent. Forty-seven per cent of the unemployed people in Canada are the young people of our country. Since 1966, the youth unemployment rate has doubled the unemployment rate of those in the bracket over age 25. If one looks at what is happening in other countries, one finds that Canada ranked fourth highest of the 12 OECD countries in terms of youth unemployment in 1976. In this country, which has so much potential and opportunity, we cannot create jobs for our young people.

Recent data indicate that from March to April of this year unemployment in the group under 25 years of age increased by 23,000 people. In one month there were 23,000 more young Canadians without jobs and without opportunity. We all know that in the present circumstances unemployment is hitting all Canadians, but the ones who are most severely affected are our young and inexperienced. They are the ones who are hurt the most.

I want to look at the causes of youth unemployment in our country for a few moments. The standard response to the cause of the problem tends very often to be the baby boom. We have more people in this particular age bracket. There is a large number under 30 years of age. However, that is not the only cause. I happen to think that the problem is that the government has come up with inadequate policies to deal with the increased number of people in this particular age bracket. In other words, it has not provided an environment and climate in which to create an increased number of jobs to meet the needs of the larger group of people looking for those jobs. It uses the baby boom as an excuse or justification for not dealing with the problem. In fact, the baby boom probably is partly responsible, but it cannot be allowed to become the total reason or justification for the problem we are facing today.

Mr. Thacker: They knew it was coming.

Mr. Cooper: That is right. All of the numbers and information available indicated that we had to create more jobs for this particular time, and they will become increasingly necessary as we move on through the next few years. The numbers and information were all there, but the government failed to respond in an adequate, meaningful way. The real problem is that the government has given little attention to our youth. It has given little attention to the effect of the baby boom about to hit our country. It has not been dramatically concerned with Canada's future. Its policies have been inadequate, often ending up as being nothing more that simple lip service to a probelm and, at best, temporary solutions.

The root of the problem is probably that the government has created the worst economic conditions for our young people which could be imagined. The budget and the National Energy Program have stunted growth. If one looks at those two examples, one finds what the government has done to job opportunities in Canada. I come from an area which has been dramatically affected by the national energy problem. In our area, we find that unemployment has tripled in the last year. This is not because there is not a demand for natural gas or for our oil. The fact is that the government-created climate of investment in that particular sector of our economy has been destroyed. The result, of course, is that no one is getting jobs. Our young people are looking into various aspects of work in the energy sector, whether it be in engineering, in rig camps or as truck drivers, but it does not really matter in which part of the particular sector they would like to be involved, because those particular jobs are no longer available. It has been the end of business expansion because of the budget and the National Energy Program. It has been the end of the progressive development of our country. Those youths who are now looking for jobs could have and should have been the beneficiaries of the growth which should still be going on in that particular sector of the economy.

Our current conditions probably present the hardest time to our young and inexperienced. If one looks at what happens in any difficult economic period, one finds that the older, more educated and more experienced people will survive. They will be able to keep their jobs. However, when businesses do not have the resources or the climate to risk investment, they will not risk that investment or give that opportunity to young people. They will not gamble. They cannot expand, so the first ones to be cut from the payroll will be the ones most recently hired. Who are they? They are our young people. They are the last to be given a chance with our economic conditions. We see before us a picture that does not look any better. In fact, it looks more and more gloomy as time goes on.

Traditionally what has happened in times such as these is that our young people have turned to education or training programs. They looked at those as an alternative to present employment. Even those options have now begun to be limited.

If we look in the field of education, we find that the federal government is shifting the responsibility for funding from itself to the provinces. In the province of Alberta alone that will mean a cutback of $392 million to that province over the next five years. That is what would have been spent in that province by the federal government on education. It has now been cut back.

Alberta, because of its economy, budget and funds available will be able to make up that difference. But what about the other provinces, the so-called have-not provinces? What can they do? What will happen to their universities and colleges? All of us are receiving letters about this. We know what will happen. A number of the colleges will be closed. A large number of them will be cutting back on their programs. To survive, a university will first have to raise its fees, lower its quotas, cut back on the number of classes and cut down on its facilities such as libraries and laboratories. The result will be fewer students getting a lower quality education, an education that may not get them a job in the end. What about those desiring education without any funds because they cannot get any summer employment? Once again they are caught in a Catch-22 situation.

In addressing the area of training, we find that the government has been slow to address the problem. Our nation had needed skilled workers. Had the Alsands project gone ahead, we would have needed a dramatic number of skilled workers in this country. We would have had more job opportunities than people to fill them. Our government has been very slow in bringing in training programs.

We talked about Bill C-115 today. As my colleague from Rosedale said, we look forward to supporting any bill that offers increased training opportunities for our young people, women and the Canadian population in general. That is the kind of thing we encourage this government to do.

Today we find ourselves in a really serious, desperate human paradox. We have high youth unemployment. At the same time we have a lack of skilled workers. The government is not addressing the problem. It is not providing choices for our young people. It is not providing either the job or, as I discussed a few minutes ago, the opportunity for education. It is a double-whammy. It is no job or simply a dead-end job. There is no opportunity to train for something that may lead to a job.

The question is, where will the future of Canada be without trained and educated young people? Where will Canada be if our youth are not given an opportunity? Instead, our government is banishing our youth to a life dependent on government assistance. Instead, it should be providing them with opportunities rather than removing those opportunities.

What are the costs of youth unemployment on a country such as Canada? There are two main costs. The first is the social cost and the second is an economic cost. Let us look first at the social cost. Among our young people who are looking for jobs we find a high level of discouragement, a high level of frustration. That can lead to petty crime, vandalism, a feeling of helplessness, an acceptance of a condition that exists, an idea of never going beyond government assistance which they receive at the moment. They begin to feel that things will never get better. All the time they have been looking for a job, they have been refused. That is their experience and that is what they expect to go on. Society is not benefiting from that whole rash of new ideas that we usually attribute to our people.

What about the economic cost? If you look at the unemployment in this group, Mr. Speaker, you find that they are not actively producing. They are not adding to our gross national product. I want to refer to a research study that was done and read a short quotation from it. I quote:

> The direct or primary effects of cutting youth unemployment rates in half in 1977 would have been to increase the Canadian GNP by something of the order of 1 per cent, or roughly $2 billion at 1977 prices. Including the secondary effects as well, the total increase would perhaps have been in the order of 4 per cent or $8 billion.

In other words, had we cut the unemployment rate of our young people in 1977 and brought it down to the national average for all age groups, it would have added one direct percentage point to our GNP. It would have taken $2 billion that would be filtered throughout our economy. The secondary effects might have been $8 billion or 4 per cent.

I see that my time has almost expired. I want to close by saying that the short-term solutions to the problem are job-creation programs. However, we can never lose sight of the fact that they are nothing more than short-term opportunities. They are an interim solution and nothing better. They are a temporary alternative.

In the long term, what we need to do is to create an environment for our youth to find their own spot in society. We need to restore their opportunity to be independent. We need to restore their opportunity for a good applicable education. They need to be given opportunities to be trained in something they want to do. They must be trained in a way that they can do something to contribute to our country. It all begins very simply by creating in Canada a climate for job-creating investment. That is the bottom line.

One sector we can look at is, very simply, the energy sector. There is a demand for those products. We know there is an opportunity to create jobs there. Those jobs will benefit our youth and the entire Canadian population.

I would like to close with that and emphasize the fact that the number one bottom line we need in this country is an investment climate that will create the risk-takers who in turn will create jobs in this country.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join my colleagues in participating in this debate, because the subject is one in which I am particularly interested, like anyone who is anxious to see the economic situation improve across Canada, and especially in Quebec. In fact, my own province is among those which have been most severely affected by the economic problems we are experiencing today, and which have also affected a large number of young people. The unemployment statistics for the past months have given considerable cause for concern. For instance, approximately 28,000 jobs were lost in a single month, and the unemployment rate has now reached 13 per cent.

Once again, if we look at the over-all statistics, it is clear that they include many young workers or students who are preparing to join the labour force. In the present state of the economy, it has become particularly urgent to seek new concepts and new solutions to our economic problems. We are examining new ways of establishing a co-operative formula with a view to solving those problems, because it is clear that nothing can be achieved if the parties concerned keep to themselves, often working counterproductively. The successful results achieved at Bombardier are an eloquent example of what can be achieved through effective co-ordination. In the case of Bombardier, the result was a contract to build cars for the New York subway, thus creating many jobs in Quebec, especially in the riding of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup represented by Mr. Gendron and in the riding of Shefford represented by Mr. Lapierre.

These are two constituencies which will be able to benefit from the fall-out from this extraordinary contract obtained by Bombardier. Of course, there already are many federal programs to support the fight against unemployment and increase job creation activities. For instance, this summer in Quebec, the federal government will spend over $24 million in programs aimed specifically at providing employment for young people. More specifically, as far as my constituency of Lotbinière is concerned, an amount of $81,000 was budgeted for summer employment.

Many requests were made in the constituency, over 60 projects to be exact, amounting to nearly $700,000 since, like all good promoters, of course, those from Lotbinière asked for more than they hoped to get and we succeeded on this side of the House, after making representations to the department concerned, in getting for the constituency of Lotbinière—and the same can be said for all constituencies in Canada and of course Quebec—an increase in the budget to $183,000. Therefore 110 jobs will be created this summer for 37 student projects, which was greatly appreciated by the students of the Lotbinière constituency. When we look at the effort made by the government and consider the situation, it was fantastic for the Lotbinière constituency to be able to announce that the budget had been increased by $102,000 to meet adequately the requests of the students who had made great efforts to come up with valid projects. It was obvious that after presentation of these projects, we had to ask the department to increase the allocation, and this is what we did, Mr. Speaker.

Federal projects will also be undertaken in other areas this year and they will create 1,750 jobs in Quebec. I believe that this is very important because various businesses are now trying to maintain employment at a level which would be normal in ordinary circumstances. As far as the students are concerned I must say that the only organization or level of government to have made some effort to find employment for young people is the Government of Canada, and I am proud of the fact that the government agreed to the requests of the representatives of these young people in this place that allocations be increased. The Public Service Commission will hire about 500 young Quebecers in fields related to their future careers. I am talking about the career-oriented program which also helps students. In fact, this is one of the points which we emphasized in our student assistance program this year so that young people who find such employment will have an opportunity to acquire an experience which can be useful later on. We want our investments in student employment programs to contribute to the training of these young people in addition to providing them with expertise for the economy of the province, which certainly needs it.

The community services projects of Canada, which is another component of the job creation programs, will allow us to allocate $17 million and create 9,134 jobs. These initiatives will also help the communities concerned since they must provide lasting benefits. As concerns this program, Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Lotbinière which I represent was allocated a budget of $580,000 which was later increased by $100,000 because, in looking for jobs, the workers were effectively asking their Members of Parliament to make representations to the department concerned to increase the funds allocated and help self-employed workers to find employment, and this community development program has been very well received in my own constituency and other Quebec ridings, as it allows Canadian citizens to submit quite interesting projects and provide employment for Quebecers. Another major contribution of the federal government in Quebec is the Canada Employment Centres for Students network. Quebec now has 47 of the more than 400 centres located throughout Canada. Last year, these centres co-ordinated the placement of 74,949 young Quebecers in summer jobs.

Mr. Speaker, recently, I officially opened my constituency's student employment centre in Victoriaville, and I was given statistics for the previous year showing that out of some 1600 applications, 1495 students were placed by student employment centres. This was truly important for students and, having been a student myself not so long ago, I feel that it is really an exceptional initiative by the Canadian government not to leave students to themselves and to ensure that a student employment centre can refer students to various employers in their area or province, as the case may be. There are also jobs outside the province.

Looking at statistics on the Victoriaville student employment centre in my constituency of Lotbinière, last year's figures show that this is a truly important initiative that had to be followed up this year. Indeed, student employment centres have become so efficient in these last few years that Canada ranks among the leading OECD countries for student placement. There is a full range of services, from job finding to counselling, and even courses on better ways to look for a job. Employers are canvassed to find out whether they have available jobs. They are urged to report all their student manpower needs. In a spirit of co-operation aimed at maximum efficiency, we also provide all available data on provincial job-creation programs. As I said on May 17, I officially opened the student employment centre in Victoriaville, and I was informed that in the three or four weeks it has been opened the centre manager and her three student associates had already conducted a number of interviews and were therefore getting ready to respond as adequately as possible to student applications. Four people work in the student employment centre in Victoriaville, three girls and a young man with either legal, labour relations or industrial relations training. They were selected through interviews and are in a position to arrange those meetings with employers.

Manpower training in Quebec is conducted with federal funding, a major contribution to the training of skilled young workers and the reduction of unemployment risks. In the last fiscal year, for instance, the Canadian government invested $185.4 million in manpower training in Quebec, helping some 65,000 full-time trainees. Some 50 per cent of the trainees are under 24, which shows how much these programs benefit our young people.

Mr. Speaker, I should also point out that as far as occupational training programs are concerned, even regular workers who had temporarily lost their job and who had to find another job when their unemployment insurance period was nearing its end, could extend their unemployment insurance period by attending those courses. Let us see what happened in the case of former employees of a company known as the Ventilateurs Victoria of Victoriaville. The employees represented by the CNTU, following representations made to me by the union authorities, were in a position to inquire at the Victoriaville employment centre and in the riding of Lotbinière, especially in Victoriaville, and with the co-operation of the regional and local school board were allowed to attend courses and thus plan for improved job opportunities for the future.

However, we are not altogether satisfied with the results obtained through those training programs and it is exactly for the purpose of improving those conditions, that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) last Friday introduced Bill C-115 on occupational training designed to implement a new training plan, taking into consideration the technological progress of the 1980s and our other economic requirements for that period. I am convinced that all my colleagues in the House would like to ensure the quick passage of that bill which will represent a major step in our endeavour to improve the fate of our young people who are looking for jobs. In this respect, it is also very important that with the report and Bill C-114 we should provide for an extension of UI benefits and move to reduce the number of weeks required before drawing unemployment insurance benefits. That was also done at the request of some of my constituents and I see that the minister did come up with an adequate response. I note that it was done in my riding. Those representations had again been made to me by spokesmen for the CNTU and I see that the department has been able to fulfil some of the expectations of those workers in my riding.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, we all fully realize that the situation is serious. The government of Canada acknowledges some responsibility for providing assistance, but it must also be admitted that we cannot hope to succeed if we act alone. The international situation as well as the policies and the active measures taken by the most important elements of our society—provincial and municipal governments, large corporations, small and medium-size businesses—all have some influence on the number of jobs which may be available. For instance, the Quebec provincial government recently backed out of its financial commitments concerning summer jobs for students. Nothing surprising there.

These past few years, the provincial employment agency for Quebec students has paid part of their salary to employers who hired students through the agency. This year the province will maintain its registration and introduction service, which the federal government maintains as well on a country-wide basis, but it has done away with subsidies to employers. That is one more example of our good government. Mr. Speaker, I find it deplorable that, rather than running some sort of an advertising campaing on the Constitution and on certain rights of which it had allegedly been deprived, the government of Quebec has not chosen instead to come here to Ottawa to make representations as the people are urging them to do through various polls in which they state their agreement with respect to the renewal of the Constitution. The Quebec government spokesmen should be here instead of running that kind of campaign. They should have used that money precisely to sponsor student programs. It is unfortunate that such a situation should exist.

In my own riding, Mr. Speaker, I urge employers to provide students with summer jobs, even if these jobs are to be of short duration. As a rule, people understand that the money students earn during the summer months help them get the experience they need to join the labour force successfully. I suggest, therefore, that employers should make a special effort in these hard times. Hiring more students for the summer would represent a very good investment not only for their own business but also for Quebec's economic future. Mr. Speaker, I should like to stress the fact that the situation in Quebec is in my view quite deplorable. But happily—and I would like my constituents in the federal riding of Lotbinière to know that—the federal government has really made a tremendous effort this year by increasing the budgets for my own riding by more than $100,000. That has made it possible for all the municipalities with youth projects to be fairly treated by the Government of Canada in the areas of the handicapped, recreation and community services. All the municipalities within Lotbinière have received money through the Student Summer Job Program within the limits of the financial resources available. I think that it is important for this government to continue these programs, for we are aware that our opponents wanted to get rid of the Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs the moment they came into office in 1979. I feel that we must seek increased budgets for the various programs.

[English]

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, no subject could be more relevant at this time of year than that of student and youth unemployment. Tens of thousands of young people are pouring out of our high schools, our community colleges and our universities in search of jobs, and in many cases full-time, permanent jobs. For many of those young people, perhaps most of them, the search will be a complete failure. I say complete failure because a considerable number of them will not have any success in landing any employment at all. Others will have to settle for something less than that for which they took their training and education. Even those who have set their sights only on summer employment to help meet the steadily escalating cost of furthering their education, will find it harder to find a job this summer than at any time since the 1930s. For many in that category, failure to gain summer earnings will force them to postpone or abandon plans to return to school in the fall. Certainly very few parents are able to help their children, given the deepening recession.

Contrast the current situation with that which prevailed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assumed office some 14 years ago. I remember the period well because I had completed my first university degree only a few months before he took office in 1968. We were the class of '67 at what is now the University of Prince Edward Island. Some of us went on to take further studies or training, but many went directly into the job market upon graduation. As we approached graduation there was little concern about whether the market could absorb us. A fair number had already been hired by all manner of firms and companies that visited the campus throughout the academic year to recruit students.

Everyone took future possibilities and prospects of employment for granted. It was not a matter of finding a job but of getting one that made the best use of a person's talents and background. The community college system was not as well developed then as it is now. Yet the same optimism was felt by its graduates entering the labour market. It was a time of economic buoyancy, of opportunity and of promise both for them and for the country. No horizon was too far, no challenge too great. The land was strong, to use a recent catch phrase of the Prime Minister. In the late 1960s fewer than 350,000 people were permanently unemployed, compared to over one million today. The inflation rate was scarcely above four per cent, compared to above 11 per cent today. Interest rates were a mere nine per cent, compared to 15, 16, 17, 18, per cent and over today. The value of the Canadian dollar was almost at par with the United States currency. It is currently hovering at 80 cents U.S., the lowest in half a century.

The Prime Minister inherited an economy that was inherently strong, but in a short period he squandered that legacy through sheer economic mismanagement. When the class of '67 graduated, Canada's standard of living was the third highest in the world, second only to Sweden and the United States. It has now plummeted to thirteenth place behind Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Germany, Denmark, Luxembourg, Iceland, France, Belgium, the United States, the Netherlands and Finland.

I have dwelt on the over-all economic picture for the simple reason that youth unemployment must be seen in the context of the economy as a whole, and not in isolation. Youth faces a lack of opportunity because this government has driven the economy into the ground. The answer to youth employment is not make-work projects, although they can be helpful as a temporary measure, nor is the answer exclusively to be found in any other limited approach tailor-made to youth, though no doubt the government could be doing much more than it is doing at present to devise programs with youth specifically in mind. Rather, the answer lies in restoring the total economy to health so that the potential of this great land and its people, including youth, can once more be realized through the release of its productive forces.

Every generation has its own distinct contribution to make to society and to civilization as a whole. No generation is the same as any other. The tragedy of youth unemployment is that this generation is being denied its turn at bat. The distinctive talents, interests, education and training of today's youth could contribute much to making our society a better place in which to live. Instead, their abilities are going to waste. Young people with good schooling in stenography, commerce, business, the building trades, the sciences, the vocational arts, even law and medicine and engineering—the traditional tickets to job security and high income potential—are finding it hard to obtain employment.

Let us look at the facts. The over-all unemployment rate last month was 9.6 per cent seasonally adjusted. A record 1,233,000 people were looking for work in April. There would have been at least another 100,000 more if one took into account those who have given up looking for work. The Science Council of Canada says Canada is becoming de-industrialized. Not only are we not creating new job opportunities, we are not even keeping many of our existing jobs. Some 223,000 jobs were lost between August, 1981, and March, 1982, largely in the manufacturing sector, but that figure applies to all sectors. More than half of those jobs were held by young men and women in the 15 to 24 age group. Nearly 53 per cent of the jobs lost in the last seven months were held by young people. Indeed, the largest single group of unemployed is in that 15 to 24 age group.

In my own region, the Atlantic provinces, youth unemployment stands at over 20 per cent, the highest of all five regions and appreciably above the national average of about 15 per cent. Yet the education, training and inherent human qualities of youth in my region are comparable to those of other Canadians. Clearly, however, qualifications are no longer the answer to labour market problems.

The problem, then, is not one of motivation or ability on the part of Canadian youth, whether in the Atlantic region or anywhere else. The problem is lack of economic opportunity, and much of the blame can be placed squarely at the feet of this federal government, specifically its high interest rate policy. The truth is, though, that high interest rates are a symptom rather than the root cause. We are in a man-made recession brought about by 14 years of this government's improvident spending, its lack of manpower planning, its failure to invest in research and development, its over-reliance on the public sector at the expense of the private entrepreneur, its limp-wristed response to the formation of the OPEC cartel a decade ago, and its penchant for governing with the next election in mind rather than with the long-term interests of the country at heart. Having allowed the country to spend itself into enormous debt, is it any wonder that our inflation and therefore our interest rates are as high as they are? Is it any wonder that our dollar is the poor cousin among world currencies? Given that we have shunned research and development geared to producing new and better goods and services for world markets in favour of relying on exports of our unprocessed raw materials, is it any wonder that the Japanese, the Germans, the French, and many others, are beating the pants off us in international trade? Is it any wonder that nearly 40 per cent of our auto workers are laid off as one country alone, Japan, threatens to capture 30 per cent or more of our automobile market?

The Canadian government, Mr. Speaker, has instilled in Canadians a false sense of security by insulating the country from soaring oil prices with billion dollar energy price subsidies instead of investing that money to make Canada self-sufficient. Is it any wonder that eleventh-hour efforts to launch energy megaprojects are being wrecked on the shoals of the so-called National Energy Program?

The government blames international forces for the state of the Canadian economy, but we, more than any other country, have contributed to those same forces; for example, by being the world's worst managers of non-renewable energy resources. Over the past four years our industrial productivity has been rising at the second slowest rate among major industrialized nations. Unquestionably a major contributor to our poor productivity is a pathetic research and development performance. The government is content to do as little as possible to foster economic prosperity while spending as much as possible on advertising to manipulate the public into thinking it is doing much more than it is.

The youth of Canada know better, Mr. Speaker; when times are tough, they know; they are the hardest hit by economic recession, indeed depression. When employers cut back because of high interest rates, or whatever, they generally stop hiring students or other young people before they lay off people already on the job. They also tend to lay off their newer, which is to say younger, employees before they lay off those with seniority.

Where do we begin to bring about economic recovery, Mr. Speaker? The first step is to realize that the problem, therefore the solution, is to be found in Canada, not in some mythical world economy. Some of the steps required, for example greater investment in research and development, are implicitly called for in my previous remarks. For the Atlantic provinces, I would hope such a thrust would include the establishment of a fourth veterinary college for Canada, to be located in that region, it is to be hoped in my own province. An institution of that kind is urgently needed to buttress the fragile base of the agricultural and fisheries industries in the region.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that, beyond specific measures of that variety, Canada must get its economic house in order. The government's high inesterest rate policy is a terribly weak hand to play, if monetarism happens to be your suit, when not complemented by a wise government spending package. I am not calling for reduced expenditures necessarily, but rather for expenditures that constitute a solid investment in our country's future, which will also help to create those much needed jobs for today's youth. We need much more spending on the economic infrastructure of the country and much less on government self-promotion, on the aggrandizement of certain bureaucratic empires, and on government takeovers of industries which have the effect of not creating wealth but of scaring it away.

I think the young people of this country recognize that no government can solve the country's problems alone. But this government more than any other in the past, is responsible for many of the problems with which we are burdened. It is for that reason that our young people, along with their parents, will be looking forward to the day soon when they can cast their ballots for a new deal for themselves and for the country as a whole.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that this debate today reminds me a great deal of the emergency debate we had on the National Energy Program some time ago. It was cited as being a great emergency by members opposite in the Progressive Conservative Party, and when I rose in that debate to speak in this House there were about as many members present at that time from the Conservative Party as there are today. I count just three.

Mr. Thacker: We know you have nothing to say.

Mr. Taylor: You have only eight over there out of 150.

Mr. Tobin: I hope that puts things in perspective for the public. I would remind hon. members opposite that there were just two members to listen to their own representative speak during this debate.

Mr. Taylor: You have only eight members.

Mr. Tobin: I think that puts in perspective the political motivation of members opposite who make these resolutions and call for these debates but then have only two members present to listen to their own spokesman on the topic.

Mr. Taylor: There are eight on your side and there are eight on our side. Get your numbers right.

Mr. Tobin: I heard the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) speak today. I listened very carefully to the series of words and phrases he used referring to Canadians all the way from being the world's worst, to being pathetic, to having a lack of initiative. He went on to discuss manipulation and to suggest that the only thing this government could do was to manipulate through advertising. What I did not hear, sadly, and what I was waiting to hear with great passionate interest because I, too, am alarmed at youth unemployment in this country were some concrete suggestions from members opposite. It is not enough to score political points and to have two members present from an entire caucus and yet offer no concrete solutions.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are eight members on this side of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is prepared to recognize the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), but not when he is not in his own seat.

Mr. Tobin: The hon. member is not in his own seat and cannot rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member has now returned to his own seat and I think the Chair will recognize the intent of the hon. member. If he chooses to rise on a point of order, he may do so now.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member keeps saying there are only two members on this side of the House. That is absolutely wrong. He cannot even count up to three. We have four members in the Progressive Party and there are four members from the New Democratic Party. The hon. member opposite has only eight members on his side of the House out of 150 members. I say to the hon. member that he had better get his own house cleaned up before he starts cleaning up our side.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the hon. member that he does not have a point of order. This is not our motion. We are not attempting to condemn the government. Neither was it our motion to move an emergency debate last week. It was yours, and you had three members. I would like to have a serious discussion today, not nefarious points of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Unfortunately, with all of the other hazards of being in the chair, I do not have a crystal ball which would permit me to determine whether a point of order is nefarious or not until I hear it.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the meeting of the Standing Committee on Agriculture today we waited 30 minutes for Liberal members to show up. We had our full complement of Conservative and NDP members, but there was not one Liberal present.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I would like to say something.

Mr. Taylor: If the hon. member would say something, we would not have to raise points of order.

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I want to indicate that the Chair will be fairly rapid in assessing whether or not there is a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention, and I think you should bring this matter to the attention of the House, that this afternoon there are four committees meeting, namely, the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Tobin: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to come to his point of order as quickly as possible.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member mentioned there were only a few members in the House, he is reflecting upon how many members there are here, which I think is wrong. You are the first commoner in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, and you should be able to tell those people in television land just exactly where the members are. The first thing is that the hon. member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) should not reflect on the number of members in this chamber. Second, I would ask you to inform those people who are watching this program that there are other members working in different places in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am delighted the hon. member feels that the role of the Chair should include that of master of ceremonies for a television program. I think I should pass on that suggestion.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, members opposite are attempting to use up the time making political points, time which I would like to have today to talk about what the government is doing. I think it is relevant and I think the people out there in television land should know when a full day of the time of this House is wasted, whether it concerns the National Energy Program emergency debate, to which no one showed up—

Mr. Paproski: You can say that, but do not reflect on the numbers in this House.

Mr. Tobin: —or whether it be an opposition day motion to which the very members who put the motion do not show up. I think the people of Canada should know that. If we are going to be serious about putting our young people back to work, members themselves had better get back to work.

Mr. Taylor: How often are you in the House?

Mr. Tobin: You moved the motion. We did not. We are here to respond to it.

Mr. Taylor: How often are you in the House?

Mr. Tobin: And you have not showed up to put forward one concrete solution today.

I was a member of a task force which spent a period of six or seven months examining primarily the question of training, training programs and institutions in this country. We made a series of recommendations. This task force was made up of members from all parties. I must say that members of all three parties approached their task eagerly and honestly. I think we made some very concrete recommendations, not all of which have been adopted at this point by the government, but many have.

I want to refer to the national training bill introduced in this House last Friday. I see my time is quickly slipping by, but I want to highlight some aspects of that bill. The bill will go a long way to addressing those occupations which are at the present time somewhat of a paradox. Literally we have thousands and thousands of people unemployed, while at the same time many jobs are going unfilled. That in itself is a crime. The national training bill will allow higher income support rates to encourage laid-off apprentices to continue with their trades. It will authorize the waiving of the present requirement that adults must be out of school for a period of 12 months, allowing them to return to secondary institutions immediately. It will permit workers to be trained in higher level skills beyong the present 52-week period. Unfortunately, because a person can receive support for a period of only 52 weeks, many of our bright young people are taking short courses instead of going on to study higher technology or computer sciences. There is a need for people with that knowledge and there are jobs in those sectors going unfilled at this time.

Unfortunately, and sadly, because I had much to say which I thought would contribute to this debate, I must call it six o'clock.

Mr. Taylor: You have not said anything yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity this evening to discuss the motion before the House which deals with unemployment, particularly unemployment among young Canadians. There is an obvious need to discuss what I view to be one of the most serious problems facing our country today. Statistics certainly point to that need, and those figures in and by themselves are nothing short of a national disgrace. Last month there were some 1,233,000 persons, or 9.6 per cent of the work force, registered as being unemployed. Nearly half that number, 508,000, were between the ages of 15 and 24. On a seasonally adjusted basis unemployment among young Canadians was 16.6 per cent. The unadjusted unemployment figure increases that figure to some 18 per cent. If the hidden unemployed—those who are unemployed but who are no longer registered as looking for work—are taken into account, that figure for youth unemployment jumps to some 25.1 per cent of the youth unemployed, which means that there are some 777,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 who are unemployed. On top of that there will be additional thousands of summer students who will be looking for employment over the next several months in preparation for returning to schools and universities in the fall.

Those and similar statistics have been known and available not only to government but also to government agencies for several years now, and I rather suspect that as these monthly unemployment figures are released, many Canadians are becoming numb at the enormous size of these figures. The reason for this is not that Canadians have been entirely shocked at the figures, as the trends have been fairly steady and fairly persistent; nor do I think people generally have stopped caring about unemployment; it is simply that statistics in these magnitudes are difficult for the average person to comprehend.

The other possible reason is that numbers and statistics fail to reflect the human element and the untold misery unemployment creates for individuals and their families. There is a report today in the Toronto Star of interviews with a number of individuals who have recently become unemployed. The report discusses the particular problems those individuals face. One of those individuals is a young chap aged 29 who is unemployed and struggling to meet a $400 monthly mortgage payment. According to the Star, he is mad at the crowds, the red tape and the complete bureaucracy which stand between him and the $189 a week he knows he has coming in unemployment insurance benefits. They call it Canada Employment, but these days, with 1.2 million out of work, even the name is a cruel joke that mocks the unemployed. In his words: "Picture yourself with a family, two kids, the mortgage overdue, and no money for five weeks". This individual took home some $400 a week before he was laid off, and then he enrolled in a federally-sponsored welding course. It was at that point that he made a mistake. He dropped out of the course to take two weeks' temporary work because his government cheques were not coming in. He says he had bills to pay but that "They don't seem to know what that means; they said being broke was no excuse for dropping out". After repeated visits to unemployment insurance offices to straighten out his claim this individual says he is sick and tired of being harassed by the system his tax dollars and premiums pay for. There are countless stories like that all over this country, and some of them are recorded in today's Star.

In terms of young people, unemployment statistics do not reflect those who have never even had the opportunity of entering the work force. They do not reflect the total frustration of those who are seeking employment for the first time and are rejected at every turn. The statistics even show that many of those kids give up in total frustration because there simply are no jobs. In their search for jobs they not only become frustrated but they also become totally demoralized after being rejected and rejected and rejected for one reason or another, the main one being that there are no jobs to be found. The second reason is that before employers are willing to hire any of these individuals they demand and insist that they have previous experience in a particular occupation or classification. It is a Catch-22 situation; how can a kid manage to get experience on the job when no employer will hire him because he has no experience? That probably has been the biggest failure of the government in the past. It has introduced so-called job creation measures and programs and brought them in under wage subsidy programs, which means that the government has subsidized employers to hire students or young people and split the wages, usually by 50 per cent. In an individual case the employer pays $1.50, and the government matches that with another $1.50. The experience under those programs is that the employer will exploit and take advantage of the young person for a period of, say, three to six months. Then the employer will simply get rid of the individual and hire another person so that he can take advantage of this wage subsidy program again. The first employer goes around and around. Nothing very positive happens to him, and programs like that certainly do not rectify a very bad and serious unemployment crisis.

There are other things unemployment statistics do not reflect. In other jurisdictions evidence of the long-term effects of extended periods of unemployment on the individual and on the family unit have been well documented. Unemployment statistics do not show increases in crime rates, family breakdowns, suicides and other hidden effects long-term unemployment has on the social fabric of the country, yet the evidence is there for anyone to see, and that evidence cries for the introduction of policies and programs to get us out of the mess in which we find ourselves.

What this government fails to realize is that the problems with which we are faced today did not begin overnight, and neither can they all be blamed on international influences. The problems we have today are the result of short-sighted and wooly-headed policies which have been followed by this government in particular over the past number of years, in spite of the fact that those policies were obviously wrong and not in the long-term best interests of the country or the vast majority of Canadians. This government has failed to deal with the most glaring of these problems, and that is the fundamental weakness in the structure of our economy. That weakness results from the uncontrolled domination of the manufacturing and resource sectors by foreign capital and our total lack of control over the exploitation of those vital sectors of our economy. This lack of control has resulted in the devastation of secondary manufacturing in Canada, as branch plant after branch plant has been closed. They have not been closed because many of them were not operating on a profitable basis but simply because decisions were made to supply the Canadian marketplace from other sources, usually the United States. In many cases we lost not only jobs but also the skills associated with them and the technology which developed and grew from the products which we produced. A perfect example of this is the electrical and electronics industry. It was not so long ago that that industry was a vibrant and expanding part of our economy. Just look at it today, particularly in the home entertainment field. Today we cannot go into a store and buy a Canadian-made radio, yet that particular industry employed upwards of 15,000 Canadians ten years ago. We cannot go into a store today and buy a Canadian-made stereo system. Every stereo system we buy today is made offshore, yet that particular part of that industry employed upwards of 50,000 Canadians ten years ago. In the television manufacturing industry, I believe I am correct in saying, there is only one manufacturer left in the country, and he is in serious trouble and has either made the decision or is contemplating the decision to get out of that business, which would mean that in a few years it will be impossible to buy a Canadian-made television set.

In today's economy the importation of electronic products to a vibrant industrial economy is absolutely disgraceful and a terrible reflection of the mismanagement of our country's economy by this and previous governments. The reason for this happening was plain to everyone except the government. Those plants were constructed here simply to supply and exploit Canadian markets. Now that those markets are saturated with the goods these plants were built to produce, these plants are closing down and the manufactures will simply supply our needs from plants outside Canada. There is not a manufacturing sector which has managed to escape from this fact, whether it be in footwear, clothing, rubber, auto manufacturing or in countless other areas of secondary manufacturing in this country.

What about the resource sector? This is an area which has been blatantly abused by successive governments for short-term gain, with little thought or consideration for present or future generations of Canadians. It has been said that this generation has no right to exploit those resources without giving consideration to the needs of future generations of Canadians, and I agree with that view. I would go further and contend that the reason we find ourselves debating this motion on youth unemployment today is the mismanagement of our resources yesterday and in past years.

I recognize I only have a few seconds of time left in which to speak.

Mr. Blais: Oh, go ahead.

Mr. Young: Hon. members are giving unanimous consent to allow me to continue, but I regret having to say that, by all indications, this government and other governments will continue with identical policies, despite all the evidence that they do not work and, in the long term, will be to the country's continuing detriment.

If this government had the political will to take action on this fundamental problem, we could very well be on the way to finding a resolution, not only to present day unemployment among our youth population, but also to resolve unemployment and the boom and bust cycles in our economy which have been a way of life for far too long. The government could do one thing and could do it very effectively, because the private sector is unable or refuses to do it at the present time. It is common knowledge that, for every job created in housing construction there are three immediate jobs created in spin-off industries, such as the plumbing industry, the furniture manufacturing industry and the electrical appliance industry. In the long term, for every one job created, for example, in the construction of housing, there is evidence to show that 25 jobs are created in spin-off industries. It seems to me that if the government were to embark on that kind of program, to get into the construction of housing, it would not only be serving a socially useful function, but would also be providing Canadians with much needed jobs. There would be money coming back into the economy rather than money going out of the economy.

I could go on to spell out more of what we believe could be done. However, my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has mentioned in this House on many occasions, and—

Mr. Paproski: Broadbent is the Charlie McCarthy of the CLC.

Mr. Young: Pardon?

Mr. Paproski: He is Dennis McDermott's Charlie McCarthy.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives love to direct criticism at this party and at other parties in the House. However, it is their opposition motion today. So far, they have five hon. members in the House. The bells rang for about ten minutes tonight because we could not get a quorum and because there was only one Conservative member sitting in the House—

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I think the new hon. member in the NDP should realize that he should not reflect on the number of people in the chamber. He must know that there are committees meeting this evening. If he does not understand what goes on in the chamber, maybe his—

Mr. Blais: There is a labour convention in Winnipeg!

Mr. Paproski: I see no reason for the hon. member reflecting on who is here in the chamber. We have other things to do than to sit in the House.

Mr. Deans: There is no rule or precedent disallowing that.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Speaker, I accept the admonition of the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. As six o'clock approached, the same matter was raised in the House by the same hon. member, I might add. Before going to dinner, I had requested the Table officers to assist me in finding the correct citation which covers comments on the attendance of members. That has not yet been found, but my understanding is that hon. members may remark as to the attendance of members generally, but not as to the attendance of a particular member.

Mr. Deans: That is absolutely right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If that will satisfy the House for the moment, I will see if I can do further research while in the Chair, and perhaps with that as a guideline, I could again recognize the hon. member for Edmonton North.

Mr. Deans: A very enlightened observation.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your decision. I simply do not exactly know where this matter is dealt with in Beauchesne's. Nevertheless, we do not like reflections on the NDP attending a CLC convention in Winnipeg or on the fact that there is only a half dozen members here. I would not want to do that.

Mr. Deans: As a percentage of the total, we are a lot more numerous than you.

Mr. Paproski: I do not think it is fair that any member should reflect on the fact that there is only a handful here from their party.

Mr. Deans: Although most of us are not quite the same size, I might say.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, we anxiously await the results of your research.

Why do the Conservatives like to criticize and like to say that our policies are all wrong? At least we have a policy and at least we have some suggestions to make, but I have failed to detect anything concerning youth unemployment from what the Conservative Party has said in the House today. Frankly, the only thing I could find in terms of Conservative Party policies with respect to youth unemployment came from its position when it unfortunately formed the government for the short period of time between 1979 and 1980. At that time, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) simply promised employers that the Liberal employment tax credit plan would be replaced with the employment tax credit plan of the Conservatives, with exactly the same problems and exactly the same formula used. What did the Leader of the Official Opposition promise? The numbers dropped downward after his election. The national youth service corps, which was supposed to provide 50,000 new jobs for young people in small communities, was later targeted to provide only 14,000 new jobs when the Conservatives were in government. I will not go on. I think the country knows that the Conservative Party is long in criticizing but short in solutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I could begin by stating that it is the hon. members of the New Democratic Party who are directly responsible for the mess in which so many young people find themselves today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: They are directly responsible because that is the party in this House which joined together with the Liberal Party to defeat the previous government and to bring in those policies which have contributed to the highest unemployment this country has experienced since the years of the depression.

I would like to direct attention to the motion before us for debate today which states:

That this House condemns the government for the economic mismanagement which has led directly to the loss of 300,000 jobs since August 1981 and produced a crisis situation for students seeking summer or permanent employment—

• (2030)

I want to repeat that last part:

—produced a crisis situation for students seeking summer or permanent employment—

We are into this debate today because a crisis situation exists in the country. The crisis is this. There are some 475,000 young Canadians between the ages of 16 and 24 who are without work today. Of that 475,000, there are some 200,000 students coming out of schools and universities who are unable to find jobs at this time.

They are spread across the country. They are in towns, villages and cities in every part of this great land of opportunity, but there is no opportunity for them this summer. They cannot find jobs. They have come out of school, college or university looking for jobs which will enable them to return this autumn to follow their studies. They are either looking for summer jobs, or they have graduated and are looking for permanent employment. They can find neither.

There are 200,000 students without jobs. There are 475,000 young people altogether without jobs. If they were to congregate in one spot, come together in one massive group from across the country, I am sure even this government would recognize the magnitude of the crisis which confronts us. Perhaps it would be more responsive than it has been so far in today's debate. What we are facing is not just a major problem for young people throughout the summer, but a massive blow to the development of our society if these young people cannot get back into the educational system this autumn.

I used the word "crisis", and I used it deliberately. The motion uses the word "crisis". That is what youth unemployment is all about in this summer of 1982. It is worse than last year and the year before. Job prospects for young people in Canada today are worse than at any time in our country's history. That is not an exaggeration. That, sadly, is a fact.

The point of this debate today is to ask ourselves how this situation came about and what, if anything, can be done at this late stage in the spring of 1982 to improve the situation in the months immediately ahead of us. As a number of my colleagues have stated in this debate, the current high unemployment is a direct result of the economic uncertainty and instability that characterizes Canada today. Government policies have created that climate of uncertainty and anxiety. As a result, investors no longer feel confident that development can move ahead in Canada. Confidence has been lost, creativity has been stifled and, as a result, jobs are not being created.

A number of members in the Liberal Party are beginning to recognize that their government's policies such as the National Energy Program, the budget, high interest rates, are not working, that they are wrong.

The policies which the federal government brought in, whether emanating from the budget or because of the high interest rate policies or the National Energy Program, are combining to produce unemployment, not jobs. These policies ensure that students will not have jobs this summer. Fortunately, Liberal backbenchers are beginning to realize the reality of these facts, but the Liberal cabinet still refuses to do so.

Earlier today I pointed out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that date had been made available to Liberal backbenchers which shows that unemployment is going to get worse in the months ahead. That is a startling fact to read. It must have come as a startling revelation to those members of the Liberal backbenches who were handed this information.

I asked the minister if he had had this data made available to him and had it analysed and, if so, had he begun to produce programs that would stimulate job creation. I asked whether he had taken that data to see what could be done and whether he could come up with policies and programs to stimulate new job creation.

I do not expect the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to be able to do all of this himself. More than any other person, he has to have the co-operation of the Minister of Finance. That is why I raised this point with him. What was the response of the Minister of Finance? He adamantly refused to answer the question. He wants to stick with the policies he now has, even though the impact of those policies has been so severe on the labour force across this country.

In some ways, one might compare the labour force of this country to a giant bellows which expands and contracts at regular periods throughout the year. The tragedy is that it has been contracting more and more since last summer and there has been no expansion. Since last August, 300,000 jobs have disappeared from the labour force. Not only have those jobs disappeared, but there has not been the seasonal expansion one normally sees in the spring and summer which alleviates unemployment, making it possible for students coming out of school and university to find jobs.

The policies of the government have brought about a prolonged contraction of the labour force. Hundreds of thousands of workers have lost their jobs since last summer. These are permanent workers out of the work force. Young people pouring out of our schools, colleges and universities at this time of the year have to line up behind those already unemployed. Unfortunately, they stand little or no chance of getting into the work force this summer, unless some dramatic move is made now by all levels of government to deal with this critical situation.

It is not enough for the minister to stand up and talk about Bill C-114, Bill C-115 or training programs in the future. He knows he will have our support on these measures. What is important is that he take steps to face this economic dilemma that confronts 200,000 students now.

I do not pretend that the government can turn the economy around overnight. I know that is not going to happen. However, I am not sure that all the steps that can possibly be taken to avert this summer's catastrosphe have been taken.

Let us not underestimate the problems that are facing students, problems which have been aggravated by recent moves of the federal government. It is this government which has cut $1.9 billion from post-secondary education funding for the next two years. It has cut that out. The immediate impact of that move by the federal government is that tuition fees for students will go up dramatically next year.

The immediate need that students have this summer is finding a job which enables them to earn more, not less, money than they usually earn in the summer months in order that they can meet the increased costs that will face them when they return to university next autumn. They are counting on these summer jobs to provide them with these additional moneys. They are finding that those jobs simply are not there.

It is a reality that students cannot get through university solely by relying on government grants or loans to see them through their education. These loans and grants have to be supplemented by private income, by the funds that students earn when out working during the summer months. But if there is no opportunity for them to earn, then the adverse impact of that situation falls heaviest on those students who come from families of low or middle income, because those students cannot fall back on parental assistance to pay their way through the next school year. Their parents are in no position, given today's economic situation, to do more than look after the daily demands on the family budget. So these young people face not only the bleak prospect of a summer without a job but, even worse, they face the prospect of having to drop out of school, not because of lack of ability but because of lack of funds. That will scar each young person individually, Mr. Speaker, but it will leave lasting scars on Canada's ability to produce the trained manpower and womanpower that we are going to need in the years ahead. In the meantime, what do you say to these young people, to these thousands of young people who are literally bewildered by the turn of events and who desperately want to find work? How do you explain to them that the climate for job creation does not exist in Canada today? Because they will come right back and tell you that it is your responsibility to create that climate.

The reality of that faces me every day in my own riding of Kingston and the Islands, a riding which has such noted institutions as Queen's University, the Royal Military College and St. Lawrence College. In my riding there are some 2,000 students who cannot find work this summer, who are desperately hoping to find a job. They know that the normal factories and plants are not providing jobs the way they did last year. They know that they cannot go out and work in the local parks and local grocery stores the way they did last year.

I agree with the minister's comments earlier today that it is the responsibility of all of us to try to help the private sector, to persuade the private sector to hire more students. But the reality is that the private sector has been so brutalized by many of this government's policies, that many sectors of it can no longer stagger along in the way they normally do. They simply cannot expand to take care of an additional 200,000 students this summer, the summer students who are now jobless. At least, they cannot do so without further assistance.

Ten of the minister's colleagues recognized that situation earlier this year, when they wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as follows, and this is what they said in their letter:

> Unfortunately, young people are hit harder by the ravages of unemployment than is any other group in society. We believe that the logical solution to this urgent problem, which demands immediate attention, is to help private enterprise to hire young people. We propose a program of grants to encourage businesses to create jobs for those under 25 years of age.

They urged the Prime Minister to adopt these measures as soon as possible. But, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has not responded to that letter from the ten Liberal members, any more than it has responded to similar suggestions from members of the opposition parties.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration will know that several provincial governments—in particular, the government of Quebec, Alberta and Manitoba—have indicated their intention to take special action to help unemployed students this year. In the province of Quebec the government has recently announced a program to pay bonuses to employers for hiring students.

Mr. Axworthy: They have cancelled it.

Miss MacDonald: The minister says they have cancelled that program. If they have, I am sorry that the Quebec government has seen fit to do that, because it might have taken up some of the slack that exists today in the province of Quebec, as it exists in other provinces, among the students.

I would like to suggest to the minister—and I made this suggestion to him the other day—that there are programs which can be initiated jointly by the federal and provincial governments, working together, even at this late date, emergency programs, crash programs, which could be introduced. I plead with the minister to consider the suggestion that I made to him, on the basis of the emergency that exists, to call together his provincial counterparts. That could be done next week. It might even be possible to arrange it this week. The 11 ministers could sit down together to try to work out programs which would assist private enterprise to hire the students, so that they can be put into the labour force this summer. It is going to take a joint effort, I realize that. I know that it is not going to be easy. But the co-operation that was spoken of earlier today by my colleague from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was never more necessary than it is at the present time.

I urge the hon. minister, I plead with him, that he call together his provincial counterparts to see if the 11 of them cannot work out programs which will spur the private sector to doing more than they are at the present time, in an effort to hire the students and thereby reduce the crisis which faces not only the country but some 200,000 individual young Canadians this summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time we injected a few facts into this debate as opposed to the rhetoric we have been hearing from the last two speakers. Let us agree that the high unemployment being experienced by Canadian youth is a matter of grave concern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCauley: Young people today make up almost half of all unemployed, with an unemployment rate which is double that of the adult population. If we were to ignore the needs and aspirations of this segment of the labour force, the costs for society would be enormous. If we were to ignore this segment of the labour force—but we are not. The situation is not being ignored, Mr. Speaker.

In 1981-82 the federal government spent over $700 million to provide employment-related assistance to some two million young Canadians. With the introduction of new training programs and intensified efforts in other programs, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission's employment assistance to young people in 1982-83 is expected to increase significantly.

However, in our efforts to deal with youth unemployment, a number of factors must be considered. Among these are our current economic conditions, the changing patterns in industry's structure and growth, the number of students looking for part time year-round work to finance their education, and the sheer size of the youth population.

We are all familiar with the phenomenon of the post-war baby boom and its effect on every aspect of our society's economy. Each year since 1975 another wave of this generation has entered the labour force, with the result that each year competition for available jobs has become all the more keen. Compounding this problem is the fact that the majority of young adults entering the labour force lack marketable work experience. Thus, their transition between school and work becomes even more difficult. Many young people leaving school find that their skills do not meet the needs of the labour market. In a tight economic climate these people are among the most vulnerable to changing economic conditions in which the last hired becomes the first fired. This, in turn, leads to unstable employment patterns, which makes subsequent job searches even more difficult.

It is therefore imperative that, in order to facilitate their future entry into the labour market, young people still in school be provided with an opportunity to obtain the kind of experience that will make them more acceptable to employers.

The summer jobs for students created through the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission have been highly successful in providing young people with the kind of work experience they need to prepare for their eventual entry into the full-time workforce. The Summer Canada Student Employment Program also has had a significant impact on summer youth unemployment each year. In fact, last summer's program was estimated to have lowered the unemployment rate for students returning to school by between 1.6 and 2.4 percentage points, on average, between May and August, 1981.

In recognition of the serious employment situation that the students face this summer, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy)—to whom I want to pay tribute tonight for doing a tremendous job in very difficult economic times—announced last summer that funding for student summer employment initiatives in 1982 would be increased by $20 million, bringing the total funding for this year's program to $120 million. This money is being used to create career oriented jobs for more than 55,000 students this summer and to place hundreds of thousands more in employment in both the public and private sectors. This is what the Government of Canada is doing, Mr. Speaker. This is what the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has referred to as brutalizing the economy for students this summer. If that is brutalizing the economy, then I do not understand what she means.

Summer Canada emphasizes the creation of qualitative, career-oriented jobs that would prepare students for future labour market participation. The program consists of three components. First, in the public service employment component, summer internship for some 3,000 students is being created in federal departments and agencies. These technical or specialist jobs which relate to the students' studies, can last up to three summers, with progressively more challenging work assignments in the second and third years.

The community project stream this year will create about 32,600 jobs for students in projects generated by established community organizations throughout the country. Close to another 6,000 students will find employment in job-creation projects sponsored by federal departments and agencies through Summer Canada's federal project stream.

Included in the federal government's summer employment initiative for students are the Department of National Defence, Cadet and Reserve Training Programs, and the RCMP supernumerary constable program. These programs will create jobs for close to 13,000 more students who are interested in jobs in the military, in law or in law enforcement.

Another important aspect of the government's summer employment initiatives are the Canada summer employment centres for students. There are more than 400 of these centres across Canada which operate in the spring and summer months. They serve as a key link in the communities between the federal effort and summer student employment, other levels of government and the private sector. In 1981-82 Canada employment centres for students accounted for some 325,961 placements in both the public and the private sector. In all, 695,365 registrations were taken and 355,769 job vacancies were listed with these student centres. Approximately 135,226 post-secondary students were placed in jobs while the remaining 190,735 placements were secondary students. This summer, despite the tight economic situation the centres expect to find employment for some 314,400 students.

The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission also operates a number of year-round programs directed specifically toward youth. These include Canada employment centres on campus, the international young workers exchange, and special youth employment centres.

The youth employment centres which operate in four provinces, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, are an extension of the Canada employment centres for students and are designed to intensify employment services for hard to place youth. They help young people develop realistic occupation and vocational plans, assist them in gaining useful work experience, and they co-ordinate the efforts of local business and labour organizations as well as other organizations and individuals interested in maximizing employment opportunities for youth in the community.

While all of the programs I have described have been developed specifically for youth, young people are also a major beneficiary of all the job creation and employment development programs offered by the government.

These programs are particularly targeted toward areas of high unemployment. Besides the opportunity to earn income at a time when they would otherwise have to rely on unemployment insurance or welfare, participants in these programs benefit by developing good work habits, learning skills that will be of use in future jobs and establishing a stable employment pattern.

Young people aged 25 and under are a major target of all these programs and it is estimated that they represent close to half the participants. In 1981-82, these figures included some 1,057 young people in the local employment assistance programs; 874 in Canada community services projects; 9,979 in the first round of Canada community development projects and 12,928 in the second round; 343 participants in the new technology employment program and 3,000 in the program for the employment disadvantaged. As well, young people are major participants in the federal training programs and represent 45 per cent of the clients of Canada employment centres and 50 per cent of the clients of the federally-funded Outreach projects.

All of these efforts are designed to assist severely unemployed youth in established positive employment patterns and in easing the transition from school to work for youth in general. While they have proved to be successful, we are not stopping here. Intensive efforts are currently being made within the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to identify the best methods for assisting young people in becoming productive members of our work force. One of the first results of this effort was the allocation, last March, of an additional $188 million for year-round training initiatives, principally for the benefit of young people. This funding will open up several thousand new training places in skills currently in demand, such as welders, machinists and those in high technology occupations.

Our commitment to the young people of Canada is a heavy one, Mr. Speaker, but it is really an investment in the future of our country. I can assure you that in job creation, as in training, our efforts will continue to see that the employment needs of our youth are met.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my children have been robbed of their future by a succession of Liberal governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: My grandchildren have been robbed of their heritage by a succession of Liberal governments. The national debt of this country means that my children and my grandchildren are faced with a debt that it may take their childrens' children to pay off.

Why do we have this kind of debate today? Why do we have this problem in the country today? We have it because the Liberals have been so profligate in their spending over the years that they do not have the money to solve this problem today.

In the first four months of 1981, in British Columbia the youth unemployment rate was 11.5 per cent, and already in the first four months of 1982 it has reached 18.7 per cent. We do not have any answer to that, Mr. Speaker.

In British Columbia, Alcan will employ 80 students in Kitimat this year when last year over 200 students got jobs there. Abitibi Price Inc. and British Columbia Forest Products Limited employed hundreds of students last year but will employ very few this year.

I must stop here, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening to Liberal statistics during this debate and, quite frankly, now I should like to talk about heartbreak, about spirits that are broken and about the many young people who are developing the view that there is no hope for them. Unfortunately, with the kind of government we have, I have no hope to offer them. Four hundred youth employment offices across the country! Well, isn't that a big deal. Except that those 400 offices are telling people between 15 and 24 that there are no jobs. Is this government creating any jobs? No, it is not. They talk statistics, this, that and the other, but are they doing anything? Are they really concerned about the youth of this country? No, they are not. Do not give me statistics, tell me about the young lad who really wants to work but is told there are no jobs.

What is the result of this? What really gets to me is that a young person wants to do something, wants to have a job, and he lives at a time and in a climate where there are no jobs, a climate created by the Liberals. It means that the youth of this land, for this year and, from what I can judge, it will be worse next year, do not have a hope in hell. That is one of the most offensive things to happen in a country which could be as great as Canada. Think of the personal and the psychological effects this can have. I can tell you a bit about that, because I can remember as a very small child wanting to get a paper route and my father saying that no, he could look after us, and that there was a man out there who needed the paper route to look after his family. I can remember at the age of 14 still trying to get a paper route and the circulation manager telling me that there was no paper route for me, he had a guy with a wife and two kids who needed the money a lot more than I or any other kid did. I know what I felt like and I can understand what literally hundreds of thousands of young people in this country are feeling today. The future of this country is in our youth, and what has this government done? It has spent the money over the years wastefully, and now it cannot really go out and do the job. Quite frankly, I blame the unions, the provincial governments of whatever stripe, and I blame the Liberal federal government.

Mr. Smith: What about the NDP?

Mr. Cook: They are part of the unions. What we have here is a situation in Canada where we are looking at importing miners and technicians from other countries for major developments. Why? Because we have not trained our own people. Because the federal and provincial governments and the unions have not wanted to train the youth of this country to do those jobs. That is the greatest story of neglect by government at every level, and quite frankly I am embarrassed and ashamed of it. The day that we bring into this country a trained worker because we do not have one should be the day the youth of this nation really go into revolt. The NDP can talk about their union friends, but just how many of them are prepared to accept apprentices? They are going to compete with their workers and they do not want them.

There is a young lad in the City of Ottawa who is angry, and the reason is that he makes only $30 a week more working than he could get on unemployment insurance. What kind of incentive is that to a young, single and healthy man? You have not provided the incentive for youth to get out and hustle. You have not provided incentives for people to work more than the minimum required in order to collect unemployment insurance. Do you think that is right? We have all heard of the UIC ski team at Banff in years past, and that situation still exists today.

Mr. Riis: What is your answer to that, reduce UIC?

Mr. Cook: What are some of the answers? I listened to the minister saying: "I have not heard one good idea from the other side of the Housse". Well, perhaps I will give him a good idea. At least it is a thought, something positive. In the United States in the 1930s they had a thing called the Civilian Conservation Corps, the CCC. It employed literally hundreds of thousands of young Americans.

Mr. Riis: Sounds like socialism.

Mr. Cook: One of the things they did was to build Timberline Lodge just outside of Portland. It was built by the youth of America when there were no other jobs, and it still exists today. It is a great ski resort, I might add. Where is that kind of thinking in the Liberal Party today? I do not know, I cannot find it. Where will the money come from for things like this? The government has this country so far in debt that it is hamstrung in terms of new initiatives, but I suggest that it could take a bloated Canadian unity office and shut it down, eliminate some of this government waste and redirect those funds into youth employment. I suggest to everyone who is watching me on his television set to think about this the next time he sees a commercial from the Liberal government or a billboard telling him how great it is to be a Canadian. You already know that, so the next time you see one of those ads, think about the money they have wasted rather than trying to help the young people of this country maintain their pride, develop their skills and go on to a useful existence.

I am really scared of what is taking place in this country, Mr. Speaker. I do not mind telling you why. I think there are any number of members here who have experienced the same thing. I have met an awful lot of people who were horribly scarred by the dirty thirties in this country. When I first started to work in the 1940s there were men who believed there is only one thing to do: take a job and hang on to it, whatever it was. Security mattered above all else. I think most of us in the House have met those kinds of people. They may or may not have had a job in the 1930s, but their spirit was broken so totally that for the rest of their lives their only concern was security. They may not have liked their jobs, but it was a job and they were going to hang on to it. No matter what else came along, they would not move. They never took a risk, never did anything, I think in many cases never even had a decent holiday in their whole life. Certainly if they were offered a better job with greater potential they would not take it. They have been broken by the 1930s. We went through two generations of people broken by the 1930s. I would hate to see another generation of our youth broken by the same kind of thing, but we will see some evidence of that this summer and it is most unfortunate.

I would like to quote from an article on unemployment and job dislocation. It reads:

> Patrick O'Rourke, manager of employment programs with the B.C. Department of Labour, said there will be few jobs for students in the west coast forest industry this summer because of lay-offs and production slowdowns.
> "The loss of a large payroll in a community means other companies have to cut back, there are fewer employment opportunities and students have to compete for jobs with people who have been laid off."
> An economist with CEIC in British Columbia said the jobless rate for students in the province could be between 18 and 20 per cent this summer.

I might add the rate last year was 9.6 per cent, and that was bad enough.

Hon. members of the Liberal Party, you are destroying the youth of this country. You have not been creative. You are not altering your priorities. You have been wasting money on all kinds of things. For God's sake, think about what you are doing to the future of this country by spending $60 million in advertising as opposed to creating meaningful jobs in useful work for the youth of our country which they so desperately need.

Let us face it, the youth of this land do not want charity, welfare, or unemployment insurance—they want meaningful work. For God's sake, supply it or face your own children and grandchildren and explain your own failures to them.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented today by the opposition party is most interesting. I believe, as others have pointed out this afternoon, that the problem is a challenge to all Canadians and of course to our government. However, when the member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) remarked that the government was doing practically nothing, to hear him talk was like being in an army column where only one soldier is in step, and the hon. member seemed to identify with this individual, since according to him, everybody else, all the other parties in this House, are not doing what should be done, and only his own party is doing something to remedy the situation for young people. I agree that the situation is most unfortunate, and our government is aware of this, because with the means available to us, we have tried to set up certain structures to help young Canadians.

People who try to make fun of the 400 employment centres we have across Canada should think twice, because these placement offices have been set up to give students across this country a place where they can find out what jobs are available. And that is why we must have the co-operation of all the parties in this House, of all provincial governments, of industry and business and everyone who can provide employment for our young people. If every employer across Canada used our employment centres to recruit students, we would be able to place far more students, because young people at the centres are trained, and the centres can, within 48 hours, provide employers with students who have the requisite qualifications and potential to fill the jobs offered by the employers. This kind of co-operation, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely essential in the present situation, if we are to provide more summer jobs across Canada for our young people.

It is absolutely no use criticizing people and trying to prove that someone is not doing his or her work properly. We must stop this in-fighting and work together to help as many young people as possible to find jobs. As I said earlier, we have 400 employment centres across the country, and in Quebec alone there are 95. Last year, in Quebec, we managed to find jobs for 75,000 young people, and this year we hope to exceed that number. But I must repeat that all businesses and especially all Quebec employers should deal with our Canada Employment Centres. The centres are there to serve employers, and there is no charge for their services. Obviously, the present situation may lead some people to take a very pessimistic view, but in any case, we have to deal with it. In addition to our employment centres, we must also concentrate on training Canada's youth. It was said earlier that we should be focussing far more efforts on the training program for young people. That is exactly what we want to do, Mr. Speaker, and it is for this reason that last Friday, the minister introduced in the House a bill to deal with a situation where, during the eighties, we shall be faced with a manpower shortage. Whether through retraining, or any other kind of training, we must prepare our young people for the labour market, and especially throughout the eighties.

This year, during the 1981-82 financial year, the federal government will be spending over $1 billion on training alone, and I am sure that no one is going to criticize this expenditure. After listening to the hon. members who spoke before me this afternoon, we can probably take for granted that the two opposition parties are going to support the government on the bill now before the House, and that it will be possible to expedite passage of the bill so that quick action can be taken to help young people enter the labour market. It is clear that the legislation must be amended, since it has been in effect for 15 years, and although it has certainly provided an excellent service to many individuals seeking training throughout the country, we must adapt it to the requirements of the eighties.

In Quebec, for instance, as a result of the Axworthy-Marois agreement announced on July 30, 1981, the province received enough money to train over 90,000 workers. Ottawa transferred to Quebec $133 million for the purchase of institutional training and apprenticeship training courses, while $30 million went to training on the job. Add to this $562,000 for native people's training and about $66 million in the form of training allowances and unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Speaker, I feel these figures are very revealing. In fact, our new legislation is aimed at further increasing the sums of money that will be made available to people who want training that will enable them to get jobs in Canada requiring a certain degree of specialized training. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the consultations prior to the introduction in the House last Friday of the bill which is intended to provide Canada with a genuine occupational training charter, these consultations first took place some time last year at a federal-provincial conference in Quebec, and again last January, in Vancouver, where participants wanted the legislation now before the House to respond exactly to our needs.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has no intention of intruding in a field which comes under provincial jurisdiction, in this case education. Since this Quebec conference in September, 1981, we have heard many provincial ministers and other provincial authorities accuse the federal government of intruding in an area of provincial jurisdiction. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the occupational training problem in Canada must be viewed as a national problem. To be able to meet this nationwide demand, it is vital for a government to take care of regional disparities and meet regional needs so that the workers of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or Quebec can look for jobs in the western provinces. The only way to give the required training to these workers is to have a central government which can co-ordinate all the training programs and see to it that everyone in the country can have access to the same courses in every region of Canada.

Needless to say, in spite of the present high unemployment rate, we must still seek thousands of specialized workers outside Canada each year. It is expected that Canada will need about 9,000 of these workers every year during the next five years, and one of the objectives of our new legislation is to reduce this need for foreign workers and achieve complete self-sufficiency within our own country. Canadians often say, and rightly so, that they have the capability, and the contract that was signed last week with Bombardier, the contract that this company signed with New York certainly proves that we have this capability, but we in Ottawa want Canadians in general, and this of course includes Quebecers, to have even more capability and to turn to professions that will be more satisfying in every way in the years to come. Mr. Speaker, I shall perhaps be accused of anticipating the debate concerning the new bill on occupational training, but I would like to point out that everything is interrelated in this sector, which is so essential if we want to ensure our young people a better future. This is also a matter of some urgency, as hon. members will know that the agreements renewed last year expired on March 31. In addition, it must be kept in mind that we need a national training program, because we are dealing with a truly national labour market, if we do not want to put Quebec workers who would want to work in Ontario or the western provinces at a disastrous disadvantage.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overemphasize the need for greater manpower mobility throughout the country, which mobility has in fact been very beneficial to thousands of Quebecers, but I would like to come back to the new legislation on occupational training and mention one of its key components, namely the occupational skills development fund, which can be created only when the bill has been approved and enacted by Parliament. Indeed, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) noted last Friday that, without such approval, we cannot allocate any funds for the construction or extension of any training facility, however urgent the need.

The federal government has already allocated $108 million to a fund earmarked for this purpose during the current fiscal year, but the legislation must be passed before we can proceed with such a program. The various provinces as well as private non-profit training organizations will be able to receive the financial assistance provided by the occupational skills development fund. The new formula and the new legislation will widen the range of training courses available and the categories of eligible workers. It will provide a list of priority occupations and the extent of courses available in each field. Larger financial allocations will also be possible in some cases and the present requirement that adults must not have attended school for 12 months to be eligible to register for training courses will be eliminated, which will mean, for instance, that recent drop-outs will have access to the courses they need.

Workers will still be in a position to receive a more specialized training during a period extending beyond the current 52-week limit and, when applicable, help will also be extended to employers who must train abroad highly-skilled Canadian workers. Finally, agreement procedures with employers will be simplified as well as the payment to provinces of the moneys provided for in contracts, in order to simplify red tape and to speed up training. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the effort will concentrate to a larger extent on skills where workers are very much in demand, on the training of workers affected by new technologies and the training of unemployed workers to prepare them for future jobs in the coming years.

The challenge of the eighties must be met by offering our workers—and especially young people ready to enter the labour market—conditions that will enable them to play an active and fulfilling role in an expanded economy that will be increasingly technological, and particularly new technology oriented. Every Canadian must have an opportunity to be trained or re-trained to gain access to the two million-odd new jobs, both interesting and well-paid, to be generated by economic development in Canada. This will also enable our country to strengthen its competitive position on the international marketplace by increasing productivity, thus making achievements such as the Bombardier contract easier to come by.

In other words, training will now have to be oriented to future needs and be based on technological developments and on the corporate needs of the new decade. Therefore, the government's role is to determine the nature and scope of adult training needs, to delineate the main policies and supply individuals, companies, groups and provinces with financial help to enable them to undertake or provide necessary training. Provinces and their institutions are the main providers of institutional training; they are responsible for the establishment, management and implementation of programs. The two levels of government therefore have distinctive responsibilities in that respect, but they must work hand in hand so that, when this legislation is passed in this House, a great number of Canadians and especially young Canadians will have access to the labour market of the eighties thus making it possible for the greatest possible number of young people to enter the labour market.

[English]

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, on a downtown Ottawa building the following graffito appears: "In a society that has destroyed all real adventure, the only real adventure is to destroy the society." We are seeing that kind of attitude in our young people today, an attitude which can only lead to pessimism, lack of hope, nihilism and anarchy. Are these the kinds of directions which we are really seeking for the country?

Unemployment sees first a loss of self-respect; second, a loss of respect for authority; and, finally, the unfortunate opting out or unfortunate fighting back against a society which refuses to give hope or opportunity. Last year in British Columbia there were 9.6 per cent unemployed. At that time we thought that 9.6 per cent was very high and that it could not possibly be higher. Even at 9.6 per cent we knew that there were at least some who were not really seeking work. They were registered but not necessarily seeking work or, if they were, in fact they were seeking it selectively. In other words, "I will work for this much but not for that much." There was some of that up to the 9.6 per cent, but certainly not all the way to 9.6 per cent. Now the unemployment rate of last summer has turned into 18.7 per cent young people unemployed. We are talking about people who are seeking employment. They are not seeking employment selectively; they are seeking any kind of employment and any kind of opportunity. Mr. Speaker, I wish you could see the picture I have here of Mark Fuller parading on Vancouver streets. I know you cannot see it; you could not see it if you wanted to see it; but if you could, you would see that Mark Fuller's placard says: "For hire, one slightly used 22-year old male. I need employment. Will try almost anything". On the placard is also his telephone number. The placard is a public and desperate plea for help.

There was a time when some young people went through a period of collecting UIC benefits when they joined the Banff UIC team or the Whistler UIC team, but they did so for just a short period of time. They did so only until benefits ran out. However, something new is happening. All of a sudden such people find that when UI benefits run out, there is no place left to go because there are no jobs, even if they wanted them. There are no jobs even for the bright, the well-educated or those who have the will to work. There are no opportunities. Bright young people are turning to welfare and from welfare to a no-hope treadmill.

We talk about how Canada was built on the basis of the work ethic. I uphold the work ethic all the time. We must rebuild the work ethic, but how can we do it? A work ethic is meaningless if there is no work. If there is no work, how can we have a work ethic?

Hon. members should put themselves into the place of high school graduates today. What opportunity do high school graduates have? They have no experience. They are out in the world looking for experience. The easy line used to be, "You don't have any experience", but now not only are there no opportunities for the inexperienced but even those who are experienced are losing opportunities and jobs. Even if those who are experienced cannot get jobs, how can those who are not? What hope is there for high school students graduating next month and wanting to go to universities, technical schools and vocational schools? It takes money to do that because the federal government is cutting back on expenditures for educational services. All of a sudden the cost of university fees, tuition, books and board will double in many cases. Expenses next year will be twice what they were this year, and the number of job opportunities will be half. Graduates will not be able to get jobs at any rate of pay. They will not be able to go back to school. What hope is there for high school students?

Mr. Riis: No hope.

Mr. Wenman: That is right, there is no hope. This is the situation not just for high school graduates but also for university graduates, technical school graduates, vocational school graduates and others who have skills. There has been no over-all strategy for education and for preparing people for the work force. The employment balance is out. People who are needed are not where they should be because there has been no over-all educational strategy and no employment co-ordination strategy for young Canadians.

It is one thing to see older people or middle-aged people unemployed. Those people have been used to the Liberal government for a decade. They are used to periods of unemployment. They have lost hope. A husband and wife, both 35 years old, came to my office. Both of them are professionals. They have worked steadily for ten years. They went to high school and, after high school, worked their way through university by working during the summers. They obtained degrees and went out and got jobs. They were employed for ten years and earned seniority in their positions. They both lost that, as well as their jobs. They have been unemployed for six months. This has never happened to them in ten years. They have a young family. Their mortgage payments doubled. They have lost their home, and that is what they came to see me about. It was not because they lost their jobs; they gave up on those a long time ago. They asked if I would call the bank or do something to try to save their home. These people have become accustomed to this no-hope government. They have become accustomed to no opportunity and the wasted potential of this land.

Some younger people, those between the ages of 18 and 25, still have a spark of hope, but hon. members should see their faces when I tell them there are no jobs for them. At one time when they came to my office I could send them to six, seven or eight places and, if they were willing to do anything for low wages, something could be found for them. I suppose now I could send them around a big circle, they would come back and I would know they would be coming back, but I do not send them around that circle any more because I have lost hope too. Is it not sad that as a Member of Parliament I too have lost hope because I cannot find jobs for them? It used to be that when unemployment offices could not or would not help, I would, but I cannot do that any more. Chamber of Commerce businessmen tell me they have no hope and that they are not creating jobs. This lack of spirit is in young people, employers and others. It is as if nothing can be done and there is no hope.

This government is doing something. It is causing the situation in which there are no jobs, but that does not mean there are not some answers. Perhaps the government should allow young people to take their unemployment insurance cheques to businessmen or prospective employers. Those employers could match those cheques or add 10 per cent or 20 per cent to them and give young people jobs so that they could be productive. This would make for happier, better and more productive young people.

Young people would not have to take their cheques very far. For example, they could take them to municipal offices. The municipalities I represent, Surrey and Langley, had summer student employment programs. I said "had", in past tense. They would be happy to take unemployment insurance cheques and turn them into jobs. They could provide jobs for probably 25 per cent of the cost and would be happy to do so. If they could not do it at 100 per cent, they might at 25 per cent. I called a municipal engineering department, and this is the response I received:

> The Engineering Department has come to rely upon the Summer Student Employment Program to provide temporary extra staff during the peak summer construction period. These students have traditionally provided the flexibility to:
> 1. Temporarily replace permanent staff who should have at least some part of their vacation in summer; and
> 2. Get done a multitude of those tasks which are pedantic and time consuming and, although important and necessary, never seem to get done because of more urgent demands on the regular staff.

And regular staffs are being cut back and cut back. Are there really meaningful jobs? I ask this of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). The answer is, yes. I have the answer in my hand. There is a municipality which will create all kinds of jobs if it is given unemployment insurance cheques. That is all the minister has to do.

What can young people do? They can do labour work to replace outside workers doing construction and maintenance. Experience is not even required. They can gather data for traffic counts, public works inventories, historical research into files and so forth. They can act as secretarial and clerical replacements. They can update base maps for legal purposes, utilities and land development. They can order information and prepare computer input. They could learn something and begin to grow a little bit. They could use the human potential they have and get some further training, which would make them even more useful to our society. These are real jobs. This is in the municipality of Surrey, Mr. Minister. Here they are. Can we do that? Can we give them our UIC cheques? I wonder.

I do not want to stop there. There are other possibilities. Let us look at the minister's cabinet colleagues here. Let us look to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). Do you know that the Minister of National Defence told me in committee the other night that the Armed Forces do not want to take into their ranks every young person who comes to them and says, "I would like to join the reserves for the summer. I would like to gain that experience and opportunity in the Armed Forces. I would like to learn a little bit of patriotism and how to protect myself and my country. I would like to become the man that the armed services promise us we can become". Sometimes the armed services say, "We do not want them. We do not want those who do not have skills, who are not able." I say to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that there are all kinds of young people who have lots of skills, lots of will and still have some hope. The Minister of National Defence said to me that out of every three who ask to go, the department takes only one because of limitations. This applies to those who want only summer training.

Mr. Riis: Would they take Trudeau?

Mr. Wenman: I do not know. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was out there with his children. I thought that they would maybe enrol in Sea Cadets or the Reserves, but I guess there is no place for them.

Why does the Minister of Employment and Immigration not go and talk to the Minister of National Defence and take at least 25,000 of these young people and give them that opportunity? What is the alternative for them? The alternative is wandering in the streets despondently, with no hope and no opportunity to go back to school next year.

Mr. Riis: They do not like young people.

Mr. Wenman: They have something against young people, it seems. They must. It is one thing to punish the wage-earner again and again. They are so punished and pushed down that they are in a desperate state. But if the government believes in our future and wants to build up these young people, why can it not take 25,000 or more into the Reserves? Tell me why? When I asked that in the committee, you should have seen the faces of the generals of the Armed Forces of Canada light up. They have been talking about cutbacks for so long that they cannot even imagine expansion. Perhaps we should make it an emergency program. We have 18.7 per cent of the people in that age bracket in Vancouver who might welcome this kind of program. Let us give them an opportunity? Why not? That is a good idea. You know it is. We could take their unemployment insurance cheques and give them to the Armed Forces and say, "Here. Create a job. It will cost hardly anything. Build the country, build the nation, build up our young people". That is the kind of thing we want to say.

I spoke with the recreation departments in several lower mainland municipalities. I phoned them and said, "What about your recreation department?" They said, "Well, we have almost no budgets this year. Recreation got the biggest chop of all." So those young people who were trying to keep the parks alive, trying to help other young people, trying to build themselves up, cannot do so. But the municipalities could take those unemployment cheques and create jobs in the field of recreation for the summer. There are so many things that could be done. It is not that there is not an answer. It is simply that there is a great waste, a great loss and a great frustration. I cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that you have not experienced it in your riding or that there is not one Liberal MP who has not experienced the same. Take this idea that I have given you today, take the credit for it and use it. Create these real jobs in this real way. Give our young people a chance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to take part in the debate this evening on the motion introduced by the official opposition, particularly since it has to do with a tremendous problem faced by young Canadians, the matter of employment. However, the motion moved by the official opposition could have been drafted quite differently, because it urges the government, and I quote:

—to . . . promote the private and public sector hiring of Canada's youth so that those attending school can afford to continue to acquire needed skills, and those graduating can immediately become productive members of the work force.

This summer we expect that about 1.2 million students will join the Canadian labour force on a temporary basis. In 1981, only 11 per cent out of roughly 1.2 million students were unable to land a job, whereas this year we expect that figure might reach 16 per cent. In other words, some 200,000 young people will be unable to find work.

However, when we read the motion, we realize that they are expressly asking the government to promote the creation of jobs in the private sector as well as in the public sector. With respect to the public sector, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced a $100 million grant. So, to those who are urging the government to take the necessary assistance measures, I suggest that an amount of $100 million does represent an incentive and is a concrete way to lend a hand to students. They can always say that it is a fair amount but that it could be larger still, and I agree. But not unlike any government or corporation, we also have budgetary limits.

One thing which really amazes me in this type of debate, Mr. Speaker, is that we hear practically the same comments on either side: we all deplore the fact that students have no summer jobs and we also deplore the fact that family heads aged 35, 40 or 50 cannot rejoin the labour force. I suppose all that stems from the legendary generosity of Members of Parliament, but all those pious wishes combined do not point to a solution. Keeping in mind the very short time at my disposal this evening, I would like hon. members to consider two possibilities which in the course of the coming months and the coming year might help us find a formula likely to enable us to make much greater use of Canada's student and permanent manpower. The first would be to reformulate various programs and call them voluntary public service. I listened to the member who spoke before me and who, in his own words, was trying to set an objective quite similar to the one I will endeavour to describe in the next few minutes. Our young people, boys and girls, are asking for work. They do not necessarily want high wages, they want to be busy, to make a worth-while contribution to the community, but also to achieve self-fulfilment. That is what the young people want at the moment.

I remember that during four summers I was responsible for student employment on the North Shore, and most boys and girls wanted to work 32 or 42 hours a week at a reasonable salary. Those young people did not spare their efforts or their time and were anxious to share their knowledge as well as to learn. It is quite important even for employers to realize how much those young people can benefit the company. On the other hand, the company is also an excellent school for young people. At present, because of our free enterprise system, it happens that more young people will be unable to find jobs this summer. Let us keep in mind that the system is based on the fact that since we live in a free country, nothing is compulsory. Unemployment insurance and social welfare are characteristics of free countries, because in totalitarian countries, everybody would be working. Everyone is given a registration number and has to perform some duties. Then, there is no unemployment, because everybody is under state control. Thank God this is not the case in America where people are free and have free institutions. We could perhaps therefore review some programs and set up some kind of voluntary public service. And what would we do in that voluntary public service? How would it be financed? Who could belong to the managerial staff? Such a voluntary public service could be distributed throughout the country in six or seven designated areas.

Young people between 16 or 17 and 25 could apply for community work and benefit from contacts with native people, anglophones, francophones and other groups, and could be transferred every six months, along the lines of the methods used by countries where military service is compulsory. With this difference, that it would be a civilian volunteer service without any connection with the Armed Forces or military discipline. It is meant as an opportunity for young people to take a break from their studies, or after leaving school or giving up a job, to gain valuable experience and give society the benefit of their intelligence, energy and creativity. The volunteer service could be administrated by employees of private companies who would be seconded to the program as a contribution to the community, so that no increase in the numbers of federal personnel or of any other level of government would be necessary.

Second, this would make it possible to keep both administrative and operational activities flexible. Every two years, companies could lend and delegate staff to enable the operation to function normally. We would be able to make use of the skills of people working as education officers in the Armed Forces. We could also use DND planes. Planes of Canadian private companies could also be used, because it seems they often fly with only about 50 or 60 per cent of their passenger capacity. We have all the resources we need to make a system of this kind take shape and become operational. The will must be there, however, and a detailed analysis will be necessary, on the basis of a pilot project, after which we could increase staff as needed. In fact, we are doing something similar under the Katimavik program. Everybody knows about this particular program, and Katimavik is a little like the program I have just described. The only difference would be that salaries would be adapted to the young people joining the civilian volunteer service, and to that salary could be added an increase of 5 per cent or 8 per cent, between unemployment insurance and volunteer work. Thus, we are not taking away jobs from people in the private sector, we are not adding to the personnel of municipal, provincial or federal governments and we are giving young people a chance to develop in their country for a year or two, to discover the various parts of Canada and live with their fellow Canadians.

I have filed a document with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to have it analysed by his officials. It is a document I prepared four years ago, under the title: Vers une intégration à la vie canadienne. If hon. members agree, it could perhaps be tabled here in the House later on. The first part of my plan is civilian volunteer service, the second part would consist in getting the unions interested in our program, and I am thinking of an apprenticeship system which would enable companies to hire young people just out of school to fill jobs with governments, Crown corporations or private companies. All that inexperienced young people would need would be the trade unions' permission to go and work for a company, although there might be already a few workers too many to do the job. But this scheme would make it possible for young people to join the labour force very quickly while gaining some worth-while experience. But that is often the tragedy in our society. Our young people can never join the labour force on a permanent basis or acquire the experience they need, so that a lot of young men and women reach the age of 25, 26, 27, 28 or 30 without ever having had a real job. Those are two schemes I should like the House to consider instead of hearing the same old complaints over and over again, that to be unemployed is a tragedy and to be unable to find work is a cause for serious concern for our young people.

I think that if we took the time to consider these two schemes very carefully, we could come up with interesting new ideas about ways to improve our present manpower training and help our society develop. Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank you very kindly for listening to me. I should like very much the leaders of both opposition parties as well as those of the government who are responsible for the manpower matters to look into my proposals. Moreover, with the House's permission, I should like to table the document I mentioned a while ago, so that hon. members may have the opportunity to better understand this plan.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I take it the parliamentary secretary seeks the leave of the House to table the document to which he referred. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use the closing moments of this debate to bring to your attention, that of this House and the nation some of the concerns that we in Atlantic Canada have about the desperate plight the youth is experiencing in that part of the country in obtaining employment, and its employment future which is indeed bleak. Atlantic Canada is one of those areas that, unfortunately, is the first to experience slumps and is generally the last to come out of them.

What has transpired over the last few months and years under this government is an experience in Atlantic Canada that is woefully inadequate when it comes to trying to cope and deal with the problems the youth of Atlantic Canada is experiencing in finding jobs.

Just briefly, I want to refer to some of the comments which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. McCauley) made earlier in the debate. He said words to the effect that if they were to ignore this sector of the labour force, referring to the youth, they would indeed be at fault. For the information of the nation, it is only fair and right that the public be apprised of what has happened to the labour force and how much attention this government has been paying to the youths who are employable and are looking for work.

In 1968, when this government under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power, the youth unemployment rate of this nation was 7.4 per cent. The most recent figures indicate that the unemployment rate in the nation now for youth is an astounding 15.8 per cent. This is the sort of tactic, program and operation that this government has implemented to take care of the youth of this nation.

I could expound with many examples from Atlantic Canada, including my own constituency, that have been brought to my attention by young people who are frustrated and by tearful mothers who are frustrated over the prospect of losing their children to other parts of the country, indeed, other parts of the continent outside this country. Unfortunately, time does not permit me to do that.

I suppose if I were to do a service to the youth of this nation, I would use the remaining minute of my time to propose a minute of silence to the youth of this country. They are going to be the losers. Believe me, the youths of this nation are losing hope by the hundreds. When the young lose hope, the nation loses hope. They are going to be the inheritors of a hopeless Canadian society, compliments of the present government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PIPELINES—BUILDING OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, on May 20, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) if he would provide a schedule for the extension of the natural gas pipeline into Atlantic Canada. As you are well aware, the natural gas pipeline was first promised by this government in Halifax on January 25, 1980 by the then opposition leader and now the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). At that time he promised that a Liberal government would take immediate action to ensure the full co-operation of all parties in the construction of the natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the Maritimes. He went on to say that the pipeline would have reversible capacity, so that Atlantic Canadians would have the opportunity both to use western natural gas now and to send offshore gas to central Canada at a later date. The present Prime Minister stated at that time that the natural gas pipeline would be like a railroad in the 1980s, an energy pipeline that would have the potential to be a steel link uniting the nation.

On at least two or three occasions I have asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to give us a definite commitment as to when this natural gas pipeline will be constructed. I started questioning him shortly after the May, 1980, election. He has been soft-shoeing the issue ever since. Now we pick up the newspaper and what do we see but, "Maritime Pipeline Project Near Collapse".

Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canadians have been very patient with this government. They have been patient because they believe in promises. They are people who generally have a great faith in the leaders of the nation. There is no reason for them to think that those promises that the leaders of this nation made to them should not be kept. When they see statements like this in the press, "Pipeline Project Near Collapse", they become despairing, and for good reason.

Why is it that Atlantic Canada always seems to be on the short end of the stick when it comes to receiving any benefits from this government? They are quick to point out that the natural gas pipeline will be completed through the province of Quebec and into Quebec City by 1983. They originally anticipated and expected to have natural gas flowing into the maritimes by 1982 or 1983. Now it would appear as though there is only a bleak possibility that that will happen. They stated, a couple of years ago, that it would all depend on the viability of the prospects of the finds off the east coast. Mr. Speaker, those prospects are looking very bright indeed, but unfortunately the government's promises become dimmer and dimmer and dimmer.

Oh, they will make a great show. I dare say that the parliamentary secretary will utter great platitudes and tell us that things are going along very nicely, that everything is on schedule, that indeed the natural gas pipeline will be extended to the maritime provinces.

But one thing is certain, and I challenge the parliamentary secretary to deny it: all hope for the natural gas turnaround is now extinguished for New Brunswick or for Nova Scotia. I challenge the parliamentary secretary to refute that statement. Unfortunately, that is the prospect before us, I am certain.

Maritimers and Atlantic Canadians have the will to work, they have worked and they have contributed greatly to the prosperity in the past years of this nation. They have contributed in many meaningful ways to the development of this great nation, but for some reason or other this government in its callous, uncaring way seems totally and completely to have ignored even the fact that they exist. That is a great tragedy. It is a great tragedy for the future of the nation and it is a great tragedy for Atlantic Canadians who are facing the bleak prospect of at least another two years before they have the opportunity to deliver to the government the message that they will not be buffooned any longer.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been stated on many occasions in this House that the extension of the natural gas transmission system to the east coast is one of the top priorities of the federal government.

The Government of Canada has committed very considerable financial support for this pipeline, because it is in fact a central element of Canada's strategy to reduce the vulnerability to supply interruptions of those areas of eastern Canada that are presently dependent on imported oil.

The pipeline extension will provide new domestic markets for natural gas from western Canada. Under the terms of the September 1, 1981, memorandum of agreement between the governments of Canada and Alberta relating to energy pricing and taxation, Alberta will make market development incentive payments to the federal government to help fund national programs to expand domestic natural gas distribution systems, thereby making this less expensive energy source available to more Canadians. The governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are strong supporters of the concept.

As the hon. member knows, TQ and M began work on the gas pipeline extension to Quebec City some time ago, however the company has encountered some difficulties which have resulted in construction delays. The federal government had estimated that the construction of the pipeline across the maritimes would begin in 1983 and that it would reach Halifax by 1986. However, this timetable requires adjustment due to the fact that current labour difficulties have plagued the Quebec portion of the line and escalated costs by millions of dollars. TQ and M has also experienced problems related to route selection and delays in obtaining provincial government approval. It should be noted that only recently the government of New Brunswick appointed a distributor for natural gas and no distributor has yet been named in Nova Scotia.

On the matter of project scheduling I would like to report that the company is planning for a full construction season, employing a fully integrated work force. Contracts planned to be awarded in coming weeks will be completed in accordance with the company's planning schedule. TQ and M expects contractors working for it to hire as many people as they foresaw initially.

The previously announced economic spin-offs of the pipeline project still stand, a point which should be of particular interest to the people of the maritimes considering the very positive economic opportunities that can be reaped by entrepreneurs in that region of the country.

In conclusion I would just like to express the government's satisfaction with TQ and M's prediction that the upcoming construction season will be very productive. However, there have been delays caused by labour disputes in Quebec and delays in the appointment of gas distributors in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

THE ECONOMY—HEARINGS CONDUCTED IN MONTREAL BY GOVERNMENT MINISTERS AND SUPPORTERS. (B) RESPONSIBILITY FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on May 18 I raised certain questions with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with reference to what has been known in the past as "the Gang of Ten". You will recall that questions were raised today, Mr. Speaker, about the "Gang of Fifteen" or was it "the Gang of Seventeen", operating out of Toronto.

The issue I raised was the issue with respect to ministerial responsibility. When a person who is a Member of Parliament becomes a minister of the Crown, that person takes an oath to act on behalf of the Crown in a capacity that is different from that of an ordinary Member of Parliament. They become part of cabinet or government as distinct from Parliament. As members of the government they are responsible for explaining government policy to the country. What has happened is that this government has caused real distress and concern throughout the country. We have the spectre of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) saying the budget is a political disaster. We have the spectre of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) saying that the employment program of the government is a disaster. We have the spectacle of the minister for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal)—and I call him that because he does not really have any other job. He is the minister for one riding, and I do not know of any other government which appointed a minister responsible for one constituency. However, the minister, otherwise known as a minister of state, says he is going to conduct public hearings into the budget and economic policies of the government. All this creates a climate of uncertainty and puts the government's entire fiscal stance in disrepute. We have all this simply because members of the government make statements that they think the policies are wrong, there will be changes, and they create an uncertainty we cannot live with.

I happen to believe, Mr. Speaker, that some of the things those three ministers have stated are correct, but that does not absolve them as ministers from the obligtion in our parliamentary system to resign if they think the government is wrong. That, Sir, is why I raised the question. The answer from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was that ministers have to respect the policies of the government, but that the ministers I mentioned are involved in consultation. Well, Sir, what these ministers are involved in is not consultation. It is, rather, active criticism of the policies of this government.

Mr. Corbett: Confrontation.

Mr. Blenkarn: My colleague says "confrontation" and I agree. The government speaks out of both sides of its mouth. A minister goes into his riding and says one thing to his constituents, and then goes to a cabinet meeting and affirms something entirely different. It creates the feeling that we cannot depend on the government or ministers of the Crown to give us honest and straightforward answers on where they and the government stand. We are entitled to those straightforward answers, and if the Minister of National Health and Welfare honestly believes we should have make-work programs to put people back to work, then she should say so, but not as the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She should resign. But as a private member of this Parliament of Canada representing her constituents she should make those statements and force the government to change its policies. But she cannot sit as a member of the cabinet and support the budget and the economic thrust of the government and at the same time go around the city of Montreal and travel across the country generally and say that changes should be made. The same thinkg applies to the Solicitor General and to the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal). There is nothing wrong with Members of Parliament, who are Liberal members who honestly believe that their government is not doing what it should do, making advocacy statements, but when a member becomes a minister of the Crown that Member of Parliament loses his or her freedom as an ordinary member and becomes a minister of the Crown of the government. There is a fine but very important distinction there.

• (2215)

This government has lost its sense of responsibility. The Prime Minister has lost his capacity to govern the country. He fails to recognize that ministers in his cabinet have an obligation at all times to support every one of the government policies. If they fail to do that, they have an obligation to give up their seat at the cabinet table. They have an obligation to their constituents to stand up and be counted.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it important to bear in mind what the Right Hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) comments relate to in his answer to the hon. member on May 18. They relate to the hearing process which took place recently in Montreal. It is important that emphasis should be placed on the words which were repeatedly used throughout the Prime Minister's answer, namely, that it was a consultative process.

We have ten Members of Parliament who decided to undertake hearings to listen to what interested parties had to say with regard to various government policies in a co-ordinated way. Those comments were expressed in various locations in eastern Montreal.

Surely the hon. member would not suggest, and I do not believe he has suggested, that the eight members of Parliament who are not ministers should be in any way constrained from doing that. In fact, you could say it is probably their duty, which all Members of Parliament have, to hear what their constituents have to say on whatever issues constituents want to bring to their attention.

I would suggest that the same rights, privileges and duties also apply to the two ministers involved. They may well have been wearing two hats. They would be listening to the representations made to them through this consultative process as Members of Parliament but also as ministers of the Crown.

I had an opportunity to discuss the process that took place with the Minister of National Health and Welfare earlier this evening. She advised me those consultations were successful, that a good listening process had occurred. I think there were opportunities which enabled them to clarify certain government programs and to familiarize those who were making representations on a wide range of topics with what the government has been doing with regard to their concerns.

I do not think we have heard anything here tonight that would suggest the two ministers in question were not supporting government policies throughout this consultative process. There is no evidence of that whatsoever. The hon. member suggested they were doing this or that; they were disagreeing with government policy, etc. He may or may not be correct if the hypotheses set out had occurred. The fact is they did not occur. The consultative process occurred in which ten Members of Parliament, two of whom happen to be ministers, heard what the people from the area they represent had to say on a wide variety of topics. That is a good process and it is probably something more of us should be doing more often. I commend them for having done it. There has been no suggestion whatsoever that anything they said could in any way be taken as disagreeing with government policy. They were there to listen, and they did; they were there to explain, and they did. If anything, I think they should be commended for taking such an initiative.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY—ALLEGATIONS OF CIA PAYMENTS TO CANADIAN ELECTION CANDIDATES. (B) REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE STUDY ALLEGED CIA INVOLVEMENT IN CANADIAN ELECTIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday, May 19, I asked a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) concerning certain activities on the part of the CIA in Canada between the years 1970 and 1976. I indicated in my question to the Solicitor General that in 1976 a Mr. John Meier of British Columbia, a former associate of Howard Hughes and a man very knowledgeable about the operations of CIA both inside and outside Canada, met with British Columbia Senator Ray Perrault and, following that meeting, met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) here in Ottawa. At that time in 1976 Mr. Meier provided Senator Perrault with extensive documentation and tapes concerning allegations of CIA penetration of Canadian security services and, as well, very serious allegations of funding by the CIA of specific election campaigns and candidates in the provinces of Quebec, British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan during the years 1970 to 1976.

Last Wednesday I asked that the Solicitor General confirm that, as a result of the allegations made by Mr. Meier, the Prime Minister ordered a secret investigation by one Pierre Genest, a Toronto lawyer. I urged that the Solicitor General confirm that inquiry and make public the results of it.

In response to my question at approximately 2.45 p.m., the Solicitor General indicated that he had no information on that subject at all. He said:

> I hope to be able to look into it and comment on it shortly.

That was despite the fact that the previous morning in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs I had given the Solicitor General a copy of a petition which, I informed him, I intended to table following question period the next day, as well as a copy of a lengthy document which I indicated I intended to question him on the following day. As of 2.45 on Wednesday afternoon we have the Solicitor General saying that he knows nothing whatsoever about this inquiry ordered by the Prime Minister.

Following up on that question and assuming that the Solicitor General was accurate in his reply, I urged that the government order a comprehensive study of these allegations by the justice committee; in other words, that the Solicitor General give the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs a reference to study the question of CIA involvement in Canada, not just during the years 1970 to 1976, but at all relevant periods until the present time. I urged that the committee have the power to hear witnesses, including John Meier, who is presently under a warrant of extradition to California which is being appealed, and that it have the power to question Mr. Pierre Genest to determine how it was that he was appointed to conduct this investigation on the part of the Prime Minister's office, what his qualifications were aside from being a prominent Liberal in the city of Toronto, what witnesses he questioned, what was his mandate, and ultimately what his findings were.

We know very well that during this period of time the CIA was active, not only in Chile in attempting to overthrow the Allende government, ultimately successfully in 1973, but as well in Greece and in Central America, and in 1975 in Australia, in attempting to destabilize the labour government of Gough Whitlam. To those who suggest that the CIA would not be involved in Canada, I point out that indeed they were very heavily involved at that time in a number of countries including Australia, a fellow member of the Commonwealth.

We recently learned during the trial in the province of Quebec of an RCMP officer arising from the McDonald commission report that an officer of the RCMP alleged that some $350,000 had been funnelled by what he called a friendly nation into the independence movement in the province of Quebec. This certainly confirms the allegations which were made back in 1976 and recently repeated by Mr. Meier. In view of the seriousness of these allegations and the obvious threat these allegations, if substantiated, would pose to the sovereignty of Canada, I urge that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be given a reference to examine all aspects of CIA involvement in Canada to determine whether indeed the CIA has been operating in Canada, either with or without the co-operation of the RCMP security service, and that in that investigation the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs have the power to examine, in camera where necessary, all witnesses who wish to give evidence on this important subject.

In closing, I emphasize that we are dealing here with a very serious matter. We are dealing with the right of Canada to control its own domestic affairs without outside interference. We are dealing with the very democratic process in Canada and the right of Canadians to the assurance that the CIA has not in any way attempted to subvert that very important process. I look forward to the remarks of the parliamentary secretary on behalf of the Solicitor General and, hopefully, to his assurance that indeed the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will have an opportunity to study this very serious question.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am going to disappoint my hon. friend.

Allegations have been made about CIA activities in Canada, raised in petitions by John Herbert Meier. The hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is apparently prepared to give weight to these allegations. The government is not, because it is satisfied that these allegations, which were made in the past and investigated in the past by the security service of the RCMP and, as well, on behalf of the government by counsel retained by the PMO, do not merit credence.

I might just say as an aside that I am surprised at the remark made by the hon. member with regard to the qualifications of Mr. Pierre Genest. I would have thought that as the justice critic for his party the hon. member would know that Mr. Genest is one of the most outstanding counsel in Canada.

It should be borne in mind by the House that sensational allegations are easy to make, and it would be very unwise to take seriously all allegations just because they are sensational.

The hon. member claimed recently that he had independent evidence which would corroborate what Mr. Meier said. I believe he has a duty to present it before any further investigation is justified. Mr. Meier has a criminal record, which he obtained for falsifying evidence in the United States. He has in the past jumped bail, and he is appealing extradition to the United States, where he is charged with murder.

The allegations which had any substance at all have been investigated in the past and found not worthy of belief. It would not be fair to the individuals purportedly implicated in these allegations, which have no substance, to hold a public inquiry based on these allegations.

Unless the hon. member is prepared to come clean with the House and give the facts which he believes support the allegations, he should not expect any further consideration of these particular allegations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GRAIN

SHIPMENTS THROUGH SAINT JOHN, N.B.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. During the summer months the port of Saint John lies substantially idle and the dock workers are unemployed. A tremendous assistance to these workers could be provided by the government if they would use their good offices, in the same fashion as the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), to urge the Wheat Board to divert just a few shipments through the port of Saint John during this period to benefit the workers. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the government not make a decision on this critical issue to workers in Saint John by refusing the motion but show their concern by agreeing to take it under consideration, by adopting it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

DIFFERENCES IN POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the present economic recession is directly attributable to years of Liberal-NDP policies of zero growth, belt tightening, and restraint, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House invites the Canadian public to cast aside the present defeatist government and participate in the liberty, prosperity and growth offered by the Conservative alternative.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CALL FOR DISMISSAL OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is both a cabinet minister and a law officer of the Crown, and should not intervene directly or indirectly in the judicial or quasi-judicial process, and in view of the statements by the Prime Minister that it is more important that justice be done than that it be seen to be done, and that justice must be tempered with mercy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House urge the Prime Minister to do justice to all Canadians who believe in the rule of law by firing the Solicitor General forthwith, but that he ensure that this justice be tempered with mercy by firing the minister gently.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EDUCATION

ASSISTANCE FOR POST-SECONDARY STUDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Reports from student aid officials in six provinces indicate that the expenses of the average aid-receiving student still exceed his or her summer earnings, savings and/or government assistance by some 15 per cent, as first reported by the 1980 federal-provincial task force on student aid. Now, in the coming academic year, fee increases at Canadian universities will be between 10 per cent and 30 per cent. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House impress upon the Secretary of State, in light of his responsibility for post-secondary payments and the Canada Student Loan Program, the urgent need for immediate financial assistance for most Canadian post-secondary students, many of whom have little hope for summer employment.

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT FOLLOW UNITED STATES INTEREST RATE POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, yesterday interest rates in the United States on treasury bills fell to 11.48 per cent. The American rate on a T-bill basis is now 3.5 per cent less than the Canadian T-bill rate. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That, in view of the fact that the government is blaming the Americans for high interest rates, the government follow American interest policies and reduce our interest rates by 3.5 per cent, so that our interest rates are no more than the interest rates charged in the United States.

DETENTION OF BRITISH JOURNALISTS IN ARGENTINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, newspapermen and all of us who support the principle of freedom of the press want to register protest against the imprisonment of three British journalists who are detained in Argentina under charges of espionage. Whereas Canada, as a free and democratic country, cannot condone the trampling of this fundamental right anywhere in the world, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs do convey through diplomatic channels Canada's concern with freedom of the press violations in Argentina and Canada's support for the representations made by many Canadians that the three British journalists, now detained, be released as quickly as possible.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

CALL FOR BOYCOTT OF NESTLÉ COMPANY PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Nestlé company continues to make huge profits by pushing an infant formula which discourages breast feeding and leads to malnutrition and even death in many Third World countries. Inasmuch as 226 violations by Nestlé of the World Health Agreement have been documented, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House condemn Nestlé for continuing to kill Third World babies and support a renewed boycott of all Nestlé products in Canada to enforce World Health Organization requirements.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON SALES OF EQUIPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the November 12 budget has had untold disastrous effects upon Canadians. One of the provisions thought up by the Minister and the bureaucrats was cutting the capital cost allowance in half for the year of purchase. This has resulted in farmers and businessmen making do with their old equipment instead of buying new equipment, and there has consequently been a string of dire results—no purchases, no sales, no orders, no work, more unemployed; no orders, no work, more unemployed; etc., etc. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House asks the minister to be sensible and withdraw this provision from the budget and get farmers and businessmen buying new equipment, which will put Canadians back to work, which will increase pay rolls, which will give the government more revenue. Only good can result form the cancellation of this ill-thought-out scheme.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPORT OF TECHNOLOGY AND FUEL TO ARGENTINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, a Washington-based human rights research group, condemned the Canadian government decision to continue supplying Argentina with nuclear fuel, characterizing the decision as "cynical economic opportunism", and as being "irresponsible and, indeed, reckless." The Council also reiterated a point already made by many Canadian nuclear experts, that any non-proliferation agreements which Argentina has signed are unenforceable and that Argentina has refused to sign the 1968 United Nations Nuclear Non-Proliferation Agreement or the 1967 agreement signed in Mexico intended to make Latin America a nuclear free zone. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House instruct the government to stop promoting its economic bailout of Canada's nuclear industry at the expense of non-proliferation, and further, that the government stop supplying nuclear technology and fuel to the military junta in Argentina until such time as we can be sure that our uranium products are not being used to build an Argentinian bomb.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE PRESS

POLICIES GOVERNING CONCENTRATION OF OWNERSHIP

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Yesterday the minister left the House to make an announcement of the government's policies to regulate the daily newspaper industry in Canada. What is there in the minister's recommendations that would have led to the Ottawa Journal or the Winnipeg Tribune not being closed? What are the recommendations made by the minister to prevent future closings of newspapers throughout the country?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I believe that the recommendations of cabinet that I announced yesterday respond to the major findings of the Kent Royal Commission, that is, the problem of increasing concentration, conglomerate ownership, cross-media dominance in a particular marketplace, and the right of Canadians, especially when so many Canadian cities have only one newspaper, to have recourse other than to the courts or the benevolence of a publisher or an editor if they believe they have a grievance.

As far as the question about what it has done to reverse the tragic demise of the Tribune or Journal, I do not believe the government is in a position to do that unless the hon. member is suggesting that we directly support newspapers with public funds in their entirety. I do not think that would be appropriate.

Mr. Beatty: The minister concedes that nothing in his recommendations will stop the closing of newspapers in Canada in the future.

ROLE OF RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns one of the specific recommendations. In the minister's recommendations he proposes that in future non-media companies intending to buy a daily newspaper would be required to justify that action to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. In view of the fact that in the minister's own document, a cabinet document dated March 31, 1982, he raised serious doubts as to the legality of such a measure, why does the minister propose that Parliament should pass such legislation which he, himself, feels could be illegal?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, under the proposal, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission would review a company that had interests beyond media interests and greater than those media interests to see that the ownership and running of the newspaper entity being purchased would be undertaken in a manner satisfactory to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission independent of editorial influence or intimidation from other properties owned by the same company.

We are acting quite within the law. If the hon. member is suggesting that we are in fact acting outside the law, he is not understanding our proposal. He should also note the dating on documents, real or otherwise, which he has, that may or may not be changed by the cabinet process.

Mr. Beatty: It is a novel approach if the cabinet process suddenly changes the legality of something when the Department of Justice says it may be illegal. His document said that even this review process may be struck down by courts.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF PRESS COUNCIL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister about another proposal which was made in his document. It is the proposal to set up a government sponsored press council. Instead of laying on another layer of government bureaucracy at a considerable cost to taxpayers, why would the government not simply ask that existing press councils agree to hear complaints from individuals about non-member newspapers? Why could the situation not have been handled in that manner instead of proposing that the government intervene in the newspaper industry in this way?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, with regard to the issue of the right of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to review prospective purchases by the newspaper industry, we believe, indeed, in the advice of our counsel, and the Department of Justice says that we are quite within our legal rights. The hon. member is misunderstanding if he suggests otherwise. Perhaps he may be referring to criminal penalties following a rejection by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, or a failure to comply. That is quite different from our right to have that review process.

On the question of why do we not simply refer any grievances to the existing councils, we believe that those councils are set up to operate according to a membership that they have established. The proposed Canadian advisory council on newspapers does not force any newspaper to belong to it. It simply has the right of receiving grievances about a newspaper if that newspaper does not belong to an existing press council. As a result of all the discussions I have had with journalists, the public and a variety of interested segments of Canadian society, I believe that that was found overwhelmingly acceptable.

The only complaint I would get was from certain publishers who said, "It should rest with us to decide whether or not a grievance is fair." I do not believe that that is fair when there are so many Canadian cities with only one newspaper. I believe the public should have the right to go to an independent body, not to a government body. That council is absolutely independent of the government. An endowment fund is the proposal, not paid for by the government, and completely independent of government.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, to no one's surprise, my question relates to the continued existence in the government of the Solicitor General, which only the Prime Minister can answer. He is not here, as I know he has a four o'clock press conference, but he will obviously be turning up in the question period before the conference. May I ask the indulgence of the Chair to defer my question to that time, and ask you to recognize the hon. member for Victoria?

Madam Speaker: Well, the hon. member simply need not get up and I will not recognize him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: She loves me!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Powell River.

QUERY RESPECTING CORPORATE TAKE-OVERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the minister in charge of the Kent Commission. I would like to remind the minister of his own words in Vancouver on February 26, 1982, when he said, "Anybody who tries something fast between the recommendations of Kent and the government's decision on what to do—we'll reach back if you are trying to beat us." Will the minister explain to the House what his recommendations will be in dealing with Torstar's take-over of Inland Publishing and Maclean-Hunter's acquisition of Sun Publishing in Edmonton, Calgary and Toronto?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, the situation of Torstar taking over Inland Publishing took place during the course of the Kent recommendations, long before I made the statement that if, between the time of that statement and our recommendations, anything took place, they would face the fact that they had gone in opposition to a direction the government was considering. Concerning the second instance involving Maclean-Hunter, once the direction is given to the CRTC on cross-media ownership in the context of the announcement made yesterday, the CRTC will surely consider that acquisition in the light of that direction.

ALLOWABLE LEVEL OF CONTROL BY NEWSPAPER CHAINS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): A second strange situation arises in this incredible report, Madam Speaker. The minister has proposed a law which will restrict any single corporation to 20 per cent of the national daily newspaper circulation. Will the minister tell this House why he is prepared to place Southam and Thomson above the law by allowing those two firms to control approximately 60 per cent of the circulation of English-language dailies in Canada?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): They are not above the law, Madam Speaker. When these firms, within the context of the laws at the time, grew to the size that they did, it was cabinet's decision that to be retroactive and break them up would be inappropriate. However, if anyone seeks to buy them, or they seek to sell any of their properties, they cannot exchange them and they will gradually have to fall back to that 20 per cent level or less. As I say, if anyone purchases either Thomson or Southam, one would only be able to purchase, as a bloc, up to 20 per cent of national average daily circulation.

ROLE OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, it is an incredible report, which would only bring joy to the publishers of this country in the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: The third part of my question deals with the responsibility to control cross-media ownership, which will be placed with the CRTC. The record of the CRTC on cross-media ownership is absolutely abysmal, and the government has already built enormous loopholes into this new policy. There are at least ten cities in Canada in which cross-media ownership creates a serious problem, according to the minister's own criteria. Would the minister table in this House the instructions that the government will give to the CRTC to deal with situations in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Hamilton, London, Toronto, Granby, Moncton, and Saint John?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You missed Saskatoon.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, the government sets a framework for the CRTC to consider when it makes decisions. Then the CRTC looks at those individual cases. The government does not take individual cases and pass judgment on them. I believe that would be inappropriate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

WARSHIP ALUMINUM SUPERSTRUCTURES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The war in the Falklands has demonstrated the vulnerability of modern warships, especially those with aluminum superstructures. I wonder if the minister could tell the House how many of Canada's warships have aluminum superstructures?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as long as I am correctly informed, I do not think any of our ships have complete superstructures of aluminum. On the question asked by the hon. member for Victoria, as we have on the board before two contractors the question of having six more frigates built in the next few years, I think it would be appropriate to look into the matter very seriously.

CAPABILITY OF NAVAL EQUIPMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. As none of our naval vessels have any capacity to counter incoming sea-skimming missiles such as the Exocet, and as our 16 older destroyers rely heavily on aluminum in their superstructures, will the minister agree that our navy is in no way equipped to fight a naval operation against an enemy?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member got all the answers from my officials yesterday at the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It was clearly stated that our navy is capable of anti-submarine warfare in a most efficient way, but as far as anti-missile defence is concerned it is limited.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING NUMBER OF RECIPIENTS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering the thousands of Canadians who have been receiving unemployment insurance benefits for a number of months and considering the fact that by December 31, according to information received from the minister's own department, some 500,000 Canadians may no longer be receiving unemployment insurance benefits, could the minister inform the House how many Canadians will no longer be entitled to unemployment insurance by next December 31, and does the minister have any solution or form of assistance for these thousands of Canadians who will be losing their entitlement to unemployment insurance by the end of 1982?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As the hon. member knows, Madam Speaker, we have introduced a number of solutions for that problem. In fact just today we announced the extension of the work-sharing program which provides coverage for over 70,000 workers under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Therefore we are able to maintain a number of companies in existence and avoid lay-offs right across Canada.

Equally, we have introduced through the unemployment insurance program a number of job-sharing schemes in the areas of fisheries, forestry and mining, again providing alternative employment for people who are covered by UI. It will extend their work opportunities and work benefits by providing a very valuable type of work through investing in the development of those very critical natural resources. We are quite aware of the situation and are trying to respond to it as well as we can. We have introduced a number of solutions. I will be very happy to provide the hon. member with the information so that he can update himself.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Given the present situation, I assume the minister realizes the importance of the question and the growing concern of the Canadian people. However, the minister has failed to answer my question. All these programs do not provide the slightest assurance that thousands of Canadians will be able to re-enter the labour market by December 31. In the circumstances, can the minister confirm to the House how many thousands of Canadians will lose their entitlement to unemployment insurance by December 31? That is a question the minister should be able to answer. According to his department, there will be more than 500,000, and if that is the case, it would be an absolute disaster, and the minister probably realizes this, but in any case, I feel the Canadian people have a right to know whether the minister at least realizes that thousands of Canadians stand to lose their entitlement to unemployment insurance, because there is no evidence that government action will provide work for 500,000 Canadians by December 31.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I would prefer to leave the whole occupation of forecasting doom to the members of the Conservative Party because they are so good at it. We are much more interested in putting people to work and in trying to find solutions rather than engaging in that kind of wild speculation which serves no purpose.

• (1430)

One cannot predict those kinds of figures because, under the Unemployment Insurance Act, workers on benefits can develop or acquire a certain number of weeks of benefits for work during that period of time to re-establish their benefits during the work period. The hon. member should know that because he has been doing it long enough. It would be a much greater service if he engaged in trying to help us to help the unemployed rather than simply engaging in that kind of forecasting in the realm of prophecy.

MEDICAL CARE

FEDERAL SHARE OF EXPENSES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the social policy envelope. In light of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been asking provincial ministers to expand the health care that is available to Canadians under insurance principles, can the minister say where the money is going to come from for the federal share? Will we get an expanded envelope, or are we going to steal from one purpose to pay for another?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the minister is not here to answer but I would like to say there are some programs in the book, voted by the House, and accordingly we are of the view that the best medical services should be given to Canadians and we ask the provinces to collaborate to achieve this.

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR SERVICES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister of State responsible for social policy, responsible for the social policy spending envelope, whether or not he has given the Minister of National Health and Welfare a commitment for increased spending that will allow for the increased services which he is saying should be provided by the provinces? Will there be more money for more service, yes or no?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think that the estimates of the Minister of National Health and Welfare are in front of the House of Commons and the hon. member should ask these questions of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is responsible for health services, to the House of Commons.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thought you were the big cheese—le gros fromage.

LEGAL COSTS OF NURSE EXONERATED ON MURDER CHARGES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I have a question to put to the Solicitor General. On Friday last Susan Nelles was discharged on four counts of murder and exonerated at a preliminary hearing as a judge found there was no evidence upon which a reasonably instructed jury could convict. There is no way to compensate Miss Nelles for 14 months of embarrassment, anguish, and worry as a result of the charges, but there must be a way in which she could be compensated for her legal costs, which will run to between $150,000 and $200,000. In light of the fact that Clifford Olson could be paid $100,000 as a convicted murderer, by the government, will the Solicitor General consent to compensating Miss Nelles for her legal costs when she had to fight for her life when she was obviously innocent?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, the administration of justice is a provincial matter. The investigation and the charges that were laid were all done under the direction of the provincial authorities. I think, with respect and with the sympathy that I share for her plight, the hon. member should direct his attention to the government responsible for the decision and for the prosecution.

Mr. Nielsen: Write him a letter.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF PARTS MANUFACTURED IN JAPAN

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. It relates to ongoing negotiations with the Japanese vis-à-vis the automobile market. I understand the minister's concern when these questions are raised on the floor of the House because he may feel that they prejudice negotiations. However, may I ask him, not with respect to the completed new vehicles but with respect to automotive parts, not component parts but the after market or replacement parts, has that been a subject matter for negotiation with the Japanese, and could the minister indicate to he House his position with respect to that very significant market?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Yes, Madam Speaker, that subject has been a part of the discussion with my counterpart in Japan. I indicated to him that we were not satisfied with the Canadian share of the parts market retained for Japanese automobiles. As has been indicated, there has been representation to the Japanese automobile manufacturers on our behalf to source more parts from Canada. This was also the subject of discussions at the Japan-Canada businessmen's conference which took place in Sapporo last week.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I hope the minister will be in a position to report some success with respect to that part of the market.

LEGALITY OF EXCLUSIONARY CONTRACTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): The other part which has some significance is access for replacement parts into agencies that sell Japanese cars in Canada. Those agencies have contracts with the Japanese manufacturers which prohibit or inhibit access to that market by Canadian manufacturers. First, has that been raised with the minister's counterpart in Japan and, second, has the minister sought advice from law officers of the Crown as to legality of those contracts that absolutely prohibit a Canadian manufacturer from having any access to that very significant market?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. That is the first time that anyone, even domestically, has brought this matter to the government's attention. Therefore it was not a point of discussion with the Japanese authorities. One other point comes to mind, Madam Speaker. I think that if the hon. member will check with the president of the auto parts manufacturers he will find that a couple of the Japanese automobile manufacturers have recently submitted lists to him and to the parts industry in Canada for submissions and possible sourcing of increased Canadian content.

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for betraying the small business community of Canada yesterday. In early 1980, when the small business community was obviously entering financial difficulties, the minister responsible decided to solve their problems or assist them by marching off on a quick study. That quick study took nearly two years and cost the taxpayers of Canada $1,200,000. After waiting two years for the result, the report that was released yesterday suggested that another year of study is in order—no action, no recommendations. Will the minister please stand in the House today and explain to the small business community of Canada what he plans to do immediately to assist them and to encourage them?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, once again, I am truly amazed at the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap. First of all, the facts he mentioned here in the House are not accurate. I am not the minister who launched the study on small business financing. The hon. member himself said, in fact, that the study was launched under the previous government in 1980. Madam Speaker, he is surprised that a study of this magnitude should be published without conclusions or recommendations. I suppose the hon. member would have preferred that I, and with me the Government of Canada, should take the word of a small group of academics and experts on the small business sector, without consulting small business itself. Madam Speaker, I feel that comments of this kind are unworthy of a member of this House who is calling for consultation with the people.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I do realize that I made an error. The minister has corrected me. It actually took three years to conduct this study, and still no action. The minister suggests that he is interested in receiving input from the business community of Canada, yet he suggests that he assemble a consultative committee. To consult about what, I would like to ask him? If he wants to consult with the business community, is he prepared to agree today to conduct public hearings across Canada so that the business people can have ready access to the reports and have ready access to some of the recommendations he will make? Will he hold public hearings across the country to react to this three-year study?

Mr. Nielsen: That is a great idea.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, it is always easier to criticize how something is done than what is done, and I feel that since both the summary and the twelve actual studies prepared by various academics were published yesterday, Canadian businessmen and women, who are more resourceful than the hon. member opposite, will be able to read the studies for themselves and formulate comments without resorting to a formal public forum of consultation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SALMON FISHING ON THE RESTIGOUCHE RIVER—INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT REACHED WITH MICMAC BAND

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister will recall that, last year, there was a very distressing situation in connection with salmon fishing on the Restigouche River. I am aware that the federal minister has been negotiating for some time with the native people in that area. Could the minister inform us whether an agreement has been reached, and if so, what kind of agreement or settlement was arranged?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, negotiations have been going on for two days, and there are many members on both sides of the House who will be very, very happy to hear the news that a settlement has been reached between the chief and ourselves and the Government of Quebec, so this year there will not be the unhappy incidents at Restigouche there were last year over the question of fishing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPORTED DISTRIBUTION OF MEDALLIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it the plan of the minister to give every chief in Canada a bronze medallion? If so, why, and how much is this going to cost?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, a week or so ago my predecessor gave me notification of a memo, which obviously he has sent to some of his colleagues in the Conservative caucus, about suggestions of this kind. May I say I think it was probably done in all innocence but, in short, the answer is no.

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, just to correct the record, I was not given this memo by the previous minister. I was given this memo by an Indian chief at hearings out in Vancouver, and this memo was from the department itself outlining the whole program. In addition to that I have the minister's briefing notes wherein he agreed a year ago that this was a good program, and the minister said, "We are going to go right ahead with it."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You speak with forked tongue.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, will the minister once again tell us whether this will be done or will not be done?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, my friend, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, used to be in the ministry, and he should be aware that ministers do not send briefing notes to their officials. It is usually the other way around.

He should also be aware that ministers do not always accept the advice given in their briefing notes.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Perhaps you should.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. The minister will know that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been doing less and less to help agriculture in the Atlantic region. I want to ask the minister once again what progress, if any, is being made in the consideration of removing the PFRA from that department, taking it into his portfolio and expanding it into a national program which would be for the benefit of agriculture right across the country and help strengthen that sector and the economy in Atlantic Canada.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I differ with what the hon. member said about what the federal government is doing for Atlantic Canada. I am sure he is aware of the grant which has been given to Scotia Gold in his area, which experienced a disaster last year. The DREE people under the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion came through with a big grant. A grant has already been given to the other large food processing company there. Another one will be available shortly. There is only one thing we have not signed, and that is an agreement on agricultural development for Nova Scotia. I am looking forward to that very shortly.

I agree to some extent with the hon. member's last statement about prairie farm rehabilitation, PFRA, coming under the Department of Agriculture but, if it does, it should be for all Canada because it is one of the best programs any government in the whole world has ever developed.

ABSENCE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I do not know about the whole world, but I would like to follow this up with the minister briefly and remind him that we talked about this once before. He knows there are problems because of the absence of a sub-agreement, which used to be under the regular DREE program. When will the minister be able to tell the House whether he will take this initiative and take this very good PFRA program, which is highly respected in western Canada, and combine it with some scheme like the former Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act and apply it right across the country for the benefit of the agricultural industry? If this initiative—which I think he will agree is a good one—is to be taken, when will he give us some indication of that?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as I have said in this House before, this is a joint agreement. The province of Nova Scotia should give agriculture the priority it needs in relation to cost-sharing programs. Nova Scotia gives agriculture a number three rating instead of number one, which I give to agriculture in Nova Scotia. That has made it more difficult to go ahead with that program. If the hon. member can persuade Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia to give agriculture a number one rating in that province, I am sure I will have less difficulty here.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO RETIREMENT AGE FOR POSTMASTERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The proclamation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for Canadians was signed by Her Majesty here last month. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms prohibits discrimination on the basis of age. Can the minister say if this will remove the requirement that postmasters must retire at age 65?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this is a very interesting point which will certainly be looked into by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, not only as it concerns employees of a Crown corporation such as the Canada Post Corporation but also as it applies to government employees in general.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Reports from the prairies last week indicate that the draft report from Dr. Gilson is not being well received by all participants in the negotiations on the Crow rate. Is the minister still using the yardstick of consensus to measure the success or failure of these negotiations and, if he is, how does he propose to deal with the situation whereby some participants insist on payments being made directly to the railways while others insist that they be made directly to the farmers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, nobody thought that this Gilson exercise would be easy, so when my hon. friend says there are still some items on which there is not yet a consensus, it is no surprise to me or to anyone else. However, the reports which have come out of the meetings have been generally quite optimistic. There has been agreement on a number of non-monetary items. I could list them, but I prefer not to pre-empt the report. It was my impression that some compromises were reached—in any event, were worked hard at—in terms of deciding who should be paid, the farmers or the railways. Some consensus was developing in that respect, and there are still a few days to go, and hopefully all these matters will be resolved.

PRINCIPLE OF EQUAL RATES FOR EQUAL DISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, another item on the agenda was the question of equal rates for equal distance which, I understand from comments in the House, will be continued, unless the farmers insist otherwise. Is that still the stance of the government? Will equal rates for equal distance continue, and what kinds of conditions would have to prevail before that stance is changed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the information I have is that indeed the principle of equal rates for equal distance will be maintained, but efforts are being made to try to find some incentive rate which will be acceptable to the agricultural community. There are some ideas which have been floated around—my friend is aware of them—respecting rates which would be beneficial for a period of time to help the development of processing, for example, in the west, and I am sure my hon. friend would agree that that would be desirable.

Oral Questions

POSITION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the incredible letters the Solicitor General wrote as the Solicitor General, under Solicitor General letterhead, for the purpose of influencing judicial consideration of a serious matter before the courts. The Prime Minister has had 24 hours to make his own inquiries and should tell us whether the Solicitor General is going to continue to embarrass Parliament and the government with his actions, or whether he is to be removed from the government. Is he in or out?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General is in, and the hon. member is out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIRECTIVE CONCERNING COMMUNICATIONS WITH JUDGES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could ask your indulgence to quote from a very clear but short directive from the Prime Minister. As recorded at page 11771 of Hansard for March 12, 1976, the Prime Minister said in the House of Commons:

> But, in so far as this government is concerned, I believe that it must be clearly established that in future no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they have before them in their judicial capacities, except through the Minister of Justice, his duly authorized officials or counsel acting for him—

In the past cabinet ministers have resigned for contravening this unequivocal rule of the Prime Minister. Why has the present Solicitor General not submitted his resignation? If he has, why has the Prime Minister not accepted that resignation?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has read correctly the directive I gave in March, 1976, that no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matters which they have before them in their judicial capacities, except through the Minister of Justice. The question is whether a minister or anyone else can be said to communicate with a judge when he gives evidence in open court. I submit that if giving evidence in open court can be construed as communicating with a judge in an improper way, it would follow that no minister would be able to appear even as a witness in court.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore his obligation to appear as a witness under subpoena would be dispensed with. The hon. Solicitor General communicated not with the judge but with counsel for the accused—

Mr. McGrath: For the purpose of influencing the judge.

Mr. Trudeau: —who then produced that letter much in the same way he could have called the minister as a witness and the minister would have been obliged to reply. So in my view, Madam Speaker, and I think in the view of any impartial person—

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: That has never been done before.

[English]

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am ready to discuss this as long as the opposition wants. If they hold that to submit a character reference by way of a letter to counsel is an improper way of communicating with a judge, then I suggest they are inventing new guidelines. They are not following the guidelines I established.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RETENTION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL IN CABINET

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the guidelines speak for themselves. I understand that the principle on which we operate in this country is that of separation between the executive and judiciary. The Prime Minister has been very vocal over the course of the last few months with respect to Mr. Justice Berger speaking out politically. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister asked for the resignation of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when he communicated with a judge to try and influence the judge's decision and sentence, how can the Prime Minister retain the present Solicitor General who is responsible for the penitentiary system, and what is the basis upon which he can justify a breach of those very clear guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the guidelines were issued precisely to cover the case to which the hon. member refers. We recall that the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had wanted to submit a character reference. I have not reread the case in any detail to refresh my memory but, as I recall, he had been delayed in some way in submitting a character reference through the lawyer. He explained to the House that he picked up the phone and called the judge directly. As a result of that the hon. minister resigned because he had communicated directly with a judge.

Mr. McGrath: What is the difference?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He did not call the judge.

Mr. Trudeau: The question then, Madam Speaker, is: should a minister be prohibited from testifying in open court? If the opposition wants to hold the doctrine that that should be prohibited, Madam Speaker, I am suggesting that we might welcome that for the future. It is not in the guidelines, but we would welcome any decision of this House that in the future no minister should be summoned in any way to open court. I would be happy to put that in the guidelines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, this letter was written on the letterhead of the Solicitor General of Canada, a member of the executive, and the one responsible for penitentiaries. The guidelines are very clear. They say:

—that in future no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they have before them in their judicial capacities, except through the Minister of Justice—

Do the Prime Minister's answers to date mean that all cabinet ministers are now free to write letters to judges, directly or indirectly, to influence sentencing or disposition of a case by the court? Is that the position the Prime Minister is now putting forward for members of his cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the guidelines were obviously intended to meet the specific case just referred to—and another case—where a telephone call or communication was made directly to the judge. That was found to be improper because it was using, in a sense, the authority of office to try to influence the judge in a surreptitious way, as I said yesterday, unknown to the parties in the case. But I am holding very firmly, Madam Speaker, to the doctrine that a minister is a citizen; if he is subpoenaed and the court wants to hear him, the court can issue that subpoena. This doctrine will not prevent that.

If a minister cannot testify in open court, as any citizen can, on behalf of a fellow citizen, then I say that is a new doctrine, and a dangerous one, because then we will say that any minister standing in a box is communicating improperly with the court and therefore he should not be subpoenaed, and therefore he should never be in a court of justice.

MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, just so that we might understand this new standard the Prime Minister has established—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: As soon as there is some quiet on the other side, Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if his new standard is that cabinet ministers are allowed to influence judges indirectly but not directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, to the extent that any witness, character witness or otherwise, is influencing the judge by testifying under oath, answering questions from counsel or the court, the answer is yes. Any witness is influencing the judge, and that is the purpose of a witness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore the only question is whether he is influencing the judge in an improper way. I can certainly understand, as my guidelines suggest, that it would be improper to try to influence a judge directly or indirectly, but not in open court. That is why the guidelines have been issued; not to prevent ministers testifying in open court, whether by subpoena or voluntarily—

Mr. Crombie: There is a difference and you know it.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, I know there is a difference, and if the hon. member for Rosedale wants to ask a question—

Mr. Crombie: Tell the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: If he does not think his leader is capable, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Tell the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Rosedale does not think that his leader is capable of asking questions. I just ask him to be patient.

An hon. Member: You are not capable of answering them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Rosedale says that I should tell the truth. That is the kind of insinuation which I find insulting. It is not the kind of thing he would tell me to my face outside of this room.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: The just society.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear that I am not challenging the hon. member to anything. I am just establishing that in this Chamber the standard of debate has degenerated to the point where I do not respect the hon. member any more than he appears to respect me. I do not think that is conducive to the civil dialogue which should take place in this Chamber.

• (1500)

Mr. Trudeau: I think we should attempt to be as polite to each other in this room as we would be outside it, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: That is the pot calling the kettle black.

USE OF MINISTERIAL OFFICE AND STATIONERY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is it the position of the Prime Minister of Canada that it is appropriate for the office of the Solicitor General of Canada and the stationery of the Solicitor General of Canada to be used to influence a judge directly or indirectly?

Mr. Nielsen: In a criminal trial.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a repetition of the previous question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, it is not.

Mr. Trudeau: I said that every witness influences a judge indirectly—

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: It was the Solicitor General, not just any witness.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time and we cannot hear the answer. If hon. members are interested, I shall again give the floor to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member for Joliette seems to have made a habit of constantly shouting across the floor because he has neither the courage nor the intelligence to rise in the House.

Mr. La Salle: At least I am not trying to obstruct justice!

Mr. Trudeau: Does the hon. member wish to make charges?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to answer the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and perhaps ignore for the time being what the member for Joliette is saying, since he does not have the floor. The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: I am not trying to obstruct justice. That is what I am saying.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I must say that if in the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition and the member for Joliette, testifying in an open court like any other witness is to tamper with justice, then, Madam Speaker, I would say yes.

Mr. La Salle: The Right Hon. Prime Minister is not answering the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I—

Madam Speaker: Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COLLENETTE—ALLEGED IMPUTING OF MOTIVES BY MR. THACKER

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, you may recall that earlier this day I did give you notice of a question of privilege concerning a matter that took place yesterday during the debates in the House of Commons. I refer Your Honour to pages 17733, 17734 and 17737 of Hansard for May 25, 1982. At the time the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had the floor on an opposition day motion. He stated, as reported on page 17733:

> The fault lies directly with the cabinet but also with Liberal backbenchers. At the time of each vote in this House they choose to protect their personal incomes rather than choosing to vote against cabinet schemes which aggravate and cause problems rather than solve them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: Perhaps the applause from the other side underlines the fact that I should rise today and express this case. I rose immediately I heard these words yesterday. Mr. Deputy Speaker was in the chair and was engaged in a conversation with the Clerk of the House. Unfortunately, he did not hear the exact exchange of views. Subsequently, in all courtesy, I waited until the end of the hon. member's speech and I rose again to make the case to the Acting Speaker who was then in the chair. It is my contention, Madam Speaker, that the words spoken by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills yesterday constitute a question of privilege for myself and for other backbenchers especially on this side of the House, but indeed, for all members in this House.

I draw your attention to Beauchesne's Citation 316(e) and (i). This citation reads:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in S.O. 35, it has been sanctioned by usage that a Member, while speaking, must not:
> (e) impute bad motives or motives different from those acknowledged to a Member;
> (i) reflect upon the past acts and proceedings of the House.

This is substantiated in Beauchesne's Citation 319(3) which reads as follows:

> In the House of Commons a member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any member or members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case; or to use any profane or indecent language; or to question the acknowledged and undoubted powers of the House in a matter of privilege; or to reflect upon, argue against or in any manner call in question the past acts and proceedings of the House, or to speak in abusive and disrespectful terms of an act of Parliament.

I went on to state yesterday that this is clearly upheld in Erskine May's nineteenth edition at page 153. Finally, I want to put on the record what is found on page 424 of Erskine May's nineteenth edition under the heading of "Reflecting upon votes of the House." It reads:

The objections to the practice of referring to past debates apply with greater force to reflections upon votes of the House, unless made for the purpose of justifying a motion that the vote be rescinded. Those reflections not only revive discussion upon questions already decided, but are wholly irregular, inasmuch as the member is himself included in, and bound by, a vote agreed to by a majority.

We have been sitting here for the last few weeks and we have seen, in my humble submission, the rules of the House transgressed with some regularity. I think it is about time that members, no matter where they sit in the House, put an end to this kind of situation from occurring any further. I would submit—

Madam Speaker: I would like the hon. member to refrain from referring to the fact that the rules have been transgressed. As far as I know, I have tried not to have those rules transgressed. If the hon. member feels that they have been transgressed then he must tell me exactly on what occasion and I will try to make the necessary redress. I think it would be preferable if the hon. member stuck to the point he wants to make just now.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I certainly withdraw my last statement. Perhaps my emotion, as a result of what occurred yesterday, ran away with my reason. But certainly the example that I gave today clearly underlines the fact that there has been a transgression of the rules of the House. When I rose and brought this to the attention of the House yesterday, as reported on page 17737 of Hansard, the Acting Speaker undertook to review the record and reserved judgment on it. This is why I feel it is entirely appropriate for me to raise this matter today in this context.

Madam Speaker: I was aware the hon. member might raise a question of privilege, but the exact terms of it were only given to me as I came into the House. I knew that yesterday the Acting Speaker had taken the matter under advisement. Unfortunately, I was unable to check Hansard fully to see exactly what the hon. member was referring to. I tried very quickly to examine the quotations from Erskine May to which the hon. member referred but I have been unable to check his other quotations. Therefore, I have to reserve judgment on the matter.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I certainly have no objection to your reserving your ruling on the matter. But I trust that you will hear other submissions, if you are going to treat the matter raised by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) in any other fashion than absolutely frivolous and time wasting—

Mr. Cousineau: You said that, oh, boy.

Mr. Nielsen: Therefore, I would submit, Madam Speaker, that you hear other contributions before coming to a decision—if you are going to treat the matter raised by the hon. member for York East with any seriousness at all. Since he complains about the attribution of motives by one member to another, I would suggest that you also take into consideration page 17738 of Hansard. You will find there that, in response to a submission I was making at the time with respect to extended time, the hon. member for York East interjected an accusation by use of the word "blackmail". He introduced that interjection with the obvious intention of accusing me of attempting to blackmail the House. My motives certainly were not those which the interjection of the hon. member for York East conveyed. My purpose in rising is to suggest that there would be an obligation on the Chair to hear other submissions, if the matter is to be treated seriously at all.

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: First of all, no one indicated an intention to speak on the particular question of privilege. However, it is still open to the Chair, after examining the first submission by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), to come back to the House and request further submissions. There is no problem there, if the Chair feels there is any necessity to go further into the matter.

Is the hon. member raising a new question of privilege about expressions which were used yesterday? He is signalling in the negative. That is fine; that is clear.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I do not like to have my signals interpreted for Hansard. I can say categorically that I do not have the kind of thin skin which the hon. member for York East has. Even though his description of my motive leaves something to be desired in so far as his conduct is concerned, I have no intention of wasting the time of the House by raising a question of privilege on it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—TABLING OF GUIDELINES FOR MINISTERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to question period today. During the course of question period the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in response to questions relating to the guidelines and directives sent to ministers regarding communications with members of the judiciary in the performance of their duties, read from the guidelines. If Madam Speaker looks at the "blues", I think she will see that he was reading, in response to the questions of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), from the guidelines themselves. Those guidelines have been unavailable to us as Members of Parliament and have been retained as secret documents by the government.

Mr. Cousineau: He read from Hansard.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I should like to refer to Citation 327 of Beauchesne's fifth edition by Fraser, Birch, Dawson with which Madam Speaker will be completely familiar. It reads:

A minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

I could see from my seat that the Prime Minister was reading from a directive as opposed to any other document. I could see the paper from this distance of two sword lengths from the Prime Minister in this place in which I sit. I ask Your Honour to require the Prime Minister to table the directives and the guidelines to his ministers so that we in the House of Commons may see under what restraints and constrictions members of cabinet operate.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is correct in quoting that particular reference from Beauchesne's. It is not clear to me—and I will check Hansard—whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was quoting from an official document or from Hansard, as I believe was the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence). We will check Hansard; the point of the hon. member is well taken.

PETITIONS

MR. SHIELDS—WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 21 members of the Senior Dew Drop In Club, in St. Lina, Alberta, is to register their protest against the November 12 budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

The nature of this petition is to request that the government immediately withdraw this destructive, discriminatory budget which is especially unfair to Canada's senior citizens. The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition Madam Speaker, you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the earliest possible moment.

MR. REID (ST. CATHARINES)—TAX ON IMPUTED RENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege and honour of presenting a petition on behalf of the residents of the city of St. Catharines. The nature of this petition is to show that Canadian home owners are incensed that the budget papers presented earlier in November, 1981, even referred to the possibility of taxing imputed rent.

Home owners are the backbone of the nation. They want to show their opposition now so that any government, at any future date, would be able to look back at the experience of 1982 and take the position that any additional tax on them as home owners would be completely and totally unacceptable.

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition by citizens of the city of Toronto calling on this Parliament to request the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to refuse to allow the testing of Cruise missiles on Canadian soil.

MR. DARLING—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to submit a petition signed by 157 citizens of the district of Muskoka in the province of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefor provide a remedy. They humbly sheweth that the private member's Bill C-451, regarding gun control legislation which deals with the number of firearms in circulation in this country and the control of the number of firearms in Canada; wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this legislation and deal directly with the present gun laws which are cumbersome, expensive to administer, and ineffective except to harass law-abiding people. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. ROSE—REQUEST FOR DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition on behalf of some 300 residents of the Eagle Ridge subdivision in my riding requesting door-to-door mail delivery. These citizens cannot understand why, especially since it now costs 30 cents to post a letter, they are discriminated against and served by, in theory, a so-called suburban service or corner lock boxes, while their neighbours in older subdivisions receive door-to-door delivery each day.

EMIGRATION REFUSALS BY POLISH AUTHORITIES

Question No. 3,677—Mr. Cossitt:

To the knowledge of the government, how many persons from Poland were refused exit visas during each of the past three years by Polish authorities after approval of entry to Canada was given by Canadian authorities?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Tabulated below are the known number of refusal decisions made by Polish authorities in respect to applications by Polish nationals to emigrate to Canada. The Canadian Embassy in Warsaw is dependent on the applicant himself for such information. But since not all applicants keep the Embassy informed of such decisions or about changes in their plans to emigrate, the figures below are approximations only. However, as an indication of the co-operation shown by the Polish government prior to the imposition of martial law on December 13, 1981, it should be noted that only five cases were included on the last representational list presented to the Polish government on June 16, 1981, and of those only one is still unresolved.

INSPECTION OF MAIL AT PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 3,771—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is it the practice of federal penal authorities to open or in any way inspect the mail received by inmates from Members of Parliament or from solicitors acting for the inmates and, if so, in how many cases was this done during the past three years?

2. Is the mail at any later time read or noted by prison authorities visiting the cells of the inmates concerned and, if so, in how many cases did this happen in each of the past three years?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. Mail received by inmates from Members of Parliament is considered to be privileged and CSC policy is to provide absolute confidentiality of communication. As to correspondence between inmates and legal counsel, it is normally exempt from opening and censorships. The director, however, has the authority to order that an envelope which appears to have originated from or to be addressed to a solicitor be opened for inspection where he has reason to believe that the unrestricted and unexamined passage of mail to or from a particular inmate represents a danger to the safety and security of the institution. The content may be read only to the minimum extent necessary to establish whether it is properly the subject of solicitor-client privilege. In the absence of such an order, the correspondence is forwarded to the addressee unopened. Statistics are not kept on the number of times such letters are opened.

2. It is not the policy or the general practice of prison authorities to read the correspondence that inmates keep in their cells.

MR. CLIFFORD OLSON

3. Does Mr. Olson or any other person designated by him receive any regular remuneration as a result of his confession and subsequent conviction and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are concerned: 1. No.

2. (a) Yes, Mr. Olson has an individual cell as do all inmates incarcerated in federal institutions. (b) No. (c) No. (d) No, he exercises with other inmates on his range.

4. Has the M.V. Arctic any equipment, heretofore unknown to the U.S.S.R., for navigating in ice conditions?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

2. Yes.

3. Yes. Canarctic time-charters this vessel to North Water Navigation Ltd. of Montreal each winter. North Water Navi-

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House in committee on Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes—Mr. Bussières—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On Clause 1—

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, the latest financial reports of larger Canadian oil and gas companies such as Dome, Sulpetrol, Turbo and a good many of the smaller Canadian-owned companies as well have revealed substantial losses in the first quarter of this year. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance to what extent this has been brought about through the petroleum gas and revenue tax which has seriously reduced the cash flows of all oil and gas companies.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is making an assumption he has yet to prove, and I think that before drawing any conclusions on the basis of that assumption, he should establish a relation of cause and effect between the facts he is trying to connect. There is no clear evidence that the conclusion he is drawing is valid, and that the effect he is describing is produced by the causes he is willing to identify. So I would ask the hon. member to prove his case if he really wants to get it onto solid ground.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, the losses which have been experienced by the companies engaged in the oil and gas business are self-evident. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance if he or his department have undertaken any studies which would show that the PGRT in itself has, in effect, produced cash losses in these companies? That is the question I am asking. There are many gas and oil companies, particularly the smaller Canadian oil and gas companies, that would have had positive cash flows in their financial statements if it were not for the PGRT. I am saying to the minister that in the case of Sulpetro, if he will take the time to look at the financial statement for Sulpetro, he will see that a cash loss in fact occurred because of the PGRT. If it had not been for the PGRT, that company would have had a positive cash flow. In making that statement I want to point out to the Minister of State for Finance that he cannot take the PIP grant as income.

Mr. Bussières: I may remind the hon. member of what I said earlier. If we look at the general state of the economy, it is quite obvious that there are certain enterprises involved in oil and gas exploration or development which are having problems. However, the hon. member may recall that many enterprises operating in other industrial sectors are also experiencing financial difficulties, so that instead of saying that the petroleum and gas revenue tax is causing the temporary financial difficulties of certain companies operating in the sector and that this tax is the specific cause, I feel the hon. member should take a closer look at each individual case. He should also realize that if we look at the National Energy Program, there are many incentive measures—also mentioned in the bill now before the House—which are aimed at helping companies involved in oil and gas exploration and development and are indeed helping them to step up exploration and development activities and thus improve their financial position.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: How can the minister stand up and say that the government is trying to help the oil and gas business to find oil when we have 55 rigs running in western Canada today and prior to the National Energy Program we had 455 rigs working? Would you not say that that is ample evidence of the fact that the National Energy Program is not working and not providing an incentive? The government has taken all the cash flow away from the industry so there is nothing left for them to explore with. In spite of the fact that the government may be giving a 30 per cent PIP grant to encourage an oil and gas company to search for new oil and gas in western Canada in the conventional areas, the companies still have to come up with 70 per cent of the cost themselves. The problem is that they do not have the 70 per cent, so it does not matter what the government is prepared to give them.

Furthermore, even in the frontier areas where the government puts up 80 per cent of the grant, if a well costs $40 million in the Beaufort Sea and the company has to put up 20 per cent of that, that is $8 million. Has the government made any study of the number of companies that are in a position to put up $8 million to explore in the Beaufort? In the case of a $70 million well in Hibernia, how many companies can put up $6 million? Has the government made any study of that?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I must say I am somewhat surprised. Allow me to turn the question around. If the hon. member were to analyse the Petroleum Incentives Program, he would realize that a grant of up to 80 per cent of exploration costs will be given to this enterprise. Assuming that a similar refund or grant were available to other industrial sectors, I wonder whether the latter would not see this as an incentive to invest in and develop their business. I may also point out that the bill before the House today, especially the second part, implements an agreement negotiated between the government of Alberta, among others, and the federal government, and that according to the terms of the new agreement, the oil and gas pricing system will, in fact, make it possible for oil companies to increase their income and thus have access to greater cash flow for continuing their exploration and development activities.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, the proof is in the pudding. The fact of the matter is that oil and gas exploration is at an all-time low. Would the minister tell me why companies are not looking for oil and gas today? I can tell him the reason. They do not trust the government. I do not see what bearing the fact that an agreement was reached between the government of Alberta and the federal government has to do with the issue. The fact that the federal government and the Alberta government took the lion's share of the pie and left nothing for the industry is the reason why companies are not looking for oil. Would the minister comment on that?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member can probably try to find all kinds of causes for the fact that there is, or there may have been, a slowdown in some operations in the oil and gas industry. However, I may remind the hon. member of what I said earlier, namely, that the economy in general is in serious difficulty, and that not only investment but also the actual operations of businesses in general have slowed down considerably, and that is caused by a drop in over-all demand which has effected the general state of the economy. I may also remind him that there has also been a decline as far as energy is concerned. There has been an unexpected drop in world oil prices, and there has also been a substantial decline in energy demand. So, instead of trying to prove that the National Energy Program has caused a slowdown in some areas of oil and gas exploration or development, the hon. member should look at the measures the Program contains to stimulate investment and the exploration and development of our natural resources, namely, oil and gas.

• (1530)

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, I have examined the National Energy Program in depth ever since it was presented. With all due respect to the minister, I would suggest that I know more about the National Energy Program than anyone on the other side of the House, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: The Minister of State for Finance is standing here in the House, trying to tell the Canadian public that the reason the Canadian oil and gas industry is not going out and exploring is the price. That is what he said, that the world price of oil has declined. That is true, except that we still do not happen to be anywhere near or even close to 75 per cent of world price in Canada, so I do not see how that has a bearing on it.

He also said that general economic conditions are the cause of the decline in the oil and gas business. That is simply tommyrot, and he knows it. I would like him to stand up and at least admit that the price and the general economic conditions—well, let us put it another way—that the National Energy Program has exacerbated the problems the oil and gas industry is experiencing. At least, let us get that on the record.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, considering the aggregate of possible causes, I would like to ask the hon. member whether he has had a look recently at the statistics on natural gas sales, and whether he could not find another explanation here for some of the slowdowns in exploration and development. I repeat that this would be oversimplifying and even distorting the situation. Since he is so well acquainted with the National Energy Program, he will agree that it would be entirely false to say that the program discourages investment and that it has reduced exploration and development activity, when in fact it contains very generous provisions for stimulating oil and gas exploration and development.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: Has the Minister of State for Finance had the opportunity to look at the number of Canadian companies whose bond ratings have deteriorated in the last eight months, particularly companies involved in the Canadian oil and gas industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I think that if the hon. member wants us to sit down and analyse specific cases, we can always take the time to do this. However, I feel that if the hon. member wants to proceed with an exhaustive analysis of this bill, we will not have enough time this afternoon to examine the financial statements of companies involved in oil and gas exploration and development.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: What I was trying to determine was whether the Minister of State for Finance knows of the very significant deterioration in the financial position of major Canadian and foreign companies engaged in the Canadian oil and gas industry. Anyone who had any appreciation whatsoever of the industry would surely want to take a look at the macro impact of the National Energy Program on the bond ratings of those companies engaged in our Canadian industry today. I will say that if the minister does not know the answer, I will tell him the answer. The bond ratings of many Canadian companies and foreign companies have deteriorated very significantly because no one wants to invest in Canada any more. That attests to the fallacy and the disastrous consequences of the National Energy Program.

Let me move on to one further question. Does the government feel that it has been honest with the Canadian public in revealing the cost of its policies of Canadianization? Day in and day out we hear that the government is fully supported by the Canadian people in its Canadianization program. Does the minister know whether the Canadian people are really aware of the effect this policy has had on their mortgage interest rates, on the value of the Canadian dollar and on investor confidence? Can the minister say that the Canadian public is aware of those conditions and costs? Is the minister confident that Canadians are aware of the cost to them of the Canadianization program?

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that Canadians are well aware of the benefits of the National Energy Program and also of Canadianizing a major sector of our industry which concerns mostly the oil and gas sectors. However, Canadians see economic developments much more as a whole than the hon. member, and they consider them as interrelated elements instead of trying simplistically to blame a single cause for our present problems. The indicting statement just made by the hon. member would have us believe that Canadians see the National Energy Program as the cause of the high level of our interest rates. Furthermore, we would have to conclude that the Canadian people consider the National Energy Program as the only cause of the extremely difficult and painful unemployment rates which prevail at this time.

Well, I would like to point out to him that the many Canadians with whom I have had an opportunity to discuss the matter have a much more complex view of the situation. On the one hand, they see the benefits of the National Energy Program. They also know that we must pay the price if we want to achieve a certain rate of Canadian ownership in our industry. They also realize that the government is showing good judgment when it comes to the pressure which must be brought to bear for this Canadianization to take place, but they also know that, like all other industrialized countries, Canada is facing an extremely difficult and severe economic crisis which forces us now to live with high interest rates, high inflation and also high unemployment. Canadians also recognize, with the government, that to create again a climate of confidence conducive to capital investments in oil and natural gas prospection and development, we must establish an economic climate capable of restoring the investors' confidence and encouraging them to make the wheels of the economy turn once again, which will also bring down interest rates and unemployment. However, the fundamental cause of these problems is the climate of uncertainty resulting from a high level of inflation. This is the general picture of the economy which Canadians have. They support the government in its ongoing fight against inflation, and most importantly, they avoid blaming a single cause, namely the National Energy Program, for everything that is going wrong in this country.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: I do not know who the Minister of State for Finance is talking to. He cannot be talking to the same Canadians that I am talking to. I am not trying to imply that the National Energy Program is the cause of all of our problems with respect to inflation, unemployment and high interest rates. That is not what I said. That is what the Minister of State tried to impute to my remarks. I am saying that the National Energy Program has exacerbated all these problems. It has increased unemployment &ed440;-1 in this country. It has increased the rates of interest that would otherwise prevail and has increased the rate of inflation in this country.

If the minister does not realize what the National Energy Program has done to investor confidence in this country, all he has to do is to talk to Canadians and ask them whether they want to invest in anything in this country today. They have completely lost confidence in this country.

Let me ask one final question of the minister. Is he aware of the workings of the machinery associated with the incremental oil revenue tax? Is the minister aware, and this is a simple question, how many producing oil wells there are in Canada today?

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member probably would have us take a catalogue, go through the pages and have a look at it. I think the exercise he would indulge in is not that serious. He goes all the way from gross allegations as to the consequences of the National Energy Program to asking how many bolts there are on a cart's wheels. My view is that kind of exercise is entirely specious.

He suggested the Canadian oil industry was facing serious problems. I would remind him that according to data from the petroleum monitoring agency, financial results and total revenues from overall activities in the oil industry for the first quarter of 1981, which is not 20 or ten years ago, but for the first quarter of 1981, total revenues increased by 22 per cent. The hon. member suggests that things go wrong because of the National Energy Program. The NEP was in force, and nonetheless the 22 per cent increase during the first quarter amounted to some $24 billion. This is what he calls a drop in revenues. This is what he calls an energy program that threatens the whole oil industry. The hon. member should look at his figures. Net revenues, after tax profits in the oil industry from all other activities experienced a 21 per cent drop to $1.8 billion. And what caused that drop? A slowdown in certain activities. However, increased net revenues from the three other main segments of the industry made up for that decrease in activities and revenues.

I would remind the hon. member that when looking at momentary difficulties that may be experienced by an individual segment, he should look at the figures, for instance, of natural gas sales to the U.S. for the last three months, and he should state what those figures are. Because they also were affected by the American recession. Can he also give us drilling activity figures in the United States? Can he note that there are also decreases in that area south of the border? I therefore suggest to the hon. member that when he blames the National Energy Program only, he oversimplifies.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is in somewhat of a difficulty. Because the hon. member is the first spokesman for his party, I permitted him to speak for almost five minutes over his normal allotted time. Perhaps in the present case I should seek unanimous consent to see if that is agreeable. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Calgary South to put a final question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, I have one further comment. Yes, drilling activity is down in the United States by almost 30 per cent. I am prepared to admit that. As I said, Canadian activity has gone from 455 rigs down to 55 rigs in western Canada. United States activity has declined from 5,000 rigs to 3,500. That is somewhat different.

My last point is that I find it incredible that the Minister of State would stand up and quote figures from the petroleum monitoring agency for the first quarter of 1981, the three months ended March, 1981, when the National Energy Program came into effect in October, 1980.

Is the minister's knowledge of the industry so limited that he believes the industry would flip that quickly in the space of five months, that a whole industry would, all of a sudden, turn off the taps? Is his knowledge so limited that he would try to relate figures for the first quarter of 1981 to something that occurred in 1980? That is absolutely ludicrous.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I could turn the hon. member's argument against him and ask him if he also believes that a single cause can explain some difficulties experienced by investors in that area? The hon. member is also very much aware that when he tries to blame the National Energy Program as the sole cause of all evil in Canada, he is dead wrong. He should admit it in his comments and in the way he puts his questions.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I have three or four questions for the Minister of State for Finance—

—I am not an expert, self-proclaimed or otherwise, with regard to the energy industry in Canada. I represent a riding of little people, consumers, the ordinary people in the east end of Vancouver.

When the National Energy Program came out, along with some other people I supported the thrust of that program. I did so for two reasons. First, we wanted the Canadian consumer to get as much of a break as possible with prices, at the same time considering that we have to receive good value for western Canadian resources. Also, we do not have to follow slavishly the OPEC cartel prices. That was the feeling at home. Also we wanted to help support Canadian companies in the industry as much as possible. We thought it terrible that such a vital industry as oil and gas should be 70 per cent controlled by foreign companies, mostly American. There was a lot of good will. Perhaps I was in a unique position to look at this as I represent a western Canadian riding, unlike most hon. members opposite, and also have a consumer's point of view. After two years we have the worst of all possible worlds. We have high prices continuing to go up, with both the Liberal and Conservatives being high-priced parties, with nothing coming back to people who cannot afford to pay those prices. There are no grants, tax credits or whatever.

There is a second problem which I have been told about by members of the Canadian industry. The minister can see that the president of Sulpetro and his assistant are in the gallery. He might talk to the president afterwards. I am told that the Canadian companies are not being helped. In fact, Canadian companies have suffered dramatically and drastically in their cash flow.

I say to my friends on the right that it has taken me a while to see that but I am starting to see it. The big companies like Imperial have been able to survive the National Energy Program. They can ride it out. We have the worst of all possible worlds.

I want to put my question to the minister on the basis of what I have just said. First, I am informed that the natural gas and liquids tax which is levied after the gas has reached the city gate represents a tax on gas consumers equal to about 65 cents of the burner tip price of $5.51 per MCF. This tax, plus the general gas price increases, has meant the following increases for home heating with natural gas, and I cite these costs: In Ontario, in the winter of 1980-81, the average home cost was $727; in Alberta, $425; in my own province of British Columbia, $447. In the winter of 1981-82 it went up in Ontario to $848; in Alberta to $544; and in British Columbia, way up to $708. Could the minister confirm these figures? Would he agree with me that the consumers have been hit by the National Energy Program and the agreement with the western producing provinces, and that the government does not have in place any way of helping old people and people on fixed incomes, pensioners, and poor people who are faced with this tax? Would the minister agree that this is a regressive tax on people, and would he indicate to the House what benefit the government is prepared to provide in this bill or otherwise to help people with these dramatic increases in the price of home heating?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I am not sure I could either confirm or deny the figures given by the hon. member for heating costs in the various provinces. I would have to look at these figures and compare them with the increase in the price of fuel and the increased tax component of that price. However, I should like to point out that the price of gas is still 65 per cent of the price of oil, and that the tax system resulting from the agreement with Alberta was actually a compromise reached by the two levels of government. I think it is very unrealistic to state that the government has no right to impose a tax or to derive income from the oil and gas industry, when that same government is setting up programs to help the industry and to help expand user capacity for gas and other energy products.

The hon. member made a point of stressing the regressive nature of a tax levied on a consumer commodity. I feel there is another aspect we must not forget. Of course, people on low incomes also have to pay taxes on heating fuel and they have to pay their heating bills just the same as people on high incomes. But the hon. member will recall that we have other ways of compensating for such increases, to provide relief for persons on fixed incomes, including senior citizens, or those on very low incomes. I may impress on the hon. member that in Canada, for instance, because of the fact that the basic tax exemption and the tax tables are totally indexed, the individual's purchasing power is, as it were, protected against increases in the cost of living.

The hon. member mentioned the case of senior citizens who, in fact, have no choice because they are often living on barely sufficient incomes and cannot do any extra work since they are retired. The government has substantially increased the guaranteed income supplement, and Canada Pension Plan benefits are also indexed. Where people on low incomes are concerned, I already mentioned the cost-of-living indexing in our tax tables. This also applies to family allowance payments, which are also a form of income supplement, a social measure, so that any increase in the cost-of-living caused either by rising oil prices or other increases is absorbed, as it were, by the cost-of-living indexing applied to the Canadian government's social measures and also to the personal income tax system.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I would say to the minister, with respect, that I think there is a little bit of nonsense there. One aspect is that, with the index, the older people may get an increase in their pensions of perhaps 9 per cent, on account of the cost of living, but two things happen. One is that energy costs go up by 18 or 24 per cent. They have to pay that. The second thing is that in my province they get the pension and then a supplement from the province, and as soon as the pension is increased the province comes and reduces the supplement, so they are put in the same position, and they are suffering.

Let me ask the minister this short question and then a long one. What happened to the gas bank in the National Energy Program? It is not in the bill. It is a way of helping small producers whose gas is shut in, to stop them from all that continued pressure in the export of gas. If we had the gas bank as was originally proposed in the National Energy Program, we could help some of the cash flow of the small producers and help some of the Canadian companies.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I would like to be able to answer the hon. member's question about the gas bank. Unfortunately, I am not that well informed; although I was very careful to examine very closely the provisions related to the excise tax and to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, I must confess my ignorance and admit that my knowledge does not go that far. I know the hon. member punctiliously attends the hearings of the committee which is studying the energy bills and I feel confident that he will have an opportunity to direct that question to my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources (Mr. Lalonde) and that he will not hold it against me if I am not as knowledgeable as he is.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I thank the minister for his answer. I might suggest that that is one way the government could help the small companies. Another way the government could help small companies is by changing the filling out of forms in this PGRT and IORT, which is just horrendous, I am told. We should not make it any more difficult for these small Canadian companies than is necessary. That is part of the reason they are so alienated from Ottawa. The minister might want to have a look at changing those forms.

On October 1, 1981, the wellhead price of conventional oil increased by $2.50 a barrel. This brought the wellhead price to $21.25, or $2.50 more than the planned increase of $18.75 under the 1980 NEP price schedule. It was as a result, I think, of the agreement with Alberta. However, there is the incremental oil revenue tax, which is supposed to prevent a windfall gain, between the higher priced schedule and the September 1981, agreement on conventional oil, and the old National Energy Program price. It does not come into effect, by this bill that we are studying here, until January 1, 1982. As a result, no IORT was levied between October 1 and December 31, 1981, when the price went up $2.50 a barrel more than allowed by the NEP. In addition, the old PGRT rate of 8 per cent, as opposed to the new rate of 12 per cent, also applied to that price increase between October and December. I estimate that the loss of tax revenue to the government was about $160 million because it did not apply that tax.

Could the minister tell us why the government decided to give the industry this windfall at that point and, if the minister agrees with what I am saying, is he prepared to accept an amendment, or to move an amendment, to collect those taxes from October to the December 1981 price increase?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, the different method of tax collection to which the hon. member is referring must be examined and understood in the context of the general agreement which was signed by the province of Manitoba and the Government of Canada because it was an integral part of the negotiations. It is important to remember that if we keep in mind the starting positions of the parties and the agreement, there were compromises throughout the negotiation process and, as it happens, that particular development to which the hon. member is referring is one aspect of that compromise. Therefore I very humbly suggest that if we were to accept his proposal we would be breaking one part of the agreement and showing bad faith toward the province with which we have negotiated that agreement.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would consider a suggestion. It involves the whole basis for the PGRT and the IORT. Let us be frank; the reason these taxes were imposed was that in one period the oil industry was making a lot of money. The industry is in trouble now; I have acknowledged that before, but their situation last year was like that of the banks. The industry was making piles of money, and now it has been cut down somewhat. The oil industry made money; it was bound to do so as prices went up. When the market price in the United States went up to the world price, what the Americans did was to bring in a windfall profits tax. What we in Canada have done has been to bring in this PGRT.

I pointed out a few minutes ago that there seem to be at least two problems. One is that there is a lot of paper work. The second problem is that it is very difficult for small Canadian companies. They are getting it right off the bottom, and they just do not have the extra money big companies are getting. We are hurting small Canadian companies, the very companies we want to help.

Will the minister consider what I am suggesting as an alternative? Why did he not? Perhaps that should be the question. Perhaps he can enlighten me on this. I suggest one source of collection, a provincial royalty, and then the federal government could get a slice of that provincial royalty. It could be added on. There could be one royalty so that companies do not need to go to this government over here and that government over there. They could have one royalty to pay, and the federal government could get its share out of that royalty. I know that means co-operative federalism, but would that not be a possible way of collecting the money the federal government needs, instead of going by way of the PGRT and the IORT? An accountant told me she has been trying constantly for the last three months to understand how to assess these taxes. People are having a great deal of difficulty.

What does the minister think of my suggestion of proceeding with a different method of taxation and getting the same result?

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the concerns of hon. members and I think that the great majority of hon. members are aware of the problems faced by the industry as a result of red tape as such, which is a sort of phenomenon of inertia, and also because there are many kinds of taxes to be collected which are applicable at various levels.

The hon. member suggests that paperwork and levels of tax collection could be eliminated through a single tax system, and then the money collected would be divided among the federal and provincial governments concerned under an agreement, according to standards and volumes to be determined. That is a suggestion. The agreement will expire in a few years. When the next agreement comes up, the hon. member's suggestion could certainly be considered.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: You don't have to wait that long.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, in the midst of this debate about our National Energy Program and the PGRT, which is an integral part of the program, I think it is very useful for us as parliamentarians on all sides of the House to recall where we have been in the past, what we have come through and where we are today. The PGRT is a very integral part of a very complicated but critical and important program for the future of Canadians.

In this exercise I would like to take the House right back to the time of the last election, at which time a number of promises were made by the then official opposition. After I have gone through those promises, hon. members will find that they are all incorporated in the National Energy Program as well as in the agreement reached with Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, the producing provinces. At the time of the last election campaign we promised there would be no 18-cent excise tax increase. We also said the 1980 increase in the wellhead price would be under $4 a barrel. Third, with respect to price we said that over a four-year period the cost to consumers would be less than the cost under the Crosbie budget. We also said we would accomplish these three objectives through a mechanism known as a made-in-Canada price, a blended price.

Let us look at the record. It is obvious we did not introduce the 18-cent excise tax increase. What we have is a three cents a gallon tax which goes into the Canadianization fund, which is designed to promote one of the other major legs of our program.

With respect to the promise for 1980 pricing, we felt—and we agreed—that the price should not go up as much as the Crosbie budget had indicated, $4 a barrel, and the actual price increase which we negotiated for 1980 was $3.

Let us look at the four-year period and the predictions we made respecting cost to consumers, because it is consumers I am concerned about. I am concerned about the consumers who live in Willowdale. Consumers are the ones who are affected most directly by the entire impact of our National Energy Program. The National Energy Program is designed to provide assistance and to help and benefit our consumers. We have to admit that our producers are an integral part of this. The producers and the provinces play a key role in this, but the thrust of the program is to assist and be of maximum benefit possible, recognizing the exigencies consumers have.

Let me repeat again that the promise was that over a four-year period the cost to consumers would be less than it would have been under the Crosbie budget. The Crosbie budget predicted that by taking consumers to 85 per cent of world price, by 1984 the price would be up to $53.70 per barrel. In reality, our program as worked out in conjunction with Alberta last year was 22 per cent lower than that at $41.75 a barrel.

This has very important implications for the consumer. For example, the cost of heating oil would be 12 cents less per gallon, for gasoline 37 cents less per gallon, and for natural gas used to heat homes it would be $3.11 per thousand cubic feet less. Over a four-year period, comparing the Crosbie budget with the agreement we arrived at with Alberta—I think these are the important figures because they affect consumers—it will mean a saving of $450 for the average oil-heated home, $1,290 for natural gas, or an average household saving over that four years of $890.

Mr. Siddon: Tell the truth. What is the world price?

Mr. Peterson: How have we achieved this result, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Siddon: By chicanery.

Mr. Peterson: It is very simple when you break it down. The Crosbie budget promised 85 per cent of world price by 1984. Our price, which was lower, was not a floor price but a ceiling beyond which prices would not go. If the orderly increases we provided for during that period of time were met, we would have achieved that ceiling by approximately 1986. What has happened—and I welcome it as a boon to the consumer—is that the world price has fallen. It has not risen as high as we or the Crosbie budget anticipated, the budget on which the opposition members based their energy program and, incidentally, all their criticism of our program. The world price has just been reconsolidated by OPEC at $34 a barrel. I welcome that news, although it has caused some strain because the predicted increases have not come about. But we should be applauding that, and we are.

There is another important aspect which cannot be ignored when dealing with the National Energy Program. I just talked about price. How was that price divided among the three major players involved in producing and distributing energy to consumers? Before the NEP was brought in, the share was roughly 11 per cent for the Government of Canada, 42 per cent for the government of Alberta, and 47 per cent for the industry. Pursuant to the agreement between the federal government and the government of Alberta on September 1, 1981, the federal government's share has increased to 25 per cent, Alberta's share has declined to approximately 30 per cent, and the industry's share has declined to 45 per cent.

Mr. Siddon: What do you do for your share?

Mr. Peterson: The price agreement and revenue sharing are just two portions of the NEP, Mr. Chairman. What I am happy about in dealing with those two aspects is that we were able to honour all of our election commitments. We are able to give Canadians a made-in-Canada price lower than predicted by the Crosbie budget, which is to the benefit generally of consumers, but obviously also to the benefit of the people of Alberta because their government accepted that price and that regime for revenue sharing. Yes, the industry took a cut, but it was from 47 per cent to approximately 45 per cent.

Two other aspects of the NEP were conservation and Canadianization, and they are critical to the over-all program the thrust of which is designed to benefit the consumer. It might legitimately be asked: What do we mean by conservation? Well, number one, we want to cut down the use of energy by Canadians as much as we can. This has involved programs designed to help Canadians consume less energy. We have seen in automobiles a reduction in the size of engines and downsizing of the automobile itself. We have seen insulation programs for plants and factories through tax incentives which have been aimed to help industry enter into conservation. We have seen conversion programs to get off the expensive fuels in short supply and on to fuels which are in abundance. If we have an energy shortage, it is only a shortage of oil. That is evident because we have to import approximately 30 per cent—

Mr. Siddon: It was 20 per cent in 1979.

Mr. Peterson: —of our oil needs at this time. None of us want to be dependent on imports at world prices, so what have we done? Under the Canadian Home Insulation Program we will give home owners up to $500 to insulate their homes and improve the efficiency of their heating plant by as much as 40 per cent, or 50 per cent in some cases, through judicious use of insulation. The government has stepped in and said to Canadians that conservation is important to them because they can save money. We have also said to home owners who use oil that we will help them get off oil and on to alternate heating fuels such as gas. We have over 100 years proven reserves of gas in Canada at this time, and if you add the reserves which are not hooked up or presently too far from a pipeline, or not adequately proven, we would have even more.

I am so confident about the future of natural gas in this country that you might say I am talking almost like some of the western explorers for gas who are very bullish about our future. The problem is not that the explorers are not finding gas, Mr. Chairman; the problem is that they cannot sell it. They have no market for that gas. What have we done? More than a year ago, over the objections of the NDP, we entered into an export arrangement whereby we would have the pre-build to take Canadian gas south of the border. I am happy that we have the markets developing because of the courage we had at that time, without support from the Tories until a few of the oil companies out west started to pressure them.

Mr. Huntington: That is totally misleading.

Mr. Peterson: The Tories were reluctant to talk about the pre-build. They were pretty reluctant to stand up and encourage us to get ahead with the pre-build.

Mr. Blenkarn: Keep talking, you are doing a fine job.

Mr. Peterson: Maybe the Tories were worried about the NDP. I am glad that in the end the Conservative Party sided with our party against the NDP and authorized the construction of the pre-build.

I am happy about that because we can use those gas revenues from the export of gas to help us with other national programs, including the National Energy Program. &rf1400;-1

We have also encouraged the construction of gas pipelines, which will increase the use by eastern consumers of western production for which they would not otherwise have markets. This is good for the western producer and it is very good for the eastern consumers. The hallmark of our National Energy Program was the fact that gas would be priced at only 67 per cent of the price of oil. There again is an added incentive that we have built into the National Energy Program to assist consumers conserve our precious oil resources and switch to the bountiful gas reserves that we have in Canada. Again, this is a program that I have indicated is beneficial to consumers in Canada and to producers. I want to see far greater utilization of gas. But this does not mean only gas. Again, we are looking at the resources that we have.

I have said already that we have an almost infinite store of energy reserves here in Canada. Maybe we do not have them right at this present moment. Maybe they are not here exactly this day, but when we look at alternative energy sources, renewable energy, such as wood and biomass, which can constantly be replenished through adequate conservation measures, we can cater to and provide for the heating requirements of many Canadians in many parts of our country.

When we look at alternative energy, such as solar, and the use that can be made of the sun when it shines, even in a cold climate by trapping its energy and using it to help us—

Mr. Siddon: Can you prove that?

Mr. Peterson: Can I prove that, the hon. member opposite has asked. Can I prove that solar energy can be trapped and tapped in Canada to help us heat our homes? Yes, we are doing that now.

Mr. Siddon: It is very costly and it is not practical.

Mr. Peterson: It is costly, but we are doing it. Research and development is going ahead at a very fast pace. We have also introduced a program to help people who drive automobiles to convert to the more ready sources of energy. I have talked about programs through which we will put up $400 for each vehicle that will be converted from gasoline use to propane use. Propane is cheaper. It can be manufactured from the vast reserves of the natural gas that we have. This is a progressive program.

We have many alternative sources of energy, from nuclear, to solar, to biomass, to forest products, and we have hydrogen. An excellent report was released concerning hydrogen by the Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution chaired by the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle. We do have these alternative energy sources available to us.

We have introduced a program of development so that we can get at them. The third aspect of our program, apart from the pricing and revenue sharing regime and apart from the conservation conversion scheme, is our program for Canadianization. We have said that what we want to do over the ten-year period during which the National Energy Program is in effect is to reduce foreign ownership in this key sector from 75 per cent to 50 per cent.

I know some hon. members opposite have criticized us. If they are on the far right of me and belong to the New Democratic Party, they have criticized us for not going far enough and not going all the way. If they belong to the official opposition, they have criticized us for going too far and for a program which we call Canadianization but which they, in their rhetoric, refer to as nationalization.

Mr. Siddon: That is why everybody is unemployed.

Mr. Peterson: We have introduced a program which has made possible the existence of what, I think, is one of the great institutions and hallmarks of Canadian economic development. I am referring, of course, to Petro-Canada. Again, the roots of Petro-Canada go right back to the election of 1980.

Mr. Siddon: How much cheaper is Petro-Canada's gas at the pumps?

Mr. Peterson: At that time, the Conservatives were saying "We will abolish Petro-Canada."

Mr. Siddon: How many bargains have they passed on to the consumer?

Mr. Peterson: We stood up and said that Petro-Canada must be an integral part of the development of Canada's resources. Petro-Canada is now playing a major role, not just in owning a vertically integrated oil and service company, one that goes right from producing fields to the gas pump, one to which people from coast to coast can drive to fill up their cars with gasoline made in Canada and sold by a totally Canadian company, which the taxpayers own, but it has given us a window on the energy industry. It has given us the method to determine what the facts are out there. I am proud of the role being played by Petro-Canada. But this is not the key part of our Canadianization program, it is only one small portion of it. The major aspect is to determine that the private sector in Canada has an opportunity to expand, grow and flourish. We have seen that happening.

Mr. Siddon: That is why people cannot afford mortgages.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to take the liberty, Mr. Chairman, of—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry but I have tried to catch the hon. member's attention to advise him that his time has expired and that he can proceed only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Willowdale to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we heard a rather interesting exercise from the hon. member for Willowdale. I hope he has an opportunity to have a chat with his brother, in the Ontario provincial Liberal Party. I hope he will talk about the ownership of oil companies by the state and the way in which the party his brother operates in the province of Ontario criticizes the national energy policy and the energy policy of the province of Ontario at every possible opportunity. I thought perhaps we might have heard something illuminating from the hon. member from Willowdale. We thought that he would have read the title of the bill, it being an amendment to the Excise Tax Act. We reflected on his opening remarks that the Liberal Party had promised not to change or increase the excise tax. Of course, what this bill contains is an enormous increase in excise taxes, not only with respect to gasoline because it does not affect gasoline as such, but it affects the raw product at the wellhead prior to its going to the refinery. Instead of having an excise tax at the refinery gate with respect to separate products produced from that refinery so that the tax might be more heavy on gasoline and no tax on home heating oil and no tax on gas used for the production of fertilizer for farmers, we wind up with this horrendous tax that is impoverishing farmers and impoverishing people who are forced to heat their homes with oil. It is an unfair tax that has nothing to do with ability to pay. It is a tax on heat in a cold country. It is a tax on energy required to make farms and the rest of the country prosper. It is a tax at the base of the product. The tax is passed on with each add-on, as it passes through the system, and mark-ups are placed on the tax by people who refine and distribute the products and by people who manufacture with the products, the chemicals and other materials from gas and oil. It is a bad tax.

• (1630)

I want to ask the minister some questions. The hon. member for Calgary South asked the minister, in connection with the profitability of certain Canadian oil companies, whether the effect of these taxes had so hurt their cash flow as to make them incapable of performing in the marketplace. We know from the newspapers that the cabinet or the minister is inquiring into Dome Petroleum. Could the minister advise us on how the impact of the PGRT, the incremental oil tax and the other taxes in the bill have affected the cash flow of Dome Petroleum, so that the government may well have to advance to the company as much as $1 billion? Could he perhaps explain that to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, my answer to the hon. member is the same I gave his colleague a while ago. The hon. member is referring to an individual oil company and asks: Since apparently this company is experiencing difficulties, what proportion of these difficulties is ascribable to our tax system? Well, let me tell the member that there is no way we could determine such a proportion, and he is only taking a simplistic approach or trying to distort reality if he seeks a direct cause-effect relationship in a situation which results from a fairly large number of factors and tries to limit them to only one single factor. And I add that his question, as asked, is a distortion of facts.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the minister knows about the problem with Dome Petroleum. I presume the matter has been discussed in cabinet. If not, then all the speculation on the street with respect to government support to that company is just pure drivel. Perhaps the minister could advise us whether that company has been studied in cabinet. Could he tell us the tax effect of the PGRT on the cash flow of Dome Petroleum? If it were not for this horrendous tax on this primary producer, the primary producer would have the cash flow to make its payments, would not be defaulting and would not have a problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can speculate if he so wishes and try to establish a cause and effect relationship between the situation of a specific company and the taxation system. I would simply point out that he is trying to look into a crystal ball and that I do not want to become involved in such speculations or such a completely useless exercise.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, if the minister will not tell us about the Dome situation, whether he will tax the industry with a PGRT and what hand-out payments or whatever he will make to oil companies to bail them out, then perhaps he could tell us something about the incremental oil tax and how he proposes to deal with that tax in view of the fact that the province of Alberta has rolled back its royalties and that the effects of the incremental oil tax will increase federal government revenues. This is not because there is more profit or any increase in price, but because the provincial royalty has been rolled back to assist the industry. Will the government give the industry credit for that rollback, or will it try to grab a hunk of the rollback in further taxes to the federal government?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, as I recall, when the agreement was negotiated with Alberta, the Alberta government had accepted the formula. I am told that representations have been made to the Minister of Finance on behalf of Alberta concerning this particular problem and that the request of the Alberta government is now being considered by the Minister of Finance.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, that is not really a satisfactory answer. We have the bill before us. Is the minister proposing to introduce later an amendment to the bill to reduce the incremental oil tax or oil charge so that the tax will not be increased or the government's revenue will not be increased just because the province of Alberta reduced its royalties on a short-term basis in order to help the industry?

The minister knows from the representations which the government has received from the province of Alberta that the industry is in trouble and that it is being overtaxed. This is why Alberta cut back its taxes, despite what the agreement in September indicated. Why would the minister take advantage of that reduction in tax in order to increase federal taxes, and where are the amendments to cover that situation?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, as I have just told the hon. member, this matter has been referred to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Alberta government, and I do not intend to table any amendment concerning this specific issue today. As I have already stated, the Minister of Finance is now considering the request made by the Alberta government.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, if the minister will not take into account the difficulty in the industry, the particular help which the province of Alberta has given the industry, or the fact that the province of Alberta recognizes that the agreement in September was based on false precepts, will the minister withdraw the bill now or delay it today so that he can look again at the situation? Clearly the bill was drafted and these taxes were calculated on the basis of some kind of huge increase in oil prices behind the contemplation in the Alberta agreement. The facts are that oil prices are going down and world energy prices are going down and that companies producing energy are having a hard time because their prices are going down, their taxes are going up and their costs of production, by the very nature of inflation, are going up. Obviously they are having a hard time, and the minister knows this; he and his colleagues are dealing with the problems of Dome Petroleum right now. Will he withdraw the bill and renegotiate the agreement with Alberta to make some sense out of it? The taxes set out here are too high for the industry to bear.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that, for the moment, there is no question of withdrawing the bill at this stage of the proceedings. The hon. member says that it is the whole energy agreement that should be revised. I would simply note that when specific issues are raised, such as that which he has mentioned, they are taken into consideration. However, there is no need to delay the passing of a piece of legislation until a decision has been made or even to withdraw a bill. The hon. member is familiar enough with the practice of the House to know that the government can introduce another bill at any time to make changes and that this does not prevent Parliament from working. I therefore suggest in all humility that we should go on considering this bill and that if the Minister of Finance were to arrive at certain conclusions as a result of his discussions with the province of Alberta, he could always say so in the House and ask us to examine any new proposals. However, this does not prevent any progress being made with respect to a piece of legislation, especially as concerns this bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: I know that the person piloting this bill is the Minister of State for Finance. Presumably he is piloting the bill as an associate of the Minister of Finance and presumably is able, with a bill of this nature, to commit the government. To suggest that the Minister of Finance is the only person who can commit the government with respect to this tax matter seems rather strange to me. Surely in the Committee of the Whole we should have a minister who can commit the government. That is the purpose of having bills put before the committee. If we have a situation where we have a minister before the committee who is not able to commit the government, then the whole process is called into question.

There are many definitions in this bill, such as definitions of old oil and new oil. These definitions are left to ministerial discretion. I would like to ask the minister what expertise he has in his department or that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has in his department which can really define and determine what field is old oil and what field is new oil and when new oil becomes old oil.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, on the first point which has to do with his preliminary remarks, I would like to say to the hon. member that we are dealing with the bill. It is quite proper, of course, for members to point out some of the difficulties which they are uncovering in the bill. They can also indicate the concerns of that industry or other groups, but the hon. member should not suggest that any issue or problem should be solved right now. I think he understands well enough how this House operates to know that an issue can be under consideration, that some decisions could be taken subsequently and that Parliament could be called to reconsider the existing legislation. We never pretend when we consider a bill that it will ever solve all problems once and for all.

The member refers to the definitions of oil as it appears in the bill. Surely he has noted in the bill that there are specific definitions for old oil and for new oil. I could also refer him to the agreement signed between the governments of Canada and Alberta also specifically defining the various kinds of oil which enabled us to set up a blended price for Canadian oil. In the same legislation and in the agreement concluded by the governments of Canada and Alberta, there were provisions defining the various kinds of oil.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Earlier the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked the government why it had not studied different forms of taxation like a windfall profits tax and the concept of an energy bank. The minister will know, of course, that the reason the government did not look at that is that it was in the Crosbie budget and was part of the program of the Progressive Conservative Party when it was in government. It did not want to bother looking at that aspect. I thought we should let the House appreciate that matter.

What provision is the government prepared to make to alleviate the cost of these taxes to people who are forced to heat their homes with oil? There are different classes of users of petroleum products. A number of people in my constituency cannot hook up to natural gas because it is not available to them in their particular parts of Mississauga. On the other hand, the price of oil keeps rising. While those who are able to use natural gas can perhaps take advantage of a slightly lower price for natural gas, people who are heating their homes with oil are faced with the enormous taxes provided for in this bill, not only royalties but the PGRT and all sorts of other taxes. Those taxes are rather significant. Would the government do something to alleviate the cost of home heating oil to some extent?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, in a previous answer, I referred to some of the provisions that exist in the Income Tax Act as well as to certain indexation mechanisms that allow us to compensate for the increase in the cost of living, the cost of living index includes a component which refers to energy cost increases. I would have a few comments to add to what I said earlier. For instance, I would like to remind the hon. member that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources administers a very generous program to help consumers insulate their homes.

By promoting better home insulation, this program allows home owners to substantially reduce their heating costs and save money. I would also like to remind the hon. member that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has a program which encourages homeowners who use oil to heat their homes to convert to other forms of energy, and this also produces savings. Let us take for instance the case of the homeowner who replaces his oil-heating system with a gas system. Since gas prices will be as much as 60 per cent lower than oil prices, the oil substitution program will allow him to reduce his heating costs.

These are two programs which can help reduce heating costs brought about by the increase in energy prices. All this, Mr. Chairman, is in addition to the indexation mechanisms that apply to basic income tax deductions, taxation tables, family allowances, old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplement and help those who need it the most to assume the burden of cost of living increases which, as I noted earlier, also include energy price increases.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It may be that the hon. member for Mississauga South wants to seek unanimous consent to make a last comment.

Mr. Blais: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: But other than that, the time allotted to him has expired. Perhaps I should explain that in Committee of the Whole, the time allotted to individual members takes into account the time used by the minister in replying.

Mr. Blais: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I thank the hon. member for Mississauga South for being so reasonable in his understanding of the time available. I make no comment on the fact that he is leaving because many of us must attend committees. I have just come from a committee myself.

Needless to say, as an individual who represents an area which has been called, at least in our part of the country, the centre of the petro-chemical industry, I have a very vital interest in the National Energy Program and, more particularly, in the negotiations which were carried on, happily and satisfactorily to the benefit, or at least to the mutual credit, I would say, of the three producing provinces and the federal government.

I read the speech of the hon. member for Calgary Centre with some interest and it made me realize why we sometimes have difficulty getting our messages across in western Canada, because without any Liberal members in the province of Alberta, all we hear, of course, is one side, or all that the people of Alberta are hearing—

Mr. Siddon: Why can't you elect any?

Mr. Cullen: —is one side of the energy issue, as though the federal government were doing something unique in endeavouring to secure some revenue from the production of oil in the province of Alberta. An hon. member across says to get out and tell them. I certainly do tell them, at every opportunity.

Mr. Siddon: How do they receive you?

Mr. Cullen: They receive me very well because they are quite often surprised to hear that there is another side to the issue and that countries with oil production feel it is appropriate to receive revenue when they sometimes give depletion allowances and, in other cases, capital cost allowances. They are all significant areas of federal tax concessions which made it possible to discover this oil in the first place. Legislation was passed which stated that we would pay more than the world price for oil so that the oil industry could be developed. I think that that was an appropriate and co-operative effort, and the people of eastern Canada were prepared to go along with that.

When one speaks in a reasonable and rational way with the people of western Canada, they are prepared to appreciate that the federal government, given its myriad responsibilities and the concessions of the Canadian taxpayers right across Canada, is certainly entitled to some revenue from oil production. The hon. member for Calgary Centre has a rather selective memory of the history or sees fit to ignore it, because Premier Lougheed proceeded in the past in a way which was not as democratic as we had a right to expect.

I remember, and it was not that long ago, that we had a one eighth royalty for oil which was allowed by the federal government as an expense of doing business, finding the oil, producing the oil and marketing the oil. Overnight, the government of Alberta made a decision to move from that one eighth royalty to a 45 per cent per barrel share of the benefits from the production of oil. At that time it was not the federal government which took the initiative in condemning this particular move; rather, it was the multinational corporations. I well remember the president of Imperial Oil, and I believe he was the chief executive officer, Mr. Twaits, who said that Premier Lougheed had thrown away the rule book. There was certainly no consultation or discussion with the federal government. As I understand it, there was not even any discussion with his provincial counterparts. Simply on his own initiative, unilaterally, that whole system of one eighth royalty for oil moved up to 45 per cent overnight. What a bonanza there was when the OPEC countries said, "No, we will not allow oil to be priced at $3 or $3.50; we will quadruple the price of oil overnight." There was Premier Lougheed with his 45 per cent share, finding that he could not spend all that money. Hence the birth of the Heritage Fund.

I do not begrudge Alberta's Heritage Fund. I do not begrudge the people deriving a significant benefit from a natural resource which is in their particular province. The Constitution was amended because the federal government formerly had title to the natural resources in the provinces. In the interests of giving the provinces some economic benefit, it was amended so that they could have ownership of these natural resources. Surely, in the long run, Canadian federal taxpayers right across Canada, in every province and in the territories, who are picking up the tab for part of the development of the oil industry in Canada, have a right to share in the benefits accruing from oil production in Canada.

There have been suggestions that there has been a rape of the resources, that we are trying to take more than we should be taking, or that it is inappropriate action by the federal government. It is inconceivable to me that anyone could actually say it is inappropriate for the federal government to contemplate a tax on the production of oil and gas or their products. Surely, the Canadian public has a right to expect more than that.

I hear gratuitous insults from the hon. member for Calgary Centre concerning the civil servants who work on these particular projects. The initiative and the idea for this has come as a Liberal policy. It was discussed during the election campaign, we brought it to fruition, and we said that we would negotiate with the producing provinces to see if we could come up with some regime which would provide the federal government—the federal taxpayer, in effect—the provinces and the corporations with sufficient funds so that the oil industry could be developed. We said that the province which owned the natural resource should derive significant benefit, but that the federal government was also surely entitled to some revenue.

There were long and skilful negotiations. I believe the minister used the word "skilful" when making his remarks on second reading. I believe the Minister of State for Finance was bang on when he indicated that appropriate, but skilful negotiations had taken place. It should be understood that it was not the federal government which acted unilaterally to impose a tax on a natural resource which was the property of a province. I repeat that it was not the federal government. This tax came about as a result of negotiations and not because the federal government imposed its will on the provinces.

There were other areas in which we thought we were entitled to some more revenue from taxes on gas and there were concessions. The federal government did not get everything it was looking for in the negotiations but, most assuredly, neither did the provinces. I think there is room for all to benefit. The oil companies, the provinces which own the resources and the federal government can benefit.

We have come up with an appropriate agreement for the benefit of all. Nobody will lose as a result of this particular negotiation. Again, it was not a negotiation with only one of the producing provinces; in effect, we reached an agreement with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Therefore, as the minister said earlier, this House has been asked to approve the agreement signed by the Government of Canada and those producing provinces. This agreement has already been reached and we are simply being asked to endorse an agreement by the people most directly involved in the benefits accruing from oil production in Canada.

In another area, I am hearing the suggestion that "Canadianization" means "nationalization". Maybe this suggestion is deliberate and maybe it is not. We all know of this, we must consider it and I think we must be careful. I would say to the official opposition, stop trying to fool the Canadian public. Stop calling it nationalization. The Conservatives know what nationalization is. They know—

Mr. Huntington: It is nationalization, Bud. Be honest.

Mr. Cullen: —what Canadianization is, and there is a significant difference. "Canadianization" means something which will be beneficial to Canadians, not just Canadians in the producing provinces, but Canadians right across the country, all of whom have made tax concessions so that we could, in fact, have an oil industry in Canada.

Mr. Huntington: That's state ownership, Bud. You know it.

Mr. Cullen: Now we hear another hon. member from the opposition yelling. Unfortunately, he is not yelling into a microphone; I can only hear the noise. I cannot hear his words, so it is very difficult to respond.

I am simply saying, Mr. Chairman, that it is inappropriate, either in hyperbole or in deliberately making these comments, to suggest that Canadianization is nationalization. I would not be in favour of that. I doubt that there are many Liberals who would be in favour of nationalizing the industry, although I know the little blue rump over there does not feel that way.

We should be very careful not to underestimate the Canadian public, particularly in the province of Alberta. They recognize what Canadianization means. They realize it is not nationalization. The people know the benefits that will accrue to Canada, not to other countries, as a result of multinational involvement.

Another area that should be highlighted is conservation of oil, our depleting natural resource. We have to find other areas where oil can be produced. One does not have to be a genius, which seems to be the suggestion of the hon. member for Mississauga South, to determine the difference between new oil and old oil. It may become complex and there may be some areas where it is necessary to have an honest debate and where a judgment call will be made. It will not be made in a unilateral fashion but as a result of discussion with the industry, the producing provinces and the federal government.

With regard to the Constitution, the criticism we are now getting is for all of those things that we took out of the Constitution as a result of negotiating a settlement. All the criticism I have heard about the content of the Constitution has been about those things we have taken out of it. That is because we could not get agreement with the opposition or the provinces.

Mr. Taylor: You took out property rights.

Mr. Cullen: I wondered how long it would take my hon. friend to start interrupting. I do not want to get into another debate on the Constitution, but it was a criticism from a member opposite. The record should be clear that the provinces were not very keen about property rights. They said that property and civil rights were their jurisdiction.

Mr. Taylor: The Liberals and the NDP took them out.

Mr. Cullen: It is a great Constitution. It can be improved upon. Now that members of the opposition have taken the Constitution to their heart, as they took the flag to their heart, they will now work hard to improve upon it. I am sure we will get that kind of contribution.

I want to talk about the area of conservation. Canadians can play a role in this area. They are being encouraged to do so by this kind of legislation and other agreements under the National Energy Program which were criticized out of hand by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. There were gratuitous insults to civil servants which were unfair. He suggested there was something wrong with the federal government moving in this way. He says there is something wrong with the government, which says we have scads of gas, certainly a lot more gas than oil, so let us put some incentives in place so that people will switch from oil to gas. I am sorry the hon. member for Mississauga South in all of his constituency does not have the opportunity to take advantage of clean-burning, non-smelling, safe gas. He should be encouraging the province of which he is a member and the companies to get into that area and distribute this natural gas.

There is not much more I want to say at this time about the bill because the minister spelled it out so beautifully at the second reading stage. However, I did want to set the record straight with regard to the suggestions made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I have had the opportunity of working with the civil servants he has gratuitously insulted by calling them eager beavers and other names not nearly so complimentary. It is my experience that the Canadian government and the Canadian people are well served by their civil servants. If we could bring their spirit of dedication to all people across this country, this would be a much better country than it is at the present time.

Attacking a piece of legislation is one thing. Attacking civil servants who are giving effect to policies, not policies which come from civil servants but from this government and this party, implementing them and showing how they can be carried out effectively, is wrong. They deserve praise, not criticism from members opposite.

If I might repeat myself, this bill is an agreement between the federal government and three producing provinces. It provides adequate compensation to the oil companies. We are only being asked to endorse it because there has been agreement by all three parties involved in the production of oil. This bill should receive quick and speedy passage.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, earlier in his remarks, the hon. member for Sarnia was singing the praises of the Canadianization initiatives which he is somewhat sensitive to when they are called nationalization initiatives. He will appreciate that if we lived in a country which produced more than it consumed and invested more than it squandered, private individuals might be able to afford to invest in the patriation of our oil and gas industry. However, when we have to go outside Canada, as Petro-Canada has, to borrow large blocks of money at guaranteed rates of return to foreign lenders, that in no way helps to Canadianize our oil and gas industry. It merely furthers our ludicrous rush toward national bankruptcy of which there are evident signs throughout this country today.

The hon. member knows that this is a mockery. The government is using sleight-of-hand to suggest that its initiatives are designed to Canadianize the oil and gas industry, at a time when people cannot afford to borrow the money required to maintain the loans against their farms or businesses or to renew their mortgages. He knows that this so-called Canadianization program is merely another government power grab designed to make Canadians more and more dependent on the state and to destroy their individual rights and freedoms to invest and save as they wish.

I want to deal with Bill C-112 from the point of view of the impact of the regressive tax measures included in it, particularly the natural gas and gas liquids tax, upon consumers, especially those in western Canada.

I take hon. members back to the fall of 1980 when the residents of British Columbia en masse, to the tune of some 30,000, petitioned this House through petitions filed by various members of Parliament from British Columbia, expressing their absolute rejection of any attempt by the Government of Canada to impose a federal excise tax on natural gas. The petition expressed their "absolute rejection of any attempt to impose a federal excise tax against the export of natural gas and hydroelectric power from British Columbia." It further states that "such action would constitute a disguised form of supplementary income tax against every resident of British Columbia" and finally stated "We will not accept it."

The government and the Minister of Finance must have been pretty concerned about those 30,000 signatures. The Minister of Finance presented a budget on October 28 in which he said that, as a consequence of the representation from the western provinces, the government had decided not to impose an excise tax on natural gas. The way in which the paragraphs were structured was very clever. I quote from page 8 of that budget speech:

> In these circumstances and after careful consideration, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I have concluded that it would be desirable to abandon our preferred plan—

That being an export tax.

> —and seek an alternative approach which we hope will meet the concerns of the producing provinces.

He then went off on a tangent without telling the audience in this House of Commons what that approach was. In the next paragraph he stated:

> This alternative approach involves the imposition of a new uniform federal tax on all natural gas.

Subsequent to that budget speech, the level of taxation has been increased further through the provision of these amendments we are now dealing with. A very neat agreement was achieved between the province of British Columbia and the federal government which essentially renounces the concept of an export tax by a bit of sleight-of-hand. It says that we set the tax rate to zero, but maintain the domestic natural gas tax, which adversely affects every resident of western Canada, and increasingly Ontario and Quebec, who must consume natural gas or would prefer to consume natural gas as an alternative to oil.

• (1710)

This tax against consumers, Mr. Chairman, is in no way compensated for by the indexation of pension benefits and the guaranteed income supplement increases that the Minister of State for Finance referred to earlier. In fact, this is a quantum jump in the tax bills of the residents of western Canada and also of the residents of central Canada.

I asked the Minister of Finance on October 31, 1980, in this House whether he did not feel that this tax was discriminatory in any way because of the way it impacted the residents of certain provinces. The Minister of Finance responded as follows:

—the increased tax is in lieu of an increase in price which is not to take place and that the increases in gas prices that will take place over the next several years will be lower than those projected in the December budget.

I would like the Minister of State for Finance to clarify that. Does he not agree that this natural gas tax is discriminatory against people who have had to convert and have found it very convenient to convert to natural gas? Does he not agree that it provides a disincentive for conversion to tax all of the ratepayers and taxpayers of Canada, including the old age pensioners, the widows and the disabled, at amounts which in the first year approached $100 for one heating season and which now amount to an increase of something of the order of $300 or $400 a season? Is this not discriminatory against home owners who must use natural gas? Is this not inflationary? And how does he justify this substantial increase in home-heating costs, given that the Minister of Finance said that this tax is in lieu of an increase in price?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the natural gas tax is discriminatory. In order to dispel the notion that it is, one must realize that the tax applies to natural gas right across Canada. It does not apply to one area only, but throughout Canada, so that natural gas users pay the tax no matter where they are located geographically. I should also like to point out to the hon. member that the tax has a redeeming feature in that, because of the price scales, natural gas will always cost 65 per cent less than oil, and therefore will always carry a lower price, so that in fact it will still be preferable to use it as a source of energy, for instance, to heat one's home, precisely because of that difference in price. Those then are two aspects one must keep in mind in attempting to prove that the natural gas tax is discriminatory, or that it might discourage its use as a source of energy.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, if we look at the amount of revenue from new energy taxes that is set out in the 1980 budget of October 28 and in the 1981 budget of November 12, we see that there is some $15 billion projected to the end of the 1983-84 fiscal year. In the 1980 budget $6.6 billion is predicted to come from the natural gas and gas liquids tax, and some $5.1 billion due to the 8 per cent PGRT in the 1980 budget. In addition, some $2.6 billion more is projected in 1981 in supplementary energy taxes, which are spelled out in the Minister of Finance's budget of November 12, 1981. As well we have the Canadian ownership charge, the special levy, the PGRT increase to 12 per cent, effective with this legislation, and the IORT. All of these amount to some $15 billion of revenue, which will be extracted from the residents of western Canada principally over the next two or three years, until the end of the 1983-84 fiscal year.

I have to ask the minister again, is that not discriminatory? What is the return for the residents of western Canada? How does he answer to the individual residents who must heat their homes with natural gas, or who live in apartments, as in the case of some senior citizens in my riding who got a supplementary bill in December, 1980, because of this discriminatory natural gas tax, leading to a monthly bill increase of some 30 per cent?

How does he answer to correspondence of the following type, of which I have received many letters. I am reading from a letter to the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources dated April 2, 1982. It says:

Dear Sir:

The recent increases in residential natural gas prices are a real concern to me. I am on a monthly instalment plan with B.C. Hydro and have just received my statement of account. Although my consumption is slightly down, my monthly payments have increased from $79 to $106 per month. This is a 34 per cent increase. Obviously, I have asked some questions.

He goes on to point out that the cost to the consumer in British Columbia of residential natural gas has risen from $1.90 per thousand cubic feet in November, 1980 to $3.70 per thousand cubic feet at the present time. That is almost a doubling of his natural gas cost. Where is the equity in that? He states:

This increase is imposed 85 cents by federal and 77 cents provincial and 30 cents by B.C. Hydro. That represents an 80 per cent increase in government taxes in 16 months.

Those figures are per thousand cubic feet. The federal tax is a major element in that. I must say that the provincial government of British Columbia has been "complicit" in this perpetration on the residents of British Columbia. In their self-righteousness they too said: "We do not want an export tax on natural gas." But they were quite pleased to conspire with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and stick it to the domestic consumers, to the extent of these massive tax increases, amounting in total to 80 per cent, on natural gas in 16 months.

My question goes as follows, in the words of my constituent:

Your government is calling on Canadians for restraint. That makes sense and many companies and citizens are doing just that.

But my constituent continues:

My salary increase this January was 10 per cent. In the light of these facts, how can you conscientiously make such gas increases? Furthermore, how can you expect home owners to pay such increases?

I have two questions:

1. Why was such a large increase necessary, and how can it be justified?

2. I understand 15 cents is designated to pay for PetroCan. Please advise the advantages to me as a taxpayer in buying PetroCan.

He concludes:

I would appreciate simple clear answers, not the typical political jargon which is so often offered by politicians.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of State for Finance to answer those questions for my constituent. How can he sit there and say that the natural gas taxes, the PGRT and other energy taxes, are not discriminatory, faced with evidence of that nature?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, in his remarks the hon. member denounced the conspiracy between the government of his province and the government of Canada in the establishment of a taxation system. I think that he is using an overly strong word. All hon. members, including him, have certainly wished at a certain point in time—in any case, I do recall that before we reached the first agreement with the province of Alberta I heard members of his party express the fervent hope that the government of Canada would conclude an agreement with the producing provinces along the lines of a sharing formula with respect to profits from the development of natural resources, particularly gas and oil. In his remarks the hon. member indicated that a petition tabled in the House had been signed by several thousands of residents of his province urging that exports of natural gas not be taxable. That issue was indeed a major factor in the negotiations.

And as the hon. member mentioned, the government—this is confirmed in the bill under consideration—has reduced to zero, in other words has cancelled the tax on exports of natural gas. However, it did reach agreement with the producing provinces on another type of system. Out of the total $1.80 increase per cubic metre to which the hon. member referred, the tax on gas, which is the federal government revenue, amounts to 45 cents, and 15 cents are levied for the Canadian ownership program. In other words, the federal government is not the only one that gets money through taxation.

Within the over-all scope of those agreements, one must keep the objectives in mind. First, we must come up with an appropriate system satisfactory to the parties, namely the provinces and the central government whose responsibility is to maintain the great national objectives in the field of energy as well as in others. Those national objectives, which hon. members know as well as I do, consist in achieving self-sufficiency as early as possible and a degree of Canadian ownership in the gas and oil development and exploration sector. Naturally it will cost money to reach those great objectives and all Canadians are expected to pay part of those costs. As I said earlier, the tax does not apply in only one region, it will be levied in all regions of the country and, the tax notwithstanding, the use of natural gas still remains an advantage over other energy sources. I also pointed out that the government has established certain programs aimed at encouraging people to rely on a different source of energy, oil or natural gas for instance, and despite the tax system Canadians fully understand and realize that it is indeed an advantage to use natural gas to heat their homes.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of State for Finance knows it is the height of hypocrisy, a ridiculously phony argument and virtually dishonest, to say that if some 30,000 residents of British Columbia were vigorously opposed to an export tax, they would somehow accept a domestic tax on natural gas. That is just the phoniest excuse which could ever be offered by the Minister of State for Finance or anyone else on the government side to justify a general tax on natural gas. It is utterly ridiculous and it is insulting to the people of British Columbia to suggest that, because they oppose an export tax, somehow they would be more favourably inclined to accept a domestic tax which would hit every one of them in the pocket book.

I have just one final short question. When is the Minister of State for Finance going to tell us—and can he tell us right now—how much spending has been undertaken in the name of that elusive western development fund which was promised in the budget of October 28, 1980? Two billion dollars were earmarked to be spent by the end of 1983, with a total commitment of $4 billion. How much money is in that fund at present, how much has been expended and are the revenue flows coming up to the levels predicted in the budget of 1980? How much is there, and how much has been spent? I think the people of this House and the people of western Canada would certainly be interested in knowing that, considering that all of these energy taxes are collected by ripping off western Canadian residents to the extent of $15 billion.

Mr. Benjamin: They also promised that fund in 1972, in 1974 and in 1979.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to say that because the citizens in British Columbia or other producing provinces did not want an export tax, a tax was forced on them. This is not at all what I said.

What I said is there were representations made, as the hon. member indicated, there were negotiations involving producing provinces and the Canadian government, during which we attempted to reach a harmonious agreement for the sharing of resource exploration and production revenues between the various levels of government and the industry. In that context, I would suggest to the hon. member that the Canadian government's share of the oil and gas revenues, under the agreement between the Canadian government and the province of British Columbia, is $3.2 billion; the British Columbia government's share is $4.6 billion, so it is higher than the Canadian government's share, and the industry's share is $4.5 billion. In other terms, the Canadian government is getting the least from the total tax base.

The hon. member is asking: How much of that money comes back to western Canada, British Columbia and the other provinces? Unfortunately I cannot give fhim those figures which pertain to the western fund. However, I would like to tell him that the Minister of Transport already had an opportunity to announce substantial expenditures for the improvement of transport infrastructures in western Canada, and this is part of the moneys the federal government will collect and reinject in that area.

However, the hon. member will certainly agree that within a federal system, under the principles of federalism, we cannot—and I am sure this is not what he is trying to do—balance everything we get and we give in double-entry form. I think the hon. member subscribes to the principles of our Canadian federalism, that wealth should be shared across the land, with have-not regions benefiting from the wealth of richer provinces, through major redistribution programs administered by the Canadian government.

I am also convinced that his objectives are also shared by Canadians in British Columbia.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of five questions I hope to put to the Minister of State for Finance, but before I do that I want to say to the House that this has been a very frustrating and trying afternoon. I have very high respect for the Minister of State for Finance. I worked with him on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when we were revising the Bank Act and when I was involved in agricultural matters, but we are dealing with the wrong minister here today. Even though the bill is in the name of the Minister of State for Finance, these are energy matters.

When my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary South, was opening the discussion this afternoon, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did come in, but he did not sit in his own seat; he sat behind it for ten or 15 minutes and visited. I think the least we could expect is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be here to listen. He also should be able to respond. This is a very frustrating afternoon because our concerns about these three natural gas taxes are not being satisfied.

These taxes really concern me. Natural gas is part of my heritage. It is part of the heritage of the city of Medicine Hat. It all began over 100 years ago.

My first question deals with a situation in the city of Medicine Hat. As a result of these taxes the people of Medicine Hat have already paid over $15 million, but they have done so under protest. They have already paid, so they have done nothing illegal, but they have paid under protest. They have initiated court action on which, for obvious reasons, I will not expand now. But some of the citizens of Medicine Hat are refusing to pay that portion of their utility bills which is due to these natural gas taxes.

• (1730)

On April 19, 1982, I submitted a petition in this House with the names of 12,689 very upset people on it. I have never seen my constituents so concerned about a punitive and discriminatory tax in the nearly ten years I have been here. My first question to the Minister of State is whether he is even aware of this petition and what is behind it. Would he comment on that, please?

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I remember quite well that the hon. member has already drawn the attention of the House to the special case of the city of Medicine Hat and to the natural gas tax which affects the citizens of that city. His colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich tells me that my preamble is phrased in some kind of vernacular. As the hon. member pointed out, we worked together on various other bills and I will add that I am not trying to hide behind some vernacular. The problem faced by his city has already been drawn to my attention and I do sympathize with what he said. However, I understand that court action has been initiated. I think that the hon. member himself has been very cautious in his comments and it would be rather inappropriate for me to be more specific with regard to that particular case considering that it is already before the courts.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, it is not so much the case involving the city which may affect us, it is the case involving the government of Alberta which has been upheld in that government's favour by a five to one decision so far. However, that is another matter.

My second point deals with the greenhouse industry. It is a huge industry in Alberta, the fourth largest in Canada, and the heart of it lies in southern Alberta. The implications of these taxes for the greenhouse industry are such that in one year the cost of heating fuel has increased six times.

This is a 100-year-old industry which was started there because we did have at one time cheap natural gas. The percentage increases in the cost of natural gas in that industry are the highest in Canada. As an example, Redcliff Greenhouses, a firm just five miles west of Medicine Hat, paid $9,130 for natural gas in 1979, just 1.3 per cent of their gross costs. In 1981 it had increased to $40,000, or 4.5 per cent, and it is estimated at $83,800 for this year, or 9.9 per cent of gross costs.

That industry is facing the real possibility of not being able to function at all next winter. If you multiply that one example by the hundreds there are throughout Alberta, you will appreciate how serious this situation is to that industry.

My second question to the minister is whether he has any feeling for what it does to an industry which was once one of the largest employers in my city of Medicine Hat.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I know that the Minister of Agriculture has already raised with the Minister of Finance the concern stated by the hon. member. It is a special matter that will have to be considered. The problem could be solved either through the tax system or through the Department of Agriculture. However, the matter will have to be looked at very closely if we are to establish whether that sector is more penalized than others and to what extent a special compensation should be provided. I can assure the hon. member that his representations and those made by the Department of Agriculture will be carefully considered by the Minister of Finance.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, my third question is more general and relates to the cost of raising food. In Alberta there are 85,000 farmers, 80 per cent of whom now have natural gas as the result of a huge rural gasification program which was really quite an achievement on behalf of Alberta farmers. Those farmers are now, of course, subject to these natural gas taxes and they have had a significant impact on their cost of production. It is not only the cost of heating their farm homes, barns and that sort of thing, but more importantly it is what these taxes have done to the cost of commercial fertilizer. I am sure the minister is aware of that, and if he multiplies that situation by the thousands who use commercial fertilizers he will get an idea of what the added costs have been. More specifically, in southern Alberta natural gas has now become the most expensive form of energy for operating sprinkler irrigation systems, especially the automated pivots which will sprinkle an entire quarter section. All of this adds significantly to the cost of producing food.

I would like to ask the minister if he appreciates the reality of this situation and if there is any indication at all that the government will recognize in this bill, by way of amendment or otherwise, the high cost of natural gas used in the production of food.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, the increase in energy costs as a factor in the cost of production of farm products and foodstuffs is consistent with the general increase in energy costs and thus contributes to the increase of that part of the food basket that is affected by this factor. Should a special tax system apply to regulate these cost factors when they increase because of a rise in energy costs? I suggest that if we replied affirmatively and provided the necessary amendments and adjustments in the taxation area for the production of energy and food, we would have to use the same mechanism to deal with other sectors also using natural gas and which could be affected. I am not saying that the problem does not exist, for it does exist. I am just saying that if we make adjustments in this sector, for that part of energy costs which is a factor in the production of food, we will have to make adjustments also for this factor in other areas of production, which would result in a very complex tax system that would be very difficult to administer. However, the problem which the hon. member described does exist.

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet, I should like to remind the House that as a result of the discussion I had with the hon. member for Calgary Centre, it had been agreed that—

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Huntington: They don't want it from the west, they want it from the south.

Mr. Bussières: I had the discussion with the hon. member for Calgary Centre regarding the amendment to Clause 7—

—in view of representations made in this debate on second reading as to the disposition of Clause 8 of the original bill, which has become Clause 7 of this bill, I should like to move an amendment and, instead of having a total maximum tax rate as provided by Clause 7 of the new bill, there would be a period of time equal to the duration of the agreement which we want to approve, there would be a maximum established in respect of each year for the various taxes. So, as this amendment appears in Clause 7, I ask that we deal first with Clauses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and when we reach Clause 7, I could read the amendment which, if I understand correctly, has been accepted by all hon. members.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Medicine Hat has a few moments left. I see the hon. member for Calgary South indicating that he wants to speak. He has been kind enough to advise the Chair that he may want to move certain of the clauses.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I have two very quick questions. They relate to the oil and gas-well servicing industry which is so important to the town of Brooks and also to Medicine Hat in Alberta. That industry has had a terrible time as a result of the National Energy Program and that is well known. Is the government giving any consideration whatever to matching the recent proposal by the Alberta government which recognized what that particular servicing industry is going through? Is the government giving any consideration to that in light of the fact that all of these servicing industries are Canadian owned, small entrepreneurial type businesses and in many cases individually owned?

Is the government also giving any consideration to the situation with respect to the heavy crude, which is all through southwestern Saskatchewan and part also on the Suffield block, where these wells are pretty well all capped because it is uneconomic to produce and there is no upgrading station. Is there anything new on the question of an upgrading station which at one time had been planned in Saskatchewan?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be in a far better position than I am to answer the hon. member with regard to the heavy crude upgrading plant. Unfortunately, I do not have the information requested and I would suggest that he put his question, which by far extends beyond the scope of this tax, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, how about the natural gas servicing industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: About the natural gas servicing industry, I must admit to the hon. member that that proposal is not now under consideration.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, as agreed with the Minister of State for Finance, we are prepared to accept Clauses 1 through 6 and 8 through 33 on division. Perhaps the minister would care to make his motion amending Clause 7. The hon. member for Calgary Centre has had to be absent from the House today and is the only one who is aware of the precise details, but I can accept the amendment that has been made in principle. However, I would ask the minister to be good enough to confirm that he has conveyed the precise amounts that are contained in the amendment to the hon. member for Calgary Centre when he moves his motion to amend Clause 7.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I can confirm to the hon. member that I have had the opportunity of giving the hon. member for Calgary Centre a copy of the amendment as worded here. He confirmed to me by telephone last week that he agreed with the terms of the amendment I intend to move. When you so advise me, I shall be ready to move it.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I am prepared to give our unanimous consent. As I understand it, and I want to put this on the record, the original bill had a high ceiling on the taxes that are mentioned in this amendment. It meant the government would not have to come back to Parliament, perhaps never, to get those taxes changed. The opposition did not like that. The opposition wanted the government to be more accountable to Parliament, especially in tax matters. The government said it had to be flexible. The government has made somewhat of a compromise now, and I think we can accept that. The government has said that it will phase in the taxes to give it some room to manoeuvre. It means that if the government wants to bring in a dramatic increase in taxes, it would have to come back to Parliament and we would have some accountability.

In any event, we welcome the amendment. It would be better if the government withdrew the act, but I am prepared on behalf of the New Democratic Party to give our consent to the amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clauses 1 through 6 inclusive carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Bussières moved:

That subclause 7(2) of Bill C-112 be amended by striking out lines 18 to 37 on page 7 and substituting the following:

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, four months ago I moved a motion in the House regarding farm bankruptcies and called upon the government to make the necessary amendments to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to make it an effective instrument to be used by farmers to prevent bankruptcies. Since then, the government has taken no steps whatsoever in this direction. We now learn that primary industry and farm bankruptcies are up by 134 per cent over 1980, and in the first four months of 1982 over 3,600 businesses declared bankruptcy, including 158 farmers. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House call upon the Prime Minister and his cabinet to open their eyes and recognize the harm they are inflicting upon Canada's business and farm communities. We urge the government to adopt policies immediately to allow farmers to keep their land and continue to produce food for Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEFENCE CAPABILITY OF NAVAL SHIPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the sinking of the British warships in the Falkland Islands ought to be a valuable object lesson to our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). These modern British warships, with aluminum superstructures and poor missile defences, are woefully inadequate against sophisticated missile attack. The minister has stated our navy's role is one of anti-submarine warfare, but how can Canada's ships carry out their assigned NATO anti-submarine defence if they have been sunk by an Exocet-type missile fired from some 30 to 40 kilometres away? Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That Canada's naval ships presently under refit to the tune of $200 million to $300 million, yet still missile defenceless, be assigned the highest priority to ensure their capability to defend themselves against sophisticated missile attack and to provide the utmost in protection for the lives of our fine Canadian sailors.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

INSPECTION OF CARS USED TO TRANSPORT DANGEROUS GOODS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it has recently been reported that yet another tank car containing yellow phosphorous, a highly dangerous and explosive material, was found to be leaking in the Hamilton rail yards. This most recent incident, when taken together with the many similar incidents which I reported to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on February 26 and March 2, 1982, clearly indicates that the procedures used to ensure the safety of residents and workers in areas immediately adjoining rail lines and yards are inadequate. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the minister require that each and every railroad car used in the transportation of hazardous or dangerous materials be inspected immediately and that a program of inspection at the point of loading be instituted forthwith in order to avoid what can only be described as a potential catastrophe from becoming a real catastrophe.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask this House to take special notice of the recent anti-social behaviour of the Prime Minister while in this Chamber. His challenges and taunts are demeaning to the conduct of this Chamber. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That members of this House refuse to take the Prime Minister's actions seriously as it appears he is saying, "Two of you hold my coat and one of you hold me."

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River.

CONDEMNATION OF PROPOSED CANAGREX CROWN CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, Canada's Liberal federal government has no credibility left at all. Canagrex was introduced as a federal co-ordinating body to increase Canada's agricultural exports, but Bill C-85 goes way beyond this function. Wide sweeping powers will permit this corporation virtually to control and take over agriculture, even to the point of telling farmers what they must grow, to say nothing about eliminating the existing export organizations in Canada and, if passed, as stated in Macleans magazine this Crown corporation could grow "like a cancerous cell" and "multiply and eat away at the country's food industry". Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That this House deplores this back-door method designed to socialize the farms of this country and demands that the bill be axed along with the responsible minister and the government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMPACT OF USER FEES ON PROVISION OF SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion arising from discussions being held between the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and her provincial counterparts.

Whereas user fees charged Canadians by hospitals or doctors, or opting out by doctors from provincial medical insurance plans, violate the promise of medicare to guarantee Canadians from all income levels free access to a comprehensive range of prepaid health services, and whereas the reduction of federal contributions to hospital and medical insurance plans through cuts in transfer payments has led to the increasing by the provinces of user-pay fees, and to an increasing number of doctors opting out in order to increase their income over what they receive from the provincial medical insurance plans, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House call on the government to return to the former system of sharing the cost of hospital and medical insurance plans and to work with the provinces so that user fees and opting out by doctors can be brought to an end.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CALL FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENTS ON BEAUFORT SEA EXPLORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, on May 10, 1982, the government announced with considerable fanfare that it had concluded six agreements with Esso Resources Canada Limited covering $600 million worth of oil and gas exploration in the Beaufort Sea. The timing was presumably intended to take the heat off the government for its failures with the Alsands and Alaska gas megaprojects. Whereas it would now appear that no such agreements exist, save for some letter of intent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

• (1410)

That the government either table these agreements if they exist or admit that it has misled both this House and the Canadian public.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EMPLOYMENT

SUGGESTED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, student summer unemployment in the coming weeks is expected to skyrocket to 200,000, or to 16 per cent. This disastrous situation will compel many young people not to return to their education in the fall because they will be unable to pay their tuition, which most colleges and universities are having to hike following federal government funding cutbacks. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately convene a meeting between himself and his provincial counterparts in order to devise a strategy to assist the private sector to hire summer students during the current employment and education crisis.

NUMBER OF PERSONS NOT ENTITLED TO BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Having received reliable information yesterday from the Department of Employment and Immigration to the effect that by December 31, 500,000 Canadians will have no other alternative but to go on welfare, since they will have exhausted their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits, and whereas the minister responsible has refused to either confirm or deny this information which was obtained from his own department, I move, seconded by the member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the House unanimously urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to publish as soon as possible the approximate number of Canadians who will no longer be entitled to unemployment insurance by December 31, and a negative reply will merely give my statement greater weight.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

KENT ROYAL COMMISSION

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF NEWSPAPER LEGISLATION PROPOSAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the government's response to the Kent Commission legitimizes the problem rather than resolves it, and whereas the hysterical response of some of the nation's publishers committing themselves to fight—in the air, on the land, and the sea, and in the gutters of Canada—the provisions of the government's response, and whereas it is unlikely that a newspaper act will ever appeal before this House of Commons or will ever be passed by it, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the minister responsible for the Kent Commission withdraw the proposal for a newspaper act for the time being and consult with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a view to bringing in amendments to the Combines Investigation Act and establish a special media branch for the time being within the bureau of competition policy to develop a framework for a competitive Canadian communications industry.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICABILITY TO PUBLIC SERVANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the cases of Neil Fraser and Paul McNeill have exposed the existence of codes of conduct governing the personal behaviour of federal public servants. The Canadian Human Rights Commissioner indicates those codes of conduct violate freedom of speech in Canada. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Minister of Justice give real meaning to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by reviewing codes of conduct governing federal public servants and determining whether the code provisions violate freedom of thought and expression and are thereby unconstitutional.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The minister, in his budget statement on November 12, predicted that the unemployment rate this year would be in the order of 7.8 per cent. The minister knows and, indeed, the country knows, that the rate is now 9.6 per cent, and that is in the order of one and a quarter million Canadians out of work and walking the streets looking for it.

Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) in a statement to the Mining Association of Canada, said, "Lay-offs are continuing at a relatively high level and we must face the likelihood that high unemployment will persist for some time to come".

Clearly the government's understanding of the economy is in disarray. Does the Minister of Finance believe that increased unemployment over the next few months is the only answer the government can give?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the hon. member's question. I am not sure if he is referring to the announcement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration extending additional funding for the work-sharing program, which has been a real success in the country. If he has that in mind when he asks me whether that constitutes the government's approach to unemployment, I would say that that, among other specifically targeted approaches, has been the way we have attempted to deal with the unemployment problem.

REQUEST THAT TAX BE REMOVED FROM BUILDING MATERIALS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, even the Minister of Finance must blush when he takes credit for a program that was designed to be temporary and short-term in order to deal with a situation created by his government. That situation is no longer acceptable to the people of Canada. The minister knows that the Canadian Construction Association predicted for this year alone an unemployment level of 20 per cent. That is 150,000 workers out of work. Time and again the Construction Association has asked the government to take the federal tax off building materials. Why does the minister refuse to continue to take off that tax, something which would help put the construction industry on its feet?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): As the hon. member knows, Madam Speaker, the removal or imposition of a tax is a budgetary matter and these changes are not normally announced or dealt with in questions on the orders of the day.

LEVEL OF INVESTMENT IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, everyone knows that a fundamental key to any recovery in growth over the next decade in this country depends very much on our investment in research and development. Despite the government's pronouncements, Canada still has a record which is second to last of all industrialized nations for investment in research and development. How can the minister take pride in that record? If he cannot take pride, why does he not now increase investment in research and development so that hundreds of thousands of jobs can be created?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised a third subject in his series of questions on the orders of the day. All of them have been very good. They have pointed to various areas of the economy where he is suggesting that the government intervene to provide more support, in one case through the removal of taxation which would mean declining revenues for the government. In another case he suggested increased grant incentives for research and development. As the hon. member knows, all of these proposals, however worthy in themselves, have financial consequences. They have to be financed either through increased taxes or increased deficits. It is not my impression that his party, or his financial critic, has advocated that one of the methods of dealing with the current situation is to set out deliberately to increase financial deficits in Canada.

FORESTRY

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Trade. The minister is aware of a commission that has been meeting for some time in the United States regarding the possibility of imposing an import restriction on Canadian lumber. The commission has now reported without recommendations. The decisions will be up to the administration and politicians to make as to whether such restrictions should be imposed by the United States.

• (1420)

First of all, has his department monitored the hearings of the commission? Second, has his department offered help to the companies which defended the Canadian position, including the government's position? Third, what is the minister doing now through the Department of External Affairs to assure that the Canadian position is put properly and that such restrictions will not be imposed on Canadian industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, in response to the questions put by the hon. member, first of all we have monitored the situation very closely, not only here in Ottawa but also on the west coast where the hearings were held, and also in Washington. In reply to the second question, we have not offered any financial assistance to the industry with respect to their representations. Third, we think that the information presented, based on the witnesses, shows that there is no evidence that Canadian firms were dumping into the United States market. It is a North American problem and we hope that the authorities in the United States will agree with the recommendations of the commission.

REQUEST THAT CANADA MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, it is quite clear from reports that we are receiving from Washington that the decision made there will be a political one, and that the whole question is overshadowed by current events or by other events which relate to the National Energy Program, FIRA and so on; and that the Americans will be looking for a way to punish this government and Canadians generally for some of its other anti-American actions. There is a clear need, the companies have told us, for our diplomats and our government to intercede at this point, to intervene in the interest of Canada and in the interest of this important industry which is already on its knees.

What is the minister doing? What can he tell us today? Will he give instructions to the embassy in Washington? Will he dispatch his officials? Will he himself meet with his counterpart in the United States to assure that what he asserts with respect to this report will actually coincide with fact?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, obviously I cannot make an assurance on behalf of the United States government. We have made representations at the political level, at the diplomatic level, and at the administrative level. We are very confident, Madam Speaker, based on the information given during those hearings and regardless of some of the political statements made by certain congressmen in the United States, that the United States special trade representative will not find any grounds for imposing sanctions as suggested by some of the political leaders in the United States.

HEALTH CARE

EXTRA BILLING BY PHYSICIANS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For three years the minister has talked tough inside and outside the House about the need to remove extra billing from our medicare system, arguing quite correctly that this was contrary to the principle of medicare itself. Yesterday she had the chance to deliver. Considering that she began yesterday's meeting once again by asserting that extra billing was contrary to the spirit of medicare and that steps had to be taken to remove it, my question is straightforward. Why did she cave in?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, that same minister has the pleasure to announce to the House today, and to all Canadians, that she has now the agreement of all the provinces, the agreement in writing of all the provinces, that the question of extra billing—which in a way she was alone in speaking on, at times—the question of extra billing is now one which will be addressed and that the control of it will be part of conditions to make sure that medicare remains universal, which has always been our objective. I am very pleased with the co-operation of all the provinces.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister has said no more in her words now than she said for three years, no more than she conceded yesterday. I would like to begin my question with this. Just last month she said:

> If you permit additional surcharges in the system for Canadians who can afford to protect themselves against it . . . you are back to pre-medicare days and very rapidly the whole system will collapse. Do not kid yourself, this is abolishing the universality of the program. You cannot have it both ways.

That is what the minister said. I agree with her. Considering that yesterday she said something which flatly contradicts this, namely, she is accepting the principle of extra billing but simply wants to control it, I say to her that she cannot control it both ways. Will she have the integrity to resign?

• (1425)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I could give the hon. member a long list of Hansard quotations in which I answered his colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, that a ban on extra billing could not be imposed unilaterally by the federal government. The hon. member prefers to call it a ban. I have not requested a ban on extra billing from provincial ministers. I have expressed to them word for word what the hon. member quotes as something I have often said to Canadians. I suppose I have been pretty convincing, because control of extra billing is now part of the dossier of negotiations. This is a great stride toward strengthening medicare for all Canadians once and for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The minister is a master of linguistic solutions to the problem. She used to talk about removing extra billing. Now we hear hypocrisy; she is talking about controlling extra billing. That is very different.

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister has just said the federal government does not have the necessary authority. I would like to act with the provinces in this area. The minister's boss, the Prime Minister, said in 1980:

> —the federal government must use its powers to bring the provinces back to the principle of universality.

That is what the Prime Minister said. Is the minister now saying that the Prime Minister was wrong? If the Prime Minister was right, why does the minister not get up and say that the federal government will bring the provinces into line?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, to a master of rhetoric I would like to say that I cannot do that for a very simple reason, and that is that there is a Constitution in this country. We helped to bring it about, and we respect it. The ten provinces happen to be in charge of administering health services in Canada, and we happen to distribute about half the cost of those services based on five basic standards. We achieved something remarkable yesterday, of which I am very proud for Canadians, and that is that surcharges and user fees on the one hand, and extra billing on the other, are now part of the dossier and will be looked into. Parameters and conditions will be developed in order to strengthen medicare and keep it universal. That is remarkable and very important, and I think the hon. member should help us achieve that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JUDGMENT USED BY SOLICITOR GENERAL IN SUBMITTING CHARACTER REFERENCES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In another context the Prime Minister characterized the ways of the Solicitor General as being unforgiveably naive and showing poor political judgment. Within the context of the English case and the Arrindell case, the Prime Minister knows that in one case the Solicitor General knew the accused indirectly and that in the other case his knowledge was not extensive. There were two counts of robbery relating to two different cities. A loaded gun was used. The Solicitor General put the prestige of his ministry on the line by using the Solicitor General letterhead. Will the Prime Minister agree in these circumstances that the Solicitor General used poor judgment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I dealt with the substance of the issue yesterday. On the matter of judgment, I would say that is a question of judgment.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, that type of attitude and answer demonstrates how blunted the ethics of the Prime Minister really are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my second question arises from an answer the Prime Minister gave two days ago in which he said:

—I think it is more important that justice be done than that it appear to be done.

If it is more important that justice be done than that it appear to be done, how does the ordinary citizen have any faith in a system of justice in which justice does not appear to be done, as in the case of English and Arrindell?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me my statement is self-evident. Certainly justice has to be done, and that is the basic principle. If it can also appear to be done, so much the better, but I realize you can never make a good case sound like a good case in front of members of the opposition because they have pretty poor judgment.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK RESIGNATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question for the Prime Minister concerns the role of the Solicitor General as the minister responsible for the administration of penitentiaries. It raises a very serious question of conflict of interest, not to mention the bad judgment of the Solicitor General. The two accused persons are now serving sentences in the penitentiaries of this country which are under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General. Clearly he is in conflict of interest because there was an intervention by the Solicitor General before the courts on behalf of these two people which was clearly in conflict with the guidelines. That would seem to put them in a rather privileged position vis-à-vis their supervisors and caretakers who are accountable to the Solicitor General.

Given that clear conflict of interest, and forgetting all about bad judgment, will the Prime Minister not now ask for the resignation of this accident-prone minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize, because I did not understand the reasoning of the hon. member's suggestion of a conflict of interest. If he is saying that the actions are contrary to the guidelines, that is the issue in the debate with which I dealt yesterday to my satisfaction.

REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL BE RE-ASSIGNED WITHIN CABINET

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could put the question another way. The letters that were filed with counsel and with the court on behalf of these two accused persons who are now serving sentences, are on their records. They will emerge during the process of parole and they will emerge during the process of classification within the penitentiary system. That is clearly a conflict of interest situation. If the Prime Minister cannot see that, then there is something wrong with his judgment. Consequently, I would ask, forgetting about the guidelines, if he is not prepared to ask the Solicitor General for his resignation would he at least have him assigned to a less sensitive portfolio?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the answer to the question is no.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

ROLE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister. Since he has now found that it is perfectly acceptable for the Solicitor General to attempt to influence a judge in his consideration of sentence, will he apply the same standard and find it acceptable that the Solicitor General can make similar representations to the National Parole Board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think that would be exactly the same situation. I would have to give consideration to the hon. member's request or question. The Parole Board comes directly under the authority of the minister, and the courts of justice do not, of course. If he were to make an application to the Parole Board through some open process wherein the Parole Board asks to hear character witnesses, I would withhold my judgment. Obviously if it is a communication directly to the Parole Board on behalf of another person, then he would not be acting in parallel to the case in the courts, where he acted in open court in a precise way.

I would have to hear more about the hypothetical situation from the hon. member. Is he asking if the Solicitor General could be a character witness in some hearing by the Parole Board, or is he asking if the minister could phone a member of the board directly and try to influence him?

RESPONSIBILITY FOR APPOINTING NEW MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister seems to be in some doubt about the propriety of making such representations by the Solicitor General to the National Parole Board. Since the Solicitor General today on departmental stationery—at least it was received in the mail today—announced the appointment of, I believe, four or five new members of the Parole Board, and until the Prime Minister has come to a crystallized decision on the propriety of that kind of representation, would he not consider that it might be advisable to remove the responsibility for appointing new members to the Parole Board from the Solicitor General, in the interim?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think that is a constructive course because the Parole Board operates for hundreds of cases which have nothing to do with this one. I would not suggest it would be proper to hold up the process of parole for some prisoners who might be deserving of it, just because of a hypothetical question asked by the hon. member.

What I am prepared to do, as I suggested the other day, is to discuss a revision of the guidelines with anyone who is interested to see whether in the future we want to prevent ministers in any way from testifying in open court on any subject, or as character references. That is why I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, since the matter has raised considerable interest and a fair degree of doubt, would the Prime Minister consider referring the question of the revision of the guidelines dealing with the conduct of ministers in this particular instance to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that recommendations could be made to the House and to the government with respect to updating them? This would ensure that every vestige of doubt about the propriety of conduct of ministers in situations like this would be removed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to receive the advice of opposition members and members of my own party about revision of the guidelines as they apply to the future.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

QUERY RESPECTING TWINNING OF LOCKS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Some months ago a joint committee was set up between Canada and the United States to study the shipping traffic between the two countries using the Welland Canal. I am told that that report has been completed and that there will be a substantial increase in the traffic. Can the minister tell the House if active consideration is being given to twinning the flight locks either at Thorold or Port Colborne at present or in the very near future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there has been quite a debate on that subject to which I have already referred. Some analyses, like the Misener report in Ontario, sees that dramatic jump into the next phase of the history of the Seaway as coming within five years, others say ten years. There is a joint study between Canada and the United States which says 18 years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What do you say?

Mr. Pepin: I say we are not there yet. I expect that quantum jump to take place in early 1990s. In the meantime, and this is the important thing, a number of things are being done such as a number of widenings of the Welland Canal in places to permit the passage of two ships, and a number of improvements in the traffic system by the use of electronics. The tariff has been changed also to favour the longer ships. Therefore number of things are being done on a progressive basis to meet with the growing demand on the Welland Canal.

EXTRA BILLING BY PHYSICIANS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question follows on those that my leader put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For the first time the minister has indicated to the House that she has altered the government's position from one of eliminating extra billing to a position where the federal government now appears to think it is going to control extra billing. May I ask the minister what the federal government's position is? Is it to eliminate extra billing, or is it to control extra billing?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes a mistake in the first part of his question. The goal of the government as it has always put forward to the public, to the different parties or to the different players, has remained the same. It is the strengthening of medicare by the clarification of the five basic standards or conditions which have been in the act for more than 20 years. That has always been the purpose. Two of these conditions in particular, universality and accessibility, have appeared to be threatened in the last three years by two avenues that no one can ignore, namely, extra billing and user fees. Both of these have been recognized as part of the process of negotiation which started yesterday with a very successful meeting toward controlling it. The purpose is to strengthen medicare.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in the process of trying to strengthen medicare will the minister recall her own statement to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs not a month ago when she said, "If you permit additional surcharges in the system for Canadians who cannot afford to protect themselves against it, you are back to pre-medicare days and very rapidly the whole system will collapse."

I ask the minister, and I would appreciate a straight answer, is it the intention of the government to abdicate the long-held position that there should be no extra billing, or is it simply the intention of the government to find some way to control it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Of course, Madam Speaker, that is exactly what I have said and will continue to say across Canada. I would like to see extra billing reduced to zero. I have explained often to the official health critic of the NDP, who does not seem to understand how the system works, that the federal minister alone cannot ban extra billing, and that a provincial minister cannot ban extra billing if he or she loses doctors to neighbouring provinces. That is the problem. We addressed it in a very realistic way yesterday, and I am very pleased about that. I still do not see why the member plays with words. The idea is to keep medicare universal, and we will succeed because this is a program which all Canadians love best.

CHARACTER REFERENCES WRITTEN BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Solicitor General tell us whether, when he wrote the Arrindell and English letters on his stationery in his capacity as Solicitor General, he expected and intended that the content of those letters would never be communicated to a judge?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the letters indicate quite clearly that I was intending to offer my evidence to the lawyers for them to use as they saw fit, including in court.

APPLICATION OF CABINET GUIDELINES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, since the Solicitor General has now indicated he wrote the letters with the intention that they be communicated to the court, will he tell us how he finds that action to be consistent with the guideline of the Prime Minister which says:

—no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they have before them . . . ?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): The Prime Minister answered that yesterday, but I take that guideline to apply to informal, off-the-record contact between members of the government and judges, and not to evidence given formally in open court.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

EXPORT OF POWER BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Three weeks ago, in answer to a question, he advised me that the decision of the National Energy Board allowing Ontario Hydro to export power to the United States from its Nanticoke plant would be coming before cabinet for consideration. I ask the Prime Minister if that has taken place and, if so, did the government decide to reverse the NEB decision until it received a satisfactory guarantee from Ontario Hydro that it intended to instal machinery at that plant capable of greatly reducing emissions which create acid rain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the matter has not yet come before full cabinet and therefore there has been no decision taken, conditional or otherwise.

INSTALLATION OF ANTI-POLLUTION DEVICES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, knowing how cabinets work and that matters which are desired to be brought before cabinet are done so very quickly, and that it now appears the government is simply not dealing with the matter in the hope that it will go away, does the Prime Minister not think it is incumbent upon him and his government to stop trying to duck this issue and face up to their responsibility of convincing the American government and people that this country is willing to adopt the same anti-pollution measures we have been so strongly urging them to adopt during the last year or two, and in this way make it possible for our two countries to wage war against acid rain successfully?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to inform the hon. member that he is misrepresenting the strength of his case if he thinks I assume the matter will go away. I know as long as the hon. member is sitting in his seat the matter will not go away, and I hope that will be forever. In the meantime, the ministers most directly involved, the minister responsible for energy and the minister responsible for the environment, are discussing the matter with the intention of bringing a joint position to cabinet. Naturally, the very sound and sane representations of the hon. member will be taken into account in that deliberation.

Mr. Hees: Big Brother will be watching.

NATIONAL UNITY

PUBLICATION ISSUED BY CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to an expensive and glossy publication put out by the Canadian Unity Information Office in April of this year, which contains very large extracts of comments by the Prime Minister on the Crowsnest discussion in a speech to a Liberal fund-raising campaign on March 18, 1982, in Regina. Part of this document indicates that the Prime Minister said:

> The NDP, I understand, has been going up and down the province claiming that variable rates would be a part of any new formula, that the decision has already been made. Well, that is simply not true.

How can the Prime Minister justify the distribution, at public expense, of highly partisan Liberal propaganda, especially during the month in which there was a provincial election campaign?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the truth of the matter is that there were in the west at the time a number of people who thought the decision on variable rates had been made. The Prime Minister's purpose was to indicate that was not so. I remember that the paragraph quoted goes on to say that if western farmers do not want variable rates, they will not get variable rates. That was meant to be a reassurance to the western farmers that their views would be taken into account in this matter. As a matter of fact, if my friend reads the communique on the statement I made in Winnipeg on February 8, he will realize that part of it was left to Dr. Gilson to negotiate with the interested parties. This is what is going on now, and we expect a report in a few days.

TIMING OF PUBLICATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I think the minister missed the whole point of my question, which is that this is clearly a partisan political position being put forward on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada at public expense. I am not a defender of Premier Blakeney, but I resent public moneys being used in my province for the purpose of putting the Liberal line across. We saw the results on April 26.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That brochure also says:

> Understandably, Premier Blakeney now finds this to be an inconvenient time to display this earlier realism.

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to have this kind of publication put out in each province before each provincial election, so that the Liberal Party's position can be put before the electorate at public expense?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is misinformed. I am informed that this publication came out after the election, not during it as the hon. member has suggested.

PORTS

FINANCING OF GRAIN ELEVATOR AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport regarding the problems the Prince Rupert grain consortium is having in obtaining financing for the elevator at Prince Rupert. As the minister knows, that consortium considers the likelihood of obtaining that financing to be only 50-50. Since Alberta is carrying 75 per cent of the cost with a $200-million loan at 11.5 per cent, and $25 million of the cost in excess of $260 million, would the minister be so good as to advise this House what luck he has had with his representations to cabinet in the past week to find further funds? Does he have another $10 million to make the grain elevator go, or does he consider it certain that it will go without any further support?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that the consortium has come to see us asking for more money on top of the $32 million, increasing to $37 million, which has already been committed to that enterprise. I have already told the House that they had two ideas in mind. The first one was for the consortium to try to find out from the bidders if they could get a reduction on the bids they received, and I understand that they have accomplished that. The second possibility was that the consortium could cut off some "unnecessary" part of the elevator, and they are working on that now. They would then come to us with that information and they would ask for the $10 million which they suggested we might add to the previous amount. This is where we are now. We expect them to knock at the door very, very soon in order to put a case for an added amount of money.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, it is an interesting time for the government to start playing hard to get on getting money. Eighteen months ago it offered $100 million to the same consortium, interest free, to build a larger elevator. Here we have a smaller elevator and they are asking the consortium to chop it even smaller. They are getting rid of the surge capacity. They are getting rid of all the footings. The $65 million Falls River hydro project to provide power to Ridley Island has been cancelled. The CN bridgework between Terrace and Prince Rupert has been cancelled or indefinitely delayed.

REQUEST FOR SUPPORT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, will the minister support this project? If necessary, will he take an equity position in the elevator to ensure that it goes ahead? Is it or is it not in the Canadian interest?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am confused—

Mr. Fulton: That is right.

Mr. Pepin: —and I think I have good reason to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member is mixing his provincial chickens with his federal eggs. He is throwing it all at us now in a hodge-podge manner, not making a distinction between what the federal government and what the provincial governments are doing in this matter. The federal government is doing tremendous things for the port of Prince Rupert. My friend should recognize that, and usually he does, but today he is in a pugnacious mood. We have provided money for the three growing facilities there—one in grain, one in coal, and a coming one in petrochemicals.

The judgment as to whether $37 million is enough or whether it should be $47 million is one which is debatable, but one on which the government has to make a decision in relation to other investments it has made in that port and has to make elsewhere. This is not a question of philosophy; this is a question of quantum.

EXPORT OF POWER BY QUEBEC HYDRO—POSSIBLE DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the statement made yesterday before the Special Committee on Energy by the Chairman of the Board of Directors of Hydro-Québec, Mr. Joseph Bourbeau. Could the minister inform the House and the Canadian people whether he has been advised of Mr. Bourbeau's statement that an amendment to the National Energy Board Act, namely, Bill C-108, might create certain problems for Hydro-Québec, since the proposed legislation would make it possible to modify a power export licence for reasons of public convenience and necessity, and might cost Hydro-Québec $10 billion, and could the minister also inform us whether he has heard that Mr. Bourbeau stated he could not care less about the power corridor between Newfoundland and the United States?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have, in fact, been advised of Mr. Bourbeau's statement. Some time ago I heard that Hydro-Québec was worried about a specific provision to which the hon. member is referring. I asked my officials to get in touch with Hydro-Québec and obtain further details. Unfortunately, we have been unable to get additional information as yet. We have also been in touch with a number of public utility companies in the United States, and we have received no indication that the proposed provision might create any problems. However, I can assure the hon. member and the House that the government will not allow a provision that would cause such prejudice, if that is is indeed the case, to remain before Parliament. If after consultations, which I hope we shall soon be able to have with the appropriate authorities, it is concluded that prejudice is a possibility, we shall not hesitate to amend the bill to ensure there is no prejudice to the Hydro-Québec contract.

FISHERIES

PLIGHT OF GILLNETTERS ON LOWER FRASER RIVER, B.C.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister will remember that in early April, and then again in committee, I asked him what possible means could be taken to assist the gillnetters in the lower Fraser River. Also the minister will remember that there was a proposal put to the department for a net buy-back program and also a sum of money per fisherman to take them out of the industry, given the fact that it is very, very difficult for them to fish at all because of the need to protect chinook stocks. The minister knows that there will be a meeting this Sunday in New Westminster of the gillnetters. I ask him again whether he has had an opportunity to discuss this further with his officials and whether he is prepared to give any kind of an answer to these gillnetters?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member in committee, the fuel proposal did not appear to be one which could be administered with efficiency and with realism. The question of nets is still being discussed. I understand that my officials are also trying to find, as they did last year, some additional fishing space in the fishing plan for the coming season, but I have no easy solution to offer the hon. member.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS ATTEND MEETING

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that at least to some degree, and perhaps to a greater degree in some cases, these gillnetters in the Fraser River need income from fishing. The minister realizes that, in taking them out as a conservation measure, they are put in a very difficult and unequal position. I am not saying unfair; I am saying "unequal". Would the minister undertake at this time to ensure that he has officials of his department at the meeting on Sunday in New Westminster to hear the comments of the gillnetters, to respond to those comments, and perhaps to come up with some solution which is equitable with respect to the livelihood that these particular fishermen are having to give up?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I fully recognize the difficulties which are imposed upon the groups of fishermen who, for conservation reasons, are restricted in their activities. It is difficult for us always to ensure that for each dislocation there will be some form of compensation. We try to average over a number of years and to find a way to keep the incomes of fishermen within reasonable levels. As the hon. member knows, if a group of fishermen has an income loss which is unusual, and if the prices support board concludes that the income has been reduced very substantially, then the board, which is an independent body with fishermen representatives, makes recommendations to the minister.

As to the question of the meeting on Sunday, if it is a meeting to which my officials are invited obviously they will, as usual, be present. However, if it is a meeting to demonstrate, I hope the hon. member will understand that no useful purpose will be served.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FILLING OF VACANCIES

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will have a vague recollection that there are three vacancies in the House of Commons. Would he not consider that the residents of these three constituencies should have representatives in the House of Commons and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I do consider that they should, and indeed Parliament made this quite clear in an amendment to the law some years ago when it indicated that the government would have to declare the date for a by-election within six months of the vacancy being recognized.

Mr. Wright: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has not given us any good reason why these by-elections should not take place.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister again: is he not a political coward for not holding these by-elections?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, if I am a coward, obviously every member of the House is a coward because we agreed in the House to give any government six months to—

Mr. Nielsen: How about Spadina?

Mr. Wright: Call it right now!

Mr. Trudeau: He wants me to "call it right now". I will not do it right now, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT BENEFIT PERIOD BE EXTENDED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister responsible for unemployment insurance is aware that 500,000 unemployed Canadians stand to lose their unemployment insurance benefits if they cannot find sufficient work over the next six months in order to requalify. Yesterday, the minister stated that he is more interested in finding solutions than in making predictions. Is the minister prepared to take the preventive action now of extending the period during which Canadians can collect unemployment insurance, until unemployment comes down to 4 per cent?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I believe that the circumstance of being unemployed is serious enough without having hon. members of the House, such as the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James, engaging in false scare tactics to try to inflame and enrage a circumstance which is already quite grave. I do not think he should be following the example which was set in the House yesterday by the hon. member from Joliette. It was really uncalled for.

What we are concerned about is that we are monitoring the situation very carefully. We will continue to provide a number of programs through the Unemployment Insurance Act to help those who are unemployed and we will continue to show the kind of sensitivity required for the plight of the unemployed, rather than engaging in the kind of scare tactics that the hon. member is patenting as his own particular product and contribution to this problem.

QUERY RESPECTING STIMULATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, a few days ago the President of the Treasury Board described any move toward a fiscal stimulus to create new jobs as dangerously counter-productive. Yet the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated yesterday that he is much more interested in putting people to work. Will the minister tell the House whether he is now prepared to support stimulating the economy to put Canadians back to work, or does he agree with his colleague that stimulating the economy is dangerously counter-productive?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have had a number of exchanges on this. However, I would point out to the hon. member that at the present rate of expenditures in my department alone we are providing assistance to over half a million Canadians, to provide them with either direct employment or opportunities to be retrained during this difficult period. That, I believe, shows a very clear and continuing commitment by this government to help those who have needs.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY MR. CHRÉTIEN—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I am prepared to rule on the question of privilege which was raised the other day by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I realize that he is not in the House. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) is in the House.

I am in the hands of the House. I usually do not rule in the absence of a member who has raised a question of privilege but I do not like to delay my rulings. Perhaps I could ask the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) if he would prefer that I rule today or delay it until the hon. member for St. John's West comes into the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, under the circumstances, I think perhaps it would be convenient if you rendered your ruling today.

Madam Speaker: On May 20, 1982 the hon. member for St. John's West raised a question of privilege alleging that on May 18, 1982 the Minister of Justice deliberately misled the House in certain answers he made to certain questions.

The procedure on a breach of privilege is well known to this House. A member complaining of a breach of privilege must do it at the earliest possible opportunity during the course of a sitting if a question of privilege arises out of proceedings in the Chamber, or by giving notice to the Speaker at least one hour prior to the opening of the sitting. The member must conclude the statement on a question of privilege with a motion providing the House with an opportunity to take some action which normally is the reference of the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for examination.

The role of the Speaker in these cases is to determine whether the case meets the conditions which would entitle debate on the motion to take precedence over all other business.

I would first of all like to review two important precedents relevant to the case before us and which were referred to in the presentation to the House. The first is the Lawrence-RCMP case of November and December, 1978; the second is the Profumo case at Westminster in 1963. The House will recall that in the latter case Mr. John Profumo had made a personal statement to the House which contained words which he later admitted not to be true. Subsequently, the House resolved that Mr. Profumo was guilty of a grave contempt of the House. This is the episode which gave rise to the citation in May's Nineteenth Edition at page 142 that:

> The House may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.

The other precedent, one of our own, involved correspondence between the then Solicitor General and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, as the constituency was then called. The member had been in correspondence with the minister on a certain matter involving the RCMP and the minister's reply had been drafted by RCMP officials. The former Commissioner of the RCMP later admitted before the McDonald Royal Commission that "the practice was very often minister's letters were not exactly drafted on precise statements of fact". I refer to the House of Commons Debates of November 3, 1978, at page 778. In this case, my predecessor, Speaker Jerome, found that, prima facie, a contempt had been committed and said:

—I cannot conceive that there is any one of us who would accept the argument that this House of Commons has no recourse in the face of such an attempt to obstruct by offering admittedly misleading information.

These two precedents are clear and unequivocal. In each case there had been evidence, an admission in fact, that a deliberate attempt had been made to mislead and that this was the condition precedent to the prima facie finding of privilege. In the Profumo case, the member himself admitted that he had attempted to mislead the House; in the RCMP case, the admission was made by the then Commissioner in evidence before a Royal Commission.

Having reviewed precedents relating to the matter, namely the deliberate misleading of the House, let me take a little time to review the precedents relating to the procedure being followed.

In the course of debate on the evening of February 22, 1978, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) stated that the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) had "intentionally, deliberately, overtly and openly" misled the House. The next day he gave the Speaker a notice of his intention to raise a question of privilege "respecting the manner in which the Minister of Finance deliberately misled the House ... ". During the discussion of the question of privilege the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham withdrew unequivocally the unparliamentary language he had used the night before.

Later, on February 23, 1978, at page 3295 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker, Jerome struck down the notice of privilege given earlier by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham because it contained the word "deliberately", and he did so without prejudice to the hon. member to raise the matter again in a substantive motion. The congruity of this case with the present one is clear but one ought not to draw the wrong conclusions from either. We are precisely following the procedure which emerged from the precedent my predecessor so clearly established.

The use of unparliamentary language in debate was dealt with in both cases in accordance with the practices of the House. The notice of privilege was drafted in such a way as to avoid the use of unparliamentary language. The House insisted in both cases that unless the discussion is based upon a substantive motion drawn in proper terms, reflections must not be cast in debate upon the conduct of members. These principles are at the very heart of Speaker Jerome's approach to the problem which confronted him in February, 1978. They are the principles by which the Chair was guided last week in the preliminary discussion of the present question of privilege.

Let me deal for a few moments with the issue before the House. Members will appreciate that the Speaker is not called upon to determine the substance of the case. The Speaker, in other words, does not sit in judgment upon hon. members. To do so would be to usurp a power which only the House enjoys. The role of the Chair is to determine the narrow procedural issue of whether or not the complaint meets the conditions which justify its taking precedence over all other business. That is, was it raised at the earliest opportunity and does it, on its face, appear that privilege is involved? I refer to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 84.

Citation 84(2) is clearly drawn from a passage in May's nineteenth edition at page 347, which reads as follows:

It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question whether the case conforms with the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence of the notices of motions and orders of the day standing on the order paper of public business; and does not extend to deciding the question of substance, whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the House itself. The conditions with which a claim of privilege must comply in order to be accorded precedence are those mentioned above, that is, (1) a prima facie case of breach of privilege must be made out and (2) the matter must be raised, of course, at the earliest opportunity.

It should be quite clear that the Speaker does not decide, in substance, whether or not a matter shall be debated in the House. Provided a proposition meets the procedural requirements established by the House, the House disposes of the matter as it sees fit, and on this point may I offer for the consideration of hon. members another passage from May's Nineteenth Edition at page 349.

Many motions, more or less affecting privilege, have been brought on in their turn, with other notices of motions; and on occasions matters to which the Speaker has refused precedence as a matter of privilege, have been raised on a motion moved at a later date.

Therefore, I am satisfied that the Chair ought not to interfere in the substantive issue which has been raised by the hon. member for St. John's West but only in the procedural elements: was it raised at the earliest opportunity, and does it appear, on the face of it, to involve privilege? If the answer to both questions is yes, the motion will be given priority and the House will decide. If the answer to either question is no, the motion can, of course, still be offered to the House at some other time, but it will not enjoy the priority with which a prima facie finding of privilege would endow it.

Setting aside, then, the substance of the issue which does not fall within my purview, I can easily dispose of the first of the procedural elements. The matter was raised at the earliest opportunity.

I have somewhat greater difficulty with the second, for I have before me two contradictory assertions made by hon. members. The hon. member for St. John's West in his motion asserts that the minister misled the House deliberately. The minister says he did not. Hon. members know that the House must accept the word of an hon. member, as stated in Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 322, and I quote:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that a statement by a member respecting himself and particularly within his own knowledge must be accepted, but it is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by a member as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

I cannot attach greater credibility to the word of one hon. member over another. The Speaker cannot interpret statements made by hon. members which must be accepted at face value. The hon. member for St. John's West claims he had been misled. I accept that. He claims he has been deliberately misled. I accept that too, but as an assertion, not as a fact upon which I could find privilege; because the minister, who has the same right to have his word accepted in this House, says there is no attempt to mislead, deliberately or otherwise, and I accept that, too.

Herein lies the dilemma. The Chair cannot give precedence to a motion offered under the head of privilege unless it can be determined, prima facie, that a contempt has been committed. Such a determination cannot be made in this case without an inquiry. Therefore, it seems to me that it is less than satisfactory to approach this case through the procedures of privilege, that some other route ought to be examined. I refer hon. members to the passage from page 349 of May's Nineteenth Edition cited earlier, and also to those comments of Speaker Jerome when he struck down the notice of privilege of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham in February, 1978. Again, the parallels between the two cases are clear. I quote from page 3295 of Hansard for February 28, 1978—and here I am quoting my predecessor:

> I would think, therefore, that the action would be to strike out the hon. member's notice of privilege because it contained the word "deliberately", on the basis of clear precedents. It is entirely without prejudice to the hon. member to raise the matter again in a substantive motion after he has had the opportunity to consult these precedents. Whether or not that course is open, in the light of the interventions that have already taken place by the Minister of Finance in the proceedings to this date, in which the Minister of Finance indicated that he did not mislead the House on those occasions, would have to depend on other precedents in which, when matters of this sort or similar to this have been raised a minister or a member has risen in his place in the House and said that the House was not misled, or if it was misled, it was certainly not done intentionally. Under the practices of this House his word has always been accepted, and the matter has always been finalized. Since the minister has already said that, whether the matter ought to go further is something only further reflection can determine.

Finally in this connection, let me refer to the Rykert case of March 11, 1890. Four allegations were made against Mr. Rykert, the second being to have made a false statement to the House calculated to mislead. The House dealt with that matter, not as privilege, but under a substantive motion on notice. I refer to Hansard for March 11, 1890, as reported at page 1714. The motion was debated and amended, the matter was sent to a committee which reported, and the report was concurred in.

In conclusion, then, let me summarize. The Speaker cannot determine whether a contempt has been committed. That determination is for the House alone. Assertions have been made to that effect, but they remain assertions, and as such do not provide grounds for the Chair to find a prima facie breach of privilege. They can be proved or disproved only after an inquiry which the Chair cannot make. On the other hand, our precedents provide another route to follow if the House wishes to pursue this matter, not through the claim of privilege in which the Chair can do nothing but uphold the well-established rules and precedents, but by way of substantive motion on notice. Since such a motion would by its very nature call into question the conduct of a member of this House, the House itself may choose to give priority of debate which the Chair cannot give under the rules of privilege, since, as I have said, I am not satisfied that a prima facie case has been established.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate what the order of business will be for the coming days. The representatives of each party have agreed to dispose of the three stages of Bill C-114, relating to unemployment insurance, tomorrow, Friday. If time remains after we have disposed of the three stages of Bill C-114, we will start debate on second reading of Bill C-115, concerning occupational training.

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, on Monday we shall proceed with second reading of Bill C-109 which provides for assistance in respect of dwellings with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Tuesday will be an opposition day, and on Wednesday, we shall proceed with consideration of energy Bills C-102 and C-107 which are reported by the Special Committee on Energy, in that order. On Thursday, we shall be considering further energy bills, in the following order: Bill C-103, provided the bill has been reported from committee, and Bill C-104. If Bill C-103 has not been reported from Committee in time for consideration on Thursday, the House will not be considering energy bills on Thursday but Bill C-109 on urea formaldehyde instead, and if there is still time after completion of the debate on the latter, we shall resume debate on Bill C-115 on occupational training.

MR. OBERLE—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 1,331 residents of Prince George, British Columbia. The petition advances a protest that, by virtue of the work-sharing program recently implemented by the federal government, unemployment insurance claimants who are unable to participate in this program and who are yet allowed to earn only 25 per cent of their weekly benefits without penalty, are unfairly discriminated against. These workers are not only receiving substantially less income than the program beneficiaries, but are penalized if they secure part-time employment of any substantial nature outside the program.

● (1520)

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition, Madam Speaker, you will find it in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker of the House of Commons to allow discussion and referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time, in order that inequities arising from an otherwise constructive use of public funds be redressed.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA—EDUCATION LEAVE COSTS

Question No. 2,834—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the education leave costs recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the National Museums of Canada at page 13.6, volume I of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, what guidelines were used to determine (a) which employees should obtain educational leave and whether such employees should be granted (i) leave with pay (ii) travel expenses (iii) payment for tuition (b) whether the skills to be acquired were needed on a permanent basis?

2. What percentage of the education leave cost of $64,811 was necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment and by the need to have new skills in order to use the equipment?

3. What percentage of the education leave was necessitated by reason of job redundancy because of the (a) acquisition of equipment (b) change in the role of the employing agency (c) change in the capabilities of employees?

4. What percentage of employees granted such leave in the past three years have subsequently left the public service?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows:

1. (a) and (b) Please refer to Treasury Board Policy, Personnel Management Manual, chapter 110-5, "Conditions governing education, training and development, including subsidization".

2. While statistical data in National Museums of Canada does not enable us to determine whether education leave costs were necessitated by the acquisition of new equipment requiring new skills from employees, it should be noted in this regard that no high technology equipment requiring special training was acquired by the corporation during the period in question.

3. Nil.

4. Statistical data compiled for the annual training and education review for any given year does not include a review of what educational leave a departing employee may have enjoyed while with the corporation.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 3,616—Mr. Herbert:

Under the Canada Assistance Plan, by province, what is the annual per capita government contribution to day care centres?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The following schedule represents, on a per capita basis, the federal contribution under the Canada Assistance Plan, towards the cost of provincial and territorial day care services. The federal contribution to provinces and territories does not represent 50 per cent of all costs incurred by the provinces and territories for day care services, as certain day care programs, clientele and costs are ineligible for cost sharing purposes as determined by the Canada Assistance Plan Act, regulations and guidelines.

DAY CARE CENTRES

Question No. 3,617—Mr. Herbert:

What is the estimated number of pre-school children presently in day care centres and, of these, how many are in centres that are cost shared by the government under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The National Day Care Study in 1980 indicated that 92,423 pre-school children (12.16 per cent of children under six years whose mothers worked outside the home) were in approved day care spaces*, including family day care spaces. It is not possible to give a precise number of children in centres being cost shared under the Canada Assistance Plan but it is estimated that at least 60 per cent of the above-mentioned number of children (that is, 55,454 children) were in such centres.

*Approved day care spaces refer to spaces in provincially approved or licensed centres as opposed to private or casual day care arrangements.

Question No. 4,240—Mr. Herbert:

Are eight provincial health ministries participating with the government in the funding of the development of management information systems for health institutions and, if so, which two provinces are not participating and were reasons provided for non-participation?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, eight provincial health ministries and two territorial ministries are participating with the government in the funding of the development of management information systems for health institutions. British Columbia and Quebec are not participating. Yes, reasons were provided for non-participation.

*CANADA HOME RENOVATION PLAN (CHRP)

Question No. 4,291—Mr. McGrath:

1. Do either the local or national Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation offices have any information about the application of the program announced by the Minister of Public Works to reimburse repairs on existing homes and, if not, can the Minister say on what date detailed information and application forms will be available, in view of the fact that the building season is now getting under way?

2. Can the Minister indicate in what specific areas of the country the plan will be applicable, so that Canadians who wish to renovate can begin to make plans?

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, further to the question put by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) which was essentially as follows: Do either the local or national Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation offices have any information about the application of the program announced by the Minister of Public Works to reimburse repairs on existing homes. The reply is as follows:

The National Office of CMHC has complete information about the Canada Home Renovation Plan. Distribution of detailed information and application forms to local offices began on April 21. All offices are now in a position to provide information and application packages.

The Plan is available in all areas of the country, but funds will be targeted to areas experiencing high unemployment. The Atlantic and Quebec Regions will therefore receive a large part of the total allocation.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on February 19, I placed question No. 4,041 on the Order Paper. In that question I asked:

1. What action (a) was taken (b) is currently planned by the government on each recommendation of the (i) Second Report of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament from the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments (ii) Fourth Report of the First Session of the 32nd Parliament from the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments (iii) Report of the Task Force on Regulatory Reform (iv) Reports of the Regulation Reference of the Economic Council of Canada?

I am informed that the answer to that question was made available by Treasury Board to the Privy Council office some weeks ago. There seems to be a delay in the Privy Council office in answering that question. Several months have lapsed since February 19. Can the parliamentary secretary tell the House, first, the cause for the delay in the Privy Council office and, second, when the answer to that question will be made available to the House?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question offhand, but I will be happy to make inquiries and see if I can expedite the tabling of the answer.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of State for Finance) moved that Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to begin the third reading debate on Bill C-112 on behalf of the official opposition. This bill is part of a large number of energy bills arising from the National Energy Program. They caused some difficulty when they were originally incorporated in a large package. They have now been broken down into bite size so that we can more easily digest, scrutinize and provide constructive criticism.

We are now dealing with Bill C-112, the major taxation device of the National Energy Program. It contains several aspects which are responsible for drawing large amounts of money into the government treasury from consumers all across the country.

An interesting feature of the taxation changes occurring as a result of this bill is that we are faced with this bill and the whole National Energy Program at a time when the rules provided by successive Liberal governments were felt to be inadequate to deal with the situation that developed in energy and also with regard to deficits and the financing of government operations.

These rules, all of the taxation regimes and all of those things which control energy companies in Canada, had originally been provided by Liberal governments. This was for all companies which had their head office in the United States or some other country or those which had a branch corporation in Canada or an enterprise active in Canada. These rules were put in place because the government obviously felt they would be adequate to deal with the amount of control and taxation that was required for energy.

All of a sudden we have had a major change in the rules as a result of the National Energy Program. What the companies find frustrating is that the rules were changed in the middle of the game. They were changed arbitrarily by government to suit the purposes of government that had been controlling all of their activities up to that time for their own purposes.

Whether you call it unfair or not, it is at least a grand confusion and a grand difficulty. A great deal of insecurity has arisen because the rules were changed in the middle of the game. As a result of Bill C-112, there are some specific changes.

I would like specifically to mention two changes that should be questioned on the grounds of constitutionality. The first is raised by Clause 3(1). Referring to the natural reservoir in Canada, the bill provides:

> "offshore area" means Sable Island or any area of land that belongs to Her Majesty in right of Canada or in respect of which Her Majesty in right of Canada has the right to dispose of or exploit the natural resources and that is situated in the submarine areas adjacent to the coast of Canada and extending throughout the natural prolongation of the land territory of Canada to the outer edge of the continental margin or to a distance of two hundred nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of Canada is measured, whichever is greater;"

This same type of clause is included in other bills, specifically Bills C-106 and C-103. The important point on the question of the appropriateness of that clause is whether or not, at a time when the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has been given this question of control to decide upon on behalf of the province, and also when the federal government has put the same question before the Supreme Court of Canada, we have a right to incorporate a clause like this in this or any of the other energy bills we have before us now. That is a major question. It is certainly a major concern of the government of Newfoundland. I would think it is a major concern of the Government of Canada, which has given the Supreme Court of Canada the job of making a decision on who does control those offshore resources.

Until that decision is made, what we have here now, in this and other bills, is almost a prejudgment on what that decision will be. A bill that is really predicated on the basis that the Government of Canada will control all those resources in their own way cannot but be offensive to the people of Newfoundland. It cannot but be a difficulty if the Supreme Court of Canada looks at it and says, "What are we doing here? We have statutes of the federal government already in place which already assume the decision that we are going to make." I think that is the first question to ask in terms of constitutionality.

The second question is a little more technical. Equally as important probably for the purpose of the bill is Clause 10. Under Clause 10, new Section 47.1(1) says:

> Where any marketable pipeline gas has been exported after September 30, 1981 and before January 1, 1987, from Canada for use outside Canada pursuant to a licence issued under Part VI of the National Energy Board Act or pursuant to any other authority under that Act and the tax imposed by Part IV.1 has been paid in respect of the gas, the Minister may—

And here is the important portion:

> —on application by the exporter in such form and manner as the Minister prescribes, made to the Minister within four years from the time the gas was exported, pay to the exporter an amount equal to that tax.

The important point here is that the money that has been garnered through the tax revenue going through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will in fact enter the consolidated revenue fund. By entering that general revenue fund, the minister is then losing control over it. In order for the minister to pay back or return those quantities which are described in this section as amounts of money, he really has to have a royal proclamation in order to give him that authority. That is not included in this bill.

As I understand it, that is a legal requirement before the minister has that right or that authority to do it. That should be questioned on the grounds of constitutionality. That is something that one of the government speakers might answer on behalf of the government when they respond during this debate.

When we come down to the real nuts and bolts of the bill, Mr. Speaker, and what really happens in terms of this taxation device, we have three parts. We have two parts that can be discussed separately, the natural gas and gas liquids tax. For the sake of identifying how important this is or what it really means, I have an estimate of what the revenue from this tax to the Government of Canada will be. This means that by taxation imposed on natural gas and on gas liquids, the Government of Canada—these are estimates, now—stands to gain in 1981-82 slightly over $1 billion; in 1982-83, approximately $1.5 billion; in 1983-84, approximately $2 billion; and then by 1984-85, $2.5 billion in that year. That is the amount of money that will come from this specific tax.

In fact, through specific measures in the bill, the minister is given the discretionary ability to provide the maximum allowable tax of approximately $4 billion permitted to him, which will allow the government to receive a maximum of $8 billion in one year from the revenue from this taxation. That is a massive amount of money. That is an imposition on the pricing machine that may have a lot to do with how competitive we are, how much gas we are able to export, how much of the market we will have or be able to develop for our natural gas.

The provision for the government by order in council to levy this tax—and many speakers have made mention of this—was one of the critical aspects of the opposition's position at the time the government brought in the omnibus bill. The order in council is a unique and unusual way of levying tax. The power that they will have to do this will not give us the opportunity in the future, until we pass this $8 billion per year mark, of scrutinizing or questioning the government on the appropriate level of taxation or indeed on what use the government is making of those tax dollars.

The other thing that happens because of specific clauses and articles in the bill is that there really is no guidance that the governor in council has as to when and under what circumstances he might levy this tax. So the discretionary power again is something of major concern. Parliament really has no control. The tax statute does not provide control as to when those taxes will be levied—not only the amounts, but when and under what circumstances.

There is a final point that can be made under this specific section, and this might worry all Canadians, Mr. Speaker. It is that the maximum amount of tax that can be levied would actually relate to other provisions in other areas, to a price of oil at $100 per barrel. I do not know whether that means that the government is expecting that by 1990, or whenever, we will be facing a $100 a barrel price for oil. It is pretty clear in the last year that we cannot fully anticipate what prices will be charged for oil, what the international circumstances might do, what the cartel might do, which would affect oil prices and subsequently affect the price of natural gas in Canada and, subsequent to that, affect the taxation levels that might be imposed by a government.

The second part of the major taxation section of this bill relates to the PGRT, the petroleum gas revenue tax, and to what is called the IORT, which is the incremental oil revenue tax. For a perspective on these, Mr. Speaker, we can look at the amount of revenue that the government can expect to achieve from these two taxes.

There have been some changes—I think that should be noted—in the oil agreements made between the government of Alberta and the federal government last September. Changes have been made which were not exactly the same as provisions in the National Energy Program. From the changes and from where at best we can estimate these changes will take us, the kind of revenues we are looking at are: for 1981-82, in November 1981, $1,180 million; for 1982-83 in November, $3,760 million; for 1983-84 in November again, approximately $5 billion—and that is in one year, Mr. Speaker, $5 billion to the federal treasury; and for 1984-85, $6,115 million. That is revenue from that single tax on petroleum products.

Whether that is an appropriate level of tax is only one part of the discussion. I think one of the things we should also look at while we are looking at that massive increase in taxation and that massive flow of funds to the federal government—and I think this is important for people to understand—is what is happening, in the same time-frame, to the petroleum industry.

Returns to petroleum companies are called netbacks, and during that same period of time netbacks to petroleum companies in Canada will be a critical factor. Under the regime we have now, the netback in December of 1983 will not change in the same way as the tax. The federal government will receive increased revenues, but producers will receive very minimal increases in their returns. These are the people who actually are responsible for getting the product out. They are responsible for exploring, finding, producing and delivering petroleum products. Under the agreement, by 1983 the old oil field price will have increased by almost 50 per cent as a result of the IORT. The producer netback will increase by only about 10 per cent. The question is whether that is adequate. Events over the past year or two have clearly indicated that the returns are not adequate to achieve the level of exploration and development we need in this country. We have seen that demonstrated in many different ways.

What will be the effects of these taxes? We will see massive increases in taxation on petroleum products. What has happened in the short term? We have heard various things from various people in the industry. The comments of large producers have varied from those of small producers. I would like to quote Mr. Bill Elser, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, in relation to the way he sees the situation, as follows:

—the industry needs further stimulations, beyond the Alberta action—

That is a reference to concessions which have been made recently by the Alberta government.

—to alleviate unemployment as a result of lagging investment in the oil and gas industry. Obviously this is a responsibility of the other producing provinces, but primarily the Federal Government—

Issues of particular concern to the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada include:

—the early opening up of long term competitively priced natural gas export markets, and,

—an improved financial position for Canadian independents that will encourage investment in this sector of the industry.

I suppose the most vivid and apparent examples of what has happened in the industry relate to large companies. There have been successive events involving large oil companies which have made it obvious to Canadians not only in western Canada but also in Ontario and eastern Canada that it is not possible under the taxation regime of the federal government for megaprojects like Alsands, Cold Lake and the proposed natural gas pipeline to go ahead and become part of our Canadian national energy scene. Those events are probably the most dramatic examples of what has happened because of the National Energy Program, pricing policy, retroactivity and changing the rules midstream. An hon. member shakes his head. Before he shakes his head he should look at the evidence and find out what the bottom line is. Can he tell me that Alsands would not have gone ahead if the Liberal government had not delayed coming to a pricing agreement for nearly two years?

Mr. Fisher: Read yesterday's Globe and Mail. It is the government of Alberta.

Mr. Gurbin: The government of Alberta might be taking somewhat of a defensive position because, unfortunately, it is seen by some of its constituents as being in bed with the Liberal government, and it is felt that that has caused a great deal of difficulty across the country. Like the NDP, the government of Alberta knows what a great problem that might create at the political level.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the hon. member would not want to mislead the House intentionally, but the fact is that his party has voted with the Liberals twice as many times as the NDP. Every time he makes this statement, we are going to rise on points of order and point that out.

Mr. Siddon: Why are you so sensitive?

Mr. Waddell: Who is in bed with whom? Get the record straight.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I am not really sure what the hon. member has said.

Mr. Blackburn: Check the voting record.

Mr. Gurbin: Obviously something has happened to upset him. It is not unusual that we cannot understand what members of the New Democratic Party say because they change their minds so often. They have done so in relation to the Constitution and in relation to energy prices. Just the other day I heard the hon. member say he finally understood what was happening in relation to the cash flow problems of small independents. It is about time members of the New Democratic Party understood some of the things happening in the oil industry. It is a little late, however, for the oil rigs which have left the country. It is a little late to make up for lost production. We could have had that production, and that would have helped to make us secure and self-sufficient in energy. Because of the single-mindedness of the NDP and the Liberals, they want centralized control. They want to take away from the industry the cash flows it needs to be competitive and to undertake the development necessary to achieve the production levels we need.

Even if I am not absolutely correct, I must be somewhat correct because I am upsetting members of the New Democratic Party. When they are upset, that usually means we are on the right track.

Mr. Kristiansen: Just go back behind the bushes.

Mr. Siddon: Saskatchewan haunts them a little bit.

Mr. Blackburn: Check the voting record.

Mr. Gurbin: There is obviously a difference of opinion about energy self-sufficiency and how we will achieve the goal which has been stated by all parties. The previous national government made a major effort to bring about energy self-sufficiency. Canada has the ability to produce synthetic petroleum products, and if we did that, we would be self-sufficient. That would take us out of the international scene, where we are vulnerable to developments over which we have no control. We should be developing our own resources and generating the employment, the income and all the industrial activity we need not only in the west but also in Ontario and other parts of the country. Progress toward that goal of energy self-sufficiency has been stopped.

When hon. members opposite talk about the goal of energy self-sufficiency, they point with pride to their conservation efforts. I was struck by one specific point the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) made in committee several weeks ago. He was talking about how well recognized the Canadian conservation program is at the International Energy Agency. Two years ago I was at the International Energy Agency in France, and it was agreed that Canada seemed to be coming along with its conservation program. I was also told that was appropriate because we had previously had the worst conservation record. That was in 1979 and 1980. We had been wasting energy for so long that our record was among the worst of all the nations which are part of the International Energy Agency. Indeed, we need a comprehensive and effective conservation program, and now we are getting some parts of such a program.

On the other side of the coin we have CHIP. CHIP was improved recently, and that was applauded by members of all parties, including members of the NDP, who are often on the wrong track. In this case they might have the right idea. However, I honestly question whether including CHIP is fair. The government brought in the National Energy Program in November, 1980 but surely they cannot expect the official opposition to believe that the CHIP program is the National Energy Program or a major part of it. CHIP has been an important part of conservation in Canada since at least 1975. It is a good program which we have supported and will continue to support, but surely the government would not expect Canadians to believe that the National Energy Program was responsible for CHIP. It was in effect a long time before the National Energy Program.

I have heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) speak with pride in this House about the nuclear program in Canada. The major part of our nuclear program falls to Ontario Hydro and it has been in effect since at least 1965. Even before that, the groundwork was laid for a 250 megawatt plant by John Diefenbaker and John Robarts. In face of the failures of Alsands, of Cold Lake, the Alaska pipeline and now perhaps the pipeline from Quebec to Halifax, would the government have the Canadian people believe that nuclear energy is part of their National Energy Program? That is a contention of dubious honesty, Mr. Speaker.

Self-sufficiency is our common goal, Mr. Speaker. It will not be achieved, however, if oil rigs and investment continue to leave the country. The industry lacks the confidence to do the things that need to be done. It looks as if by 1990 we will be exactly where we are stuck now, having to import between 20 and 30 per cent of our petroleum requirements. It is unfortunate that we will continue to be in that vulnerable position until beyond 1990. Things could change if steps were taken to improve the investment climate in this country instead of the kind of actions that are identified with all the different parts of the National Energy Program.

When I think of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency I think of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) telling the House today about the things that she is going to do. She knows that she hold a club over the provinces; she knows that she is going to require more and is going to give less. She is using the club to try to gain a kind of centralized control and influence that would be a detriment to all concerned.

Through its control of energy development and its control of our magnificent resources, the government has got us into the mess we are in today. Responsibility for that cannot be laid on the oil companies or on the United States. The government must take responsibility because it is supposed to have been in charge, but it would have us believe that the fault lies elsewhere.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that the oil companies are not concerned about the monitoring aspects of the National Energy Program. How many companies would invest in research and development in a highly technical area knowing that all their work could be monitored by the minister who has access to all financial and production figures and is also in charge of Petro-Canada number one, number two or number three or, as we learned in committee this morning, possibly Petro-Dome or some other company? It is clear from the energy legislation that the Government of Canada—the minister—acting without a Crown corporation, can buy shares in Canadian or foreign companies. That would increase public ownership in the energy field. It will be interesting to see what happens with Dome and some of the other Canadian energy producing companies.

The minister has discretionary powers and has access to the details of every operation in Canada. This information, which is important for the vitality and development of individual companies, can be passed along. Does the government really expect that capital will continue to come into the country under those conditions, when Petro-Canada will know what other companies are doing? I do not think the industry will have confidence in the country when this kind of influence is present.

A great deal has been said about the effect of taxes and foreign investment in the energy industry and that this accounts for some of the difficulties we are experiencing. When the National Energy Program was introduced there was a massive outflow of capital from the country because investors lost confidence in the government. When investors saw the retroactive, confiscatory and control aspects of the program they took their money out of Canada and indeed, they continue to do so because they have no confidence in the country.

That draw on our capital has been one of the single most important factors in the high interest rate policy that is in effect today. In order to attract foreign capital, a high interest rate is necessary. An hon. member opposite shakes his head in a negative manner. I can only say that if he knew what the answer is, perhaps we would not be in the mess that we are in today. It is pretty clear that his caucus does not have the answer either because the government's policies just are not working. If the hon. member does not know that the business community cannot accept the present interest rates and that the major part of the problem is that there is no confidence in the country and that capital is leaving, then I fear for our future; because the hon. member should have access to some information and should be able to influence policies.

Because of the National Energy Program we have high interest rates, a loss of employment and high inflation. What are we going to do with the $5 billion or $6 billion in taxes that we will receive in one year? What will we do with those tax dollars? That is the question Canadians should ask themselves. They might be paying 60 cents or 70 cents in federal taxes on a gallon of gasoline, or 40 cents on diesel fuel. What is happening to that money now? That is the other side of the coin.

The government is spending $250 million a year on advocacy advertising to sell programs which are unacceptable unless they can be put out in a public relations way to try and make them look good. Canadians know what the problems are, they feel them individually. The government may not, it may be too insulated and unable to understand, which is unfortunate. The government is not going to spend any more money on health care; it has already told us that. The minister has already said there will not be an increase through the established programs funding to the provinces. She wants more control but is certainly not prepared to transfer more money to the provinces. The money is not going there; it is not going into tax credits in order to relieve the burden on low and fixed-income people or to those 1,250,000 people who cannot get a job. The money is not being used to develop our energy resources. So what are they doing with it?

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that members opposite will point proudly to this 7 per cent reduction in petroleum requirements. I will give the government credit; the oil conversion program is a good one which should be expanded and made to work better.

Mr. Speaker, one out of five is not a very good record but I guess the government has to find some comfort somewhere. The government fought an election on the basis that price should not be used as a technique to conserve energy. The government says the real results have been through the conservation program, CHIP and other programs, which have resulted in the 7 per cent reduction in energy use. I think that should be challenged by any thinking Canadian. It is the economic downturn and the increase in the price of energy which have created this reduced requirement for petroleum. It is good that demand is down because we certainly are not doing very much to achieve self-sufficiency. However, in looking at these various programs I think we owe it to Canadians to look also at the taxation system and what it has done to them in relation to inflation and higher costs. They should ask themselves whether the system is well managed, whether the taxes are achieving the goals we want for Canada, and whether this government is on the right track. I suggest not.

Taxation

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak for the NDP on third reading of this bill. However, I ask myself, how many times over the past 18 months have we debated energy, indeed this bill, in one way or the other? I debated this bill on May 13 and February 18, 1982, and in a number of speeches before that. That indicates to me that in some way we could reform this institution so we could have shorter speeches and better debates. Look at this place this afternoon. We have a few tourists in the gallery and a few members in the House. If we wanted to debate energy we could concentrate it in a smaller area, with quicker resolution, and generate some interest in it. I bet many people do not understand this bill because it is complicated. However, once you go through it you find it affects every one of us because it places taxes on all of us.

I wonder if anyone listens to these speeches. I am not going to give a long speech today because I do not think many people will listen, certainly not the government. You can talk until you are blue in the face and they change very little of their legislation, although they did change one aspect of this bill which I will come back to. But I wonder if the people listen, Mr. Speaker.

Before you rule me out of order, I might wonder that aloud. I know our speeches go right across the country by cable television, and I suppose out beyond those TV cameras people are watching. So I ask those people out there, if they are watching, to contact me. Send a letter to Ian Waddell, House of Commons, Ottawa. They do not even need a stamp. I would like to get their views on what they think of this particular energy bill and the National Energy Program.

I know this is rather irregular, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Siddon: It sure is. It is called grandstanding.

Mr. Waddell: —but I would like to see whether we get any particular reaction. Likely not, but we will see.

Let me just go through my speech, and with respect to the hon. member from Newfoundland over there, I will mail him a copy. There are four aspects to this bill. First of all, it changes the price of gas consumed domestically so it affects everyone who uses gas. Secondly, the bill brings in what is called PGRT and IORT, the petroleum and gas revenue tax and the incremental oil royalty tax. That is a mouthful, but they are really taxes on the industry resulting from the deal between Ottawa and the producing provinces. Thirdly, the bill touches on the National Energy Program; I want to discuss that from the point of view of the consumer and producer, and where we are going with the NEP. Finally, I want to talk about some positive options, about where I think we can go.

This country is in a real mess, Mr. Speaker. It is in real trouble. It is up to the parties and members of this House to get down to business and stop some of this nonsense which has been going on in Ottawa in the past couple of months—the what I call almost fascist tactics on the part of the official opposition, the Conservatives, and the incredibly negligent inertia on the part of the government. I want to offer what I think are some positive options and I invite the other parties to offer their suggestions.

Mr. Kelly: How long did you stall C-48?

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member asks how long we stalled Bill C-48. We fought for Bill C-48, which dealt with energy in the Canada lands, in the north and offshore, so that we could obtain job spin-offs for Canadian workers. Goodness knows they need those jobs today. The hon. member will get his chance to discuss the bill with which I want to deal now.

The first item I want to discuss is the change in gas taxes. In fact it means that there is an excise tax on gas consumed inside the country. The government threatened to put a tax on gas going outside the country as well, but it backed off largely as a result of the position of the combined opposition in the House and the position taken by western provinces. It was a wise move to make, but it put a tax on gas consumed internally.

I raised this matter yesterday in the House when we were in Committee of the Whole on this bill. I asked the minister what it would cost individual Canadians and how it would affect those who cannot afford to pay, such as senior citizens, people on fixed incomes and poor people. These taxes are hurting those people. I am receiving letters from my riding and I am meeting with people in the east end of Vancouver. For example, people have come into my office and said that their hydro bills are going up much more than the cost of living or the pension they are receiving from government. They have asked what can be done about it. I put that question to the minister and he said that the government gives senior citizens a cost of living increase on their pensions which makes up for it.

I did some research last night and found that it does not make up for it. In my home province of British Columbia there have been the following increases in the price of natural gas. In November, 1980, the rates went up 13.6 per cent because of the federal excise tax on natural gas which we are debating. In May, 1981, it went up 6.1 per cent due to the Canadian ownership tax. In July, 1981, there was a 5.7 per cent increase due to an increase in the excise tax. In August, 1981 the wholesale price rose 25.5 per cent and operating costs rose 5.1 per cent. In February, 1982, the excise tax increased 6.1 per cent and the wholesale gas price rose 1.8 per cent. In April, 1982 British Coumbia operating costs rose 4.5 per cent and the price increased by 11 per cent. My source is British Columbia Hydro.

It is clear that there has been a substantial increase in the price of natural gas to consumers in British Columbia. Also it is clear that 31.5 per cent of the increases in British Columbia since 1980 is attributable to the tax which we are debating today—25.4 per cent was due to the excise tax and 6.1 per cent was due to the Canadian ownership rate. The minister is wrong when he tells me that the price of natural gas was increasing at the same rate as the cost of living. In fact, energy prices are going up dramatically more than other prices generally. This is hurting people.

Why is it a regressive tax? It is a regressive tax because it applies to everyone. It applies to the older woman in my riding who came to see me two weekends ago. She was receiving a pension of $400 per month, and she had to pay these increases. There is an ongoing bank inquiry in this building because bankers said that they were not making enough money. Senior executives of banks are only earning $200,000 per year! They are faced with the same energy price increases. Whether one earns $200,000 per year or $400 per month, one is faced with the same increases. That is why it is a regressive tax and that is why we in the NDP oppose it.

When the Conservatives were in office they suggested an energy tax credit. We have suggested a cost of living tax credit which is somewhat broader than the energy tax credit. Our suggestion would mean that when we take the money out of the pockets of people by the payment of hydro and gas rates, it would go to the government and then back into their pockets as a credit or a grant. This is what we should have, but we do not have anything like that from the government. That is why we say this tax is regressive. It is costing people more and more to heat their homes, and the government does nothing about it.

I should like to refer to some examples of what it costs to heat homes in Ontario. In the winter of 1980-81, the cost was $727. In the winter of 1981-82, it went up to $848. In Alberta it was $425 in the winter of 1980-81 and then it went up to $544 for the following winter. In British Columbia it was $447 and then it went up to $708. The point is that my constituents are correct when they tell me that their energy prices are rising more than the cost of living. The government is wrong when it disputes that fact. It is really negligent when it does nothing about it. All it does is bring in a tax. It does not recycle any of the money. The point I am making is a simple one, but it is important and it affects consumers all across Canada. They are the ones who are being hosed by the National Energy Program.

The second matter I want to discuss is the PGRT and the IORT. The hon. member who previously spoke, the hon. member for Moose Grey—

Mr. Gurbin: That is the name of a beer!

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member must remember that I am from British Columbia and I sometimes confuse the names of beers; I am sorry. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) made the point well that these taxes were hurting the netbacks to small energy companies. He also said that I was rather late in changing my view. Well, I have changed my view on it. I think that it is affecting some of those companies. I do not have any brief for big oil companies in Canada, but I do have some sympathy for small Canadian-owned companies. We must remember that they were the companies that were supposed to be helped by the National Energy Program. The president of Imperial Oil, which is not exactly a small company—in fact, it is the largest oil company in Canada, controlled by Exxon—appeared before the energy committee. He said that he did not like the National Energy Program but that his company was getting by because it made profits in the downstream—refining and marketing. It also makes money in exploration and production, which is the upstream. The PGRT really affects the upstream. Small Canadian companies do not have the downstream, such as the small Canadian-owned gas station on the corner. Such companies have to rely on the upstream, on production. They are hurting because this tax grabs everything at the upstream. The government has created a paperwork nightmare, which I have been told by the companies that have to fill out forms in order to pay this tax, and also it has created a tax which is hurting small Canadian companies.

I am a social democrat, a socialist, and I am proud of it. I reject the notion that a socialist or social democrat should accept unworkable bureaucracy, should be blind or should not consider the fact that perhaps there are some small Canadian private companies which deserve a chance. I am prepared to consider them sympathetically and to give them a chance. In fact, I am going to Calgary tomorrow to consult further with these companies to see whether there are alternatives to the tax.

Now I should like to talk about some alternatives. It seems to me that there are positive options or alternatives for Canada. I have expressed my concern about this before and now I want to suggest a few alternatives. First let me talk about price because this is what consumers are concerned about. We should not slavishly follow the OPEC price which continually goes up and up. If we are to put up prices, then we should redistribute some of the income in the form of cost of living tax credits to people with low incomes and those on fixed incomes.

Before leaving this subject, I want to indicate just how serious it is. The government will give an increase in the pensions to senior citizens to cover the increase in the cost of living. As I pointed out, they need it. Look at the increase in energy prices. My province of British Columbia, which gives them a supplement, then takes the increase away from their supplement. People see the government giving it to them on the one hand and then British Columbia taking it back on the other hand.

We in the House may say that that is the way of the governments in Ottawa and British Columbia, but all the average citizen knows is that he needs the money and it comes from the government. The people find it wrong, as I do, that the government would give on the one hand and then take back on the other hand. This is happening in the tax area, the pension area and the energy area.

After we have redistributed some of the money to the people that need it, the next positive option is that instead of playing around with PIP grants—$6.5 billion to the oil industry to achieve a Canadianization program based on an unworkable bureaucratic scheme—we would make Petro-Canada the leading oil company in Canada. To make it number one we would take over one of the major American multinationals and let the Canadian oil companies do their thing. In the next couple of years we would have 50 per cent Canadian ownership and some government direction in the economy.

The hon. member who spoke previously talked about control of resources by Ottawa. I am a westerner and I realize that Ottawa and the western provinces have to work together, but due to the importance of the oil and gas sector there must be some direction in that industry.

There must be energy security for Canadians. In order to achieve that security there must be some direction, and it is our policy that this direction should come through Petro-Canada. I believe that Canadians support that policy.

The problem which exists in the House is that we are not radical enough for the people of Canada. We do not see any progressive initiatives taken. We listen to a few dinosaurs from a particular area who represent big oil companies and speak day after day in the House. But very few members stand up to speak on behalf of the Canadian consumer. I suspect that the consumer will opt and already is opting for an expanded Petro-Canada. The increasing sales of Petro-Canada service stations is evidence of that fact. I suggest that we drop some of these other tax programs.

As a westerner I would like to make another suggestion which I believe would be for the benefit of the western provinces. I believe the government is making an error in concentrating the efforts of the National Energy Program on exploration in the Beaufort Sea and the high Arctic. There is oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan that we have not touched. There is oil in the Lloydminster-Wainwright area and that is where we should be looking. Drilling rigs in Alberta could be working. I have a small button which is distributed by the energy services association in Alberta. That association is comprised of small entrepreneurs who help service rigs. Do you think they will get jobs in the Beaufort Sea? It will be the American multinationals that will go up there because they are the only companies that can afford to be involved in those kinds of plays.

We should be producing our oil in Canada. We can produce it cheaply and help the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan at the same time. I know that there is a feud, if you like, going on between the federal government and the Alberta government. The federal government is shifting all its explorations to the Canada lands in the north instead of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I believe that that is wrong and I will expand on that point later.

I would like to suggest another positive option, and that is to eliminate the PGRT and the IORT and just have a simple tax on the oil companies so they will not be burdened with filling out many forms for various governments. These companies should pay a royalty to the provinces and the provinces should share that royalty with the federal government. The difficulty which faces this option is that it requires co-operative federalism. That co-operation existed in this country and its principles were eloquently expressed by the Right Hon. Lester Pearson. I quoted him in a previous speech which I made on this bill in the House.

I say to Canadians that they must bring some pressure to bear on politicians in the country, provincially and federally, to act responsibly. What happens is that a provincial government begins to "Ottawa-bash" and it gets re-elected. Therefore, it will keep doing that because it realizes it is a good way to stay in power. Of course, the federal government responds to this "bashing".

The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that co-operative federalism is dead. I think that is a sad statement. I believe that Canadians do not want to see co-operative federalism die. They want a tough federal government and a good provincial government which will stick up for their rights. Canadians do not want to see an end to co-operation because it is part of the federalism that we have developed in Canada.

As I said earlier, I would ask that the people of Canada give us, as legislators, some responsibility. Although this may not be popular with my hon. friends, I must say that I have had a chance to sit in this chamber and listen to some of the shenanigans that have been happening. I have seen the bell-ringing incident and the recent question of privilege brought by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I feel that the official opposition will bring down the institution of Parliament. These acts have spread to Ontario where the Ontario Liberals have foolishly copied the bell-ringing episode. This is not how a government should operate in Canada. The country is in difficulty, people are unemployed and the oil and manufacturing industries are in trouble. We must see some positive measures introduced.

When I speak in Calgary tomorrow I know that some people will disagree with some of the policies I have enunciated, but at least we have made some suggestions. We are prepared to change some of them if they are not pragmatic enough and are shown not to work. However, the government is inactive and is not prepared to change its policies. Therefore, we end up with the National Energy Program.

One of the factors in our society is that conditions change so quickly. The National Energy Program is falling apart because it is based on the premise that oil prices will keep rising in the world market. However, there is a glut in the world market presently. This makes the agreement struck by Ottawa and Alberta unworkable and it will have to be reconsidered. There is nothing to prevent us from looking at the agreement again and there is nothing to prevent us from reviewing these taxes so that we can help small oil companies. Instead of the government remaining inactive while it is faced with a barrage of questions every day, there is nothing preventing it from saying that it will give the old and poor people a break, recycle some of that money to them and stimulate some areas of the economy. This can be done and people will respond to it. If I am wrong I will know when people write to me after I have made this speech.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had time to respond to some of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), but I wish to talk about the offshore issue today. This subject continues to dominate events in Newfoundland currently. It continues to be the main item of discussion, or non-discussion if you like, between the provincial and federal governments. This is rightly so because the people of Newfoundland and Labrador recognize the amazing potential for offshore development. It has the potential to improve dramatically our economic fortunes as a province, a potential to alter for the better our role as a fully participating partner in the Canadian confederation and to address the pressing needs for employment opportunities and improved social services as well as an adequate economic infrastructure.

Even more important than all of this is the potential to allow all of us as Newfoundlanders and Canadians to hold our heads high with complete dignity and unquestioned justification.

It is that aspect of the offshore potential which is little understood by those hon. members who do not happen to have the good fortune to be Newfoundlanders. It is the crucially important issue of dignity in this entire debate which goes to the very root of our commitment as Newfoundlanders, our unbridled determination to ensure we extract from that offshore resource every possible ounce of benefit. We will leave no stone unturned, no avenue unexplored and no possibility untapped to achieve that goal. The offshore issue is much bigger than moving oil from source to market and much bigger than moving it from Hibernia to the consumer. The real issue has more to do with hope, with opportunity, with the future and with dignity.

We as Newfoundlanders often talk about getting ready for a rainy day and having a little security down the road. We have seen a lot of rainy days, days when the head of the family had to leave home to work in the Arctic because he or she could not get a job at home; days when a son or daughter had to say goodbye and go off to Alberta where an employment opportunity was waiting, an employment opportunity which was not available back home in Newfoundland; days when the family business went under because the "now it's good, now it's not so good" Newfoundland economy was going through another of its not so good periods. As I have said, we have seen a lot of rainy days in Newfoundland.

Can we be blamed, then, if we are so determined to snatch a bit of sunshine? Can we be faulted if we see, in the offshore potential, an umbrella, a road to better things? That is the context in which we, as Newfoundlanders, talk about, dream about and fight about Hibernia. On that, we are all agreed. On the objective, the end goal, there is no division. That is not what divides us as Newfoundlanders. It is not the objective, not the end, but, rather, the means to that end which divides us. How we get there is the reason for the row, and it is a completely understandable row bearing in mind the stakes at issue.

Mr. Peckford, the Premier of Newfoundland, and I do not see eye to eye on every detail as to how we sort out this particular issue and how we reach our common objective, but it is a common objective. I am confident that our objective, mine and his, is one and the same. The fact that he disagrees on the means does not mean his commitment to the cause is any less than mine, or any more than mine for that matter. Our differences on the method, the way in which we get to that objective, should not suggest that he is any less a Newfoundlander than I, or vice versa for that matter.

All of us are determined to be masters in our own household. I use that parallel, that particular analogy, quite deliberately. We are determined to be masters in our own household. A household is not a hermit's cabin tucked away somewhere up in the wilds, in the woods, with its back turned on the world. I am referring to a household, a vibrant, living, successful unit of itself, thriving not because of its isolation from the real world, but rather because its members are plugged into the real world, benefiting from that contact and contributing to the well-being of the world because of that contact.

It will come as no surprise to Your Honour that the overwhelming majority of Newfoundlanders live in the real world. Most do. Sadly, a few do not. That scattered few includes a couple of people who have the ear of the Premier of Newfoundland. He himself lives in the real world, but a couple of people who have his ear do not live in the real world. That scattered few who do not live in the real world are unfortunately still fighting yesterday's battles. Why does someone not tell them that the decision to join Canada was made by Newfoundlanders more than 30 years ago?

Mr. Siddon: You tell them.

Mr. Simmons: The issue was put to bed at that time. The future of Newfoundland and the future of Canada are tied closely together. Why do the scattered few not recognize that fact of life?

Mr. Siddon: How many voted in the last election?

Mr. Simmons: If only they would recognize the realities of today's world, the Premier, Mr. Peckford, would be getting much better advice than he is presently getting from such people.

I want to deal briefly with some of the misconceptions heard these days, especially in Newfoundland and Labrador, but to a lesser degree also around the country. Some of the misconceptions concern the offshore issue as it relates to Newfoundland, and some particularly relate to the federal government's role in the offshore issue to date. One of the current misconceptions, especially because of the reference by the Government of Canada of the Hibernia area issue, is that it was the federal government which first put the issue before the courts. The question concerning offshore, as it relates to possible court references, goes back a long, long time. But for the sake of brevity this afternoon, let me just deal with the last five years or so.

When the present Premier of Newfoundland was minister of energy in the Newfoundland government, he and the then federal energy minister, Mr. Gillespie, agreed to a joint court reference. That is right, Mr. Speaker; they both agreed that the most expeditious and sensible way to deal with this particular issue involving the legality of ownership was to put a joint reference, a Canada-Newfoundland reference, before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Unfortunately, subsequent to the date of that agreement in late 1977, Mr. Peckford changed his mind. The Government of Canada, acting on the agreement reached at that particular meeting of the two ministers, forwarded the draft wording of a reference to Mr. Peckford. The government is still waiting for the response, five years later, because there was a change of heart in the interim. There was a change of mind. Well, that is everyone's right.

The next time the issue emerged as the subject for court adjudication was a year or so ago, not at the initiative of the Government of Canada and not at the initiative of the government of Newfoundland, but, rather, at the initiative of a third party, the Seafarers' International Union. The SIU had been in the process of attempting to gain certification to represent some offshore workers in the Newfoundland area. In May of 1980, a couple of years ago, the SIU applied to the Newfoundland Labour Relations Board for certification as bargaining agent for the unlicensed employees of the Crosbie fleet of vessels supplying the oil rigs. Access to the fleet was denied to the SIU by the Newfoundland board; its application was turned down in 1980. So later that year, in September, the union applied to the Canada Labour Relations Board for certification. The board rejected the SIU application on the grounds that it did not have constitutional jurisdiction. The SIU did not accept that particular decision and placed it before the Court of Appeal. That is how the issue concerning the offshore, although it was a fairly limited issue at its outset, was introduced into court. It was at the behest or initiative of the Seafarers' International Union. In April, 1981, that union filed its memorandum of fact and law with the Court of Appeal. In it the union alleged that the Canada board had jurisdiction in these certification proceedings because Canada had exclusive jurisdiction over resource development on the continental shelf.

I am surprised that the union memorandum contained that kind of assertion. My view, and I believe that of most Newfoundlanders and many Canadians, is that no one knows for sure who owns the offshore, whether it is Canada or Newfoundland. I have some very strong views. I believe Newfoundland has a very strong case with regard to ownership. I may have time to get back to that issue later, but I was surprised that anyone would put in writing the kind of thing that showed up in the SIU memorandum of fact and law as far as jurisdiction over resource development is concerned.

I will deal briefly with the conclusion of the SIU case which had the effect of putting offshore jurisdiction before the courts. The SIU case was set on the court calendar for the hearing of argument by the Court of Appeal in February, 1982. Before that could be done, one preliminary but very important issue had to be dealt with by the court. At the opening of the argument on February 8, the Newfoundland government requested that the hearing be adjourned because Canada and Newfoundland were negotiating in an attempt to resolve the natural resource issue. That was a legitimate request by a party in the case, the government of Newfoundland, which had a vested interest in the matter at hand, a very clear vested interest.

It is interesting to note what the other parties to the dispute did at that time. None of the other parties supported the motion of the Newfoundland government that the hearing be adjourned. Crosbie Offshore Services, which had been the ally of the government of Newfoundland throughout the proceedings, remained neutral on the issue. The Attorney General of Canada was instructed neither to oppose nor support Newfoundland's request that the hearing be adjourned. The SIU and the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, the other parties in the case, opposed having the proceedings adjourned. The court ultimately ordered that argument proceed and it did a couple of days later, on February 10.

I have given the sequence because it is important in light of some of the allegations now being made. To review, the SIU put an issue in court on a fairly narrow question, whether labour jurisdiction was federal or provincial. In the process the SIU—not the federal government or the provincial government—introduced the larger issue of jurisdiction over offshore development. The SIU introduced that important wrinkle.

There was a motion by the government of Newfoundland to have the matter adjourned because of ongoing negotiations between the two governments. The Government of Canada neither opposed nor supported the motion. Two other parties opposed the motion. The presiding judge in his wisdom decided to proceed with the argument and to allow the case to follow through to its conclusion.

I believe there was a very happy conclusion for all who have an interest in the offshore issue. I believe, as does the government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada, that this issue of offshore ownership is not one that you should approach by the back door. The issue of ownership is so crucially important that it should be addressed in its own right and not as an adjunct, subparagraph or tangent to a labour jurisdiction issue or any other issue before the courts.

On March 5 of this year the court decided in favour of federal labour jurisdiction. It said it decided that on the basis of the navigation and shipping power which is versed in the federal government. The court said it could do so without having to decide the much larger offshore resource question.

I said there are a number of misconceptions about the Newfoundland offshore. That is understandable. However, it does not help find a solution when there are so many misconceptions.

One misconception is that it was the federal government which put the offshore issue before the courts. If you accept what I said as far as the SIU case is concerned, you will see that the federal government did not introduce it in the court at that time. That is clear. Not only did it not introduce it, but it made no effort to expand the issue to include offshore after it had been introduced by a third party, the Seafarers' International Union.

What has happened since then? This case was completed on March 5. Even before it was concluded, the government of Newfoundland, which had said for many months that it wanted a negotiated settlement, put a reference to the Newfoundland Supreme Court on, I believe, February 12 of this year. In that reference it asked the court to adjudicate and give its determination on the question of offshore generally as it relates to the seabed off the shores of Newfoundland and Labrador.

In its wisdom, the Newfoundland government took the initiative and first put the question of offshore ownership before the Supreme Court. It is the right of the government of Newfoundland to take whatever steps it considers necessary to have the issue resolved once and for all.

If you accept that it was the SIU and not the Government of Canada or the government of Newfoundland which first put the issue before the courts, albeit somewhat by the back door, and if you accept the government of Newfoundland next put it before the courts in February of this year, it obviously follows that the federal government was neither first nor second in putting the matter before the courts. It was not until Wednesday of last week, the middle of May, that the Government of Canada took the issue to the Supreme Court of Canada.

We have two parties in a very important dispute, the government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. If one of the parties, the government of Newfoundland, takes a reasonable action and puts before a court of the land the question of ownership, is it any less reasonable if four months later the other party to the dispute does the same? Are there two sets of rules? Is not what is sauce for the goose also sauce for the gander? If one party in the dispute does one thing, is it entirely shameful that the other party does the same?

Earlier in my comments I referred to a very few people in Newfoundland, a very few, a scattered few, a minuscule minority, a handful, who do not live in the real world. I submit that it is that scattered few, a couple of whom have the ear of the Premier of Newfoundland, who are introducing confusion into the debate, an important debate that ought to be settled on its logical merits and its emotional merits. It has to be settled on both. It is that scattered few, unfortunately, who have elected to confuse the debate by introducing half-truths, by pointing the finger, by looking for scapegoats, by every means possible, because they have a real fear. They have reason to have fear, because they know the good sense of the overwhelming majority of Newfoundlanders, whatever they think in political or partisan terms about the Government of Canada, about the opposition parties in this House, or about the government of Newfoundland or the opposition party of the Newfoundland house. They happen to know, Mr. Speaker—

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would hate to see him get into difficulty. Is this matter not before the courts now and consequently should not be discussed in the House?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Burin-St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: On the point of order raised by my friend from Alberta, it is, of course, in the courts. Everyone knows that and that is clearly acknowledged. But that has not prevented members of his own party from asking questions and expecting responses on the issue, so I take that as adequate proof that his party does not think there is anything wrong with discussing it.

But there is another reason why there is nothing wrong with discussing it while it is before the courts. The hon. member, before putting his question, should make a distinction between an adversary proceeding before the courts, which would be sub judice in this particular House, and a question before the courts which is put there for the purpose of seeking the court's opinion. This is not an adversary proceeding. There are adversary connotations in so far as another court proceeding is concerned; but in so far as it being put before the Supreme Court, it is put as a reference, not as an adversary proceeding where you have a defence and a prosecution. That is not the nature of the proceeding and I do not think the point applies at all to this particular case, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I think the hon. member is quite right. Furthermore, what has been discussed so far is not the subject matter that is before the courts but how it got to the courts; that is what we are listening to now.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about a number of misconceptions. The one that seems to be paramount in the minds of many people is one that I have dealt with, that it was the federal government who first put this issue before the court. I think I have given to the House sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the federal government did not put it first or second but put it third before the court, and in so doing exercised the self-same right that the other party in the dispute had already exercised four months prior. So I really fail to see any particular need for concern on that particular issue.

I was saying before the point of order was put by my hon. friend for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that the overwhelming good sense of Newfoundlanders as a whole, regardless of what they think in terms of party partisanship, will have these few people I referred to see that there is nothing wrong, nothing unfair, nothing sneaky, nothing under the table, about asking the highest court in this land to adjudicate upon such an important issue.

On the same general subject, Mr. Speaker, in the last week or so we have heard the Premier of Newfoundland say the action of the Government of Canada in putting this issue before the Supreme Court of Canada will mean—and these are his words last Wednesday—"continued subservience".

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope he had a weak moment; I hope he really did not mean that. I am on his side on this point. I happen to believe that he has a very strong case. Is he already conceding it, Mr. Speaker? By saying that this action of putting this issue before the Supreme Court of Canada means continued subservience, is he saying that he has lost the case already? Has he thrown in the towel already? How can that be conceived to mean "continued subservience" when almost in the same mouthful he tells us, as he has over the years, and rightly so, that Newfoundland has a strong case? I hope he will retract those words and, in so doing, say that they were made in a moment of weakness, that he did not mean that. I hope he did not mean it.

Another misconception is that by the act of going directly to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Government of Canada has thereby done something which is without precedent. Again for those unlearned in the law, and I happen to be one of them, for the large body of lay people out there who do not follow all the cases, who do not necessarily get their jollies out of considering how many cases go before the federal government, when and for what purpose, I can understand that argument, that misconception, would be swallowed by a lot of people. They would say: "The Supreme Court has gone off and done this without precedent; it is going to clobber a province into the ground; it is going to sidestep them; the federal government is going to the Supreme Court of Canada while an issue is still being heard in the Supreme Court of a particular province." And in this case, they mean Newfoundland.

There are two points, Mr. Speaker. Point number one, Mr. Speaker, is that, as members of this House will know, if a province wants to make a reference to the court, it has to make a reference to the court in its own province. Newfoundland cannot make a reference to the court of British Columbia or to the court of Canada as a whole. Equally, if the federal government wants to make a reference, it cannot make it in any of the provinces, it has to make it directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. So I submit to you, first of all, Mr. Speaker, that in going to the Supreme Court the Government of Canada is going to the only court it can go to; and the government of Newfoundland in going to the court in Newfoundland is going to the only court to which it can go.

Secondly, is this a new departure? Has the federal government now gone and done something that has never been done before? Not quite, Mr. Speaker. If those who argue the other side want examples, I can give them a few. Many, many times in the past the Government of Canada has gone to the Supreme Court of Canada with a reference at the same time as there was a reference on the same subject before the court of the province concerned. I can give you, had I the time, Mr. Speaker, at least ten examples going from 1976, 1970, 1955, 1948, right back through to 1928. I shall deal with only one, and that very briefly, Mr. Speaker.

This is a case which was before the Court of Appeal in Quebec on the subject of who had radio jurisdiction. What happened in that particular case? What happened, of course, was that while the case was still before the Court of Appeal in Quebec, the Prime Minister of the day put it in the Supreme Court of Canada and it was dealt with in that particular fashion.

Since we spend so much of our time, Mr. Speaker, talking about Liberals and Tories and other types in this particular dispute, it is interesting to note that the Prime Minister who put that reference to the Supreme Court of Canada while it was still before the Court of Appeal in Quebec back in 1930 was none other than a great Tory Prime Minister of Canada, Prime Minister Bennett, the Prime Minister of the day.

I could give more recent examples, Mr. Speaker, right up to 1976. There is the example of the anti-inflation board in the appeal court of Ontario. I could give you an example involving the breathalizer in 1975, involving another court in this land and a reference directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. There are many examples that put to rest the lie that somehow the Government of Canada is doing something that is without any particular precedent.

I realize it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude at this particular point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions.

CARGILL GRAIN LIMITED—APPLICATION FOR DREE GRANT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence and communications, including telephone submissions, regarding the application by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant from DREE towards construction of an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the difficult position of having to introduce this motion today because of events which have transpired in the last year. Cargill Grain made an application to DREE for a $2 million grant for the construction of an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort. Cargill was quite prepared to put approximately $25 million toward that project. I am told that if that project were to proceed, it would create permanent employment for some 60 employees at the plant. Naturally, there would be other spin-offs in the city of Melfort and in the surrounding areas. Not only would there be spin-offs in the city of Melfort, but the farmers in that particular area would also benefit because they would have another crushing plant to which they could deliver not only canola but flax seed as well.

On numerous occasions I called the office of the former minister responsible for DREE in an effort to get some information from his executive assistant. However, that is all in the past. The minister is gone, so there is no use pointing those facts out. The minister refused to return my telephone calls. Is that co-operation from a government department? What we really need is freedom of information in legislative form so that we can have information made available to us upon request. With that information we could make progress. We do not serve ourselves; we serve our constituents and, in this case, the constituents of other areas because they naturally would have been delivering to this plant if it were built.

The present situation is quite unacceptable. There is a CSP plant at Nipawin. It serves that area, but despite the fact that plant is there, many farmers have to deliver as far as Saskatoon or Lloydminster, the town on the border between Saskatchewan and Alberta. That is 300 miles away. I suggest there is a better way out.

Cargill Grain made this application realizing that DREE had made a similar grant to CSP at Harrowby, Manitoba. In that case total federal-provincial grants amounted to something in the order of $5.8 million. A grant to CSP and not to Cargill naturally creates unfair competition.

There are those who believe that the pool is the only way to go. That is fine. I am not arguing about where the producer should take his grain; if the pool serves him, that is fine. If Cargill does not serve him properly, he can certainly stay away from Cargill and Cargill will go out of business. However, Cargill is prepared at this time to put in $25 million, and I would like to see that plant go ahead.

In an exchange I had with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), he said that Cargill Grain had made an application. I could not understand why the application was not accepted. He said that, being a multinational, Cargill Grain has all kinds of resources, and then he proceeded to tell me that he officiated at the opening of a storage plant in Quebec City for which a grant was given to Cargill Grain.

Mr. Benjamin: That was wrong too.

Mr. Korchinski: There is something illogical there. Cargill Grain is a multinational and I am sure it can compete if the competition is fair, but the competition is not fair. It is seen to be fair to provide a grant in Quebec. I do not argue against that; there probably was a need. However, there is also an equal need for an oil seed crushing plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

There must obviously have been input from some sources to the minister's office at that time. I know the mayor of Melfort supports this application. The Chamber of Commerce supports it. The rural municipalities, Star City, Porcupine Plains and, I presume, several other areas support it. I know the municipality of Nipawin passed a resolution supporting it. The members of that council represent farmers in that area. CSP is right at Nipawin. CSP does not mind. Farmers want a choice. I have received telephone calls from the Nipawin area, and I have been told that Cargill Grain is offering $14 a tonne more. I will not argue the merits of Cargill or CSP, but I say that the producers should have a choice as to whether to deliver.

On another occasion I approached the new minister responsible for DREE, who is responsible for applications like this, and the minister told me that after he had taken over he had been approached by Cargill Grain and that he was reviewing certain facts. He told me in the committee on March 23 that several weeks prior to that date he had been approached by Cargill Grain. We are well into May; several months have gone by. He must surely have had time to reflect upon the problem and make a determination. Just a few minutes ago I put in a call to the minister's office and I was told there has not been a reversal of the decision. I am not sure what that means. The department has not made a decision one way or the other, but there has not been a reversal! That means that the department is either dragging its feet or for some reason it is just coasting along.

The minister might have many reasons which he has not made known to me, but it seems to me what is necessary now is that the basis upon which the former minister made his decision be determined. I have indicated that support has come from several areas. I would like to know who opposed that application. Was it the CSP? Was it the pools, which are competitors? Was it the farm unions? Was it the individual farmers who did not want anything to do with Cargill Grain? Was it the rural municipalities? Was it the former NDP government in Saskatchewan?

In the Standing Committee on Agriculture the Minister of Agriculture said to me:

> —Cargill . . . has not received the approval of the Saskatchewan government, and that was one of the main reasons why I never approved it . . . they have been very wishy-washy on it in Saskatchewan—the Saskatchewan government.

That was the former Saskatchewan government.

Mr. Anguish: The present one too.

Mr. Korchinski: He went on:

> They have made quiet objections to it, and then we have asked them to put it in writing. So we have exchanged one or two letters back and forth on it. I do not know what the position of the Saskatchewan government on it is at the present time, but they certainly did not endorse it at one stage of the game.

I would like to know from where that opposition came. I know there was opposition; that is quite evident. I see articles in the newspaper by leading New Democrats who oppose this. I have copies of those articles. Is the department handing out grants to co-operatives and socialist ventures and to no one else? Is that the approach the department is taking? We got rid of one socialist government in Saskatchewan, but we still have a socialist government here in Ottawa. It is bordering on communism because it has already gone beyond the socialist stage. It is past its infancy. It has grown up, and it is taking over industry after industry instead of encouraging them.

Obviously I must try to get to the bottom of this matter. I put a call through to Cargill Grain and asked whether it would be proceeding. I was told, "No way, it is unfair competition". Therefore, Cargill will not proceed with the plan. New Democrats who tell me it is a good thing for farmers to deliver 300 miles have something wrong with them. When they say they are going to have farmers deliver for 300 miles, is that supposed to keep costs down?

I have enumerated some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to dwell on them. The facts speak for themselves. I have indicated that some negative responses have been received. I should like to know who the government listens to. I am satisfied that the minister has not completely closed the door but he certainly has not taken action.

This motion was put on the Order Paper some time ago. I would have been quite prepared to accept some sort of explanation but none was forthcoming. Chambers of commerce and farmers have tried to piece together the mystery of how this government operates, but the question will not be solved until we find out who the government listens to.

I am satisfied that submissions did not come from individuals farmers, but chambers of commerce have supported the application. If the information were available it would clear the air and resolve the problem, and it would be beneficial to the NDP to say they endorsed it if a letter was sent. What harm can there be in producing evidence at this time? Surely all hon. members would like to be as informed as possible, but without the information I am seeking no member can decide whether the application was dealt with properly or not.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, although I understand the hon. member's desire to clarify a situation he feels is ambiguous, I still think that raising one's voice is not particularly conducive to obtaining further information for hon. members, and what is important at this stage is to find out exactly why the department decided to set aside, for the time being, the application made by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant to set up a plant in Melfort, Saskatchewan.

First of all, just to get the facts straight, I think the hon. member is aware that, at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development on March 23 of this year, he had plenty of time to put questions to the minister and to senior officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, in order to get an accurate picture of the situation. However, the hon. member has so far gone well beyond what the motion as such requests. The motion is quite clear, and requests only, and I quote:

> That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence and communications, including telephone submissions, regarding the application by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant from DREE towards construction of an Oil Seed Crushing Plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

What the hon. member is asking in his motion is only that documents be made public. Now, he should know that in a case like this, the ethics of international and national trade, in terms of the free market principle, forbids the production of documents when the public funds requested have not yet been granted to a company. If the hon. member desires specific information on Cargill Grain's projects in that particular area, including projected investments and requests to the department and answers given by the department to the company in question, the hon. member knows perfectly well that his question should be put directly to the company because, at the present time, the Canadian government has not given any public funds to the company.

In fact, the case is being discussed with the management of Cargill Grain Limited and departmental officials, but the department has made it quite clear that if Cargill Grain Limited wanted a review of its application, it would have to provide some new information to support this. Now, in this case, the then Minister of DREE, the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), wrote to the hon. member, giving him a very specific answer concerning the refusal of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, formerly DREE, and this letter which was dated November 2, 1981, is quite clear. It says very explicitly, and I quote:

[English]

> After an exhaustive review of the case, I feel confident that Cargill can, and will, proceed with the project without assistance from DREE. The company is financially strong and the project appears to be a wise one from the company's point of view.

So that was the letter, and it goes on to say that since Cargill Grain Limited has the financial resources to carry out its project without government funding, it would perhaps be inappropriate on the part of the government to provide funds to a company which already has the means to carry out its project independently. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, Cargill Grain Limited applied pursuant to the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act. The legislation is quite clear. It authorizes the department to grant funds to a company, provided it can demonstrate a real need. Until now—and here opinions may differ—according to the experts in this field, the conclusion is that Cargill Grain Limited is capable of building its plant without outside help. Now, when an application is sent to the department, the people who are there to find out whether there is a real need, take the time to make a thorough analysis of the case. In this case, the hon. member knows perfectly well that the department has several meetings with representatives of Cargill Grain Limited to find out what could be done under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act. The hon. member is also aware that the minister must abide by the law like any other member of this House and like any other Canadian citizen, and that even if the minister wanted to grant the funds requested by Cargill, according to an analysis of the company's financial statements which was very positive and considering the fact that funds are available to Cargill for short-term use, the minister, on the basis of the evidence submitted to date is not authorized to grant funds to Cargill. If he did, he would be breaking the law.

The documents and the reply given to the hon. member are very clear in the letter he was provided with, and I therefore, feel his motion is more dilatory than straightforward. Perhaps the hon. member should rephrase it or take a different course of action, such as asking Cargill directly for the documents he is requesting from the department, since the latter is not allowed to make public statements on private financial interests. And I believe that any member of this House would acknowledge the principle is sound. Cargill has never authorized the government to publicly divulge its financial statements or the nature of the application and financial requirements involved here. Cargill never asked the government to do so, and if the hon. member desires further information, I think his best bet would be to go to Cargill and ask for the company's complete financial statements.

When the hon. member met with departmental officials, that is, the minister responsible and all senior officials, on March 23 of this year, the hon. member drew comparisons with the Province of Quebec, where Cargill had been able to obtain funds for the construction of a warehouse in Quebec City. At the time, the minister explained that the situation in Quebec City was entirely different from the Cargill project in Melfort, Saskatchewan. At the meeting, the hon. member had plenty of time to speak with departmental officials. I feel the minister was very clear in his explanations, in terms of the Regional Development Incentives Act. In fact, the hon. member should realize that it is not a matter of the minister refusing to authorize a grant because for some personal reason he does not happen to like it, but that he cannot do so because the company's application does not meet the criteria set forth in the Act. This is a basic factor in the department's decision and its application of the Act. We would be the first to be blamed if the department were to start handing out money to companies who did not really need it. It would be a waste of public funds to distribute government grants more or less indiscriminately to companies with very positive financial statements and which are capable of carrying out such projects independently.

However, I may point out that the department is very conscious of the fact that a $25 million investment in an area such as Melfort, Saskatchewan, would considerably boost the economy in that area. In this connection, should Cargill be able to submit new facts or elements of information to the department, the latter is willing to review a new application by Cargill at any time, provided new information is submitted for consideration. This aspect is extremely important. Just because a negative decision is made on an initial application does not mean that the decision stands forever. Cargill may submit a new application at any time, and if new facts are presented, the case can be reconsidered and we can then see whether there are grounds to review the decision and see whether a positive decision can be made, but at this stage, I want to make it quite clear to the hon. member that no one is objecting on the basis of competition or personalities to giving a grant to Cargill under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

The department's present refusal to proceed with the grant under the present Regional Development Incentives Act is simply based on the fact that the company's financial statements give reason to conclude that the company is capable of going ahead with the project itself, a project which we on this side of the House support equally as much as the members opposite. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, add one more fact, namely, that the Regional Development Incentives Act is used on a wide scale to encourage investment outside the large urban centres in order to strengthen the country's economy. Cargill has previously taken advantage of such provisions and has been successful in other areas, obviously depending on where the company wished to expand and on the nature of its application. In this particular case, we are not concerned with analyzing applications to see what the government can do to help some company. However, the Regional Development Incentives Act has helped many areas in Canada to develop, and we, as a government, would be very happy to be able to contribute to further projects and even to a project like the one proposed by Cargill, provided we are not asked to do more than the law authorizes us to do.

That legislation was approved by Parliament and it is unthinkable that any minister or departmental official would disregard the provisions set out by the legislators to meet the basic purpose of the law, which is simply to provide federal financial support to various projects. After having reviewed myself the figures I was given, I readily realized that, in the case of Cargill, it would be neither fair nor equitable in the present circumstances to provide public funds to a company like Cargill. Once again, this company transacts business throughout Canada and is a highly responsible corporate citizen which has done a tremendous job in my own constituency in Baie Comeau, where it is located. I can sympathize with the request of the hon. member, but once again, we have to consider the facts and not simply intentions or projections. We must look fully into the facts submitted to the department before making a decision. I can assure the hon. member that if we had been able to find an appropriate formula to grant the subsidy, we would have been most happy to do so. However, we cannot take it upon ourselves, because of our natural generosity, to give a positive answer to this request at the moment. On the other hand, I remind the hon. member that if Cargill wants to rephrase its application and submit new data, the department will always be willing to take all aspects of the matter into consideration.

To come back to the motion in which the hon. member asks for the tabling of certain documents, as I said at the very beginning, it would not be proper to agree to this, and I do not believe that confidential documents have ever been divulged in Parliament until the file has been processed or a positive decision has been made. I think that the hon. member understands quite well that the government cannot divulge parts of a private file which are of a confidential nature until the examination has been completed. I would not want the hon. member to think that the department is not acting in good faith in this case. On the contrary, it is trying to act as responsibly as possible, and, for instance, if tomorrow morning a competitor of Cargill applied for a grant, I am convinced that Cargill would ask to examine the financial statements of this competitor, and once again, our attitude would be the same, that is we would have to protect the confidentiality of the files. In such a case, these files are treated in the same way as data concerning personal income under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The confidentiality of the files is at the very basis of the security which the examination of information entails, and most important, of the trust shown by companies, businesses or individuals when they ask the government to deal with their affairs or provide expertise for their business.

I believe that it would create an unacceptable precedent for a government to divulge the contents of the documents requested by the hon. member in his motion. I remember quite well having replied myself publicly in this House not so long ago to the motion of the hon. member, and the reply was quite clear. It said that the documents requested were confidential for commercial reasons and that the government believed that publication of these documents might prejudice the competitive position of the company. We therefore urged the hon. member to withdraw his motion. This was not because the subject is not important or considered a priority. On the contrary, it is simply that at this stage, it would be improper to divulge documents which are of a private nature and be of no use whatsoever to the business the hon. member wants to help. The hon. member will recognize that at this point it would not be beneficial to the company.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member mind indicating whether the government would be prepared to reveal the communication which either supported or opposed it? I am not interested in any financial documents or any matter which may reveal the financial position of the company. I am not interested in the financial aspects. I am only interested in who supported it and who opposed it.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, with respect to that very specific application, I do not have before me the names of the parties for or against that grant application by the Cargill company. Decisions are not taken on the basis of objections or recommendations, but simply on that of the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act. This is very important. Indeed, the letter from the previous minister, the hon. member for Matane (Mr. DeBané), is quite clear. That letter, dated November 2, 1981, made it quite clear that on the basis of a financial assessment of the Cargill situation, there was no authority under the Regional Development Incentives Act to subsidize a corporation that, according to the figures submitted at that time, was in a position to complete the project by itself. There was no question of heeding the representations on behalf of or against the project. It was solely on the basis of an analysis of financial records that the negative conclusion was reached. This I would like to assure the hon. member. It was not a matter of anybody being for or against. The decision was simply based on a financial analysis.

Certainly we have the minister's word, and better still the written confirmation of the then minister. If the hon. member has claims to the contrary, I would ask him to rise and submit them. But if he recalls the letter of November 2, 1981, it is written black on white that the minister concluded that the corporation, the Cargill company, had the financial capability to carry out the project without a federal grant. So this is exactly the basis for the department's decision, and I see no reason why the department should start considering representations on behalf of or against a project. The only reason why the department turned down the application is, fortunately, the sound financial position of the Cargill company, which is entirely to its advantage.

It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that were the government to start subsidizing companies whether they had a very sound financial structure or not, we would be irresponsible in granting subsidies. I appreciate that the hon. member wants to know all the facts but, with all due respect, I can only assure him that we have absolutely nothing to hide in the matter. The department is quite clear. If you have claims to the contrary, it might be interesting to make them in writing so that I could look at them at this stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member explain how it is that Cargill Grain obtained a grant in Quebec based upon the same financial position?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The time allotted to the hon. parliamentary secretary has expired. He may entertain a question only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I can reply to the hon. member's question quite easily. Moreover, the hon. member put that question to the minister at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development on March 23. The application made for the construction of a warehouse in Quebec City was quite different from that made for the construction of a plant in Melfort, Saskatchewan. The financial assistance requested was not the same and the financial statements submitted for the Quebec project were quite different from those submitted for the Melfort project. If ever the hon. member wants more information, I would be quite pleased to get his questions in writing, and we could answer him in writing pointing out the significant differences between both projects.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say that we support the motion of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). We would like to see this correspondence produced, but likely for entirely different reasons than those of the hon. member. We support the idea of a rapeseed crushing plant located in Melfort or somewhere in that area. There is no argument about that, but we part company with the hon. member and with the government when we say that not one nickel should go to an outfit like Cargill Grain. The government, in providing funds to Cargill in Quebec or anywhere else, is totally wrong. The government and FIRA, the toothless tiger for Canadian economic independence and sovereignty, should never have allowed Cargill Grain into the country in the first place when National Grain was bought out.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Mackenzie realizes that representatives of the outfit which he supports have been in court, fined and even jailed repeatedly in the United States. This is an outfit which was party to short-weighing American grain aid to starving people in Bangladesh and India by eight million bushels; this is the kind of outfit he is supporting.

I made careful note of the hon. member's remarks when he said that a grant to CSP, the co-operative movement in Saskatchewan, instead of to Cargill would be unfair competition. I will make sure that all co-operative and pool members in the hon. member's riding hear about that. I hope he is extra careful when he checks Hansard later this day. Is it unfair competition if a grant is paid to a company which is owned, controlled, developed, and paid for by grain producers themselves rather than to a multinational corporation in the United States? In fact, Cargill is the largest in the world. It has hundreds of millions of dollars to play with on any given day of the month. Are the people of Canada supposed to give a grant to Cargill, when its first objective is to make all the bucks it can off grain producers, particularly rapeseed producers in Canada? Its next objective is to destroy orderly marketing, the co-operative movement and the Canadian Wheat Board. It wants a free and open market; that is its next objective. Cargill is the outfit which indicated that one of the reasons it would not go ahead with the rapeseed crushing plant in Melfort was the Crow rate.

I presume the hon. member, by pleading on behalf of Cargill, fully supports the fact that rapeseed producers in his riding will be receiving $20 less per tonne by 1986-87. Also I presume his pleading on behalf of Cargill means that he agrees rapeseed producers should receive $20 per tonne less. I hope he tells that to rapeseed producers of his constituency and to those in the entire area of Saskatchewan which produces rapeseed.

We do not necessarily need another rapeseed crushing mill at the moment. In its report of January 1982, the rapeseed industry projected that by 1985 the domestic and export demands for rapeseed oil would increase by something in the order of 150,000 tonnes, that the demand for meal would increase in the order of about 200,000 tonnes, and that we would need one or more additional rapeseed crushing plants. Surely to goodness Canadian taxpayers, rapeseed producers and flaxseed producers of Saskatchewan should not be called upon to put up money for a multinational grain corporation. Another of Cargill's objectives is to ensure that United States grain producers get priority over the grain producers in Canada with which Cargill might deal or in any other country of the world.

The hon. member also talked about 300-mile hauls for rapeseed. Where was he when his party was in power for nine months, when the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) was in charge of a committee on branch line abandonment and the line from Gronlid to Melfort was abandoned? Where was he? Did he appear before the CTC with a brief?

Mr. Korchinski: I made a submission.

Mr. Benjamin: Did he persuade the hon. member for Moose Jaw to keep that line? The grain producers in Gronlid now have to haul their grain another 20 miles.

Mr. Korchinski: I made a submission.

Mr. Benjamin: Who did you make it to and what luck did you have with your own government?

I am surprised that the hon. member would go to bat for an outfit like Cargill when we need additional rapeseed crushing capacity in western Canada. It is our preference that it be in the hands and ownership of grain producers themselves, whether it is rapeseed, flaxseed or any other grain.

Second, I had hoped that the hon. member for Mackenzie would be in support of the recommendations of the Hall Commission. The courts ruled a long time ago that rapeseed was a grain, thereby making it eligible for the statutory grain rate, the Crow rate. Meal was subsequently considered a product because the statutory rates apply to grain and grain products. Since rapeseed is grain, rapeseed meal is a grain product and the Crow rate applies to rapeseed meal. Mysteriously, the statutory rate does not apply to rapeseed oil which is a severe handicap to the crushers in western Canada. In fact, it is no wonder that the Japanese want to buy only rapeseed, because they get the benefit of the Crow rate and then process the rapeseed to make oil in Japan, when it should be done here. That is what Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who could hardly be called a raving socialist—he was appointed to the bench by Mr. Diefenbaker and headed three royal commissions and has the respect of the entire population of Canada—pointed out that his recommendations need to be implemented. I think that the hon. member should go back and do his homework. He should be telling his rapeseed producers, flaxseed producers, his own party and the government that the rapeseed crushing capability, like our grain handling capacity, must be in the hands and ownership and control of the grain producers themselves. He should say that Mr. Justice Hall's recommendation should be implemented in order to really help the rapeseed crushing industry.

Finally, he should quit weeping tears for the poor Cargill Grain Company. If we are to have competition in grain handling in Canada we do not need it from a multinational corporation which operates in 80 or 100 countries in the world. We do not need it from a corporation which has been guilty over and over again under United States law. We do not need it from a company that transfers cargo on invoices four or five times while it is out in the middle of the ocean in order to circumvent U.S. embargoes and anti-trust laws. Cargill has holding companies and trust companies in a dozen countries, yet the hon. member weeps tears for poor Cargill.

If this Parliament and the government have any national respect, that would be the first corporation we would deport from Canada. We need that company like we need a hole in the head.

In addition to the co-operative movement, there are many private Canadian grain companies. If there is justification for so-called competition in grain handling and rapeseed and flaxseed crushing, surely the private Canadian grain trade should get some attention ahead of an outfit like Cargill. We believe that priority attention should go to the grain handling and grain crushing industries that are owned, controlled and operated by the grain producers themselves. If the hon. member is not prepared to stand by that suggestion, I hope he gets up and says so again in the near future.

Obviously we need more rapeseed crushing capacity, and of course Melfort is an excellent location for such an increased capacity. There is no argument with that. The government is right in not giving aid to Cargill in Melfort, but it is wrong in giving help to Cargill in Quebec. I believe that states the case purely and simply.

I hope the government will accept this motion. I would like to see all the correspondence as well. If the hon. member for Mackenzie has any doubts, I invite him to read a weekly newspaper published in his own constituency. Perhaps he does not read it usually but I invite him to read the Melfort Journal of April 14. I suspect that he has read it, but I invite him to do so if he has not.

With respect to supporting an outfit, which does not need or deserve support from the people of Canada, let alone—the grain producers, I find it beyond belief that such support should be proposed. I never thought I would live to see the day when an hon. member in the House, from whatever party, would rise to support a company such as the Cargill Grain Company. I find it incredible. I hope that the hon. member will cogitate, meditate and ruminate and by tomorrow morning will mend his ways and decide that he might be wrong about that corporation.

The capacity to grow, handle and process grain products in western Canada should be by right under the ownership and control of the grain producers themselves, and they should be given all possible support by the respective provincial and federal governments. We do not need any more unintelligent, mindless and senseless briefs on behalf of the Cargill Grain Company.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments made by the member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), who is always good for a rousing speech. However, I get the impression that he does not really like the friends of the member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). I thought I was listening to a Communist member just now when I heard the member for Regina West describe his fondness for Cargill and his impressions of the company. To me, as a member for Lac-Saint-Jean who is not very deeply involved in grain matters, I must say that the company has provided a very good service to Canadian grain producers. I think it has its place in our society, especially since it seems to be a viable company, which is a very important factor today, in these difficult times, when we realize that viable companies are the ones that are still operating. There are other Canadian companies like this one, for instance, Bell Canada, and they are continuing to provide work for thousands of Canadians, while other less viable companies are not as lucky, thus making it harder for some Canadians.

To get back to the subject at hand, the motion presented by the member for Mackenzie requests that copies of all correspondence and communications between the Minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion and Cargill be tabled in the House. I asked for permission to speak on this subject, Mr. Speaker, because before becoming a member of the House, I worked for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as Executive Assistant for two years and before as an Assistant for three years. I therefore had time to become acquainted with the department and how it works, and especially how various companies approach the department. A motion such as the one presented by the hon. member becomes extremely negative on the following point.

When a department such as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion gets involved in a particular case, the initial aim is to provide incentives, in other words, the department was created for a specific reason: to fight regional disparity. There are two ways the department tries to achieve this goal; first, by assisting the establishment of companies in certain areas of the country where a special incentive is needed for economic expansion. To provide such assistance, the department has two special mechanisms, the first being direct grants or the Regional Development Incentives Act, and the other consisting in agreements signed with the provinces under which the department is authorized to become involved in infrastructures for industry, tourism, agriculture or other purposes. Thus, the department is there to fight regional disparity. It creates incentives, so the department must be present. If it were not, the project would not get off the ground, but I would not go so far as to say that the department was created for the purpose of subsidizing every single project in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, certainly not! The department will help promote development in a given region—the Lac-Saint-Jean region, for instance—and award grants for that purpose. The Cargill case is very clear. Whatever the decision taken by the department, I do not feel that Cargill is interested in putting up its plant in Montreal because it is not really the place to mill wheat and it stands to reason that the plant should be where the wheat is produced. It is obvious as well that there are logistics advantages to selecting the site where they want to go and, unless I am mistaken, that is Melfort. Besides, the financial position of Cargill is strong enough.

But what I am driving at when I refer to the request of the hon. member and his work with respect to the department is that obviously, Mr. Speaker, it is possible that in a certain economic context the requests made by Cargill were not justified in the sense that the company could afford to go ahead on its own. But the economic situation changes so rapidly that over the years I saw the Department of Regional Economic Expansion reject outright some applications which were approved two years later. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the department may very well make a judgment and decide not to award a grant for a given project because the company can afford to proceed on its own and the project will indeed be a paying proposition. I have seen that happen and the example I recall is Golden Eagle in Quebec which wanted to instal equipment to recycle waste oil, but the yield rate was 34 per cent. DREE never did go along with that project because it was a sure thing, it became self-sustaining after three years and that was that. Conversely, when a project cannot be successfully launched, that very fact shows that perhaps the department did not take into account each and every factor involved.

What I want to suggest to the hon. member is that if at first they do not succeed, just keep trying. The Cargill Company should keep trying. Earlier the parliamentary secretary stressed the fact that the hon. member ought to keep in closer touch with the company itself because, if Cargill Grain Limited does need help from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to prosper, create jobs in its region and facilitate grain handling operations and the production of milled grain, then the company should go back to the department—as it has done, if I am not mistaken—and explain in different terms the rate of yield of its operations. But the hon. member should not be asking the department to make public the information it has on Cargill. I cannot imagine, Mr. Speaker, that a department which wants to bring assistance to certain regions or make grants to some companies would feel justified to publish confidential information about Cargill or any other company. I suggest that members opposite would be the first to raise a fuss if the government were to release confidential information concerning a company which has applied for a grant.

The hon. member wants more information, as the Parliamentary Secretary was saying, he can also obtain from the company an affidavit which would authorize him to look into its whole file. If the company were to authorize him to make all the relevant facts known to the Canadian people, Department officials would then be in a position to disclose all sorts of information concerning Cargill Grain's financial structure, its soundness, its weaknesses and so on, but I feel it is not the responsibility of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to tell the Canadian people to whom Cargill Grain will sell the grains it will buy from Canadians, or to disclose potential markets which its competitors could secure tomorrow morning if they only knew they existed.

It seems to me that within the context of the Regional Development Act, an hon. member's role is very similar to that of a developer, in the sense that his job is to stregthen the ties between the Department and the company which would like to settle in his riding. And in this respect, he or she has every right and the opportunities are there to get in touch with the minister, his office staff and department officials who make no bones about working for the advancement of our country and who know Canada well. I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that DREE is the department which knows each and every area of our country best, and I do not mean only the provinces and the regions, but also the sub-regions within the provinces. No department, either federal or provincial, has as complete a knowledge of the economic situation of each and every Canadian region, its economic strengths and shortcomings, as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Its officials have developed a fantastic capacity for economic analysis due to their 12 years expertise in signing over 100 agreements worth billions and billions of dollars with the provinces with regard to tourism, agriculture, industrial and commercial development. There must be in fact some 150 agreements in force now throughout Canada, and the Department knows everyone of the companies now operating in each and every region.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, it becomes obvious that, irrespective of political considerations and the need to hide anything, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, DREE has very good reasons to be careful in handling the taxpayers' money. The best proof I can give you of that, Mr. Speaker, is that by 1980, DREE's losses since its inception had come up to only 0.6 per cent of the grants allowed, a rate which is by far lower than that of the banks. DREE has very seldom made unwise investments, due to its outstanding analytical talents. So, let us go on working and treating whatever information the companies provide as confidential. I urge hon. members opposite to follow-up on the applications they get from their ridings, and never to hesitate in contacting the DREE people, whether they are officers of the department, the minister, his officials or his Parliamentary Secretary, the strengthen the ties between the department and their ridings and especially the companies that are interested in their ridings. Remember that DREE was set up by a Liberal government in 1968 to develop the country and fight against regional disparities, which it will continue to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for the Minister of State for Finance) that Bill C-112, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) had the floor.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the issue of Newfoundland offshore ownership is now before the courts because of two separate initiatives, the initiatives taken by each of the two parties in the dispute. In the first instance, the government of Newfoundland, one of the parties in the dispute, put a reference to the Newfoundland court of appeal in February. Last week the other party in the dispute, the Government of Canada, put a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada.

As I noted earlier in the debate, in each case the respective governments did the only thing in terms of court reference they could do. They went to the court to which they would normally go to put down a reference, in the case of the provincial government, the provincial court of appeal and in the case of the federal government, the Supreme Court of Canada.

The issue of the offshore is really two questions. The question of ownership is now before the courts in St. John's and Ottawa. Does the Newfoundland government own the resources or does the federal government own them? That issue will be determined in due time by the respective courts, and we will have a finding.

There is another issue quite apart from ownership. I believe it is the more important of the two issues. It is the issue of how the resource will be developed. What will be the share of management of the development between governments? Who will get the benefits? Who will be the real beneficiaries of any development of the Newfoundland offshore? There are two questions, two issues. First, who owns? Second, who will reap the benefits? How will it be developed and to whose benefit?

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, or to anyone listening to my voice at this time: if you own a house, as you probably do, and if, unlike me, you do not have a big hefty mortgage but have clear and absolute title, can you, unfettered, without consulting anyone, tomorrow morning, turn your house into a restaurant, for example? Can you renovate it without consulting the authorities and getting a permit or some other piece of paper? Can you put on an additional storey? Legally, can you even destroy it? You know the answers to those questions.

You may have the real ownership of a property, but having effective control over what happens to it is quite a separate issue altogether. Therefore, there are two issues, who owns, and who will control and to whose benefit?

I have always felt that the second issue was by far the more important. That is why I was so encouraged over the past months and years to note that both governments were addressing themselves to finding a partnership arrangement which would lead to a proper balance in terms of management of the development and address a proper and fair balance in terms of sharing the revenues that would be forthcoming from that resource development.

That is the way it should have been. Governments should have been able to continue to talk to each other and sort out, as members of the same family, an issue which affects the people they respectively represent in Ottawa and St. John's. That is the issue of revenue sharing and effective management of that resource.

I was encouraged to see both governments talking. Then the talking became less frequent, until it ceased altogether. Then came the disastrous period of confrontation. Everybody was talking about taking everybody else to court. I do not think that particular stance serves anybody's purpose. Of course, so far as the references are concerned, no one is taking anybody to court, they are taking an issue to court. The Newfoundland government is not taking the federal government to court, nor vice versa. They have both gone for references which are not of the adversary sort, references seeking the determination, the opinion, of the respective courts.

I would have hoped that that question could have been left until the resource development and revenue-sharing issues had been addressed by way of an agreement between the two governments. A reasonable effort is being made, the effort has not come to an end. In my view, the effort has to be ongoing. It is encouraging that in the past few days spokesmen for both governments have said they want to get back to the bargaining table. I still live in hope that the actual agreement can precede any determination by either of the courts as to the actual ownership of the resource. I hope also that the pattern of the Nova Scotia agreement, at least one in particular, will be observed, that is to say, that there will be a provision in the Newfoundland-Canada agreement to provide that, irrespective of the outcome of any court determination as to ownership of the resource, irrespective of that finding at some future time, the agreement shall stand and that both parties will undertake to honour the agreement.

The Government of Canada for its part has declared publicly that it will stand by any agreement, irrespective of the ultimate outcome of any court proceedings on the issue of ownership.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have two issues. We have the issue of who owns the resources, and we have the issue of revenue sharing and management sharing.

I come now to the second issue for a moment. I believe that any agreement must be one which gives the Government of Newfoundland a fair, a very effective role in the rate of development and how it is to be developed. The Nova Scotia agreement, to which I referred just now, gives the government of Nova Scotia a fair amount of management control. It gives it a fair amount of revenue. I am not here tonight to sell the Nova Scotia agreement. I happen to believe, as a Newfoundlander, that the Nova Scotia agreement is but the minimum, it is the starting point for any ultimate agreement between Newfoundland and Canada. How could we as the Government of Canada go in good faith to another province and offer it any less to begin with than it has already offered and entered into in writing with another province?

Therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, that the very minimum that can be forthcoming in any agreement between Canada and Newfoundland is the ultimate provisions of the Nova Scotia agreement. That particular agreement is one that another well-known Tory, Premier John Buchanan, thought to be quite fair for Nova Scotia. He in turn managed to get a deal which returned more money per barrel to his province than another agreement which another great Tory, Premier Lougheed, was able to get his province of Alberta. So I say, Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Buchanan was able to build on Mr. Lougheed's agreement, I have no doubt that Mr. Peckford will be able to build on Mr. Buchanan's agreement. The end result will be an agreement which will provide generous revenue sharing and will provide an effective management voice by both governments. I certainly hope so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I was not very surprised when the hon. member who has just finished speaking said that the federal government gave another province in the east a better deal than they gave to Alberta. This is not surprising. We have been used to that, we have been getting that all through the years It is just living up to the standard that this Liberal government has set. That is one of the reasons why there is so much difficulty.

I am not going to discuss the items discussed by the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). The British North America Act did give the resources to the provinces. When Alberta and Saskatchewan were created, we had to wait 25 to 30 years to get our resources, after a fight put up by the former U.F.A. government. We got our resources finally in 1930. When we got the resources, we got ownership and control. I do not think there is any doubt about that. That has been made quite clear in the new Constitution. We have a little water in the province of Alberta, we do not have an ocean but we have a considerable number of lakes and a considerable number of rivers, and the resources under the water still belong to the province. The people in the west have a difficult time to understand why the maritime provinces do not also own their resources simply because they are under water.

I do not want to discuss that matter further because I feel that it is bad taste to do so when it is already before the courts. I think the Canadian government would have gained prestige if it had waited until the Newfoundland court had ruled on the matter and then ascertained whether it was necessary to make an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, either by the Government of Newfoundland or by the Government of Canada. But the Government of Canada did not decide to do that, and I can understand the frustration and the way the people of Newfoundland feel in regard to that particular issue. I think it was done in haste by the Canadian government and is in bad taste.

I want to discuss this particular bill, Mr. Speaker. I want to read what it says, because I think the people of Canada will be rather astounded to find that they have been paying taxes that have still not been passed by Parliament. In the early days, representative government was established so that the king or the Crown or the government could not levy taxes without the consent of the people. I do not like the method this government is using, whether it is precedent or not. I just do not like it. I do not think it is sound and I do not think the people of Canada like it, either.

For instance, the explanatory note at the beginning of Bill C-112 says:

> This Part would implement the Ways and Means Motion to amend the Excise Tax Act (1) tabled by the Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Excise Tax Motion').

That is right. The same thing applies to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the incremental oil revenue tax.

They are all now before Parliament to be rubberstamped. It must be there only to be rubberstamped because the taxes are already in effect, the government has been collecting these taxes for several weeks. I do not like this way of doing business. In my view, it is not democracy, it is simply making a rubberstamp of the House of Commons, and I object to being a rubber stamp.

I know what the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said the other day. He said that a ways and means motion was passed. That is right. But what does Beauchesne say about a ways and means motion? I will read from Beauchesne's, page 174 of the fifth edition:

516. (1) A Ways and Means motion is a necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax, the continuation of an expiring tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax, or an extension of the incidence of a tax so as to include persons not already payers.

It goes on to say, on page 175:

517. (1) The Minister of Finance will generally table Ways and Means motions relating to the changes announced in the Budget either on Budget night or shortly thereafter.

This he has done. It continues:

(2) A Minister of the Crown designates a day for consideration of the Ways and Means motion under the terms of S.O. 60(2).

That was done. It goes on:

(3) On the designated day, the Ways and Means motion is decided upon without debate or amendment.

It is a formality, it is decided on without debate or amendment. That is exactly what was done. Then Beauchesne goes on to say:

—then a bill is introduced based upon the provisions of any such resolution, given first reading, printed and ordered for second reading—

That is the proper parliamentary procedure. We pass a ways and means motion and, bang! At that point we start collecting the taxes from the people. Their representatives still have had nothing to say about it. We cannot debate ways and means motions, and that is completely unfair to the people who pay the taxes. We are acting like a dictatorial government would act, and that is why throughout Canada we now hear people calling this government a socialist government. Our friends, the socialists, call it a communist government. Whichever it is, it is a dictatorship whose laws are not receiving the stamp of approval of the House of Commons. It comes to the House of Commons afterwards and says, "Rubber stamp what we have been doing". That is not democracy, it is not representative government, and I think the people of the country should know that.

I want to deal with some of these taxes. The incremental oil revenue tax is a tax on windfalls or large amounts of money earned by oil companies. Those revenues come to the coffers of the government. I would have no particular objection to that tax if it were reasonable and fair. We all know we have to pay taxes. I do not know anyone who objects to paying taxes, but people object to paying unfair taxes, and they object when the burden is heavier on some than on others.

Most people say we have to pay taxes. Many people have told me that it is a pleasure to pay taxes, but that was before the last budget. It is a pleasure to pay taxes if a person has received money. I remember the coal mining days in Drumheller. I was at a public meeting at which a chap was complaining because he was paying $250 in income tax. That was a lot of money in those days. I remember one miner leaning over to me and saying, "Boy, would I ever love to pay $250 in income tax." People used to get their money first, but not since the last budget. Now we pay taxes on money we never even see. We pay taxes on money which never comes to us. That is completely ridiculous.

I want to deal for a moment with some of the taxes which are being levied. I want to deal with one utility company and tell the House the amount of money it has to pay. It can pass the cost on to its customers. It is a utility company, so the people have to pay; otherwise, their utility is cut off. They have no choice. Many other small companies in similar circumstances go bankrupt. That is why today under motions under Standing Order 43 an hon. member from British Columbia, the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) spoke about the bankruptcies of many companies and farms. They cannot pass these costs on. The utility company about which I am speaking does pass its costs on. I am not saying those costs are passed on fairly because, as the energy critic for the New Democratic Party pointed out this afternoon, the burden is unfair.

I will deal first with distribution of revenues. I am not here to speak for companies, except for the companies in my riding. I feel it is my responsibility to speak for them, just as it is my responsibility to speak for anyone else in my riding, but I am not speaking for Shell or Imperial Oil. I am not speaking for multinationals. They can speak for themselves. They might suffer a little, but not very much. They still have enough revenue to keep themselves going, but small companies do not. Some small companies have gone bankrupt because of the additional burden the federal government has placed upon them.

I want to indicate to the House how the total revenues of one company in my riding were spent in 1980. Gas supply cost 45 cents of each revenue dollar. The company operations cost 25.3 cents. That was to pay the company's employees, etc. Five cents of every dollar was profit to the company, and the company paid taxes at 24.7 cents. About a quarter of every dollar the company made went to taxes. At that time the tax amounted to 11.3 cents for federal excise tax and 3.4 cents for income tax.

In 1981 the picture changed. By that time the Canadian government had dreamed up another tax called the Canadian ownership tax. The government did not ask the people. It did not campaign on that. After the election the government simply initiated this new tax because it wanted to buy Petrofina and another oil company. If Petro-Canada wanted to buy another oil company, it should have done so in the same way as any other oil company. It should not have been given special consideration. The people should not have had to pay, especially those who could not afford it.

In 1981, the gas supply was down to 39.1 cents, largely because the Alberta government gave a rebate to keep the price of gas down so the people would not suffer too much. The company operations cost 23.3 cents. The company did a little slicing and cutting out some of the fat. Company earnings were also down to 4.5 cents instead of 5 cents. However, taxes were up. Taxes made all the difference. The federal excise tax went from 11.3 cents to 15.3 cents, and the Canadian ownership tax was 5.1 cents. Suddenly, out of the blue the company found itself paying a Canadian ownership tax. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said that the people of Canada would be delighted to pay the Canadian ownership tax. I wish he would go into some people's homes and hear what they tell me. The people are not delighted at all. They are having a hard time making a living and making ends meet. In 1981 the income tax paid by this company actually went down a little, to 2.7 cents, instead of 3.4 cents.

Then we come to 1982, and these are estimates. The gas supply is costing 39 cents, the lowest yet, again because of the rebates offered by the Alberta government. This is an Alberta company in my Bow River riding. The company operations are down too, to 20.1 cents. Again I suppose the company is practising restraint. Company earnings are down to 3.7 cents of every dollar as against 5 cents and 4.5 cents in the previons two years. However, the taxes are up to 37.2 cents. The federal excise tax has now jumped from 1980 when it was 11.3 cents to 20.2 cents. Everything else is down, but the federal tax is going up, with the exception of the Canadian ownership tax, which has gone down slightly to 4.6 cents. The total is 37.2 cents as against 33.1 cents the previous year, and the income tax component is 2.4 cents. In addition to that, the company has a franchise tax of 10 cents, which is being levied right through the whole year.

What does this mean to the people? That is the point I want to make. The company can pass it on. I am not complaining on behalf of the company, although other small companies which cannot pass on these costs go bankrupt. Their employees go unemployed. However, this particular company is able to pass its costs on to the people.

I have here statements made by a senior citizen who is 79 years of age. I do not know how old his wife is, but I imagine she is just about the same age. He says:

> Just turned 79 years of age trying to keep my head above water, but with this gas bit, increases in town utilities, increase in taxes . . . barely existing—

His taxes jumped way up to $1,261 a year. Previously he was paying considerably less than that. The difference is all those federal taxes because everthing else has gone down. Increases in federal taxes have become a burden on senior citizens. They are becoming a burden on those on fixed incomes. And we forget about the wage earner, who is just barely making it. I mean the wage earner who is barely making it, who is trying to pay off a mortgage and raise a family or send a son or daughter to university. That is who is being hit hard, and that is what I object to.

This tax is also hurting small companies. It is not hurting Imperial Oil or Shell because those large companies can bear it, but the small companies cannot. I wish we could get that through the heads on the government benches, but that would be pretty hard, Mr. Speaker, because not one minister on the front benches is here tonight.

That is another thing that I object to in this House. I spent several years in the Alberta legislature and when a bill was discussed the minister was always in the House. That was a requirement imposed by the House and by the premier. The ministers of this government do not have time to read Hansard and maybe they think we do not have anything to offer, but they could at least be here out of respect. After all, every member of this House has been sent here by the people to speak for them, and that is what we are endeavouring to do.

Yesterday a member of the NDP questioned the minister about senior citizens and was told that they are being given a supplementary allowance. That is supposed to look after them. But, Mr. Speaker, the supplementary allowance does not look after the increases in federal taxes. It is no wonder that senior citizens are crying. The man I referred to earlier said he is just existing, and I believe him. I have been in the homes of many senior citizens and have come away with a heavy heart because I know they are not getting enough to eat. Some are living on soup or bread and sometimes even on dog food because they do not have enough money to last to the end of the month. We give them a cost of living bonus thinking that they can live on that. It is something like the times before the revolution in France when the people were crying for bread and an aristocrat told them to eat cake! That is what the government is doing here; it is not listening to the people.

There is no reason why this tax could not be reduced for senior citizens, for those on welfare and people on low incomes. If it were reduced for small companies as well, that would help keep people working. The government is hurting itself by trying to grab the last drop of blood, as Shakespeare put it in one of his plays.

I have a letter here from another senior citizen who says that she is taking "a cruel beating on her utility bills". This is a lady of 75 or so who spent her life trying to help others, and now she is being treated in this way and does not have enough to eat for the whole month. She knows the reason for this—it is the taxes imposed by the federal government.

The government does not need that money, Mr. Speaker. It made several billions of dollars on the agreement with Alberta, so why does it also have to levy these taxes? Saskatchewan removed the road gas tax of 46 cents, but the federal tax is 50 cents to 80 cents. The Saskatchewan government tried to help the farmers and workers and indeed everyone who buys gas for the car, but they are still stuck with the 50 cents to 80 cents federal tax. What is the federal government going to do about that?

There is another point that I want to deal with, Mr. Speaker. I have a graph here which shows the annual natural gas costs for a household in my riding, assuming 200 gigajoules per year, in 1972. On that basis the gas supply costs were $20, the municipal revenue tax $10 and the company cost of service was $80 for an annual cost of $110 or 55 cents per GJ. That was before the federal government imposed a direct tax. In 1977 the provincial government's price protection plan shielded customers by $56 per year. The gas supply costs were $120, the municipal revenue tax $25, the company cost of service $95, for a total annual cost of $240 or $1.20 per GJ. By February 1, 1982, the provincial government's price protection plan shielded customers by $100 per year. In effect, the Alberta government was saying, "We are getting more for our gas so we will give you $100 per year back to help make up the difference in the cost." The gas supply cost was $240, federal excise tax $160, municipal revenue tax $60, company cost of service $170—in other words, 25 per cent of the total cost was going to the federal government. The total annual cost was $630 or $3.15 per GJ. The increase is largely due to the federal taxes. In 1980 this particular utility company had a total revenue of $257 million. The total tax on that was $8 million. In 1981 its total revenue was $338 million, and the tax for Canadian ownership and the federal excise tax amounted to $64 million. If the company had not passed that amount of tax on to the users, it would have gone bankrupt. It is no wonder that small businesses and farmers are going bankrupt when they face taxation like this which is completely unnecessary.

A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, a naturalist told me a story about seeing a huge bird come down out of the sky and grab something in its claws, then soar back into the sky again. Suddenly it looked as if the bird was in trouble when its wings started to flutter. A few minutes later it fell to the ground. My friend rushed over to where it was and there he saw a weasel sucking the blood of the bird. The Canadian people picked a weasel government in 1980, Mr. Speaker, and it is now sucking the economic blood out of the nation. It is time the government started to take stock of what is happening to the country if it wants it to hold together. When the National Energy Program was introduced in October 1980 the Minister of Finance said that it would reinforce the commitment to new supply development. I want now to deal with Alberta, not that Alberta is any more important than any other province. Every province is equal but I happen to come from Alberta and I am supposed to be speaking for the people of Bow River. What the Minister of Finance said was heartwarming to the people of western Canada. He said:

The National Energy Program is fair to Albertans. It is also fair to the government of Alberta. The people of Alberta will enjoy, as will all Canadians, the benefits of an energy program which will deliver energy security at reasonable, made-in-Canada prices.

Later on he said:

With the National Energy Program, Alberta's absolute and relative position will improve dramatically.

What is the situation under the NEP? Drilling rigs are down from 400 to about 55. A lot of workers with their expertise have had to leave the province because of lack of work. It has even been felt down in the small villages and towns of my riding. Instead of drilling crews living in hotels, eating in restaurants or buying groceries and keeping those businesses alive, they are now stuck with additional taxes and less business. This thing has just gone through the country like a nightmare. All across Canada we see the effect of the NEP, not only with the big jobs but with the little jobs. Then we have that agreement which was signed by Alberta in desperation because they wanted to get things moving. They left out conventional oil altogether because they wanted to concentrate on the oil sands, Cold Lake, Hibernia, the Beaufort and the Arctic. The government forgot about where we have been getting oil for years and years. Those people were left out in the cold without any work. Then, to make matters even worse, they made an agreement to buy 400,000 barrels of oil a day from another country. Our wells are plugged up, our people do not have work, some of them are hungry and some of our businesses have gone bankrupt, but we are buying 400,000 barrels a day of Mexican oil. Young men from every other province have left Alberta to go home because the work has dried up under the NEP. I wish anyone who says he is proud of the NEP, as one of the Liberal members did yesterday, would visit some of the homes in my riding in Alberta. He would not be very proud, I tell you. Things are drying up, there is hunger right in the midst of plenty. Maybe not as bad as in 1935, but still very bad.

The hon. member over there can laugh if he likes, but I tell you, when you are hungry, you are hungry. I have gone through the experience, I know what it is like, and some people are suffering in that way right now. The member there can wave his hands if he likes. That is the trouble with this government, it will not even listen to the facts. Well, the day will come when they might wish they had listened.

Mr. Corbin: You are exaggerating.

Mr. Taylor: I am not exaggerating.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Taylor: Go out and take a look for yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: For the sake of exactitude, would the hon. member please back up his statement that we import 400,000 barrels a day from Mexico? Where the heck did he get that idea, just for the sake of facts?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has the floor.

Mr. Taylor: You are importing 40,000 barrels a day.

Mr. Gauthier: You said 400,000 barrels a day.

Mr. Taylor: Forty thousand barrels a day. If I said 400,000, I made an error. But 40,000 barrels a day is just as bad.

Mr. Beatty: Only Allan MacEachen could make an error like that.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, I am making the kind of mistake that the Minister of Finance normally makes. I have been in the House too long already. Let me give you another comparison. You will not like this, but it is very real. But I do not care whether you like it or not; I am not here to please the Liberals. I am here to give you the message from the people who sent me here. I am going to do it whether you like it or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: If you do not like it, you can lump it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the Chair is listening attentively and his remarks are of course directed to the Chair.

Mr. Taylor: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. In 1932 and 1933 Stalin went into the Ukraine and forced the peasants into collective farms. The long-established methods of individual tenure were abolished. When the peasants refused, an artificial famine was induced because they were compelled, during a season of poor harvest, to deliver so much grain to the cities that whole villages died of starvation. At least three million men, women and children were deliberately starved to death and millions more deported to Siberia. History calls it "the artificial famine", brought on because the government was so hungry for taxes that it took practically all the food from those farmers. Look up the history and deny that! That is exactly what this government is doing today, taking so much of the produce from the people that senior citizens are going hungry, businesses are going bankrupt and there is no work. Look at the record, over a million people unemployed. Then you sit there and smile as if you had done something wonderful. Well, Mr. Speaker, the people do not think so.

Because world prices soared much higher than the Canadian price, Ottawa said it would introduce a subsidy to refiners who use imported oil so there will be the same price right across the country. When the international price fell one would assume that the subsidy would be reduced in such a way as to keep the domestic price at least competitive with the foreign price. Yet that is exactly what did not happen. It stays at the same price. The government pours out billions buying foreign oil it does not need. It says we have a contract with Mexico, but the government has a contract with the Canadian people also. You want to see the people of Canada going hungry while you make sure the people of Mexico are fed. Well, Canadians are getting fed up with that.

Then there is this ridiculous budget under which the government taxes people on income they have not even received. And it does that without legislative authority! There is no legislative authority to cut the capital cost allowance in half for the year of purchase. Yet that measure has closed up industries in Ontario, Quebec and the rest of Canada. I know one dealer who ordered eight combines last fall. When that budget was introduced he called the farmers who said they were not buying, they would make their old combines do. So what happened? He cancelled the order for eight combines, which meant a lot of people in Ontario and Quebec went without work. Then the government cancelled IAACs entirely. As a result, land purchases in Western Canada have practically stopped. A farmer's land is his pension, the only one he has. When he sells his land he has to get enough to live on for the rest of his life. He does not have a pension from a Crown corporation or the government. His land is his pension. He can sell his land to multinational corporations, but we do not want them owning our land. At one time he could sell it to his hired hand, his son or his daughter, and he would say, "I know you do not have $250,000. It is my pension for working the land 40 to 50 years, but I will take $10,000 this year and put it in an IAAC; then you can pay me another $20,000 next year and the year following and so on." But now with the budget he is required to pay capital gains on the entire $250,000, money which he does not even have. Consequently he cannot afford to sell his land. People who should be retired have now had their nest eggs ruined by the budget. Today they cannot retire. They must continue working after having worked for several years to reach the point at which they could sell their land and receive a pension. Is that fair? Well, that is what the government's budget does. Hon. members opposite should go out to see some of the farmers who are experiencing this. They are having a difficult time. They are being taxed on money they do not even have. One chap who sold before he knew all the laws had to go out and borrow money at a high rate of interest to pay capital gains tax. It was money he had not even received, but the government must have its pound of flesh and every drop of blood. As I said earlier today, the government is so anxious to obtain every cent it can that it is actually sucking the economic lifeblood out of the nation. This is exactly what it is doing. It is not the only thing that is bad.

Look at the barrels per day of Alberta crude which could have been produced. About $5 billion is going out of the country. This money could have gone to Canadians to purchase trucks and groceries, or could have done many things in the country. The minister said that the government has made a considerable financial investment in the program which over the years amounted to several billion dollars. He also indicated that it represented a direct subsidy to consumers in eastern Canada, the majority of whom are Quebecers. Also he said that it was not difficult to imagine the additional burden which would have to be borne by every family in Quebec if it were not for this subsidy. He went on to say that between 1973 and 1980 Quebecers received $5 billion in payments under the program. We should have been buying crude oil from Alberta with this $5 billion, and Quebecers would have experienced the same prosperity, without it being taken out of the mouths of Albertans.

The National Energy Program is sucking the lifeblood out of the nation. I object to these bills coming before the House and the taxes being levied before they have had legislative approval. It is criminal that the country has reached the stage where the government goes ahead and levies taxes without the authority of Parliament, and then it expects other people in the country to obey the laws.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, would the House allow unanimous consent for the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to answer a brief question before the next speaker is recognized?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's allotted time has expired. This would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Anguish: Would the hon. member give us a brief explanation as to what the view of Liberal premiers in Canada would be on the topic we are discussing this evening?

Mr. Paproski: What Liberal premiers?

Mr. Anguish: Exactly.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, perhaps that is why there are no Liberal premiers in the country, and there will not be a federal Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who is Liberal, much longer.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy being in the House when the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) speaks because he speaks as a populist. Although I do not agree with many of the things he says, he speaks as someone who has been around for quite a while. In fact, he has been around in the Social Credit movement, but I think his views are quite different from those of most Tories who speak as if they and the multinational oil companies were one and the same operation. It is refreshing to hear the other side of the situation, however. I do not disagree with the hon. member that perhaps there is poverty and people who are poor in Alberta. I wonder how this has come about when the government of Alberta has probably the largest revenues per capita of certainly any government in the country and probably of almost any government in the world. It has a massive heritage fund, but at the same time the hon. member tells me that there is poverty and that people are starving. I wonder how that can happen in this land of plenty.

Also I heard the hon. member talk about this institution being non-democratic, a dictatorship, and so on. I cannot quite understand this. He said that the minister was not in the House for a couple of minutes and that he did not remember a situation in the Alberta legislature where a minister was not present all the time a bill like this one was being debated. As I recall the period when the hon. member was a member of the Alberta legislature, which I gather was approximately 25 years, there was rarely more than three or four opposition members. I cannot imagine a bill being discussed more than two or three days with only three or four opposition members, unless the government itself wanted to talk about it forever.

There have been 86 days of debate on the first part of the National Energy Program. There will have been 35 days on this part, and I do not know how many dozens of opposition days along the same line. We have spent at least two thirds of a year in the House or in committee on these bills. The hon. member for Bow River has spoken at least a half dozen or a dozen times. I would say half a dozen would be the minimum because I heard him speak many times. I have spoken at least a dozen times on these bills. How can anyone say that members of the House have not been given a chance to speak on these matters? How can anyone say that this place is undemocratic? It is beyond me. I have spoken at least a dozen times on this or on similar bills. If I sat down and added it up, I am sure it would probably be 20 or 25 times. I just do not understand the notion that this is not a democratic procedure. I do not think there is a parliament anywhere in the world where members would spend more time deliberating on legislation than we do in this Parliament. That is certainly not done in the mother Parliament in Britain where a bill such as this would go through in two or three sittings. It is amazing that hon. members of the opposition are attempting to convey to the public through the television medium that we are not democratic, that we do not have a chance to debate these bills and that they are rammed through. We have spent 86 days, another 35 days, as well as the opposition days, and we are still debating the same bill. I just do not understand.

I started off my comments by saying that the hon. member for Bow River has a different approach. I think it is because he has a different background and a different sensitivity than many of the other members of his party. It was perhaps a week or two ago when I heard the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) speaking to another related bill. He talked about Reaganomics and all of the positive events which were occurring in the United States. I repeatedly heard this from the Conservatives, so I read some of the speeches made by such hon. members as the financial critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). They are all preoccupied with this notion of Reaganomics.

During this debate on the national energy bill I can see the same kind of attitude prevailing, namely that we have to cut taxes to safeguard one segment of our society. It is called the sparrow theory whereby if you feed the horse enough oats the sparrows will survive. That is the type of predominant attitude we find among the majority of members on that side of the House.

Since I am a convert to this particular party, I am familiar with other party philosophies. I have always felt since I have been a member in the House that the Conservative opposition members have a great deal of difficulty in becoming united because they basically do not have a central point of view. They have a large right wing, a very active and articulate left wing—what is called the red Tories—but with really nothing to unite them. That is very different from the party that I belong to. Within the Liberal Party I see a very large centre with some people who move to the right and with some, like myself, who may move somewhat to the left. However, there is a very strong and coherent centre. That is what is lacking in the party on that side of the House.

During the energy debate over the past several weeks what we have heard is the very far right Reaganomic approach to the entire situation. This not only concerns tax cuts, it concerns, as well, matters such as the National Energy Program where the Conservative Party sounds very much like Mr. Brock, the United States government representative who constantly talks about the American government being very disturbed because we are attempting in various ways to achieve a 50 per cent ownership of our natural resources. He is touring the United States, and recently visited Toronto, condemning us for having the effrontery to try to get control of our major resource industry. He is disturbed that we are trying to achieve the modest goal of bringing that industry under 50 per cent Canadian control. That modest goal which we are striving for is difficult to achieve because there is great power and other factors against us. For example, there is the power of the very large global oil companies, there is the United States government, and the Reagan government in particular, as well as the objections we hear from the opposition. These factors make it very difficult for Canada to get control of those resources.

That is the essence of this entire bill. Through this bill we are trying to get control of our resources and, as a nation, attempt to conserve those resources in order to develop them not only for Canadians of today but for future generations. We have heard much about the evils of the National Energy Program having caused a decline of drilling activity in the west and the fact that many rigs have left for the United States. Hon. members say this is mostly due to the National Energy Program, but they ignore many other factors which come into play.

Between 1980 and 1982 when this government has been in power there has been a net decline of 8 to 10 per cent in the consumption of oil in Canada. That is a very desirable decline. Most of the hon. members opposite were here in 1978-79, but presumably they have very short memories. If hon. members recall the winter of 1978-79, there was an actual decline of 50,000 barrels per day in the production of oil from western reserves. That 50,000 barrels is the actual amount we are purchasing from Mexico today. If hon. members will remember this period, they will recall the deep concern about the fact that we were not going to be able to get through that winter, similar to the circumstances we faced the previous winter. They will also remember that when they were in power they were concerned about getting a contract with the Mexican government to purchase oil. They were unable to get an agreement with the Mexican government because instead of going there as a government, they sent Exxon to do it. The Mexican government was not having anything to do with multinationals, and therefore the Conservative government could not make a deal with that particular country. The ones who made the deal was our own Petro-Canada, the very company that that government wanted to get rid of. Those are the facts. That is why we were able to make that deal.

We may not need those 50,000 barrels of oil today and we may not be getting that oil from the western reserves, but it is not leaking away. The great myth that we hear from the other side today is that somehow that oil in western Canada will disappear if we do not pump it out and get rid of it as fast as we can. As I said, it is as if there were a hole below the earth's crust which will drain all the oil. That oil will eventually be produced. If we do not use that 50,000 barrels a day from western reserves today, it will be there for future generations. I do not understand the nonsense coming from the hon. members who say that we must get that oil quickly because we need the revenue from it. I suggest that every barrel of oil in the ground today will be worth a lot more to future generations than it is today, and it will be much more meaningful to future generations of Canadians. What is not pumped out now will be of untold value to our children and our great grandchildren. Therefore, I do not deplore the fact that we are not taking that oil out of the ground.

I believe it is an established fact that one of the reasons why there is not as much drilling taking place in western reserves is that there is not that much more oil left in western reserves. Drilling operations have not uncovered a lot of oil in those reserves.

In 1978-79 and during the time of the Conservative government, we were told that the production from the western reserves would decline to about 10 per cent of the production in 1980 by 1990. That is, in the 1990s production would be 10 per cent of the 1980s. I believe that those figures were somewhat pessimistic. Our consumption of oil has declined to such a degree that it makes that prediction impossible. Due to conservation we will receive a few more years of oil production from those reserves. Those western reserves will not be there forever if we pump oil out at the rate we have been doing it in the last 10 or 15 years.

Therefore, I believe that Canadians, after looking at the National Energy Program and the many other factors, including conservation, can say that the decline in consumption by 8 to 10 per cent in the last two years has been beneficial and not detrimental. If the people of Alberta are suffering at this stage, they had better look to their provincial government whose revenues are larger than any other government in history and probably any other government in the free world. If there is hardship in Alberta, Albertans should look to their government which has these large sums of money at its disposal.

I have mentioned this significant decline in consumption which is due partially to conservation and partially to the various incentives that this government, through the National Energy Program, has developed over the last ten years. For example, the CHIP program has spent a lot of money in conversion from oil to gas which has promoted conservation in many ways. I would like to see this continued. One of the effects of conservation is the actual decline in oil consumption.

Of course, another reason for the decline in oil consumption has been the general recession. It was very interesting the other day when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) did a little work and pulled out a few figures to indicate that this is a global recession and that it is affecting oil companies throughout the world. He quoted the figures and indicated, for instance, that in this country Gulf Canada, Shell Canada and Texaco Canada outperformed their international parents. I am sure that hon. members opposite do not believe that, because they maintain that the National Energy Program is destroying all of this industry, but in this country they outperformed their parent companies. The minister also pointed out that the earnings of some of the major oil companies in the United States declined in the last year. For instance, the first quarter earnings of Occidental were down 76 per cent over last year's first quarter, and Marathon was down 71 per cent. These are all United States companies. Standard California was down 65 per cent, Mobil was down 49 per cent and Texaco was down 44 per cent. These are the companies in the United States, many of them having large holdings in Canada, whose revenues are declining. Also remember that Exxon has abandoned the oil shale project on which it spent very large sums of money in the United States. So none of the companies in the United States are affected by the National Energy Program. It was not the National Energy Program which made the parent Gulf company do worse than the Canadian Gulf, or the Shell Canada or Texaco do worse than the Canadian companies. It was a series of other things. The National Energy Program has not hindered these companies. As a matter of fact, it has made it possible for us to develop a long-term program, and those companies and many others in this country are doing extremely well. So it is a myth. This particular program is designed to bring those resources to Canadians, to develop them for the good of all Canadians and not to export the profits from these developments to some other foreign country. We should be duly proud of that program and not condemn it, as the hon. members opposite have been doing.

I would like to refer to natural gas for a minute. I keep hearing the story that there is a tragedy out west because we capped about a thousand gas wells and that those wells could be pumping gas—I do not know where, but probably to the United States.

Mr. Kempling: They do not pump gas.

Mr. McRae: We could derive massive revenues from that. As I said before, one would almost think that there were some kinds of perforations in the caps so that the gas was leaking out, disappearing, and then all of a sudden, by the time we got around to it in three or four years, after pumping it out, there would be no gas left. I get the feeling that members feel that the stuff is evaporating into the air and that we are losing all of it. There is one way of getting rid of this gas in a hurry, and that is by pumping it across to the United States. But when that government of the party opposite was in power in 1979, for a mercifully short period, it supported the National Energy Board in allowing for increased exports to the United States. The then minister was asked by the present minister, by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), by myself and by others, time and time again, "When is the cut-off, with the new discoveries and everything? When will the supply of the western reserve gas equal the demand for the western reserve gas?" The answer was "In 1997". In 1997, my son will be 40 years of age. At that stage, he may have a child of four or five years of age and we will run out of gas at that point or—

Mr. Kempling: When are you going to run out of gas?

Mr. McRae: That is the figure that he eventually gave us after being asked four or five times in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. senator, Senator Foghorn, could answer a question.

Mr. McRae: I always enjoy questions. I would like to answer a question if the hon. member would like to ask one.

Mr. Shields: I just wondered if the hon. Senator Foghorn would accept a question. Oh, he would, would he? I would ask how many days, how many weeks or how many months the hon. member has spent in the oilfields of western Canada, or in Canada.

Mr. Kempling: None.

Mr. McRae: I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, how much time I have spent in the oilfields, but I guess it is certainly not as much as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). He certainly spent a great deal more time there, and it is my hope that he spends a great deal more time there in the future. I have spent some time in the oilfields but not a lot. I do not know what that has to do with the situation. I have not spent very much time on Wall Street, either, but I think many of the people here know a little bit about some of the things going on in the world without being there.

I would like to talk about gas because I think this is an important feature. Basically, there is one way we can get rid of this gas that is capped. One way to get rid of it very rapidly would be to export it. That is a good thing. It would mean there would be export dollars coming in, and so on. But as I indicated, with that crossover line of 1997, which may change, it also means that when we sell or export today, we will not have it for Canadians in the future. I think that the future should be our chief consideration. That gas is not disappearing. That gas is being kept there for future generations of Canadians and there will be much more drilling going on at such time as we need more gas. I believe this to be the prime reason that there has not been the kind of drilling going on in the western reserves, both for oil and gas, that there was before. In one manner or another there was enough at a particular stage of the game to do what was done, particularly in the gas field, and these wells were capped. It is my opinion that we should uncap them as the need arises, and the gas will flow, and then we can explore for some more. We created tremendous incentives in the mid-seventies to drill continually, but after the drilling it was said that we had to get rid of the stuff, that we had to sell it to the United States and quickly export it because we could not afford it. We spent all that money on drilling, but suddenly all the incentives were created for export purposes. This was not for the long-term future of Canadians, for the future generations who will have to keep warm and will need these fuels to survive.

Mr. Taylor: I thought you wanted self-sufficiency in oil.

Mr. McRae: It is important that we understand that under this National Energy Program we are attempting to do what should have been done years ago. It is what any self-respecting country would do. I am very critical of the governments which were in power in this country for 40 or 50 years and did not do this. However, I am very proud that I am part of a government which is now doing what should have been done years ago, that is, getting control of these resources for Canadians. It is ridiculous that the other side condemns us. It constantly condemns us because we have set up a national oil company. We bought out three companies. According to the other side, it was terrible that we should have done this. It suggested that in no way should we have done that and that we should depend exclusively upon the private sector to Canadianize itself. That will not happen that way. I was very pleased—

Mr. Stevens: Why? Why will it not happen?

Mr. McRae: When Petro-Canada bid for Husky Oil, I was very pleased. Husky Oil had some very good holdings in this country which will be very valuable in the long run, particularly involving heavy oil, when we get around to that. I was also very pleased when Petro-Canada did not get it and the bid went to Nova Corporation or Alberta Gas Trunk Lines which bought this company. It therefore became a Canadian company, allowing Petro-Canada to go out and buy Phillips a little later. It seemed to me that we got the best of all deals. We got the Canadian portion of two important American companies operating in Canada. One is in the private sector and one was obtained by Petro-Canada. That is the way Canadians are. They believe in a mixed economy, not Reaganomics. We do not believe that anything the state does is bad and anything the private sector does is good. That is not true.

I find it difficult when the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) talks about our ridding ourselves of Crown corporations and then talks about all the corporations initiated, acquired or built under good Conservative governments such as Ontario Hydro or PWA, which was taken from the private sector into the bosom of the Alberta government.

These kinds of things have been done in this country for a long time. Knowing Canadians, I am sure it will continue. It does not starve either the private or the public sector. They work hand in hand. The party opposite tries to drive a wedge between the private and public sectors, accepting the idea that is common with Mr. Reagan and the ultra-rightwingers in the United States that anything the state does is bad. It is something that party is introducing into the House of Commons. It is a bad thing. It is not because Conservative governments since the beginning of this country have done the kinds of things we are doing.

Mr. Stevens: Not true.

Mr. McRae: I have to defend that situation.

Mr. Stevens: Tell the truth.

Mr. Kempling: You can't trust a Grit.

Mr. McRae: Canadians are becoming more self-sufficient because of this ownership. We are acquiring the means to be self-sufficient.

Mr. Stevens: You are nothing but a socialist.

Mr. McRae: It is too bad I am deaf because I would like to hear what members opposite are saying. Canadians want to be self-sufficient, and we are moving in that direction. In the past two years we decreased by about 5 per cent our reliance on foreign sources. As I say, we are moving slowly in that direction. Canada is now about 81 per cent self-sufficient in oil. That is not better than we always were, but it is better than in the recent past. If we continue to do what we are doing, the situation will continue to improve. I think of the Hibernia and the Dome project in the Beaufort as areas where we will succeed.

Most members on this side were disappointed that the tar sands project did not go ahead. We hope that in the next three or four years it will proceed, possibly in a different way. One of the most significant statements regarding this project was made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He talked about the type of technology that is developing. If we are going to do the job and get the oil out of the tar sands in large quantities, we must develop technology. The hon. member said it may be good that we did not go ahead at this point because technology could improve over the next few years. He said it may be cheaper, that we may get more out of it, and in the long run the country will be better off.

We must continue to develop these areas, but at a rate that we as Canadians can do it. We should not take all the oil out, export it and make future generations suffer. That is what would happen if members opposite were still in government. They are not concerned about future generations. They are concerned about the quick buck, and let future generations worry about themselves.

I now come back to the theme I have been developing throughout my speech. In the right-wing of the Progressive Conservative Party there is a large segment known as red Tories. They believe in Reaganomics, the whole sparrow theory of taxes. Those are the kinds of things they want for this country. It is that party that wants to be associated with United States interests.

The other day the hon. member for York-Peel condemned the government for the Bombardier-New York deal. I see that groups in the United States are now joining the hon. member in trying to prevent those 2,500 jobs from going to Canadians.

Mr. Stevens: How many?

Mr. McRae: Twenty-five hundred. Did I say 25,000?

Mr. Stevens: How about the American jobs?

Mr. McRae: We have an Export Development Corporation which the opposition spends much time condemning. The fact that we are doing what is being done in Japan, Germany, the United States, France and other countries, setting up financial deals in order to be more successful in our export trade, is something that should be praised, not condemned.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering if the hon. member will accept one more question.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I felt the last question was rather frivolous. I assume this will be the same type of question. I would rather use the time in my own way.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member referred to me two or three times in his speech. I am hoping he will entertain a question from me.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I will finish my remarks and then I will be glad to accept a question from the hon. member. We have an argument here that is rather important.

It is very important to sell on the export market, but that is very difficult at this time. A company in Thunder Bay, Hawker Siddeley, tried to sell on the export market. It did not lose out because of quality or price. It could not compete with the loan that EDC would make. Therefore it is tremendously important that we assist our export trade.

Those on the other side do not place the same importance on this. That is why I say there is a significant difference between the approach taken by this side and that of members opposite. We follow a middle-of-the-road approach in an attempt to rationalize the industry and bring it under Canadian ownership without going to excess.

This is a centre party. The Conservative opposition wants to move everything to the right. It wants to function with the sparrow theory of economics, cutting taxes and giving incentives to large corporations. The NDP wants to move too rapidly. They want us to do far too much. This country could not stand the strain of an ideological left or an ideological right. This country must be kept together, and this can only be done with a centre-type of government.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am glad to have the opportunity to ask this question. We will see whether the hon. member takes it as frivolous or not. Does the hon. member realize that yesterday in Edmonton the largest auction sale of oil field equipment from the oil patch was held? It was the largest in the history of the oil industry. Does the hon. member also know that brand new drilling rigs worth $1 million were sold for $510,000 on an unreserved auction sale? Does the hon. member also know that the equipment—

• (2130)

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Shields: Does the hon. member also know that the equipment was owned by Canadians, that the sale went for a period of five or six consecutive hours, and that the buyers were all Americans and all Canadians were selling? That was caused by the energy policy of this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, order. I recognized the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order, but obviously there was not very much of a point of order. He asked, in keeping with our tradition, whether or not he might ask the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) a question. That is fine. If it is not going to be a point of order, at least let there be an attempted question, relatively brief. Does the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan choose to answer the question, or shall I recognize the next speaker?

An hon. Member: No, no, give him a chance.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I have already heard the question and of course I know. The answer is, yes, and I know it because he has told me. I do not disagree with the hon. member. What he has said is true and since what the hon. member says is true, that these rigs are going for half or less than half what they are worth, then there cannot be such a demand from the other side or other areas for the same thing, otherwise they would be going for more than what they are worth. We are talking about international commerce. I find the question could easily include what I have been saying all along, that is, there is a decline all over in this business and it is true in respect of these sales.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, order. If the House chooses to pursue this question and answer business during the time of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), then I should recognize the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave).

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk, in this third reading debate on Bill C-112, mainly on natural gas. There is good reason for that. I live in an area where natural gas has been part of my heritage, going back in our history for a hundred years. That is a long time in southern Alberta, I can assure you. Natural gas has been a part of my whole life, so I think it is appropriate to make some comments about it and about the implications of this particular bill on that total industry, at least that side of the total oil and gas industry.

Yesterday I was privileged and pleased to participate in the Committee of the Whole House on this same bill. I found it was a very frustrating and quite unsatisfactory debate. Here we were discussing energy issues of vital concern to western Canada and especially to Alberta and especially on all taxation matters relating to natural gas. It was a disappointing committee stage, primarily because this bill is the official responsibility of the wrong cabinet minister. The hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is a very genuine and sincere minister. I worked with him a year ago on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when we were discussing the Bank Act.

An hon. Member: Good man.

Mr. Hargrave: That is when we were discussing the implications of agriculture on the Bank Act, a very important part of it. I would say his expertise is not in the area of oil and natural gas in all its various aspects, in our Canadian exploration and production. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) should have been the responsible minister for this bill. After all, it is totally about energy. He should have attended yesterday's committee stage and participated as well in this final third reading debate today.

Natural gas is historically part of our Alberta heritage. The city of Medicine Hat and most of southeastern Alberta is underlaid with rather vast resources in natural gas. Today we in the city of Medicine Hat and all of southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan are deeply concerned about the negative developments following the introduction of the National Energy Program in the October 1980 budget.

The atmosphere in yesterday's committee stage was not conducive to a reasonable exchange of comments from opposition members and at least a genuine attempt at an answer from the Minister of State for Finance.

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) participated with a speech only. He had no questions. I would like to respond in part at this time. Here is a direct quotation from page 17802 of Hansard of part of his speech:

> I have a very vital interest in the National Energy Program and, more particularly, in the negotiations which were carried on, happily and satisfactorily to the benefit, or at least to the mutual credit, I would say, of the three producing provinces and the federal government.

Now present day circumstances in the oil and gas industry are certainly not in the "happily and satisfactorily" beneficial state. This was a very inaccurate statement. It is very well known by all of us from the west that our petroleum industry has been in a declining and worsening state ever since the introduction of the National Energy Program over a year and a half ago. If the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton had been anywhere in western Canada, he would be well aware of the real situation and he could hardly avoid the reality of our western situation now. A little later on in the same speech, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, in response to a question as to how he was received when he visited the west, had this to say:

> They received me very well because they are quite often surprised to hear that there is another side to the issue and that countries with oil production feel it appropriate when they sometimes give depletion allowances and, in other cases, capital cost allowances.

Now, listen to this:

> They are all significant areas of federal tax positions which made it possible to discover this oil in the first place.

Well, that is quite a statement to make. Again, here is this very inaccurate and misleading statement, I must say. It is well known that it was American capital, and initially American expertise that made Alberta's oil and gas industry possible. It is a well known fact throughout the west. Without that United States capital financing we would still be waiting for federal and central Canadian capital funding.

Now a word about my own city of Medicine Hat. In my nearly ten years of representation of my home city and all of southeastern Alberta, I have never seen such serious concern and despair over any issue as we now have, due entirely to the punitive and discriminatory natural gas taxes in this legislation. Already over $15 million has been paid by the city of Medicine Hat to the federal government for these gas taxes. But they are being paid under protest. The city of Medicine Hat owns its own utilities, it has always owned them and has developed its own electrical power by the use of natural gas.

At present the mayor, Ted Grimm, and council insist that these taxes are both illegal and unconstitutional. There is at present a court case under way in Calgary to determine the legality of the application of that tax. Some citizens are so upset that they are refusing to pay the natural gas portion of their utility bills.

On April 19 last I was privileged and pleased to present a petition on behalf of 12,689 adult citizens of my city who strongly oppose these gas taxes, which are already causing an over 100 per cent increase in their utility bills, and that is only over a period of one and a half years. That petition also fully endorses the city's legal action against the federal government. I can assure hon. members that this is a very harsh reality to be faced by the elderly and retired citizens in my home city. There is a great number of retired farmers in my city, mostly from southwestern Saskatchewan, who for years have been moving to Medicine Hat for their retirement, primarily because of natural gas.

Now there is a speçial situation pertaining to Alberta's greenhouse industry which requires some special comments. Just a week ago today there was a special protest meeting, so to speak. It was a public meeting held in the town of Redcliff to discuss the situation and what the natural gas taxes have done to Alberta's greenhouse industry. It was a very significant meeting.

I want to remind the House that Alberta's greenhouse industry is the fourth largest in all of Canada, so it is a very important one. It was founded primarily because of the availability of inexpensive natural gas, and it began close to 100 years ago. There are a few disadvantages, such as the distance between us and our markets. We supply primarily cut flowers to the greater part of western Canada, and there is the problem of non-availability of common carriers to transport those cut flowers. There are the costs of machinery and other imported goods and, of course, the cost of labour, but by far the greatest cost is the incredible increase in the cost of natural gas used for heating greenhouses.

The operator of one particular greenhouse operation, known as the Redcliff Greenhouses, made a statement at that meeting a week ago today saying that by the end of this year its annual gas fuel bill will be six times its bill of just a year ago. Redcliff Greenhouses has identified what its fuel cost figures have been over the last four years, and they tell quite a story. Very briefly, here it is; in 1979 the operation's natural gas cost totalled $9,130. That represented 1.3 per cent of its gross costs. In 1980 those cost had risen to $14,000, or 1.8 per cent of its gross costs. In 1981 the cost totalled $40,000, or 4.5 per cent of gross cost. However, its estimated 1982 costs are $83,800, or a 9.9 per cent increase. Is it any wonder that there is a very grave concern about the survival of the total greenhouse industry in my home city and, in fact, all across southern Alberta?

Now a word about the agricultural food cost aspect as it is affected by the additional costs of natural gas due to these taxes. They are already the largest single factor in the rapidly rising cost of food across the prairies. About 80 per cent of Alberta's 85,000 farmers now have natural gas service to their farmsteads. It is a significant accomplishment to have natural gas in almost every farm in Alberta. Across southern Alberta on our irrigated lands natural gas has become a major source of energy for sprinkler irrigation, especially the centre pivot type. Over the last two years this energy source has quickly become the most expensive, much higher in price now than diesel fuel and electrical power. Electrical energy is now the most economical, and not too long ago it was the most expensive.

On a province-wide basis the oil and gas taxes have increased the cost of farm fuels and fertilizers by staggering amounts. The end result, of course, is much higher food costs for both humans and livestock.

The oil and gas well servicing industry is a very important sector in Alberta. It is not a big multinational group including large Canadian-owned companies, but this sector, which services individual drilling operations, is a very important sector, and it is headquartered to a large degree in my constituency. It includes a wide variety of small equipment units, from the very large drilling rig outfits that sometimes require 40 or more trucks to move a single outfit to the individual single truck outfits such as water haulers. This total industry has been devastated by the National Energy Program. The town of Brooks in the northwest corner of my riding had a population of about 9,000 a couple of years ago. It has shrunk since. This area is probably the hardest hit service centre in western Canada, but the cities of Medicine Hat and Red Deer and other smaller centres have also suffered and continue to suffer.

The tragedy is that almost all of these service outfits are Canadian developed and Canadian owned, and they are the original private enterprise outfits, although a significant number are no longer now operating, for reasons of bankruptcy, no work available or forced moves to other areas, especially to the United States, and some of them even to the continent of Australia.

Not too long ago the Alberta government announced a new and special assistance program amounting to over $5 billion which specifically recognizes the special circumstances and needs of this servicing industry. Yesterday at the committee stage I asked the Minister of State for Finance if he did not feel it appropriate that the federal government contribute a similar amount—at least some—and after a second prompting his reply was this:

> About the natural gas servicing industry, I must admit to the hon. member that that proposal is not now under consideration.

That, of course, is a very severe disappointment to all of us in Alberta. I think there was an opportunity there for some joint action by both levels of government.

We have a situation in the heavy crude oil area of our energy production in southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan on which I want to make a brief comment. While it is not generally known, there is a smaller but significant heavy oil industry in those two areas, the whole of southwestern Saskatchewan and in the Suffield military reserve. Most of these wells are closed in and not producing, mostly because they are not economic to operate. This is partly due to the long haul to the United States upgrader refineries where it must be hauled for refining, but the planned upgrader plant for Saskatchewan which seems to have been shelved for now—perhaps indefinitely—because of the uncertainties brought on by the National Energy Program, is a major reason why these are uneconomic to produce.

I want to make some special comments about mineral rights in western Canada and offshore rights. My colleague, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), has already referred to this item of prairie history, and it is an interesting part of our history. By 1905 the three prairie provinces were part of confederation, but what is not generally known is that our lands as well as our mineral rights were not ours to sell or rent for needed revenues until 1930, 25 years after Alberta and Saskatchewan were created. It is no wonder we were essentially bankrupt for our first 25 years. Then, after getting our land and mineral rights in 1930, we had to endure the next ten years of drought and depression. By comparison, Ontario and Quebec have enjoyed their land and mineral rights since confederation. In other words, they have enjoyed those rights from day one. In all fairness, is it not appropriate that today Newfoundland's offshore resources rightfully belong to Newfoundland? Newfoundland's claim is perfectly understandable and long overdue. Certainly all of western Canada feels like this about this issue. Members on this side comment on it at every opportunity in light of developments in this House over the last few weeks.

I think it is most unfortunate that our history has left this unfinished business as far as one of our newest provinces is concerned, and I hope we have the good common sense to resolve it in a way agreeable to all.

There is one other matter on which I want to comment, and that is in reference to the natural gas and gas liquid tax in the provision regarding the production of natural gas in the Northwest Territories. Until 1987, any gas production that is exported from the territories will be taxed, while all production from the rest of Canada in the same period will not be taxed. This is an unfair situation and we should address ourselves to it. If any area needs encouragement in getting the gas flowing now, it is the Northwest Territories with its vast potential that is waiting to be developed. It is almost uneconomical to produce the amount that is at present being produced for export because of the application of this tax.

It has been my pleasure to contribute to proceedings in Committee of the Whole House and third reading debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on this bill, although my remarks will be brief as there are only eight minutes left in the debate.

I should like to point out to hon. members that the hardship imposed by the tax that this bill deals with was drastically illustrated yesterday when the largest unreserved auction sale in the history of the oil industry took place in Edmonton. There were drilling rigs, trucks and all types of oilwell-servicing equipment that were put on the auction block. The sad thing is that members on this side of the House, particularly those from Alberta, have time and again attempted to bring to the attention of the government the damage that the National Energy Program has done to western Canada and the once strong and viable oil industry.

Every piece of equipment at that auction yesterday was owned by Canadians who had invested their hopes, their future, their dreams, their time, their expertise and their money in developing one of the strongest and most viable oilwell-servicing industries in North America.

The development of this sector of the oil industry contributed to the research and development that the government is constantly saying is required in Canada, and it was done by Canadians. Because of the National Energy Program, however, this company found itself facing bankruptcy, and so had to sell off its equipment. These were drilling rigs that were designed and fabricated in the plant in Alberta and which had never spudded into a hole. They were brand new. The manufacturer felt that one particular piece of equipment would have to fetch at least $1 million in order for him to break even, but it sold for $510,000.

I have been in my office listening to the debate on the monitor and I have also been here in the House listening to hon. members opposite discuss the implications of the tax on the oil industry and on the people of Canada. I must try to get across to them that this tax has dried up the cash flow of the very companies that we are asking to find new oil so that we can reach energy self-sufficiency within a reasonable time. It is absolutely impossible for this country to reach oil self-sufficiency by 1990, as any knowledgeable forecaster will tell you.

Alsands and the Imperial Oil project at Cold Lake have been abandoned, as has been the pipeline. We cannot even hope to explore the areas in the western basin that are reported to have oil. The enhanced recovery programs are not moving forward, yet we constantly hear that we will reach oil self-sufficiency because we still have Hibernia. We all know about the Hibernia fiasco and what is happening there. The government and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is now attacking Newfoundland in the way that it attacked Alberta.

The government also speaks of the vast oil exploration program in the Beaufort Sea, but knowledgeable people writing in the newspapers and business journals explain what is happening there. It has become clear that we will not get any great quantity of oil from the Beaufort Sea in the 1980s. Our only hope for oil self-sufficiency in Canada in the intermediate term was to develop the tar sands and the oil sands. The Cold Lake plant was one giant research project, but the tax that we are about to vote on hit investors so hard that they felt they could not go ahead with it. They did not have enough cash flow from other operations in Canada to support the massive investment of $13 billion that was required. The investment community has lost confidence in the government, Mr. Speaker. It must redesign the national energy policy and it must redesign the budget. It must get Canada moving again!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being ten o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Friday, May 7, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith without further debate or amendment every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the bill now before the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in order to prop up the dollar the government raised interest rates in Canada to the highest level in nearly six months. At the same time, earlier this week, the Americans dropped their T-bill rates to 11.48 per cent. Canadians now pay as much as 3.7 per cent more interest than Americans pay. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the government cease blaming the Americans for its made-in-Canada high interest rate policy, cease using interest rates as a special tax on Canadians to cover its total mismanagement of the economy, and immediately take steps to reduce interest rates so that our interest rates are comparable to the American interest rates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DECLINE IN VALUE OF DOLLAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, in spite of present high interest rate policy and heavy intervention by the Bank of Canada, the Canadian dollar fell yesterday to within one half of a cent of its record low of 80.08 cents set in December of 1931. This situation simply reflects the appalling economic policy of the incompetent Liberal government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the backbenchers of the Liberal government urge the Minister of Finance to bring in sweeping new measures which will stop the erosion of our dollar and will give some sense of hope and direction to the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

TWENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Today is the twenty-first birthday of Amnesty International, the internationally respected human rights movement which is independent of government, political grouping, ideology, economic interest or religious creed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and supported, I am sure, by all hon. members in this House:

That the House recognize the outstanding work done by Amnesty International for the promotion of human rights throughout the world, congratulate it on the occasion of its twenty-first birthday, and wish Amnesty International many more years of success in its work to free prisoners of conscience, to halt torture and execution, and to seek fair trials for political prisoners.

Madam Speaker: The House might want to applaud this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF OUTSTANDING SCHOOL PATROLLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. There are three outstanding young Canadians in the gallery today and they are to be honoured at noon by the Governor General for their acts of bravery while on duty as school patrollers. Their actions resulted in saving several young lives. I accordingly move, seconded by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen):

That the House recognize Karen Dickson, Lora Lee Kurylo and Jason Roberge for their courage and resourcefulness. These young school patrollers have shown qualities and dedication we all can admire.

Madam Speaker: Perhaps the House will want to applaud these young heroes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONDEMNATION OF TAXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, taxes under the national energy policy are sucking the lifeblood out of the oil and gas industry: excise taxes, incremental oil revenue taxes, petroleum and gas revenue taxes, Canadian ownership taxes, natural gas taxes, natural gas liquid taxes, taxes on ethane, butane, etc. It is no wonder the industry is drying up, leaving hundreds of unemployed, and scores leaving the country. There have already been more than 3,800 bankruptcies of businesses in 1982.

• (1110)

The Alberta and Saskatchewan governments are cancelling some taxes and cutting back on royalties to help, but the insatiable desire of this Liberal government for more and more money just cannot seem to be satisfied. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House demand that the cabinet ministers and the Liberal government and the Liberal Members of Parliament come out of their ivory tower and into the real world and start cutting back on taxes and royalties, or else throw in the sponge.

No government has a right to live in luxury while its subjects exist on relief and unemployment insurance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, in preparing for the Versailles conference, the government has been forced to give statistical evidence of its complete failure. We now learn that for the first time in 18 years the Canadian economy will decline rather than grow. The gross national product will fall .5 per cent rather than rise 2.2 per cent as forecast by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). This government has now admitted its complete bankruptcy. It is bankrupt of programs. It is bankrupt of ideas. It is bankrupt of capable people. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House demand that the incompetent Minister of Finance, the incompetent Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the incompetent Minister of Justice, in fact, the whole incompetent cabinet, and the incompetent and irrelevant Prime Minister resign, call an election, and let the Canadian people get the monkeys in this government off their backs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF QUEBEC TAXES ON MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the National Assembly in Quebec tabled Bill C-74. As the 74 Liberal members opposite from Quebec know, Bill C-74 is aimed at them since many among them have established residences in the province of Ontario where provincial taxes are lower and can save them as much as $4,000 or $5,000 a year. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House ask all Liberal Members of Parliament, especially cabinet ministers, from Quebec to pay their taxes in Quebec as every one of their constituents must, and not try to evade their responsibility to their provincial government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

DELAY IN KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that the Atlantic fishery is plagued with plant closings, threatened bankruptcies, high interest rates, exchange rate disadvantages, low prices, unemployment, and now, to the shame of the government, harassment from the Department of National Revenue, and given the fact that all of this was obvious to the government as long ago as last summer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House condemn the government for its lack of action, and especially that this House deplore the fact that the Kirby task force, established to come up with answers to the present and continuing crisis, will not report until, at the soonest, September, leaving the fishing industry and those dependent upon it in confusion and uncertainty.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF JOB-CREATION MEASURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity. Last November the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) forecast the unemployment rate for 1982 as 7.8 per cent. Yesterday he revised it upward to 9.2 per cent. The minister's gross errors in economic forecasting and planning have significantly contributed to an additional 230,000 Canadians being without work. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Finance immediately introduce measures designed to create job opportunities for Canadians so as to redress the impact of his iniquitous November budget which callously added another 200,000 Canadians to the unemployment rolls.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

DEMAND THAT UNLEADED GAS PRICES BE POSTED AT SERVICE STATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) admitted in a letter that the growing spread between the pump prices of leaded and unleaded gasoline could be the result of unleaded gasoline prices never being posted at Canadian gasoline stations. A number of U.S. States, including California and New York, have already forced the posting of all gas prices at each service station in an attempt to remedy a similar situation south of the border. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

• (1115)

That the government take immediate action to require the posting of unleaded gas prices at service stations across this country in order to bring down the price of unleaded gas and thus protect the consumers of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FUTURE OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, on the continuing issue of Dorval and Mirabel. In view of the extreme interest shown by members of all parties, such as the hon. members from Lachine, Châteauguay, Vaudreuil, Annapolis Valley, and so on, I want to ask the minister very seriously how much longer he will equivocate and delay in coming to grips with this festering sore on Canadian aviation, and indeed on international aviation, called Mirabel. When will he make a decision on the relationship between the sound, well-used and satisfactory airport called Dorval and the white elephant many miles—or should I say kilometres—away? How much longer will we have to wait for a decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already said how much I regretted having mentioned a date. I was hoping that public opinion and my colleagues here in this House would have looked at the spirit of what I was doing, not at the letter or the date I was indicating. I hope to present my views on the subject very soon to my colleagues. I do not dare mention a date any more. Then it will go through the discussions of cabinet, and the final result will be announced.

COSTS ASSOCIATED WITH MIRABEL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, it is a refreshing change to have this minister and indeed this government finally beginning to pay some attention to public opinion. That is an innovation around here. The minister knows that if it were not for some common sense and determination, Canadians would by now have had another monstrosity like Mirabel foisted on them at Pickering. I would like the minister to give me, if he could, some rationale as to how we can cut down the tremendous continuing losses the extent of which, together with the additional construction cost, will probably never be known. Are we going to continue to undermine a profitable airport with the intent of propping up a loser? Can he give some indication of his policy and his thinking in this regard now?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, both at Mirabel and at Pickering the use of the land is being optimized. The Minister of Communications is making an announcement today, as a matter of fact, on the use of the surplus land at Mirabel. He will indicate what will be sold, and what will be rented, and what will be protected. At Pickering similar action was taken some months ago. We have established a regime for the maximum use of the land in both cases. In Mirabel and at Pickering, sufficient lands are being kept for future use, both for Pickering as a secondary airport to Malton and for Mirabel as a complementary airport to Dorval.

PLANNED USE OF MIRABEL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that, unfortunately, a lot of the land in the Mirabel area has been rendered almost useless for agricultural purposes by bulldozing and other methods that were necessary when this white elephant was being constructed.

I would ask him, finally, if it is true that the Minister of Communications, his cabinet colleague, is pushing for a three-hour rule, meaning that all flights over three hours would land at Mirabel. That would also mean, Madam Speaker, that people in Quebec City, for example, would have to deplane at Dorval, take a $40 taxi ride to Mirabel, and lose many hours of travel time in order to get to the United States. Is it true, as well, that the Minister of Communications wants all charters to be transferred from Dorval to Mirabel?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is terrible.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is exactly what has been going on for a number of weeks now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Make a fuss in cabinet.

Mr. Pepin: A number of people, well intentioned and knowledgeable, in many cases, have come out with compromise solutions for what to do with Mirabel. Two have been indicated by my hon. friend. One is to put in Mirabel every route which is more than three hours away from Montreal. Another idea referred to a moment ago by the hon. member is to direct all charter flights to Mirabel and not to Dorval. In my presentation to the cabinet in the coming weeks I will be indicating the difficulties, the advantages and the disadvantages of each of the compromise solutions which have been offered, and the judgment of the cabinet will be exercised on all issues, the extreme ones and the middle of the road ones.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPORT OF URANIUM MATERIAL TO ARGENTINA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Canadian government intend to embargo the planned shipment of 3,000 uranium bundles to Argentina on the ground that it is too risky to maintain a program of nuclear co-operation with a militaristic regime which has defied international standards by invading the Falklands and cannot be trusted not to use Canadian materials to make a nuclear bomb, and can the minister state what Canada's reaction will be if Argentina attacks the Queen Elizabeth II at sea with 3,000 soldiers aboard?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I have stated in this House several times, the government has no intention of imposing export controls of that kind. If we did have export controls as well as import controls, they would likely be of the kind that the previous government adopted after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. They would likely not apply to pre-existing contracts but only to new contracts. We not only have an undertaking from Argentina that Argentina will not use any nuclear technology or material from Canada for non-peaceful purposes but, of course, there will also be inspection of Argentine facilities by the International Atomic Energy Agency which will serve as a guarantee of the peaceful use of our nuclear facilities.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I would like to repeat my question about the reaction of the Canadian government if Argentina attacks the Queen Elizabeth II at sea, but my supplementary question is related to the question of exports versus imports and sanctions. I want to know why the government has applied sanctions against Argentina only on the import side, which allows Canada to continue to export nuclear technology to this repressive and dangerous regime, thus weakening the support we should be giving Britain, which is trying to uphold international standards of law and order in this moment of grave crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman's second question was really answered in my first answer. The fact is that we have not imposed export controls, nor has the European community. If we did impose them, they would not be of the kind that would affect existing contracts in any event, because that is not customary with sanctions of this kind.

DEVELOPMENT OF ARGENTINIAN NUCLEAR CAPABILITY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who must realize that what we are talking about here is not the export of butter or wheat or even eggs. What we are talking about here is the export of nuclear fissionable materials, and there is a big difference. How far is the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to accept that the aggressive and belligerent activities of the Government of Argentina can go, including the building of a plutonium reprocessing plant which could use the plutonium waste from the Candu reactor being built in Argentina by Canada? How far does Argentina have to go before the Government of Canada is prepared to halt its export of nuclear materials?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I referred previously to the record of the former government with respect to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. When asked the other day by the press as to the difference between the two situations, I understand that the hon. member for St. John's West stated that in the case of Afghanistan the Soviet government was invited into Afghanistan by the Afghan government. If that is the kind of foreign policy which is propagated by members of the party opposite, then I do not think we have any lessons to take from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATURE OF EXPORTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he recognizes any difference between the export of wheat and the export of nuclear fissionable materials. Does he see any difference between them?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): What I see, Madam Speaker, is that the hon. member is attempting to score political capital by trying to make suggestions that the government has not been wholly supporting the British position. The Prime Minister is on record as stating that we are 100 per cent behind the position of the United Kingdom. We have satisfied every request which the United Kingdom has made of us in this crisis, and we have taken all the same measures as her friends in the European community.

Mr. Clark: MacGuigan, the arms merchant.

STATEMENT BY ARGENTINIAN OFFICIAL ON USE OF FISSIONABLE MATERIAL

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs aware that a high Argentinian official has admitted that one of the interests Argentina had in acquiring a Candu reactor in the first place was for its possible military implications, and to learn about the use of fissionable material for military purposes?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend is referring to a television program which was aired some time ago, in which a number of statements were made, he will know it was not the Government of Canada on which the finger was put as a possible source of nuclear supplies for non-peaceful purposes.

MEDICAL CARE

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the erosion of medical care and health services in this country.

Yesterday we learned from the Minister of National Health and Welfare that she will no longer insist on eliminating extra billing for medicare. We on this side consider this a betrayal of the whole principle of medicare and the 1966 Medical Care Act to which the government is committed. In addition, we know that the provinces are facing cutbacks in federal funding for medical care. This year there will be a reduction of some $800 million in federal payments. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if these trends and cutbacks by the federal government mean that it is no longer committed to the Medical Care Act of 1966, and does it mean that it is in favour of extra billing, user fees, and long waiting lists for medical care?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Oshawa, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Beaches, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni, I am pleased to answer the question of the hon. member for Vancouver East by saying that the answer is no.

PROVISION OF SERVICES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister, who seems so energetic this morning. I am glad that the minister responded because I believe he was responsible for the initiation of some of the medicare legislation to which I referred. Is the government aware that in British Columbia today there is a cutback of some 1,200 acute care beds that have been closed down, 3,000 hospital workers have been laid off, and 12,000 people are waiting for elective surgery?

Since the federal government must obviously share responsibility for this very severe crisis in health care, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, speaking as Acting Acting Acting Prime Minister, undertake to ask cabinet for a review of this situation, as it affects not only British Columbia but all other provinces? Under the legislation to which the government is committed, will the minister guarantee a review of federal funding to help meet these required costs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the Acting Acting Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare, I will take due notice of the representations made by the hon. member. I wish to draw to her attention the fact that the administration of health comes under provincial responsibility. This week the Minister of National Health and Welfare met with provincial ministers of health to try to stress to them the importance of maintaining the highest standards of service to the Canadian public. I would urge my hon. friend to use every effort to try to convince the government of British Columbia to maintain those high standards and to co-operate fully with the federal government in achieving that particular objective.

Presence in Gallery

• (1130)

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I would like to advise the Minister of Energy that I am here, and have been here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It is hard to see you; that is all.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister. I fail to understand how the government can make these kinds of statements, that medicare will not be affected by the reduction in transfer payments of some $5.7 billion over the next five years. When will the cabinet come clean and stop trying to do a snow job on the Canadian people as far as medicare is concerned? Tell the truth for once; there will be a reduction in transfer payments, it will seriously affect medicare, and in fact the Ontario government has stated that the plan will reduce hospital beds under medicare over the next two or three-year period?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to see that the hon. member for Beaches is here. I should have said that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was not there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend is completely wrong in his statement that transfers for medicare are going to decline. I invite him to look at the figures which are public and there for anyone who wants to read them. They are to the effect that payments by the federal government to the provinces for medicare over the next five years are going to increase significantly year by year. I invite my hon. friend to take the trouble to look at the figures, and he will realize that indeed the federal contribution to medicare will continue to increase significantly over the next five years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ENERGY MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND

Madam Speaker: I have the honour of bringing to the attention of the House the distinguished presence in our gallery of the Hon. William Birch, the Energy Minister of New Zealand.

THE ECONOMY

STATISTICAL DATA—QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I delayed putting my question because I had expected the Minister of Finance to be in the House. Possibly I can put my question to the Minister of Energy, who is rumoured to be the Minister of Finance shortly.

Mr. Smith: A lot sooner than you will be, Mike.

Mr. Wilson: The economic plan of the Minister of Finance is now in total shambles. That came out this morning in the briefing documents for the Versailles Summit which show that growth in the national income, anticipated to be 2.2 per cent, is now minus .5 per cent. The budget estimated unemployment at 7.8 per cent, it is now estimated at 9.2 per cent for the year and, as the minister knows, it is now in fact 9.6 per cent. That means there are now 200,000 more unemployed than were estimated at the time of the budget.

Since the minister's economic plan has proven to be totally out of touch with reality, and since so many of the members of cabinet and caucus are pushing the minister for a new economic plan and budget, would the Minister of Energy state whether it is the intention of the government to have a new economic plan and budget shortly following the Versailles Summit?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the figures referred to by the hon. member, which were published yesterday in a briefing document for the Versailles Summit, did not originate from the Department of Finance but were taken from a study prepared by the International Monetary Fund. Since the hon. member is accustomed to seeing various organizations prepare forecasts and publish figures, he should know the relative value of such statistics. I should like to remind the hon. member that the best way to bring down interest rates and unemployment is, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday in his press conference, to restore a climate of confidence, and in order to do so, we must get rid of the uncertainty created by high levels of inflation. I would invite the hon. member to support the efforts being made by the present government to reduce the inflationary pressures and expectations which are causing this uncertainty.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, surely the minister must understand that because we have not had any budget legislation for six months people do not know what they are dealing with. Surely he understands the fact that the economic plan has proven to be totally out of touch with reality, that it is doing more to undermine the confidence in and credibility of this government than anything else imaginable. I will put the question again. Is the government considering a new economic plan to try to add some confidence in the economy now, and bring in a new budget which will erase some of the disastrous policies brought in last November which have caused some of the problems we have today?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is saying that no budget legislation has been passed as yet. However, yesterday evening the House had an opportunity to vote on a very important piece of fiscal legislation that introduces petroleum and gas revenue taxes. Furthermore, next week the House will be sitting in Committee of the Whole to consider the borrowing authority bill, an extremely important piece of budget legislation, and the House will have an opportunity to continue the debate on the economy. The hon. member is asking whether the government intends to bring down a budget. In fact, only a few weeks ago in his green paper on proposals for broader consultation in the budget process, the Minister of Finance indicated that he was in favour of having budgets on set dates, preferably in the autumn.

[English]

ORIGIN OF STATISTICAL DATA

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance who, if I understand him correctly, has just made an astounding statement. Do we understand that the minister is saying that these figures referred to are not Finance Department figures but are available from the IMF and other agencies? If so, if international agencies can forecast and revise unemployment and inflation rates, why can't the Minister of Finance?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think that if the hon. member took the time to do a bit of research she would find that it is common practice for many international organizations, including the Monetary Fund and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development—the OECD—to publish regularly projections and forecasts on employment, unemployment, and the economic outlook in various countries. There is certainly nothing to get excited about. Similar studies are published by the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance tabled several when he brought down the budget, and many other organizations publish them as well. There is nothing unusual about that.

[English]

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I will leave the Minister of State for Finance to swing at the end of the rope in his response to that question, and will direct my supplementary to the minister responsible for unemployment and immigration.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration to the critical lack of jobs this summer. I was present yesterday at the opening of one of his student employment projects in the Vancouver area. I know placements are one tenth the number of applications, and I know there could be 200,000 students without jobs this summer. In B.C. the youth segment of the labour force is running an unemployment rate of 20 per cent. I know the minister is bringing in his training bill today, but there are no emergency measures in place for this summer, and I ask the minister what assistance he is planning now in the short term to encourage business to employ students in the next four months?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with, I am pleased the hon. member took time to attend the opening. I think it is important that all Members of Parliament work in very close co-operation with our special system of student employment centres in order to help them achieve their goal of aiding students to gain employment.

We have undertaken a number of special measures. I have now written to close to 1,400 employers across Canada asking for their co-operation in developing employment opportunities for students. The federal government has undertaken special measures to add money to the student employment budget this year, in contrast to the position taken by the government of British Columbia which cut back on its allotment for student employment.

We have made an appeal to Members of Parliament asking them to undertake special measures in their own ridings to contact businessmen to see what resources they have in their own offices to help students with employment. We are undertaking a major advertising campaign in an effort to engage and enlist the support of the private sector in providing employment for students this summer.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

STATEMENT MADE BY RESPONSIBLE MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Senator Austin, who is in charge of the Canada Development Corporation, announced yesterday that the government plans to privatize that corporation. Can the Acting Prime Minister confirm this? If he does, how does that square with the Liberal promise found in the Montreal Gazette for February 13, 1980, which quoted a statement made by the Prime Minister that when the Liberal party was re-elected, it would convert the CDC into a bigger player in industrial development along the lines of Petro-Canada in energy. In light of the statement made by Senator Austin, and the tremendous unemployment in this country, can the Acting Prime Minister tell this House and the Canadian people why his party is breaking yet another campaign promise? Why is the Liberal government throwing in the towel?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member would be better off reading our press releases instead of the reports in The Gazette or other Canadian newspapers. He would realize that this decision in no way contradicts our intention to sell the government's shares in the Canada Development Corporation, nor does it contradict the commitment made by the government during the last election campaign. If he read the press release, the hon. member would realize that Senator Austin, who is responsible for the CDC, indicated that, with the consent of Parliament, we would be establishing a new company, wholly owned by the Canadian government, in order to help the latter make the appropriate decisions, both in terms of selling its CDC shares and advising us on new investments.

MANDATE OF PROPOSED NEW CORPORATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have not relied only on press reports; I have here some letters that were exchanged between Senator Austin and officials of the CDC. The Senator says in one place that the CDC has failed. In a second place he says that it has fulfilled its mandate. He talks about a new corporation, and he calls it a new corporation wholly owned by the Crown. Yet in another place he talks about a holding company. Can the minister, who is speaking on behalf of the Senator, tell us what the mandate of this new Crown corporation will be? What are its objectives? Why is the government creating a new corporation when the CDC was established for that purpose in the first place?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I am, perhaps, not as fluent in English as the hon. member, but I have also read the letters to which he is referring, and in those letters the senator states that, after ten years, the CDC has clearly fulfilled its mandate and achieved the objectives for which it was created, the first one being to enhance Canadian ownership of industries, which was fully attained. Furthermore, the CDC has become one of the major resource companies in Canada and, within the Canadian commercial sector, it is the Canadian company with the greatest impact in terms of risk capital and the purchase of high-technology companies.

MIRABEL—MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport relating to the Dorval-Mirabel situation. As the minister is aware, one of the major reasons for the pressure on him for the transfer from Dorval to Mirabel coming from municipalities in the Mirabel region is the matter of infrastructure costs which these municipalities incurred in anticipation of economic spin-off activity. Would the minister give consideration to possible assistance to the communities thus affected by this infrastructure burden in order to relieve the pressure on them, and allow the government to make a decision based on real, common sense interests relating to this situation, namely, the interests of the Montreal travelling public, the interests of the Montreal business community, and the interests of the Canadian airlines that are very much concerned about the possible effects on their profits of options being proposed for a move from Dorval to Mirabel?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking me if I intend to be a good minister. The answer is pretty obvious; yes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: It is a difficult exercise; otherwise it would be already resolved.

In this particular instance there are some fairly obvious conflicts of interest between groups of people and areas, depending upon where they are located.

Mr. Bradley: Conflicts of interest within caucus.

Miss MacDonald: The problems are all located in the back benches.

Mr. Pepin: In my usual compromising and friendly way, I was hoping to find compromises that would accommodate the greatest number of people. I have listened in recent weeks—because the tension has been particularly acute in recent weeks—to every idea on the subject, and I am still open to others. That is all, because I see Madam Speaker is signalling the end as a television producer would.

LEGAL COSTS INCURRED BY EXONERATED NURSE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The day before yesterday in answering questions posed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings concerning the Susan Nelles case and compensation for her legal costs, the Solicitor General said that the hon. member should direct his attention to the government responsible for the decision and the prosecution. By that, he meant the government of Ontario. I do not deny that the government of Ontario has responsibility with respect to some compensatory arrangement in a case where an accused has been exonerated. However, I do believe the Solicitor General ought not to slide away from his responsibility on that basis.

Given the fact that this matter has been previously discussed as a matter of principle at the federal level, and the inadequacy of the system has been touched upon at the federal level, is the Solicitor General prepared to take an extraordinary responsibility and get in touch with the Attorney General of Ontario concerning this case, knowing that he will be joined by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, by me, and by several other Members of Parliament from Ontario who are anxious that there be some justice done in this case, particularly when it appears that the charge should never have been laid in the first place?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have been able to ascertain that there is no precedent my officials have been able to find for such compensatory action at the federal level.

Miss MacDonald: Establish one then.

Mr. Kaplan: I am having a search done, although it is more difficult, to find provincial precedents for doing so in any of the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Beatty: Tell us about compassion.

Mr. Kaplan: However, I will note the hon. member's representation and I will bring it to the attention of my colleague, the Attorney General of Canada.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, perhaps when the minister does that, he could bring to the minister's attention the 1973 study of the federal Law Reform Commission on Criminal Court costs where the existing system is described as being totally inadequate and which should be replaced by a full cost system. The recommendations in that study went on to suggest that perhaps federal-provincial arrangements might be made, and for that kind of thing to be provided. That is what I meant when I said there has been a discussion in principle by the federal government on this inadequacy. Given that, will the Solicitor General go a little further and not only discuss the matter of compensation with his colleagues but join with others in this House of Commons, especially in view of the fact that in this case an injustice has been perpetrated, and go to the government of Ontario to ask it to move on its position in the hope also that the Government of Canada will see its way clear to do justice in this case?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I note the hon. member's point. I will bring it to my colleague's attention.

AIRPORTS

COSTS OF DORVAL TO MIRABEL REMOVAL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. With respect to his calculations on the Dorval-Mirabel operations, I would ask the minister if he has had provided to him a cost-benefit study with respect to the cost to Montreal of the removal of certain airlines from Dorval to Mirabel?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this has been thoroughly researched. A first study has already been made public, and a second will be made public at the same time as the cabinet decision is announced.

My hon. friend should know, and does know because he is a very sophisticated economist, that there are many ways of presenting these costs. For example, one of the airlines has put in as a cost a new airplane, because of the extra distance that this move to Mirabel would represent. The same airline forgot to reduce the 17 miles from trips going west that this would also bring about.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Seventeen miles?

Mr. Pepin: This is not news; there are many ways to present costs. There is a saying that if you put ten economists in a room you will have 15 answers, and this applies in this particular case also. To calculate the costing to passengers, airlines, to government and so on is a very uncertain exercise.

POSITION OF AIRLINES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The one element I am sure the minister has not taken into account is the possibility of not spending that money on that operation, and instead installing radar at Victoria International Airport. I would ask the Minister of Transport whether he has taken that into consideration. At the same time, would he tell us which airlines have actually petitioned him to move from Dorval to Mirabel to get on the back of that elephant?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the answer to the second question is none.

The answer to the first question is to observe my hon. friend's total lack of gratitude because I have already informed him that in the RAMP program, the radar development program, Victoria is first on the list. I already told him that. I expected compliments, regards and gratitude, but obviously I am not getting anything!

Oral Questions

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE IN AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the Canadian Dairy Commission's export marketing activities which have been investigated three times recently, once by David Kates of the Public Service Staff Relations Board during the investigation of a grievance, once by Justice Hugh Gibson as part of a royal commission, and most recently by the Auditor General of Canada as a result of complaints arising from the previous two reports.

Since the Kates report revealed documents showing losses on one deal alone amounting to over $900,000—money which comes out of the pockets of the farmers of Canada—and since the Auditor General's report has been in the minister's hands for some time, will he tell the House what recommendations were made by the Auditor General concerning the internal operations of the Canadian Dairy Commission?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has made some wide-sweeping statements about the report. There was nothing in any of the reports I have received, up until the latest one which I have not had time to study. The final report just arrived on my desk last Friday, a week ago today. I have looked at it very quickly and I will be studying it and will be making it public in time. That will be in due course, after I have studied it, and I may follow whatever recommendations may be in that report.

I asked for the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General's report is a review that I asked for over a year ago. It was finally submitted to my desk last Friday. I have not had time to study it. I do not intend to hide that report in any way, fashion or form.

Mr. Fraser: An urgent, single supplementary, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIRPORTS

QUERY RESPECTING MIRABEL DESIGNERS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I want to thank you for your generosity. My question is also for the Minister of Transport. What we would like to know, Madam Speaker, is this: are the persons who designed and decided to build Mirabel still with the government and, if so, what are they designing now, where is it going to be, how much will it cost, and is there any possible way we can stop it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not made inquiries into the background of every officer in my department to find out if he was there or not away back in 1967 when that project was conceived. There were also a number of consultants brought in from outside when the decision to build Mirabel was made.

I have been cautioned by a great number of members in the House to make my own decision on the subject. That is what I am trying to do. In doing so, I have listened and taken into account all the representations that were made here and outside the House. I am going to develop, in the presentation of the final decision, an answer to all the questions that can be raised and have been raised in the past.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, and I apologize to him.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

IMPLEMENTATION OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to return to the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture concerning the Canadian Dairy Commission. Since he has the report and admits that he has not had time to read it, would the minister make a commitment to the House that once he has read the report and analysed its recommendations he will table that report with its recommendations, in the House, in addition to a report on the action taken by the Dairy Commission to implement those recommendations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking for something that I have already said I would do, that I would follow the normal procedure of making the report public. He is asking that it be tabled in the House. If that is the normal procedure, that is what I will do.

Let me say to him that there is nothing in either one of the two previous reports that found out that there was anything wrong with the Dairy Commission that you would find even under any normal business operation. There have been many charges made about the incompetency of the Dairy Commission. I had Secretary Block here, the Secretary of Agriculture from the United States, and when you talk about his dairy problems in his country, with the huge surpluses and so on, his search for markets and his subsidy problems, I can tell the hon. member that our problems are very small.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

IDENTITY OF DEVON COLE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Will he tell us who Devon Cole is and what is his current relationship with the Solicitor General?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, Devon Cole is a resident in my constituency, a former resident in my constituency, who worked in election campaigns and works actively in community activities in my constituency. He is not an employee of the government or an employee of my ministry, and never has been. He worked as a volunteer in election campaigns.

REMUNERATION FOR ELECTION WORK

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, did Mr. Devon Cole receive any compensation of any kind from any source for his work on behalf of the Solicitor General of Canada in an election campaign?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I believe he worked, for a short period of time, as a driver in one of my campaigns, not for the full campaign. The expense was disclosed in my statement of spending during the campaign.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSITION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General will know that as a result of comments he made urging members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to carry on acts that had been declared illegal by the McDonald Royal Commission, several prominent Canadian lawyers have petitioned the Law Society of Upper Canada to have the Solicitor General investigated for unprofessional conduct. Would the Solicitor General be prepared to invite, himself, the Law Society of Upper Canada to carry out an investigation of his conduct to see if it is unprofessional conduct in relation to the matter raised by these lawyers—

Mr. Peterson: You are on a fishing expedition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I do not want to be shouted down by members of the government, Madam Speaker. Would he be prepared to invite that investigation which has been requested by a number of prominent lawyers?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, that letter, which is well known and has been made public, is not directed to my conduct. It is directed to the policies which I have approved for the operations of the RCMP. I do not believe it is within the mandate of the Law Society or of the disciplinary committee to review the policies which I have established for the RCMP. I believe that the place for those policies to be reviewed is here. I have frequently explained them in committee and in the House. I am prepared to do so.

• (1200)

These policies, when criticized by the McDonald Commission, were confirmed by me with the law officers of the Crown, who have advised me that these policies which I have in place are supported by precedent and are perfectly lawful. Notwithstanding that, for further assurance. I went outside and obtained two outside legal opinions on these policies, which are the subject of the complaint of these lawyers to the Law Society. Both of the opinions which I obtained supported these policies. I continue to believe that they are proper, and they continue to be the policies of the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONDUCT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL IN SUBMITTING CHARACTER REFERENCES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, since, in the case of Arrindell and English, the Solicitor General and the Prime Minister have made the incredible claim that the Solicitor General was acting in his private capacity, rather than in his ministerial capacity, a claim which no one in this House can accept, with the exception, perhaps, of the Liberal Party, given its standards. And since the conduct of the Solicitor General, acting as a lawyer, has been called into question by the president of the Canadian Bar Association, would the Solicitor General, in order to clear his name, invite an inquiry into the propriety of his conduct by either the Canadian Bar Association—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —or the Law Society of Upper Canada, having regard to the fact that the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General have made it impossible for Parliament to judge that behaviour which they claim was private? Will he allow the governing body of his professional association to look into his professional conduct in this matter?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): The evidence that I put forward in those trials was evidence put forward in open court, not as a lawyer, not as the Solicitor General of Canada, but as someone who knew the individuals. I am a lawyer and I am the Solicitor General of Canada, but if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to make the point that this was done in my character as Solicitor General of Canada, I do not see how he can argue at the same time that it should be put forward as conduct of a lawyer to the Law Society of Upper Canada.

Before sending those letters, I considered the propriety of them and was satisfied that they did not violate the guidelines set down by the Prime Minister, in any sense of the word.

What I had to give was evidence of my knowledge of these two individuals which—

Mr. MacKay: Lack of knowledge. You said you hardly knew them.

Mr. Kaplan: —I gave in open court and which was available to the other side for comment, and I do not feel this was conduct which had anything to do with the conduct of a lawyer. It was the conduct of a person with knowledge of two individuals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. OBERLE—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

PRIVILEGE

MR. YOUNG—ASSERTION OF MR. LALONDE RESPECTING ATTENDANCE IN HOUSE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the assertion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) during question period that I was not in attendance in the House when, in fact, I was in my place, as I always am when the House is sitting. It would be appropriate if the minister were to acknowledge that fact.

Mr. Deans: Or even to listen.

Madam Speaker: The presence of hon. members in the House is not officially or traditionally acknowledged. However, the hon. member has made his point.

OFFICIAL REPORT

REMARKS OF MR. McRAE IN DEBATE ON BILL C-112

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question relates to yesterday's debate, at which time the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) is reported at page 17853 of Hansard as having said this. I do not intend to read the whole paragraph because it is quite lengthy, but there are a couple of lines I would like to point out to Your Honour, which is why I raise a point of order. I do not think the hon. member deliberately wanted to mislead the House and I do not know whether he knew the facts, but I think this should be brought to your attention. He said with regard to 50,000 barrels of oil which is to be sold to Canada that they were unable—

Madam Speaker: Order. Can I find out from the very beginning whether the hon. member is trying to debate what has been recorded in Hansard, or whether he really wants to correct a statement that he has made in the House? It is not yet clear to me at this point. I would like him to be correct, so that I know where I am going.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, Madam Speaker, I wish to correct his statement. I am sure that he did not want to do this intentionally, and therefore—

Madam Speaker: Well, if the hon. member wants to correct a statement of his own, he is perfectly free to do so; but one hon. member cannot correct the statement of another.

Mr. Paproski: Well, I could say that the hon. member lied, but I do not want to do that. However, my people in Edmonton would say that he lied, because what he has said—

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. members cannot say indirectly that which they cannot say directly—

Mr. Clark: Except the judges.

Madam Speaker: —and I am just warning the hon. member of that fact. The problem before me now is that he wants to correct the statement of another hon. member; that privilege rests with the person who made the statement, not with the hon. member for Edmonton North.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No, no. Order. It is over.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. (a) and (b) The guidelines used to determine which employees qualified for educational leave with pay and reimbursement for all expenses incurred are Treasury Board's Personnel Management Manual, chapter 110-5—Conditions governing education training and subsidization, DREE's training policy in Personnel Services Manual, volume D, Human Resources chapter, personnel training section, and the collective agreements.

DREE—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,959—Mr. Clarke:

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

(a) On July 30, 1979, a Theodolite Transit and Automatic Level were among several items stolen during a break-in of a locked government vehicle parked on a Winnipeg street.

(b) The vehicle and equipment were assigned to a PFRA engineer for a visit to a project site. Upon discovery of the theft, the Winnipeg Police Department was notified immediately. The stolen items were entered into a national police computer system and a detective assigned to investigate.

(c) To date, none of the stolen items have been recovered and no charges have been laid by police.

(d) Replacements were purchased by PFRA.

(e) Instructions to all regional staff have been issued to the effect that no attractive items are to be left overnight in vehicles unless they can be securely locked in the trunk and whenever possible vehicles will be securely parked in government warehouses or compounds.

DOT—MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 2,981—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Transport under the Marine Transportation Program at page 32.39, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) and (b) (1) "Coming Back Alive"—total cost was $79,115 of which $64,780 was paid in 1979-80. This is an educational film which was aimed at hunters and fishermen who consider a cartop boat as a platform for their particular sport and do not consider themselves as boaters.

(2) "The Volunteer Marine Rescue Auxiliary Program Float Plan"—total cost $4,950. This is an educational film which was aimed at the boating public, including commercial inshore fishermen and pleasure craft users.

(3) "What now Skipper", "Canadian Boating Test", "Cold Can Kill", "Cold Water Survival", "La Garde côtière canadienne", "La Garde Côtière canadienne" (videotape), "Le Nancy J. ne pêchera plus", "Sécurité à bord", "Pourquoi pas l'endosser"—total cost of the above was $2,298. These educational films were aimed at the boating public, especially pleasure boaters.

The remaining expenditures relate to the rental of films for use by Canadian Coast Guard Vessels.

(c) No distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

TEACHERS EMPLOYED BY DIAND IN ALBERTA

Question No. 4,134—Mr. Taylor:

1. How many teachers were employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the purpose of teaching students on reserves in the province of Alberta as of June 30 (a) 1981 (b) 1980 (c) 1979?

2. How many of the teachers who were on staff in 1979 were still on staff as of June 30, 1981?

3. Does the department have its maximum number of teachers required on the reserves in Alberta?

4. Does the department give the teachers they hire a contract?

5. What is the actual turnover of teachers on reserves in Alberta?

6. Does the department have a curriculum that teachers are required to follow?

7. Does the department provide a special curriculum for Indian boys and girls and, if so, does it include special education for slow learners and medical, hearing and sight testing?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Teachers employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on reserves in the province of Alberta as of June 30, are as follows: (a) 1981—187 teachers, (b) 1980—205 teachers, (c) 1979—198 teachers.

Note: The decrease from 205 in 1980 to 187 in 1981 occurred due to a turnover of the school operation to the Saddle Lake Band. The department reduced its staff by 18 person-years to accommodate the band's needs.

2. Ninety-one teachers on staff in 1979 were still on staff as of June 30, 1981.

3. Maximum number of teachers allocated on reserves are established by ratio. One classroom teacher for every 18 students, kindergarten, grades one to twelve, plus two teacher aides for every five teaching positions, K-4 to grade three. For kindergarten grades, one teacher is allowed for every 15 students attending on a one-half day basis. As of March 12, 1982, calculations are based on February, 1982 student enrolment. The instructional requirement projected for September, 1982 is 198 teachers plus 33.5 teacher aides equalling a total of 231.5 instructional staff. This allocation has been approved. It is difficult to maintain the number of staff at the allocated level due to resignations and other factors.

4. Teachers are hired through the Public Service Commission in the same manner as other federal civil servants. Contracts are therefore not required.

5. Actual turnover of teachers is estimated to be approximately 40 per cent.

6. Department teachers are required to follow the Alberta provincial curriculum.

7. The department does not provide a special curriculum, however, our schools add cultural material by expanding social studies programs to include native history, culture and language. Special services are purchased through tuition agreements with the provincial schools, i.e., (a) School for the deaf, (b) Schools for the mentally retarded, etc. National Health and Welfare visit our schools for medical and dental work including hearing and sight tests.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Once again I feel it necessary to ask the parliamentary secretary why question No. 2,042, which was put on the Order Paper on January 29, not this year but last year, has not yet been answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend will be pleased to know that I have in fact made inquiries with regard to the preparation of an answer to this question. Information is required from a number of different sources. Much of that information has arrived, but a few of the sources have not yet provided information. I hope to be in receipt of it before too long and I will continue my efforts to satisfy the hon. member with an answer as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971 (NO. 2)

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF QUALIFYING PERIOD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-114, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 2), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by expressing my appreciation to hon. members of the House for their courtesy in permitting this bill to be considered during this one day sitting. I appreciate the fact that they are prepared to give up what would perhaps otherwise be a Friday afternoon in their ridings to debate what is a very important measure for a large number of Canadians.

Mr. Nielsen: You owe us one.

Mr. Axworthy: I am always prepared to pay my debts. The provisions of this bill are very simple. In fact, there is only one. It is to extend for a further year the present variable entrance requirements under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The importance of this measure is that, without this provision to extend the variable entrance requirements, a large number of Canadians would require a minimum of 14 weeks' eligibility in order to claim unemployment insurance benefits.

In this time when we are facing very serious levels of unemployment and having to cope with major strains upon the unemployment insurance system, it would obviously be very unwise to try to bring about any destabilizing forces by undertaking major changes to the act. Therefore, we are asking the permission of the House to extend for one further year the extension provisions which would otherwise come to an end on June 4, so that we can offer to Canadians who unfortunately require support and assistance under the Unemployment Insurance Act some stability which will be maintained in present circumstances during this trying period.

It is important at this time to pay tribute to our forefathers and predecessors in this House who in 1940 had the wisdom and foresight to establish the unemployment insurance system. We are now experiencing perhaps the most significant test of that system because we are going through a very serious period of recession. It is a credit to this House in terms of its history and longevity that at times it makes the right choice, which may not be recognized or appreciated at the particular moment, but generations that come after receive the full benefits of their judgment.

In this case, hundreds of thousands of Canadians are benefiting from the existence of the unemployment insurance system. It provides a basic income floor and ceiling for many thousands of Canadians at this time. Without the unemployment insurance system, certainly the tragedy and severity that unemployment brings would be that much more severe for many individuals. The existence of the unemployment insurance system provides a certain degree of continuity during this period when we face such high rates of unemployment. If for some strange reason we were not to let this bill go through, the consequences could be very dramatic. We would be faced with conditions in parts of Canada that none of us would like to contemplate.

[Translation]

For instance, Mr. Speaker, I have estimated that over 300,000 people receiving unemployment insurance benefits would otherwise not be paid. In addition, most of these people, and there are now 83,000, are from Quebec and the Maritimes.

[English]

We can see the difficulties that would be faced by a large number of Canadians if this bill did not go through. The obvious need for it is there. This is not something that is new, untried or innovative. It is simply a bill to maintain the present system for a period of one year.

I owe an explanation to the members of the House as to the progress or state of development in terms of the over-all reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act which we initiated over a year ago when we brought forward the task force report on unemployment insurance. At that time the feeling of many members of this House was that a general review and assessment of the entire unemployment insurance system was required. We therefore brought in a task force report which had as its objectives the need to streamline the system and to ensure that many of the administrative difficulties and peculiarities could be changed and altered.

Second, we indicated that there was a need for greater equity in the unemployment insurance system. Many repeaters or new entrants coming into the system for the first time are penalized under the existing act. With regard to those who now require a 20-week entrance, we should look seriously at how we can reduce their eligibility needs. At the same time, there are other parts of the act in the area of social equity that need to be reformed. I refer to the need to change substantially the benefits under the maternity provisions.

Many women have quite rightly complained that the requirements under the maternity provisions are inequitable. We agree with that. That is one of the areas of reform we propose to examine as well as the provisions that apply to adoptive parents. That matter has also been brought to my attention many times.

There is also the fundamental question of cost. It is a fundamental issue to be raised in this House. The unemployment insurance system is presently a $5 billion item shared jointly by employers, employees and the government. This is a very large expenditure. It is obviously of some concern as well that we find ways to ensure that the administration and delivery of the system is efficient and is cost-purposeful.

We want to examine very clearly the impact of the unemployment insurance system on income and the redistribution of income in this country. It is a matter of real concern that there are regions in this country which face high, chronic unemployment, not just in the phase we are going through, but for a continuous period. It is important that the unemployment insurance system be utilized to provide for some levelling of equal treatment of those who are faced with those conditions.

At the same time, we have examined ways in which we can make the Unemployment Insurance Act somewhat more creative in terms of using the unemployment system to help people train for new skills of work on community projects during periods of unemployment. This will bring about a number of beneficial results to the community and at the same time allow the community to retain very important skills and a work force.

All of these proposals were made in the task force report. It was my clear commitment at that time that we would not proceed with any of these major reforms or changes without very widespread discussion and consultation in this House and throughout Canada.

Over the past year we engaged in a very wide-ranging process of discussion and consultation with labour groups, business groups, community groups and social organizations. As one would expect, there were a number of conflicting points of view. Because there have been some suggestions from time to time that the task force report and recommendations in it are government policy, I want to underline very clearly that they are not. They are simply recommendations to the government to be considered in light of the discussions and consultations we engaged in over the past year.

Equally important, as we are now revising and condensing those recommendations and consultations, is that we come forward with a package of reforms which would give Members of Parliament a full and open opportunity for fair examination and detailed discussion.

The Unemployment Insurance Act is far too important an ingredient in our total economic and social framework for us to ignore. It is our intention and desire to provide the time in which we can have a very open and clear discussion in this House on the recommendations we bring forward.

It was discouraging to us that that kind of discussion could not take place within the time restraints of this session. We all know how occupied the parliamentary agenda is with a number of very important measures on economic matters. It was clear that we would not be able to alter as much as we would like the full-ranging discussion that the unemployment insurance bill would demand. Therefore, it seemed to make sense that we continue the existing provisions of the act for another year.

When Members of Parliament return, the government can bring forward its proposals for reform and provide the time and opportunity for the very detailed discussions and judgment that this House can bring to such a very important issue.

That is the fundamental importance of this bill. It really gives a degree of security, a degree of assurance and continuity to those presently receiving unemployment insurance, while not bringing about major changes at a time when there is a high degree of turbulence in the economic system. It also ensures that we maintain the provisions with regard to the degree of equity, namely, the variable entrance requirements, to the point in time where we will have a full-scale ranging discussion in this House about a number of reforms.

So, Mr. Speaker, I recommend this short but important bill to members. I hope that we will be able to give it quick dispatch. I would welcome the comments members may have. I hope they will restrain some of their comments about the broader impact of the Unemployment Insurance Act until the time when we bring in the full-ranging reform.

I know that members are anxious to give me the benefit of their wisdom and judgment about the whole unemployment insurance system. But, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would be somewhat redundant to spend the time of the House talking about something which as yet has not been presented. I think we would be conserving some of the efficiency of time of members and of Parliament if we were to wait until the government comes forward with its proposals, which we would intend to do at the earliest opportunity when there is time in the parliamentary timetable, so that we can then have a discussion based upon reality, based upon something that is before us, rather than something which is hypothetical and speculative. I do not think the time of the House needs to be taken up in wishful thinking or prejudgment but should be spent on something based upon facts.

If that is the case, it would then give us the opportunity, in the time remaining today, to initiate discussion, I would hope, on the training bill. It is a measure that will deal directly with the problem of unemployment by providing major opportunities for all young people and others to get broadened and expanded training opportunities during this period of recession.

So, Mr. Speaker, with the courtesy and co-operation of members of this House, I hope that we may pass in very quick order this unemployment insurance measure. Then for the sake of Canadians we can go on and do something which is equally important, perhaps more important, and this House can show its commitment to deal with the problem of unemployment by engaging in discussion on the training bill, which will give us all the opportunity to do something concrete, real and important for those who are waiting to receive some sign or message of hope.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the minister in his request to have the bill passed through its three stages and therefore be eligible for official passage on June 4, as I think is required by law. We are happy to do that, for a number of reasons.

First of all, we in this party, as I am sure all other members of the House, support the basic philosophy of the unemployment insurance scheme and have done so for many years. As the minister has indicated, it is a scheme to support families in hard times and in between times and it has done so for two and one-half generations. If we did not pass this bill today, Mr. Speaker, we would be changing the variable entrance requirements. It may have been a good scheme to try to take account across the country of the variation in unemployment rates. As people understand it, between ten and 14 weeks are the insurable weeks required, depending on the level of unemployment. Therefore, a high unemployment area will require fewer insurable weeks.

That is the basic understanding of the recommendation which was first brought down in 1977. It was brought down as an amendment in 1977 in order to give effect and flexibility to the scheme, to make it easier on those people in some parts of the country who needed help most, particularly in relation to the fact that there was higher unemployment there.

In 1977, Mr. Speaker, when it was brought down, part of the agreement or understanding was that there would be a general review of the act. That is why a task force was appointed. This idea was put forward in 1977. That part of the act would legislatively die in 1980. It was extended in 1980-81 primarily to allow for the continuation of a review of the act. In 1980 the task force to which the minister has referred was established.

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, look with favour on the work that the task force has been doing, not because we support all of its recommendations but because it is the first time in a long time that we have had a review of the act, an act that has been with us since 1940. It is worth while reminding the House—I do not think the minister needs to be reminded—that it is not some small review that is taking place with respect to the act. In fact, four issues are being addressed. First of all, everyone knows that it has been very difficult to understand administratively how UI works. Consequently, the first issue being addressed by the task force is the complexity of the administration of the program.

Second, this aspect is not well understood by the public, and therefore public comprehension suffers as a result of the 40 years of administration of the plan.

Third, I suppose the question is raised as to the cost-effectiveness of unemployment insurance. It seems to me that this is something the minister could bring forward in terms of a recommendation in that part of the task force report.

Fourth, the labour market impact is important. It is important, obviously, that whatever we are doing with unemployment insurance relates to the labour market in terms of training and also in terms of income redistribution systems that we have in other levels and in other parts of the country.

These four issues have been dealt with on the understanding that effectively the unemployment insurance program has two basic purposes. First of all, it is an income protection scheme; secondly, it is a labour market development program.

There has been some experience, some exchange and vigorous discussion from time to time, with respect to how well each of those two purposes are fulfilled, particularly with respect to the labour market development program. I do not think there is any doubt about our willingness—and I think I am speaking for all members of the House—to see unemployment insurance continue as an effective income protection scheme as well as the labour market development program.

The task force report has some very specific recommendations to which we would like the minister to give some consideration. He mentioned some of them, I think. I did not catch all of his speech and I apologize for not getting all of it. He mentioned the question of entrance requirements and the recommendation of the task force for the elimination of the special entrance requirements for new entrants, repeaters and so on, and having one entrance requirement. That has some sense to it and we hope that the minister will bring that forward. It is clear that if we had a single entrance requirement we would have a sense of equity and simplicity that would help in the comprehension of the program.

The minister may also have mentioned that the task force report talks about some changes in the benefits schemes. I think the minister will probably have to avoid that for a while. The essence of the task force report is that, for good and sufficient reason which I need not go into at this point, there ought to be a tightening up of the regulations and a diminishing of the benefits. From time to time we have had some differences of opinion with the minister, but I have never heard any opinion that he would be so foolish as to take that step at this point in time.

The task force also referred to maternity benefits. In particular it went on, as the minister indicated in his own remarks, to deal with the special conditions surrounding what is known as the "Magic 10" rule. Even more so, the restrictions on adoptive parents is something that the minister could bring forward.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: It is even a human rights problem. It is not known merely as another regulation with respect to a benefit. If I am correct, the Human Rights Commission has already spoken on the matter. Certainly it is a question of human rights, and it is one thing that could be singled out by the minister without waiting for the finality of the comprehensive review.

• (1230)

The minister mentioned a number of other aspects of the task force report. I think all I need to say to conclude my thoughts on the task force report is that I urge the minister to proceed with it. I know he has a lot on his plate, but there are aspects or sections which could be knifed out of the report and dealt with. I think we are as interested as the minister in making sure people have faith in unemployment insurance as a program both for income protection and for labour market development. Those two functions as part of the program are as important to us and the Canadian people as they are to the minister. The more he can do to show that the scheme or the program continues to serve Canadians, as it has for two and a half generations, the better, and we would certainly support him.

There are one or two smaller problems. They are not small in one sense because they affect people and they are always important, but they do not necessarily affect as many people as some of the things I and the minister have been talking about.

One problem we find from time to time is with the regions that are used for the unemployment insurance scheme, particularly in relation to the fact that we are now specifically talking about regional variations. Whenever we draw boundaries of any kind, whether they are physical, ideological, emotional or spiritual, those closest to the boundary get hurt. So I am not arguing that there has been any intention to create problems; indeed, there are some problems, and I will cite one example for the minister.

If we go to the riding of Simcoe North, we will find that that riding is divided in half in terms of the regional variation rate. One half is the Georgian Bay area and the other is the Toronto area. I am sure most of the people in the Georgian Bay area wish they could have been included in the Toronto area for reasons other than unemployment insurance, but the fact is that there are two small townships in that portion which is included in the Toronto catchment area, and those two townships are Rama and Mara. Unfortunately, Rama and Mara have high unemployment rates, but they are in the Toronto area. Therefore, the people who work in Rama and Mara have to work more weeks in order to have the same qualifications as their brethren in Orillia, which is their normal catchment area.

The boundary review committee was approached about this, and the only suggestion it made at that time was that it would have to wait until after the 1981 census. Incidentally, I might say in December, 1979, DREE made a report and included these townships in an area which clearly would be suffering from high unemployment rates into the mid-1980s, so the minister has some specific information from DREE, a December, 1979 report, which talks about such areas as Owen Sound, Orangeville, Barrie, Orillia, Lindsay and Peterborough and includes those areas as areas of high unemployment into the mid-1980s.

The people who live in the little townships of Rama and Mara would be forever grateful if they could find themselves included in the Georgian Bay section rather than the Toronto section, because that would mean they would not have to have what they consider to be—and I think quite rightly—unfair qualifications for the variation rate.

There are one or two other points I would like to make at this time for the minister's consideration. I know he has considered one of them at other times and in other forums, but I think the credibility of his department—and, indeed, the credibility of all of us—could be enhanced. When we talk in this chamber about unemployment, we all use the statistics which benefit us most. I do not apologize for that. I do not expect apologies from anyone else because we all do it, but it certainly does not contribute to the education of the general population when we use an amazing array of statistics which are used primarily to benefit our own arguments. I think the minister, the government and all of us have a vested interest in seeing if we can arrive at a definition of employment and a definition of unemployment which we could all use and understand.

For example, the minister knows, and many hon. members know—but many people do not understand—that when we talk about unemployment, we are not including those whose unemployment benefits have expired. They may still be out of work, but their benefits have expired. We are not including those who have never qualified because for one reason or another they could not qualify. They are still out of work. Those who are able-bodied but on welfare are not included in unemployment statistics. Those who have simply given up looking because in the location in which they live there is just no point in looking any more are not included. Indeed, in order to be counted, according to Statistics Canada, a person has to be looking actively for a job in the last four weeks.

As I have just pointed out, there are many good reasons why we find people not in that category, but they are still considered not to be unemployed. Indeed, a person can work for one day out of three months, and if he was doing so in the last four weeks, then he is not counted as being unemployed. I want to make it clear that I am in no way at all blaming the minister or his department for this. I think over the years our understanding of employment and unemployment has become encrusted like barnacles on a boat. We have simply added on new thoughts and never clarified them.

We have three separate organizations the government uses—and we all use—for different sets of statistics. I think many policy decisions these days are made less on people's understanding of the realities and more on their understanding of the statistical descriptions of realities, and when that is the case I think we should have very strong interest in making sure we have not only a cogent, clear and honest definition of employment and unemployment, but also one which is generally agreed upon so that we are always talking about the same numbers.

Finally, if I could, I would like to make one observation with respect to the relationship between unemployment and welfare. I have already indicated that there are many, many people who are not on unemployment rolls in terms of being reported but who suffer because they do not have jobs. Obviously, people on welfare are in that category. Increasingly, as times get tougher—and the minister has said that times will get tougher in the next number of months and, indeed, into 1983 and beyond—we will have to make sure we are not for our own purposes avoiding putting people on unemployment rolls but simply putting them on welfare rolls.

I remind the minister that when it comes to whether people are on unemployment insurance or on welfare, two things are clear. People would rather be on unemployment insurance than on welfare because, no matter how we say it, teach it and try to learn it, there is a stigma attached to welfre that is not attached to unemployment insurance, as people still regard unemployment insurance as paying their own freight. That is the reality. I could dress that phrase up for the dance, but that is the reality. It is important not to look for the easy way to remove people from unemployment statistics and therefore off unemployment insurance benefits and on to welfare, because that affects people personally and emotionally and I think hurts their own futures.

The second reason I hope we do not take that easy route is that the cost of welfare rests, obviously, with all three levels of government. However, as this minister in particular would know, it rests most heavily on municipal governments. As you might remember yourself, Mr. Speaker, the ability of municipal governments to cope with these costs and their other responsibilities is wearing pretty thin.

For those two reasons I would like to raise again an old issue about which I have not heard much—at least with respect to the two points I raised—regarding the relationship between unemployment insurance and welfare. They are both income protection schemes, but one has a significantly different effect on the individual, and it also has a different effect on the ability of a particular level of government to be able to afford the costs.

Finally, let me say that we are looking forward to dealing with Bill C-115. I hope it will be very soon. I am not the House leader for my party, but I have my modest thoughts on that, which I will bring forward at the appropriate time. Bill C-115 is not unrelated to Bill C-114. Bill C-115 is a bill which I trust will give us some hope for the future, and in a sense Bill C-114 is a gentle reminder of the runs, hits and errors of the past. They are related bills and we will certainly have lots to say on Bill C-115. We would like to support the minister on Bill C-115 every time he takes a good step, but we will not support him every time he does not take a good step.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-114. I do not think the minister is going to be very happy when I say I am not going to take his advice and restrain my remarks on the whole field of unemployment insurance. In his remarks the minister made a comment about legislation to come forward this fall which will give Members of Parliament a full and fair opportunity to study the subject and have input into the legislation. If that comes to pass it will be the first time in my three years' experience in this House. As a rule we do not have much opportunity under this government to study legislation and have our concerns noted.

For the last few years I have been a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which has spent a lot of time studying the different aspects of national defence and foreign affairs and has made recommendations which the government has ignored. The most recent of these was the cutback in reserves funding which the committee recommended against.

At this time in Canada 1.2 or 1.3 million people are officially unemployed. We all know that the real figure is closer to two million so it is too much to ask us to restrain our remarks at this time.

In my constituency things are not very different from conditions anywhere else. There is very high unemployment. There are 11 Indian reserves in the constituency, on all of which the unemployment rate is in excess of 75 per cent. On a number of reserves at some times in the year unemployment runs between 90 per cent and 95 per cent. An example is the Easterville reserve when in the non-fishing seasons there are only about half a dozen jobs available in the community—a couple in the band office, a couple working for the schools, and a couple operating the honey wagon. About 1,000 people live in the community but there are only half a dozen or a dozen permanent jobs. Yet the minister wants us to restrain our comments!

For the last two weeks in the city of Winnipeg Indians from the Peguis reservation have been demonstrating outside the office of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development because of a very serious shortfall in housing on the reserve. There is a backlog of some 120 houses. Yet when these concerns are brought to the attention of the government, the natives are given funding for only five or ten houses. This is a case where jobs could be created and housing provided on the reserves, but the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development ignores it, saying that the natives should get outside funding through the banks and CMHC. How are they to pay off the mortgages if they do not have jobs?

I want to make some comments on how the government has moved away from its responsibility in the unemployment insurance field over the last ten years. The provisions in Bill C-114 are not earth shattering nor are they provisions which this party is about to oppose. We know that the purpose of the bill is to extend the existing variable entrance requirements of ten to 14 weeks according to the regional rate of unemployment. We support that. The alternative is that all Canadian workers would be required to have worked for 14 weeks in order to qualify for UIC, regardless of how much unemployment there is in their region.

The variable entrance requirement permits people in areas of high unemployment who have more difficulty finding work to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits with fewer weeks of insurable earnings. Without it, many of Canada's seasonal workers, whether they work in the tourist industry of Prince Edward Island or fish our oceans and freshwater lakes, would be cut off from unemployment insurance benefits.

This variable entrance requirement has not always been a feature of the unemployment insurance program, however. In 1971 the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), who was then minister responsible for the program, introduced a progressive piece of legislation which enjoyed the unanimous support of the House. I am speaking about his unemployment insurance legislation. In the long forgotten "just society", this was to be the cornerstone of the guaranteed annual income.

The Unemployment Insurance Act of that year substantially reduced the eligibility requirement from 30 weeks of insurable earnings over two years to eight weeks over one year. It also reflected an understanding that the government had an important responsibility to control regional and structural unemployment.

While the unemployment insurance program introduced in 1941 fixed the federal government's contribution at 20 per cent of the cost of unemployment insurance, the 1971 act provided for the government to assume financial responsibility for unemployment insurance benefits when the unemployment rate was above 4 per cent and for the benefit of people who were unemployed for an extended period of time. This gave the government a vested interest in keeping the unemployment rate down. Because the government accepted that responsibility, its contributions to the unemployment insurance program increased as unemployment surpassed the 4 per cent ceiling anticipated for the 1970s.

In 1971 the government's contribution to the program was 19 per cent of the total cost and the rest was made up of contributions of workers and employers through unemployment insurance premiums. By 1975 the government's contribution had reached 51 per cent of unemployment insurance payouts. From 19 per cent in 1971 to 51 per cent in 1975 is quite a jump and it accurately reflected the responsibility that the government must assume for full employment in this country. That was obviously the understanding when the new unemployment insurance program was introduced in 1971.

Of course, the government was upset that its share of the cost of unemployment insurance had increased so remarkably, but what did it do? Did Liberal governments of the 1970s undertake measures to permit Canada to regain control of its economy and to create more jobs? Did it launch a massive job-creation program? Absolutely not. In fact, at various times it actually cut its funding for job creation. To bring down unemployment costs it introduced a series of legislative measures that shifted this financial responsibility for unemployment insurance on to the private sector, that is, the contribution of employees and employers to the unemployment insurance program.

That is not all it did, Mr. Speaker, We can all see that the government's economic policies could not maintain an unemployment rate of only 4 per cent for the duration of the 1970s. In fact, by 1979 the government's own definition of full employment had been changed so that 6 per cent was set as the benchmark at which full employment could be said to be achieved. We look back at 6 per cent longingly now, Mr. Speaker.

With more and more workers unable to find work, both Liberal governments and the short-lived Conservative government moved to prevent more people from qualifying for unemployment insurance by tightening up the entrance requirements. It was only four years after the new Unemployment Insurance Act had been introduced in 1971 that the Liberals set about dismantling it. Recognizing that unemployment would undoubtedly persist at above the 4 per cent predicted for the rest of the decade, the threshold level above which the government was responsible for the cost of initial benefits was changed from 4 per cent to an eight-year moving average of unemployment rates. In 1977 the government wriggled out from its commitment to bear the cost of extended unemployment. Bill C-27 eliminated two extended benefit periods for which the government had previously been totally responsible. The same bill introduced the variable entrance requirement we are dealing with today.

Most of the members opposite will no doubt insist that the variable entrance requirement was introduced to promote regional equity in the UIC program. I submit that is nonsense. After that requirement was introduced, unemployed workers in the hardest hit regions of the Atlantic provinces were required to have ten weeks of insurable earnings to qualify for unemployment insurance instead of eight weeks. How can making it more difficullt to qualify for unemployment insurance promote regional equity? That can only be characterized as Liberal logic. They make it more difficult to qualify for UI, and then they make it even more difficult for people who do not live in those regions hardest hit by unemployment, and sell the whole package as promoting regional equity.

The introduction of this requirement in 1977 had nothing at all to do with promoting regional equity. It was a sop to the Liberal backbenchers from areas of high unemployment who were protesting the government's intention to increase the entrance requirement from eight weeks to 12 weeks. It seems to have worked; the backbenchers were silenced, and anyone today committed to saving our crumbling UIC program is forced to support the variable entrance requirement.

Since unemployment insurance was overhauled in 1971, every amendment introduced by the government, either with Liberals at the helm or my Conservative friends to the right, has ultimately served to tighten the screws even further in order to disqualify more Canadians, thus saving the federal government even more money. Of course, none of this would be possible without first trying to convince the electorate that it was in their best interests.

Bill C-14 was rammed through Parliament in 1978. It was preceded by a very slick advertising campaign designed to convince Canadians that unemployment insurance was fraught with cheaters and people who did not really want to work. Then, after trying to convince the public that it was essential to stop the unemployed from abusing the program, the federal government set about abusing it in its own way, to the tune of more than $900 million, in Bill C-14. It did so by shifting the burden of the extended period of benefits from the government to the premium payer, and by making it even more difficult to qualify for benefits. The victims of the government's abuse were young people and women, those sectors of the public having the most difficulty breaking into the labour market.

Finally, in 1980 the government ushered in legislation to take it out of the unemployment cost-sharing business to an even greater extent. The eight-year moving average was eliminated. No longer would the government assume financial responsibility for unemployment insurance should the unemployment rate become unacceptably high. The government only contributes now to the regional extended benefits. That manoeuvre saved the government about $360 million in 1980-81. Not content with that, it began to raid the fund, paid for by workers and their employers, to finance other government ventures. In April, 1980, an order in council transferred the costs of the national employment service, some $202 million in 1980, from the Government of Canada to the UIC. Last year $188 million in job-training costs were charged against unemployment contributions. This year the minister is raiding the fund to the tune of some $190 million to date to pay for work sharing. This, instead of taking real steps to create jobs for the thousands of Canadians facing lay-offs as the government's economic policies take their toll.

However, we have good reason to fear, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has even worse changes in store for unemployment insurance. I am referring now to the recommendations of the task force on unemployment insurance which the government reluctantly released last summer. I say reluctantly because I think it is evident that if my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), had not secured a copy of that report and made it public it would not have been released to this day.

I mentioned earlier that the government's share of the cost of unemployment insurance has been dropping with each amendment since 1977. In 1980 Bill C-3 reduced the government's contribution to 20 per cent of the cost, the level which existed prior to the hon. member for Lincoln's Bill C-229 in 1971. But now the recommendations from last summer's task force would have assumed a fixed share of costs established at 15 per cent, rather than assuming the responsibility for any part of a program which is costly because of the government's inability to produce jobs where they are needed.

The task force would also have the regional extended-benefit phase eliminated entirely. The focus of unemployment insurance if these recommendations are implemented, will shift from income protection to labour market development. People living in areas hardest hit by unemployment will be penalized with a boost in the requirement from the present ten to 14 weeks to 15 to 20 weeks. So here we have regional equity being promoted in a way which will disqualify more Atlantic workers from benefits and force them to move west to meet the needs of the labour market.

The task force cited as evidence of the need for these changes more allegations of the unemployed abusing the program. It spoke of the fact that in Newfoundland workers could now qualify for up to 42 weeks of benefits with only ten weeks of insured earnings. Meanwhile, workers in Alberta must work 14 weeks to qualify for only 14 weeks of benefits. The task force cited this disparity as an incentive for Newfoundlanders to set up a cycle of dependency, implying they will work only long enough to establish a new claim. That is a rather slanderous thing to say about the workers of Canada. Even in Newfoundland, where unemployment is higher than in most of the country, only 12 per cent of claimants exhausted their claim in 1979.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[English]

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, before one o'clock I was speaking about the unemployment insurance task force report of last year and how it had unfairly singled out Newfoundland workers as an example of how people become dependent upon unemployment insurance, at least dependent in the definition of this government. The task force ignored the fact that the Atlantic region has a higher proportion of repeat claims because job opportunities in that region are often seasonal or non-existent. How can this government seriously consider the findings of a task force that is so blatantly bent on blaming the victims?

I think it is clear, as in all other changes to the unemployment insurance program introduced since 1971, that the reason for recommending longer entrance requirements and shorter benefit periods is to cut government costs for this program. In addition to that, in a cynical move to encourage labour migration to the site of the government's ill-fated megaprojects, the task force recommendations sought to force workers to move to the west where the jobs were expected to be.

According to the provisions recommended in last year's UI task force, the regional rate of unemployment would still be used to determine the benefit period of unemployment insurance claimants. The benefit period would vary across the country from 20 weeks where unemployment was less than 6 per cent, up to a maximum of 50 weeks. However, claimants in areas hardest hit by unemployment could by no means be guaranteed 50 weeks of benefits. The maximum benefit period would vary from 20 to 40 weeks in most cases. It would only be those people who were fortunate enough to hold a job for a full 35 weeks prior to their claim who could possibly qualify for a longer benefit period than the 40 weeks.

The task force says that these changes are necessary to reinforce work incentives and to take people's labour force patterns toward work and away from unemployment insurance. The people of Canada have been told by the minister's task force that they did not really want to work, that they were inclined to live off unemployment insurance rather than work. I reject that accusation, which is what it is. It is an accusation that the working people of Canada are lazy and need to be prodded by their government to contribute to the general well-being of this country. What kind of Victorian moralizing is that?

Even in Newfoundland where it is more difficult to find work than in many other parts of this country, only 12 per cent of unemployment claimants stay on unemployment insurance until they are cut off. This would suggest to me that the people of Newfoundland, and all other Canadians, do indeed want to work. This government has taken away their right to work by its ruinous economic policies and it is now blaming them for being unemployed.

Traditionally, there have been four categories of unemployment; seasonal, frictional, cyclical and structural. It is now apparent that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and his UI analysts would have us believe that there is one very important category of unemployment that has been ignored in the past, and that is intentional unemployment.

For the record, we in the New Democratic Party reject the accusation that the working people of Canada are lazy and need to be prodded by the government from collecting unemployment insurance and made to work. In the worst kind of cynicism—Liberal cynicism—this government throws thousands of Canadians out of work with its tight monetary and fiscal policies and then blames them for being unemployed or for living in one of the high unemployment regions of the country.

According to the unemployment insurance task force, tightening up UI regulations and further restricting the extent of UI claims will cut $220 million off the government unemployment insurance bill.

Canadian workers can breathe a bit easier, at least for now, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration has decided that it is advisable to maintain the status quo on unemployment insurance entrance requirements for at least one more year. They can breathe easier because what the minister apparently has up his sleeve is much worse than what is in effect now.

It is valuable at this time to recall what the hon. member for Lincoln, the author of the 1971 unemployment insurance legislation, had to say about the series of amendments to that legislation throughout the 1970s. I quote the hon. member:

—since 1971 when the Unemployment Insurance Act was brought in, reflecting the views of all members of the House, there have been no less than five or six amendments to the bill, if I recall correctly. In each and every one of these amendments there has been a clause or provision, among others, subtly to shift the financial burden of unemployment from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and the government to the employer-employee to the point that it is almost absurd. I would say that close to $1 billion has been so shifted—

He goes on to say:

It might have been more fair if the officials had told Parliament that they had miscalculated the rate of unemployment in 1970 when they said it would average 4 per cent and that, for reasons beyond their control, unemployment should more realistically be predicted at 6 per cent. They could have made the necessary adjustments and I think Parliament would have understood, the country would have understood and the opposition would have understood.

Instead either by coincidence or design, prior to every one of these amendments we had a well orchestrated campaign based on the alleged abuse of the plan, thus preparing and conditioning people for the amendment, and supposedly aimed at reducing the abuse or tightening up the regulations, when in fact the main purpose of most of the amendments was to shift the financial burden from the government to the employer-employee. I think that has been unfair—

It must sadden the hon. member for Lincoln, a member of the government of this country, to sit in the House and see what his government is doing to unemployment insurance. After he warned the Minister of Employment and Immigration in 1980 to save unemployment insurance from those determined to undermine it, after he warned the minister not to heed those who would suggest that the contributions from workers and employers to unemployment insurance be used to finance department programs, that the government should pay for the unemployment programs from government revenues, after all these warnings from a member of his own party, the minister has done just the opposite. He has watched over the preparation for further dismantling of unemployment insurance in this country and has diverted millions of dollars of unemployment insurance contributions into government programs.

The combination of the government's deliberately induced recession, dressed up as an anti-inflation economic strategy, and its dismantling of the unemployment insurance program is drawing unemployment insurance and the entire system of social services to the brink of a crisis.

The unemployment insurance fund derived from employee-employer contributions could well fall $1.2 billion short of meeting the demands for benefits. It could even go above that figure. For the month of February this year, the total bill was $650 million. That is close to double the average monthly payout last year, which was some $370 million. Instead of costing $4.8 billion as it did last year, unemployment insurance could end up costing from $8 billion to $10 billion this year. That is before account is taken of bills for more than $200 million for the administration of the National Employment Service, $188 million for job training and $190 million for work-sharing, all charged against UI contributions.

With the government existing from cost-sharing for unemployment insurance and charging the costs of its other programs to the UI fund, those Canadians who are lucky enough to have weathered another year of this government's inflation fighting and still hold a job will see their UI premiums increase dramatically. There are 270,000 fewer jobs this year than last year. With unemployment expected to continue its rise, it is unlikely there will be more premium payers among whom to spread the increased cost next year.

But that is not all. The unemployment insurance system, of course, will not go broke. The government will boost unemployment insurance premiums next year to meet this year's deficit. By the end of the year a good many Canadians will have exhausted their claims and will have to look elsewhere for means of support. Of course, the preference would be for them to find work, but the ugly truth for many of those people will be that there is no work to be found. Unemployment is now at a post-depression high and even the government's own analysts are predicting that the Canadian economy will shrink—not grow—this year, eliminating even more jobs. This will be the first time since 1954 that the Canadian economy has actually shrunk.

With no jobs to turn to, what can these unfortunate souls do? Unhappily, it looks as though their only option will be to turn to provincial welfare, which is totally unequipped to deal with such an increase in demand. In the past when recessions hit, workers could often find temporary work to enable them to renew their unemployment insurance claims. Their chances of that are now more remote than ever. For one thing, I have already mentioned that there are 270,000 fewer jobs this year than last year and that the economy is continuing to slide. But the other factor is that the government, in an effort to save itself money, has consistently reduced the protection afforded by unemployment insurance. It has done this just as the need for an effective unemployment insurance program has increased.

In the recessions of the seventies, unemployment insurance had been the main stabilizing influence to help to limit the impact of the decline; but now, as the government deliberately takes this country further down the recessionary path, it does so after substantially weakening the unemployment insurance program. What will happen to the Canadian economy when unemployment insurance and the welfare system collapse under the strain of the climbing number of jobless Canadians?

Finally, I want to address myself to a couple of clauses in the unemployment insurance regulations which are particularly discriminatory. The first of these affects farm workers. Section 16 of the regulations stipulates that in determining a worker's eligibility for UI benefits, only jobs lasting 25 days or longer with the same employer are considered to be insurable earnings. As far as I know, farm workers are the only group of regular workers affected by this requirement. It is quite possible for a farm worker in, say, the Fraser Valley to work steadily for six months, but not with the same farmer. Farm workers often move from crop to crop and from farm to farm, only spending a few weeks or even a few days with each employer. It is not uncommon for the 25-day regulation to deny them benefits when they would otherwise qualify.

I hope that I do not need to remind the House that farm workers are often subjected to inhuman and dangerous living and working conditions, near starvation wages, unlimited hours of work and even racial abuse. Section 16 unfortunately serves to perpetuate the exploitive system of labour contracting which farm workers often must endure. By working through a labour contractor, a farm worker is, in fact, working the whole time for the same employer, no matter how many farms are actually worked on. That is the principal service provided by these farm labour contractors who, in turn, pocket a large part of the worker's pay, often up to 40 per cent of the worker's wages. But many farm workers are faced with a difficult choice of either working independently of the contractor and forgoing UI benefits during the winter off-season or working for the farm labour contractor who pockets a huge portion of that worker's pay.

Last fall, the Canadian Farm Workers Union approached the Human Rights Commission to rule on Section 16 of the UI regulations. It argued that it was racially discriminatory since it discriminates against farm workers who are largely members of minority groups. The union said that because of Section 16, the federal government was the best friend a farm labour contractor ever had. It said that Section 16 was the Magna Carta of unscrupulous farm labour contractors.

The Canadian Farm Workers Union is calling on the government to delete Section 16 of the regulations, and I want to support its demand. By deleting Section 16, the government could accomplish two things. It would provide farm workers with a modicum of justice, and it would eliminate the need for farm labour contractors who have been milking farm workers for too long.

Another inequity in the UI regulations discriminates against inland fishermen, an occupation of many of my constituents. Under the present regulations, fishermen were declared to be eligible for benefits during their off-season, but the regulations also define their off-season strictly as running from December to mid-May. In my constituency and in many other areas of prairie Canada, fishermen have a winter season which generally runs from November through until March or April. When they are laid off or they catch their quota by some time in March or April, they are not eligible for UI payments for the rest of the off-season. It is an unfair regulation which my colleague the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and I have been calling upon the department to change for a number of months, indeed years. All we hear from the government is that it is working on it. It is working very, very slowly on it.

Mr. Young: Until the next election.

Mr. Sargeant: We in the New Democratic Party support the bill before us today, Bill C-114. It is, given the current state of unemployment insurance and what the minister seems to have in mind for the future of unemployment insurance, a valuable provision to protect those Canadian workers employed in seasonal occupations. We call for the government's continued support for unemployment insurance and the strengthening of the program. However, we are suspicious of the government's proposals to make UI a more effective tool, tilting workers toward work and away from unemployment insurance. Those kinds of proposals are only window dressing for the government to abdicate its responsibility for income protection for the working people of Canada. Of course, that is what unemployment insurance should be. It should be only income protection. It should not take the place of a vibrant economy and job creation as an answer to the growing number of unemployed. We have seen the government stake its development dreams on the energy megaprojects and we have seen those projects go down in flames. Now we hear that the government is expecting the economy to continue to decline for the rest of this year and that it has no intention to stimulate it or to mount any realistic and effective programs to stem the tide of unemployment. What we want and what the people of Canada want is an economic strategy which will create jobs to provide incomes for Canadians. Nothing I have seen in the three years that I have been in this House suggests that the federal government, whether Liberals or Tories are at the helm, is about to deliver such a program.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join in the debate for just a few moments and to join my colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), in saying that it is the intention of our party to support this bill and to allow the matter to go through on all three readings this afternoon so that it can become law, bearing in mind the time limit under which the minister operates. But I want to say that while we are discussing what I believe to be improvements to, or at least in terms of the existing economic situation the maintenance of, the system of unemployment insurance, it must cross the mind of any hon. member who speaks in the House of Commons on this bill and who considers the fact that we are focusing this day on unemployment insurance, that we are really discussing a program which has had to be augmented and changed, not because of failures of unemployment insurance, but, rather, because of the failures of the economic policies of this government, policies which have refused to recognize the realities of the country. That is really the bottom line of all of our discussions, whether we are referring to UIC, student employment programs, or what have you. If we had a reasonable economic policy in the country that spoke to growth, to incentive, to reasonable trust and use of the exuberance of the private sector, which enticed people who now save their money in savings accounts to invest that money, to build plants and equipment and to expand their businesses, I expect that the House would not be concentrating to the extent it is on unemployment insurance and the problems facing the unemployed.

I also worry that when we discuss this matter we always seem to speak in terms of percentages of unemployed and discuss for how long people who comprise these percentages are without work. The percentages do not illustrate the human problems of the people behind those statistics. I think the government must address those programs, as well. I know that the minister is involved in some job-creating programs, summer programs and others. He and I know that while the dollars spent on those programs create some jobs, they are very costly and temporary jobs. I hope that in the course of considering its economic program for the future, whether before or after Versailles, the government will consider the cost of those jobs and whether there might not be a better way of approaching the problems of the unemployed in this country, and will particularly address employment for our young people.

There is a great deal of confusion concerning government policy. Aside from taking the wrong direction, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his ministers have added to the confusion. Last week in Vancouver, on May 24, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) spoke to the International Monetary Fund Conference. I wish to quote from page 3 of his text. I assume he followed it; there is no indication he did not. He usually reads his speeches. He said, and I quote:

• (1430)

—I believe that we can no longer look to the traditional reliance on fiscal policy stimulus as a job-creating device.

That was his statement. The minister raises his eyebrows. I raised mine as well when I read it. The kind of programs this minister is involved in, job-creation programs, are fiscal policy stimulus. The minister makes speeches here and across the country saying that they are relying on those kinds of things as a device to help create jobs. Some say they are ineffective, some say they could be more effective, but that is what the government is relying on.

What is confusing things is that this minister speaks with a forked tongue. He speaks out of both sides of his mouth at the same time. A confusing situation is created.

What does the President of the Treasury Board mean when he says we can no longer look to the traditional reliance on fiscal policy stimulus as a job-creating device? Is he telling us the government is going to do away with the job-creation programs of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy)? Are they going to be diminished? Are they not going to be improved? Is he saying the government is not going to look to recreating the tax system to provide some incentive for investment?

Is the President of the Treasury Board saying the government is going to abandon the research and development stimulus that is necessary in this country? That is a fiscal policy stimulus for Canada. We have opportunities in the high technology industry to create a whole new era of industrial development and secondary manufacturing.

The President of the Treasury Board said in Vancouver what he would not say in Kanata, in my constituency, where people engaged in the high technology industry know the importance of research and development. Is that going to be abandoned? Are no jobs to be created as a result of using the tax system to provide incentives to get people to invest?

Is the government stepping out of manpower training? That is a fiscal policy stimulus and a job-creating device. You train personnel for jobs that are available. Is he saying it is beyond the ken of this government to put in place a tax system that will encourage companies and corporations which require skilled help? They cannot wait for governments. They need these people. They must create their own schools of learning rather than bring people from abroad at this time when so many young people are looking for work.

Is the President of the Treasury Board saying we are not going to have problems of export promotion support? What is the government saying? On one hand it is not going to look to fiscal policy stimulus. On the other hand it says it is behind research and development and all those other things.

It is this glaring, blatant inconsistency that is confusing the business community, young people looking for guidance and those concerned about the state of the economy; there is one message in Vancouver and another in Ottawa. It depends on the audience to whom ministers are speaking.

What did he say? He says that what the government is going to do will no longer be a quick-fix. We either have a no-fix or a quick-fix. The government until recently did not talk about getting on with the job of changing the direction of its economic policy. That is neither quick-fix, slow-fix or no-fix. That is an important initiative.

People think that the meeting at Versailles will be a great watershed convocation of world leaders who will discuss the direction the world will take. I hope they do. I also hope that the confusion that has been added to the debate by the Prime Minister will be removed. While the President of the Treasury Board said one thing in Vancouver, the Prime Minister was quoted in the May 27 edition of the Ottawa Citizen as saying "his government could have a new economic strategy for a fall throne speech if the Versailles Summit fails to find solutions to the world's worsening economic situation".

In other words, if Versailles does not work, Canada is going to do by itself what I said it could not do. It said we are dependent upon the United States; but if Versailles does not work, we will not be dependent on the United States, we will do it on our own. That is the situation. It is that kind of silly, inconsistent economic nonsense which drives Canadians up the wall.

It is about time we considered the situation in which we find ourselves. The cabinet came back from Meach Lake as devoid of new ideas as when it when it went there. They wasted the heat for the building that weekend. They wasted your money, Mr. Speaker, and mine as well as their time because they came away with nothing new in terms of economic directions which would affect to a corresponding degree the unemployment insurance system. We will never do away with it; it should never be done away with. There is a certain amount of humanity about it. From time to time governments have to be humane. They also have to look at situations which face them.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) says in this House there is nothing we can do, that we have to rely on the Americans, that we are caught in the great vice of world conditions. The Prime Minister says that after Versailles the government may do something. The question is why it has not been done before Versailles. Why did the government not do something two years ago when it promised Canadians a number of things about the good life that would accompany the return of the Liberal government to Ottawa?

What we have now is a new slogan for Canada. Instead of a new deal for Canada, we have a new slogan— "Liberal times are tough times". The International Monetary Fund indicated just how tough they are. We are into a negative growth rate period in the country for the first time within the memory of many people.

Mr. Nystrom: The thirties.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I suspect we have not had that kind of situation since before the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was born. That is the kind of inconsistency we face.

The government which says it loves small business is going to help small business through the employment it provides for young people and others. It is going to study again what has already been studied with regard to changes in the legislation and initiatives that could be taken by the government in respect of small business.

It must be dreadful for members opposite to visit their constituencies on the weekend. It must be rough on them. My heart goes out to them. However, my heart goes out also to those people who are the victims of these policies which smack of inconsistency and do damage, not just to this country but to many Canadians who thought when they put this government back in office that something reasonable would be done. That is the situation we find ourselves in and it is under those circumstances that we are considering this bill.

While I have the minister here, I want to put a proposition to him. It is a proposition that he will receive from me in the mail. It deals with some changes that might be made in unemployment insurance legislation and benefits, matters which I suggest are in some respects effecting a discrimination.

I have in my hand a letter dated May 14, 1982, from a constituent of mine, Mrs. M. E. Villeneuve of No. 4. David Drive, Nepean, Ontario. With a number of other people she prepared, had circulated and had signed within the Ottawa-Carleton region a petition that asked for some changes. I believe I can best put the case by reading the letter into the record, because it lays the matter out. In writing to me she said this:

> I object to the fact that there are no unemployment benefits for women who go on leave when they adopt a baby.
> When a natural mother has a baby and is on maternity leave, she receives unemployment benefits; and Federal Government employees, in certain categories, now receive additional funds from their employing department. Natural mothers are also able to return to their jobs as early as they wish to earn their salary if they financially need to.
> Adoptive mothers must be off work for a six-month period, a policy of Children's Aid Society, with no benefits from unemployment or from their employing department.
> When a couple adopts a child they are taking over a government financial responsibility. People who adopt a child go through so much stress and wait for so long, that they certainly deserve the same privileges as any other parents. In this day and age no one can afford to be off work six months without pay, and I pay my unemployment insurance just like anyone else.
> I feel this is an extremely unfair situation, and you can see from the attached petition that many other people are against this. There is absolutely no justifiable reason for this, and it is time that the government gave unemployment benefits to adoptive mothers instead of continually increasing natural mothers' benefits.

That is how it appears to that mother in that situation. She concludes:

> I request that you present this letter and petition on my behalf to the Minister for his consideration. A reply would be most appreciated.

I can tell the minister that I have written to him today and I also have sent the petition to him today. At the same time, I felt that as we are going to deal with this legislation today in the House vis-à-vis unemployment insurance, I would like to address the matter directly to him today.

I am sure that if he had his way, the programs of the government would be much different. He would not want to go home to Winnipeg every day and defend the banalities of the Minister of Finance to the effect that nothing can be done. I am sure that this is the case with a whole host of backbenchers in his party. That is why there is trouble in the backbenches of the Liberal party, and a great deal of difficulty. I want to say to my friends in the Liberal Party that silence by them, public silence by them, will ensure either one of two things—the continuation of the existing policies which are doing so much damage to their constituents, or a movement away from those policies which will be insufficient to meet the needs of the country, one or the other.

We are members of the opposition. We are always being turned to for advice by the government. We have given them advice but the advice is never taken. It lies in the hands of the Liberal members of this House to move the government away from its damaging fiscal policies; and they will not do it in caucus. I tell you, my dear friends, through you, Mr. Speaker, that you will not do it in caucus.

It is time that backbenchers of the Liberal Party realize the important position which they hold and rise up publicly, openly, in this debate or otherwise, and at whatever opportunity there is, to drive home the point in the British parliamentary system to which the government House leader so often refers when it is convenient to him to do so.

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I see my hon. colleague is making his usual Friday afternoon speech and is throwing dirt at the government and the backbenchers. I want to assure him that there is full solidarity in this party and that there is no way the Liberals will support any Tory government or their policy.

Since he has been referring to me and to the British parliamentary tradition, I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, through you, to say that I have just made public my intent to strike a special committee to deal with parliamentary reform at the beginning of next week. I hope that he will make his views clear there and that he will not stick to the paper he tabled some one or two years ago, because it was less than acceptable.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank the hon. member very much. He has raised a whole new point that I could discuss.

Some hon. Members: No, no, no!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not believe, first of all, that I was throwing dirt on his colleagues.

Mr. Nystrom: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not care if his colleagues support us. That is not the issue. I was not throwing dirt on his colleagues. What I was saying to his colleagues was that the responsibility for the present economic situation and its continuation lies on the backs of those Members of Parliament who support publicly the government's economic policy.

Now, they may talk about it in caucus; I am sure they do. They may talk about it at home; I am sure they do. But the time has come for them to speak out about it in Parliament, because that is the way you get governments to move.

Mr. Nystrom: Right on!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the way you get governments, including the government House leader, to pay attention to Parliament—because they have to pay attention to Parliament. I hope that those proposals that are brought forth by the government for parliamentary reform go a lot further than just making it convenient for Members of Parliament. What needs to happen here is to create a system where Members of Parliament who represent ordinary people have an opportunity to speak out and to investigate, to be healthy skeptics of what government tells us they are going to do. Unfortunately, what has happened to this Parliament—and the government House leader is admitting this finally—is that Parliament has come more and more under the thumb of the executive.

That is what has happened to this institution. I wager that if we had a half decent budget process in place and there had been a good recommendation hanging around since 1977, we would never have had the budget we got on November 12. There is too much good sense in this House of Commons. There is not much good sense in the Department of Finance, not much good sense with the deputy minister of finance, not much good sense with the Minister of Finance. Putting that deputy minister together with the Minister of Finance, with the two of them never having met a payroll in their life, has been a combination that has been lethal to the country. That is the problem. We have never had that kind of thing before.

If this parliamentary reform program will allow Members of Parliament—I do not care what their stripe may be, Liberal, Conservative, New Democrat, or Independent even—to make some contribution to policy development, then the minister will have done something. But I warn him that if his program—I have not seen it yet—is merely designed to meet the convenience of Members of Parliament, then it is not enough, and it will be judged to be not enough by the country or by any interested observer in this place. Because the country is looking at this place. They are looking at it, the government House leader knows it, and they are going to demand some things of this place. We have the responsibility—I am prepared to accept that, but so has the government—in terms of making it relevant. I hope, I pray, that he is enlightened, that he went far beyond his speech to the federal lawyers' club, which was a speech on the cosmetics of parliamentary reform rather than the reality of parliamentary reform to get to the heart of things. My position paper, which he referred to, was not the last word. The problem with the situation is that my position paper was the first word ever heard from a government in a long time about meaningful changes.

Members of Parliament would be a little better off even to take what he describes as those shallow reforms. If they were so shallow, why were they not adopted by the government immediately?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt my hon. colleague. I respect the fact that he has the floor and I would not object if he is given a bit more time, if he requires it. However, I think he is on the wrong track. He presumes I will impose on the committee changes just as he tried to do. The reference will be very broad, and the committee will be large in order to allow as many backbenchers as possible to participate. I hope the hon. member will refrain from participating because I would not like to see the old pros giving their views on this; I would like to hear new and good views from backbenchers.

• (1450)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is a rare and refreshing observation. It is not a point of order although it was raised under the guise of a point of order. In any event, we will see what the proposal is. I never look a gift horse in the mouth, but I have a healthy skepticism about what this government tells me it is giving to me. Any time the government gives me a gift, I worry. Sometimes it flares back and kicks me where I am very tender. We will see if that occurs. If my friend's proposals are good, if there is some reasonableness, if he will allow backbenchers and if he does not chair the committee—

Mr. Pinard: I won't.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —then there may be some hope. I hope it does not die with this Parliament, though, because the problems will be around until the fall and we will have to deal with them.

I hope my friend does not put his thumb under this. When we get to the moment of truth with respect to parliamentary reform, I hope what happened with respect to freedom of information will not happen again. When we got to the moment of truth with respect to freedom of information the government started to quiver and shake. The government said, "My goodness, we are going to have to give up some secrets; we can't have that." However, I will give my friend his due. If it is a good approach and if the committee system is good, he will have my support. We will take a look at it Monday, but there is a long road of parliamentary reform ahead.

I am a perpetual optimist. I believe sometimes the leopard can change its spots and that suddenly out of a shroud of secrecy there will be a streaker of openness in terms of freedom of information. Where there has been closeness before in terms of parliamentary reform and a desire to keep government in control, I hope suddenly there will be a transformation to sainthood and a new plateau of involvement of Members of Parliament. If that is the result, we will all cheer. I will cheer with my friend. If need be, I will even buy a bottle of champagne which we can share together! It will be a bottle of Canadian champagne, by the way. I suspect, however, that many of the things we are discussing in terms of unemployment insurance as well as the economic program of the government would be different if parliament could have been involved.

I want to thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your kindness. You allowed me to proceed because you had also allowed the government House leader to do the same thing. As usual, you have presided over the House with the even hand and fairness we have come to expect of anyone from eastern Ontario who approaches that task.

I hope the minister will consider very carefully the question of adoptive parents, who have a unique problem. I also hope the government as a whole will bear in mind the new things that are happening in the unemployment insurance field.

I want to close with one further reference. I found an interesting clipping in The Globe and Mail which reports that the federal government is now setting up an ombudsman's office in Manitoba—I believe in the minister's riding—on a trial basis. I think that is very generous of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). The article in The Globe and Mail says that a new ombudsman would cut Unemployment Insurance Commission red tape. The office is being set up on a trial basis. I think it is wonderful the minister would do that for his riding. I do not know whether additional public servants will be hired for this, but it is a pilot project. It will cost $200,000 in the first year and will be expanded to other provinces if it proves useful. That is what the article says. This office is now being dubbed the "Canada Public Help Centre". The article states the centre, and I quote:

—will open Monday in Winnipeg's Osborne Village area, and will be staffed by four advisers under the direction of Ted Wakeman, a 30-year veteran of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

I, of course, wish him well in that new undertaking. The minister made an interesting observation about what this is all about. He said it is to "break down the barriers to ensure people get a sympathetic response".

The advisers will help people understand confusing government forms, and will patch up difficulties that occur when public servants have bad days and give their callers the brushoff—

Now we have an ombudsman for those who get the brushoff. What is happening is interesting. When the freedom of information bill goes through, we will have a freedom of information ombudsman. We now have a language ombudsman. We have a penitentiaries ombudsman. We have a privacy ombudsman. We will have a UIC ombudsman.

If I may finish with this thought, I think the government should consider creating an ombudsman to report to this Parliament. There was a first-class bill in 1978, Bill C-43, which was advanced by the then minister of justice, Mr. Basford, which would have created the office of ombudsman. We cannot afford to have these little ombudsmen's offices all across the country. It would be much too expensive if we did it jurisdiction by jurisdiction, problem by problem and statute by statute.

The government's having gone this far, I think a case could be made now to create the office of ombudsman. I speak for myself only in this, naturally. If the government decided to move in that direction, I would be prepared to support it. I might even be prepared to help because what has happened in this country is that government has grown so large that in comparison the ordinary people feel quite small. I think we need help. Members of Parliament can help. Attitudes certainly can help. I think if this pilot project works out—the idea of a new kind of ombudsman is very interesting—the government should perhaps consider bringing in some legislation to create the office of ombudsman. It seems to me that should be the next step in this matter, the government's having gone as far as it has.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House of Commons. I hope the minister will take to heart my comments respecting adoptive parents and that my friend, the government House leader, will reveal himself ultimately as the saviour of Parliament.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in this debate on the bill now before the House. I realize that we, the House leaders, have an agreement to get the bill through all three readings this afternoon. We are now engaged in second reading, and I shall therefore be brief, except to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) on his present initiative to request an extension of the existing legislation, as he has done in the bill now before the House. My colleague from the Progressive Conservative Party, the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), wanted to draw a parallel between parliamentary reform and the policies favoured by the government, and he implied that if our parliamentary rules were different, we would also be getting different policies, especially concerning employment. Perhaps he is right. I am not in a position to contradict his statement out of hand, but where he is making a mistake is when he is looking for scapegoats. I feel that even in 1982, it is rather presumptuous to accuse a few parliamentarians of being responsible for the very slow pace at which our noble institution is gradually becoming more modern. The hon. member knows this as well as I do. More or less as a joke, I said earlier that in a document tabled by the hon. member, there was nothing that could be taken seriously. He realizes as well as I do that I approve of some of his proposals and already mentioned this to him, and especially, to give only one example, the proposal for a twenty-minute limit on speeches. I have always found this a sensible proposal and I certainly would support it if presented again.

However, without wishing to judge too severely his manner of proceeding when he was House leader, I think the proposals he made at the time should first have been considered by all parliamentarians in the course of preparing and approving a report by a parliamentary committee. He implied that he could not accept the proposals I made and explained in a speech to federal lawyers a few months ago. I want to make it clear that every single one of the proposals I made on this occasion had been considered previously by a parliamentary committee in 1976 and 1977, or from 1975 to 1976, it does not make much difference, a committee of which both the member for Nepean-Carleton and myself were members. Since these recommendations had already been made by a parliamentary committee, I felt it was entirely proper to air them publicly as being desirable changes in the short term, in order to show some confidence in the growth of our parliamentary procedures and the changes to be made.

In any case, I want to give the hon. member the assurance, since he insisted on drawing a parallel between parliamentary reform and the bill before the House today, that the referral to a special committee is a referral of a very general nature that will make it possible for members on both sides of the House to express their views, without constraint or limitation, regarding all aspects of the rules of this House. In addition, there will be no undue limitation on the committee's proceedings, we have no intention of cutting off the committee's work before it has reported to Parliament, and we earnestly hope that parliamentarians and especially backbenchers, will make a major contribution in suggesting procedural changes, as part of the committee's work. That is why when the member for Nepean-Carleton made it clear that he would agree not to sit on the committee, since he is more or less an old hand at parliamentary procedure, he did so provided I would agree not to chair the committee. I have no objections. I will not sit on the committee if he does not, so that more backbenchers will be able to express their views. In any case, we shall have an opportunity to discuss the matter at the House leader level—I am referring to the membership of the committee. I shall certainly consider the offer made by the member for Nepean-Carleton.

Finally, it should not come as a surprise to him, because earlier today I advised the Progressive Conservative House leader and the House leader for the New Democratic Party, of my intention to give notice today of this referral to a special committee of twenty members for the consideration of parliamentary reform, and also to present this motion. I also have the consent of the parliamentary House leaders for approving the referral, without debate, some time next week, probably early in the week. In the circumstances, there are absolutely no snakes in the grass. This is a very frank and open approach which will make it possible for members on both sides of the House to make recommendations, while the referral also provides for interim reports under which certain changes could be tested. In any case, all this will open the door to changes that may further affect the government's policies but, above all, will make it possible for Parliament to be more efficient and more productive and to respond more satisfactorily and promptly to the present demands of modern society, where problems tend to surface more rapidly than they did in the past.

Consequently, I believe there is reason to rejoice at this approach, and I shall be speaking to this subject in greater detail later on. In concluding, I hope, with the member for Nepean-Carleton, that the policy we are discussing today will be a step toward greater parliamentary flexibility. I am convinced that in view of the present unemployment levels and the economic situation the present bill will be very useful in our society. Once more, I wish to congratulate the minister on his initiative, and I thank members on both sides of the House for their co-operation in expediting the passage of this bill at all three readings today.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-114 this afternoon. Is the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) was rising on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry. We tend to focus on the center of the House all the time. It is my mistake. I did not see the hon. member rise. Usually we recognize one member from each party in the debate on an amendment, and in this case also we want to hear the opinion of each party. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was recognized, followed by a member of the government. Now I will recognize the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), followed immediately afterwards by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Are we speaking on the labour bill or—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry, I cannot recognize the hon. member when he is not in his seat.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody was rising in response to the government House leader who strayed far from the contents of the bill we are dealing with here.

An hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I will take my orders from other places. I thought the hon. member was answering the government House leader.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There was some confusion, I admit. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton had the floor and was talking of reform. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) spoke at some length on the subject of the committee that will be formed next week. Perhaps the Chair got carried away and was listening with great interest to what was being said. I agree that not enough was being said about the matter before the House, namely, the amendment to Bill C-114. However, I recognized the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. That was done inadvertently because I did not see the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton rise in his place.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, there are two things that I should like to deal with. First of all, it is very strange that in the middle of a discussion on Bill C-114 we got into a discussion of parliamentary reform. There is limited time for debate on this bill so I do not think it is advisable at all to stray from it. A number of members want to speak on the bill, and the subject of parliamentary reform will be dealt with at another time. If we are to continue the debate on parliamentary reform then it is proper that we hear a member of the NDP, but we are dealing with Bill C-114 and the proper method is to go from one side to the other. Consequently the next speaker should be from the official opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I have not a list of hon. members who have participated. I said that I did not see the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton rise, and therefore inadvertently I recognized the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody. That can be withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Consent is not given, so the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I feel like the phoenix rising three times from the ashes. If the rules of relevancy were to be strictly adhered to perhaps both sides of the House would come under criticism from the Chair. I support the Chair and the decisions of the Chair. When the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody I do not quarrel with that.

There has been a great deal of wandering from the subject in a couple of the other speeches, as was pointed out by the deputy whip for the Conservative Party. I do not think that started with the government House leader. It started with the intellectual and literal, if not verbose musings of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who is a very capable man. He knows how many devils can dance on the head of a pin. He can launch into great stylistic meanderings on a moment's provocation. I think it is only fitting, after all his years in the House, that he be known as "the wizzard of ooze". I am very fond of him personally, even when he makes such gross literary errors as saying that the leopard can change its stripes at any moment. That kind of allusion baffles me, but obviously it does not baffle the master of bafflegab. I think he must have provoked the government House leader, which is why the government House leader got all mixed up, took the heat off the minister of unemployment, and we went on to a debate about parliamentary reform. I think there is probably a need for that because some of us tend to, if not defame, at least deform some aspects of Parliament. We should get on with reform through a special committee, and I think all of us are looking forward to it. I was a little worried, though, about the offer of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton to buy the government House leader a bottle of champagne. I just wondered if that might be considered by some to be payola, or something like that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Canadian champagne.

Mr. Rose: Canadian champagne. I am quite sure he did not mean it in that way at all.

Since we started out today speaking about unemployment insurance and the extension of the variable requirement, I would just like to make a couple of observations. First of all, we do not oppose the proposed extension. We are going to have a lot to say, though, when the bill is amended because we do not like the attitudes which are assumed in some of the utterances, not only of the minister but also of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in attempting to put the blame for unemployment squarely on the backs of the unemployed, or to shift the cost of unemployment off the federal government and onto provincial welfare rolls. You might be able to do that, but you cannot shift the misery of unemployment to anyone else but the unemployed.

Some people do not pay unemployment insurance whatsoever.

Mr. Nystrom: Senators.

Mr. Rose: MPs, Senators—

An hon. Member: Stanley would not let us.

Mr. Rose: —but senators do not need it. They have a lifetime job. They do not need severance pay either. But I would point out that an MP's job is one of the most insecure in the world, as perhaps at least some of us have occasion to know. The average time in office of an MP is 5.3 years, so the job security is not all that great, and perhaps we as a group should be paying unemployment insurance regardless of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might have said.

I am sorry the minister has gone, Mr. Speaker, not that I blame him after the last couple of exchanges. He urged us not to talk today about the level of unemployment. He asked us to avoid all discussions of the misery and insecurity of those employed who are about to lose their jobs. He did not want us to talk about long-awaited changes or what improvements we might suggest to unemployment insurance. He did not want us to talk about the grim employment prospects for students and young people. I do not blame him. He does not want us to talk about that because he wants people to forget about it and talk about the brave new world which will come about with some future legislation. He does not want us to talk about the 1.5 million unemployed, the people who have given up looking for work, the young people in communities with perhaps 20 per cent or 25 per cent unemployment. He does not want us to talk about native unemployment, which runs up to 80 per cent in some communities. I can understand why he does not want us to talk about that. I do not blame him. He said it would be redundant if we were to talk this afternoon about those things because, after all, we have a great chance to talk about those things some other time. Perhaps we will have that opportunity when Bill C-115 is introduced. Interestingly enough, the minister had a proposal that we should introduce that bill for second reading, not waste the time of the House this afternoon with Bill C-114 which everyone favours, but deal with the minister's second reading speech and we could have ours the following week. That was a very generous offer, especially when one considers that the minister woulld introduce the bill, it would be discussed in the press, and he would be the only one to get any news out of it. I think when we deal with Bill C-115 we should be all here together to discuss it, and each party's critic should have the opportunity to provide input.

So, Mr. Speaker, he does not want us to talk about those things. The government does not want us to talk about lots of things. A committee of the government, though, certainly talks about things. A committee of Liberal members talks about things. Here is a leaked document of a caucus committee, including one cabinet minister and one ex-cabinet minister. What are they talking about? They say:

> The political-economic situation is very serious and every effort must be made to improve it.

We cannot disagree with that. The document says:

> Committee must help demonstrate that the Liberals have the will and determination to govern.

No one can quarrel with that because they are demonstrating just the opposite at the moment. They are falling apart at the seams. Hardly a week goes by without some backbencher getting up on his hind legs and saying things about his own government which are hardly complimentary. It goes on:

> The committee should probe radically alternative ways of revitalizing the economy and of offsetting current hardships.

That is what members of the government are saying. We have been saying that for years now, but the government is now beginning to catch up and talk about things like that, too. But there is a cautionary note here when it says we:

> —must ensure that whatever is recommended it be consistent with Liberal philosophy.

I have been here some 14 years and what the Liberal philosophy is completely eludes me, if it is an identifiable philosophical position. There might have been a Liberal philosophy at one time, but what it is today is: do what you have to do and get away with all you can.

Mr. Pepin: That is a philosophy.

Mr. Rose: That is the philosophy. I am glad the minister admitted that is the philosophy. They go on to ask: what do we do and how do we achieve it? The document goes on to say we:

> —need to break the bureaucratic stranglehold on the system. Structure of government departments frustrates effective direction by ministers and prevents an imaginative, action-oriented approach.

I could go on and on. I am pleased to read that into the record, not just to embarrass the government, but to suggest that even the very prominent members of that government are worried. They look at the polls and are worried. Well they should be, because, as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton said earlier, the country is worried. We have entered a period of negative growth for the first time since the depression.

I would like to direct the minister, Mr. Speaker, to a very serious matter which is not beyond his ability to correct.

Mr. Kristiansen: Where is he?

Mr. Rose: He is the Scarlet Pimpernel; one minute he is here, the next minute he has gone.

Mr. Nystrom: He is on the telephone.

Mr. Rose: The next time I wish to speak to him, then, I will phone him. He is listening to me on the telephone. I am very pleased to hear that.

An hon. Member: He is out looking for a job.

Mr. Rose: I do not know where he would get a job. In any event, I do not want to proceed as though what I was about to discuss were a frivolous matter or one that I did not care about. It has to do with the farm workers in the Fraser Valley. Many of these people are of one ethnic group. Many of them do not speak English. Many are new immigrants and work for $1.25 an hour. Many of these people are among the lowest paid people in my riding. They go from job to job as the crops ripen and develop doing farm work. Most of these jobs do not last more than a few weeks. Sometimes they do not last more than a few days. Because they do not last for more than a few days, they cannot work for one employer more than a few days and, therefore, they cannot establish the 25-day minimum necessary for them to qualify for unemployment insurance. I do not know of any other working group of people in society who are discriminated against in the same way that farm workers are. I do not know why this is so. On the other hand, if these people decide not to go to work for an individual farmer—because if they do and they work less than 25 days they do not qualify for unemployment insurance—and instead are employed by a farm labour contractor who can put them to work at several farms over a season, then they do qualify for unemployment I suppose if it works that way in the Fraser

Valley with crops such as broccoli, strawberries and raspberries, it should also work for us in southern Ontario with our grape picking, tobacco harvesting, and so on.

• (1520)

In addition to being very low-paid and having most insecure jobs, which causes difficulty in plugging themselves into the system—at least this is the experience of my constituents, many of whom are immigrants—they are discriminated against in terms of unemployment insurance because they cannot qualify for benefits.

I do not claim that all farm labour contractors are exploitive. They are not. They perform a good service for some of these people. But a person should not be faced with having to work for a farm contractor because otherwise he will not receive unemployment insurance. They should have the choice of working either for an individual farmer or for a farm labour contractor.

At the moment Section 16 of the regulations forbids this. If a farm worker goes to work for two weeks for farmer A and then two weeks for farmer B, he does not have the necessary 25 qualifying days. Therefore, he is not eligible for unemployment insurance. When that farm worker is laid off, as all of them are because this work is seasonal, he collects no benefits even though he has to pay the premiums. That is blatantly unfair.

This is not a new problem. It goes back two years, if not longer. It is at least two years that I know of, but the situation has become so bad that farm workers, like the lettuce and the grape harvesters in California, have formed a union. We hear people say there are too many unions and that unions are too strong. But unions come about because people are forced to bargain collectively in order to look after themselves. A farm workers' union has developed in the Fraser Valley. It will grow as it has in California and elsewhere, because there must be some way of fighting for rights collectively. You would think that people would have to fight a big, rotten and inflexible bureaucracy in order to change the act. That is only half right. They do not have to fight to change the act. The regulation is all that needs changing, and that can be done by order in council. That is all that is required to right what I think is a wrong which should not be perpetuated.

The farming season is nearly upon us, and there is no protection or relief for these people. If there is a Liberal philosophy which is: do what we have to and do only when we have to, and if there is more to it than that—and I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who is the acting Prime Minister, is nodding approvingly—surely a simple change by order in council is not beyond the ability of the government and a process which would not take long.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): After all, there are more than 3,000 orders in council each year.

Mr. Rose: This is not the first time I have mentioned this matter. On December 8, when the Christmas spirit pervaded all our hearts, including, presumably, those who govern—

Mr. Anguish: Including the Liberals?

Mr. Rose: —I rose under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and said this:

> In contrast to other workers like plumbers and carpenters, Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Act denies farm workers all unemployment insurance credit for the days worked unless they work 25 days for the same employer. Thus, over 100,000 farm workers among Canada's poorest paid workers who are not normally covered by minimum wage legislation, health and safety protection, or workers' compensation benefits, are victims of unemployment insurance discrimination which can force these workers into the arms of labour contractors who can, by moving workers from job to job, employ farm workers for the season for a fee of sometimes up to 40 per cent of their already low wages.

I moved then that we change this regulation because it is only right and just to do so.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we support the extension of the bill. We want to see it go through all its stages today. We think this is important. We look forward to improvements when the act is changed. But we are not all that optimistic about improvements in the Unemployment Insurance Act. Our experience has been just the reverse. Cutbacks have occurred and the poor have been blamed for the failure of the government's economic policy. I could certainly speak on that topic as well. However, I will not do so today. I will leave the House, I hope, with a very determined wish, supported, I think, by all fair-minded people, that we scrap Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Act regulations and start treating people who work in the agricultural industry on a seasonal basis as decently as we treat other people who work in our society and who have more protection.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) yesterday about this bill, he said it was the wish of our party that this bill receive speedy passage through the House. We all agreed on that and we agreed that we would keep our remarks brief. I am sure this was also the wish of the minister. Today, however, the government House leader made a very lengthy interjection, and I am sure other members were involved, which puzzled us. Nevertheless, hundreds of thousands of Canadians are affected by this legislation, and all of us should see to it that this bill pass.

I am, however, critical of the minister for waiting until the eleventh hour to introduce this bill. This legislation needs many amendments. Probably the minister agrees, but the point was agreed on years ago, yet here we are with a bill that has to be passed in all stages today to enable the unemployed in Canada to receive instead of what should be a paycheque some form of assistance.

I am very critical of the bill, and there are many sections of it which should be discussed. Many amendments should be made. I am sure every Member of Parliament has constituents phoning daily saying that they cannot get their unemployment insurance or their maternity benefits. We should also be dealing with the point raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) concerning adoptive parenthood regulations and benefits. This is something which certainly needs attention. This bill should be more creative and should stimulate people to work instead of merely passing out unemployment insurance cheques to them just to enable them to make ends meet. We should be striving to provide something more meaningful in life for them. That is the direction in which the unemployment insurance program should be headed.

I believe that this bill should have been dealt with some time ago. I believe that it is proper that the minister had asked for input from members of Parliament since a Member of Parliament has a better opportunity to indicate how the bill may rectify problems that our constituents are having. The minister reflected this view recently in the House when we were speaking about the workload that some offices in the Unemployment Insurance Commission were taxed with. He indicated that he would look into the matter if hon. members would bring it to his attention. While that is very kind of him it is, after all, his department's responsibility. It is not the responsibility of a member to bring this to his attention.

There should be more prompt payment of claims, which is a matter we should be dealing with today. However, we are setting this aside for another year. I hope that in another year's time we will not once again be dealing with this at the eleventh hour. I hope something can be done in the meantime to have this bill put through with many amendments made to it. We need this Unemployment Insurance Act in our changing society. I do not think that any member would argue with that fact.

Another gross unfairness within the act concerns the regional boundaries. This had also been mentioned by the hon. member for Rosedale with respect to the riding of Simcoe North. I have the privilege and the honour of representing the two townships, Roma and Mara which he mentioned some time ago, which are located just outside of Orillia. These townships are grouped with the Toronto area for unemployment insurance entrance purposes. Also within my riding is the township of Georgina in the region of York where unemployment is the highest of any region in the regional municipality of York. Yet it too is grouped with the city of Toronto. I find that this is very unfair.

I think this bill is long overdue. What grieves me is that my constituents who live in the county of Haliburton and the county of Victoria are probably grouped with other areas where there are different industries and different unemployment problems. The entire riding of Victoria-Haliburton has an unemployment insurance rate of 9.5 per cent. It had been recommended by DREE in 1980 that this area would suffer large scale unemployment by the mid-1980s. Yet this area is not entitled to the DREE program to stimulate employment; it is ignored.

I have met with the minister many times. As late as yesterday, I travelled with the ex-minister responsible for DREE, who is still involved with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I asked him about a DREE grant for my area. He said that it is coming and the government is working on it. I have heard this assertion for years but nothing happens.

I realize that we cannot take time on this very important bill and that there are other members who wish to speak to it. But I believe that we should not deal with this bill which affects so many Canadians in this manner. One would think from the way the debate was conducted by the government House leader that there were many Members of Parliament who would be unemployed. He brought that statement into it. It did not relate whatsoever to the bill we are discussing today.

I believe that the government should not delay any longer and should begin to introduce amendments to this bill immediately. I join in expressing the sentiment of many other members who spoke today that we need reform. We need to have a bill introduced which has some meaning and which will provide some light at the end of the tunnel for the unfortunate unemployed of this motion. We need new programs introduced.

I do not understand why the minister's riding has been chosen to have an ombudsman, as was revealed by the member for Nepean-Carleton. There are many other parts of our country that probably need and should have an ombudsman as well. I do not know when the minister will make that announcement, but it has probably been leaked out by now.

In closing, I would suggest that the government is responsible for the fact that this bill is necessary. The government came in with many promises and all the answers for an ailing economy in the 1980 election, but the economy has become increasingly worse ever since. I hope that the government will take the gravity of this situation to heart. This bill should receive top priority. It has not reached that stage yet and it is the government's responsibility to take it there.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I will begin my remarks by saying that I believe it is a tragedy that we are dealing with an unemployment insurance bill in one day, when, had the minister seen fit to introduce it sooner we could have taken it to committee and given it a thorough examination to determine whether it needed further amendments. However, I understand the urgency of the plea.

I come from Calgary, a community in Canada which has been an engine of growth within the last decade. Last Saturday I attended a meeting in that city at which there were many people who had lost their jobs and had either lost or were losing their homes because they could not afford to pay their mortgages at 19 per cent. They especially cannot afford those mortgages when they are unemployed.

I stand here today as someone who has recently experienced what is a very frightening phenomenon, that is, a government which can turn a healthy and thriving community and country into a disaster zone through its ill-conceived policies. We are debating this bill today because there are four times as many unemployed Canadians as there were 14 years ago when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. It is an achievement to turn out four times as many Canadians in 14 years. That is the undeniable record of the government.

I wish there was more money available for the unemployed. I realize, however, that our taxes are almost double what they were 14 years ago.

Another item which has risen 12 times as much in 14 years is the interest on the public debt. It represents 14 years of mismanagement, which has created a situation where 12 times as much money today is required to pay the interest on the public debt. As well, a good portion of that money leaves Canada. This means that it is not available for unemployment insurance, hospital beds or pensioners. That money simply pays the bankers' interest on the debt which this government has incurred over 14 years, with the encouragement and even the blackmail of the New Democratic Party, going back to the mid-1970s.

We have a tragic economic situation today. This dilemma was predictable. We stand here today knowing that last year we spent $4.8 billion in unemployment insurance benefits. That is a lot of money; close to $5,000 million. Last year we also spent twice as much as that amount on importing one commodity, that is oil. Today we are buying oil from Saudi Arabia, Mexico and other countries at $35 and $45 a barrel, which amounts to some $10,000 million annually. In the meantime, oil sits in the ground in western Canada because we have a government that developed a policy which favours the importation of oil. We have a government which has developed a policy indicating that Canadian oil should be left in the ground, Canadian jobs should be lost and unemployment rolls shall grow. That is the rhythm of the energy policy to which this nation has been subjected since the "Liberal Party West" chose to throw out a sensible government. The NDP, the "Liberal Party West" threw out a sensible government and returned a government—

• (1540)

Some hon. Members: The people!

Mr. Hawkes: —whose record has been, is today and will be tomorrow a tragedy for Canadians, and then it had the gall to stand in the House and say, "We care. We would like to get rid of unemployment. Let us throw more money at the problem."

An hon. Member: The people put you out!

Mr. Hawkes: But do the hon. members ever say how the government is to raise the money? Do they feel very good about the borrowing pattern over the last 14 years, with the result that today 23 cents out of every federal tax dollar goes to pay the interest on the debt? When one pays taxes, the government is left with 77 cents out of every dollar one gives. The rest goes to the bankers. The taxes go up, but the payment of interest goes up even faster. We have less money today. The NDP solution is to tax business. Where do the unemployed come from? Where did the unemployed come from, if it were not businesses which had to lay people off and then went bankrupt? Where did the unemployed come from, if it was not a factor that—

Mr. Deans: How about young people who cannot get into the work force?

Mr. Hawkes: —the costs went up so high that they could not sell the things they produced?

Mr. Deans: How about the young people who cannot get into the work force?

Mr. Hawkes: The young people cannot get into the work force because the factories are closed.

Mr. Deans: Because they are poorly managed.

Mr. Hawkes: Support the labour union leadership, not the membership. The leadership wants 30 per cent raises. In Medicine Hat, just in the last two weeks, there was a union like that, a leadership like that, which represented 175 people and it wanted 30 per cent raises. All right, that is what they got, but the business was closed and not one of those 175 people is working. They just had an auction, sold off the equipment and there are no more jobs for those 175 people. Did we really ask those 175 people if that is what they wanted? Or were they the captives of a leadership element which was paid so well it was out of touch with the grass roots and did not understand that the grass roots person in this country, in Canada today, is a person who cares, who wants a job, who wants a chance to be promoted, who wants a life which allows him to own a home and to have a decent standard of medical care? That is what the grass roots of this country want and we have a leadership which has gone berserk at the urging of people who have no common sense at all. To be spending $10 billion a day, paying four nations, importing oil when the oil is sitting in the ground in Canada, is not common sense.

Mr. Deans: Right!

Mr. Hawkes: It is not common sense to tax a business or an individual to the point where he cannot compete in the marketplace, where the things he produces cannot be sold. It is insanity. It is not common sense.

Mr. Kristiansen: You want to tax the consumer!

Mr. Hawkes: It is not common sense. The prescription or the trail that we have been on for the last 14 years, is a disastrous trail. I think people can understand it. Today it is possible for people in the gallery and people watching television to go out and get many credit cards or to go out and borrow a lot of money. But they must surely know that if they borrow so much money that their entire paycheque goes to pay the interest on the money they have borrowed, they will have nothing left for food. That is the growing achievement of this government, aided, abetted and supported by the New Democratic Party. It is a prescription for borrowing today to pay back tomorrow.

I remind people that today we spend 12 times as much paying the interest on debt as we did on the day that the Prime Minister took office. In 14 years, we have increased our need to pay interest by 1,200 per cent. There has been a 1,200 per cent increase. That is one of the major reasons for our difficulties, because money is auctioned. The government borrows 25 per cent of what it spends, goes out into that auction market and competes against everyone in this chamber, everyone in our gallery and everyone watching television who wants to borrow money. It drives up the cost of that money. It drives up interest rates because its borrowing needs are so high. When it does that, it causes the small businesses in this country to collapse.

I would like to refer to interest rates. Farmers cannot afford the interest rates and they have no choice but to lay off their employees, to voluntarily liquidate or to go into bankruptcy, and the jobs are gone. The need for help for those important, unfortunate victims increases. So the costs go up and the jobs go down. That has been the prescription in this country for 14 years.

I would like to conclude by drawing the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to the Hansard of June 26, 1980, almost two years ago. I would like to remind hon. members of the New Democratic Party that that was the last evening on which we considered an employer tax credit bill. Hon. members in our party fought the government and the New Democratic Party in this chamber for eight days. We said that unemployment would get worse and the economy would collapse. The cheapest and best way to create jobs in this country is through employer tax credit programs, some kind of wage subsidy program, because that would help people, especially young people, to get and keep jobs. Instead of costing an employer $260 a week, it would cost about $65 a week. For one quarter of the the same dollar, four times as many jobs could be created. One other impact would be to reduce the cost and the production of those goods. They would be cheaper to make, inflation would be kept down and jobs would be created.

On June 26, 1980, I moved an amendment which would have extended that program for an additional two years. It would have been in place today. There would have been more jobs in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Kristiansen: Bail out big business!

Mr. Hawkes: The hon. members of the "Liberal Party West", the New Democratic Party, said no to that amendment. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said no to that amendment. Two years later, we are standing here with a major problem which must be solved. Common sense must begin to prevail. In the inner workings of the Liberal cabinet, it is crystal clear there are people charged with the responsibility to help people. The Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), and the minister responsible for social policy, are losers in the resource game. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are the winners in the resource game. When hon. members, through passive behaviour, allow the minister of energy to win, they are sending money and jobs out of the country to other nations. When they allow the Minister of Finance to win, they are doing the same thing. It is about time that the backbenchers on the other side stood up in caucus, stood up in this chamber, and forced that cabinet to pay attention to those ministers who are supposed to help people, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and others. You can no longer afford, in the name of common sense, to allow the minister of energy to win the resource battles. We will help the Minister of Employment and Immigration today to pass this bill, because Canadians need it. Next time, I hope he brings it in a little sooner so we can look to see if it will be even more helpful. But we need the help of the backbenchers on the other side.

The minister of energy is a minister who has caused more economic grief in this country, more of this unemployment with which we are dealing, than one can ever imagine. If you have a day and a half, read the transcripts and you will find out how and why. However, he must be replaced with somebody with common sense. That is the way to get this nation back together and get rid of the unemployment problem. Get rid of the ministers who are causing it. It cannot be done without the will of the backbenchers on the other side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the chair.

On Clause 1—Short title

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt because I did not want to delay the Committee of the Whole, but I have a couple of questions for the minister.

The minister will recall we had some difficulty with regard to discrimination in the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. For example, there was a time when women who fished with their families were discriminated against. The minister may recall the case of the squid fisherwomen. There are still elements of that, I suspect. In any event, I want to give the minister an opportunity to report to the House on what steps he has taken to close the loopholes which allow for women to be discriminated against in the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to report to the hon. member that we did take actions to allow women who are spouses of fishermen who would also be eligible for fishermen's benefits to also collect those benefits. I do not have the exact details in front of me, but I will be glad to provide them to the hon. member.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. He was out of the room making a phone call when I made the plea about Section 16 of the regulations which discriminates against farm workers. Is the minister considering removing through order in council Section 16 at an early date?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the hon. member. I was called to the phone. I am sorry I did not have the chance to hear the whole tone of his remarks. I will look at the transcript of his remarks in the House this afternoon and give him the reply by letter at the beginning of next week, if that is agreeable. I would prefer to have his exact remarks before trying to reply in the House.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I have three questions for the minister. I will ask them quickly because I understand there is an agreement.

First, there are a lot of people unemployed. Many of them try to find jobs on their own. Sometimes when they find a job, they have to get to that job immediately, and it requires a move. Under the regulations, persons are supposed to make arrangements before moving in order to receive any moving assistance. I would ask the minister whether there is any flexibility, as many of those unemployed who find a job on their own do not have the chance to get to the unemployment insurance office first, as there are not that many in the country. Could there be some flexibility to encourage our unemployed to find jobs by offering them some assistance with regard to moving expenses?

Second, I want to reinforce the argument made by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton in connection with adoptions. Many of my constituents have adopted babies two, three or four days old. That is tantamount to having given birth to those babies. The department insists that a mother stay home with a baby for six months. Many can ill afford to do that. They have taken the child and given that child a name. Will the minister give consideration to amending the statute so that those adopting will receive some consideration with regard to unemployment insurance?

Third, I would like to mention a situation with regard to telephones in the Calgary office. Sometimes you phone and phone and phone. There is an antiquated telephone system in that office. Other government offices have switchboards. It is not necessary to sit listening to a busy signal minute after minute, sometimes up to half an hour. I would like to pay tribute to John Hodge, the man in Calgary. He does a good job. However, he is handicapped because of the telephone system. He has not told me that, but I know. I would like to see a switchboard installed in those offices where there are a great number of calls. This would help keep down the blood pressure of people, and they would not explode when someone finally answers the phone.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question of mobility, we have a mobility grant program. I can report that that program has been used substantially more in the last few months than a year ago. It is designed for permanent, not temporary moves. There are certain conditions with regard to the distance one must travel. The reason we require a person to go through our office is so that we can verify that it is a legitimate move and meets the conditions. I will be glad to supply the hon. member with a more complete explanation. I am conscious of the clock; I do not want to take too much time. However, it is a legitimate question and he will be provided with an analysis of what is taking place.

I am glad the hon. member raised the question of adoptions. I receive a great many representations on this, not only from the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton but from many members of the House. These proposals were contained in the task force recommendations on reform. They are being kindly looked upon by my colleagues in government. We have not completed our recommendations. I can assure the hon. member that these are areas we plan to act on when we bring in the omnibus bill for reform to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

With regard to the third point of telephones, I cannot give an immediate answer. I will ask the deputy minister's office to look into this and I will get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to tell us when he anticipates bringing in the comprehensive reform bill. There are a number of matters we want to deal with in the House.

The second matter is directly involved with the bill. Some time ago I wrote the minister about the situation that prevails with regard to the interpretation of being involved in a labour dispute and the problems that flow from that. Has the minister had an opportunity to look at the proposals for change in keeping with the case that he dealt with very well? It affected a number of employees in Hamilton during the Steel Company of Canada strike. Can we expect to see some change to that interpretation? Is he in a position to give us an indication as to what sort of change we can expect to see?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, on the first question, that decision is not entirely in my hands. We have gone through a full year of consultation, and recommendations are being considered by cabinet. Because of their extensive nature, we felt we needed a good deal of parliamentary time in order to give them proper examination. That would be a matter for the government to decide in terms of the next session and when the distinguished House leader feels we will be able to give the matter proper consideration. That is a matter for discussion between him, the hon. member and the hon. member for Yukon. We would be prepared to bring in our recommendation as soon as we can. Under the circumstances, I would like a clearer picture of what is taking place so that we can modify it to take that into account.

We established a committee of employers and trade union people to examine what changes can be made to Section 44 dealing with the unemployment insurance requirements during strikes. Their findings were not exactly universal or based upon consensus. My officials now have the findings of that committee and are preparing a report for me. If it is possible to arrive at something satisfactory for both sides, we will see if we can include it in the omnibus bill.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, not only the unemployment insurance program but a number of other programs which are supposedly of a job-creating nature come under the jurisdiction of the minister. They are to be based on the percentage of unemployment in that particular region. In regions such as those that I represent, particularly those in the north of Canada and those areas that have a large indigenous population, the Statistics Canada figure can create a problem. I will give an example. In my constituency 8 per cent unemployment is shown, whereas offices within the Department of Employment and Immigration will say that the real rate is something like 22 per cent, because many people just are not counted, they are no longer entitled to UIC benefits and they are not counted at all.

I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the minister is aware of this type of problem and is proposing any solution. It is becoming more and more widespread that programs are based on the percentage of unemployed.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, that is similar to the issues raised on second reading by the member for Rosedale, with a view to getting a much better definition of unemployment, who is unemployed, and how we can provide for more adequate distinction for the different categories. I associate myself with these remarks because it is important to have a clear understanding. I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, to find out if StatsCan could find a more appropriate way of coming to grips with the issue. The report back was that, without exceptional additional expense the present labour survey is probably the most useful tool that we have to make those judgments about the rate of unemployment. We do take into account as the member knows, that that part of the problem is caused by the fact that a number of native people on the reserves are not included in the labour report survey. We tend to build that factor into the formula when we come to the calculation of the allocation of money for the direct problem of unemployment. We just do not use the labour force survey statistics in that respect. We do build in some additional factors.

I would like to find a better answer for those points raised by the hon. member for Rosedale. We are trying to examine the position to find if there is a more effective way to come to grips with the figures. It is not always fair to compare the labour force survey with the actual number of claims that there may be in an unemployment centre office at that time. The unemployment centre judges claims by a different means, and they are in regard to different cycles. The labour surplus judgment that they make is not always an accurate reflection of what the actual rate of unemployment may be.

I must confess that I am as perplexed at times as the hon. members opposite are. We have asked StatsCan to look into the problem to see if we can get a better reading on it, to find a system that is not only effective but also that is not so costly as to be prohibitive.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions for the minister. The minister will recall that on March 24, 1982, there was a motion under Standing Order 43 that I raised regarding the question of voluntary lay-offs. There was an exchange of correspondence relating to that. The minister's last answer was, I think, on April 30, 1982. I am not sure—it may be partly my fault or maybe the minister misread it somewhere in an excerpt—but I would like to explain the problem again and again get a response from the minister so that he could take another look at it.

What basically happens in these cases is that a discrimination takes place as between the treatment of employees of non-union firms and the treatment of employees of unionized firms which have seniority clauses and collective agreements. In the case of a non-unionized company, the Unemployment Insurance Commission will simply accept the word of the employer that a given person is laid off. But where there is a collective agreement in place, the UIC tends to go behind that decision and see whether or not it is going to accept the word of the employer, and make its own judgment as to who should or should not be laid off in the circumstances. Here is what has happened in some of these cases. I am not attempting to sensationalize it in regard to the allegations, because one never knows what the medical reasons may be. There have been older employees in some cases who have been forced to remain on the job, people who are close to retirement, working on very heavy jobs that they are not used to any more, and who have suffered injury and are now on compensation. In some cases it is alleged that heart attacks have occurred and that at least one person has died as a result of that. It is urgent that we return to the kind of humane consideration and flexibility in the interpretation of regulations, that we require to go back to the system of two or three years ago, when the UIC simply accepted the word of the employer, in good faith, that this was the person who was laid off. That is one question to which I would like an answer.

The second question deals with another matter. I know that the minister is currently considering some correspondence from me. I have not yet received the answer, but I am sure his staff is working on it. The problem arises owing to the existence of clauses in collective agreements whereby employees do not receive their holiday pay, for example, for Christmas Day, Boxing Day and New Year's Day, because they were on lay-off. These agreements state that they must work the scheduled day preceding the holiday and the day following, and that has to be within a 60 day period. What has happened is that we have many employees, many hundreds in my own community alone, who have found themselves intermittently off and on work over a period of months and months. But because they reported back to work once within that 60 day period they are now dinged for two or three days' unemployment insurance overpayments, sometimes having to make up for the whole qualifying period, depending on when that vacation or the time of lay-off fell.

When you have been unemployed for five out of six months and find yourself dinged for that much money, surely there is something in the way of humane consideration that could be put in place so that we are not playing the role of the Grinch that stole Christmas retroactively, or something like that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, as I explained in the correspondence with the hon. member, it is certainly not the intention of the commission to play that heavy role in this area. It merely comes down, in many cases, to the choice of the older worker who, because of the existence of a collective agreement, is given the right to choose voluntarily to be laid off and thereby provide the remaining work space for a younger worker. That choice is made usually in the circumstances where the collective agreement provides for a sub, where there is a payment procedure through the collective agreement for a lay-off.

Of course, where we get caught in the cross-fire is that we see that, according to the legislative framework, as a voluntary lay-off without just cause and a six-week penalty is therefore imposed for doing that. We understand that that may be done for good reasons. One may want to help the younger worker to stay on the job and that may bear ultimately on the sub. But to make that change, to take into account that peculiar case in that collective agreement would mean that we would open up the whole question of a large number of people who could take voluntary lay-offs and therefore be held to receive these benefits, and that, as you know, would run counter to the wishes of Parliament when they made the amendments earlier. That is the reason for the problem.

I will take a look at this correspondence again to see if we can come up with a more satisfactory answer. I suppose that perhaps when we get to the larger bill and if we have time to discuss it in committee, we can get to a better exchange on this matter at that time.

Clause 1 agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all orders preceding No. 111 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-311, to amend the Broadcasting Act (advertising on children's programs) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much of the time of the House except to bring the House up to date on a measure that has been before it now for approximately 13 years. The bill was first introduced in the House in 1970, and it was at the second reading stage on November 22, 1971. Of course, at that time it was talked out.

Just by way of interest let me point out that during the course of that debate there was a very distinguished intervention by Your Honour, which I am sure you will want to read at page 9945 of Hansard for November 26, 1971.

Let me bring it up to date a little bit further. The bill was again introduced in 1973 as Bill C-22, and at that time it was agreed that the bill would be withdrawn and the order withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the then Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. We held very substantial hearings indeed. We heard from a number of witnesses, 19 altogether. Indeed, the hearings were comprehensive and resulted in a very interesting report to the House, which hon. members can find if they refer back to the first session of the Twenty-ninth Parliament in 1973. I presume the Journals for July of that year would have the report. It should interest the House if I put on the record the recommendations of the committee, which were unanimously concurred in by the House, as follows:

> In the opinion of your committee, it is recommended that consideration be given to the advisability of taking whatever action is necessary, including the introduction of legislation to accomplish the following objectives:
> 1) that the CRTC pass regulations which would provide that advertising must not be directed exclusively to children;
> 2) that the CRTC limit further the number of commercial minutes per hour during children's programmes;
> 3) that the CRTC require the deletion of advertising directed to children from American programming distributed on the Canadian cable systems;
> 4) that the Income Tax Act be amended so that advertising directed at Canada on foreign television stations would no longer be considered deductible for income tax purposes;
> 5) that ways and means be found to expand the Canadian programme production industry with particular emphasis on the creation of children's programmes.

As I say, those recommendations were unanimously concurred in by the House, and it would be well for us to consider what has happened since that time. Indeed, that is the purpose for bringing on the bill at this time, to enable the House to being itself up to date on just exactly what has happened since the House unanimously concurred on those five recommendations.

I believe hon. members will find there is a disposition on the part of the House to do just that by way of an amendment which would have the effect of withdrawing the bill and the order at second reading and having the subject matter referred to committee, which would allow the committee an opportunity to call the CRTC to ask the CRTC to report to it on just exactly what progress has been made with respect to the implementation of the recommendations of the committee which were concurred in by the House.

I will not go into the arguments in support of the bill. I refer hon. members to Hansard for November 26, 1971, page 9941. I have already made reference to the report of the committee; the bill is the same bill, and the arguments we could put forward can be found there. Since I believe there is a disposition on the part of the government to allow the subject matter of the bill to go to committee, I will not take up any more time of the House other than to say that I believe this is a very important matter. Children are influenced by television more than any other group in our society. Children are much more vulnerable than any other group in our society and, hence, they need the protection of society.

Advertising for children usually is perceived as a directive or an order, and often a child—especially a child as defined by the bill, one who is under ten years of age—cannot differentiate between a commercial message and the program the child is watching. This creates a great deal of confusion. It creates stress on the child-parent relationship, especially in these difficult economic times.

As I say, I could go on and on, but I will conclude by just noting that since the bill was introduced, Quebec has introduced its own legislation which prohibits this form of advertising within the province of Quebec. I believe that has created jurisdictional problems which have been the subject of court references from time to time. I think that as well could be something we could look into when this matter is referred to the committee.

In any event, I thank the government in anticipation of the amendment which I expect will come forward to allow the subject matter of this bill once again to be referred to committee.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that I and my party agree with the bill, as we did in 1973. I heartily recommend that it go to the appropriate committee, and hopefully this time something will come of its recommendations, certainly as they apply to certain private broadcasters here but, also as they apply to programs which spill over into our country from the great nation to the south of us.

I recall the hearings vividly. While I did not take full part in all of them, I can well remember the effort and the concern expressed by some companies producing breakfast foods. They manufactured their "crunchies" out of some sort of sawdust and loaded them with sugar and then defended the nutritional value of their products before our committee, even to the point of bringing in experts and nutritionists from south of the border to defend the position they took.

This bill will not be embraced with jubilation by all advertisers, so I think it takes a great deal of courage on the part of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to bring this bill forward again and also for Parliament and our broadcasting authority, the CRTC, to do something about it.

I do not think the fight will be an easy one. The idea of a voluntary code will be the idea most appealing to many advertisers. The point is that a voluntary code has not worked; otherwise, we would not need to have this bill.

As I said before, we agree with the intent of the bill, and probably would support stronger legislation than is actually in this bill. However, I understand that it is only the subject matter of the bill that will be referred to the committee. If it is referred to the committee—and I understand it is to be—perhaps in its wisdom the committee might take stronger steps than are outlined here.

Since the inception of CBC television the CBC has had an advertising ban on child-directed educational programs. Five years ago the CBC increased its restriction on child-directed advertising, and a total ban on advertising during programs directed at children under 13 has been in effect for some time. This has not been the case on a number of private broadcasting stations. A total ban on advertising adjacent to—meaning before and after—programs directed to children under the age of 13 is also part of the CBC code. There are also restrictions on the number of child-directed commercials during prime time or family viewing times. That is also part of the code, and I support that, as does my colleague, the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who moved a motion under Standing Order 43 the other day proposing to ban television commercials during prime time if they are commercials advertising horror films which show the most violent and sensational clips from those films while children are watching which, presumably, they are since it is a time for family viewing and the programming is supposed to be suitable for family viewing.

I think there are a lot of areas that could be examined and investigated. Certainly, violence of any kind is something we should guard against. In our society there is far too much violence, and allowing it, or in effect almost recommending it to children as a form of entertainment or masochism, is something we do not need.

We can ask why child-directed commercials are allowed during adult programming. Perhaps it is because parents can discuss the programs with the child and rationalize the bid being made by the advertiser.

What the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has been proposing since 1973 is that the kind of policy which the CBC has adopted be made widespread throughout the broadcasting media. He has noted, and I agree with him, that the province of Quebec is tougher about advertising than the rest of the country. Three years ago the province of Quebec adopted legislation banning advertising on children's programs. Naturally such a ban leads to a loss of revenue and advertisers could charge discrimination. There is no denying that in some ways that would be the case, but other things have been banned for a number of years. I think of liquor and beer commercials which are prohibited on certain television stations. Tobacco commercials have been banned but advertisers have survived. Perhaps more money would be put into children's toys and games or food as a result. In any case, I think the advertisers would soon make up the revenue.

I should like to thank the hon. member for St. John's East for bringing this to our attention again and I recommend that the bill go to committee. I should like to close by quoting briefly from a report prepared by the research branch of the Library of Parliament for the House of Commons Subcommittee on the International Year of the Child. It notes the need for positive action programs, and on page 14 has this to say:

—the CRTC encourage the development of a television program composed of brief segments (one or two minutes each) to be aired several times daily, providing information on a variety of subjects such as nutrition, the harmful effects of alcohol, drugs and smoking, and on available sources of help for people with problems; and encourage increased use of television for educational discussion groups and talk shows dealing with subjects such as the developmental needs of children, parenting practices, etc.;

This is the kind of child advertising we need, not just banning what we do not need but, adding the kind of educational topics that children desperately need in order to survive in this consumer jungle in which we live.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief as well. I welcome the chance to comment on this important area of children's television. It has been noted this afternoon that much has been done on a voluntary basis. Like the hon. member opposite, I believe that the subject matter is worthy of parliamentary review from time to time and therefore the government does not oppose the idea of submitting it to committee for scrutiny to see how far we have come and where we are going.

I should like to make a few observations on the subject. I think we all recognize that the ban would have little or no effect on the CBC, Radio-Canada or the provincial educational television systems. The CBC has never accepted commercials for pre-school programming and since 1975 it has not carried commercials on any program for which the majority of the audience was made up of viewers under the age of 12. Provincial organizations such as Radio Quebec and TV Ontario are, by the nature of their licence, noncommercial. Therefore, the effect of this legislation on Canada's public broadcasters is nil in that none of these organizations presently accept advertising in this type of programming.

What the bill suggests is the elimination of advertising in children's programming on the private television stations in Canada. These privately owned and operated stations reach over 96 per cent of all Canadians and rely entirely upon advertisers for financial support. As has been pointed out this afternoon, there would be some difficulty for them as a result.

I think it is useful at this time to step back for a moment and review what has already been achieved in the important area of children's television. In the early days of television in Canada, that is, in the 1950s and 1960s, private television stations produced and scheduled many programs for children. These were financed out of the revenue of commercials. The Canadian Radio Television and Telecommunications Commission has routinely reviewed the licences and the progress made in this important area. A review of the commission's decision does not reveal any great objections to the performance of private television. However, in the latter part of the 1960s, a number of people began to question some high pressure advertising techniques being used by a minority of television advertisers in their commercials for products and services of interest to children.

The advertising industry and the Canadian Association of Broadcasters recognized that there was merit in these concerns and in 1971 produced a voluntary code imposing standards and restrictions for advertising for children. In 1974 the CRTC required each private broadcaster to adhere to the code as a condition of its licence renewal, as well as limiting the number of commercial messages in children's programs.

I would like to point out that the voluntary system seems to have worked quite well. We believe, with hon. members opposite, however, that there is a time to review the impact of such measures on young people. We certainly have no objection to bringing the subject matter of this bill before the committee for further study and review to see if our thinking is as clear as we would like it to be.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise that I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

That Bill C-311, an act to amend the Broadcasting Act (advertising on children's programs) be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

NUCLEAR ENERGY

COMMENDATION OF SAINT JOHN DOCK WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, because of Argentina's failure to have signed the nuclear proliferation agreement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House commend the dock workers at Saint John for their refusal to load the nuclear bundles which were to have been shipped to Argentina today by a Canadian government agency, AECL.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, in 1960 Canada was home to the second-most productive people in the world. By 1970 we had slipped into third place. By 1980 Canada had plunged into eleventh spot in terms of productivity. In light of the fact that the greater part of this slide occurred during the administration of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That the Prime Minister resign for having unwisely exploited Canada's natural resources while failing to cultivate our human resources.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43. Given that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides in Section 2(d) for freedom of association, and in view of the interpretation of the Acting Minister of Justice before the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution on January 22, 1981, that freedom of association covers the right to organize and bargain collectively, and since exclusion from the Public Service Relations Act effectively denies freedom of association to the messengers, bus drivers, kitchen staff and all other employees of this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House reaffirm its commitment to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by explicitly terminating the extraordinary privileges of the House with respect to its employees.

Madam Speaker: I am not sure whether this motion is in order. However, I will put it to the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BILINGUALISM

IMPOSITION ON TORONTO AIRPORT BUSINESS OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, small businesses are under ever-increasing pressure today thanks to ever-increasing government intervention in all phases of their operations. For example, the government is forcing the 38,000 retail grocery stores in Canada to purchase new metric weigh scales from foreign manufacturers. Now it appears that the small franchise operations at Toronto's international airport are being forced to employ bilingual staff in an area which, of course, is multilingual. What a shame that they will have to fire Italians, Portuguese, Chinese or others because they cannot speak French. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That this order to impose rigid bilingualism at all Toronto airport business operations should be considered insulting and unconstitutional to the immigrant populations of Toronto and an added burden to the already overburdened independent businesses trying to make a living there.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, while Canada-wide dissension rages in the Liberal Party, as witnessed by the B.C. affair last weekend when delegates were told that the government has no plans to deal with the economy until after Versailles, and equally at the Ottawa policy convention where eastern Ontario Liberal backbenchers described themselves as "voices crying in the wilderness", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House determines to rid itself of the Liberal blight and replace the present incompetent government with the Conservative alternative.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF EAST INDIAN WOMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter. Amarjit Kaur Sandhu, an East Indian woman whose husband took her dowry and abandoned her, will be forced to leave the country tomorrow, with no place to go. Over 200 appeals to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have been ignored, and the minister responsible for the status of women has refused to intervene. Inasmuch as Mrs. Sandhu cannot return to India for economic, cultural and family reasons and she has job offers in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to have a change of heart and allow Mrs. Sandhu to stay in Canada on humanitarian grounds.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF ESTONIAN CITIZEN, SERGEI SOLDATOV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I seek the attention of all hon. members of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the terms of Standing Order 43. On May 12, 1982, Mr. Sergei Soldatov, a distinguished Estonian political and human rights activist, appeared in Ottawa before the Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki group along with representatives from the Estonian Central Council in Canada. Mr. Soldatov was in prison for six years for alleged anti-Soviet activity. His only son, Aleksander, 23 years of age, has been refused permission to leave Estonia to join his family, which is an obvious violation of the provisions of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe Final Act. In view of Canada's strong support for the principle of family unification, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That this House express its deep concern to the government of the Soviet Union and strongly urge that Mr. Sergei Soldatov's son, Aleksander, be permitted to leave Estonia without delay so that he may be reunited with his family.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

CALL FOR BUDGET WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, taxes arising out of the National Energy Program and the November 12 budget are a burden to wage earners and those on fixed incomes and have discouraged investment in and expansion of industry and have, indeed, killed incentive in this country. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), on behalf of the million plus unemployed, and the thousands more who will become unemployed if things are not changed, and those who would invest in Canada if the government would cut down its present exorbitant "take" in taxes:

That this House demands that the government withdraw the budget and substantially reduce the energy taxes at once.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DESIGNATION OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS AS ESSENTIAL EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has today ruled that the government has the right to designate an overwhelming percentage of the membership of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers' Association as essential, and in view of the fact that that action effectively removes the right to strike for that group of public employees as well as stripping them of their real bargaining power, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House condemns the government for its backdoor Ronald Reagan labour policies and calls on the government to cease this continued vicious attack on the men and women who serve the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDEMNATION OF PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the government has given entirely new dimensions to the terms "deserving Liberals", "political patronage", and "appointment by merit". The CNR, the CBC, the CTC, virtually all federal institutions, now have come to be seen by those opposite, Madam Speaker, not for appointing the best men and women to fill the positions but for appointing their political cronies. There has perhaps been no government in Canadian history, federal or provincial, that is worse than this government in that regard. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Tammany Hall and Huey Long award of merit for incorruptible government be awarded to those opposite, to be presented to the Prime Minister at Versailles later this week at the home of King Louis XIV, the Sun King.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BANKRUPTCIES

INCREASE IN NUMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, whereas bankruptcies in the Province of British Columbia are up by 48.3 per cent, and in mid-May national total bankruptcies were 3,651, up from 2,000 last year, and whereas the debt incurred from the bankruptcies already this year is approximately $627.8 million, double last year's figure, I move:

That this House recognizes that the Minister of Finance in his budget has completely destroyed the operation of small business in Canada and that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has now achieved the record of putting more people out of work than the government can create in job-creation programs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SMALL BUSINESS

FINANCING REVIEW—PRIORITIES AND NEEDS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. The minister has spent $1.2 million directly and a little over $800,000 in indirect expenditures on a small business financing review which has been under way for over two years. From twelve major reports he has produced a 77-page overview which, apart from the business sector profile of clusters, is probably the most poverty-stricken report in terms of conclusions ever produced by the Government of Canada.

As the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism has had access to the 12 reports for some time, can he tell us what are the priority issues and needs of the business community in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I have already explained to the House that after reading the reports prepared by various university experts and consultants' firms, I felt it was necessary to analyse the conclusions drawn in these reports with the small business sector itself and with a group of people across the country who could perhaps held me to find new perspectives or confirm existing ones with respect to policies on small businesses. As far as the figures quoted by the hon. member are concerned, when I said that the cost involved was $1.2 million, I was referring to the total cost. Consultants' fees and private studies carried out over a period of almost two years during which the study was made, amounted to $700,000, and this, with the estimated cost of the work of departmental employees who worked on the special team, added up to $1.2 million.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, it is obvious to those of us on this side of the House who know something about the subject matter that the minister is not addressing, nor is he aware of, any of the real gut issues which face this important community which relies on him in its interface with the government.

CREDIT CO-INSURANCE PROGRAM—QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, the overview speaks positively about the credit co-insurance program, which has been in the Ottawa works for about three years or more. The agreement for the first broker under this program was signed on February 10, 1982. Essential to the implementation of this program, which will be a valuable aid to the long-term financial needs of the business sector, are amendments to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act. Why have these amendments not been brought forward so that this new vehicle of financial assistance will finally be able to operate?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member said only one firm was authorized to provide reinsurance. I think he should check his facts, since as far as I know, there are five firms who are allowed to operate in this field at the present time. I have taken note of the two suggestions made by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, the minister obviously does not know what is going on in his own department. There is only one broker who has been licensed, and that agreement was on February 10. There are others making applications and taking positions in the marketplace, but they have not been licensed, nor is the legislation in place. I am asking the minister to make sure the legislation is put into place so that that need in the financial markets can be served.

BUSINESS BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, the FASCYM report says:

Day to day operating problems far outweigh financing in importance—

Can the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism explain why 300 small businesses per month in the Toronto area alone are closing their doors, why thousands of independent stores cannot pay their bills and are closing their doors, why bankruptcies are accelerating at depression rates, and why transportation companies are closing or going into receivership?

Madam Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member does not seem to realize that we are going through an extremely difficult period. Until our economy, with the co-operation of all economic agents including business, consumers, governments and unions, is able to control inflation which at the present time is causing a drop in consumer demand, which in turn is the main cause of the bankruptcies that are taking place right now, until we have dealt with the very basic problem of inflation in our economy, Madam Speaker, I do not think we can expect to see any rapid improvement.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

FORTHCOMING STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has announced that at eight o'clock this evening he will make a statement on motions. I think he will understand that this is only the second time in this Parliament that a minister has made a statement on motions, the first being when the Minister of Finance announced very, very extensive changes to his budget last December 18. Will the minister's statement tonight on his energy policy continue in the tradition established by the Minister of Finance?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait until eight o'clock. I may remind him that the National Energy Program has been adjusted regularly since October 1980. A number of adjustments were made when an agreement was signed with the three oil-producing provinces. Further changes representing, in all, about $900 million in additional income for the industry were made since last September, and I am referring to the $900 million spread over the period from 1981 to 1986. My hon. colleague will have to make up his own mind this evening, but I want to make it clear that we have made regular adjustments as the situation has developed.

[English]

REASONS FOR STATEMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, maybe I could be more precise. Is one of the reasons for the statement tonight that consumers today are paying 10 to 20 cents more per gallon for gasoline than consumers in the United States? Is it because the goal of self-sufficiency by 1990 has gone out the window? Is it because Canadian-owned oil and gas companies are struggling along today in the position where they are hardly able to survive? Finally, is it because so many jobs have been lost in the manufacturing industry because of the disastrous energy policy which the minister introduced in 1980? Are those the reasons for the statement on motions tonight?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I understand that my hon. friend is no longer the energy critic for the opposition. It shows in his question that he has lost touch with the facts. First of all, the average price of gasoline in Canada today is still lower than it is in the United States.

Mr. Thomson: That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Try the truth for a change.

Mr. Lalonde: Secondly, the price for heating oil in Canada is lower by as much as 7 cents per litre than it is in the United States.

Third, the price of natural gas in Canada is very significantly lower than it is in the United States.

These are the facts that the Conservatives, with their blinders on, refuse to see and refuse to notice.

As far as the other points raised by the hon. member are concerned, if he were still energy critic he would realize that Canadians have made great progress in the conservation of energy. This has meant that the objective of self-sufficiency today is clearer and more achievable in 1990 than it was in October, 1980, or than it was when the Conservatives were in office—

Madam Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Brant.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, there was a fourth question.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In a few days time he will be in Versailles and will have an opportunity to have a discussion, face to face, with Premier Suzuki of Japan. The Minister of State for International Trade failed to get an 85 per cent Canadian content in Japanese automobiles and trucks coming into Canada. I ask the Prime Minister very simply, will he screw up his courage and demand that Premier Suzuki make sure that, within one year to 18 months, 85 per cent of the part content of Japanese cars and trucks will be manufactured here in Canada?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy to take notice of the question.

STEPS TAKEN BY AUSTRALIA

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, while the Prime Minister is taking notice of the question, will he keep in mind that Australia, which also exports a great deal of raw materials to Japan, has very effectively imposed a 57 per cent tariff on all Japanese automobiles and trucks, as well as the 85 per cent content requirement? Will he remind Premier Suzuki of the Australian deal with Japan?

Mr. Paproski: Take him on a motorcycle.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I—that is a very serious question in spite of the hon. member for Edmonton North trying to devalue it. Madam Speaker, I will take notice of that question too.

REQUEST FOR EMBARGO ON IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I notice the Prime Minister is in a very noticing way today. While he is at it, will he assure this House—and I think he can answer this question without going to Versailles—that if all else fails, if the Japanese refuse to source up to 85 per cent here in Canada, he will unilaterally impose a 15 per cent embargo on all Japanese cars and trucks until they do agree to source here in Canada up to 85 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, one of the purposes of the Summit will be to try collectively to avoid returning to the kind of beggar-thy-neighbor policies which ruined the western industrialized societies in the 1930s. So rather than promise to take that kind of protectionist attitude without further discussions, my answer would be that I would not want to give that undertaking.

APPLICATION OF NON-TARIFF BARRIERS TO JAPANESE IMPORTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade I will direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, having to do with the non-tariff barriers now being imposed on Japanese automobile imports. The guerrilla tactics adopted by the government are an amateurish and chicken-hearted reaction to the minister's total inability to negotiate with the Japanese, and simply underscore the immensity of the failure of his negotiations. Because of these tactics, owner-operater truck drivers are in danger of losing their rigs, 100 to 200 jobs have already been lost, and consumers will pay more for transportation. Does the minister think it is necessary and right that these Canadians have to suffer because of his ineptitude and failure at negotiations?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we are not intending to create suffering for Canadians; we are intending to preserve and maintain the jobs of several hundred thousand Canadians in all parts of this country whose lives are linked with the production, distribution and sale of automobiles and parts. If my hon. friend is serious, he would direct his question, not to me but to his colleagues, such as the hon. member for Halton, the hon. member for Perth, and the hon. member for Mississauga South who call for action even more direct, blunt and severe than the reasonable steps we have been taking over the past few weeks.

CUSTOMS INSPECTION OF SHIPS CARRYING JAPANESE IMPORTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the minister will have his opportunity to address himself to those members. At the present time Customs officials are conducting random searches of the crew's cabins on ships bringing in those cars, inspecting the licences of the officers of those ships, and in general harassing the crews. Have officials of the minister's department or that of the Minister of State for International Trade given orders to the customs officials to do that? Also, since Canada sells more to Japan that it buys, why does the minister think these kinds of tactics would induce the Japanese to buy even more from Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it is a fact that Japan sells us $1.5 billion worth of cars and parts. In spite of very strong efforts by our industry, supported by the government, they have bought from us in the past year only $6 million worth in parts, a decline from $8 million in the preceding year.

• (1430)

With respect to the custom procedures that my hon. friend was talking about, all the procedures taken, as far as I am aware are fully prescribed by law. I do not know if he is asking us not to carry out the procedures properly under the customs law or the procedures with respect to anti-pollution or the procedure with respect to safety requirements, but if my hon. friend is so concerned about this matter, why did he not speak up and tell his colleagues, the hon. member for Halton, the hon. member for Perth and others in his caucus, not to press us for the kind of action that we have not yet decided is necessary to take.

Miss MacDonald: Do something.

Mr. Gray: His complaint is against them, not against people like ourselves who are working to get a satisfactory resolution of this matter with the Japanese on a voluntary basis in a way that respects our good commercial relations and in a way that takes into account the needs of Canadian workers which the hon. member does not seem to care about.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Halton.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, we are used to a lot of hogwash coming from that minister, but what he has just said is totally ridiculous. As the minister knows, the automotive industry in this country has lost nearly 50,000 jobs because of a lack of action on the part of the government. The minister should know that these new tactics in Vancouver will not create one new Canadian job.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell this House and, more important, will the minister tell the automotive industry once and for all what policy his government has to help those automotive workers who are out of work in Canada? I ask the minister to tell us now because that industry can no longer continue to operate in the vacuum in which it is operating today. I ask the minister to give us an answer.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have been working to strengthen and preserve our industry, and to strengthen and preserve jobs. But, more important, I would like my hon. friend to tell us what his party's policy is.

Mr. Gamble: What arrogance.

Mr. Gray: Is his policy what the hon. member from British Columbia is saying, or what he has been seeking for over the past several weeks? Why don't you guys get your own act together?

Mr. Jelinek: We have a policy. There is no action on your part.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN INDUSTRY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, since we are not getting answers from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will pose my supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. After two years of negotiations on the part of the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which negotiations have failed totally as far as the importation of Japanese vehicles is concerned, could the Prime Minister tell this House and the automotive industry in this country—which is suffering perhaps beyond repair unless some specific action is taken as soon as possible—what his government's policy is with regard to the 50,000 unemployed in this industry and the growing number of unemployed in this important sector of our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat the point excellently made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. We have just had one Conservative member for British Columbia, I believe, indicating that he wants Japanese automobiles to come into Canada in greater numbers and with accelerated frequency. Now we have another member who is asking us to protect the Canadian automobile industry. The hon. minister is absolutely right. If the Tories had a policy, they would not be asking these absolutely contradictory questions.

EFFECT OF CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE PROVISION IN BUDGET

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If he is so concerned and knowledgeable about the industry, would he tell the House whether he supports that budgetary provision dealing with capital cost allowance which has cost the likely sale of between 50,000 and 100,000 new vehicles since last November? Does the minister support that policy? If he is so anxious to know what the Tory policy is, I will tell him. We are against any budgetary provisions such as the one in last November's budget—

Mr. MacEachen: Which one?

Mr. Jarvis: —which cost those thousands of jobs in his riding and in mine.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, assuming I am going to refer to the same aspect of the budget which the hon. member is talking about, I have already suggested in answer to a question in this House that the analysis he has put forward is greatly exaggerated and the impact is not at all what he has said it is.

Mr. Jarvis: How much? How many cars?

Mr. Gray: In any event, the question asked by my hon. friend further shows the contradiction. The hon. member for Halton asks us what our policy is and what the cause is of the problems in the industry. He ascribes them not to the pressure from imports of Japanese cars but to a provision in the budget, which we say is greatly exaggerated.

Mr. Jarvis: Do you or do you not support that budgetary provision?

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE SURCHARGE AND IMPORT QUOTA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it is along the same line as the one asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Perth. Does the minister feel that it is a proper policy for the Canadian government to use harassment techniques rather than amendments to the law, with respect to imports of Japanese cars? Does the minister not think that we should be above that kind of harassment and that we should take some positive action in terms of a surcharge and in terms of an imposed quota, rather than using harassment techniques which are clearly the kind of thing that only a bully boy would do?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I totally reject the premise of my hon. friend's question. We are taking steps that are fully provided for, by law. It is interesting that the hon. member himself is calling for an approach which certainly would have a much more severe impact on the people about whom the hon. member from British Columbia was talking than anything we have done so far.

ENFORCEMENT OF INSPECTION PROCEDURES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): My friend knows, Madam Speaker, that the business of enforcing laws is to enforce them in a reasonable and sensible way. Is the minister's way of handling this import problem that he is taking, and will continue to take, a detailed enforcement of inspection on every single vehicle coming off ships in Vancouver? Will that procedure continue for a long period of time, or is the minister going to do the proper thing under GATT by putting a temporary surcharge on these automobiles coming in, until our industry can recover and re-organize and be competitive on a world basis?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has not told us what impact his idea will have on the jobs of the people in his British Columbia colleague's riding.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: He has not responded to my point about the impact on jobs. He wants a more severe effect on those jobs in British Columbia than anything that we are doing in terms of a reasonable enforcement of our existing law. As far as we are concerned the best way to deal with my hon. friend's concern is for the Japanese to respond to our very reasonable approach in a way that will assist our industry to continue its restructuring—

Miss MacDonald: Tell us about the unemployed in Windsor.

Mr. Gray: —and move toward substantial content in Japanese vehicles in a way that recognizes the basic strength and potential of our industry and the workers in it.

MEDICAL CARE

EXTRA BILLING BY PHYSICIANS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, she is not in the House today, and we have been told by an assistant in her office, Miss Anita Biguzs, that we will no longer know when the minister is coming to the House unless we give her the content of our questions ahead of time.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Mitchell: That's undemocratic and it is disgusting.

Mr. Murphy: Therefore, under those circumstances, I will put my question to the Prime Minister. Right now we have five provinces that are levying user fees. We have three provinces that are charging a premium increase each year for medicare, and $55 million is coming from Canadian taxpayers' pockets for extra billing. Will the federal government support universal health care services by amending the Medical Care Act to eliminate all forms of extra billing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not want to pre-empt the minister on this question. However, I have to remind the hon. member of the New Democratic Party that the law concerning medicare was adopted in this House after agreement with the provinces. The hon. member will recall that the Constitution does not authorize the federal government unilaterally to legislate on the delivery of medical services. The law was a compromise reached with the provinces. I personally think that the minister was very successful in moving the provinces closer to our view on this matter that extra billing should be frowned upon. If we could legislate that, I would be happy to hear from the New Democratic Party under what section of the Constitution they would contemplate legislation.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should like to quote from the absent Minister of National Health and Welfare who is on record as saying, "if you allow surcharges to the system, very soon medicare will collapse". Despite all legal arguments, we have had the minister saying on a number of occasions that she will not allow extra billing. If that is the position of the government, if that is really the position of the government, then do not call conferences; start the constitutional process.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, the hon. minister is on record, as is the government, as feeling that extra billing is regrettable and should be dispensed with.

An hon. Member: Withhold it.

Mr. Trudeau: I put the question to the hon. member that the Constitution does not permit us to legislate in this area. We can only proceed by agreement. I have heard a member of the New Democratic Party shout across the way that we should withhold the money. If that is the position of the New Democratic Party, no doubt it would have effect. It would destroy medicare and extra billing with it. If that is the policy of the hon. member, or if they have some secret approach to the Constitution which will permit us to legislate in areas of health delivery, I would like to hear them.

PUBLIC WORKS

TASK FORCE REPORT ON PAYMENT OF GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. In almost all ridings and municipalities in Canada there is federal property in respect of which the Minister of Public Works annually makes a grant in lieu of real property taxes. The House will recall that Bill C-4 passed on July 15, 1980. The House will also recall that a task force, chaired by Mr. Isodore Pollack, was formed and was asked to consider two questions which arose in committee study—first, the right of municipalities to appeal from the discretionary powers of the minister in respect of assessed value of properties and, second, the right to appeal from certain exclusions from grants in lieu of taxes.

Could the minister tell us whether the task force has made its final report? If it has, could the minister tell us what conclusions were reached and what measures he intends to take to implement the recommendations?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. It will give me an opportunity of responding to other members on both sides of the House who took an interest in the legislation and the issues which were raised in the question. That study has been prepared and made available to my ministry. In committee deliberations I indicated that that report would be made available to the committee. I intend to make it available to the committee, and all hon. members will have an opportunity to look at the results which flow from intensive discussions with the provinces and many municipalities.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

STATUS OF CANDU REACTOR SALE TO MEXICO

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. During the time that the National Energy Program has been in place and the minister has been directing his efforts toward redressing some of the very serious difficulties which have been created by the program—and we hope that we will hear some answers tonight, some things which will redress some of the problems—there has been another sector of the Canadian energy industry which has been in serious difficulty, that is, the Candu, or the Canadian nuclear industry system. The Romanian reactor deal has been lost, and now it appears as though the Mexican reactor deal is doomed. Does the Prime Minister know what is the status of our potential sale to Mexico of the Candu reactor? Does he have any idea what the impact of the loss of that sale will be on the Canadian nuclear industry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the hon. member is stating the facts correctly when he says that the Romanian deal has been lost. There have been some economic difficulties in Romania, as we know, but that does not mean that the contract has been lost. The Canadian bid is still there, the contract is still there, and that reactor has not been lost any more than the Mexican one has. In the case of the Mexican government, I understand that it has delayed the date of decision and purchase, but we on this side are not considering those contracts lost.

FUTURE OF INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I have to say that all reports we on this side are able to obtain indicate that indeed both those sales are doomed. In the face of that, there are somewhere between 40,000 and 60,000 skilled and highly technical jobs at stake in the Canadian nuclear industry. If the Prime Minister checks, I think he will know that those jobs are very much at stake right now unless something happens in the near future. Is there anything on the threshold or on the near horizon which he can see which will answer the problem and help the Canadian nuclear industry to survive?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for International Trade, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and myself in our travels in foreign countries have pushed the sale of the Candu. We have in some cases signed contracts. I repeat that it is not our position, as it seems to be that of the hon. member and his party, that these contracts are doomed. Before giving up on the contracts which we already have and declaring them doomed, I think the hon. member should try to encourage and support us in making those contracts effective, rather than asking us what we will do for an encore.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISION ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to the earlier one of the hon. member for Perth, for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He indicated in response to that hon. member that his estimate of lost car sales as a consequence of capital allowance changes was exaggerated. My question to the minister is simple. Would he please tell the House how many car sales and jobs, in his opinion, have been lost as a consequence of that budget measure? Given that there have been job losses in the minister's own view, why does he continue to support that measure?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I tried to get across that I did not accept the premises of my hon. friend's question because the analysis of the Minister of Finance and his advisers indicates that the impact is not what the industry had originally feared. Therefore, the approach of my hon. friend in his question is not one I would accept.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I repeat my question to the minister; it is a simple one. Does the minister believe that there have been any job losses and car sale losses as a consequence of the capital allowance change? If he believes that there have been, what is the degree, or is he saying to the House that no jobs and no sales have been lost as a consequence?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we are in a situation where the over-all market for motor vehicles has declined in size in both the United States and Canada. There are a number of complex factors involved. The industry continues to argue that it is having some effect, and the analysis we have available indicates that, if the effect is there at all, it is minimal. I think this continues to be a matter of debate.

Oral Questions

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONTAMINATION OF WATER SUPPLY AT BANFF, ALTA.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment who is responsible for national parks, I direct my question to the first acting minister, the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. For two months or more the people of Banff have been very concerned, to put it mildly, about a parasite in their water which causes diarrhoea, vomiting, cramps, and sometimes swollen limbs. This parasite is carried by beavers which are a protected species. I advised the minister about this about a month ago. What action is the government taking to make the water safe?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, if I may, I will take notice, of what appears to me to be a slightly technical question, for the Minister of the Environment. I will try to bring the hon. member an answer perhaps tomorrow.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister. I notified the office of the Minister of the Environment about the question. I thought he might have given the first acting minister the information.

NECESSITY FOR FILTRATION PLANT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, regulations in the Alberta department of the environment give the department the authority to order a filtration plant where the water is of poor quality or where there is a dangerous parasite in the water. This is seldom used, however, because town councils are just as anxious as the department to keep their water supply good. Will the government, since it is responsible for the townsite of Banff, order a filtration plant or instal a filtration plant in order to protect the water for local inhabitants and also for the thousands of tourists who will shortly be coming to that area?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will certainly bring that to the minister's attention.

AIRPORTS

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Last week, the government decided to sell off one third of the expropriated land at Mirabel, that is, 35,000 acres out of a total of 96,000. What is the government going to do with the remaining 60,000 acres? Why not get rid of the rest as well?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as many hon. members know better than I, the decision of the government followed a year-long study by a commission, a company established to take a look at land uses around the airport. It was as a result of those intensive studies and negotiations with all persons affected concerning the airport lands that there was a recommendation that all of the lands, in light of the experience at the airport over the last few years, were not required. Some lands were to be returned to private ownership and other lands were retained on the advice of experts, for example, for the ministry of transportation, who indicated that in order to serve two purposes, that is, to permit the airport to be established, without terrible inconvenience or safety hazard to the people in the area, a certain amount of the acreage could be released back to private ownership, which decision was finally reached.

Mr. Skelly: It is a very surprising response, Madam Speaker, especially to fall back on the defence that a year-long study was conducted, considering the sabotage done to the Kent Commission. The government really should not have any qualms about proceeding in a more equitable manner, at least in one case.

SELL-BACK PRICE OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question. The proposal of the government is to sell back the property at today's market prices, less 15 per cent. In the interest of fairness, would the minister not be prepared at least to allow those individuals whose land was expropriated to purchase back that land at the price at which their land was expropriated plus the accumulated interest?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: Fair ball.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons the study did take a year's time was in order to be fair and to find a formula which was, in fact, fair. It was no easy task to hit upon a formula which could be fair to the taxpayer of Canada in general, that is, the person putting up the funds for acquisition of the property, and which would spell out to whom, how, and under what basis we could manage a resale of the property to people in the area. That was difficult, and we did attempt to be fair. It was a complicated question, taking into account assessment of market values. That was a matter involving not only technical advice but also some appreciation by people in the area. That is why we had representatives from a broad spectrum of the community on that committee trying to decide what would be a fair formula to people in the community.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There are millions of Canadians who are suffering under severe economic pressures, but we are told that nothing in the way of a new initiative of an economic nature will be taken by the government until after the Versailles Conference. Surely the government has contingency plans in place in the event that some of the actions that it intends to take at that conference are not supported by other international governments. Why does the government today not announce what it plans to do within the framework of its power so that Canadians, as soon as possible, can see some hope and expectation for the future?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is very general indeed, and I am at a loss, because of its general character, to respond to it with my usual specific answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: Back to the drawing board, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, we are attending the economic Summit at Versailles and we will be discussing the world economic situation with other Summit members. If, as a result of that meeting, further initiatives should be taken, then, of course, the government would announce them.

Mr. Huntington: Retired before you start.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not quite prepared to admit to the hon. member that we are just waiting for the Summit, in that case.

Mr. Paproski: Maybe you should go to Fatima, never mind Versailles.

Mr. MacEachen: Where?

Mr. Trudeau: You are the guy who should go to Fatima.

POSITION OF MINISTERIAL ADVISERS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): The reason the question is general, Madam Speaker, is because the problem is general, brought about by general misadministration by the government. The one thing the people do not have is hope and expectation for the future, because there has not been one sign of something—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been allowed to ask a supplementary question. The first question should obviously be short, but the supplementary should be even shorter.

Mr. Gamble: The best news that could be given, Madam Speaker, would be the resignation of the minister. In default of that—and I am sure he will not give us that kind of good news—will the minister at least announce that the general incompetents, those people within his department who brought about that calamity on November 12, have been replaced by people who have some expectation of a bright future for Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I think, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member has a very simple attitude toward the current economic situation. If it were simply a question of bad policies in Canada and bad officials and a bad minister in Canada—

Mr. Jarvis: Mostly the minister!

Mr. MacEachen: —then I would wonder why the unemployment level in the United States is about the same as it is in Canada. I would wonder why the unemployment levels in the OECD area are increasing and are projected to increase, why inflation is a problem in almost every industrialized country—

Mr. Huntington: Why can we not have energy self-sufficiency?

Mr. MacEachen: —and why the recession exists all over the world. Surely the power of the Minister of Finance and his officials is not great enough to bring about such economic chaos in every part of the world.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

COST OF CANCELLED CHALLENGER AIRCRAFT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who might recall that on February 11 I asked him the following question:

> Could he inform the House how much research and development money and other funds went into the stretched version of the Challenger jet before the project was cancelled with a loss of some $500 million worth of orders?

The minister replied that he would "be happy to obtain that information and provide it to my hon. friend as soon as possible." Well, his "hon. friend" has been waiting for three and a half months, and I would like him to narrow the date down a bit.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I apologize for not having provided the information to him by now. I will try my best to have it for him by the end of the week.

DEBT STATUS OF CANADAIR

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Perhaps while the minister is getting that information for me by the end of the week, he could explain to the House the debt status of Canadair at the present time. I understand that the government is giving it letters of comfort which have enabled it to borrow something over $1 billion. I wonder if the minister could tell the House, within $100 million, how deeply in debt Canadair is at the present time.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I will be happy to do that, Madam Speaker. Not long ago, the House, in the supplementary estimates, approved authority to the government to guarantee up to $1.3 billion in loans by private sector companies to Canadair to help provide operating capital for the carrying out of its projects.

ENERGY

PROPOSED NATURAL GAS PRICE INCREASE IN ONTARIO

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. There are vast numbers of consumers in the province of Ontario who are angry about a proposed huge increase in the price of natural gas after the Government of Canada implored people to convert from oil to gas for home heating fuel. I recognize that permission for Consumers' Gas to raise its rates comes under Ontario provincial jurisdiction, but can the minister say whether there is anything that he can do to temper this increase to these consumers?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker. I suggest that the hon. member who asked the question and who is a distinguished member of the Progressive Conservative Party, speak to his friends who are running the government in Toronto.

REPRESENTATIONS TO ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I quite realize that Ontario consumers are affected by the government of this province, but will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as a federal minister, also protecting the interests of consumers of this province, join me in persuading the Ontario Energy Board to reduce these proposed gas rates in the interest of keeping prices down and combatting inflation?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member believes that my support could be of any help, with pleasure.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COLLENETTE—ALLEGED IMPUTING OF MOTIVES BY MR. THACKER—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the question of privilege which was raised by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette). The hon. member raised a question of privilege alleging that on May 25 the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) imputed motives to Liberal backbenchers.

I just want to say that disrespectful or offensive language is covered by Standing Order 35 and that the unparliamentary words must be brought to the attention of the House by way of a point of order, not by way of a question of privilege. Therefore I cannot accept that the hon. member had the basis for a question of privilege.

Having examined what might have been a point of order, I looked at the words used by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills. I found that he was not exactly addressing his remarks to any member individually. Erskine May says at page 430 of the Nineteenth Edition:

> Expressions which are unparliamentary when applied to individuals are not always so considered when applied to a whole party.

In the words of my predecessor, Speaker Lamoureux, I would say that these kinds of exchanges are part of the political life of the House. However, I would urge hon. members to try to use language that is acceptable to all members on all sides of the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had consultations with my colleagues on the other side with regard to statements by ministers. I would like a House order to ensure that at eight o'clock we will be in a position to revert to statements by ministers in order to allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to make a statement at eight o'clock this evening. If you seek unanimous consent, Madam Speaker, I think you will find it, following consultations I had with my colleagues.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to revert to statements by ministers at eight o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,117, 4,125, 4,213, 4,214 and 4,296.

[Text]

NCC—WINTERLUDE FESTIVAL

Question No. 4,117—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the National Capital Commission at any time state that the cost to the taxpayers of the Winterlude Festival was approximately $350,000?

2. Did the figure include overtime to employees of the Leisure and Culture Branch and, if not, was that figure estimated to be approximately $100,000?

3. What was the estimated cost of publicity and promotion and was it approximately $100,000?

4. What was the cost of piped music and lighting the canal and was it approximately $100,000?

5. What was the estimated cost of all maintenance and was it approximately $150,000?

6. Were all the extra figures included in the original estimate and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes at a press conference held January 17, 1982. Later, the estimate was raised to $473,000.

2. No. Recreation and Culture Division overtime estimated at $60,000.

3. Estimated at $100,000.

4. Cost $30,000.

5. Estimated at $150,000.

6. Yes, in revised estimate, except for overtime under 2 above.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Question No. 4,125—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Foreign Investment Review Agency, when receiving applications from foreign-owned trucking companies, require that applicants indicate if they are prepared to use Canadian chartered banks and Canadian-owned advertising agencies and to direct their purchasing to Canadian-owned suppliers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

The Foreign Investment Review Agency, when receiving applications from foreign-owned trucking companies, does not require that applicants indicate if they are prepared to use Canadian chartered banks and Canadian-owned advertising agencies. Nor are applicants required to direct their purchasing to Canadian-owned suppliers.

However, the effects of a foreign investment proposal on the utilization of parts, components and services produced in Canada are required to be taken into account in the determination of whether or not the proposal meets the test of significant benefit to Canada. Accordingly, all applicants, irrespective of the industry sector to which their proposals apply, are required to specify their sourcing intentions. There are no special policies which apply to the trucking sector.

Order Paper Questions

SECURITY CLEARANCE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 4,213—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. How many public service positions require security clearance and what percentage of the total positions does this represent?

2. What are the criteria currently used to determine which positions in the public service require security clearance?

3. Since 1977, by year, how many security screening requests went from departments and agencies to the security service?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. Personnel security clearance programs are prepared by departments and agencies to meet their own security requirements. As these requirements vary in intensity from one department/agency to another, so will the number of positions affected.

2. A security clearance is mandatory in positions where an employee requires access to classified material in the discharge of his/her duties.

1979—60,965

1980—56,199

1981—59,514

A large proportion of these figures represents rechecks or updating of an earlier screening process; departments/agencies generally review security clearances at five-year intervals. The Security Service is not required to make a statistical distinction between a first screening and an updating process.

CRITERIA USED TO CLASSIFY GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

Question No. 4,214—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

What are the criteria currently used to determine which government documents should be classified?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Top secret: Documents, information and material of paramount security importance, the unauthorized disclosure of which would cause exceptionally grave damage to the nation.

Secret: Documents, information and material, the unauthorized disclosure of which would endanger national security, cause serious injury to the interest or prestige of the nation, or would be of substantial advantage to a foreign power.

Confidential: Documents, information and material, the unauthorized disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the interests or prestige of the nation; would cause damage to an individual; and would be of advantage to a foreign power.

Restricted: Documents, information and material are to be classified restricted when they should not be published or communicated to anyone except for official purposes, and when they are not classified in any of the three previous categories.

DIEMACO INC.

Question No. 4,296—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence place a $753,100 contract with Diemaco Inc. for in-service small arms publications under contract number MC50.2550409 (2MC81-02092) and, if so, what types of small arms will be covered in the publications?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. The Department of Supply and Services awarded a contract on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to Diemaco Inc. in the amount of $753,100. The type of small arms covered in the publications is: pistols and revolvers, rifles, submachine guns, machine guns, small arms weapons turrets and mounts, small arms accessories.

*SINKING OF "ARCTIC EXPLORER"

Question No. 4,298—Mr. McGrath:

1. On what date was the enquiry ordered into the circumstances surrounding the sinking of the Arctic Explorer?

2. Did the Arctic Explorer sink some time during the morning of July 3, 1981 and, if so, for what reason did the enquiry into the incident not begin until April 27, 1982?

3. Were SOS distress signals received by the Canadian Coast Guard between 0000 hours and 2400 hours on July 3, 1981 and, if so, what action was taken in response to the signals?

[English]

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the reply to question No. 4,298 of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is as follows:

1. July 9, 1981.

2. The vessel sank on July 3, 1981. The Coast Guard required the normal 2 to 3 months to prepare technical evidence to be presented at the formal investigation. The usual practice, which was followed in this case, is for the Chief Justice of the province concerned to then nominate a judge to be commissioner. Because of the heavy court calendars of the Newfoundland judges at the time, there was difficulty in providing the nomination.

3. The answers to this question and all others related to the sinking will be examined in public by the Court of Formal Investigation currently sitting in St. John's, Newfoundland. Therefore, it would not be advisable for me or anyone else to make further comment while the investigation is proceeding.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That a Special Committee, consisting of, notwithstanding any Standing Order, 20 Members, to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider the Standing Orders of the House and procedure in both the House and its committees;

That the Committee be authorized to include in its interim and/or final reports drafts of proposed permanent or temporary Standing Orders drawn to give effect, if concurred in by the House, to any permanent or temporary change or changes proposed by the Committee; and

That the Committee have all the powers granted to Standing Committees by Standing Order 65.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed. The parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was promoted two and a half years ago! I realize you spoke as you did out of the force of habit, because usually at this point my parliamentary secretary rises to answer the questions on the Order Paper.

I would like to say that I had consultations—

[English]

I had consultations with the House leaders of the opposition parties at the end of last week. If you seek unanimous consent, Madam Speaker, to get the approval of this motion without debate, I will believe you will receive it. I know that the deputy House leader of the Conservative Party has a question to ask regarding staff, and I will be pleased to answer the question before unanimous consent is sought.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, our party is prepared to grant unanimous consent to the passage of this motion on the understanding that Standing Order 65 is broad enough to allow the committee to have whatever staff it requires to deal with the matter. I believe the government House leader is prepared to put on the record exactly what staffing facilities will be available to the committee.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier to my colleague, the committee will have the same advantages as standing committees under Standing Order 65. As I told him, the intent is to allow parliamentarians to first have input. We would like to see it as a committee of parliamentarians, mostly backbenchers. If during the process, whether it be two weeks, a month or more down the road, the committee requires technical assistance and requires the right to hire specialized staff, as I told the hon. member, we will consider that request from the committee very seriously. However, in the first instance, we do not intend to give that specific power to hire technicians. Once again, we want it to be a committee of parliamentarians. We have knowledgeable parliamentarians who should first make their input and recommendations on changes in order to make this Parliament more relevant, modern and human.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE INSULATION ACT

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

The House resumed from Monday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-109, to provide for payments to persons in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. I should declare at the outset that I may be in a conflict of interest situation, as I have a residence that has had urea formaldehyde foam installed in it as insulation. Consequently, I am one of the parties involved and affected, although I doubt if I will be one of the persons who will qualify for assistance under the bill because the parameters are so narrow that less than 20 per cent of the houses insulated with urea formaldehyde foam will qualify for assistance.

It is not because I am one of the affected parties, but because there are over 100,000 people out there who are affected and will get virtually no assistance from what was a bad mistake in judgment by this government, that I would like to zero in on this matter today in my intervention in this debate.

It is perhaps necessary and well to go back on the events leading up to the ban that was announced by the government in December. Back in May, 1977, the government was being advised through one of its deputy ministers that it should proceed cautiously before approving this material for use in home insulation. One of the problems that was identified then by Dr. Ian Efford was that the standards failed to prescribe application procedures critical to the foam's effectiveness. He went on to state, as a result, that no federal department should use the product.

That is very interesting and very germane to my argument, Mr. Speaker, because this product was approved by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for use under the government's home insulation program, the CHIP program, in September of 1977. In other words, the government went against their own advisers. According to the advice they received, it was not good enough to be used in federal government departments. Indeed, there was some question as to whether or not the standards were adequate with regard to how the stuff was to be applied, and, indeed, whether or not there were standards governing application of the material. Notwithstanding that, there were the warnings that the government had, even going back beyond that to April, 1977, when the then minister was advised that there were problems with regard to shrinkage, degradation, the potential of UFFI causing metal corrosion and wood rotting. Because of that, the minister of energy at the time was advised not to recommend the product for use under the CHIP program. Yet it was recommended for use under the CHIP program and was given the seal of approval of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in September, 1977.

There is a combination of errors here that has brought us to this particular situation at this point in time. First of all, we have the government closing its ears, failing to accept the technical advice it was getting from within the government. Secondly, this was a program that was and still is applied across the country without any statutory authority or any statutory provisions. In other words, there is no statute governing the Canadian Home Insulation Program. As a consequence of that, the CHIP program in its early days was responsible for a number of fly-by-night operators. These people knew absolutely nothing about the insulation business, being hastily formed in order to cash in on what was perceived as a bonanza.

We had this dangerous combination of inexperienced insulators, using a material that had inadequate standards for application. That is the combination which I believe has in large measure resulted in the problem that we are faced with today. It is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker, that is facing many home owners today. We do not know what the guidelines are and we will not know until presumably the bill gets to committee. And we may not know even in committee, given the track record of this government. We may not know what the guidelines are until the bill receives third reading and becomes law. Of course, the guidelines are critical in telling us how effective and how fair and just the bill will be in its application. We do not know that.

What we do know is that less than 20 per cent of those affected will qualify for the payment of the $5,000 or up to $5,000 that they can receive under the bill. What about the other 80 per cent? These are people who do not necessarily have a health problem or they have a health problem that they cannot prove meets the criteria set out under the regulations. They may not have a health problem, but they have an economic problem of enormous proportions. They face the prospect of seeing their life savings—and a home investment usually represents the life savings of a family—depreciate to the point where they cannot sell their homes, where they have difficulty in obtaining conventional mortgages for the home. Up to now they have not been able even to make the case with municipalities that they should receive some consideration in terms of municipal property taxes, although I believe there is a movement in that direction.

So, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the government has not only a moral responsibility. Given the fact that the minister responsible for housing went against the advice within the government in September, 1977 and approved urea formaldehyde foam to be used under the CHIP program, I believe the government has a legal obligation as well. Once we get to committee or beyond committee and have the guidelines, I suspect that this will be a matter for the courts to decide ultimately. Secondly, the legal responsibility flows from the government's ignoring the advice that came in the first instance, by the way, from the National Research Council in 1978, and from the government's subsequent decision to approve it, as I say, for use under the CHIP program.

By its decision to ban the product in December, 1980, the government assumed responsibility not only for the protection of the health of those using it but also to protect them from financial loss. That is a responsibility to the more than 100,000 Canadians who had this material in their homes.

The bill we have before us today not only fails adequately to address the health problem but totally ignores the very serious and very substantial economic problem created for that 80 per cent of the more than 100,000 homes which will not qualify for assistance under the bill. Incidentally, it should be said in passing that estimates of the number of homes which have had urea formaldehyde foam insulation installed range from 85,000 to a quarter of a million, so we can take our choice of any figure between 85,000 and 250,000 and somewhere between is an accurate figure for the number of homes affected in this country.

Of course, we are not even talking about public buildings, nor does the bill address itself to apartment buildings. That is another problem in itself and one which certainly will have to be addressed, because once we lay emphasis on the problem in terms of addressing it by legislation with respect to the health problem, then that, of course, has to be applied to other buildings as well such as public buildings, apartment buildings and motels and hotels. However, as I said, this does point out what I consider to be a very serious problem.

Was the government right back in December, 1980 in banning urea formaldehyde foam insulation once it had given the material its seal of approval under CMHC standards for use under CHIP? Did the government fully realize the consequences which would flow from its action? I submit that even to this day the government still does not appreciate the consequences which have flowed from its decision to ban urea formaldehyde foam insulation back in December, 1980, as evidenced by its failure to address the economic problems as well as the health problems facing those who have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes.

The president of the Canadian Home Insulation Contractors' Association said on May 10: "The mass hysteria that has been created out there has created problems for everyone." I use that quotation advisedly because I suspect there is not a region of this country where a legitimate contractor involved in the home insulation business has not gone under as a consequence of this, because urea formaldehyde foam insulation was the prevalent material used by most legitimate insulators across the country—and I underline and emphasize the words "legitimate insulators"—who were doing an adequate job. They were using urea formaldehyde foam, and as a consequence of the government's decision they were forced out of business. Hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of Canadians lost their jobs as a consequence, so everyone has been affected. Everyone has been hurt.

I am not suggesting for one moment that the government was wrong in making the decision it made back in December of 1980. We will have to wait until the minister comes before us in committee where we will have an opportunity to question him in greater detail. What I am saying is that the government has to take full responsibility for its decision. It has to take full legal as well as full moral responsibility and, in so doing, it has to address the serious economic problems it has created for over 100,000 home owners in this country, a disproportionate number of them in the minister's own province of Quebec. That is my main concern.

I listened with interest to the minister, and if indeed the government was anxious to get this bill out, I just wonder why it waited so long to resume the debate at second reading. Perhaps the minister is trying to drag out second reading debate until we receive the final report of the three-man committee of inquiry which was established under the Hazardous Products Act. It is interesting that that committee has not issued its final report. The committee is still in the process of preparing its final report to the government. We have received a preliminary report. It is conceivable—indeed, it has been predicted—that that committee will criticize the government and say that the government was wrong to ban the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation in the first place. Whether the committee will do that, of course, remains to be seen, but it seems to me to be passing strange that we as legislators would be asked to give second reading to a bill on which the jury has not come in. In effect, that is what this three-man investigating committee set up under the Hazardous Products Act is.

In any event, given the fact that the chairman of that committee is well known to the minister because he was the minister's campaign manager and there is a very close relationship there, I suspect that the report of the committee and the minister's program with respect to the bill will operate in tandem.

Having said that, I think it is important for us to make the point that we are concerned about the effect of the government's ban on the investments of thousands of Canadians who are struggling with homes they cannot sell. They are stuck with homes on which they are even finding it difficult to get conventional mortgages. Given our responsibility to these people, it certainly is incumbent upon the government to give us an undertaking, before second reading, that it will at least tell us in the committee just exactly what the guidelines are. Is the minister prepared to give the House that undertaking? Is he prepared to tell the House, before third reading of this bill, that the House will know exactly what the regulations are with respect to the application of the financial assistance provisions of the bill? It is absolutely critical that we know that in order to determine that those who are to be assisted will be assisted as justly as possible and there will be no discrimination with respect to any consideration.

In addition, I believe the government also has a very serious obligation to tell the House exactly what it feels is its responsibility to those who do not have health problems as a consequence of urea formaldehyde foam insulation, and I am one of them. There is no problem in my home. I do not live there all year round. It is in my constituency, but I have no problem there. Indeed, the insulation has worked very well. It has served me very well, but if I were attempting to sell my home, I would have to state that it has urea formaldehyde foam insulation because that is now a regulation of most real estate companies in the country. Of course, the minute that goes down on the sales contract, I am out of luck. The property value is gone. I could not give my house away once people knew it had urea formaldehyde foam insulation in it. I think that is a problem.

My good friend, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), usually makes good contributions in the debates of this House. I suspect many of his constituents have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes, and the majority of them, as the hon. member well knows, will not qualify for assistance under this bill. However, they will continue to have very serious problems, and I ask the hon. member to join with me in a bipartisan approach to this problem so that we can help all of our constituents.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, there are many four letter words in our language which are judged to be obscene. I think UFFI, the acronym for "urea formaldehyde foam insualtion", has been added to the list of dirty words in the English language. As we know, urea formaldehyde foam insulation is a dirty, poisonous substance which has been used in some 100,000 homes by people who thought they were using a reliable, safe product recommended by the federal government and sponsored through the CHIP home insulation program.

As we also know, many members of families have suffered very serious health problems as a result of the use of the foam. Others who have not yet had health problems are afraid that, with further deterioration of the foam, the formaldehyde gas will be released. We know that under certain weather conditions, such as the high humidity of the west coast, it is possible that there will be health problems in some families in the future.

Some people have a particular sensitivity to urea formaldehyde gas and there is particular risk for infants, elderly people and people with asthmatic conditions, as well as women who spend all day in their homes, those who do not go out into the workforce. The effect of UFFI is now recognized as so potentially hazardous that the real estate value of most homes insulated with this substance is nil. I have seen cases where it has actually been below zero—where people have received less than the value of the property when the home is insulated with urea formaldehyde.

Not only are urea formaldehyde foam insulation victims worried about health and economic loss, but many have been under extreme stress for almost two years, since they became aware of the problem. They are also angered beyond tolerance by the hypocritical, uncaring attitude of the government that created the problem in the first place. The government, supposedly set up to protect consumers, advocated the use of this substance to insulate homes and to save fuel costs.

A number of years ago the government was warned by its own researchers that this substance was risky and dangerous, and the Massachusetts experience confirmed this. Tests made over the past year also showed a health hazard, yet even today the government refuses to acknowledge the seriousness of the problem and that it is primarily responsible since it permitted this form of insulation to be used. It ignores the obvious and only solution, which is to provide for the removal of this poisonous substance from contaminated homes.

Let me summarize some of the facts we know about urea formaldehyde foam insulation. There are an estimated 100,000 homes in Canada that had urea formaldehyde foam installed in the walls expecting that it would improve the value and make these homes more comfortable. Through the CHIP program, the federal government is directly responsible for the insulation in at least 25,000 of these homes. In British Columbia, some 8,000 homes have used urea formaldehyde and, as a result, are at risk. People have found that sealing and ventilation techniques do not guarantee that the gases will be contained or removed. The full cost of removing the foam in most provinces is estimated to be around $25,000 per home.

We know that health problems can occur when there is a very low level of urea formaldehyde concentration. The government uses the level of .1 parts per million foam in the air as the minimum level. I have many examples of people who have a doctor's certificate to testify the foam has caused health problems where there has been a much lower level than the .1 part per million. Symptoms caused by UFFI are nose and throat irritation, breathing difficulties, sore throat, dizziness, nausea, vomiting and asthmatic types of attacks.

We know that despite the promises of the Department of National Health and Welfare to keep physicians and medical experts more informed on this issue, even today many doctors are not aware that the symptoms they are diagnosing as allergies are probably related to this hazardous foam insulation. Urea formaldehyde foam insulation has also been linked to nasal cancer in laboratory rats and mice. There are health hazards that have been substantiated. They are not evident in every home where this foam has been used but they are very serious and are potentially a risk and a worry for most home owners who have used it.

There are structural problems in the homes that have used this type of insulation as well. For example, there are cases where urea formaldehyde foam insulation has been used and the electrical wiring has been corroded. It also creates rot problems. I understand this is particularly prevalent in a climate of high humidity and that means, of course, in the coastal regions of British Columbia. This structural problem leads to potential fires and contributes to shortening the safe lifetime of the house.

In 100 per cent of the 100,000 homes I mentioned, there are very serious financial problems. Houses with UFFI show a very dramatic loss in value which can only be changed by removing the foam. Real estate agents are asking whether there is UFFI in a house when it is listed for sale or when its value is assessed. As soon as they know that to be the case, the value drops. This is acknowledged by many provincial and municipal governments which are reducing taxes because the value of the property has fallen. It has been suggested that the form for assessing the value of a house insulated with urea formaldehyde foam used by real estate companies will contain a question about this.

Those are some of the symptoms we know of that have created such a serious problem for many Canadian home owners. The problems with this type of foam came to my attention two years ago, as I am sure it did to many other hon. members. I recall a number of very pathetic human situations that raised serious concern in many of us. I recall, for example, an elderly couple who lived in a very wealthy part of Vancouver coming into my office. They had put all their life savings into their home, and it had beautiful antiques, draperies and in fact gold leaf trimming. Because of health problems they had to move into the basement. They were really wrought with anxiety wondering what to do. The woman had a very serious asthmatic condition and was in bed most of the time. Her husband was completely bowed under with worry. They could not move out of the house and they could not live in it.

Another family with young children, where the wife and one baby particularly affected by the gas, lived in a tent in their backyard. Eventually, after the summer was over, they had to sell their home without knowing what would happen. They had no other choice and took a considerable loss. Even now they do not know whether they will be compensated.

Two years ago a man living not too far from my office came in very, very angry. He is still very, very angry. His name is John Owens and he has been very outspoken on this issue. He had not yet been seriously affected, although members of his family woke up every morning with nasal congestion. Headaches and nausea were not uncommon, particularly in the wife, who stayed in the home all day. He was angry because the government was doing nothing, and he did not know what to do about his house. Again, he was an average worker who had put all his savings into fixing up his home. He had worked very hard and now his major capital asset was at risk. Added to this was the complete frustration, month after month, indeed year after year, of the federal government simply not taking this problem seriously and doing nothing to help.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to read a letter from the Rapanos family of Carnarvon Street in Vancouver. This is what they say:

In the Autumn of 1978 we decided to take what we felt would be a good step to improve our home which was constructed in 1943 and to help protect our family from the future inflation in energy costs. The CHIP programme was available to provide a further incentive. After obtaining three estimates, we enquired about the contractor's reputation and whether or not the urea formaldehyde foam he was proposing to use was CMHC approved. Everything checked out so the work was done and subsequently we received a CHIP grant. There was some unusual smell and at one place a wet spot appeared on the wall next to an electrical outlet but since we were also painting at the time we attributed some of the smell to this even though it still seemed to continue for a time after the painting had been completed. At this time we had no reason to suspect anything out of the ordinary.

Since 1978 a number of facts have become known to us:

1. At the end of 1979 we brought our normal, healthy baby home from the hospital. She immediately developed bronchial and breathing problems which we treated with innumerable visits to the doctor. The child has had more antibiotics and prescriptions in her first two years than many people experience in twenty years. She is well below average in terms of her growth today in spite of her being of average birth weight and we are very worried about the long term effects of her ongoing breathing problems in terms of her future health and growth.

2. We, ourselves, have both noticed, particularly in the winter months when the windows are more likely to be closed, that sore throats in the mornings were an almost daily occurrence for both of us, yet the colds we expected to follow never occurred. It has seemed, however, that we have both experienced a lot more "colds" or precold symptoms over the last few years.

The above observations were prior to our awareness of any potential health impacts of the UFFI. Since the time of the ban on use of the material a number of further facts have come to be known through reading the studies associated with the product, discussing the effects with staff from the Vancouver Health Department and speaking to others who have this insulation in their homes.

3. The degradation of this unstable UFFI material is a certainty, only the rate is variable and unpredictable and this degradation releases formaldehyde gas.

4. There is no established "safe" level for this material for long-term continuous 24-hour per day exposure (as in the case of a mother and child at home). The .1 parts per million is an arbitrary figure gleaned from research to date. The Final Report of the Department of National Health and Welfare Expert Advisory Committee on Urea Formaldehyde Foam Insulation April 1981 states:

"The Committee is therefore not prepared to recommend any level of formaldehyde exposure as inherently safe."

The carcinogenic potential of this material is not clear; however, it has been shown to effect rats at 6 ppm which is presumably over a fairly short test period.

I am sorry the minister has just left us because the letter goes on to say:

Mr. Ouellet, what is this going to mean to the health of our child as she grows in this environment? Would it be "safe" to have more children? Looking at the health of our child now, we must say we are extremely concerned. We have therefore come to the conclusion that this level of uncertainty is too great & that the only thing we can do is have the UFFI removed.

5. Our home has been tested by the City of Vancouver Health Department (report attached). The tests indicated that the formaldehyde level was approximately .05 ppm in the living space and .66 ppm in the walls, which indicates that the level of gas being produced in the walls is creating a potential to continue to contaminate the home.

There are no new furnishings or finishes in the home which could have contributed to this formaldehyde level and we do not smoke.

I might mention that was the kind of rationalization I recall the minister using in this House to try and get himself and his government off the hook. The letter goes on:

6. We recently found another home which we were interested in purchasing and have discovered, from speaking to three separate real estate companies, that in spite of the fact that the home we were interested in was assessed at a lower value than ours, because of the formaldehyde ours would in fact be worth much less on the market. Only one company stated that the presence of the foam should result in a lowering of the list price by $25,000, while the other two simply suggested quite low asking prices and said that the "buyer resistance" to homes with UFFI had become "considerable".

One agent advised that several of the major banks were either refusing to write mortgages for such homes while others "reviewed" each case on its own merits.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this illustrates again in very human and specific terms the seriousness of this problem and the terrible situation in which home owners find themselves. The letter goes on:

In the case of this insulation, where the Government acted as a promotor through CMHC (and apparently through RAPCO), in the use of this product, action should be immediate and complete. If you do not provide full compensation in this case, how can your ministry ever have any respect from private companies who might be required by your Ministry to recall their faulty products. This is a terrible double standard!

The fact remains that the effectiveness and safety of UFFI were misrepresented when the product was given an endorsation. Since that time, your Government has fully recognized the problem and has established a compensation program.

Mr. Minister, why make this compensation incomplete! We can demonstrate a concrete economic loss and we believe also demonstrate health effects; why then when WE have acted in good faith, should we be penalized either for the full cost or a portion of the cost of removal of this frightening material from our homes. What kind of common justice is there in helping some people but not others? Your proposal is insufficient, unfair and discriminatory.

This stuff decays and a .5 ppm reading today is not either safe or constant over time and we would be irresponsible to raise children in an environment contaminated by the material or the fungus that live in it 24 hours a day—selling the home is a very costly non-solution which simply shifts the problem.

In conclusion, we must say that we believe that this hazardous material MUST BE REMOVED from our home and this conclusion is drawn from the National Research Council data, economic damage and most important, real and rational concern about the PRESENT AND FUTURE OF OUR FAMILY.

That letter was written by Bill and Marilyn Rapanos. It is typical of what so many UFFI home owners across the country feel. I think the only positive thing that we can say about this situation is that home owners in every province of Canada are so incensed that they have formed very militant citizen action groups. They are determined not to accept the insulting kind of compensation program which the government has proposed and which, of course, is legislated in Bill C-109 under discussion.

Over the past year and a half, as housing critic for our party and as the hon. member representing the riding of Vancouver East, I have spoken many times in the House about the disastrous situation which has affected home owners with UFFI insulation. My constituency office has a headquarters for one urea formaldehyde action group.

The federal government must bear full responsibility for this disaster facing home owners with UFFI. For it to try and say otherwise or even to try to put the responsibility on to the provinces is irresponsible indeed. The federal government endorsed the program and encouraged home owners to use urea formaldehyde insulation under the CHIP program.

For the record, I would like to go over a couple of statements that were made earlier. These will show how long the government has ignored this problem and how long it has been in trying to do something about it. On July 17, 1981, we proposed a financial solution which would help home owners. I demanded in the House that the federal government establish a fund to assist Canadian home owners with the cost of removing UFFI from their homes. After all, we have disaster funds for floods and for fires; surely this is just as great a disaster.

In 1981 we proposed reallocating the $5 million which the minister was proposing to spend on testing homes with UFFI and also that the $330 million which had been allocated in 1981 for new insulation programs be reallocated and used as a good start on a UFFI disaster fund. Of course, the government ignored these proposals, just as it ignored repeatedly the need for a major program for these people, not to give information and to set up action phone lines, to which people could not get through, but something constructive. The federal government talked about several million dollars for informational programs as well which did not even get out to local family physicians about the effects on health of UFFI. But what we wanted were funds to be used immediately for the very obvious and well documented problems which were evident and which should have been acted upon in a direct way.

At that time we said also that public health officials in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario had already indicated that the federal government's testing program was unreliable and inconclusive. The affected home owners had called for the removal of the insulation as the only way to ensure further problems would not occur in the future. That was in 1981. Then we move to December 24, 1981 when the government was proposing what it saw, after this long delay, might be the solution. At that time I stated:

> The federal government, by making a token tax deduction for removal of urea formaldehyde foam insulation, at last has admitted they have a responsibility for the UFFI disaster. However a $5,000 tax deduction for only ten per cent of the affected homes falls far short of solving the UFFI problem which the federal government created.
> UFFI homeowners are left with devalued properties with little or no resale value. Many people have their life savings invested in their homes which now are contaminated.

As I said earlier, it would cost between $20,000 and $30,000 to remove the foam. But to remove the foam—the poison—is the only solution. The federal government endorsed and promoted the use of this insulation material. The federal government ignored earlier warnings from the National Research Council. The federal government is responsible for both the economic as well as the health problems which it created. UFFI action groups across the country and members of the New Democratic Party have said over and over again that the federal government has been hypocritical by pretending to provide remedial help. The phony aid program. which was part of Bill C-109, is just that. It is available to only a few home owners whose homes have a 0.1 parts per million reading, and to people who have serious health problems.

Many people are not yet aware what their health problems are possibly as a result of UFFI. Perhaps their doctors have not yet documented them. But when I questioned the minister about that, he admitted in the House of Commons that 0.1 parts per million was merely an arbitrary figure. The minister also agreed that individuals react differently to the foam. The more a person is exposed to the foam, the more sensitive a person becomes. Those serious health problems occur as the foam disintegrates. I asked the minister why these limits were set. They are just a waste of money and do not get at the real problem. What happens to people who are forced to move out of their homes? Many have already moved. Some people in my riding have actually had their homes torn down without any guarantee they will be compensated for that. They have rebuilt their homes at considerable risk and a lifetime's indebtedness with today's high interest rates.

The idea of paying $100 as a sort of downpayment as a prerequisite for testing is unrealistic. This has been a serious problem for senior citizens. Many of our senior citizens worked hard to insulate their homes. They were the ones with older homes who wanted to conserve fuel costs. Most senior citizens cannot afford this $100 requirement.

There is no real remedy for the disastrous effect of this foam insulation which, as I have said, was sponsored by the government, except for the government to compensate home owners for the complete removal of this insulation.

I might say also, Mr. Speaker, that we have asked the minister, who is so keen on testing and on studies which give him time for the heat to diminish, whether he would do a real estate assessment of the devaluation of property if he feels he needs proof. He has chosen to ignore this request also.

I know we do not need a lot of extra evidence in the record because many people have spoken about this problem. However, I would like to quote from a UFFI Action Association letter. This association operates out of my constituency office. It has members from across British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: No money or government support was involved.

Mrs. Mitchell: This group has been extremely active in research. It has provided valuable data for the government. The December, 1981 letter of the UFFI Action Association of Vancouver reads in part as follows:

• (1600)

The B.C. UFFI Action Association together with the other UFFI groups across the country reject the federal government's proposed plan of compensation. We reject because the amount (only up to $5,000 remedial action) is too low given the cost we face and is available to only a select few (those with current health problems and/or levels above 0.1 ppm formaldehyde level). The vast majority of UFFI home owners stand to get almost nothing under this plan.

They organized a telegram campaign to the minister. Telegrams flooded in, in the thousands, which read as follows:

I expect nothing less than full compensation for foam removal and restoration of my home.

This is the position of the New Democratic Party. My colleague who spoke on this bill strongly advocated a federal-provincial conference on the matter. We say that effective help does not have to be delayed in the meantime. Surely we all agree that it would be fine if the provinces helped also, but I think the greatest help they could provide at this time would be to assist citizen action groups to move forward with some of their legal cases since the federal government seems to be so slow.

I should like to use this opportunity to commend particularly the action groups to which I have referred in all provinces. Penny Tilby, president of the B.C. action group, and John Owens, also a very active member, have put hours and hours of work into this entire effort. There are thousands of members of their groups at the present time. They have organized numerous meetings. They have up-to-date research. They have tested any and every suggestion which has been made. Also they developed an information network which is far superior to that of the federal government.

The federal government should make funds available immediately to assist these groups. If ever there was a group committed to research which has a vested interest in arriving at solutions, it is UFFI victims themselves. Despite the promises of the ministers, funds have really not been available. I believe $10,000 was available from the Government of British Columbia to help with some of the administrative and travel costs, but to my knowledge the federal government has not yet made funds available to these groups.

Also we advocate that the least the federal government could do would be to sponsor conferences to bring together organizations in Ottawa and to listen to them. Of course, it is very convenient for the federal government to close its ears when the victims are hundreds, indeed thousands, of miles away. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) should be an advocate himself because not only did his department sponsor the program in the first place, but many public buildings have been insulated with urea formaldehyde. Also we know that many schools and small trailers have particular problems. There must be action on them.

We have mentioned that we want a federal-provincial conference. However, we do not only want advisory groups, which will be used, as the Liberal government is so fond of doing, to stall, to get the government off the hook, and to do nothing to solve the problem. We want some laws passed which will provide full compensation. Bill C-109 is completely inadequate. I have repeated these points over and over again, as have other speakers.

I appeal once again to the minister to sponsor immediately a federal-provincial conference and to provide funds for action groups to meet here in Ottawa, to bring together their research and to take action on their own behalf. They have said that kicking them when they are down and refusing grants is very typical of what they have been led to expect from the government. The last straw with the group with which I am familiar was that they were refused charitable status for their organization, so that people contributing to them cannot even obtain tax deductions. There are over 40 groups in Quebec alone and 24 other known groups across Canada.

I urge these groups to keep the heat on and to keep pressuring. Certainly all of us in the House, including government backbenchers, should keep pressuring for justice in this case. It is a national disaster. We must establish a national disaster fund. We must find ways for the government to change and extend its bill to provide true compensation for urea formaldehyde foam insulation victims.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I hope my intervention in the debate on this legislation dealing with urea formaldehyde foam insulation will not be overly long, but I feel compelled to make some contribution. In my view, this legislation, taken in isolation, is woefully inadequate. I am not convinced, although I suspect, that this is the government's sole answer to a very serious emotional, social and economic problem. I would be much comforted if either the minister or perhaps his parliamentary secretary later today allays my suspicions. If this is simply a first step by the government in addressing the problem, I think I would be inclined to be more patient and more understanding. If, on the other hand, this legislation represents the total response to this very, very serious problem, then I suggest there will be difficult times ahead for the minister, for his department and for the government of which he is a member.

If one looks briefly at the history of the problem up until approximately September of last year, I suppose one might adopt the cliché, "a comedy of errors". But the word "comedy" implies that there is some levity or something funny about the situation. There is absolutely nothing funny about it. It is a tragedy of errors rather than a comedy of errors.

In August, 1977, CMHC acceptance numbers were granted by the corporation's acceptance branch. In the next month, September, 1977, urea formaldehyde foam insulation was approved by CMHC for use in the Canadian Home Insulation Program. In November, 1979, some two years later, a complete ban of the product took effect in the state of Massachusetts. Attendant upon that, of course, was significant publicity in our country. In September, 1980, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) announced the establishment of an expert advisory committee to study the documented evidence available on the product. In December, 1980, the same minister and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) took steps to institute a temporary ban on its use. In April, 1981, the Government of Canada made the ban on the use of UFFI permanent.

Following the ban, on June 11, 1981, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced the establishment of an information-co-ordination centre to solicit and register public complaints on UFFI. On the same day the minister announced a board of review pursuant to the Hazardous Products Act to hear submissions from the industry and from other interested parties related to the decision to ban UFFI. Finally, on September 20, 1981 the then parliamentary secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), told reporters in Montreal that Treasury Board "has accepted the principle of evaluation damages and of compensating victims".

I do not claim to represent a riding which, with regard to this issue, is unique. I think we all share, to varying degrees, the problems within our ridings which have arisen from the installation of this product by our constituents, with government encouragement and, indeed, financial support in many cases. Surely there is a very strong moral obligation on the government, and I quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare who said, at a press conference in December, 1980: "I feel that, morally, we were the victims as much as the people were of a lack of knowledge".

I do not know how one might interpret that. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare, by claiming to be a victim, was suggesting in some way that she was sharing the impact of the UFFI ban, then one would have to suggest that the minister was using a very unfortunate choice of language. If, however, one might interpret her remarks to the press on that occasion as indicating a very serious responsibility to her fellow Canadians who were the victims of this government's inadequacy, then this response contained in the legislation is hardly enough to resolve the moral problem that she professed on that day.

I said that the problem was not simply an emotional one, nor simply a social one, nor simply an economic one. I certainly do not claim high seniority in this House. I have been here for something less than 10 years, but I suppose that those of us who have been here any length of time have dealt with problems at various times which one could quite accurately classify as emotional problems and they are often very difficult to deal with. Certainly from time to time and under a certain amount of pressure we have dealt with problems which could quite adequately be described as social problems. In the last few years, particularly in the last few months, we have all dealt with problems that can be described, again quite accurately, as economic. However, I do not recall a challenge or a problem in the few years I have been in the House which has so dramatically combined all the emotional, social and economic elements.

I have read news reports and I have heard it said that the victims of the UFFI disaster were simply reacting emotionally. Well, of course they were reacting emotionally; it would be a natural reaction. I have heard other observers say that the socio-medical problem was more a problem of the imagination of the users of UFFI than genuine physiological problems. Well, I do not care one wit whether that problem is real in a physiological sense or is simply a medical problem of a psychological nature, because one can be every bit as serious as the other. I would find it hard to find a colleague in the House who would not agree with me it I advanced the proposition that very often the perceived problem on a certain issue is every bit as important and often harder to resolve than the real problem on a certain issue. Therefore, I cannot say whether a person with UFFI in his home who can be diagnosed as having a physiological problem, whether it be akin to an allergy or some form of respiratory problem which can be diagnosed as a particular disease, is in any poorer health than the victim of this foam insulation who is suffering serious mental health.

I have heard other critics and observers say that the economic problem is not nearly as serious as UFFI users are making it out to be, and that if one took masking tape and put it around light switches and that type of thing, then it would resolve the test level and those home owners should be quite able to sell or mortgage their homes on the same basis as a home without the insulation. That is nonsense. It is simply not a fact. Therefore, we have a group which is very small in relation to the total population but which, in terms of the number of users of UFFI, is very significant. On the basis of government advice and in many cases on the basis of government subsidy, these people are now the victims of an emotional, social and economic disaster.

Bill C-109 is the government's response. To repeat what I said earlier, if it is simply the first step, that is fine. I will work happily, enthusiastically and energetically with the government on its second, third, fourth and fifth steps. But if it is the total reaction of the government to this problem, if this is the end of it, it is not good enough.

I am happy to see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) in the House. I know of his problems. As a cabinet minister I had the experience of going to the Treasury Board and I know what the President of the Treasury Board faces. But I must suggest to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this is an absolutely unique situation and it must be dealt with in that way. Sir, if you put yourself in the place of a home owner with UFFI, I think you would have an appreciation of the frustration, anger and sorrow that these people feel. In my riding there is a very active home owners group composed of people from all age groups and all income sectors. It is a very representative group of my constituency. When I last met with them, I found them to be dreadfully disturbed, not just by the fact that they were the victims, but also by the inadequacy and uncertainty with which they perceived government to be dealing with them. For example, one home owner asked me this question during that meeting: "Having removed my foam insulation, am I entitled to apply for another CHIP grant to replace it with acceptable insulation?" Immediately upon returning to Ottawa following that occasion, I wrote to the minister that this question was asked of me. I did this many weeks ago. What was the answer? I have not yet heard. I wrote again last week and said, "Give me the answer; it is a simple question. If the answer is no, and a home owner with UFFI who removes the insulation cannot apply for another CHIP grant, tell me so that I can relay that information to my constituent." I appreciate that this is a very small issue in terms of the total issue, but appreciate the frustration of a home owner who asked his Member of Parliament what he quite accurately considered to be a simple, straightforward question, and weeks go by without any answer whatsoever.

I would like to refer to the testing procedures. Immediately upon the application forms becoming available for this latest testing, those in my riding who had not directly received the application form from the department were supplied with the form by me through the home owners' group, the HUFFI group. Applications, to my direct knowledge, were completed and mailed immediately upon their being available. This was weeks if not months ago. The home owners have heard nothing.

Put yourself, Mr. Speaker, in the position of the home owner who completed an application form weeks and weeks ago and there has been no action. We wonder why there is anger and militancy among the members of these groups! It is the most expected reaction in the world. Naturally, they not only blame the government but blame their Member of Parliament. It is my responsibility to deal with that.

What am I to say to a constituent to whom I supplied the application form and who I know completed it and sent it in in an expeditious way? That home owner sits at home surrounded by UFFI and receives no response to his application. It is absolutely unacceptable and inexcusable that the mechanics did not exist, and maybe still do not exist, for dealing expeditiously and efficiently with those applications.

I said my intervention in this debate would not be long, but I want to deal with what I expect to be a firm commitment from someone speaking on behalf of the government before the end of this second reading debate regarding the regulations which will be the main vehicle for the implementation of Bill C-109.

We have every right on behalf of our constituents who are the victims of this disaster to be able to inform them before the end of second reading and before this matter goes to committee that these will be the regulations under which the legislation will be implemented. I do not know whether a backbencher or a parliamentary secretary will participate from the Liberal side, but I feel not only justified but perfectly reasonable in insisting that we know what these regulations are before we move into committee stage.

If that commitment cannot be made on behalf of the minister, then I have serious reservations as to the efficacy of those committee hearings. Is it the proposal of the government that witnesses representing these home owners' groups come to Ottawa to appear before the committee to discuss this legislation and that parliamentarians on the committee will discuss clause by clause the provisions of this bill without any knowledge whatsoever of the regulations? In terms of this legislation, that is absolutely absurd. One cannot study at committee stage the provisions of this legislation without knowing specifically the regulations. I plead with the government on behalf of home owners everywhere who have UFFI installed to let this House know this afternoon or this evening what these regulations will be.

In conclusion, I want to repeat that if this is the government's total response to a problem that it created, underwrote and issued grants on, a problem of which it is the author, that is not good enough. Second, I want absolute assurance that the department is adequately staffed to deal efficiently, effectively and expeditiously with the applications and to respond. Finally, it is absolutely essential that parliamentarians and witnesses who appear before the committee know the exact content of the regulations before the commencement of committee study of this legislation.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has a certain amount of time left. I wonder whether he would entertain a single question?

Mr. Jarvis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there is a very vital issue missing in the bill before the House and the debate in public. As the hon. member very ably pointed out in his presentation, we are considering a bill which must go before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. That committee has been given a very rough and rocky time by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I see that the critic in the opposition party is nodding his head. There has been a question about the procedure and the agenda before the committee.

The hon. member knows very well that if we allow this bill to go to that committee, two arguments will prevail. I am sure he will agree that they would be prepared to shut down that committee by bringing in some form of closure and failing to permit adequate study.

There is another aspect of the question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I thought the hon. member had risen to ask a question. We will entertain a question.

Mr. Skelly: There are some serious considerations as to why we are not prepared to bring this bill forward quickly. One consideration is that the Conservative Party has put absolutely nothing on the record for the home owners. They say there is too much UFFI and it is the fault of the Liberals. Is there a point at which we are going to get the Conservative Party to put something constructive on the record as to what they would do for the home owners should they ever become the government? It is basically a put up or shut up position at this point.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the first question was.

Mr. McGrath: Don't ask him to repeat it!

Mr. Jarvis: If the hon. member is asking me whether we want to be party to a delay at the committee stage because the report is not available, I suggest to him that I have some sympathy with that. The down side of that is the problem in coming to grips with what is inadequate. As the hon. member well knows, there is a great deal of legitimate pressure on behalf of some home owners with the problem. I tried to make that clear in my speech. This is a first step.

I do not want to be dogmatic. I understand the great help the board's report would be to committee, not just to parliamentarians but also the witnesses who appear before it. Whether I would like on behalf of our party to be party to a filibuster or a delay or any such thing at committee stage, I am not sure that would get the report in quickly. I do not know if we will get the report or not. I hope the parliamentary secretary to the minister will address that.

In terms of the second part of the problem—and I am sure the hon. member will not take this personally and will forgive me because we have a begrudging but mutual respect for each other—if that party had voted the right way back in 1980, this country would be a lot better off.

• (1630)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, some hon. members in this debate have described the urea formaldehyde foam insulation situation as a national disaster. It is. There are approximately 80,000 homes with UFFI in them. It has been said already, but it deserves repetition, that if all those homes were together in one place we would consider it a national disaster. If those 80,000 homes had been hit by a flood or an earthquake or some similar national disaster, this House and the government would have rushed immediately to help them. But because they are spread across the country and because these desolate tales come to us in bits and pieces, slowly, it does not have the impact it should have, yet it really is a national disaster.

During the Easter recess, Mr. Speaker, I attended a meeting in my riding of 300 UFFI victims. These were French-speaking victims, not English-speaking victims. I must tell you that I wished that I had the bureaucrats and government officials with me on that night. Women came to the microphone, wept and broke down in tears, at the situation as a result of the gas emitted from the walls of their homes. Others told stories of having lived in garages outside their homes throughout the winter, of parking cheap mobile homes on their property to live in because of the intolerable situation in their homes. Others told of going to live with relatives because they could not live at home; and because they left their homes vacant the insurance companies were charging them additional insurance for fire and theft because they were no longer living at home. To sit there that night as a federal Member of Parliament and listen to those stories was very difficult. I was wishing that all those who could expedite assistance for them had been there with me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: The problem is not just one of health alone. There are others whose health has not been affected so far, thank God, but they have seen the value of their homes decrease. They do not know from day to day whether there will be some future breakdown in the walls or in the structure with the result that gas will be emitted from the walls. That is to say that in a year's time they may be affected by the gas. They know they have UFFI in their homes, they do not have the health problems yet, but they may have those problems next year or the year after, and they do not know what will happen when the time comes to sell the home when their children grow up. They see their houses decrease in value, they are left in a terrible state of uncertainty and they want corrective measures taken, even though they may not suffer from ill-health right away.

The government says it has no legal responsibility with respect to these people who freely put UFFI in their houses. I think they are correct in that; the government has no strict legal responsibility. If people were to sue in a civil action before the courts, those people would probably fail. But I submit very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that we have come to the aid of people in disaster situations. I refer to earthquakes, to floods and to disasters on the prairies where crops have been destroyed. The government may have had no legal responsibility to do so, but felt it had some responsibility, both politically and morally, to help those people who were in such serious difficulty.

Mr. McKinnon: That is right.

Mr. Allmand: The government has already responded. In December, 1980, by banning the foam, by admitting that it could cause difficult problems. Again, in December, 1981, the government announced a program of testing and assistance. The program has come to us, however, only in bits and pieces. The people I have spoken to in my constituency have not yet received any definite assistance. Some of them have had tests, they have had visits, and there have been letters back and forth. But none of them have got money in their hands to compensate them or to help them rid those homes of UFFI.

With respect to the tests, one man at that meeting of 300 in my constituency to which I referred said he had three tests done on his home and all three came out with different results. The government-sponsored test was done, but he also had tests done by very reliable engineering firms. Even among them, there were two different results. That indicates to me that if we are going to give aid on the basis of these tests, we certainly should not be dogmatic and inflexible. The amount of gas that may be emitted in a home at any one time might depend on weather and other conditions. Otherwise, I do not see how one could explain why the result of the tests were different.

The government has prepared a bill and that bill is before us now. It will go to committee and I am very hopeful that in committee the government will keep an open mind on this issue. I hope it will listen to those groups which represent victims across the country. I hope those representatives will be called to the committee, so that they may give their stories directly to the committee as I was able to hear them at that mass meeting one night in my constituency. It is very important to listen to the representatives of victims. The committee will also wish to listen, of course, to engineers and other people familiar with this foam, but the bill should be given very thorough study in committee. Amendments should be considered to widen the coverage. If we are going to give aid, we should not be niggardly, we should not draw the lines too restrictively. We should reconsider the deadline for helping people retroactively to the announcement of the program. Some people who had UFFI in their homes acted quickly, before the government announced its program. Those people paid a lot of money to do that and have gone into debt. They should not suffer because they took that quick action.

Some members mentioned the regulations. Of course, the regulations are very important. Clause 3 of the bill provides that assistance will be given to applicants, in accordance with the evidence and according to criteria set out in the regulations. At this point we do not know what kind of evidence will be required or what the criteria will be. It is very important that members know those important factors before there is a final vote on the bill at third reading.

I wish to mention a few other steps that might be taken to help these victims. I mentioned before, and I have repeated—and this has been taken up by others—that we should consider using the tradesmen in the Armed Forces to help take out some of this foam. We have many engineers and tradesmen in the Armed Forces who help in times of national disaster. If there were a flood or something like that, the Armed Forces would come to the assistance of the people concerned. We have these trained tradesmen who are being paid salaries by the federal government and their equipment is covered by the federal government. Could they not be put to work for a year or two to remove the foam insulation? That would save the government moneys they would pay to private contractors or private businessmen. It is not that it is bad to give such contracts, but we are in a period of restraint. We are already paying these tradesmen and engineers; they are not faced with any great military challenge at this time and could be used to great effect in helping individuals remove this foam from their homes.

There is another matter, Mr. Speaker. The government says it is not legally responsible for the damage resulting from this foam insulation, and I agree that that is probably correct. However, should the government not consider that it could take the corrective measures and pay for them, and then be subrogated legally in the right that the victims might have had against those who were responsible, whether it be those two installed the foam improperly, or whether it be those who manufactured the foam. Whoever is found responsible, there is a right of action against them. The government may hesitate to spend sums of money now to compensate these victims, but it could take corrective action and then be subrogated in its legal right to make claims against the people who were really responsible for these serious damages.

In his announcement last December the minister spoke about research being undertaken to develop neutralizers to the foam insulation. If such neutralizers could be developed, that would be much cheaper than tearing down walls and buildings, and so forth, to get the foam out because neutralizers could be injected into walls. That would do away with the negative effects of UFFI and probably solve the problem. In his final remarks today or before the committee I would like the minister to tell us what progress has been made by research scientists in developing UFFI neutralizers.

I do not know whether this is correct or not, but some victims have told me that the grants which will be made to them under this program will be taxable and that they will have to include those grants as part of their taxable income. This may be a case of taking away with one hand while giving with the other, and I would like some clarification on that point.

I do not want to give a long speech on this matter. I merely wanted to put on the record my very real concerns about what I believe to be a serious national disaster and a very, very sad situation. I urge the government to act quickly and fairly to bring justice to the home owners affected.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) would entertain a question.

Mr. Allmand: Sure.

Mr. Keeper: I listened with great interest to the hon. member's speech about urea formaldehyde. He outlined the problem very well. He made it clear that there are people across the country who are suffering very severe health problems because of this insulation. He noted the fact that the government subsidized—we might even say promoted—the use of this kind of insulation in houses across the country. The hon. member made clear note of the fact that while the government may not have a strict or narrow legal responsibility to compensate people and to help them with their financial problems, it has a moral responsibility and should act upon it. The hon. member pointed out that citizens who have put this foam insulation into their houses—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Did the hon. member seek the floor to be recognized to participate in the debate or to ask a question?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will go straight to the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House would like to hear the question.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I will take your advice to heart.

Having made such a good speech about urea formaldehyde on behalf of the citizens of this country and given the inadequacy of this legislation, is the hon. member prepaped to vote against it?

Mr. Allmand: No, Mr. Speaker. At second reading I will not vote against it. In my speech I stated that I want to see this legislation sent to committee. I hope the committee will listen to the associations of victims as to how the legislation can be improved. I would like to know, as would opposition members, what the content of the regulations will be because the regulations will establish the criteria and the evidence required for assistance. After we have finished the committee hearings and the bill returns here for third reading, I will then make a further decision.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I feel honoured to participate in the debate this afternoon because we are dealing with an extremely important question which affects many families right across Canada. Large numbers of Canadian families are concerned and have very deep anxiety with respect to this question.

It would be interesting just to review briefly the history of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Originally it was banned in Massachusetts in 1976, although it was approved in Canada as a safe product in 1977. The original Canadian approval was given in 1969. That was withdrawn in 1970. In 1977 the National Research Council stated in one of its public releases that urea formaldehyde was a problem. In 1977 the CMHC again endorsed it as a safe product, even though the NRC had recommended against its use in a prior report. Also in 1977 the Canadian Home Insulation Program began, and urea formaldehyde foam insulation was an approved insulation material. In August of 1978 Dr. Vian of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated that there were serious problems and complaints about urea formaldehyde foam insulation and advised against its use.

In 1979 the state of North Carolina documented proof of cancer in laboratory animals exposed to low emission rates of urea formaldehyde. In January of 1980 final and conclusive laboratory tests were done by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and those tests showed that urea formaldehyde was a possible source of cancer. In September of 1980 the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) formed a special committee. Two months later, in November of 1980, the Consumer Product Safety Commission in the United States issued a report on the threat of cancer. In December of 1980 there was a temporary ban in Canada imposed by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and in April, 1981, there was a permanent ban on urea formaldehyde foam.

It is interesting to note that as far back as 1969 concerns were expressed about the safety of this product, and yet we continued through most of the seventies to use it. In fact, it was used widely during that decade. The estimates vary. Government members say 80,000 families have been affected. Conservative members say close to 200,000 families have been affected. Our estimate is that close to 100,000 families have been affected. These are all estimates. Part of the problem is lack of information. We do not even know how many homes are affected.

As we look through the history of the seventies, we see a process whereby this material was approved, then not approved and then deemed to be a problem, and yet nothing was really done about it until the 1980s. There is a problem because, first, this material affects health. Its affects are difficult to pinpoint because they vary. They vary from house to house. They vary depending on climatic conditions. They affect various people living in a home in different ways. Some people are affected more than others. However, what is understood is that this material is not good for people in any dose. As I said, some people are affected more than others. In some homes more gas escapes from the walls and into the homes than in other homes. However, let me state very categorically, very simply and very plainly that any amount is not good. Therefore, we should make our objective the eventual removal of this foam from all homes.

We all recognize that that is easier said than done. Estimates for removing the substance from a home range between $20,000 and $30,000. That would make this a billion-dollar program right across the country. I think there is recognition that the price tag would be high and that the solution to the problem is not simple. However, the bill before us certainly is not the solution.

A government which has not acted with haste all at once acts with too much haste. We are dismayed that this bill is presented to us without the special advisory committee having reported to the government. What is the sense of having the advisory committee if it is not to advise as to what type of remedial action should be taken? Why is the government moving now when its own advisory committee has not even reported? We suggest that there is a bit of folly in that. We also suggest that the home owners who have organized themselves into various associations across Canada should be consulted. Is it not just plain common sense that people whose health of life is affected should be consulted? Unfortunately, the government has deemed it fit not to consult them.

• (1650)

As we look at the problem and realize the anger Canadian home owners feel toward the government and the companies that put the foam in their homes, we must ask who is ultimately responsible. Surely the government must accept a fair amount of responsibility. After all, it did a fair amount of testing and approved the product. The company which manufactured it was even indirectly owned by the government through the Canada Development Corporation. The government should accept a fair amount of responsibility, but instead it has played political games with Parliament and with the home owners across the country. If it were to deal realistically and honestly with the problem, it would meet with home owners in an honest, open and frank way. On all counts the government has failed, however.

Sometimes to the chagrin of some of my fellow members in this party, I have risen to question the testing procedures followed in the areas of pharmaceuticals, herbicides, pesticides, etc. I have drawn to the attention of the government the fact that an outfit called International Biotest Laboratories in the United States, in testing most of the herbicides and pesticides used in Canada today, has deliberately falsified its data. Yet the United States government accepted that data and registered most of the herbicides and pesticides that are on the market today.

Recently I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the testing of pharmaceuticals. From freedom of information data obtained in the United States, it was revealed that the U.S. Food and Drug Administration had done a random sampling of 10 per cent of companies and individuals that tested pharmaceuticals and had found that approximately 45 per cent of them did not have good laboratory practices. In fact, because of its investigation it declassified 10 per cent of the companies and individuals that were testing pharmaceuticals.

There is a basic problem in the testing of individual chemical products put on the market every year, and there are thousands of them, Mr. Speaker. The testing has not been adequate or honest. If a problem occurs, very often the government is the last to hear about it. We have found that remedial action by government departments is slow. That is illustrated by the history of urea formaldehyde during the 1970s when various tests showed there was a problem with it. Different government departments ignored the test results and did not act upon them. Even the National Research Council warned the government about it but that warning was ignored. We need a total re-evaluation of the way new products are tested and how the results of those tests are made available to government departments.

I commend my friends to the right for the initiative they have shown in taking up this issue, Mr. Speaker. However, in the short period that they were in government I brought the problem of urea formaldehyde to their attention. During question period on October 22, 1979, I put a question to the then Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who was also in charge of CHIP and CMHC as follows:

> Have other materials, such as styrofoam and treated wood-shavings, been subject to testing methods, and are there any testing procedures to ensure that urea-based foams do not give off highly toxic formaldehyde gas after insulation?

The minister replied:

> The testing has been done in the past for CMHC by the Ontario Research Foundation. CMHC in itself has not taken part directly in the testing but has had to take their word for the results obtained.
> We are looking into all aspects of this very important program. It has been generously funded. We hope to improve its administration as more experience is gained.

At the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on November 2, 1979 I put the following question to the Conservative minister:

> Were there any studies as well conducted with formaldehyde insulation materials in terms of whether they do throw off toxic fumes and whether this is much of a danger?

He replied in part:

> However, I never had anyone talk to me about this rather exotic-sounding insulation. You brought it up in the House and I am sure some of our officials have looked into it.

Then I turned to the official from CMHC who was present and the following exchange took place:

> MR. DE JONG: Are the people in CMHC aware of the problem with foam?
> MR. HESSION: Specifically the urea formaldehyde?
> MR. DE JONG: Yes.
> MR. HESSION: Yes, we are. I think you were inquiring as to the degree of testing there. I think more particularly the standard that is in existence is in the order of a one-part-per-million requirement, which, in the extreme, has suggested to our professional staff, our technical staff, that the toxic difficlty is minimal in this country.

Those were the answers we were getting from government officials when the Conservatives were in power, Mr. Speaker. When I asked particularly about urea formaldehyde at that committee, the minister turned the question over to Mr. Hession, who replied:

> I want to assure the member that there are literally thousands of materials every year, new materials, coming into the market, and we make it our business, before accepting them, to be satisfied, either through the industry's own testing or through the testing of third parties, that they are acceptable in professional technical terms.

Those were the answers we were getting not too long ago. I am glad to see the conversion of hon. members opposite to the realization that a problem exists. I am also glad to see that there has been some enlightenment of members of the opposition as well. My short experience in the House has shown that as soon as either party sits in opposition, certain enlightenment occurs and they become good, honest advocates; but once they cross the floor everything seems to be "I'm all right, Jack". In fact, the questions we are hearing from the right now were being stonewalled by them when they were sitting opposite. I must surmise that when hon. members opposite were on this side they were asking the same questions and championing the same sort of causes. But strange things seem to happen when either party crosses the aisle.

Enough politics have been played with this very serious problem, Mr. Speaker. People are angry, and they have every reason to be, at the fumbling and mismanagement and at different departments making conflicting statements. People are seeing the value of their homes being destroyed, and they are angry because they do not see any clear and positive direction which the government is following. They see mass confusion, attempts to evade responsibility, and continued flight into bad weather, as my colleague says.

I suggest first of all, Mr. Speaker, that the government meet with the citizens concerned. That surely should be obvious as requirement number one; an honest dialogue with those citizens who are losing their homes. Second, the minister should withdraw the bill until he has heard from his own advisory council. Third, the minister and his officials should meet with their provincial counterparts. Then he should come back to the House with a bill which has had input from those three groups of people.

My other recommendation, Mr. Speaker, is that the government get its act together. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the NRC, CMHC, and the officials responsible for CHIP, should get together and devise a co-ordinated and meaningful program. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government is not so big and insensitive that it cannot do that. Surely the government is not so incapable that it cannot do something in an honest way for the citizens affected by this foam insulation.

The minister advocates civil action. I feel he is somewhat cynical in that suggestion. He surely should know that a civil action on this issue will cost anywhere from $100,000 to $300,000 and most people cannot afford that. He must also know that the statute of limitations, which I recognize is a provincial responsibility, will prevent many people from taking legal action. Perhaps if he is serious about that, however, he can do two things. He can make some money available from the public treasury so that those affected can take action in the courts, and perhaps he can approach his provincial colleagues and suggest to them that they amend the statute of limitations requirements so that people have the time to bring this matter to the courts. I think these are sound suggestions, more so than those my friends to the right have been proposing after discovering this was a problem.

It is all well and good to say a terrible problem exists, but you have to follow it up with something concrete. I recognize and do not minimize the difficulties we face. It is a difficult and costly problem, one which we are not going to be able to resolve overnight. But at least we can put in place a process by which we can begin moving in the right direction: the removal of this insulation from Canadian homes. That is the ultimate goal.

I have tried to tie my remarks, Mr. Speaker, into the much larger question of how new chemical products and technology enter the marketplace. I hope the government has learned a lesson from this. I hope the government realizes a very costly mistake has been made, and I hope and pray it will go over the existing procedures whereby new products are registered and allowed to enter the marketplace, so that this will not take place in the future.

In conclusion, I am afraid this legislation which is before us is not adequate and does not really meet the concerns of the Canadian people. It is a bill which has been brought forward more, I suspect, out of politics than from a desire to deal honestly with a mistake. As such, Mr. Speaker, we will stand in opposition to this bill.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UREA FORMALDEHYDE INSULATION ACT

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-109, to provide for payments to persons in respect of dwellings insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening carefully to the debate this afternoon, with some interest and a great deal of disbelief at some of the statements made by hon. members opposite. I want to spend the time available to me in responding to a number of the more sensational statements that were made this afternoon, and to touch upon a number of actions the government has taken, is taking and will take.

Let me remind hon. members opposite that the Government of Canada is concerned enough about this problem to allocate over $110 million to a program to assist the victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Let me remind all those members who need reminding that those people with problems are eligible for a tax-free grant of some $5,000. We are told that is not enough. Well, in my riding I have talked to a number of people with UFFI in their homes. They tell me that the bids they are getting from contractors to remove the insulation are well below that $5,000 figure. We are told by scientists at NRC that not only might removal be the most expensive solution, but also possibly the worst one. We are now studying ways and means of doing the job in a better way than that of total removal. We are looking at ways of sealing walls and installing air exchangers which, to the best of our knowledge at this time, are better solutions than total removal.

We are proceeding in a rational orderly way because we take this problem seriously. We have a testing program in place. We have a program in place to certify contractors to do remedial work. We have a program in place for remedial advice which is categorized to specific problems in specific homes. This is not a case of throwing money at a solution hoping that we will get off the hook. It is a case of an intelligent orderly program. However, I just heard the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) tell the House and the Canadian public that the only solution is the total removal of this foam. It is typical of the New Democratic Party to suggest that kind of thing which would be total fiscal irresponsibility. To do what the NDP suggests would cost between $1.5 billion and $2 billion. It is not even needed.

This afternoon we heard the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who has urea formaldehyde foam in his own place, tell us in a honest and forthright way that there is no problem in his home. He is warm, secure and happy in his home. He has even saved money on his heating bill. The media has made this problem sensational. And the problem for the hon. member for St. John's East and for many home owners throughout the country is that the market value of their homes has decreased, not because there is a tremendous problem, but because of sensationalism in the press.

I would like to take this opportunity to read into the record a report that was broadcast on the CBC Radio national news on May 19, 1982, which has to do with the situation in the United States. The report opens with this comment:

> The U.S. Congress has been holding hearings in Washington this week into the problems thousands of Americans are having because they used urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes. Although there have been calls in the U.S. for an aid program similar to Canada's for these home owners, the Reagan administration doesn't think the health problems warrant it.

Then a reporter from Washington elaborated by saying:

> Reagan administration officials said today there is not enough evidence of a health hazard from formaldehyde foam for the government to give aid to people who used the material to insulate their homes. Legislation has been introduced in Congress to establish an aid program similar to one Canada has started, but administration officials down-played the reports of a cancer risk from formaldehyde.
>
> Canadian professor Dr. Michael Newhouse of McMaster University testified at today's hearings. He said there is no health hazard from the insulation, and he said it was a mistake to ban the material.

Dr. Newhouse said:

> There is no question that the psychological harm done to date by the ban far exceeds the potential health effects, if such effects exist at all. People may not have had a problem before, but, since all of this stuff has appeared in the press and has not been denied by government health agencies, a huge problem exists.

The reporter concludes by saying:

> Congress is expected to take up legislation for the aid program this year, but its prospects of passage are dim.

If we keep having filibustering from across the way, the prospects for the passage of this bill will also be dim. But it is some action, and we are proud of it.

We have heard comments that the government is responsible for this mess, that we approved the product. Let us make it clear that every year tens of thousands of new products appear on the market. Some are very useful, some are not. But the government does not approve these new products. The government cannot approve or even test all new products. In order to do so we would need an entire army of employees, inspectors, scientists and experts. That is impossible. If it were possible, the cries of outrage from the official opposition would be so loud that we would not be able to hear ourselves think. Hon. members on the other side would complain about government interference and about free enterprise. Let us make it clear that the government is no more responsible for urea formaldehyde foam insulation than for any other product put on the market by manufacturers.

I have already touched upon some provisions of the bill and some of the action that we are prepared to take if hon. members opposite will allow us to do so. I have reviewed the provisions of the bill, as I have said, but let me enumerate some other actions that have been taken. Let me point out to members opposite who refuse to go into the facts that we have funded through public moneys UFFI home owner groups throughout the country enabling them to get a better reading of the picture and enabling them to do their work in representing their membership. An amount of $40,000 has gone to a group in Quebec; an amount of $39,000 has gone to the association of Ontario home owners with urea formaldehyde foam insulation; an amount of $4,000 has gone to concerned urea formaldehyde foam home owners of St. John's, Newfoundland; and an amount of $7,000 has gone to HUFFI, Manitoba. A co-ordinating grant of $30,000 for the production and distribution of a news letter to UFFI home owners throughout the country was given to a group here in Ottawa.

A national advisory committee has been established to consult and meet with the minister, officials of his department and officials of UFFI centres. The meeting will be held this month. I will be attended by representatives of 12 home owner organizations across Canada from the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies and British Columbia. Mr. Richard Patten, president of HUFFI, Ottawa, has agreed to accept the position of chairman of this council. The purpose is to dialogue and discuss possible remedial measures. UFFI officials from the UFFI centres, the minister and representatives of home owner groups across the country will be able to exchange ideas in a reasonable and orderly fashion and review research. In short, it is for people to come together to see what can be done about this problem and to find out what advice they have for the government on the best way to proceed.

The hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) raised the question of regulations today. There was some sinister suggestion that regulations are being hidden or were not forthcoming because there was some purpose in keeping them in the dark. That is not so. The minister has made it clear that he will circulate draft regulations at the committee stage of this bill. We have purposely set up the bill in general terms because we want to be flexible. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the best way to be flexible is to incorporate flexibility into the regulations. As long as we can, we want to be open to the new research being done daily and to be open to suggestions from home owner groups across the country so that we can incorporate suggestions into the regulations and thereby improve the bill.

One other thing to which I want to respond concerns a remark made by the hon. member for Regina East who suggested there was some connection between the deliberations of the board of review set up under the Hazardous Products Act and the introduction and presentation of this bill. There is no connection; I want to make that perfectly clear. We are not waiting for the board of review report because we have decided, as a humanitarian gesture, that we must proceed as quickly as possible to assist those who need help the most.

The hon. member for Regina East also accused the government of not consulting. I have already made it clear that we are in the process of consulting with home owners. In fact, we consulted before the bill was introduced. We consulted with the industry and with provincial governments. Unfortunately, neither the industry nor the provincial governments thought the problem was of sufficient merit for them to become involved.

We believe there is a problem for some people—the very young, the very old, those with allergies—and those who are sensitive to gases and associated substances with which they come in contact in their homes. We believe that this bill is a step in the right direction. We would like to have the co-operation of the provinces, but it does not appear to be forthcoming. I suggest to hon. members opposite that there is a saying that the enemy of good is the best. We have a good bill here, and I invite their co-operation to see that it is quickly passed.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a very short question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Jong: Is the hon. member aware of an exchange which occurred when we met with the National Research Council before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on Thursday, March 18, 1982? At that time I asked Dr. Kerwin, the head of NRC:

> Are you at all addressing the long-term problem of devising ways and means in which we can get rid of the urea formaldehyde that is in the walls in an efficient and an inexpensive manner?

Dr. Kerwin answered as follows:

> Mr. Chairman, we are not addressing that problem at the moment. The facilities we have are stretched to dealing with the current day-to-day worries and problems—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, I would ask him to pose it. He is just repeating a question which has already been posed.

Mr. de Jong: Is the hon. member aware that Dr. Kerwin stated that they were not addressing the problem of removing urea formaldehyde from walls because their resources were stretched to the limit and they hoped, if they obtained more resources, that they might be able to address the problem?

Mr. McCauley: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular incident. As I tried to make clear in my speech, the problem is not removal. The problem is what we should do with the gas from that particular insulation. The best possible solution is to seal the walls. I assure the hon. member that studies are being conducted at the present time to see what is the possible solution in terms of sealing.

Mr. Skelly: I wonder whether the hon. member would accept another brief question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Skelly: The bill is running into some question in its passage at second reading. Would the minister be prepared to give the draft regulations before second reading of the bill is completed? Also, would he be prepared to meet with home owner advisory groups before the bill leaves this place approved in principle? Third, would he agree to meeting with his provincial counterparts so that we can dispense forever with this question of whether they will co-operate or involve themselves in consultations?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I should like to answer these three questions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that at second reading stage we are discussing the principle of the bill. Of course, that is the purpose of second reading. The principle is whether or not we will directly aid home owners who have urea formaldehyde insulation in their homes. If opposition parties agree that we should aid them, then we should send the bill to committee where the methods of helping them will be studied in more detail. Indeed, I will undertake to distribute the regulations and the definition as to how aid will be given to home owners. These regulations will be distributed to members of the committee for study of the bill in committee.

The second question concerned meetings with representatives of home owners. The date has been set for mid-June when they will come to Ottawa for a meeting with officials of my department, with officials of the UFFI centre and with myself. I am looking forward to this meeting for the input of representatives of various home owner associations which have formed across Canada.

The government wants to help home owners and it wants to have the input of the various heads of these groups which represent home owners in various provinces. We are looking forward to their input and their co-operation in finding proper solutions for home owners affected by the product.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing in favour of the government in this regard: at least it is bringing in a bill. I should like to deal with a problem which has certainly developed in my constituency and I am sure it has developed in the constituencies of other members. It concerns the government's involvement in approving UFFI, having it approved government assistance, government supervision and licensing of contractors, and so on. However, first of all I should like to indicate that essentially the bill allows the minister to make regulations with respect to urea formaldehyde foam insulation and appropriates $55 million from the consolidated revenue fund for the period ending December 31, 1982.

The rest of the bill deals with the regulations, although the bill does provide that someone who receives money under the bill, if that in fact is the case, is not prohibited from suing the Crown. But nowhere can I find in the bill any provision for a $5,000 payment or indeed payment of any amount of money to anyone. In that respect, Mr. Clark Lowry, director of the UFFI Information Centre, was interviewed on radio by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on February 9, 1982. He was asked by the interviewer how one qualified for $5,000. Mr. Lowry said that first of all home owners make an application and then the centre sends out two air metres to their homes which are used to measure the formaldehyde level. If we go through Mr. Lowry's interview, we are left with no answers or suggestions that indicate that the director of the UFFI information Centre knew what was going on with respect to the real problem which affects people.

What is the problem? Let me deal with the matter in a chronological fashion. This material, despite objections by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and other real concerns of the Department of National Health and Welfare, was approved by CMHC for the Canadian Home Insulation Program in September, 1977. Until that time no one had given a seal of approval to the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation in Canada. Prior to that time people may have used the foam at their own risk. They may have insulation with the material. In fact, many people did insulate with the material. But in September of 1977, this government, despite advice to the contrary, despite real concerns expressed by its own departments, approved the material under the CHIP program. In a sense, that program was a something-for-nothing program. Those who went along with the CHIP program received up to $350 for materials and $150 toward labour for installing insulation in their homes. That program still exists. The advantage of urea formaldehyde foam was that it could be pumped into the extension walls of a house without upsetting the decor, it could be done relatively quickly and, in fact, could encase the entire outside perimeter of the building. If properly installed, this type of insulation firms up and works wonders in terms of protecting people from the cold. It does reduce the heating bills, at least in some cases.

There has been some concern expressed that urea formaldehyde foam is not the best type of insulation. Clearly, there are other types which are better, but for a great number of home owners, this urea formaldehyde foam, approved by the government, the installation of which was partly financed by the government, represented a marvellous way to insulate their homes cheaply, quickly and cleanly.

A great number of people insulated their homes with this foam, given the effect of the grant program, the certification program, and the whole series of people who got into the business of installing this foam, going around and knocking on doors. After the spring of 1978, if one's home was constructed prior to 1961, with $500 one could carry out almost the entire job of insulating a home, involving very little of one's own money. Of course, salesmen went around. Indeed, they still go around selling insulation. But they particularly went around selling this type of insulation because it was a no-fuss, no-muss job and the government paid for it.

I point out that the government had information and advice from the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources expressing concern prior to authorizing the use of this foam, but Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation went ahead and approved the product. So when one asks about the government's responsibility to people, there should be no doubt. This was a product which the government approved and which it paid home owners to put in their homes. The government cannot back away from that problem. It created a situation where people relied on the foam and, indeed, it paid people to rely on it. People relied on it and have been damaged.

The first question is, what are the real health and physical damage problems? Let me read from the government's booklet produced by the National Research Council, dated April, 1981. On page three it states:

> Exposure to formaldehyde can cause eye, nose and throat irritation, coughing and asthma-like symptoms, headaches, dizziness, nausea, vomiting and nose bleeds. The severity of the reaction depends on the formaldehyde concentration, the duration of exposure and the sensitivity of the individual. Although there may be no reaction to a single exposure, repeated or long-term exposure may increase an individual's sensitivity to the gas. When sensitized, a person may suffer serious reactions at very low concentrations.

There is a health problem with the material. But there is no question about the fact that most persons in my constituency who are faced with the problem of this urea formaldehyde foam product in their homes complain of no health problem. However, in the same booklet, the government goes on to state:

> UFFI deteriorates continuously at a moderate to rapid rate so it has a short life compared with other building materials. The rate of deterioration depends on the conditions to which it is exposed.

Then the government goes on:

> Deterioration of the foam leads to breakage of the cell walls and shrinkage of the insulation decreasing the foam's ability to resist heat and air flow. Formaldehyde gas is released and may be carried into the living space by air infiltration and, at a slower rate, can diffuse through the wall materials—

Where the cavity containing the foam has not dried properly after installation, fungus may grow on the foam or on other materials in the cavity. Fungus spores can be carried into the living space by air infiltration.

That is what the government states concerning the material. What do hon. members think the public would say if the government or the National Research Council said that that is what is wrong with property which is insulated with urea formaldehyde 1770;-1 foam? Well, we know. No one here, not even the minister himself, would buy a house insulated with urea formaldehyde foam, no matter what the level of formaldehyde readings, no matter what tests are taken by those who read the meters. What we have, in effect, is a situation where a relatively small portion of the population has homes badly insulated with urea formaldehyde foam in their homes, where the foam is degenerating, where health is affected, where certain sensitive people are seriously affected by nose bleeds and the rest. But everyone else is destroyed. Why are they destroyed? It is because their homes are totally, completely and absolutely unmarketable.

The parliamentary secretary says that we have created a hype, that there is a big news hype on this matter. I ask the parliamentary secretary, who created the hype? A moment ago I read from the material issued by the National Research Council dated April, 1981. Having read that, were I to be faced with the possibility of buying a home insulated with urea formaldehyde foam, I would not buy one. Mr. Speaker, you would not buy one. Of course you would not, because you know the material will disintegrate, the fungus will grow and the formaldehyde will seep into the wood and wall building materials. If you are sensitive and you are exposed to the insulation over a period of time, you could become supersensitive and could be affected by coughing, asthma-like symptoms, headaches, dizziness, nausea, nose bleeds and gosh knows what. So the parliamentary secretary and, I suppose, the minister, say there is a hype. Of course there is a hype. The minister and his department created the hype. Instead of sensibly finding that there was a problem with some of the installations, that the insulation affected some people and some people were ultra-sensitive to the foam, the minister went ahead and completely banned the foam. He turned it over to the National Research Council. They created more hype. The minister says it is not all that bad, that it has not upset most people and that these people have saved money on heat. If they have a high enough level of formaldehyde, they will receive a couple of testing machines. If that does not work, they may be entitled to a grant of up to $5,000.

That is not an answer. The real problem is that between 80,000 and 100,000 people relied on this government and its grant program. They were told this was an improved material and they had it installed in their homes by approved building contractors licensed by the government to instal the material.

When these people try to sell their homes, they find they are not worth anything. I suspect all members have had people with this foam insulation problem visit their constituency offices. The first visit I received was very shortly after the temporary ban in December, 1979. Then the permanent ban came about.

A constituent, Mr. Stewart, has a century-old home on Clarkson Road. It is a beautiful two-storey brick home built about 1850. Mr. Stewart is retired. That home represents his basic asset. He did not take a nickel of government money. However, he did go to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to get the details on the material. He was told how good it was and who were the licensed contractors. He is not the kind of person who takes money from the Government of Canada. He does not believe in grants. He said he did not need welfare, that he would pay it himself. How his century home is completely unsaleable.

Another constituent spoke to me last Friday. His home is on Martley Drive. I chatted with him. He told me that his home was insulated with urea formaldehyde foam. He is retired and wants to sell his home. He and his wife go to Florida in the winter, and he cannot afford to keep his home in Lorne Park. He needs to release the money from his investment for retirement. His pension is not growing. We all know what inflation is. He had a real estate agent visit his home. He was told that if the lot was vacant it would be worth $85,000, but since he had a pile of bricks with UFFI in it, it was only worth $80,000. The agent said it would cost that much to get rid of the house. What a thing to tell a retired man on pension. That home represents his life's savings. It is worth less than if it were a vacant lot.

This man does not have a home. What he has is totally unsaleable. It is a health hazard. It will cost $5,000 to get rid of that health hazard. He could get $85,000 or $80,000 for his lot the way it is and the buyer would have to get rid of the health hazard.

In the government they say it is a hype. The hype has gone across Canada. It has destroyed the savings of thousands and thousands of people. A bill setting aside $55 million and providing testing units is not a proper response. It is not the response we demand from this government. The government should bring in a program whereby all affected homes will benefit from some remedial action and then be certified as health-safe.

Mr. Ouellet: That is exactly our program.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am glad the minister interjected. If he will certify Mr. Stewart's home as safe and give him the Good Housekeeping seal of approval so that he can say to the agent from A. E. LePage that he has a Government of Canada guarantee, and if there are any effects from the urea formaldehyde, the government will look after the losses, he will be doing something. If that is what the minister will do, we will be 100 per cent for it. That is all he has to do.

Mr. Ouellet: You should read the documentation. It is all explained.

Mr. Blenkarn: I have a file full of documentation from the minister. I receive his press releases every day, his compilation of newspaper and other clippings. My friends in the NDP nod. They receive it as well. If that is what the minister has in mind, I expect someone on the government side to say that the government will certify these properties as health-safe and give them the Good Housekeeping seal of approval. If there are any problems caused by the urea formaldehyde, the Government of Canada should look after the problems right down the line.

Mr. Ouellet: Not the second part.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister says, "not the second part". Even a used car dealer will give a better guarantee than that which the minister is offering.

Mr. Ouellet: We do not know whether the people are allergic. It depends on the people.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister does not know if they are allergic. The question is whether he is prepared to certify Mr. Stewart's home as safe, not only for Mr. Stewart but for anyone who may buy it. If not, then the minister has not done anything for him. This insulation does not bother Mr. Stewart, his wife or his grandchildren. It only bothers his pocketbook because it cannot be sold.

No one will buy a home with urea formaldehyde foam insulation because of what the minister has said and what his research has shown as well as what was produced by the department and the National Research Council. He must now bring in a program that certifies the home as health-safe, not only for the current occupants but for any occupant who might be in that home for at least the next 25 years. That is the kind of certification we need.

The documentation from the National Research Council says that the foam can create fungus. There is an indication that the acid in the foam will deteriorate the metal in the walls. There are some suggestions that the fungus will grow, permeate the wood and brick and seriously damage the structure itself. Where is the guarantee? I do not see that guarantee in anything that has been issued from the department. That is the kind of guarantee the department ought to give. I do not think it would cost all that much. I do not think you have to tear all these houses down, as the members of the New Democratic Party have suggested. I do not think you have to tear all the foam out of all the houses in the country and out of all the apartment buildings. But I say you have to tear up some parts of the foam that have not been installed correctly. You have to do some work on the houses and you have to leave the houses in such a state that the houses can be certified as safe, not only for the current occupants but for any other occupants, with a guarantee that the government will take the house over if it is not proven safe.

There could be some kind of insurance deductible provision that would make some sense, so that people would not take advantage of the government. At least that would be a guarantee to those who invested in a piece of real estate and who have been expropriated by fear or by the kind of information published by this government, a situation that has wiped out and destroyed the savings of many of our citizens.

This is a very serious problem, Mr. Speaker. We have people who rely on the government to certify the quality of a product and then find they cannot rely on the government because the government certification does not mean anything. Then we have a situation where people cease to trust their government. There was nothing that required the government to certify UFFI. The government did not have to certify it. The government could have said, "caveat emptor", let the buyer beware, and could have refrained from commenting one way or the other on this insulation. Indeed, the government could have said it would not even help to cover the cost of insulation. It could have said, "Do it on your own, do what you want." They probably would have been better off. Perhaps the government will learn something from this effort to improve, from this effort to certify and this effort to proclaim as good. Sometimes when you lead people down the garden path, it costs you money. That is where we are now. These people were misled by their government, they were misled by a program initiated by their government. These people have the right to look to their government that certified the program, that advertised the program, the government that indeed financed the program, to come good.

The government has no right to say that the provinces should bear their share. What province certified UFFI? If there was a province that did so, it should come clean, too, and pay. But the provinces did not get into the act at all. For the government to say it can only go this far because the provinces won't join in, that has got to be the worst line. Why should the provinces join in? After all, it was this government that certified the product, against the advice it had received; it was this government that promoted the product.

Mr. Ouellet: No, never.

Mr. Blenkarn: You did, you promoted the product. You certified the people who installed it in the first place.

Mr. Ouellet: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: As a matter of fact, right now your own program even says that you will not allow who ever installed the stuff before to take it out. I do not know why. There were people who were insulation contractors and got into the business of installing UFFI and who are put out of business now. Part of the application process that this minister has issued provides that if a person ever installed UFFI, anybody who is a contractor or a labourer or whatever, cannot be licensed under the minister's program under this bill. Hah! What discrimination that is! That is what you did. You certified the people who had put it in.

Mr. Ouellet: Never, that is not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: At least CMHC did. You licensed the contractors.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: They received their licence numbers with respect to being licensed installers under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Ouellet: No, that is not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: And you went ahead. The minister says it is not true. Well, I will go over those facts. I say they are true, that this government certified the contractor—

Mr. Ouellet: It is the product.

Mr. Blenkarn: —certified the material, certified who should be doing it. Mr. Stewart, whom I spoke of earlier, went back to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation office and they gave him the list of approved contractors and said, "You had better have the approval number of the contractor. Do not hire anybody who is not approved." Well, that is whom he hired, a CMHC approved contractor, that is how he is in trouble, that is his claim against the Government of Canada.

Mr. Ouellet: You are misinformed.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister says I am misinformed. Well, I must say, Sir, that the representations made by installers were that they were approved by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Indeed, the grant program was to approved installers only.

Sir, let us go further, before I finish what I want to say. This product does in fact reduce heating costs, and reduces them substantially. But this product has been declared by the government to be unsafe or not valid as insulation material. The government has a problem. In effect, the government has a damage action being brought against it. Indeed, it is being sued by all sorts of people across the country. The government has an obligation, the same as I would have if I made an error in judgment and ran into your car in an automobile accident, an obligation to make good your damages. If I were a chartered accountant and I issued a financial statement upon which you relied to buy shares in a company covered by that statement, and if that statement was in error and you were misled by it, then I would have an obligation to pay you for your loss. The government has an obligation to go in and clean up the mess. That does not necessarily mean taking the foam out, but it does mean certifying to the people who own the homes that the homes are safe from now on. It is the obligation of this government, not of the Government of Ontario or of the Government of Quebec. It is the obligation of this government. I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to that stage in our proceedings known as presenting reports from standing and special committees.

Madam Speaker: Does the House unanimously agree to revert to that part of the proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member does not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I understand we now have a House order to revert to statements, but I want it to be noticed that unanimous consent was just denied by the Tory party.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now revert to statements by ministers.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PRESENTATION OF "NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM: UPDATE 1982"

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I rise in the House tonight to present hon. members with an update report on the National Energy Program. I am pleased to report on what has already been done in just over 18 months and what we will do to maintain our full momentum toward complete success.

Initially, I would like to table, in English and French, a document entitled "The National Energy Program: Update 1982", Mise à Jour: Programme Énergétique National, 1982.

On October 28, 1980, my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), rose in the House at about this time in the evening to present our ambitious and comprehensive plan to chart Canada's energy course through this decade and beyond. The energy challenges facing Canada were great, but they also fostered great opportunities. We have come a long way since then. We have made remarkable and sustained progress toward reaching the major goals of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Huntington: How many barrels have you produced?

Mr. Lalonde: This success is all the more notable because it was achieved in the face of difficulties created in Canada by the world economic recession.

Mr. Blenkarn: And by the Liberal Party.

Mr. Lalonde: The National Energy Program is not merely prices and tax. It is much more. The National Energy Program is a dynamic and comprehensive strategy of evolving responses to a changing world. The fundamental strength of the program is that it responds directly to all of Canada's major energy challenges and opportunities.

An hon. Member: Horse feathers.

Mr. Lalonde: While the goals are unchanging, the methods we employ will adapt to meet changing conditions.

Hon. members will recall that we set three major goals in the National Energy Program. The first was security of oil supply, with a specific target of oil self-sufficiency by 1990.

Mr. Huntington: Bankruptcies.

Mr. Jelinek: Higher gas prices.

Mr. Lalonde: The second goal was fairness in the distribution of energy benefits and burdens. The third was greater opportunity for Canadians to participate in the oil and gas industry.

Tonight I can report with increased confidence that Canada will achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: At the Tokyo Economic Summit in 1979 the Clark government pledged to limit oil imports to 600,000 barrels a day in 1985. Today I expect that Canada's import requirements in 1985 will be cut to half of what the previous government anticipated under its policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: We have not merely passed the test the opposition established; we have surpassed that test. This accomplishment is possible in large measure because Canadians are responding enthusiastically to the program's conservation and oil substitution elements. The results in 1981 were indeed striking.

Mr. Kilgour: We know about that in Alberta.

Mr. Lalonde: In home heating, natural gas made inroads against oil, featuring a 13.6 per cent increase in Quebec alone. Heating oil consumption was down 17 per cent across Canada. Gasoline consumption fell by 3.3 per cent. Over-all, crude oil use was down 7 per cent in one year.

Mr. Kilgour: Nothing to do with the recession, eh?

Mr. Lalonde: While imports were increasing before the National Energy Program, they did not increase in 1981 and should actually fall this year.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us about the gross national product.

Mr. Lalonde: Oil security cannot be achieved by the petroleum industry alone. It requires the commitment and involvement of every Canadian, and this is what we have seen in 1981 in our conservation and substitution efforts. The opposition says that it had to do with the recession. I remind hon. members opposite that those figures were achieved in Canada at a time when the Canadian economy was growing at a rate of 3 per cent a year in real terms. That was not the recession. Canadians have made that commitment. For example, since 1980, over one million Canadian households have been saving money and oil because they have used the $500 grants offered under the Canadian Home Insulation Program. That is over one million Canadians in only one year. In only one year, 200,000 Canadians have received grants of up to $800 under the Canada oil substitution program to switch from oil for heating to gas, electricity and alternative energy. We now know that this program will continue to make a significant contribution to energy security throughout the decade.

• (2010)

The effect of this response from the people of Canada has been immediate and drastic. At the same time, the National Energy Program offers powerful incentives to the petroleum industry to find and develop new supplies of oil for Canadians. There have been many successes in this regard in the last year and a half. We reached a comprehensive agreement with all three western producing provinces and with the province of Nova Scotia, which may soon become a major producer. Of great significance is the accord with Nova Scotia, the first comprehensive long-term agreement for joint management of offshore petroleum resources in this country's history.

These agreements establish oil and natural gas prices and allocate revenues in an equitable and fair manner. They provide a stable climate for investors and producers and certainty and moderation for consumers. In other words, these agreements are fair to all Canadians.

Equally important was the passage of the Canada Oil and Gas Act by this House last December. The bill governs the promising frontier areas where Canada's future supplies are to be found. Therefore, we took strong steps to ensure that Canadians have the opportunity to play a full and vigorous role in petroleum development in these regions. These steps will mean jobs for Canadian workers, investment opportunities for Canadian businesses and a wide array of spin-off economic opportunities for Canadians. However, recent developments in the international energy and economic front threaten to undermine Canada's strong and growing oil and gas industry. The world economic recession and the unanticipated moderation in international oil prices have decreased industry confidence and weakened the energy investment in Canada.

Since the agreement with Alberta last December, the Government of Canada has taken several steps to counteract these conditions. These include, for example, extension of the new oil reference price to most experimental projects; assistance to low productivity wells, and the provision of depletion for ongoing capital expenditures by Suncor and Syncrude.

These measures to assist the industry are valued in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

In addition, the Alberta government announced last April a $5.4 royalty reduction as part of its commitment under the September agreement. We welcome these adjustments but it is clear that additional steps are required. Tonight the Government of Canada is taking those steps to ensure the progress that I have described, is sustained in the months ahead.

Mr. Clark: You are resigning!

Mr. Lalonde: First, the government will assist in further reducing the level of shut-in oil in Canada. Second, the government will strengthen the petroleum industry to expand exploration efforts. Third, the government will accelerate the use of natural gas as a substitute for oil. Fourth, the government will freeze the natural gas and gas liquids tax at its current level for the remainder of this year. Fifth, forecasted increases to the petroleum compensation charge in 1982 are no longer required, thereby further constraining consumer prices.

This evening I have tabled a full description of these measures. However, I should like to draw your attention to the more than $2 billion offered tonight to stimulate an active and aggressive petroleum industry.

The basic petroleum and gas revenue tax rate will be reduced from 16 per cent to 14.67 per cent for the period June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983. This will result in an effective tax rate on production revenue of 11 per cent after the resources allowance deduction, already available, is included.

In addition, the incremental oil revenue tax on conventional oil will be suspended for the period of June 1, 1982, to May 31, 1983. The wellhead price on oil discovered in the period after 1973 and qualifying for provincial royalties at the new oil rate but not in receipt of the new oil reference price, will rise on July 1, 1982, to 75 per cent of the current world price. After July 1, the price will remain at this level, subject to a ceiling of 75 per cent of world price, until the price of conventional old or pre-1974 oil reaches this level. Thereafter, all oil discovered before 1981 will again be treated in the same manner for pricing purposes.

An annual small producer's credit will be offered of up to $250,000 against the PGRT liability of corporations on their production revenue. This credit, which will be available to offset taxes on revenue earnings after May 1, 1982, will be of particular benefit to hundreds of small producers who will not pay any PGRT. We estimate that less than 100 of the largest firms will pay PGRT. The net gain to the industry will be about $900 million between now and 1986.

The new oil reference price will be extended as of January 1, 1983, to existing tertiary projects which pay royalties no higher than those applicable to new oil. The Government of Canada will be prepared to provide earned depletion to tertiary recovery projects subject to agreement with the provinces on appropriate levels of royalty relief and provision of data indicating the justification for such support. Eligibility for earned depletion of very large projects, that is, involving more than $100 million, will be considered on a case by case basis.

The new oil reference price will be extended, beginning January 1, 1983, to all experimental projects which pay a royalty no greater than 5 per cent of gross revenue. The new oil reference price will also be extended as of January 1, 1983, to oil wells that have been suspended for a period of at least three years, provided the production from those wells qualifies for new oil royalties.

The rate of PGRT on production and royalty income arising from synthetic oil production from integrated oil sands plants will be reduced from an effective rate of 12 per cent to 8 per cent between January 1, 1983, and December 1, 1984.

These are the main measures applying to the oil and gas industry. They more than restore the industry's share of the revenue pie. Between 1975 and 1980, the industry's so-called golden period, it received 45 per cent of a smaller pie. We estimate that with these measures and those that were announced by Alberta in April, the industry will get 46 per cent of a much bigger pie between now and 1986. Energy development is the engine for economic growth, and we are determined to ensure that it remains so. These measures will restore full health to the oil industry, thereby stimulating greater economic development for Canada and jobs and investment opportunities for Canadians.

When Premier Lougheed announced his government's royalty deductions in April, he was concerned that some of the revenues intended for the industry would flow to the Government of Canada. The measures I have announced tonight show that this is simply not the case. In fact, the Government of Canada is providing more than $2 billion in additional benefits. Approximately $300 million will go directly to the Government of Alberta. I would like in turn to urge Premier Lougheed to return at least some of this gain to the oil industry, especially to promote existing tarsands plants and their development. The Government of Saskatchewan has announced its intention to reduce provincial royalties. This is a welcome, indeed a long overdue, complement to federal action. The government of British Columbia is reviewing its take from the industry and I hope for positive results as quickly as possible.

The penetration of natural gas into oil markets is an exciting success story in Canada. To ensure that it remains a success we are announcing a series of important measures tonight. In the National Energy Program the Government of Canada committed itself to the extension of natural gas service into the maritimes. This commitment remains unqualified.

Since the introduction of the NEP two important developments have occurred. First, important progress has been made with regard to Sable Island natural gas, which may be available as early as 1987. Exploration successes suggest that sufficient reserves will soon be proved to support a pipeline to the mainland. Also, the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia reached an agreement which encourages rapid commercial development of this resource.

Second, the construction timetable of the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline has slipped and completion to Halifax is not now expected until well into 1986. The coincidence of these two dates obviously creates the need to consider whether the transmission line should be re-oriented around Sable Island gas. However, the government recognizes that this could cause some financial and operational difficulties for the sponsors of the TQ and M pipeline. Therefore, the government will meet the full cost of engineering and survey work on the pipeline between Quebec City and the Atlantic coast by advancing an interest-free loan to the sponsors to be repaid when the maritime portion is constructed. When this work is done, final pipeline design and construction can start as soon as information on Sable Island gas resources is available. Since natural gas will not be available to maritime consumers as early as anticipated, there is the possibility of pre-building markets for pipeline gas with propane from local and western Canadian refineries. Therefore, the government will make propane an eligible fuel source under the Canada Oil Substitution Program in the maritimes where a residential or commercial consumer is switching off oil.

We are also taking major steps to ensure the greatest possible penetration of natural gas into Quebec markets now served by oil. The government is establishing a fund of $500 million to assist with the construction of branch lines off the main TQ and M trunkline to provide access to important gas markets. Similar measures will be considered for the maritimes as soon as the pipeline to the maritimes is in progress. These measures relate to expanding the natural gas market in Canada. The government recognizes the importance of natural gas exports to the health of the industry. We welcome the recent decision of the National Energy Board to adopt a new formula in determining the amount of natural gas which is surplus to Canada's needs and can therefore be exported. This change will provide welcome export opportunities to the natural gas industry, while at the same time maintaining our all important commitment to ensure that Canadian needs are met before exports are allowed. Further, the government will meet 50 per cent of the cost of converting residual fuel oil boilers in industrial, commercial and private institutions to natural gas, effective June 1, 1982, or from the date that gas becomes available, and applicable for a period of time.

The most important news tonight is that these measures will not increase prices that consumers pay for petroleum products or natural gas by more than the amount forecast in the agreements with the producing provinces. It is often suggested by members opposite that the only way to achieve energy security is to expose all Canadians to the uncertain and sometimes brutal effects of international oil prices.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Who said that?

Mr. Lalonde: If any evidence is needed that there is a better way, the NEP has provided that evidence. Great strides towards energy security have been made while providing Canadians with energy prices substantially below world levels. Under a Liberal Government, Madam Speaker, this progress will continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Over the life of the energy agreement with the provinces, consumer energy costs in Canada will be the lowest—of any industrialized country. The made-in-Canada pricing ensures that conventional oil will not rise above 75 per cent of world levels, and limits natural gas to approximately two thirds of domestic oil prices. Consumers will remember that the Conservative budget linked gas to 85 per cent of oil. Well, we have brought that price down, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Compared with world prices, we estimate made-in-Canada prices will save Canadians—

Mr. Clark: Tell us about 14 cents a gallon. Tell us about your broken promises.

Mr. Lalonde: —$39 billion in oil costs, and $21 billion in natural gas costs between 1981 and 1986.

Mr. Clark: Nobody in the country believes you, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: These are huge figures and difficult to comprehend on a personal level, but if you ask a Canadian how much that represents—

Mr. Clark: If you ask a Canadian: can you believe Marc Lalonde? They say "never".

Mr. Lalonde: Between 1981 and 1986, Madam Speaker, it represents a saving of $2,500 in energy costs for every man, woman and child in this country.

Mr. Clark: Nobody believes you, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: These are the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Our energy prices, Madam Speaker, compare more than favourably with those in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The cost of heating an average home in Canada today is about $1,025 a year, 25 per cent less than the cost of heating a similar home in the United States.

An hon. Member: Hogwash!

Mr. Lalonde: If home owners took advantage of grants under the Canadian home insulation program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, they would save an additional $500.

We also offer benefits to consumers of gasoline. However, provincial governments have the constitutional right to take away the benefits of a made-in-Canada price with made-in-the-province taxes. For example, in Ontario and Quebec provincial retail sales taxes since 1978 have increased 51 per cent and 210 per cent respectively. On the other hand, motorists in Alberta and Saskatchewan, which provinces do not levy sales tax, enjoy gasoline prices below those prevailing in the United States.

• (2030)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I said earlier that Canada had made tremendous progress towards achieving the three basic goals set by the National Energy Program in 1980. Our aim was to achieve energy security for Canadians, and especially to achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990. We have made tremendous progress in this respect, so much so, that while the Progressive Conservative government expected that we would have to import about 600,000 barrels per day by 1985, we can state today, with considerable assurance, that our import requirement will be less than 300,000 barrels a day in 1985, less than half the amount forecast by the previous government. Furthermore, Canadians have taken advantage of programs set forth in the National Energy Program, namely, home insulation and off-oil substitution by natural gas, electric power or other forms of energy. Since 1980 alone, Madam Speaker, over one million Canadians have insulated their homes, and have thus been able to reduce energy costs quite substantially, and in some cases bring them down to half of what they would have had to pay otherwise. In addition, during the last twelve months, over 200,000 Canadians have switched from oil heating to gas, electricity, wood or other forms of energy, again with considerable savings.

We have also promoted the marketing of Canadian natural gas in eastern Canada. We supported construction of the pipeline to the Maritimes, and we continue to support this project very strongly. In fact, the pipeline will reach Trois-Rivières this fall, and is expected to reach Quebec City next January. In addition, thanks to an agreement concluded recently with Nova Scotia on the development of offshore resources, we now expect it will be possible to bring into production the natural gas reserves around Sable Island off the coast of Nova Scotia. It is quite possible that by 1987, we could have a situation where a gas pipeline would be carrying natural gas, not from west to east, but from east to west, which would greatly enhance the economy of the province of Nova Scotia and of the Maritimes in general. However, we want to make sure that Canadians in Quebec and the Maritime provinces will have access to natural gas as soon as possible. That is why I announced this evening that we shall first provide complete financing for all engineering projects that will have to be carried out between Quebec City and the Maritimes in connection with the construction of the gas pipeline, to ensure that Canadians in these areas will be able to benefit from this project as soon as possible.

We have also established a special fund of $500 million, that will be used to finance the cost of branch pipelines in Quebec, to ensure that people in the areas of Lac Saint-Jean, Beauce, the Eastern Townships and elsewhere in Quebec will be able to obtain natural gas through branch lines already approved by the National Energy Board, and this without delay and at a cost that is truly reasonable. In fact, Canadians in the Maritimes and Quebec will be paying the same price for natural gas as they would in Toronto.

And this measure we are announcing this evening should ensure a rapid extension of the natural gas distribution system in Quebec.

I have also announced a series of further measures to provide assistance to the oil industry. The amounts involved are considerable, since they will exceed $2 billion between now and 1986. In fact, more than half of this amount will be transferred to the industry within the next eighteen months, and will be especially helpful to small oil industries, a great many of which are of Canadian-owned.

The question we must ask is: Who is going to pay for the benefits or concessions we are providing the industry at a time when it is facing very specific problems? I want to make it quite clear to consumers that none of these measures will involve any price increases for consumers for natural gas or oil over and above the increases provided in the agreements concluded last year with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia—

Mr. Clark: That is not true!

Mr. Lalonde: —so that these measures will not entail any increases over and above those provided in the agreements.

Madam Speaker, our goals were energy security, and we are convinced we shall attain these goals by 1990. Today, we are in a situation where we are importing far less oil than was previously expected, and less than was forecast in the 1980 National Energy Program. We have been able to maintain oil and natural gas prices at levels that are lower than those of any other industrialized country in the world, including the United States.

In some provinces, gas may be more expensive than in some American states, but we must not forget that the retail price for gas depends to a considerable extent on provincial taxes. For instance, in Quebec the retail sales tax has increased by 210 per cent since 1978.

Mr. Clark: Federal taxes—

Mr. Lalonde: It is therefore not surprising that the price of gas in Montreal is higher than it is in Plattsburg or Burlington, because they have a provincial tax of 40 per cent added to the cost of gas at the refinery gate.

It is interesting to note that in Saskatchewan or Alberta, which have no provincial tax, gas is cheaper than in the neighbouring states to the south. I would invite my colleagues to see for themselves—

Mr. Kilgour: That is a lie!

[English]

Madam Speaker: I ask the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) to withdraw those words. They are unparliamentary, as he knows.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, in my opinion, it is not true. I have the figures here to show he is wrong—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member will be able to discuss them at the proper time. It is perfectly normal for hon. members to disagree on the facts from time to time. In fact, sometimes the entire debate in Parliament consists in giving varying views of the facts. However, the hon. member knows perfectly well he may not use such unparliamentary language. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw those terms.

[English]

The Speaker heard them.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, if I can make a phone call, I will return to the House and happily apologize if I am wrong. I am quite certain the minister is not telling the truth on the point he just made in the House.

Madam Speaker: That is totally irrelevant. It is for the purposes of this procedure that I am asking the hon. member to withdraw his words.

Hon. members may have different opinions as to what is true and what is not true, but they may not use the kind of language which the hon. member has just used to debate that point. I would ask the hon. member to co-operate and simply withdraw those which are unparliamentary. The hon. member knows that.

• (2040)

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member refusing to withdraw those words?

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I am almost totally certain that I am correct. I cannot be absolutely certain unless I go and make a telephone call. Will you give me ten minutes to make that decision?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I should like to accommodate the hon. member, but I ask him to accommodate the Chair and to withdraw those words which are unparliamentary.

Mr. Kilgour: With due respect to Madam Speaker's charm, I will withdraw the term.

Madam Speaker: I will accept that, but in future I ask hon. members not to refer to my charm.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, perhaps the following will refresh my hon. colleague's memory and help set his facts straight. I can state positively that in April 1982, the price of a litre of gas in Calgary was 34.5 cents and that in Montana, to the south, it was 37.3 cents, in other words, 2.8 cents more per litre than in Calgary. This was in April 1982. Perhaps my hon. colleague would care the check his facts. Madam Speaker, our oil pricing system is supposed to bring the price of oil up to a maximum that should not be reached until July of next year, namely, 75 per cent of the world price for conventional oil, and as far as the blended price is concerned, which includes the price we must pay for all imported oil and the price of oil from oil sands, we estimate that today's price is still less than 80 per cent of the world price. Those are the facts. If we look at the situation regarding natural gas, Canadians are even better off, since they can buy natural gas for only 65 per cent of the price of Canadian oil. The benefits are such that if we calculate the aggregate of benefits to all Canadians by 1986, the net result is that every Canadian man, woman and child will have saved $2,500 per person by 1986, as a result of our pricing system here in Canada.

[English]

One of the major objectives of the National Energy Program has been the opportunity for Canadians to participate. Canadians know with certainty our commitment to energy security and Canadian opportunity. Canadians know the progress we have made over the past 18 months, and Canadians know that we will reach our target by 1990.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Canadians should also know that the Conservative Party, which is shouting and complaining on the other side tonight, has regressed just as we are making progress. Eight years ago the Conservative Party made the following commitment:

> To maximize the benefits to Canadians the Progressive Conservative Party believes that as a cornerstone of such a policy for the 1970s and the 1980s Canadians must dedicate themselves to acquiring and holding ownership of more than 50 per cent of the non-renewable resources industries in Canada. A Progressive Conservative government would take the lead in this direction—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That is what the Crosbie budget did.

Mr. Lalonde: As a government for nine months and as an opposition party for the rest of the time, the Conservative Party has consistently opposed and obstructed our Canadianization measures while paying lip service to the concept.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Naturally I would not want to describe the statements of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), because that would call for unparliamentary language. But I ask the Chair to consider whether it is appropriate for the minister of energy, under the guise of a statement on motions, to make a speech which is not only, in my submission and to use words which I believe are parliamentary, inaccurate, but also to use this opportunity to make a simply unvarnished, partisan speech which does not carry the benefit of the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: To answer that point of order, I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) recognizes that the hon. minister is making a statement and that he is free to make a statement in the manner that he wishes. Unfortunately the Chair has no power and no desire to intervene in the style of any hon. member of the House.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I only have a few minutes remaining.

Miss MacDonald: It is tough to back down, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry it is getting so close to home for the Conservative Party and its leader. In effect, the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Clark: Yes, indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Last year we had Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, which provided for much more Canadian participation and control of Canada lands which belong to the people of Canada. What did we see? We stood for Canadianization at that time, and the Conservatives voted no.

An hon. Member: We saw confiscation.

Mr. Lalonde: There are a number of bills which are now before the House—Bill C-101, Bill C-102, Bill C-103, Bill C-104 and Bill C-105. They all stand for Canadianization. On every one of those bills the Conservatives voted no.

Surely this is evidence, if evidence is needed after Conservative efforts to destroy Petro-Canada, that the Tories have opposed every measure brought forward to promote Canadianization in the country.

Mr. Huntington: That is because we support the people.

Mr. Clark: Tell us about Alsands.

Mr. Ouellet: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lalonde: What we are doing now is what the Conservatives promised to do in 1974. This is what they oppose today on every occasion, in every forum, under the guise of any justification. Conservatives now dismiss Canadianization as being confiscation—and I heard that word being used opposite tonight—or theft and piracy. We on this side of the House believe that Canada's natural resources are owned by all Canadians and should be developed to the benefit of the Canadian community.

Mr. Clark: Is this why you chase our producers to the United States?

Mr. Lalonde: Petro-Canada today has been restored to full health—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: We have the evidence tonight that the Conservatives have not accepted it as yet. The Conservative energy critic warned Canadians that "PetroCan is here for the moment and there's not much we can do about it. We'll see what the situation will be once we're back in power".

Finally, a radio interviewer asked the Conservative energy critic to offer a constructive alternative to the NEP. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) then replied: "Of course we have alternatives to offer to get rid of the National Energy Program. We would replace it with what you had before." That is the Conservative view of the future—a return to the past.

• (2050)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: For Canadians the choice is clear—

Mr. Clark: Turn and run, Marc!

Mr. Lalonde: —this government's National Energy Program or the Conservative Party's no energy program.

Mr. Clark: Turn and run!

Mr. Lalonde: The National Energy Program represents a bold initiative. Canadians, under those programs, are taking their energy future in their own hands, determined to build on their energy strengths. Much has been accomplished. Much remains to be done.

Mr. Taylor: More socialism!

Mr. Lalonde: Tonight, I have spoken of measures we have taken in the areas of production, conservation and oil substitution. There have been changes in the past. No doubt there will be changes in the future.

Mr. Clark: What's next, Marc?

Mr. Lalonde: However, our fundamental commitment—

Mr. Clark: When is your next retreat, Marc?

Mr. Lalonde: —to provide Canadians with greater opportunities for their oil and gas industry, to ensure a fair deal between producers and consumers and to achieve energy security for all Canadians is there and will remain unchanged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, we have just seen the most shameless defence of the worst economic disaster that this country has seen—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: —probably in our history.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Wilson: This major reversal is probably the greatest reversal that we have seen, with one exception, that being the time on December 18 when we stood here and watched the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) step back and take in all his dirty laundry on the budget. But there is still more to come on that, and we cannot wait for the next one.

Mr. Ouellet: Which multinational do you represent when you are speaking like this?

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, this National Energy Program has been the greatest disaster that we have seen. We have seen 40 per cent of the rigs leave the country. We have seen 15,000 jobs lost. We have seen the Alsands project killed and the Cold Lake project killed, and the minister has waited 18 months to do something about this disaster.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) have used the Canadian economy as an experimental laboratory for their own selfish socialist policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: It has been a disaster and all Canadians are suffering for it, suffering through high gas prices, through high interest rates, through loss of employment and through greater reliance on unstable sources of oil in the Middle East. First the Minister of Finance and now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have eaten a large plate of crow. The problems were addressed by the minister tonight. Make no mistake about that. These problems were caused, first and foremost, by the energy policy which he announced in October of 1980. This misguided, misunderstood policy, the ivory tower view that he thrust upon all Canadians on that night, has damaged the most promising industry that we have in our country. At that time it was a source of strength for our economy.

Mr. Gustafson: It was booming.

Mr. Wilson: It was the one source of strength which could have carried us through the recession that we are in today. But now this industry is struggling for survival. I repeat, the minister has finally realized, after 18 months of dithering, wondering what he could do to pull himself out of the muck, wondering how he could get this industry partly back on the rails again, recognizing that there was a disaster which had to be addressed, the rigs having left the country, the Cold Lake and Alsands projects having failed, that the exploration which was running at a rate of increase of 31 per cent per annum has now, since October, 1980, been reduced by 2 per cent per annum. That is the effect that his policy has had on the industry in this country.

Mr. Clark: Make him stay!

Mr. Wilson: But let us also look at what he has done tonight.

Miss MacDonald: He has just left the House.

Mr. Wilson: The minister has left the House, I see.

Mr. Ouellet: He will be back, do not worry, but with what you are saying, he could go away.

Mr. Wilson: The minister has put together a patchwork quilt in trying to understand the impact of this on the industry. He is only tinkering with the problems brought about in October of 1980. He must understand that he cannot put Humpty Dumpty together again just by this fragmented policy approach. The loss of confidence in the industry, the lack of trust in government and the lack of credibility of the government in the eyes of many people in the oil and gas industry will take years to regain.

I should draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that in 1974-75, the last time we had this sort of disaster in the oil and gas industry, it took three years to recover, but that was when the oil rigs which had left the country amounted to only about 10 per cent, compared with 40 per cent this time. No one believes the statistics used by the minister tonight. He is well known to be a master at twisting numbers to try to tell a story, but people who know the story never believed and never will believe it. This approach will not regain the confidence in that industry that we must have if we are to recover.

We should also recognize that the degree of intervention, regulation, big lever-pulling by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stays. Nothing has changed to remedy that major problem which has caused those in the industry to back off and to move their rigs and their people south.

The third point I should like to make concerning the program announced tonight, the update, is that the minister has said that this $2 billion program will save the industry. He takes substantial credit for it, and he says that it is all his doing and that he is paying for it. He said that the consumers will not pay a nickel for it. He has never got it through his head that the consumer pays for everything. Directly, in this program, the consumer will be paying 30 per cent or $600 million of the total program of $2.1 billion. That is the sort of thing that he has laid on the consumer tonight. He has ignored the fact that gasoline prices in Canada are at 10 cents to 20 cents higher per gallon. I have the statistics here if the minister wants to quarrel with those figures. These are figures which are right up to date as of today in May of 1982, compared with the figures of January, 1982, in the document he laid before the House. The situation has changed. The lines are crossing and consumers will be paying more and more because of the program he has announced tonight.

The other point I want to raise concerns the fact that the minister said the Conservatives wanted consumers to pay the full world prices. That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Ouellet: He said 85 per cent.

Mr. Wilson: He knows that we changed our energy program from what it had been at the time of the last Liberal government. We reduced the relationship to world price by 5 percentage points.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: That is the difference. We took that first step. If we had not taken that step, I do not believe that this government would have done anything close to what it is doing today.

The fourth point is that it is very important to recognize that in the announcement tonight there are still many "ifs" and there will be many doubts on the part of the industry. There is no assurance that imports will not be decreased to ensure change to the current shut-in of Canadian production, which is costing Canadians money and jobs. There is no assurance that the natural gas pricing formula, only with regard to the gas which has been authorized for sale to the United States market, will be changed to allow that volume of gas to be sold on the market and to save the many Canadian-owned oil and gas companies which are suffering because such a tremendous amount of natural gas is shut in.

• (2100)

Finally, and this is a key point, there is no assurance that the minister will not again change the rules of the game. There is no assurance that when things improve, as they undoubtedly will in time, he will not change the rules of the game again to the detriment of those people who have invested their hard-earned money in this industry.

Let us make it quite clear, the National Energy Program is a proven disaster. It is a major policy error on the part of that minister. When it was introduced, the energy program was recognized as being a disaster.

The minister showed himself at that time to be totally out of touch with the realities of that industry. He showed no understanding of the impact. He closed his ears. He said he would listen but would not do anything. It has taken him 18 months to do something. He sat in his ivory tower on Booth Street saying he was listening to everybody, but there was no action.

Now the minister has brought in some changes, but they are not the solution. It is too late to bring about the changes that are needed to rebuild that industry to the strong vibrant position it was in two years ago. To say tonight that he is sorry, to make this public admission that he has been an incompetent, misunderstanding minister, is no substitute for the good judgment that Canadians expect of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when bringing in such a major program as this a year and a half ago.

The credibility of the Government of Canada in the eyes of the industry will not be won back by a single announcement. It will only be time, a stable policy and the positive working relationship with the industry that will allow the Government of Canada to regain the trust and confidence of the industry.

We have seen over the past 18 months and will see over the years and months ahead that Canadians will suffer through higher prices which they will be forced to pay for gasoline and heating fuels. They will have higher interest rate levels than would have been the case had we not had this energy policy. Canadians will suffer through job loss because of the lack of activity resulting from the cancellation of two major projects plus the slowdown in activity in the conventional side of the industry.

Does the announcement tonight stabilize the price to the consumer? I say no. I believe we will see an increase in price as a result. Does this provide any help to the consumer, the home owner, the farmer, the small-business man, the fishermen, who are fighting high interest rates and high costs for energy? There is no relief offered. There is no mention of the energy tax credit that we have been calling for in this House for three years.

We should also recognize that the primary objective of the National Energy Program is out the window. Self-sufficiency for the industry by 1990 is totally out the window. Any knowledgeable observer will tell you that. Anybody who has any understanding of the industry does not believe anything that the minister has been saying time and again. Starting in October, 1980, he has been saying that the goal of self-sufficiency of oil supplies in this country is easily attainable and we will attain it. Each time the minister makes these adjustments or changes to the policy, he admits in public to all Canadians that what he was saying before was not true for he did not understand what he was saying. We will not reach oil self-sufficiency by 1990. Surely that is clear to the minister by now.

The only way to achieve the goal of self-sufficiency is if the minister, together with his colleague the Minister of Finance, runs this country so far into the ground that the demand for oil and gas is reduced so greatly that there is not the need for the oil and gas that we hoped we would have with a vibrant, thriving economy. That is the nature of the problem. That is why we are not going to see oil and gas self-sufficiency in this country. The minister can talk all he wants about this goal, but he knows deep in his own black heart that it will not be reached.

The minister has said all along that the policy he brought forward has been recognized as a very positive development in the country and has been so right from the start. During the course of this afternoon I was looking at a number of statements that had been made over the years. These go back to late 1980 and early 1981, the early days after the energy policy was announced.

This shattered industry did not just happen. It was not brought to its knees by the oil glut, high interest rates or weak international economies. These have been factors. Let us go back to 1980 just after the energy agreement was announced. Data Resources, a very well qualified organization, said that the National Energy Program will be extremely costly for this economy. Let me just quote:

—the costs of the NEP would include foregone economic growth—

We have seen that.

—lower real incomes—

We have seen that.

—lost employment—

We have seen that.

—and a delay in reaching oil self-sufficiency.

Others have commented on this as well. The president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank said, "The energy program could lead to a national economic disaster." Darcy McKeough, the former treasurer and energy minister in the Ontario government—

An hon. Member: Non-partisan.

Mr. Wilson: He is a non-partisan gentleman now. He said:

—this country is embarked on courses of action which are destructive in their impact, no matter how superficially attractive they may be in their objectives.

He was pointing out that the attractions of Canadianization are very beguiling. There is a great attraction, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said.

We recognized the importance of Canadianization and brought this forward in our policies before the Liberal Party even understood the importance of Canadianization. They were still pushing the industry into the hands of multinationals and foreign owners. We recognized the importance of it. We also recognized that it has to be done in a way that can be accepted by the marketplace, rather than have Canadian ownership forced on it. I will come back to that in a minute. Others have commented on this as well. The Canadian Institute of Real Estate Companies said there is a fear that the energy program will increase, rather than decrease, Canada's dependence on insecure sources of foreign crude. Another person who commented on this that I would like to refer to is Wayne Clendenning of Richardson Securities. He felt that the energy program ought to be changed substantially.

All of these gentlemen, very knowledgeable people in the oil and gas industry, called for these changes in late 1980 and early 1981. Why did we have to wait a full 18 months before the minister saw fit to make a change? The main reason is his inflexibility and arrogant attitude. He said to everyone who told him that he was wrong that he was right and no one would cause him to change? No one could tell him he was wrong.

It was only when the industry was literally brought to its knees, with 50 to 60 companies coming to Ottawa again and again to plead with the minister to please get some sense into his head and make the necessary changes to bring about some return of health to the industry, that he took some action.

I wish to make some brief concluding remarks. I am glad the minister has returned to the chamber to hear them. Let me say to him that the greatest contribution he could make to the energy future of this country would be to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2110)

Mr. Clark: We give unanimous consent.

Mr. Wilson: The display by the minister tonight, practically breaking his arm patting himself on the back, with all the self congratulations that he could muster about the great things of the energy program, shows that he still does not understand the damage that he has wrought upon this industry and the changes that are still necessary to bring that industry back to health.

Mr. Baker (Neapean-Carleton): His eyes and mind are closed.

Mr. Wilson: He should resign and let someone else bring in these policies that will try to undo some of the terrible damage that he has brought upon this industry. He has alienated large parts of western Canada. He has done tremendous damage to the fabric of this country.

Mr. Clark: He doesn't care.

Mr. Wilson: There is 18 months of delay that he has let go by while the feelings of Canadians in western Canada have become more and more concerned about the impact of central Canadian policies, federal government policies, as they affect western Canada.

Mr. Clark: Lalonde doesn't care.

Mr. Wilson: Finally, he has set back self-sufficiency probably for a full decade. That is the nature of the damage that he has done to this industry.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shame!

Mr. Wilson: There is nothing more stupid than a brilliant person who is too arrogant, too stupid and too inflexible to understand the mistakes that he has made and to bring about the changes that are necessary to undo those mistakes. That is the nature of the minister we have today, and that is why I say to him that he should resign.

An hon. Member: Resign.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, in closing, let us look at the three elements of the National Energy Policy. The first, Canadianization. The Canadianization policy as it has been implemented by this minister has been a disaster, because it has given false hope and encouragement to a number of Canadian companies to do something more than what they should have been doing. We have increased Canadian ownership, yes, that is correct, the numbers are there; but we have crippled a number of those Canadian companies who took in the words of the minister. They have found now that they are put in such a desperate position that they are unable to compete in this industry. By comparison, the multinationals are much stronger today, relative to the Canadian-owned companies, than they were back in 1980. The minister would have been much better off doing nothing, letting the market forces move their own way.

The minister commented on the fact that we have voted against some of these bills that are implementing Canadianization. He is absolutely right, and I am proud of the fact that we have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: He is a true Canadian.

Mr. Wilson: He said he is going to bring the industry back to full health. If he brings the industry back to full health in anything like the methods that he has used in putting the industry in the position it is in today, God help the industry.

Mr. Taylor: It will be in the coffin.

Mr. Wilson: When was the last time the minister walked the streets of Calgary talking to the people who have been affected—

Mr. Clark: Without a guard!

Mr. Wilson: —by the industry that he has damaged so severely? That is the question that the minister should ask: when should he go back to Calgary?

The second element of the energy program was fairness in pricing, fairness in revenue sharing. I look at this program tonight, Madam Speaker, and I see no fairness whatsoever to the consumer. I see high prices, and high taxes to the Government of Canada, continuing as before, some cut-back in the government take but very, very high levels of taxation, and certainly no change in prices. As I said a minute ago, the consumer will be paying 30 per cent of this program.

Let us just look at the fairness to the industry. When we started off on this charade of an energy program in 1980, the minister was concerned because the energy industry had 45 per cent of the revenues. He knocked it down to 36 per cent and said: "That is what we should be doing to bring in a certain degree of fairness." Well, Madam Speaker, you may not have noticed the number in the presentation the minister made tonight. The number that he has brought the industry back to is 46 per cent. What have we been doing for the last year and a half? We went back to where we started as far as it relates to the share of the revenues that the industry has.

Look at what has happened to the industry. It has been decimated by the damage that was done in that intervening period. They will have to use a large part of those revenues to rebuild their financial strength. They will not be able to reinvest those in the development of our energy reserves. The minister should have stayed in bed; he should not have brought in that energy policy a year and a half ago.

An hon. Member: He should not have got out of it.

Mr. Wilson: The final objective of that national energy program of October 1980 was self-sufficiency by 1990. That, as I said earlier, Madam Speaker, is totally a lost cause. It has gone out the window, that objective. The only way, as I said, is if we continue in recession the way we are now and the demand for energy products goes down so severely that we just will no longer need it. But that is not the way that we on this side of the House want to achieve self-sufficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The minister has pointed to Hibernia and the Beaufort Sea as the main promising parts of our energy future that will bring about oil self-sufficiency.

Mr. Blenkarn: Alsands.

Mr. Wilson: He never mentioned, not that I heard in his whole speech tonight, he never mentioned the impact of the loss of Alsands and Cold Lake. I refer him back—I do not think he likes to remember this—to the numbers in the energy program itself. It had production of about 1.4 million barrels a day. Of that, 715,000 was from the Alsands and Cold Lake and other synthetic crude projects. Those are gone. He just totally ignored the fact that they are gone. They have disappeared into thin air, and he does not acknowledge the fact that they have had a major impact on the ability of this country to reach self-sufficiency.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: More business for Mexico.

Mr. Wilson: Now, Madam Speaker, the minister has supervised the most damaging national policy that we have seen in our history.

Mr. Blenkarn: Right on!

Mr. Wilson: He has bled the oil and gas industry dry. He has bled the country of well qualified technical people. He has bled the country of valuable capital dollars. From the date that he came into office, we have watched the level of the Canadian dollar go from 87 cents to 80 cents. He has also used this energy policy to bleed consumers through the high taxes that have been used to bring in money to that voracious spender, the Minister of Finance.

That is why this minister must resign, Madam Speaker; and I plead with you, and I plead through you to the minister, not to stop now. This energy policy is still a disaster. It still needs major surgery. Either the minister can face up to this or he should move over and let someone else take over his job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the member who last spoke, the hon. member from Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), said "God help the industry", meaning the oil industry. I do not know if he read the same material as I read tonight. I understand that the small producer and other producers got a PGRT credit worth $900 million. The PGRT as a tax was reduced from 12 per cent to 11 per cent, giving the industry $200 million. The PGRT was reduced on the integrated oil sands projects, another $125 million. The IORT, another tax, was suspended for one year, that is $250 million. A new category was created called the old-new oil, meaning $75 million to the industry. The NORP price to existing tertiary recovery meant $300 million to the industry. NORP to experimental projects meant $100 million to the industry, and NORP for suspended wells, meant $100 million to the industry. That is a total of $2,050 million, or $2 billion to the industry. Well, God has helped the oil industry. God has just helped the oil industry, Madam Speaker; the oil industry have drilled for oil, and they have found it here in Ottawa.

• (2120)

Tonight the minister must feel like a Glace Bay coal miner; he has just been through a cave-in. He calls this new program the National Energy Program update. That is doublespeak if I ever have heard it. This is not an update. It is an upper for the oil companies, but it is a tragic downer for the Canadian consumer.

It is true that some small Canadian oil companies were hurting as a result of the National Energy Program and its taxes. They were hurting and needed some help, but under the program tonight Imperial Oil will enjoy—and I have counted them—six changes which will help. There will be changes in the PGRT. Imperial Oil will get help proportional to its production. It will get help with respect to Syncrude, tertiary recovery, enhanced recovery, experimental recovery and the IORT. When we ask for money for medicare in this country, the government cannot find it. When we ask for money for pensioners, the government cannot find it. When we ask for money to help the unemployed get jobs, the government cannot find it. But, boy, it finds $2 billion for Imperial Oil and the others. That is just incredible.

Mr. Nystrom: Shame. And the Tories want more.

Mr. Waddell: Not only does the government find the money, but what this money can be used for is also positively dangerous. If we read this program carefully, we find that there is nothing in it like a performance guarantee which would say what this $2 billion has to be used for. The money can be spent by companies abroad. It can be invested abroad. It can be used to pay debts. It can be used to take over Canadian companies. It can be used to pay dividends to American shareholders. This is an industry that is 70 per cent foreign owned, mainly American. There is nothing to protect the consumer. There is nothing to protect the taxpayer.

Last year there was a 30 per cent increase in the cost of energy to the Canadian consumer, and in the package tonight there is nothing to help the Canadian consumer.

Last September Premier Lougheed and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a deal. They split up the pie. The energy industry lobbied for a year and a half. Every day in the House members of the Conservative Party supported big oil. They constantly stood and asked for a better break for big oil. Tonight they got that break. Tonight they got $2 billion, but who was there to represent the consumer? How was the interest of the consumer protected? There is nothing tonight.

The minister says we are lucky to be paying less than world prices. Since 1980 the price of a barrel of oil in Canada has gone up from $14.75 a barrel to over $30 a barrel. Much of that oil was found when the price of oil was low and it was cheap to explore for oil. Companies used to tell us they could develop tar sands for $6 a barrel. Now oil costs $30 a barrel in Canada. Some of that oil which was found between 1973 and 1980 was what was called old oil. Under the old agreement it was called old oil. Under the package tonight—and this is what really hits the Canadian consumer—there is a new category called "old new" oil. What does "old new" oil mean? "Old new" oil means the companies will get higher prices for it. There will be higher prices for oil as a result of this retreat tonight. Where will the money come from?

Mr. Taylor: Alberta.

Mr. Waddell: There will be an oil price increase of $2.25 a barrel in July. There will be another increase of, I think, 25 cents in August. I think there will be another $4 increase in January of 1983 and another $4 per barrel increase in July. The government has been collecting a petroleum compensation charge, and that charge has been to make up for buying expensive offshore oil. We buy offshore oil because in the early 1970s we exported all our cheap oil. Now we have to buy offshore oil. The government was in fact making money on the petroleum compensation charge because the price of offshore oil has gone down. Prices in the world market have gone down. Instead of the Canadian government's saying to the consumer that since there is extra money, the consumer will not have to pay increases at the pumps, what does the government do tonight? It recycles the money into the "old new" category and pays the oil companies more money. The consumer is affected directly as well as indirectly. The government is forgoing $2 billion in revenue. The minister says we are not taxing; we are just forgoing revenue. Where is the government going to get the $2 billion? There are two ways by which the minister could get it. He could get it by increasing personal taxes, or he could get it by eliminating government programs. So, the consumer and the taxpayer suffer again tonight.

In 1980-81 the cost of heating an average home with oil in Canada was $770, but last winter that cost rose to $1,170. The annual cost of gasoline for the average motorist in 1980 was $730, and in 1981 it was $945. I do not have the statistics, but I am sure my colleagues from farm areas could tell me about the increased prices farmers have to pay to operate their vehicles and to supply energy to their operations. There is nothing in the package tonight to help the Canadian consumer.

I just returned from my riding today. I had an open house in my office in the east end of Vancouver. People came to see me. They came with their hydro bills and told me they are going up. They came in with their heating bills and told me that they were going up. Some told me that their pensions are increased by 8 per cent or so but that their energy costs have gone up 30 per cent. There is nothing in this package to help.

What does the government do? Does it give some money to old people? Does it give some money to people on fixed incomes? No, it gives money to Imperial Oil and the rest of the industry. It gives the industry $2 billion. This is an industry which was one of the richest in Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Still is.

Mr. Nystrom: Joe Clark's friends.

Mr. Waddell: My friends to the right ask for free enterprise. Is free enterprise giving $6.5 billion in PIP grants to this industry? Is free enterprise bailing out Dome Petroleum? Is free enterprise giving super-depletion allowances and further grants? Is that free enterprise? If it is, I would like a little bit of that free enterprise to be given to some of the people who come into my office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: In 1979, the Canadian taxpayers put up 61.7 cents of every dollar of oil company profits. The oil companies in this country have $4.3 billion in deferred taxation revenue. Under PIP some companies will get 93 cents of every dollar spent from the taxpayers of Canada.

My party is not against the small Canadian oil industry. Part of the problem of the National Energy Program is that it has backfired. What has happened is that companies like Imperial Oil, Gulf and Shell, because they have downstream refinery operations and marketing operations, could weather the heavier taxes. Smaller Canadian companies, in the upstream were suffering, so it is partly right that the minister should change the PGRT with respect to small companies. However, the $250,000 minimum amount and which companies will not have to pay the PGRT are not defined. This applies to all companies. It should be better directed and there should be a performance test as to what is done with the money.

I noticed the minister's style and tone tonight. I know when you are in retreat you have to make a defence. The minister is a good lawyer, and he knows that the best defence is a good offence, so he projects a confident style. However, let us look at the National Energy Program and leave aside all the rhetoric about how it is socialist, which it is not. Let us look at it from a practical point of view.

• (2130)

One of the bases of the National Energy Program was that world energy prices were going up. This is hindsight. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources should have known last September, as most other competent analysts in the world knew, that there was going to be a glut of oil. I see the minister laugh but I think his department should have known that. This program was based on oil prices continuing to go up, but instead prices have fallen. There has been conservation in Canada and that is a good thing, but I would remind the minister that he is cutting out $23 million for municipalities for energy conservation and, on the other hand, is giving $2 billion to the oil companies. We could have a lot more conservation if we put some of that money into the effort.

The real problem is that there is a recession in this country. That is why energy conservation will come about. I hate to say that that is part of the reason, but we have had a recession. The problem with the National Energy Program is that the planners in the department looked at the oil industry and thought that it was making tremendous profits. It is different from our manufacturing industries which had to go to the banks to borrow money when they wanted to expand. The oil industry just had to take the money out of cash flow. Any time they were challenged, as the government challenged them in the early 1970s, they just lobbied and had the program changed. History is repeating itself tonight. They had a big cash flow so they explored and found mainly natural gas and some oil. There was tremendous pressure to export that natural gas.

The minister and his department came along with the National Energy Program and started taxing the industry—until the minister retreated tonight. Then the industry found that, like other industries, it had to go to the banks. It spent a lot of money for borrowing and taking over private Canadian companies as the minister encouraged it to do, but suddenly we had recession and high interest rates, and it found it was hung out to dry. That is why the industry is in trouble now.

If the minister really wanted to help the industry he would not go back and give it $2 billion. He would look over to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and ask him to lower interest rates. That would help the industry, and that is the way to do it.

[Translation]

I wonder why the Government of Canada, at a time like this, has decided to hand $2 billion over to the big oil companies in Canada. The government does not have the money to spend on health services or education or unemployed workers in this country, so I fail to understand, Madam Speaker, how the Government of Canada is able to find $2 billion to help these big companies which are very, very well off, and why—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Shame!

Mr. Waddell: —the Government of Canada does not have the money to help the poor people in this country.

[English]

I wanted to mention that the announcement tonight encourages further gas exports. I just returned from Calgary, and I would point out to the minister that there are other ways of doing this. We do not have to export all our cheap natural gas because if we do, we will have the same problem that we have with oil. When the minister was in opposition he said that it was necessary to work with Alberta to get a pro-rationing system, and that it was necessary to clean up the marketing system. Madam Speaker, the marketing system is in a terrible mess in Alberta.

There is nothing in this announcement about a gas bank, Madam Speaker. The minister spoke about a program of switching from oil to gas, and that is a good program which should be expanded. The pipeline to the Maritimes and other places should be proceeded with. We cannot encourage Canadians to switch to natural gas and then not be able to supply it at a reasonable price in the years ahead. That would be a complete disaster.

The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) estimated that this package would cost consumers about $600 million. My estimate is that it would cost consumers $1.2 billion. I would remind my friend to my right that both they and the Liberals have, not misled the Canadian people, but have given people the idea that there would be cheaper energy in Canada.

I see an hon. member pointing to the minister. His party, when in government brought down an 18-cent excise tax, but it was projected to go up and up and up. The Conservatives would have brought in a huge increase in the price of energy, and they cannot say otherwise. All they have to do is to read their own budget. Now the minister, in a Liberal government, had a chance to lower the petroleum compensation charge to make energy a little cheaper for the average Canadian, but he opted for aiding the industry. I guess he wants to be Minister of Finance because he certainly aided the industry tonight.

I think I have made the points I have wanted to make, Madam Speaker, and tomorrow I hope to suggest some alternative ways to aid the Canadian consumer. Tonight we have seen a sell-out and a retreat. We have seen a rich industry, with some companies that need some help, given general help of $30 billion at a time when there is no money for health, education, employment, job creation, pensions and so on. That money has to come from somewhere, Madam Speaker, so it will come from forgone revenue and from the consumer. it means further cutbacks in government programs.

These are our oil resources, Madam Speaker. We do not have to get on our knees and be grateful to the oil companies. These are Canadian resources, so we should not have to pay OPEC prices. We should be giving the Canadian consumer a break. Of course, we should encourage conservation in all the ways we can. We have to recycle that money.

Judging by some of the public opinion polls, some people in this country think that our attitude toward energy is too conservative and we should Canadianize more quickly and by 1990 have a 75 per cent Canadian-owned industry. Some people think we should make Petro-Canada the leading oil company in Canada. That is not what we get from this announcement, nor do we get a limited amount of help for small companies, but rather this broad brush stroke that will help Imperial Oil and Dome. My colleagues and I sit and cry every night. We are losing sleep over poor Imperial and poor Dome which have taken so much money from Canadian taxpayers in the past.

The sad thing about this announcement tonight is that not only is the minister in retreat but that a program which could have been good has been messed up by a tax regime that is getting worse because we are backtracking.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You put them there.

Mr. Waddell: We did not put them there. We voted against an incompetent government with high oil prices. The people put them there.

As Frank Scott the poet said, this country is silent, waiting to be developed and to be born. We have all the resources known to mankind. We have the heavy oil deposits in Wainwright, Lethbridge and Lloydminster. The oil is out there. We do not have to do what the minister has done. No oil has been produced from the Beaufort Sea, so how is that to bring us self-sufficiency? This energy policy, in spite of the face the minister puts on it, is in tatters. Tonight we are witnessing a retreat which would do Napoleon proud. When there is so much to be done, when there are so many people who call for help to pay for heating oil or gasoline, who is speaking for them? Basically what this program tonight comes down to is more money for oil companies. It is NEP-2.

• (2140)

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the minister made reference to the fact that the petroleum compensation charge would be the same or possibly lower. In view of the fact that inflation is such a terrible problem for the country, and many people on fixed incomes are suffering terribly from the increasing prices of energy, why did the minister not make some commitment to reduce the petroleum compensation charge so that Canadians could have some assurance that we will see a levelling off in the escalation of energy prices?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the petroleum compensation charge is set at a level to pay for the cost of imported oil, the cost of new oil and oil coming from the tarsands. Under the agreement with Alberta the federal government is not going to make money from that charge. Over the period 1981 to 1986 the moneys received under that charge should balance out. We are working to try to keep it reasonably in balance every year, but there will be years of a relatively small surplus or a small deficit. I can tell my hon. friend that, barring unforeseen developments in the price of oil, towards the end of 1982 I expect to be able to recommend a reduction in the petroleum compensation charge on January 1, 1983.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, it would have been very helpful and reassuring if Canadians could feel that this policy was designed not just for one part of the economy, but to recognize some of the problems consumers are facing. My second question relates to rumours about government assistance to certain Canadian-owned elements of the oil and gas industry which are in some heavy financial difficulties. I wonder if the minister regards his announcement tonight as being a response to those problems, or whether there is a possibility of some further action by the government to respond to the situation?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the measures announced tonight are of a general nature to help all the industry. As a matter of fact, as I indicated before, the weight of those measures is directed towards the smaller companies, most of which are Canadian owned. The greater benefits of this program are going to go to the small companies which have proven to be the most dynamic and positive elements in the industry, ones with the highest re-investment rate and ones that work in Canada to create jobs for Canadians. Those measures have to be seen in that respect, but they are of a general nature. Some elements in the program I have announced will be of benefit to some of the larger companies, some of which are in the situation referred to by my hon. friend. As far as individual Canadian companies which may have special difficulties at the present time are concerned, that is another issue and I have no comment to make on it.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question to the minister has basically to do with what I think is the misleading nature of this document, and I do not mean that in an unparliamentary sense. The title indicates that it is a National Energy Program update. Yet when we look through it, we find that basically it is another statement on the oil and gas industries alone. If I look at page 67, I find only one paragraph on the western power grid. That is a megaproject which will provide hydro from northern Manitoba to Saskatchewan, and even to Alberta, to provide low cost energy. One paragraph out of this huge report is on the western power grid. The paragraph says that the government will give serious consideration to a request for financial support on that project. For a government which said it had ironclad guarantees on the Alaska pipeline, a government which said it was committed to reducing unemployment and interest rates and strengthening FIRA, if those are the hard words they have used for things they have not done, what the hell does "serious consideration" mean?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as my hon. friend may know, there is a new government in Manitoba, and we wish it well. However, there have been some very preliminary discussions between that government and the federal government. There have been telephone conversations between the Premier of Manitoba and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), discussions between myself and the Manitoba minister of energy, mainly over the telephone, and approaches made to the federal government as to whether it would be ready to consider some form of support to the western grid, particularly through some financial technique, the details of which I would not want to get into at this time. These approaches were of a very general and preliminary nature. The federal government has indicated to Manitoba that it is willing to sit down with them and examine in a very positive way their proposal which, at present, is still very much of a general nature. Therefore, we are not in a position at the present time to come up with a firm statement on exactly what we could do. Such a statement would be premature for the good reason that we have not yet sat down with the Government of Manitoba in that regard. We have indicated our general positive approach to their request, and this will be pursued over the next little while. I do not know whether it is a matter of weeks or months but we have had discussions in this regard.

My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), had discussions with some ministers of the Government of Manitoba as recently as last week, and he is following this file very closely indeed, and with great interest.

• (2150)

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question. I welcome the good news from the minister. However, there is one thing I would like to check. He has given the impression that this is just a new proposal that has come with the New Democratic Party government in Manitoba. Is it not true that this is something which has been under discussion between the previous Conservative Government of Manitoba and the federal government for a number of years? If that is the case, why are we still at the stage of serious consideration?

Mr. Lalonde: For a very simple and good reason, Madam Speaker. Until quite recently there was no agreement between the two prairie governments—

Mr. Murphy: Three prairie governments.

Mr. Lalonde: Sorry, the three prairie governments, as to whether this particular project would go ahead. There has been nothing precise and formal to consider because the three governments were at odds, and sometimes rather severely at odds, on that particular project. It may have been that some approaches were made over the years of a very general nature, but there was really no project about which people could say it will cost so much and that this will be done this year or next year, etc.

It was not until we had an indication that the three governments were now ready to back the project and go ahead with it that we could start seriously considering the proposal or getting down to the specific points of it. We are quite ready to sit down with the Manitoba government with regard to this.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a few short questions. The minister took great pains this evening, both in his documentation and in his speech, to describe to us what a great success the National Energy Program had been. If it is that successful, why did the minister feel it necessary to offer tax relief to the extent of $2 billion to the industry?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the success of the program has to be judged on the basis of several elements to which I have referred, namely, security of supply, opportunity for Canadians, and fairness in terms of cost to the consumer.

There is little doubt for any objective observer that the National Energy Program has proved to be a great success in that regard. As I have indicated, we have, through conservation and substitution in particular, reduced substantially our projected reliance on imports in this decade. We have increased significantly Canadian participation in the industry. We have a price regime that is fair and advantageous compared to any other industrialized country in the world. These are major achievements in themselves. But this particular industry is facing some difficult problems in terms of cash flow. We believe these problems will remain through 1983. We want this industry to be dynamic and we believe it is the engine of economic development for many areas of this country.

Mr. Wilson: It was.

Mr. Lalonde: It will create jobs. Benefits will accrue all across the country. This is why we have decided to bring additional benefits at this time, bearing in mind and taking into account problems relating to lower sales than had been expected and higher interest rates than had been expected. That industry is facing serious cash flow problems. This is particularly evident in the smaller firms. This is why we have concentrated our efforts to help the small firms, most of which are Canadian.

Mr. Thomson: Madam Speaker, the minister appears very confident that the alterations he has made this evening will restore investor confidence in the industry. In June, 1980, before the National Energy Program was introduced, 461 rigs were operating in the western Canadian sedimentary basin. This morning only 121 rigs were operating in the western Canadian sedimentary basin. I think the minister may remember that I asked him a question immediately following the introduction of the National Energy Program. At that time the Toronto stock exchange index on oil stood at some 5100 odd points. Today it stands at 2600 points. That is a 50 per cent reduction.

Would the minister, being as confident as he is that these changes will restore confidence to the industry, be prepared to offer his resignation in the event that during the next six months only 50 per cent of the 340 rigs, that is 170 rigs will go back to work? I ask for only 50 per cent of them. If he is so confident that what he has put forward this evening will add perhaps 1,000 points to the oil and gas index on the Toronto stock exchange, which is proof of the pudding, does he have enough confidence to stand up and offer his resignation if we do not achieve those two things?

Mr. Murphy: What about an ironclad guarantee?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, my friend is concentrating on drilling rigs. I remind him first that the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors before the introduction of the National Energy Program in 1980 said that because there was a surplus of natural gas they were unable to sell gas. That association expected a 40 per cent decline in the number of active drilling rigs in Alberta. That was before the National Energy Program was introduced and before the recession in North America which has led to further declines in demand for drilling rig activity.

My hon. friend often refers to drilling rigs that have left Canada for the United States. I remind him that many of these operators have not found the Eldorado they were expecting in the United States. A good friend of my colleague and a good friend of mine moved six rigs to the United States in protest against the National Energy Program. Out of his six rigs, he has five rigs inactive in the United States. They are doing nothing. He has one rig working in the United States.

Mr. Clark: What does that prove?

Mr. Lalonde: That is the state of affairs in the United States where there is no National Energy Program. I would urge my hon. friend to bear in mind the general environment and general context of the oil and gas industry at the present time, not only in Canada but around the world.

Mr. Clark: Where is your courage, Marc? Put your seat on the line.

Mr. Lalonde: One has to see the situation with that kind of perspective. We expect a large degree of activity in the oil and gas industry. As I have indicated, that industry finds itself now with roughly the same percentage of the total pie it had between 1975 and 1980. The percentage is 46 per cent versus 45 per cent during that period. But it is a much larger pie, a pie with $163 billion in it, while the previous pie had about $60 billion in it. The pie is larger but the percentage is about the same. If the industry cannot make it within that kind of environment, I am afraid even my hon. friend could not make it go.

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the minister. First, can the minister tell us whether he has taken any measures to alleviate the problem of potential shut-in volumes of oil and gas?

Second, on page 17, there is a table showing a comparison of projected revenues now with those anticipated in September, 1981. In that table, we see a projected decrease in the revenue of $25 billion. Can the minister tell us how much of this had been set aside for government expenditures, and what effect this reduction in revenues will have on the government's fiscal position and current account deficit?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, as far as shut-in oil is concerned, I have indicated that the government would immediately ask the companies to limit themselves to the minimum required under their term contracts with suppliers from abroad. This means in effect that there should be no purchase of oil on the spot-market outside of Canada. The program also indicates a number of other measures, such as financial support for swaps between Canada and the United States in the west in exchange for swaps in the east. We would want to discuss with the industry the possibility of setting up storage of shut-in oil in the west to take into account the fact that in certain periods there appear to be large shut-ins, while in other periods there is practically no shut-in oil.

• (2200)

As to the last point referred to by my hon. friend, it is clear that the Government of Alberta, the producing provinces generally, and the Government of Canada see their revenues considerably reduced between 1982 and 1986 compared with the forecasts which were made at the time of the Alberta agreement last September because of increases which are less than was anticipated. Obviously this has an impact on fiscal arrangements, and the Minister of Finance will have to bear these facts in mind when he presents a review of the budget estimates over the next few years.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: At this point, a motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 is deemed to have been moved and seconded—

[English]

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that there was unanimous agreement to give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) the opportunity to make a statement on motions tonight. There are two points which I want to raise. One is that, to my knowledge, there was no indication at that time that there would be a limitation upon the right of Members of Parliament to put questions to the minister in relation to his unusually long statement. Indeed, there was no indication that the normal hour of ten o'clock would be invoked in these circumstances. Second, I think there is an open question as to whether or not the House is still at the stage of motions.

The House will recall that at an ealier stage this evening, without any notice to the deputy House leader of the Official Opposition, there was a request made for an opportunity to revert to motions to present a report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the deputy House leader of the Official Opposition had not been advised—and the House knows that the normal practice is to advise the deputy House leader or his representative in such a circumstance—consent was not given.

There has now been, as I understand it, some conversation with regard to the opportunity to have that motion presented again by a member now in the House, with the right under our rules to present that standing committee report. I know the House would not want, perhaps inadvertently, to act in a way which would prevent the will of a standing committee of the House from being heard.

For both those reasons, I beg Madam Speaker's indulgence to allow the House of Commons to continue its work past the normal hour of ten o'clock, first to allow us to question the minister on an unusually important and unusually long statement on motions and, second, to provide the House with an opportunity to consider again, now that all parties have been advised, the wisdom and the possibility of allowing the whole House to receive a report of a standing committee of the House which, if not received today, would not become effective.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) raised two points which are well covered by the Standing Orders. I am sorry to say that he is absolutely wrong on both of them. In the first point he raised he said that he did not expect, since we gave unanimous consent to allow the minister to make a statement in the House as opposed to outside the House, questions to be limited. He should know that in Standing Order 15(3) it is spelled out very clearly that after the statement of the minister Madam Speaker has the discretion to allow a few brief questions on the matter and that the length of time is left to her discretion. I think that after two hours ample time has been given, but in any case it is at your discretion. I am sure the minister will be here tomorrow during question period to answer further questions on the matter.

For the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to quote Standing Order 15(3), which reads:

> On Statements by Ministers, as listed in section (2) of this Standing Order, a Minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon and Members may be permitted—

It reads, "may be permitted", not must be permitted. It continues:

> —to address questions thereon to the Minister. Mr. Speaker shall limit the time for such proceedings as he deems fit.

• (2205)

The standing orders are very clear. It is at Your Honour's discretion. It is not because we agreed to allow the minister to make his statement at eight o'clock tonight in the House of Commons as opposed to outside the House that we should automatically agree to long questions and agree to go beyond Standing Order 15(3). May I add Beauchesne's Citation 263—

[Translation]

—page 87, fifth edition, and I quote:

> 263. A brief question and answer period may follow the Minister's statement and Opposition comments. The length of this period is left to the discretion of the Speaker by the Standing Order.

Madam Speaker, I think it is quite clear you have been extremely generous and patient. Tomorrow, the minister will be in the House during question period, and at that time he will be able to provide even more appropriate answers to questions which, I hope, will be more sensible than those demanding his resignation, as was the case during the last comments made by hon. members.

[English]

The second point raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was that consent was denied to allow the chairman of the committee to table the report earlier this day. The chairman told me that there was an understanding among members of that committee that each of them would speak to their own House leader about the requirement for unanimous consent allowing him to table the report at this time. In so far as I am concerned, even if the Tories had played a trick in committee this morning, I was nice and said, "Fine, no problem. We will agree that the report be tabled". But tonight at eight o'clock they denied that consent. We presume that their members on the committee who played the trick were able to put their act together and tell their own House leader that they wanted to give consent so that the report would be presented on time tonight. But they themselves denied that consent. They cannot get their act together, and they must suffer the consequences.

Let me point out also that the Standing Orders are very clear. Under the Standing Orders, when ten o'clock is called, all reports are deemed to have been made. Even if we were to consent now, it would be too late. So for all those reasons, we want Your Honour to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I just wanted to add that, from our point of view, we would be happy both to have the hour extended to allow for continued discussion and to have the motion from the standing committee reintroduced. We gave approval for it earlier in the evening. We would be happy to give approval again if the government House leader felt the urge to present once again the standing committee report.

Madam Speaker: Well, it is past ten o'clock. It is true that I do have the discretion under Standing Order 15(3) to allow hon. members to ask questions when the minister makes a statement in the House, and I have done just that. But that discretion given to me under Standing Order 15(3) is limited by Standing Order 40 which tells me that at ten o'clock I must call the adjournment debate, and that is what I was prepared to do. I received no indication from anyone in the House that we were to go beyond ten o'clock. Therefore, in conformity with Standing Order 40—the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. First of all, I regret that the government House leader referred to any party suffering the consequences of its actions in the House. That indicates a state of mind in his part which could bode ill for the future conduct in the House of Commons.

Mr. Pinard: Oh, you blackmailer.

Mr. Clark: Let me simply rise at this point, since there has been the expression by the New Democratic Party of its interest in having the committee report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development presented. That was moved by an hon. member of the Liberal Party, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner), and I believe it was supported by other hon. members of that party. Since the inadvertence, in terms of informing our deputy House leader, was on this side of the House, which I accept, and since our party, now that our deputy House leader has been informed of the circumstances, would certainly be prepared to allow the House to accept a report of a committee of the House, as Leader of the Opposition I would therefore like to ask the unanimous consent of the House of Commons to revert to motions to allow the most recent report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development to be received by the House as a matter of courtesy to hon. members of the House.

• (2210)

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there are two points. First, the Leader of the Opposition seems to recognize that it was the error of the Conservative Party that they did not give the appropriate consent earlier this evening. Considering that admission of error, and the fact that they cannot get their act together, I am willing to take their request under consideration and tomorrow see whether we can agree that the motion be moved by the chairman of the committee. I am not in a position tonight to give that consent.

Madam Speaker: It is quite clear that the House does not give unanimous consent to have the report presented to the House.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am sure it was entirely by inadvertence that the government House leader, in offering to consider this matter, has overlooked the consequences of the committee report being considered tomorrow. That report, because of rules with which the Chair is familiar and with which the government House leader on reflection is familiar, if it is not received by midnight tonight, May 31, the end of our sitting for May 31, will be null and void. It will have no effect.

The minister, who spoke earlier of tricks, has, I am sure inadvertently, put himself in a position where he might be practising that sort of thing himself. I know he would not want to do that. I know he would want to give the House of Commons the opportunity to accept the report of the committee of this House. According to the rules of the House, we can only do that before the end of this parliamentary day.

If there is a delay until tomorrow, the Parliament of Canada will have acted deliberately to deny a report of a standing committee of the House of Commons to be considered by the House of Commons. I am sure that is a matter the House of Commons would not want to have occur.

Since the government House leader has indicated his willingness to look at my request in a positive way, now that I have brought to his attention the fatal implications for that report of the standing committee of his not agreeing to have that motion accepted now, in the interest of having some reasonable conduct and courtesy prevail in the House of Commons, he would be prepared now to give me the unanimous consent that I, in my capacity as Leader of the Opposition, request.

I am sure that other hon. members would be quite prepared, as I have been in the past, to extend the courtesy of accepting the request. I am sure they would return that courtesy tonight to allow Parliament to function.

After all, we are but a week away from the introduction of rules to reform the Parliament of Canada. If this is a demonstration of the spirit of a reference to a committee—

Mr. Pinard: That was done today.

Mr. Clark: Indeed it was done today. If on the very day the reference is made to a committee to allow Parliament to consider a reform of the rules the government acts in a spirit which denies Parliament the capacity to act, I am sure that matter would be deeply regretted by all members of the House. It could cast a long shadow over our subsequent ability to work productively together in this chamber.

Madam Speaker: Before we go any further, I want to tell the House that there are two difficulties. The first is with regard to obtaining unanimous consent. Second, I have to inform the House that I do not have a signed copy of the report by the chairman. That is irrelevant if the House wants to give its unanimous consent. I am in the hands of the House. I can do all of these things if the House consents.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) with honey voice talks about spirit. He must know what happened this morning. Committees do not usually meet on Monday mornings. The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs agreed to meet at the request of some members of his party who said they wanted to deal with substantive matters, not to vote on the estimates as such. The Tory party members played a trick this morning when they voted on one of the items, surprising the members on the government side because, once again, committees usually do not meet on Monday mornings. The trick was played then. The spirit must be considered in the light of what happened this morning in that committee. The trick was played by the Tories. Having that in mind, we must understand that it is not very easy for us who, knowing that we have been tricked, were willing tonight at eight o'clock, when the chairman of that committee rose to seek unanimous consent to table the report—including the trick of the Tories—to agree to that. The Tories said no. I rose on a point of order, asking it to be noted that the Tories said no. Now they want to play a trick, but they could not put their act together. It is as simple as that. Tonight the Leader of the Opposition talks about good spirit and he says we had better agree to the talking because the spirit might change. Just because of blackmail, the answer is no. We do not agree. We do not consent.

• (2215)

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Pinard: We do not like to be blackmailed, Madam Speaker, nevertheless—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: Nevertheless, he should know that under the rules, by unanimous consent anything can be done. When I said to him that, despite all this, I was willing to consider his request and come back tomorrow, after having talked to the chairman of that committee—who is not here at this time—he should have known that, by unanimous consent, we can go beyond the rule which says that by midnight a report is deemed to have been made. So I will not give in to his blackmailing tonight. We will give consent only after I have had the opportunity to speak—

An hon. Member: Order, order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: It is obvious to the Chair that there is no unanimous consent for the request to table that report tonight.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Is it a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. Oberle: A point of order, Madam Speaker. I must bring to your attention and to the attention of the President of Privy Council, the government House leader (Mr. Pinard) that I and several other of my colleagues in the House tonight are members of this committee. I fail to see that there were any tricks played. I do not know what was reported to the House leader, but there were no tricks.

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not think I can entertain any more discussion about this particular problem. There is no unanimous consent. This was the request that was made by an hon. member. There is no unanimous consent. In my view, the question is final for the time being and it being ten o'clock—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—APPLICATION OF NON-PROFIT BARRIERS TO JAPANESE IMPORTS. (B) CUSTOMS INSPECTION OF SHIPS CARRYING JAPANESE IMPORTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we have a problem in this country, and it is not only a problem of procedure in this House. Right now I am considering the problem that we face on the west coast, where customs officers have been directed by one of the ministers, or maybe by several of the ministries, to use banana republic tactics to abuse the Japanese auto importers in the port of New Westminster, the Fraser Harbour Commission and the Annacis Island. Mr. Speaker, that problem is symptomatic of a much deeper problem. The minister has resorted to that particular tactic of dragooning those importers and chastising them and the workers on the west coast, because of his abject failure in negotiating with the Japanese car manufacturers.

I think all of us will concede that it is not easy to negotiate with the Japanese manufacturers. They are very shrewd businessmen. They are very hard nosed and they are going to get as much as they can for their country. We understand that, we respect it, but we do not have to accept the failure of these ministers, and then to have that failure compounded by heaping abuse on the workers on the Pacific coast. Why should the workers out there suffer because of the bungling of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and then make the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) the lackey to cover up their failures? That is the problem.

Today I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about the fact that bludgeoning tactics are being used on the west coast for a self-serving purpose of his ministry. The minister said he intends to preserve and maintain the jobs of several hundred thousand Canadians in all parts of this country whose lives are linked with the production, distribution and sale of automobiles and parts. Putting that into language all of us can understand, the minister is willing to sacrifice several hundred jobs in British Columbia to save several thousand jobs in Windsor. In terms of mathematics, I can understand that. In terms of morality, it makes no sense at all.

The problem lies deeper than that. There is an inability and an unwillingness on the part of this government to look at the sickness which exists in the car industry in Canada today. The problem is not that the Japanese are making good automobiles. The problem is that the Canadian industry is making automobiles Canadians would like to buy but cannot afford to buy. It is not a matter of price tags; it is a matter of value.

The same edition of the newspaper which reported problems on Annacis Island also reported that Chrysler and Ford have recalled 127,000 cars. Incidentally, that number is about two thirds the total number of Japanese automobiles imported into Canada annually. In one fell swoop the Canadian car industry has to recall 127,000 cars. The Canadian car buyer cannot afford that kind of value! If the Canadian car was one which Canadians wanted to buy because of value, there would be no international problem.

For the benefit of the minister I want to read just two short paragraphs from an editorial in yesterday's Vancouver Province entitled "An obnoxious campaign".

> Barry Melchin, whose trucks move imported cars landed in the Lower Mainland to dealers throughout B.C. and Alberta, summed it up: "I don't see why my drivers should have to sit around and my cash flow dry up because they can't build decent cars in Ontario."

The editorial is summarized at the end, where it says:

> Smarter people would be devoting their energies to making sure that North American cars are better-designed, better-built and more competitively priced.

That is the problem, and instead of looking at the problem, the minister wants to chastise workers in British Columbia. I know the Canadian car market is in trouble, and I suggest to the minister that we take an honest, unjaundiced look at the problem and not resort to a cure which is worse than the disease.

The minister keeps saying it is time to impose quotas. Surely elementary economics would tell him that as soon you institute quotas, you drive up the price of cars, and low-income families in Canada particularly could ill afford to purchase them. It would be better to increase Canadian content in those Japanese cars and make the Japanese auto manufacturers use Canadian parts so that the Canadian parts industry in Ontario would prosper, and therefore the automobile industry in Canada as a whole would prosper because it could compete with Japanese imports, which are now inundating the Canadian market.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Friesen: I need more time, Sir.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to participate—even if it is only for three minutes—and to respond to the questions of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Unfortunately, because of other matters, I was not able to get to the House on time today to answer the hon. member's questions in question period. However, it is obvious that the hon. member has not been listening to his colleagues in the Conservative Party for the last three or four months. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) in particular have been screaming day after day, week after week and month after month for the government to take tough action to restrict the imports of automobiles from Japan.

If I remember correctly what the hon. member said a few minutes ago, he said it would be ridiculous to impose quotas at this time. He should tell that to his Conservative colleagues who have been saying for the last three or four months that we should impose quotas of 15 per cent on the import of automobiles into the Canadian market and 8 per cent on the import of trucks.

• (2225)

The hon. member knows that I went to Japan in March and met my counterpart, the minister of industry and trade for Japan. I put before him specific proposals to voluntarily restrict the sale of automobiles to Canada during the next 12 months, to place a ceiling on the sale of commercial vehicles, and to agree to a commitment to negotiate content in some form or other in a long-term arrangement between the two countries. He rejected all three requests.

We are not asking for something that the Japanese did not give to somebody else. In 1980 the Japanese government agreed to give the U.S. industry a one-year period of restraint at a level resulting in a 7.7 decrease from 1980 sales. At the same time, Canada's agreement with Japan resulted in 1980 sales plus 10 per cent. This year all we asked the Japanese authorities for was the same agreement they gave to the United States in 1980.

Consultations presently are going on at the official level between Japan and Canada. As the hon. member knows, the automobile industry is in a serious state in Canada. Thousands of employees have been laid off as a result of the decline in our market plus the import penetration. This is not just in Ontario or Quebec but about 300 dealers have also closed down across Canada.

Until such time as we arrive at a satisfactory settlement we feel there is no alternative, and therefore we have asked Canadian Customs to strengthen customs procedures at the point of entry. That is not something we want to do, as we had hoped to arrive at a mutually satisfactory decision. Unfortunately, that has not happened to date.

I am very hopeful that before long we will reach a decision beneficial to Japan and to Canada and that we will continue, in the long-term interests of both countries, to expand our bilateral trade of over $8 billion.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF CUSTOMS AREA TO INCLUDE CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 this year I put the following question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen):

> In view of the advantages it would give to Canadian manufacturing industry, and especially the steel industry, of an extension of the Canadian Customs area offshore, to extend it from the 12-mile limit to the continental shelf, as Norway, the United States and the United Kingdom have already done, and the massive drilling and exploration program planned on the east coast offshore, is the government planning to extend our Customs regulations to include the east coast offshore to the continental shelf?

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) replied that my question was an interesting one—I was glad to hear that—and that it could help certain Canadian companies to gain a competitive edge. He went on to say that the question would require careful study. I hope that the parliamentary secretary who responds tonight will indicate that the study is complete and that we will be able to make decisions in this regard.

The Canadian steel industry which has been operating at a very high level of production for many years, has dropped in recent months to as low as 50 per cent of capacity. There have been extensive lay-offs and some companies such as Algoma Steel have been required to lay-off pretty well all the work force for one week in June.

I think it is important that the government should take every possible action to increase the amount of steel utilized within our borders. This proposal to extend the Customs area to the continental shelf would increase the use of Canadian seamless tube and other metal products.

The oil and gas bill that we worked so hard on in committee last year contains a provision that requires companies going into oil and gas production in the Canada lands to submit a plan to utilize the maximum Canadian content. In the North Sea development in the United Kingdom in the early '70s, there was only 25 per cent content required. In the course of a decade, that has been increased to 75 or 80 per cent United Kingdom content. That was achieved by having a team work with the oil and gas exploration, production and development companies and another team of about 100 people working with the actual British suppliers. It is a good model, one which Canada will be able to utilize as Hibernia and other similar areas beyond the 12 mile limit come into production.

If we look at our own situation, 85 per cent of the goods and services used in offshore exploration are imported. The rigs come from the U.S., so they naturally deal with their own suppliers. In fact, all this equipment is coming into Canada duty free because it is beyond the 12-mile limit.

So I think it is important that the government act immediately, and I am sure the parliamentary secretary will want to announce something just as soon as possible in this regard. The U.S., the U.K. and Norway have all extended their customs regulations to include the continental shelf, and it just seems to be common sense that Canada do the same in order to assist the steel industry.

We do not actually have production in those areas yet, but we will during the course of the decade, and while we are exploring in areas such as Hibernia we should extend the regulations so that the equipment will have a much higher Canadian content. I am hoping the government will move on this. I do not have an actual estimate on the economic benefits in terms of dollars and jobs, but I am sure that we are talking about literally millions, perhaps hundreds of millions, in goods and services which could be Canadian. We are certainly talking about literally hundreds of jobs in a steel industry which requires them right now in Canada.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for raising this issue in such a thorough and very practical fashion. The Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières) advised the hon. member that the extension of Customs jurisdiction is under very careful study by the government at this time. The study is well advanced and a full policy statement on the matter should be issued soon. At that time we will also be able to announce what we have decided to propose by way of changes in our coastal trade policy and measures of assistance for the shipbuilding industry. Much of this will have a direct bearing on the steel industry and the concerns raised by the hon. member.

Extending Customs jurisdiction beyond the 12-mile limit involves not only the application of regular duty rates from the Customs tariff, but also the provisions for anti-dumping and countervailing duties which can be applied when dumped or subsidized foreign goods cause or threaten to cause injury to Canadian manufacturers. The use of subsidized interest rates to finance the sale to Canada of various kinds of capital equipment is one of the problems we are looking at in this connection. The government has received representations on this issue, not only from the hon. member for Algoma, who has done it so well tonight, but also from the steel and shipbuilding industries, urging Canada to extend its tariff and other protective measures to the outer limits of the continental shelf so that Canadian producers can take full advantage of the economic opportunities presented by offshore resource-related activities. We shall have to decide the scope of activities covered by any extended customs regime. Canadian legislation relating to the fishery already extends beyond the 12-mile limit. I am sure the hon. member for Algoma would agree that foreign fishing vessels operating in our economic zone in compliance with Canadian fishery laws should not be subject to Canada Customs laws. Under international law we also permit innocent passage through the waters over the Canadian continental shelf.

The hon. member is quite right that a number of other countries have already extended their Customs regimes to their offshore economic zones, and it would certainly be within Canada's rights to take parallel action. This has important ramifications for his riding and the voters and workers who live there, and I congratulate him for raising this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.36 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PROVISION OF SHELTER FOR VICTIMS OF FAMILY VIOLENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs tabled in this House on May 6, 1982, its third report—an inquiry into violence in the family. Among its many recommendations the committee calls on this government "to appropriate initial capital costs of new emergency shelters and funds for second stage housing" to offer protection and security to the thousands of Canadian women who are victims of domestic brutality. In light of financial obstacles facing emergency shelters, including Anselma House, a shelter for battered wives in the Waterloo riding, arising from CMHC's refusal to allocate funds for their second stage housing project, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That this House urge the government to adopt the committee recommendation regarding second stage housing without delay and thereby demonstrate concern for victims of family violence.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEMAND FOR BAN ON FUNGICIDE CAPTAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Health and Welfare Department still demands the banning of the fungicide Captan because it is a cancer-causing agent and a danger to health; whereas the Department of Agriculture proposals will not effectively reduce public exposure to Captan; whereas a study by the Department of the Environment called for the transfer of registration of pesticides from the Department of Agriculture to a less biased agency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House instruct the government to institute an immediate ban on the domestic use of Captan, significantly reduce acceptable residue levels of Captan on fruit and vegetables, and convene a parliamentary inquiry into the registration process of pesticides and other chemical products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUTURE USE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, since February of this year I have put five questions to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), and introduced three motions on behalf of the people of the Chatham-Newcastle area, with reference to the government's decision to neuter CFB Chatham and destroy approximately 3,500 jobs in the process—all to no avail. After mammoth representations, including a delegation from the provincial Liberal Party, the government has made a colossal statement that the base will retain "some" military functions. I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the government indicate if it is their intention to set up a retirement home for outdated tanks and leaky cruisers, a military museum where most of the Armed Forces gear could now go, or a memorial to those brave souls of the region who did not want to go down with the ship.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST THAT LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION DISBAND CERTAIN PARTY ELEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Clark) publicly restated his support for the policy on bilingualism during his visit to Chicoutimi yesterday, and whereas the same day, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) objected to the hiring of francophone staff for shops at Toronto Airport, and whereas the hon. members for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and York North (Mr. Gamble) both object to the special francophone recruitment program in the public service, I move, seconded by the member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau):

That the Tory leader get rid of the elements in his party which refuse to consider French Canadians as one of the two founding peoples of Canada, and that he order those party elements to stop objecting to every measure aimed at improving the status of francophones in this country and making the insulting allegation that this would increase the burden on the taxpayer.

AIRPORTS

DISMISSAL OF PARKING LOT ATTENDANTS AT VANCOUVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of a recent decision taken by the Ministry of Transport to reject the lowest and all bidders for the provision of parking lot attendant services at Vancouver International Airport, a decision which led to the heartless termination yesterday of employment for 20 persons, including a number of new Canadians and middle-aged women supporting unemployed or handicapped husbands and their children, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

• (1410)

That the Minister of Transport be urged by this House to give the parking lot employees at Vancouver International Airport a six-month minimum extension of work at the airport or that he arrange alternative employment for them so that they may continue to support their dependent families.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—OBSERVANCE OF BAN ON EXPORT OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, on April 12 the cabinet announced its decision to ban the import of all goods of Argentine origin as well as the export to Argentina of those goods and components which could be used as instruments of war. In contradiction of this policy, however, Canada has imported wood products into British Columbia from Argentina by way of a vessel of Argentine registry, the Entre Rio, with the shipper on Canadian customs control showing as Nassau, Bahamas, and, further, Canada has exported to Argentina in one shipment alone 400 tons of ammonium nitrate of 90 per cent strength which can be remanufactured as explosives which could be used against the British forces in the south Atlantic. In view of this contradiction of Canada's stated policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House call upon the government to enforce its so-called policy of banning Argentine imports and the export of those products of a war capability, including nuclear fuel bundles, because the strength of Canadian support for the British operations in the Falklands is being seriously undermined.

Whereas June 5, 1982, will be the 150th anniversary of an act passed in the Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada, granting persons of the Jewish religion all the rights and privileges of other subjects, and particularly the right to hold public office, and whereas the granting of full political rights to Jews did not take place until 1850 in the United States and until 1857 in Great Britain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CONDEMNATION OF SUPPORT FOR CANDU REACTOR PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last night the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) finally admitted that nobody outside Canada wants to buy a Candu reactor and that there is no further demand for nuclear electricity in Canada at the present time. However, after finally arriving at these two earth-shattering conclusions, the minister proposed a new nuclear energy export plan by saying:

> The Government of Canada believes that the Candu option should be preserved, if only to keep Canada's nuclear option open.

Therefore, in order to accommodate the irrational affection for the Candu demonstrated by the minister and his obsession with "preserving" this, the penultimate dodo of the great Canadian megaprojects, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

> That the government scrap its latest Candu bail-out scheme of building reactors in Canada to sell nuclear electricity risk-free to the United States and, rather, that it satisfy the minister's nuclear obsession by pickling one last Candu and presenting it to the radiant minister for his own personal use and enjoyment.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PRICES OF OIL PRODUCTS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like to congratulate him for finally having the courage to admit in public that his program was a disaster which needed changing. We are very pleased to see the changes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1415)

Mr. Hawkes: In the document on the energy update, the minister does not make it clear that oil prices will be going up. By January 1, 10 per cent of the oil used in this country will be subjected to a new, higher price. I should like to ask the minister why he did not make that clear in the document. Can he tell us today, in terms that Canadians can understand, how much per gallon the price of oil and oil products will go up as a consequence of the new prices contained in his latest document?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am glad to receive the congratulations of the hon. member although I would argue that they are certainly ill-founded, but one has to take small graces from Tory members.

I want to tell my hon. friend that the text of the document is quite clear. I am surprised that it took him that long to find out that an additional price would be paid for oil discovered between 1974 and 1981. That is spelled out quite clearly in this particular document, and every single journalist that I read got that point quite clearly. I fail to see why my friend had such difficulty finding it out.

As far as the question he asked is concerned, I am pleased to advise him that not only do we not expect any increase in the petroleum compensation charge in January to cover the cost of these particular changes, but in effect we expect a decrease in the petroleum compensation charge.

PRICE OF IMPORTED OIL

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the minister is saying that maybe by January taxes will go down, but I would point out to him that the price of oil will go up. If he had told Canadians last night that the price of oil was to be increased five cents per gallon, that would be the kind of clarity they could understand.

May I move on to suggest that the program would not have been changed if there had not been a perceived need for change, so it is an admission of mistake.

May I ask the minister why he did not deal with the following situation. In Canada today, tax dollars are used to provide a subsidy on oil imported from Mexico of $18 per barrel, which makes that oil $9 per barrel cheaper than the Canadian produced product. We need the jobs in Canada, and we need the money in Canada, so why did the minister not take the opportunity last evening to make sure that Canadian oil would be sold at a price comparable to imported oil? Why did he leave a policy in place which provides that imported oil will become cheaper than Canadian oil, while jobs and money are chased out of the country? Why did he leave that system in place?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it was for the good reason that my hon. friend is as wrong on the second question as he was on the first. On the first point I want to remind him again that, because the price of international oil has not increased as much as had been anticipated, we will be able to finance the changes announced yesterday within and at prices which will be below those forecast in the agreement with the province of Alberta that my friend was cheering last September. We are going to end up with prices lower than those anticipated under the agreement. That is clear.

The hon. member referred to Mexican imported oil, but I would remind him that we import oil from many countries such as Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, and others. As a matter of fact Mexico is only a small contributor to our total imports.

We have indicated that we took steps last month to reduce the quantity of shut-in oil in western Canada. In May and in June the level of shut-in oil will be as low as it has ever been in the past. In addition, yesterday we announced some measures whereby the companies are prohibited from buying on the spot market and will have to limit themselves to the minimum levels covered under the term agreement, in order to ensure that Canada will find itself able to get its supplies in the future if we ever run short of oil again. That is reasonable management of our energy policy and not, I am afraid, the kind of rhetoric in which my friend tries to indulge.

• (1420)

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, Mexican oil is the only oil bought by this minister, and that is why it is of special interest.

FINANCE

QUERY RESPECTING LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last night the Minister of Energy told us that the Minister of Finance is going to be short $25 billion—that is twenty-five thousand million—in the next five years. It can be recovered by cutting expenses, increasing taxes, or borrowing more and driving up interest rates. Can the Minister of Finance assure this party and the Canadian people that he will not raise interest rates in an attempt to cover up the mistakes made by the Minister of Energy? Can we have your assurance that—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has made any mistakes. Quite the contrary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: But I assure the hon. member that I propose to do everything possible to bring down interest rates.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REASONS FOR DECLINE IN OIL CONSUMPTION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. World demand for oil has dropped 15 per cent in the last two years. The minister repeatedly tries to make the case that the 7 per cent reduction in oil consumption in Canada is due to his substitution and conservation efforts, when really this is only a fraction of the decline. The major factor in the decline is the loss of GNP due to high interest rates, farm failures, resource industry decline, and a lack of new homes being built.

Last night the minister admitted that he did not understand the needs of the oil industry. Will he admit today to this House that, in co-operation with the Minister of Finance, the major success of his National Energy Program in reducing oil consumption has been accomplished by forcing Canadians into the poorhouse?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, frankly we have another example of the amazing rhetoric of the Tories. The decline in crude oil consumption last year in Canada was 6.7 per cent. That took place at a time when the Canadian economy was growing in real terms by 3 per cent. That was not a time of recession, it was a time of economic growth in the economy in 1981. The record is there; the GNP grew by 3 per cent last year. Last August we had the lowest unemployment rate in five years.

In spite of that record of economic growth we managed, through conservation and substitution, and with the help of the program set up by this government and the co-operation of the Canadian people, to reduce our oil consumption by almost 7 per cent. That is a good record.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, if the minister will stop his rhetoric and take a look at the GNP for the last two quarters of 1981, and then try to repeat the same statement in the House, I will apologize. Otherwise, I think he should, because it was minus .9 per cent.

PROJECTED OIL DISCOVERIES—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. Consumers and businesses across Canada have been asked to pay for energy products at prices which are often higher than their American counterparts, in spite of the fact we were promised energy prices no higher than 75 per cent of world levels. This was supposed to be part of the program to achieve self-sufficiency.

In light of the fact that, according to the minister's own projection, there would be no new oil discovered in Canada in 1982; in light of his failures with Alsands, Cold Lake and the Alaska gas pipeline, will he promise to give this House his resignation if his projections for 1983 are not realized? If by 1983 we have not discovered 177,000 barrels of new oil per day, I think he should offer his resignation to this House, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, again I find it rather strange that when I answered the previous question by saying that the Canadian economy grew by 3 per cent in real terms in 1981, the retort of my hon. friend was to say that it did not grow as much in the first two quarters. My friend has to look at the whole year. For the whole of last year we had a real growth of 3 per cent, and the hon. member should at least be honest enough to recognize that fact, a fact which everyone has recognized.

• (1425)

As far as oil discoveries are concerned, I remind the hon. member that for the first time since 1970 there has been an establishment of oil reserves in the last two years of 1.3 billion barrels of oil. That is in addition to the reserves of oil in this country found by the discovery and the establishment of the commercial viability of Hibernia. For the first time since 1970 we have been able to add to the reserves of oil in Canada. I am confident that in the next few months and, as a matter of fact, in the next few weeks, my friend may have good news about additional reserves, and I hope he will stand up and congratulate us at that time.

SCHEDULED JULY INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the fall the government has done a complete about face on its energy program. Between the federal government in Ottawa and the government of Alberta an additional $7 billion has now been given to the oil companies. When is the government going to do something for the Canadian consumer? Specifically, will the minister approach the energy ministers in the producing provinces with a view to negotiating the elimination of the 7 cents per gallon increase that is scheduled to come about on July 1?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the objectives of the energy program have been maintained. Not only have they been maintained, but they have been strengthened. We are determined to achieve self-sufficiency in this country. We are determined to enlarge Canadian participation in the industry, and we are determined to maintain fair prices for Canadian consumers. Under the program it has been established that Canadians will have the lowest energy prices of any industrialized country in the world. That is the record, and that record will be maintained for the Canadian people.

As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, rather than going to the ministers of energy of the producing provinces I would rather go to the energy ministers of the consuming provinces. For instance, the province of Quebec has raised its taxes by 210 per cent in the last four years at the expense of the consumer.

Mr. Siddon: You have done it too.

Mr. Lalonde: It is in that sphere where some of the largest increases have taken place.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy knows full well it is the trend in energy prices that counts. In the United States the price is downward in terms of energy cost, and so is the rate of inflation. In Canada the price of energy has gone up, and so will inflation. The minister should understand that. Considering that the 7-cent per gallon increase on July 1 will cause an increase in the Canadian cost of living by a full percentage point, together with a loss of 25,000 jobs to the Canadian economy, why does the minister not tell the House of Commons today that he will approach the ministers of the producing provinces with a view to bringing a break in financial terms at long last to the Canadian consumer?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the experience in the United States. I remind him that even with the increases we have known, the blended price for a barrel of oil in this country which comes from the refinery is less than 80 per cent of the international price, and less than 80 per cent of the price in the United States.

If there are additional increases taking place at the pump, much of that is due to provincial retail sales taxes. Saskatchewan and Alberta have no retail sales tax on gasoline. Quebec's retail sales tax on gasoline is 40 per cent, and Ontario's retail sales tax on gasoline is 20 per cent. The percentage varies from province to province. Even with the increases forecast, not for July 1, because they will only come into effect in September, Canada's price for a barrel of oil will still be well below international prices and well below prices in the United States.

On the other hand, the federal government does not control provincial tax, and it is up to each provincial government to decide what is appropriate in that regard. This is where the difference may show up between certain states in the United States and as well in some provinces in Canada, for instance. But, as a whole, when it comes to the price of oil from the refinery, Canadians now get the lowest prices in the industrialized world, and they will continue to get the lowest prices in the industrialized world.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the minister knows full well that the economy is in a terrible tailspin and that the increases which are coming in July, when they go into effect in September, will cost us thousands of jobs and result in an increase in the cost of living. Also the minister knows that the Government of Canada and the government of Alberta have given $7 billion more to multinational oil companies.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON BEHALF OF CONSUMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the minister again why he does not do something to stimulate the economy and to help Canadian consumers by negotiating a price downward movement instead of an upward one? Will he tell the House that the real reason he is not willing to act for consumers but is willing to act for oil companies is that the oil companies have literally given hundreds of thousands of dollars in the past decade to the Liberal Party?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend must be scraping the barrel and really running short of arguments. First of all I should like to tell him that getting that industry going will create jobs in the country, not only in Alberta but all over the country. It is not by running any particular industry into the ground that my hon. friend will create jobs, despite all his rhetoric and despite what the CLC may say. the money which has been given, or the concessions which have been made by the government of Alberta are quite significant, as he indicated. We, the Government of Canada, have made some adjustments yesterday to the tune of over $2 billion. Most of that money will not go to the multinationals; it will go to small Canadian companies. Most of them are Canadian companies. These are the companies which will be helped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Most of that money will go to those companies in the next 18 months when the Canadian economy needs stimulation. That is what we have to do to help job creation in the country, and not do as the NDP would do and scrape the barrel.

DECLINE IN EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Today the Canadian dollar dropped to the lowest level in recorded history in reference to the American dollar. This drop in the dollar represents a total lack of confidence in the Canadian economy. Despite the minister's efforts last week at increasing our interest rates while American rates went down, despite his massive influencing of the market, with the Bank of Canada today at noon bidding heavily against the drop, where are we going in the country with confidence? Will the minister tonight, or this afternoon, request the unanimous consent of the House to speak on motions to outline to the people of Canada where we might be going?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has made some reference to the Canadian dollar. I think it is worth pointing out to him that what is happening is basically not a general weakening of the Canadian currency in international currency markets. The Canadian currency is rather strong in comparison with other currencies, apart from the United States dollar. I should point out to him, so that he will keep the matter in perspective, that at the present time the American dollar is at a five-year high in relation to the Japanese yen and the German mark which are regarded as rather strong currencies. The Canadian dollar against the American dollar is performing better than most other currencies on international markets.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that at noon today the Bank of Canada was using massive amounts of our foreign exchange to prop up the Canadian dollar.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, will the minister confirm that he has or has not drawn on our credits with American banks to support the dollar? In other words, will he come clean with the people of Canada and tell us where we are going? Will he do that on motions tonight, after the markets have closed, to give the country some sense of confidence?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member is doing his utmost to create a lack of confidence in the Canadian currency and its performance.

Mr. Crosbie: You do not need any help, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: If there is any source of uncertainty, it is coming from the lachrymose comments of the hon. member at the present time. I have confidence in the Canadian dollar. It is not the intention of the Government of Canada to encourage a devaluation of the Canadian currency. He ought to look at what is happening in international currency markets at the present time. He ought to realize that the American dollar is strengthening against all currencies, including the Canadian dollar. When he puts that in its proper prespective, I hope he will withdraw the rather fearsome comments he has made in his last two questions.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN COMMITTEE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He may have confidence in the Canadian dollar, but Canadians do not have any confidence in him. One of the reasons is his own track record. Yesterday in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the minister announced that he would be borrowing billions of dollars more to cover the deficit. I asked him specifically whether that news would depress the Canadian dollar, and he said that it would not. Given the fact that the dollar is dropping like a stone, how could the minister be so wrong?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Well, Madam Speaker, I think that I was totally right because I do not believe either the hon. member's question or my answer saw the light of day in any place except the report of the committee, which will come out in several weeks.

Miss Carney: The Minister of Finance has more confidence in committee reports than I do. I was talking about the judgment of the Minister, and obviously his judgment was wrong.

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the changes which the minister announced yesterday in his continuing budget striptease. I understand that the changes he announced yesterday bring to about 28 the number of changes that have been made. He is offering tax relief to people buying small tools, metric scales, uniforms, bed linen, and even encouraging the purchase of art by dead Canadians as well as living Canadians. In view of the terrible economic conditions, when will the minister replace these small change items with some big ticket changes to capital cost allowances to encourage the construction of new plant and equipment and to revive job opportunities in the Canadian economy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member belittles the changes which were made in the capital cost allowance. I advise her that these changes are regarded as important by those who have requested that they be made, including a large number of members of the House of Commons and representatives of private industry. Perhaps the hon. member ought to inform herself more clearly on this matter, as well as the fact that her question and my answer yesterday were not reported anywhere that I could see and, therefore, had absolutely no effect upon international currency exchange markets.

DISASTERS

NEW BRUNSWICK FORESTRY FIRE—MILITARY ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the raging forest fire in New Brunswick. I wonder whether the minister could inform the House what type of assistance the military might be prepared to give, and whether indeed it is providing any assistance—

Mr. Fraser: Send the navy.

Mr. Harquail: This is a serious question. The hon. member for Vancouver South should appreciate that forest matters and forest products are very important to the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, while I am on my feet, and without further interruptions, I wonder whether I could learn from the Minister of National Defence just what assistance the military might be able to provide, with manpower and equipment, to contain this fire and protect that important natural resource.

• (1440)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Armed Forces are in the service of all Canadians. We were notified of the forest fire on Sunday evening and as soon as we were requested by the civil authorities, we supplied all the resources we could. At the moment we have 312 troops there, 56 vehicles, and four helicopters helping the people in the region of Beaverbrook Lake and the Miramichi. We are very glad to do it.

FEDERAL EXCISE TAX—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government of Alberta has given $5 billion to the oil companies, and the minister's government gave them $2 billion last night. Is the minister prepared to do something for the consumer? That is all that we are asking him to do, to give a quid pro quo to the consumer. More specifically, is he prepared to review the federal excise tax? He cannot blame Quebec or any other province for the federal excise tax. Second, is he prepared to renegotiate a pause in the increases in oil price that are to happen—approximately 7 cents a gallon in July? Those are two concrete suggestions to help the consumer. Why does he not do something for the consumer, because the National Energy Program is no longer working for the consumer?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, frankly, my hon. friend must not have read the National Energy Program, the agreement of last September, or the document that we released yesterday. The document which was released yesterday indicates that, thanks to the price schedule that is in the National Energy Program, in the agreement with Alberta I should say, and which is in effect at the present time, as an average, between 1981 and 1986, Canadian consumers—every man, woman and child in Canada—are going to save $2,500 in energy savings because they do not have to pay international prices. This is what this government has achieved. This is what the Canadian consumers will benefit from.

I am afraid that my hon. friend must be wearing blinders day and night if he cannot see that. I must tell him that we will indeed continue to benefit in this country from the lowest prices of any industrialized country in the world. That is the situation, and I am sorry if my hon. friend cannot see it.

Mr. Waddell: I have a supplementary for the arrogant Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I invite him to go to my riding where the average person is paying from $700 to $1,100 for heating oil, an increase in the last year, and has paid from $600 to $900 this year to drive a car, and where the price of energy has gone up 30 per cent for people, including those on fixed incomes. He should get out of his ivory tower and go down among the people to ask them what they think of the program.

SOURCE OF FUNDING ASSISTANCE FOR OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Every day we ask the Prime Minister in the House whether he is prepared to find some money to aid in health care or education—money for the provinces—and to find money for jobs. How is the Prime Minister's government able to find $2 billion to help the oil industry—mostly the large oil industry in this country—when it cannot find money to help the unemployed and the people who need health care?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I may remind the hon. member that as a result of the National Energy Program and the agreements concluded with Alberta, every Canadian will benefit from a net savings of $2,500 between 1981 and 1986. The hon. member referred to the home heating bill for someone living in Vancouver. Now, if that same person were living south of the border, in the United States, it would cost him 25 per cent more to heat his home today, and I do not know how much if he were living in a country other than the United States. That is the situation. We are not saying that energy is cheap in Canada. We are not saying that prices are not going up, but we must live with the realities of the world we are in today. At the present time, Canadians are paying the lowest prices of any industrialized country in the world, and this will continue to be the case during the next four years, thanks to the measures taken by this government. I wish my hon. colleague would acknowledge these facts. As far as assistance to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Sunbury.

STATUS OF WOMEN

COMMITTEE REPORT ON FAMILY VIOLENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has he had an opportunity to consider the recommendations made in the report on wife battering which was recently tabled in the House? If so, what is the intention of his government with respect to the implementation of these important recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, indeed, the government has seized itself with this report which reveals a very distressing situation in Canada, and one which is something of a blot on our society. I have had occasion to verify the actions taken by various departments. It would seem that in just about every area contained in the recommendations, the ministers have taken action or are at the point of taking action.

The hon. member was courteous enough to send me notice of his question. I have a short list of areas where ministers are taking action. The Solicitor General has been looking into ways of establishing training programs, particularly in sensitizing the forces to the special problems—

Mr. Clark: Table it. Order. He should table it.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am not sure what is worrying the Leader of the Opposition at this time.

Mr. Clark: Table the answer. He has got a long list; let him table it.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition wants his members to ask written questions, we will give written answers. But if they are allowed the courtesy of giving verbal questions, we will give verbal answers. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. Clark: You are reading a list.

Mr. Trudeau: I think that many of the debates in the House, and question period itself, would be much more serious if we did proceed by way of written questions and written answers, and with notices of questions. I am prepared to discuss that situation.

Mr. Clark: You will abuse it like you are abusing this.

Madam Speaker: Order. I believe the question was on a different matter.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Prime Minister for the encouraging answer.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question which might elicit, in abbreviated form, the information he was attempting to give us. Is it the intention of the government to treat its response to the recommendations in the report as a high priority?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, yes. As I say, the ministers are already engaged in ways of following up on that report. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, for instance, has been encouraging the use of CAP funds to establish shelters for battered wives, and the minister has already established a family violence clearing house which can have as its mandate, resource information, research, where to turn for help, and such other matters.

In other areas like the recommendation on federal-provincial consultation, this has not begun yet, of course, but the Minister of Justice meets annually with his counterparts and it is his intention to raise this matter with them and to look at the report on this subject with the attorneys general of the provinces. There are many other areas which are under examination and we would be happy to discuss them with the hon. member at another time.

FUTURE OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It is interesting to see the antagonism and the disagreement on such an issue as are apparent on the government side with respect to the future of Dorval and Mirabel airports. Since the President of the Treasury Board has a direct interest in the financial viability of Mirabel and also jurisdiction over many of the public servants connected with it, as well as being a Montreal member, will he attempt to resolve the problem and bring some rationale into the continuing operation of both these airports? What is his solution?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as this is one of my responsibilities I want to assure the House that I received representations from the President of the Treasury Board as I have from many other hon. members, if not all hon. members, from the Montreal area.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE SOLUTION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I will go right to the top. I am going to the Prime Minister. I know he has a logical solution as he has a solution for most of the problems which beset this country.

An hon. Member: Don't say you are going to the bottom!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: The Prime Minister knows that Mirabel airport has been a financial, agricultural and commercial disaster, and that it is a problem which cries out for a quick and rational solution. He also is aware, for example, that a delegation of several concerned and angry municipal politicians from his area met again on Monday. Therefore I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he can finally bring an orderly and rational end to this continuing controversy which is doing no one any good, not the industry, nor the area, nor even his own caucus.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I must say that the hon. member is fortunate in that his own Quebec caucus does not seem to be divided on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): In unity there is strength.

Mr. Broadbent: Like your western caucus.

Mr. Trudeau: But certainly on this side there are very vigorous hon. members from different areas of the province who are presenting conflicting points of view, and it is the job of the caucus, under the leadership of the excellent minister, to find, as the hon. member hopes, a rational solution to the subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BILINGUALISM

ENFORCEMENT AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question, too, will be directed to the Minister of Transport, if I can get his attention. Private concession operators at Toronto airport, but not at Mirabel, are being coerced to implement an involuntary, forced bilingual personnel policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: This directive will lead to the dismissal of present employees who are unilingual. It is an affront to the merit system, and reduces unilingual Canadians in an overwhelmingly English province to the status of second-class citizens. It will mean, also, that our shop operators will have increased overhead costs. In places—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member really think that that is a question? This is question period.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, it is very important to Italian Torontonians. I would ask the minister, what is the nature of the legal action which will be taken against concession operators who fail to comply, and will this language policy be extended to other airports such as Vancouver, Calgary and Winnipeg, under federal jurisdiction? Will it be extended to other free entreprise operators within Canadian federal institutions?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is in Canada an Official Languages Act.

[English]

There is an Official Languages Act in Canada—

[Translation]

—and in my department, as in other departments, we are trying to implement this legislation as it applies to aviation, and that includes the particular case we have here of concession operators in airports. We are trying to do this as realistically and as responsibly as possible, and that is why, as far as airport concessions are concerned, we have established three categories: (a), (b) and (c), according to the demand for use of the other official language. We are applying the legislation by diplomatic and responsible means, through agreements signed with the concession operators. The agreements contain requirements the concession operators must meet.

Therefore, when these measures are implemented, we are, in fact, applying the terms of the contract. There are problems, and we are trying to solve these, but in most cases we have been remarkably successful by using persuasion instead of simply enforcing the regulations.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party is the party that champions human rights, but obviously not language rights. I would like to ask the minister if he considers that that will happen with the CNR, too.

EFFECT ON UNILINGUAL ENGLISH-SPEAKING CITIZENS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister one further question. Is this not a divisive policy, in view of Quebec's bill 101 which denies language rights for Canadians? By 1984 or 1985, will it mean the young people of nine out of ten provinces will be precluded from jobs because they are not bilingual—as an example, in these buildings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I feel you will find many examples. Not too long ago I had the occasion to serve on a commission that gave me that opportunity. The hon. member will find that in many parts—all parts of Canada—

Mr. Clark: What happened to its recommendations?

Mr. Pepin: —there are a great number of people who are certainly fundamentally devoted to the implementation of bilingualism in this country.

An hon. Member: Like Jack Horner.

Mr. Pepin: We think that what we are doing in the Department of Transport is right, given that objective which is shared by the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

DEVELOPMENT OF HEAVY-OIL UPGRADER IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister is no doubt aware that a consortium in Saskatchewan, which includes Saskoil and Petro-Canada, is proposing to build a heavy-oil upgrader near Moose Jaw. In light of all the announced tax changes last night, such as earned depletion and others, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether any of these tax changes can be applied against the development of a heavy-oil upgrader in the province of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in the National Energy Program published in 1980 we provided some funds to support the development of upgraders in Montreal and Saskatchewan. Those funds are still part of the energy envelope and are still available. In addition, the changes we announced last night will mean that there will be more money in the hands of the corporations. This will improve that cash flow of corporations. This way they will be in a better position to proceed with that particular project.

Finally, I understand that the new government of Saskatchewan, which I am also wishing well, is considering substantial changes to the royalty level in Saskatchewan. I remind my hon. friend that the royalty level in Saskatchewan is the highest in Canada. As a matter of fact it is one of the highest in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I think it is high time that the royalty level be changed if we want to see progress and action in the oil and gas field in Saskatchewan.

PARTICIPATION BY GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, in other words there is nothing in the tax changes which could be applied toward the building of the heavy-oil upgrader itself in the province of Saskatchewan. It is like building a road to the river but building no bridge to cross the river. In light of that I would like to ask the minister whether or not he has had a chance to speak to the new minister of energy in Saskatchewan. Has the minister received a commitment from the minister of energy in Saskatchewan that Saskoil must still put up 25 per cent of the cost of the heavy-oil upgrader? While he is on his feet, can the minister make a commitment to increase

Petro-Canada's share from 15 per cent to at least 25 per cent so that Saskoil and Petro-Canada will hold a majority of shares in that upgrader in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. friend again that I have indicated there is substantial support provided under the National Energy Program for the construction of an upgrader, in the form of a straight grant. Today that is still part of the energy program. Second, the cash flow which will be increased to the industry through the changes we announced last night will help the private sector and Petro-Canada to proceed, if they so desire, with the construction of that particular upgrader. I have not discussed the particular issue to which my hon. friend referred with the Saskatchewan minister. I am not considering making representations for particular changes with regard to actual participation. I would rather leave that to the corporations concerned, that is, Saskatchewan Power and Petro-Canada, to decide the best arrangements.

ASSISTANCE FOR WESTERN SERVICING INDUSTRY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sure that the minister is aware of the very serious situation in the oil and natural gas servicing industry in western Canada, particularly with the near-total collapse of the natural gas servicing industry at Brooks, Alberta, almost totally involving small, independent Canadian operators. Would the minister indicate what specific help is now available for this sector as a direct result of his statement last night, quite apart from the recent Alberta announcement? Would the minister also indicate whether he sees any significant increase in the short-term possibility of natural gas exports to the United States?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the announcement last night included $2 billion. I indicated that over half of that amount would go to the industry in the next 18 months and that a large share of that amount would go to small Canadian companies which have proven to be the most active reinvestors. It is fair to assume that those companies would show the same dynamism in the next few months as they have shown historically in the past. This should have a positive effect on the service industries in Alberta. As a matter of fact, some contact that we had with some representatives of that industry this morning indicated that they were very supportive indeed of the steps that we took yesterday.

As far as the export of natural gas is concerned, I cannot promise my hon. friend that there will be substantial increases very shortly. As my hon. friend knows, the National Energy Board has approved new ways of determining the surplus and it will consider applications for additional exports. I think we will have to wait until the latter part of this year to know whether the Board will approve the further exports or not.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, following last night's discussion on the report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, there has been a discussion with party representatives and we have come to a compromise. If the following motion is accepted by unanimous consent, as seems to be the case, then a member of the committee will table the fifth report of the committee, and not the sixth. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development be permitted to table its proposed fifth report after this date, provided that the said report is limited to observations on the main estimates, 1982-83 and does not deal directly with the said estimates, which pursuant to Standing Order 58 were deemed to have been reported without amendment on May 31, 1982.

If we have unanimous consent for this motion, Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras) will be tabling the fifth report only.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its consent to this motion?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have no reason to believe that members of this party would withhold the unanimous consent that is necessary, but I do want to express my disappointment that the entire proceedings of the committee are not to be reported back to the House in the way in which the committee handled them.

Motion (Mr. Pinard) agreed to.

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (A) of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 and, in accordance with the provisions of The Constitution Act, 1867, was presented by Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Madam Speaker to the House.

PETITIONS

MR. PATTERSON—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Fraser Valley East. The purpose of the petition, signed by more than 130 members and friends of the Chilliwack Fish and Game Club, is to register their protest against the private member's Bill C-451, regarding gun control legislation, which deals with the number of firearms in circulation in this country and the control of the number of firearms in Canada.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this legislation and deal directly with the present gun laws which are cumbersome, expensive to administer and ineffective except to harass law-abiding people.

MR. IRWIN—SALE OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition of 3,000 names of citizens of Ottawa, collected by Mr. Richard Delaney, requesting the Cabinet not to approve an Ontario Hydro scheme to sell power to General Public Utilities of New Jersey unless proper emission control devices are included. If Canada is to have any credibility in this environmental field, Madam Speaker, then this petition should be considered as seriously as the all-party petition of 139 Members of Parliament and the other place requesting basically the same disposition.

In addition, as well as the petition, the Ottawa Board of Education approved a resolution requesting that the students in science classes be exposed to the petition, discuss the matter and vote. The results of the vote are enclosed with the petition. Seventeen Ottawa schools have responded. One hundred and seventy three are in favour of the present Ontario Hydro proposal, while 4,568 are in favour of imposition of environmental controls as a pre-condition of approval.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—UNINSURED LOSSES

Question No. 2,960—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the uninsured losses of more than $1,000 of equipment recorded by the Department of the Secretary of State for the National Film Board in footnote No. 17 at page 13.4, volume 1 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what circumstances was the film projector lost and (a) who was culpable (b) were any convictions made and, if so, what sentences were imposed (c) are any trials or appeals pending (d) was the equipment replaced (e) did the department undertake steps to ensure that such losses did not recur and, if so, what were they?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows:

1. The projector was loaned to Manitou College, a private Indian corporation occupying premises administered by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as part of the National Film Board's commitment to community development under the government's Challenge for Change program. The college was closed and the premises are now under the administration of the Department of the Solicitor General, which established a penitentiary institution there. The matter of the missing projector was referred to the Department of Justice, which was acting for the above-mentioned two departments to solve problems caused by the closing of the institution. The Department of Justice reported that the projector was not among the assets located on the premises after closing and no trace of the projector was found; their report stated that NFB could consider that it had disappeared, and that it would be impossible to recover the equipment and/or its market value.

(a) See above. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable. (d) No. (e) Yes; more frequent follow-up on equipment on loan.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON PETROLEUM

Question No. 4,177—Mr. Andre:

1. How many times did the National Advisory Council on Petroleum (NACOP) meet during (a) 1981 (b) 1980?

2. How many times did the Business Advisory Council to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce meet during (a) 1981 (b) 1980?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows:

1. (a) and (b) The National Advisory Council on Petroleum has not existed since 1978.

2. Number of meetings in (a) 1981 None. (b) 1980 None. However, meetings were held with many business groups including the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Air Industries Association and the Business Council on National Issues during this period.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise at this time with respect to question No. 4,120 and to draw it to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. The question which is in three parts, Madam Speaker, is not a difficult one for the government to answer. It asks, for each cabinet minister, the names of the executive assistants and other members of exempt staff who are receiving income, from sources other than funds allotted to ministerial budgets, the names of those who receive income, favours, loans or other benefits of value from sources other than those permitted by the conflict of interest guidelines of cabinet ministers and former cabinet ministers. It also questions whether the Prime Minister has supplied every cabinet minister and each executive assistant and all members of the exempt staff with copies of the code of ethics produced by the late Prime Minister Pearson, and with a copy of the conflict of interest guidelines for cabinet ministers and former cabinet ministers.

The parliamentary secretary will understand that the reason for that question is to ensure that the exempt staff of cabinet ministers are receiving payments under ministerial allotments and to determine whether there are any special favours or benefits such as interest-free loans of payments of income from Crown corporations or other government agencies in an indirect way by way of subterfuge which otherwise would not be concealed from public view. I know the matter would be of some embarrassment to the government if it gave a reply. I know that because of the information we now have before us. I ask the parliamentary secretary to do his job and to get these questions, which are straightforward, answered as soon as possible.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with the exact progress which has been made in answering this question, but I will be happy to look in on behalf of the hon. member.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—EXTERNAL RELATIONSHIPS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West) moved:

That this House deplores the failure of the Government to represent Canada properly or adequately in our external relationships or in accordance with the views and principles of the Canadian people specifically by its failure to oppose in any convincing and meaningful way the violation of human rights within Poland and the imposition of martial law therein, by the failure to support the United Kingdom and the rule of law in international affairs by opposing in a meaningful and convincing way the armed aggression of Argentina in its invasion of the Falkland Islands and, this House deplores the failure of the government to strengthen the Department of External Affairs as recommended by the McDougall commission as well as its failure to eliminate all aspects of patronage in the operation of that department.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is more in sorrow than in anger that I rise to speak on this motion. This is an occasion for sorrow among Canadians because of the level to which our external relations have fallen. The motion mentions four particular areas of our foreign policy or our external policy which are the cause of great sorrow and, in fact, can certainly inspire anger as well.

Canada is not a nation which wants to subjugate others through military or economic power. We are a middle-ranking nation which wants stable world order. We want a world order in which we can trade and increase our own wealth and prosper. We want to assist others for humanitarian purposes as well as for our own enlightened self-interest. However, it has become very obvious that we are not any longer a nation which is trusted as an honest broker or even a truth teller or as a nation which could be a trusted go-between. We are a nation which no longer can even defend our own national interests against other small or medium-sized powers. We suffer from impotence with respect to defence. We are unable to defend ourselves even from small or middle level powers, should that become necessary.

The white paper on defence in 1971 was the last such paper, and it said that there were four major areas of activity Canada should involve itself in in defence. The first was surveillance of our own territory and coastlines to protect our own sovereignty. We are no longer in a position even to do that. It would not be a question of Canada's seizing, for example, St. Pierre and Miquelon, if we did desire to do that. It is more a question of whether St. Pierre and Miquelon might seize Newfoundland from Canada. That is the posture into which our military defences have put us, and the state of our navy is not due to any fault of those who serve on those forces but to the fault of a government which is uncaring about that aspect of our national being.

The second priority was said to be the defence of North America in co-operation with U.S. forces. As all hon. members of the House know, we are completely dependent upon the United States of America for our defence, yet we have a government which, having put us into that position, is forever carping and criticizing our defender and making snide comments, feeling itself to be morally superior to the United States of America. We depend on the United States to defend us with their nuclear arms, their military spending and their defence activities, but our government seems to think it puts us in a morally superior position to be defenceless and to depend on the United States of America and then to cavil and criticize them and feel superior to them.

Last night I came across a quotation from Fisher Ames, who said in 1800—and it is certainly true: "Nations that want protectors will have masters." This nation has wanted a protector, and it has a protector—or protectors—but it also has masters, and it is just as well for us to recognize that fact.

Going back to those defence objectives, our third defence objective was to fulfil NATO commitments. All hon. members of the House know we are not fulfilling our NATO commitments in any way, shape or form. We are seriously deficient in that respect.

The fourth objective was supposed to be international peacekeeping. We are attending to our international peacekeeping role to some extent.

Our foreign policy in the last number of years has largely been the creation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who claims to have a special expertise and a special interest in that area. He paints himself as a world leader in that area. However, he has failed to provide any leadership in the foreign policy field. Under his direction the government has taken a very narrow view of our interests in foreign affairs.

Most importantly, in our view this government has failed to express the desire of the Canadian public for moral content and spirit in our foreign policy. Canadians want a foreign policy and they want a government that will take foreign policy stands which project abroad those values that govern us internally, by which we define Canada to ourselves and by which we want to define Canada to the world. We do not believe we can stand for freedom at home while we condone repression abroad. We do not think it is a great accomplishment to have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for Canada, but our government demonstrates hardly any sympathy at all for the loss of those same human rights and freedoms which were being established so painfully in Poland last year under Solidarity.

As a result of the Prime Minister's deficiencies in this respect the government has failed either to lead or to educate Canadians on foreign policy matters. Foreign policy is any little matter the Prime Minister is interested in at the moment. For example, the Prime Minister whined to the United States of America and to the other six powers that comprised the economic summit some years ago because Canada was not to be included. Because Canada pleaded to be included and because the United States took pity on us and our Prime Minister, we were included in the economic summits. We are attending the one which starts this week because the United States of America listened to the pleas of the Prime Minister, who wanted to be included and who will go there this week not to put forward some far-reaching design of Canada's but to whine about United States interest rates and to try to pretend that it is the American economy and American policy which have Canada where it is today economically and which have devastated Canada from one end to the other. He will go there and use that opportunity to try to find a scapegoat in the United States, the very country which made it possible for Canada to attend. That is what foreign policy is in the Trudeau era.

The Prime Minister also does not think much, apparently, of his Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). He does not appear to think he is up to being the spokesman for our foreign policy or external affairs generally. When that minister has taken that occasional stand, he has inevitably been contradicted by the Prime Minister, with the result that our foreign policy is and appears to be contradictory and confused.

What are some examples? One was the response to the Polish imposition of martial law in Poland in December when the Prime Minister took a very easy going approach to that, almost approving—really approving—while the Secretary of State for External Affairs seemed to take his line from Mr. Haig in the United States to take a tougher line. Further confirmation was the supposed reorganization of the Department of External Affairs on January 12 of this year when this minister was cluttered up with two other ministers hung around his neck like albatrosses. One was the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley). Some people believe that there is an argument to be made for putting those people into the Department of External Affairs. But a third minister, one designated the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. De Bané), the former minister for DREE, has been added. This only causes confusion in the Department of External Affairs. It shows how little the Prime Minister trusts the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why was it necessary to appoint a Minister of State for External Relations? It must be because he has relatives living overseas! One cannot see any other purpose for the appointment.

To top off the insult to the Secretary of State for External Affairs from the Prime Minister, who should be supporting him at all times, in announcing the role of the Minister of State for External Relations the Prime Minister said that the purpose of the appointment was to develop a strategy of our relations with foreign countries and the role of Canada in francophonie, Africa in particular, and so on. Surely to heavens the role of Canada in francophonie and our relations with foreign countries must be decided and defined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, not by some third minister hung around his neck.

Where is the Minister of State for External Relations? When it was necessary to send someone to Cameroon it was not the minister of state in charge of francophonie who was sent but the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal). The Minister of State in charge of nothing from Quebec represented Canada for a week in the Cameroons. We are to have a fourth minister to assist in foreign affairs. The matter would be laughable if it were not so serious. What is left for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to do once our relations with foreign countries and the role of Canada in francophonie and international, social, cultural and humanitarian affairs are removed? What kind of trash is this, Mr. Speaker? The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been cut off from the neck down, if not from the knees up.

The Prime Minister's foreign policy is plagued by contradictions between what he says and what he actually does. In a press conference on May 14 he said that we are 100 per cent behind the British in the Falkland Islands crisis. If Britain had to depend on friends like that, God help the United Kingdom! If we are 100 per cent behind the United Kingdom while we are shipping 3,000 nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina this month—if we are carrying on business as usual, as the cabinet paper stated—is that 100 per cent support for the United Kingdom or is that hypocrisy pure and simple on a gigantic scale?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The government claims that it is bound by a contract with Argentina. I have requested that the contract be tabled but the government refuses. We are told that it is such a strong contract that it cannot be breached. We may forget about war, forget about civil commotion, forget about riots, acts of the Queen's enemies and all the other exceptions that are put in every contract. This is apparently the strongest contract ever entered into on this earth between two sovereign nations. Apparently we cannot break it by stopping the supply of nuclear fuel bundles for a nation that is already proven to be an aggressor and which has used armed force to invade the Falkland Islands. We are to supply that nation with nuclear fuel bundles while at the same time supporting the United Kingdom 100 per cent. If that is 100 per cent support, it is the same kind of support we see the Prime Minister giving the Secretary of State for External Affairs—100 per cent in the back!

In the Korean war days, if we had had a contract with North Korea when it invaded South Korea, would we have carried on with business as usual? It is not likely. If this government had been in power, we might have; but we did not do it when we had men in power. When Germany invaded Poland, for example, would we have continued with our contracts with Germany no matter what it had done on the international scene? I suppose if the Prime Minister had been in power the answer would be yes, but we would not have done that under any other Canadian representing the feelings of the people.

The government has condemned Argentina for violating international law but it is "business as usual" with that government whose own leaked document says that it is going to continue to build a nuclear bomb.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs who is supposed to support the United Kingdom said in response to a question that I put to him that the Canadian government took no position on the question whether Britain had sovereignty over the Falkland Islands. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Senate passed a resolution to the effect that the Falkland Islands were a British colony. It was not afraid to say that Britain has sovereignty over the Falklands, but this government, giving Britain 100 per cent support, will not even say that Britain has sovereignty over the Falkland Islands. That is the kind of support it gives. That is standing against aggression. But then, that is this government all over—hypocrisy of a gigantic dimension.

Have we offered any assistance to Great Britain to help repel armed aggression in the Falkland Islands? No, we have not. Have we offered a ship, as New Zealand has done? No, we have not. Have we offered anything to Britain except pious platitudes? No, we have not. That is disgraceful, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have the Prime Minister's statement and I will elaborate on that.

What about the question of Poland? On February 23, 1982, a feeble list of sanctions against Poland and the Soviet Union was announced. The minister admitted that these were only symbolic and were designed to encourage the martial law regime to live up to its intention to re-establish civil liberties. We called upon Soviet authorities to end martial law, to release those who had been arrested, to restore immediately a dialogue with the church and Solidarity. That is what the minister's press release of February 23 said that Poland should do. The sanctions were designed to strike such fear into the hearts of the Polish government that all this would happen. But has it happened, Mr. Speaker?

I have here a dispatch from Peter Kent, who was jailed several weeks ago in Poland, in which he said that he saw the Polish guards beating Solidarity demonstrators with rubber truncheons in front of his very eyes. Martial law has not been lifted and civil liberties have not been re-established. Martial law still exists and there is no dialogue between the church and Solidarity.

Those sanctions were imposed three months ago. On March 24 we outlined the kind of sanctions that we would have imposed were we in power and these received the full support of the Polish community and the Canadian Solidarity groups. But the government says that it does not want to impose harsher restrictions and that it is going to continue to sell grain to Poland with credit for three-year terms, the most generous credit arrangements we have with anyone. It is going to continue to allow the Polish government to send trawlers into our 200-mile economic zone to take 12,000 tons of fish per year without receiving any return. It claims it is doing that because it wants to help the ordinary Polish people and it does not want to interfere with the supply of food for them. These measures do not hurt the Polish government, Mr. Speaker, but, rather, help it.

If it is necessary for us to assist the Polish people, if they need food, if they need aid, it should go through international agencies of assistance which will see that it is distributed and gets to the people it was meant for. It should not be done in a way that props up the despotism that now rules Poland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have in my hand a letter dated May 12, 1982, from Zygmunt Przetakiewicz.

Mr. Flis: Shame on you. You cannot even pronounce it!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) has turned his back on the Polish community so I do not want to hear from him. Shame on him, sitting over there without protesting while this is happening to the Polish people.

In this letter of May 12 the head of "Solidarity" Information Office in Canada, referring to our proposals of March 24, writes as follows:

> I fervently hope that your proposals will be implemented by the Canadian government as soon as possible.
> I believe that sanctions precisely directed at the Polish and Soviet authorities are the best peaceful means by which we may aid the Polish people's struggle for their rights.

• (1530)

> In this manner our actions would parallel the peaceful resistance of the people in Poland by which they hope to apply sufficient pressure on the Polish authorities to force them to end the state of war, to release all of those arrested and to resume the dialogue between Solidarity and the government—

This has the backing of the Solidarity movement in Canada. The first Pan-Canadian conference of Solidarity had a meeting on April 24 and 25 in Toronto. They made resolution that the Canadian government is obliged to defend human rights now suspended in Poland; that the issues be raised at the UN by Canada; that the Canadian government use moneys put away for Poland to finance the delegation of accountability to verify whether Canadian food exports to Poland are reaching the people. They asked that the Canadian government replace what they call the present symbolic and ineffective sanctions with more meaningful ones, and implement a full range of trade, diplomatic and cultural sanctions against Poland and the Soviet bloc until the state of war is lifted in Poland and human, citizen and trade union rights are reinstated. That is what they have asked for. And if I cannot pronounce that gentleman's name properly, he knows that my heart and support is with him!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: On May 17, Mr. Speaker, I presented those Solidarity resolutions to Parliament exactly as they had been given to me by way of a motion under Standing Order 43. The members on the Liberal side of this House said no and did not permit that resolution to be passed by this House.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crosbie: The party that sits with and supports—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand, and you can correct me if I am wrong, that it is inappropriate and improper to comment on the result of a vote because the hon. member does not know from which side the "no" on those motions comes from. In any event, he is not supposed to comment on them and that is a rule of this House.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am—

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman wants the record set straight in Hansard. When martial law broke out on Sunday, December 13—

Mr. Crosbie: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Flis: Yes, it is. On Monday there was an all-party agreement to a motion which was to be presented in the House on that day. When the motion was brought into the House the Conservatives refused to give it unanimous consent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will have an opportunity to be recognized in the course of debate. The hon. member for St. John's West has the floor.

Mr. Crosbie: the Polish Scarlet Pimpernel has spoken. Mr. Speaker, I have limited time or I would deal with that Polish Pimpernel pretty quickly. However, I want to move on and my next—

Mr. Flis: I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale-High Park is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could check whether that was parliamentary language or not. As a Canadian, I resent being called names like this.

Mr. Crosbie: I retract, Mr. Speaker. Let me leave Poland for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. By the way, the Prime Minister has never retracted his initial statement of December 18 when he said:

> Hopefully the military régime will be able to keep Solidarity from excessive demands.

He was very hopeful about that. What were the excessive demands of Solidarity? Free speech; freedom of movement; freedom to have a free-trade union. Those were the "excessive demands", and our Prime Minister hoped that the military régime would be able to keep Solidarity from those excessive demands. What do they say in Poland? The Globe and Mail reported that one Pole said:

> Your Trudeau, he really did us in.

This illustrates the false hypocrisy of our position in the world, the pirouetting and posturing which goes on under this government.

The Prime Minister made a speech on May 2 at the convocation of St. Francis Xavier University where he warned of a moral void. He spoke of the—> —need for a new code of international morality, a new global ethic to guide the conduct of peoples and of nations, in this new age in which we live.

The person who spoke those noble words is the same person who is selling nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina, no matter what happens in the realm of armed aggression. That is the "new global ethic" of this Prime Minister who speaks in these terms to university graduates and then proceeds to sell nuclear fuel bundles to the military régime of Argentina which is guilty of the most heinous human rights violations, apart from anything else. Do his actions in support of martial law in Poland reflect his new code of "international morality?" If that is the new code, then we have no difficulty in finding out who the architect of that new code is.

There has been an erosion in the moral vigour and direction of our foreign policy which is paralleled by a decline in the status and efficacy of its chief instrument, our foreign service. The Prime Minister cares not a whit about the condition of the Canadian foreign service. The Secretary of State for External Affairs cares not a whit. A royal commission was appointed by the Prime Minister in the person of Pamela McDougall when he himself said that dissatisfaction was prevalent in the foreign service. She reported to the government on October 18, 1981, and what action did the government take? It has taken no action. There was a major reorganization of the department on January 12 about which she was not consulted by the Prime Minister who appointed her. She was not consulted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. She was not consulted by the deputy minister of that department until some time in February or March, I have forgotten the exact date. The minister was satisfied to tell us here in this House that he had nothing to do with the commission, that it was reporting to the Prime Minister. Well, God help Canada if we have ministers in charge of departments who are proud to proclaim that they are doorsteps and footmats for the Prime Minister, and that they do not control or administer their own departments. If that was my department I would have had Miss McDougall in within a week after she gave me that report, and would read it and discuss it with her. Maybe I will never be in that department, but I would not want to be if I had to function as the Secretary of State for External Affairs now functions, like an India-rubber man.

This royal commission report was ignored, Mr. Speaker. What are some of its findings? Tremendously alarming findings were made, and then the minister came into the House and tried to pretend that Miss McDougall did not mean what she said. He was repudiated by Miss McDougall in the committee. I read to her the minister's statements in this House and Miss McDougall said it was a false impression. She stood by, she said, every recommendation and conclusion she came to in the report. On December 17 in this House the minister said:

—that she herself stated that the report puts things out of focus, that on balance it is a good foreign service with good morale. By singling out the various problems . . . this gives an over-all false impression—

That was the answer of the minister to a question by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on December 17, 1981. Then the author of the report came to committee and said that was entirely false, and she stood by all her conclusions. Some of her conclusions were that the morale of this department is shot. There is a huge gap in communications between agencies in the field and the head office. There is a sorry state of communications between Ottawa and missions abroad. There is mistrust, confusion and misunderstanding about the partial consolidation of 1981. There is a crisis of identity and confidence in the foreign service which requires positive counteraction. There is a profound malaise in the foreign service.

This is the commissioner appointed by the Prime Minister, one who is experienced in the service, speaking about the implement through which our foreign policy is carried out. She says there is a failure of management in the foreign service.

The Prime Minister did not care, because the Prime Minister does not care about that department. The Prime Minister makes up his own foreign policy as he goes along, and he has nothing but contempt for the people who work in the Department of External Affairs, and nothing but contempt for the three ministers he put there to play ring-around-the-rosy when there should be one secretary of state in control of Canada's external relations. That is why there is an erosion in the quality of our foreign service and that is why it is in its present condition. So our foreign policy is transformed from an enterprise which should be dedicated to achieving our interests, securing our friendships and preserving peace and the values of the west, into a vehicle for the personal glory of the Prime Minister. Here is what he said at St. Francis Xavier:

Heads of state and of governments ought to work together to forge existing international bodies into an authentic network whose lines of communication will be kept warm by a human current—summitry.

The Prime Minister thinks the answer is for heads of state to meet at the summit. Summitry is the answer to all the world's problems. It is the personalized approach to foreign policy. Canadians wonder whether we have any role to play or if it is all to be done by this magical Prime Minister at the summit.

• (1540)

I want to spend a few moments on patronage in the foreign service, which has been exemplified by the recent appointment of Mr. Erickson to be the architect to design our embassy in Washington. After practising an elaborate deception on the whole Canadian architectural profession in a shameful manner, Mr. Erickson, not recommended as one of the four best by the committee, was appointed by the Prime Minister because he was a pal, a friend of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Smith: That is nonsense.

Mr. Crosbie: Let me say this. If that gentleman had any courage or was the architect he is supposed to be, he would revoke that commission and send it back so that the people who were recommended, the Zeidler firm in Toronto, who were found to be the best by the committee, would get it. What happened is absolutely shameful.

At the very font of our system is the Prime Minister who is supposed to be the leader of this country. But what do we see? We see the kind of action that Louis XIV might have taken as the "Sun King" at Versailles, and that is where the Prime Minister is going on Friday. The procedure followed is what an absolute monarch would do but not a parliamentary government.

The questions posed by the Edmonton Journal on May 12 are the questions we have to ask now. How ethical is it to establish a selection committee which has no real role? How ethical is it to ask for costly submissions by architects for a project they cannot win? How ethical is it for Mr. Erickson to accept the project when a panel has decided that he is not the best qualified to design the embassy?

Mr. Speaker, I believe you are indicating that my time is running out. That is the difficulty when we are on such a vast subject. I speak now of Argentina. There is an old proverb; "He that sups with the devil must have a long spoon." We are supping with the devil by sending nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina. I have another proverb written by Erasmus in 1508: "It is easier to raise the devil than to lay him." The devil that we are raising in Argentina today and with whom we are supping is one with which we will have the greatest difficulty ever laying.

In conclusion, I have to say that we have the weakest foreign policy we have ever had, administered by a Prime Minister and a Secretary of State for External Affairs who are letting this country down badly, who can do nothing of substance, who posture plaintively and humiliate us on the world scene by letting down our friends, comforting our enemies and by inflicting shame on the Canadian people who feel we can do very much better by assisting where we are needed in international affairs.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I thought possibly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) would like to respond to some of the hyperbole we have just heard. If he would like to respond now, I would be willing that he do so.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) may have the floor.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, it strikes me passing strange that the party to my right should be talking about international morality and the absence of it on the part of the government. Mind you, they are quite right. There is no great spirit on the part of the government. But for the Conservative Party to be placing itself in the position of morality in international matters is almost unbelievable. Where was the Conservative Party when many years ago we were talking about the importance of not providing Argentina with a nuclear reactor? Where was the Conservative Party then?

An hon. Member: We were not at war then.

Miss Jewett: We said at that time that Argentina would be on the threshold of developing nuclear weaponry and that if we provided a reactor we might well assist them in developing nuclear weapons. But now hon. members to my right are saying yes, and now they are protesting the sending of nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina. But there was never a word from the Tories about that a year and a half ago. There was never a word about the oppressive, dictatorial, militaristic regime of Argentina a year or so ago. Not a word. Have you ever heard a Tory worry about the people who have disappeared in Argentina?

Mr. Taylor: Do you have a monopoly on it?

Miss Jewett: One or two, perhaps, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) being a case in point. But only one or two in that whole party have ever worried or concerned themselves about the dictatorial regime in Argentina.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You are the epitome of words, I suppose.

Miss Jewett: But now the Tories are talking as if they had somehow all along been in support of criticizing that regime.

Mr. Wenman: What about human rights in Poland?

Miss Jewett: All right. The only country which the Conservative Party has been looking at seriously from a human rights point of view in the last several months has been Poland. All of us have been concerned about the imposition of martial law and the deprivation of rights of the Polish people.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about the Soviet Union?

Miss Jewett: It has been said earlier in this debate that we were prepared to have a unanimous motion in this House deploring the situation there. Where was the Conservative Party when we were talking about martial law in Turkey? Have you ever heard a single Conservative protest martial law in Turkey, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about human rights in the U.S.S.R.?

Miss Jewett: Have you ever heard the Conservative Party as a whole protesting the 30,000 murdered people in El Salvador? Never. The Tories have never said a word about the denial of human rights in Guatemala, El Salvador—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Nicaragua and the U.S.S.R.?

Miss Jewett: As a party they have never taken this position on any country. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) above all has never taken a position in the defence of human rights anywhere in the world. When he says that we want to project fundamental values that we all share in the world, we could not help but agree. But we would like to see it done in practice, not done highly selectively.

Mr. Taylor: We don't support communists.

Miss Jewett: We have supported the arguments made time and time again in this party and in Socialist International in opposition to martial law in Poland. It is all on the record. We have supported the opposition to martial law in Turkey. We have supported the need to refer the human rights question in countries in Latin America and above all in El Salvador to the United Nations. But not the Tories. Don't tell me they are concerned about values concerning human rights.

Mr. Taylor: You know everything.

Miss Jewett: The Tories are not at all concerned about these questions.

The hon. member for St. John's West also spent some time in South Africa. Never have we heard a word from him or from the Tory party as a whole on the question of apartheid in South Africa.

Mr. Crosbie: I was also in Japan and China.

Miss Jewett: Nor have the Tories been very concerned about Namibia. I could go on and on in this vein, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have been concerned about Namibia and SWAPO.

Miss Jewett: We sit here and listen to the utmost hyprocrisy, but we are obliged to take this dog's breakfast of a motion and see what we can pull out of it which might be useful and valuable.

There is no question in the minds of anyone in this party that what the government did in the matter of assigning the design of the new embassy in Washington to a crony of the Prime Minister's was reprehensible. There is no question in our minds about that. Whether or not if the Tories had been in power they would have done the same thing is hypothetical, because they were not in power long enough. But I remember one occasion in the last election campaign when the hon. member for St. John's West complained that when the Tories were in power they had not used the power of political patronage sufficiently.

Mr. Wenman: What about the NDP in Saskatchewan?

Miss Jewett: The hon. member complained that in politics there are times when one should be rewarding one's friends. That was the hon. member for St. John's West in the last election campaign. I am not at all sure that if the Tories were in power they would have done very much differently on that matter.

Mr. Wenman: And the NDP in Manitoba.

Miss Jewett: I am not at all sure either whether the Tories would have listened to Miss McDougall. If the hon. member for St. John's West had been Secretary of State for External Affairs, I am not at all sure that he would have even known that his Prime Minister had appointed a royal commissioner to look into conditions in the foreign service. There is such division and lack of communication in the Conservative Party that he may not even have known.

• (1550)

He did not mention in his motion one of the most serious criticisms made in the McDougall report concerning the conditions faced by spouses abroad and the absence of any adequate female representation and promotion in the Department of External Affairs. When the minister is considering the report, I hope he addresses himself to that matter.

What is most alarming about the motion before us today is that is does not touch upon the most important matter to all humanity today, that is, the arms race. Not a word does it say about what Canada's position might be or should be at the special session on disarmament which will begin next week. Not a word of criticism does it offer about the absence of any follow-up by the Government of Canada on its 1978 strategy of suffocation. There was not a word in this motion about a matter which is on our doorstep and will be the subject matter, as we all know, of a seven-week session of the United Nations. Do we in fact have a policy for the government to follow? There is a good deal of talk that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would be available, would return from his travels on June 14, which is the day allotted for the Canadian speech. Will he go there to speak? Is he likely to speak there when we know that apart from a small glimmer in his speech at Notre Dame University—a speech which was quite at variance with the recent addresses of both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne)—he has no new initiatives for Canada to take to the United Nations and therefore probably will not attend? It would hardly be satisfying to the Prime Minister to announce at the United Nations special session that we would make our major contribution the testing of airborne Cruise missiles.

The government has agreed to postpone the final decision on that testing until after UNSSOD II. However, it seems to me that the government is still very deeply committed, because it is so intimately tied up with American strategic planning, to go ahead with the testing of Cruise missiles. There was not a word of criticism of the government for its lack of ideas, hopes and even dreams in the field of international affairs which is so vital to us all. I suggest the reason for this lack is that in fact, for all the hyperbole of the hon. member on other matters about the great differences between the two parties, there are no great differences between the two parties on these matters.

When the Conservatives were in power in December, 1979 they went along with the NATO decision, without a murmur, to have ground-based Cruise and Pershing IIs in Europe. The Conservative government of the day did not raise a murmur, as did the governments of Belgium, The Netherlands and other countries. In fact, if anything, the Conservatives might even be worse in this intimate tie-in in the nuclear arms field than the Liberals.

Having no real difference, and being Tweedledum and Tweedledee on these matters, the motion before us today did not even raise the matters of arms control and disarmament. It was as if the entire area of arms control and disarmament, about which all Canadians are now talking, is something that the Conservatives have not even heard of, with the exception of two hon. members. If some of the Conservatives here had been at the walk for peace in Vancouver on April 24 and had seen the 35,000 people who were there, if some Liberal Members of Parliament had been there as well, I think they would take a very, very different view on this matter today than they do.

The fact is that the Liberal government has been extremely remiss in almost all aspects of foreign policy. It has allowed Canada's whole orientation to be changed. Ever since 1968 it has abhorred the enormous advances made by the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. It has as much as said—and in fact did say on one occasion in the words of the Prime Minister—that it did not want to be a helpful fixer, a mediator or a power in the world scene which was working for peace, understanding and reconciliation. It has not taken that course but rather has allowed Canada to become absolutely and totally enmeshed in a military strategy and doctrine over which it has no influence or control. As a result of taking that course, it has put itself on the fringes as far as the world scene is concerned.

I wonder what the government knows about the newest document which was leaked in Washington concerning the Pentagon strategy for fighting a long nuclear war. I wonder whether the minister read it. It appeared in the New York Times the day before yesterday. I wonder whether our officials and the minister had any role to play in the development of that document. In case some hon. members have not yet seen it, the document is the new five-year over-all plan of the United States defence department for "fighting and winning" a nuclear war, even though President Reagan a few months ago said that in a nuclear exchange there are no winners. Did our Department of National Defence have any input into this? Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not know, perhaps the Minister of National Defence does not know; in fact they probably do not know.

Since we are so intimately linked with American strategic planning, I ask whether we in fact had any input into the development of this document. I am quite sure the answer is no. Canada has given up the kind of influence it in fact exercised in the 1950s and 1960s. Also it has given up the role, to use James M. Minifie's phrase, of peacemaker and has almost become totally and solely a powder monkey. This is what Canada has done in the last decade.

There are glimmers that the government might yet have Canada play a more independent, more responsible and more useful role in the world. I hope that in the course of the minister's remarks today we may hear something positive and creative, particularly in light of the fact that we will be speaking at the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament on June 14.

• (1600)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at no time in our history has Canada's national principles and interests been so deeply engaged with the world around us. We often sense, with a terrible immediacy, events in the farthest corners of the globe. The international system developed in the post-war world needs constant repair and renovation if it is not to unravel. The interplay of political, economic, military and social changes is dizzying in its speed and dangerous in its potential consequences.

What do Canadians expect of their foreign policy in such a time? Foreign policy constantly embodies the views and principles of Canadians. It is the expression abroad of the nature of our country, of our deeply held values and of our national policies. This government believes that there are a number of principles which Canadians cherish and expect to see pursued at home and abroad. These principles were first laid out in the paper at the beginning of the 1970s and include the fostering of economic growth, the safeguarding of Canada's sovereignty and independence, working for global peace and security, promoting social justice, enhancing the quality of life and ensuring a harmonious natural environment. These are six values to which Canadians are deeply committed as a people in their life abroad as well as their life at home.

In the current period, economic growth and social justice are the priority goals of this government abroad as they are at home. Attention to peace and security and to the rule of international law is surely a fundamental pre-condition to prosperity and justice. The international environment at the present juncture is by no means congenial or conducive to the pursuit of peace and international co-operation. Perhaps the most troubling is the tendency toward persistent crises, toward a failure of mediation and the emergence of problems which spring up beyond the reach of national institutions; problems which slip through the international safety net and threaten violence and injustice.

Canadians expect their foreign policy to work for the good of this country but they also insist that it work for the good of the global community. They realize that Canada cannot pursue its goals in a world of instability. They demand of their foreign policy that Canada make a contribution to world order and harmony.

Canadians expect their foreign policy to address the perplexing issues of the day openly, directly and peacefully. They expect Canada to pull its weight in the world, for example by promoting the independence of Namibia, supporting the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, accepting refugees from oppression, countering the Soviet threat in alliance with traditional partners, working for economic progress in the Caribbean and Central America or deepening our ties with francophone states.

It is against that background of priorities and principles that I now turn to the motion before us. I believe I am speaking on behalf of a middle power, a modest people, but a people with a strong sense of idealism not only for themselves but also for their world. Canadian foreign policy articulates and demonstrates the long-standing Canadian characteristics of moderation, reason and co-operation quickened by concern for our fellow man.

This party is in the mainstream of Canadian opinion with respect to international affairs. It is in the mainstream of western opinion. That cannot be said for either of the parties opposite.

Let us look at their position. Let us take Her Majesty's loyal opposition. Let me cite this incident which occurred at the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on May 4. The mover of the motion for today's debate, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the official critic for his party in that field, attacked the government for not providing military assistance to Britain in the conflict over the Falkland Islands. In the same meeting his Conservative colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), told the committee, "I want some compromise. I want you"—speaking to me—"identifying the nature of the compromise and getting on to that."

One could speak volumes about the confusion that exists in the ranks of the official opposition with respect to foreign policy. One wonders where the members of that party are today. For instance, I had hoped to hear the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) speak of the views of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on the election in El Salvador. It would have been most enlightening for the country to find out where the Conservative Party stands. It would have been interesting to hear the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble)—and perhaps we will—speak of the views on social justice of the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), who knows that I agree with his position but also knows that he unfortunately does not have the support of his own party. It would be interesting to hear the views of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) on the disarmament theories of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). That would be a treat.

Let me give another case in point relating to the hon. member for St. John's West who is, for the moment, the official critic for his party. When asked about the actions of the brief Tory government over the invasion of Afghanistan, this hon. member—obviously stretched to the limits of his understanding of foreign policy—told startled journalists that the Soviet Union had been invited into Afghanistan. Not only is that hon. member not in the mainstream of Canadian public opinion, not in the mainstream of western public opinion, but he is not even in the mainstream of world public opinion, because 105 nations at the United Nations voted against the Soviet invasion of—not invitation to—Afghanistan. It would have been interesting to have the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) here to see this cavalier treatment of the policies of his government when they were in office as expressed by the hon. member for St. John's West.

As I have said, this government speaks for the mainstream. There are a few brave souls in the party opposite, risking the wrath of their fellows, who swim along with the government, but there are others who are off paddling on the sides by themselves, and there are some who are floundering. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is swimming in the wrong direction, upstream, and the hon. member for St. John's West has indicated by his views on Afghanistan and other issues that he is not even in the water yet. Perhaps I might change my metaphor somewhat to say that he is actually a beached whale who has been thrown up on the shores by his own leader.

With respect to the New Democratic Party, it is all too well known that their attitudes to the world are vitiated by the anti-western, anti-NATO position which they have taken on all issues of the day but which come out most dramatically on issues of East-West confrontation and issues of disarmament. It is well known that the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the leader of that party, is a closet supporter of NATO but is not allowed out of the closet by his own party who, at their last meeting, voted against the continuance of Canada in NATO.

• (1610)

Having seen that the opposition parties are not in the mainstream, let us look at the position the government has adopted with respect to the crisis in Poland and Canada's response. Following the imposition of martial law in Poland on December 13 of last year—

Mr. Crosbie: They sent Flis over!

Mr. MacGuigan: —Canadian policy in respect to this tragic event has been twofold. We have continued to manifest our humanitarian concern for the welfare of the Polish people, particularly for their human rights and freedoms. We have also sought to demonstrate clearly to the Polish and Soviet authorities our firm belief that the imposition of martial law on the united people struggling to build a better future for themselves and their country was a reprehensible act. I need not list again for hon. members the humanitarian assistance that the government has provided for the Polish people.

Mr. Crosbie: Helping the government.

Mr. MacGuigan: Our efforts have been considerable and have served to supplement, in no small way, those of thousands of Canadians across this country. I notice the interruptions by the hon. member for St. John's West. I think the House should once again take notice of his interruptions. I do not know whether he was speaking for his party on this occasion or not. How is one to know? On this occasion he said that he was opposed to the continuance of the food supply of wheat which Canada allows to go to Poland so that the people will not starve. That is the policy of that hon. member, at least, and perhaps of his party. I leave that to them to fight out among themselves in their usual happy fashion.

Mr. Crosbie: That, I never said.

Mr. Siddon: Happy as you are. As long as you tell the truth, Mark.

Mr. Crosbie: Try the truth, like the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacGuigan: We have also frequently and consistently expressed our serious concerns about the human rights situation in Poland. I attended the fifth session of the Madrid follow-up meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe—

Mr. Crosbie: You are good at attending meetings.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and spoke out in detail on that occasion, February 9. Let me recall a portion of my Madrid statement.

Mr. Crosbie: All talk and no do.

Mr. MacGuigan: I stated:

> The commitment of the Polish government to fulfil its obligations under Principle VII has clearly been abandoned in the events that have transpired in Poland since December 13, 1981. Thousands of people have been interned, simply for having been active in an organization duly recognized by the Polish courts. They have been charged with no criminal offences. They are simply being held, being allowed minimal contacts with their families and friends, at the pleasure of the government—
> At the time of the imposition of martial law in Poland, nearly ten million of the country's work force of some 14 million belonged to "Solidarity". They were supported in their efforts to improve the economic and social conditions prevailing in Poland by their families and friends, by the million-strong membership of rural Solidarity and by millions of sympathizers and admirers around the world.
> Their valiant efforts to exercise their right to self-determination gave us all hope in the power of the individual to take his life in his own hands, to join together with other like-minded individuals, and together to build a better future. These hopes were quashed on December 13, 1981. The present Polish authorities have not, despite all their efforts, been able to explain to our satisfaction why they acted as they did, where the threats of civil war and anarchy came from.
> Canada has stated on numerous occasions that Poland must be left to resolve its political and social difficulties without outside intervention. We believe firmly that only the Poles themselves have the right to determine their national destiny—but it must be all Poles, not just a small ruling class.

Surely this statement fully demonstrates the Canadian government's concern for the human rights of the Polish people. I can tell hon. members that the Soviet and Polish representatives in Madrid were left in no doubt about our position.

In implementing the second aspect of the response to the imposition of martial law in Poland, the Canadian government has stood firmly with our NATO allies. At our ministerial meeting in Brussels on January 11, and again in Luxembourg on May 17 and 18, we called for the lifting of martial law, the release of those detained and the restoration of the dialogue among the government, Solidarity and the church. Canada and its NATO allies also agreed to suspend the provision of future commercial credits for goods other than food, and to hold in abeyance consideration of holding negotiations on the payments due in 1982 on Poland's official debt.

The measures the government later announced on February 23, 1982, were designed to demonstrate our concerns over developments in Poland to the Polish and the Soviet authorities. These measures are well in keeping with those adopted by our NATO allies, and we remain fully committed to them.

This again illustrates the fact that we are in the mainstream, not only in the mainstream of the Canadian people, which is our most important responsibility, but also in the mainstream of the west because our sanctions and measures taken against the Soviet Union are parallel to those taken by other members of the alliance.

I would like now to say a few words about the Falklands crisis. I referred earlier to the instability of the world in which we live; I should also have added the unpredictability. The Falklands crisis illustrates the volatility of events. It also underlines the need to give more than lip service to the norms of international law, and that stability will only come when international principles are achieved in practice by all states.

The text of this motion, in so far as it concerns the situation in the Falkland Islands, suggests to me that Rip Van Winkle must have been one of the drafters because they have obviously forgotten, if they ever took the time to learn, what the Canadian position is. The resolution criticizes the government for its alleged "failure to support the United Kingdom and the rule of law in international affairs."

Let us look at the record. On the same day that Argentina began its occupation of South Georgia and the Falkland Islands on April 2, we called in the Argentine charge d'affaires to express our consternation and concern that in this day and age Argentina would resort to force to settle a territorial dispute with another country, in clear violation of Article 2—

Mr. Crosbie: Nuclear bundles.

Mr. MacGuigan: —of the Charter, which states that "all members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace, security and justice are not endangered." It is on this clear point of principle that Canada opposed Argentina's action and fully supported the Security Council Resolution 502.

Mr. Gamble: The strongest words you can muster.

Mr. MacGuigan: During the Security Council debate on Resolution 502, our ambassador clearly expressed Canada's position in this regard. He said:

> My delegation has requested participation in the debate in order to express its shock and deep concern at the precipitous action of Argentina in resorting to force in its attack and armed occupation of the Falkland Islands.

This was followed by our decision on April 4 to recall the Canadian ambassador to Argentina for consultations, a traditional diplomatic device to demonstrate formally disapproval of another country's action.

Mr. Taylor: And left the technicians there.

Mr. MacGuigan: At the same time, the government placed an immediate embargo on the export to Argentina of all military equipment and, on April 12, followed these measures by a ban on all imports from Argentina and on export credits for any new commercial transactions with that country.

Mr. Taylor: Still sending nuclear bundles.

Mr. MacGuigan: Our sanctions, of course, were parallel to those taken by the European Economic Community, by Australia and New Zealand and, of course, went beyond those of the United States. I might say that they were adopted without terminal date, unlike those of the European Community which had to be renewed twice and only now are like ours, without terminal date.

Both sides are obviously convinced that their claims to the Falkland Islands are just, but Britain has always been prepared to seek a peaceful solution to the dispute. Argentina, unfortunately, chose to use force in violation of the United Nations Charter, an illegal act which was so recognized by the Security Council at its emergency session on April 3 which demanded by a vote of ten to one Argentina's withdrawal and the immediate cessation of hostilities, and the beginning of negotiations between the two governments. Regrettably, not only did Argentina ignore the Security Council resolution but actually flouted it, because it proceeded to strengthen its garrisons on the Falkland Islands.

In the face of this action, as I have said, Canada joined the European Community, Australia and New Zealand to impose economic sanctions. As was explained at the time of this action, the government's principal concern was to contribute to ensuring the respect for the United Nations Charter and for the rule of international law consistent with our conviction that force must never be used to settle territorial disputes.

• (1620)

Canada has maintained this position consistently since that time in the same manner as the European Community, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. I have received on numerous occasions expressions of appreciation from the British Foreign Secretary and the British High Commissioner for Canada's forthright and robust position with respect to support for Britain.

Mr. Crosbie: A diplomatic nicety.

Mr. MacGuigan: I can assure the House that no British request for co-operation has gone unanswered.

Mr. Crosbie: Shameful. You have not offered any.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, Security Council Resolution 502 calls on the governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom to seek a diplomatic solution for their differences. As the world well knows, over the past several weeks there have been intensive efforts by the two parties, by the United States Secretary of State Haig, by President Belaunde of Peru, and finally by the Secretary General of the United Nations, to bring about such a negotiated solution. Canada was asked by Peru to be associated with one such initiative and we agreed to do so provided that our role was acceptable to the parties concerned. However, this initiative was soon overtaken by events and was superseded by the efforts of the Secretary General of the United Nations.

I have indicated to the British Foreign Secretary, to the Foreign Minister of Argentina, to the United States Secretary of State Haig, to the Foreign Minister of Peru, and to the Secretary General of the United Nations, that Canada would be willing to facilitate any negotiations, or to participate in any agreed settlement arrangement, if the parties concerned felt that Canada could play a useful role. That offer still stands; but no useful purpose would be served by seeking to involve ourselves in the current negotiating processes so long as they offer some hope of success, as they are presently being conducted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I want also to say a word about our bilateral relations with Argentina. As part of our policy to enhance our relations with the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean which I announced in March 1980, we have been endeavouring to develop a better degree of correct and cordial relations with Argentina. We have made it clear that although we do differ profoundly with Argentina in respect of its unilateral and aggressive action in trying to resolve this territorial dispute with Britain, we would hope nevertheless that when the present crisis has been resolved we can continue the process of developing these relations to our mutual advantage.

We have no quarrel with Argentina per se, but we do respect, and we insist upon the respect of others for, the rule of law. We profoundly hope that reason will prevail within the government of Argentina. We hope that they will accept the will of the international coummunity and will abide by the Charter of the United Nations and with the specific requests of the Security Council Resolution 502 which calls for an immediate withdrawal of Argentinian forces from the Islands and a resumption of negotiations between Britain and Argentina to resolve the matter peacefully through negotiations in accordance with the United Nations Charter.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the contract? Will you table it?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the war in the Falkland Islands has raised among other issues the red herring, I might almost say the red flag, of nuclear politics. This flag has been waved ferociously and piously by members of both the opposition parties.

The considerations are twofold. First there is the question of the reliability of Argentina as a nuclear partner. Second, there is the question with respect to the war. Let me take the question of the war first. The opposition has attempted to capitalize on the natural concern of people about both of those issues. With respect to the war, this is not a matter which has any relationship to the hostilities. The nuclear bundles will not even be delivered to Argentina during the likely currency of hostilities. The nuclear reactor will not be in operation for quite some time after that. All of this, of course, is according to a contract which Canada entered into many years ago with the government of Argentina.

Mr. Taylor: Do you believe that?

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member for St. John's West, as I understand him—and again I do not know whether it is the party's view or not, but it seems to be his view—suggests that we should add this sanction to our sanctions. Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that no other country has done this. Germany has not done it. The European Community has not done it. I mention Germany in particular because they are a supplier of nuclear material and technology to Argentina.

Mr. Crosbie: Lead the way.

Mr. MacGuigan: Indeed, the BBC program, which was recently copied by the CBC, said they had reports that led them to fear that it may be less than a year before Argentina joins the nuclear club, and they went on to say that it would do so with the help of modern German technology. There is no accusation with respect to the supply of Canadian technology. Canadian technology is not only not readily adaptable but is well protected by safeguards and, of course, by international inspections.

Mr. Taylor: Canadian technicians are down there right now.

Mr. MacGuigan: When the opposition imposed sanctions with respect to the invasion of Afghanistan, which the hon. member for St. John's West calls the "invitation" to the Russians to enter Afghanistan, they related, of course, to a limitation; they were not a total embargo. When sanctions were imposed with respect to Iran and other countries, they dealt with future contracts. That is the normal posture with respect to sanctions, that if they apply they apply to future contracts. That is exactly the rule that we are following here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he will permit a question before he finishes his remarks.

Mr. MacGuigan: At the end, Mr. Speaker, I will take a question if I have the tolerance of the House and my time has expired.

That is the military aspect of the question, Mr. Speaker. The other aspect is the suitability of Argentina as a nuclear partner. I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, that we have the bilateral arrangement by which Argentina has undertaken not to use the nuclear reactor for any purposes other than peaceful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: In addition, we have the right of inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency as soon as that reactor comes into effect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. members from the opposition are shouting about this. If this is what they are concerned about, if they are concerned about the suitability of Argentina as a nuclear partner, why did not their government cancel the contract?

Mr. Taylor: We were not at war.

Mr. MacGuigan: Their government was then in power, briefly, it is true, by choice of the Canadian people. Because of the kind of judgment they were expressing on this question they were not kept in power very long by the Canadian people. They had a chance, Mr. Speaker, to cancel this contract and they did not do it. Now they are saying that we should do it—because they are over there.

Mr. Taylor: We were not at war then.

Mr. MacGuigan: We understand, and the country understands, the whole hypocrisy of their position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has the floor.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, obviously they do not like the truth. They find it very hard.

An hon. Member: You are hypocritical. You are two-faced.

Mr. MacGuigan: The truth is always very difficult. We see their hypocrisy of taking one position in government and a different position in opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am in my last minute. I would just say that we are a party which has been expressing the mainstream of Canadian politics. In fact, we have been doing that for generations. That is why we keep being returned to this side of the House. In this case we are also in the mainstream of the western world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: I would like to end with a quotation from the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent—

An hon. Member: I wish he were here now. He would have a different policy.

Mr. MacGuigan: He articulated this philosophy many years ago:

> A policy of world affairs, to be truly effective, must have its foundation laid upon general principles which have been tested in the life of the nation and which have secured the broad support of large groups of the population.

• (1630)

We are proud to be in the mainstream not only of the present but also of the past and the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for St. John's West to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: I have a very short question, Mr. Speaker. The mainstream, of course, will soon flush the minister right out into the ocean, but is the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to table the Argentine nuclear contract and all associated documents which, the minister says, absolutely forbid Canada to make any changes, even in this emergency? Will he produce that contract and table it so that we can see it?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which I attended—I believe the hon. member was not in attendance but had a nominee asking questions for him—I said I would not table those documents because they contain confidential commercial information.

Mr. Crosbie: Naturally.

Mr. MacGuigan: We are looking at the question to see whether there is any way of easily getting around that, but it appears at the present time those documents are not suitable for tabling.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that in the approaches used by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) and the minister they recognized instinctively that their cases against this outstanding motion were so weak that they had to resort to trying to divide the Conservative Party. They used the well-known tactic of "divide the opponent when you do not have a substantive argument to offer".

I will get to the minister in a moment, but the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam began by criticizing the Conservatives for not opposing the sale of Candu technology to Argentina and by saying we are now being hypocritical in this motion. I want to tell the hon. member that when the Conservatives formed the government in 1979, it was that Conservative government which refused a second sale of a Candu reactor to Argentina on the ground that Argentina would not accept the full-scope safeguards upon which my party, and my party alone, insisted. We would not allow Candu sales without those safeguards. I think the record should be made clear in that respect.

Then the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam spoke about El Salvador and human rights. She said my party was without any compassion; I think that was the word she used. I do not know where she was on March 9, 1981 when several addresses were made by various members of my party. I refer only to the one I made on behalf of my party in the debate that afternoon in which I talked about the agony of El Salvador and the repression of human rights there.

Members of the New Democratic Party talk about the Conservative Party's not having compassion or concern about human rights. Who was in government in 1979 when a policy was brought in to bring the boat people of Vietnam to this country? That was one of the greatest humanitarian endeavours undertaken by this country. It was the Conservative government which did that, so I prefer my party be judged by its actions, which I proudly stand in this House and reflect and report, rather than by press accounts of so-called divisions within my party.

The minister talked about his party being in the mainstream. The use of the word "mainstream" applied to the Liberal government would be funny if it were not so tragic. The Liberal government is so far in the backwaters of Canada—and, indeed, the world—with its duplicity that I believe the minister would have been better advised to try to defend himself and his government against this motion; but I heard hardly a shred of rebuttal against the charges made in the motion.

The minister tried to defend the government's continuance of nuclear technology co-operation and the sale of 3,000 nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina in the midst of a situation the entire world knows is tragic. The world knows how the Argentine government conducts itself with respect to human rights, with respect to trust, with respect to violations of the United Nations Charter and with respect to invasion in contravention of international standards. This matter was referred to several times during the course of the minister's intervention. When there is a war going on it is absolutely shocking that the government should refuse to review its policy on nuclear sales.

Just before I speak about Argentina in some detail, I would like to refer to the fact that the minister also tried to divide my party. He began with the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He referred to him as a beached whale. I have always considered the hon. member for St. John's West to be a roaring shark snapping at the entrails of a government in total disarray.

The minister also said I do not have the support of all the members of my party. If I do not have their support, I would like to know how I come to be standing here at this very moment speaking on behalf of my party. I remind the minister—and I hope he has a chance to read this—that as part of the responsibility I have for speaking for my party on international development I made a statement on May 13, which has the full support of the hon. member for St. John's West, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) and the other members of my party. On May 13 I was speaking about the estimates of CIDA for this year. I said that if the government wants the support of the Canadian public at a time when our domestic economic situation is so serious, when the number of bankruptcies is up and when we have high levels of unemployment, inflation and interest rates and if the government wants to increase CIDA estimates, it will have to toughen up its whole operation and get tough with the bureaucrats here in Ottawa who are standing in the way of sound development practices. The government will have to get tough with those developing countries which are spending excessive amounts on arms and cutting back on development programs for their own people. The government will have to get tough with a communications program which can tell the Canadian people exactly what is going on.

I do not want to hear any more talk about divisions in my party. I hope the media are paying attention to my speech, if we can ever find them present at a foreign policy debate. All the media want to do is try to poke holes in parties attempting to reflect deep Canadian concerns.

Let me talk now about the more serious of all Canadian concerns today in the field of foreign policy. One of them is the continuance of the sale of 3,000 nuclear bundles to Argentina at a time when we are increasingly concerned about the instability of that regime. On July 14, 1981, the subcommittee on Latin America and the Caribbean was examining this situation in some detail. The witness that day was Mr. James Donnelly, the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I asked him in a summary question: "Can you give a guarantee to the committee that recycled fuel from the Candu reactor in Argentina will not be able to be used for a nuclear device?" Mr. Donnelly replied: "I certainly cannot give the committee or anybody else that assurance."

Since the start of the nuclear co-operation program with Argentina, we have known that there was the risk of nuclear fuel being siphoned off the nuclear reactor which went to Argentina as a result of the 1973 arrangement. The risk was clearly seen by the government of 1976 which imposed full-scope safeguards. It is bad enough that the government of that time left the sale of the Candu reactor in place without insisting that Argentina support the full scope safeguards, and it was bad enough that Argentina had not signed the non-proliferation treaty; but in light of the escalation of the war in the south Atlantic, and at a time when the trustworthiness of the Argentinian regime has been called into question and the government's leaked document said that Argentina is well on the way toward developing an indigenous nuclear fuel cycle that is completely free of safeguards—despite all that official concern that Argentina may manufacture an atomic weapon from its Canadian nuclear reactor, the government has refused to reconsider the full implication of its policy. It has refused to accept responsibility for the possibility that Canada may turn out to be an accomplice in the development of an Argentinian nuclear bomb.

What kind of government are we dealing with in Argentina? Since the military took over and formed the junta there has been a consistent policy of torture and murder of political opponents to the rightist government. Amnesty International estimates that 20,000 people disappeared after having been picked up by government security forces. There are thousands of political prisoners in jail. The military government has financed and armed private death squads. There is no freedom of the press in Argentina. No opposition political parties are allowed to function. There is no right to strike and no right to collective bargaining. Libraries and book stores have been purged of so-called leftist books which were burned in public.

As my colleague the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) properly remarks, Solidarity would never have been able to get off the ground in Argentina.

So much for the character of the regime, Mr. Speaker. Against this canvas of one of the most repressive juntas on the face of the earth today, we have the escalation of the south Atlantic war. I am sure we are all happy to note that the British forces, which certainly could have had more support from this government than they have had, appear to be closing in on Port Stanley at this very hour. I have no doubt that all of us in the House fervently hope that this tragic conflict can be quickly brought to an end.

Why did that conflict start, Mr. Speaker? It started because, against the standards of international conduct, Argentina invaded the Falkland Islands. Despite the importuning of the Secretary General of the United Nations, despite Resolution 502 of the Security Council, despite the tremendous effort made by diplomats on all sides, including the U.S. Secretary of State, the war went ahead. Argentina refused to recognize that opinion in the western world opposed its continued occupancy of the Falkland Islands by force.

The minister said that we have no quarrel with Argentina per se. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have a quarrel with Argentina.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: This party has a quarrel with Argentina. It was this party that trusted Argentina so little that it would not even sell it a second Candu reactor without the application of full-scope safeguards. The minister now says, in defence, that this is a red herring of nuclear politics. He also claims that the motion of the hon. member for St. John's West which raises our concerns—which are the concerns of everyone in the world who wants to avoid some sort of nuclear catastrophe—is just a red herring and that no other country has applied added sanctions. The only sanctions that we have applied against Argentina, Mr. Speaker, are on the import side. This means that we can keep on selling to Argentina and trying to make money. So desperate is this government for funds that it will even play with the security of the world, in spite of a report of its own advisers which was provided to the cabinet committee warning the government of the consequences of the present policy of maintaining nuclear co-operation with Argentina.

An article written by Margaret Munro, which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of May 18 this year, ended as follows:

> The briefing paper prepared last month goes on to say: "In fact, the president of Argentina's nuclear agency, Rear Admiral Castro Madero, has in recent statements been unequivocal in rejecting the Non-Proliferation Treaty and full-scope safeguards, while reaffirming his country's desire to retain a nuclear explosive option—
> "Our immediate concern is that in their rush to close the (nuclear) cycle, the Argentines may be tempted to exploit their power reactor program which is now under safeguards."

I call on the Canadian government to reassess its policy on Argentina and nuclear co-operation. I call upon it to do so today. I do not know what it will take to get the government to see light on the subject.

We have here a great example of what happens when there is a conflict in a small, remote part of the world such as we have seen over the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands. We have seen what happens in the absence of permanent peace-keeping machinery that, with the consent of the two parties, can be used to straighten things out and to act with some authority. It is absolutely essential that the world move to the establishment of some international peace-keeping machinery. This party has stood for the development of such peace-keeping forces and, as a matter of fact, we want our own defence component strengthened so that it can more adequately serve the cause of world peace through participation in peace-keeping forces.

There was a small glimmer of hope today with the news that President Reagan had announced yesterday that the United States and the Soviet Union will open negotiations in Geneva on June 29 regarding the limitation and reduction of strategic nuclear arms.

The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam asked why this question was not included in our motion. We are not raising it today because we are trying to get the government to put some teeth into its own strategy. All members of this party want the Canadian government to go into the Special Session on Disarmament with policies built on principles designed to further the cause of world peace. That is the stand taken by 78 distinguished Canadians who signed a statement called "Canadian Foreign Policy in the 1980s". I will just close by referring to what this distinguished group of Canadians is asking the Canadian government to do. They say that they want:

> 1) removal of the threat of nuclear war, the greatest danger facing mankind today;
> 2) the strengthening of the United Nations and other global institutions designed to bring about a pacific settlement of disputes, foster international co-operation, promote the growth of world law and the protection of basic human rights;
> 3) the mobilization of world resources to achieve a more equitable international order and bring an end to the crushing poverty which is the common lot of the majority in the Third World.

That is the basis of a foreign policy which combines a perception of the direction of the world, compassion, and a reflection of our own domestic interests applied externally. We must have a foreign policy which combines those elements of security, trade and development. We must be able to operate on all these fronts with some credibility. The government is destroying its credibility. There is no other area where the government's credibility is under so much question as that of the continued export of nuclear fuel bundles and technology to Argentina, a country which has no business making a bomb, and a country which will threaten world peace. I believe I speak for millions of Canadians when I say that we do not want to be compromised or share in the complicity over Argentina, knowing what it has done to its own people, and what it intends to do in the future as demonstrated by the invasion of the Falkland Islands.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—EXTERNAL RELATIONSHIPS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie:

That this House deplores the failure of the Government to represent Canada properly or adequately in our external relationships or in accordance with the views and principles of the Canadian people specifically by its failure to oppose in any convincing and meaningful way the violation of human rights within Poland and the imposition of martial law therein, by the failure to support the United Kingdom and the rule of law in international affairs by opposing in a meaningful and convincing way the armed aggression of Argentina in its invasion of the Falkland Islands and, this House deplores the failure of the government to strengthen the Department of External Affairs as recommended by the McDougall commission as well as its failure to eliminate all aspects of patronage in the operation of that department.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are many facets of this motion and I intend to deal with only one, the Polish question: what happened to the economy of Poland; Poland's relationship to the East and the West; a bit of the history of Poland—because if you do not understand its history, you do not understand what is happening today; Solidarity; and human rights.

The present problems in Poland go back to 1970 when then Premier Gierek decided to import western technology on a massive scale, mostly on credit. After that he ran into the OPEC price increases and the worldwide recession. As a result, the Polish economy was virtually bankrupt at the time of the Solidarity uprising. In 1981 Poland's national income was down 15 per cent, as was industrial production. In 1980 coal production was 200 million metric tons; in 1981 it dropped to 165 million. Last year Poland had to import six million to seven million tonnes of agricultural products, and their balance of payments deficit reached $4 billion. Between 1981 and 1985 they faced a crisis in rescheduling $2.5 billion in debt. Exports to socialist countries were down 17 per cent and imports up 20 per cent. Exports to the West were down 25 per cent, and imports also were down 17.5 per cent because of a lack of hard currency.

What kind of cultural environment does Poland live in? It has a very distinct East-West environment which you must understand. It is the only East bloc country with small individual land owners. The Catholic church is very strong in Poland, as is well known. Culturally it has a Western lifestyle, yet we have a large amount of tourism and travel from East and West into Poland.

In general the people are better educated than in the rest of the Eastern bloc. There have been ruptures in the past between communist states: Stalin and Tito in 1947-48; Czechoslovakia in 1968; the Polish uprisings of 1956, 1970 and 1975; the Hungarian revolution of 1956.

Why is Poland different from the others? Poland is the key country in the Soviet bloc because of its strategic location, its military and economic potential, and because of its large population. Therefore, major change in Poland could transform if not destroy the Soviet Union's East-European empire.

What did Solidarity demand, Mr. Speaker? There was an agreement on August 30, 1980, at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk. These are the things they thought they would be getting. First, the beginnings of an independent trade union movement, which no other communist country had. The right to strike, the right to collective bargaining, Saturdays off, the right to enter candidates in local elections, and a joint task force to co-ordinate supplies of food, fuel, medicine and clothing. I find it odd that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) should say, quoting him as closely as I can: "We do not think it is important to have a charter of human rights at home if we do not support human rights in Poland." He was talking about freedom from arbitrary arrest, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of association, freedom of peaceful assembly, the right to a jury trial and the right to counsel. He was speaking of entrenched rights, and these are all things he voted against in our own Constitution until he was satisfied that they could be overturned, overridden or set aside by the provinces and the federal government. I have to go back and see what his position was on human rights six months or a year ago.

Mr. Gamble: The Russians have those rights in their Constitution as well.

Mr. Irwin: If it is a choice between human rights and political opportunism, he opts for political opportunism. So how can I trust what he says, a man who advocates human rights in Poland but who will not support entrenched human rights of the type he wants in Poland right here in his own country?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind being criticized by the hon. gentleman, but he should be factual. I voted for the concoction brought into this House by the government, and I have never voted against a charter of Human Rights and Freedoms. I do not want to be quoted as having voted against them.

Mr. Irwin: The "concoction" the hon. member voted against was Section 15, which said that there shall be no discrimination based on sex, religion, colour, age, or whether people are handicapped or mentally retarded. He voted against the legal rights which allowed jury trials, the right to counsel and reasonable bail.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We have had those for centuries.

Mr. Irwin: He voted against freedom of association—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You just got those rights last week? You are out of your mind.

Mr. Irwin: I see I have two other members of the Conservative Party who voted against these rights.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I did not vote against them.

Mr. Irwin: I have a lot of respect for many members in that party, but don't come in here and tell me about human rights in Poland when you will not support them in your own country. That is the record.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Tell the truth for a change.

Mr. Irwin: I was not going to raise that, Mr. Speaker, but when I see the minister unfairly attacked by hon. members opposite, then the truth should be known in this House. And that is the truth.

Mr. Gamble: Then you are departing from your present practices.

Mr. Irwin: Let me get back to Poland. Solidarity was supposed to be 12 million strong. Perhaps in spirit, but I do not think in fact. Solidarity has collapsed. Prime Minister Wojciech Jaruzelski declared a state of emergency. Lech Walesa and approximately 10,000 Solidarity members and even the former party leader, Edward Gierek, were imprisoned. That is the situation.

• (1700)

To understand how Poland got to this position, you have to understand the history of Poland. Poland has had almost 1,000 years of wars, splits and divisions going back to the year 966. That was when supposedly—it may-be myth—the first king of Poland, King Miezko, ruled. Poland progressed into the sixteenth century. That was supposed to be the golden age of Poland. I think it was. In the sixteenth century Poland was the predominant power in eastern Europe. In 1572 the Jagellonian dynasty died out. It had existed from the fourteenth century to the sixteenth century. What is odd about that and why Poland declined is something that we should remember in Canada. More and more power was given to the landed gentry. In 1652, the notorious liberum veto was introduced. This situation has almost come into being in Canada. Any member of the Diet could defeat legislation. Doesn't that sound like the power given to the provinces? This liberum veto could nullify previous laws and it could dissolve the Diet.

By the mid-seventeenth century Poland was in its decline. The Russians invaded from the east and the Turks came from the west. The Cossacks living in the frontier area of Poland revolted and Charles X of Sweden invaded Poland. I tell hon. members opposite to listen and learn. They will learn something about the country they are talking about. I say to hon. members: "Do not form your foreign policy on what happened last week by what is reported in The Globe and Mail." I tell them to learn something about what makes Poland tick.

In 1660 Poland had peace. But wars, the bubonic plague and mass murders followed and by 1668 the population was reduced to 4 million. It had decreased 55 per cent. The cities lost all their manufacturing, most of their industries and three quarters of their inhabitants.

Between 1704 and 1710 Poland went to war with Sweden. Sweden invaded Poland and one third of the Polish cities were in ruins. Between 1702 and 1710 the population decreased from 8 million to 6.4 million. Sweden advanced into the Ukraine and Russia defeated Sweden. Under Peter the Great, Russia took over Poland.

Hon. members have to understand the historical connection between Russia and Poland. In 1763 Catherine's former lover, Stanislas Pontiatowski, was made King of Poland. Finally Poland died as a result of three partitions. These partitions occurred in the years 1772, 1793 and 1794. Poland was divided in 1975. Russia, Prussia and Austria took over the country and Poland totally disappeared. This was the first time in the history of Europe that a country by cold calculation was divided up and disappeared without war.

However, during this period there was a group much like Solidarity today. It was led by a peasant called Kosciuszko. They had only scythes as weapons but they defeated the Russians at Raclawice. If it had not been for the Prussians coming to the aid of the Russians, the Poles might have been successful. Except for one period under Napoleonic rule, Poland disappeared until after World War I when we come into modern history.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Poland was created from three defeated empires after 1918. But even then the Poles seemed to do the wrong thing. In 1920 Poland went to war against Russia. The Poles were governed by a band of colonels who were cronies. They had fought against Russia in World War I. Poland went through a period under Marshal Pilsudski. Marshal Pilsudski said something interesting about Poland. He said: "Even if you are defeated, if you are not vanquished, that is victory." That seems to be the Polish phenomenon that we witness. Poland basically went through a series of benevolent dictatorships prior to World War II. But in this period Poland attacked Lithuania over a dispute concerning the city of Vilna.

Poland attacked Czechoslovakia and Poland again attacked Russia.

In World War II Poland would not aid Czechoslovakia nor would it allow Russian troops to cross Poland to aid Czechoslovakia. William L. Shirer said that "this was bound to be a policy of suicide".

And that is what it turned out to be. Poland alienated all of its allies surrounding it. Mr. Shirer went on to say:

—and indeed it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the Poles in the nineteen thirties, as on occasions in the centuries before, were &1700;-1 driven by some fateful flaw in their national character toward self-destruction and that in this period, as sometimes formerly, they were their own worst enemy.

After World War II Poland was basically under the absolute rule of Russia. But it was not until 1955 that Poland became a member of the Warsaw Pact. In this respect, it is interesting to note what happened.

At the beginning of World War II Russia made a secret pact with Germany. The Russians moved into the eastern half of Poland. In this connection 6 million Poles died, which represented almost 22 per cent of the population. There were over 600,000 war casualties. Poland sustained damage to its industry, its communications, its housing. Damage sustained to Polish culture was impossible to estimate. Toward the end of World War II, on August 1, 1944 there was still that will, that search for freedom, within the people and the Polish underground arose. Poland was still occupied. The underground movement lasted two months. The Russians incited the uprising, but they did nothing to help. The Poles were virtually wiped out by the Germans. Two hundred thousand people, mostly young boys and girls, were killed by German SS troops as revenge.

Finally, on January 17, 1945 the Russians took over, and unlike other countries such as Yugoslavia and Albania, which were liberated by their own partisan communists, Poland was liberated along with Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, East Germany and Czechoslovakia and occupied by Russia.

Mr. Gamble: You cannot call that liberation.

Mr. Irwin: Eventually through a process of elimination the communist party took over in Poland. In 1948 the Socialist party and the Polish workers' party emerged to become the Polish united workers party. The Stalin purges occurred between 1947 and 1949. In 1955 Poland became a member of the Warsaw Pact.

Throughout 1000 years of autocratic history there have always been groups in Poland who have searched for freedom. There was the peasants' revolt under Kosciuzko. Solidarity was led by Lech Walesa and there were the World War II freedom fighters. Truly, to be defeated without being vanquished, that is victory.

After World War II and a slow start as a result of its aftermath, and during the cold war period, Canada's relations with Poland developed comparatively quickly, especially during the 1960s and into the heydays of detente of the 1970s. As the minister said, we have maintained that the internal problems of Poland must be solved by the Poles themselves. But we want to impress upon Polish authorities that their actions are met with categorical disapproval by most of the Canadian people.

The hon. member for St. John's West I believe has said "do something". He keeps leading up to it but I am never sure what he means. I think he said: "Cut off our exports of grain to Poland". What else is there?

Mr. Crosbie: I never said that. Read the March 24 statement and see what was suggested.

Mr. Irwin: Twenty per cent of the food going into Poland comes from Canada. Do we further the cause of human rights in Poland by cutting off food to the Poles?

Mr. Crosbie: No one has suggested that.

• (1710)

Mr. Irwin: I am getting a little tired of criticisms about what we have or have not done for Poland. Right now we have allocated $500 million of credit to Poland. This is the highest per capita of any western democracy. Also we have allowed 1.5 million tonnes of grain to be shipped to Poland on credit and have allocated $500,000 to the International Red Cross for food, clothing and medical supplies. Also we have allocated $300,000 to support the relief efforts of the Canadian Polish Congress, and we have agreed to take in more refugees on the highest per capita basis of any free country in the world. This is what we have done. I am getting sick and tired of opposition members not acknowledging these facts. Tell the facts as they are. Canada and Canadians have been the most generous per capita in the world as far as Poland is concerned.

That is Canada's commitment to the Polish people. But is it enough? As John Stuart Mill said in 1854:

The worth of a state, in the long run, is the worth of the individuals composing it ... A state which dwarfs its men in order that they may be more docile instruments in its hands even for beneficial purposes, will find that with small men no great thing can really be accomplished—

In February, 1982—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member's allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: No, not at all.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Crosbie: No, there is not unanimous consent because the truth is not being spoken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair sought unanimous consent and it is not forthcoming.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I say in all sincerity that we all benefited from the trace of the history of Poland that we have just had, and that we all acknowledge the courage of the Poles throughout their centuries of persecution. We acknowledge it today. It is inherent in that people. I only wish we had more people in this country to stand up like the Poles and defy government. Solidarity is a great cry, and we need that type of spirit in Canada.

I was delighted that the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche)—

Mr. Irwin: You are never going to get a minute more than you are allowed as long as I sit in the House.

Some hon. Members: Cry baby.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has the floor.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was pleased that the hon. member for Edmonton South preceded me and brought to the attention of the House some of the comments which were made in the subcommittee hearings on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. I want to read into the record for the second time the inherent danger in shipping nuclear bundles to Argentina. The hon. member for Edmonton South asked Mr. Donnelly, the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, whether he could give a guarantee to the committee that recycled fuel from the Candu reactor in Argentina would not be used for a nuclear device. Mr. Donnelly replied: "I certainly cannot give the committee or anybody else that assurance." That is a damning statement when we think of the refusal yesterday of my motion under Standing Order 43 commending the dock workers at Saint John for their efforts to prevent nuclear rods from being loaded in Saint John for shipment to Argentina at the insistence of an arm of the Canadian government, the AECL, whose president gave the answer to which I just referred.

Since I put my motion I have received a telephone call from AECL indicating that it is not the agent for sending this material to Argentina but that it is being done through a private organization. He did not argue too much because he and I both knew—and there can be no argument about this—that no nuclear fuel will leave the country without the permission of AECL, which is an arm of the Canadian government, a Crown corporation.

I just want to return to the Argentina-Falkland Islands aspect of the motion today because, in my view, the government seems prepared to turn its back on this matter and, in the process, almost condones violations of human rights in such countries as the U.S.S.R. Also the hon. member for Edmonton South brought forward evidence that Argentina has embarked upon a military campaign of occupation, in defiance of the norm in world behaviour and now in defiance of a United Nations resolution, and attacked one of our prime allies. The United Kingdom is more than an ally. It is the origin of almost 50 per cent of the people of Canada. This government seems prepared to send nuclear bundles to the enemy of that country so that it can develop nuclear energy.

I am sure the minister—he may be the only one or there may be others, such as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne)—has heard of San Carlos de Bariloche, a famous ski resort in the Andes, in southwest Argentina and adjacent to the Chilean border. It is a ski resort but it is also the seat of the Argentinian think tank. As well, it is a detainee centre where Argentinians used to send political detainees, such as Evita Peron, at one time. There were possibly others detained there.

It may be that the Argentinians had in mind to take over the Falkland Islands and transport detainees from San Carlos de Bariloche to the Falkland Islands where they could be safety left. I am referring to those people which Argentina would not want to have in its own country. They would not be able to swim back to the mainland in order to cause trouble. It would be sort of a Devil's Island for Argentina.

Another thing which happens at San Carlos de Bariloche—and I am sure the minister knows this—is that it is the Argentinian atomic research centre. This is where research goes on, using spent fuel or plutonium created from the use of the Candu reactor, likely to process a nuclear device. We all remember what happened in India. We had an ironclad guarantee that there would be no bomb construction, and then we heard that India managed to create one. San Carlos de Bariloche in southwest Argentina is a centre where this work could likely be conducted. The government now has an opportunity, with the action of the dock workers or stevedores in Saint John, to reconsider its actions and say that it will not send these rods to Argentina where they might be misused, despite the undertaking which has been given.

There are two other areas which I wish to raise in deploring the actions, policies and performance of the government. There is so much which is deplorable about the foreign policies and performances of this government that one barely knows where to start. I will give one instance.

• (1720)

Almost two years ago an initiative was taken by the Institute of Natural Resources in Pietermaritzburg in Natal, South Africa, to work up an exchange of persons and ideas with a department in the Ontario government on land use programs in Natal and in one of the Bantustan states of Kwazulu. The South African institute felt that Ontario had much to offer in this area and was anxious to draw on Ontario's experience.

The concepts that were being explored were not only innocuous in political terms but could well form the basis of useful interchanges in areas of great importance to both countries. They included the development of what is called the integrated approach to land use. That is, use based on a sound evaluation of the natural resources of a region plus a thorough understanding of the people's needs and wants in that region. These were purely technical studies and a prospective useful interchange approved wholeheartedly by the South African government.

By January, 1981, the plans had matured to the point where an exchange of scientists was being considered. The names were almost ready. A Canadian was to go to South Africa to explore related techniques as developed in Canada and a South African was to come to Canada to the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources where he could see what there was transferable from Canada in technology to South Africa. Everything seemed to be in place for this exchange of officials. I underline the word "officials". They were not politicians or soccer players or rugby players, but technical officials.

Only a month later, in February, 1981, the whole deal was off. Why? The Ministry of Natural Resources of Ontario had said that they were in touch with the Canadian Department of External Affairs in Ottawa and, believe it or not, they were advised, and I quote from the letter:

> Since we wrote to you last October, I have been in contact with the Canadian Department of External Affairs in Ottawa. I have been advised that a co-operative project between the government of Ontario and the Government of South Africa through your Institute would be inappropriate in light of the present state of relations between Canada and South Africa.

What was so harmful and inappropriate about such an interchange? But they said it would be inappropriate, and the province of Ontario bowed to the superior knowledge of the Department of External Affairs. I believe it is a sad comment on international relations and the manner in which this government handles those relations.

The other area I wish to speak on relates to the report prepared at the behest of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by Miss Pamela McDougall who is a former ambassador to Poland and a high ranking civil servant since her return from Poland. She was to look into what is called "conditions of the foreign service".

Programs affecting External Affairs have struck me as being deplorable for a long time. I would say that the most deplorable programs began about 1968, but even before then. I can recall as far back as the mid-1960s when managerial reorganizations were imposed on the department with little or no prior consultation by people who had little or no notion of what a foreign office was designed to do. "Experts" were brought in from outside to reorganize a department whose function within the Canadian government service and whose function within the world these experts were absolutely incapable of understanding.

The net effect of that reorganization, or those reorganizations, were that the employees of the firm which had been sent in to reorganize the department found niches for themselves in the department and settled in. Eventually they moved up into the higher positions. They liked External Affairs the way it was and they were determined to enjoy some of the fruits of overseas service. They were not equipped or trained in the foreign service. They came in as managerial experts.

Now, we find that Miss McDougall discovers that the Department of External Affairs is in a managerial shambles. This shaking up of the department was just getting under way when the bilingualism program was introduced with all that it meant in absences from foreign policy desks. I might add that this bilingualism program was introduced to a department which was at that time, I am quite sure, more bilingual than any other department in the Canadian government.

This was almost immediately followed by a scheme of "program budgeting" and subsequently by "zero based budgeting." Shortly after that we were involved with absorbing all overeas support staff into the staff of the Department of External Affairs. We then had to contend with the problems of lateral entry. The early Ericksons of this world were being brought in to the Department of External Affairs at fairly high levels while preventing promotion up through the ranks. We then learned about the interdepartmental interchange from one department to the other which was presumably to reflect the government's notion of what Canada is.

As though this were not enough, there was a scheme for consolidation thrust upon the department by the Prime Minister's office. Then almost immediately there was the appointment of Miss McDougall to look into what was described as conditions in the foreign service. You can be sure that conditions by this time were in a sorry state and a royal commissioner such as Miss McDougall was needed to look into those conditions.

What is deplorable about how the government functions is that no sooner had the McDougall report been submitted in October of 1981 that a further and a more comprehensive consolidation of all the departmental officers from all departments concerned with offshore and overseas problems relating to trade, immigration and foreign policies—but not CIDA—were to be integrated into the Department of External Affairs with three ministers superimposed on them. Is it any wonder that the Department of External Affairs had been going through a period of the jitters, as it most certainly has? This can be verified if you talk to the employees of the department. It was so deeply involved in reorganizing itself and its departmental structures and learning about all the different kinds of budgeting and remanipulation of streams of command that it had little or no time to turn to the fundamental problems for which the department was established, that is, the definition of foreign policy recommendations for the government.

Due to these manifold and concurrently imposed changes, it has been obliged to be, at best, responsive to outside events and by no means capable of developing new initiatives to further Canada's causes in the many fields of our concern. Perhaps this is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants. I can recall as far back as the mid-1960s when he was quoted as saying: "What is the use of sending all those types to missions abroad? We can read what is going on in the world by reading The New York Times." I see a former foreign service officer walking behind the curtain. He could confirm this fact if he would stand up and say so. What the Prime Minister failed to take into account in such a cynical, arrogant and indeed stupid and ignorant comment was that, without a fully trained and devoted foreign service, it is just not possible to get to the bottom of the motivations of peoples and states except through living abroad.

What is it that causes them to adopt this stand or that at the United Nations, or in a disarmanent debate, or in the Law of the Sea discussions or to invade the Falklands? These matters do not develop overnight. They can be observed only by a competent foreign service. These in-depth analyses of motivation and explanation of national behaviour are not to be found in news reports, in The New York Times or any other paper, despite what the Prime Minister says. That is what the Department of External Affairs was well trained to do, until successive governments under this Prime Minister deliberately debilitated it and set out to destroy that essential capacity in foreign affairs.

Why otherwise, I ask myself, did Miss McDougall feel moved to recommend as she did in her report at page 55? Recommendation 44 is a very important recommendation and I implore your Honour to listen. It states, "Concrete steps should be taken to correct the widely held view that those in positions of power consider the activities and the product of the foreign services largely irrelevant to federal government or Canadian objectives." When a royal commissioner has to make that kind of a recommendation, conditions in the foreign service are in a sorry state. They are at a low ebb. I am glad that there are at least two ministers present in the House to hear my comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a lot more to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki).

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to this debate will be fairly well directed to one aspect, and that is by way of an overview to the background of Polish history to indicate what is expected of that country today and in what direction our help and our support should be given. Much of the debate, a great deal of the talk that one hears and the arguments put forward are without a real understanding of what the underlying cause of the problem has been in Poland. The help being given is very much that of symptomatic relief. It is superficial help. It does not get down to the cause of the internal and worrisome problem existing in that country.

To really understand it, one must look back to Yalta in 1945, at which time the principals, namely Stalin, Roosevelt and Churchill, made a decision by which Poland was handed to Russia. It was put under the sphere of influence of Russia with the rather vague understanding that within the next one or two years, a free election would take place and at that time the country would be given an opportunity to direct its future. This was an assurance given by two allies, by Churchill and President Roosevelt.

This was a very damaging and unbelievably serious blow to the personality of that particular nation. Until that point, Poland had a record of one thousand years as a protector of the Christian faith. It had been a protector of democratic principles. It had contributed to the world of art and to the world of music. It had been scholarly in various intellectual pursuits. At that time it was the centre of university training and had the ultimate example of the concepts of freedom and education. This freedom, by virtue of that meeting at Yalta, was snatched away.

Those of us who took part in the last war heard stories of the exploits of the Polish people in a military sense. They took a very active part in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Indeed, a prominent member of this House from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) was a member of that squadron and took part in some of the air battles. The Poles made a very outstanding defence at Monte Cassino in Italy under Alexander. They fought in Africa in the third Canadian and British divisions under Montgomery and acquired the distinction of being very worthy fighters and supporters of the allied cause.

What I am pointing out is that this country, whose ideals and ideology were similar to ours, and which supported the Christian faith, was handed over to a completely foreign country with an ideology completely incompatible with its personality, background, ideals and hopes. It was at that point that if anyone were to assist the Poles, they ought to have stepped forward. Unfortunately, there was no initiative by any of the allied countries to give the Poles that free election and the opportunity to acquire the status they had previously held. What happened was that this nation of courageous and hard-working individuals was able to adjust on its own, and did adjust, to the conditions under which it was forced to live.

Shortly after 1945, the Poles did accept a socialist form of government and the loss of sovereignty and were prepared to work with the communist government imposed on them. They realized very early that they comprised a buffer state between western Europe and the eastern communist bloc. However, their spirit and drive were such that they were not satisfied.

All of us who have followed the progress of the country of Poland have seen how it was possible for the unions to be organized under the very eyes of the communist regime, how they were united with the support of the church, the farmers and the university students. The Polish people formed a union which was unique in the world, one which worked hand-in-hand with management, with the academics and with the farmers in creating a force which, through its own moral suasion, was able to bring ten million of their 14 million workers under one umbrella unit.

The members of this group known as Solidarity were effective in producing a crack in the ideological makeup which we know as communism, and they have continued to enlarge that crack. They were able to surround themselves with people of similar aims amongst the Czechoslovakians and the Hungarians, and then martial law was imposed upon them. Now, my message is just simply this: that the underlying disease, the deep-seated, deep-rooted problem, the gnawing cancer that exists is their loss of freedom, the loss of their individuality, their loss of hope in the future. This is the primary problem which at this point has no ready cure, no easy approach. However, they do require the understanding of other democratic countries about them. They do require a constant representation on behalf of human rights. They require continuous material support, but they do not require any other intervention. They do not require actions or activities that will be provocative. They do not require outside help that could stir up activity which would be deleterious not only to their own growth and to their own future, but which could spark and ignite a catastrophe in the rest of the world.

I have every confidence, and I think those who know the soul and the heart of the Polish people must have confidence, that the Polish people are innovative, are daring, are courageous, that they will evolve a technique, a method, whereby again they will acquire the status in this world that they had in the past. What is not needed at this time is a bickering and a hassle by well-meaning people, well-meaning allies, well-meaning neighbours who in their enthusiasm to try to help them, may harm them. The people of Poland are of an indomitable spirit and of considerable initiative and drive. I, for one, would rely on that spirit and that support to bring them again the status that is rightfully theirs. What they need is support from every angle, whether it be monetary, or food supplies or the prayers of the people about them. My only thoughts and my only considerations are that we in our enthusiasm help them but not be an obstacle in their way of winning freedom again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity afforded me by the motion now before the House to participate in this debate on Canada's role and concern in international affairs. I had planned to respond to some of the comments made by previous speakers. I was interested in the contribution made by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) in words that were dripping with self-righteousness. I decided otherwise because my hon. friend from Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) responded to those comments in a more gentlemanly manner than I might have done.

I was interested in the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) regarding the appointment of the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to his present position of external affairs critic in the Conservative Party. The minister suggested that the hon. member had become somewhat like a beached whale, beached by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I would carry that idea just a little further.

I wonder what would have happened to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, if we were to project that idea a little further. If the hon. member for St. John's West was beached by being placed in the external affairs critic position, perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) beached the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville by appointing him as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Possibly to give him a little help, he appointed two other ministers of state and put them in with him to try to help him out of his predicament. Instead of that, the plan has backfired, and he is in a worse situation than ever.

The minister's statement that he had no quarrel with Argentina was a shocking one, in view of the statements that have been made and the charges that have been levied against Argentina, and with every justification for them. For the minister to say we do not have any quarrel with Argentina is almost beyond belief.

It was suggested that the Progressive Conservative Party had an opportunity, when in office for a very short time, to do something about the Argentinian case. The question was raised why we did not cancel the agreement with Argentina then to supply material relating to the CANDU reactor.

The situation was entirely different then, I am sure. At that time Argentina was considered at least a friendly nation in some respects, even though it was far from maintaining those standards of human rights that we would have appreciated. Nevertheless, they had not declared war, they were not at war with one of our NATO allies at that time. There is a war going on now and this government is continuing to supply nuclear fuel bundles to a nation, Argentina, that is fighting against Great Britain at the present moment.

In a somewhat belligerent manner, the minister charged some members of the opposition with voting against the charter of rights. He did not enlarge upon it, but I would like to have asked him where he was when the government refused to incorporate in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms the right to property.

• (1750)

Mr. Friesen: Right on, and human life.

Mr. Patterson: Yes. As my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), has suggested, the right of human life.

I can remember the time when Canada's role in foreign affairs was considered a very important one, and I remember the time when Canada's voice in the international forum was listened to with respect and appreciation. Those were the days when we had the opportunity to discuss foreign affairs in this House. There were opportunities to debate a whole spectrum of international relationships, Canada's role, Canada's place and Canada's responsibility. But those days seem to have gone. The government places so little importance upon this subject that it will not assume the responsibility of stating on certain occasions that it is prepared to introduce debate on external affairs. I said we used to have those debates, but those days are gone.

In latter years this House has had limited opportunities to deal with the many perplexing problems confronting the international community and where Canada and Canadians stand in relation to those issues. There is little, if any, evidence that there are any fundamental principles upon which our foreign policy is based. Problems are viewed in an indefinite and uncertain fashion, and it has become almost impossible to understand where we are going in our foreign affairs policy and how we propose to get there.

It has been pointed out by other speakers in this debate that the morale in the Department of External Affairs has plummeted, and in spite of a very thorough and logical report commissioned by and submitted to the government, the problems still remain and the recommendations of that report remain in limbo.

Since the present Prime Minister has been in office, there has been a continuing drift in external affairs policy and a downgrading of Canada's Armed Forces, resulting in a serious lack of manpower and equipment. Canada's commitment to NATO has been greatly reduced and, as for NORAD, the Prime Minister has stated that the U.S.A. would not see Canada invaded. I, as well as many other parliamentarians, have had the opportunity to visit the Canadian bases in Europe, and I remember very well on different occasions when I had the opportunity to be there what a brave front our service men put on. They were courageous; they were efficient; but as far as their equipment was concerned, we were told it would not stand up in any sense to the rigours of warfare.

Mr. Friesen: Embarrassing.

Mr. Patterson: That is embarrassing to our Armed Forces, it is embarrassing to our Parliament and it is embarrassing to the Canadian people.

The bright spot in recent Canadian history was during the brief period when my party was in office. A comprehensive review of Canada's foreign policy was undertaken with a view to updating the policy in the light of current conditions and restating the principles upon which Canada's commitments would be based.

At that time we stated that the task of Canadian foreign policy in the 1980s was to seek the establishment and maintenance of an international order in which Canada could pursue its own interests and foster its ideals. The goal was to strengthen Canada's voice and actions in the world community in support of the interests of peace and human dignity. Time does not permit the elaboration of those objectives, but I submit the government is derelict in its responsibility by failing to initiate in-depth parliamentary study and debate on these and other important basic principles.

One of our immediate concerns at this moment is the conflict raging on the Falkland Islands, and this forms one of the parts of the motion currently before the House. A crisis was precipitated by the occupation of territory—not theirs—by the armed forces of Argentina. This naked act of aggression is an affront to international law and order and a repudiation of the facts of history. If it is countenanced, it poses a threat to the peace and security of the world.

We are reminded today of the history of this particular crisis and the attitude of Argentina. Argentina has refused to be part of the group which signed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. Argentina refused to sign the Mexico agreement declaring Latin America as a nuclear free zone. Argentina invaded and occupied territory illegally. Argentina promised Falkland Islanders that their cultural, linguistic and property rights would be respected. That commitment was broken and rights violated, and reports in that connection have been placed before us. Argentina disregarded the UN resolution which condemned Argentina's action and called for Argentina to withdraw. The resolution called upon Argentina to negotiate with Britain to settle their dispute.

Britain accepted that challenge and endeavoured in every way to reach an understanding and a peaceful settlement of this dispute. In fact, Denis Healey, the Labour spokesman in Britain, stated that the Thatcher government had bent over backwards in an endeavour to resolve the crisis. But, of course, Argentina would not respond.

The actions of the European Community have been more forcibly proclaimed than has Canada's commitment. In my view one of the unmistakable indications of our concern and dismay would be at least the halting of any further shipment of nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina until the crisis is resolved. Other actions might be considered, but this should be the minimum. The minister stated that the shipment of such bundles would not affect the war because it possibly would be over before they reached their destination. We have to thank the dock workers who said they would not be a partner in the shipping of those nuclear bundles to Argentina. Apparently they had a great deal more courage than the government in pursuing that course.

I would like just in closing to refer to an article which appeared in my local paper. I see my time has almost gone. This article was written by Mark Rushton and is entitled "Talkin' thru my hat???"—and sometimes he does. However, what he says here is very good.

> However, as far as I am concerned, Britain has done the right thing by the Falklands, and by the rest of us in the free world.
> If aggressors the world over believe they can get away with scooping minor protectorates like the Falklands or Somalia, what is next. The Russians do not appear at all reluctant to sweep through Europe, gobbling up Afghanistan and Poland.

The article concludes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just one minute.

Mr. Patterson: This article concludes:

> Wouldn't it be comforting to know that if a banana republic starts a nuclear war, it is doing it with Canadian products.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) had the floor.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not noticing the Speaker when he rose to call it six o'clock.

I should like to conclude my remarks by adding a little to the statement made by the editor of my local paper in order to make it clear. He wrote as follows:

> Britain, small as she is, is telling the world that western nations are no longer going to sit back and take it.
> It is interesting to note that the U.S. is going very public in its support of Britain's action. Where, I wonder is Canada? Still worrying about ensuring its sale of Candu nuclear reactors to Argentina?
> Wouldn't it be comforting to know that if a banana republic starts a nuclear war, it is doing it with Canadian products. We may all be dead, but in our graves we will know we have died an employed nation, rich from the sale of such "necessities." Of course, our federal government can protest that it is not selling nuclear weaponry. After all, buyers sign a form saying they won't use their reactors for production of war material.
> It is nice, and safe, to be naive, but has Ottawa forgotten the old saying about "All's fair in love and war?"

I am sure that if it suited Argentina's convenience, it would not hesitate to somehow break the agreements. Indeed, there are signs that it is going to do that. I hope that this debate will alert the government to some of the problems we face. The time has come to take a new look at our foreign policy and to recognize that in a changing world we must be up to date in order to meet the challenges that confront us from day to day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in this debate today I am tempted to indulge myself in some thoughts about Poland and about the current and possible future state of East-West relations in light of the plight of that hapless country. I am equally tempted to say a word about the Falkland Islands dispute as an expression of the problems of residual remnants of empire and of self-determination in them. These are questions that Canadians might do well to ponder and to make such contribution to their resolution as their resources and interests may determine.

However, I have been asked whether I would instead say something about the third part of the opposition motion which relates to the royal commission on conditions of foreign service. I am happy to do so not only because I was in the foreign service for some 12 years, but because during that time I had the opportunity to work closely with the royal commissioner, Pam McDougall, in Vietnam. I recall very well the adverse circumstances in which we served in Saigon and Hanoi and the frustrations of attempting to be a peacemaker. The gospel says blessed is the peacemaker; I would suggest that more often the peace-maker is frustrated, and we certainly had good measure of that.

Miss McDougall has personal experience of life in the foreign service, including at smaller posts where Canadian interests are sometimes not so obvious as in larger. She has offered the government and indeed the people of Canada a timely review. It is in some respects similar to those which emerged in recent years in other western countries, such as the Duncan report in the United Kingdom and several reviews in France and the United States.

It is hardly surprising that from time to time such reports, including the McDougall report, are prepared. They offer useful benchmarks in the continuing reevaluation of our diplomatic service. Change has accelerated in international relations, as in so much else. It is certainly appropriate for Canadians to consider upon occasion what changes should be made in the conditions of foreign service, to match the differing circumstances in which diplomats find themselves today.

• (2010)

As technology continues to annihilate space and limit the influence of time, diplomacy finds itself excluded from variety of functions which traditionally fell to it because of the distances between states and the time it took to consult amongst them. Indeed, diplomats today live in a different world where the ease and rapidity of travel and telecommunications, the omnipresent press, the pervasive influence of television, the increasing emphasis on multilateral diplomacy as opposed to traditional bilateral diplomacy, and a variety of other factors, have made for different circumstances in all foreign services today. Additionally, contacts between countries at a variety of levels, through a range of non-governmental organizations, have also contributed to the new circumstances in which our diplomats must work. It is a long way, Mr. Speaker, from the world of Lord Dufferin or even Lawrence Durrell, or the Canadian diplomat Charles Ritchie who has described so wittily the role of Canada on the world stage in the post-war years. That role was in several major respects fundamentally different from what we see today.

Canada, during the immediate post-war years, was a middle power playing a significant role on a relatively uncrowded stage. Canada had emerged from a self-imposed isolation to the giddy experience of world diplomacy. In the few decades since then Canada's role has changed, and if our foreign service does not also evolve, some of our diplomats may find applicable to themselves the unenviable description offered by Anthony Sampson, a noted British writer who said:

> The intensity and isolation of embassy life and entertainment ... the formalities and protocol, all contribute to the diplomat's lassitude. Young British diplomats soon lose their curiosity, usually after their third posting, and achieve a lacklustre expression, an immunity to new experience and new people, and above all an absence of zeal.

That situation is characteristic of a foreign service attempting to carry out policies which are either not clearly enunciated or else irrelevant to the real national interests of the country involved. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in Canada there is no need for this. The challenge for Canadian policy is to pursue our own particular interests, in new and evolving areas, new in the sense of emphasis rather than principle. The challenges are also new in the sense of more emphasis on trade, not merely in the more traditional practice of tariff negotiations, but in removing and reducing non-tariff barriers, of new initatives in the energy field and telecommunications, in the elimination of pollution, and in promoting a régime of law for the oceans of the world. All these and other activities represent a new emphasis for the Canadian foreign service, roles which no other entity in our society can possibly play.

Some reference has been made to the role of newspapers in providing some of the information on which governments formulate their foreign policy, and on which governments act. But I would suggest that no newspaper can represent our particular interests to another nation. Mr. Pearson made an observation, some years prior to that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to the effect that newspapers are often well informed, their foreign correspondents are well informed. They cannot, however, provide the representation of Canadian interests, nor indeed can they evaluate knowledge of the local country policies against our interests. One challenge for Canadian policymakers is to be certain of our own interests and to avoid spreading our resources too thinly. Over-staffing is to be avoided in any organization. Indeed, there are some who would argue that today we have too many posts abroad, we have too many missions not fulfilling a useful function. In that respect I would bear in mind the admonition Arthur Andrew, a distinguished Canadian foreign service officer who wrote:

> An effective foreign service cannot be obtained simply by spending a lot of money and maintaining a large variety of diplomatic missions. The diplomat is extremely conscious of the expense and inconvenience of maintaining him abroad and he is quick to know if his work is important or not. It is normal for him to think that the foreign ministry at home does not give proper weight to the importance of his work. He accepts this and goes on trying to convert his colleagues at home to his way of thinking. But he cannot function and may become a parody diplomat if he comes to believe that his job has no significance. There are undoubtedly many diplomatic posts in the world for which there is little or no present justification. Maintaining them may be inescapable but can have a devastating effect on the diplomats who are obliged to keep them open.

Indeed, the challenge for Canadians, the Canadian government, and the foreign service is to continue to employ our talent, of which there is a vast reservoir in our foreign service, in imaginative ways, helping to ensure that members of the foreign service have the direct challenge of contributing to the formulation of our foreign policy. If some posts require a reduction in staff, there are certainly others which could benefit from strengthening of their activities, particularly in the trade field.

On another subject, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether, in the circumstances of the foreign service today, or indeed at any time, the introduction of collective bargaining or, in effect, the trade union method of negotiating conditions of employment has been a very helpful innovation.

Without wanting to sound like an ultra-traditionalist, I would suggest that we have not benefited much from the introduction into the foreign service of collective bargaining. I would certainly hope that at least some of the more difficult manifestations of collective bargaining can be avoided by ensuring that the practices and conditions within the foreign service are such as not to trigger that particular form of redress.

In that context, of course, the report of the royal commission becomes particularly relevant since Miss McDougall has attempted, with considerable success, to address some of the problems of the foreign service in an environment where, for example, the role of spouses is changing, or where single-parent families have particular constraints or needs. I hope that members of the House will take the trouble to review some of the recommendations which Miss McDougall has offered because they have real validity. In that connection I would note that the Prime Minister has requested the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) to assume responsibility for the review of the report's recommendations. In carrying out that role, the minister has appointed a senior member of the department to co-ordinate a response which is now well advanced.

However, in any discussion of the report it is important to recall that its recommendations, and the issues it has raised, are complex and many of them have extensive legal and financial implications. As a result it is obvious that the recommendations need to be thoroughly examined and changes designed which will bring the maximum long-term benefits.

I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already reported to the House that certain steps have been taken to implement recommendations of the royal commission report. The House will have in mind that one of the principal recommendations of that report is the merger of the former trade commissioner service, which hitherto functioned under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, with the foreign service of the Department of External Affairs. That merger, recommended by the royal commission, recognizes the fundamental fact that Canada is a trading nation, that our prosperity depends to a major degree on trade, on our ability to trade with other countries. For a country that lives by trade, we have fortunately long had an outstanding trade commissioner service. I, for one, welcome the merger but will follow with interest whether the traditions and the quality of the trade commissioner service are maintained in the new merged foreign service.

As part of the review of recommendations, the assistant under secretary responsible for personnel and the co-ordinator, whom I mentioned earlier, have met with individual staff associations of the department and various employee groups to ensure that their reactions are fully taken into account in the government's implementation of the recommendations it chooses to follow. In addition, all staff at posts abroad have been invited to submit their comments.

Amendments to the foreign service directives as implemented a month or so ago respond directly to many of the royal commission's recommendations for improvements in benefits and compensation for foreign service.

On an interdepartmental basis, the working groups, chaired by the co-ordinator, have submitted a number of papers and recommendations on diplomatic status, privileges and immunities, passports, equity of treatment, security and personal safety, education, recreation and availability of information on current Canadian affairs to foreign service families abroad. In that latter connection, I am sure that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) who I see in the House this evening will recall well the feeling that many of us had abroad of being isolated from events in Canada.

When he and I had the honour of serving in posts abroad, we often encountered difficulty in being kept up to date on information concerning Canadian events and public policy. I am sure that any improvement made in that area will be of great benefit to the effectiveness of our foreign service.

Those issues which I have touched upon, all of which were identified in the royal commission report, are now being considered by senior management in the Department of External Affairs. Questions of the foreign service environment are also being addressed with recommendations on the report's many spouse related issues, including the conditions and circumstances of life abroad which spouses are likely to encounter. As well, the report deals with questions on housing, health care, the concerns of single employees and a variety of other matters. Our expectation that recommendations for senior management and, as appropriate, for government consideration, will be available by the end of this month.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that whatever positions are initially taken by the department, some have significant financial implications which will require consultation with Treasury Board and in some cases with other departments and agencies of government.

In short, within the Department of External Affairs, work is underway on a variety of organizational, personnel administration and foreign service management changes which flow directly from the report of the royal commission. Accordingly, the government has decided to seek an amendment to the Department of External Affairs Act with the aim, among other things, of giving responsibility to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the administration of the foreign service and of recognizing the foreign service as an integral but unique component of the public service. In its application, the new act will make it possible to make, in the commissioner's words, "Occasional exceptions to domestically oriented policies and programs in the personnel and financial administration fields, where foreign service requirements dictate such acceptance."

The concept of a broader foreign service act, not recommended by the royal commission but proposed by a staff association, is also being studied. It is hoped that the new act will be presented to the House for consideration in the near future.

In providing for special legislation governing circumstances of foreign service, we are not in fact engaging in any radical departure from Canadian practice or, indeed, from British practice where circumstances of the foreign service, circumstances differing from those which obtain in the public service generally, have traditionally been embodied in separate legislation. Foreign service should be, to a degree, regarded as a separate and identifiable entity within the total public service.

Separately, a study is under way into the extent to which there can be a greater delegation of decision making authority to heads of posts abroad. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that one of the commissioner's recommendations was "Let managers manage and make them manage." The government, sympathetic to this point of view, is examining the best means of putting this broad recommendation into effect.

Mobility was also encouraged in the report between the foreign and domestic services. A task force with a mandate to include the development of a plan to increase two-way secondments has been established under the chairmanship of a senior public service employee. Action is also being taken to improve the administrative capability of foreign service personnel through the reintroduction of the administrative services employee group. This group disappeared in past reorganizations.

During the last two years, competitions have been held to staff 33 such positions, with 27 of the successful candidates drawn from the rotational support staff ranks. In addition, it is expected that during the next two years about 50 administrative trainees will be recruited, of whom no less than one-half will be drawn from within the department.

In summary, a wide range of activities are under way both within the department and interdepartmentally to examine the recommendations of the royal commission. Careful consideration is being given to all the issues addressed in its report. Steps are already being taken in a number of areas directly relevant to its recommendations and observations.

I shall conclude by quoting an observation of the commissioner. She said:

> The foreign service I have described still attracts and retains a high calibre of employee—one who responds to challenge, is stimulated by change and adjusts extraordinarily well to a variety of living and working conditions. I met such people everywhere I went and at every level. They work hard, they give their best and they enjoy the service.

Canada can be proud of such a foreign Service, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in Saskatoon last Sunday I joined a group of people in the park near the Bessborough Hotel for an ecumenical service protesting the Cruise missile and asking for peace in general throughout the world. We had very bad weather last Friday and Saturday in Saskatoon. There were dark clouds, rain and snow of all things on the second to last day of May. However, as the service was taking place at about 3.00 to 3.30 on Sunday afternoon, the clouds suddenly broke and a glorious spring came to Saskatoon.

• (2030)

This event is something that I would like to see take place in the world. Then we would be able to find fresh sunlight of hope breaking through the dark clouds of despair which in a sense cover so much of the planet. I hope we find some solution to the problems which have been discussed today in the House of Commons by members of all parties. I hope we find some real answers to these questions.

Interestingly enough, on the same afternoon in Penticton, British Columbia, at the provincial convention of the Liberal Party there was an ongoing discussion regarding the whole question of the testing of missiles in Canada and nuclear disarmament. I understand there was hot debate at that particular meeting and that a certain gentleman by the name of Mr. James McIntosh of Richmond countered that the arms race is "like two men standing in a basement up to their ankles in gasoline. One has seven matches and one has nine, and the idiot with the nine matches thinks he is safest". I was glad to hear that the British Columbia Liberal Party sent a strong recommendation to the national government to take into consideration that thought when it sends representatives to the United Nations for the disarmament talks next week.

I am happy that this debate was called today and that it began with the question of human rights. Of course I would have been happier if other countries had been listed in the motion aside from Poland. I do not think anyone in the House of Commons doubts the question of the violation of human rights in Poland, but South Africa and some other countries in Latin America could have been included. Even a closer look at ourselves would provide opportunity for a broader and fairer debate on the question of human rights. One major problem facing the world at the present time is the violation of human rights at all levels in all parts of the world.

During my tenure in the House of Commons, I feel that the two experiences for my part which were the most important was working on the North-South task force and later on the special subcommittee to study Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. These groups consisted of hon. members of all three parties, people with different experiences and people with different perceptions. At the end of the work of both these committees, as the interim report on Latin America and as the report of the task force were brought down, there was unanimous consent on the part of all parties in regard to these two areas. It was a thrilling experience. When we deal with all problems of the planet in areas in which we do not have all that much expertise, the best we can do, if we are to do anything, is to use everything at our disposal to reach a positive conclusion. I think everyone who worked on these committees would agree that we were able to work together on these serious questions. I was fascinated to learn that people from different parts of Canada with varying backgrounds had different perceptions of the same thing. I should like to speak tonight about perceptions—how people see things.

Many members of the House of Commons, whether they like it or not, are about my age. We are all Canadians. Some of us were born in Canada but we have all lived through the same era of history. I was 17 years old when the first atomic bomb was detonated and knew that from that day on the world would never be the same. Something happened that day which had never happened before, and from that day on the history of the planet was different. It is fascinating how differently Members of Parliament perceive that event. I feel that we must find a way to get rid of atomic bombs; there is no question about it. Yet, other people seem to think that we need more atomic bombs in order to be safer. I am not questioning their truthfulness, but some people feel that more armament brings greater security and safety. I am not condemning anyone because their perception is different than mine, but I am mentioning this because basically we were all born here and we see things differently.

When we look at this in the context of Canada, we realize that there are many different people in various parts of the land, but when we look outside the country we see how difficult it is to obtain an accurate perception of another reality in another part of the world. Fortunately I had the experience of living for a period of time in Latin America. It was not my fault; it just happened to be part of my life experience. Anyone who has gone to live in another country for a number of years will share the experience I had and know how difficult it was to find out what was going on in Latin America. In the beginning many things were shocking. How could these people see things in that manner? Why could I not see it in the same way? Was I stupid or were they stupid? People who have lived in other countries talk about culture shock, and culture shock is what it is. It literally flattens a person when he cannot find out what is going on some place else. However, after a person lives in another place for a while, begins to speak the language and begins to hear what the people are saying, he begins to realize that they have reasons for looking at things as they do. As I say, members of the House of Commons have different reasons for looking at things in different ways.

Approximately 2½ months ago the main concern was the question of El Salvador. We know that there was deep division on our perception of what was taking place there. Again, I condemn no one's perception, but there was deep division within the House of Commons on the question of El Salvador and what was taking place there. It was difficult—and I am not saying that it was the same for everybody—to understand a complicated reality in a totally different historical and cultural place. That was the question 2½ months ago. Suddenly on April 2 the news changed. El Salvador was more or less forgotten, Central America dropped out, and attention was focused on the southern Atlantic and the Falkland Islands.

Throughout history the people of Latin America have looked upon the Fakland Islands as the Malvinas. From the time they are little children they look upon the islands as part of Argentina. Their perception of the islands is very different than our perception, if anyone knew where they were, that the Falkland Islands are British territory. With this twofold perception there was bound to be a head-on clash.

It was almost like a medieval play. For a period of four, five or six weeks, they were being drawn closer and closer into conflict while everyone hoped a solution would be found in order to stop that conflict. But they kept getting closer and closer to that final conflict until finally there was attack, death, destruction, ships sunk, planes being shot down and both countries going bankrupt along with all the other tragedies which war entails. Obviously, it would have been preferable for this not to happen, but it did.

I personally believe that in our modern world with its atomic bombs and the threat of total destruction within hours that one of our greatest problems is that we lack a true model for solving conflicts. We need another way to solve conflicts other than armed confrontation. When the crisis began I read an article, which I believe is true, about a group of children who were visiting President Reagan of the United States. These children had heard about the war over the Islands which was about to commence. These children asked President Reagan why it was not possible to play a game in which the winner could win the Islands.

Although this may seem like a naive suggestion, let us imagine for a moment that this could be one possible model for establishing who had sovereignty over the Islands. Instead of young men dying and families crying over the loss of their sons, imagine another way to solve the conflict which the diplomats were unable to do. I say this in the sense of using our imagination because it probably would not have happened. There ultimately had to be some kind of contest over this stalemate, so let us suppose that the idea proposed by the children to the President of the United States had been accepted as the process in which to solve the conflict. An international football match between England and Argentina could have been arranged. The prize would have been sovereignty over the Islands. In this way the conflict could be settled without having to revert to war. I think that this model might have been accepted. Argentina won the World Cup in international soccer which Latin countries believe to be a great achievement. They were the last winners in 1978. England has also won the cup and both countries are great soccer powers. The World Cup is being played again in approximately a week and is contested every four years.

Let us suppose that this particular solution had been followed. The troops would have left the Island and a third country could have been selected as a site for the game. It could have been televised on international television for everyone to see and representatives from every country could have attended. This game would have been played for the sovereignty over the Islands and there would not be death and destruction all over the Islands.

The point is that there must be other ways to solve conflicts. I spoke with the Prime Minister of Barbados and mentioned this proposition which was made by those children. He said it was a good idea but that if Barbados was involved they would have to play cricket. Any game could be played, but at least it would be another way to solve the problem of conflicts in our modern world.

One factor which brings about conflict is differing perceptions on issues. This motion deals with the implementing of the McDougall report recommendations relating to the foreign service. I believe it is extremely important that today's diplomats are very well versed in the cultural and historical values of the countries to which they are stationed so that they will be able to really understand what is happening in those countries. I appreciate that our diplomats do attempt to become part and parcel of the society and philosophies of the people in the countries they are stationed, but nevertheless, we must realize that diplomats enter those countries with a slanted view, or preconceived notion, of the reality in those countries.

For example, members of the House of Commons are Canadians who are roughly the same age, with the same type of education, the same background and yet we have quite different slants to our views. When we filter information back to our constituents, the slanted view which various members may have will obviously taint the reality of the matter we are reporting on.

Mr. Gamble: The same as yourself.

Mr. Ogle: I have a slant as well. There is no doubt about that. What I am attempting to say is that by understanding the culture of different people, our slanted point of view will change. If we impose our standards on the culture of another country and assume that is what it should be, it will, of course, be an improper slant.

As we consider this motion today, it is important that we realize we are facing a decade ahead which could literally mean the end of the world.

As all members know, the Holy Father, Pope John Paul II is visiting the British Isles. It is the first time a Pope has visited England. There has been 400 years of separation between churches at one level or another which has been marked by bloody war at times, with hate and anger because of different perceptions or slants on the meaning of religion and what it will mean. The Pope is in England now. While I was watching the sun rise over Saskatoon, the Holy Father was in Coventry, England. As we all know, that is an area in England in which the beautiful medieval cathedral of Coventry was flattened in the Second World War. Coventry became the inspiration for the British during the war. The motto was "pay them back because of Coventry."

The Pope was there in an ecumenical group of Anglicans, Catholics and others and gave a speech on peace. I would like to read part of that speech for the record. He said:

> Wherever the strong exploit the weak; wherever the rich take advantage of the poor; wherever great powers seek to dominate and to impose ideologies, there the work of making peace is undone; there the cathedral peace is destroyed. Today, the scale and the horror of modern warfare, whether nuclear or not, makes it totally unacceptable as a means of settling differences between nations. War should belong to the tragic past, to history; it should find no place on humanity's agenda for the future.
> And so, this morning, I invite you to pray with me for the cause of peace. Let us pray earnestly for the Special Session of the United Nations on Disarmament, which begins soon. The voices of Christians join with others in urging the leaders of the world to abandon confrontation and to turn their backs on policies which require the nations to spend vast sums of money for weapons of mass destruction. We pray this Pentecost that the Holy Spirit may inspire the leaders of the world to engage in fruitful dialogue. May the Holy Spirit lead them to adopt peaceful ways of safeguarding liberty which do not involve the threat of nuclear disaster.

Thank you.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that this type of motion should come from the hon. member from St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He must have found it very difficult to develop his position on Saint Pierre and Miquelon, which he already mentioned in his speech, and to produce such a motion. He has to be some kind of an acrobat.

• (2050)

In any case, tradition has it that the role of the opposition party is to oppose the government; but tradition also has it that the opposition party should oppose the government on sensible policy grounds and not just for the sake of opposition. Its motion already contradicts the affirmation of the government of the United Kingdom when it says that it is satisfied with the support that Canada has given. It has not put in any requests which have not been satisfied, and this has been established quite a few times. The opposition party's motion before the House today "deplores the failure of the government to represent Canada properly or adequately in our external relations or in accordance with views and principles of the Canadian people". Then it proceeds to list, in a shotgun approach, a variety of subjects concerning which the government policy has allegedly produced failure, which the opposition party calls upon this House to deplore.

Allow me to recite some of the opposition's complaints. It complains about the government's response to the violation of human rights in Poland. It complains about the government's response on the imposition of martial law in Poland. It complains about the alleged failure of the government to strengthen the Department of External Affairs. My colleague, the distinguished member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) dealt with this question with eloquence.

The opposition party also complains about the alleged failure to eliminate patronage in the operation of the Department of External Affairs, but this complaint does not come from the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) because during the tenure of the Clark government he was the champion. He affirmed that he was or would be the champion of patronage. The opposition also complains about the alleged failure to support Britain and the rule of law in respect to the current crisis in the Falkland Islands.

Others from this side have adequately dealt with the other question or aspects of the motion. I will mainly deal with the question of the Falkland Islands. I would like to address myself to this question because of the situation that it represents today. It represents a demonstration of support for a principle of international relations which is perhaps the most important event in mankind's struggle for the supremacy of the rule of law since the Korean War, when the nations of the world united to resist an act of flagrant aggression. I say this because what is happening in the Falklands today is a reaffirmation of the principles so clearly laid down in the United Nations Charter that international disputes must not be resolved by armed force or the world will subside into the rule of the jungle.

It has taken modern world society ten years of violent, total warfare in World War I and World War II to come to the belated realization that war can no longer be the plaything of states and generals in charge of such states and that it must be replaced by the rule of law. That is the reason the government has taken the stand it has in opposition to Argentina's clear act of provoked aggression—

Mr. Crosbie: What stand?

Mr. Dupras: —and territorial greed. I was glad to hear the minister clearly enunciate that again in his speech today.

Mr. Crosbie: What speech?

Mr. Dupras: I was also glad to hear the minister reiterate the government's view that it takes no stand on the question of the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands, which is the core of the current dispute on the grounds that this is a matter for negotiation and agreement between Britain and Argentina.

Mr. Crosbie: What nonsense!

Mr. Dupras: Clearly Britain has a very strong case for its claim to sovereignty, but we must concede that Argentina also has a case, a case which it has maintained for many years. I would like to read an editorial from the Ottawa Citizen of May 7, 1982, which states:

That the Falklands have been under British control since 1833 is a fact. Whether the Falklands are British and the British have the right to continue to control over them is for the world court or for an arbitrator and not for one of the parties to the dispute to decide.

That is the government's position. It is clear from the evidence I have just cited that, contrary to the views of the opposition party, it is indeed in accordance with the views and principles of the Canadian people.

The issue, therefore, is not the question of sovereignty but the method by which Argentina has sought to resolve a dispute. The minister, in his speech, pointed out the history of the past two decades of negotiation between Britain and Argentina up to and including the most recent negotiations which concluded only a few days before Argentina's unilateral action. Negotiation is the civilized modern manner to resolve these disputes as demanded by the Charter of the United Nations as so aptly stated by The Globe and Mail editorial on May 11, last:

The transfer of sovereignty must be negotiated by Argentine diplomats, not imposed by Argentine admirals.

This is the position of the government as reiterated by the minister in his remarks today. It has been the position of the government throughout and was eloquently expressed by Canada's representative to the United Nations in his interventions before the Security Council as illustrated by the minister.

It seems clear from some of the remarks made by supporters of the opposition party's motion that the Canadian role should be in support of Britain regardless of the issue of principle involved. This is not, however, the position of the government or the view of informed Canadian opinion as demonstrated by the following quotation from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of May 2, last, which states:

> Muddy thinkers have suggested that those who are supporting Britain in this dispute are doing so for reasons of tradition or of support for a last fling at colonialism. Nothing could be further from the truth. Canada, the United States, the European Economic Community and others are applying economic and diplomatic pressure to Argentina because of the principles that force must not be allowed as a way of conducting international relations and because free peoples have a right to self-determination, no matter how small the numbers involved.
> In the wintry seas of the South Atlantic, Britain is placing at risk the lives of its soldiers, seamen and airmen so that these principles may be upheld. It would be far better if this were not necessary, if Argentina would listen to reason and behave like a mature and responsible state rather than an international outlaw.
> The financial and human cost to Britain of this principled action has been high. It is a price that democracy should be prepared to pay, however, both for the immediate reasons and because of the undoubted contributions that this action is making to international stability. If the member states of the League of Nations had shown the kind of resolute commitment to lawful behaviour now being shown by Britain, the tragic trail of the 1930s might not have led to the Second World War. Had Japan paid a high price for its Mukden venture in 1931, had Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy been subject to crushing sanctions and the threat of joint military action in the mid-1930s when they were flexing their muscles, all three countries might have enjoyed the blessing of their dictatorships collapsing or being overthrown.
> All over the world today, cruel and greedy dictatorships are closely watching the development of the Falklands crisis. Had Britain taken the easy way out, washing its hands of the 1800 Falkland Islanders and conceding Argentina the right to grab them and their land by force, the world now would be seeing a rash of such military ventures. Whatever the outcome of this crisis, much credit for sustaining decent standards of international behaviour is due to all countries, including Canada, that have participated in opposing Argentina's lawlessness.

That is precisely the point of view of the government and the basis on which the government's actions have been taken. It is clear from the editorial I have just cited that it is a position widely endorsed by the Canadian people and proves the shallowness of the opposition's argument that the government has failed to respond to the views and the principles of the Canadian people.

Mr. Crosbie: You've done nothing.

• (2100)

Mr. Dupras: The minister in his speech demonstrated that Canada acted quickly and resolutely in response to Argentina's action.

Mr. Crosbie: Did what? How did Canada react?

Mr. Dupras: It acted in full support of the principle of international law which Britain, at tremendous cost to itself, has undertaken to support. As stated by the Winnipeg Free Press on May 18:

> The world stands in debt to Britain already for the costs it has incurred and the risks it has taken in support of that freedom.

The opposition motion argues that Canada has failed to support the United Kingdom and the rule of law in international affairs in this matter, but the facts obviously demonstrate clearly the fallacy of this argument. As the minister pointed out, Britain's main request to Canada was to support them in upholding the rule of law, and this we have done forthrightly and repeatedly.

As the minister mentioned, the British government has expressed its full appreciation for our action. In respect of more practical support, the minister has assured the House that no British request has gone unanswered, and I think that we can all take satisfaction from that fact as well. The opposition attempt to demonstrate that Canada is a meek, disinterested observer in this matter lends no credit to itself or to its responsibility as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

I was humiliated in committee about three weeks ago when members of the Conservative Party said that Britain should need our help, that she cannot win the war by herself. I was surprised and disappointed in this, because, as I said already, we have satisfied all of their requests; and I have pride enough and knowledge enough of their capabilities to know that they do not need Canada's effort or its contribution.

In respect of the international negotiation process, the minister explained that Canada has repeatedly indicated its willingness to facilitate negotiations or to participate in any agreed settlement that might emerge from the negotiation process. That is in accordance with our traditional image and role as a responsible member of the international community. The House should fully support the government, Mr. Speaker, but what I am really worried about is this.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what I am really concerned about in this conflict is the post-conflict period. Not a single opposition member has thought about this side of the matter or what Canada could do and what its role will be after the conflict. If the people of the Falkland Islands are given a choice, they will surely prefer to retain British citizenship and refuse, for very obvious reasons, to live under Argentine rule.

It seems to me, and the facts appear to be supporting this more and more, that the support Argentina has received in this conflict from the Latin American community is based on some vague romantic principle instead of on more tangible values such as respect for human rights, freedom of religion and freedom of expression. Mr. Speaker, what frightens me is the consequences the conflict will have on this community and on the credibility of the institutions involved—I am, of course, referring to the Organization of American States. What will be left of the credibility of this institution? Will the old alliances and friendships that existed for so many years be able to survive the conflict? Will certain countries be willing to accept Argentina's new-found friendship with the Soviet Union, for instance? Will our neighbours to the south continue to enjoy the influence they seem to have over a number of countries in Central and South America?

Mr. Speaker, all these questions have drawn very few comments or proposals for solutions from the members of the opposition. I feel that there is here a very basic and valid reason why the Canadian government should maintain the position it has adopted and which I described in the first part of my speech, and why, once the conflict has been settled, it should concentrate on what is to happen after the war. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we must remember that many South American countries are developing countries, and that Canada, the United States and Great Britain have committed funds provided by the taxpayers of our respective countries towards reducing poverty and finding solutions to the problems facing society in developing countries, the majority of South American countries being considered as belonging to the South, in this respect.

The countries in the southern hemisphere of the Americas are understandably very distressed, and it would certainly not be appropriate to criticize them or the United Nations or the Organization of American States, because even if the latter two organizations have often failed politically, they have also to their credit some very important, though perhaps lesser known, achievements in a number of areas including literacy programs, public health, human rights, status of women, financial administration, statistics, history and geography. The Organization of American States has been very successful in all of these areas.

I believe that it will be necessary to rethink the need for continental solidarity and to seek a new approach to our common security. We shall have to find a formula that will restore peace, trust and honour to all citizens in all the countries and territories of the American continent. After this war, it will be necessary to consider a reorganization of the American states which could be based on a treaty of perpetual union with guarantees for common defence, peaceful solution of conflicts and maintenance of existing borders. Representatives of the various nations involved would have to analyse the principles and theories in favour of a union of the countries of this continent and the means by which this can be realized. Finally, a continental assembly involving all North and South American countries would have to be established for the purpose of finding a solution and rebuilding the Organization of American States.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, very few countries on the North or South American continent will be able to lead such an undertaking, and it is clear that this role will have to be played by Canada, because its influence and prestige are without equal in Central and South America; it has no colonial past and also because it has acted wisely in the position it has taken throughout this conflict, thus ensuring that some day, Canada's voice of reason will enable it to play a major and essential role in restoring peace and renewing the entire Organization of American States. Mr. Speaker, Canada is held in respect. Since the beginning of this century, it has been asked to collaborate with and to join, the Organization of American States. However, I would prefer to see my country join an Organization of American States after it has been renewed and modified to give each country a more distinctive place within the Organization than it has at the present time. I see you are about to tell me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago a national poll showed that the concerns of Canadians were, first of all, high interest rates and their impact on family and business life; second, concern about their homes and their ability to keep them; and third, the matter of survival, nuclear war, and the whole state of the world in which we live. An opposition party trying to be responsible in terms of the actions of a government looks day by day at the ability of that government to meet the needs and to be seen to be addressing the needs of the people. Day by day in this House in recent weeks we in the official opposition have addressed the concerns of Canadians about the effects of interest rates and the effects of inflation and the concerns of home owners, and today it is fitting that in the name of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) we should lift up for discussion throughout the day the matter of the failure of the government to give leadership in this third area, which these polls show is of prime concern to Canadians, in terms of Canada's place and the leadership of this government in the community of nations.

The motion we are debating this evening deplores the failure of the government to represent Canada properly and adequately in our external relations. Then by way of giving some focus to that broad statement, the motion zeros in on the matter of Canadian leadership, statements and actions with regard to Poland. It goes on to talk about the failure of the government to support the United Kingdom and to support the rule of law in international affairs in relation to the invasion of the Falkland Islands. It then goes on to deal with the failure of the government to retool and reinvigorate those who go out as ambassadors and commissioners on behalf of Canada in our foreign service. It then talks about the cavalier and cynicism-breeding mechanism of patronage in this department and as we have seen it in other areas. Therefore, this evening I am anxious to reflect some of the concerns about which I hear and about which those on this side of the House hear respecting the leadership of this government—or I should say the failure of leadership—which are referred to in the motion before the House.

Through the years we have come to think of Canada as a middle power. In his comments the minister spoke about responsible leadership by a middle power. He spoke about the responsibilities of Canada, but we have now come to a point where Canadian foreign policy has become so ad hoc, so expedient and so inconsistent that Canadians cannot get a picture of what is happening. As is the case with respect to economic policies from day to day, we do not know what to expect, and just as our businesses and our families cannot plan over the long term, so in the matter of foreign policy we are not able to plan or predict how we will act. Increasingly our foreign policy has become directly tied to economic struggles, and one begins first of all to see what is the economic downside and no longer what are the matters of principle.

It has already been said in this debate that it was in 1971, when there was last undertaken a major survey or review of foreign policy in which the Canadian public, interest groups, universities and those with knowledge could begin to be heard so that there could be a statement before the public. As one who has had the opportunity with other members of the House to be part of the subcommittee studying Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, I have been increasingly aware of the importance of this study, even if it is now being done sectorally rather than globally, as was the intention of the Clark government. In paragraph 6 of the interim report which was tabled in this House we addressed the whole matter of failure in this regard. The report says:

> More to the point, our study reflects growing Canadian interest in Latin America and the Caribbean. The only previous Parliamentary investigation directly related to our work was the Report of the Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs on Canada-Caribbean Relations. That report, completed over ten years ago, formed part of a general foreign policy review conducted in the early 1970s. Our work entails a broad examination of Canada's relations with both the Caribbean and Latin America, regions that have changed profoundly over the past decade. Those changes have, in turn, important implications for Canadian foreign policy in the 1980s.

Later on in paragraph 17 of that report we again address the failure in our foreign policy and the need for the government to address it. We said:

> There may be a danger of an exaggerated and naive view of Canadian influence, but there is an even greater danger of downgrading and neglecting our opportunities for influence. The evidence received by the subcommittee suggests that Canada enters the 1980s with a valuable asset in its relations with Latin America and the Caribbean: a generally good reputation for sensitivity and concern. The Government must beware of the risk of eroding this reputation with hasty or ill-advised policies.

I suggest that in relation to foreign policy the calls of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his recent speech for a new code of international ethics is not matched by the mechanism and the tools to present that to the House. The statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) this afternoon that Canadians demand that Canada make a contribution to world order is reflected in the polls, and part of the reason the polls show this concern is that there is a failure of leadership in that area. For the minister to suggest to this House that the government speaks for the main stream of Canadian life is to be well away from the concerns of Canadians day by day.

Let me turn for a moment to our Canadian foreign service and the instrument by which we are represented. We have already heard two of our colleagues on both sides of the House speak from their experience in Canada's foreign service. The whole McDougall report deals with a broad area, as was outlined in the opening comments of the hon. member for St. John's West, of failure on the part of the government. The hon. member for St. John's West reminded us that Ms. McDougall outlined in her report the decline in morale, communication problems, mistrust between departments, the identity crisis, the malaise in the service, failure at the management level and the fact that she had not even been consulted on the recent rearrangements.

There are four main areas outlined in that report, and first among those was the area of the family and environment. Family concerns, the report says, were top priorities of employees of Canada abroad. Spouses are tired of being treated as mere appendages of employees. They need more support because of problems in relation to many moves and their support capacity respecting the careers of foreign service employees.

In that report there is a scathing indictment of the failure to come into modern days in terms of the role of women. In the last throne speech the government made an unprecedented five references to women and the enlightened legislative initiatives in relation to women which would be brought before this House. We have yet to hear a comment on this report by the Prime Minister, who commissioned it, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the minister responsible for the status of women. The report uses terms similar to those used in the recently-tabled report on wife battering. It discusses the tensions and stresses of living abroad representing our nation and the resentment and dissatisfaction of many wives of foreign service personnel due to the pressures on them which are different from the ones which bring about violence in large measure in Canada. However, those pressures are real in relation to family life.

It goes on to speak about the opportunity for leadership in recognizing the spousal contribution—in most cases the spouse being a woman—as official residence administrator and the responsibility that is taken on in that case. It proposes incentive premiums for spouses of foreign service employees and suggests a mechanism for personalizing the whole career pattern through basic personnel, family support services and family counselling services. These are all a part of the business of humanizing and morale building for the repesentatives of Canada abroad. They are also part of a pattern for a government that has a purpose and a plan in relation to women. Surely the neglect of this report and the mass of information it contains is an indictment in itself and is an example of the failure of leadership.

Let me say a word about the implications of what is happening today in the south Atlantic. We have heard some comments about the implications of Canada's policy of continuing to supply nuclear bundles to a government which has openly said that it intends to use its capacity in a destructive way and which has not satisfied the agreements. We have already begun to look at the implications of that. Why are Canadians so deeply concerned about this failure? Surely it is because they begin to see that the mechanisms for heading off confrontations are not in place.

We have a picture of the build-up and the confrontation going on in Port Stanley today as a result of the British armada setting sail for three or four weeks. We have the scenario of the world media following it. We have the scenario of diplomatic nations at work, but we have no mechanism that can stop the bloodshed at this moment. There were three or four weeks' warning of this confrontation. We are told now, however, that if there was a nuclear strike on Toronto, Vancouver or Halifax or any North American city, we would have 12 minutes' warning during which the leaders of the world could negotiate. It is small wonder the Poles are concerned about the lack of mechanism and leadership to deal with the situations facing them today.

In a speech the Prime Minister called for a new code of international ethics. Never have we needed it more, but where are the plans? Where is the leadership from the government in face of the realities of today?

There is a need for new mechanisms for world order. At the forthcoming special session of the United Nations on disarmament which opens on Monday next, there is an opportunity for Canada and other nations to put in place some mechanism to head off the type of confrontation we see now. In the future such confrontations will not use conventional warheads but will use nuclear warheads.

Last September, at the United Nations, nearly 100 parliamentarians, representing 25 or 30 countries, met and introduced a resolution on peacekeeping. When we watched the Secretary General of the United Nations attempt to be an intermediary in the present crisis we realized that he has no authority.

The question of whether Canada could make forces available for peacekeeping must be dealt with. Our forces need to be re-equipped in order to carry out such a responsibility. Those parliamentarians drew up a resolution which said that, believing that it is in the interest of world order, there should be enforceable world law and disarmament and recognizing the need for a permanent administration, the establishment of a standby United Nations peacekeeping force and for members of that peacekeeping force to owe complete allegiance to the United Nations and not to the national contributing governments, and being aware that at present the contributing nations can withdraw forces at any time as well as realizing that not all members for the Security Council pay for forces which they voted to establish, and continued as follows:

> Urges the United Nations to establish a standing peacekeeping force individually recruited, such recruits to be carefully screened to ensure that they are of high calibre and character; and also
> Urges the United Nations to establish an international satellite monitoring agency to provide impartial information about the integrity of international boundaries and the deployment of the world's military forces.

There are options, Mr. Speaker, so that as the world moves from crisis to crisis there would be an authority to which Canada could contribute. Recently in the matter of the law of the sea we have begun, in a small way, to agree to limiting our sovereignty. In the matter of air piracy and terrorism in the air, we have begun to agree to mechanisms of order so that we can begin to limit that type of piracy. Surely national terrorism and national piracy have to be addressed in terms of the future of the human family. If we fail to do this, all who advise us tell us that the next generation of nuclear missiles will be as mobile as a house trailer in the hands of an Idi Amin or someone else, or in the hands of Argentina or some other government with its back to the wall. More by accident than design we may find ourselves faced with the use of these terrible and terrorizing instruments.

The motion before the House tonight suggests that there are opportunities for leadership by Canada in the area of human rights, peacemaking, peacekeeping, and for sending what has been in the past one of the most able and respected foreign services, abroad. We can to this with integrity and with purpose.

It is because of the weight of public opinion that we on this side introduced this motion and urge the government to give the leadership which is its responsibility.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the decision by the Soviet Union and the Polish communist authorities on December 13, 1981, to govern Poland with a military junta was like a knife in the heart of the Solidarity movement in Poland. This is a peaceful social movement, demanding nothing more than the same rights and freedoms that we have entrenched in our constitution, proclaimed by this Parliament on April 17, this year. They demand nothing more than the right to have free workers' unions which would be recognized by the employer, in this case the Polish government.

• (2130)

There has not been a more crucial crisis in the world since the December 13, 1981, Polish crisis. We have had many other very serious crises such as El Salvador and the Falkland Islands, but in my opinion none were as crucial as that of Poland. I have never been so disgusted, Mr. Speaker, with an opposition motion as I am with this one.

Mr. Crosbie: Get some backbone and support the motion.

Mr. Flis: This is a motion which lumps in the Polish crisis with the McDougall commission and patronage in the operation of the External Affairs Department. The official critic tells me to get some backbone. Mr. Speaker, I am standing here with backbone—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: —and that is why I am taking part in this debate. This is the importance that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) places on the violation of human rights in Poland and the implementation of martial law therein.

Mr. Wenman: Look to your own government.

Mr. Flis: I appeal to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) to do this country a favour and please—please—replace his present official external affairs critic with someone who is more responsible and knows what the hell he or she is talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: He is like a fish out of water, wriggling helplessly, flopping on the sand for survival.

Mr. Crosbie: You are an idiot.

Mr. Flis: Scoring political points is more important to the official opposition and the hon. member for St. John's West, than helping the people of Poland and Canadians of Polish descent.

Mr. Wenman: Why are you afraid to speak against the government?

Mr. Flis: Let me explain what I mean, Mr. Speaker. Martial law was imposed on Sunday, December 13, 1981.

Mr. Cousineau: Why don't you just listen and shut up?

Mr. Flis: The next morning, Monday, December 14, I called a meeting of the Polish emergency committee of Canadian parliamentarians, made up of members of all parties. The co-chairman is the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski). But he did not initiate such a meeting; he did not think the imposition of martial law was serious enough. A member from this side of the House had to call the meeting to formulate a motion to present in this House on December 14 and this is the motion which was worked out by representatives from all three parties. I am very proud of the members who were present such as the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), and members from this side of the House. This is what we worked out:

Whereas Canadians are greatly concerned over the recent developments in Poland, and whereas Canadians strongly adhere to the principles of the Helsinki Accord with special references to basic human rights and freedoms, and whereas Canadians support the citizens of Poland in the struggle to acquire those basic freedoms to which they have a right, and whereas Pope John Paul II yesterday asked that solutions be arrived at without violence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

The hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown had agreed to second this motion but when I arrived in the House he came running over to me and said "Jesse, sorry we cannot support that motion." I found out later why they could not support it. The motion read as follows:

That the House urge all nations of the world to refrain from any political or military actions that may in any way interfere with the internal affairs of Poland and that this House express the wish that Poland's internal difficulties will be solved by peaceful negotiations between the Polish government and the Polish people.

The Speaker asked if there was unanimous consent, which the NDP and the Liberal Party gave, but the Conservatives said no, Mr. Speaker. They said no to a motion worked out by all three parties, yet when it came to put the motion in the House they refused to support it because they wanted one of their own motions—less effective—without any consultation with the other two parties, to go forward first. That is what I mean by their being more interested in scoring political points than helping Canadians of Polish descent or the people in Poland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you talk to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? What did you say to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Flis: Another example of this was at a public meeting in Toronto on Thursday, December 16, 1981. Again, all three parties were present. About 3,000 people were gathered in front of Nathan Phillips Square. Following the meeting representatives from all three parties—I remember it as if it were tonight—were still on the platform and they agreed to meet the next morning in Ottawa to formulate a motion incorporating the resolutions of the Canadian Polish Congress and the thousands of Canadians gathered at Nathan Phillips Square.

The next day in the House of Commons a motion was presented without any consultation with the all-party committee which was set up for that purpose, among other things. The resolutions were very good. To give you an example, it said:

1. To press for the immediate lifting of martial law in Poland and the release of all Solidarity officials.

2. To press for the reinstatement of the rights of workers to form free trade unions.

3. To publicly state that no intervention by third parties into the internal affairs of Poland will be tolerated.

4. To send to Poland, for distribution by non-government organizations, significant economic aid in the form of food, medical supplies and agricultural machinery and feedstuffs in order that the people of Poland survive the coming winter.

All these resolutions were acceptable to this side, but again the Tories wanted to play their grames. They did not want to co-operate with the other two parties, they wanted to beat everyone to the punch. We could have modified one of those resolutions and probably got unanimous consent in this House.

The mover of today's motion read the resolutions presented to him by Mr. Przetakiewicz, whose name he could not even pronounce, again showing the disrespect he holds for Canadians of Polish descent. Does the hon. member know who Mr. Przetakiewicz is? I would like to read to him from the information bulletin called "Solidarnosc", edited by Mr. Przetakiewicz. On the very back it says:

Solidarity Information Offices abroad are not officially authorized to represent 'Solidarnosc'.

Mr. Crosbie: So what. Do you think the Polish government is going to authorize it?

Mr. Flis: That is the attitude, Mr. Speaker: so what. I ask the external affairs critic for the official opposition not to disgrace the name of Solidarity by lumping it together in the same motion with the McDougall commission, and department patronage. The hon. member is so ignorant that he has not even taken the time to learn that it is the Canadian Polish Congress which represents all of the major Canadian Polish organizations in Canada including the Polish Canadian action groups and Mr. Przetakiewicz group. It is the Canadian Polish Congress which is the official spokesman on the views of Canadians of Polish descent, and if the hon. member does not know how to organize things, I would be willing to arrange a meeting with the head executive board of the Canadian Polish Congress for him and his leader since they appeared to be unable to organize even this small task. I am pleased to say that from the time Solidarity began in Poland, Canadians of Polish descent, and all of the major Polish Canadian organizations, have had an open door to this government.

Mr. Crosbie: They went speedily through the door and out again with nothing accomplished.

Mr. Flis: The critic says nothing was accomplished. I will tell him what these consultations accomplished. Consultations with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) led to refugees being allowed to stay in Canada on a one-year permit, allowing them to work and be eligible for all the benefits that Canadians are eligible for.

• (2140)

These consultations led to the policy where people from Poland who wanted to come as permanent immigrants were processed much more quickly without too many questions being asked. Last week when the minister appeared before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration he agreed to meet again with representatives from Canadian Polish organizations to review current immigration policies and visitor-visa policies for the Polish people.

I have lost track of the number of meetings the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has had with the President of the Canadian Polish Congress, Mr. Kaszuba, and other leaders of Canadian Polish organizations. I know about them because I was present at most of the meetings. These consultations led to the $500,000 which this government gave to the International Red Cross to help the Polish people with medicine, food and clothing. These consultations led to the $300,000 which this government gave directly to the Canadian Polish Congress so that the food, medicine and clothing would go to the needy people in Poland via the church, not via the communist government. These consultations led to the provision of food for the Polish people through our grain credits.

We have had meetings with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to see whether there was surplus food in Canada which we could sell cheaply or donate to the people of Poland. I was a little shocked to learn that we have very little surplus food in Canada. We are the bread basket of the world yet we have very little surplus food. It is by consultation with Canadians of Polish heritage that we have managed to help not only the people of Poland but also Canadians by reuniting thousands of families.

What have the Tories done? Let me ask the official opposition and the New Democratic Party for that matter, what they have done of a constructive nature to help Canadians whose brothers, sisters and parents are in Poland? The hon. member for St. John's West goes shooting off his mouth across this land and in this House. What has he accomplished? He has discriminated against me personally today in this very chamber by referring to me as "the Polish Pimpernel". When I rose on a question of privilege, he withdrew his words. But that was too late. The damage was done. Just look, Mr. Speaker, they all laugh. They laugh at racist remarks like that. They laugh and they discriminate against a member in this House.

An hon. Member: What is the matter with you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: I can hear the word "turkey" and I can hear other things. I welcome these words because I want it recorded in Hansard so I can send copies across this country for Canadians of Polish descent to read.

As I said, the gentleman withdrew his words when I jumped up on a question of privilege. But it was too late. The damage was done.

On January 27, 1982, the hon. member for St. John's West asked a question of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As reported in Hansard at page 14373 he said:

> Madam Speaker, I would like to move from the world of fantasy land to the world of Po-Land.

He pronounced Po-Land disrespectfully. But it is in Hansard for everyone to read. It does not look discriminatory when one reads it, but the way the hon. member makes these comments is very repulsive. The official critic said this afternoon that he and his party have the full support of the Polish community. With that kind of attitude toward Canadians with backgrounds other than his own, he would be lucky if he could muster even 1 per cent support of the Polish community. I can verify that.

Mr. Crosbie: Be careful. I might run against you.

Mr. Flis: The hon. member says that he might run against me. I say to him "Come into the riding of Parkdale-High Park and I will run against you." The people will speak. They will not put up with that kind of discrimination or that kind of negative attitude. The hon. member was elected to help build a country for the future not to tear it apart; nor to pit one group of Canadians against another group of Canadians. Canadians judge us in this House by our attitude, our behaviour, our sincerity and our respect for all Canadians. We are all Canadians regardless of our roots. Canadians are not very impressed by our foul language which comes from the mouth of the official critic of the external affairs portfolio. I appeal again to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to find himself a critic who will not be an embarrassment to his party, to this House and to this Canada.

There are other incidents of members of the Official Opposition who have made similar unkind remarks, but for the sake of time I will pass over them.

The official opposition likes to take credit for what other federal parties have accomplished. The hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) in his speech today said that it was his party that initiated the Vietnamese boat people program. His statement is totally false. The program for breaking the log jam of boat people was initiated by the Liberal federal government 18 months before the Tory government came into power. It was this Liberal Party which put out a challenge to the Canadian people that the federal government would match one for one the number of refugees sponsored by the private sector to a maximum of 50,000 refugees.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was Mayor Dewar who did that.

Mr. Flis: When the Conservative government came into power, it reduced the limit of 50,000 refugees to 35,000. Where is their humanity, compassion and sympathy? And where is their assistance for refugees?

Today I spoke with Mr. Jan Kaszuba, president of the Canadian Polish Congress, head executive board and Chairman of the Free World Polonia Co-ordinating Council. I highlight the fact that he is chairman of the Free World Polonia Co-ordinating Council. The word "Polonia" may be new to some members in this House. It means "the Polish people". I think it is quite an honour for a Canadian to be elected president of the free world council representing 24 countries and 10 million people of Polish descent beyond the boundaries of Poland. Mr. Jan Kaszuba, the president, is a great Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: I would like to share with this House the latest resolutions put forth by the Canadian Polish Congress. First, is for the government to declare a total embargo on trade with the Soviet Union and suspend all present negotiations as they are the ones responsible for the crisis in Poland. Second, to stop all trade dealings with the government of the Republic of Poland, with the exception of food. The Polish Congress goes on to explain why they make this exception. Third, to recall the Canadian ambassador in Warsaw to express indignation for the violation of human rights in Poland. Fourth, to restrict or cancel consular representation of the people's republic of Poland and bring them on par with Canadian representation in Poland. Fifth, to send representations to the General Assembly of the United Nations to stop the violation of human rights in Poland.

Let us put our partisan politics aside on some issues and let us see how many of these resolutions we can implement as a government. When I say as a government, I mean the official opposition and members of the New Democratic Party. When we want to we can place our political differences in abeyance as we did last Wednesday when members and senators from all parties joined the Polish Alliance of Canada at a banquet celebrated on Parliament Hill to commemorate the seventy-fifth anniversary of one of the oldest and largest Polish organizations in Canada.

• (2150)

In closing, if we could work in harmony during one evening outside the chamber, surely we could work together inside the House to help Canadians help the people of Poland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could we obtain unanimous consent in order for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I was inclined to observe, as I listened to the performance of the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), that there must be something missing when, having just read the latest proposed resolution of the Canadian Polish Conference, he could sit in his seat and support a party which opposed a resolution that was proposed in the House on May 17 by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), which included the following specific provision:

> —and finally, that the Canadian government replace the present symbolic and ineffective sanctions with more meaningful ones and therefore implement a full range of trade, diplomatic, and cultural sanctions against Poland and the Soviet bloc until the state of war is lifted in Poland, and human, citizen, and trade union rights are reinstated.

Of course that resolution did not obtain the approval of that member's party. While he is showing his irrate fit of temper at the hon. member for St. John's West, let me ask him what is his reaction to the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and how he can still remain having regard to those comments within the Liberal Party. He said:

> Hopefully the military regime will be able to keep Solidarity from its excessive demands.

That was the comment of the Prime Minister immediately after the imposition of martial law. Just yesterday a newspaper carried a story about the potential release of Lech Walesa. In that newspaper article is quoted Polish Deputy Prime Minister Jerzy Ozdowski who reportedly said the following with respect to Solidarity:

> It was a movement so young that it didn't take into account the realities. It was bypassing the political conditions and was striving to attain changes which were impossible to implement.

What were the changes? The attainment of freedom and liberty in a country which has long been denied it by another nation, the Soviet Union, against which the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park has not given us a whisper of complaint. Yet, his ancestral country has been subjected to the most tyrannical, imperialistic nation in the world, one which has historically robbed nations around it; imposed martial law where it could; invaded and occupied Afghanistan; used surrogates from Cuba to occupy and assist in the conduct of a civil war in Angola; gobbled up the Baltic states; took over and swallowed up, within the great empire of the Soviet Union, the Ukraine; and has never yet stepped out of a nation that it has occupied. Why has the hon. member, who has the interest of these freedom loving people at heart, not spoken out against this tyrannical regime?

I will tell the House why. It is because it would be out of character for that member of the Liberal Party to speak out against the best interests of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister went on to say:

> If a military regime has the effect of preventing a civil war, I cannot inherently say it is bad.

We are talking about a regime which took over a movement that was finally trying to bring to that brave people the freedom they deserve, and the Prime Minister's comments were to the effect that "I praise them because they helped to avert a civil war." There is no evidence that a civil war would have occurred without the intervention of that monster from the east, the Soviet Union. Also the Prime Minister went on to say:

> We have no evidence of Soviet troops shaking their sabres on the border.

Where was the man? Was he asleep? Did he fail to recognize that on the day before September 13, the commander in chief of the Warsaw Pact was in Warsaw giving directions to their vassals? Did he fail to recognize that for months before the Russian military might had been mounted on the border of Poland, shaking, their sabres so that everyone in the world could hear? They seem to have done that to the escape of the attention of a member of the House who professes to be a champion of the people of Poland. This is offensive to me because it lacks real substance. I should like to have him stand up in his place and condemn the perpetrators of this evil. This has not happened and it is time it did.

If we listen to the comments of the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), we are confronted with a variety of slants. It is time that the House began to recognize a slant which has taken place in Canada where we are blind to aggressive moves by a power which is determined to destroy our systems around the world and has used in the process well-meaning intellectuals who believe that the best thing we can do is to throw up our hands and surrender because it is a horrible offence to protect ourselves against a potential enemy. There is no doubt that there is an enemy there. It is an enemy which has proved itself historically from the beginning of the time when Lenin and his gang of thugs took over the Soviet Union.

We have seen just recently what occurs when a nation has no defence. Had the Falkland Islands been armed to the teeth, it would never have been invaded by the nation which perpetrated that invasion. Argentina would never have sent its ships, airplanes and its men against the Falkland Islands had it been defended. It is important to bear in mind that we in the House ought not to have to experience first-hand what happens when a country is ill-prepared. We should take some guidance and gain prudence from what has happened elsewhere. We have a mighty nation spread over a great continent with hundreds of miles of unprotected territory. For people to suggest that it is appropriate for us in some way to throw down our defences and join some peace pact, knowing that those monsters lurk out there from the Soviet Union, is an abandonment of reason.

I submit with respect to this issue that our place is within NATO and that we have an obligation to protect our country. To fly off in fits of fancy, trying to imagine a better world for all men and women, is to reject common sense and good reason. I submit to the House that the issues which confront us today are those to which the House should direct its attention. We should prepare ourselves and strengthen the Western World. We should not condemn those who join with us in providing the best protection for ourselves and for those other freedom-loving people around this planet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—LEGAL COSTS INCURRED BY EXONERATED NURSE. (B) LAW REFORM COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I may go back just a wee bit, my colleague, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) asked a question of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) on May 26, 1982, relating to the question of compensation for costs incurred on behalf of Miss Susan Nelles for her prosecution on four counts of murder from which she was not only discharged by a judge in Toronto but was, in fact, exonerated in the course of that judgment.

The answer given by the Solicitor General at that time was:

> Madam Speaker, as the House knows, the administration of justice is a provincial matter. The investigation and the charges that were laid were all done under the direction of the provincial authorities. I think, with respect and with the sympathy, that I share for her plight, the hon. member should direct his attention to the government responsible for the decision and for the prosecution.

I give that by way of background information.

That answer disturbed me a great deal; the fact that there should be an attempt to slough off what I would like to tell the House what I believe is a moral responsibility on the basis of the British North America Act as to what is the responsibility of the province and the federal government.

On May 28, 1982, I raised the matter again in the House of Commons. I asked the Solicitor General whether or not, given the responsibility that certainly lies with Ontario, there was not a moral responsibility with respect to the judicial system of the country and especially the criminal law system of the country for some compensation with respect to costs for a person found in the position of Miss Susan Nelles of Belleville. On that occasion the minister went farther than he did with the hon. member for Prince Edward Hastings. He said:

> —I will note the hon. member's representation and I will bring it to the attention of my colleague, the Attorney General of Canada.

I asked him another question and his answer was:

> —I note the hon. member's point. I will bring it to my colleague's attention.

In the blues that I saw, "colleague's" had the apostrophe after the "s" which would have meant his colleagues, the members of cabinet. In the official record of Hansard, "colleague's" has been singularized, I suppose dealing with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

I want to say to the House that there is a moral gap in the criminal law. There is some jurisdiction, some responsibility generally in this field for the subject as evidenced by the report of the Ontario Law Reform Commission in the study done by them in 1977. They said at that time:

—it is not difficult to conclude that the existing system is totally inadequate and should be replaced by a full costs system.

They recommended the combination of federal legislation and in part by federal-provincial arrangements to provide a Canadian criminal cost system with certain features. One of them was to be the granting of costs in cases like this.

I ask the House to consider that a charge was laid by the police after investigation. I do not know what occurred during the course of that investigation but in any event, at the end of it a Canadian citizen was discharged after 14 months. Her reputation was trotted out before the Canadian public. As a professional, she is likely ruined in terms of her profession and no one, whether here, Toronto or elsewhere, can say that it is morally right that the old system ought to apply and that a person like her ought not to be assisted somehow.

The federal government has a responsibility. If the report of the Law Reform Commission is not enough, I want to suggest to my colleagues that we ought to urge upon the government to go together with provincial governments to change that system. But in this particular case I want to urge some recompense, even if in part, for a legal bill that amounts to about $150,000 or $200,000. Surely, if a plaintiff who brings an action is wrong in a civil case and is therefore charged in costs when he loses, it equally ought to apply that the Crown which brought an action under the criminal law jurisdiction when it is shown to be wrong because the charge has been dismissed, ought to also be penalized in costs.

This Susan Nelles case is just the indicator of the inequity in the system. It is time that some equity was brought to the system of criminal justice and we have the chart in this report. I do hope that my friend, the parliamentary secretary, can report on some progress tonight in this matter.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is one which engages a great deal of public sympathy. At the same time, I believe it raises a number of important questions of principle. It would, of course, be entirely inappropriate for me to comment on the particular facts of this specific case. It is my understanding and belief that the matter is presently under review by police investigation. As well, it has been the subject of a provincial inquiry under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Dubin.

The hon. member, however, has quite properly raised the wider questions of principle and policy related to the general question of compensation for accused persons who are subsequently discharged or acquitted. As he noted in his question, "The Government of Ontario has a responsibility with respect to some compensatory arrangement in a case where an accused has been exonerated." I think that this is an extremely important point to consider, given the division of responsibilities in the field of justice under the terms of the Canadian Constitution.

As the hon. member well knows, the Parliament of Canada has the authority to enact legislation with respect to criminal law and procedure, under the terms of Section 91(27) of the BNA Act. The provinces, on the other hand, have the responsibility for enacting legislation related to the administration of justice, under the terms of Section 92(14).

The Criminal Code provides for provincial authorities to carry responsibility for the investigation and prosecution of almost all offences under the Criminal Code. Thus, police forces under the authority of the provincial attorney general or another provincial minister, and Crown prosecutors, also carried the burden of criminal investigation and prosecution in Canada. It is important to observe the division of responsibilities in the field of justice in order that appropriate accountability may be maintained, as well as in order to ensure the most effective use of resources in the important public task of discovering and prosecuting crime.

The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton went on to suggest that there may, as well, be a case for federal consideration of the general issues involved, and referred to a study paper published some nine years ago by the Law Reform Commission. The proposal set out in that study paper which, I might add, did not take the form of a formal recommendation from the commission, suggested that consideration be given to the establishment of a system to pay the costs of all acquitted and discharged accused persons based on economic need, with any such compensation system to be administered by provincial criminal injuries compensation agencies. I might add that no working paper or report has since been published by the commission recommending the adoption of that position, but the president of the Law Reform Commission of Canada has indicated that the general question will be examined again in the context of the criminal law review which has recently been initiated by the federal government in close co-operation with the provincial attorneys general.

ENERGY—EXPORT OF POWER BY HYDRO-QUEBEC—POSSIBLE DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, may I refer the House to the question I directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) last Thursday on the subject of Bill C-108, an act containing amendments to the National Energy Board Act. This bill has given rise to outrageous politicking on the part of Quebec and Newfoundland, on a subject that is purely a matter of economics. Only Lise Bissonnette, in her editorial in the newspaper Le Devoir of May 20, published under the heading "The gnat and the camel", showed a clear understanding of the real problem, which is not the so-called corridor, which indeed Mrs. Bissonnette calls a "scarecrow", but an amendment that will allow the National Energy Board to revoke or suspend a licence if in the opinion of the Board, the public's convenience and necessity so requires. According to Mr. Joseph Bourbeau, Chairman of the Board of Directors of Hydro-Quebec, a neighbour of mine in Brossard, this amendment might jeopardize electric power sales worth nearly $10 billion, and it would not be very wise to allow, and I quote:

—the government unlimited discretion, let alone invite a specialized agency to go beyond its terms of reference.

The expression "public convenience and necessity" included in the bill also appears, for instance, in the Aeronautics Act; as counsel I have had occasion to argue this point of "public convenience and necessity" in connection with the Aeronautics Act, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that this kind of amendment would grant far too extensive powers to the National Energy Board and to the governor in council, and could well draw business decisions into the political sphere. That is the contentious aspect of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I asked the minister to amend his bill and withdraw this provision, which according to Mr. Bourbeau would solve the problem because we would then revert to the original legislation.

As for Hydro-Quebec's concern about regulatory authority, more specifically with respect to the environment, which could very well cause some confusion in negotiations on export contracts and cause federal-provincial relations to deteriorate still further, I may remind Canadians, as our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did previously in the House, that the National Energy Board will have the power to issue a licence, but the licence holder will be governed by current provincial legislation, and as far as Quebec is concerned, this means environmental legislation and, of course, land protection legislation. This is already a daily occurrence in Quebec with respect to Trans Quebec & Maritimes PipeLine. Therefore, I do not think these concerns have any basis in fact. To get back to the corridor, the Parti Québécois can indulge in all the allegations and motions and press conferences and symbolic references it likes, the corridor is just a "scarecrow", to quote the editor-in-chief of Le Devoir. In fact, when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation last Wednesday, the Chairman of the Board of Directors of Hydro-Quebec made it quite clear, and I quote:

I could not care less about the corridor.

And that is because as a project, the corridor is technically and economically just not feasible and is not a viable proposition. First of all, it would be far more expensive to transport electricity and to build such a corridor from Newfoundland than to let Hydro-Quebec transport electric power via its own grid to Ontario, the United States and New Brunswick. Second, the corridor would require not just one line but two, to guarantee supply, which would double the cost. Third, it is clear that it is in the interest of Newfoundland to come to terms with Quebec.

The people of Quebec must remember that the present act does not contain any provisions that would oblige Hydro-Quebec to allow Newfoundland to use its grid, and that the power to expropriate for electric power exports is technically and economically feasible only if the expropriation takes place over a very short distance. Actually, the government included the expropriation clause at the request of Calgary Power, to resolve a regional problem, since, as the House is aware, Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland is far more interested in using the Hydro-Quebec grid to transport electricity than in building a corridor.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the gist of Mr. Bourbeau's testimony was that the dispute between Newfoundland and Quebec could be negotiated without any trouble if the politicians withdrew from the scene and negotiations between Newfoundland and Quebec were handled, not on the basis of symbols, but in a businesslike fashion by businessmen, namely, by Hydro-Quebec and the Churchill Falls Development Corporation, and not by Mr. Peckford and Mr. Lévesque.

In concluding, I may remind the Parti Québécois caucus that as far as this case is concerned they are absolutely not aware of the facts.

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when concern was expressed in this House on May 27 by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) about a proposed amendment to the National Energy Board Act as embodied in Bill C-108, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stated that if a clause in that bill that would make it possible to modify a power export licence would cause problems in relation to an export contract, he would not hesitate to amend the bill to ensure that there was no prejudice to such a contract.

This matter refers to Section 84 of the National Energy Board Act. Currently under Sections 84(1) and 84(2) of that act, the board, with the approval of the governor in council, could not revoke or suspend an export licence unless any term or condition of the licence had not been complied with or had been violated. Under the proposed Section 84(1)(b) the board, with the approval of the governor in council, would be given the additional power to suspend or revoke a licence if, in the opinion of the board, public convenience and necessity so required.

The language of proposed Section 84(1)(b) is based upon a similar provision in the Aeronautics Act which has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

I might say that there were objections to the application of proposed Section 84(1)(b) to exports by the Canadian Bar Association and by Hydro-Quebec. These objections were made on the ground that the exact meaning of the words "public convenience and necessity" could not be precisely defined. The proposed amendment, according to Hydro-Québec, could also raise doubts in prospective customers' minds as to the reliability of Canadian electricity exports and would therefore render negotiations of export contracts even more difficult than they are already. Even if contracts could be negotiated, the additional uncertainty might result in a lower border price than would otherwise be obtained. Hydro-Québec further argued that there would be an effect on existing contracts. This proposed change could, therefore, impact on export contracts worth several billion dollars.

After weighing these arguments, the minister agreed to consider modification of this proposed subsection in Bill C-108 relative to its application to electricity exports. Serious consideration is being given to this matter by the minister and, indeed, it is presently under review by the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—JAMES BAY AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON TAIT REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS. (B) SAFETY OF WATER SUPPLY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, on May 18 I rose to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) when he might expect a decision from the cabinet on the review of the implementation of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. His reply to me was, "Soon, very soon." I am here tonight to see if I can find out what "soon" means.

I have here a copy of the agreement, and it is 454 pages long. It was signed on November 11, 1975, by representatives of the Canadian government, the government of Quebec and representatives of the Cree and Inuit who live in northern Quebec. They gave up much of the territory they had inhabited for centuries—since time immemorial—for a cash settlement that is to be paid out over a period of 20 years and also for a number of benefits which are to accrue to them. Such benefits are housing, education, fire protection, roads, fresh and pure water in their villages, air strips and a number of other things. Unfortunately, many of these things have not been forthcoming.

Last March representatives of the Cree and Inuit came before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and told us of a great number of cases in which this agreement has been seriously breached. We heard of conditions that would make the Third World look pretty good. In one instance we heard of seven children dying in 1980 because of gastroenteritis which had been caused by unsanitary conditions. We heard of tuberculosis throughout the northern villages of Quebec. We heard a litany of complaints that it was a very bad situation.

At this point the committee made a report to the minister pointing out the terrible things that were going on in northern Quebec. He agreed that the situation should be reviewed and appointed an official from his department to go to the area. The official did so and presented an 87 page report to the minister, with recommendations. I understand that this report went before cabinet in January.

On February 18 the minister called a meeting of the Standing Committee of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to discuss the review. He thought that it would be through cabinet by February 18, but unfortunately that was not the case and so we could not discuss it. Every day since then we have expected the decision to be handed down.

On May 14 the chairman of the Standing Committee of Indian Affairs and Northern Development asked the minister when we could expect a decision from cabinet and the reply was that it would be available reasonably soon. I asked the same question a week later and the answer was "soon, very soon."

Today the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development was tabled. Item 12 of the report states as follows:

> Recalling your committee's earlier report to the Minister respecting the implementation of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, your Committee is dismayed by the delay of the federal Cabinet in reaching a just decision based on the recommendations of the department's review, providing for adequate funding according to the terms and conditions of the agreement.

This contract was entered into between the Cree, the Inuit and two governments. It has been broken. It was supposed to be the hallmark of future land claim settlements in Canada. It is a sad situation that we have not been able to honour the agreement. I put the question to the parliamentary secretary, when can this decision be expected?

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) as well as other members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development have expressed concern regarding the time it has taken for cabinet to consider the report on implementation of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. It is unfortunate that it has taken longer than originally anticipated to adequately study this issue and to develop appropriate remedial measures. I am pleased, however, to inform the House that cabinet is in the final stages of considering this matter and I anticipate that the decisions made by cabinet will go a considerable way in resolving the difficulties being experienced by the Cree and Inuit.

The member for Cariboo-Chilcotin is rightfully concerned with the safety of the water supply in the Cree Community of Paint Hills. I assure him I share his concern and steps have been, and will be, taken to improve the situation as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Far be it from me to try to minimize the situation in Paint Hills. However, to set the facts straight, I think I should inform the hon. member that, contrary to what he said in the House on May 18 of this year, the gastroenteritis epidemic which spread through Paint Hills in 1980 did not result in any deaths. A report on the epidemic prepared by Dr. Gary Pekeles in March, 1981, indicates that the number of cases of gastroenteritis in Paint Hills in the spring and summer of 1980 was not any higher than usual.

[English]

The hon. member made reference on May 19 to an apparent conflict between information contained in the minister's letter of March 19, 1982, and water tests conducted on March 9. The March 19 letter to Chief Hughboy of Paint Hills indicated that there did not appear to be any serious water quality problem at that time.

● (2225)

The March 9 test results, however, indicate a serious contamination problem. The fact is that when the minister wrote the letter on March 19, department officials had not yet been notified of the test results. In fact, correspondence from Chief Hughboy indicates that he himself did not receive an official "Notice to Boil" letter until March 19.

Last year, in an attempt to improve general health conditions in the community, a remedial measures program was put in place. I would like to point out that this program was designed and implemented by the Cree themselves with advice from DIAND. It included covering the spring used for drinking water, fitting it with a pump, instituting door-to-door water delivery in safe containers, and a general community clean-up. During 1981-82 our department spent $217,774 in funding this program. It is continuing this year and the department is working with the Cree to resolve the problem.

Although the program has improved conditions somewhat, it is clear that a very serious problem still exists and that the only long-term solution is the construction of permanent infrastructure facilities. A funding proposal for a total water and sewer system has been prepared by my department which will be seeking Treasury Board approval very shortly. The regional director and Chief Hughboy have met here in Ottawa to accelerate approval and construction.

[Translation]

New measures resulting from a study of the James Bay agreement now being considered by cabinet could also be expected to improve the situation very shortly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

THE ECONOMY

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT TAX MEASURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the government is eating "crow" by giving back to the petroleum industry some $2 billion which it should never have taken in the first place, but so far the government has been unrepentant for extracting from consumers millions of dollars via the excise tax, the Canadian ownership tax, the tax on gasoline and heating oil, etc. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House condemns the Liberal government for its greed in levying these taxes and thus killing much of the industry, and for its refusal to help consumers by returning some of the ill-gotten taxes extracted from the aged, the crippled, common workers, businesses, farmers, fishermen and others.

Will this government show no compassion for the poor?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF PLANNED INCENTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the past three months the prime lending rate in Germany has dropped from 13 per cent to 11.5 per cent, in Japan from 7 per cent to 6.4 per cent, and in the United Kingdom from 14 per cent to 13 per cent, but our prime rate went up to 17 per cent. Interest rates in Canada are now 2 per cent to 4 per cent higher than they are in the United States and will probably go higher, yet our currency is even weaker on foreign exchange markets. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the government produce a new fiscal plan for Canada involving incentives to investors, both Canadian and foreign, discontinue all programs prejudicial to new investment in the country, as in the National Energy Program and FIRA, and stop wasting foreign exchange to try to prop up, by artificial means, the exchange value of our currency.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REDUCTION IN RAIL ORDER PLACED WITH SYSCO IN CAPE BRETON, N.S.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that Canadian National has decided to reduce again its order of rails from the Sysco operation in Cape Breton, and since this latest cutback from 88,000 tonnes to approximately 44,000 tonnes will increase the number of jobs lost at both SYSCO and Devco, which latter supplies raw materials to Sydney Steel, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House condemns CN for its callous disregard for the worker force and the economy of Cape Breton, and further condemns the laissez faire attitude of Cape Breton's three Liberal Members of Parliament, including the Minister of Finance, who continue to talk about economic growth and ignore the decline which is devastating the entire Canadian economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

STATEMENT MADE BY NEWFOUNDLAND PROVINCIAL LIBERAL LEADER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Liberal Leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland, Stephen Neary, stated on May 13 in the House of Assembly that he would not trust his federal Liberal colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), "as far as I can throw him", and that every action of the minister justifies this observation, and in view of the fact that the actions of the Liberal government in Ottawa since May 13 show conclusively that federal Liberals cannot be trusted even as far as they can be thrown, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

S.O. 43

That this House approves the statement made by the leader of the Liberal opposition in the House of Assembly of Newfoundland, with the addendum that the federal Liberals in toto cannot be trusted even as far as they can be thrown.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HIRING OF PARLIAMENTARY GUIDES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that there is significant evidence of the Liberal patronage machine at work in the hiring process for parliamentary guides this summer, and in view of the fact that the merit system established to hire guides was bypassed to hire three candidates who were not recommended, but rather were supported by Liberal Members of Parliament, including the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House respectfully requests the Speaker to appear before the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services to explain fully the reasons for the apparent revival of the Liberal patronage system in the hiring process for summer jobs on Parliament Hill.

Madam Speaker: There are other ways of dealing with this, and I invite the hon. member to use those other channels.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADA MANPOWER INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program which began in 1974 was originally designed to train both present and new workers in skills. On April 1 this year this program, which had a previous budget of $102 million, was severely restricted and now can only be used by a company if new workers are hired and subsequently trained. This month Butler Metal Products Co. Ltd., of Cambridge, Ontario, was refused funds for upgrading skills of present employees, making such employees less employable and more likely to have to resort to unemployment insurance benefits. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration re-examine the effect that the changes to the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program have had on skill training and direct his officials in the field to allow companies to upgrade the skill levels of their present employees if the result is increased productivity levels and a higher skilled work force.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS ACT

SUGGESTED DELETION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS IN PROPOSED LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I believe that hon. members of all parties are concerned about human rights in Canada and, for that matter, throughout the world. In view of their concern for establishing and securing rights to true worship and the rights to our religious practices, I should like to call upon them to give unanimous support to this motion.

It has been brought to my attention that there have been complaints by some church groups regarding certain aspects of Bill C-10, the Canada Non-profit Corporations Act. Specifically, these church organizations are concerned about the possible appeal to the courts by a member disciplined by his corporation. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs delete Articles 114 to 116 inclusively from Bill C-10, the Canada Non-Profit Corporations Act, regarding the disciplining of members.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

METRIC CONVERSION

OPPOSITION TO IMPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, this is another motion that will pass! The "Mandate", a Canadian Federation of Independent Business survey released today, shows that 52 per cent of the businessmen and businesswomen surveyed favour an immediate halt to Canada's national program of metrication. Only 43 per cent of the business community want to go ahead with metric in any form whatsoever. These results repeat and confirm the results of several national polls and surveys conducted in the last year or two which show that all sectors of Canadian society oppose metrication on extremely good and reasonable grounds. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House acknowledge the results of the CFIB survey on national metrication and accept the topic as a suitable and pressing subject for immediate debate with a view to halting the enforced move to metric.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

CONDEMNATION OF MINISTER'S POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the persistent attempts by the Minister of Finance to whitewash the government's dismal performance by chastising the United States for not bringing its deficit under control and for failing to bring interest rates down, and whereas the United States federal deficit is presently about half as large per capita as Canada's, U.S. mortgage rates are well below those available in Canada, and our dollar has crashed to less than 80 cents U.S. today. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist):

That the Minister of Finance be condemned for his skulking deceit in not having the decency to distinguish between President Reagan's successful attempts to cut taxes, to cut government spending and to restore incentives to private investors in contradiction to the failed experiment in MacEachenomics which translates into higher taxes, increased government squandering, and an outright attack on the integrity of Canadian business.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, you have before you some motions under Standing Order 26 which you will deal with later today, so my questions are directed to the Minister of Finance.

The minister will know that, one way or another, he spent about $1 billion last month propping up the dollar, at least another $225 million yesterday, and goodness knows how much today. He will know, from looking at the market, that his $750 million U.S. bond issue on the Euro-dollar market is now selling at a discount rate to yield 15 per cent. Can he tell this House what plans he has as Minister of Finance to improve the climate of confidence that the world might have in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has related his question to changes in the international currency market, and has talked about changes in the official reserves. I think I should point out to the hon. member a fact which ought to be borne in mind, namely, that yesterday and in preceding days the Canadian dollar did weaken against the United States currency. But that is not a phenomenon unique to Canada. Most other OECD currencies weakened against the American dollar, which has been very strong because of high interest rates in the U.S. That is the cause of the situation affecting Canada and other countries.

Yesterday the hon. member was making quite a number of dire predictions about the fate of the dollar. I should remind him that even though the dollar went through 80 cents early this morning, by noontime it had made a significant rebound to 80.34 cents.

Mr. Crosbie: How much did that cost you?

Mr. Broadbent: How much did you spend?

Mr. MacEachen: That shows how careful the hon. member ought to be in making these unjustified predictions.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, to keep the minister up to date, at two o'clock the dollar was 80.22 cents. We in this party would like to see a strong dollar. We would also like to see some action by the minister to improve the climate of confidence in Canada. Therefore I ask the minister when we might have a new financial statement of the aims of this government. We hope it would include some effort by the government to lessen the restrictions on foreign investment in Canada which would improve the climate of confidence for Canadian investors, and give entrepreneurs an incentive to invest in Canada so we can make it grow again and Canadians can have jobs again. When will the minister give us that kind of a statement? When can we have a new financial presentation from the government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the government decides it is appropriate to make a financial statement, then of course I will be glad to tell the House about it. However, I should tell the hon. member that if he is again linking the necessity for a statement by the Minister of Finance to currency movements, then presumably he will be urging the President of France, the Chancellor of West Germany, and the Prime Minister of Britain also to make statements in their countries, because each of those currencies have had precisely the same experience as the Canadian dollar has had in the last two days.

The hon. member should understand that this is a phenomenon which is being forced on all the currencies of the major industrialized countries as a result of the strength of the American dollar, which in turn is the result of very high interest rates in that country which are having such a very damaging effect on the economies of all countries of the industrialized world.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE LOWERED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, first of all the minister will know that the German currency in relation to the Canadian currency has strengthened by 3.8 per cent. The minister will know that we do not really worry about other currencies because 90 per cent of our trade is financed in American dollars.

In view of the fact that other countries have been able to have substantial reductions in their prime rates, for example, Germany from 13 per cent to 11.5 per cent in the past three months, and England from 14 per cent to 13 per cent, and in view of the fact that our T-bills are now selling for over 15.5 per cent, can we expect new high rates of interest in Canada tomorrow, or will the minister direct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to lower interest rates to give people in Canada a sense of confidence like people in other countries are getting from their governments and their central banks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there is no person who is doing more to restrain interest rate movements in the country than the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In light of the circumstances, the Governor of the Bank of Canada has to maintain a balance between the exchange rate and the short-term interest rates, in light of the pressure that is being placed upon both these rates on the exchange market and in the short-term market by the very powerful economy which the hon. member has mentioned. When he talks about the very high proportion of our trade with the United States, he is obviously admitting that that economy and its operations have a very heavy impact on what happens in this country.

EURO BOND BORROWING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In his insistence that the Canadian dollar is strong, he sounds like the "Charles Atlas" of the financial world trying to build economic muscle under the twin weights of his massive capital outflows and huge budget deficits. If the Canadian dollar is so strong, why did the government have to float a $750 million issue on the Euro bond market which, I understand, is the largest single maturity issue ever raised in that market? Why would the Minister of Finance have to borrow that much money to add to our international reserves?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is prudent to maintain one's international reserves in good shape. There was an opening in the Euro dollar market for a bond issue of this size—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —at a rate more favourable than that at which such borrowings could be made in the United States. It was my decision to make that borrowing at this particular time. It does not seem to be a very unusual step because we have moved on previous occasions to borrow on the foreign market.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance who has not answered the question: is this the single largest maturity issue ever raised in the Euro bond market? It is a massive amount of borrowing that he has had to undertake to support the dollar.

MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING ATTENDANCE AT VERSAILLES SUMMIT CONFERENCE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance recently went to Paris to learn that unemployment in Canada is at record levels. Is the minister going to the Palace of Versailles to learn that he is running the economy on the wrong economic track? The Prime Minister is also going to Versailles. Why is he going? Why is the Prime Minister not staying here to defend the dollar and his economic policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member that I have been before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs twice in the last two days, and I have not heard from her or from any other member of the Conservative Party a single policy option that could be implemented at the present time by the Canadian government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You sure did today.

Mr. Crosbie: I will send you my speech of last week.

Mr. MacEachen: We know the policy that we are following, but members of the Conservative Party have been unable in these difficult times to articulate any consistent policy that could be considered. I believe in that circumstance they are failing miserably in their duty to the people of Canada.

Mr. Jelinek: Aren't you the government?

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Indeed the dollar has fluctuated down to its lowest level since the Depression, during the past 24 hours. The minister knows that the major reason for the decline of more than 5 cents since last fall is to be attributed to our record balance of payments deficit which exceeds some $6.6 billion. The short-run problem has been compounded in recent days by the government's failure in the energy field and its associated megaprojects.

Will the minister at long last recognize that we are in a state of economic crisis in the Canadian economy, that last fall's budget is completely outdated, and that we need a new budget now? Will he announce the date of a new budget which will be brought down before the summer recess?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to co-operate as much as possible with the hon. member, but it is not possible to announce a new budget date today.

REDUCTION IN ENERGY TAX REVENUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a different version of the same question to the minister. I point out in the same context that last fall's budget assumed that the federal government would have some $61 billion in revenue coming in over the next five years from its National Energy Program. As a result of the announcements made two days ago, that amount has dropped a full $25 billion. In that context, and given the immense negative implications for the people of Canada in terms of the economic impact of that data, will the minister at least assure us today that he will announce, within 24 hours, the date of a budget which will be brought down before we recess?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot give that assurance.

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister once again, considering that since the budget came down in November, 58,000 men and women have been laid off in the province of British Columbia, unemployment in the province of Ontario in the first quarter has increased 111 per cent, and in the province of Quebec 75,000 men and women have been laid off in the manufacturing sector alone, will he acknowledge that he has some serious obligations to the people of the country and tell them, especially the unemployed, that they will have some prospect for jobs this summer because he will bring in a budget within the next month?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has correctly identified unemployment as a very serious problem in the economy. He knows that we are now in the midst of a world-wide recession and that unemployment levels are rising in every country of the world, or most countries in the industrialized world. In the next breath the hon. member goes on to suggest that there is some easy way out of this difficulty—

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. MacEachen: —and that the magical wand is the presentation of a budget. The hon. member never tells us what policies he would recommend except policies which, if the Minister of Finance were unwise enough to accept them, would make the situation worse, would cause more inflation and more unemployment. That is the policy of the New Democratic Party which has been restated time and time again. It is not a policy which is followed by any government that I know in the industrialized world, including his socialist friends in Europe.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT ACQUISITION OF PROCESSING PLANT AT ST. ANTHONY, NFLD.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I should like to ask the minister why the Government of Canada, in taking over the fish processing plant in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, is moving by way of the fisheries Prices Support Board. Why is it directly taking over the plant through the aegis of a Crown corporation, instead of providing the necessary assistance in concert with the Government of Newfoundland to the operator of the fisheries products plant, which is a much more sensible arrangement? Why is the government proceeding this way?

• (1430)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue and I went quite some distance in our efforts to try to find a solution. I met with the company in question. We had very lengthy discussions. There were negotiations between representatives of my department and the company. In the end it was agreed that this was the only approach which would work. I recognize that it is not a perfect approach but I had to try to find a solution so that the fishermen, whose season was about to start, would have a counter at which to sell their fish. I made it clear that it is a one-year agreement or understanding until we can come up with some longer-term solution.

Mr. McGrath: The minister did not address the crucial question of why he did not provide assistance to the operator in co-operation with the Newfoundland government, and why the Kirby task force was diverted from its principle function to put this deal together.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, as welcome as the aid is, because it is an important plant, I have to ask the minister is it now the policy of the government to take over uneconomic plants directly and operate them in this way, or is this merely a move to bail out his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. member's experience should really not allow him to get away that easily with that question. For example, he knows that we came to the assistance of the Grand Banks and the Gaultois operations when that company presented a business plan which was discussed with the bank and members of the Kirby task force. We found a solution. We made it very clear that it was a temporary solution while longer-term restructuring was taking place.

We met with the company and it made it very clear that it did not want to operate St. Anthony. We made it clear that we would come in with some form of assistance. They asked for something, I offered what they were asking for, and then they wanted something else. I simply had to find a solution to give the fishermen of that area enough hope that they could sell their fish as well as giving some plant workers some support for a year. We will see what happens in the restructuring.

CLOSURE OF FISH PLANT AT GEORGETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It also relates to the catastrophic state of the Canadian Fisheries industry. For example, H.B. Nickerson and Sons Limited of Prince Edward Island have shut down their Georgetown Seafoods Plant, eliminating nearly 400 jobs at one fell swoop.

The Prince Edward Island government has devised a strategy, and proposed it to the federal government, that would require the federal government to permit a fish quota for the plant in question large enough to make it profitable. Is the minister planning to accept the Prince Edward Island government's proposal since it is a reasonable one? If not, why not?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, in 1969 there were licensed vessels which brought fish to this plant which were sold to H.B. Nickerson Limited. They were moved to another part of the Maritime provinces. This policy was accepted at that time and there was, in fact, no absolute limitation of licences even on that size of vessel.

I made it clear in 1974 or 1975 that the dislocation of traditional landing patterns would not be allowed by a wholesale move of licences from one area to another. Unfortunately, the proposal made to me by the Prince Edward Island government would have implied dislocation to another area in the Maritime provinces. This left no room for substantive negotiations with the company which has the control of those licences at the present time.

In light of that proposal, which simply was not workable, I have been waiting for other proposals. I have been willing to try to sustain Georgetown if serious negotiations were to take place with H.B. Nickerson in an attempt to divert some fish to Georgetown. That proposal has not been brought forth yet.

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, if the minister is not prepared to accept the eminently reasonable proposal of the P.E.I. government to keep the Georgetown Seafoods plant open, even though that proposal is approved by Nickerson and Sons Limited, the company concerned, does the minister have an alternative plan to protect the jobs at Georgetown Seafoods? Does he at least accept the principle that such plants in the region must be kept open and that the federal government has a vitally important role to play toward that end?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I very much hope that the information which those questions appear to convey is very carefully examined. The fact is the proposal which was presented to me would have, or could have meant serious dislocation to plants in another area of the Maritime provinces, in this case Cape Breton.

I made it very clear that I was willing to exert some authority to ensure that the normal flow of fish which had been coming to Georgetown over a number of years would continue. Unhappily, the proposal which I had before me would have meant taking licences away very arbitrarily from one area to put them into another area of the Maritimes. I am afraid I could not do that.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

STUDY OF LONTREL

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As commendable as the agreement is between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to protect Canadians from the impact of chemicals and certain herbicides, has the minister had an opportunity to study with her department the product called Lontrel which was developed by Dow Chemical, and which increases the yield of a field by some 30 per cent? This product is being used by our competitors in other countries. People who use this product would be quite prepared to sign any kind of release required. Has the minister had an opportunity to study whether or not this particular product might be made an exception?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, with respect to this problem which the hon. member has raised with me on several occasions, according to the actual rules of the game in the department with regard to health protection it would be very difficult for us to recognize changing the procedure to determine the validity of the product that the industry and the producers would enjoy. I am sorry that I have to give a negative answer up to now. We are not in a position to give the necessary certification immediately. Some tests are still not completed or ready.

TRADE

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL TRADING CORPORATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Yesterday he made an announcement that he was shelving the idea of establishing a national trading corporation. He does that despite the fact that an all-party committee recommended last year, in a very large and comprehensive report which was made after 270 meetings, that we needed such a corporation in Canada to promote trade for small and medium-size businesses. It also stated that this corporation could also increase exports by some $14 billion per year. In light of that, and the fact that the committee said this was critical and crucial, can the minister explain to the House why he is rejecting the idea of establishing such a trading corporation for Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the recommendation from the parliamentary committee indicated that initial capitalization of approximately $300 million is needed; 50 per cent to be made up by the private sector and 50 per cent from the government. As you know, our greatest priority right now is export financing. That is the quickest way to create jobs in Canada. I am sure that the hon. member would agree that our number one priority now with respect to the current situation is to reduce inflation and create jobs for Canadian industry. Therefore, all the financing which is available to me goes to our number one priority, which is export financing.

We did not shelve the idea of a national trading corporation. We postponed the decision for now until such time as the private sector which, at this point has not come forward with any kind of proposal to put up $75 million or $100 million toward the corporation, decided to do so. If they decide it is a priority in the future we will be happy to consider the proposal.

REASONS FOR NOT COMPLYING WITH RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, how much longer will the minister wait? Twenty-five per cent of our GNP is dependent upon exports. Most other countries have trading corporations and trading houses. There is a decrease of our share in world trade. We have a $21 billion deficit in manufactured goods trading. In light of all those things I want to ask the minister very precisely what proof does he need before he establishes a national trading corporation to help the small and medium-size companies.

• (1440)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): First of all, Madam Speaker, we do not derive 25 per cent of our GNP from trade; we derive 33 per cent from trade. Second, is the hon. member interested in jobs being created now in light of the high unemployment in this country? There is no guarantee whatsoever that one single job would be created with the establishment of a national trading corporation. With export financing there is a guarantee from the day we sign a contract that jobs will be created right here in this country, and I think that is our priority now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT BORROWING POWER BE ENLARGED

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As lack of enthusiasm by the banks has caused the Small Business Bond to be of very little value to farmers seeking additional funds with which to meet the very serious financial problems they are faced with today, has the minister approached his colleague, the Minister of Finance, and strongly urged him to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to enlarge its borrowing power so that our farmers may obtain the additional financing they need at 10 per cent interest in order that they may deal successfully with the great financial problems they are faced with at this time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, to answer the hon. member first of all concerning the small business bond, I believe about $2.5 billion in total has been loaned under that program to small business people, so, to some, it has been a big success. We have worked very closely with many farmers, with the Farm Credit Corporation and with lending institutions. Arrangements were made between the Farm Credit Corporation and the lending institutions to use the combination of a Farm Credit Corporation loan and a small business bond. It is true that there have been many turn-downs. We are reviewing how far the Farm Credit Corporation can go with the new legislative power which has been vested in that corporation. We are moving as rapidly, as fast as we can. We hope that we will be in a position within two or three weeks to make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance.

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, Madam Speaker. As the minister knows very well, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has brought an urgent plea before the government that additional borrowing power be given to the Corporation so that it can make this additional money available at 10 per cent to farmers who are faced with very serious financial problems. Is the minister giving this serious consideration, and when does he expect to be able to make an announcement on this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Agriculture has indicated, we have already indicated our approval in principle that the Farm Credit Corporation might be able to extend its capacity to borrow in private markets.

MINES AND MINING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Mines and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the near crisis state in Canada's mining industry, with shutdowns and labour disruption now affecting more than 34,000 mine, mill and smelter workers across Canada, which multiplies to at least 160,000 employees when service jobs are included, and whereas these unprecedented cutbacks are a consequence of economic conditions which prevailed several months ago, not the current economic conditions, what specific proposals has the Minister of State for Mines offered, and what actions is the government prepared to take to remedy this serious crisis which is having a devastating impact on communities all across Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the concern of the Minister of State for Mines has been quite obvious, and she is in Calgary today addressing the Business Outlook Conference. I am sure she will be happy that I pass on to her the representation of the hon. member.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I think the matter is so urgent that it needs a more direct answer than that.

LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Prime Minister, being chairman of the cabinet, has some idea of what specific initiatives we can expect the government to take. What will the minister and the government do for the 10,000 striking steel workers at Inco, the 3,000 iron workers laid off in Labrador, the 6,000 unemployed asbestos and iron miners in Quebec, the 3,000 miners in Ontario, the 3,000 on the prairies and another 2,000 in Atlantic Canada—

Madam Speaker: Order!

Mr. Siddon: —and the 10,000 laid off mine workers in British Columbia? What will the government do, Madam Speaker?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to my role as chairman of the cabinet. He will know that if the cabinet wants to make an announcement, it does so. I will tell the hon. member that he can expect that when we have an announcement to make, we will let the House know about it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE DEFINE POLITICAL RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question involving employee-employer relations in the public service, specifically the Public Service Staff Relations Board decision involving Neil Fraser, and the Supreme Court of Canada decision concerning the air traffic controllers. With respect to the first case, the Public Service Staff Relations Board case, the judgment appeared to leave unanswered the question of what is appropriate political action, excepting the case involving Neil Fraser himself. This speaks to the use of parliamentary committee to explore the matter. Has the minister considered the establishment of a parliamentary committee to see whether there could be a better definition of the political rights of public servants, involving their ability to speak out?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thought the Public Service Staff Relations Board was quite helpful in that it really confirmed what has been the view expressed by myself and, I believe, by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, that we are very much involved in an area of judgment and black and white lines cannot be drawn. Nevertheless, I have followed up the suggestions which have been made.

I indicated in the past that I personally had no great objection to parliamentary committees but that I really did not feel that their deliberations would be terribly helpful in this particular case. I raised some suggestions in a letter to the Prime Minister and discussed the matter with a number of other colleagues. I understand that the Prime Minister has looked at the matter and, in fact, has responded, but I have not yet seen his letter.

ARBITRATION PROCEDURES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Will the minister undertake to table the letter? I call to his attention my concern because his counsel said at the hearing that if public servants speak out at all, they do so at their own risk. There is no guideline whatsoever with respect to that matter, and that causes me some distress.

With respect to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of the air traffic controllers, it does blunt the efficacy of the strike route, I think we must say, and may also raise the importance of the arbitration route. If a parliamentary committee is established, would the minister consider referring the question of improving the methods of arbitration in the public service to that committee? I ask this because it seems to me that the situation may well give way to a greater and greater use of the arbitration route in settling disputes, or questions involving the relationship between the public servant and the employer.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): I tend to agree with part of the question raised by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. There may, indeed, be ways of improving the arbitration route. We are constantly looking at ways to improve the arbitration route and, for that matter, other measures under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I am raising those matters with my colleagues. But with respect to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, it seems to me that it simply confirmed the intention of parliamentarians, many of whom were probably here in 1967 when the act was adopted and when the designation process was established.

TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER MODIFICATIONS TO FOOTWEAR IMPORT CONTROLS ARE CONTEMPLATED

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the many representations that have been made by members on this side of the House and by the Canadian footwear industry, could the minister inform the House whether and when he expects any changes in the current policy on footwear import quotas in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, we shall make a decision on the footwear question during the last week of June or the first week of July, after the federal-provincial conference of Trade and Commerce Ministers on June 21 here in Ottawa.

• (1450)

INQUIRY WHETHER STATEMENT ON FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY WILL BE MADE BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the minister give us any guarantees today that a statement regarding the footwear industry will be made before the summer recess, while the members are still here and not after they have left?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, my colleagues on this side of the House have already requested that we make a statement before the parliamentary recess. It is my hope that, after we have had discussions on the shoe issue and other issues with my provincial colleagues, we will have an announcement to make, prior to the ending of the session.

[Translation]

ASSURANCE SOUGHT THAT FOOTWEAR ANNOUNCEMENT WILL BE MADE BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am not asking for hope, I am asking for a commitment. Could we have a commitment from the minister today that there will not be a statement on the footwear question after the House has adjourned, as was unfortunately the case with VIA Rail?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I said, what happens in this House on our side is the responsibility of our House leader. I will discuss it with him. We hope to have a decision made prior to the end of the session.

INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He has indicated that a new budget is in the offing. He will be well aware of the $21 billion deficit in manufacturing which has resulted in the loss of 200,000 jobs. The cost to every man, woman and child in Canada is $1,000 each, annually. Will the minister state to the House today that in the new budget the government will be moving off its disastrous resource megaprojects strategy and into a manufacturing-oriented strategy in terms of economic recovery and job creation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, to clear up the first point, I have not stated, either directly or indirectly, that a new budget is in the offing. When that decision is made it will be announced to the House.

I would direct the hon. member's attention to the document tabled at the time of the budget, entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", in which was laid out the economic approach of the government. If he looks at the document carefully he will find that the manufacturing sector did receive very strong support as a major element in the future growth and development of the Canadian economy. For that reason I do not believe that the hon. member is asking us to do anything that we have not fully acknowledged presently in our approach to economic development.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance knows absolutely clearly that it was the megaprojects that the government was counting on to be its economic saviour in the 1980s and the 1990s.

Miss Jewett: That is right.

Mr. Riis: Will the minister send a clear signal to Canadians today that he will be bringing in a new budget before the end of June?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I attempted to answer that question earlier, in reply to the hon. member's leader. I want to tell the hon. member that when a decision is taken to bring in a new budget, when the circumstances are appropriate—

An hon. Member: They are appropriate now.

Mr. MacEachen: —I will advise the House and take my hon. friend into my confidence at the earliest possible time.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I wish to address an important question to the Prime Minister on a matter which was raised on Monday in this chamber, the subject being Canadian parts content in Japanese manufactured vehicles, to protect Canadian jobs and give opportunity to our vital automotive industry which employs 101,000 Canadians. On Monday he took the question under advisement. I expect that with a five o'clock departure tomorrow to Versailles there is no more time to consider it. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that he will meet with Premier Suzuki of Japan and insist on a much higher Canadian parts content, much higher than the one half of 1 per cent which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce admitted was the Canadian parts content in Japanese cars?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will remember that I took notice of that question in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade. Of course the subject has been discussed between us before and since then. I will keep in mind the negotiating strategy of the minister when I meet Premier Suzuki in Versailles.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON ISSUE

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, that is a far cry from an assurance, at a time when the automotive industry is in the dire straits the Prime Minister talks about. One half of 1 per cent parts content is a long way from 85 per cent. Some 101,000 direct jobs,—625,000 jobs in the industry in total—are dependent upon this kind of decision. I wonder if the Prime Minister would reconsider and give us an assurance that a much higher parts content will come about, rather than the Mickey Mouse tactics of slowing down the import of Japanese cars through inspections on the west coast.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I repeat that the strategy we are employing in regard to negotiations with the Japanese is not something I would want to discuss with the hon. member across the aisle of this House. He does recall himself that on Monday there seemed to be division within his own Conservative caucus as to whether we should be encouraging the entry of Japanese cars or discouraging that entry. I had hoped that in the last three days they might have got their act together, but I see that they have not.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that is prompted by the concern expressed by the Canadian shipbuilding industry. When the government reduced the shipbuilding subsidy from 20 per cent to 9 per cent, approximately two years ago, it promised the industry a revision in its policy. To date that program has not been forthcoming. What is the current situation? Is the minister now ready to tell the Canadian shipbuilding industry what the government is willing to do to assist the industry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, contrary to what was suggested by my hon. friend, the government did not reduce the subsidy. That subsidy of 20 per cent was a temporary measure. Once its term ended, the subsidy was allowed to revert to the basic 9 per cent. However, we also set up a task force to consult with the shipbuilding and ship repair industries, with the trade unions, and with the users of Canadian ships. We are looking at the results of this consultation very actively, as a basis for decisions on a new policy. I think we are fairly advanced in our consideration, at the cabinet level, and I hope to be able to make announcements, together with my colleagues, on this matter before too long.

QUERY RESPECTING SPECIFIC PROJECTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce knows that the international shipbuilding industry is heavily subsidized by national governments, and there is a real question of whether our Canadian shipbuilding industry can carry on without help from the government. I want to know more specifically what the government is willing to do about specific projects, like the new Canadian National marine ferry that is to be constructed, and what assistance it is going to give to the shipbuilding industry to aid in the construction of icebreaking vessels to open up the Arctic—which is part of the government's program in terms of the energy policy.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we recognize the importance of the shipbuilding and ship repair industry to the Canadian economy generally, and to a number of areas of our country specifically. Just in the past year or so, we have taken some very important actions to help that industry. There is our support for the expansion of the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Company in Saint John, New Brunswick. There is the very substantial support to enable the expansion and updating of the Halifax shipyards in Halifax, Nova Scotia. We will be making announcements, as time goes on, about our further measures of assistance and support to recognize the capacity for productive activity of the workers and management in our Canadian industry.

FINANCE

TAX ON FUEL USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Some time ago he gave assurance to my colleague, the member for Vegreville, that his government would be looking at removing some portion of the 60 cents a gallon tax this government takes on fuel used in the agricultural production of food. Has the minister had an opportunity to look at this?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker.

• (1500)

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, people in the farming industry will certainly appreciate that answer.

REQUEST THAT TAX BE REMOVED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has complimented the two provinces which have removed their taxes on gasoline. Those two provinces are Saskatchewan and Alberta. Will this government do equally as well and remove taxes on the production of food? That would benefit not only to the agricultural community but also the consumers of Canada who now have to pay for this grab by the federal government.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to announce the tax changes suggested by the hon. member.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, June 1, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

MR. SIDDON—PARKING LOT EMPLOYEES AT VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to table a petition on behalf of the employees of Canpark Services at Vancouver International Airport. This petition arises out of a recent decision taken by the Ministry of Transport to reject the lowest and all bids for the provision of parking lot attendant services at Vancouver International Airport, a decision which led to the heartless termination this week of employment for 20 persons including a number of new Canadians and middle-aged women supporting unemployed or handicapped husbands and their children. These employees have given dedicated service to the public at Vancouver International Airport for as long as ten years in some cases.

The petition recommends that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) be urged by this House to grant the parking lot employees at Vancouver International Airport a minimum six-month extension of work at the airport or that the minister arrange alternative employment for them in these difficult times so that they may continue to support their dependent families.

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—OAKALLA, B.C.—CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON FACILITIES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition on behalf of hundreds of my constituents who are calling upon the federal government not to co-operate in any way in the construction of prison facilities on the Oakalla lands in Burnaby and to ensure that the government lives up to its previous promises to remove completely all correctional facilities from the Oakalla lands.

MR. CROSBIE—YUGOSLAVIA—PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by 29,277 citizens of Canada who are deeply concerned about the plight of seven prisoners of conscience now being held by the government of Yugoslavia in defiance of that country's obligations—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please remove that basket from his desk. I have never seen a petition presented in a basket with an inscription on it.

Mr. Crosbie: —in defiance of that country's obligations under the Helsinki Final Act to which it is a signatory. The seven individuals named in this petition have been recognized as prisoners of conscience not only by Amnesty International but also by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), who has referred to them as "classical cases of dissidents". Therefore, the petition asks the House to urge the Government of Canada to make representations to the government of Yugoslavia in order to obtain the early release of these seven individuals.

I have the petition here, and there are so many names I am afraid the petition had to be put into a basket.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am not able to accept that.

Mr. Crosbie: You can pick them up by hand if you want.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member can present his petition in the usual way. If we allow this, we will have all sorts of things being exhibited in the House.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just so that we may be clear on this question, I take it your ruling is not to be construed in such a way as to deny the right of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to represent—

Mr. Campbell (LaSalle): Sit down, Joe.

Mr. Clark: I am sorry I am being shouted at by hon. members across the floor who do not want to have the views of some 29,000 Canadians on this question of prisoners of conscience heard.

I take it, Madam Speaker, you are not ruling in such a way as to prevent—

Mr. Cousineau: You are not fair at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) is continuing his harassment, and I wonder whether he is against petitions by Canadians. I hope that the Chair's ruling does not deny the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) the right to submit his petition in any form he likes.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Of course not. This is quite elementary. Petitions are to be presented in the usual form. In the case of this particular petition it is quite obvious that it can be carried in the usual way. If I allow a basket or anything else, someone might bring in a petition in a baby carriage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Hon. members must know that decorum in this House is a necessity. I do not understand how on one word from the Speaker it can be taken that a petition is not accepted.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, have you made a ruling that this petition is not accepted?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cousineau: You are worse than Joe.

Mr. Crosbie: If you have, I certainly want to object. If you have not, fine.

Mr. Cousineau: You and Joe should jump into the basket.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, have you ruled that this petition is not acceptable?

Madam Speaker: Of course not. The Speaker just receives petitions, and that is why I have not pronounced a word about the petition except to disallow the display.

Introduction of bills. The hon. member for Victoria.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to limit the extraordinary discretion of the Treasury Board under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to reduce radically the pensions of Canadian forces personnel on the basis of—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am a bit confused. I have had no notice of this bill. I do not think the hon. member is following the proper procedure. Do we have notice of this bill?

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I submitted copies to the Clerk of the House this morning.

Madam Speaker: Forty-eight hours' notice is required, and we will receive the bill when the hon. member satisfies the procedure.

Question No. 2,879—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the Foreign Investment Review Agency at page 32.17, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the agency explain the 8986 per cent increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid?

THE ECONOMY

CRISIS IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a motion under Standing Order 26 in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the crisis in the Canadian dollar, which has reached its lowest point in history in comparison with the U.S. dollar, a fact which is directly related to the failure of the government to announce its intention not to proceed with measures related to last fall's outdated budget, the collapse of the government's energy program and the related failure of the government to produce a new economic policy for Canada.

Madam Speaker: I have another notice for an urgent debate under Standing Order 26 in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

• (1510)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the dramatic and dangerous drop in the value of the Canadian dollar.

There are two reasons why a debate is urgent. The first is that our dollar has fallen to a record low. The second is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) depart tomorrow for an economic summit at Versailles. The Parliament of Canada has a right and an urgent responsibility to advise the government and to hold the government accountable, before it enters into any undertaking at Versailles.

If you accept this application for an emergency debate, I am ready to move the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: Both motions under Standing Order 26 relate to the crisis in the value of the Canadian dollar and its effect internationally.

The Chair recognizes the importance of these matters but the report that the dollar has reached its lowest point in history in comparison to the United States dollar does not alter the fact that the problem is of a continuing nature and not in the nature of a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration, as provided for in paragraph 16(a) of the Standing Order.

Paragraph (d) of the same section of Standing Order 26 states:

(d) The motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this Standing Order—

I must point out that on December 18, 1980, in a similar situation, I allowed a request to discuss a matter under Standing Order 26. In my decision that the matter was proper to be discussed, I stated, in part:

In this case both hon. members have drawn my attention to the juxtaposition of circumstances of rising interest rates, the rising cost of living index, the rising rate of inflation, and the decline in the dollar.

I also said that the matter could not be debated at an early opportunity and probably not at all, since the House was about to adjourn.

It would not be reasonable to expect the Chair to agree that the matter proposed today is different simply because the dollar has registered a further decline.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has indicated in his statement that the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will depart tomorrow for an economic summit at Versailles and suggests that Parliament has a right and urgent responsibility to advise the government and hold the government responsible.

We are all aware, of course, of the importance of that meeting, but the provisions of Standing Order 26 do not permit me to allow an emergency debate on that basis.

It is therefore with regret that I cannot accept these applications for an adjournment motion under Standing Order 26.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 19, consideration of Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Lalonde).

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) had the floor.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I understand that we are again debating Bill C-102 and that I had the floor the last time the bill was considered. This is report stage of Bill C-102, which is a bill to create energy Crown corporations exclusively by order in council rather than by legislation.

When we left the bill I was on my feet responding to an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), and I said I would conclude my remarks on that amendment when the bill was next before the House, and that is today.

There are two amendments to Bill C-102. I think I have already said that we had no trouble with the other amendment proposed by the Conservative Party and that it should be accepted to further democratize, so far as that is possible, the working of this bill. Then there is the amendment I have referred to and I have something to propose which I have not been able to show to the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, although I have shown it to his House leader and to the parliamentary secretary. I think it would help to make Crown corporations publicly accountable.

Before I seek leave to introduce that amendment, I understand the government has a small amendment as well. We are certainly prepared to give consent for the parliamentary secretary to introduce that amendment. I want to make some comments, however, with respect to the speech of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, but before I do I wonder if I might inquire if he has a copy of the amendment I propose to introduce.

Mr. Beatty: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have a copy of the amendment that the hon. member will propose. But I think there is some confusion. It is my understanding that when the House recessed at six o'clock on May 19, it was dealing with motion No. 3 in the name of the government House leader. That motion deals with the issue of negative resolutions in the House. I do not think my colleague can move another amendment until we dispose of the discussion on motion No. 3 currently before the House. It would be my intention to speak briefly to that motion if the hon. member has finished his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps the Chair should recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dingwall: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is also my understanding that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was speaking to an amendment introduced by the government and that he would continue his remarks. I will seek unanimous consent of the House to introduce another amendment later. I believe the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway will also seek the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an amendment.

As the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe suggested, I think we should proceed with disposition of the government amendment which is now before the House.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, naturally I am prepared to follow that order. Before I do, I should like an indication from the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe if he would grant consent on behalf of his party that I may introduce an amendment. When speaking to my amendment I intend to try to address again some of the points he made in a rather good speech on his own amendment. At that time I was not in a position to reply but I have had time to think about the matter and I have introduced another amendment. I should like to know his position on that.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is looking for an assurance from this party that at a later date he would have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an amendment. I gather he is concerned that if unanimous consent were not given he would have to contrive some other way to get his remarks on record on the motion that is before the House now.

I believe there was an agreement among all parties that any amendments proposed on any side would be allowed and debated. On behalf of my colleagues I can certainly give the assurance that we are prepared to allow the hon. member to dispense with notice in moving his amendment at a later time.

Mr. Waddell: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would never contrive to get in remarks on another motion! I am prepared to sit down now so that we can get on with basic matters.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I infer from those remarks that the hon. member has just finished his speech on motion No. 3, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to make some brief remarks on motion No. 3 proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to amend the provision in the bill for negative resolutions. It provides that there be either a negative resolution or, conceivably, an affirmative resolution which would be the sole parliamentary control of the incorporation of these new Crown corporations.

• (1520)

I think when members of the House deal with this, they should keep in mind that the central issue is how Parliament controls these emanations of the Government of Canada. Ostensibly, Bill C-102 is designed to provide a framework whereby there would be some parliamentary control over the proliferation of new Crown corporations. At the present time it is possible for three public servants to go out this afternoon and incorporate a new Crown corporation under provincial, federal or foreign legislation.

The government's argument about Bill C-102 is that it would bring in a regime and system for incorporating new Crown corporations in the energy field. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have already expressed our party's concerns, and I intend to reiterate them, possibly later this afternoon, about this whole concept of giving the government a blank cheque and saying go out and incorporate as many corporations as you want. There is no requirement to come back to Parliament and explain their purpose or potential cost; just go ahead and do it. Parliament's sole control over this would be through a negative resolution or through an affirmative resolution as contained in the amendment before us right now.

Our party will accept the proposed government amendment, Mr. Speaker, on the ground that it is preferable to what is there today. As I pointed out on second reading, the negative resolution provisions are probably unconstitutional. Under the Constitution, the Senate is expressly forbidden to authorize the government to spend money. But the government, in the existing provision, would give the Senate the right to overrule the House of Commons. You would then have the ludicrous situation where members of the House would vote on a negative resolution and say to the government: No, we do not want you to go out and spend, say, $2 billion to buy another Crown corporation. The House would have expressed the will of the people of Canada and exercised its responsibility as custodian of the public purse. Then, under the current provisions of the bill, we would find that unless the Senate passed a similar negative motion, they would have in essence a veto. The Senate's failure to veto also the government's decision, its failure to reiterate a House of Commons vote, would give the government the authorization to go ahead over the express opposition of the House of Commons. My guess is that the only reason we see a somewhat improved provision here for a negative resolution is that the government recognized the very real prospect that the incorporation of a Crown corporation under that sort of procedure could very well be struck down in the courts. The government does not want to run that risk and consequently is proposing a whole new procedure here for negative resolutions.

There was a rather amusing exchange of letters between the chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), where the chairman expressed very serious concerns about the negative resolution procedures in the bill. The government then put down this amendment which they were proposing. However, last week we received from the minister a letter stating that he rejected the concerns of the committee. As far as he was concerned, the procedure was adequate, notwithstanding the fact he had already moved an amendment to change it. It was a curious action on the part of the minister because he indicated that he simply was not aware of what he was doing.

What do we have now, Mr. Speaker? We have a provision which is infinitely preferable to the existing one. The Senate will not have the ability to overrule the House of Commons and authorize the creation of new Crown corporations which the House has specifically rejected. However, we have a curious lack of symmetry in the bill. There is the belief, which most of us in the committee have cherished for some time, that where you have a negative resolution procedure, either House passing a negative resolution should be enough to cast a veto on a statutory instrument. Yet what we have is a provision in this amendment whereby those negative resolutions can be initiated here but not in the Senate. By the same token, there is a provision where if the minister, under some unexplained circumstances, chose to put forward an affirmative resolution, he could do so, but it would have to be initiated in the House of Commons.

It makes sense to me, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure it would to all members of the House, that if the government is going to go to the trouble of putting down an affirmative motion, it should be entitled to do so in either the House or the Senate. Indeed, because of the legislative demands on our schedule here in the House, it often makes sense that other actions such as this should be initiated in the Senate where the schedule is less intense.

It is surprising that the government proposed an amendment which goes some way to addressing the House's concern, but creates a complete lack of symmetry and a situation where action cannot be initiated in the Senate to strike down or affirm the statutory instrument. It would have been our strong preference to give the option to the Senate to initiate that action there instead of having to wait until the House had disposed of the matter.

Having said that, the proposal before the House today is infinitely preferable to what is in the bill at the present time. This amendment, if passed, may result in a bill which was unconstitutional again coming into conformity with the Constitution of Canada. Consequently, we are prepared to accept that although we feel the measure proposed by the government only goes half way to meeting the concerns of members of the House.

The other point is that a negative or affirmative resolution procedure is no substitute for the government coming back to Parliament and putting down a bill to create a new Crown corporation and having it debated. Anyone who has had the opportunity to read the reports of VIA Rail Canada is aware of the fact that on two separate occasions the president of VIA Rail has said that perhaps the greatest problem facing that company is that their mandate was never spelled out by the Government or Parliament of Canada. They find themselves charged with the responsibility of running a passenger system which has never been properly mandated by Parliament; they have never been told by Parliament what is expected of them.

We have had no explanation whatsoever from the government as to the need for these new energy Crown corporations. Surely, if it was setting up the mechanism for them, one would have thought it would take the House of Commons into its confidence and explain why the government feels it may need to create an unlimited number of Crown corporations. Surely it would be preferable to deal with them on a case-by-case basis, and that in each instance where the government felt it was necessary to intrude in the marketplace and set up a new Crown corporation, it would have come back to Parliament with legislation to be debated in the same way as PetroCan. Instead, the sole parliamentary control will be through the procedure included in this amendment before us today. There will be, I believe, three hours of debate in the House and three hours in the Senate on what could be the setting up of a Crown corporation worth perhaps $2 billion and with enormous consequences for industry. Yet our sole involvement in this House will be a three-hour debate.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that Parliament is irresponsible if we accept the proposition that a three-hour debate is adequate when the government is considering making a major intervention in the marketplace and possibly committing billions of tax dollars to a new Crown corporation. The issue is not whether or not there should be Crown corporations. That is an issue for another day, and we should be able to look at it on a case-by-case basis. The issue is not whether the government should be forbidden to incorporate a new Crown corporation in the future. How do we as trustees for the taxpayers of Canada discharge our responsibility and make sure that their tax dollars are spent in a way that is prudent and wise?

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that where sums of that sort are involved and new Crown corporations could have the potential for very seriously interfering in the markets of the country, to discharge our responsibilities we deserve and we require more than a three-hour debate in the House of Commons and three hours in the Senate.

It is obvious that the government has made the decision that we will be denied more than that. Parliament will not have acts brought to it in the future respecting energy corporations for debate in Parliament. There will not again in the future be something equivalent to the Petro-Canada Act being debated in Parliament which was the case before that corporation was set up. In the future, the government will use this very easy procedure which it has proposed in this bill which will allow it to incorporate new Crown corporations. Parliament's control over this procedure will come in the form of a three-hour debate either on an affirmative motion authorizing what the government is doing or on a negative motion put down in the House of Commons. We believe that is unacceptable. We believe though that the amendment before the House today is better than the unconstitutional and unwise provisions contained in the bill as it stands today.

I want to indicate that we will be voting against this bill, even after it has been amended. We would be voting against it even if the government were to accept the amendments moved by our party, because we believe it is a dangerous bill. We are, however, prepared to allow this motion to go forth. While it is inadequate, it does something to ameliorate the damage that is done by the present negative proposal which is in the bill at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My understanding is that I will put the question on motion No. 3. Following the usual practice of five or more members standing in their places, the division will then be deferred. I will then look to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) for what I understand is a government amendment, about which I have been advised there will be just a short debate. I will then look to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who has been so kind as to forward a copy of his amendment to the Chair. When those matters are disposed of and if there are no further amendments, I will then call in the members to deal with the ensuing divisions.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Pinard, for Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That clause 1 of Bill C-102 be amended by striking out line 29 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"(f) acquire, hold, dispose of or otherwise deal in securities or assets of"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is primarily technical in nature. The amendment is drafted to deal with two possible problems. It could arguably be read that if there were no amendment it could prevent a Crown corporation from disposing of any of the shares or assets that it might be set up to acquire and hold. This would put an undesirable limitation on the ability of a Crown corporation to carry out its responsibilities as a Crown corporation. I am referring, of course, to Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act.

On that basis, it is proposed to add to the words "acquire" and "hold" the words "dispose of or otherwise deal in". The words "shares or assets" are too limited. The oil and gas industry is an industry in which there are a wide variety of different kinds of instruments. While some would arguably come within the normal interpretation of shares, there are many that would not. Again, it would unnecessarily limit the flexibility of a Crown corporation operating in that industry if it were limited to shares and assets alone. For that reason, the word "securities" is proposed in the amendment.

I said at the outset that this particular amendment is primarily technical in nature.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has sought unanimous consent for leave of the House to present an amendment. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, would the parliamentary secretary permit a question of clarification? He may have explained the point but I missed it when one of my colleagues was speaking to me about procedure.

I can understand the provision dealing with "dispose of". Obviously the concern is that the bill as currently worded could prevent the government from disposing of securities that it has acquired through the bill. Could the parliamentary secretary elaborate on the words "otherwise deal in"? Could the parliamentary secretary give us examples of the sorts of actions that would be covered by that portion of the amendment?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would clarify what he is seeking. Is he seeking an explanation of the words which were contained in the previous draft legislation, or is he seeking a greater clarification of "security and assets"?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I was looking for a clarification of "or otherwise deal in". I would like clarification as to how the government sees Crown corporations otherwise dealing in securities or assets.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, briefly, I believe it has been stated in testimony given before the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation that there are a variety of instruments which are put into effect, if you will, in the oil and gas industry. They may take on a number of descriptions. There are joint ventures of various kinds intertwined and intermingled. Therefore, it provides for some flexibility within the act so that those particular measures will not impede the success of any Crown corporation in its dealings in trying to get something off the ground or in the ground. It is a measure of flexibility given to the Crown corporations which, I believe, is part and parcel of most, if not all, corporations in the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the efforts made by the parliamentary secretary to expand on that, but could he give us a specific example of an action that some company might take that would be covered by this provision? He indicates that the government is trying to give the companies more flexibility. Could the parliamentary secretary give a specific example of some action that would be taken, whether it would be otherwise dealing in securities or assets? How specifically would this particular provision come into force?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a question but if I had had notice of it, I could have provided him with several examples. If he wishes, I could give the hon. member an undertaking to provide him with them. However, I do not have any at my fingertips at the moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Dingwall) agreed to.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent to introduce the following amendment:

That Bill C-102 be amended by the addition of a clause as follows:

"8. (1) The activities of Crown Corporations created under Section 6, both in terms of the public policy responsibilities and financial accountability be referred annually to the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons.

(2) The appropriate standing committee referred to under Section 8(1), at its first meeting after reference do establish a review committee made up of members of the Board of Directors, consumers and employees of the Crown Corporation, the appointees of that committee to serve on a voluntary basis and to report periodically to the standing committee on the functioning of the Crown Corporation".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway be presented to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered.

• (1540)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, we are debating one of the energy bills which resulted from the splitting of the omnibus energy bill after the famous or infamous bell-ringing episode. The omnibus bill was divided into eight bills and Bill C-102 is one of them. The result of the division of the former bill is that we have had time to look at individual issues in the omnibus bill. Some very fascinating and modern problems have surfaced which perhaps we would not have debated if we had debated the omnibus bill.

I should like to deal with the creation and operation of Crown corporations. We have a strange alliance in the House. My friends on my right have quite a different attitude to Crown corporations than we in the New Democratic Party, but we seem to come up with some of the same conclusions though for different reasons. One such conclusion is that Crown corporations must be accountable. I should like to speak briefly on why they should be accountable, and on my amendment which includes a rather novel way of making Crown corporations accountable.

We in the New Democratic Party take the position that regulation-making is a necessary part of our system of government. It is inconceivable to us that governments in a western democracy could function if every decision required legislative approval. However, what is at issue is the degree of regulation under which we live. As I understand it, much of the regulation making in the United States during the 1960s and the early 1970s resulted from the desire to satisfy democratically sanctioned goals within an economic system which otherwise would be motivated exclusively to turning a profit. The present anti-regulation mood in the United States is an attempt to ease the economic burden of regulations. In the United States they deal with the economic productivity argument versus the social responsibility argument.

More sharply, of course, are the efforts to deregulate much of the environmental protection which has been set in place, an effort which Canadians sometimes find hard to understand. If our society allows deregulation in areas which one can describe as socially beneficial in order to aid the economic productivity side of the equation, we believe the whole area of advancing technology will be opened up to less democratic control. In other words, the limits of technological growth may not be in the area of energy and resources as many environmentalists would have us believe. Rather, the limits may apply to our democratic process to control the effects of technology. Clearly regulation-making power is an extension of government and therefore is a vital tool on the side of democracy; but it is a tool which cannot be abused.

In Canada we have regulation-making which was abused in the issue of the pre-build of the Alaska gas pipeline where the government, by order in council, made the wrong decision without really going to Parliament. It agreed to pre-build the pipeline and as a result, lost the financing for the entire pipeline.

Also we in Canada have advanced in the area of Crown corporations which are not really a form of regulation but are related to it. I should like to refer to two recently published books. One is entitled "Public Corporations and Public Policy in Canada" which was published by the Institute for Research on Public Policy. The second one is entitled "Government in Business", which was published by the C. D. Howe Institute. They deal with both provincial and federal Crown corporations.

I have been acquiring an interest in this field, and it is a fascinating one. One problem is corporate profitability versus the policy role of Crown corporations. This issue is a very central one because it raises the dichotomy facing Crown corporations. Do those which have commercial functions exist to make a profit or do they have some public policy responsibility? If they do, how can that responsibility be measured? If they do, what sanctions could be set in place to regulate entities which do not meet that measured responsibility?

I am sure I do not have to remind Conservative members to my right that their party got into trouble over its abortive efforts to privatize Petro-Canada. I think that resulted, among other things, from not having really established that Petro-Canada had failed. Beyond that, Canadians accepted the need for a Crown corporation in the oil and gas industry. In effect, Canadians expected that Petro-Canada would have some responsibility in the area of public policy. It will be interesting to hear the debate in the months ahead over the Canada Development Corporation in order to discover whether Canadians have decided if it should be privatized or whether it has a public policy role.

The measure of Crown corporations, however, is undeveloped. Politically it seems to me that it is a quagmire and requires some very careful examination before coming up with a policy. Merely calling for greater accountability of Crown corporations is too facile since it loops back into the basic question of profitability versus public policy responsibility. There are some things we can do if we accept the fact that we must have greater accountability.

The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) is one of the few members of the House who pays particular attention to this area. I congratulate him for that. I have learned quite a bit from reading his speeches.

I should like to put the problem as I see it. Both parties in opposition are advocating that a Crown corporation should be created through Parliament. I think we both agree that it should not be created by order in council. If the government says that it cannot do that because Parliament takes too long, the answer is to reform Parliament, not to say that it cannot be done.

The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) told me that VIA Rail was formed by a one dollar item in the supplementary estimates. What kind of scrutiny does that give Parliament? My point is that even if a corporation is created by Parliament—and Petro-Canada is an example—we still have the problem of ongoing accountability.

During the debate on Bill C-101 the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) gave a very thoughtful speech on the role of Crown corporations. He pointed out that while we on this side support Petro-Canada and would not privatize it, we still have some questions as to the thrust of its development in the north, its role with environmental and native groups and indeed its board of directors. I must be charitable in describing its board of directors. There are Liberals on its board of directors; it is patronage-ridden. We do not really have much accountability even after we have created a Crown corporation. This is what I want to talk about today.

There are two other issues facing Crown corporations. One is the relationship between public and private corporations and the other is the privatization of Crown corporations. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe does not have the privilege of coming from British Columbia as I do. He has not seen—and it is not a privilege—the breakup of many Crown corporations in that province through BCRIC, the BCRICing of Crown corporations or transferring them to the private sector. This has been a disaster in British Columbia. If the hon. member ever gets into power again and he has the same idea of privatizing Crown corporations, I suggest he should take a look at the way BCRIC has failed. Those are issues for another day.

I should like to focus my attention on the amendment because I think it covers some of the issues. I have suggested in the amendment that in the activities of Crown corporations they have a responsibility. My amendment suggests that it should be referred to the appropriate standing committee. Ideally we should have a special committee on Crown corporations. I understand Tommy Douglas, when he was the leader of our party in Saskatchewan, established a special committee. I understand that in Britain there is a special committee of the British House of Commons that deals with this. I think it was called the statutory regulations committee in Saskatchewan which specifically dealt with Crown corporations.

• (1550)

I have not had the honour of serving on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and therefore it is new to me in many respects. I am sure that if my understanding of it is wrong the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe will correct me. It is my understanding, however, that it has made recommendations to have an ongoing review of Crown corporations. I am told, for example, that it was proposed to make the Auditor General the auditor or co-auditor of a Crown corporation with the authority to conduct a comprehensive audit. I understand that this happened with respect to the Post Office for a period of two years, but when the Auditor General wanted to get his mandate reviewed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wrote to him and said no. Therefore, they have really been denied any authority.

I am also told that the hon. member for Regina West proposed an amendment a few years ago, which was accepted by the government, which would require the annual reports of Air Canada and the CNR to go to the committee. I believe that the committee has spent some time during the last month questioning the appropriate officers from Air Canada and the CNR, thereby setting a true example of scrutiny and parliamentary accountability.

Of course, I would have moved that this go to a special committee, such as the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, but I believe it would not be proper to specify that directly in terms of House procedure. My amendment is general and simply moves that the activities be referred to the appropriate standing committee. A House order could then be entered as to which committee would consider it.

I would like to make it clear that the first part of the amendment is to establish ongoing legislative accountability, both in meeting public policy commitments as well as being financially responsible for Crown corporations. The second part of my amendment calls for the establishment of a joint management-employee-consumer review committee. This committee would keep an ongoing brief. It would not be paid because of the obvious problems it would present. It could serve on a voluntary basis and act like a watchdog over the committee.

This amendment goes farther still. It involves an area about which Canadians should start thinking. It is called economic democracy. This term is not only used by Tom Haydon, Jane Fonda's husband, but is also used by social democratic parties in Europe. Economic democracy is a very big issue there and has been debated by my party's counterparts in Europe, the socialist party in France and the social democratic party in West Germany, which are the governments in those countries, incidentally.

As I understand it, the parties want to move to make Crown corporations more accountable. The reason for that is simple. People want to have some control over the institutions that control their lives.

One of the first successful cases I had when I was a young lawyer in Vancouver was against British Columbia Hydro, which was a rather monolithic corporation. I challenged that corporation to pay security deposits back to poor people because I thought it was illegally keeping the security deposits. The Supreme Court of British Columbia subsequently held that this was true and it ordered $400,000 in security deposits returned to those people.

At that time people asked me what I was doing by trying to take on a big Crown corporation like B.C. Hydro. I remember saying that I did not have any qualms about doing that since by taking on a large Crown corporation it seemed to me we were trying to make it more accountable. B.C. Hydro is a good example of a Crown corporation that is very unaccountable to the British Columbia legislature and to the people of British Columbia.

My amendment begins to deal with this problem. It deals with economic democracy. I believe it is the beginning of a movement to put some of the workers and some of the people who consume the services of a Crown corporation on the boards of directors. The board of directors of Petro-Canada should be made up of an environmentalist, someone from the small oil industry and the large oil industry, and some Inuit or Dene native people since Petro-Canada operates in the North. It should not only be comprised of deputy ministers from Ottawa and political patronage appointments. Since I cannot yet change the manner in which appointments are made to the board of directors of Petro-Canada, the problem which confronts me is to open up the process for these appointments.

One way of opening it up is to propose this amendment. This is not a complicated amendment. The government believes in accountability, economic democracy and people being able to have some control over their lives. As well, if the government believes in making Members of Parliament more active in scrutinizing these corporations, why not accept this amendment? It simply allows a reference to a standing committee in order to enable that committee to examine these Crown corporations. For example, assume that Dome Petroleum is made a Crown corporation and a special corporation is made for the Beaufort Sea. A year from now an appropriate committee could review what those corporations have been doing and how they were managing their finances. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe could ask many probing questions on behalf of the taxpayers to find out what was happening in those corporations.

The second part of my amendment would provide for a voluntary review committee to be appointed by a parliamentary committee. It would be a broad-based committee comprised of consumers and employees of the Crown corporation. Although it is a novel idea, it is a small step toward greater economic democracy. Therefore, I would urge the House to accept the amendment.

In relation to this matter, I did have the opportunity to review the problem of accountability of Crown corporations in terms of "agent of Her Majesty". This relates to some of the amendments introduced the other day by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. The law is confusing because it applies both ways. It may be argued that even if you do not stipulate "agent of Her Majesty", Crown corporations are still agents of Her Majesty because, if you read the rest of the act, the government has a type of direction in the Crown corporation. These facts are probably only understood by lawyers. In any event, it may not matter one way or the other whether you stipulate an agent of Her Majesty or not. The Air Canada Act specifically states that Crown corporations are not agents of Her Majesty. Does that make all other Crown corporations agents of Her Majesty? That could be argued. I believe the better argument is that we must review the whole scope of how Crown corporations are set up.

That brings us back to Members of Parliament because we are the ones who are literally creating the law on these energy corporations. While this is a serious matter which sounds technical, it is really quite a simple issue. It is to give the people control over their lives and over some of the instruments that affect their lives. I believe there is great support in the country—certainly from the left wing of the country—as well as from our party for an amendment such as this.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in discussing the hon. member's amendment. I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary intends to put the government's position on the record. I can indicate my general support of the amendment although I do have some reservations about it.

He first proposes to ensure that the appropriate standing committee in Parliament would have the opportunity to review the activities of a Crown corporation on a regular basis. The other novel proposal is to give the appropriate standing committee itself the responsibility of striking a review committee. I have never heard of a review committee before. I am not aware of any in place at the present time which report in any way to a standing committee of Parliament made up of members of the board of directors, consumers and employees of the Crown corporation and that those appointees of the committee would serve on a voluntary basis and report from time to time to the appropriate parliamentary standing committee. He says he sees this, in essence, as a foot in the door for economic democracy, that in time we would find that workers and other affected groups would find their way into the boards of Crown corporations, and that because he cannot do that at this point, what he is doing is trying to accept a second best solution. I do not see it as particularly advancing that cause. I do see the value of it in that the hon. member appears to be attempting to improve some element of accountability between the Crown corporation and Parliament, and that, in itself, is constructive.

● (1600)

There are problems posed by the fuzziness of the amendment. How many people would there be on such a review committee? When would it hold its meetings? How would it be financed? How would the reports be prepared? How, in fact, would a parliamentary committee be able to reach into a corporation where it perhaps did not know the employees to choose or which one of the employees would be appointed to serve on the review committee? What, in fact, would be the action taken by Parliament as a result of the review committee's report? There are a number of questions here which leave the amendment somewhat fuzzy, but I do not believe this is insurmountable. I believe the intention of the hon. member, in terms of improving accountability between Crown corporations and Parliament, is basically sound.

I do, perhaps, want to use his amendment, however, as a vehicle for very briefly dealing with one issue that he raised, the question of the appropriate relationship between Crown corporations, Parliament and the committees of Parliament. I think he quite correctly mentioned the fact that the Public Accounts Committee has proposed that there be one committee on Crown corporations which could hold Crown corporations accountable in the future. Indeed, this is done in several other jurisdictions.

The real issue here is really a fifty-fifty proposition, whether that is the better way to proceed or whether it is better to have regular standing committees taking the responsibility for appropriate Crown corporations involved in their fields. By and large, the argument in favour of having a committee on nationalized industries or on Crown corporations would be most forceful in instances where the responsibility of the government was essentially that of monitoring the financial activities of the Crown corporations, ensuring, for example, that annual reports were made, that the corporate plan was properly spelt out from time to time and that proper procedures were followed to allow for accountability.

Where there might be some difficulty in setting up one committee of Parliament to which all of the Crown corporations would report, amounting to 171 at the present time, I believe, is where there were very specialized areas of activity. There are several different types of Crown corporation, but perhaps for the purpose of simplicity I could divide them into two categories. The first is one which operates as a business corporation. It may very well be, for example, that if a company were in some trouble, the government would make the decision to take it over and become the 100 per cent owner; it was then nursed back to health and operated on a business-like basis. There is no particular public policy concerned there other than that of ensuring that the company continue, and perhaps protecting the jobs of the workers. The government would not be involved on a day to day basis in overseeing the activities of the company, giving instructions that it must get into a particular field or not get into a particular field.

Companies such as de Havilland, which are not created as instruments of government policy—the government thought it was essential that it have an aircraft company—could very easily report to a committee on Crown corporations in Parliament. The role of that oversight committee would largely be to ensure that the company was functioning on a sound basis, that its finances were well run and that it was properly managed. By and large, it would not get into issues related to the role of the government in that aircraft industry per se. The only question which would have to be asked from time to time, other than questions concerning the soundness of the management of the company, would be whether it was still necessary that this function remained under government control or whether it should be returned to the private sector.

There are, however, other Crown corporations which are very clearly instruments of government policy. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is one that springs to mind. That is a departmental Crown corporation. Perhaps most Canadians are not aware of the fact that it is a Crown corporation. It is inseparable from government policy. It does not function on its own. It is an integral part of the government's policy on housing. There is an instance where the considerations of Parliament are essentially policy considerations. What is the role of the government in the provision of housing in Canada? What should it be in the future? The argument against having such a company report to a committee on Crown corporations in Parliament is that that committee would have good expertise on financial management and on accountability in general, but it might not have the specialized expertise necessary properly to scrutinize the activities of a Crown corporation in a specific field.

Air Canada comes to mind again. Is it better that Air Canda should report to a committee on Crown corporations or that it should report to the transport committee? The CBC is another example. It is set up as a direct instrument of government policy. It was not that the government felt it was financially necessary to get into this area to rescue private broadcasters in some way, but, rather, that the government decided that the CBC would be a useful instrument in fostering Canadian culture in Canada. It recognized that it would be run at a loss and that there was a role for the state to play on a continuing basis. In my judgment, the policies and actions of the CBC are an integral part of broadcasting policy in Canada. If there were to be one central committee on Crown corporations, my hon. friend would have to ask himself whether it would be appropriate that the CBC, Air Canada and the other corporations report to that one committee or whether they should report to an appropriate standing committee, such as ones dealing with broadcasting, transportation and so on. But I should point out that while my hon. friend said he would like to move in that direction, the amendment he has put before the House today would not create a committee on Crown corporations. It makes reference to appropriate standing committees and would mean that Air Canada would continue to report to the Standing Committee on Transport, the CBC to the Communications and Culture Committee, and so on.

In sum, then, what we have is a proposal that Crown corporations would report on a regular basis to the appropriate standing committee. My friend has made a proposal which is imaginative and novel. I think there is some precedent for a parliamentary committee to strike a review committee which would report to it from time to time. I do not see it as the answer to the problem of the need for more accountability, nor do I necessarily feel it is desirable in some instances that Parliament should always be looking over the shoulders of the Crown corporations. A case in point is de Havilland. I am not sure that Parliament should be involved in the day to day activities of de Havilland. The real issue of concern to Parliament, first of all, is whether de Havilland should be well run and, second, whether it should be owned by the government or by the private sector. It is not an instrument of government policy.

If we had an appropriate Crown corporations omnibus bill, as was previously promised to us on numerous occasions by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) but which is now dead, then I would say that the proposal by my hon. friend might be far too restrictive. But in the absence of that legislation and other measures being taken by the government to enhance accountability to Parliament, I suggest that any measure proposed by hon. members of the House which would improve the accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament should be supported by hon. members of the House of Commons. Consequently, we are prepared to offer our support to the hon. member for his amendment.

Mr. Jarvis: Question.
