And more than five members having risen:

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 183)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse	Gilchrist	McKinnon
Anguish	Greenaway	McKnight
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Gustafson	McMillan
Beatty	Halliday	Miller
Benjamin	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	Mitchell (Mrs.)
Blackburn	Hargrave	Murphy
Blenkarn	Hawkes	Murta
Broadbent	Heap	Neil
Cardiff	Hnatyshyn	Nickerson
Carney (Miss)	Hovdebo	Nystrom
Clark (Yellowhead)	Howie	Oberle
Coates	Jarvis	Ogle
Cook	Jelinek	Orlikow
Corbett	Jewett (Miss)	Paproski
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Keeper	Riis
Crosby (Halifax West)	Kempling	Rose
Crouse	Kilgour	Schellenberger
Deans	Kristiansen	Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Dick	Kushner	Siddon
Dinsdale	Lambert	Skelly
Domm	Lawrence	Speyer
Elzinga	Lewis	Stewart
Fennell	Lewycky	Taylor
Fraser	MacDonald (Miss)	Thacker
Fretz	MacKay	Thomson
Friesen	Malone	Vankoughnet
Fulton	Manly	Waddell
Gamble	Mayer	Wenman
Gass	Mazankowski	Wise
	McCain	Wright
		Young
		Yurko—91.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Bussières	Dawson
Axworthy	Campbell (LaSalle)	De Bané
Bachand	Campbell (Cardigan)	de Corneille
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Chénier	Demers
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Chrétien	Deniger
Bégin (Miss)	Collenette	Desmarais
Berger	Comtois	Dingwall
Blaker	Corbin	Dubois
Bloomfield	Côté (Mrs.)	Duclos
Bockstael	Cousineau	Dupont
Bossy	Cullen	Dupras
Breau	Cyr	Duquet
Bujold	Daudlin	Ethier
		Evans
		Ferguson
Fisher	Lang	Parent
Fleming	Laniel	Pelletier
Flis	Lapierre	Penner
Foster	Lapointe (Beauce)	Peterson
Fox	LeBlanc	Pinard
Francis	Leduc	Prud'homme
Frith	MacBain	Regan
Gauthier	MacEachen	Roberts
Gendron	MacGuigan	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Gimaïel	Mackasey	Rooney
Gingras	MacLaren	Roy
Gourde (Lévis)	MacLellan	Schroder
Guilbault	Malépart	Simmons
Harquail	Maltais	Smith
Henderson	Marceau	Tessier
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Massé	Tobin
Isabelle	Masters	Tousignant
Joyal	McCauley	Trudeau
Kelly	Munro (Hamilton East)	Turner
Killens (Mrs.)	Nicholson (Miss)	Veillette
Lachance	Olivier	Watson
Lajoie	Ostiguy	Weatherhead
Lamontagne	Ouellet	Whelan
Landers		Yanakis—112.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

● (1710)

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in order to facilitate the debate which will be taking place in the course of the next few minutes, perhaps it will be useful to talk for a couple of minutes about what this debate is not about. This debate is not about the issue of whether there is a role for Crown corporations in the energy field in the future. That is an issue to be debated on another occasion. What the debate is about this afternoon is the question whether or not Parliament has a role to play in being consulted and involved before the government sets up new Crown corporations in the energy field. That is the first issue.

The second issue is what responsibility does Parliament have on a continuing basis to ensure that Crown corporations operating in the marketplace operate in a way that is fair and proper and which shows respect for the tax dollars of the taxpayers of Canada and for the intention of Parliament when it passes legislation that Crown corporations conduct themselves in a proper way.

We have just voted on three amendments to this legislation which is before us today. I moved two of the amendments. One of those amendments was very straightforward and would have simply required that the procedure which would have been followed by the government for incorporating a new energy Crown corporation would be followed as well for subsidiaries.

A question which members should logically be asking themselves is this. If it is necessary that a Crown corporation, before it is created, should have the authorization of the governor in council in the form of an order in council and that the order should be tabled in Parliament so it will have an opportunity to put forward a negative resolution to strike it down and say that it does not want the Crown corporation started, then why should not the same procedure be followed for subsidiaries if they can be incorporated with all of the powers of the parent, with as much power to commit the consolidated revenue fund and to interfere in the marketplace?

The amendment which we proposed was simply designed to ensure that the same provision was followed for the subsidiaries of these Crown corporations. We proposed the amendment and debated it. There was silence from the government side; not one syllable was uttered explaining why it was desirable to have parliamentary involvement at the outset when the Crown corporation was created and why it was suddenly undesirable to have parliamentary involvement when there was a proliferation of subsidiary Crown corporations. That amendment was defeated, not with any explanation to Parliament or to the Canadian people, but just by the use of raw numbers.

The second amendment which we proposed and which was just voted on dealt with the question of agent of Her Majesty status. There are two fundamental concerns which we should have as parliamentarians as a result of agent of Her Majesty status. The first concern is that, in granting automatic agent of Her Majesty status as part of the birth certificate of these new Crown corporations, we are giving them the ability to have their debts automatically become liabilities within the consolidated revenue fund. What we are saying is that these Crown corporations can continue to borrow in the future, and if they are badly managed and run up massive losses, the people of Canada are the ones who will automatically become liable for those losses and will have to pay the bills.

Second, we are saying that on the basis of current jurisprudence in the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the Uranium Canada and the Eldorado Nuclear case, companies in the future shall have immunity to criminal law, such as the combines law and the legislation dealing with false and misleading advertising. What we are saying is that under this legislation we are automatically conveying immunity to these Crown corporations from the workings of the Combines Investigation Act. If a private company were to price-fix, the government would lay criminal charges against that private company; but if a Crown corporation which is incorporated under this bill price-fixes, it is immune.

We are saying that if a private company engages in false and misleading advertising, criminal charges would be laid against that company by the government and it would be fined as a result. In the case of these Crown corporations, they will be exempt. They can engage in false and misleading advertising with impunity.

Surely we should be asking ourselves whether we should be automatically conferring that status on all Crown corporations. We therefore moved the amendment, which stated that since the government has the ability under current legislation to convey agent of Her Majesty status on any Crown corporation if it so chooses at any time, we simply asked that it be done on a case by case basis rather than giving a blanket grant of this special privilege that these Crown corporations would have.

Again, we moved our amendment and made our case and there was silence from the government side. There was no explanation whatsoever as to why the government was not prepared to review this on a case by case basis or why it was essential that all these new Crown corporations be granted this automatic agent of Her Majesty status. Had it given justification for its position, it would have been easier to understand why the government would vote down an amendment designed to protect Canadian taxpayers. No such justification was given.

We now find ourselves in a position where we are dealing with third reading of a bill which was bad to begin with. It had amendments moved to make it better but it is going through largely unchanged. I want to indicate that when the vote is taken on this bill some time before six o'clock this evening, our party will be voting against it because it does not deserve the support of the Parliament of Canada.

What does the bill do? Most importantly, it provides a framework for the creation of new Crown corporations either by incorporating them under the Canada Business Corporations Act or by using funds and purchasing existing companies and converting them into Crown corporations.

The logical question which the taxpayers of Canada would expect us to ask the Liberal members who are proposing this legislation is: For what purpose will these new Crown corporations be incorporated? What will be the nature of the new Crown corporation to be created? You have Petro-Canada, you have Eldorado Nuclear and you have Uranium Canada. For what purpose does the government need new Crown corporations? No explanation has been given. All that the government has asked is that the House of Commons give it unending authority to incorporate any energy Crown corporation it so chooses.

I should stress the fact that its powers go well beyond the energy field. If they are incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act they have the powers of a natural person and can extend beyond simply dealing in energy matters. The government can incorporate subsidiaries and can operate either in Canada or abroad.

These are questions which have not been answered in this debate. How will these companies operate and for what purpose will they be incorporated? What role will they play in the marketplace? What are the government's intentions? How can the government ask Parliament, as trustees of the public purse and custodians of the public interest, to simply give it carte blanche to do whatever it wants without giving a single explanation of the nature of these Crown corporations to be created?

The issue today is not whether there should be any Crown corporations in the energy field in the future. The issue concerns the role of Parliament and whether the government has a responsibility to justify the creation of a new Crown agency to Parliament. Surely we would be totally remiss in discharging our responsibilities if we said that we did not care as Members of Parliament for what purpose the government is setting up these Crown corporations which could result in costing the taxpayers of Canada billions of dollars and will obviously have an effect on the marketplace in Canada. We have asked those questions but have received no answers. Surely there is no way members of the House can be expected to vote for the bill until we have those answers.

Have there been problems with Crown corporations in the past which should cause some concern today? Indeed there have. During the 1960s and 1970s there was a succession of reports by the Auditor General of Canada, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and by the Lambert Commission, which was the royal commission on financial management and accountability. Various and sundry other groups found that financial management and control of Crown corporations desperately had to be improved. Just this year we saw the most conspicuous example of government mismanagement when it was in the marketplace at the time of the Consolidated Computer collapse. That was a situation where the taxpayers of Canada were required to pick up a bill which I believe went over $100 million in the collapse of Consolidated Computer.

• (1720)

It is perhaps useful to refer to Consolidated Computer as a case study and to ask ourselves whether the Consolidated Computer fiasco could repeat itself here. After the collapse of Consolidated Computer, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) commissioned an internal study by General William Anderson, a very distinguished public servant on loan from the Ontario government, who investigated the circumstances surrounding Consolidated Computer and made recommendations to the government. His report has never been released to Parliament. We have never had the opportunity to have any formal tabling or debate in the House. But we have a copy of at least portions of that report.

It would be useful to put on the record parts of the report under "Summary and Recommendations", because as I read the report hon. members should ask themselves how often this will happen in the energy field if Bill C-102 is enacted. On page 50, under "Summary and Recommendations", General Anderson stated:

> The story of CCI is one of continued support, notwithstanding formidable evidence and considerable advice to the contrary. The available documentation in the files and the often conflicting information and opinions from the interviews do not provide a clear and single explanation of this phenomenon.
>
> In 1971/72, the decision to restructure the company seemed to be in line with the General Adjustment Assistance Board's normal decision criteria with due recognition of government policy in the computer sector. It was concluded that CCI had technology worth saving and the company was restructured, refinanced and provided with new management under the direction of the GAAB. However, the significant feature in this case was that the GAAB took an equity position in the company.
>
> Subsequent decisions on CCI were influenced not only by the need for the GAAB to make reasonable, high risk business judgments but also by the government's legal responsibilities as owners of the company, social responsibilities as employers of a "private sector" workforce and perceived moral obligations to both suppliers and customers of CCI. In addition, there was a growing awareness of the government's policy and strategy with regard to the computer industry which supported the establishment and development of a strong Canadian capability in this area. CCI started to shift into a special category of its own and was no longer subject to the same decision criteria that applied to other projects.
>
> The 1976 restructuring was more hotly debated than the earlier refinancing. At first, the GAAB decided to sell CCI. However, the committee that was set up to develop sale proposals, recommended that CCI be restructured with equity being held by Fujitsu, Central Dynamics Ltd. (CDL) and the government. In addition, the GAAB established the lease companies in 1976 and approved 99 per cent guarantees of up to $30 million. Once again, the GAAB was in the role of owner and banker. While the GAAB acknowledged the high risks, it was felt that the link with CDL and Fujitsu would provide the necessary management products and technology to make the company viable. Subsequently, CDL withdrew from the proposal but this was not seen by ITC or the GAAB as being fatal.
>
> The interrelationships between the GAAB/EDB, ITC, CCI and the lease companies, as outlined earlier in this report, made it virtually impossible to render objective business decisions in this high risk environment.
>
> The government decision in 1976 seemed to reinforce the idea that CCI was a special case and that it was to be treated as such. Additional financing was provided by the GAAB/EDB in subsequent years but the usual review of loan guarantee proposals was less evident in the documentation. Repayment schedules and minimum covenants, which would normally serve as controls, were waived or modified by the GAAB/EDB. While some project officers in ITC and members of the EDB were concerned and recommended that the project be terminated, their warnings were not heeded. Contributing to this situation, particularly in the later years, was the lack of quality information and the piecemeal nature of the decisions.

General Anderson goes on to talk about the lack of available information, and then in a subsequent paragraph states:

> During the last two years, there was a growing number of officials recommending the termination of the CCI project. The reports, with a few important exceptions, were almost all bad. However, there were still a few individuals in key positions that were somewhat "bullish" on the future prospects of the company. The EDB, on a number of occasions, postponed a final decision on the project. There always seemed to be a new event which indicated that the company could be turned around or sold or that the government liability could be reduced. The events included a renewed interest by Fujitsu, a major contract with ICL, various potential buyers, new management and a new business plan. Each of these events required time to "investigate", "negotiate" or "develop". None of them ever materialized in a manner that offered any real hope to save the company or reduce the government's liability. This situation was pointed out to the EDB in September 1980 when a briefing, in support of a loan guarantee request of $4.7 million, noted that " . . . since November 1979 the EDB has, on four occasions, agreed to insure a total of nearly $12 million in new loans . . . for the purpose of buying time". The loan request was approved and the EDB and ITC continued to "buy time" until January 1981 when the EDB decided against any further support and turned the matter over to ministers.
>
> In June 1981, the government approved a partial restructuring and sale of CCI by no later than December 31, 1981. In the documentation which led to this decision, ITC was still referring to the "new management team", "large customer base", "potentially lucrative links with leading computer suppliers" and "world competitive products". It suggested that the longer term prospects were promising and made repeated references to the private sector interest in purchasing CCI.
>
> It was not until October 1981 that the full seriousness of the CCI situation was recognized by ITC and the government decided that the Minister of ITC and the President of the Treasury Board should disengage the government from CCI by whatever means were appropriate. Further study (since the June 1981 decision) revealed that the company was in far worse shape than earlier believed.

In summary, the decisions to continue the support of CCI were probably made in accordance with the normal GAAP criteria up to and including the 1971/72 restructuring. The decisions since that time have been influenced less by objective business judgment than they have by the government ownership of the company, the various individual perceptions of the reasons for supporting CCI, the EDB's perception of government policy, significant conflicts of interest, poor quality information and advice that always offered a glimmer of hope that all was not lost.

This particular fiasco involving a corporation which came to be under the ownership of the government resulted in a cost to the taxpayers of Canada of over $100 million. I have in my hand letters passing between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and the President of the Treasury Board, exchanged on a confidential basis. The President of the Treasury Board made it clear that the government was in a very vulnerable position, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce still urged him to put in more government money to try to cut the losses. If the legislation before us is approved here today, we are putting the taxpayers of Canada in a position where they could be liable for literally billions of dollars of losses. With this legislation we will be creating a breed of Crown corporation which is above the law, which will operate in competition in the marketplace and will not be subject to the same criteria as other private sector corporations. We are ensuring that there will not be adequate parliamentary consultation either in the creation of these Crown corporations or in their management on a regular basis. In Bill C-102 there is not even a requirement that these Crown corporations to be incorporated be included in the schedules of the Financial Administration Act. The government did not even go that far, yet it says that it wants unlimited ability to incorporate these corporations and to make the taxpayers of Canada responsible for their debts.

When the vote is taken on this matter in a few minutes, I hope Your Honour will look down the benches of cabinet ministers in front of you and that you will ask yourself to how many of them you would be prepared to give signing authority on your credit card. To how many of them would you give authority to use their business judgment as to when it would be appropriate to run up a charge on your account? Mr. Speaker, your answer would probably be "None of them!" In particular, would you give that authority to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on the strength of his performance concerning energy issues in recent days? Surely you would not. However, that is precisely what Parliament will do today. It will give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the authority to incorporate unlimited new Crown corporations and to make the people of Canada liable for their debts.

This is a bad bill. It does not deserve the support of Parliament. All hon. members who are concerned about parliamentary control and ensuring that the taxpayers' dollars are protected have a responsibility to vote against this bill on third reading.

• (1730)

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking briefly on third reading, I have a few comments. This bill is largely about open government versus closed government, when it comes to the operations of Crown corporations, in determining what fields we as representatives of our electors feel it is appropriate and wise for our government to be engaged in.

Most hon. members recognize that from time to time the government must go into the marketplace in one form or another. Unfortunately, the history of much of Canadian government in the past has been that when we go into the marketplace we go in with one arm tied behind our backs. In dealing with the larger, centralized elements of the business community, we find that our governments play poker with all of their cards face up or with half of their cards face up, and consequently get into trouble.

Time and time again the private sector of the energy industry has said to the government: "You give us the price we want, at both the front end and the back end, give us the tax incentives and the write-offs and the taxes we want, or we will pack up and go home." Any government worth its salt has had to face the challenge, either that it must give in completely to that kind of threat of a capital strike by the private sector in that field, or it must be prepared to go into the business itself as an alternative.

We in this party as much as anyone else recognize the situation presented to the Canadian people. We know there are times when the government must involve itself in the major sectors in the marketplace. Our problem with this bill is that the government, meeting behind closed doors and without any reference to the elected representatives of the people, can determine for itself in what manner it will act. The official opposition and we in this party put forward amendments which attempted to introduce realistic checks and balances. We did so in order that we ourselves may be assured, and so that we in turn may assure the people we represent, that the decision being made by the government is an appropriate and wise decision, and that the new institutions will perform a valid and responsible function in the marketplace.

In its own amendments the government has taken some cognizance of the awkward position as regards the Senate that existed in the initial legislation. We are still left with the situation, specified in exact terminology in this bill, where there can be a government and a House of Commons both agreeing it is necessary to have a Crown corporation in place to perform a certain function; and a Senate which disagrees. Many people in this country believe—I am not going to say rightly or wrongly at this point—that the Senate is a bastion of the rights of the privileged and a bastion of the rights of property. Whether it is the Senate of Canada or the British House of Lords, that is their main function within parliamentary democracy in the western world. It alone is going to be able to say: "No way."

We know that the Senate has certain prerogatives within our parliamentary system, but in very few specific pieces of legislation where it is not required do we enter that veto in, do we see it specified. We had a great debate on that matter of the Senate's right, with respect to the Constitution, of the Senate insisting on its right to veto changes to its own composition and its own nature. Here we are again with another piece of legislation saying that the rights both of the government and of the House of Commons itself can be overturned by giving the Senate a second kick at the cat.

Members of the Senate who have held directorships for years in financial institutions and in energy corporations—they are rather famous for that and have been for years—are given the right to veto what both the government and the House of Commons in their wisdom have decided to let go through. It is wrong in the broader view of their normal role in the parliamentary process, and it is doubly wrong for us to include the right to veto specifically in legislation of this sort. It is not done in other laws we have passed and it is a gross mistake to do so in this instance.

We also have problems here with respect to the general matter of social responsibility and public accountability of all Crown corporations. We do not like bureaucracy and regulations any more than anyone else. The amendment introduced a few moments ago by my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was one attempt to introduce some guarantee that accountability and social responsibility would be built into some of the corporations that the Canadian government from time to time may wish to institute. If we do not introduce that guarantee of accountability and responsibility into the management structures and into the review structures of those corporations, we will become bound up more and more in red tape of a kind that will cause untold problems both to our constituents and to ourselves as representatives.

A former leader of the Conservative Party, which forms the official opposition, had some interesting words to say on that matter at the recent policy conference of that party. He said:

> The free market "is a wonderful mechanism. But the motivation is making a buck, and a miner or a manufacturer doesn't make money by improving the environment. He doesn't make a buck worrying about the socially disadvantaged, or tiding over employees in times of unemployment . . . Any civilized society has concepts of order and ideals that aren't the business of the marketplace."

Those Conservatives who come within that historic definition of conservatism share the emphasis on the public interest and the public philosophy. Even though socialists and Conservatives historically may have a different view from time to time as to what the legitimate public interest is, we share that philosophy and we share that degree of responsibility in public accountability.

My colleagues and I are sometimes more than a little puzzled why people who do not show any willingness whatever to accept that traditional concept of conservatism continually rise and speak on behalf of that party in the House. I am glad that at least the former leader, and also some of the members over there, still hold to the views and the philosophy that are the basis of that party.

There is an appropriate place for public interest, for an expanded sense of public responsibility and accountability. To our great regret, the government has not seen fit to incorporate into this legislation the kind of mechanism that is necessary when setting up institutions to serve the people. There is no chance such as there is in Norway within StatOil, where there is an annual report to parliament which is debated in parliament. The corporate plans of that corporation in the energy sphere and the status and performance of that corporation are analysed on a regular basis by the parliament of Norway. We do not have that kind of mechanism here. If it is in the government's mind to set up some corporations in this area—and if it is not, why the legislation?—why has it not taken this opportunity to show it believes in the democratic process, that it believes in public responsibility and in public accountability? We can only assume that it does not believe in these things or we would have heard more from the government directly or we would have had some more appropriate response at least to the suggestions made by ourselves and by the official opposition during the debate of the last few hours.

• (1740)

I do not want to take much more time at this juncture. Many hon. members would like to bring this matter to a resolution. Our party certainly does not want to hold it up, but I urge the government in the weeks and months ahead to take another total look at the structuring, especially of public corporations but also of some major private associations and corporations across Canada, to see if we cannot begin to reintroduce some of the sense of social responsibility and community responsibility which, once upon a time, existed in areas of the private sector and may one day exist in the public sector. If we do that, we will have fulfilled our purposes as a people's Parliament. If we do not do it, I think we will all have given democracy a bad, bad name.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak briefly at third reading of Bill C-102.

I think the key question is why this bill is needed and why it is before the House. No one has given us any real reasons why this bill is needed, but I would like to state why I believe it is needed by going back to an act passed by this House called the Canada Oil and Gas Act. When it was before this House, it was Bill C-48, and I would like to quote Section 31 as follows:

> The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, prior to the authorization of a system for producing oil or gas from any Canada lands, may direct that
>
> (a) the Crown share in any relevant interest be transferred to a designated Crown corporation; or
>
> (b) any designated Crown corporation to which a Crown share in any relevent interest has been transferred under this section transfer the Crown share to any other designated Crown corporation.

When we dealt with Bill C-48, some of us made a very strong case—and I was one—that we did not want to see a 25 per cent Crown share transferred to Petro-Canada in areas like Hibernia, the Grand Banks, in the Beaufort, on the Arctic Islands, in the Mackenzie Valley and the west coast offshore. I simply did not want to see this Crown corporation called Petro-Canada have such vast holdings in relation to Canada lands with respect to oil and gas production. I felt, as several of us did when we discussed that bill, that it was necessary to have holding corporations in their simplest form which have very few employees and boards of directors holding a 25 per cent share on behalf of the Crown and, as a result, having Crown policy injected into these partnerships or into these consortiums producing gas and oil off the west coast, in the Mackenzie Valley, in the north and on the east coast.

I was particularly concerned that in areas where we set up these holding corporations the provinces should be permitted to put somebody on the boards of directors of these Crown corporations to have policy input. If a corporation is associated with an area around Nova Scotia, Nova Scotia should have the opportunity to put somebody on the board of directors of such a Crown corporation in that area. If it was associated with Newfoundland, Newfoundland should have the opportunity to put somebody on the board of a Crown corporation dealing with production off the east coast. If it was up north, perhaps some other province or provinces should have input into policy. If it was off the west coast, the province of British Columbia should certainly have the opportunity to put a member on the board of directors of a Crown corporation holding a 25 per cent interest in production and exploration in that area. That is why I think this bill is vital and necessary.

It is appropriate that people make suggestions about incorporating greater accountability to Parliament on the part of some of these Crown corporations, but the bill is necessary because it would be wrong to assign such vast holdings and interests and such vast policy direction to either Petro-Canada or some other Canadian Crown corporation.

However, I say again that these Crown corprations must effectively be holding corporations with very few employees, and the boards of directors should adjust themselves to policy in dealing with the consortiums and partnerships which will be created.

I do not want to hold the bill up, so in conclusion let me say that if it is the intent of the government to create Crown corporations to deal with energy matters in a substantial way beyond the requirements of Bill C-48—and I say they are substantial with regard to that bill—I would be concerned about this bill. If it is the intent to create Crown corporations to build nuclear reactors across the nation or outside the country, that should be debated to a much greater extent in the House. If it is the intent to create energy corporations to deal with solar energy or some other form of energy, I think the government has a responsibility to come back to the House in relation to creating Crown corporations in other areas.

I believe the intent of Bill C-102 is to deal with the holding Crown corporations which are necessary to affect the requirements of Bill C-48 and the exploration of oil and gas on federal lands; but if the government intends to go much beyond that, I think it should come back to the House for additional discussion of that type of legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party is against Bill C-102, because it gives the government, and more specifically the cabinet, the exclusive right, without consent of Parliament, to promote the establishment of energy corporations. This is against the basic principles of our parliamentary system.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard, for Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 184)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand	Dingwall	Landers
Axworthy	Dubois	Lang
Bachand	Duclos	Laniel
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Dupont	Lapierre
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Dupras	Lapointe (Beauce)
Bégin (Miss)	Duquet	LeBlanc
Berger	Ethier	Leduc
Blaker	Evans	MacBain
Bloomfield	Ferguson	MacEachen
Bockstael	Fisher	MacGuigan
Bossy	Fleming	Mackasey
Breau	Flis	MacLaren
Bujold	Foster	MacLellan
Bussières	Fox	Malépart
Campbell (LaSalle)	Francis	Maltais
Campbell (Cardigan)	Frith	Marceau
Chénier	Gauthier	Massé
Collenette	Gendron	Masters
Comtois	Gimaïel	McCauley
Corbin	Gingras	Munro (Hamilton East)
Corriveau	Gourde (Lévis)	Nicholson (Miss)
Côté (Mrs.)	Guilbault	Olivier
Cousineau	Harquail	Ostiguy
Cullen	Henderson	Ouellet
Cyr	Herbert	Pelletier
Daudlin	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Penner
Dawson	Hopkins	Peterson
De Bané	Isabelle	Pinard
de Corneille	Joyal	Prud'homme
Demers	Kelly	Regan
Deniger	Killens (Mrs.)	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Desmarais	Lachance	Roberts
	Lajoie
	Lamontagne

Messrs.

Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)	Smith	Turner
Rooney	Tessier	Veillette
Roy	Tobin	Watson
Schroder	Tousignant	Weatherhead
Simmons	Trudeau	Yanakis—113.

NAYS

Messrs.

Althouse	Crouse	Hawkes
Anguish	Deans	Heap
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Dinsdale	Hnatyshyn
Beatty	Domm	Hovdebo
Benjamin	Fennell	Howie
Blackburn	Forrestall	Jarvis
Blaikie	Fraser	Jelinek
Blenkarn	Fretz	Jewett (Miss)
Broadbent	Friesen	Keeper
Cardiff	Fulton	Kempling
Carney (Miss)	Gamble	Kilgour
Clark (Yellowhead)	Gass	Kristiansen
Cook	Gilchrist	Kushner
Corbett	Greenaway	Lawrence
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Gustafson	Lewis
Crosby (Halifax West)	Halliday	Lewycky
	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	MacDonald (Miss)
	Hargrave	MacKay
		Malone

Messrs.

Manly	Neil	Siddon
Mayer	Nickerson	Skelly
Mazankowski	Nystrom	Speyer
McCain	Oberle	Stewart
McDermid	Ogle	Taylor
McKinnon	Orlikow	Thacker
McMillan	Paproski	Thomson
Miller	Riis	Vankoughnet
Mitchell (Mrs.)	Rose	Waddell
Murphy	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)	Wise
		Wright
		Young—85.

● (1810)

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Madam Speaker: It being past six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.13 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 3, 1982

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN CHILD CARE TAX DEDUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity. The child care tax deduction of $1,000 for working mothers has not been adjusted since 1976, even though child care costs have soared to $2,500 a year in government-subsidized centres and even higher in the private sector. Given that child care costs are a legitimate business expense and should be treated as such for tax purposes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the $1,000 tax deduction limit for child care which working mothers can now claim be increased to reflect the legitimate costs of child care which are currently running on average at four times that amount.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIRPORTS

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would like to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that the Liberal government, under the able direction of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) and the hon. member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd), has now stated that it will sell only 30,000 of the 97,000 acres it expropriated for Mirabel International Airport and not 80,000 acres as indicated three weeks ago, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That congratulations be extended to the "speedy" Liberal government for keeping the farmers of this region in continued confusion and relentless frustration for "only" 12 years while it settled this issue.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING FOR NATIVE WOMEN'S FIGHT FOR JUSTICE AND EQUALITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, all sides of this House have recognized the blatant discrimination against native women in Canada and the urgent need for action to end it. Above all, native women need a strong organization of their own to represent their interests at local, provincial and national levels. A consultation process with the Native Citizen Directorate identified several areas for expansion of the native women's program, and a cabinet submission was to be made in early March. However, nothing has happened, and the Native Women's Association of Canada has not been able to obtain a meeting with the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) to discuss their needs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House instructs the Secretary of State to arrange an early meeting with the Native Women's Association of Canada in order to arrange an adequate funding program so that native women will have the means to fight for justice and equality.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

OPPOSITION TO DIVERSION OF EAST COAST FLIGHTS FROM DORVAL TO MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Halifax Board of Trade and other concerned organizations and residents in Atlantic Canada view with alarm the possibility that Air Canada and CP Air flights from Halifax destined to Montreal will be diverted from Dorval to Mirabel Airport. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

S.O. 43

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to reject and cancel the so-called "Minus 6" plan and any other plan promoted by Transport Canada that would divert east coast originating flights from Dorval to Mirabel Airport since such a diversion would cause grave hardship, increased cost and unfair disadvantages to airline users in and from Atlantic Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRADE

SUGGESTED ENCOURAGEMENT OF EXPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of great urgency concerning the economy of this once-strong trading nation. Whereas the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) has now publicly rejected the majority report of the House special committee inquiring into the formation of a national trading corporation and has, instead, joined with my party and the great majority of Canada's exporting business sector in opposing such a hybrid trading corporation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble):

That this House urge the adoption of policies favouring the expansion of our export trade by means of an encouragement of renewed investment in Canadian industry and an intensifying of the mandate of existing public agencies dedicated to the existence of Canada's trading community.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

• (1410)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA AND HONDURAS—PLIGHT OF FLOOD VICTIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The devastation caused by the recent floods in Nicaragua and Honduras has left thousands homeless and without food and clean water. Many roads and bridges have been washed away, and the risk of epidemics is high. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That Canada render to Nicaragua and Honduras all possible emergency assistance in this very grave situation, and that, in so doing, due consideration be given to the longer term development needs of these two countries.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

RESULTS OF POLL CONDUCTED IN EUROPEAN NATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the citizens of those countries attending the Versailles Summit this weekend were polled yesterday by the European publication "Paris Match", and whereas the results of this poll showed that Canada was chosen unanimously as the country whose people enjoy the best standard of living, and whereas all countries but Japan felt that Canadians are the people who inspire the greatest confidence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger):

That this House request that the members of the opposition be provided with a copy of these objective and unbiased polling results as published in "Paris Match", in order that they can familiarize themselves with world opinion—an opinion which ranks Canada and Canadians so highly.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES BROKERAGE FIRM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in a market release issued by Solomon Brothers of New York they make the following statement, "We have suspended research coverage of all Canadian oil firms. While we will continue to survey developments 'north of the border' the Canadian federal government's energy policies make foreign investment in that nation's energy sector unwelcome and, in our opinion, unwise." In view of the comments by Solomon Brothers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone):

That this House condemn the government for creating an impression with a major brokerage house, indeed a brokerage house that acts as fiscal agent for the government in New York, that investment in Canada is unwise and unsafe.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR FINALIZATION OF NORTHLANDS AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the $155 million Federal-Provincial Manitoba Northlands Agreement expired one year ago, and since the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) has avoided meeting with the provincial minister, Mr. Jay Cowan, in spite of the province's repeated request that negotiations be finalized and in spite of the federal minister's promise to meet in late April or early May, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That the minister responsible for the Northlands Agreement, with total cabinet approval, finalize an agreement with Manitoba which will include the provision of sufficient federal funds for northern programs and development.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

METRIC CONVERSION

SHIPBUILDING BLUEPRINTS SUBMITTED IN IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that shipbuilders at the Port Weller drydocks went to great expense to convert from imperial to metric measurement only to receive a Canadian government icebreaker contract, dated September, 1981, with the blueprints entirely in feet and inches, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the government allow all industries to operate in the system of measurement in which they feel most comfortable and that the government cease and desist from mandatory metric imposition which is obviously becoming ridiculous.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

DISASTERS

REPAIR OF FRASER RIVER RAILWAY SPAN IN NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I wish to present a motion on a very urgent and pressing matter concerning the fire that burned the railway bridge over the Fraser River in New Westminster. In view of the fact the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) told me that he would take urgent action to ensure that the span would be opened very, very soon, and that such action, I am afraid, has not yet been taken, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Public Works be encouraged to act today to ensure that the span on the railway bridge over the Fraser River be opened to allow shipping through.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN CENTRAL BANK RATE—QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, I am sure, is aware that the bank rate has just been set at 15 7/8 per cent, up about .5 per cent from last week. This is bound to lead to an increase in mortgage and other interest rates, and is clearly directly related to the weakness in the Canadian dollar in the past few days. I have recommended to the government in the past a number of policy changes it could make which would take pressure off the dollar and lower interest rates. Is the government considering any further policy changes in its budget, and energy and foreign investment policies which will result in less pressure on the dollar and consequently lower interest rates in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it is a fact that the U.S. dollar has appreciated against most major currencies; the Canadian dollar is certainly not an exception. If there are further policy changes to be announced, they will be announced in due course and in the proper way.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I did not ask about the dollar. I asked about interest rates which are causing a lot of pain in this country.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR EASEMENT OF PRESSURE ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the weak Canadian dollar represents the verdict of the world marketplace that Canadian policies are not working. Liberal policies—well supported by the NDP which has time and again called for policies which would result in a lower Canadian dollar—are leading to a higher interest rate and a great deal of pain in the country. I can only remind the minister that bankruptcies here are 2.5 times those in the United States. What action is the government proposing to take to ease the pressure on interest rates and take the pressure off the dollar so that the home owners, farmers, small-businessmen, and manufacturers who are being hurt by these interest rates will feel less pain?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the over-all thrust of the budget which the hon. member so strongly opposes is to reduce pressure on both interest rates and the rate of inflation. I notice my friend is simply asking questions, so he obviously has no answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: If he is right about the verdict of the world, then it applies as well to the yen and the mark, and he has nothing to say about that.

Mr. Wilson: I want to remind the minister that we have put forward answers to him and to the Minister of Finance. They have been totally ignored, and the result is a weaker dollar and higher interest rates for all Canadians.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will put the question to the minister one more time. Is the government proposing to do anything about this problem in the marketplace and show some recognition of the fact that the high government deficit, which the Minister of Finance referred to on Monday evening, is causing high interest rates and higher unemployment? Does the minister have any answers or any response to the proposals we have put forward?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my friend has often spoken in opposition to the budget, the very basic thrust of which is to reduce the upward trend of that deficit which he says is so serious. But I am informed that his leader said in Montreal the other day that they have no alternatives. No wonder my friend is doing nothing more than asking these empty questions.

* * *

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REDUCE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for housing who will be aware that approximately 700,000 mortgages will be up for renewal between now and the end of the year, at interest rates of 18 per cent or 19 per cent if today's figures are any indication. On a $40,000 mortgage that will mean an increase in monthly payments of something between $200 and $250, an amount which very few people can afford. However, they could be helped if mortgage rates come down. What proposals has the minister responsible for housing and high mortgage rates made to the Minister of Finance in order to get him to bring down interest rates?

• (1420)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to report to the hon. member that the government's plan, that is, the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan, which was supported by the hon. member herself and her party, is in place. The plan provides for mortgage deferral. This is the equivalent of deferring interest rates up to 3 per cent or 4 per cent, or a grant of up to $3,000. In the last 30 days approximately 1,200 families have applied for and successfully used this plan. That was the response of the government which said that on the one hand we must take into account the first question raised this afternoon, namely, that the government must be diligent and attempt to keep expenses down, and we must be sensible with expenditures. We have to balance that on the other hand with our responsibility to be sensitive to those people who are finding things very difficult. The formula in that plan is to offer assistance to Canadians who have to pay a disproportionate amount of their income on mortgage renewals. This plan is in place for those Canadians who have to pay more than 30 per cent of their income for principal, interest and taxes when renewing mortgages. It is operative, and I am glad to have had the support of the hon. member.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I am sure that even the minister will realize that plan is not bringing mortgage rates down. They have gone up today as a result of the increase in the interest rate.

CONCERN OF WOMEN HOME OWNERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): My supplementary question is for the same minister. Yesterday I met with a group of women here in the House of Commons who are taking adult retraining courses. The very first question and concern they raised with me was the matter of mortgage renewals and their fear that they may lose their homes. What would the minister have said to that group of women if they had had the opportunity to pose their question to him?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, first I would have brought to their attention my answer to the first question. The government offers a plan through the local CMHC offices to assist people who are adversely impacted by high interest rates when renewing their mortgages. The plan attempts to assist those people who are most seriously affected by high interest rates when renewing their mortgages. That is the advice I would give to those people and to all other Canadians who find themselves in a similar position. First, they should inquire whether the assistance under that plan is available to them.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BUSINESS BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister and former minister of finance. Today we have learned that the prime rate has jumped again, and the banks will now likely set a rate for preferred customers of 17.5 per cent once again. Under the present interest rate policy the forecast is that, at a minimum, something like 10,000 businesses will go bankrupt this year, and this means that thousands more Canadians will lose their jobs. Why does the government stand back and do nothing in the face of this human and economic disaster?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the government's economic policies have been announced by the Minister of Finance, as the House is no doubt aware. Obviously, if we want to keep interest rates here in Canada at a level that is acceptable to Canadians, we must make sure that inflation goes down, and that is what the government is trying to achieve at this time. Of course, the discussions taking place in Versailles tomorrow and during the weekend will certainly be very important as far as Canada's economic policies are concerned, and when he returns to Canada, the Minister of Finance will be able to announce whether any change in policy is advisable.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, no one but a Liberal cabinet minister, not even the backbenchers, believes that high interest rates are helping against inflation. Everyone in this country knows that high interest rates are driving inflation up, not bringing it down. The Government of Canada has not dealt with the structural causes of inflation. It continues to use quick fixes, for instance, the borrowing the other day of $750 million once more to prop up the dollar artificially.

• (1425)

I ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government will now commit itself to putting an end to this disastrous spending of the taxpayers' money on an artificial solution, put an end to quick fixes, and bring in a budget before the end of June which will deal with the serious structural problems in the Canadian economy, and which will put particular emphasis on job creation in the manufacturing sector.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the government has many programs in place which are designed to help the manufacturing sector. I think that my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has made many statements about that.

As has been said by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, all nations of the western world are faced with some very difficult situations. We hope that the consultations which are shortly to take place in Versailles will create a better climate so that the economies of these nations will be able to move in the direction that everyone wishes for all of us.

Mr. Broadbent: I guess it is because of all the actions of the Liberal government that there has been a loss of 100,000 jobs since last August in the minister's home province of Quebec alone. That is the kind of action we see from the Liberal government.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since we could not get a clear answer from the Minister of Finance on this question yesterday, will the Acting Prime Minister at least deal in a negative answer? Will he tell the House that there will not be a budget produced before the end of June?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the Minister of Finance had to tell the hon. member yesterday.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a series of questions to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The minister will be familiar by now with the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which was tabled in the House a couple of days ago, which, incidentally, was unanimously endorsed by all parties represented in the standing committee, and which lays out evidence which shows the minister being seriously negligent in his discharging of trust responsibility to native people. It shows that in most cases it is the minister's bureaucracy that is the only thing standing in the way of native people achieving their self-determination.

Is the minister prepared to tell the House and the native people of Canada when he will meet the standing committee and the native people to lay before us a serious program for action which will alleviate some of these serious problems that were identified in the report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, without going into the details of how that committee came to its conclusion—having talked to some of my own backbenchers with reference to certain undertakings the hon. member himself gave and then called a meeting on Monday morning—I just want to indicate that I have gone before the standing committee on many occasions, as the hon. member knows. I have made myself available on numerous occasions for all sorts of questions. I intend to continue doing so. I do not believe there is any need for me to be defensive in terms of opening myself up to any type of cross-examination by the hon. member or anyone else who wants to undertake that in the committee.

Mr. Oberle: The minister implies in his answer that there was trickery involved in the committee meeting.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You said it.

EXPENDITURE OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUNDS—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, one of the recommendations in the report was that, because of the sometimes fraudulent and strange way that economic development dollars are being spent, particularly in the Pacific region, the minister should immediately appoint an independent inquiry to look into the affairs of the Pacific region, particularly the way that it disburses scarce economic development dollars. Is the minister prepared to tell us today whether he is inclined to appoint this independent inquiry immediately to look into these serious allegations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would not want to dignify the type of wild witch hunt of the nature that the hon. member is conducting. He used the term "fraudulent". If he has any evidence of any fraudulent behaviour on the part of any civil servants connected with my ministry in the west, instead of these obnoxious innuendoes, I think that every member in the House would be pleased if he would stand up to make his charge and then take the responsibility to make it stick.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SECRETARY OF TRADE FOR GREAT BRITAIN

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of Lord Cockfield, who is the Secretary of Trade for Great Britain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DELAY IN TABLING OF REPORT ON JAMES BAY AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. When will the minister report to the House as required by statute under the James Bay Agreement? The report was supposed to be tabled 30 days after January 31, but it is still not before us. Testimony before the committee indicated that nothing has been done since the last testimony before the committee a year ago. We want to know what the government is intending to do because there has also been testimony that there are still life-threatening situations in the James Bay area.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, with reference to the latter part of the hon. member's question, I have been in touch with both Billy Diamond and the Inuit leaders and I hope we will be able to announce the resolution of the James Bay report in terms of commitments by the government. I would anticipate that that would be very soon. I fully indicated in the House about a week ago that it would be soon, but I did tell the hon. member that I thought we would certainly have the matter completely resolved prior to the end of the month.

May I say that prior to yesterday, during the discussions with those leaders over many weeks, it was suggested from their point of view as well as ours that, as the whole question of the James Bay Agreement was being reviewed and corrective action would hopefully be taken by the government, it might be advisable to postpone the tabling of the report until the resolution of this matter. I think that at least the Inuit leaders preferred that course of action. That is the reason why there has been some delay, which I regret, but I hope to table it very soon.

QUERY RESPECTING REPORT OF INQUIRY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I suppose I should ask the Minister of Justice whether reports should be tabled as established under statute. Another inquiry has been called because of the work of the committee last year. That inquiry has been completed by the Minister of Justice. I believe it is in the hands of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has been there for a number of months. The whole inquiry is with regard to the James Bay region, but we still have not received any reports. I wonder when the minister will make that available to the House. The people up there deserve better treatment than they are getting.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave the correct information to the House that this report has been received and we have looked into the shortcomings of the implementation of the agreement. The government is determined to live up to its commitments. As the minister said, the final answer from the government will be coming out this month.

* * *

AIRPORTS

SALE OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL AND PICKERING

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. He will be familiar with one of the properties to which I will be referring. The Mirabel and Pickering properties which were expropriated for airports have been in a state of chaos for a period of 12 years and ten years respectively. The minister was formerly a member of a group called POP which fought the expropriation of the Pickering land.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fennell: During our seven months in office, we had already—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have a question? If so, I will recognize him. Otherwise, I will not, as this is not the time for speeches.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that there are 600 families—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I want to warn hon. members that when I ask them to stick to their questions, I do not want them to continue making speeches. I am speaking to this hon. member now. Would he please put his question?

Mr. Fennell: Would the minister state, because of the confusion, the exact amount of land the government intends to sell and whether the current farmers will be given the right of first refusal on this land? How much longer will the process of retrocession take?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the question. The hon. gentleman gives me the opportunity to congratulate him for his appointment as official opposition critic for public works. Mind you, that appointment was made nine months ago, and this is the first question that the hon. gentleman has asked—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: —but he has asked a question concerning a matter which has been of major concern to the Department of Public Works and the Government of Canada. During those nine months, the government, through the Mirabel Land Company, has been working with local officials in the Mirabel airport. We have come up with a formula and an offer has been made. It has been widely communicated. I would invite the hon. member to take a look at the press releases and the plan which is now available to the public.

TERMS AND TIMING OF SALE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, it took me nine months to find out who the minister was, because nothing was being done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: The minister refers to press releases. There are 600 people on the Mirabel property—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fennell: —who do not know how much land will be given up for sale. Who will have the option of buying it, and when will it be completed?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has really been serious in his investigation of these questions, I would invite him to look at the material made available at the press conference on Friday last. All of those matters have been detailed. They are all available. I am sure that the people in the area are better informed than is the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOLIDAYS ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADA DAY

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and relates to a very important upcoming date, that being July 1, Canada Day. We all refer to it as "Canada Day". Because of the historic developments this year in the patriation of the Constitution, and as we have our own flag and our own national anthem, I wonder whether the minister could advise the House and all Canadians concerning his disposition to take the necessary action to bring in appropriate legislation to change the name of Dominion Day in the future, and hopefully this year, so that it is officially and legally known as Canada Day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, in relation to the question, the hon. member may know that there is already a bill on the order paper which would provide that July 1 would become known as Canada Day. I have spoken with the House leader on this subject, and the government would be willing to co-operate in arranging for this bill to be passed in all stages during one day if the opposition were willing and prepared to undertake such co-operation. If such co-operation is forthcoming, then it would be quite possible for us, before July 1 in the year of the patriation of the Constitution, to establish Canada Day firmly in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FISHERIES

SHIPMENT OF CATCHES FROM VANCOUVER TO BELLINGHAM IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There are presently 400 unemployed shoreworkers in the groundfishing industry in British Columbia. At the same time fish caught by fishermen in British Columbia are being offloaded in Vancouver and shipped to Bellingham, Washington, for processing. Growing resentment would indicate that there may be some difficulties on the Vancouver waterfront and at the port of Vancouver. Is the minister aware of this action by Canadian fishermen, and is he willing to sit down with the companies to determine how those jobs which are needed in British Columbia can be kept there in the future and not be exported with raw materials?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Decisions affecting the groundfish processing plant were made after considerable reflection by at least one company. I am told that the Prince Rupert Co-operative decided to interrupt its activities in that field after trying to make it work in terms of volume and just finding that the market was not there to sustain it. I have not received representations of the type which would allow me to give a positive or a negative answer to the industry.

• (1440)

It is obvious that the groundfish industry on the west coast, because of the volume involved, is just not finding it, in the present circumstances and in the present market, a profitable operation to continue.

WEST COAST SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): The spokesman for B.C. Packers, Madam Speaker, which is the largest processing plant in British Columbia, has indicated there may not be a salmon fishery this year. The minister may be aware of that statement. What discussions has the minister had with B.C. Packers and others in the industry to ensure that there will be a salmon fishing industry in British Columbia? Will the minister take the kind of steps that the Kirby task force has taken for St. Anthony's on the east coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have to be extremely cautious in commenting on that question. The hon. member knows that, as usual, we are on the eve of very difficult negotiations on fish prices. I would be derelict in my duty if I were to appear to take a position on this issue at this time.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—INQUIRY WHETHER FUNDS WILL BE GRANTED AT PRIVILEGED RATES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. On May 26, the Quebec Farm Producers Union made representations to the Minister of Agriculture for the purpose of obtaining additional funds at preferential rates. Yesterday, the hon. member for Northumberland asked the minister, on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, whether he intended to provide for additional funds at a rate of 10 per cent. The minister did not answer the question. Therefore, in the interests of all Canadian farmers and, of course, the Quebec Farm Producers Union, I should like to know whether, today, the minister could give the House the assurance that he will ask the Minister of Finance for additional funds at preferential rates, as is being done in other sectors. That is the kind of answer farmers need.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon member is aware that some farmers in his part of Canada, Quebec, La Belle Province, and in other parts of the country, receive money interest free on advance payments for storable crops for the lifetime of the storability. Last year nearly $500 million was advanced to farmers interest free.

When the farmers presented their brief to the different members of the cabinet, including myself and the Minister of Finance, they suggested a 10 per cent interest rate. We asked at that time if this was for all farmers, special groups of farmers, young farmers, or farmers in more financial difficulty. We did not receive an answer from them. We are exploring all avenues of how we can raise more money for the Farm Credit Corporation. We are following the suggestion that some of the farmers made, some of the members of the farm groups made, Madam Speaker, on an agri-bond type of operation, giving special treatment for investing in the Farm Credit Corporation as far as tax benefits are concerned. We will be making representations shortly, as I said yesterday, to the Minister of Finance and my government colleagues.

[Translation]

STABILIZATION OF FARM PRODUCT PRICES—INQUIRY WHETHER NEW FORMULA BASED ON PRODUCTION COSTS WILL BE APPLIED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. I am not convinced that farmers will get any reassurance out of the minister's reply. The minister can talk all he wants about what happened in the past, but the fact remains that since May 26, the Farm Producers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have been asking the minister to take additional action in view of the current situation. In the same request, the Quebec Farm Producers Union asked to have the Price Stabilization Board assess production costs, a major change that will be more satisfactory considering the present circumstances. Could the minister, and I am still speaking on behalf of the farmers, give us the assurance that he will advise the Union and the Federation that he is willing to approve a new assessment based on production costs as far as the price stabilization program for agricultural products is concerned?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, what the hon. member is asking me to do is to make a recommendation to Parliament. He does know that we do have different stabilization programs, but he is asking me to compensate farmers when the marketplace does not give a proper return to them. We think there are different ways and means of obtaining that proper return that gives them a decent profit for their productivity. We will be proposing that shortly. I said that to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when they were here, that there were ways of compensating farmers and making sure that they get proper compensation, other than using the treasury of the provinces or the treasury of the federal Government of Canada to do that. There are other ways of doing that.

The hon. member knows very well what I mean, because there are some farm producers in Canada who are not asking for that kind of assistance. A big percentage are not asking for that kind of assistance that he is talking about because they have looked after themselves pretty darn well by taking advantage of the legislation provided by them by the most democratic institutions in the world, the provincial legislatures and this House of Commons.

Mr. La Salle: Will you do it, yes or no?

Mr. Whelan: He says, "Will I provide that kind of thing?" If he was so interested, Madam Speaker, in doing what he says, why did his party hold the House in abeyance for three weeks while that legislation was ready to pass?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSING

RENEWAL OF MORTGAGES ON UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATED HOUSES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, on two earlier occasions I have directed questions to the minister responsible for housing in respect to the CMHC commitment to guarantee loans for houses with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. It is still being reported that such people are having difficulties in some locations in Canada in renewing their mortgages. Would the minister now assure all financial institutions engaged in the lending of money for mortgage purposes that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will indeed guarantee any mortgage application for renewal with any individual financing a mortgage?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have answered that question on two previous occasions. My answer today is the same. It is the policy of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the National Housing Act to provide mortgage insurance to those companies that qualify under the act for mortgage insurance. Nothing has changed. The corporation indeed is providing insurance for those people who qualify for renewals of mortgages even though they have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes.

REQUEST THAT MORTGAGE RENEWAL PROGRAM BE PUBLICIZED

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): I appreciate the minister's reassurance of the government's position in this regard. But in spite of the fact that tens of millions of dollars are being spent on advertising for other programs, it apparently has not been communicated to the financial institutions engaged in the mortgage business that indeed any application for a renewal for a UFFI insulated home will in fact be guaranteed by CMHC. Will the minister take the necessary steps to extend the communication not only to members of this House but to the general public who may need a mortgage, and to all of those engaged in the mortgage business?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, after questions were raised by the hon. gentleman previously, the corporation took steps to let the lending fraternity know. It was at my direction that head offices of all the lending companies were asked to notify all of the branch offices, so that there would be a widespread distribution of this information. If there is any difficulty, if the hon. gentleman has any specific cases, or if any members have difficulties—and some have already brought some to my attention—I would be pleased to respond. But I certainly do not think it warrants the expenditure of millions of dollars in advertisements, as the hon. gentleman would ask us to do now, especially in the light of the fact that all we get is criticism when we attempt to advertise good programs of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF ADMISSION TO UNITED STATES OF TORONTO SUPPORTER OF DISARMAMENT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mrs. Kay MacPherson, who stood as the NDP candidate in my constituency of York East in the past three federal elections, has been refused entry into the United States to attend a United Nations conference on disarmament, simply because she has been an outstanding proponent of peace and disarmament. This is apparently an example of the U.S. government enforcing the provisions of the McCarran Walter Act to exclude undesirable persons.

Has the United States government advised the Canadian government that any Canadians who stand for disarmament and peace and who wish to attend this conference will be similarly excluded, and will this also cover Members of Parliament, such as myself, who plan to attend the UN conference in a couple of weeks in New York?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): I had the occasion to talk briefly with this lady yesterday evening and I told her that I was very surprised that this situation should have occurred. I have no further information about it. I will certainly ask for information and report to the House as soon as possible.

* * *

• (1450)

AGRICULTURE

BANKRUPTCY OF ECON CONSULTING GRAIN COMPANY—REQUEST FOR COMMISSION INVESTIGATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture concerning the bankruptcy of Econ Consulting, a Winnipeg grain company which owes its creditors $4.3 million. On May 11 I asked the minister for a judicial inquiry into Econ, but the minister said he preferred to wait until the current investigations are complete. Since that time the commissioner for the Canadian Grain Commission has told the Standing Committee on Agriculture that he is making no specific Econ investigations.

Will the minister tell the House why the commission is not investigating Econ, since the agency is responsible for the private grain trade and has the necessary legal powers to do so?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that bankruptcy proceedings with respect to Econ are going on at the present time. He knows the legal obligations both sides have. We have received presentations from both sides. I am satisfied that all proper procedures are being followed at this time, and I think it would be improper to carry on the kind of investigation the hon. member is talking about at this time before the bankruptcy problem is settled.

REQUEST THAT JUDICIAL INQUIRY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind that in addition to Econ two other grain companies have gone bankrupt in recent months and that the RCMP have charges pending against at least four more grain companies in Manitoba, will the minister address this serious problem which faces the entire private grain industry—not just Econ—by ordering a judicial inquiry to do the job the grain commission is neglecting to do?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member says the Canadian Grain Commission is neglecting to do its job. In relation to the obligations vested in the commission by legislation, I think it is doing a proper job. Until someone can prove otherwise, I will remain of that opinion.

The hon. member talks about bankruptcies. A comparison between the number of bankruptcies in other businesses in Canada and the small number of bankruptcies among grain operating businesses shows they must be doing a pretty darned good job. The hon. member knows as well as I do that 80 per cent to 90 per cent of grain companies are in that category, and we do not have to worry about their going bankrupt. There are some about which there might be some concern, and from time to time the Grain Commission audits the books of some companies. The hon. member is fully aware of that also. Some suggest we should have an army of auditors inspecting books, as is done in police states; I do not intend to have that.

* * *

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

ABDUCTION OF TORONTO BUSINESSMAN TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of Justice is also in relation to Canada-U.S. relations. The minister will know that in September, 1981, a Toronto businessman, Sidney Jaffé, was kidnapped by bounty hunters and, in complicity with Florida state officials, forcibly removed from Canada to face prosecution in that state. It has been eight months since that outrageous invasion of Canadian sovereignty, and Mr. Jaffe still sits in a Florida jail. The bounty hunters remain unextradited. I know the minister has made representations to William French Smith, the Attorney General of the United States, on the matter. What progress has he made?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I share the concern of the hon. member, and I put this question to Mr. Smith when I had a visit with him not long ago. I am very unhappy that U.S. authorities are not proceeding faster than they are because Mr. Jaffé was a Canadian citizen in Canada when he was taken by force to the United States. I think that should not have occurred but, unfortunately, I have not received any firm answer from Mr. Smith. My department has been working on this, as has the Department of External Affairs but, unfortunately, we cannot report progress at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Attorney General's name is Mr. Smith, William French Smith.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister has pointed out to American officials that the actions which have been taken in this instance are similar to what they would be if Canada were to send out a posse to pick up, say, Hal Banks in the United States, or John C. Doyle from another jurisdiction. I simply want to ask the minister whether he intends to follow this up strenuously in terms of extraditing these people who shanghaied a Canadian citizen out of our country, and I wonder whether the government is considering making a habeas corpus application on behalf of Mr. Jaffé.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I will take notice of the procedure suggested by the hon. member. If it is possible, we might do just that, but I am not sure we can.

* * *

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO FAILURE OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INCORPORATED

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I also have a brief question for the Minister of Justice. He will recall that last March I raised the question of an inquiry under the Department of Justice Act, Section 4, into the Consolidated Computers debacle which cost Canadian taxpayers well over $100 million. Subsequently I debated the matter in the House, and I asked the minister informally what was going on. I wonder if he can now give us a report on what his officials have found under that section and, hopefully, assure us that there will be a proper departmental or judicial inquiry into this so that someone will be held accountable for this monumental waste of taxpayers' money.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I am not in a position to report progress at this time, but I am getting a bit impatient.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION URGING INQUIRY INTO ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and it is supplementary to that posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River.

If I heard the minister correctly, he characterized as obnoxious the unanimous recommendation of a standing committee of this House which called for a specific inquiry into the administration of economic development funds in the British Columbia region. Does the minister intend to act on that unanimous request by a standing committee of this House for a specific inquiry into the administration of economic development funds in the British Columbia region of his department?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition should examine my remarks. I do not call the recommendations of the committee obnoxious. I called the suggestions and implications of the hon. member more than obnoxious.

I repeat to the Leader of the Opposition that I may have agreed and the government may have agreed to the tabling of that report, but that in no way carries with it any implication that we agree with all the contents of it. That is obvious.

Second, I repeat that no matter what is the sense of values of the Leader of the Opposition in this particular situation, I have not the slightest intention of mounting some type of judicial inquiry into the alleged misbehaviour of certain officials, who cannot speak for themselves in this House and cannot defend themselves against wide generalizations and accusations of some type of fraud. I think that would be obnoxious, and I would expect any Member of Parliament who has one iota of concern for civil liberties in this country would object very strongly to that. If the hon. member or the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make some substantive charge against the conduct of certain of my officials, then I am prepared to consider it; otherwise, it is entirely out of the question, as far as I am concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to compare my standards with the minister's standards any day of the week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let us be very clear about this. We are dealing here with the unanimous report of a standing committee of the House of Commons, including a recommendation agreed to by Liberal Members of Parliament.

Mr. Beatty: Liberal majority.

Mr. Clark: That recommendation, among other things, asked for a public inquiry which would allow those very public servants to explain themselves and, if necessary, defend themselves before a public inquiry. Do I understand that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is denying that right to public servants, is denying action on the unanimous recommendation of a standing committee, and is denying the people of Canada the opportunity to have an impartial study into the activities of the economic development fund of his department in the Pacific region? Is he saying absolutely no to that kind of inquiry asked for by an all-party committee in this House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I will have to examine the "blues". The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seems to be shifting ground from question to question. I take it now he is talking about some type of study. I am of course prepared to undertake that. If he is talking about an inquiry of some kind, would he specify, or if he is backing up his own member who was talking about a judicial inquiry, would he back that up? In other words, instead of being indefinite and just making allegations of some kind, would the Leader of the Opposition accept his responsibility and say specifically what it is he is recommending?

• (1500)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER READ REPORT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the minister read the report signed by the Liberal Members of Parliament and signed unanimously by Members of Parliament from all parties who served on that committee, which recommends that there be a specific inquiry into the administration of economic development funds by his department in the British Columbia region? Will he also agree to have that specific inquiry into that specific matter which was recommended specifically by that all-party committee, and which was recommended unanimously?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition keeps talking about the all-party unanimous recommendation. As I understand the matter as it was related to me by my parliamentary secretary, some undertaking was given to him as a member of the committee—and that is one Liberal member of the committee—that if an agreement was made for the standing committee to meet on a Monday morning—which is most unusual—there would be no substantive votes taken at that time. He agreed to that, only to find out that the agreement was not kept.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If that is the kind of activity that would lead to some type of substantive unanimous approval, then the Leader of the Opposition has a much different set of values than I do.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION BE IMPLEMENTED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I regret having to ask this question again. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, a Liberal, was, I believe, a member of that committee, and the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior was a member of the committee and, as I understand it, their names are appended to the unanimous report which contains that recommendation.

May I ask the minister again, very simply, if he will have that inquiry that is specifically asked for into the administration of economic development funds in the British Columbia region, or will he not? Is he going to honour the recommendation of the standing committee, or is he not going to honour it?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I consider that that obviously warrants being looked into. I will look into the observations contained in the report to find out whether there is any substance to them at all. I would naturally do that in any circumstances, as would any minister. If that is what the Leader of the Opposition at last wishes to clarify to the House as what he means by an inquiry, of course I will do that, Madam Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill C-114, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 2), without amendment.

* * *

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

June 3, 1982

Madam:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor

General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 3rd day of June, 1982, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Jacques Noiseux,
for Edmond Joly de Lotbinière Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, June 2, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I should like to ask the government House leader to give the House some indication of the business of the House for tomorrow and for as much of next week as possible.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-115, the Occupational Training Act, and we hope to get second reading before the end of the day. If not, in any case if we get an agreement on Bill C-37 which is the bill for Canada Day on July 1, I would be willing to call it as the first item of business and then deal with the other bill. We could dispose of Bill C-37 very quickly. If we fail to get agreement on Bill C-37 tomorrow, then the first item of business would be Bill C-115, followed by Bill C-37.

[Translation]

Next week, the business of the House will be concerned almost exclusively with the report stage and third reading of energy bills, Madam Speaker, and, unless otherwise indicated, these energy bills will be considered in the following sequence: C-103, C-104 and C-108, and that will be on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Point of Order—Mr. Hawkes

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. OBERLE—ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN STANDING COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I beg your indulgence. I was tempted to raise this question of privilege a couple of days ago when, for the first time, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) asserted that in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development certain irregularities were indulged in. Today in question period the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) alluded to the fact that certain irregularities took place in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the passing and production of the reports which were laid before the House. Everyone knows that the make-up of the committee is—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member tell me what the question of privilege is about, because I am afraid he is now discussing things that took palce in committees? Unless these things are reported to the House they cannot be discussed in the House. At any rate, anything that takes place in committees should be dealt with in those committees and certainly cannot constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been reported to the House. Both the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have cast a shadow on the validity of this report by saying that this party, and this member in particular, used certain techniques, which were described by the President of the Privy Council as trickery, to achieve this report. Everyone knows that the committee is made up of members of all parties, that the governing party has a majority in committees and that committees cannot pass anything unless at least some government members are present for the passage of whatever the committees do.

I feel that my privilege and the privilege of all members is offended when committees report to the House and ministers of the Crown use language such as was used in the question period today—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This clearly is not a question of privilege and cannot be brought up at this time nor under this guise.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HAWKES—BILL C-103—SUGGESTED ERROR RESPECTING REPORT STAGE MOTIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, could I bring to your attention Motion No. 9 on page x on today's Order Paper and Notices. Motion no. 9 stands in my name but I think there must be some mistake. I did move ten motions and there are 11 on the Order Paper but all 11 appear in my name. I think the error is in relation to Motion No. 9, which I suspect was moved by a member of the New Democratic Party as it is similar to a motion moved in committee. I bring that to your attention and to the attention of the House.

Madam Speaker: I am sure that the officiers of the Table will look at that and make the necessary correction.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY LEGISLATION

PRESENTATION OF EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the eighth and final report of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

PETITIONS

USE OF METRIC SYSTEM AT LIVESTOCK AUCTIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 140 citizens in central Alberta, is to register concern over the use of the metric system in auction markets and other bid-buying operations in livestock sales.

The nature of this petition is to request that the government implement the use of the metric system in auction markets and other bid-buying operations no earlier than January 1, 1986, but preferably that the system not be implemented until agents of the federal government are able to establish that the use of the metric system is intuitive with the majority of buyers' and sellers' language as an expression of value.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the powers of your office to allow for discussion and referral to committee as soon as possible.

• (1510)

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of the constituents of Crowfoot. The petition is signed by approximately 950 citizens and is to distinguish the unique difference which exists between auctioning or bid buying and that of fixed-price buying when it affects the change of nomenclature and units of measure. The petition asks the government to recognize that the understanding of value and submission of bid must be intuitive to the auction system, and that an early change to metric, before the language of metric is clearly understood, will disrupt thousands of auction markets across Canada and that a cautious bid by a buyer could result in the loss of thousands of dollars of income for individual ranchers.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that you will find their petition in order and that the appropriate ministers of the Crown will provide an opportunity for this matter to be discussed in the appropriate committee.

MR. TAYLOR—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I take great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some 959 Canadians living in my constituency in Alberta. The petition requests that capital punishment be reinstated for deliberately planned murder. Our society is built on crime being punished. When the ultimate crime, namely murder, occurs, then the ultimate punishment, namely death, should be enacted. Some of my petitioners come from the Standard, Alberta area, where a beautiful young girl, Kelly Cook, was brutally murdered, and some are from the High River-Okotoks area, where two young women were murdered and their remains burned. A person who deliberately plans and executes the murder of another human being has no right to live.

My petitioners pray that the government will reflect the thinking of the majority of the people of Canada and reinstate capital punishment for murder.

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from citizens of the City of Toronto requesting Parliament to direct the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to refuse to allow the testing of Cruise missiles on Canadian soil.

MR. ROSE—PRODUCTION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS COMPONENTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition on behalf of 940 residents of my riding requesting that our government take measures to halt the production of nuclear weapon components in Canada, and that the government instruct its representatives at the upcoming United Nations Special Session on Disarmament to take an active role in initiating discussions to bring about, hopefully, a global freeze on the production, testing and deployment of nuclear weapons.

MR. KILGOUR—PROVISIONS OF BILL C-10

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of members of the congregation of the German Zion Baptist Church in Edmonton who are very concerned about provisions of the proposed non-profit corporations act which was the subject of a unanimous resolution in this House yesterday. I ask on their behalf that the petition be presented to this chamber.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,854, 2,977 and 4,239.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE—ENTERTAINMENT AND HOSPITALITY

Question No. 2,854—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Privy Council Office under the Privy Council Office Program at page 32.25, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to entertainment and hospitality (a) how does the Privy Council Office explain the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what services does this entail (c) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000 (d) what was the name of each type of service (e) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts over $2,000, to whom was it paid (f) are guidelines used to determine when the Privy Council Office will pay for hospitality and, if so, what are they (g) of the $65,720 paid for hospitality, what percentage was principally used to entertain (i) foreign visitors (ii) Canadian businessmen (iii) provincial public servants (iv) federal public servants (v) ministerial exempt staff (vi) Members of Parliament (vii) Members of Provincial Parliaments, Legislative Assemblies and the National Assembly (viii) Canadian dignitaries, such as the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors General (ix) federal Crown corporation executives (x) provincial Crown corporation executives (xi) members of federal commissions, boards and councils (xii) any other categories?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): (a) In respect of entertainment and hospitality, a decrease of $13,328 was reported.

(b), (d), (f) Definitions and policies on hospitality are contained in chapter 360 of the Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual.

(c) Nil.

(e), (g) Records of hospitality payments are not maintained according to service or categories of individuals.

DIAND—MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 2,977—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development under the Northern Affairs Program at page 32.16, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to motion picture production and distribution (a) what was the title and total cost of each film produced in the fiscal year 1979-80 (b) at what audience was each film aimed (c) what cost recovery is anticipated from the distribution of all the films?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) "Opening of the Baker Lake Co-operative"; a 15 minute ¾" video documentary in Inuktitut produced by Nunatsiakmiut Communications Society of Frobisher Bay. Cost: $5,667; (b) audience, primarily Inuit; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

2. (a) "Canadian Reindeer Industry"; "Eskimo Dog—Qimmiq", two (approximately ½ hour each) 16 mm film documentaries produced through the NFB by Inuk Films, Yellowknife. Cost: $46,196; (b) audience: national and international; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

3. (a) "Canada's House of Commons", a 15 to 20 minute ¾" video documentary in Inuktitut produced by Nanatsiakmiut Communications Society of Frobisher Bay. Cost: $8,578; (b) Audience: primarily Inuit; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

4. (a) "Prince of Wales Northern Heritage Centre", a 15 minute ¾" video documentary in Inuktitut produced by Nanatsiakmiut Communications Society of Frobisher Bay. Cost: $5,000; (b) Audience: primarily Inuit; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

5. (a) "Pond Inlet Community Television Project", a ¾" video documentary in Inuktitut (approximately ½ hour) produced by Eric Tagoona. Cost: $2,200; (b) Audience: primarily Inuit; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

6. (a) "Inuit Traditional Games", a ½ hour 16 mm documentary produced through the NFB by Ken Buck. Cost: no invoices received in 1979-80; (b) Audience: national and international; (c) no distribution proceeds are expected as these films are made available to groups for education-information purposes.

The balance is for scripts for slide presentations, $6,208; technical and training services to PIC TV and Nunatsiakmiut Program, $18,617; translation and production of slides and tapes on forest fire control into three languages, $3,646.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 4,239—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, what amount was paid in family allowances in the Province of Quebec?

2. Do the figures differ from amounts calculated on the basis of federal family allowance rates and, if so, what is the difference and how is it adjusted?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The amount of federal family allowances paid in the Province of Quebec in the past five years is as follows:

Order Paper Questions

(in millions of dollars)

1977	$555.8
1978	$600.3
1979	$446.9
1980	$467.1
1981	$493.7

2. Yes, the figures differ from amounts calculated on the basis of federal family allowances rates and the estimated differences for the years in question are as follows:

(in millions of dollars)

1977	$ 4.4
1978	$ 22.4
1979	$ 6.0
1980	$ 3.9
1981	$ 14.2

In 1977, 1978 and 1979, the amount paid to beneficiaries in the Province of Quebec was greater than what would have been paid had the federal rate been used. In 1980 and 1981, the amount paid was less than the amount that would have been paid had the federal rate been used.

In the choice of a provincial family allowance rate configuration, payments over a four-year accounting period are taken into consideration. The most recent four-year period was 1978 to 1981. Rates are selected so as to minimize the difference between payments made under a provincial configuration and what would have been paid had the federal family allowance rate been applicable.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would take note of question No. 2,596 I placed on the Order Paper 363 days ago. It is a simple question, and I understand the answer has been prepared for several months but the minister is unwilling to table it in the House. Would the parliamentary secretary take this up with the Department of National Defence and report back, please?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into this matter on behalf of the hon. member.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL CONSUMPTION STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-107, respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

That Bill C-107, an act respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards, be amended in Clause 11 by striking out lines 35 to 42 at page 7 and lines 1 to 10 at page 8.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 185)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse	Heap	Miller
Anguish	Hovdebo	Ogle
Benjamin	Jewett (Miss)	Orlikow
Blackburn	Keeper	Rose
Blaikie	Kristiansen	Sargeant
Deans	Lewycky	Skelly
Fulton	Manly	Waddell—21.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Blais
Andre	Beatty	Blenkarn
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Bloomfield
Bachand	Bégin (Miss)	Bockstael
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Berger	Bosley
		Bossy
		Breau

Messrs.

Bujold	Gendron	MacLaren
Bussières	Gimaïel	MacLellan
Campbell (LaSalle)	Gingras	Malépart
Campbell (Cardigan)	Gourde (Lévis)	Malone
Cardiff	Gray	Maltais
Carney (Miss)	Guilbault	Marceau
Chrétien	Gurbin	Massé
Clark (Yellowhead)	Gustafson	Masters
Collenette	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	Mayer
Comtois	Hargrave	Mazankowski
Cook	Harquail	McCain
Corbin	Hawkes	McKinnon
Corriveau	Henderson	Munro (Hamilton East)
Cosgrove	Herbert	Murta
Côté (Mrs.)	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Neil
Cousineau	Hnatyshyn	Nicholson (Miss)
Crombie	Hopkins	Nowlan
Crosby (Halifax West)	Howie	Oberle
Crouse	Irwin	Olivier
Cullen	Isabelle	Ostiguy
Cyr	Jarvis	Ouellet
Daudlin	Jelinek	Parent
Dawson	Johnston	Patterson
De Bané	Joyal	Pelletier
de Corneille	Kaplan	Pepin
Demers	Kelly	Peterson
Deniger	Kempling	Pinard
Desmarais	Killens (Mrs.)	Prud'homme
Dingwall	Kushner	Regan
Dinsdale	Lachance	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Lajoie	Rompkey
Dubois	Lalonde	Rooney
Duclos	Lambert	Rossi
Dupont	Lamontagne	Roy
Dupras	Landers	Savard
Epp	Lang	Schellenberger
Erola (Mrs.)	Laniel	Schroder
Ethier	Lapierre	Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)
Evans	Lapointe (Charlevoix)	Simmons
Fennell	Lapointe (Beauce)	Smith
Ferguson	La Salle	Taylor
Fisher	Lawrence	Tessier
Fleming	LeBlanc	Thacker
Flis	Leduc	Tobin
Forrestall	Lefebvre	Tousignant
Foster	Lewis	Turner
Fox	Lumley	Veillette
Francis	MacBain	Watson
Fretz	MacDonald (Miss)	Whelan
Frith	Mackasey	Wilson
Gass		Wright
Gauthier		Yanakis
		Yurko—172.

• (1530)

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

[English]

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I will not take up too much time of the House since this bill is probably one of the most useless pieces of legislation that has come before Parliament, certainly in the years that I have been here. One must wonder why it was part of the energy package in the first place because it is not certain, when reading the legislation, what it will, in fact, do. I will expand on that later. I will quote one sentence stated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) just a month ago, on April 20, during second reading in the House. He said, "This legislation, the Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act, was first promised in 1976". In 1976, Mr. Speaker! Does the minister not know that the situation has changed considerably since that time? Not only is this piece of legislation obsolete, it was not necessary in the first place. If the government was serious about creating energy fuel consumption, it would not be creating additional regulations at a time when the automobile industry is facing huge unemployment in the country.

May I say at the outset that if the government was indeed serious about further reducing the use of conventional energy, it would then encourage, through any number of incentives, the use of alternate fuels such as propane or compressed natural gas. Those are the steps that are needed by the industry. We know that this is not what the government is doing with this piece of legislation, or indeed with any other piece of legislation that is either before the House now or being contemplated by the government. The industry does not need Bill C-107, which is obsolete, unnecessary and in fact damaging, not only to the automotive industry but to the whole economy of Canada.

With respect to the automotive industry, surely this is not the time to burden further the domestic automotive industry. Instead, the government should act on the serious damage that Japanese automobile imports, for example, have inflicted on our economy if it wants to help the industry. I am certainly not a protectionist by heart, but under these difficult and unusual circumstances I believe the government should be taking a tougher stand with respect to imposing Canadian content regulations of offshore imports so that jobs would be created in Canada. The government has negotiated with the Japanese for two years and those negotiations have obviously failed. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) has accepted the fact himself just this week that negotiations are at an impasse. If his answer to that is those underhanded tactics in Vancouver which are taking place now and are creating further unemployment for Canadians, that is certainly not the step to take either.

If the government is serious about trying to help the industry, the second option is to create incentives for foreign investment in Canada. That is what is necessary to create jobs. One should know that there have already been 50,000 jobs lost in the automotive industry in Canada in the last two years. The situation is not getting any better at all, and here is a government coming up with a piece of legislation to put further controls, directives and regulations on an industry which is certainly already overburdened with regulations and other difficulties and is getting no support whatsoever from the Liberal administration here in Ottawa.

• (1540)

What Bill C-107 represents is not so much the Liberal government's commitment to energy self-sufficiency or its so-called made-in-Canada energy plan, whatever that is, because we know what is happening to its whole energy program, although we do not have to dwell on that today. The National Energy Program has been a total disaster. That has been evidenced by the fact that the minister himself had to come before the House just this week to announce some new emergency measures. In those announcements alone there is an admission by the government that the National Energy Program has been a total and absolute failure. But the Alsands project has collapsed as well. Because of the tremendous increase in federal taxes, the price of gasoline has still increased, but not by the 18 cents a gallon which the Conservatives suggested in the last election campaign. Many think that the reason the Conservative government was defeated at that time was the 18 cents a gallon increase at the gas pumps. Canadians now know that the price of gasoline has, in fact, increased by nearly $1 a gallon since the Liberals made a promise that they would keep the price of gasoline to less than the promise made by the Conservatives.

What this bill, in fact, represents is the government's continued deception and use of empty legislation and empty promises devised to do nothing more than make the government appear to be doing something. That is exactly what it is. This is a piece of legislation that would give the government the right to implement restrictions on gas consumption by automobiles. But they are not telling us what those restrictions are in this piece of legislation. It is a vague piece of legislation which would create a threat to the domestic automotive industry without the automotive industry being able to plan ahead of time.

• (1550)

In his speech on second reading, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the industry needed "a long range plan to be able to plan ten years ahead". Well, certainly with this piece of legislation the industry cannot plan ten years ahead if this piece of legislation does not spell out exactly what the government intends to do next month, next year, two years from now or five years from now. So what is the minister talking about? It is empty rhetoric, that is what it is.

The reality of this legislation is that it is void of any content. Yet at the same time it empowers the minister to enact compulsory fuel consumption standards without indicating any specific details as to just what those standards will be or what the objectives of the government will be with regard to acceptable levels of fuel consumption.

The bill represents no digression from the government's reliance on those standards made compulsory in the United States, and it does not challenge their accuracy. That is a very important point to keep in mind, Mr. Speaker. The United States, which has compulsory regulations for gas consumption, has a standard to keep up, that is, 27.5 miles per gallon. We all know that the North American auto industry is governed by the United States and that the products are designed in the United States. The industry in the United States and in Canada is far surpassing the regulations imposed in the United States of 27.5 miles per gallon. Most domestic automobiles now get over 30 miles per gallon and some as much as 40 miles per gallon. So why, Mr. Speaker, are we looking at this piece of legislation today, why was it included in the omnibus bill in the first place?

I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that the minister said that this legislation has been in the works since 1976. It is just giving some bureaucrats in their ivory towers who know absolutely nothing about the automotive industry, and also obviously know nothing about the energy situation, something to put together, to give them the job of creating an extra piece of legislation.

This bill is not helping the energy situation, it is harming the automotive industry and it is not assisting Canadians in any way whatsoever. If fact, the minister has in mind regulations of a new type in this piece of legislation. I believe that these regulations should be spelled out before any such legislation is passed by the House. That is exactly the point I am trying to make, that we cannot trust this government, we cannot allow it the opportunity to do to the automotive industry, by fuel consumption regulations that might be unrealistic, what this government has done to the energy industry with the National Energy Program. I do not want to dwell on the disaster that the National Energy Program has caused to the economy for all Canadians.

In fact, the minister has in mind enacting standards that are already being met and surpassed. It would amount to nothing more than demanding, for example, that vehicles come equipped with safety belts, a feature that is already compulsory; in other words, reinventing the wheel, a waste of the time of Parliament.

I would like to take a look briefly, Mr. Speaker, at the practicality of this legislation. In 1976, when this legislation was put together, Canada implemented voluntary fuel efficiency standards for automobiles. That, Mr. Speaker, was in the post-OPEC oil embargo days. It is very important to keep that in mind. That was at a time of fuel shortages and at a time when North Americans were just beginning to swallow the hard medicine that fuel prices were about to increase dramatically. It was a time when energy conservation was fast becoming one of the primary objectives of economic planning. In that same year the government promised to bring forward legislation that would put into law those voluntary fuel efficiency standards that I have just mentioned. When one looks at this bill, Mr. Speaker, it would almost appear that its introduction now is nothing more than desk cleaning. The bill is empty. It does not deal with the very significant changes that have taken place in the automobile industry since 1976, nor with the vast changes that have taken place in the energy situation since that time.

I would suspect, notwithstanding the fact that most Canadians are wise to the methods of this government, and that they will be wise to their methods when the next federal election takes place as well, that one of the reasons the government has not been motivated to pass those fuel consumption standards that it promised in 1976 is simply that the Americans had already beaten them to it, just like interest rates. We are well aware of the Liberal preference to have our policies determined in Washington. At the same time, I do not mean to underestimate the importance to the federal government of a matter such as this, they having already sold out our automotive industry. Given the size of our automotive market relative to that of the United States, regulations such as these would be a little like the tail wagging the dog. That, Mr. Speaker, is another reason why I question the minister's intention in attempting to push this bill through this third reading stage and through Parliament.

I wish to get back to those regulations already in effect by virtue of the fact that our vehicles are designed and tested in the United States. This goes as far back as 1973, I believe, when the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency initiated a voluntary fuel efficiency labelling program. This was superseded in 1975 by the passage of amendments to the motor vehicle information and cost savings act, which stipulates (a) the actual fuel economy standards to be reached for each auto manufacturer for 1978 to 1980, and until 1985; (b) the legislation requires that labels indicating the fuel efficiency of each car be affixed to the automobile; and (c) that the EPA must publish a book listing all efficiency ratings and that that book must be made available to all auto dealers.

On average, these standards are met in Canada by virtue of the fact that, as I have already said, these automobiles are designed and tested for this market, whether they are produced in the United States or in Canada. In fact, in Canada most vehicles, on average, surpass even these standards because our emission level standards, as everyone knows, are lower than those in the United States. The minister has not challenged these standards. The bill does not contest the accuracy of these tests, nor their applicability to the Canadian market.

So exactly, Mr. Speaker, what does the minister have in mind in asking Parliament for the authority to enact yet unknown standards? Why is the Liberal government trying to attempt to pass legislation without spelling out what the changes and standards would be? It is just more bureaucracy, and that is something that we certainly do not need more of at this very dangerous time in our economy.

Technically speaking, this Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act embodied in Bill C-107 only continues the conceit of the federal government, but with a new twist, Mr. Speaker. Whereas former energy ministers have maintained that we have fuel consumption standards when in fact none were in place, the present minister now proposes to implement such legislation but at the same time wants to pretend that he has no authority. If he had no authority, then he would not be presenting this bill; and if he had the authority, he would not have to present this bill and he would come up with the specific requirements now, so that this House and Canadians and the automotive industry would know what those requirements would be.

The EMR briefing note on the act claims that it would be a two-stage bill. If voluntary standards fail to work, a second part of the bill will allow the government to implement compulsory standards. But that is not what is written in Bill C-107; and that is again why I believe we must question the intention of the minister and not allow this bill to pass.

The bill clearly gives the government the authority to set fuel consumption standards which the industry must meet at some time in the future. There is absolutely no mention in the bill of voluntary standards. In fact, there are only two very absurd ways the government could set voluntary standards under this bill. One would be to set standards by one regulation and by another to exempt everyone, a contradictory situation. The other way would be to set no standards at all.

• (1600)

Under those circumstances, why do we have this legislation? If the reality is that this government is concerned only with appearing to be doing something, I for one do not believe the minister should be empowered with this authority. If the government does have it in mind to legislate the same standards that exist in the United States, then I think there should be a clear statement to that effect contained in this bill, and it clearly is not there.

If the government does not have that in mind, I demand that this House be advised of the real objectives of this bill. Is there something hidden in this bill which gives the government the power to do something in the future about which neither we nor the industry know? It is not specified in the bill. That is why I question the bill.

I remind the government that the automotive industry has already demonstrated its intention and ability to respond to energy shortages. Fuel consumption has decreased dramatically since 1976, not because of bills of this nature but because of the considerable increases in the price of gasoline. The price of gasoline in Canada is going up when it is going down everywhere else in the world. If it continues to go up, we will have energy self-sufficiency by 1990 because people will no longer be able to afford to buy gasoline.

What, at its introduction, at its second reading and at committee stage, was vague legislation continues to be vague. Without content, it serves only to upset an industry which simply does not need to deal with the threat of yet more regulations, and the automotive industry employs more Canadians both directly and indirectly than most others.

I want to say in closing what I said when I began. If the government were really serious about trying to preserve conventional energy, it would encourage the use of alternate fuels. I have just mentioned two, and I will repeat them: propane and compressed natural gas. However, the government is not going in that direction. If the government were serious about trying to help the automotive industry, it would deal with the Japanese in a tougher way. It would deal in a realistic way with the automotive industry in order to protect jobs in Canada. It need not necessarily impose embargoes on offshore imports; it should be creating Canadian content regulations and incentives for foreign investment in Canada. I would not mind a Honda plant in my riding, as long as it was creating Canadian jobs and helping the Canadian economy. However, we cannot continue to strangle our domestic industry and impose further regulations on our domestic industry while we allow the Japanese to send us $1.5 billion worth of automotive products and while we sell the Japanese nothing more than token windshield wipers. In fact, Canadian automotive products sold to Japan amount to only one half of 1 per cent of the total Japanese imports to Canada. That is not free trade, it is not fair trade and the Japanese are very much taking advantage of that situation.

If the government is really interested in improving our whole economic system, whether it be through trying to protect or help a specific industry, preserve gasoline or encourage productivity, the government has only one alternative, and that is to throw out that "tremendous" budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of last November, which has been damaging to the economy of this country, and replace it with a new budget. Only then can we begin on a new road to recovery.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: I thank very kindly my friends and foes alike.

Bill C-107 basically sets fuel efficiency standards for automobiles. Some of the remarks made by the preceding speaker were absoutely correct.

Mr. Jelinek: That scares me when it comes from a member of the New Democratic Party!

Mr. Skelly: I want to associate myself with some of the thoughts he expressed here today. Since the last election the government has been a mindless organization, and this bill is a good example of that.

One element of this bill is worthy of support. No one in this House would not support the idea of conservation of fuels through insistence on improved standards of use in automobiles—or any other transportation mode, since transportation presently is a large consumer of our very valuable hydrocarbons. However, unfortunately, as pointed out by my colleague, this bill impacts negatively on the automobile industry. While the government on the one hand is attempting to do consumers a favour and bring about fuel security in the long term, on the other hand it is failing to do anything to salvage the automobile industry. Indeed, it is imposing a penalty on it. This is mindless and almost destructive, as are the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the National Energy Program. This bill will have a negative impact on the auto industry. It will not help in the development of a comprehensive industrial strategy. It will do nothing for the aspirations of Canadians in relation to the development of the auto industry, energy conservation or a general energy strategy. This bill takes none of those things into consideration. There should be companion policies and legislative proposals to go along with it. Without them, this bill is a mindless exercise.

I have the same questions as those my colleague raised. What will be the effect on Canadians attempting to develop a relevant automobile industry in this country? This legislation will have a serious impact on that industry. I urge the government to something constructive. It should use the levers it has to ensure that within Canada we begin to develop the research facilities we need. Automobile companies should be encouraged—or forced, as it were—to use our market facilities, but the government should also make sure there are research facilities here to develop the necessary technology to produce the fuel efficient engines envisaged by this legislation. That is the ridiculous part of this bill.

In the long haul the policies of the Minister of Finance and the energy policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—and the government generally—are wrecking the Canadian economy. There are no two ways about it. We receive mail from people who are suffering badly not only because of this kind of legislation but also because of the over-all mindless policies of the government.

My colleague mentioned some other things in his outline of this bill which are very typical of the Conservative Party. I have said it before, but with respect to this bill it is clear that the Conservative Party is a "gofer" for a small number of very large corporations.

Mr. Dingwall: Agreed.

Mr. Skelly: The Conservatives are "gofers" for major oil companies. Their energy critic has been a very articulate and outspoken defender of Imperial Oil, Shell and Texaco—

Mr. Dingwall: Shame.

Mr. Skelly: —and a small number of other very large corporations. That position taken by the Conservative Party was again demonstrated by the previous speaker's comments. His only concern was what will happen to a small number of major corporations. He did not seem to be concerned about what would happen to consumers. What happens when Canadian workers see fuel-efficient automobiles produced elsewhere? That party's knee jerk reaction to legislation—which I guess has potential at some point—is typical. It has been busy wrecking the Canadian economy and devastating the standard of living built by our forefathers and by workers today. That is the party that is busy wrecking Parliament.

• (1610)

A previous speaker pointed out the effects of all this on the auto industry and the effect of the negative approach for the sake of being negative. Their role as "gofer" for their corporate friends at the expense of a great number of small businesses, consumers and workers in this country should be remembered. There will have to be a change in that orientation.

The big lie that has been perpetrated in this House for a long time is that somehow it was the opposition that threw the Clark government out. In reality it was the same workers who did that. They were offended by that government's policy. The consumers were offended by that policy. The small business people were offended by neglect and the single-minded purpose of defending a small number of very powerful corporations. That kind of thing must stop before the Conservatives can be considered a serious or credible alternative for the country. So much for its role as "gofer" for the oil companies and for major corporations.

I want to return to the detail of the bill before us, Mr. Speaker. The bill contains a typical Liberal government trick. Of course, there is a need to develop fuel efficiency standards for automobiles and we have to be serious about that. This would provide advantages for the country if it were applied along with a strategy for a transportation policy and for the automobile industry. If we handle this matter carefully, it could help develop a fuel efficiency technology in Canada. This country could become a world leader in fuel efficiency. Unfortunately, we do not have a coherent policy on this. We have led the world in many fields: we developed the first jet passenger liner, we have developed an admirable high-tech industry and we have been leaders in many other fields, but I think this happened in spite of government instead of with its assistance.

We will never achieve anything with the old carrot and stick approach, Mr. Speaker. We watched the director of investigation and research attempt to defend Canada against corporate concentration when legislation did not permit it. Mr. Bertrand tried to use the carrot and stick approach but it was a complete failure. This, too, will be a complete failure. We know the government will not impose the compulsory aspects of this legislation on the community even though the bill provides for it.

The question of conservation is vitally important for the future, Mr. Speaker. If properly administered, this bill would provide for an examination of alternate and cheaper fuels which would be of tremendous benefit to the consumer. It would look at alternate technologies, would create employment in Canada and mean a new approach to world markets. A bill like this is extremely important, but unfortunately within the government's plans—if a plan exists—this bill will not achieve anything. The compulsory aspects do not have enough clout.

The bill has another flaw which is typical of the government's whole energy package. This bill is very permissive and it is vague. Some time in the future we may impose standards, but not necessarily, it seems to say. The authorization to create regulation provided by the bill is strong, however. It is literally ruled by cabinet, ruled by order in council and ruled by regulation. All through the National Energy Program the government has left control in the hands of the minister and in the hands of cabinet. It is a serious thing when control is removed from the representatives of the people and is put into the hands of a small group of individuals in government who, as I have said before, have literally destroyed the economy and have thrown much of the energy sector into chaos by ignoring long-term, serious priorities.

The bill is part of an over-all package that has been before us for months. A long time ago the government made a very strong statement of policy based on Canadian ownerhip, enhancement, exploration and development of the resource, conservation and alternates, and it held that great revenues for the Canadian people would be derived. It dealt with conservation, security of supply, enhanced revenues or a greater share of revenues and provided access for a petroleum corporation of Canada. Today, as the final package is slipping through, the government has backed away from most of these things.

When Bill C-48 was introduced there was a great hue and cry from the oil companies and their "gofers". It went to committee along with great promises and when it came back to the House the Liberal amendments essentially went along with the "gofers" and the oil companies. All of a sudden, after the bill is passed this package is presented and we are told that there are serious problems in the energy industry in Canada. The government has backed away from the revenue aspect and has given several billions of dollars to the major oil companies. The price of energy is being driven up, consumers are suffering, home owners are suffering and, indeed, Canadians generally are suffering. Our industrial strategy is suffering too.

These bills have no substance. The "gofers" to my right who have been strong, outspoken proponents of the multinational oil companies, the favoured few who have blackmailed and misled us for years and years, have been upstaged by the more cunning group on the other side who have laid out policies that they think will interest the vast majority of Canadians. When the amendments come in and the cards are on the table, however, the Liberals will be seen to have betrayed the Canadian people.

There really is no difference between the "gofers" on my right and the government, Mr. Speaker. That was clearly illustrated by the fact that they voted together to defeat a very worth-while amendment in the House this afternoon. The record shows that time and time again when proposals are put before the House that will benefit the Canadian people, whether they concern the economy, employment, control of banks or the major oil companies, these two parties stand together with the major corporations against consumers and Canadians generally. No legislation illustrates this fact better than the bills emanating from the National Energy Program.

• (1620)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate which marks the end of a process which began some time ago. It is nice to see the Conservative Party energy critic who has returned from worldwide travels. I welcome him back to the House and the proceedings. I include in that, of course, the energy critic for the NDP, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). They both know we have had deliberations on this particular bill, heard witnesses before the committee, and then we debated it quite seriously.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is an important part of the National Energy Program. It is a key conservation measure aimed at reducing the consumption of fuel by motor vehicles in Canada. I wish to remind hon. members of the magnitude of the oil savings we believe can be achieved by this program. The savings have been estimated at 300,000 barrels of oil per day by 1990, compared to the fuel required by vehicles maintained at a 1979 level of fuel consumption performance. This represents a sizeable reduction in transportation energy use, the largest sector of oil consumption in Canada.

Our commitment to this program dates back at least six years, and has embraced a history of discussions with the auto industry as well as numerous Canadian and foreign government agencies. The result was a successful voluntary fuel consumption program, supported by Bill C-107. The importance of this bill and the large measure of agreement on its role was evident in its success in committee. The performance of industry under this voluntary program provides further evidence of success. The targets for fuel consumption performance have not only been met but exceeded to date, and it is our expectation that this trend will continue. This willingness and expressed commitment of industry to co-operate with us makes a good case for retaining the voluntary nature of the program.

As a means of enhancing this voluntary program, industry and the federal government will work together in many areas. Industry is certainly willing to participate beyond current levels and we intend to harness this co-operation in order to co-ordinate all interests affected by the Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act, including the fuel-producing industry. We hope to focus this effort through industry-government working groups, one of which will concern itself with fuel consumption data. My colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), has had notable success in developing a reporting system which provides key reports to the government from industry which indicate vehicle fuel consumption performance, sales, and thereby incorporate average fuel consumption information. This system is central to the production of the motor vehicle fuel consumption guide which I am sure many hon. members have heard about or seen in dealer showrooms. I should emphasize, however, that this reporting system is designed to support the administration of the program rather than the formulation of policy.

We therefore wish to involve industry actively in the development of relevant data to support fuel conservation policies which affect them directly. I wish to take this opportunity to commend the motor vehicle producers for their expressed willingness to participate not only in the gathering and analysis of data, but also its interpretation.

I want to emphasize that the flow of information will be two-way. For example, we will provide the information the industry needs to project future fuel supplies and quality. We also recognize the research and development efforts which industry has made over the past ten years in order to respond to the rapidly changing market and energy conditions. Research on cold weather fuel consumption is a good example of this effort. The government realizes the burden which such efforts impose, necessary though they are in this day and age of conservation. We, too, have an obvious interest in research and we will support industry's efforts.

In the vital area of motor vehicle fuel we will work with industry to determine the optimal mix of fuel and fuel quality for use by vehicles in the future. In this way we hope to be able to co-ordinate industry's reponse to new fuel options. There is a great deal of interest in fuel options and we have committed ourselves to examine these in detail and to strike with industry and provincial governments a consensus on what an appropriate mix and quality of conventional and alternate fuels might be and how they are best used in Canada in the coming decade.

Under this "enhanced voluntary" program our approach to the setting of fuel consumption standards will be one of meeting with the industry to secure a realistic picture of the constraints and opportunities imposed by technology and economics on fuel consumption performance. We will seek to obtain views on Canadian market demands and trends as well as fuel availability, quality and trends in other countries. We will also take into account other regulatory constraints on industry, such as emissions and safety. From that should come informed decisions on achievable, effective standards for motor vehicle fuel consumption performance, with appropriate credits for new fuels we may wish to encourage.

Through these negotiations, Mr. Speaker, through working groups and further discussions between industry and government, we hope to make clear our expectations for industry performance under a voluntary program. This commitment we see as being essential to continued mutual trust. The government has decided that the program will remain voluntary unless companies fail to co-operate. As with all government programs, we take quite seriously the process and need for regular analysis and evaluation of this program, especially in terms of its effectiveness in meeting its goals. We will be dealing with this in our annual report to Parliament under this bill. It will include an assessment of compliance with program requirements, and the impact it has on real world fuel consumption. We will be assessing the case for continuing the program beyond 1990, and for other approaches which may be required.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the key objective is to improve the flow of information concerning motor vehicle energy consumption. We are very pleased to find no reservations on the part of industry in responding to our desire for improved two-way communication. We feel passage of this bill will be a significant step toward energy self-sufficiency. We want to see this long-standing commitment fulfilled, and we will strive, in co-operation with other government agencies and industry, to ensure that the aims and objectives of this bill, an important part of the NEP, are achieved. In concluding my remarks I urge all hon. members to support this legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)—Housing—(a) CMHC role in renewing mortgages on urea formaldehyde foam insulated houses. (b) Request that banks be instructed to renew mortgages; the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly)—The Economy—Closure of lumber mill in Chemainus, B.C.—(a) Protection for jobs. (b) Investment of capital outside of Canada.

• (1630)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL CONSUMPTION STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-107, respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to add just a few words on this bill. I am glad that no member of this House had the gaucherie to mention that Members of Parliament beat the pages in last night's baseball game! I am glad no one pointed that out; it was a fairly close game.

This bill is really important and it has not had very much debate. It is ironic that we spend all our time debating taxes and grants to oil companies, etc. These are all things on the supply side of the equation—that is, where we get our oil and gas—and we spend very little time in committee or in debate on the demand side of the equation.

The parliamentary secretary who just spoke said that energy self-sufficiency is the goal of the energy program. But we should be talking about energy efficiency. As the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has said, if we looked at our demand for energy we could really make some progress in energy self-sufficiency. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) never ceases to point this out.

This bill deals with fuel standards for cars. Ralph Nader, the American consumer advocate who pushed fuel standards, would laugh if he read this bill. It is a very weak bill. It does virtually nothing. It sets out voluntary standards for companies. Consumption standards should be more stringent. The auto exhaust emission standards should not be sacrificed in return for better fuel consumption ratings as set out in this bill.

It seems to me that we should be talking about increased fuel efficiency and reduced pollution emissions. We should have better targets set up that are contained in this bill. The government should set its targets now as the industry is planning ahead.

This bill really does nothing out of the ordinary. It does not change anything that is happening right now. We do not set any tough standards for the industry. If we did we would give the industry something to shoot at. We have taken a second-rate approach compared to what the Americans are suggesting. Automobiles and light trucks consume about one third of Canada's refined petroleum products. Out of eight bills, is there very much in them dealing with conservation? We have something in part of the first bill and something in this bill. This bill is a Mickey Mouse nothing bill. It deals with fuel consumption standards and looks for voluntary standards. It does not set out any tough standards to follow.

It seems to me the government is making a mistake. It is another fault of the National Energy Program. In the future the government should bring in bills to deal with energy conservation that have some teeth in them so that we can get into the matter of fuel consumption.

A pattern is developing in Canada. Some of the major automobile companies are now starting to build fuel guzzlers again. I mean big cars, of course. To continue doing that will be a tragic mistake. People are beginning to think there will be a big oil glut on the world market. As a result, people are again starting to use oil and gas like there is no tomorrow. The minister said the other night we have made progress. He is right; Canadians are conserving fuel. But we have only begun to do that. We can do much more. I suggest to members opposite that they subscribe to and read a publication called "Canadian Renewable Energy News". I believe the editor's name is Mr. Jeff Passmore. I have been reading this publication lately in more detail and I have begun to realize there is a tremendous saving that we can still achieve in conservation.

We in the New Democratic Party are going to vote against this bill, not because we do not want fuel consumption standards for cars and not because we do not want to see energy efficiency, but because we want a bill with teeth in it dealing with auto exhaust emission standards and better fuel consumption standards, along with some guidelines for the industry. What Canadians need is a balance between the carrot—the advantages in price that conservation will give them—and a little bit of the stick. Canadians have to be pushed into conserving fuel. What better way to push them into doing that than imposing standards for cars, light trucks and vans which use one third of our refined products? But conservation in this area cannot be done with this bill.

This bill is typical of Liberalism. It is a halfway thing. The government thinks it is in the middle, the wishy-washy middle. Being in the wishy-washy middle is not leadership, nor will it give us energy efficiency in this country.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments on the bill. If there has been an agreement made, I will honour it. However, I will not speak for too long. To my knowledge there will not be a standing vote on this measure. My speech will be very brief unless I am provoked.

Mr. Dingwall: Shame on you!

Mr. Bosley: Consider yourself provoked.

Mr. Rose: I want to add to what my colleague has said about the ambivalent and wishy-washy legislation before us. Certainly we have seen a reduction in the consumption of petroleum products over the last year in the vicinity of 8 per cent to 10 per cent. Canadians have reduced their consumption of petroleum products as a result of scare tactics concerning the shortage that we thought existed in oil supplies. The rationing mechanism in Canada has not been a result of consumption standards. The rationing mechanism has been price. When the price of a product is pushed up high enough and quickly enough, naturally the consumption of that product drops. That has been the most effective, and certainly the most stringent and punishing kind of conservation measure on the part of this government.

In this bill we are talking about setting voluntary standards. That is all they will be and that is all they will ever amount to unless the price of gasoline is pushed up to the point where people can no longer afford to buy it. We had what was called a marvellous victory when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), his Alberta counterpart, Mr. Leitch, the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, and our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) got together and toasted one another with champagne over this great energy agreement they reached. They said what a wonderful thing it would be for Canadians. But what did it do? Our oil prices go up every six months. Yet I have a lot of trouble convincing my constituents who drive 50 miles back and forth to work each day—

Mr. Dingwall: In Cadillacs?

Mr. Rose: Some of them have Cadillacs, not all of them, certainly not very many who vote for me have Cadillacs, in contrast to the supporters of the hon. member across the way! I have great difficulty convincing my constituents that a price increase every six months is good for them. The distance from Mission to Vancouver is the same regardless of the price of gasoline. Many of these commuters have the same old gas guzzlers they have always had, because they cannot afford a new car.

This agreement simply amounted to a naked revenue grab by the federal government and the province. But all the plans went awry when the world price dropped. I do not know what we are going to do now. I do know that by conserving and therefore lowering the consumption of gasoline, it also lowers air pollution levels. If you do not burn as much gasoline there will not be as much emission into the air of harmful pollutants. The concomitant side benefit of lower consumption and fuel efficiency is less damage to our environment.

• (1640)

We would be in favour of more stringent standards. We know that the auto companies in the United States have asked the Reagan government to put off the imposition of the demands that the American government once had under the Carter administration for greater fuel efficiency for automobiles. These standards have been pushed back. I have a large car—not a Cadillac—which is a gas guzzler.

Mr. Dingwall: Get a bike.

Mr. Rose: I can ride a bike. Contrary to the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, I do not always ride a hobby-horse. In any event, I am concerned that we might slip back into our old ways. It is habitual. We were just starting to learn how to conserve energy. Unless we are shown some government leadership, I am afraid we will slip into the same old pattern that we have always followed, Canadians being the supreme, number one energy gluttons of the world.

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Could the hon. member repeat his last statement? I did not hear it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 186)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand	Ethier	Leduc
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Evans	Lefebvre
Bachand	Ferguson	Lumley
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Fisher	MacBain
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Fleming	Mackasey
Blais	Flis	MacLaren
Blaker	Foster	MacLellan
Bloomfield	Fox	Malépart
Bockstael	Frith	Maltais
Bossy	Gauthier	Marceau
Breau	Gendron	Massé
Bujold	Gimaïel	Masters
Bussières	Gingras	Munro (Hamilton East)
Campbell (LaSalle)	Gourde (Lévis)	Nicholson (Miss)
Campbell (Cardigan)	Gray	Olivier
Chrétien	Guilbault	Ostiguy
Collenette	Harquail	Ouellet
Comtois	Henderson	Pelletier
Corbin	Herbert	Pepin
Corriveau	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Peterson
Cosgrove	Hopkins	Pinard
Côté (Mrs.)	Irwin	Prud'homme
Cousineau	Johnston	Regan
Cullen	Joyal	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Daudlin	Kaplan	Rooney
Dawson	Kelly	Rossi
De Bané	Killens (Mrs.)	Roy
de Corneille	Lachance	Savard
Demers	Lajoie	Schroder
Desmarais	Lalonde	Simmons
Dingwall	Lamontagne	Smith
Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Landers	Tessier
Dubois	Lang	Tobin
Dupont	Laniel	Tousignant
Dupras	Lapierre	Turner
Erola (Mrs.)	Lapointe (Charlevoix)	Veillette
	Lapointe (Beauce)	Watson
	LeBlanc	Yanakis—112.

NAYS

Messrs.

Althouse	Fulton	Malone
Andre	Gurbin	Manly
Anguish	Gustafson	Mayer
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	Mazankowski
Beatty	Hargrave	McCain
Benjamin	Hawkes	McMillan
Blackburn	Heap	Miller
Blaikie	Hnatyshyn	Murta
Bosley	Hovdebo	Neil
Cardiff	Jarvis	Nowlan
Clark (Yellowhead)	Jewett (Miss)	Oberle
Crombie	Keeper	Ogle
Crosby (Halifax West)	Kempling	Orlikow
Crouse	Kristiansen	Patterson
Deans	Kushner	Rose
Dinsdale	Lambert	Sargeant
Epp	La Salle	Schellenberger
Fennell	Lawrence	Skelly
Forrestall	Lewis	Taylor
Fraser	Lewycky	Thacker
Fretz	MacDonald (Miss)	Waddell
		Wenman
		Wright—65.

● (1710)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.10 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall items preceding No. 98 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

USE OF GENERIC DRUGS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all government studies completed in the past five years concerning the use of generic drugs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is once again my privilege to be speaking in this Thursday five o'clock "happy hour", and the subject today is generic drugs and the pharmaceutical industry.

I should say at the outset that I am no longer interested in obtaining a House order for the production of papers, it having been amply illustrated in this session that such a House order is valueless. I have illustrated that, despite a House order for the production of documents, there is no obligation on the part of a department to supply the documents referred to in the motion. In fact it is now abundantly apparent that until the House rules are changed, it is meaningless to obtain such House orders. Therefore, since I want to air a problem, I will continue as often as I can to use this opportunity to speak about the subject in question and no longer concern myself with trying to obtain documents.

When I was first elected in 1972 the very first call I received was from a Mr. Jack Fralich, who was then the president of Hoffmann-La Roche, a major Swiss-owned multinational pharmaceutical company in my riding. He wanted to see me about government legislation, Bill C-102, and specifically compulsory licensing.

Anyone who journeys from Ottawa to Montreal or from Toronto to Montreal will observe in the constituency of Vaudreuil a huge concrete monument to Bill C-102. That huge concrete structure, which was built at a cost of something in the order of $16 million, was to be the forerunner of a $65 million plant for the production and distribution in North America of drugs from the giant Hoffmann-La Roche company. The $65 million of 1969-70 probably would be at least twice that amount today. One can see how much has been lost in terms of construction and jobs because that particular project did not go ahead.

If one passed that huge concrete structure at night, one observed that only a limited number of floors had their lights on. In other words, only a limited number of floors were occupied. The rest of the floors were empty in 1970, in anticipation of expansion, but they remain empty today, in 1982.

One can and undoubtedly will argue what the benefits of compulsory licensing have been to the consumer, but I will let someone else deal with that subject. I want to point out, though, that in that one company alone, the loss of investment in Canada, the loss of jobs to Canadians and the loss of research and development have been very considerable indeed.

A few words about the industry are probably appropriate. The pharmaceutical industry possesses many characteristics which make it interesting to economists and a concern to the public. It is an industry which deals directly with the health of individuals and, as such, there is a desire to ensure that its product is readily available to the public, both in terms of price and quantity. However, to the extent that drugs can be extremely dangerous due to improper use—or because of their very nature—there exists a strong tendency to regulate this industry. Through its role in the health care field there exist external benefits to proper drug use and, as a result, it is generally believed that a competitive solution will not be optimal. The industry is highly research-intensive. It faces an inelastic demand for its products and has the sole purchasing authority resting with an agent other than the ultimate consumer of the product. These features make the pharmaceutical industry somewhat unique and should be considered when examining the economics of prescription drugs.

The demand for prescription drugs is relatively insensitive to price changes. The person prescribing a drug does not consume it or pay for it. The consumption decision is made by an individual who is unusually familiar with the quality of the product due to his role as a physician and the practice of drug firms of providing a great deal of information to doctors in the form of advertising and visits by detail men.

The industry believes that firms which are innovative earn high profits which encourage others to copy or become innovative themselves. A firm cannot rest for long on its past achievements. It must continue to innovate in order to maintain its market share. Although at any point in time the concentration rate may be high, with some firms earning monopoly profits, the entry rate into the market will also be high. Such competition from new products will cause prices to fall directly or indirectly via quality competition.

The industry is experiencing a much greater deficit in foreign trade than previously. In addition to this, the domestic industry is supplying a smaller fraction of Canada's domestic consumption than previously was the case.

• (1720)

In answer to one of the many questions that I put on the Order Paper, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) indicated that the estimated percentage of the total national health bill spent on drugs in 1976 was 10.5 per cent. That figure is interesting if we relate it to the balance of trade in pharmaceutical products. In 1971 the negative balance of trade in pharmaceutical products was $50 million; in 1975 that imbalance had grown to $110 million and by 1979 the imbalance had reached $232 million. Once again, Mr. Speaker, those figures were supplied by the government, this time by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais).

In Canada, patents are awarded for 17 years, although the patentee has exclusive property rights for only the first three years. After that period of time compulsory licences to produce can be awarded to other firms if it is demonstrated that the patentee has abused his patent. This is not the case with drugs; patent abuse is not a pre-requisite for the awarding of a compulsory licence. Since 1923, compulsory licences in pharmaceuticals could be granted to produce patented drugs in Canada. The 1969 changes to the Patent Act allowed for compulsory licences to import the generic equivalents to patented drugs. After the 1969 amendments to the Patent Act, patent holders have been receiving royalties of 4 per cent—I emphasize that figure, Mr. Speaker—of the total sales of licensees, which is far from a monopoly return.

The government's policy toward drug R and D appears to be contradictory. On the one hand that monopoly power is granted through patent protection in order to encourage R and D, and on the other hand monopoly power is taken away through compulsory licensing to induce lower prices via increased competition. In Canada, over 65 per cent of total R and D expenditures do not originate in industry and are therefore not subject to the profit motive. Some inventions cannot be readily copied, even in the absence of patent rights. Often the inventor possesses a head start in the application of the invention and possesses know-how concerning it which may not be readily apparent to outside observers. The inventor also has a head start in getting the ultimate product to market, which usually generates a certain amount of product loyalty among consumers.

According to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, there are two criteria on which the performance of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada can be considered inadequate. These relate to its balance of foreign trade position—to which I previously referred—and the level of research and development expenditures locally. Although these reports claim that a multitude of factors could be identified, the major reasons for this poor performance are judged to be government policies and regulations concerning the industry.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that here I am referring to reports of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. These reports claim that the 1969 amendment to Bill C-102, the Patent Act, was a major contributing factor to the decline in Canadian pharmaceutical research and development. The arguments in these reports do not differ with those discussed in the original research branch paper of March, 1980. As with other studies taking such a position, these departmental reports equate reduced profitability of selling pharmaceutical products in Canada with reduced profitability of engaging in R and D activity in Canada.

I should like to read an extract from a letter written by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts) dated April 29 of this year. The letter is addressed to me and in it the minister writes:

> The government is very concerned about the over-all low level of research and development in the private sector and is actively pursuing a number of measures to improve Canada's performance in this area. We recognize the importance which a strong Patent system can play in encouraging industrial investment in R&D thus creating the appropriate climate for innovation.

A little earlier I referred to the first call that I received after being elected to Parliament from the then president of Hoffman-La Roche. It is interesting that one of the employees of this company with whom I have had considerable correspondence refers to the company as follows:

> —certain companies, primarily the ones with the best R and D productivity, are being driven into the ground by Bill C-102. The attitude within these companies, who have been responsible for the saving of countless Canadian lives, is becoming desperate.

Referring to Hoffman-La Roche he goes on to say:

> —now operates far below its production capacity, has shelved plans for capital expansion and is now in the process of reducing staff. The organization is trapped between falling revenue and increasing operating costs, and, not to be forgotten, also trapped between generic substitution brought about by Bill C-102 and true innovative competition.

The writer, Mr. K. S. Hardy, an employee of Hoffman-La Roche, referred me to a very interesting editorial which had appeared in the "British Medical Journal" entitled "Generic Prescribing and the Drug Industry". The following quotation is particularly appropriate in relation to the pro-generic legislation currently in effect at both levels of government in Canada:

> —generic substitution would be a clumsy and ineffective way of reducing NHS drug costs and one which might discourage foreign investment in the British pharmaceutical industry. Long-term, a worldwide trend toward use of generics could further reduce the pace and breadth of research by the pharmaceutical industry.

As I said earlier, this gentleman has written me frequently and many of the comments in his letters are particularly appropriate to the subject we are discussing this afternoon. For example, he refers to a competing company, Smith, Kline & French, which used to have a plant in Montreal but which has now moved out of the province of Quebec. He writes as follows:

> The research intensive segment of the drug manufacturing industry is the most responsible for breakthrough drug discoveries. These breakthroughs can and often do result in vast savings to the total health care system and benefit society as a whole. As an example it was calculated that prior to the discovery of the anti-ulcer drug Tagamet, hundreds of millions of dollars were spent either directly or indirectly on gastric surgery, in-hospital care, lost man-day economic contribution, income taxes, etc.

In a letter of December 15, 1981 he writes that Smith, Kline & French were the discoverers of the breakthrough drug Tagamet and goes on to say:

> Despite the well-documented proof of social contribution relative to its price, it is noteworthy that the productive research effort which gave birth to "Tagamet" has been rewarded with approval of several compulsory licences in this country.

• (1730)

> At this point in time, the first imitator is introducing its generic copy of "Tagamet" barely 4 years after the introduction of the original discovery. Because of its research productivity, Smith Kline & French has learned rather painfully that Bill C-102 penalizes the research-based firms in direct proportion to their research success.

Now, because of one major discovery, surgery, long hospital stays, mortality, lost taxes and other social costs have been so greatly reduced that the cost of the drug itself is a minor consideration and is one that has reaped monumental dividends to individuals, governments and society itself, not to mention the saving in suffering and human life. As Mr. Hardy says:

> None of Canada's major trading partners employ compulsory licensing to import. Hence, it should come as no surprise that Canada is perceived as being a "hostile" environment. Such perceptions will not change unless compulsory licensing is abolished and a fair patent system is instilled which recognizes product protection.

One of our previous Members of Parliament who eventually became a minister was Martin O'Connell, the former MP for Scarborough East. If I had the time I would have liked to quote extensively from a paper which he prepared in 1978 but I will conclude by saying, as does he:

> With the return of Great Britain to patent protection, Canada remains the only developed country with this unique discouragement to product innovation and manufacturing in the pharmaceutical industry. In both countries, compulsory licences to import issued to companies which have not incurred the costs of research and testing appear to have had a profound adverse effect on research-based companies. This is understandable when it is realized that it normally takes some ten years of research, development and clinical testing by the patentee before a new drug is cleared for sales and that it may soon be overtaken by a new discovery, let alone licensed to a company interested only in manufacturing the products developed by others. But one need not look only to the British decision; good and sufficient reasons exist in Canada to modify the nine-year-old Canadian system of compulsory licences to import alternative generic products.

Because of my cough and for other reasons, Mr. Speaker, I should conclude here. I think I have amply illustrated that whatever benefits the consumer may have received from compulsory licensing in Canada, the cost in jobs, construction and investment has been very high indeed.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I might start by suggesting to the previous speaker that there are a number of brand and generic drugs which could be used to help his throat. Perhaps we can talk about that later.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, reads:

> That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all government studies completed in the past five years concerning the use of generic drugs.

The surprising thing is that this motion is even required and that we have not by now observed the kinds of things the previous speaker talked about concerning the impact on the industry, the market share of generic drugs in Canada, what the impact has been on research and development and therefore on jobs, and, in particular, on the quality of pharmaceuticals provided for Canadians.

The word "generic" is perhaps a misnomer; in a sense, all drugs are generic. What we are really talking about is whether or not a particular company with a particular brand name has the protection which would encourage it to do further research and development and other things necessary in order to produce drugs for human use.

An important aspect as well is the question of the responsibility the Canadian government has in this area. Because of the number of government supported drug plans for senior citizens, the government is directly involved in the question of which drugs or combination of drugs, generic or otherwise, are covered. The critical point here, which the previous speaker was trying to get at and which caused him to propose this motion, is that the drug companies with operations in Canada would have a degree of protection, which they do not now have, and which would provide the stimulus for them to carry on their operations in Canada.

One of the first questions in a discussion on that subject is whether or not in fact, even with their operations in Canada, they are doing research and development here and not in other countries. As the hon. member suggests, that would mean increased employment opportunities for Canadians. There is no question that, with the changes in the patent law and with the loss of some of the protection the companies had before, there was a major shift in this area. In some way that in fact benefited Canadians. This occurred through an influx of generic drugs which could be very efficiently produced at a very low cost.

The question is whether or not we had the necessary standards of quality by allowing these relatively non-controlled sources of drugs to enter Canada. It is clear that in some cases drugs of poor quality entered Canada, drugs which did not have the beneficial effect they were meant to have when prescribed for a particular disease. One of the drugs which was discovered to be a problem was, of course, tetracycline. It is well known that the standards of that particular antibiotic when it was imported into Canada were well below that which would be expected either by a medical practitioner or the patient receiving therapy. There was a very serious question as to standards, and that to me is one of the most important aspects of this matter.

In addition to the standards, an interesting question is whether or not we as a government have been following the quality of those drugs. Clearly a responsibility the government has to the Canadian people is to ensure that the quality of the drug being offered in Canada is good. Recently we have had a number of examples, particularly in the area of pesticides, where the quality of different chemicals allowed into this country has not been acceptable. We have ended up accepting the word of independent companies which have been used by different drug companies for testing of products to prove they were acceptable and would not cause ill effects should they be used in a particular way. DDT is an example of that. DDT levels build up. It is difficult to get rid of DDT. DDT has detrimental effects. Thalidomide is another example. The testing process there was important. Testing of drugs to determine whether or not they are acceptable for human consumption is very important.

• (1740)

The federal government has a responsibility for drug standards, but it has not been seen to be completely effective in the past. All of us would, I think, want to take a serious look at this. I would question whether we have been following in a responsible and effective way the quality and the standards of generic drugs that are imported into Canada. I suspect the answer to that question is no, that we have not. I know we have improved our assessment to some degree, but I suspect there is a lot more that we could do. It would be interesting to find out what studies we have had on generic drugs in that respect in addition to the economic effect.

Mr. Blaikie: None at all.

Mr. Gurbin: I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) say none at all. That is the point.

I will come back to the main argument put by the hon. member who proposed this motion. We have to examine the viability of the industry to provide drugs for Canadians at a reasonable price. There are Canadians with certain diseases who require large amounts of drugs over long periods of time. These drugs are important to their health. The cost of them can use up a major portion of a family's income. This can put severe stress not only on low-income families but on middle-income families as well. It is not unusual for patients to spend $100 per month on drugs for long periods of time. There are drug plans in which patients can become involved. Most people who face long periods of drug therapy eventually are able to get into some kind of drug plan. If not, there may be some assistance through some level of government.

Mr. Blaikie: The NDP government has Pharmacare.

Mr. Frith: Even the Tories have it.

Mr. Gurbin: No matter who has to pay, whether the government collects the money and then gives it back in the buying of votes or whether it is the people themselves who pay, it costs somebody something. There has to be a balance. Maybe this balance is out of line, but we will not know until we get the information that is being asked for in this motion. We have no way of assessing whether or not that balance is in line.

We are told that the research and development levels of drug companies which produce brand name products as well as new products are decreasing significantly. Surely there are other ways that governments have to improve the research and development climate for a company. In addition to the massive amounts of time and effort that are involved to produce a new product and eventually bring it on to market is the problem of financing. We have to think also of the general business climate and the confidence companies have in Canada. There are a whole raft of reasons for lack of confidence. First is the lack of confidence in the Liberal government today, the provisions imposed by FIRA, the interest rate levels and the general decline in the economy. Right now a drug company would have to consider seriously doing anything in Canada. Until that climate changes there will not be much change in the kind of activity going on in Canada today. The essential ingredient of confidence and the climate to stimulate the testing of drugs is not here. It is not quite as simple as getting papers, although I think that is important. We on this side would strongly support that initiative. We would like to see testing of generic drugs as well as a number of other things which the federal government has responsibility for in health care, on behalf of all Canadians.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how much time I have. I hear that we may be called out of this chamber to attend the Senate.

I do want to say a few words about the whole question of drug testing. The motion put forward by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) calls for copies of studies done by the government over the last five years having to do with the use of generic drugs. I am not sure just how many of those kinds of studies there are. I know there is an inadequate number of studies, indeed if there are any, on the effects of drugs which are on the market in Canada. It is a fact that some drugs on Canadian pharmacy shelves have never been properly tested. They may be dangerous to the health of Canadians.

Information made public recently under the freedom of information act in the United States clearly shows that in the case of at least 16 prescription drugs presently in use in Canada, the Department of National Health and Welfare have not properly protected the health of the Canadian public. Health and Welfare Canada commonly authorizes the sale of powerful new drugs based on testing done by the drug manufacturers themselves. In our view, it is irresponsible for the government to rely on private companies who manufacture the drugs and sell them also to test these same drugs. This is an obvious conflict of interest in our opinion and is something that ought to be rectified.

The Food and Drug Administration in the United States has recently found cases of misrepresentation, fraud and falsification of test results in U.S. drug testing laboratories. One hundred and twenty seven laboratories have been found to be in violation. Forty three doctors were suspended and another 24 are under investigation. The FDA caught up with one doctor who had been making up results by picking EKG tests out of a garbage can and assigning a name to a test result. Yet the federal government refuses to change the law to require that drug testing be done in Canada and at more reliable locations than the drug manufacturers themselves. For instance, these tests could be done in our Canadian universities.

The present system for testing drugs has to be changed or we will see and hear more of the horror stories that we have witnessed with regard to some of the drugs that are now on the market. I refer to the near fatal experience of a woman in Oakville, Ontario. This woman had been taking the drug clindamycin. This woman was given clindamycin in 1973 for a minor nasal infection. Within a couple of weeks she was near death from colitis. In the years since she has had a series of eight operations, and most of her intestines have been removed. It turns out the company that marketed the drug, the Upjohn corporation of Kalamazoo, Michigan, carried out clinical trials in 1969 which showed the drug to cause colitis but did not inform Canadian officials until 1974.

• (1750)

With regard to drugs, pesticides and other hazardous substances, the government must recognize that it cannot trust the drug industry to tell the truth. It will simply just have to be more vigilant. This would involve implementing some inspection programs in Canada. It would be a matter of inspecting laboratories and looking over the shoulders of doctors who conduct the tests. The government must come to realize that the situation whereby people involved in the conflict of interest which I earlier described, where the drug manufacturers themselves do the testing, cannot continue any longer if the health of Canadians is to be protected.

We should have research conducted on hazardous substances, as I suggested recently in this House in a Standing Order 43, by a national hazardous substances research council or similar body through which we would have the confidence that tests were being conducted by an independent body whose only concern was to discover, in an accurate, honest and scientific manner, what the possible side effects of various chemicals in the environment or drugs on the market might be. If that were to happen, I believe the Department of National Health and Welfare could truly be said to be looking after the health and welfare of Canadians, rather than sitting by with an either naive or diabolical confidence, I am not sure which, in information provided from the United States about drugs that are on the market.

A good example of this which I would like to mention is the anti-nauseant drug, Bendectin, which is prescribed for pregnant women. This has been a subject of controversy for several years since it has been suspected, although not definitely proven, to be a cause of birth deformities. It is the only drug which exists solely for use by pregnant women in their first three and most vulnerable months of pregnancy. I might add that it is also made by Merrell Labs, the company that has been dogged by doubt ever since it marketed thalidomide in North America.

Bendectin has been on the domestic market for 23 years, but in recent years it has been plagued by suspicion that it is a teratogen, which in layman's language is a drug or chemical that causes congenital malformations and defects in human and animal fetuses. Two recent studies show a statistically significant increase in birth defects in children born to women who took Bendectin.

The first study, conducted by Doctor Jose Cordero, reviewed 250,000 births. This was done at the Centre for Disease Control in Atlanta. The study associates Bendectin with such defects as missing hands and feet.

The second study, which was released in September, 1980, by Doctor Hershel Jick at the Boston collaborative drug surveillance program, suggests that Bendectin is a moderate teratogen on the limbs. Doctor Jick's report indicates that something less than five birth defects might be expected for every 1,000 women taking Bendectin during the critical early stages of pregnancy.

We have spoken with Dr. Donald Patterson who has been attempting to get the ear of the Medical Association and/or the Canadian government on the Bendectin issue. Dr. Patterson believes that Bendectin should be allowed to remain on the market but should only be used as an anti-nauseant for non-pregnancies only. That is to say, for motion sickness, chemotherapy effects and so on. Enough suspicion has been aroused in the United States regarding the safety of the drug that patient package inserts are included with each prescription. These inserts contain information on the risk and benefit considerations involved in taking Bendectin.

The most that has been done in Canada is that Bendectin is now sold by prescription only rather than over the counter as before. But in all these cases, whether we are in committee or in whatever forum where we have the opportunity to question the government on these matters, we find that all the government can do is quote from tests which have been done by private manufacturers in the United States who have an interest in the marketing and promotion of these products. What we in the NDP say is that this situation cannot go on any longer. We live in a modern society which has a great number of substances, whether chemical or pharmaceutical, that we have to contend with. In Canada we are virtually at the mercy of people who have an interest in making profit out of the promotion of these substances.

This brings us right back to a basic philosophical argument. Are these substances to be produced for profit or for the health and use of the Candian people? We would like to see the profit motive removed from these matters, particularly from the testing of these particular substances.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member from Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing to the attention of the House of Commons the subject of the use of generic drugs in Canada.

It is to the credit of the member that he is concerned about this matter. It certainly does concern Canadians who need medication, particularly those who need drugs for acute illnesses and the many who need them for the curing of chronic illnesses or keeping these illnesses under control.

In all such cases, those who need relief from pain and suffering greatly value the achievements of the drug industry over the last few decades. World wide, the pharmaceutical industry has developed, tested and introduced many new products with extraordinary powers to ease the afflictions which have burdened men, women and children for centuries. There is no doubt that these accomplishments have made a significant contribution to the progress of mankind.

I am sure that the hon. member for Vaudreuil would agree that people suffering from illness need these medications at a reasonable price, especially if they need them for a long time or even permanently.

The hon. member has asked about government studies completed in the past five years concerning the use of generic drugs. With respect to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, it has initiated three studies in the course of the last ten years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to the Governor General in the Senate chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill S-19, an Act to provide for state immunity in Canadian Courts—Chapter No. 95.

Bill C-58, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act—Chapter No. 96.

Bill C-114, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 2)—Chapter No. 97.

Bill S-25, an Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the association known as "The Army, Navy and Air Forces Veterans in Canada".

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-103, an Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the little time available to the Chair, I have been able to take a cursory look at the motions and it would be my intention that they be dealt with as follows: Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 should be debated and voted on separately; motions Nos. 4 and 5 could be debated together and voted on separately.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-103, an Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended by deleting clause 12.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the first of the energy bills to be debated in this chamber subsequent to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation finishing its work. That work was completed at approximately 12.30 this day. It speaks to the difficulty that the energy committee has endured under the special House order, where hon. members of that committee have frequently been required to be in two places at the same time. It is a pleasure to be standing here this evening with no sense that the committee is meeting simultaneously with the House and that hon. members will have to make a choice as to whether to participate in the hearings of the legislation before committee or in this chamber.

• (1810)

I think it is wise at the outset to remind Canadians that Bill C-103 is a consequence of the bell-ringing which took place in this Parliament for 16 days. Members of the Canadian public may recall that the Progressive Conservative Party quietly, over a period of one year, attempted to tell the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) that it was wrong to bring in the kind of legislation proposed in Bill C-94. It was legislation that had far too many topics inside it, legislation that the minister intended to be debated in this chamber and in this chamber alone.

What the minister of energy wanted the Parliament of Canada to do was to deny Canadians the right to be heard as witnesses before a committee. There was a democratic principle at stake, Mr. Speaker, and we won that democratic principle on behalf of Canadians. We have had a committee. But it is a tragedy that the House leader chose to bring forward bills for debate in this chamber at the same time as the committee was meeting.

That procedure is exemplified by the fact that Bill C-103 was reported back to this chamber, a 50-clause bill, with 11 amendments already accepted by the government. Those amendments were accepted because of the work done by committee members and the work done by witnesses before the committee. However, the tragedy of Bill C-103 as it sits before us this evening is that so little of what those witnesses told the committee appears in the form of amendments.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is still so bad that there is a temptation to move amendments on each and every clause, but there is a danger in that, because we have a limited time to debate and if we were to move so many amendments it would be difficult for the Canadian people to focus on what is wrong with the bill.

I say to the Canadian people, those who are watching at this moment in time and those who may read about our debates, that the official opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, attended each and every one of the committee meetings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: We spent seven and one half to eight hours on many days. We examined, in the most minute detail, each of the clauses in this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: We will stand in this chamber and we will vote for the proposed amendments. And we will vote against the bill, because it is still a bad bill. We would like to invite government members, Liberals who were elected in this country in 1980, we would invite them, some of the independent thinking members on the other side, to consider the wisdom of each of the separate amendments. We invite them to think over their responsibility to their constituents, their responsibility to this nation, and join with us through the amending process in making a bad bill at least a little bit better.

Experience has taught us in this Parliament, Mr. Speaker, that the squeaking wheel gets the grease, that power is the name of the game. Unless those watching this debate, or reading about this debate, care enough about the country to pick up a telephone or pick up a pen and communicate their thoughts and their feelings to those members, then experience tells us that they are not likely to change, for some reason best left to them to explain. They bow to the squeaking wheel of public opinion; they do not bow to logic; they do not bow to what is good for the nation. But if enough Canadians across the country pick up a pen, pick up a telephone, and communicate their thoughts and feelings to a Member of Parliament, they can tell them clearly that they should support some of these amendments.

I urge people to listen closely to the logic of that. If Canadians are persuaded, then time is short. This bill will become law sometime next week unless members of the Liberal Party of Canada who were elected to serve in this chamber can be persuaded otherwise by their constituents and, let us hope, by the eloquence in this chamber. Common sense dictates, the health of the nation dictates, that the amending process required for this bill continue.

I would like to put into context, Mr. Speaker, a kind of schema, a kind of report card, that people can use for measuring the wisdom of a proposed amendment. There are many ways to develop a way of measuring a topic as important as this. I am trying to make it simple, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that there are four criteria that members opposite should look at before they decide whether or not an amendment is a wise one.

The first of these is: does the amendment provide any increased degree of protection for the consumers of oil and gas and the products thereof? Canadians should realize that when they go to the local service station and buy a gallon of gas today, the price they pay at the pump is greater than the price they would pay in many parts of the United States of America if they were to drive south. It makes people wonder about the campaign promises to keep the world price below 75 per cent, when they can just drive south of the Canadian border and buy gasoline cheaper than they can here. If they are wondering, then they should know that on average 65 or 66 cents out of every dollar that they pay goes to government in the form of taxes. The gasoline they put in a car, that they pay a dollar for, is worth 35 cents. When they buy oil to heat their homes, it is a similar situation. This bill has many taxing provisions in it, Mr. Speaker, and consumers will pay. Your costs as Canadians will go up if you give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the authority that he wants to raise your taxes. So people should look at an amendment and see if it will help the consumers.

Second, Mr. Speaker, in the climate in Canada today, Canadians should look at an amendment and see if it will help this country with jobs. Tomorrow we get the unemployment figures. Last month we had almost 1,300,000 unemployed. That makes you look at an amendment to see whether or not it has the wisdom of helping this nation and the Canadian people to have a job, a job instead of an unemployment insurance cheque, instead of a welfare cheque. A job—that is what Canadians want. To this point the policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have cost this nation hundreds of thousands of jobs.

• (1820)

On Monday evening the minister announced the injection of $2 billion into the oil and gas industry, and that was a clear-cut admission that the energy policies of the past 18 months have been bullheaded, badly designed and harmful to this nation. They cost us jobs. We can see that in a direct sense in western Canada because rigs are not drilling. Truck drivers do not have trucks to drive. Caterpillar operators do not have caterpillars to operate because there have been auction sales, and the Americans have come north to Canada and bought that equipment for less than half price. The American industry has boomed, and our jobs have disappeared. That is a consequence of the policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

People in Ontario and Chicoutimi who worked for companies which provided parts for vehicles have been laid off, but it is very hard for them to see that they have lost their jobs because—in part, at least—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has led this nation astray, with the advice and consent of backbench members of the Liberal Party.

Those are the first two. Does an amendment protect the consumer? Does an amendment help us get more jobs? My third criterion for judging an amendment is its impact on the economy and, in particular, its impact on interest rates. With his policies the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has encouraged Canadian companies to go on buying sprees. He has encouraged them to borrow money abroad. Even today we have further evidence of the consequences of that distortion of the Canadian economy. Increased borrowing of capital has driven down the value of our dollar, and that has caused interest rates to jump one half of 1 per cent today.

Canadians sometimes have difficulty seeing that government is their competitor in the marketplace when they borrow money. When they try to get mortgages for their homes, mortgage money is being auctioned off, and they are bidding against their own government. Their own government can take money out of their pockets through taxes as well as outbid them. The cost of borrowing grows and grows.

The federal government is the prime culprit in this country. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told us last Monday evening that federal revenues would fall $25 billion short of his projection. If the response of the government is to go back to the marketplace to borrow that amount, interest rates will continue to rise. Small firms and farms will continue to go bankrupt, and people will lose their homes.

Energy policies are not the total cause of our difficulties, but they are a very important factor, and each and every amendment should be screened against that criterion. Will an amendment help bring interest rates down? If we do not have the amendment, will interest rates climb higher?

The fourth criterion is whether an amendment helps our democracy. In theory this chamber is a place for debate. In theory a committee is a place to examine witnesses and to reach independent conclusions. But in reality all of the eight bills in the present energy package attempt to transfer power away from democratic systems and into the hands of a small group, the cabinet. Those of us who work in the Parliament of Canada as elected members know the kind of schedules cabinet ministers have and the amount of time they have to examine any particular piece of legislation in detail. It is darned little, and each time a piece of legislation comes forward in this chamber, it is flawed. It is usually seriously flawed; that is a consequence of a process. Cabinet ministers are too busy.

This bill seeks to transfer enormously increased responsibilities to a minister who has already demonstrated clearly and unequivocally to Canadians that he cannot handle well the responsibilities previously assigned to him. Why in the name of sanity, when that is so unequivocally clear, would we attempt to give that individual increased responsibilities?

I would like to repeat the four criteria for an amendment. Does it protect consumers? Will it help us get more jobs? Will it help our economy and keep interest rates down rather than allow them to go up? And will it enable elected people to do their jobs and to be of assistance to the government in screening legislation and making it better?

I hope members of the New Democratic Party will pay attention to the speeches made by members of this House of Commons, because one of the real disappointments in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation was that of the 31 or 32 members—I forget the number—of the New Democratic Party, we saw only one of them in those weeks of committee study. The remainder did not come and did not learn. Sitting in this chamber they probably still do not understand.

Mr. Anguish: Should we have a quorum count now when there are only two members of your party in the House?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. These are ridiculous charges. The hon. member has just asked how people can be in two places at the same time. How can they be in other committees, in the House, and in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation at the same time? The hon. member cannot have it both ways. The hon. member should be fair.

Mr. Anguish: Typical Tory.

Mr. Nowlan: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: It is Tory crap we have to take day in and day out in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it was also disappointing—

Mr. Waddell: Get to the point of your speech.

Mr. Hawkes: It was also disappointing how many times there was no member. For instance, there was no member this morning—

Mr. Waddell: Stop talking about the past and get to the present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair was alerted about two weeks ago by an hon. member to my left on whether hon. members should comment on the presence or absence of hon. members either in the House or in committees. I have had the advantage of looking at some of the precedents in that regard. Without access to the precedents right now, I think perhaps it would be reasonable to suggest to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that some caution be used in referring to the presence or absence of members either in the House or in committees. I say with caution because, quite frankly, the precedents I have seen do not refer to presence in committees. They refer to presence in the House, but I think with that caution expressed to the hon. member, which is done as a service to him and not in criticism, he may wish to consider how he chooses to express himself now.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It should be pointed out that there are four Conservative members in the House to listen to this "dynamic" speech.

Mr. Anguish: One is a Liberal sitting on this side.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There are three.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair just explained the question of commenting on the presence or absence of hon. members. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) will consider those remarks.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have a long evening ahead. We are dealing with a number of amendments. I respectfully suggest to the Chair and hon. members that hon. members should have to deal with the amendments. If they do not deal with the amendments, they should be called to order. That is the only way we will get through these bills.

• (1830)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, as usual your wisdom is most welcome and worthwhile. I shall refrain from commenting further.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: I want to point out to Canadians and members of the chamber that the detailed proceedings of the committee are published. Every word spoken in committee is available to Canadians across the country through our journals system, and there they can find out who asked the questions and who was present for the votes. I would urge groups like the Consumers' Association of Canada, which sent a brief about its concerns, to read what happens in question period and learn who is the protector of consumers—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I respectfully suggest that we should insist upon relevance in this House. There is an amendment before the House which deals with a transportation tax for air carriers and maritime carriers. We are not in committee and we are not talking about how many members are in the House. Let us deal with the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, we can read the transcripts and see who asked the questions about the transportation tax. We can find out who was present to vote on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has made every effort to watch the problem resolve itself rather than attempt to rule on it. The fact is that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is quite correct; there is a rule of relevancy in the House. It is so rarely observed that I thought we might escape the issue by carrying on. But now I have to ask the hon. member for Calgary West if he would address himself to Motion No. 1 standing in his own name.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 1 deals with the minister's decision, through a ways and means motion which was never approved by this House but simply approved by cabinet and the minister, to put a tax on aviation and marine fuel. That tax existed for nine months. It brought revenues to the federal government from the aviation side of the transportation industry. In the process of collecting that tax the government discovered it had an international agreement with other nations and that the tax ran counter to that agreement. The testimony from the minister is clear and unequivocal: that tax will be rebated to international air carriers but will not be rebated to Canadian air carriers.

I want the House to visualize just how unfair and unjust that is for consumers, for employment, and for our economy generally. For example, Wardair, a Canadian-owned air transportation company, does 98 per cent of its business on international routes. The Canadian government has decreed that in the industry, when Canadians compete with a Russian, French, British or American airline flying from a Canadian airport to an airport in another country on the same route, the Canadian company shall pay 25 per cent more for fuel in this country than those foreign carriers.

That defies logic, it defies common sense, and it hurts. The airline industry in Canada is laying people off. Recently Air Canada reported a $27 million loss. It is an interesting coincidence that its increased tax bill was $26 million.

What the government decrees in Clause 12 of this bill is that Canadian companies shall be rendered non-competitive relative to foreign companies that fly in and out of Canadian airports. That is the first reason why this amendment to delete the clause should be supported. If the House were to vote to delete that clause, then the government would have no choice but to rebate the money to Canadian air carriers and thus treat them in a fashion consistent with the way carriers of other countries are treated. Where is the logic in penalizing a Canadian company and offering a bonus to a foreign company that competes with us?

The government says that a Canadian airline that flies from Canada to New York shall pay more for its fuel than the same size airplane on American Airlines which flies exactly the same route. That is insanity. It is a prescription for bankruptcy, a prescription for job loss. It is insanity. I defy any member of the Liberal Party who sits in this chamber to defend the logic of penalizing a Canadian company and bonusing a foreign company that is in direct competition on the same route. Hon. members opposite should stand up and give one sensible reason why any member of the House should vote for that principle.

Let us consider what we were told by the marine industry, Mr. Speaker. There are 17 ships at berth that have no cargo; they are sitting idle. We were told this is because these provisions have increased their costs to the point that they cannot compete with alternate modes of transportation. Two thirds of the cargo which our Great Lakes shipping fleet has traditionally carried from American producers to Baie Comeau for shipment around the world, has been lost for one reason, and that is the federal government's determination to collect a special tax from our shipping industry. That is the consequence of Clause 12, Mr. Speaker. We were told that the amount was $5 million, but the loss in Seaway tolls is $4 million and the loss to companies in increased paper work is at least $500,000. That is without even considering that if the sailors were employed and paid income tax, more revenue would be generated.

That is the consequence of Clause 12, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to move that it be deleted. I would remind hon. members that to support the motion would be to remove the discrimination that has cost so many jobs and has increased the cost of airline fares and cargo. It works its way through the economy, Mr. Speaker. We develop a transportation network that works reasonably efficiently when we allow transporters to compete. We have trucks, we have trains, we have ships, and we have planes. In his wisdom the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, not the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), has said that two elements of the four shall be made non-competitive. Why did he pick on ships and planes? The answer we got in committee was because it is administratively easier to tax ships and planes and the fuel they use than it is to tax trucks or trains—no economic logic, no consideration of the repercussions on jobs and costs; simply that it is administratively easier to collect a tax from those two elements of our shipping industry.

• (1840)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, hon. members will discover in other amendments and motions that the same lack of logic, the same harmful consequences exist. I urge members of the Liberal Party in particular, perhaps in caucus or in some special committee, first to learn about these amendments, why they have been proposed, what they would do that would be good for this nation, and then mount a lobby group. We watched the lobby over the concerns to Hydro-Quebec and Ontario Hydro, and it worked. The minister changed what the members wanted him to change. I invite them to form a similar lobby to support this party in passing the amendments we have proposed and which they think make sense.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to a member of the Liberal Party standing in this chamber and telling me why this first amendment does not make sense. All it seeks to do is to treat aviation and shipping in a manner consistent with the way we treat trains and trucks. It further seeks to treat a Canadian company as well as we treat a foreign country air carrier. It provides no special advantage for the Canadian carrier; it simply takes away the disadvantage which the minister said Canadian carriers must bear. We must do that as quickly as we can, before those carriers face bankruptcy.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on this amendment on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I listened carefully to the words of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I noted how much he loves to speak. In fact, words come out of him sort of like excrement coming out of a goose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: He goes on and on and, it seems to me, hardly deals with the matter in question. If he looked at the committee meetings, which we both attended, he would find that the essential—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised points of order because the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) mentioned the committee. He is now doing exactly the same thing. If it is to apply to one member, it should apply to all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair may be confused. It was an earlier expression of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) which had preoccupied my mind and I was expecting that to be the point of order the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was raising. I listened attentively to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway—the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I heard the expression used by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). The hon. member was getting into the barnyard and talking about excrement. Knowing that he comes from Vancouver-Kingsway, which is sort of an urban riding, I really do not know whether he has seen a goose in his life. But certainly when we listen to him in this House we know what we are looking at when he talks, and that is a sort of goose which speaks English. However, we have not gotten down to the bladder or the udder and, quite frankly, I go right back to what the former right hon. member for Prince Albert said here in this chamber many years ago. When you are dealing with gas policy, or when you are dealing with large national issues, and/or if you are following elephants, you do not go after rabbit tracks. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, when you are in a contest with a skunk, you certainly do not try to match him at the hydrant.

Mr. Waddell: Is that a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am going to deal with the reference made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway because it has now come to the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what I was protesting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Hon. members will recognize that some words are considered unparliamentary. Matters have even got to the point where there is a list of those words. My recollection, which may be reliable, is that no other hon. member has yet caused the Chair to rule on the particular expression he used. However, there is another matter related to unparliamentary language, and that is that the Chair has a responsibility to judge whether the remarks were made in a certain temper or mood within the House. In that regard I would appeal to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to keep the chamber as cool as possible or, if he chooses to heat it up, to do so by an address to the motion in front of him rather than by personal remarks to other members.

Mr. Waddell: Of course you are right, Mr. Speaker, and I will not pursue that line. I will try to take my own advice and get down to the matters at hand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Although I might say I cannot think of anything more Canadian than goose and gander.

We are dealing with an amendment having to do with a transportation tax. If I could put it very simply, the problem is as follows. We started out with a tax which would stop foreign operators from coming in and picking up cheap fuel in Canada. But what we heard in committee—and this was my only reference to the committee—from the airlines, was that we now have a situation where fuel is more expensive for Canadian carriers. It goes further in that we gave a rebate to foreign carriers but not to Canadian carriers. So it really represents a sort of zig-zag government policy, which is, I suspect, part of the reason the hon. member brought in his amendment. I just wish he had gotten right down to it and said that.

In the couple of minutes I have I want to show how that problem still exists in another area of transportation, namely, the marine transportation field, and to show that Bill C-103 discriminates against that industry. I have a particular interest in the marine industry because, as the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) pointed out, I do come from the west coast and this is of some interest to the shipping people out there.

I want to point out that American barges are competing with Canadian barges in supplying bunker oil to ships in Vancouver Harbour. The price difference is as follows: the Canadian price is $1.68 per gallon, and the American price is $1.38 per gallon. As a result of Canadian prices being higher than American prices, Canadian suppliers are suffering.

• (1850)

I talked to Colin Park, who is manager of the oil division of Seaspan International Ltd. which does 95 per cent of the ship bunkering in Vancouver, and he told me that his company's business is down 25 per cent as a direct result of the price difference.

Tom McGrath, president of the seaman's section of the CBRT on the west coast, is a well known labour leader. He is very colourful. He is very quick to pick up issues on the coast which hurt his membership and ordinary workers on the west coast. Mr. McGrath confirmed that the problem has meant unemployment for his members.

I am told the difference to which I referred, between the American and Canadian price, is not solely due to the tax we are talking about in this bill. You have to realize the B.C. government has also imposed a tax on bunker fuel in the amount of $5.66 a barrel. There is also a charge which we call the TFCRC that we are talking about, of approximately $3.25 per barrel. As a result we have a situation on the west coast where the difference between the Canadian and the American price is about $6 per barrel.

We heard the parliamentary secretary say not to worry, that Canadian prices are always cheaper than American. The average price of heavy bunker fuel in Canada now is about $31 to $35 per barrel. Canadian refiners on the west coast who supply Seaspan International are faced with the choice of either losing money or losing business. They seem to be doing both. I am told they are absorbing much of the dollar loss while the suppliers like Seaspan are losing business. I am informed that the P & O Steamship Line, which company brings in its colourful cruise ships and tourist trade to Vancouver, usually has three cruise ships bunkering in Vancouver every summer. But this year the P & O line has not asked for Canadian bids at all. Mr. Park says that he is afraid this business is being lost to Americans.

I put these matters to Admiral Timbrell, who testified before the committee. He agreed these were problems. On May 2, 1982, in the House of Commons, the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), a Liberal Member of Parliament, asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr.Lalonde) concerning this matter. As reported on page 16095 of Hansard he said:

> Could the minister inform the House whether he agrees with statements made by representatives of the Canadian shipping industry who held a convention here in Ottawa this week? They felt that levying the surcharge on marine fuel expended on international voyages in inland waters on Canadian entrepreneurs was discriminatory, and also that the surcharge was an infringement of the National Transportation Act, since it applied only to marine transportation and not to railway or highway transportation, and finally, that a large part of the traffic in American goods carried by Canadian entrepreneurs would now be carried by American shippers who, as a result of the surcharge, would now be economically more attractive.

That states the case for the opposition, a case which was raised by the hon. member for La Prairie. I put that same question to Admiral Timbrell in the committee. I also quoted to Admiral Timbrell the answer given by the minister in the House. The minister said that it was not a problem. Admiral Timbrell disagreed with what the minister said and agreed with the question raised by the hon. member for La Prairie. Our own merchant shipping people are being discriminated against.

It is essential that we realize how important shipping interests are in Canada in the sense of efficiency in energy. I am told that if you deal with a tonne mile, which is one gallon of fuel expended to take one tonne one mile, the figures for water are 600 compared to 200 for rail, 70 for trucking, 8 for air, and 3.25 for pipelines. Why are we subsidizing pipelines and trucks, and helping railways, and at the same time discriminating through this tax against the marine shipping people? It does not make sense in terms of efficiency of energy, nor does it make sense to discriminate against one form of transportation vis-à-vis another. It hurts people in my part of the country. I am grateful to the two gentlemen I mentioned for raising this matter, and that is why we on this side of the House are prepared to support this amending motion.

We invite the government to deal with our charges and the charges made before the committee in a submission by the Dominion Marine Association which was filed on May 7, 1982, as well as the evidence of Rear Admiral Timbrell given at the committee hearing on May 18, 1982. We invite the government to respond to that here in the House and to tell us why it is not prepared to accept this amendment and change this discriminatory form of taxation.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I must say I was interested to see the parliamentary secretary stand up. I do not know if he was going to make a general reply on the combination of amendments you now have before you, but I must say, almost with apology, that I find myself nearly in agreement with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with respect to the first motion, the fuel compensation tax. I will not talk in combination and/or in co-operation with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingway who, quite frankly, in the relatively short period he has spent in this House has made a contribution that is not enhanced when he talks about geese, unless he talks about geese at Thanksgiving time. If he talks about geese and certain functions of geese and/or people and what they do during the day, then I think he debases his own character and contribution to this House.

I must ask whether it adds to the dignity of the House by rising on a question of privilege, with the quotation marks around the word "privilege", when different members use expressions which seem to be cute at the time but do reflect adversely not only on hon. members but obviously on this institution. Having gone through the Fraser Birch Dawson "Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms", I will not take the time to go through all the expressions that have been proved unparliamentary. All I can say is that a point like that is only treated in the gender in which it is uttered, and that is jest! For example, when "the pig has nothing left but a squeak" is deemed unparliamentary, and when the utterance the word "stinker" is deemed unparliamentary, you do not have to get much of a combination between goose and what happens to a goose after it eats food to realize that that itself might be deemed unparliamentary. Enough said.

I did agree with almost everything the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said in terms of Motion No. 1, which deals with the fuel compensation tax. Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, has many fundamental taxing provisions of the National Energy Program.

• (1900)

Before I get into the fuel compensation tax, I would like to pay tribute to members on all sides, certainly on the opposition side, be they Conservative or NDP, and perhaps even Liberals—certainly to those members who did take the time in committee to deal with these very complex bills which started as that complex juggernaut with which the House was confronted weeks ago when the bells rang for many days.

We all know that the House was confronted with an omnibus bill which was unintelligible in its construction or political comment which made it difficult to criticize since it covered everything in energy under the sun. Due to the ringing of the bells and the restoration of some reason to the House, there is now this House order which puts a time limit on these bills, including C-103, and provides for debate during the supper hours. We used to debate during supper hour many years ago and perhaps, in situations like this, it might not be such a bad situation to use the time during the supper hour to make some progress.

I believe that the hon. members who are responsible for those bills being drafted under the time limit which we all know was imposed by a House order, deserve credit. They are more involved with the technicalities and interaction of these bills than certainly I am. I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation but I am a member of the Standing Committee on Transport. In that respect I would like to express my views on the relevant part of Bill C-103, the fuel compensation Tax, as well as the amending motion moved by my party. That amendment in effect moves to strike the fuel compensation tax section out.

Although I do not know all the complexities of this energy taxation, I want to speak about the fuel compensation tax in an attempt to get members of the House, especially on the government side, to understand what will happen if they vote against our amendment.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stood in the House many months ago to introduce his infamous budget, it not only caused the downfall of the dollar and seriously affected businesses, farmers and home owners who cannot afford homes, but also caused his own political downfall. His hair that was fluffed and blown when he used to enter the Chamber is no longer blown or fluffed; it is flat on the top of his head like his political future because of that budget of November 12.

The business, political, and economic communities had to digest the massive amount of suggested tax changes which were contained in the budget. It was not a white paper, green paper, or blue paper. It was not a Benson tax paper, or Walter Gordon's tax paper in which the Canadian public had a chance to have an input and to suggest tax changes. These tax changes were all hidden in the budget. Since then we have stumbled upon one tax change or reform after another. Napoleon's retreat from Moscow many years ago seems like an orderly progression compared to the retreat of the Minister of Finance.

I think it is most appropriate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance are in Versailles in the Palace of Mirrors because, without reflecting on the Prime Minister, which would be an entirely new speech, the Minister of Finance must have concocted that budget in a Palace of Mirrors. What has happened is that those mirrors have become misty—the sun of reality has shone upon him, blinding him, and he has fortunately begun to react to the pressure from the public to begin implementing tax changes one after the other. Six retreats from Moscow is the MacEachen retreat from Cape Breton.

Mr. Dingwall: What did you do?

Mr. Nowlan: The parliamentary secretary has a relatively brief time in this Chamber before we go to the people. I say that kindly because you are a very enjoyable young man and I would like to believe that you have a longer political future but, quite frankly, in terms of the political waters of the deep east, or in deep Cape Breton, your political future is just about as firm as the Minister of Finance's.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member's remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Nowlan: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, you are quite correct. I should have been directing my remarks to the Chair, but I feel so kindly toward the parliamentary secretary that I do forget the procedure. I would like to get to the substance and, through you, just say hello to my hon. friend from Cape Breton. He is a fellow Nova Scotian, and in that sense he has many good characteristics.

With respect to the November 12 budget, the Minister of Finance had three mastheads to it, if I remember correctly. One of them was called equity. This was supposed to be one of the governing philosophies behind the budget.

Since I have been involved in politics for a number of years I realize that nothing should be assumed about what your audience may understand you to say, but in any event I have to make assumptions because I have not dissected the Speaker's ruling. Since I am not a member of the energy committee, I will not attempt to do that, but I am puzzled as to how the Chair took one amendment which was so clean—to repeal the section of the act which imposes the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge—and combine it with another motion. As I have said, I have not studied the ruling which was made when this debate started at six o'clock, but without reading the reasons of the ruling I am frankly disappointed that the Chair would combine the motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, Motion No. 1 is to be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Dingwall: Are you finished?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I am not finished at all. I appreciate your comment, Mr. Speaker. I heard the Chair's ruling and, for the purposes of debate, I suppose matters should be consolidated. Now that the vote is on Motion No. 1 I will direct my remarks to that motion alone.

Motion No. 1 to amend Bill C-103 is short and simple. It simply attempts to delete the imposition of the transport fuel compensation recovery charge. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway does, I am sure members of the House understand what that transportation fuel compensation recovery charge means. You and I know, and perhaps some members, that the charge on fuel was imposed by the government in 1980, I believe, when the price of gas was not higher in Canada than in any other part of the world, especially in the United States. There was the fear expressed by some, including politicians, that Americans were coming to Canada to fill up with fuel at our deflated prices, and driving or flying back to the United States.

I am pleased to see the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway talk about Vancouver, which is one of the true vibrant ports of the nation, and I appreciate the contest between Seattle and Vancouver. However, perhaps a more relevant concern was marine traffic on the Great-Lakes and the competition between Canadian lakers and American lakers. The purpose of the fuel charge at the time it was imposed was to equal the price of fuel used by lake boats relative to the price charged in the United States. It was as simple as that.

• (1910)

I cannot think of any better example of the lunacy of those parts of the National Energy Program which are lunatic than the transportation fuel compensatin recovery charge which has no capacity to change even though the circumstances have changed. We know that the price of gasoline in Canada is higher than in the United States. It is lower in the United States than in Canada. Yet we have this ridiculous situation in terms of equity that if one is a Canadian air carrier or Canadian lakeboat shipper, one has to pay the increased tax levied two years before when our prices were high and American prices were low, whereas the American air carriers and lakeboat operators do not have to pay this tax today.

That is not my evidence or opinion. The most pertinent evidence before the committee was heard as recently as Tuesday, May 18, at which time not only the Canadian Air Transport group appeared, but also Admiral Timbrell and the president of the Air Transport Association of Canada, Mr. Angus C. Morrison. Sandy Morrison is a very interesting Canadian who has had some history in Ottawa. There are some people in this chamber, and perhaps even the Chair, who remember when Sandy Morrison was an executive assistant to one of the ministers of transport at some other time.

Sandy Morrison is a great individual. I know him very well, I would not suggest that he was a political colleague of mine, to say the least, yet he is now president. I can understand why he is the president of the Air Transport Association of Canada. He knows many people in Ottawa. So be it. I am prepared to face that reality. If another party is in power for 40 years, there will be other Sandy Morrisons. That is fine, too. That is the name of the game, to a point. But Sandy—Angus C.—Morrison is President of the Air Transport Association of Canada. Even the ex-whip of the Liberal Party, the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre), who was over here a moment ago, will, I think remember Mr. Morrison. Mr. Morrison has said, as I said earlier, that this transportation fuel compensation recovery charge, in today's climate, is a discriminatory charge against domestic air carriers. It is not simply discriminatory. I want to show the lunacy of the situation under this charge which was levied against all air carriers.

I want to deal with the air carriers and the marine carriers under this charge. As set out in the evidence before the energy committee, and by the minister and his officials in the Transport committee, the domestic carriers and the Air Carriers International have had to pay several millions of dollars under this charge.

When it was levied, the Government of Canada, this present government, was warned that it could not levy a special charge for fuel against international air carriers because that would do one of two things. It would breach the bilateral agreements between countries, or it would run straight in the face of the air associations around the world as it would breach their agreements.

Does Your Honour know what has happened and what makes this matter so idiotic? The United States said that the Government of Canada was levying a discriminating charge against international carriers, that it was unfair and that it would take the matter to wherever disputes are resolved, to arbitration within the system. Mainly because of this, the Government of Canada reluctantly said, "Do you know something? You are right. It is discriminatory".

We are not referring to several thousands of dollars, but, rather, many millions of dollars. To try to be as accurate here as I could, I was going to say $54 million domestically, and $50 million internationally. It is fairly close to that, and I could stand to be corrected. But let us say that the international carriers have said, "Hey, Government of Canada, under that discriminatory tax, you owe us approximately $50-odd million in rebate".

Lo and behold, because the Government of Canada was caught out in left field, it notified External Affairs which notified all the relevant embassies to say, "Please get the diplomatic couriers and an exchange of correspondence going so that a system or process could be set where we could pay back $50 million to the international carriers". Who is in competition with the international carriers in Canada but the domestic air carriers? We have now flipped this thing completely around from levying a tax against international carriers to ensure they paid the same for fuel that our domestic carriers were paying. They had to pay the same tax, under the breach of the IACA agreements and the bilateral agreements between Canada and other countries, flying into Canada.

Our government, because of pressure and because of the law of their agreements, has said, "Governments of the world, international government, you are right. We will have to pay back that $54 million in fuel compensation taxes." Yet, what is the situation with the domestic carriers? The domestic carriers have still been levied and have paid part of the debt of $50-odd million they have incurred under that tax. They have had no chance, and the question as to whether the government will pay back that tax to them has been turned down so far.

I do not want to get into the subject in depth because it is another law, but under another feature of the budget, which, in effect, I believe is Bill C-108, the government will not continue to charge the fuel compensation tax under Bill C-103 which, in effect, it has charged for two years. Under the tax changes which will eventually come up before the House in a ways and means motion, the same tax with the same impact will be levied against domestic carriers as we have levied before under Bill C-103.

There is the absolutely ridiculous situation involving domestic carriers. We all know how the air traffic industry today is in a very bottom line, almost thumb-sucking, very uncertain situation in trying to stay above the line between red and black. Yet, because of a direct policy of this government under Bill C-103 and the fuel compensation tax, which perhaps started off with some reason but which had no capability of changing when the circumstances changed, we are left in the ridiculous situation that if hon. members in the government vote against the amendment, they are voting to keep in place discrimination against domestic and international carriers. That is what will happen if government members feel compelled to blindly support the government as they so often do.

I would like to refer to the other element, the marine part of this tax, and the interesting discrimination which will be incorporated in legislation, if this amendment does not carry. If I were a betting man, I would guess the odds were that it may not because the numbers are not on this side.

If I were a member from Ontario, especially a member from the Lakehead or an area joined to any lake system, I do not see how I could even begin to support that feature, Bill C-103, and allow the fuel compensation tax to stay because it also discriminates against the lake carriers. Today, our lake carriers are paying this tax, even though they are in competition with the American carriers. Again, I wish the press, who sometimes lambaste Members of Parliament, would pay attention to what goes on in the committee and find out some of the evidence, because I must say that I am a little jaundiced about what goes on in committee, the waste of time there, the hours and hours. But at least committees do collect a lot of interesting evidence and they are repositories of a lot of evidence.

What I said here earlier about the marine fuel compensation tax were not my words. They were the words of Admiral Timbrell, who happens to be—like Angus Morrison was the President of the Air Transport Association—the president of the Dominion Marine Association.

• (1920)

It is interesting for those members from Ontario especially, and even from Quebec, because they are affected by the evidence that Admiral Timbrell gave in that committee. He said, amongst other things, that his association represents 19 Canadian companies, that they have approximately 172 ships, or over 90 per cent of the Canadian fleet of large ships, 1,000 tons and greater. He said:

> We operate principally in the Great Lakes and down the St. Lawrence and outside, coastal and occasionally deep sea.

They basically are a St. Lawrence operation. He says again in his evidence, interestingly enough, on May 18, reported at page 20:26 of the committee minutes of proceedings:

> In an average year, we move about 90 million tonnes of cargo. To put it in perspective for you, we carry more in eight and a half months, which is our operating season, because of freeze-up, than Canadian Pacific rail does in twelve and slightly less than CN. About 50 per cent of our cargoes are foreign or are on international trade.

We know, of course, that CN and CP carry an awful lot of cargo. He mentions the twofold nature of the competition—with the United States and also competition in Canada. They compete against rail, they compete against bus, and those people do not pay the fuel compensation tax. He points out here, in a most interesting way:

> When the charge came on May 1 last year and until January 1, my companies had paid the equivalent or approximate sum of $5 million in the TFCRC. That $5 million on our international trade represented an increase of approximately 6 per cent on our charges.

He says that in addition there was a $500,000 bill for administration charges. In terms of the tight competition between the Canadian lake carrier and the American lake carrier, it is the evidence, according to the admiral, the president of the Dominion Marine Association—not me, not our party, but the president of the Dominion Marine Association that represents a conglomerate of Great Lake shipping, Upper Canada Lake shipping and Paul Martin's company. One of those is Paul Martin's company—another interesting Canadian who certainly has had an interesting political background.

All these gentlemen, regardless of their political background—that is the point—have said that this tax is discriminatory against Canadians trying to service the international market and/or the domestic market. He pointed this out here in a most interesting way. Perhaps I should read this for members opposite who were not privileged, as most of us were not, to be there at the committee hearing. He talked about the shipment of grain and how his association was so involved in grain, and how Canada gets the benefit of that traffic. He said as follows:

> Last year, an average year, we carried approximately 6 million tonnes of U.S. grain to the lower elevators. We charge approximately $10 a tonne, so there is $60 million U.S. we collected for moving that grain. For each load of grain that went through the seaway, the seaway collects approximately $21,000 out of a $25,000 bill. The other $4,000 is for a ship. So, for every cargo we do not take through the seaway, they lose $21,000. If that grain, the U.S. grain, does not arrive at our lower elevators at places like Baie-Comeau Port-Cartier, Three Rivers, Quebec, Montreal, then those elevators, which are Canadian investments, lose an equal amount.

He is saying, and he gives the figures, they have been losing that amount. If for no other reason than that, in terms of the fuel compensation tax, which is a discriminatory tax against Canadians in competition with Americans, I would ask members of this House, before they blindly vote the party line, to try to sort out some of this energy problem and, in terms of Bill C-103, vote for the amendment that we have moved in Motion No. 1. That motion is clear, simple but strong, and it says "delete the fuel compensation charge under Bill C-103, primarily because the circumstances have changed."

If we could move there, Mr. Speaker, that, and another whole speech I could give, might show Canadians outside the chamber that this chamber and members in it are a little responsive to some of the problems in reality in the economy. There is just no logical reason why domestic air carriers in Canada should not be refunded the same as international carriers, when the two carriers are in competition with another; and there is even less reason why our Canadian lake shippers, in competition with their American colleagues and competitors, should still be charged a fuel compensation tax when their American competitors are not.

That is discrimination. That is not equity, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is in the appropriate place tonight, in the palace of Versailles, in the palace of mirrors, because this whole budget is a mirror and this Bill C-103 and the fuel compensation tax is one of the most distorted mirrors in the energy scene.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to add too extensive a discussion on this first motion, as I understand we will have many chances tonight to speak to this bill.

First of all, I am particularly concerned about the amendment in front of us, presented by our party. This is a simple motion, to delete this clause altogether. My colleague who spoke immediately before me said he was not in the committee. I was fortunate to be in that committee, to hear the pleading of the witnesses. I wished that the minister could have been there to listen to those witnesses.

I would like to refer particularly to one gentleman who with total dedication got a very strong point across. That is Mr. Currie of Wardair. The point that he brought out for us so clearly dealt with this clause. It is that Wardair is the only privately financed airline that is not either government owned or connected with a large financial institution. They have a debt to the Canadian government of $8.5 million.

Wardair is an airline that goes back in history to Yellowknife, to the Northwest Territories. A gentleman called Max Ward had the guts and the entrepreneurial spirit to start something Canadian, privately financed. This gentleman announced and brought out their first quarter earnings, showing a loss, because they have to show a liability of $8.5 million.

Let me compare that to KLM or British Airways or other foreign carriers which operate out of Canada. They got their money back. But Max Ward of Wardair did not get his money back. He is a Canadian, he is being discriminated against, according to the Constitution that the Liberal members are so proud of. There is something wrong when a Canadian citizen is discriminated against compared to foreigners. That is my stand for getting rid of this Clause 12.

Another point in regard to air transportation is that Mr. Lindsay, a vice president of the Air Transport Association and in charge of government affairs—I am sure he is a long-time friend of the government—gave evidence on May 18.

• (1930)

He said right at the beginning that Air Canada was making a profit, and Mr. Currie referred to why it was making a profit. At that date he stated Air Canada was making a profit. How can a vice-president of the Air Transport Association of Canada one day say Air Canada is making a profit and a week later the financial statements show Air Canada lost $27 million? Air Canada had to pay $26 million of it back to the government. I do not feel badly about Air Canada because whether it has a profit or a loss, it all ends up back in the same government pot. It is strictly a question of bookkeeping, and I would say the minister is probably a genius at manipulation of numbers, so it does not worry him, but it worries me because a man like Max Ward and Wardair are being discriminated against under this act.

I would now like to turn to the Dominion Marine Association and Rear Admiral Timbrell, who I found to be a very clear-thinking witness. He gave us a great deal of information. What he impressed upon me was that we do not have many industries in this country which are really Canadian. We cannot call the automobile industry Canadian. We can call the steel industry Canadian; my comments will reflect that. However, Rear Admiral Timbrell pointed out that what the government is doing is removing a benefit to a Canadian carrier. We could call it a non-tariff barrier, which every country in the world provides, but by removing this benefit, the government has put 17 ships out of business. Seventeen lake boats are out of business. They employed 500 people with a capital investment of $535 million.

This industry has always had a difficult time. It has never had a decent break from the government. I acknowledge that the shipbuilding industry has, but these people have not. They pay the price. They could buy their ships offshore, and the Canadian government would have to offset that by giving grants to the shipbuilding industry so it could compete with Japan, Taiwan and other countries, but this industry does not even have the advantage of the airline industry. It pays $40 million per lake boat, and it must finance that with money at 17 per cent to 20 per cent under this current administration.

We should encourage an industry which is purely Canadian and which has been successful, in spite of lack of incentives. Last year alone the industry paid $5 million in taxes, but this year it will lose $40 million in revenues. That is very bad thinking on the part of the government. It has prevented boats from travelling through the seaway, where the government could collect approximately $2 million. Five hundred people are now in the ranks of the unemployed. They are collecting unemployment insurance, and the government is not collecting any taxes from them. An interesting point is that these people are not low paid. The average wage on a boat is $30,000. The reason for that is the hours are 24 hours a day for eight months, and they take their holidays in the winter. These men are not paying taxes this year. They are among the 1.750 million people unemployed in the country, and I am including the 500,000 who are not even in the statistics. When we work out what the tax on their income would be, we find that it comes to in excess of $2.5 million. Then when we add to that the fact that these gentlemen are not able to buy anything because they have no income, we see that the government loses out on sales tax. The one I would like to mention in particular is the 24 cents excise tax on gas. There is also the 4.5 cents tax to buy Petrofina. So this sum of money is increased by another $1.5 million. As I calculate it, the government is out millions because of its being punitive to a Canadian industry.

I strongly urge that this House consider this motion and vote for it because the tax with which we are dealing is punitive. It benefits foreigners. It allows them to take our airline business away from us and allows American railroads, the American shipping industry to take grain shipments away from us via the Mississippi. I plead with the backbenchers of the Liberal Party to support this motion, especially if they want to get back into this House the next time around. Canadians are hurting. Jobs are needed. I plead with you, Mr. Speaker, as one of the members of that bench at times—you are not right now, but you are at times—to talk to your colleagues.

I would like to make one last point about a person in my riding. A small entrepreneur there decided it would conserve energy if transport trailers were shipped across Lake Ontario as opposed to going all the way around from Oshawa to Rochester. According to the information given to me by Rear Admiral Timbrell, it is some six times as efficient to go by ship as it is to go by truck. That gentleman started by going by carrier from Oshawa to Rochester, but this tax is one of the factors which put him out of business. We should provide grants to gentlemen like this who want to conserve. Transportation by boat is three times more fuel efficient than transportation by rail, and it is Canadian, not American.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few points on Motion No. 1. It is incredible to me that this government would be in favour—which it will demonstrate if it votes against this amendment—of treating foreign carriers of Canadian goods or foreign carriers competing with Canadians more favourably than domestic carriers. Surely we should be encouraging Canadians to export and to be more competitive with other countries around the world. I refer specifically to agricultural commodities. Agricultural commodities are a very important earner of foreign exchange for this country. Many of our agricultural products come from the west. The bulk of grain exported to earn foreign exchange for this country comes from the west. Much of our country is land-locked, and it is important that we are capable of moving goods from the west efficiently to export positions. That usually means seaboards, either east or west, and it is important that Canadian carriers be as competitive as possible with the countries with which we compete for foreign markets.

To talk specifically about grain, we know there are American grain carriers on the Great Lakes. Those operators hire out and lease their boats to move grain. If we put Canadian carriers into a position where they are not competitive with American carriers, that puts us in western Canada in a very precarious position in terms of exporting our grain. I just cannot believe this government would be in favour, by voting against this amendment, of giving an unfair advantage. Initially, the government imposed this tax on foreign carriers. It subsequently removed that tax and gave an advantage to foreign carriers over Canadian carriers. That to me seems ludicrous.

Let us look at what the European Economic Community does in terms of some of the agricultural commodities it produces. The EEC pays domestic producers of wheat consumed in the European Economic Community about $9 a bushel, which is $4.50 more than we pay here.

• (1940)

Instead of taking that into account and trying to be as fair as possible with our domestic producers, the government proposed a tax which puts our producers at a disadvantage when compared to foreign producers. I find it incredible that it would do such a thing.

The government has recognized that we have problems with rail capacity in western Canada and we have to give it credit for addressing that problem. But, Mr. Speaker, there is some unused capacity at Thunder Bay. However, this tax means that our shippers cannot compete with the Americans. It does not make sense to have unused capacity in one port and then tax Canadians at a higher rate than foreigners who carry our commodities. That does not make any sense to me.

The government wonders why it does not have any support in western Canada. Perhaps it should look for answers at some of the measures it brings before this House such as the one we are considering tonight. This tax will hurt our capacity to move grain to export and will make us less competitive with the Americans who are our chief competitors for world markets.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) who just spoke pointed out that 17 carriers will be put out of business. I do not know how many of them will not operate in the present shipping season and I do not know how many are grain carriers, but even if they stay in business they will be at a disadvantage because of this tax.

The hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) went over many points that I should have liked to deal with. I do not want to prolong the debate, but I should like to point out that if it is fair that the government should revoke and remit the tax paid by foreign carriers that burn Canadian fuel because of an international obligation, surely it should be incumbent upon the government to treat Canadian carriers in the same way. Essentially that is all the motion asks. Members of the government who vote against the motion will really be voting in favour of discriminating against Canadian carriers of Canadian goods. That will hurt us on the international market.

We have problems with the Canadian dollar and with interest rates. One of the ways to solve these problems is to be competitive in the export market. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) arranged to borrow $750 million on foreign money markets to support the Canadian dollar. Surely the government should instead encourage Canadians to export goods rather than borrow the money. If we can sell the goods that we can produce very efficiently, then we will not have a debt. When we borrow money, not only do we have to pay the money back but we also have to pay interest on it. This tax will discourage Canadians from earning the money we need to support our dollar and to bring down interest rates.

I find it incredible that the opposition should have to bring in an amendment like this one. If the government were governing in the best interests of all Canadians, it would not draft a bill like this in the first place.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will just take a few moments to reiterate the reasons for this amendment and to provide some reasons why members of the House, if they are to fulfil their responsibilities, will vote for it and strike Clause 12 from Bill C-103.

Clause 12 introduces a transportation fuel compensation recovery charge—a name long enough to confuse people as to its intent. That means it is confusing enough to deflect some of the political flack that should properly be directed at a government that would bring in what could only be described as an atrocious taxation measure.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and spokesmen for the Liberal party repeatedly claim to have done a marvellous job in designing an energy policy for this country. In particular they are concerned about the consumers of energy in Canada and, as an expression of that concern, they have moved to protect Canadians from the world price. For a number of years that has been the theme of the Liberal Party—that it is protecting Canadian consumers from the world price. That is a fallacious claim, Mr. Speaker. Any Canadian who lives near the border or who has travelled in the United States knows that it is cheaper to buy gasoline there than in Canada, even though the United States is at world prices.

We also know, particularly people in western Canada, that the policy means that the Liberal Party would rob the politically weak part of the country to give to the politically strong part of the country. This is all done in the guise of national unity with advertisements on television and so on. All the while the government expresses concerns about the growth of separatism in western Canada.

When you start monkeying about in the marketplace, whether you be the Canadian government, the Polish government, the government of the Soviet Union or any other, you louse things up. No central planning or decision-making operation can compete with a free market system which has the tremendous advantage of decentralized decision-making. That is one element which is absolutely essential to efficiency and effectiveness. When the government claims that things can be done better through centralized planning, it keeps making the same kinds of dumb, stupid mistakes—not through malice, not necessarily through lack of intelligence, except to the extent that it cannot see that central planning schemes do not work. They have never worked anywhere; they will never work because they cannot compete with the efficiency and effectiveness of the free market system.

The transportation fuel recovery charge is a classic example of this. For the brief period when we had cheap fuel in Canada, people started to take advantage of it. Airlines going from New York to Montreal to Europe found it made sense to fuel up in Montreal because of the cheaper fuel. They did not load up in New York. Truckers would enter Canada with an empty tank and leave with a full one, and ships did the same thing. It is understandable.

But the clever genuises who designed the National Energy Program imposed a transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. One day a piece of paper was tabled in the House and there was a new tax. The House was not asked about it. Members were not asked about it—but there was a new tax. But these clever little geniuses who designed this tax forgot to see whether in fact it was permissible, given our obligations under bilateral agreements with other countries. Lo and behold it is not permissible, it violates some of our treaties.

• (1950)

That did not bother this government for awhile, the fact that provisions of the NEP violated our obligations under GATT and so on, and we have not seen the end of that yet. They are not bothered by any contract they sign with the provinces. Why should they be bothered by any of their international treaties? But then the Americans said they were going to take the issue to arbitration, and so the Canadian government caved in. How did they cave in? Well, through a little provision in the Financial Administration Act, I believe, which allows the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) to rebate certain taxes. Rather than come out and be honest and admit they made a mistake—oh, no, no such admission—quietly, through this other provision, they are going to rebate the tax, but only to foreign international carriers, not to Canadian international carriers.

These same little geniuses have come up with a new scheme. They are going to do the same thing, but supposedly through the income tax system. It remains to be seen whether or not it will work. In essence, then, this clause concerning air transport is cancelled. It came into existence and then disappeared before the House of Commons had a chance to discuss it. It will not in fact ever apply to foreign carriers who will now have the full sum of $46.5 million rebated to them. It will only apply to Canadian international carriers. They will have to pay that $50 million.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the incredible situation we have. The House of Commons is being asked to approve a tax which no longer exists. It came into existence and disappeared before we even got around to considering it or thinking about it. It was introduced to supposedly prevent foreign carriers from taking unfair advantage of an energy pricing scheme which was supposed to protect Canadians from the world price, but which will result in Canadian international carriers paying the full tax while foreign airlines do not. Mr. Speaker, Rube Goldberg could not have designed a more stupid, insane and asinine scheme than this one.

It is incredible that anyone could come forward with this piece of trash and not submit his resignation. This is an affront to democracy, decency and common sense. It really is unbelievable. We must be a very docile people to tolerate this kind of thing. Frankly, I do not understand why Max Ward has not strapped some machine guns on those jets of his and strafed this place. The only reason this tax still applies to Canadian carriers is because Max Ward happens to come from Edmonton and does not have that much political clout. If he had been born in the minister's riding, we would not have this asinine tax; we would not have this silly and absurd circumstance where the House of Commons is being asked to retroactively approve a discriminatory tax, one which was supposedly to prevent foreigners from taking advantage of energy policies which are supposed to protect Canadians. There is no simple way to describe that stupid situation. I hope when those trained donkeys vote against this amendment, they at least have the decency to blush.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): Order, please. The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division stands deferred.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now deal with the second motion on the Order Paper.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto be amended in Clause 16 by striking out lines 42 to 44 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"ration of the parties, the Gov-".

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, that amendment, standing by itself, is difficult to understand given that it contains two half-words "ration" and "Gov". The part of the act which this motion now seeks to amend reads as follows:

Where no agreement is entered into under section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this Part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province.

If the amendment were to pass, Mr. Speaker, that section would now read:

• (2000)

Where no agreement is entered into under section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, the Governor in Council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil—

In other words, with this amendment the government of a producer-province may enter into an agreement setting crude oil prices if those parties agree they may change that agreement, or the agreement may be terminated. Without this amendment, what we have is a situation where the federal government unilaterally could terminate any agreement that it had entered into with a producer-province with respect to crude oil prices.

What we are trying to do through this amendment is to take out of the hands of the federal government the ability to unilaterally break a contract. Just on the surface, just from the point of view of common decency, convention, practice and established procedure, surely we should be able to do that. I like to think, I know it is naive, that Canadians and therefore the Canadian government can be trusted to keep their oral contracts. A promise made by any Canadian or by the Government of Canada should be kept. I would like to think that a handshake is all that you need to bind a contract.

Mr. Fennell: With this government?

Mr. Andre: I know that is naive. It would probably put too many lawyers out of business if we ever followed that practice in this country, but it is not necessarily a bad thing. At least in Canada a written contract should be binding. A written contract should be something that binds and commits. Written contracts, of course, have force majeure provisions. That is, if some extreme event occurs, the contract may not be enforceable. That is understandable.

But to write into law and to make the law of Canada state that the federal government may enter into a contract and break it at whatever time and for whatever reason it wants is bad practice. It is bad law. More than that, it contributes to disharmony and difficulties in this country when a federal government breaks its word and breaks its contract.

In existence right now is an agreement between the federal government and the producing provinces for the price of oil. The agreement was effective September 1, 1981. But there was an agreement before that which was entered into in late 1975 for crude oil pricing. That agreement was entered into by the provincial governments and the federal government. That agreement called for an increase in domestic crude oil of $1 every six months. That agreement was to last until the end of 1979. However, in late 1977 as we approached what everybody thought would be the 1978 election year and the Liberal Party looked like it might be having a little bit of difficulty, the then minister of energy, Mr. Alastair Gillespie said "I am going to have to cancel the contract as it applies on January 1, 1978."

There was no other reason than that, Mr. Speaker. The federal government had an agreement with the producing governments. The constituents of Etobicoke said "We do not like our prices going up." Their member, the minister of energy said "Okay, I will cancel the contract. I do not feel bound by written contracts." The political considerations of the Liberal Party were more important than the honour and integrity of the Government of Canada. That is what the minister of energy did at that time. That is why people in western Canada are joining the Western Canada Concept Party. They say that they cannot trust the federal government to honour written contracts.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member talks about agreements and handshakes, I would like to remind him that the only agreement they ever made was last fall in Europe and they broke it. That was the gentleman's agreement they made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will have an opportunity to participate in debate. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Andre: The hon. member talks about keeping one's word. He should read the rest of this bill. He will come to the part where 14 cents a gallon is mentioned as the maximum amount which the Liberal Party would allow gasoline to increase. If he does the arithmetic, he will find that 14 cents has suddenly turned into 52 cents under this Liberal government. That is if he is talking about keeping words and promises.

That violation of a written contract is only one of a series of those sorts of things. Is it not an insult to decency and to common sense and is this constant bickering between the federal government and the provincial governments not a concern to us? We should worry about the integrity of our country. This constant fighting has weakened us so much. Should we not be saying "If we are going to keep this country together and if we are going to have parts of this country feel like they are part of the whole, then as a bare minimum we have to have a situation where written agreements are honoured, kept and cannot be broken unilaterally by the federal government unless some extreme situation occurs which would be covered by a force majeure provision."

We should be outraged by the actions of the former minister of energy, Mr. Gillespie, in his unilateral violation of that written contract. We should be outraged and we should say never again will we permit a government to act that irresponsibly. We should not allow the government to show so little concern for integrity. We should not be asking the House of Commons to legalize that immoral behaviour. But that is what we are doing. The government is asking the House of Commons to make legal what is clearly immoral.

Last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked at a press conference when he will call the byelections for the three vacancies. The Prime Minister answered that legally he does not have to call those byelections for six months. The reporter asked whether he felt he had a moral obligation to do so. The Prime Minister asked "What is immoral about acting legally?"

• (2010)

He cannot distinguish between moral obligations and legal obligations. If it is legal, it is moral. His only moral code is the Criminal Code. If it is immoral to break a contract, as it most assuredly is—at least it has been in this country and has been part of our traditions because Canadians keep their word and do not break contracts—then the way to make it moral is to make it legal. That is the feeling of the Prime Minister and his party. If breaking contracts is legal, it is moral. That is what members opposite are asking this House of Commons to pass. They want us to pass a law which would make it legal for the federal government to break contracts which would therefore make it moral, in their minds, to unilaterally break contracts.

Unfortunately, what will happen as a result of this legislation is that no province will enter into a contract with the federal government in which they will have confidence. The provinces will design their affairs accordingly.

There will be a continuation of the sentiment in the provinces of this country that the national government is a foreign government against which they should erect barricades because it is untrustworthy. There will be a continued balkanization in Canada. There will be the feeling in the different regions and provinces of Canada that the federal government cannot be trusted. Who can trust a government which says it will make it legal to act immorally in terms of honouring contractual agreements? Who would trust someone who said they would make legal what is immoral? That is what the federal government is asking for.

Although I know it falls on deaf ears, I would like to conclude by making the same plea. If the trained donkeys in the backbenches of the Liberal Party can screw up their courage, think about Canada and vote for this amendment, they will be serving their conscience, serving Canadian tradition and serving Canada of today and the future much better than by merely standing up and saying, "Aye, Sir, Aye" to the absurdities that continue to gush forth from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak on this amendment, but I do have a couple of things to say. I invite hon. members across from me to put up a speaker to reply because I think a reply is called for. I will try to explain why in a couple of moments. I noted that the hon. member who just spoke took a crack at lawyers and was supported by some of my colleagues.

Mr. Blackburn: From Brant.

Mr. Waddell: If you are a lawyer, I suppose one of the things you learn in court is to try to put your case in such a manner that the judge or those judging it will accept it.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) was attempting to make a case for his amendment to the government but spent 15 minutes insulting the government. There were a couple of remarks in the hon. member's speech which stirred me. He said that if Max Ward lived in the minister's riding, he would get help for his airline. I do not believe that this helps unity in Canada. We know what the implications are behind that statement. As a westerner, I do not believe that helps the situation.

The hon. member said that the federal government does not keep contracts. Although I do not like the federal government and have disagreed with the minister more than I have agreed with him, I have not seen the federal government break contracts in my experience. They have done many harmful things but they have not openly broken contracts.

Mr. Fennell: How about this one right here?

Mr. Waddell: I will come to that one in a moment. The hon. member for Calgary Centre said that the constituents of Etobicoke moved the former minister of energy to change an agreement. I would remind him that those same constituents voted for the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who is a Conservative. If the hon. member wishes to be in a future Government of Canada, he must reconcile the fact that the constituents of Etobicoke Centre want cheap gasoline and his western constituents quite legitimately want a top price for their resources. These two competing factors must somehow be combined in order to keep the country working. It does not help the situation for him to throw in these statements. They may backfire on him.

I find many problems with this amendment and the clause. I would like to hear more debate on some of the principles behind the clause. One of the principles is that oil prices should be set by agreement. They should be set by agreement because the provinces have control of their resources under our Constitution. They could set any price for oil and gas.

Mr. Mayer: Inside the provinces.

Mr. Waddell: That is true, but it would basically be better, as it goes to other parts of the country, that they be free to attempt to get the price they want.

I want a good price for western resources. If Ontario and Quebec are not prepared to charge proper rents and prices for their resources, that is their problem. We want good prices for our resources in western Canada. We still have the interest of the country in mind. Energy—Oil and gas—which we have been almost exclusively debating for two years is vital. It is important that we have a national energy policy.

If an agreement cannot be reached, it will probably necessitate a federal override. The federal government would have to set the prices but only after serious negotiations. We saw this happen in Canada when the federal government and the minister had to negotiate with Premier Lougheed. They eventually reached an agreement. Although many of us do not like the agreement—both the Conservatives and the New Democratic Party do not like it for different reasons—an agreement was reached. That is co-operative federalism.

One of the great tragedies which occurs in the House is not only when the hon. member for Calgary Centre insults the federal government about not keeping its contracts, insults electors in Etobicoke or the fact treatment would be different for someone in Quebec, we see the same problem on the other side with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said that co-operative federalism, is dead. He just likes to take everyone on in a fight, including provincial premiers and members of the House. This is not a good attitude either. He has not yet challenged me to a fight because he knows that he will easily win.

With respect to this particular question, what I believe must be considered is that once you have a contract, can you change it? The member from Calgary Centre said that the federal government can now break a contract at any time it chooses. That is not what the bill says. The bill talks about a contract being terminated. It says, " . . . in the opinion of the Governor in Council is not effective or is not capable of being effected." The contract is not capable of being effected. The real weakness in this bill is what does that mean?

• (2020)

I am told that the French version is a little different. It refers to what happens if the contracts cannot be executed or implemented. That is a little different. Suppose we had a separatist government in Newfoundland or a WCC separatist government in Alberta or a tremendous change in the world and Canada was at war, or there was a great depression or something like that—

An hon. Member: What do you mean, if?

Mr. Waddell: —it may be that the federal government would need to have power to change the contract. We must surely have better wording and a better guarantee than that because we in the west do not want the federal government to unilaterally act like that. We say there may be periods or extra special occasions when it could make changes. Therefore, what I have tried to do is to set out how a co-operative federalism approach would work. I have tried to keep away from throwing insults at others on this particular bill. The minister was in the House a few minutes ago. I asked that an hon. member for the government speak to show us how this wording will not allow a quick unilateral action by the federal government to change an existing contract, because if it does, we on this side of the House could not support it.

I found to my shock that the recent changes in the National Energy Program update the other day were unilateral changes by the federal government. The change which Premier Lougheed of Alberta made a few weeks ago, giving $5.4 billion to the industry, although it affected the federal-provincial agreement at that point, was also a unilateral change. I think that is a very dangerous way to move. I will grant that the hon. member for Calgary Centre did say at the end of his speech that we do need some co-operation in this country. Therefore I say to the government in closing that when we consider this amendment rationally and in the spirit of co-operative federalism, and we must consider this clause, let us hear from government. Can the government tell us that the wording in this clause, which I think is defective in the English language and is somewhat different in the French language, will not allow the governor in council to quickly act unilaterally to change one of these agreements? I point out that while this may sound technical, we are dealing with something which is really important. It has taken up most of the debate in Canada in the last couple of years. It relates to the agreement between the federal government and the provinces, mainly Alberta, but also my province of British Columbia, and Saskatchewan. It concerns fixing the price of the most important commodity that we have, that is, oil. All Canadians feel that way when they go to the gas pumps to fill up.

I believe I have made my comments in reply to the Conservative motion and I would like to hear the government reply to some of the points I have made, concerning the unclearness of the section.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I chose to speak on this particular amendment because it is a critical amendment having much to do with the whole terms of reference and the way that the whole energy program, or, as one hon. member once alluded, the whole national energy problem, has been created by the legislation brought before us in this House.

I rise at this time following the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I do not know if anyone else could sort out exactly what he was saying. The one point we could take is that he was asking that a member from the government side stand up to speak. I think we understood that, but if the rest of what he said is any more clear to anyone else, perhaps one of the members could explain it to me, because I think he said that he does and that he does not. That may be all right in a courtship, but I do not really know whether the hon. member says he is supporting this motion or he is not.

An hon. Member: Sit down and let him explain it to you again, if you cannot understand it.

Mr. Gurbin: The real question is whether the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway can read. He made an allusion to the French translation, and that may be well and good. But if he can read English, the statement is very clear, and he has been correct in picking out the part of the clause that we are trying to amend which states:

—in the opinion of the governor in council is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province.

That could not be any more explicit. I do not think there was any intent on the part of the government to either mean or state anything than that written in black and white on that page, within that clause. Unless the government accepts the amendment that we are honestly offering, unless it is prepared to say that it will not act in a unilateral way, it means exactly what it has said. I do not share the same confidence of the hon. member who previously spoke that the government had any intention to write anything else down there on paper or could in any way explain its way out of the intent and meaning of that particular wording.

It has been historically proven, it has been shown to us time after time, that the government is not only capable, but desires to have the ability and the authority to use its power in a unilateral way. It is as clear as it can be. It has repeated time after time in bill after bill in the parts of the energy legislation with which we are dealing today.

My main point in rising to speak concerning this clause is to consider it from the perspective of what will happen to consumers, to the people of Canada, by this particular clause in the reference. This legislation, this whole bill, is saying that the government will raise taxes. There will be two main taxes, one called the Canadian ownership charge and the other called the petroleum compensation charge. While the whole National Energy Program has fallen on the head of the minister, and while he tries to justify an alibi and support the positions he has taken, which have been proven wrong time after time, we are now in a situation through this bill where Canadians are already paying 24 cents a gallon, roughly four or five cents a litre, if you like, for gas alone, for a petroleum compensation charge. This charge alone, right now, which is in excess, is doing all the things to consumers that the Liberal Party promised it would not do in the last election.

It is creating all of the increasing difficulties people are facing. It is increasing prices, hurting farmers, hurting commuters, hurting people who are using heating oil and who do not have any alternative. But on top of that 24 cents a gallon, which is already there, this bill and this particular clause gives the unilateral power to the federal government to charge an additional 24 cents a gallon at the discretion of the minister without agreement with the provinces. That would amount to a total of somewhere around 12 cents a litre. Every time a litre of gas went into a car, the federal government would have added 12 cents a litre by this petroleum compensation charge. This charge is now in excess of something like $1.5 billion. That is the figure, taking into account that there is much locked-in oil in western Canada that we have not brought out.

That extra charge is money sitting at the government's disposal, at the expense of the consumer, gaining interest for the government at a time when Canadians across the country are suffering under these increased prices. That is something which the government is prepared to unilaterally increase by an additional 24 cents a gallon by order in council. It would do the same thing with the Canadian ownership charge, which is now about $1.15 a barrel. This will provide a maximum level of about $4 a barrel. That charge is what each Canadian is paying each time a litre or a gallon of gasoline comes out of the pump. That is about four cents now. That charge, in a discretionary, in an arbitrary, even in a unilateral way, according to this clause, can be increased to a maximum of $4 a barrel.

• (2030)

Consumers across Canada are faced with these increased charges. They are faced with these prices that have been put in place and they are given those additional prices at the same time as the Liberal government is saying that we are going to have a fair energy policy, that we will have an energy policy that will make it right for Canadians to achieve self-sufficiency, and all these things. What have Canadians really got to show for that? What they have to show is that all the things that are really the hallmark now of the National Energy Program are really the cross that the minister has to bear. As boldly as he would like to tell Canadians that his energy program is working, the industry knows, and Canadians are gradually becoming aware, that this is a big fugue, really, that it is a con job, a job where Canadians are told one thing and precisely the opposite is happening. Capital is flowing from the country. The investors have lost confidence. Oil companies have not been able to produce. Consumers are facing increasing prices and do not have anything to show for it. We have had a massive transfer of taxes into the federal coffers, taxes that have not increased our ability to achieve the self-sufficiency goal. In fact, last year, 1981, we had no new oil found. In spite of all the increased revenues that the federal government has got, our deficits continue to increase.

All of the negatives are there; and there is not a darned positive thing about it. There is just nothing that could give us any hope that this kind of measure, this kind of approach, will satisfy any of the claims that the minister makes for his energy program.

The Canadian Bar Association took particular exception to this clause. They suggested that any change that would be made would have to be made by consultation. We went through a long process in the country, in the opposition and the government side of the House, in dealing with the Constitution. The bottom line of that was the Supreme Court saying: "Yes, legally you can claim that right but really what we need and have to have traditionally in this country is co-operation and understanding and agreement that is reached by the provinces and agreed to by all the parties concerned." That was the legitimate response and the government finally acceded to that and we got an agreement that was in general accepted—with a notable exception.

What we are doing now is in a smaller way and in a less important way. We are saying that although the Canadian government could not do it at that level with that particular document, it does not really matter. The federal Liberal government is saying: "in spite of that, we are prepared to say here that we will do in a unilateral way whatever we please, regardless of what the producers may say, or what a producing province might say, or even what a consuming province might say; we will do it, we have the right and we are going to take the legal authority through this bill that we will pass because we have a majority in the House of Commons."

Several speakers have mentioned co-operative federalism. If there were a chance, if there were an opportunity for us to repair some of the bridges that have been nearly burned down in our relationships with the provinces, whether in the west or in the east or in central Canada, this bill will make sure we are not going to be able to restore that sense of co-operation, that sense of confidence between the provinces and the federal government, the kind of equanimity and happy relationship that we used to have and that I can remember well back in the late 1960s. That is gradually eroded each time this federal government has interfered, acted unilaterally, acted politically, in order to maintain power, in order to achieve control, in order to gain revenues, in fact, so that as a government they could become more and more involved in all of the things that are occurring in Canada. There are many things that most Canadians would like to support, but if we cannot do it in a co-operative way, if we cannot do it as a unit and as a nation, then we have lost everything.

The agreement that has been made so far took several years and caused a lot of grief. The agreements between Alberta and the federal government were agreements that ended with the system of prices and the system of increases that was laid down, that was acceptable to both parties and that Canadians in general accepted. People knew that energy prices had to go up in spite of the fact that it was a political tool, a very powerful argument for the Liberals in the last election.

Now, individual Canadian consumers are faced with all this discretionary power, orders in council and higher and higher and higher taxes and prices, that are really helping to put the crunch on the invididual Canadian. I think particularly of people in agriculture, and there are many in my constituency facing high prices for fertilizers and farm fuels; but I think it applies equally to almost any segment of Canadian economic activity. It looks as if it will get a lot worse and that it will continue to cost Canadians more and more.

The minister tries to justify and rationalize these increased costs and his energy program continually erodes, and we see with deep regret the country falling further and further behind in an international way. We saw the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) try to support the idea that it was not the energy program that was contributing in a major way to the fall of the Canadian dollar. I do not think that really washes now. Everyone knows that energy prices have caused a considerable amount of the inflationary push that we have had.

Many people know that because the money for investment in energy is gone, we have lost a lot of the interest rate reductions that we could have had. People in the areas affected directly certainly know that, because we failed at Alsands, tens of thousands of jobs are gone, lost. They know that because of the failure of Cold Lake, tens of thousands of jobs are lost. They know that the natural gas pipeline from Alaska is gone and that we have lost that. They know that there is failure after failure after failure in the energy program. No amount of argument, no amount of false bravado, can change the fact that the whole thing is in a shambles.

We need not only a major revision in the specifics of this and other bills that are part of the energy legislation, but we need a complete revision in the attitude of the government so that we can get the individual Canadians and particularly the small producers on a sound economic footing. We must restore the confidence to the business community, so that the minister and his government will have an opportunity to see that the economy starts to grow again. I do not think we can expect that out of this minister. He is completely in tune with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). He supports his budget.

• (2040)

He supports all the measures the Minister of Finance has brought forward, as do all Liberal members. That is unfortunate for the Canadian people, and I hope the minister will at least accept the single suggestion in the amendment we have before us now or perhaps just the challenge of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to explain to this side of the House that that part of this clause does not mean what it says, that the federal government will do unilaterally what it wishes and impose on Canadian consumers, businessmen and farmers the increases allowable under this legislation.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I too am very concerned about this clause in the bill and hope we can prevail upon those who support the government to understand what the motion we have moved this evening is intended to do. What it is designed to do is take away from the cabinet the power unilaterally to revoke a pricing agreement.

I would like to speak for a moment about written agreements. I hope the minister will pay attention. A written agreement can be changed only with the consent of both parties. If the government intended to reduce taxes or prices by virtue of a new agreement, it seems to me it would have no trouble obtaining the consent of both of the parties which signed the agreement. It could bring about that change to lower prices or taxes. We are all accountable to our electorate. I think we would find it very difficult to go home to our constituents and say we had not supported lower taxes. Changes to an agreement can be made with the consent of both parties, and that seems a practical approach when it comes to reducing taxes. What the government clearly intends to do by this clause is to take unto itself the power to raise taxes unilaterally. I have to agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) when he says, "If the government intends otherwise, I would like to hear from it." The best way we could hear from the government would be for it to support this amendment. Skipping the first part of the clause, it says:

—In the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies—

The key phrase is "not effective or is not capable of being effective". That means if it is not effective in terms of what the government intends to do with it. I am not a lawyer, but common sense tells me that clause means if it is not effective for the purposes the government intended. It does not mean it is ineffective for purposes solely of enforcement, which I could go along with, but it means it is not effective, or it can mean it is not effective in terms of the purposes the government intends for that particular excise tax.

As I have tried to point out, to me that means the government is taking upon itself the power to raise taxes. The government of the day has the power to bring bills before the House and to have them debated and passed by the House. It seems to me that is what a democratic system should be. It should be accountable to the people for taxes, for the way they are raised and paid and for the way they are dispensed with. However, this kind of clause in the bill erodes further the accountability of the parliamentary system to the people who sent us here to sit as watchdogs over their tax dollars.

I come from western Canada. Many people in my constituency are in the cattle business. Large deals, in terms of dollars, are made, although they are not large deals in terms of a farm's output. One might make a deal on the telephone whereby his word is his bond. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) referred to this in his opening remarks. One's word is one's bond. A person might want to sell a total year's production of cattle and, if he has a reputation for being an honest person, he makes that kind of deal over the telephone. He can give his word, and it is his bond. I agree with the hon. member for Calgary Centre that we should go back to the day when our word meant something. However, under this bill a written agreement between parties can be changed by only one of the parties involved.

If I go to a bank for a mortgage to buy a house, I negotiate the terms of that loan. It is agreed that payments will be made over a period of two, three, four or five years—whatever term is agreed upon—at a fixed rate of interest. If I were to begin paying my mortgage and after two or three months the bank telephoned me to tell me it had decided unilaterally to raise the price of my mortgage I would not be in favour of that. Nobody would. That would be the cause of many court cases, and I would hope that kind of thing would not be allowed and that banks would be forced to honour the terms of original agreements. Yet under this clause the government is asking for the power unilaterally to change an agreement which has been arrived at.

I see the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) smiling. I hope he will take my remarks seriously. If he does not support this amendment, he will be agreeing that we have come to the point in our country where the government should have the power to change agreements it does not like unilaterally.

Two or three weeks ago we had the opportunity to talk with some people who arrange for the investment of funds in this country. In the course of the conversation the point was made that the people who deal with the investment of money in this country do not think past six months any more because after six months the rules will be changed and it will be a whole new ball game. That is a terrible statement to make and have it applicable to the country in which we live.

We are having troubles with our Canadian dollar. The situation has reached almost crisis proportions. Contrary to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) says, we in the opposition do not like to condemn our government. We do not like to condemn our country. We are proud of it. We want to do things which will make it productive and number one in the world. However, when we see that is not happening, we are made to feel sad. The point the Minister of Finance makes is that we should not condemn him because that causes problems. However, we should look at some of the things his government is doing, and I suggest this clause adds to insecurity and chases money out of the country. That causes problems for our dollar and problems for people who want to produce. Those problems are brought about by high interest rates. It is precisely this kind of legislation that the government is proposing that is causing these problems. When we think of what the National Energy Program and its back-in provisions have already done, we understand why nobody looks at us with any faith any more.

As I said, the people with whom I had an opportunity to speak said that within six months the rules will change and there will be a whole new ball game, so no one thinks beyond six months any more. Large amounts of money are leaving Canada and, by and large, going to the United States. Literally billions of dollars are being chased out of our country, and that is forcing the price of the American dollar up. One would normally think that when we sell our dollars out of the country, the price of the Canadian dollar would fall. Because we live so close to the Americans and because we are each other's best customers as far as trade is concerned, we have tried—I think for very good reasons—to tie the Canadian dollar to the American dollar. This is a very interesting point.

I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is not paying any attention. I think he should pay attention. I think the Minister of Finance should also pay attention. When this kind of clause serves the purpose of chasing massive amounts of Canadian dollars out of our country, that money leaving the country causes the price of the American dollar to rise. Subsequently, the price of the Canadian dollar rises with it, and this brings about an effect opposite to that which we might normally expect. It is like being in a boat that is sinking and instead of bailing it out, someone puts lead in it to make it sink faster. That is the effect that this clause will have.

• (2050)

I want to turn now to agriculture which is a subject that is near and dear to a lot of members from western Canada. At the present time, a tremendous amount of tax is paid on the fuel that is used for the production of food and we are already in the situation where we find it difficult to compete with the United States. I know we are each other's best customer, but we are also each other's closest competitor. We have to be competitive with the United States when selling our agricultural products on world markets.

I have here some figures given to me by the very distinguished hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). They show that in 1980, a farm of approximately 1,000 acres in Alberta paid approximately $11,800 in tax on petroleum products. In 1981 that tax increased to $16,700, an increase of almost $5,000 but the frightening thing is that by 1986 it is estimated that the tax will amount to $42,000. That means a tax of $40 per acre on land for petroleum tax alone.

That is a lot of money, yet this clause provides that the tax will increase. It provides that the agreement of the parties affected can be obtained to reduce a tax, but the only way I can see the clause being used is in the case where the government wants to unilaterally increase a tax. If the bill goes through without amendment, then producers in my part of the country—and I believe the figure would be comparable for any farming area in the country—can look forward to paying taxes of more than $40 per acre simply on the fuel necessary to farm the land.

If the government does not intend that the clause will be used in the way I have outlined, I would like the minister or the parliamentary secretary to reply and point out where I am wrong. I am hoping against hope that the members of the government who represent farming regions will support the amendment. If they vote for the bill as it stands, then they are in favour of imposing a higher tax in fuel used for the production of food as the years go by.

I want to point out that this $40 per acre does not include the tax on things made from a petroleum base such as most of the insecticides, herbicides, building materials and many other products used in agriculture. That is only the tax on the fuel burned to farm the land.

In closing, I should like to emphasize an important point that was made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. It is actually a question for a philosopher and we know that in some of his musings the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) likes to think of himself as a philosopher, so perhaps he can tussle with it. Someone said that simply because the majority is capable of doing something, that does not make it right. I took a philosophy course at university like a lot of other members and I remember that someone said simply because you have a majority and they are capable of imposing their will on the minority, that does not mean that their ability to impose their will makes it right.

Surely we must have some reason to be proud of the system that has brought this country to where it is today. This clause, however, puts us in a situation where we can simply say that because we have a majority, anything that majority does is, by definition, right. In my opinion, and I suspect in the opinion of most Canadians, that does not make it right at all. In fact, I think many people would say the opposite—that because you have the ability to impose your will on someone that does not make it right. There has to be some room for common sense and justice, otherwise we would simply be ruled by the largest and most powerful. In the same way that the government can impose its will on us because it has a majority, the people who are the biggest, the strongest or the most gifted could impose their will on the less gifted and less strong.

I urge members of the government who will support the bill to consider some of the implications of this clause if it goes through without the amendment we have put forward this evening.

I do not want to prolong the debate, Mr. Speaker, but I am glad to have had the opportunity to participate.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, most people in Canada are a little confused by the name of the riding I represent and they are not sure if I represent the whole province or a little bit of it!

I was interested when the gentleman from Etobicoke who happens to represent the riding of Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) referred to himself as a westerner. I finally understood why he went west. Being from Etobicoke he is jealous of my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). He could not get that riding if he wanted it. Even if he did get the nomination, he could not be elected there.

If the hon. member had been at committee with those of us who went over this bill word by word and clause by clause, he would understand what Clause 15 is about.

This motion asks that the words "in the opinion of" be deleted. As the clause stands, the minister need have no fear of not Canadianizing the oil industry because he will drive out not only foreign investment, but Canadian investment as well.

How can anyone be expected to invest in an industry where the minister can make a unilateral decision on the sale price of products? As has been mentioned before, billions of Canadians dollars have left the country in the past year. The minister was worried about foreign investment, but he does not have to worry about that.

This is totalitarian legislation. It is designed strictly for the Liberal government. It gives so much power to the minister that he can do what he wants without ever referring to his partners in confederation, the producer provinces. He could write up a contract with the producer provinces one day and next day cancel it, as soon as his bureaucrats in Ottawa got his ear and told him he did not have to go through with it.

I plead with the government to take the four words "in the opinion of" out of this clause. Make this a true partnership contract. That is what we have in Canada. I plead with the government not to try to impose its unilateral views on the citizens of this country. That is what is happening more and more with every piece of legislation.

• (2100)

I do not profess to be a lawyer, but I have been in the business world. I have signed many contracts, and I have done many contracts with a handshake. I will tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, sure as the devil I would not make a contract with that government, by signature or handshake, because they have no sense of morality. They want to run it their way; they do not give a damn about Canadians or jobs for Canadians. They care only about one thing, themselves.

At least there is one member of that party who is honest. He participated in the committee, and he stood up in this House and expressed the views of the Liberal Party. He said "if we must be communists, we will be communists". At least he is honest. I respect that gentleman for saying that, because at least he told the public the truth. They do not care about the public, they care only about power, their jobs and their indexed pensions. I hope they have their six years in because the next time around they are going to have a terrible surprise.

We hear a lot of discussion in this House about rights. But what about duty, duty as Canadians, as cabinet ministers of that government? They have a duty to industry, to the ten provinces and territories. They have a duty to this country which they are not fulfilling. And I think I can explain why. The hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), in one of the committee meetings, happened to say "I wish we had oil wells in our backyard." My colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), jumped on it very quickly and said "I wish to God you had those wells in your backyard, too, if you did, we would not have this legislation in front of us". I am from the centre of this country and I object to the discrimination against the western portion of this country.

We were in committee today, and it was interesting. Hydro-Quebec and Ontario Hydro, provincial Crown corporations, came up with some changes. They were shot through right away; this is going to be changed, this is the way it is going to go. The private sector has been there and put their point across about the problems of the industry. Has the government made any changes on behalf of the industry? No, Mr. Speaker.

It will only make changes on behalf of Crown corporations and on behalf of the people its members represent. It is sad that they only represent such a small geographical portion of this country, but I understand why. It is because those people have enough common sense to not elect them to this House. I plead with hon. members opposite that when they stand up to vote, they wince as the camera goes by, because they are not helping Canada, the unity of Canada, and they are not helping Canadian citizens.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I will not take much of the time of the House on this motion but it does stand in my name and I would like to comment on it. I would like Canadians, those in our gallery this evening and those watching us on television, to consider what their situation would be if they signed a contract with a mortgage company, for whatever term, and the mortgage company then tore up that agreement and demanded its money instantly. How many millions of Canadians would lose their homes? Where would the mortgage companies be if a customer could tear up an agreement without their consent? Would they lend you money?

Where would we be if we used a credit card to make a purchase, at a certain interest rate, and then the company could change that rate? What if you thought you borrowed money at 10 per cent, but after you borrowed it the company said no, it was at 100 per cent? Where would we be if agreements freely entered into could be broken by one side alone without consultation or process? We would have chaos. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), supported by the cabinet, is asking the elected members of this House to pass a clause which puts into jeopardy an agreement freely entered into by both parties. It gives the federal cabinet—not Parliament, not the elected representatives—an appointed group, the power to unilaterally break an agreement which they entered into on behalf of the Canadian people.

Each day in question period—I wish the minister would pay attention—he says "I cannot do this because I have an agreement with Alberta; I cannot do that because I have an agreement with Saskatchewan". I wish I could believe that. It would be so much easier to believe if he did not put in this legislation a clause which allows him to break that agreement at any time without consultation.

Even if we have faith in this cabinet and its wisdom, what about the future? What about the future for your children and my children? There will be an election sooner or later and a new cabinet, and that cabinet could be sworn in at eleven o'clock in the morning and by noon it could issue a statement which completely cancelled an agreement entered into with any and all provincial governments. How would members of that party not serving in that cabinet feel? What if the Government of Canada enters into an agreement with Ontario or Quebec and that party's cabinet unilaterally abrogates that agreement? The backbenchers, people elected to represent the people of the provinces concerned, have no say.

• (2110)

It is just the cabinet, based on what information no one knows, because cabinet meetings are secret. We are dealing with principle. Our society runs in large measure on the fact that we have agreements with each other and that we mutually change agreements. We do not have the principle where two parties as matters of free choice enter into written agreements with each other that can be broken by one party.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stands in his place in this chamber, either during question period or at any other time, and says that he cannot do something because he has an agreement with another province, then we will know if this clause passes without amendment that that is a charade because the minister will have given himself the power to break any agreement. When he says that he cannot do something because an agreement is in place, what he would be saying to us is that he chooses to do something or chooses not to do something.

Simply, this clause says that the Canadian people cannot trust their federal government to keep an agreement, an agreement which it entered into on their behalf. This is awesome power the minister has. The minister was asked about that in committee. On that occasion he gave no clear indication why the clause was in the bill. We asked him why he wanted that power. We really did not get an answer. We asked him whether that clause was put in the bill by accident or by design of some civil servant. The minister did not really know.

We suggested that he take this clause out of the bill and that if he needed it later on that he should have the courage to come before Parliament, before the elected people, and defend the need to have the unilateral power to tear up an agreement with the provinces. If something like that is ever necessary, there is a proper forum and place in which to do it. But why does the minister need this power at this time, given the uncertainties that exist in Canada today and the stresses on our confederation? Surely we should not have a clause that encourages the present minister, or any future minister, to act unilaterally without consultation and be able to tear up an agreement that was entered into.

Agreements should be changed through mutual negotiation. Agreements should not be one-sided. In that context, I encourage those members who support the principle that agreements should be changed as a consequence of negotiation to vote for this amendment. The only members of this chamber who should vote against this amendment are those who really believe it is right to give the cabinet the power, without complication, to tear up an agreement made with another member of this confederation. That is not right. The House should indicate that in the strongest possible way. It is not an issue on which government's fall, but it is an issue of principle and this chamber should support the principle that lies behind the amendment.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. However, I do not want to leave unanswered on the record certain allegations that have been made tonight. I listened carefuly to the comments made on this particular amendment by the hon. member who has just spoken and by some of his predecessors. By listening to what they said, you would believe that what is being proposed here, as the hon. member mentioned, is that the governor in council, the cabinet, could at will tear up an agreement reached with a particular province concerning oil prices, an agreement that would have been arrived at freely. You would believe that this is a new provision, a new power which the government is trying to get for itself.

First, I would like to point out that the provision of the bill states that when there is no agreement, the governor in council, the cabinet, can by regulation establish maximum prices for various kinds of crude oil. Or, again, if there is an agreement and the agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, again, the governor in council can promulgate prices by regulation.

That is the point to which the hon. member who last spoke is objecting. It says that "where the agreement is not effective or not capable of being effective—", which in French reads: "Lorsque . . . l'accord conclu n'est pas exécutoire ou n'est pas susceptible de le devenir."

What does that mean? It means that if there is an agreement and it cannot be implemented or cannot be acted upon because of circumstances beyond the control of the parties, then the cabinet, the governor in council, can establish maximum prices for crude oil if there was an agreement that for whatever reason could not be implemented, could not be made effective. Some members have said that this would destroy the confidence in the industry. As I indicated, you would think this is a brand new provision which this government is trying to get to allow it to walk away from agreements made with any particular province. I would like to remind my hon. friends on the other side, who may not have paid attention to this provision as much as they should have, that this is not a new provision. This very provision is Section 36 of the Petroleum Administration Act and it has been there ever since 1975 when that act was passed by Parliament.

Mr. Mayer: That doesn't make it right.

Mr. Lalonde: Let me read this section from Bill C-47, the Petroleum Administration Act. It reads:

> Where no agreement is entered into pursuant to Section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude oil to which this part applies that are produced, extracted or recovered in that province.

● (2120)

That is section 23(1) here, word for word. It is simply reproduced because Sections 34 to 46 of Bill C-47, the Petroleum Administration Act, have been repeated. There is nothing new or anything that is frightening for the industry.

I would remind my hon. friends that the industry has known its golden years with respect to money and other matters with that provision. That provision had been examined by parliamentary committees, debated, voted and passed by Parliament in 1975. Therefore, all the agitation of my hon. friends in the Tory benches, I would have to say, is somewhat fabricated. If it is not fabricated, it took them seven years to become that outraged. I would invite them to go back to the bill which has been in effect since 1975. There is nothing changed. Nothing has been changed in this case either.

An hon. Member: It is wrong, then.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member says that it is wrong, then. I would remind him that his government was in office for nine months. If this was such a terrible detriment to the west, as I heard some of them say, why did they not introduce an amendment to this bill when they were in office, even for first reading?

I am not asking them to have passed a bill, since they did not have much time to do that, but they could have at least indicated the seriousness of their concern over this provision by introducing an amendment in Parliament indicating that they did not like this provision of the Petroleum Administration Act. They could have said, "We think it is outrageous and therefore we will quickly table, at least, an amendment for first reading."

They did not do that. I would suggest it was not because they did not have the time since it would have been a very easy amendment to draft. They did not do it because there is nothing very outrageous about it. It is a very simple and explainable provision. It is quite understandable because we must bear in mind that there may be special circumstances when a certain agreement with a certain province may become ineffective or unable to be implemented. As the government of the nation, it must have the power to assume its responsibility in the national interest and act to ensure that the prices for various kinds of crude oil will be determined at a time when a certain agreement for a particular reason becomes ineffective.

It is my hope that these few points will have at least removed the notion from the minds of my hon. friends that there is some secret plot which was suddenly invented in the last few months whereby the government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be accumulating new powers that no one has ever heard of. Even the Conservative minister of energy, when he was in office, had this power and lived with it. The country did not suffer from it. On the contrary, I think it is a precautionary clause which is quite understandable and which has not given rise to arguments even from the producing provinces. I can tell hon. members that in two years this point has not been raised once with me by any particular provincial minister of energy.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Lalonde: Why? Because, I am happy to say, the provincial ministers of energy appear to have more sense and have been a little more reasonable with these issues than some members opposite who have spoken tonight.

I do not want to spend any time on some of the more despicable remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (M. Andre). I think they were very well answered by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I will simply say that I regret that members of the House feel they have to resort to this kind of argument during a debate. I do not believe they are serving their cause and they are not serving themselves. They are not growing in their own minds by using that kind of argument or in the minds of the public. I do not believe that they serve the cause of understanding, tolerance and friendship between the various regions of this country which is so important.

I only want to say that the arguments that were used did not appropriately reflect the provisions of the bill which were being discussed. These provisions regarding taxation, particularly in the transportation field, will apply equally to foreign as well as domestic carriers. With respect to the hon. member who spent much time discussing maritime transportation, it has been made quite clear before the committee and barely needs to be repeated here that those provisions are not discriminatory against Canadian carriers or transporters. They apply equally to foreign as well as Canadian carriers. I reject those arguments which have been made.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly respond to the remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in regard to this portion of the bill which deals with the agreement. This agreement is very important to the industry today because the major problem facing the industry is a lack of confidence. This is just one more area where that confidence breaks down; the minister's right to break the agreement at his discretion. These powers given to the minister adds to the breakdown of confidence.

I sat in the committee for the past two years and listened to witnesses who appeared before that committee. Contrary to what the minister says, the matter of confidence was raised as the number one subject. I believe it was the Elf Aquitaine Company of France which said, with reference to Bill C-48 in particular, that they had never seen this type of legislation introduced in the free world which would allow confiscation as it did under Bill C-48.

In this clause we have the exact same kind of powers of discretion by the minister. If we realistically look at what has to happen in Canada today in order to restore confidence in the National Energy Program and to get investment returning to Canada with respect to the National Energy Program, it is this very matter which must be dealt with. The timing of this was very important because of the actions of the minister with regard to the National Energy Program. That is the point which was being made by the hon. member who spoke previously and to whom the minister referred. It is most important that confidence be restored to the industry so it can depend on the government and on signed contracts.

If you consider the situation as it relates to the falling Canadian dollar today, I would suggest to Canadians and to the minister that the main reason for the weakening Canadian dollar is the National Energy Program and the lack of confidence that the minister himself has brought upon a very successful industry in Canada through the kind of directions he has given to the National Energy Program.

• (2130)

This bill is no exception and this is why it is so important. I would just like to say briefly, in these closing remarks, that I must respond to the minister. It is most important that this ordinary discretion on the part of the minister not be taken at this time to further weaken confidence in an industry that must go ahead in developing our resources. This country should be number one and should not be falling behind in the economic situation as we are today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 3

Petroleum Administration Act

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto be amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 19 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(d) the probable effect on the explorers, producers".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to refer to Motion No. 3 in its context. What we are asking or what precedes this amendment is the power of cabinet to set price. The motion that was brought forward by the minister—and we challenged it in committee—is the clause appearing in the bill and it asserts that in the setting of price, the cabinet should be concerned about the impact of that price on consumers and producers. What we seek to do through our amendment tonight is to change one word, and that is "explorers", because if we have learned with a sense of clarity what this minister's policy has done, we can see it so clearly in the exploration end of the business. Today in Canada one quarter of the wells being drilled were being drilled before that man became Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

In that period of time he has single-handedly destroyed three quarters of the exploration industry in this country. He has destroyed hundreds of family-owned, small firms which have gone into bankruptcy. He has caused people to lose their jobs and, subsequently, their homes. He has put the energy future of all of us at risk because the oil and gas industry begins by looking for the needle in the haystack.

Buried somewhere in the ground is a pool of oil or a reservoir of gas. We have technical ways of guessing where it might be, but then one needs half a million dollars to even drill a shallow well. Most wells would cost at least $1 million. Someone has to pay that money. One hires a drilling rig, hires truckers, caterpillar tractors, cooks, builds shacks and then one drills. One finds oil and gas or one does not find oil or gas. More frequently, one does not, but it takes much money and it is a high-stakes, high-risk venture. It takes money.

But this minister, through his National Energy Program, took the money away from the people who know how to look for oil and gas and two years later we have less of it. By analogy, if this minister had taken over a grocery store, bought it on behalf of the Canadian people, he would have started selling the groceries off the shelves, taken the money, gone somewhere and had a party.

Do hon. members know what the first use of the money should have been put to? It should have gone to the wholesalers to put the groceries back on the shelves for the next customers. But when one does not do that, but just sells the groceries and does not buy more with the money to put back on the shelves, pretty soon every shelf in the store is empty. That is what would happen and that is what the minister has done to this country.

Governments take 65 cents out of every dollar Canadians pay for oil and gas. There is not enough left in that 35 cents to look for oil and gas. So, we force them to sell it. We are selling the groceries off our shelves. This minister will not leave the industry enough money to drill the wells, to put that oil "back on the shelves" for the next generation, for your kids and for my kids. In the process of doing that, he has caused all kinds of small, family-owned firms to go into bankruptcy.

Last week, the biggest auction sale in the history of western Canada was held, selling drilling rigs, caterpillar tractors, trucks, equipment, and the buyers were Americans, citizens of the United States of America. The prices were less than half-price. The minister stood in this House on Monday night, some three or four days after that auction sale, and said, "We will update the program". What did he brag about? He bragged about giving the oil industry $2 billion more. That is the way he said it. But what he really meant was that he would take $2 billion less away from them.

They found the oil and the money was theirs. With his taxation policies, he took too much away. He took so much away that we cannot drill the holes any more. We cannot find the oil. We are burning it. It is burning in this building right now. It is burning in all those cars out on the street. But there is no well drilling to replace it. It is going. Less than 100 wells are being drilled in this whole country—

Mr. Gustafson: Ninety-four, to be exact.

Mr. Hawkes: —on this day. We were up to 700, 800 or 900 in the course of a month, but this minister has taken away the future from your children and my children, at least in part. He is taking so much of the money that there is not enough left to hire the people to drill the wells. He stands in this chamber and tells us that we have an agreement with the provinces and that if we go out and find new oil, we will get the world price. Canadians believe him and the newspapers carry the headlines.

• (2140)

Then we read in Clause 16 that he can tear that agreement up on 30 seconds' notice. "Take your money today," he says to Canadians, "invest in an oil rig and go drill a well, and if you find it, you will get a certain price." But hidden in the legislation which his members intend to vote for is the principle that what he tells you today, he can break tomorrow without your consent, without your advice. That is what creates the instability. People do not trust.

The minister told us on Monday night that the energy program had accomplished great things and that it was going to do better things. Well, since Monday night we have stood in this House and said: "No, you have made it a little better than it was, but it is still rotten, it is still bad." The report card will be what happens on the stock exchange and what happens to the value of the dollar. Since Monday night, all stocks have gone down 200 points and the dollar has dropped for the first time in Canadian history, below 80 cents.

Knowledgeable people in Canada have judged this minister and his so-called revision. The program was rotten. It was revised. Canadians have said it is still rotten and it should be dropped. At the very least, I urge members of this chamber to add the simple word "explorers" so that when this minister or some future minister determines the price and taxes, there will be some protection for our kids, that we not sell the groceries today without replacing them, but have to take into consideration in price the need to drill more wells to replace the oil we are burning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Hawkes) negatived.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto be amended in Clause 31 by striking out line 13 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"amount not exceeding twenty-eight dollars".

[English]

He said: I believe we should be on Motion No. 5.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Both motions should be debated together.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto be amended in Clause 31 by adding immediately after line 2 at page 20 the following:

"(1.4) The tariff of charges set out under subsection (1.1) shall be set at such a level that the aggregate of revenues from those charges does not exceed the amount required to pay the compensation payable under the provisions of Division 1 of this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, now we come to a substantive motion that is in large part responsible for a lot of the difficulties of the country. Canadians may remember the month of December, 1979, when the New Democratic Party said 18 cents a gallon tax was too much, the Liberal Party said the same thing, and they threw our government out of office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, certainly the House would accept the apology of the hon. member for statements that have been looked at as mendacities certainly mendacities concerning the National Democratic Party, about this party removing the Tories from power. It was the people of Canada who removed them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: They know that very well.

Mr. Hawkes: It was all those western Liberals called the NDP who stood in this chamber in December, 1979, and either through revolt or through design threw out the Crosbie budget.

Mr. Anguish: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as what the hon. member refers to. It is almost unparliamentary language.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order, I am certain that all hon. members want to hear it, but certainly not to entertain a debate. We will hear a point of order, if there is one. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: I can understand their sense of embarrassment. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as minister of finance in December, 1979, proposed to the Canadian people that there be a tax on gasoline of 18 cents a gallon. The Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party found that unacceptable on behalf of the Canadian people. We have seen it doubling, an increase of almost $1 a gallon since that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of the relevance of the speeches being given by the hon. member here this evening. I think he should try to be relevant to the motion that we are debating here. Instead, what he is talking about is the hindsight that the Conservative Party shares. The only thing they can talk about is hindsight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Perhaps with hindsight hon. members should all introduce points of order only when they are points of order. The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Conservative members for going to the special energy committee and learning a little more about oil and gas taxation. The complaining members of the New Democratic Party from the west chose not to attend during those four weeks.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am a New Democratic Party member from the west. From time to time and many times I have attended in committee, but I was not asked to speak in this House. The hon. member has got to tell the truth to the House now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: He has never done that before, why do it now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am sure hon. members will want to contribute to this debate.

Mr. Andre: Let us call an election and let the people decide.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sure hon. members would want to defend their stand and I am sure members of the House will want to take the opportunity to do so when they are recognized. I fail to see a point of order; and the hon. member is debating. The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, if the member of the government would like unanimous consent to go to the Canadian people to decide the issue, we would be happy to give that unanimous consent just as quickly as we could. Mr. Speaker, you have read for our edification two amendments as part of a bloc. The first amendment has the effect of changing the words "seventy-five" to the words "twenty-eight." That may be a bit mysterious to many members in this House, to members who have not studied the issue. What it does with this clause before this Parliament, in one tax alone, through the use of the words "seventy-five" is empower the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to raise gasoline prices 48 cents a gallon. That is not all the taxes that he has imposed on Canadians since February, 1980. This is just one and it is 48 cents a gallon.

• (2150)

In this chamber and in the committee my party has discovered that that possibility bothers members of the Liberal Party. They went to the Canadian people and said gas should not be taxed more than 18 cents a gallon.

Mr. Gustafson: And the NDP supported them.

Mr. Hawkes: Through this amendment we want to give them the opportunity, at least with respect to this one tax, to keep their commitment to the Canadian voters. All they have to do is vote for the number 28 instead of the number 75, and this one tax would be about 18 cents a gallon or less. That is what they told the voters. They said, "Vote for us, and we will see that your taxes do not go up that horrible 18 cents". The Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources wants 48 cents a gallon, but we are giving Liberal backbenchers and members of the New Democratic Party an opportunity to keep their commitment to the voters. If they told voters 18 cents was too much, then it would be stretching logic to vote for 48 cents a gallon. They have the choice of the 48 cents the minister wants or the 18 cents they promised the voters who sent them to this chamber. This is their chance to keep their commitment to the voters who sent them here. It is a chance for all hon. members opposite to keep the commitment they made to the voters who sent them here. Do hon. members opposite remember their campaign brochures and their speeches? They said 18 cents was terrible. All they have to do to keep their commitment is to vote for Motion No. 4. That would keep this tax under 18 cents a gallon, and hon. members could keep their commitment to the voters. If they vote to reject the amendment before us, they vote for 48 cents a gallon.

I hope constituents listening to our discussion this evening will telephone their Members of Parliament and tell them whether they think they should vote for 48 cents when they were sent here to keep the tax under 18 cents. I hope that happens to members of the New Democratic Party too. I invite constituents to pick up their telephones tomorrow, telephone their Members of Parliament, Liberal or NDP, and tell them to vote for Motion No. 4 because it would restrict the taxing power of the minister to something less than 18 cents a gallon, and that would be in line with the brochures, pamphlets and advertising distributed and the speeches made by hon. members opposite.

I think it is generous of the Conservative Party of Canada to give hon. members in this chamber the opportunity to keep a campaign promise in this way. I hope hon. members will give a lot of thought to this at the weekend. They were sent here to uphold a principle, and by voting for this amendment they can uphold that principle with clarity, pride and dignity. However, if they choose to uphold the minister's desire for a 48 cents a gallon tax—just this one tax alone—surely they are breaking faith with the people who sent them here and the things they told them in December, 1979, in January, 1980, and in early February, 1981. That is the first half of the amendment, and I urge its consideration at the weekend.

The second half of the amendment would protect consumers. It would impose a maximum tax of 18 cents a gallon. That would be a break for the consumer. It would bring the price of gas at the pumps down right away. It would be cheaper. If the House voted for this amendment, gasoline and home heating oil would cost consumers less.

However, there is another principle, and the minister has enunciated it. He told us in committee that the petroleum compensation charge, according to his agreement with the producing provinces, shall not be set at a level greater than that required, so that the amount of money coming in through taxation and the amount paid out to Saudi Arabia and Mexico for imported oil would be the same. That is what the minister told us. However, I say to the consumers of Canada that they should beware. The minister has told consumers about his intentions, but nowhere in the wording of the clause is the minister restricted. Many times in the last few years we have been told by ministers that taxes were being levied for specific purposes, and as soon as Parliament has granted those taxing powers, the money has been used for other purposes. Through this amendment we are seeking to protect the consumers of Canada.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Being a member of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, I heard everything the hon. member had to say on this subject. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that enough is enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Conservative Party I would like to thank the hon. member for reminding Canadians that, yes, they have had enough. We have had enough of this minister, and we have had enough of this policy. I thank the hon. member for bringing this so forcefully to the attention of all Canadians.

Motion No. 4 says that the minister absolutely shall not charge more than 18 cents a gallon tax for compensation purposes. Motion No. 5 says he shall never tax at a rate greater than that required to provide compensation. If we had a decent policy under which wells were being drilled and no oil had to be imported, we would come to the point where this whole tax would disappear and it would be guaranteed in legislation that once the need had passed, the tax would no longer be collected. That is what Motion No. 5 would ensure. Motion No. 4 says there will be a maximum tax of 18 cents. Motion No. 5 says when the need is passed, which surely will happen, the government cannot collect the tax.

Surely a sane and sensible government would not collect a tax which is not needed, but I remind hon. members that in 1975 this Parliament approved an export charge. The purpose of that export charge was to pay for imports. It is now 1982, and this government is collecting that export charge and not putting a penny into paying for imports. It has a new charge of 48 cents a gallon, and there is no restriction in legislation which says it must be used for a specific purpose. There is no restriction in legislation which says that when the need is passed, the tax will disappear.

What we have here is a public relations exercise. People want this Parliament to approve taxes for good reasons, but the government does not want to restrict itself, through legislation, to those good reasons.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

• (2200)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—CMHC ROLE IN RENEWING MORTGAGES ON UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATED HOUSES. (B) REQUEST THAT BANKS BE INSTRUCTED TO RENEW MORTGAGES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on February 15, as reported at page 14994 of Hansard, I inquired about CMHC guaranteeing mortgages on homes insulated with UFFI. The answer I received at that time was not satisfactory, nor could it be called positive. On April 30 I asked the same question, in effect, as reported at page 16780 of Hansard. In the reply I was assured that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation would guarantee all applications for renewal of mortgages, but I guess I specified banks particularly and not the general mortgage industry.

Since that time I have received reports that owners of houses with UFFI insulation are still having difficulty renewing their mortgages. Today I suggested to the minister that the government should spend some of its advertising money for this purpose. Someone interjected that it would perhaps be as valuable for the home owner as advertising the Canada goose! This in no way reflects on the Canada goose—I think it is a wonderful bird and I admire it. However, I think the Canadian public would get more value from money spent advertising that CMHC will guarantee any mortgage renewal request for any house in Canada insulated with UFFI.

The decline in the value of homes insulated with this material is seriously underestimated by the government. I do not think it understands the problem at all. It has been publicly stated that 80 to 90 per cent of the estates of most retiring people is constituted in the value of the home they own. It is also estimated that approximately 80,000 Canadian homes have insulation containing health hazardous formaldehyde.

An article in the Ottawa Citizen of May 4 states that about 3,000 people are seeking cuts in property taxes because of foam insulation. Another article in the Ottawa Citizen on April 30 carried the heading "Ottawa fears tax loss from foam insulation". The article states that the assessment review court decided that some Sault Ste. Marie homes were worth about half their previous value, and it cut the tax bills accordingly. The article states that it will be months before it is possible to process the appeals to the assessor in respect of the taxation to be paid this year. For many families, 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the value of the estate will virtually disappear because the houses they own have little if any value.

The minister told me that if I could give him a name, he would investigate the case. If the minister is interested, he will not have any difficulty finding out about one member of this House who has an interest in one of these homes. He needed a little security and when he sought a loan through a mortgage with the house as security, he was turned down cold. He was told that in effect they would rather lend him money without security than on the security of a home with UFFI insulation. This is a measure of the serious loss experienced by people who have used this insulation.

I have in my hand a document entitled "Urea Formaldehyde Foam Checklist". This checklist was to be handed to an occupant by the installer before the foam was installed. I have polled people in my constituency on whether they ever saw this form or anything like it. Directions for its use list several of the precautions that should have been exercised before urea formaldehyde foam insulation was installed in any home. It was supposed to assure that people would get a high quality insulation job. In part, it reads as follows:

> —the contractor is required to provide you, the consumer, with an information brochure before commencing the insulation . . . the onus for the manufacture and installation of urea formaldehyde foam insulation is on the contractor.
>
> Allergy-prone people or asthmatics may be more sensitive to formaldehyde fumes and should consult their doctor before selecting this type of insulation.

• (2205)

Two of my constituents have suffered as a result of being unfamiliar with this direction from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Section A(1) of the checklist says:

> The materials to be used should have a Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) acceptance number.

These were the directions issued by the government. It goes on:

> The contractor must have a licence bearing his/her photograph; ask to see it.
>
> All circuits with electrical wiring carrying 200 volts or more, in any of the cavities to be foamed, must be turned off.

Every clothes dryer or stove properly installed in Canada carries 200 volts or more. It gives a guide to temperatures. The material should not be installed in attics, or in homes with a vapour barrier outside the insulation. My home has; it is just fortunate that I did not use UFFI because I would have it inside an excellent vapour barrier. I could go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on April 30 the hon. member asked a very straightforward question:

> Is it the policy of the minister responsible for housing that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation should guarantee all applications for renewal of mortgages for UFFI homes. If it is the policy of the government, has CMHC been so instructed and are they so behaving?

The minister answered in an equally straightforward fashion:

> Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

It is very important to make that point, that CMHC is prepared to continue to guarantee mortgages on UFFI homes and provide guarantees on mortgage renewals for such homes even if no guarantee previously existed. It is very important to establish that fact for the understanding of the hon. member and those interested in this issue.

The major banks approve their mortgage renewals, provided the borrower has a good financial record. Most of the time the banks do not inquire whether a home has UFFI or not. They look at the financial record of the home owner when considering renewal. On the other hand, when the banks do learn of the presence of UFFI they know, as the hon. member has pointed out, that the home is potentially subject to devaluation. Because it is a financial transaction, they are then much more hesitant to make a loan to the full amount of the mortgage. On that basis they ask for a guarantee, and it is on that basis that the minister pointed out that CMHC is prepared to offer that guarantee. We all realize that we must give these home owners some assistance. As the minister has pointed out, CMHC is prepared to give that assistance. That is a very laudable position of both the minister and CMHC.

Adjournment Debate

THE ECONOMY—CLOSURE OF LUMBER MILL IN CHEMAINUS, B.C.—PROTECTION FOR JOBS. (B) INVESTMENT OF CAPITAL OUTSIDE OF CANADA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in late April MacMillan Bloedel announced the indefinite closure of its lumber mill at Chemainus, British Columbia. Since that time the company has indicated that it has no plans to either reopen the existing mill or proceed with earlier plans to build a new mill.

• (2210)

The mill manager was quoted in the local newspaper as saying that the new mill would not be built now because all available capital was needed for the building of a new pulp mill in Alabama. Consequently, people in my riding face a loss of 600 jobs in the basic industry. Today happens to be the last pay day for these employees. They get exactly one day's pay and after that they can look forward to the very uncertain future of unemployment insurance. Job loss has a multiple effect, the same as job creation.

In addition to the loss of 600 jobs in the Chemainus mill, there is a loss of jobs in small supporting industries, local shops and services. A shopkeeper pointed to the psychological factor involved when a major industry shuts down. Even people who still hold their jobs cut back on their purchases because of growing uncertainty. Certainly the depressed condition of the forest industry is a factor in the Chemainus closure. British Columbia suffers today because it has become totally dependent upon the export of raw resources. As a result, British Columbia is even more vulnerable to international markets than it would be if it had a more diversified economy.

Just this past weekend in the southern part of my riding in the View Royal area, Plumper Bay Sawmills has just announced bankruptcy. The bankruptcy story is becoming far too common in the entire forest industry of British Columbia.

The International Woodworkers of America union has pointed out that at the end of May 12,837 woodworkers or 25.7 per cent of the membership were laid off. This is an increase from 8,170 people who were laid off at the end of April. Anyone who knows anything about the lumber industry in British Columbia knows that springtime is the very time when loggers are getting back to work. However, at present they are facing increased lay-offs instead.

The B.C. Central Credit Union has pointed out that some $31 million a week is being paid out for unemployment insurance in British Columbia, and it predicts that total UIC payments in B.C. could run to $2 billion by the end of the year. The $522 million budgeted by the provincial government for welfare payments will not be enough unless conditions improve. And so we recognize the general problems of the British Columbia forest industry.

MacMillan Bloedel is not immune to these problems. However, MacMillan Bloedel has not acted in the long-term interests of the community at Chemainus. The lumber mill at Chemainus has been owned by different companies for over 120 years. There was a time when the present mill was one of the largest and most modern in the world. It was geared to cut the large and beautiful timber which grew on the east coast of Vancouver Island. It is a tragic fact that the largest and best of that timber has now been creamed by lumber companies such as MacMillan Bloedel.

The mill is now outdated and poor forestry practices in the past have caught up with the industry. British Columbians are having to pay while companies like MacMillan Bloedel take the money and run. The mill became outdated. The plant ran down and become antiquated. It did not gear up to cut the second growth timber and the smaller timber which was farther back in the hills.

Our party believes that if the multinational corporations are going to be making money from the resources of our province they should be investing their money in those provinces and creating permanent jobs.

• (2215)

When I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about the export of money to build a new mill in Alabama, his only answer was that he would take notice of it. We not only face a crisis in Chemainus, not only in the forest industry of British Columbia, but across Canada. The tragedy which the people face in Chemainus is one that is shared by hundreds of thousands of Canadians. We face a government that is incapable, unwilling, or both, to take action.

In this adjournment debate, I ask the government once again if it is willing to take some action to ensure that multinational corporations will act responsibly and that they will have the welfare of the communities in which they operate in mind and not simply cream our resources, take the money and run off to exploit some other part of the world.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to give the hon. member a brief but nevertheless complete answer. First, the Canadian lumber industry is going through a difficult period right now, because the market is cyclical and demand is dropping in most parts of Canada and in the rest of the world, especially in countries that have their own lumber industries. Second, MacMillan Bloedel has invested over $650 million in Canada between 1979 and 1981. Third, the Alabama plant was built strictly with American funds, so there is no question of Canadian capital being drained to the United States. The plant is a sawmill built exclusively with American money. Fourth, what can be done now to help people who are laid off? I would have a great deal to say about the matter to the hon. member, because my own riding includes Baie-Comeau and Chute-aux-Outardes, both heavily dependent on the lumber industry, and we have problems there too. The Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have signed agreements with the government of British Columbia to provide assistance for workers by bringing in specific projects that will directly help the people who are affected by these lay-offs. The agreements were signed not only with British Columbia, but also with Ontario and other provinces, and now we must wait and see whether the action taken by the federal government is a satisfactory response to provincial needs. Fifth, the hon. member is asking the minister whether we are going to take action to ensure that the multinationals are doing whatever they can and that they are truly working in the interests of Canadians.

I would therefore ask the hon. member whether he actually has some specific cases in which he can prove that the multinationals are taking advantage of the present situation, and if so, to let us know so that we can investigate the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

At 10.19 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 4, 1982

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

TRANSPORTATION OF UNITED STATES ARMAMENTS ON ALASKA HIGHWAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is in regard to an incident which occurred yesterday near Mile 475 on the Alaska Highway in northeastern British Columbia, involving a civilian commercial transport vehicle carrying United States Air Force bombs of the type M20 Rockeye. The vehicle overturned dislodging and spilling a number of these active projectiles over a wide area.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police out of Fort Nelson, who were called to the scene, ordered the closure of the highway, and later in the day a United States military task force, including an explosive ordinance disposal team, arrived via Hercules aircraft at Fort Nelson, British Columbia, to take charge of the material. Having regard to the fact that this shipment was made—and the highly critical clean-up operation commenced—without the involvement or even the knowledge of our own military authorities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Minister of National Defence be required to avail himself of the earliest opportunity to inform the House what action he is contemplating to implement or improve any regulations governing such movements of dangerous military hardware through our country by our NORAD partners.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ANNIVERSARY OF LANDINGS IN NORMANDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to raise is urgent as this is the last day I can do so this year in this chamber. It is important because the event, even though 38 years ago, led to the overthrow of the Hitlerian Fortress Europe by the western allies of which, at that time, Canada was the third principal force. Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1944, allied forces stormed the beaches of Normandy, France, ultimately to achieve, 11 months later, VE Day on May 13, 1945. In that heroic struggle hundreds of thousands of Canadians participated, soldiers, airmen, sailors—not all men, since there were thousands of women in uniform in World War II.

It would be invidious to pick out units or formations for fear of missing out many brave men, whether soldiers storming the beaches, sailors manning the ships and boats of those first armadas, or the thousands of Canadian airmen who kept the skies relatively clear of the enemy or who prevented the movement of enemy reinforcements.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Minister of National Defence who, like myself, saw the June 6 landings as the first of the rescue mission to those of us who were on the wrong side of the battle lines by reason of earlier activity:

That this House go on record as saluting the bravery and sacrifice of those Canadians who on June 6, 1944, gave of their lives in the struggle to defeat the evils of Hitlerism and its heartfelt congratulations to those Canadians who survived to go on to ultimate victory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to put this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, fish in Lake Ontario have been discovered to contain the highest levels of dioxin ever recorded. Given the fact that the prime source of dioxin is the chemical dumps situated in the United States, making this a bilateral problem, and given, according to a press release from the office of the Prime Minister, that National Environment Week runs from May 20 to June 5 this year in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

S.O. 43

That the government indicate when it will start taking seriously the problem of pollution in the Niagara River, the Lake Erie ice boom, the Garrison Diversion project that will affect Manitoba, and show good faith by appointing a Canadian chairman to the International Joint Commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

• (1110)

TRANSPORT

FUNDING FOR VANCOUVER LIGHT RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On June 2 at Gladstone School in my Vancouver constituency, over 250 people met to protest the unilateral decision of the Government of British Columbia to impose an above-ground rapid transit system in the Commercial Drive area. Whereas the Government of Canada is contributing money to the Advanced Light Rapid Transit System, ALRT, which could be built underground for only an additional 1.5 per cent of the construction cost, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That the Government of Canada increase its contribution so that the necessary funding can be provided to build underground and thus save this very vibrant local community from needless destruction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-88, passed by this House over two months ago, gives the Farm Credit Corporation, with the concurrence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the power to raise money by any means, and I quote:

The Corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the Corporation.

Recently the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made statements to the effect that the FCC, because of this new provision, will have $1 billion of additional funds available to farmers at lower interest rates. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Minister of Agriculture be requested to make a statement on motions at the earliest possible date, advising Canadian farmers when this additional funding will be available and at what interest rate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

COST OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ELECTRICITY—USE OF DAIRY HEATERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, electricity on Prince Edward Island is generated by oil-fired boilers causing that province to have one of the highest electricity rates in Canada. The majority of dairy farmers on P.E.I. use electrical hot water heaters for heating the water used for washing their milking equipment. There are heat exchangers on the market which dairy farmers could use to utilize heat from milk being cooled, to heat the water necessary for washing their equipment. Regular use of these heat exchangers would help to make eastern Canada less dependent on expensive foreign oil. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources immediately change the Canada Oil Substitution Program so that it will include heat exchangers that are available to dairy farmers to utilize the heat from milk to heat water.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The announcement by President Reagan from the Versailles Economic Summit on behalf of the United States of America is a very positive one. Economic policies are bearing fruit, inflation in the U.S. is down, and interest rates are falling, he is happy to report. Personal savings are improving and economic recovery is imminent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the motion is urgent, would the hon. member please get to the point?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, on the contrary the Canadian economic picture today shows the Canadian dollar as the weakest since the depression of 1930. Interest rates climbed today by .5 per cent. Unemployment is rampant. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott):

That this House call on all members of the Liberal Party in the cabinet and backbenches to stop being puppets of the Prime Minister and stand up and be counted along with the opposition, and call on the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to bring some positive action to this sagging economic situation in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1115)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF STIMULATIVE ACTION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. This week the government established two records, an all-time low for the dollar and an all-time high for unemployment. The statistics this morning show that unemployment stands at 10.2 per cent; that is an increase of 45 per cent over last year. We have lost 320,000 jobs since August; 22,000 last month alone. So far, Mr. Speaker, the government has refused to take off the federal tax on construction materials to help the construction industry. It has refused to expand the Small Business Loans Act to provide emergency funding. It has refused to increase its investment in research and development.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Crombie: It has refused to support the Canadian automobile industry, and the Canadian textile and shoe manufacturing industries. Since the government has refused to do these things we have asked it to do, would the Acting Prime Minister tell us what things his government will do to get this country back on its feet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the figures this morning on unemployment are to be deplored. We are the first to do that. The government has done a number of things in the past with respect to employment, with respect to the structural aspect of it, and so on. This has been stated in the House on a great number of occasions.

There are some things that the opposition could do to help. Let me give some examples. In my own area of transportation, I have got a ports bill waiting in this House. Most of the members of the opposition have said they agree with it. The marine community of Canada wants it very badly. The opposition could help this morning very substantially by giving me this bill in the coming month. This would enhance the capacity of ports in Canada at this time.

I have got another initiative on western transportation—$17 billion in the next decade.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I am telling you what I am doing. The members of the opposition could be very helpful in restoring confidence by approving of this move.

There is quite a number of things that this government is doing. The opposition could be very helpful, too, and it may be that they should take their responsibility for that today and for the rest of the month.

Mr. Crombie: Every unemployed Canadian knows the inadequacy of that answer.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This minister is responsible for the level of unemployment. He must be shaken by the fact that 320,000 jobs have been lost since last August, 22,000 last month alone. The government insists that somehow our salvation lies with the United States. In the United States the employment level has gone up, while ours is going down. Since these are made-in-Canada problems, where are the made-in-Canada solutions?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are all very disturbed by the increase in the number of unemployed, according to the return quoted this morning. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know that this government has taken a number of very important initiatives in order to save jobs amongst workers. We now have well over 1,700 agreements under the work-sharing program, which affect 83,000 workers. As a result we have been able to save a number of jobs and have averted a number of lay-offs.

Equally, I would point out, as did my colleague, the Minister of Transport, that if the member from Rosedale is as anxious as he appears to be, he can help people come to grips with the unemployment problem. Today we will be debating a bill on training that will authorize expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars to bring many new Canadians into the training programs. If the hon. member and his colleagues would co-operate, we could pass that bill today, have it in committee, and have it ready to be operating within a week's time. It would provide many new places for tens of thousands of Canadians. This is a case where, if the opposition were as concerned as it appears to be, it has the opportunity to give us the assistance we need by helping us pass that legislation.

• (1120)

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. He knows that his work-sharing programs account for 69,000 avoided lay-offs. This does not at all touch the 1,241,000 people who are on the streets today. Despite the programs and pronouncements of the minister, we lost 22,000 jobs last month alone. Surely the minister's responsibility is for all the unemployed, not merely for the 69,000 in the work-sharing programs. His responsibility is for all people who are unemployed. The country is looking for some economic leadership from the minister and from the government. I should like to ask him one more time: what will he do for the people who are unemployed today?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, again, the time in question period would not give us full scope within which to state the number of programs we have in place. Let us just clear up some of the misinterpretation by the hon. member. To begin with, when he talks about 1.2 million people on the street, they are also on the street with substantial support from the unemployment insurance fund which was established to provide for support during this period of time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Hon. members seem to discount the importance of that, but our unemployment insurance system is one of the most critical supports and foundations for unemployed people in the industrial world. The government is committed to maintaining it and, furthermore, building upon the program.

We have now signed agreements with the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, and other provinces, to provide not only for training but for a number of new employment projects in the forestry and fisheries areas. We have a number of alternative programs to provide employment, and we would be much better off in the country if the opposition would give some co-operation and help, rather than simply always raising a big fuss and a lot of noise.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and of the Prime Minister. This week the Government of Canada had to defend the Canadian dollar by running down its foreign exchange reserves, by borrowing abroad, and by increasing the rate of the Bank of Canada and interest rates generally. If the Canadian dollar is so strong, why must it be defended by higher interest rates which are causing businesses to collapse at near depression lows, and are costing thousands of Canadians their jobs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say what is obvious, that there is a major problem of confidence in the world today. The meeting at Versailles should—and we all pray that it will—bring about a good amount of confidence in the economy. Canada is reacting to the situation in the same way as the United Kingdom, Germany, and France. We are all looking for ways and means to get out of a very, very difficult international situation.

The Minister of Finance has repeatedly said what was at the roots of the problem. He indicated that fact that the inflation in the United States has gone down to 6 per cent or 7 per cent and the fact that interest rates remain at 16 per cent have created a U.S. dollar attractiveness in the world which is upsetting the world economy at this time.

The other day the Minister of Finance repeated that he would adjust to circumstances. He kept all his options open. He promised to the House that he would review the situation after his return from Versailles. He said that if he had to go to the market for more money, he would present his case to the finance committee and would indicate what were the figures. That is the situation in which we are now, and hopefully by next week, when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance return, we will have a better view of the next steps.

INTEREST AND INFLATION RATE LEVELS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to correct him. The major problem is not lack of confidence in the international economy; it is lack of confidence in the way the government is running this economy. The government—and the Acting Prime Minister has just repeated this—has repeatedly blamed Canada's economic problems on American economic policy. If that is the case, why are United States interest rates and inflation rates coming down, while Canadian interest rates and inflation rates are continuing to be very high?

• (1125)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not very original. I stated the position which is understood to be the one in all countries of the world. The United Kingdom, France and Germany also identify the source of major discomfort in the world today as being the situation which exists, as I explained, in the United States.

My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and myself have indicated a number of things that the opposition could do in a positive fashion to help us all in this situation. I think the opposition has some responsibility also. I mentioned the ports bill as being very important. The hon. member, who comes from the great city of Vancouver, knows that the marine community in Vancouver wants this bill. Why does she not come out now and arrange things so that this bill will be passed? It will create a great amount of enthusiasm in Vancouver about the future of ports and transportation in that city. The members of the opposition, I repeat, have some responsibility also.

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister as well. Since last fall's budget, unemployment in Canada has continued to rise month after month. Today it has reached, in real numbers, almost two million Canadians. Every Canadian knows someone in our country who is unemployed. My question is straightforward. Will the government now acknowledge that its budget is completely out of date, and will it accept its responsibility to provide some job security to Canadians for the coming summer and say that it will bring in a budget before we recess, a budget that recognizes the need for action?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously I cannot answer that question except by repeating what we all said here this morning. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said in particular that a number of programs have been created to take care of chronic unemployment as well as structural unemployment. I will not repeat them all. He has reported in the past few days on a number of programs such as job sharing, and a number of initiatives to help students through the summer. All these things have been done.

There is hope that the meeting at Versailles—I underline "hope"—might begin to resolve some of the more basic issues in the world today. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance went there, and they said repeatedly before they left that what will come out of Versailles will influence their decisions in the future. That is all I can really say. The hon. member cannot expect me to say more than that today.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister should know, as all Canadians know, that the programs that the government has produced up to this point are simply not working. Something in addition is required, and that is the message we are trying to get through to the government.

INVESTMENT IN MANUFACTURING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, Canada faces an economic crisis the likes of which we have not seen since the war. What is required now is economic leadership by a government that will level with the people of Canada and make it clear that there are no quick fixes, but will produce some grounds for hope. In this context my supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Since he and his colleagues refuse to commit themselves to produce a budget before the recess, I would at least ask him if the government will recognize that the way we can get job security is to put investment into the manufacturing sector, and at least commit the government to produce some new initiatives to create manufacturing jobs before we recess.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is saying is that what is needed is more government spending. Most people, if not all, agree that one of the causes of inflation in Canada today is the deficit in government expenditures. Most people say that the deficit accumulated by this government is excessive.

• (1130)

My hon. friend has recently discovered that manufacturing will be the solution to Canadian economic problems. At other times in the past others have said that natural resources would be the solution. At other times maybe a few NDPers have said that services were the key to prosperity. But on the manufacturing side, on the industrial development side, there is hardly a day that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or another minister does not announce a major initiative, a major participation on the part of the federal government in some project.

My friend loves to go to the west coast. At Prince Rupert three quarters of a billion dollars are being invested in that port. If he goes to Roberts Bank he will find that we are quadrupling the facilities at that port. In Vancouver, container terminals have been expanded.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pepin: I am just repeating this to help hon. members in the House and the population to realize the extent of what the government does now. My hon. friend would like us to do more. That is a debatable argument because, if we did much more, we would contribute to the deficit which contributes to inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, what the minister has said would be humorous if it were not so sad. It is true that something has been done in Prince Rupert, but it is also true that more than 100,000 men and women today are out of a job in the province of British Columbia alone. It is true that we need much more action. That is what we are demanding on this side, and that is what the government does not seem to understand. I point out, before I ask my last question, that it was the Minister of Finance himself, not people on this side of the House, who said that his budget was outdated and that we needed a new economic statement.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask, in view of the answers that the minister is giving us, whether he is not really admitting that the government has given up its serious obligation to govern, that it refuses to provide any economic leadership and that, in short, it has lost any sense of mandate to govern, and should resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance left, they indicated that, upon their return with the assessment they will be able to make of the world situation following the meeting at Versailles, they will be in a position to review the situation. They have repeatedly said that.

What I was trying to argue with my hon. friend is on the sort of mood that he tries to create that the Government of Canada is not doing anything. I was trying to counter that suggestion to the best of my ability, in the field in which I operate, the field of transportation. I could take the hon. member from coast to coast and show him what is happening, and he would realize how much the Government of Canada is doing. It is high time that he gave the impression to the people of Canada that he recognizes that. So, now he seems to agree with me.

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. Pepin: I will try it again, then, at the next opportunity. The next question is, how much more can the Government of Canada do? If the Government of Canada does a lot more than it does now, it brings about a series of problems—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MR. AND MRS. ROLLY FOX

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to call the attention of the House to the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of Mr. and Mrs. Rolly Fox, the parents of Terry Fox.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

TRANSPORTATION OF UNITED STATES ARMAMENTS ON ALASKA HIGHWAY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given him notice. It is with regard to the incident which occurred yesterday in northeastern British Columbia, at Mile 375 on the Alaska Highway, involving a civilian commercial transport vehicle carrying dangerous military hardware, namely, United States Air Force bombs of the type M-20 Rockeye. The vehicle overturned, spilling a number of these bombs over a wide area. Incredibly, no one was on site to inform the public of the hazards associated with this incident, nor was our military authority nor the minister's office informed of the shipment.

First of all, it was done without consent. The clean-up operation, involving a United States military team which arrived in Fort Nelson in a Hercules aircraft, was also carried out without the knowledge and consent of our own military authorities. I would like to ask the minister whether he is prepared, after the question period, to make a statement with regard to this important and serious incident?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have the details here of the accident to which the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River has referred. I will supply him with some of the details of this accident, if he wants them, but I do not think there is any need to make a statement on this issue. The involvement of the Department of National Defence is only marginal. It was routine shipment of munitions from Alaska to the United States, which happens quite often. All precautions were taken. The shipment was passed through customs, the necessary permit was obtained from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and everything which had to be done was done. All the munitions were properly crated and rendered what we call "safe", so they could not explode.

Mr. Epp: What else could they do?

Mr. Lamontagne: I repeat, all precautions were taken to ensure that there could be no accident. The accident was probably caused by the driver. I do not know exactly how it happened, but as far as the public in the area is concerned, there was no risk to life, risk of explosion or anything like that. The clean-up is under the control of the emergency people from Alaska and from the company, and the Alaska Highway will be opened in due course.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the answer is sufficient.

CLOSING OF HIGHWAY TO CIVILIAN TRAFFIC

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): The fact is that this shipment was made under permit from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was not a specific permit, but one which covers all such shipments on an annual basis. The fact is that the military authorities who were asked about the danger instructed the RCMP to close the highway. The highway has been closed to civilian traffic for a day. These bombs are loaded. They were equipped with safety pins, yes, but I am told by the military officials that if a train had hit the truck, say, near the metropolitan centre of Vancouver, these bombs may well have exploded.

It is incredible that our military authorities are not informed of these shipments. I am not denying that these shipments have to be made. Certainly under our arrangements with NORAD, our air space and our highways will from time to time be exposed to these dangers. We should certainly be prepared to accept these dangers, but there must surely be more control. We must be informed so that, when an incident occurs, the public can be informed of the danger and hazards associated with it, and civilian transportation facilities can be kept in place.

I ask the minister again, will he first of all order his officials to review the procedures governing such shipments? And, at the earliest opportunity, will he make a statement in the House on the outcome of such a review and what he intends to do to allay some of the obvious fears that the people in my constituency presently have concerning the future?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, for the satisfaction of the hon. member I can certainly look into the procedures followed at the moment to review whether they are still safe. But, as I have just mentioned, every possible precaution was indeed taken. As far as being advised of every shipment is concerned, our department is usually advised of what is going on. But in the case of the normal transportation of ammunition, where safety procedures are in fact respected, we just take it for granted that everything is going well, and the proof is that everything was taken into consideration, that is, there was no explosion or anything to risk the lives of any of the people in the area. Despite that, I think that we can look into the procedures to see if they can be improved.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, who says the opposition has some responsibility. If he remembers, the hon. member for Rosedale gave him five options. But I want to ask him a specific question about youth unemployment.

Canadian youth between the ages of 20 and 24 today are facing a staggering 20.2 per cent unemployment rate. One out of every five of these people is unemployed, out of work, has no job. The minister and his government place a lot of stress on important initiatives. I therefore ask the minister why youth unemployment is going up despite these programs and initiatives.

• (1140)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation with young people in this country is one that is now being shared across the economy. There is a lack of growth in the economy. This is something that is being shared by all industrial countries. We have tried to put a program in place that will supply work for over 55,000 young people this summer, through our Summer Canada program. At the same time we have put in place a network of over 400 employment offices across Canada, the purpose of which is to begin working with businessmen to develop job placements for students and to provide an area where students can register for those jobs.

As I said in the House before, we need the active co-operation of members to work in their own constituencies and regions to help businessmen register the jobs in those places so that they will be available to the students. Again, we are dealing with a situation and circumstance which is shared by all countries, as we have seen in the discussions as a prelude to the Summit meeting. We are taking initiatives in this country to try to respond to this to the best of our ability.

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Acting Prime Minister. Despite the comments of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, those initiatives are not working. Youth unemployment is going up, not down. The minister said that is due to a lack of growth. Can the Acting Prime Minister indicate why this lack of growth is now directly related to the government's budget, its economic leadership and, for example, the loss of jobs through the operations of FIRA?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last point in particular regarding the treatment of foreign investment in Canada is debatable. In a debate on that subject, different positions are taken. This morning I tried to indicate to the opposition that a number of things can be done which necessitate their support. I was quite blunt about it. There are a number of instances in which they could be helpful in restoring confidence. Occasionally the opposition should do something other than oppose.

I might mention that this morning great emphasis was placed on the unemployment figures. Another stack of figures came out this morning. No one has mentioned them yet. The trade figures are quite good. We are now running a surplus of $5 billion, which is up $3 billion from a year ago at this time. Yet, I repeat, nobody has mentioned that fact.

I also tried to indicate that there is an element of positivism, if I might put it that way, which should be in the air at this time. There should be an element of confidence in the air. Every one of us has a responsibility in that regard. Yesterday I read an article from Paris "Match" which stated that, of five leading countries, Canada is considered the place with the highest standard and the place which inspires most confidence. It is about time that we reimported that confidence.

* * *

ENERGY

COST OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ELECTRICITY—USE OF DAIRY HEATERS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I gave him notice of this yesterday, and further notice today. Electricity on Prince Edward Island is all generated by oil-fired boilers, causing Prince Edward Island to have one of the highest electricity rates in Canada. I am sure the minister is aware that there are other means of reducing the use of oil. The majority of dairy farmers on P.E.I. use electric hot water heaters to heat the water used for washing their milking equipment. There are heat exchangers on the market which dairy farmers could use to utilize the heat from the milk being cooled, to heat the water necessary for washing their equipment. Is the minister prepared to make use of heat exchangers that are available to dairy farmers eligible for COSP, off oil conversion?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question and having sent me further information this morning concerning the machines to which he has referred. I will be pleased to examine this question with my officials and inform the hon. member of the conclusion we reach. I would advise my hon. friend, as he may well know, that we have expanded the COSP program in the maritimes, and conversion to propane is now eligible for COSP grants. I will study the suggestion with great attention.

* * *

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REMEDY UNEMPLOYMENT IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. This month it seems that, once again, northwestern Quebec has the highest unemployment rate in Canada. Nearly 27 per cent of the workers in this area are unemployed at the present time, which demonstrates the abject failure of the Liberal economic policies. Would the Acting Prime Minister agree, on behalf of the government, to implement job-creation programs immediately in order to help this northern area where unemployment has taken such disastrous proportions?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's question, a number of negotiations have been carried out between members of this government and those in Quebec. We announced that we are working with the Government of Quebec to establish a program under Section 38 dealing with the forestry industry. We have opened up discussions in other areas where we can apply our job-creation money to assist those in those hard-hit areas. In addition, the members of the government and their respective departments have provided initiatives, as my seatmate, the minister of trade, has, for example, which brought about major investment in Bombardier and which will provide close to 20,000 jobs in that province. We are looking at a number of programs in the area of the Gaspé. There are a number of initiatives that have been taken by the government to provide aid to the Province of Quebec. We are certainly open to further suggestions because we want to co-operate with all sectors of that province to ensure that the people there have the employment they require.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

DEVELOPMENT OF FISHING INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In Quebec City, his counterpart, the Hon. Jean Garon, stated before a parliamentary committee that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans failed to meet his commitment to arrange for a meeting, and that the federal minister was working hard to solve the problems of his own province, namely New Brunswick, and ignoring the problems of Quebec. Could the minister inform us whether his policies are seriously holding back the development of the fisheries industry in Quebec and whether it is true that he does not want to meet his provincial counterpart?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the most dramatic increase ever in the history of the Maritime fisieries means holding back the fisheries in Quebec, I have the impression that fishermen would be asking me to hold back a bit more. After all, fishermen in Quebec have received the lion's share and a big lion at that, as a result of an increase in quotas for the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I am sure that the member for Manicouagan and other hon. members can give convincing proof that this is happening. As for the meeting with Mr. Garon, several appointments were set up, but at the last minute I always received a call that the minister would not be able to make it. There comes a time when decisions must be made and they must be announced: that time came for me. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I did not go out of my way to pick a fight with the Quebec Minister of Fisheries. I think that in certain areas we have been able to co-operate, but with respect to others the minister is making allegations which are not altogether accurate. For instance, he says that the reduction in herring quotas was done on the spur of the moment, although he knows perfectly well, or he would if he took the trouble to read the files of his officials, that the herring problem has been going on for at least three or four years. In any case, I shall refrain from further comment, because it would only make matters worse.

• (1150)

[English]

EMPLOYMENT

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In spite of all the claims he has made about creating employment and keeping people off the unemployment rolls, by virtue of the statistics put out today his efforts have clearly been inadequate. The president of the Board of Trade of Sydney, Nova Scotia, has said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please put his supplementary question?

Mr. Keeper: What is the minister planning to do which will be adequate to meet the employment needs of some one million Canadians? What is he planning to do today?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to what we can do today, the hon. member can be equally helpful because a bill dealing with a new national training program will be presented for second reading. That bill will provide employment prospects for tens of thousands of Canadians. If the opposition cooperates and allows passage of that bill, those Canadians can be in new training positions within weeks or months. It is as much up to the opposition as it is us as to what will be done.

* * *

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS ON ENTRY OF SPAIN TO NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES ORGANIZATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There are reports that Canada and Spain may have reached a fisheries agreement which would give our Atlantic fishing industry greater access to the multimillion dollar Spanish cod market. Since the Spanish fleet is presently overfishing outside Canada's economic zone, or 200-mile limit, and has for 17 years implemented non-tariff barriers against Canadian fish exports, has Spain now agreed to enter the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization—or NAFO, as it is called in the trade—and has Spain agreed to abide by its regulations?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there have been some negotiations, and the Spanish government has indicated a readiness to join the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. The matter as to whether we will have a final agreement is still open. We are looking at the negotiations, and suggestions which have emerged from the negotiations, and I am not in a position to give a final judgment yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR OTTAWA CENTRE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Canadian Press has apparently quoted the Liberal Member of Parliament for Ottawa Centre in response to the unemployment figures released by Statistics Canada today, to the effect that "the situation has deteriorated much faster than I ever imagined, and it is much worse than I hoped we would ever have to endure". He said that there must be changes, and "MacEachen knows it".

Does the Acting Prime Minister agree with the perceptive statement made by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre as quoted by the Canadian Press and, if so, can we reasonably expect the major changes to which the hon. member has said we can look forward?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, who is quite familiar with the Minister of Finance, could find many quotes from the Minister of Finance to justify what he has said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore on a short supplementary.

* * *

FISHERIES

ACCESS TO SPANISH MARKET FOR CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Since Canada should only give allocations to the Spanish fleet after Spain proves its willingness to open its markets to Canadian exports, and in view of the very high rate of unemployment in Canada today, and especially in the fisheries industry, has the minister received this assurance and, if so, how many tonnes of Canadian salt cod can we expect to sell this year to the Spanish market as well as to the European Economic Community?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. member in my first answer that we had not arrived at a final conclusion as to whether the advantages offered under the negotiations would justify going ahead, or whether our goals were completely met. I certainly would hesitate to stand here and say that if there is a signed treaty or a signed agreement I would not accept the word of the nation with which we would be signing an agreement, and I am sure the hon. member did not want to imply that.

On the question of unemployment, I might say that what worries me—and it should worry the Canadian industry—is that our overdependency on one market is leaving us more exposed than I would like to see, to having full warehouses of unsold fish. It is necessary to discuss in a very rational way the leverage we have to get into some non-traditional markets. Frankly, I hope the industry will stop wanting to have it both ways, which is to get all the fish but then to have nothing left to negotiate some market entrance. I fear this debate has been going on for too long in the industry.

* * *

THE JUDICIARY

CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL REPORT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT JUSTICE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the submission to him of the report of the Canadian Judicial Council on the conduct of Mr. Justice Thomas Berger of the British Columbia Supreme Court. Since this case is unprecedented and it is important that the country and the judiciary be fully informed as to what, if any, are the recommendations in that report on judicial conduct, is it the intention of the Minister of Justice to release that report in its entirety and, if so, would he inform the House today?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I think this is unprecedented. It is a very important precedent because the division of powers in our country is very well established, and we have to make sure it will remain so. The report is on that very subject, and after a lot of reflection I have decided to make the report public later on today. I hope it will not be considered as a precedent, but because there has been a long and very great debate in Canada about this subject, I think it is my duty to make the report public.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH OILSEED CRUSHING PLANT AT MELFORT, SASK.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On March 23 in a committee I inquired of the minister whether the application by Cargill Grain for an oilseed crushing plant at Melfort was being considered, at which time he assured me he would review the case. It is now two months since that time, and since the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been talking about joint job-creation programs, and this being one of those kinds of programs which would create jobs, has the minister reviewed the case, and is he now in a position to assure Cargill that he will accept its application and that the project will go ahead? What is the situation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the application in question was rejected by my predecessor. After I became minister, the Cargill company presented what it said was some new information justifying a fresh look at the situation. I have been taking a fresh look at it, but I have not concluded my work.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—QUERY RESPECTING JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since the Acting Prime Minister seems to be totally unaware of the unemployment crisis in British Columbia, I will turn to his seatmate, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and ask him if he is aware that the unemployment rate in British Columbia has gone up 70 per cent since this time last year. Is he aware that at present the unemployment rate is 11 per cent and, in some areas like Prince George, 19 percent? Will the minister therefore tell the House specifically what job-creation programs the government has in mind for British Columbia, particularly job creation in industry, and what programs there are to make permanent jobs available in industry?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have been making some announcements involving specific job creation on a permanent basis. For example, we have supported AEL Microtel and its new microchip facility, which will create some 500 jobs. We have supported the Duke Point industrial park and marine terminal, which has just opened in Nanaimo with the very substantial support of the federal government. We have assisted Ebco Industries in the setting up of a numerical-controlled machining centre to compete more effectively in the aerospace sector. These are some of the initiatives we are taking in the manufacturing sector to create jobs in British Columbia. We intend to proceed along those lines because we recognize the seriousness of the situation and the importance of diversification of the British Columbia economy.

• (1200)

At the same time, unfortunately, we are not in a position to take steps to improve and deal with the very serious recession in the major markets for British Columbia products, namely, the United States and western Europe. I hope there will be an improvement there. In the meantime we are working to try to deal with some of the most severe aspects of the situation in British Columbia which we recognize as serious. We are taking some initiatives which are designed to create long-term manufacturing jobs, an objective which I hope we all share, for the workers of British Columbia.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

TRANSFER OF FLIGHTS FROM DORVAL TO MIRABEL—CONSEQUENCES TO REGIONAL ECONOMY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Transport—

Miss Jewett: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Later! The minister will soon be announcing his decision on the transfer of flights from Dorval to Mirabel. Could the minister give us the assurance that one of the criteria in his recommendation to cabinet will be to consider the serious economic consequences any transfer of flights from Dorval to Mirabel might have for the general economy of Montreal Island and its immediate surroundings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no decision for the House this morning, but I shall comment in a somewhat philosophical vein on the issue itself. There are people who are saying that we must take into account the immediate interests of the workers, employees, carriers and so forth. Others are saying that no, on the contrary, we must look to the future and ask ourselves whether the drawbacks of a double airport at Montreal are not substantial enough to justify the immediate transfer of these flights. I merely wish to show that there are two sides to the issue and obviously, both sides will be taken into account in the decision we shall make.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Thursday, June 3, 1982 and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FORRESTALL—REPLY OF MR. PEPIN RESPECTING PORTS AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I want to do so before the Acting Prime Minister leaves the chamber. Earlier in the question period I am afraid he unintentionally misled the House with the response that he gave to the lead question from this side. I wish I could get his attention for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is a point of order before the House.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister has charged that the opposition is holding up passage in this House or is even holding up debate in this House on the content of the new ports authority bill. Where the minister has unintentionally misled the House with this charge and accusation lies in the fact that the government—and he is very much aware of this—has limited debate in this matter to a short day. If we cannot guarantee and promise a short day, in the words of the government House leader, he will not let the bill come forward.

I would not want the minister to leave the impression among the port communities in this country that I, having responsibility for this party for leading this legislation through—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member has made his point and it is not a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF THIRTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the thirteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

* * *

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING INDEXATION OF MEMBERS' SALARIES

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-656, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (salaries).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill imposes a maximum annual upper limit of 6 per cent on the indexation of members' salaries. This is a direction in leadership that this House would be very wise to consider seriously in this very difficult economic period.

Just consider, Mr. Speaker, the effect on the nation of members of the House not following the direction of this bill, if we should undertake to give ourselves a 10 per cent or 11 per cent increase in January. I recommend this bill to every member of the House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,156, 4,277.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

DND—CONTRACTS FOR SUPERHEATER HEADERS AND SKIS

Question No. 4,156—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place a $1,440,000 order with Babcock and Wilcox Ltd. for superheater headers ship sets under contract no. 15MJ.2701385-III (2MJ81-02435) and, if so, how many sets were ordered?

2. Did the department purchase skis from K.K.W. Sports Enterprises Ltd. for $10,875, contract for ski instruction from Silver Star School of Skiing for $38,400 and purchase ski tow services from Silver Star Sports Ltd. for $19,200 and, if so (a) how many pairs of skis were purchased for $10,875 (b) who is using the skis (c) who is using the ski instruction and towing services (d) how many soldiers are taking part in the ski training program (e) how many instructors were provided (f) over how long a period does the program run (g) what is the purpose of the program (h) will there be other similar programs and, if so (i) how many soldiers will take part (ii) what is the expected total cost?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Supply and Services as follows:

1. The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, placed a $1,440,000 order with Babcock and Wilcox Ltd. for 12 sets of superheater headers.

2. (a) and (b) Yes. The Department of National Defence purchased 150 pairs of cross-country skis which constituted part of a normal replacement purchase for the Ace Mobile Force (AMF) battle group.

(c), (d), (e), (f), (g) and (h)(i), (ii) The contract for ski instruction and ski tow services is in support of the ski training program for 1 Canadian Brigade Group. Five hundred and twenty two soldiers participated in the program which was conducted over a five-week period starting February 2, 1982 and ending March 10, 1982. In support of the program 16 instructors were provided. The purpose of the program is to train soldiers in alpine skills, encourage and maintain physical fitness and enhance esprit de corps. Similar programs are being planned annually for a maximum of 640 soldiers at a cost approximately the same as for this year's.

LIBERATION STRUGGLE OF THE PEOPLES OF SOUTHERN AFRICA

Question No. 4,277—Mr. Taylor:

1. Will the government be represented at the Canada-wide conference to be held in Ottawa, May 7 to 9, 1982?

2. Did the government contribute directly or through CIDA towards the cost of running the conference and, if so, what amount?

3. Did the government contribute directly or through CIDA or any other government organization towards the travelling expenses of Sam Nujoma of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) and Oliver Tambo, the leader of the African National Congress (South Africa), who are planning a tour of Canada in April 1982 prior to the conference in May and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The government will not send delegates to the Canadian Conference in Solidarity with the Liberation Struggle of the Peoples of Southern Africa held in Ottawa, May 7-9, 1982. An official of the Department of External Affairs will attend the conference as an invited guest.

2. The Department of External Affairs and CIDA will not contribute toward the running of the conference.

3. The Department of External Affairs and CIDA will not contribute toward the travelling expenses of persons from Africa.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

THE ECONOMY

ALLEGED NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received a notice under Standing Order 26 from the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I believe the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is going to present the argument on his behalf.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my leader who is unavoidably absent, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the crisis in the Canadian economy, composed of the following disturbing elements: the record high level of unemployment of 10.2 per cent of the work force, nearly two million Canadians if the hidden unemployed are included; the collapse of the National Energy Program; the weakening of the Canadian dollar; and the increase in Canadian interst rates. All of these elements constitute an economic national emergency unprecedented in the post-war period requiring immediate action to put into place a program of national economic regeneration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As provided for in Section (2) of Standing Order 26, the hon. member for Oshawa has given me due notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House to discuss the crisis in the Canadian economy.

There can be no doubt as to the importance of this subject for all members of the House. The application refers to problems which have been of concern to the House and various aspects of this chronic and continuing problem have been discussed almost on a daily basis for an extended period of time.

• (1210)

A series of bills relating to the National Energy Program have been and will be discussed by the House for weeks. Since December 10, 1981 the elements enumerated by the hon. member have been chosen as the subject matter of at least eight opposition motions under our supply procedures and debated in this House. I must draw to the hon. member's attention the fact that on December 18, 1980 he, together with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), sought leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of, and I use his own words as reported on page 5888 of Hansard of that date:

—discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the economic crisis in Canada—

That application was accepted by the Chair. I must point out that the application was accepted on the eve of a proposed adjournment of the House for a period of time. Today the proposed subject is "the crisis in the Canadian economy".

As Madam Speaker pointed out to the House last Wednesday, the Chair is bound by the conditions laid down in Standing Order 26. Section (16)(d) of that Standing Order reads as follows:

—the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session pursuant to the provisions of this Standing Order—

Therefore, the Chair cannot accept the hon. member's request for an emergency debate on this subject at this time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL TRAINING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-115, to establish a national program for occupational training, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as we discussed during question period this morning, members of this House are quite justifiably concerned about the level of unemployment in this country and are asking for some real answers on that issue. How can we come to grips with the problems facing many Canadians without jobs? Mr. Speaker, today members of this House have the opportunity to do something very real, tangible and concrete about that problem. We are introducing for second reading a bill which will authorize the government to put in place a brand new national training program, one that will affect young people, workers in existing plants and factories, and those coming into the work force. The bill will affect literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are attempting to respond to changing economic conditions. So, Mr. Speaker, in a very immediate sense there is an opportunity for this House to show Canadians that we are concerned, not just in a rhetorical way, but in a very clear and real way, and that this Parliament can take action to respond to their needs.

Equally important is the fact that this bill will provide a foundation and framework for developing responses to the job market throughout the 1980s. We will be experiencing major alterations in the way people work in Canada. There will be a new world of work, a new technology and new industry which will require a substantially different set of skills on the part of Canadians. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that one of the most important investments we can make as a government is to ensure Canadians are capable of responding to this new technology with the appropriate skills.

[Translation]

In the '80s we are going to see a number of changes; changes in the price of energy, in our industries, in computer science and in technology. Workers will have to adapt to these changes. Mobility, re-training and new work standards are aspects that will become more important for Canadian workers. For instance, there will be more women in the labour market. Training and education will be necessary to fill the positions that will be developed during the '80s. The job world is changing.

[English]

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I addressed a conference of combined representatives of community colleges across Canada, the people who provide a large proportion of this training. The conference dealt with the impact of new technology. They realize that in a very few years there will be major adjustments for people working in the service industries, such as insurance companies, banks and the public service. Secretarial pools will be replaced by word processors. Of course, this raises, honestly so, the fear over the impact this new technology will have, and whether it will put people out of work. Mr. Speaker, I do not fully associate myself with those concerns because I believe new technology also creates work, but only if people are trained for and able to adapt to the new skills required. So we are talking about an investment in the future of this country of immense proportions. We are talking about assuring hundreds of thousands of Canadians that they have hope in the future.

It is important to note as an historical footnote that the introduction of this training act is one of the first clear examples of the way in which the parliamentary task forces, established two years ago, have been able to have a major impact on government policy. Members will recall that at the beginning of the new Parliament the government established five or six task forces to enable it to come to grips with changes in the economy and society. One of the most important of those was the task force chaired by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), but with a membership from all three parties. That task force visited communities right across Canada and met with all kinds of Canadians in business, labour and education. A very clear message came from those Canadians that we needed changes in our training programs. We needed more money, new institutions, and we needed to improve substantially our flexibility in order to produce a first-class training system, one of the best in the world. I want to say to Members of Parliament, particularly those on that committee who spent many long hours working on the report, that they can see in this bill a very clear reflection of their investment of time, energy and creativity in that task force.

This government has honoured their work by bringing forward a new training bill which will give us the opportunity to establish the foundations of a new training system in Canada. I wanted to pay my own compliments, Mr. Speaker, to the members of that task force for the work they have undertaken. Equally so to those members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, with whom it has been my great delight and pleasure to meet on many occasions during the two years I have been the minister of this department. On those occasions they provided a number of new and creative suggestions as to how we should deal with training in Canada. Again, this bill is a reflection of their contribution.

The bill is not something which is necessarily the subject of partisan debate; it is something we can all agree to and should agree to because it reflects a sharing of responsibility of members from all parties. That is what gives me particular pleasure in being able to bring forward this bill. However, I want to provide one caution, Mr. Speaker. I do so with a clear realization that Members of Parliament will want to have the opportunity to debate this bill and to discuss its merits and suggest whatever kinds of amendments or concerns they might have.

• (1220)

I would put toward them a very clear choice. We can either spend a long time going over territory that we have gone over before and thereby run the risk of having this bill sit on the agenda for months on end, or perhaps even lose the bill because at the close of the summer session it may die on the Order Paper; or we can enact this bill with dispatch so that it can become law and we can get down to the business of training Canadians in a new kind of way.

I make a special appeal to members of this House, in particular in this debate today on second reading, to allow us to have second reading today so that the bill can go to committee. Then we can spend time in committee going over the details. If we are not given the opportunity to pass the bill on second reading, with the kind of parliamentary timetable and agenda that we are facing we are running the risk of not having this bill proceed further. I particularly address my remarks to the members of the opposition to help them realize that the choice is in their hands. With the kind of demand they were making today in question period, a legitimate demand, that this government do something to help Canadians and especially young Canadians, it is very clearly their responsibility. We can do something very real today by giving this bill passage and moving it through committee so that it will become the law of the land and we can get on with the training of Canadians.

Why is it so important, Mr. Speaker? Let me spend a moment giving a short history to show why this bill is central to the initiation and development of a new training system for Canadians. The Allmand task force, a task force that was commissioned by my own department, clearly showed that there were major faults in the present system. Perhaps the most important omission was that our present training system, largely funded by the federal government to the tune of over $800 million in the past year, was training a number of people for jobs that were not there, jobs that no longer existed. In some regions of the country over 30 per cent of those enrolling in the training programs supported under the Adult Occupational Training Act were in surplus occupations. That engendered enormous frustration on the part of the people who enrolled in those programs. It simply meant that we were not making good use of the money that was being expended in large sums in an effort to help Canadians get these new skills.

The recommendation that we have received is to develop a program that will target our training dollars towards those occupations which are in demand, to put the money where the jobs will be, to ensure that at the end of the training program there will be employment. This legislation is the keystone of that recommendation.

We were also told, Mr. Speaker, that it was very important, before we went forward with legislation, to have very close and open consultation, so that not only would we take the recommendations of the task force but we would also have two federal-provincial conferences on the issue of training; that we would present a basic policy framework to provincial ministers, sharing in the responsibility, so that they would have the opportunity to react.

The national training program that we put forward last January contained the following elements. First, that we have to improve substantially the planning of manpower and labour market programs. We need much better information than we now have. Although we were in a modern technology society, we were flying blind in terms of assessing needs. We did some at the federal level and some at the provincial manpower commission level, some of the schools did some, but it was fragmentary; no one integrated the information.

We are proposing to develop what we call an occupational protective system. Under that system we will take the best information that can be gathered at the federal level, the statistics that we have, and the kind of information we develop in terms of a national labour market, and combine and integrate that with the information obtained by provincial governments and manpower commissions and departments of colleges and universities. We would also integrate that with private industry information so that we can get a real assessment as to what industry requirements sector by sector will be.

To that end, over the past year we have been signing a number of employment agreements with different industrial sectors. We have signed agreements with the mining associations, with aerospace, with the graphics industry, with the foundries industry. We can begin to put in place a network of arrangements across the country with private industry so that we can share information, and when we have that information we can identify where the shortfall may be, where the problems may be and target our resources.

Therefore, one of the key elements in the new national training program is a national program of information development and planning, so that we have a clear ability—not perfect but certainly an improvement on what we have now—to plan where we want to go. And what about an information pool, a reservoir of information? We will be in a position to begin designating priority occupations in consultation with provincial governments and private industry. By priority occupations we do not mean just those that are in demand on the national level. We mean those which also have regional and local requirements. That means that we will be able to target our resources in training to those occupations where there is a need, so that our training programs will have a direct relationship to the job market. We need the authority to do that, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the key ingredients and elements in this bill. It will give us authority to begin providing those designated occupations so that federal dollars going into the training system will be allocated to wherever the demand may be.

We also recognize that if we are to make major changes in the training system, adjustments will have to be made, changes will have to be brought about. In particular, there will have to be a substantial modernization of training facilities. I have visited many of our community colleges and plants and factories. I found to my horror that sometimes people are training on equipment that is 30 or 40 years out of date. They simply do not have up-to-date facilities. They know that we are moving into a new era of information technology, yet many of our schools and training systems simply do not have a computer terminal.

Let me give an example from a visit I made a few weeks ago to the marine college on Prince Edward Island. One of the anomalies or paradoxes we face is that, in a growing industry on the east coast of Canada, the offshore oil and gas industry, we are having to recruit workers from offshore because there are not enough trained marine engineers or navigators to supply the needs of those industries. Yet we have a college, a good college, on Prince Edward Island that is training people for those occupations, but they are working on navigational machinery which was built during the Second World War. They say: "We need a new computer, a new simulator, and we can turn out an additional hundred marine engineers a year to supply the industry". So for lack of one piece of equipment, we are denying a high-skilled, high-technology job to 100 Canadians per year.

At the same time we realize that there are enormous demands for expansion of training facilities. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) knows that in Toronto there was a report just last week that Seneca College has received over 15,000 applications from people for their high-technology training school and they have places for only 8,000. Seneca College now has applications in front of us and the provincial government of Ontario for expansion of that program.

This legislation authorizes the Government of Canada to go into a new program called the skills growth fund. It will provide direct grants to training centres and institutions across Canada for the expansion and modernization of facilities.

An hon. Member: The provinces didn't do it.

Mr. Axworthy: Whatever the reason, I am not going to lay the blame. I simply say that if we are going to bring about a new system of training we have to recognize that we will need a new curriculum, new courses. We will have to retrain many of our faculty members, provide new equipment and new facilities. Mr. Speaker, we have put $108 million this year on the line to be spent, and we could be spending it the very moment this legislation is passed. Those 15,000 applicants for Seneca College in Toronto could be going to school next fall if we get the legislation passed now. They could be in the new training classes. But we need the money to do it, and this is why we need to have this bill passed right away. We cannot pass it if we are not given authority by Members of Parliament to spend the money. It is not a matter of budget. We have increased the training budget by 15 per cent this year to over $1 billion, but under the laws of the land I cannot spend it unless I have the authority of Parliament. This is why we are here today, asking for authority to modernize substantially the system of training for all Canadians.

• (1230)

Equally important is the question of the kind of training. In this respect I should like to turn to some of the recommendations of the Allmand task force which we took into account. Not only should we be training in high technology jobs, as critical as that may be; we must begin to tackle the problem of the hard core unemployed, such as young persons, drop-outs and persons who do not get a chance and for reasons of lack of education or skills are always on the sidelines in the job market.

We have carefully analysed the problem of youth unemployment. Something close to 200,000 young people in the country are on what we call the margin of society. They are the people who drop out of school at grade seven or grade eight. They may obtain jobs for a couple of months washing dishes, but generally they are in and out of the job market. They are virtually the transients of the job market. We believe we can tackle that problem, come to grips with the structurally unemployed and give those people a chance through the introduction of training programs.

Up to this point in time, the Adult Occupational Training Act has provided major deterrents to doing this because of certain age requirements. This bill contains a fundamental change in the flexibility which we can offer to young Canadians, because we are changing the definition of who is eligible for training under the act. I draw the attention of hon. members to the definition of "adult" under the old act as someone who was one year beyond the school system. We are now defining an adult as any person which the school system says is of a school-leaving age. This means that we can now open up training to those who drop out of school at grades seven and eight.

The hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) has offered suggestions on more than one occasion that we must do this. This bill responds to that responsibility. I also draw this to the attention of hon. members from western Canada where there is a problem with high unemployment among native people. We know that something like 70 per cent of young natives leave school before graduation. Under this program we would be able to begin developing training programs for these people to provide them with new skills and opportunities to obtain jobs and, therefore, they could take advantage of the changes in the marketplace.

In addition, we are talking in this bill about recognizing the changing labour market by providing the ability to waive the requirement that training only be offered for 52 weeks. This is in recognition of the fact that many training programs, particularly in the high skills area, extend beyond the normal 52-week period. The bill authorizes my commission to waive that responsibility, and where training is to be provided beyond 52 weeks, we can again provide funding. Equally, we can now provide new funding for Canadians not only in traditional or conventional training centres but for those in new kinds of consortiums or arrangements put together by employers. Rather than agreeing to supply training for one employer, which we found tended to discriminate against the smaller business person with a small shop employing only 40 or 50 people which would not want to commence a program on their own, we are authorizing an arrangement whereby small employers can come together, either through a union or an employers' association, to initiate a joint training program. This means that one employer might provide training for machinists, another for heavy duty mechanics, and another for pipefitters, for example. This would mean that small factories in manufacturing areas would be able to become involved in a training consortium.

Also there is provision under the bill whereby we would provide direct training for certain special groups that want to provide training in new skills for people in society with special needs. This would be beneficial to organizations such as the Gabriel Dumont Centre in Saskatchewan which is operated by non-status natives who want to get into training programs which are related to their own needs. Under the program we would be able to provide training assistance under the industrial training program for such people. It will substantially expand the flexibility of our training system to provide new kinds of training facilities, new polytechnics, new études, new centres and new institutes which were previously difficult to form under the national training program. We have broadened the range of training facilities.

Also the bill will enable the federal government to develop new financial arrangements with the provinces to eliminate much of the red tape and the administrative regulatory handicaps which were there before. For example, previously in the training system we would have purchased courses from a provincial institute. This required very detailed record keeping to ensure that the course was administered and that people attended the course, and the provinces had to submit their bills at the end of the year. Under this new arrangement we have the alternative of engaging in a flat rate formula with the provinces, so that we can eliminate red tape, provide for the purchase of courses and the sharing of administrative costs on a direct fee basis. This recommendation was strongly suggested to us by provincial governments.

We have attempted in this bill to respond to a number of concerns. I should like to talk for a moment about some of the ongoing misconceptions about these areas. First, let me talk about the grand, old perennial Canadian problem called "money". Members of Parliament have asked many times what commitment the government is making to future employment for Canadians. As I indicated, we are making a commitment this year of over $1 billion, which is well over a 15 per cent increase over last year. The money is allocated to our reserve to be spent the moment the bill is passed. We have made a commitment, and we can provide for the alternatives which many hon. members of the House have requested.

A second misconception concerns jurisdiction and the suggestions that at times there are problems relating to who will deliver the program or whether it is really an intrusion of the federal government into provincial jurisdiction. The fact of the matter is that we are again doing what hon. members have requested, that is, ensuring accountability for federal money which is spent to ensure that we will spend the money according to the needs and demands of the national marketplace, but not in any arbitrary or unilateral way.

The entire thesis of this bill and our training program is to consult with the provinces and private industry, to develop priority occupations based upon those consultations, to work jointly and to share responsibility, but still to maintain accountability at the federal level for the money we spend. We are not intruding; we are simply engaging in a more wholesome partnership where obviously as a federal government we must share responsibility with provincial institutions, the private sector and labour unions. Under this bill we will be able to begin to enact that kind of shared responsibility and to provide for a combination and a partnership in the training of Canadians. I hope hon. members will not be deluded by those tangential arguments which we often hear because people are more interested at times in creating mischief, disruption and confrontation than in trying to create something which is positive and will work.

This legislation is not written in stone. It can go to committee, we are prepared to look at amendments there and to respond to the preoccupations of hon. members. We are also prepared to consider that this is simply a foundation or a base upon which we can then build the training program. We do not say that it has all the answers, but we are talking about the beginning of a new system. We see the need for substantial new retraining programs across the country which we can provide under the bill. We see the need for new co-op education programs so that we can provide much closer arrangements between industries and schools. We see the need for major changes in adult retraining so that when the adult population faces the need to change jobs or their occupation they can begin to develop programs either through the community college, their union or their employer. A new training act is necessary to bring that about. We need a new training act that is based upon the operation of basic principles that allow the federal government to operate through the medium of a national labour market and which would also ensure that we can target our resources and modernize the system. That is the purpose and direction of this bill.

• (1240)

I strongly recommend this legislation to members of the House. Again, I reiterate that it is my sincere hope that members will recognize how much responsibility we have on this Friday afternoon. Friday afternoon is not usually a time that is used to make great advances in Parliament. Most members find it convenient to return to their ridings on Friday afternoon. I would say, however, that we have an opportunity today to do something very important and significant for Canadians. By giving this bill second reading we will launch the means for the initiation of a new training plan for Canadians which will ensure them the opportunity to meet the future working world.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that I am pleased to participate in this debate today. I would like to underline the minister's last comment. I also believe that this is not simply a minor event which is occurring during the longest session of Parliament's history. I have reviewed all the legislation which we have dealt with in the House, including the budget statement, the National Energy Program and the Constitution debate. If I had to choose a piece of legislation which will or ought to have a greater impact on Canadians in the next 20 years, it is this piece of legislation.

No member of the House should underestimate the significance of the bill which is before us. Its importance should not simply be considered for what it will achieve in the next year or two, but indeed in the next 20 years. After reading the bill and the available literature, and after engaging in discussions with people, I was astonished by how little most of the people to whom I talked knew about the history of technical, technological and vocational education in this country and, indeed, the history of the federal government's role in these areas. I thought I might spend some time on that history for the benefit of those who have not had the opportunity to look at it. I think it will be instructive not only to ourselves but also to the government and others who may be interested.

The principles in the bill which we are discussing today on second reading are not new. They are an extension of certain principles developed in the past but they are not of themselves new. It is perhaps a type of arrogance of any current generation which makes it believe that everything it does is brand new. That is why I think the historical record is instructive.

It comes as no surprise to anyone in the House that education was given to the provinces in 1867. Interestingly enough, it was within eight or ten years—by 1876—that the federal government took its first step into the field of education. What is equally interesting is that this first step occurred in the minister's home province of Manitoba where the federal government provided lands for the development of an institution which would one day become the University of Manitoba. In the same year the federal government began programs for training its own people under RCMP programs.

Almost as soon as confederation was achieved the federal government began to move into the field of education on demand in the sense that there needed to be some involvement from the central government which dealt with matters common to all Canadians.

I will not go through the complete history but there are certain watersheds in the historical development which can be instructive. It was not until 1980 that we decided in our Canadian way to do something about the fact that we had an embarrassment of riches which we discovered when we opened up the west. We found that we had a tremendous amount of natural resources. As the new technology of that age and the new economy at that time began to develop, we realized that there were shortages of skilled people and that there were no programs or funds available to train the young Canadians of the first decade of the twentieth century for future jobs. In 1910 we established a royal commission on industrial training and vocational education. One of the great unusual consequences of that royal commission was that it was one of those royal commissions that was effective. It was actually used and its recommendations were put into law.

Two acts which were spin-offs of that first big watershed in 1910 and flowed out of the recommendations of the royal commission were the agricultural assistance act and the agricultural instruction act. Those spawned the first animal husbandry courses and the first agricultural institutions in western Canada. The National Research Council was established in 1916 as a result of one of the recommendations.

In 1919 the bulwark for the next 20 years of technological education was established. It was the technical education act which lasted from 1919 to 1939. It provided to a generation and a half of Canadians the financial and institutional base by which it coped with the technology of that generation.

In 1942 there was another watershed: the vocational training and co-ordination act was adopted. It was quickly adopted for two reasons; first, the old act had died; and second, we had a new reality in Canada, which was the war. We needed to train people for a host of new technologies coming into the world which were ushered in by the war. Therefore, the vocational training and vocational act of 1942 became the new federal base.

The Veterans Rehabilitation Act of 1945 was established to direct for the first time in any significant way funding by the federal government to students in technical, technological and vocational training.

In 1960 we began the phase which we are presently going through. The Technical and Vocational Training and Assistance Act was established by the Conservative government of John Diefenbaker. I mention this as a watershed along with 1910 and 1942. The 1960 act brought about a major change in the role of the federal government in technical and technological education. In fact, it provided vast quantities of funds for capital development in much the same way as the principle of the minister's bill. It established funds for technical and vocational high schools, not simply for people who were in the high school system but for technical and vocational high schools. This was done in the Atlantic provinces, western Canada and central Canada.

Those who benefited from technical and vocational education in those days were direct beneficiaries of a large infusion of funds, programs and schools as well as the training of teachers by the federal government. For those interested in the extent to which the federal government was involved in technical, technological and vocational training in Canada through the 1960 program, the fact is that the federal government in the short span of seven years established 688 new schools and renovated 440 of those schools from one end of the country to the other.

This brings us up to 1967. A new act called the Adult Occupational Training Act became the base for Canadian manpower training programs which we have enjoyed since that time. The purpose of that act in 1967 is worth quoting. This was an act "designed to contribute to the economic and social development of Canadians while reducing regional and individual disparities and providing employment related training".

Maybe everthing else old is new again and maybe there is nothing new under the sun. The point I am making in all of this historical development is that the federal government in Canada has been involved in a long history of training, over 70 years. It has provided billions of dollars, thousands of programs and trained millions of Canadians. Now, I emphasize that because I know there are people who are not aware that this is not a new reality. It is a new time and we have new technologies, but the federal government has always been, at least since 1910, and in my view ought to continue to be, one which plays a leading role in the development of funds, institutions, programs and teachers for technical, technological and vocational education.

• (1250)

That historical development also establishes, I think, certain Canadian ways in which we have gone about the federal role, and there are three principles that I think are worth mentioning. First of all, in 1910, from 1939 to 1942, in 1960 and in 1967, each time that the federal government took another step and participated in the development of technological and vocational education, it did so in relation to clearly understood national, industrial and economic strategies. National technical, technological and vocational training is not something that is stuck in the door all by itself. It is just not a sheaf of paper or a bunch of programs that have no connection with anything else. The motivation each time that this country has taken a leap forward in its economic programs and its industrial strategy has been the adoption of a national training program.

Now, it is important to emphasize that first principle. I wish the government well, but if it is to sell its program, not just to other governments but to the people of this country, then it will have to make its goals more clear than what we have heard so far in terms of national industrial strategies and national economic recovery programs. Because then people will understand the funds and the involvement in provincial policies which will also be required.

Indeed, as the minister himself indicated, we are going into a new world, as we did in 1910, as we did in 1942 and as we did in 1967. We are going into a new world where the speed of change is very great—a world of robots, a world of computers, a technological revolution. I guess that that type of technological revolution was just as scary at the turn of the century, in a sense, but it offered the same opportunities. One thing is clear with the current one. We now live in an integrated world economy where, unless we do have a national industrial strategy of economic recovery and a national training program which fits it, we will not become world competitive.

The second principle usually does not occupy the interest of parliamentarians at the federal level, but it is one worth pointing out because there are parts of the bill which will receive considerable scrutiny in committee, at least from me. It involves the way in which we balance education, in its broadest definition, and technical education. I will not spend much time on it today, but I wish to flag the problem within the bill. I think there is an idea that we must somehow move away from educational institutions, and that if there has been a bias in that direction, we must move away over to the other bias so that we have more and more exclusion of institution and more and more employer-based education.

As any educator would advise, there are a number of philosophies. There is one which suggests that the most important way in which to have technological and vocational education is to have it in the workplace. The extreme opposite is to have it only in the educational institutions. Indeed, we have veered from one to the other. Throughout the western world one will find countries which represent one philosophy more than the other.

What is required, and it certainly fits well in the Canadian mould, is a balance. There must be a balance between the training of people for jobs and the training of people for life. There is no dichotomy in the individual's mind. There is always a dichotomy between levels of government and government bureaucracies. I heard what the minister pointed out in his speech. At least, I hope the minister said what I think I heard him say, because it is a good idea. When people work at whatever they do, they develop their own personalities. Their work tells them who and what they are and who and what they will become. Therefore, when we talk about training, it is wise to ensure that that training takes place within the context of an over-all educational program. I speak not only of philosophy here. If the federal government persists in the view, which I hope it does not, that it can split training from education and therefore split itself from provincial co-operation, it will not only cause a problem between governments, but will also mean that it has not done its work well in serving the people of Canada. It is absolutely essential that that second principle of balance between education and training, between institutions and the work place, be maintained.

I might say that a while ago I spent some time on this matter. For the minister's edification, he might want to speak to the chairman of his advisory committee on immigration, Mr. Tom Sosa, who is vice-president of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. I have a great love and affection for what I call the Ryerson model. It did not always do the job it was supposed to do, but its model was the best model. I commend it to the minister.

The problem for technological and technical education in the province of Ontario in the fifties and sixties was that the moneys went to the universities and there was nothing for that level of technical and technological education. Up until 1966, there was only one institute in the province of Ontario which carried out that level. That was Ryerson Polytechnical Institute or the old Ryerson Institute of Technology established in 1948. The principle behind the model was that one should link work to the job and link work to education so that it carried out an in-service program at the same time carried out a program within the educational institution. That model, I might say, was broken during the change in educational philosophy across the country in the 1960s. Previously Ryerson had to finance itself on the basis of running a very tight ship, ensuring that its graduates had jobs and that its departments were able to fund the students who were coming in. Co-operation between industry on the one hand and the high schools on the other was what made the Ryerson model work. I commend it to the minister.

The third principle is the principle which makes the other two possible. In my view, the first principle is that the government must make clear its national industrial and economic recovery goals in order to make sense out of a national program of technical education. Second, it must create that balance between the needs of education for individuals and the need for training. Third, it must establish co-operation between the levels of government.

With regard to the minister and, indeed, any minister, it is always easier if one does not have to try to talk to the people who will also be involved with you in the same business. It is simply easier to do it yourself.

I note that the hour is now one o'clock, Mr. Speaker; I would like to continue after the lunch hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, prior to the lunch break I had commenced my remarks by going through the historical development of technical, technological and vocational education. I had outlined the three significant principles that come from that historical development. In my view, these three principles have served us exceedingly well and will serve us in the future if the government pays attention to them.

The first principle is that any program of national training should be part of a national economic recovery as it was in 1910, 1942, 1960 and 1967. It is important that that principle be understood by the government. Second, the program must be an appropriate balance between the needs of so-called education for life and the needs of technical training, education specifically for the workplace, that a balance be maintained and that we not sacrifice one for the other as has so often been the case at other times and in other places. The third principle, the one I was dealing with when the hour struck one o'clock, is the principle of co-operation.

Throughout each of our watershed periods when the federal government has become involved in a significant way with respect to technical and technological education there has been the requisite, not easy to achieve, co-operation with the provinces. That in my view, particularly with this bill, is a very important principle. As it stands right now, the bill commits the government to consultation but does not commit it to agreement. I recognize some of the difficulties the minister may see, but when we do the questioning during committee stage and report stage, we will be able to develop an argument and the minister will see the value of agreement with the provinces.

To put it in the shortest possible way I can, if the government cannot find agreement with the provinces, we will have lost two things, with disharmony again being on us. First, we will have lost that intricate relationship between education and training. We would have the provincial governments dealing with education and the federal government dealing with training. We will have lost the necessary integration between the two. In short, we will have lost the second principle.

Also, we would have lost the opportunity to develop what is inherent in the principles of this bill, namely the best possible approach that a federal political system can take in terms of the development of training in technical and technological education.

The third principle, that of co-operation between the two levels of government, is essential. Indeed, the other two principles which have served us so well will not be successful unless that co-operation is clear and obvious. The best way to do that is in connection with agreements so that the individual is served by both levels of government rather than having them at war one with the other.

In his speech the other day to the presidents of community colleges from across the country, the minister said at the bottom of page 8 of his speech: "We will invest in new facilities, equipment, curriculum and build the kinds of institutions needed to train Canadians in new skills for new jobs". I support that. I think all Canadians support that. What is important is the definition of "we". "We" should not be the federal government and should not even be the federal Parliament. If it is to be successful, "we" means the federal level, the provincial level, private institutions and those involved in the delivery of education. "We" means all of those who deliver the service, and it also means those who receive that service. It is on the definition of "we" that I think the success or failure of the minister's bill will be determined.

• (1410)

This brings me finally to the specifics of the legislation now before us. As I think I probably have been able to demonstrate, this bill in 1982 is serving the same need Canadians had in 1910, in 1942, in 1960 and again in 1967. We have a system today that has many problems, and I suppose as too often Canadians try to do, we try to point the finger at who caused the problems. Who is to blame? The fact is we are all to blame. The federal government is to blame.

The minister says we have been pouring millions of dollars into training programs for which there are no jobs. Most of those millions of dollars have come from the federal government. The federal government had the opportunity for approval of those programs and, indeed, as the task force on work in the eighties pointed out, the minister's own department wasted—I think that was the word used—millions of dollars training people for no jobs. There clearly is a responsibility at the federal level. The provincial governments have their share too.

The glories of an educational institution being run like a grand corporation caught the imagination of too many people involved in education in the sixties and seventies, and far more money was spent on administrative and on non-teaching and non-learning aspects of technical, technological and vocational education than needed to be. The provinces too often looked for the glory and less for the delivery of the service. However, we as parents were also responsible. Particularly in this field we have for too long—for the last 30 years—assumed that somehow if we were involved in technical, technological or vocational work, that was not quite up to snuff in relation to what people ought to be. We put far too much emphasis on grants to universities and too little on the importance of doing the good, honest work required. We lost the sense of having pride in good labour done. We lost that in the last generation and a half, and I am hoping one of the things which will come out of this bill will be a recapturing of the understanding of the contribution that technical, technological and vocational jobs make, not just to the economy of the country but, indeed, to society as a whole. Who we blame is not important to the future. I think we are all to blame. The fact is we now have a technical, technological and vocational system that is not serving us.

The specifics of the bill are four in number. First, the minister argues as a question of principle at second reading of the bill that we have to have the identification of priority occupations, and those ought to be the major business of the federal government. I agree with that. That was clearly the principle in 1960. It was also clearly the principle in 1967, in 1942 and in 1910. That is the principle now. It is a good principle. The federal government should be concerned about those priority occupations which will allow us to deal with the technical and technological revolution that is already upon us. Indeed, we should have been concerned about it eight or ten years ago.

Second, the bill argues for a greater opportunity to have employers and non-educational institutions involved in the delivery of technical, technological and vocational training outside institutions. I support that too. I think there are lots of opportunities to use the facilities of those non-educational institutions. To give an example, what is the best marketing school in Canada? Some people might think it is the University of Western Ontario. I think most people would understand it is Procter and Gamble—sorry to Lever Brothers! There is great value in training in the workplace, but not at the cost of education in the institution. The principle is good. We are going to have to wait until the regulations and the agreements show whether that balance between education and training is maintained.

Third, the bill talks about the necessity for projecting employment needs and offers what is known in the trade as COPS, the Canada occupational projection system. It is a computer-based system which allows for some understanding of what we are going to need in the future. I think the minister would admit that it is not terrific, but it is all we have at this point.

What I would like to suggest to the minister, and will be suggesting in the committee, is that he pick up on a suggestion which has been made to him on a number of occasions. He could refine it to his own use, but it is a suggestion with respect to participation by the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Issues. It is not very often both labour and management get together with a proposal. They have made a proposal to the minister. It seems to me that even if the specifics of that proposal are not sufficient for the minister and if he would like to use COPS in connection with it, I think the Business Council on National Issues and the Canadian Labour Congress would be happy to listen to some proposals from the minister so that they could participate in labour market projections. We should not simply write labour market projections off as a theoretical system. Being able to project what we will need in terms of skilled talent is a very, very important matter. Otherwise, our ability to be able to organize resources in time and, indeed to be able even to lead the market for a change, would be lost.

Finally, the bill would spend more money both in terms of capital costs and in terms of funds for individuals. Indeed, one measure that I think is excellent would increase benefits to individuals from 60 per cent to 70 per cent and would therefore give people the incentive to get involved in the training programs proposed in the bill.

I can conclude my remarks by saying two things. As I have tried to indicate, this bill has a noble tradition. It is a tradition not known to very many Canadians, but it is a tradition which has served us well, and it has served us well because we have observed those three principles. I implore the minister to pay attention to those principles: national training should be related to national economic recovery; national training should have a balance between the needs of education and the needs of the workplace; and national training should be done within the atmosphere and framework of co-operation and the search for agreement between the two levels of government. If the government does that, I think the name Axworthy will be right up there with the names of those people who piloted the bills through in 1910, in 1942, 1960 and 1967, and that will be well deserved.

However, if the minister fails to pay attention to those principles, he will not only have failed, but we also will have lost the one opportunity we have to become competitive in the world and to be on the road to recovery for the next 20 years.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment line, the soup kitchen, children attending Salvation Army services not just for spiritual sustenance but for food, are all realities in Canada today. Canadians are in deep trouble. Unemployment is at its highest level since the depression. We are spending some $1 billion on training while skilled jobs go begging. Yet in spite of this situation, things could be different if we had the political will to make them different.

I would like to take a few minutes to describe to hon. members the kind of situation we find ourselves in in Canada today. We have an intolerable level of unemployment. In real terms the number of unemployed is some two million, yet at this time of record levels of unemployment we still have shortages of skilled workers. There are jobs for skilled workers that are not filled by Canadians. This situation is not temporary, although sometimes the government would like us to believe that it is. All the predictions made by economic forecasters lead us to believe that any recovery will be slow and that we are not going to return to the kind of economic growth that we once knew. Put simply, we are facing an economy in which a large number of people are unemployed, bankruptcies have increased, inflation continues to soar and, in the last few days, we have seen the failure of the Canadian dollar. That is a clear indication of a failing economy.

• (1420)

It is not enough to recognize the over-all economic problems that we face, Mr. Speaker. There are other and more particular problems with employment and training. There are some very grave inequities in the way people are able to earn income. Some are able to make a pretty good living while others are not. I am thinking of groups normally designated as disadvantaged—women, natives, the handicapped and even immigrants.

I should like to say something about the employment of women. We all know that on average women earn something in the order of 60 per cent of the income that men earn. By and large they work in what are known as job ghettos. The technological changes of the future are a threat to the low paying jobs that women presently occupy. The microchip revolution will deskill a lot of jobs so that the work women presently do will require less skill and, as a result, they will lose earning power. There are other jobs that will become more highly skilled, of course, but it will be more difficult for women in the future to climb the ladder of their careers than it has in the past.

Most Canadians are aware that the vast majority of native people have neither the education nor the equality of opportunity that is necessary to be successful in the working world and to earn a decent income. They have been in this position for a long time, of course, but that is no justification for the situation continuing.

Handicapped people are also disadvantaged in the economy and in the job market. Very real barriers exist for handicapped people, not only in the physical sense of access to buildings where they might work and participate in community activities, but also in terms of attitude. We have not really learned to accept the handicapped person as someone with full rights of citizenship and the full right to earn a decent living.

Many immigrants were attracted to this country by the promise of prosperity, but recently some lured here to work in the garment industry, for example, have been disappointed. Rather than steady employment and a good income they have been faced with lay-offs, part-time employment and shattered dreams. Many of them work for less than the minimum wage and many are underemployed. I can think of a Philippino man who was trained and qualified as an engineer in his own country but found when he came to Canada that he could not use his skills and had to work as a draftsman. There are some people who feel that he may not have had the same standard of training as a Canadian engineer, but I would remind hon. members that the educational system in the Philippines was established by the United States and that the same training manuals are used there as are used in Canada. In fact, in Canada and in the Philippines, the education of engineers is modelled on the United States system, so there is no reason for the inequity that continues to exist.

The labour market not only demonstrates the inequitable and intolerable state of employment among disadvantaged groups but there is also a great deal of waste. There is waste of the great human potential that exists in this country. The hopes, dreams and futures of our young people are being laid to waste. Our record high level of unemployment has reached almost two million in real terms and about half that number are young people. They are losing the opportunity to gain the training and experience which are necessary for them to work their way up in the job market. Not only are their hopes and dreams shattered by the present economic mess and lack of training, but there is another shocking problem that should not exist in any industrialized western democracy. The task force report entitled "Work for Tomorrow—Employment Opportunities for the '80s" identified the extent of functional illiteracy in this country. A very significant portion of our population does not have the basic education necessary to make a living in an industrialized society. There is a waste of human potential and a waste of economic potential as a result. If those people were given an opportunity to be functionally literate, they would be an asset to our society and to our economy.

All these problems—record high unemployment, inequities in the labour market, the waste of human potential—exist in a country that has very real and great potential, a country that has an educated population and great resources. A country like ours should not put up with these kinds of problems.

• (1430)

How has the government responded to the situation we face today? Its response has been disappointing, to say the least. It has been what I would describe as a public relations response. This bill, C-115, the legislative authority for the national training program, does not tell us a great deal about that program. It does not tell us what the government intends to do. In order to find out something about that, we have to go to the press releases issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I am looking at one now dated May 21, 1982 in which he described the so-called new national training program. But it does not tell us a heck of a lot about what the program is going to look like either. It is a well-crafted document which certainly touches on all the key points. It mentions native people, handicapped people, women, and it mentions there will be new initiatives. But it does not tell us a heck of a lot about how they are going to do these things. It tells us they are going to train native people and others for national occupations, but no substance, no detail and no specifics. That is what I mean when I say it is a public relations response; it makes for good press releases and good speeches, but it has no substance.

I do not want you, Mr. Speaker, to accept my comments on the basis of my assertions alone. I would like to examine a few of the things mentioned in this national training program. The first thing I want to comment on is the approach to forecasting the kinds of jobs for which people will have to be trained. The proposed forecasting system is called the Canadian occupations projection system, or COPS for short. It is a macroeconomic system which involves consultation with various groups in society. It is a system devised by the same institution, the federal government, which has failed so dismally in the past in its predictions for job needs and training. But the real problem with the system is that it offers no real way of obtaining access to information about private sector investment intentions. Just where do corporations intend to invest in the future and, therefore, what kinds of jobs will result and what kind of training do we have to put in place?

Of course, it is quite natural that a corporation would want to keep its investment decisions confidential because of competitive factors. You cannot just make this information available willy-nilly because your competitors will take advantage of it. Yet we must find a way if we are to be able in any way to forecast the kinds of jobs which will exist in the future.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, having a macroeconomic prediction model, or even consulting with other groups about what they want, is no substitute for an industrial strategy. An industrial strategy should involve public participation in the determination of investment decisions in this country over the coming years. In other words, where are we going to put our dollars, what kind of industry are we going to develop, and therefore what kind of labour market are we going to have? Without a well-thought-out industrial plan, without some public involvement in the direction of investment, we have really no way of knowing just what the economy is going to look like in the future.

I would like to move on to another aspect of this so-called national training program. I say so-called because it really is not all that it purports to be. There is a section in this bill dealing with industrial training, the essence of which is that it will provide incentive funds to industry to train workers on the job or in other settings. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not new. A system based on incentives has been in place in this country now for quite some time. It is also a system which has led us to our present circumstances of extremely high unemployment and jobs which lack skilled workers. As a part of this system of training incentives there has been an effort to move funding away from community colleges which, of course, come under provincial jurisdiction. It looks like there will be a reduction of 10 per cent in funding to community colleges. I say that based on the fact that the guarantee being given to provincial governments and community colleges is that their funding will not fall below 90 per cent of what it was before. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that guarantee will become the ceiling. In effect, you will have community colleges, the basic instrument we have for training people, facing a reduction in funding. This comes at a time when there is no way they can afford to do with less.

Another aspect of this training policy, Mr. Speaker, is what is called national occupations. The federal government, by legislation, is going to take upon itself the authority to designate certain occupations as national occupations. It is going to say: okay, this is an occupation in which we need trained people and this is where we are going to put our money.

What is wrong with that, Mr. Speaker? The problem is that you have the same old department making the decision about where to put the money. They have dressed it up a bit by putting it in legislation and calling it a "national occupation", but if you still have the same employment department making decisions about where our dollars are going, our experience to date with regard to how successful that department has been in terms of putting the money in the right place to produce the required trained workers leaves us with very little confidence that anything really constructive will come out of this legislative designation of national occupations.

• (1440)

This bill leaves the federal government in a neat little position of being able to respond to public pressure from time to time. For example, if we became aware suddenly of a great shortage of machinists, although it might be a little too late, if it became a public issue and a political issue, it would not be a hard task for the government to add that activity to the designated list of national occupations and tell the people that the government is doing something. The problem would be, of course, that it would be far too late.

This national training program claims that it will give women, natives and disabled people better access to training. That is on page 4 of the backgrounder, the federal proposals, the press release that I mentioned. That one line does not mean much. It is nice to know that the federal government intends to give natives, for example, better access to training. The government said the same thing in the last federal budget with regard to economic development. They had a line there that said there would be some $350 million for native economic development. Native leaders have called me and asked where that money is. They say they know it was in the budget, that they have been trying to find out from the government about it and they ask what they intend to do with it, how they intent to spend it, what shape the program will be that will be so financed. They cannot find out; they are worried that one day they will wake up and find the program has been laid down and they will have to live with it, regardless of the content or structure of the programs and without their really having any say about what the program should be. The same thing applies here. There is talk about giving natives better access to training. It would have been far better to get the native leadership involved in the development of that program before it was announced.

The government also claims that there will be better access to training for women. With the technological change going on in our society, with the microchip revolution, with the gaps in the career ladder that this is going to cause for women, it will be even more difficult than today for them to advance and reach a level of economic equality with men.

Women want not just a one-line mention in a press release. They want some real guarantees that they will have access to the highly skilled occupations that will be created by technological change. They want a real guarantee that they will get first crack at those jobs. They want to know that adequate and worth-while training will be provided so that they can move from low level occupations into the new highly skilled occupations, and therefore be able to jump the gap in the career ladder that is created by technological change.

Another aspect of this program is the skills growth fund. This is the fund of $108 million for facilities and equipment, to help in the updating of the training equipment available in institutions across the country. We do not know much about that item from this press release. I wonder how far $108 million will go in this great big land.

An hon. Member: A drop in the bucket.

Mr. Keeper: We have ten provinces, and if you divide that sum equally it may mean only $10.8 million for each province. It is not a great deal when you consider the expense of bringing facilities up to modern technological standards.

Over all, Mr. Speaker, this program touches all the right bases in terms of identifying the issues, but when you take a closer look at it and try to find out the specifics and what it means, it is like punching a pillow; you really cannot get at it. We do not have adequate information and we are not told what is really being intended. That is not an adequate response to the situation we are facing today of high unemployment, lack of skilled workers and inequities in the labour market. That is an inadequate response.

Some might believe that is the best that can be done. I think a lot more could be done, Mr. Speaker. We could find really concrete ways of working with the very difficult problems we face. We do not have to be superficial in our approach. We do not have to accept the manpower department programs as they have always been. We can have a positive impact upon the type of training that is to take place in this country. We could have a comprehensive training system that would meet the needs of our economy for the future and provide Canadians with real opportunities to train for interesting and exciting jobs in the future.

Let me give some examples, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate what I have been saying, that it is possible to do better than what is proposed in this national training program. Going back to the question of the economy and jobs, what this country needs now, and needs badly, is an industrial strategy. It needs a plan to create manufacturing jobs throughout the country, not jobs in one region but jobs in all regions. It is obvious to everyone that the economic strategy this government has been following, based upon resource export, has really failed. That is literally demonstrated with the failure of the megaprojects in recent times. We need a plan for developing our industrial economy. We need a plan for investment in manufacturing, so that there will be jobs for which Canadians can be trained and to which people can look forward.

With regard to projecting what kind of positions people will need to be trained for, as my colleague from the Conservative Party mentioned, there was a joint submission from the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Issues, a proposal for a labour market institute. This offers at least one real and concrete way of adding to the information that we have and will allow us to make better predictions about the jobs for which we need to train people. It offers an institutional setting in which researchers could talk to businessmen to find out something about their investment decisions without making the information generally available to the public. Therefore, this information about their investment decisions could be the basis for the kinds of prediction the institution would make about training needs for the future. It would be a real way of bolstering, making more accurate, and placing a more solid data base under the projection system we use for making decisions concerning the jobs for which we are training people.

• (1450)

With regard to the system that we use to train people for predicted jobs, we need an industrial training system which is comprehensive, in the sense that it encourages and demands that all employers become involved in training. One of the main problems with training in the country today is that a very small percentage of employers train people for skilled jobs. Of course, those employers can be raided by other employers of those skilled workers once they have made an investment in them.

We must devise a system which makes it mandatory for all employers in the country to train and to contribute to the cost of training. This would be a way of ensuring that employers train and that there are skilled workers to fill the jobs of the future. Such a comprehensive industrial training system would view training as an investment. We would not have to rely only upon skilled immigrants, we would be training people who are in Canada to fill those skilled jobs.

Turning to the disadvantaged—and I will briefly mention native people—over the last few years there has been demonstrated success with what are called new careers programs. These programs may last several years in length of training. They take people with very low levels of education and train them for professional occupations, such as teachers, lawyers and doctors, over four or five years, and this results in a real difference in the income levels of these people. There is no mention of this in the national training program, but such a commitment would mean a real difference in the program. There is no mention of or commitment to a new career training strategy. If that is to be the intention, it should be spelled out.

With regard to women, we need a real assurance or some guarantee from the government that women who are displaced in the workplace as a result of technological change will have first crack at the jobs which come up, and that they will have adequate training in order to be ready and available for them.

In regard to the handicapped, a very good study was conducted by the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped entitled "Obstacles". A solid commitment should be spelled out to the very good recommendations in this report with regard to employment for the handicapped.

The problem of functional illiteracy was mentioned in another parliamentary report on manpower. It is a very severe problem in this country that saps the wealth of the nation. Why do we not have a war on functional illiteracy in this country? Is it not time that all Canadians should have an adequate education, at least an education which allows them to enter the labour market? There are many ways of approaching the difficult problems we face. I encourage the government to look harder at the possibility of implementing some of these approaches to training and employment problems in the country.

In conclusion, unemployment in Canada is the highest it has been since the depression of the 1930s. When a real recovery begins—and there is no evidence of it yet occurring—it looks as though it will be very slow. The market is begging for skilled workers, yet we continue to spend billions of dollars on training in a haphazard manner. Canadians could be doing the work which we all know needs to be done. Canadian factories could be producing a cornucopia of wealth. Women, natives, handicapped persons, immigrants, youths and all Canadians could be trained for skilled jobs. To paraphrase a former practitioner of our trade, politics, the art of the possible, some people see things as they are and ask why; I dream not the impossible dream but of real things yet to be, and ask why not?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the House today to express my support for Bill C-115, an Act to establish a national program for occupational training, because I am convinced that this legislation will make a major contribution toward adjusting our training system in Canada to the demands of the electronic age. I must admit that I would have preferred to take part in a debate in more cheerful circumstances. I would have preferred to praise our accomplishments across Canada, our abundant wealth and our very advantageous economic situation. Unfortunately, the situation is quite different, not to say alarming. Mr. Speaker, I have decided to take part in this debate for two reasons. First of all, because the unemployment rate in Canada, although it is impossible to give the exact figures, has reached a record high, and although we can say that all industrialized countries are faced with this kind of problem, I do not think we can draw any consolation from a comparison with other countries, although on the other hand, such a comparison does oblige us to be more realistic and to recognize that Canada, notwithstanding its constant and renewed efforts, will never be able to insulate itself from other countries and their problems, just as they do not insulate themselves from the prosperity enjoyed by industrialized countries.

My second reason, Mr. Speaker, is that I have had the honour and the privilege of sitting on a seven-member task force, one member of which, I am sad to say, is no longer with us, and here, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to our colleague Bruce Lonsdale, who passed away several months ago, and who made a major contribution to the work of our committee. The task force, Mr. Speaker, was fortunate in being able to travel across Canada and to find out for itself, during often very spirited discussions with the public, about the real problems of unemployment and solutions that could be considered. The committee, on which I acted as co-chairman with the member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), submitted 186 recommendations. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has accepted several of these recommendations, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank him and to ask him to continue implementing of the basic recommendations of this report on employment opportunities for the '80s.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker, although there are continuing regional and sectorial manpower shortages, Canadians are experiencing the highest unemployment levels in 40 years. Although this unusual situation is very cold comfort for those who are unemployed, it does point to a number of shortcomings in Canada's manpower policy and leads us to expect that our problems will soon get worse. Until now, Canada has been unable to meet the demand for skilled workers in the traditional trades and it has been unable to adjust to the needs of a developing economy. Until the middle of the seventies, most of our requirements for skilled manpower were filled by immigrant workers from abroad. However, a rise in the standard of living in the European emigration countries led to a serious drop in the number of immigrants. The resulting decline in the numbers of skilled manpower has given us an economy that is plagued by inflation while at the same time not being able to provide enough jobs for less skilled workers. This situation has been aggravated by a recession that is both national and international. Unskilled workers are the last to be hired and the first to be fired.

Businesses can no longer operate at full capacity are being restructured and that, as a result, less skilled workers and those with the least seniority are being laid off first. This has led to a decline in the number of on-the-job training programs and thus in the number of opportunities for workers to gain experience. Consequently, today's recession is contributing to tomorrow's shortage of skilled workers. In extreme cases, recessionary pressures are weakening the economy's structures to the point where businesses that could be productive are going bankrupt. Our manpower policy must cope with these problems, first of all, by restructuring Canadian industry so as to facilitate adjustment of the labour market to new demands. Subsequently, workers already on the labour market must be trained or retrained for the trades that are necessary to a proper functioning of the economy. Finally, jobs must be structured to take account of the specific needs of workers. For instance, allowances must be made for the particular needs of the increasing number of women who are carrying a twofold responsibility for work in the home and in the labour force.

In addition to the recurring weaknesses of our manpower policy in these areas, Canada's decision-makers will be confronted with further major problems during this decade. The ongoing trend toward opening up occupations and the wave of investment for the purpose of integrating new technology should lead us to expect important changes in the sectorial and occupational balance of regions where there is a manpower demand. If Canada is unable to respond to the new demand for skilled manpower, it may be prevented from upgrading its production potential and jobs will literally have to be exported. The arrival of fewer young workers on the labour market means on the one hand that the economy will not have to absorb a large number of workers with more experience as was the case during the last decade. On the other hand, as the average age of the workers increases, adjustment to the new requirements will have to depend to a greater extent on the retraining of those who are already part of the labour force. Finally, the women's rate of participation is expected to go on increasing while the service sector, which has been the traditional source of female employment, will probably be the most affected by the technological changes, and especially by the microelectronics revolution.

The two basic questions concerning training are how and where it is given and who pays for it. How do we achieve a balance between experience and on-the-job training on the one hand and academic training on the other ? A changing economy needs a labour force that not only is specialized, but that also has transferable specializations. Obviously it is easier to learn some of the trades on the job and a different approach is needed for others. The lack of basic training is restricting many Canadians to unskilled jobs and is virtually excluding them from training and retraining programs. Over four million Canadians are functionally illiterate. On-the-job experience cannot teach them to read or write any better or to improve their marginal situation in relation to the labour force as a whole. On the other hand, to the extent that training is transferable, each employer is tempted to attract specialized workers away from other employers since he can then benefit from these workers without any cost to him. It is because of this market deficiency that the government has had to subsidize training facilities through its tax revenues. However, these programs which range from university and college courses to manpower training programs have too often ignored the requirements of the labour market.

On a national level, there is a shortage of engineers and a surplus of arts graduates. Regional manpower programs have trained workers for jobs that require little specialization in areas affected by chronic unemployment. Financing must be more selective and the programs better co-ordinated. In addition, people often say that a given training program does not meet the specific needs of the industry. Attempts to reduce work situations reproduced in laboratories and workshops have proven costly and outdated and they have shown that our teaching institutions do not have the required resources at their disposal. Universities have had to deal with both basic training and fundamental research. We shall need a much broader spectrum of on-the-job training programs to match theory with practice.

While off-the-job training has sometimes been inadequate, the very serious shortage of specialized workers in the fields that traditionally require an apprenticeship period point to the obvious failure of this procedure in Canada as compared with students trained in teaching institutions. Apprentices are often laid off during a recession. Besides, apprenticeship programs are often spread out over conventional four-year periods without any consideration for the actual requirements of the trade. The government has already implemented various industrial training subsidization programs, but we obviously have to do more. Already the fundamental question of who should pay for this training and who should distribute the funds is being asked.

• (1510)

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, when I was travelling across Canada and consulting with the people, the most frequent comments we heard were the following: young people realize they are trained in skills where there is absolutely no prospect of short, medium, or long-term employment. They complained all across Canada that they were insufficiently and inadequately counselled; in that regard, this legislation fulfils that requirement in part. Another comment we heard was that often young people do receive theoretical education but no adequate practical training, which prevents them from filling jobs within a reasonable time-frame. Those two basic complaints were heard over and over and over again, Mr. Speaker. There are, in my opinion, five training principles that should be adhered to and closely examined. First, more specialized training should be provided in Canada. Second, more on-the-job training should be provided. Third, a greater number of Canadians should be attracted to highly skilled trades. This is one of the major objectives of the legislation now before us. Four, ongoing education, retraining and upgrading should be provided in order to meet the increasing demand for new technology and the changing concept of competition on the world markets. Five, fair and equitable funding should be studied in depth.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on those training aspects, and say a few words on in-plant training. During our travels, we often heard that in the area of training it was essential to give higher priority to on-the-job training in order to meet industry's current needs. The Canadian government will spend $166 million in 1982-83 to help employers provide training that is often costly and time-consuming. Employers who wish to train workers or upgrade training in trades such as tool-making, welding, industrial maintenance mechanics, electronics and engineering technicians, oil production and other first-class trades will be given priority in the allotment of federal funds. The current critical trade skills training program will be integrated within the industrial training program, and CTST training will be improved. Such initiatives are aimed at helping the industry set up the structures needed to train each year 10,000 highly skilled workers by 1984-85.

In addition to training workers in the critical trades, the industrial training program will stress training in the trades where job demand is high, the retraining of workers affected by technological and industrial changes, the training of the unemployed, the training of women in fields where jobs are usually held by men, and the training of adults with specific needs. This scheme strikes me as very interesting and encouraging, Mr. Speaker, and I urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to pursue his efforts in that direction.

With regard to institutional training, Mr. Speaker, I should also like to make a few comments. As we pointed out in our report on employment opportunities, institutional training should complement in-plant training by giving higher priority to the critical trades, that is those where a shortage of skilled labour exists. I believe the minister got the message. The number of skilled workers can be increased not only by extending the traditional apprenticeship training but also by giving some training prior to the apprenticeship stage provided by provincial educational institutions. That is why the federal government is willing to finance a major expansion of pre-apprenticeship training in the critical trades, provided the provincial governments agree to include that training in their apprenticeship programs, and provided there is a real demand in the industry for that type of trainees. The federal government will also buy more pre-job training courses, because requirements having been increased in such trades as computer programming, industrial design and word processing. Thus, training prior to apprenticeship and employment will be available, which it is not at the present time, enabling one to acquire skills to a higher or a lesser degree. Simultaneously, the federal government will progressively abandon its purchases of non-productive courses or reduce them according to the actual needs of the economy. The funds the government intends to inject into training will also go to the training in school of apprentices in the Red Seal jobs and other trades where demand in high.

Mr. Speaker, I said that a fifth important aspect of training that bears scrutiny is that of financing. I should like to repeat Recommendation 40 of our task force report on employment opportunities which suggested the following solution to the government, and I quote:

> 40. To help finance industrial training, the government should establish a refundable tax on salaries, wages and other remuneration (a payroll tax-credit system), in the following manner:
>
> (a) A payroll tax should be applied to employers, equal to a designated percentage (perhaps 0.5%) of their payroll.
>
> (b) Any amount of money up to the designated percentage of payroll spent on training approved by existing training authorities, or training leading to a degree from a recognized education or training institution, should be credited against the payroll tax.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker, that is a suggestion we have made, which the minister has not yet implemented but to which he has certainly given consideration, for it is a significant part of what I feel is the answer to the problem of training funding.

We need the National Training Act that is now before us to upgrade our training system, in order to better respond to the challenge of technological change. To be able to fill the positions of tomorrow, Canadians must have the opportunity to take updated training courses using modern equipment, and that is specifically the purpose of the National Training Act. This bill will authorize the setting up of the skills growth fund, the easing of requirements that have limited in the past our capacity to train specialized workers, as well as the introduction of incentives to retrain workers. All these elements are prior conditions to the upgrading of our training system. This upgrading is urgently needed because technological developments are rapidly changing our daily lives.

For instance, our letters are typed on word processors. Surgeons use laser beams for microsurgery and our children do not simply attend ordinary day camps any more, but computer camps. Moreover, most job opportunities available nowadays are for men and women familiar with digital components, micro-processors, optical fibers and computers. Our capacity to adapt to these changes will have a strong impact on Canada's economic growth, productivity and trade balance. On a more personal level, we are offering every Canadian the possibility of stimulating and rewarding professions.

Pessimists fear that the technological revolution will open the door to massive unemployment. In West Germany, for instance, some foresee that office work will soon be 40 per cent automated, which will cause millions of office workers to lose their jobs. According to a Canada Council report, if we delay promoting the development of technologies in the areas of micro-processors and telecommunications, we will lag behind more advanced nations for quite a long time. A great many operations in the manufacturing industry would become obsolete overnight. Our trade balance, already precarious, might never recover. Structural unemployment could result in permanent unemployment for many Canadians, a lowering of our standard of living and possibly compel some to emigrate. That is what the Canada Council is saying will happen unless we make all-encompassing changes. Although the Canada Council has elected to paint such a grim picture of the negative consequences the technological revolution may entail, Canadians are nevertheless aware of the urgent need to make changes now. We must promote technological innovations by providing funds for research and development and devising the most modern and efficient training system. As an optimist, I feel that the technological revolution is offering us a unique opportunity to make the best possible use of our most precious assets, which are our human resources, increase productivity and create new jobs. In the area of computer graphics for instance, computer assisted design and manufacturing might make incredible increases in productivity possible, if we put the available technology to work. This new technology will liberate workers from tedious and repetitive jobs. They will be able to control the quality of their own work. Moreover, the kinds of jobs created through the practical application of advanced technology, if we approach them the right way, may be rid of the obstacles and prejudices that are at the present time hindering professional groups.

By shifting the emphasis toward trades in great demand, the new training legislation will make it possible to increase retraining opportunities. Women who hold most clerical jobs in offices and in the service sector will be disproportionately affected by the advent of new technology and we must see to it that they are given the opportunity to upgrade their skills or, if they prefer, switch to fields which so far have been the preserve of men. These past few years, Canadians have gained international recognition in the field of technological innovation. For instance, the Telidon system developed by Canada's Department of Communications is now being widely acknowledged as the world's leading videotex/teletex technology. In addition, our reputation has been greatly enhanced in international quarters with the unveiling of the space shuttle remote-controlled manipulator arm made in Canada. The National Training Act will help us benefit from such achievements. It will enable us to ensure that we have modern and efficient training facilities to train the number of workers needed by industry. It will also make it easier to alleviate some of our strict and restrictive requirements and to offer better incentives for retraining workers left behind by the industrial revolution.

The legislation introduced by the minister will pave the way toward faster economic growth and a better employment outlook for Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this bill should be adopted soon, before the end of the session. This legislation will give us the legislative authority to go ahead with major initiatives such as the skills growth fund. This fund is of vital importance if we seriously aim at training enough highly skilled workers to meet the needs of our economy, but the money will not be available unless the National Training Act does become law. Without that authority, we cannot earmark funds to build or expand a single training institution, no matter how urgently it may be needed. As it is, the institutions we do have fall far short of training all the skilled labour at the rate required by the industry. Unless we greatly speed up the rate of expansion, we can expect severe shortages of about 9,000 skilled workers a year over the next five years. Capital expenditures of that magnitude call for huge investments. The provinces are busy setting up programs that will require investments of many million dollars. For its part, the federal cabinet has set aside a $108-million fund for that purpose for the current and next fiscal years, but those funds are frozen until the bill is passed.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer briefly to the basic aspects of this legislative measure, first and foremost the skills growth fund. Manpower sources and the existing training institutions will not turn out enough expert technicians and tradesmen to meet the demand in the eighties. With a view to promoting manpower training in high priority jobs, the federal government will establish under the new act the skills growth fund, in co-operation with the provinces, so as to expand or upgrade our technical training equipment and facilities. The provinces, the industries or non-profit organizations could be asked to administer the institutions. They would also be responsible for training designated groups such as native people in skills in great demand.

• (1530)

Second, the legislation will broaden the range of training courses provided as well as the classes of workers eligible to take those courses. It will provide a list of priority skills and the variety of courses available in those fields. Under the new legislation, higher allowances may be paid to laid-off workers in designated industries and areas, under the special industry and labour adjustment program, who decide to retrain in order to acquire skills in great demand when a high rate of vacancy is not expected in their former occupation. The allowances paid would increase insurable earnings or unemployment insurance benefits from 60 to 70 per cent or if the benefits have expired, additional benefits would be paid if the workers are enrolled in retraining programs.

Third, the bill will provide higher financial allowances in order to encourage laid-off apprentices to acquire skills in trades where there is a shortage of manpower and workers to retrain in fields where technological change has caused their lay-offs but where jobs are still available. Additional special allowances would be paid to laid-off apprentices attending critical trade skills training courses. The additional payments would be added to other forms of income support.

Fourth, the bill will remove the present requirement that adults have completed their studies 12 months before enrolling for training courses to enable young drop-outs to attend those courses that are essential to them. As for skilled workers, the new legislation will authorize the Employment Commission to remove the present requirement under which a trainee must wait a year before enrolling in a training institution. In some cases, when young people or members of special groups have left the regular school system and wish to acquire new skills, a delay of one year is a real waste of human resources at a time when the need is greatest.

Fifth, under the new legislation, workers will be allowed to receive a more specialized training for a period longer than today's 52-week limit. This provision, which will remove the 52-week limit for training courses and allow the financing of training programs over a longer period, is of major importance and it is essential that it be approved as soon as possible.

Highly-specialized training programs in occupations of national importance would benefit the most from this provision. Removal of this restriction will also make it possible to combine preparatory courses with personal training on the basis of existing opportunities. This would benefit many workers, such as women who re-enter the labour market and native people who need such a combination to acquire skills and find jobs. Sixth, the new legislation will provide support for employers who have to train highly-specialized Canadian workers abroad. Under this bill, the Commission would be able to negotiate with the employers training agreements for programs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marceau: I am grateful to my colleagues and I shall not abuse the leave I have been given. I shall conclude my comments in a few minutes. This provision would benefit a great number of workers, such as women who re-enter the labour market. This provision also would be applied in a moderate way, but it could be extremely useful when production methods require the use of new technology which is not yet taught in Canada. In such a case, Canadian workers could be trained where techniques were developed, acquire the latest skills and therefore gain access to key jobs deriving from economic expansion.

Seven, the legislation will simplify agreement procedures with employers and the payment to provinces of money provided for in the contract, in order to reduce paper work and accelerate training.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the progress of the economy in quantitative and qualitative terms over the eighties implies a major increase in the resources committed to the acquisition of higher skills. Under the new legislation, we intend to establish a national training program centred on trades, where there is very strong worker demand for the retraining of labour affected by new technology, and on unemployed worker training to prepare for jobs in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give my wholehearted support to this legislation, even though I feel it will not solve all our problems. I find, however, that members on all sides react positively to the legislation. I commend them for that. I am ready to support the bill and I invite my colleagues to do so, with the hope that it will be a major tool toward the solution of the disquieting problem of unemployment, Canada's number one problem, to which all members are committed to bring a fast answer.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, you know of my special interest in this subject, so you will understand that I am delighted to be able to participate in this debate on this day. Unfortunately, this is not a very good day to discuss a measure like this, in light of the statistics announced earlier showing that we have record unemployment.

Not even in the deepest of the depression did we have the numbers of unemployed we have today.

Mr. Deans: We are leading the industrialized world.

Mr. Oberle: What the statistics do not readily reveal is that over half of the 1.25 million unemployed—and that is only the official statistic; the number is closer to two million—are under the age of 24, and that is a serious indictment respecting the ability of this government to come to grips with a very serious situation.

It is very difficult to discuss this bill without providing the backdrop of what it is intended to do and the problem it is supposed to solve. Many of my colleagues have repeatedly said that we have entered a new era of technological and industrial revolution, one that will proceed and accelerate at a pace ten times as fast as the industrial revolution which has been under way for 200 years. If that is so and if all the promises and opportunities this new technological and microelectronic revolution will bring with it are realized, I am very much afraid this bill will do very little to respond to these opportunities and challenges. However, to be fair, it is a small step and it is in a general direction, so we are looking forward to discussing this matter in committee further and providing the minister with some ideas that we on this side of the House have developed.

• (1540)

I am rather pleased that in his speeches the minister uses some statistics that I have assembled and some from reports made by his department and others who have studied what I call the human resource paradox. There are major industrial projects, particularly in new industries, that cannot proceed because of a serious shortage of manpower skills on the one hand and, on the other, because there are large numbers of unemployed who have no opportunity to find work.

The minister and the government must come to grips with the fact that in the post-war period it was commonplace, every time manpower skills were needed, to bring in well trained, seasoned immigrants to fill the jobs. The average Canadian workers were left to find jobs as labourers and acquire skills as they went along. That would not help us respond to the challenges and the opportunities of the last ten or 15 years of this century and the beginning of the next.

This bill is supposed to carve out a role for the federal government to re-enter or to broaden its participation in the field of education. We all know that since confederation there has been an ongoing dispute between the federal and provincial governments. The provinces have guarded their jurisdiction over culture and education very jealously, rejecting every effort of the federal government to carve out a role for itself. My illustrious colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) outlined for us how the federal government from time to time, and with varying degrees of success, has intervened in this area.

There is a new twist, however, in the way that the minister proposes to intervene in the field of education. May I say at the outset that I agree with the notion that the federal government will have a major role in this area. It will have to pay for what I call its deliberate policy of neglect of our educational system which is supposed to train young people for the transition from school to work.

At the end of this month another 200,000 young people will graduate from our schools and will enter the job market for the first time. The provinces seem to think that their role is complete then, and that unless a young person goes on to university it is the responsibility of the federal government to find him a job and, if that is not possible, to find a way of getting him on the unemployment insurance rolls.

The federal government should begin to establish a national focus for education. The minister has proposed a new definition of the word occupation. Clause 2 of the bill reads in part as follows:

> "occupational training" means any instruction, other than university instruction, that provides a person with skills for, or improves a person's skills in, an occupation;

So occupational training is no longer regarded as education and, as a result, the federal government feels justified in entering the field. I am not worried about that because I think we should seize any opportunity to help in this area. To be educated in school will now mean that the schools look after academic requirements. The minister will probably agree with me that the primary and secondary school system is geared to fulfilling academic requirements—everyone wants their children to become doctors, lawyers and engineers and nobody wants their children to scramble through life in a blue collar job.

I think that governments, unions, schools and industry all have a role to play in removing the stigma attached to blue collar trades. Some of these do quite well, I am told. It is reported that some plumbers make more money than doctors these days, so a stigma should not be attached to a blue collar job. Nevertheless, our education system is still geared to the academic side which prepares young people for university.

I have assembled some statistics on how many young people who graduate go on to university. I became interested in the subject after reading a report of a commission appointed by our OECD trading partners. It has studied the educational system in this country and made some recommendations. These were rather startling. It found that Canada has spent more money than any other country in the western world—and one can assume that means any country in the world—on educational facilities. In the sixties there was a great push to build new schools, learning institutions and universities. Money was no object, and we outclassed every other country in our generosity to our educational system.

The commission found that the product of these schools was mediocre in comparison to the educational skills, academic or vocational, of other systems. That finding offended me and I became interested in the subject. Having studied it, I then decided to write my own paper and to that end I assembled some statistics.

I found that about 30 per cent of people who passed grade nine and entered the last three years of secondary schooling did not complete school. In general they enter the labour market and find jobs washing dishes, driving trucks, or labouring in the hopes that they will acquire skills as they go along. Too often they just stand around on the streets, particularly when the economy is in the state it is in now. Their hopes and dreams are shattered and no one knows what happens to them.

Of the 70 per cent that complete school, only 30 per cent advance to post-secondary institutions, and of those, only 19 per cent get a degree. So 70 per cent of the graduating school population on the job market is totally unskilled and 200,000 of them will enter the job market at the end of this month.

• (1550)

The OECD people, and I in my report, looked at a number of other countries and what they are doing to overcome this problem. It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that I grew up and went to school in another country. Therefore I have personal experience in this particular area, so it was not very difficult for me to make comparisons. The secondary school system in most of the industrial countries we compete with is a dual system. Young people make their decision on what they will do for the rest of their lives at a much earlier age, usually 14 or 15, in consultation with their parents and guidance counsellors. When you consider, Mr. Speaker, that it costs the taxpayer $3,200 a year to keep a student in school, and when you consider that 70 per cent of those in grades 11 and 12 are totally bored by the system and will not get anything out of it, that is getting to be pretty ridiculous.

When I moved my family here my son and daughter were to go to grade 13. I asked an official of the Ontario Department of Education why, for heaven's sakes, in this province there are 13 grades of school instead of 12, as is the case in most other provinces? The reason stated was that we cannot afford to send out another 100,000 people to stand around on street corners. In fact, the official said, it is a glorified babysitting service.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I see some failings in this bill, particularly where the minister says he will use some of this new-found money to build additional educational facilities and buy additional equipment. I know the minister has read my report, and he complimented me on it. It is not, of course, the be all and end all. Some people say the attitudes in our country are not conducive to the kind of dual system that exists in Germany and Japan and in other countries with which we compete. However, I ask myself from time to time whether this is not the time for government and politicians to change their attitude toward education because we know the system is failing and our young people are not properly served. Someone has to do something. Now, who should do so if not our senior levels of government?

There are other components of this bill which worry me, for example, where it says that those people who can prove they have not been in school for at least a 12-month period can qualify for vocational or occupational training courses. There is a qualification, and I respect that, that the commission or inspector can waive that particular provision. But why is it in there in the first place? According to the report of the OECD inspectors, we are not doing too bad a job in adult training. Our regional colleges are doing a good job in training our adults, but we are spending most of our time and resources in chasing the horse after it has left the barn. Neither this bill nor any other measure laid before us since I have been here has been designed in any way to come to grips with the root cause of the problem: to challenge our young people at a much earlier age to make a decision.

Mr. Deans: That is nonsense.

Mr. Oberle: My friend says this is nonsense. I invite him to read the OECD report and my report. These are reasonable suggestions; they are working well in every other land—

Mr. Deans: That is absolute and unadulterated nonsense. You should get out of here and go and see.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why don't you go back to sleep.

Mr. Oberle: I challenge the hon. member to tell me why it is that at the present time over half of the unemployed are under the age of 24. The fact is that our educational system has failed them miserably, and our senior governments have pursued a policy of deliberate neglect in terms of looking after the legitimate needs and aspirations of our young people.

There are other sections in this bill that we will certainly want to examine when we get it into committee, but I would like to think that members have an open mind. Certainly this bill is not conducive to making amendments which would lead us to these kinds of far-reaching proposals which have been made. The minister, from time to time, like his colleagues, indulges in making accusations to the effect that the opposition only criticizes and never has any constructive ideas to put forward. I want to serve notice on him that we will bring to committee some constructive ideas, and we would be very pleased if the minister would come to the committee with the same kind of open mind. He is talking about spending a lot of money, and we want to be assured that it will be spent in the right direction.

Another portion of the bill which is nothing new is the clause which says that no occupational course can last longer than 52 weeks. I recognize the fact that the commission can waive that provision, but I question its being in the bill in the first place. The problem is that as we look for national occupations, I assume the minister does not intend these to be occupations which are needed from time to time. I would think the government intends to identify certain national occupations toward which young persons or adults would work to achieve a certificate, and these occupations would be identified as such. It would not necessarily be the job of a welder; rather, I would say, that of a forestry technician, a baker or a chef. It does not matter what kind of learning institution you are in, it takes longer than 52 weeks to become a millwright. In fact, I maintain there is no institution in this country, nor would you be able to create one, that would be able to respond to the challenge of the new technological revolution. In future, training will have to be carried on in the actual workplace.

The dual system I envisage would accommodate that. Industry would play a much greater role in training young people. In many other industrialized countries industry is compelled to assume that role. They are penalized through the tax system if they do not, and are rewarded in the same way if they oversubscribe to the programs. The schools and colleges then play a role in backing up the training which goes on in industry.

If you look at national occupations or vocations, Mr. Speaker, then you have to design programs which will last a lot longer than 52 weeks. In fact, for most of the occupations I mentioned, be they that of a millwright or a computer technician, and I could rattle off 40 or 50 others, the courses should probably run for three to four years. You cannot learn to be an electrician in 52 weeks and be able to market your skill in competition with people who have worked in the trade for a long time. The training would not necessarily require the construction of new buildings or the provision of new equipment. We have a lot of fine facilities, particularly in the secondary schools, which are underutilized.

• (1600)

For the information of my friend to the left, who seems to be over-reacting to some of the things I said, let me say that I get a lot of mail from teachers. I sent 5,000 copies of my report particularly to schools and school boards. I get a lot of response from teachers who tell me it is about time that somebody talked about these things openly, because teachers are incredibly frustrated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall Notices of Motions No. 51 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall Motion No. 52 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall Motion No. 54 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 13.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have two private member's motions, Nos. 13 and 66, on the Order Paper. I believe that the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent to switch these two motions so that I and other members of the House would have the opportunity to discuss and debate Motion No. 66 today rather than Motion No. 13, as Motion No. 13 has been discussed in the past. I would ask the House to give unanimous consent to the exchange of these two motions.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there is, in fact, consent to make that switch. If the hon. gentleman needs a seconder for his motion, as he is an independent member, I will second his motion. In order that it can be considered and passed by the House, I will not occupy the time of the House by making a speech.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are prepared to give our consent to that order.

Mr. Deans: I want simply to ask a question with regard to that order before we proceed. Is it the intention of the hon. member to withdraw or otherwise dispose of Motion No. 13?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The proposal is that the House today consider item No. 66 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). In order to do so, we would have to stand items prior to that, with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will all items prior to No. 66 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

All items preceding No. 66 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

* * *

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY REFORM

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to evolve and bring before the Parliament of Canada a bill to provide for the structural reform of the Senate of Canada;

That nine Members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be Members on the part of this House on the Special Joint Committee;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its Members such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable and necessary and to delegate to such subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the Committee have the power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have the power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada and to hold public hearings and consult fully with all provincial governments and Members of the legislative assemblies of the provinces as well as with the federal government and all Members of Parliament and Senators;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of advisers to assist in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required;

That the Committee submit its report not later than November 1, 1982;

That the quorum of the Committee be six Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when six Members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that that House do unite with this House for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee; and

That the Committee consider the following documents before submitting its report and bringing forward a bill to provide for the structural reform of the Senate:

1) Bill C-640, An Act to provide for structural reform of the Senate of Canada

2) the Report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, 1972

3) Bill C-60, The Constitutional Amendment Bill, 1978

4) the Report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, 1978

5) the Report of the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution, 1978

6) British Columbia's Constitutional Proposals, 1978

7) the Report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, 1979

8) the Report of the Constitutional Committee of the Quebec Liberal Party, 1980

9) the Report on Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution, 1980 and any other studies, reports or submissions that the Committee deems appropriate for consideration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I almost feel like starting by indicating that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that this House pass this motion at the earliest opportunity so that in fact we can proceed with the motion as it is on the Order Paper.

I want to indicate that I have not moved any motion to that effect. I simply said that I feel like moving a motion to that effect and that it might be passed today so that the House could move forward with this motion.

This motion requests that a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to evolve and bring before the Parliament of Canada a bill to provide for the structural reform of the Senate of Canada. I am not going to read the motion, because it is fairly extensive, on the understanding that it will be included in its entirety in Hansard.

I want to underscore several parts of this motion and read them in to Hansard a second time, that is, that the committee consider the following documents before submitting its report and bringing forth a bill to provide for the structural reform of the Senate:

First, Bill C-640, an act to provide for structural reform of the Senate of Canada,

Second, the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, 1972,

Third, Bill C-60, the Constitutional Amendment Bill, 1978,

Fourth, the Report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, 1978,

Fifth, the Report of the Special Senate Committee on the Constitution, 1978,

Sixth, British Columbia's Constitutional Proposals, 1978,

Seventh, the Report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, 1979,

Eighth, the Report of the Constitutional Committee of the Quebec Liberal Party, 1980,

Ninth, the Report on Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution, 1980.

All these reports or papers, if you wish, deal with the reform of the Senate.

There are two aspects I wish to debate today. One is the need for Senate reform and some of the concepts incorporated in Bill C-640. The other is the process itself for structural Senate reform.

Mr. Speaker, I want to touch on the second part first, the process for structural Senate reform.

I have been in this House now for three years and I remember, as a provincial member and a member of a provincial cabinet, that for some 12 years the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) with the Premiers across the land, held first ministers' conferences to patriate the Constitution and reform the Constitution. They simply got nowhere. They held meeting after meeting after meeting and came to no conclusion and had no success.

It was not until the process was initiated by this House that the process of patriation and the incorporation of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and the evolution of an amending formula, finally reached success.

It was this House that took action by unanimous consent on May 9, 1980. It was this House that set up a joint committee of this House and the Senate to look at all aspects of a charter of rights and freedoms.

When this House took action directly, then things began to happen. So I am saying, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the process for Senate reform, that we must move to a similar type of action as we did with constitutional patriation and constitutional reform.

When this House and this Parliament puts together a proposal that is sound in every aspect, and then the Prime Minister goes to the Premiers with it, generally there is some form of agreement. But as long as the process was one of ten Premiers and the Prime Minister, or the 11 first ministers, getting together for a talk session, nothing ever happened. For 12 years that process went on.

I say again that until this House took very specific action, nothing really happened. But once this House took specific action then indeed we succeeded in repatriating the Constitution, with the entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and even in the evolution and acceptance of an amending formula.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am proposing through this Motion No. 66 that a similar type of process be undertaken, that we agree to the establishment of a joint committee of this House and the other place and that this committee be allowed to travel from one end of the nation to the other, and indeed consult with the premiers, consult the provincial governments, and review all the past literature, and hold public hearings, if necessary, in regard to the meaning of the Senate itself. Then it can bring before this House a specific bill for Senate structural reform and also present the bill at the same time to the other place.

I am convinced that if we pursue, as the Parliament of Canada, this type of process, we will be successful in regard to Senate reform.

• (1610)

The next question is: why is Senate reform necessary? Henri Bourassa once said that Senate reform "comes periodically like other forms of epidemics and current fevers". He was right. Our history, especially our recent history, is littered with the forgotten remnants of proposals, studies and legislative initiatives which tried to breathe new life into an institution that has been wasting away for over 100 years. The fact is that reform of the Senate will not wait much longer. We have reached a point in our national development where we must make our institutions more responsive to every facet of Canadian society. There is a crisis of confidence in these institutions which has exacerbated regional and provincial alienation.

Over the last 20 years, economic, cultural and sociological developments have radically altered the face of Canada. Institutional reform is imperative, not only to respond to these developments, but to allow us to confront future challenges and problems, confident that our institutions can cope with the complexity of the problems before them.

Although the patriation of the Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms and an amending formula will help to revitalize our institutions, the debate surrounding patriation has unfortunately accentuated the acrimony and alienation felt in some parts of the country, particularly out west, because there is no clause for ownership of property. We must now take the reform process one step further to lessen ill feelings and tensions which have arisen. The west needs Senate reform; it needs a voice at the centre which represents the regions. This was the identified need for the Senate in the first place in Macdonald's time. Senate structural reform is necessary so that the provinces and regions can be represented directly at the centre in a meaningful way.

I have worked on Senate reform for quite a number of years. I have written a number of letters and have made a number of proposals in past years, but perhaps the two most appropriate initiatives which I took were to structure and introduce Bill C-640 and to place Motion No. 66 on the Order Paper, so that somehow or other this parliamentary institution could move in a meaningful way toward Senate reform.

I believe a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to investigate Senate reform and to report back to Parliament is a necessity. Such a committee would consult fully with all provincial governments and members of legislative assemblies, as well as with the federal government and all members of this institution. As I said earlier, this is an approach which can work and is more likely to succeed than allowing first ministers to do something which in the past they have always failed to achieve.

Bill C-640, an act to provide for the structural reform of the Senate of Canada, was intended to highlight the need for Senate reform as the first constitutional priority following the patriation of the Constitution. It sought to provide representation and balance in Parliament of the national, regional and provincial interests. I have proposed that the Senate be composed, to represent the national interest, of 150 senatorial chairs, and that these senatorial chairs be representative of five natural regions in Canada, with each region providing 30 senators to the Parliament of Canada. Also I proposed that the provincial interests be represented in the Senate by five senators for each province, appointed by the provinces and responsible to the provincial legislative assemblies. Furthermore, the bill was structured to provide the Senate body and each individual member with stability, continuity, accountability, legitimacy and independence.

I want to touch briefly upon each of these points in my remaining time. In regard to stability, each existing Senate member is permitted to complete his or her appointment in accordance with the terms of appointment. Each new senator is appointed for a minimum of six years, and then will have to return to the people to seek reconfirmation. It would be a form of election, a half-way situation between an appointed Senate and an elected Senate. Also I should say that it would be inappropriate to attempt to change the existing tenure of any senator who was elected or selected upon an existing system.

In regard to continuity, the transition from the old senatorial regime to the new one is structured so that only approximately one third of the senators would be up for reconfirmation every third year. Although I have had many second thoughts on this particular point, I now believe strongly that reconfirmation should occur only every six years. This presents an interesting complexity of senators within a restructured Senate in the future, if reconfirmation is held only on a six-year basis.

Let us imagine the situation where, from one end of this nation to the other, every six years senators initially appointed had to return to the people to seek reconfirmation in each province. Let us imagine a number of regional senators having to go back to the regions to seek reconfirmation. I think it would have a dramatic effect upon all Canada. I think senators would become important, and they would have to account for their usefulness in this institution to the people of the provinces and to the regions they represent. They would be accountable directly to the people they represent in this institution.

In regard to legitimacy, senators now lack legitimacy because they are appointed by one person, namely, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), they serve to the age of 75 years and are accountable individually and collectively to no one but themselves and perhaps to the person who appointed them. Lawmakers or lawgivers must surely gain legitimacy for their powers directly, or at least indirectly, from the people. Therefore, in the bill I have proposed they are appointed by all the people's representatives, either provincially or federally, and must go directly back to the people for reconfirmation rather than be appointed by one man only.

In regard to independence, under the new bill a senator can and will be able to maintain non-partisanship if he or she so wishes.

This is only one bill. This is only one alternative for Senate structural reform. As I indicated at the beginning of my speech, there are many alternatives. The structural reform of the Senate has been investigated and there are enough reports on that proposal to fill a suitcase.

• (1620)

The question which has been before most of us is whether it should be an appointed or an elected Senate. Surely the only acceptable process is one that is half-way in between. An elected Senate would permit directions which would not be acceptable to our system of government in Canada. I hope that hon. members and the government would seriously consider beginning a new process of senatorial reform similar to what it did in connection with constitutional patriation and constitutional reform. If it does, I believe that the other place can experience reform at the earliest opportunity and become a very effective representation of the regions and provinces in this place.

I suggest to you that much of the ferment which exists out west, such as western separatism, which I discount and reject, has been a result of inadequate direct representation by the provinces and regions in the Parliament of Canada. Senate structural reform must be one of the top priorities of additional constitutional reform from now on.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I would like to indicate to the hon. member who just spoke that I am generally supportive of the thrust of his motion. He is aware of that because when he wrote to each of us I was one of those members who responded to his well-thought-out submission.

At that time I made two or three comments on the proposal. One of my initial reactions was that the reconfirmation procedure would be more appropriate if we did not end up with too many reconfirmation campaigns within a given period of time. I suggested that we could perhaps lump together reconfirmations in order to prevent us from going through that procedure too often.

The other aspects of his original proposition seem to have been streamlined, as they now appear in this motion.

Some of the very interesting suggestions that the hon. member made at the time included Indian representation in the House of Commons. Whether that is the kind of proposition we would want to consider in the House—to have separate Indian representation—is certainly not something to which I want to commit myself now. However, it is an interesting subject which should be thoroughly examined and debated. New Zealand does have that kind of system with regard to the Maori population. I believe there are people with opinions from both sides of the fence as to how that system works now, but I suspect that the Maori population is still favourable to that idea even though their representation, which I believe numbers only four, is not very significant considering the number of Maoris as a percentage of the total population of New Zealand.

Although I should not create new issues, issues which have not been raised in this motion, I did take issue with another point in the original motion. It concerned the question of provincehood for the Yukon territories. This seemed to be initially part of the motion which the hon. member was proposing. I have some quite strong reservations about provincehood for the Yukon or the Northwest Territories, not in the very long run but in the immediate short term. I believe that we should be aiming toward a constitutional mechanism which will allow the population of those two territories to have an efficient government. There should be a mechanism whereby they will be allowed to communicate and solve problems that are affected by directions from Ottawa. We should provide mechanisms which will allow a rapid and efficient flow-through, whenever Ottawa civil servants are involved, to the local population in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

We should get rid of the red tape, but we should consider the many alternatives before coming to the conclusion that provincehood for that size of population in these days is necessarily the only solution.

I would like to thank the hon. member for having given us the opportunity this afternoon to discuss this most important issue . I know that he is on the right track. This type of reconfirmation mechanism which he talks about is imaginative and, I believe, holds the key to the kind of reform in the Senate that will be meaningful, useful and effective as far as better government in Canada is concerned.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) who just spoke had some kind words for my hon. friend from Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) when he said that this resolution was on the right track. My thought there is that it is possibly on the right track for the first step. Beyond that, however, I part company with him.

The hon. member for Edmonton East has rather bootlegged into this resolution, in what he calls Bill C-640, a formula which he has conceived. It is a denial of the whole purpose of his resolution.

When we began our very difficult national gestation of a constitution two years ago I was totally opposed to the principle of setting up a new constitution which would emanate from one man who had no mandate and a cabinet which had no mandate, in consultation with ten premiers who had no mandate. A constitution is not something that is drawn up by someone and imposed on people. A constitution is that body of law handed to a parliamentary institution for the governments of the people. It may become rather difficult to get full accord or a large majority to agree to the Constitution, but we are not a revolutionary state, we are not a conquered state with a constitution imposed upon it.

• (1630)

Under the present Constitution, or the type of government that we have in a parliamentary form of constitutional monarch, the Senate constitutes one third of the Parliament of Canada. I think all those hon. members of the House who go about saying that the Senate should be abolished or that this or that should be done in the Senate are displaying appalling gall. I say, rather, "Physician, heal thyself". I would rather say that this chamber should preoccupy itself first with determining what is wrong with this institution—

Mr. Smith: You are doing that.

Mr. Peterson: We have a lot of work to do.

Mr. Lambert: —not just as to the mechanics of it. We should consider whether we will increase the size of this place by almost arithmetic progression, if we do not stop, and whether the powers of the cabinet with regard to this chamber, to this House, should not be modified. Should there not be more control by the backbenchers over cabinet in what is euphemistically called responsible government?

Mr. Peterson: It is responsible.

Mr. Lambert: Should there not be a great deal more responsibility between the administration and hon. members of this House? However, let me say that an hon. member is elected to legislate, to discuss, and not to administer as unfortunately, so many municipal councils do. Members are elected to arrive at decisions and to set down policy. How many municipal councillors decide that they will be the chief administrators and will override the administrators on every account, that they will sit on their shoulders and tell them what they will do in every particular situation? That is not for this House.

I would say, coming back to the purport of this notice of motion that, yes, I agree that this is a way of starting a joint Senate-House of Commons committee, although the resolution is deficient in specifying the number of Senators to be invited. I would say that the Senate being a third of Parliament, if we were to change its structure, perhaps we would find there are too many members from the House of Commons, and if that body were to be too large, I think a body of 12 would be big enough so that there could be six from either place. Remember, Mr. Speaker—and I would invite hon. members to consider this—the Senate is precisely one third of our parliamentary government. So, six Senators would represent Canada just as much as we do. I do not know where people get the idea, but there is some self-generated conception, which is a misconception, that, having been elected, we are nationally anointed and that only we have wisdom, that we are the ones on our own.

Mr. Smith: Popularly.

Mr. Lambert: There is the idea that the tongues of fire have alighted on our heads, that we are the divinely inspired in the House of Commons and that everyone else is some degree lower.

Mr. Speaker, I invite you to read the reports of Senate committees to see their quality of work. They beat our House committees and our task forces. Frankly, their reports are worth a great deal, but do not expect the popular media to read them. That is work. All the media wants to see, shall we say, is the 45 minutes or so of blood and gore of the question period, that so-called media event—

Mr. Peterson: Shame!

Mr. Lambert: —on which it bases opinions as to the performance of government, performance of individual hon. members or cabinet ministers, etc. It is a showplace and I think it is worthless. Their performance is worthless. But let us see the true worth of committee reports and some of the Senate work. How many people have read Senate Hansard to see the quality of some of the speeches? There is not a reporter covering them. One never hears anything about the Senate speeches. I do not know if there is a reporter here. At noon, when we were listening to a very excellent speech by our member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie)—

Mr. Peterson: From somewhere in Ontario.

Mr. Lambert: He is from Rosedale.

Mr. Smith: That tiny perfect fellow.

Mr. Lambert: That was an excellent speech. It had been well prepared. It was not read. I heard some evilly-read speeches today, as though they were being looked at for the first time, to the mystification of the hon. members presenting them.

Mr. Peterson: Shame!

Mr. Lambert: Be careful. The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) will identify himself.

But that is something that we fail to notice about the Senate as it is now constituted. Certainly, there are some people who are less than others, but that is something which exists in this chamber, too. I would look for a committee of 12 to serve as that body which will hear representations from all parts of the country as to whether and how the Senate should be changed. It can consult, as the resolution calls for, provincial premiers, members of the opposition in the provinces and academics, and can hold public meetings and receive briefs. In other words, it would determine from the people how they want their Senate to be constituted. The public did not really get much say on the Constitution, as it is now part of the Canada Act, nor on its Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There was a government which, in many instances, did not yield, even though the majority of public opinion was against it. Then, the final indignity was the bargaining of rights to arrive at a consensus so that the project could go forward, or else it would go forward as a unilateral action. Talk about the tyranny of a temporary majority! That was the epitome of the performance.

Mr. Peterson: It was scandalous.

Mr. Smith: Shocking.

Mr. Lambert: Again, we come forward. My colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton East, after putting forward this idea, then put forward his own pet theory about how the Senate should be constituted. He has made up his mind already, except that he does concede there might be some optional solutions. He does not go quite that far. I think it would be nine to ten or nine to one of what appears in Bill C-640. Somewhere in there is his favourite proposal.

• (1640)

I do not think we should be tied down to that. We should not be tied down to anything except that the government should be serious about meeting the desires of the people with regard to the Senate. The results would range all the way from total abolition, so that this becomes a unicameral subject, to the tyranny of the temperate majority, or we might have an elected-type of Senate such as there is in the United States or Australia where there are real problems. Not one is 100 per cent perfect. I suggest, however, that the basic idea of the joint representation be accepted. I do not think there should be 18 members on the committee, but a lesser number with the proper staff.

Here I hesitate as to the form of this motion in that it obviously envisages government expenditure. Therefore, it should be of a recommendary nature, that the government should give consideration to the idea. When one recommends the appointment of people with authority to do this and that, it goes beyond the power of an ordinary member to embody that in his motion.

I have done a fair bit of picking on this. Basically, I commend the debate this afternoon. It gives us an opportunity to discuss this on a reasonable basis, taking into account the existence of and the part that the Senate plays in Parliament without us telling them that we do not think much of them. I hope some day that some senator will write a candid comment about the House of Commons. It would be very interesting reading. I hope we will hear some other views. We could get on with this.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the proposition before us, I would say that while the New Democratic Party has long advocated the abolition of the Senate, that position should in no way be construed as signifying unalterable opposition to the concept of a second chamber if such a chamber were to be structured on a democratic, responsible and realistically representative foundation. Because of that long-held position which my party has taken, we as a party perhaps have not given the due measure of attention to the subject of alternatives that we otherwise would have done. Therefore, what I am about to say consists largely of my own musings on the subject, although they do arise from conversations with quite a large cross-section of people from different parts of the country with different economic and social backgrounds. They are in large part coloured by my own concept of what is one of my particular roles.

When I stood for election in 1980, I was quite frank with my constituents. I told them that if they saw fit to elect me, they should be prepared for me to be somewhat of a shared representative. They elected me quite knowingly on that basis, not only as the representative of the geographical constituency of Kootenay West, which I am proud and honoured to represent, but as one of a very few blue collar industrial workers to have the good fortune or otherwise to be part of this place. As such, I and a very few other members of this House have a particular vantage point, which is somewhat different from that of others, to present on this subject and a number of others.

There are only half a dozen, if that, members of this House who can be called industrial wage earners. This is the inverted pyramid, as it is often called, where vast numbers of Canadians who earn their living by wages find themselves singularly unrepresented in terms of a government of people who do not share their background and experiences. That is an awkward position to be in from time to time.

Many of the values of that section of our population are not always reflected, shared or understood by people who come primarily from a middle-class background, the professions such as the legal profession or the old professions or from the academic community.

I mention this briefly because it strikes many of us that we feel no great excitement about the establishment of a second chamber which would repeat all of these errors in its type of selection, whether it be elected, appointed by region or otherwise. Such an institution will continue to see neglected the direct expressions, opinions and interests of a very large number of Canadians who, for a variety of reasons, have difficulty in being heard so as to ensure that their interests are adequately looked after by government at all levels. The nature of their work is something that prevents them from doing that.

If you ask any Canadian what he or she is, they will tell you that they are a Quebecer, a British Columbian, or a Manitoban. Very often they will give their specific region, province or place of origin. Second, they are likely to say they are either a carpenter, lawyer, secretary, woodworker, miner or teacher. In other words, whether people are elected or appointed, they are known by where they live or what they do.

Representation in this House is based largely on geographical borders and constituencies. They are largely artificial electoral areas. I am lucky because my constituency has natural frontiers that were recognized long before it was a constituency. Not all constituencies have that sense of homogeneity.

We do not represent parties as we are not elected on a proportional or party-list basis as in some other jurisdictions. We are elected geographically within regions.

There has been a lot of talk about divisions of opinions or interests in this country. All divisions are certainly not east and west, although they are the ones that make the headlines. Many of the serious divisions of a political and economic nature are urban versus hinterland rather than east versus west. There are very common differences and attitudes between the interior of British Columbia and the lower mainland, including the major metropolis of Vancouver. The same is found in many areas of rural Alberta as opposed to the administrative and industrial centres of that province. It is found between northern Ontario and Toronto. There is probably no less love lost in those areas than between the east and the west of Canada. Very often what takes place within a province or region is just a microcosm of the divisions that take place on a broader scale. There are certainly many serious divisions between the hinterland of Quebec and Montreal and Quebec City. However, those distinctions are as representative of different geographic areas as they are of the different economic functions that a hinterland and an urban metropolis represent. It is basically a difference between the managerial and the consumer interests of a city and the interests of the producer population, particularly in the resource industries in the hinterland of our country, whether it is in relation to forestry, mining, agriculture or fishing.

• (1650)

While it is appropriate that a province choose representatives to sit in the Senate, I hope if a committee is formed to make choices as to what representatives shall sit in the second chamber, whether by election process or selection—which I suggest is probably more appropriate—by various provincial governments, I suggest there should be some requirement other than simply a moral one to ensure that within the selection process adequate weight is given to those economic interests which make up the various populations, whether on a regional basis within a province or of working people either independently or through their organizations.

Management groups also find themselves under-represented in this elected chamber, as do unions and employees. We are largely an academic, legal, professional institution, and business and labour find themselves almost totally excluded. That shows in the kinds of things we do, not only in terms of our social attitudes, our social legislation and many other aspects of legislation we draft, but it certainly also shows in the way we handle—rather, mishandle—our economy continuously as a government and as a Parliament.

What I am trying to say is that in my view and in the view of many other working Canadians—and a number of Canadians in the business community as well—the last thing we need in Canada is another middle-class institution with middle-class values and middle-class priorities. We have many institutions and many legislators who are basically woolly-headed idealists in the sense that if we simply pass a law they think we suddenly really change something. Most people in the work-a-day world, whether labour or management, realize that life, the constitutional process, the legislative process and the structure of our society, are largely like a long arm-wrestling contest. It is like two fish in a goldfish bowl. We go back and forth, and then end up somewhere in the middle. Thus we end up with packages or results which everyone, whether they love it or not, realize we have to live with, rather than engaging in a continuous infantile name calling in which no one accepts responsibility for anything. Perhaps I and a few of my colleagues who share my background are locked into our background in the sense that somehow we prefer a system in which, even if we are not absolutely satisfied with the outcome of a process of negotiations or bargaining, at some point we realize that the battle has to end; we sign our names, make our own commitments and put our names on the dotted line, and that is something we have to live with for x number of years. It does not happen that way here, and I really do not think we need another institution in which the same kind of unhealthy attitudes to life and the processes of living together continue to exist.

I suspect I am not in the enviable position of my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), who has a specific formula in mind, although I am sure he is as flexible in this as he has been on other occasions and on other major subjects which have received quite a bit of consideration in this House in recent months and years. But if this proposal is to go ahead, either now or at some time in the future—and I am sure something akin to it will—I would like us to bear in mind that there is a large body of people out there in the country who feel left out of our processes. They do not look at this Parliament as really being their Parliament. They do not look at the courts of this land as really being their courts. They do not look at the Senate of this country as being their Senate. Sometimes they have a great deal of difficulty believing that the institutions to which we all pledge our loyalty really consider deeply what their legitimate interests are, quite apart from serving them. I hope in the drafting of any proposal for a second chamber we give consideration to other divisions, whether on a subregional or interest basis, to ensure that working people and people who have devoted their lives to participating in the productive aspects of our society, whether in labouring roles or in management roles, can say that it results in government not only "of the people, by the people and for the people", but also that they may have a vested stake in their institutions and they may exercise some continuing loyalty and ability to participate more directly in the decisions which affect their day to day lives.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to what the previous speaker had to say about his perception that there is an under-representation in this House of working middle-class people. I really do not believe that because the vast majority of Canadians, by any reasonable definition, are middle class, and it may be that some hon. members in this chamber have gone on to university or have gone into academic life, but I think we will find that there is a large proportion of the members of this chamber who came from farming communities, who were farmers or who were the sons of farmers. I have an academic background, yes. I taught at the University of British Columbia. My father was an electrician, and I was raised in an electrician's family.

Mr. Kristiansen: Not the same thing.

Mr. Evans: I have the same roots as the hon. member does. I was raised in the same kind of family. I lived with my parents for 23 years. My parents were middle-class people who had a labour union background, 43 years in the IBEW, and I rather resent it when the hon. member says that we are not middle class, that the working people are not represented in this chamber, that we do not know what the working people want, or that we do not have parents or relatives who are working people. I consider all Canadians to be working people. They just work in different ways.

With regard to the Senate and the reform of the Senate, there are a few things I would like to say. The time is very short, I realize, but I have been thinking about this, as has the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), for some time, and I think the Senate needs to be reformed.

There are certan problems I see in the way the country is represented. I think we have difficulties with our political parties. All three political parties have expressed the feeling that the grass roots of political parties are not having enough input into what is going on here in Parliament, in the Senate, and generally in government at the federal, provincial and, indeed, at the municipal level to some extent as well.

There is also a definite and distinct problem with regional representation, and I think one of the major problems we have faced in the last few years has been regional representation by federal-provincial conference, which bypasses Parliament and elected representatives. It is not acceptable, and we have to bring that regional representation in a very meaningful way back to this Parliament of Canada.

Finally, there is a problem of representation of political parties in different parts of the country. With respect to the proportional representation problem, it has been suggested that members of the House of Commons be elected in a certain way and that certain parts of the House be appointed on a proportional basis. I do not agree with that. I think we should all be elected by our people, but there could be another chamber where proportional representation would in fact be the case, and that could very well be the Senate.

I have some further ideas, but I see that our time has expired. I would like to put those ideas forward when this debate on the hon. member's motion resumes.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[English]

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 7, 1982

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, at the Versailles conference this past weekend our Finance Minister (Mr. MacEachen) stated, "we must do everything possible to improve the climate for investment", while our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) admitted to reporters that some recent measures had been counterproductive. In light of the above, as well as the report by Statistics Canada which says, "the economic data now available for the first quarter of 1982 indicates that the Canadian economy experienced the sharpest decline since 1954", I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Finance Minister bring in a new budget to address the most disastrous economic slump in 28 years, and get over a million and a quarter Canadians back into the work force.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE JUDICIARY

INVOLVEMENT OF JUDGES IN POLITICAL ACTIVITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, noting that the Canadian Judicial Council has reprimanded Mr. Justice Thomas Berger for his political activity while continuing to sit as a Supreme Court judge, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House reaffirms its view that judges, of necessity, ought not to engage in political activity.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my motion arises out of the failure of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to negotiate an arrangement with the Japanese Prime Minister in Versailles on the importing of automobiles into this country. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House call upon the Government of Canada to introduce legislation immediately that would enable it to impose, in Canada, the same local content rules that exist in Australia regarding the importation of automobiles into that country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

RECOMMENDED REVAMPING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) ate truffles in Versailles this weekend and blamed Uncle Sam's high interest rate policy for Canadian unemployment, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Lalonde) ate crow in Ottawa and provided at least some relief for the industrial-energy sector by reducing certain federal taxes on some oil production activity. It is clear that governments do retain some flexibility even in periods of high interest rates. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House recommend that the government incorporate into the new budget—the minute it returns from France—a thorough revamping of the National Energy Program, particularly excluding targets of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990 as well as the 25 per cent retroactive government ownership in Canada lands.

These two measures alone would do much to revitalize the reeling oil and gas industry and provide a much needed job program in the manufacturing sectors of central Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

CROWN CORPORATION APPOINTMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to note the Liberal Party's executive placement bureau has found havens for yet two more party hacks: the Alberta federal campaign manager has gone to his reward on the board of the national airline, and the fund raiser for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) joins his fellow westerner, Jack Horner, on the board of CN. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That Canadian taxpayers take note:
Liberal hacks don't worry about merit;
They take the plums and grin 'n' bear it.
No experience needed; don't need to know a whit.
Just buy a card and be a good little Grit!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby.

* * *

THE JUDICIARY

CONDEMNATION OF CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL FOR REPORT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA JUDGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. On Friday last the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) made public the report of the Canadian Judicial Council on the complaint by Judge George Addy concerning the conduct of Judge Thomas Berger. In view of the fact that the secret hearings of the Judicial Council, constituting nothing less than a witch hunt, spurred on by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and apparently supported by Conservative members, have produced a report which is a discredit to the members of the Judicial Council who supported it; and in view of the fact that the same federal judges lobbied long and hard in the political arena to sweeten their own generous pension scheme, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House condemn the members of the Canadian Judicial Council for their appalling report on the conduct of Judge Berger and note their hypocrisy in speaking out to feather their own nests while criticizing Judge Berger, whose only offence was speaking out in defence of aboriginal and minority rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have been telling the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) for several months that his November 12 budget and other government policies were killing investment in Canada and driving money and jobs out of the country, but he has done nothing about it. Then suddenly—what do you know?—while in Versailles, it finally sank through, and the minister told reporters that "we must do everything possible to improve the climate for investment." Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

• (1410)

That this House recommends that the minister put some action where his mouth is and do what is easily possible and withdraw the budget at once. This will be a good start on improving the investment climate in Canada, but if he really wants to solve the problem, resign, resign, resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the housing construction industry is all but at a standstill. By CMHC's own admission, the starts for new single detached homes is the worst in 20 years, down 63 per cent from the same period last year, and starts for multiple units down 35 per cent. Because of its dismal performance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the minister responsible for CMHC tender his resignation, attached to the resignation of the Minister of Finance responsible for high interest rates, which should appropriately be attached to that of the Prime Minister, responsible for the appointment of the aforementioned ministers to this so-called cabinet.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CALL FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, at least one in six jobs in Canada is automobile related. The Prime Minister of Japan has advised the Prime Minister of Canada that his concern for the Canadian auto industry is a minor matter and he proposes to take no action. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce make a statement now as to what action he proposes to take so that the Canadian auto parts manufacturers and the Canadian automobile workers will have some role in the Canadian auto industry of tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

DISARMAMENT

SUPPORT FOR ENDING OF ARMS RACE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I move a motion under Standing Order 43 to which I trust that the House will give its unanimous consent. Today the Second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament is beginning in New York. The world faces the ever-growing danger of escalating wars and nuclear annihilation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House recommends to all participants in the Second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament (UNSSOD II) that every possible effort be made in good will and good faith to end the arms race and restore peaceful stability to our world.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

S.O. 43

FISHERIES

FUTURE OF FISH PLANT AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the groundfish operation at the Seal Cove B.C. Packers plant in Prince Rupert is a viable operation with a nine million pounds and $7 million throughput last year; and in view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce received an application for public funds from B.C. Packers earlier this year to keep the plant running, and since the St. Anthony, Newfoundland, groundfish operation is being turned into a Crown corporation today to keep it operational, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the B.C. Packers request for public funds be made public so that the shoreworkers and fishermen of Prince Rupert will know the cost of keeping the plant open, and that this House endorse a fair is fair policy—if the groundfish operation in St. Anthony's can be saved with public funds, then the same level of funds should be sent to Prince Rupert, to preserve Canadian jobs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that there is virtually no action coming from the United States concerning the cleanup of chemical pollution in the Niagara River and the Great Lakes; in view of the fact that Lake Ontario will be dead in 20 years if these critical problems are not dealt with, and in view of the fact that Canada has been without an International Joint Commission chairman for months, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House calls on the Secretary of State for External Affairs to immediately appoint a Canadian IJC chairman with instructions to raise the serious problem of toxic chemical pollution in the Niagara River and Great Lakes, and further, to express Canadian concerns that the latest Reagan budget proposals would see Great Lakes research cut to nil and will obviously make it impossible for the United States to live up to treaty obligations with Canada under the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT ACTING PRIME MINISTER RECOGNIZE INEFFICIENCIES OF CORRECTIVE MEASURES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is now quite clear that the government is putting off making basic changes in its misdirected and injudicious economic policy because it would have us believe that the United States is the enemy and the cause of all our problems. Now that this subterfuge has been brought out into the open, is the Acting Prime Minister willing to admit that very precious time has been lost in putting off changes to the budget and the government's economic and energy policies, which for months have been shown to be totally inappropriate, and that this delay has caused a major increase in the unemployment rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the answer to this question may be found in the press conference given by the Prime Minister yesterday in Paris. The Government of Canada has not accused the United States of having a high interest rate policy. In his press conference, the Prime Minister commented that the Americans themselves, the Secretary of the Treasury Mr. Regan in particular, have deplored the excessively high interest rates in the United States and said that these levels can be reduced only by Congress, and more specifically, by controlling the deficit. I therefore feel that my hon. friend is mistaken in saying that the Government of Canada is accusing the United States, while the same problem is being criticized in the United States. Have we lost precious time by not taking action? That is of course a matter of judgment, but once again, in his press conference yesterday, the Prime Minister said that we first had to know whether the Americans were going to act responsibly with respect to Canada's interests, and in that connection, he simply said that we could certainly not wait until November.

[English]

FORTHCOMING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the rumours that are coming from the Summit conference indicate that the Minister of Finance is proposing to introduce significant changes in the anti-investment elements of his budget, that he is proposing to change the policy that has been followed toward foreign investment in this country, and also that he is going to attack the problem of the very, very high budget deficit which is currently approaching the $18 billion mark. These policies could have been attacked months and months ago. The only reason that we on this side of the House can see for the delays is that of using the many times discredited ploy of holding up the enemy outside as being the cause of all our problems. Surely the minister understands this is not the reason for our problems today. Is the government going to persist in putting this slant on the problems when it presents its economic statement that is expected over the next few weeks?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, once again, I must say that the assumption made by my hon. friend is false, since the Americans are as critical as we are with respect to high interest rates in the United States. In fact, statements by Mr. Regan, Mr. Haig and others clearly show that they, too, realize that the present interest rates in the United States are abnormally high. As for the intentions of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I heard the rumours on the subject that were circulating yesterday. The Minister of Finance will be here tomorrow. However, I doubt very much whether he will be able to confirm or deny all these rumours, some of which are contradictory, but in any case, my hon. friend will have an opportunity to put his question to the minister directly.

• (1420)

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO INTRODUCTION OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the United States is aware of these problems, but it has been acting. Over in Paris the Prime Minister said that we may have to wait another six weeks before this government acts. Why is the Prime Minister delaying this long when unemployment is approaching the million and a quarter level, when the dollar is bumping along at an all-time low, and when the economic condition in the country is as bad as it has been since the war? Will the Acting Prime Minister today commit to the House that this cowardly and casual approach of the Prime Minister will be replaced by something which will bring back some confidence to the country? Will he commit that there will be an economic statement in the House before it recesses for the summer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be in a better position to say what he will do tomorrow. I think most people in Canada accepted the idea that before taking measures in Canada the least we could do was to find out what the Americans intended to do, it being generally accepted in Canada and even in the United States that the real interest rate in the United States is abnormal.

Mr. Wilson: It is only a one-hour flight from here.

Mr. Pepin: Now that this opportunity has been taken—the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have had conversations with these gentlemen and with other leaders—on their way back and here in the House, presumably for a number of days or weeks, they will be reflecting and, as we are told, putting together a package to present later.

* * *

HOUSING

DECLINE IN CONSTRUCTION OF RESIDENTIAL UNITS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. On Friday last CMHC released the housing starts for May. It showed them seasonally adjusted at 116,000, which compares with 208,500 for May last year. Actual starts in urban areas are down 51 per cent, and single detached dwelling units are down 63 per cent. This is a disastrous situation for a period in the year when construction in residential and rental housing should be showing a substantial increase. What does the minister propose to do about this, apart from trying to blame the provinces for not doing enough?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the figures reported by the hon. member do not take into account some $350 million allocated in the budget of November. This was the basis for the legislation that was supported by the hon. member and members of his party. That program was passed just recently through Bill C-89 in the House. It is designed to produce 30,000 affordable rental units, one third of which will be directed toward low incomes, on a rent geared to income basis. That program will be almost under way within a few weeks and should bring considerable relief to the picture the hon. member just painted.

QUERY RESPECTING STARTS UNDER CANADA RENTAL SUPPLY PLAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I wish the minister would tell us how this will bring relief to the single dwelling-unit situation which is down 63 per cent and going lower. While the minister is at it, perhaps he could tell us how many actual starts have taken place under the CRSP provisions of the legislation to which he just referred. We know that there are 2,400-2,500 applications, but how many actual starts have there been? The minister knows full well that the situation is such that unemployment is now over 10 per cent. In 1976 there were 400,000 more people employed in residential construction than there are today. He knows the situation is critical because it is a labour-intensive industry. He talked about the 30,000 units, but how many actual starts are under way at the present time?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, regrettably there are none under way at the present time. The legislation enabling that particular program was endorsed recently by the House. The program has been advertised. We have received 2,500 applications, and we are in the process of starting the first development. Surely the House must remember that when I tabled that legislation on December 18 and asked hon. gentlemen for support, I pointed out that that program would really have to be in place by early in the new year to get under way. It was as a result of the holiday taken by opposition members and the delay of three months that this problem was caused. Surely the opposition has to share some responsibility for that delay.

* * *

• (1425)

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER FOLLOWING VERSAILLES SUMMIT CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Following the Summit conference in Paris, the Prime Minister made two contradictory statements. On the one hand he said that Canada is faced with an economic crisis and, on the other hand, he said that the government plans to wait another six weeks before taking any action. Which is it? Does the government think that we can have another six weeks of a leisurely, do-nothing policy, or does the government say that we do have a crisis that requires action now?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not see a contradiction. The Prime Minister is stating that we are in an economic crisis and is saying that, as quoted by my hon. friend, six weeks will be needed to put the package together.

Mr. Crosbie: What have you been doing for two years?

Mr. Clark: That is not what he said.

Mr. Pepin: Well, one of the things to clear up was the intention of the United States. The Prime Minister said repeatedly in his conference yesterday that he will consult with his caucus and cabinet on the package that he intends to present. Most members here would find that to be quite normal.

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, a year ago, when we on this side were demanding action on the economy, the government was saying that we had to wait for last year's Summit. After the Summit, when action was demanded, we were told we had to wait for last fall's budget. Since last fall's budget we were told to wait for the Versailles meeting. I say to the government that the people of Canada are sick and tired of waiting for the government to act.

If you look at what is happening to the economy now, and if we wait for six more weeks, 25,000 more Canadians will have lost their jobs, 3,000 personal bankruptcies will have been declared, and another 1,000 small businesses will have shut down on a permanent basis. Does the Acting Prime Minister think that these people can afford to wait another six weeks?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think that my hon. friend is exaggerating, not so much in describing the situation itself which the Prime Minister himself calls a crisis, but in somehow implying that the government has not done any thinking or made any preparation for a number of months.

Almost every day here, as I said on Friday, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, myself, or someone else gets up to announce an important development or investment, be it here, at Prince Rupert, Halifax, or elsewhere. Therefore that is an unfair commentary. The gist of the answer I want to make is that the government has been thinking and preparing itself for the Versailles meeting. Obviously, the six weeks will be weeks of consultation, and discussing among members of cabinet and caucus before the Prime Minister or Minister of Finance is able to announce a package.

Mr. Broadbent: I repeat that the people of Canada are becoming tired of consultation and tired of policy discussions. They want just a little action to preserve and create some new jobs for them. Before asking my supplementary question concerning interest rate policy, I point out to the minister that a survey done at the time of the Summit showed that the only government at the Summit that had fewer than 50 per cent of its population supporting its policies is the Government of Canada, and that will not surprise anyone on this side of the House.

INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the main problem in the short run is interest rates. A senior official, who was part of the Canadian delegation, was quoted in today's Le Devoir as saying that the government now plans to send a message to Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada pointing out that a lowering of interest rates will not adversely affect the health of the Canadian dollar. Is this government policy? Does the government plan to take action to bring down interest rates and, if it does not plan to do this, why not?

• (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I repeat that I am not in a position to announce what the package will be. My hon. friend attaches a great amount of importance to Gallup polls or the like, concerning the lack of popularity of this government. My hon. friend's party has been at the 18 per cent level for a great number of years now—

Mr. Broadbent: That was six months ago. You are out of date, Jean.

Mr. Pepin: —and he still believes he will form the government one day or another.

On the subject of housing, for example, which was raised this morning again, the minister responsible for housing deflated the question raised with great—

Mr. McGrath: He did it by misleading the House.

Mr. Pepin: —effect by saying that there is already $350 million going toward housing which will influence development in that sector.

My hon. friend should be reminded at this point that he voted against the measure referred to by the minister responsible for housing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSING

SITUATION OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I find it strange that the minister responsible for housing would blame the opposition for holding up a housing bill, which was first announced November 12 in the budget and not introduced in this House until February.

The Minister of Finance was quoted as saying at the end of the Versailles Summit that he and his leader would have to return to Canada and explain a greater sense of reality. Can the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the housing policy, tell us whether this greater sense of reality statement contains any kind of hope which can be offered to young Canadians today who want to buy their own homes or, at least, find affordable accommodation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I think the first thing I should do is to correct the record and introduction by the hon. member who, I am sure, would not want to mislead the House. The legislation to which I referred, Bill C-89, was introduced by me and tabled in this House on December 18. It had its first reading in January, and its second reading in February.

Some hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Cosgrove: It awaited the opposition—

Mr. Clark: The truth comes out.

Mr. Cosgrove: —while its members went on a two-week holiday. We had to use closure to get that legislation through the House—a three-month delay that was totally unnecessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AID FOR CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): I could carry on the debate for some time as I was on the committee and I know there were some times when the minister did not appear when we were ready to put that bill through.

A real estate industry study has shown that the first-time home buyer market has disappeared. No young people are buying homes, and there are no first-time home buyers left in the country. Can the minister tell us what plans he has, other than to build apartments? We doubt that he will reach his 30,000 units. What plans does he have to help the housing construction industry get out of the very serious slump it is in at the present time with the high interest rate policy of the government?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I must refer to the introductory remarks of the hon. member and try to set some facts straight before the House.

Mr. McDermid: Read Hansard.

Mr. Cosgrove: At no time was I unavailable to attend the committee. As a matter of fact, at the first opportunity, the day after the House passed second reading, I was before that committee, and then the Conservatives walked away from this Parliament for two weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is a lie.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENTS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER AND ACTING PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in order to prevent the Minister of Public Works from suffering a complete nervous breakdown on the floor of the House, I will direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. I am interested in the mysterious six weeks, the new hidey-hole the government has devised to avoid having to deal with its responsibilities. In France the Prime Minister said the six weeks were necessary so that Canada could figure out what the U.S. would do. In this House the Acting Prime Minister has said that the six weeks were necessary so that the cabinet of Canada could figure out what it would do. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the Prime Minister was correctly explaining the six weeks, or was the explanation of the mysterious six weeks delay given by the Acting Prime Minister correct; in other words, that it will take that long for the cabinet in Canada to make up its mind? Which one spoke the truth?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I could not confirm or deny the interpretation of the six weeks given by the hon. member who asked me that question. I did not think it was worth picking it up and debating that subject. From my reading of the Prime Minister's press conference, I understood that he was planning to consult with his cabinet and his caucus before making an announcement. I didn't see any clear-cut indication on that subject, but, again, the Minister of Finance will be here tomorrow and, as he was there and I was not—

Miss MacDonald: Phone the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pepin: —he will be in a better position than I am to give specific definition to what was said at Versailles.

DURATION OF REASSESSMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister knows that, among his duties, he is to be in a position to inform the House of Commons in the absence of the Prime Minister. The telephone has been invented. The Acting Prime Minister has had the opportunity to get in touch with the Prime Minister to find out exactly what the Prime Minister said. The Prime Minister is very directly quoted as saying that Canada could not wait "more than another six weeks" for U.S. economic policy to change before reassessing his own government's economic position. Is it the position of the Government of Canada that Canada will wait another six weeks before reassessing its position?

Mr. Lalonde: That is not what he said.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know that the telephone has been invented in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I am pleased that it was.

But the situation I faced was whether or not I should have spent the weekend on the phone to Paris, with the knowledge that the Minister of Finance would be here tomorrow to answer all the questions that have been raised by my hon. friend on this particular point. I do not think the six weeks are of major importance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: The spirit of the matter is that there will be a reassessment of the situation.

Obviously, the Prime Minister was to consult his colleagues. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources implied, who knows, it might be less than six weeks?

Mr. Broadbent: It may be six months, eh? Who knows?

Mr. Pepin: The Prime Minister was trying to convey the feeling that he intends to take action.

Mr. Clark: The interpretation from that is that it might be six weeks, or it might be six months. It might be any length of time before this government acts. The Acting Prime Minister says that it does not matter. Well, I will tell him, for the millions of Canadians who are out of work it matters. For the thousands of Canadian businesses going into bankruptcy it matters that the government is not offering any policies at all.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT ECONOMIC STATEMENT BE MADE IN PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me ask the Acting Prime Minister a question that is clearly within his competence to answer as the senior minister replying for his government here in the House of Commons today—not tomorrow, not six weeks or six months from now, but today. Will the Acting Prime Minister, on behalf of his government, give us an ironclad guarantee—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Clark: Excuse me, rather than an ironclad guarantee, give us a guarantee we can count on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Will the Acting Prime Minister give us a guarantee we can count on, that any new economic policy will be announced while the House of Commons is in session, and that the government will not draw up a new economic policy and then run away from Parliament, as it did with VIA Rail and as it did after Bonn? Can we have a commitment that the House of Commons will be here to judge any new economic policy which comes down?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, at this time I can only say that my impression is that the Prime Minister will want to do that. But may I take the question as notice and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: —discuss it with the Minister of Finance when he comes back later on today or tomorrow morning? We will possibly be in a position to give something firmer tomorrow.

REQUEST THAT COMMITMENT STATEMENT WILL BE MADE IN PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): It may be reasonable—I think it is not—but it is arguable that it may be reasonable for the Acting Prime Minister to wait for the Minister of Finance to come back and discuss economic questions. But it is certainly not reasonable for him to deny the House of Commons and the country the certainty that Parliament will be able to judge new economic measures until the Prime Minister comes back, because the Prime Minister is away on a longer tour. He will be out of Canada for a long time, away from this House of Commons.

The minister is the Acting Prime Minister of Canada. I am asking him a question relating to the rights of this House and the conduct of the government, not its economic policy, but, rather, its timing. Will he now give us a commitment that the House of Commons will be in session and in a position to judge any new economic policy that the government brings down?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not deny it. Obviously I left that possibility open. I said I would discuss it with the Minister of Finance to see whether he would be in a position tomorrow to confirm the possibility of a statement before the recess.

* * *

INDUSTRY

PLACEMENT OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAIL ORDER WITH SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Transport. It concerns the intention of Canadian National with respect to a contract in which they are involved with the Sydney Steel Corporation to purchase a minimum of 88,000 tons of rails in the contract-year beginning August 1, 1982. I would like the minister to assure me that this contract will be honoured. The minister also knows that this plant is presently closed. Does the federal government propose giving any assistance to allow this rail order to be rolled, in advance of August 1 of this year? Finally, is the minister prepared to look into the question of a disagreement between CN and Sydney Steel Corporation as to the Sydney Steel Corporation's ability to roll all types of rails which CN requires, and to try to resolve this discrepancy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is a very clear question dealing with three points. First, with regard to honouring the contract, the contract is indeed at the 88,000-ton level for 1982-83. CN would like to reduce that because it will have to store light rail. However, a contract is a contract is a contract. Having made the commitment, I am willing to press CN to honour it. So much for the first question.

With regard to the advance production, the possibility is there. It is estimated that it would cost $1.4 million more to begin producing sooner, instead of in August. The Minister of Finance is willing to pay one half of that if the government of Nova Scotia or SYSCO is willing to pay the other half.

With regard to the conflict on the quality or technical difficulties, CN offered to appoint an independent assessor. I think SYSCO is now accepting that. It is being discussed this week, and I think such a decision will be made.

* * *

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXPANDED PROGRAM TO ASSIST CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Housing. The minister heard the statistics today with regard to the shortfall in the number of housing units being built in the country. Given that we could meet two basic problems by building housing, first that we could provide shelter for people who today cannot find shelter at prices they can afford and, second, we could create 100,000 or more jobs in Canada if we would undertake to build up to the level of the 220,000 housing units that are necessary, why does the minister not go before Treasury Board to ask for authority to proceed with a housing program that will meet the obvious needs of Canada today?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that 30,000 units are scheduled under the program authorized by this House under Bill C-89. These are rental units that are designed to serve moderate income families. Ten thousand will be for people on a rent geared to income basis. Why the New Democratic Party, which purports to speak for people of modest income by times, will not support that, I do not know.

After that plan, we introduced other programs which will assist in getting people working in the trades. For example, we have extended the CHIP program from the eligible year of 1961 to 1971. We introduced $30 million into a Canadian home renovation program which should spring and will spring an additional $60 million from banks by Canadians taking advantage of that program. That is a total investment of $90 million, which should provide work for another 10,000 people. Those are new initiatives taken since the rental accommodation program was announced.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I do not like to quarrel with the minister, but the facts are quite clear. The programs brought in by the government do not begin to meet the basic needs of the majority of working Canadians. The majority of Canadians cannot afford to pay the prices being charged or the interest rates being charged. How is it that the government can find $2 billion to give to Imperial Esso and other such companies? How is it the government can go into the money market and borrow $750 million to shore up the sagging dollar, but cannot find any money to put into the building of homes at a price that Canadians can afford?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will have to repeat myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: I referred to the rent geared to income program. There is no better or more equitable housing program in Canada that I know of, to serve Canadians of modest income. They pay in accordance with a percentage of their income. The hon. member and his party voted against that program this year. They delayed that program for three months. In light of that experience, I find the hon. member's question quite hollow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF ADMISSION TO UNITED STATES OF TORONTO SUPPORTER OF DISARMAMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is a matter that gives me some concern. It was raised last Thursday by the minister's colleague from York East. It concerns the exclusion of Kay MacPherson from admission to the United States. She was to attend the United Nations Conference on Disarmament. She had no criminal record, but her name came up in an American immigration computer. Can the minister enlighten the House on why she was excluded? Also, can he advise what reciprocal arrangements we might have with the United States concerning information and the names of people who might be undesirable to both countries?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, we cannot give full information. That decision was fully made by the United States government. There was no consultation with us. It was an application of their immigration laws. My understanding of the case is that they applied an order against hundreds of people from around the world who were to appear at the United Nations for the special session on disarmament. It was not a particular exclusion in the case of Mrs. MacPherson, but a matter of excluding a number of people under their old McCarran-Walter Act which was passed in the United States in the very dark days after World War II.

As far as reciprocity is concerned, we each administer our own immigration acts according to criteria. We would not exchange information through the immigration procedures. Obviously there are a number of contacts made in security cases, but I do not believe Mrs. MacPherson would come under that definition in any way.

REASONS FOR DENIAL OF ADMISSION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who, last Thursday, responded to the question from the hon. member for York East. He undertook to the House to inform himself of the specific reasons for Mrs. MacPherson's exclusion. Can the minister now tell the House what those reasons were?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said I would contact the Department of External Affairs about this. They made some representations to the American government, but up to this point they have not received any specific information.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING CONTACT BETWEEN ACTING PRIME MINISTER AND CANADIAN DELEGATION AT VERSAILLES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by the Leader of the Opposition. A few moments ago the Acting Prime Minister spoke of impressions. How much direct contact, if any, has he had with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance on what actually occurred in Versailles? Does he have any knowledge or authority to answer here in the House?

Finally, how much longer, given some time limit, will it take the government to come to the realization, and publicly admit, that the national energy plan and FIRA have driven out or discouraged billions of dollars in capital from our country in the name of Canadianization while discouraging foreign investments, and at the same time causing the Bank of Canada to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to prop up the falling dollar, which was caused by the government's economic illiteracy? How much longer will it take the government to realize and admit publicly that there has to be a policy change and will the minister give us some time-frame for a new budget and new taxation policies to spare Canadian taxpayers from this double-whammy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): On the first point, Madam Speaker, I repeat, knowing that the Minister of Finance will be here tomorrow, and knowing that he was involved in all aspects of the Versailles meeting, I thought it would be normal for me not to get in touch with him and take time from the discussions the Prime Minister and the Minister were having with other leaders. I thought that was the right approach.

With regard to the causes of the present situation, I think it came out very strongly from everything in the press that the "crisis" we are experiencing is not only a Canadian phenomenon. It came out very strongly that rates of inflation, rates of unemployment, were the same in every country—10 per cent, 9 per cent, 7 per cent, in countries which are used to much lower levels of inflation than is Canada. That particular dimension of it is pretty clear to me and to most people who read the papers during the weekend.

• (1450)

PURSUIT OF CANADIANIZATION POLICY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if it also came out that Canada no longer has the luxury of pursuing narrow and ill-conceived Canadian nationalism at this time, that we no longer can afford it as a country? Did that come out?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Where? In the conversations at Versailles?

Mr. Clark: No, on the telephone.

Mr. Pepin: On this subject, Madam Speaker, every person in Canada is slightly ambivalent. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gives him or her figures about the higher degree of Canadian ownership in the petroleum industry, he or she is very, very pleased. A Canadian is equally pleased when he hears that some foreign-owned company is taken over by citizens of this country. Every Canadian quite normally hopes that more and more of that will take place, but quite rightly, in my view, he is not willing either to abandon some of the advantages that foreign ownership presents. All of us on this subject hope to have our cake and eat it, too; but most of us are pretty rational when it comes to having to make the decisions.

* * *

RAILWAYS

REPORT OF NEGOTIATOR ON CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Now that Professor Gilson has finished his study of grain transportation in western Canada, and specifically the question of the Crowsnest Pass rate, will the minister inform the House when the government will be receiving the report, if ministers have not already received it? Secondly, after the government has received this very, very important report, when will the report be made public so that the farm organizations and various interested groups across the country may have a chance and a time to analyse the report and submit to the government their approval or rejection of the report?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, let me indicate what would be the optimum scenario. I have a feeling—I am sorry I can only say that, because Professor Gilson is working, I was going to say frantically, but that is not true—he is working very hard to complete the report as soon as he can. The impression I have is that I will receive it in the next week or ten days. That is an impression only; it might be three or four, but it is coming. Second, it will then be translated and printed. It is expected that this will take two to three weeks, at the most. Then it will be made public, at that time, for people to comment on it.

Then cabinet will be asked to make decisions on it, before the summer recess. In August and September a draft bill will be produced, the bill will be presented to the House in the fall, and it is hoped that the program will come into operation in the new year.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF CONSENSUS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, since the minister was in Winnipeg not last week but the week previous to that, with Professor Gilson, it seems highly unlikely that he does not know generally what is in the report. Can he give an indication to the House of whether he expects to have general agreement on the recommendations that Professor Gilson will come out with, and whether or not he expects the government will have to act unilaterally on some of the key issues of concern that Professor Gilson could not or may not have been able to solve in his negotiations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was indeed in Winnipeg and in Edmonton last week. I met with a number of people who have been in the discussions around Professor Gilson and all of them praised the tremendous knowledge and diplomacy that the professor brought to the meetings. Most of them said that the process of discussion was most educational for all those who took part. Will there be a consensus, will there be agreement by all sides to the recommendations of Professor Gilson—I do not think so. There will be various degrees of support, and various degrees of lack of it.

* * *

GRAIN

EFFECT OF VERSAILLES SUMMIT ON EXPORTS TO SOVIET UNION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister in one of the various capacities he is in here, this afternoon. In view of the Versailles conference decision to restrict trade credits to the Soviet Union, one of the few decisions they made, and in view of the fact that the Soviet Union is one of our largest grain customers and is asking for credit, can the minister assure us that the Versailles decision will not result in the cutting back of Canadian grain exports to the Soviet Union and the Eastern Bloc?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I could not comment on the reference to the Versailles aspect of the east-west debate. I do not really know what the conclusion was. With respect to providing credit to the Soviet Union from Canada for purchases of grain, I think our position has historically been in Canada that we match competition. Other countries like the United States are providing such facilities, have provided credit in these instances—I do not want to be too clear—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Don't worry about that.

Mr. Pepin: I just want to say that in these particular circumstances we try to match the competition.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): What guarantees can the minister give this House that Canada is not once again in a de facto sort of way becoming a part of the United States embargo on the Soviet Union as we were in 1980? What assurance can he give that the restrictions being put on credit do not represent a squeeze which this time, as it was last time, will be fully endorsed by Canada and will affect Canadian exports and again reduce returns to Canadian farmers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The only guarantee—

Mr. Clark: Yes or no?

Mr. Pepin: The only guarantee I can give is the facts, as they are developing in Canada now. My hon. friend knows, better than almost anybody here, how well the Canadian Wheat Board has been doing, with the support of the Canadian government, in selling wheat in recent times. Last year's export figures to the Soviet Union, if my memory serves me well enough, were 6.2 million tonnes. My information is that the same level could be reached possibly again this year. That is a clear indication that no sales are being missed anywhere. Generally exports are going beautifully. The record on shipments from the west coast was beaten, was overpassed last week; and any day now we are expecting a record export of grain from Canada for all times. That is good enough, it seems to me.

* * *

THE PRESS

ESTIMATED COST OF PROPOSED ADVISORY PRESS COUNCIL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. What would be the cost to the taxpayers of the Minister of State's plans to control the press?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, obviously there is no plan to control the press. Our fear is that one or two companies in Canada may control the press, and that would not give much diversity. I am sure that is the basis of a free press. The cost at this time we believe will be in the range of $20 million to fund the advisory council on newspapers. Additionally, about $1 million a year for five years will be required for the grants.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT SCRAP PRESS COUNCIL PLAN

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that of all of the minister's plans to control the press, the element that has been most criticized is the plan for a government-sponsored press council, which the minister says will cost the taxpayer some $20 million, why would the minister not simply scrap that plan, save the taxpayers the $20 million, and ask the existing press councils to hear complaints against non-member newspapers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I would be encouraged if the opposition had an original idea or proposal. That is the first time they have suggested anything on this issue. I have said for a long time, since the Kent royal commission report was published, that nothing would delight me more than the newspapers themselves running their own advisory council with press councils. I and, I am sure, the government, are quite prepared to entertain that possibility. However, to suggest that the Ontario Press Council, for example, should be the hearing body for Alberta newspapers is a little absurd.

• (1500)

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNT TO ETHNIC NEWSPAPER

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. I would like to know why he is discriminating against Mr. Kissin and his Jewish Press newspaper in Ontario by not paying his bill.

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): I am sorry, Madam Speaker. I do not know the case the hon. member is talking about, but I find that pretty poor language coming from the hon. member. There is a fair and reasonable system set up. If the hon. member is talking about advertising in the ethnic press—

Mr. Paproski: You are not paying your bills. You are advertising in his paper and not paying him, and he has written you three letters already.

Mr. Fleming: Well, first off, I just do not believe that is the case when it comes to advertising the multicultural program. If it comes to some other program, the hon. member should be aware I am not responsible for it and have not been for some months, and the hon. member should direct his question to the appropriate minister. However, out of courtesy, before the hon. member charges discrimination against another hon. member surely the most sensible way would be to give some notice, and we would then be prepared to answer.

Mr. Paproski: You have three letters from the man. You have three invoices to pay the bill.

* * *

AIR CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF NEW DIRECTOR

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell us what single, personal or professional quality entitled Mr. Branny Schepanovich to be appointed to the board of Air Canada over the weekend and why he was any more qualified than any of 1.2 million unemployed Canadians for that post, unless the government is more concerned about patronage than getting people back to work?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not doubt that the 1.2 million Canadians about whom my hon. friend talks would see themselves as fully qualified to sit on the board of Air Canada. The gentleman in question was selected on the recommendation of a number of ministers, particularly the minister for the region involved because we try to have regional representation on such boards. I have read the biography of this person and inquired about him. I understand he is a distinguished lawyer and will be quite useful to Air Canada.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—STATEMENT OF MR. COSGROVE RESPECTING BILL C-89 ALLEGED MISLEADING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I could anticipate what Your Honour might say in terms of its being debate, I just want to submit to Your Honour that if a minister misleads the House, that creates disorder in the House; and the minister responsible for housing misled the House today. I am not saying he did so deliberately, but I am saying he had a case of selective amnesia when he accused us of walking away from Bill C-89.

The facts are simply this. The bill was referred to in the budget in November. It did not receive second reading—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member was right in anticipating what I would have to say about that. I do not think this is a point of order; the hon. member is simply debating.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

REFERENCE OF PETITION TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House, I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins):

That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 99, the petition of Cliff Blackmur, of the city of Saskatoon, and Robert K. Coulling, of the city of Regina, both in the province of Saskatchewan, praying for the passage of an Act to amend the Act of Incorporation of The Grand Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of effecting certain technical changes in the constitution of the society, filed after the time limit specified under Standing Order 90, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, together with the two hundred and sixtieth report of the Clerk of Petitions thereon, presented to the House on Friday, June 4, 1982, for any recommendations the committee deems advisable.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, our party has had previous consultation on this matter and we are prepared to grant unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,237, 4,238 and 4,321.

[Text]

CANADA IMMIGRATION CENTRE—MONTREAL

Question No. 4,237—Mr. Herbert:

What is the average number of persons processed per week by the Department of Employment and Immigration at their premises at 1616 Dorchester Boulevard West, Montreal?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): For the period of January to April, 1982, an average of 900 persons per week were processed by the Canada Immigration Centre at 1616 Dorchester Boulevard West, Montreal.

Question No. 4,238—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the size in square feet of the reception area at the premises at 1616 Dorchester Boulevard West, Montreal and how many chairs are available in this area for persons waiting for attention?

2. Is the space considered adequate and, if not, is it to be enlarged?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. The size of the reception area is 983 square feet. There are 40 chairs for persons waiting for attention.

2. At the present time the space is considered adequate.

TRAINING SEATS PURCHASED IN COLLEGES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,321—Mr. Howie:

1. Were seats purchased by the Department of Employment and Immigration in community colleges in New Brunswick in the current fiscal year to train carpenters, upholsterers and pipe fitters and, if so, how many?

2. Has a decision been taken on how many seats in each of the categories will be purchased for next year and, if so, what is that number?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes; carpenters, pre-employment training, 50 seats, apprenticeship, 56 seats; upholsterers, nil; pipe fitters, pre-employment training, 50 seats, apprenticeship, 17 seats.

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 3, 1982, consideration of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motions Nos. 4 and 5 (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the two amendments we are debating jointly are an attempt on our part to have the Liberal Party keep its promises. By voting for these two amendments, the only thing that will happen is that the promises made by the Liberal Party before, during and since the 1980 election will be kept. That is all that will happen. Those two amendments would have that simple little effect. The Liberals would keep their election promises.

The first amendment, Motion No. 4, would change the amount of the petroleum compensation charge from the current $75 per cubic metre to an amount not exceeding $28 per cubic metre. To put that in units most people understand, that would change the tax on gasoline, heating oil and diesel fuel from a 52 cents per gallon level to an 18 cents per gallon level. Your Honour will recall that in December of 1979, when the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) brought forward a budget proposing an 18-cent a gallon tax, the proceeds of which were to be used for subsidizing imported crude oil, the Liberal Party said that was too much. Hon. members opposite said that was outrageously high and that it was intolerable. Neither the Liberals nor their pink friends could live with that kind of tax level. That was outrageous.

Mr. Keeper: You should turn red in the face when you say that.

Mr. Andre: That was outrageous, said the pinkies and the Grits. No, they could not tolerate that. There was no way they could tolerate an 18-cent a gallon tax. That was horrible.

Mr. Kristiansen: You are a big blue movie that ought to be clipped.

Mr. Andre: So the Liberals brought in a proposal of their own. They said we would have a made-in-Canada system. That used to be an honourable phrase. "Made-in-Canada" used to be something one could say with pride. It represented something of substance. What was the Liberal's made-in-Canada price system? Their made-in-Canada tax was 94 cents a gallon. They said that 18 cents per gallon was outrageous when that increase was brought in by the hon. member for St. John's West, but then the Liberal Party brought in an increase of 94 cents per gallon. When the bells started ringing and the public started to pay attention to what was in that atrocious energy package—that incredible abortion—and they found out that the Liberals were planning on 94 cents per gallon, then the government backed off and made it 52 cents per gallon. That is only three times as much as was considered outrageous in December, 1979, but that is how much the government backed off.

• (1510)

Motion No. 4 proposes that the government back off to 18 cents per gallon. The figure that was considered absolutely atrocious in 1979 is the figure they would be required to adopt today. If there are any Liberals over there who have any integrity—and that is not very likely—if there are any who feel an oblgiation to keep promises or a responsibility to honour commitments, if there are any such Liberals in the House like the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), then they have no choice but to support this motion. It asks nothing more than to reduce the maximum level of the tax to the figure that was found to be outrageous in December, 1979.

If hon. members opposite vote against this motion—and I am sure they will, being well-trained donkeys—then the public will have the proof that the Liberals lie, that they do not keep their promises, that they will say and do anything in order to achieve electoral victory. Afterwards they feel no responsibility and no sense of obligation.

The sad thing about this is that because we share the chamber with them, they bring contempt on all of us. Unfortunately, people tend to talk about politicians being dishonest. That is because of that kind of politics and those kinds of politicians, who make promises they know to be irresponsible and then shamelessly violate those promises.

This motion would give the government an opportunity to keep that promise. If there is any sense of decency among its members, they should vote for Motion No. 4. They would be doing nothing more than keeping the election promises they made so solemnly to the people of Canada in February, 1980.

Motion No. 5, which is being debated simultaneously, is also our attempt to keep the Liberal Party honest, futile as that effort may be. The motion attempts to limit the petroleum compensation charge to the amount that is necessary to fulfil the purpose for which it was intended. It was introduced as an item to provide revenue to subsidize imports so that we have one price across Canada. It does nothing more than say that is the only purpose for which the petroleum compensation charge will be used and that it will not be used for generating funds for other purposes.

We have the solemn promise of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that that is all the charge was intended for—for this so-called "made-in-Canada" price, for oil subsidization. The problem with the solemn promise of the minister is that we have had solemn promises from Liberal energy ministers in the past few years that have turned out to be false, promises that were worth nothing. The promises the minister has broken, the statements he has made which have turned out to be untrue, follow the tradition of the Liberal Party in the last few years, and especially Liberal energy ministers who have performed in exactly the same way.

The minister's predecessor, the Hon. Alastair Gillespie, signed on behalf of the government an energy price agreement with the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia which called for the crude oil price to increase one dollar every six months. I think the provinces believed they had a contract with people they expected to behave honourably. However, in spite of those agreements, negotiated over many weeks and months with a lot of debate and which took a lot of energy, on September 27, 1978, Mr. Gillespie announced that the final one dollar increase would not take place. He was urged to break that contract by the New Democratic Party, which is as honest and respectful of contracts and agreements as the Liberals.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the House a member cannot allege that other members do things illegally, such as break contracts. In civil law that is illegal. The New Democratic Party has never advocated that contracts be broken. I spoke about that specific matter the other night. I wish the hon. member would get his facts straight and stop throwing mud.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Press report of 26 April, 1979, said that energy minister Gillespie had announced that the plan for a one dollar increase would not take place and that the New Democrats had urged cancellation of the previous increase. So, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Press reports that the NDP urged the minister to violate this written contract, and he apparently listened to their suggestions.

• (1520)

Mr. Waddell: Before the hon. member alleges that we are saying the government should do something illegal, he should quote the reports correctly. They are changing a contract in consultation with the provinces, which I advocated and talked about the other night.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, we have from the record the fact that the immediate predecessor of the current minister of energy says that if the political pressures are such, he is quite willing to disregard a contract, break his word and tear up an agreement without being overly concerned about the consequences to the reputation of the federal government as an institution which one hopes would obey the laws and respect the practices and traditions of this country.

Then, of course, we have the commitment of the Hon. John Turner, then minister of finance, who on page 31 of his 1975 budget said:

I therefore propose, effective tonight, a special excise tax on gasoline for personal use. The tax will be at a rate of 10 cents per gallon.

Earlier in his remarks he had said:

In recent months the gap between compensation payments and oil export charge revenues has grown rapidly. This has come about because the volume of our oil exports has fallen while our oil imports have risen.

So he had proposed this excise tax on gasoline in order to help subsidize imports. What has happened to that tax today, Mr. Speaker? I do not have the figures yet for 1981, but in 1980 that tax amounted to $441 million collected from Canadians. But what happened to it? It disappeared, Mr. Speaker, into the big pot. Is it used for import compensation as the then minister of finance said it would be? No, it is not used for that at all. It is gone. Canadian consumers are paying at least $440 million too much for their gasoline today because the statement made by the Hon. John Turner turned out over time to be false. Did he behave any differently from his colleague in the cabinet, the minister who succeeded him as the minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald? He is the fellow who, on September 13, 1973, unilaterally imposed a 40-cent export tax on every barrel of crude oil exported from Canada. He said that was to put in this two-price system. Then when the provinces objected he said on December 13: Well, we are going to give 50 per cent of that tax back to the oil-producing provinces and the rest will be invested in the industry, likely through a national oil company. Just two weeks later, on December 27—in between Christmas and New Year's which is guaranteed to be a time when most people will not notice—the export tax will rise to $6.50 a barrel and the commitment to return the tax revenues to the provinces will end when the tax technically ends and is replaced by a charge.

That is the kind of "honourable behaviour" you get from Liberals. They said: "Look, we made you a promise that we will share the export tax with you; the tax is ending on February 1 so there is nothing more to share. By the way, however, on the same day we are putting on a charge and we are going to keep it all ourselves." They changed the name from "tax" to "charge" and used that as justification for violating a commitment. Then they wonder why, Mr. Speaker, they have this legacy of mistrust, federal-provincial conflict, this ongoing battle between Ottawa and the provinces and the seeming inability of the federal and provincial governments to reach an agreement without having a battle first.

Mr. McDermid: You cannot trust a Grit.

Mr. Andre: You cannot trust Liberal governments. They break their promises, break their commitments, and tear up agreements one after the other.

Is this minister any different? Let us look at a recent interview, April 2, 1982, on "Canada AM". The minister was asked by CTV interviewer Pamela Wallin:

CTV: The taxpayers in this country pay more than $6 million a day to subsidize oil imports yet, now to solve a problem, we have to increase our exports?

MR. LALONDE: Now whatever we export is charged, there is a tax charge and the revenues coming from that export charge help in reducing our cost for the imported oil.

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is false. Not one penny from that export charge goes to help reduce the cost of imported oil. But it enabled the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to get out of a tight question in that interview, and that is what is important. The truth is not important at all. What is important is to get out of a box, and if you have to sacrifice truth in order to do that, so be it. Truth is not a commodity valued by the minister or this government.

This petroleum compensation charge, Mr. Speaker, was introduced by the government to give us a made-in-Canada price and supposedly result in Canadians paying less for their gas and oil. Our party recently did a survey of the price of gasoline in major Canadian and American cities. We compared the price in Toronto and Buffalo; Halifax and Boston; Vancouver and Seattle; Winnipeg and St. Paul, Minnesota, and Edmonton and Houston.

• (1530)

We are told by the Liberals that Canadians are protected from world prices because of the so-called made-in-Canada pricing system. That is what the minister tells us. That is what this government promised in the election campaign. Prices in the United States are deregulated. The Americans pay full price. They are not protected on the marketplace by their government. The world price dictates their price for gasoline and oil. With only one exception the price of gasoline in Canada is higher than in the United States.

Mr. Kelly: Why?

Mr. Dinsdale: Because of government mismanagement.

Mr. Andre: The member on the other side asks why. He is from Ontario. The answer is very simple. In March, 1982, the typical average price for gasoline in Ontario was 40.8 cents a litre. The provincial tax was 6.6 cents a litre. The federal tax was 14.1 cents a litre, or roughly the equivalent of 60 cents a gallon. That is an awful lot more than a tax of 18 cents a gallon which the Liberals said was so outrageous.

Mr. Kelly: What is the state tax?

Mr. Andre: I have just explained to the member on the other side that 6.6 cents a litre was the Ontario provincial tax.

Mr. Kelly: What about New York state?

Mr. Andre: The federal tax is 14.1 cents a litre, which is more than twice as much as that charged by the government of Ontario. The Alberta government receives 6.9 cents in royalties, and the cost of crude excluding royalties and taxes paid is 3.2 cents. The leader margin is 2.2 cents. The oil company share for refining, marketing and distribution is 7.8 cents. Therefore, when you fill up your car with gasoline in Ontario, 68 per cent of what you pay goes in taxes. That is two thirds of the cost. If you pay $15 for gas, $10 of that goes in taxes.

Mr. Kelly: What is the New York state tax? Be honest, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: The Liberal member opposite says be honest. That is like a pyromaniac saying "Don't play with matches".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The hon. member should remember all the way back to the 1980 election when we heard "Vote Liberal and we will keep the tax down. No way will you have to pay 18 cents tax on a gallon of gasoline; we will keep the tax at less than 14 cents a gallon." That is what his leader said.

Mr. Taylor: That is what Kelly said too.

Mr. Kelly: Tell us the American price.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, if I thought the hon. member's ears were open as wide as his mouth, and if I thought there was something between those ears, I would be willing to devote some time and energy to helping him.

Mr. Kelly: Just give us the facts.

Mr. Andre: I will be finished with my remarks in a moment. The hon. member will have an opportunity then to participate in the debate, although I doubt it.

Mr. Kelly: Come on Harvie, give us the facts.

Mr. Andre: Apparently the hon. member opposite would like to speak, so I will give him the floor.

Mr. Thomson: Tell the hon. member to get up on his feet and speak.

An hon. Member: He is chicken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: There are no more speakers. Has the hon. member finished his speech?

Mr. Andre: No.

Mr. Ouellet: Then stand up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): If we can have order, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has the floor. I invite those who do want to participate in the debate to rise in their places so they can be recognized. The hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) would like to speak, I am quite willing to yield the floor to him. He is barracking and yelling from his seat. I thought he wanted to give a speech.

Mr. Kelly: Give us the facts.

Mr. Andre: There he goes again, Mr. Speaker. I will yield the floor to him if he insists on speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Perhaps hon. members could grant the usual courtesies to members who are recognized. At the moment the hon. member for Calgary Centre has the floor.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as I was indicating—

Mr. Tousignant: Even if you have the floor, you don't have to utter any insanities.

Mr. Andre: Now we have another member who wants to speak. If he wants me to complete my remarks first, that is fine, but if he wants to speak now, then I will yield the floor to him and I will carry on with my remarks after he has finished.

Mr. Keeper: Hon. members over there can't take the heat.

Mr. Andre: First, by this amendment we seek to impose a limit consistent with all of the solemn promises made by the Liberal Party in the 1980 election. Second, through Motion No. 5 we seek to limit this tax only for that purpose. That is the intent of these two motions, which is then consistent with Liberal Party policy and commitments. If in fact the Liberals would like to live up to their commitments, they need do nothing more than vote for these motions and they will be honouring all of the commitments they made to the people of Canada.

There is one other item related to this petroleum compensation charge which should be brought to the attention of the House. It concerns the manner in which it was brought in at the outset and the manner in which it is accounted for in the accounts of Canada.

Let me deal with the manner in which it was brought in. The original petroleum compensation charge was introduced as a levy for the purposes of subsidizing Syncrude production. The House will recall that when the Syncrude agreement was reached, it was agreed to pay Syncrude world price for the synthetic crude that would be produced from that plant. That meant, therefore, that there had to be some subsidy for the synthetic crude to bring it to the lower level that was prevailing for Canadian crude. To achieve that the Petroleum Administration Act was introduced, which created a refinery gate levy, the proceeds of which subsidized the synthetic crude. That levy was brought in as legislation that had first, second and third reading. The money collected went into a special fund. This money was dedicated solely to subsidizing Syncrude production. However, the limit in terms of how much this levy might be turned out to be unsatisfactory. This should have necessitated an amendment to the legislation.

On July 11, 1980, however, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled a piece of paper which he called a notice of Ways and Means which raised this levy. This was an incredible procedure. The levy was brought in by legislation, but suddenly, in a piece of paper that was tabled in the House of Commons, the minister raised the levy. This was not a tax nor was it a budget statement. In fact, there was no statement. He just tabled a piece of paper indicating that the price would go up. It was incredulous, it was unbelievable.

• (1540)

We raised a point of order and the Chair said that it was a legal matter on which it could not judge. We sought a legal opinion and were told by legal counsel that what the minister had done was illegal, which confirmed our opinion. However, to pursue it through the courts would cost several tens of thousands of dollars, which unfortunately I do not have; in any case, it might end up with a Pyrrhic victory because the government might come along and retroactively make legal what was illegal. We have this incredibly arrogant attitude. The country is sick when the government blatantly, openly and with impunity breaks the law, which is exactly what the minister did, and apparently there is nothing we can do about it.

Just a few months ago I asked a legal officer of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in committee how the levy was changed or raised by just tabling a piece of paper, because it was not a tax and there was no tradition for doing so. He said that it was basically a tax. Then I asked why there was no Ways and Means motion preceding it in the first place, and he said that it was a procedural imperfection. Just like that, what had not been a tax became a tax! Is that not an absurd, asinine way to run the country? We are without any weapons to hold the government to account, to have it obey the law. Now it is a tax; suddenly it was changed from a levy into a tax. Because it is a tax the government has the ability to change its levels by tabling a piece of paper called a notice of Ways and Means.

Now it is a tax. Well, a tax is something which goes into the consolidated revenue fund and is accounted for through public accounts. Then expenditures by government through the blue book are funded by drawing on the consolidated revenue fund. Okay, we say that perhaps it has changed names and become a tax, but at least we have the knowledge that it goes into the consolidated revenue fund, that when it is spent it goes through the estimates procedure, that supply must be approved by the House, and that at least we will have an open and honest accounting of what is going on. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to accounting, it goes back to becoming a levy.

How does the government do that? It is very simple. Referring to page 7-2 of the estimates for 1982-83, there is a line entitled "Payments to refiners and other persons who import crude oil and petroleum products", which shows $2,974,800,000 or almost $3 billion worth of expenditures. If we look down the list, we see another line entitled "Petroleum Compensation Revolving Fund", which shows a negative expenditure of $2,974,800,000. In other words, it is a revenue item in the expenditure accounts which cancels out the other expenditure. What effect does this tax and expenditure have on government spending? Nothing, zero; it does not show up.

When the Blue Book is presented, as it was at the end of February, the government has a lock-up for the media. Members of Parliament are not allowed in the same lock-up because we might talk with members of the media. Just the media is present, and high-priced officials prepare press documents for them. Then they announce to the world that government spending this year has risen 16 per cent over last year. This information goes out in all the stories over national television. This is what the people of Canada are told, and they believe it because their government tells them. In fact, if the government had not cooked the books with this little negative expenditure, spending had risen 22 per cent. We were deceived about this $3 billion expenditure.

It is a tax if they want to raise it, but when they have to account for it, it goes back to becoming a levy. If they do not want it to show up in government spending, they enter a little negative expenditure item so that a number is produced which looks nice and they can stand there and say, "We are restraining government expenditures; are we not good boys and girls?" If a private business tried that kind of creative bookkeeping, it would be in big trouble with the regulatory authorities. The Government of Canada does it all the time.

What, pray tell, can we do to keep the Government of Canada honest? Is there not a mechanism available to Members of Parliament to keep the Government of Canada honest, to keep it from cooking the books, and to keep it from changing taxes to levies and back to taxes at will, whenever it feels like it, so as to confuse?

Anyone who is concerned about what the government is doing with this petroleum compensation charge and the manner in which it has abused the House, the country, the electoral process and all of us who call ourselves politicians, by putting all of us into disrepute by its constant violation of promises, constant misinformation and distortion of the true facts of the situation, would join with us in voting for Motions Nos. 4 and 5 and in helping improve this legislation in just that little way. They do not cover everything that is wrong with the legislation—far from it. They certainly do not cover everything that is wrong with the National Energy Program—far, far from it. But at least it is a small step in the direction of being honest with the public of Canada and in fact doing what was promised in the first instance.

Before resuming my seat, let me indicate that this limiting of the petroleum compensation charge to a maximum of the equivalent of 18 cents per gallon will not result in any real loss of legitimate treasury funds because, if the government were to keep its promise that the export charge is to be used for import compensation, if the government were to keep its promise that the excise tax on gasoline would go toward import compensation, and if it directed the petroleum compensation charge toward import compensation, there is more than enough money to compensate imported crude oil so that we have a one-price system across Canada.

• (1550)

In no way can this motion be construed as somehow causing the government to be forced to dip into non-petroleum revenues in order to subsidize consumption in this country. All that this motion would do is cause the Liberal government to live up to its promises and nothing more. I do not believe this is an outrageous step to ask members of the Liberal Party to take, to live up to their promises—or at least this one promise.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I be permitted to ask a question of the hon. member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This can be done with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kelly: I have two brief questions. The first question relates to the respective gasoline prices of the two nations which figured rather largely in the hon. member's speech. What is the difference in price and what accounts for that difference? I would hope that in answer to the second question the hon. member would do more than just repeat the prices or the price content of Canadian gas at the pump and would instead give a breakdown of the American prices so that we can see exactly what accounts for that price differential.

Mr. Andre: In the United States, as in Canada, every state or province has its own taxing scheme and it is therefore difficult to give a universal number. Unfortunately, I do not have the document. My colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) has a copy of the document which has complete comparisons. We will be pleased to send a copy to the hon. member.

However, in order to take into account the very factors which he has talked about, we conducted a survey for several months of comparable locations across the United States. We have investigated Massachusetts, New York, Washington, Minnesota and Texas to examine the comparables. Here is the document. For example, in Seattle, Washington, the price of gasoline is 39.5 cents per litre. That is Canadian cents. In Vancouver, the price is 43.6 cents a litre. The hon. member is correct that British Columbia has road taxes, but so does Washington.

Mr. Kelly: What are they?

Mr. Andre: I do not know what the British Columbia taxes are either. What difference does it make?

St. Paul, Minnesota charges 41.3 cents per litre, and Winnipeg charges 39.9 cents per litre. It is higher in Minnesota than in Manitoba. In Buffalo, New York it is 39.5 cents while in Toronto it is 38.8 cents. Therefore it is a little bit more.

Mr. Kelly: What are the Toronto figures?

Mr. Andre: As of April 5, Toronto was 38.8 cents. We know it has gone up since then. In Buffalo it is 39.5 cents.

Mr. Kelly: Does that include ad valorem taxes?

Mr. Andre: I will send the hon. member the document if his research department is not able to make those phone calls.

Mr. Ouellet: It is cheaper in Canada.

Mr. Andre: That must be put in context with the promises made by the Liberal Party that in no way, shape or form would we be paying world prices and that we were going to be protected with oil prices much lower than world prices. The Americans are paying world prices.

Mr. Ouellet: No.

Mr. Andre: Where there is a difference, I would like the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to check—

Mr. Ouellet: He knows they are not paying the world price.

Mr. Andre: He says they are not paying world prices in the United States.

Mr. Ouellet: Check what they are paying in Europe.

Mr. McDermid: That has nothing to do with it. The problem over there is that they do not understand the business.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that the United States is not paying world prices. He must be talking about the united states of eastern Slobovia, because in the United States of America they are definitely paying world price for crude oil. The difference is that in Canada the government has loaded up huge taxes. The minister says that they have done so in Europe. They have certainly done that in some European countries but those governments are not standing up at the same time and saying they are protecting their citizens from world oil prices, the terrible oil companies, the Arabs, Venezuelans and Mexicans who want to charge so much. At least European countries are honest enough to say that they have to conserve and so they are raising the price to that very high level in order to achieve conservation.

Mr. Kelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question was posed by way of a point of order. Unanimous consent was given. I think we have no choice but to hear out the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I will hear the point of order after he is finished.

Mr. Kelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is very difficult to recognize the hon. parliamentary secretary on a point of order. Unanimous consent was given on a point of order for the purpose of asking a question which the hon. member for Calgary Centre is in the process of answering. There is no way I can entertain another point of order at this time.

Mr. Andre: The reality is that the difference between Canada and the United States with respect to the price at the pump, where it counts if you are a consumer, is that we are in fact paying the equivalent of world price at the pump. The difference between the United States and Canada is that the Canadian government has loaded the price up with taxes while the United States has not. It perhaps might be forgivable for the Canadian government and provincial governments to have loaded up with taxes if there was at least the decency to be honest about it. They should at least have had the decency to be honest and to say it was putting on these taxes for those reasons. But it certainly is an affront to decency and an affront to the House for the government, its spokesmen, minions and ministers to stand up and say they are protecting Canadians from world prices through the made-in-Canada price. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is not protecting anyone from anything. It is, in fact, bleeding the consumers for the benefit of the treasury in a dishonest way.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to this bill. I have heard this controversy between the Conservatives and the Liberals over oil prices for some time. Last weekend I attended a reunion of high school friends in Perth, Ontario. Most of the people there were from Mississauga, Oakville or west Toronto. It was very interesting to talk to those people. They are family people who are in their middle and late thirties and hard working. Frankly, they think we in the House of Commons are crazy when they see us yelling at each other and making great unsubstantiated charges. They are also worried about high prices and would like us to do something about them.

• (1600)

When I heard the last hon. member go on to rail about the opposition and when I heard the replies, it reminded me of a quote from Macbeth:

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more. It is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

Instead of some sound and fury, today I would like to try to give some facts concerning the petroleum compensation charge and blended oil policy. I notice that the critic for the Conservatives has left so I hope some of his colleagues will take this message to him, because I want to compare Liberal and Conservative oil prices right now, and I would like the other parties to reply, if they can.

As of June, 1982, the Liberals' blended or consumer price per barrel is 75.8 per cent of world price. A blended price is taking Canadian oil, which is lower than world price, and world price oil, which we have to import because we do not have enough Canadian oil. We exported most of our cheap oil in the early seventies, adding on the various taxes, levies and charges, and then blending them all together and getting a price at the pump. The Liberals promised that the blended price would not exceed 85 per cent of the world price.

The Tory budget of 1979 promised that the Canadian price would not exceed 75 per cent of the world price from 1979 to 1982 and 85 per cent of that price from 1983 to 1984. The Conservatives also added an 18-cent a gallon excise tax on the gasoline. What we must remember is that it is a wrong impression when my friends to my right, the Conservatives, say: "Well, we were just putting 18 cents on". They put 18 cents on right away and then they were to make an agreement with Alberta and the other producing provinces and the price would have gone up and up. Likewise, the Liberals have made an agreement with Alberta and the other producing provinces which also makes the price go up and up.

I stand to be corrected, if I can be, but my comparison shows that as of June, 1982, this month, Liberal prices are approximately 41 cents a litre for regular gasoline, amounting to $1.85 a gallon. That varies slightly, up and down. Conservative prices would have been 42.8 cents a litre, or $1.92 a gallon. Therefore, it seems to me that the Conservative gasoline prices would be 7 cents a gallon more than the present price.

Mr. McDermid: Talk about home heating oil.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member asks me about home heating oil. I think the Conservative price for home heating oil would have been less than the present Liberal price, because there was no 18-cent a gallon excise tax on that.

Mr. McDermid: And gas?

Mr. Waddell: It may have been slightly less than that for natural gas. But the point is—

Mr. McDermid: The point is—

Mr. Waddell: Wait a minute. Perhaps the hon. member would let me finish. The other point one must consider in the equation is that the Conservatives also promised an energy tax credit which would have given some money back to low and middle-income families, although we really never knew the nature of the credit. That must be considered. But the point is that both the Liberal and Conservative Parties are high-cost parties. They are approximately the same. So to spend 20 hours slinging darts or arrows at each other across the floor of this chamber is rather useless, it seems to me. The consumers are still getting hosed and there is nothing to help them.

The hon. member who spoke for the Conservatives tried to put blame on our party for breaking contracts. We never suggested breaking any contracts. In July there is to be another increase to $2.25 a gallon for gasoline. We said that that increase need not come, that there could be negotiations with the provinces to stop that increase and to give the consumer a break. That is what the consumer needs, a break. We gave the oil companies a break the other day. We gave Imperial Oil and its friend $2 billion and we gave them a break. We could find that money. This is what The Globe and Mail had to say about that in its article on June 3: "Imperial Oil Limited of Toronto is one of the big winners in the federal petroleum industry relief package." Sure, some small industries benefited and they needed to benefit from that, but the big boys also benefited. They were not happy. Shell's reaction was this, according to the Canadian Press: "Shell Canada Limited said Ottawa's $2 billion aid package for the industry is modest in scale and temporary in nature and will not significantly increase exploration in western Canada".

When I met with my friends this weekend at our reunion, as I mentioned, they asked me how the government could find $2 billion for the oil companies. They said, "The government is not taking any action against bank profits and we do not get anything. Our oil prices have gone up a great deal." As a matter of fact, they were right; their oil prices have gone up an average of 30 per cent in the last year. I have in my hand some statistics. The price of home heating oil went up from $770 a year to $1,100 for the average family. The price of gasoline, as I said, went up from $730 to $945 for the average motorist. That is substantial.

Mr. McDermid: Who gets most of it?

Mr. Waddell: My friend asks who gets most of it. Well, the industry gets a lot of it and I will tell hon. members why.

Mr. McDermid: Most of it.

Mr. Waddell: The government gets a lot of it, too. The industry gets most of it because it found oil when it was really cheap, $2 a barrel, and now it will sell that oil on the market for $30 a barrel. So they are getting a windfall there. There is no doubt about the fact that they are getting the money.

Who else is getting money? The federal government is getting money. The hon. member and I will agree that for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to stand up in this House and say that it is all the fault of the provinces is sheer nonsense. There is a federal excise tax. As the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) pointed out, the government extended that tax. The minister could cut back that tax if he wanted. The provinces, too, are villains. The Government of Ontario, the hon. member's province, tagged on an ad valorem tax. It got into the grab for money, too. The governments are grabbing the money, the oil companies are getting some money and the consumer is getting hosed. It seems to me that the facts are there.

I have in my hand a list of price increases under this Liberal government which I would like to read, but I get tired when I read it. There were two increases on August 1, 1980. There were increases on October 28, 1980, November 1, 1980 and two increases on January 1, 1981. There were increases on March 1, 1981, May 1, 1981, and two on June 3, 1981. There were increases on July 1, 1981 and September 21, 1981. The list goes on and on.

Mr. McDermid: Keep reading.

Mr. Waddell: The price of oil has risen from $14 a barrel to $30 a barrel. We know two things. We know that Canadians were living in a bit of a fool's paradise in the sense that we had oil prices which were too low. We know that western Canada is entitled to adequate compensation for its oil and gas resources. We knew the prices would rise. We should be honest with the people and tell them what they will rise to and let us not pretend, as the Liberal Party is pretending—

Mr. McDermid: The Tories told them.

Mr. Waddell: The Tories were not being honest. I just pointed that out.

Mr. McDermid: Oh yes, we were.

Mr. Waddell: Well, the hon. member has listened since the beginning of my speech and can reply to it. The impression I get from this debate on Bill C-103 is that the Conservatives are saying, "We would have put on only an 18-cent a gallon tax." That is not true. They would have put substantially more on. As a matter of fact, as I have said, their price would have been 42.8 cents a litre today.

The Liberals made a promise that we would have low oil prices and they broke that promise. They are not, perhaps, being straightforward enough to say so. I will give Your Honour an example of where they are not being straightforward. The headline of an article from The Citizen dated March 2 states, "Lalonde offers hope of cheaper gas". That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said. He said that Canadians may get a slight break at the pumps because international prices are going down and the government might consider reducing the special tax it levies to subsidize gas prices in eastern Canada. That is the petroleum compensation charge that we are debating today. Then last week, when he gave $2 billion to the oil industry, the minister said that the consumers will not benefit. I meant to say that he said the consumers will not hurt. They will not benefit, obviously, but they will not get hurt. He said there would be no change for the consumer. He did not say to forget about cheaper gas. The money being collected under the petroleum compensation charge will be in surplus. It could have gone to reduce the charge to the consumer. However, it will stay as a tax and the consumer will not get a break. Only one journalist, Les Whittington of the Ottawa Citizen, picked up what was happening to consumers. The rest of the press were misled by the slick press releases of Energy, Mines and Resources.

• (1610)

We have two parties essentially the same when it comes to oil prices, both protesting too much that they are low-priced parties. There is no relief in sight for the consumers. They will have a 30 per cent increase on their energy bill, and nothing to shield them from the worst.

There could have been a reduction in the petroleum compensation charge, but the minister will not do that now. The money will go to the industry. It will go to the industry because of the change in the price of oil, old oil discovered between 1973 and 1981.

Instead of the old oil price, it will be called an old-new price and they will almost get the new reference price. It sounds like mumbo-jumbo. It is an increase in price. It has to come from somewhere. It will come from the government forgoing lower prices to the consumer.

The government has to forgo other things as well. It will drop $25 billion in projected revenue because of the decrease in world prices and consequently the take for the government. That means the government will ultimately have to tax personal taxpayers more or forgo social programs. Either way the consumer gets hosed again. The consumer will get hosed at the gas pump, in his hydro bills, tax bills, and social programs. It is tough for the consumer.

I get back to my friends at the reunion. They need a little help. I will end on a positive note. The government could look at the petroleum compensation charge and at the agreement with the producing provinces. It could go back to Premier Lougheed and say that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Premier Lougheed made their champagne toasts over the oil price deal, clearly the small oil companies were stuck; and now that we have helped them, how about helping the consumers?

If the federal government cannot persuade Premier Lougheed, Premier Devine and Premier Bennett, then it should forgo its share of the new price increase coming in July. It would be a break, albeit a small one, for the Canadian consumer. The consumers are getting hosed and they need a break. That is what we should be debating here today instead of hurling insults at each other.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said that we were not honest with the Canadian people as to the prices they were going to have to pay for gasoline, heating fuel and natural gas.

Mr. Waddell: Now, not then.

Mr. Thomson: We were completely up front with the Canadian people. We were completely up front with the Canadian people in the Crosbie budget. We said exactly what we would charge in terms of a gasoline charge and exactly that the consumer would have to pay for home heating fuel and natural gas. We told the Canadian people the prices that would be paid for crude oil over the next four and a half years.

We were completely up front, completely honest and open with the Canadian people, as distinct from the point made by my colleague for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) with regard to the Liberal government. This government was completely dishonest. It misled the Canadian people. It is quite unfair for the member of the New Democratic Party to put us in the same boat with the Liberal Party.

Mr. Waddell: I am talking about now, not then.

Mr. Thomson: The Liberal government prices for heating oil are much higher than those introduced in the Crosbie budget. Natural gas prices are also much higher. We had an energy tax credit for all low and middle-income families in Canada. There is no such tax credit offered by the Liberal government.

If the hon. member wants to talk about fairness, let him be fair and put all the facts on the table, not just those facts he wants to impute to us which put us in the same boat as those rascals across the way.

Further, the oil industry in this country would not now be lying devastated and in ruins had we followed the 1979 Crosbie budget instead of the Natural Energy Program we have today. Alsands would be two years further down the road. We would be well on our way toward an additional 260,000 barrels a day of oil and oil self-sufficiency in this country. If the hon. member wants to tell the truth, he should tell the whole truth and not just part of it.

The other night the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) went to great pains to tell Canadians what a great thing his National Energy Program was. He said that it was working beautifully for everyone, that it was glorious and that we were well on our way to energy self-sufficiency. The minister said that we have low prices and that Canadians have the best of both worlds. Why? Because of his National Energy Program, which he says has been glorious. He failed to mention, however, that it has caused a good deal of our unemployment problems. He conveniently forgot that it has contributed in no small way to high interest rates in this country.

More than anything else, the Liberal government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources do not understand that because of the National Energy Program, investors do not trust the government any more. They do not trust it because it has changed the rules in midstream. It has confiscated the assets of investors. Therefore, they do not believe the government.

For quite a few years before becoming a Member of Parliament, I was in business. Like most businessmen, I guess, I made a few mistakes here and there, perhaps more than some. I was in the oil well drilling business. I could drill 100 wells per customer and not make one single mistake. Every well would go according to program. One day I drilled a bad well. The 101st well was a bad one. We had problems, some within my control, some not. However, I was always remembered by that customer, not for the 100 good wells but for the one bad one.

That is the problem which this government and other governments face today. Investors do not trust it. Why would anyone want to invest in Canada when this government has confiscated the assets of people and changed the rules in midstream? It expropriated their assets. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) shakes his head and says they did not confiscate anybody's assets. What about when the government backed in to the Canada lands for 25 per cent? That is expropriation. That is what investors call it. Expropriation, without compensation; that is confiscation. Why would someone not invest in Canada? Investors do not have faith in us, that is why. They do not believe what this government is saying.

• (1620)

It has diminished cash flow. People invested their money in Canada to expolore for oil and gas. Then two levels of government come along once they find oil or gas and they take all their money away from them. They do not leave anything that gives them a decent return on what they have already invested. It is a sad thing today.

The reason the National Energy Program, for some Canadians, seems to have sold so well is just that the oil companies seem to be bad guys. They are the scapegoat, so then the National Energy Program must be good. That is the tragedy. Most Canadians automatically think that Imperial Oil, Shell, Gulf are ripping the people off; therefore Petro-Canada must be good. What a sad, sad story.

The people of Canada put up $600 billion of their hard money for the privilege of buying their gasoline at Petro-Canada stations. Do they get it any cheaper? Is one cent a gallon any cheaper? No, they pay the same. But that is only the half of it: there is no return on that $6 billion, either. It is just going down the tube. Petro-Canada came out with a great big statement saying how much money they have made. Any other company in Canada that made as little money on $6 billion as Petro-Canada makes would not be in business, let alone have anyone investing in it. Petro-Canada is a criminal abuse of taxpayers' money, and Canadians will have to wake up and understand that that is what is contributing to the high interest rates.

Where do hon. members think the Government of Canada is getting that $6 billion? Do they think they just manufacture it out of thin air? They had to go out and borrow it, because the Government of Canada could not tax the people enough to pay for it. When you go out and borrow $6 billion, you have to pay the going rate of interest.

Interest rates, whether we like it or not, are a function of supply and demand. If you buy a car or a house today, or if you buy food for your table, what you pay is a function of supply and demand, and interest rates are just that. So the $6 billion that is being poured into Petro-Canada is causing the Canadian people to pay 17 per cent, 18 per cent, 22 per cent rates of interest today on their homes and cars and credit cards.

We are not going to get this country back on the rails until governments, and particularly the federal government, recognize one fundamental issue, that until you have investor confidence people will not invest. When you do not invest, not only are we not creating jobs for ourselves, but we are not creating jobs for our kids. We are losing jobs because people are taking capital out of the country. Ten billion dollars went out of Canada last year, $10 billion that could have created 200,000 jobs.

Until the federal government and other governments recognize the investor and treat the investor fairly, we will not create jobs, we will have further unemployment, we will have higher interest rates.

As for the National Energy Program, or the update thereof last week, I said that the minister seemed to blow his horn, trying to tell the Canadian people what a glorious success this had been and what the National Energy Program had done for all Canadians. But if you do not have the cash, you offer some incentives, some modification to the program. For example, for the small Canadian oil or gas company the government offered a credit against the PGRT of $250,000 a year. That is quite a bit of money: it represents one 5,000-foot dry hole.

An hon. Member: They don't even know what that is.

Mr. Thomson: That is what $250,000 will buy you, Mr. Speaker. We have 400 oil and gas companies in western Canada, so we can drill 400 more dry holes a year. We cannot complete them, but we can drill them.

People are not going to drill. Taking a man's cash flow away from him is like walking into your neighbour's house and stealing his silverware, and then coming back and saying: "I am sorry, here is your silverware back that I took last week".

The point is that the oil and gas industry does not have the available cash flow to go out and drill for new oil today. The new oil prices are attractive, I grant you that, and some of the incentives are attractive; but you must have the cash in the first place to go out and drill for that new oil. If you do not have the cash flow, you are not going to do it.

Apart from the petroleum and gas revenue tax relief of $250,000 a year for each individual oil and gas company for a period of four and one-half years, apart from that one tax concession, all of the other concessions were made for a period of one year. When you go out to look for an oil and gas well that you hope will produce for 15 years, or perhaps 20 years in the case of gas, you do not predicate your investment decisions on one year. When you are going to invest the kind of money that it takes to find an oil well or a gas well, you predicate that investment on a tax regime that will be in place for at least the term of payout, which is at least seven, eight or ten years. How can investors have any confidence in a program or a tax modification which amounts to saying: "We will change it for a year, then we will have a look at it, and if we do not like it we will change the rules back again". How can you reasonably expect any investor to have confidence in such a program? It is ridiculous.

The devastation the government has caused in the industry in my province, Alberta, by virtue of the National Energy Program is really sad. Here was an industry that was providing jobs not just for the people in Alberta, but it was the only industry that could have helped Canada through this period of recession. I do not say it would have solved all of the problems, by any means, but it certainly would have helped. Many people who do not have jobs today would have jobs. It would not have solved our high interest rate problem, but our interest rates would not have been quite so high without the National Energy Program.

For every $100 that is spent in the oil and gas industry in Alberta, only $29 stays in the province; $71 goes to other provinces. And $41 of the $71 goes to the province of Ontario alone. For every one job that is created in the oil and gas industry in Alberta, two jobs are created in the province of Ontario.

• (1630)

What this government has done has caused sadness not just for Albertans but for all Canadians. I keep asking myself whether it was by design or by accident. Was it the deliberate intention to destroy the oil and gas industry in this country, or was it just because hon. members opposite did not know any better? I see my hon. friend smiling. Has he asked himself that question? If it was done by design, I think that is pretty frightening.

Mr. McDermid: All the jobs lost in Quebec, and he laughs.

Mr. Thomson: My hon. friend laughs at that proposition.

Mr. Collenette: Be serious.

Mr. Thomson: Since I came here three years ago it has been my understanding that the fondest hope of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal government and one of the Prime Minister's cherished dreams was to unite this country. I tell my friend that he has done more in the last three years to take this country apart than has been done in the last 15 years.

Mr. Collenette: Rubbish.

Mr. Thomson: The sad part of it is I do not think my friend even knows what he has done; nor does he have any appreciation of it.

Mr. Irwin: What have you done in this country other than spread that type of nonsense?

Mr. Thomson: What have I done?

Mr. Lewis: Want an election?

Mr. McDermid: Right now!

Mr. Collenette: Nineteen eighty-four.

Mr. Thomson: If we were the government today, we could put this country back together on a solid footing, which is something that hon. member does not have the courage to do. Hon. members opposite do not have the necessary gumption; nor do they understand the problem.

Mr. Collenette: You gave away the store.

Mr. Thomson: This afternoon we are debating Bill C-103, which is part of the National Energy Program. It is a bill which will completely overhaul the Petroleum Administration Act and change its name to the Energy Administration Act. The maximum allowable oil export charge will be raised to $55 a barrel. The charge will be determined by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources instead of by the National Energy Board. We set up the National Energy Board to look after these determinations for us, but the government does not like that. The government does not like the independence of the National Energy Board. We gave the National Energy Board too much authority, so we are going to take that away so that the minister can set these charges by order in council. The government will be permitted to return 50 per cent of the proceeds to the producing provinces if it sees fit.

A transportation fuel compensation recovery charge can be applied to all aircraft and ships leaving Canada. In practice, the charge will no longer be applied to foreign aircraft companies. A petroleum compensation charge can be levied to a maximum of about $12 a barrel in order to pay oil import compensation. By the insanity of our National Energy Program we are importing 400,000 barrels of oil a day into Canada, and we have 300,000 barrels of oil shut in in western Canada trying to find a market. We are paying $40 a barrel every day for 400,000 barrels while we have 300,000 barrels in the ground out in western Canada. What kind of absolute irresponsibility is that? It is just incredible. The government says we have commitments to foreign suppliers. Perhaps we have, but how long would we be paying for foreign oil imports if the compensation charge was reduced? At the same time, surely to goodness, could we not reasonably expect that the government would not mind allowing western Canada to sell 300,000 barrels of oil to the United States? The United States is importing 5.5 million barrels of oil every day, 300,000 barrels of it from western Canada. But no, the government thinks we should keep it shut in. "Let's keep our thumb on those westerners; let's not give them a break."

Bill C-103 gives retroactive authority to the government to introduce a special compensation charge for any cutbacks in western Canadian oil, and the bill allows the government to levy a Canadian ownership charge to a maximum of $1.15 a barrel and to a maximum of 15 cents per MCF of natural gas. The tax ceiling would have been $4 a barrel under the previous legislation, and the proposed Energy Administration Act would establish the Canadian ownership account into which the funds would go. Further, the proposed Energy Administration Act would give the government the authority to amend the pricing terms of the Syncrude agreement.

The motions we have before us this afternoon are Motions Nos. 4 and 5, and my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, has explained the purpose of those motions. The purpose of Motion No. 4 is to reduce the maximum level of the petroleum compensation charge, in effect to 18 cents a gallon, which would correspond with the 18 cents a gallon set forth in the Crosbie budget. By passing this amendment, hon. members opposite at least would be saying to the Canadian people that they have not exceeded their election promise of 1980. I think my colleagues have explained that.

Motion No. 5 would limit the petroleum compensation charge so that it could be used only for purposes of subsidizing imported crude into Canada. It would not be allowed to be moved over to the Consolidated Revenue Fund or to be used for other purposes.

Those are the two motions we have before us this afternoon and, in my view, they appear to be quite reasonable. I see no reason why anyone should object to them.

I just want to say a further word about the National Energy Program while I have the floor. One of the stipulated intents of the National Energy Program was to provide energy security for Canadians. I have spoken about some of the other tragedies of the National Energy Program in terms of its devastation, the unemployment it has created and so forth, but in my view the greatest tragedy to the Canadian people of all is in terms of energy security or security of supply of oil. We in Canada rely very heavily upon oil. We rely on it to the extent that over 50 per cent of all our energy consumption in Canada is oil-related. As I have said, we import 400,000 barrels of oil of the approximately 1.6 or 1.7 million barrels of oil consumed per day. We are importing 25 per cent of our oil.

Through the National Energy Program the minister told Canadians we would have security of energy supply. That is a fraud, because the National Energy Program is depriving Canadians of oil security. Our reserves are diminishing at a very fast rate. We produce about 1,200,000 barrels of oil per day out of a total of 1.6 million that we use. We import the balance of 400,000 barrels a day. Our conventional oil reserves are declining at the rate of 100,000 barrels per day per year, so in ten years our conventional oil and gas fields will be capable of producing one million barrels per day less than they are producing today. If we do not find any more oil, our conventional oil fields will only be capable of producing about 200,000 barrels of oil per day by 1990.

• (1640)

The government should tell that to Canadians. Instead, it tells people not to worry because it will be possible for them to substitute gas for oil. The government feels confident that people will conserve a lot more oil. Last year for the first time people practised conservation and consumption was reduced by 7 per cent. But the easiest part of conservation is over, Mr. Speaker, and the easiest part of substitution is over.

I say the government is practising a fraud on the Canadian people by insinuating that they will have oil security. I wonder how much of last year's 7 per cent saving was attributable to the recession? I wonder if we really conserved anything or if that 7 per cent was all due to the recession.

Assuming that oil consumption does not increase one barrel between now and 1990 and that we are still consuming 1,600,000 barrels per day then, our conventional fields will only be able to produce 200,000 barrels per day. So we must ask where the other 1,400,000 barrels will come from. Will they come from Hibernia, from the Beaufort Sea, from the megaprojects, the oil sands? The minister did not say anything about that the other night, not a word. He implied that we will be secure because the government will continue to make substitution possible. Does he mean that will come by conversion to gas, Mr. Speaker? In his wildest dreams does he believe that he is going to be able to substitute natural gas, coal and electricity for 1,400,000 barrels of oil per day? He does not have a shred of evidence to support that claim that he is willing to put before the Canadian people or this House. I wonder who we will buy that oil from in 1990? At the moment we buy from Saudi Arabia, Venezuela and Mexico. Even if they are able to sell it to us then, I wonder what price we will pay? Will it be $40 per barrel or $100 per barrel?

When we have the opportunity in Canada to be self-sufficient, why would the government introduce a National Energy Program that would deprive us of that opportunity? I cannot understand that and my constituents cannot understand it. Why would the government be so hidebound, so doctrinaire, as to introduce a program that will deprive Canadians of the opportunity to achieve self-sufficiency? No one will explain that to us.

Bill C-103 and all of the National Energy Program was never intended to come to grips with the primary goal of self-sufficiency. That is just a nice set of words used to describe the government's main intent, which was complete control over the oil and gas industry and to siphon off huge amounts of revenue so that it could continue with its profligate spending. In the forecast of revenues over the next five years the government includes $53 billion from the industry. It might not be so bad to destroy an industry if that $53 billion were used to create jobs and help bring interest rates down. But that is not the case, Mr. Speaker.

The second priority of the National Energy Program, which the government ranked ahead of self-sufficiency, was Canadianization of the industry. With the introduction of Bill C-103 and other parts of the National Energy Program, Canadians are witnessing a new era in which government not only shares the planning function with business, but where government actually makes the business decisions for the industry.

This bill, together with others, is the most massive, co-ordinated program of regulation, tax measures and other interventions aimed at moving the government to the position where it virtually controls every single aspect of the industry. We are about to see, or probably have already seen, a bureaucracy of accountants and lawyers the like of which we have never seen before to administer this legislation. By virtue of these regulations the government will control the day to day decisions of managers in the oil and gas industry. The substance of this legislation, in many cases, is such that companies and individuals are guilty unless they can prove themselves innocent. Public servants are placed in the position of making recommendations which will depend on highly discretionary choices between different proposals.

In short, Mr. Speaker, what we have is government bureaucrats who will be directly involved in commercial decision-making. I say we are dangerously close to becoming a socialist republic. In one form or another the new regulatory moves are designed to gain complete influence and control over business decisions. As I said, these regulatory measures have been co-ordinated with a host of other programs, like the changes to the tax regime which are designed radically to increase the fiscal take of the government.

It is hard to imagine the administrative burden which all these regulations will place on the industry. The cost of doing business will be increased to a staggering level—indeed, it already has been. The cost of compliance with the new information requirements for COR, PIP and PMA will be out of all proportion to the economic benefits derived. Time, manpower and money will be spent filling out forms instead of being devoted to production activities. Rather than an oil and gas finding operation the industry will be turned into a bookkeeping operation of lawyers and accountants.

• (1650)

Let us look at what happened in 1981 as a result of the NEP. We know the industry is lying in ruins. We know exploration in western Canada has fallen by 30 per cent. We know the Cold Lake and Alsands projects are dead. We know drilling in western Canada fell from 9,000 wells in 1980 to 6,600 wells in 1981. We know that last year our imports of crude and refined products averaged 418,000 barrels a day. We know the federal government paid out $4.5 billion last year to refiners to offset the extra cost of imported crude. We know that industry cash flow declined by 35 per cent during the year, with earnings down a similar amount. We know that $10.2 billion left the country. We know that because of the government's Canadianization policy more than $7 billion of that $10.2 billion went to acquire assets of foreign-controlled companies. We know these purchases created a burden of debt which seriously hinders future oil and gas exploration and development, and they did not add one single barrel of oil to our energy reserves. We know that $3 billion left Canada to explore for oil and gas in the United States and elsewhere. These companies are exploring for oil and gas in other countries and we are still importing 400,000 barrels of oil a day. It is madness. This large outflow of capital is one of the major factors in pushing the value of the Canadian dollar to a 50-year low and interest rates to a record high.

What about the oil well and drilling rigs service industry? Here was a Canadian industry, 90 per cent owned by Canadians. What has happened to them? Twenty-three companies are bankrupt today by virtue of that government. Two hundred and twenty-seven rigs have left the country, mostly for the United States. One hundred and seven oil well servicing rigs have left the country. Of the 461 rigs left in Canada, there were 121 working last week. In June, 1980, prior to the NEP, there were 360-odd rigs working in Canada. Industry has lost 25,000 jobs. Thousands of professionals engaged in the industry have left our country, driven out by a senseless and inane government.

Is it any wonder that we see this hostility and bitterness in western Canada toward the federal government? The Prime Minister in a speech not so long ago blamed racism for the election of a separatist to the Alberta legislature. Just how far out of touch can the Prime Minister be to make such an assertion? He cannot have any appreciation whatsoever of the alienation felt by western Canadians caused by his dogmatic approach to the Constitution, the NEP and the Crow rate. The election of a separatist in Alberta has absolutely nothing to do with racism. It is a sad indictment of our Prime Minister that he should so gravely mistake the enormity of the feeling which exists in western Canada today. If he or any of his cabinet would spend even a little time listening to the people in western Canada and remove themselves from their centralized isolation in Ottawa, they might learn that there is serious—very serious—trouble brewing on the prairies. I do not say this in any sense as a threat; I say it because this government has turned its back on the people of western Canada and they feel helpless with nowhere to turn. Believe me, I have never seen the level of frustration and desperation which exists in Calgary today.

The minister of energy had a press conference last Friday. In his opening statement I read this:

> We today introduced legislation to implement the final major elements of the National Energy Program designed to give Canadians control of their energy future and ensure self-sufficiency in oil by 1990.

The people of this country do not believe that. They do not believe this government. The minister may believe it, but he is the only one. I sincerely hope the Beaufort and Hibernia will eventually produce enough oil for us to be self-sufficient. I think the potential is there, but it will not happen by 1990, and for the minister to pretend it will is a serious misrepresentation of the facts to the Canadian people and he knows better. In looking at the amendments to Bill C-103, I would hope the government will have enough courage and wisdom to accept the amendments and throw out the bill.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I got involved in this debate earlier through a number of interjections and a couple of questions, and I want to round that off by making some brief observations. I want to restrict my remarks to the issue of price, which was raised a short while ago by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and then commented on by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

I do not debate the conclusion that prices generally appear to be higher in Canada at the pump than they are in the U.S. I have heard enough evidence from learned members of this House and interested constituents to convince me of the accuracy of that observation. The point of my original interjection was to ask why the price was higher, because it was argued that the reason was the policies of this government. If you look at the price of gasoline when it leaves the refinery in both countries, Mr. Speaker, I think you will see a substantial difference. I think any objective and honest member of this House would agree that at that point Canadian prices, at about 75 per cent of the world price, are far cheaper than their American counterparts.

If that is the case, why do Canadians have to pay more at the pump than the Americans do? The answer is obvious, and in a way it was contained in the response that I got from the hon. member for Calgary Centre. It lies with the high provincial taxes that we have in many provinces in Canada. If we are looking for a culprit to blame for higher prices, and that seems to be the intent in many debates in this House, I suggest you do not have to look any further than, say, Bill Davis in Ontario and John Buchanan in Nova Scotia. Mr. Davis, as everyone knows, recently introduced a 20 per cent ad valorem tax on gasoline. That accounts for the higher price of Ontario gasoline compared to its counterpart in New York state. Premier Buchanan in Nova Scotia just introduced the 15-cent a gallon tax in Nova Scotia, which accounts for the higher Halifax price compared to the Boston price.

• (1700)

Having commented on the arguments developed by the Conservative spokesman this afternoon, I would like now to pass on to the arguments presented and developed by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party. First, I will comment briefly on the preface to his remarks, when he reproached us gently about the unseemly squabbling which characterized the interaction between myself and the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I could not help but smile inwardly as I compared the rhetoric with the apoplectic intervention by the hon. member several days ago when he rose continuously in this House on points of order, attempting to score points against the very member who was the object of my interjections this afternoon. Perhaps the hon. member had a brief or a selective lapse of memory when he brought the Shakespearean reproof to our attention this afternoon.

The New Democratic Party is attempting to pose as the low-price party in this House during this debate. I would like to point out that I have to doubt the honesty of that posturing and I do so based on two arguments. The first argument arises out of the fact that the New Democratic Party is, in essence, a western party. It may have an eastern leadership, but it is in fact a western caucus. I do not believe that any party that is so dominated as that party is by its western members could convincingly argue to anyone, at any time, that it could negotiate a cheaper price with the western premiers and with its western constituents than we did or the Conservatives thought they did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: I do not buy that argument at all. I do not think anyone else who has looked through the debates of this House over the preceding two years would buy that argument either.

Second, the New Democratic Party is a very ambitious party. The members of that party have had the courage of their convictions to outline in this House, in some detail the energy policies they would execute if only, through some miracle or divine intervention, they formed the Government of Canada. If you review the list of policies which they are proposing, Mr. Speaker, you would find that they are very expensive proposals. I would ask the hon. member or the audience beyond this House how on earth the New Democratic Party expects to pay for those ambitious expensive policies. I suppose that it would not impose the cost at the pump. In not doing that, the party could lose as a low-energy-price party. But someone, somehow, somewhere, at some time, will have to pay the price of its energy policies. I would argue that if you are not paying for those policies at the pump, as we are asking the consumer to do for many of our policies, you will be paying for those policies through your taxes.

Mr. Waddell: You got it.

Mr. Kelly: For hon. members of the New Democratic Party to argue that their party is a low-energy-price party when, in fact, it would be socking it to the taxpayer for the most expensive energy policy of all the three parties constitutes, I think, a ludicrous and farcical assault on the very honesty which that gentleman attempted to bring to this debate a few moments ago.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—The Economy—Query respecting contact between Acting Prime Minister and Canadian delegation at Versailles. (b) Pursuit of Canadianization policy; the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid)—Astra Trust—Position of depositors. (b) Minister's statement; the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell)—Status of Women—Parliamentary report on battered wives—Government action.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motions Nos. 4 and 5 (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to deal with the propriety and wisdom of Motion No. 4 and Motion No. 5 placed before this House, I might comment initially upon the remarks made by the energy spokesman for the New Democratic Party, to whom I listened with considerable interest. It seems convenient for members of that party to recall part of the facts but not all. It was not until the hon. member was reminded of the specific plans we had when we formed the government to include an energy tax credit, which would have been of substantial benefit to a great number of Canadians, that reference was made to that specific proposal when he compared prices of the Liberal Party today to prices proposed when our party formed the government. We had to be reminded also that the 18-cent federal excise tax of 1979 was not to apply to home heating fuel.

The issue before the House is not to compare energy policies of 1979 with energy policies of today because the public, the final juror in determining the merits of the 1979 tax proposals, made its decision. That decision is one we cannot question. The issue surely before the House today is whether the proposals contained within the ambit of Bill C-103 are effective in implementing a program promised the Canadian people when their votes were cast in February, 1980, and whether that program is in line with specific commitments which have been made and whether they are in order today. The answers to those questions are most definitely not so.

I can recall vividly my experience on the election platforms prior to the February, 1980, election when I was advised by my Liberal opponent that the consumer in Canada would be confronted with a blended petroleum price and that was easily explained, said he, as being a combination of three specific prices; the price for conventional crude oil, the price for synthetic crude and the price for imported foreign oil.

I raised the question at that time that one of the constituent elements of the price happened to be an unknown quantity, that of the price of imported foreign crude over which this government has no control. Under those circumstances, how could he then assure my constituents that the price which would be paid by them would be less than the price they were then paying? The promise was, "Vote Liberal and the price will stay down".

• (1710)

The one component of that composite price which was never mentioned, although it should have been obvious to all, was the petroleum compensation charge, an equalization charge which permitted Canadians from coast to coast to pay relatively the same price for a gallon of gasoline, a gallon of crude oil or a gallon of diesel fuel. We are looking at that obvious omission today, the public already having been subjected to some impositions of the same nature as those which related to the Alberta levy to compensate for a cutback by the province of Alberta in two of three stages. The crucial issue was the commitment of the current government, in the words of a specific advertisement during the time of the 1980 election in the riding of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), to "vote Liberal and the price will stay down." What was omitted from the campaign literature was the small print, which should have read: "until the Liberal government takes office." The print was so small that it was not seen, and the public believed.

The proposals which we have before the House with respect to Motion No. 4 would have the effect of reducing the petroleum compensation charge from the current $75 per cubic metre to $28 per cubic metre. That change would result in a reduction in the price per gallon from 52 cents to 18 cents, an amount which will correspond to the amount of excise tax to be used for the purpose of paying the petroleum compensation charge referred to in December, 1979, and an amount above which the new Government of Canada pledged itself not to go. Accordingly, it is appropriate to point out that the entire amount, as it currently stands, is a reduction from the originally sought amount by the government of 95 cents per gallon. After the nights and days of the long bell, that amount has been reduced.

This piece of legislation is but one of a series of bills which have resulted from that action, an action which, incidentally, even in terms of the bill as it presently stands, has had the effect of saving the consumer of Canada, who may have driven on an average of 12,000 miles per year and derived 25 miles per gallon from his vehicle, $201 in the course of a year on his gasoline consumption. In the event that this specific proposal in Motion No. 4 should be passed, the additional saving to the same consumer, driving the same number of miles per year and deriving the same miles per gallon, would be $163 per year. That is not an insignificant amount. It is one which could be better used in the hands of hard pressed-consumers of Canada than in the Consolidated Revenue Fund maintained by the government.

I listened with some considerable interest to the comments of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when he stood in his place last week and announced some adjustments to the National Energy Program. It was of significance that in the course of his address he made no reference to two most significant circumstances which had developed since the announcement of the NEP. Those circumstances were the abandonment of both the Alsands and Cold Lake projects, after the Government of Canada had pumped $50 million into the accounts of Imperial Oil for the purpose of shoring up a plan which ultimately was to fail. The money was badly spent because, throughout its negotiations with the province of Alberta and with the province of Saskatchewan, the government had adopted a stance of confrontation, the same kind of confrontation politics it adopted in dealing with the province of Newfoundland with respect to the Hibernia issue and generally with respect to the province of Quebec. The entire western part of the country has been abandoned to confrontation and bitterness, a fact which quite frankly is well known to some government members who have raised this very issue with their government but with no results. It is fundamentally important to the country that the benefit of all Canadians be looked to. That can never happen if the national government picks a fight with every province at every turn to get its own greedy way. Its own greedy way has been to take more and more of whatever is left in the pockets of consumers.

In 1917 the Government of Canada of the day imposed a tax which took effect in 1918. That act became the Income Tax Act of today. It was a temporary, war income tax measure designed to raise revenues for a specific purpose for a limited period of time. The Government of Canada soon recognized that it had found eldorado. This system of regularly and consistently extracting funds from the public, first of all in small amounts and then gradually in greater and greater amounts, was the salvation to the rapacious appetite of the federal government. The government today has given new meaning to the words "black gold".

The oil which is generated and produced in western Canada has become a new eldorado for the federal government. It has tapped into that resource to the extent that originally it anticipated, generating over a five-year term $53 billion. The government was to get it in a variety of ways—compensation charges, Canadian ownership charges, royalties or levies. Whatever it might call them, they were all a form of taxation. When a government reaches into the pocket of a citizen and extracts therefrom an amount, that amount, properly given its name, is a tax. To call it an ownership charge, to call it a petroleum compensation charge, or to call it a donation to a benevolent fund, is frivolous and deceitful. It is purely and simply a tax. That tax has grown and will continue to grow under an administration which recognizes that it has a new source of wealth which it can tax and indirectly take from the pockets of the taxpayers and consumers of Canada without their intimate knowledge.

• (1720)

The government's convenient metric system which it uses to determine the charges that are made is part of the program to confuse the taxpayers so they do not know how much they are paying. In order to determine an amount which taxpayers will understand, it is necessary for someone to sit down and calculate exactly what $75 per cubic metre is. When all of that is done and government members stand in their place to claim that the provinces have imposed a special road tax or ad valorem tax, such as that Ontario has placed on petroleum products at the pump, they fail to mention that of all the entities deriving part of the final sale price of a gallon or litre of gasoline, the one with the biggest hands and longest grasp is the federal government. As of March this year, fully 34.5 per cent went into the hands of the Receiver General for Canada.

The issue of the ad valorem tax imposed by the province of Ontario is one that I lament. I do this because it adds a tax to another tax, which adds to inflation. It is a signal to the public that governments believe that tomorrow's price will be higher than today's price. If that were not so, why would anyone impose an ad valorem tax? Governments expect the price to be higher tomorrow. However, in doing so the provincial government has but followed the lead of the federal government, which did the same thing with its excise taxes.

When those issues were debated in the House, I drew to the attention of the Minister of Finance what the consequences would be. There is an alleged battle between the government and inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us as recently as last weekend that it is true that you can wrestle inflation to the ground so long as you wrestle the economy to the ground. He has accomplished the latter but has failed in accomplishing the former. Nevertheless, it is measures such as this which fuel inflation. The government is taking more and more instead of less.

How can the hard-pressed consumer expect to pay for the increased costs that are imposed upon him by a government when he has less money as a consequence of specific programs which are advocated and undertaken by the government to extract more from the pocket of the consumer, who is left with less to pay with? That is the result. It is deceitful then to turn around and say that its battle is with inflation, and to say to Canadians; "You have too great a demand upon the public; working as you are, you should reduce your demand on the economy because in that way we will achieve our desired goals of combatting inflation". The greatest contributor is the federal government itself.

This measure but adds to inflation. It takes more from the public and adds it to the consolidated revenue fund, but not as a charge or something which can be specifically identified for a certain purpose and allocated and invested in the interim to generate income to be used for the purpose of paying the alleged levy. The charge is quite clearly a simple form of taxation. We have a perfect example of how the measure is ineffective in terms of meeting a specific commitment.

It is to this issue that Motion No. 5 is directed. When we examine how Clause 40 of the bill has been drawn up, we see that it was designed to offset the cost of additional petroleum compensation payments that had to be made to Canadian refineries when it became necessary to import more foreign crude to offset the loss of Alberta crude. That Alberta crude diminution, the House will recall, resulted from a failure of the government to negotiate an arrangement with the producing provinces of the west which would have obviated the need for ever imposing that charge.

In any event, what are the facts as they surround this particular circumstance? We are asked to pass a measure to allow for a certain amount to compensate for that special petroleum compensation payment made to the refineries. Since we know the period that it covers, the amount of oil that had to be imported as well as the specific amounts which had to be paid to the refineries, we can determine that this specific provision of the bill as it stands today generated $142 million more than was required. The specific provisions are designed, as I have indicated, to cover the shortfall in Alberta production. Yet $142 million more was raised to cover the 120,000 barrels a day than was needed.

The interesting fact in all of this is that at the very time that these charges are to be imposed, that is, effective March 3, 1981, until September 21, 1981, the actual consumption of petroleum products in Canada declined by more than the 120,000 barrels a day for which this compensation is allegedly imposed. I would have thought that the Government of Canada, if not recognizing that that reduction in consumption should immediately offset the Alberta charge, should have at least prorated the amount. But it did not because it has one conception of all charges, levies and amounts. The conception is that these are all forms of taxation which provide an opportunity to grab from the public. Why diminish the appetite of the government at all? It can surely spend that somewhere else.

This brings us to a very significant point in this entire issue which was discussed in some detail by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) when he directed the attention of the House to the fact that when these charges are shown in the public accounts they are not reflected as revenue imposed upon the taxpayers on one side and as an expenditure of the government on the other, but as a flow-through in which the Government of Canada is treated as a conduit. It is taking from the taxpayers and paying to another. But if that be true, then there should be no $142 million surplus, because the whole justification for the approach taken is that what we have taken from one group of taxpayers we have paid to another. But that is not the case.

• (1730)

It is deceitful, to be kind to the government, to proceed in this fashion. It underlines the fallacy of the entire concept. Whatever government takes must be shown as revenue derived, and whatever government spends must be shown as an expenditure of government. There is no flow-through. There is no conduit pipe. If this concept is given the full extent to which it may be taken, can Your Honour not conceive of the Government of Canada raising a special tax which it might call the "Canadian Benevolent Fund" which would be used to pay the salaries of public servants? Since it would be a special imposition under the conduit pipe concept, the accounts of this country need never show the payment of a dime to the public service of Canada.

The whole theory is deceitful. The government must disclose what it really spends. In terms of these revenues, it has spent over $3 billion in compensation. What it has retained in the Consolidated Revenue Fund is another form of tax which was not distributed to an alleged recipient at all. These measures become essential at a time which is most crucial to all Canadians, when our economy is suffering and revenue could best be left in the hands of Canadian business and Canadian taxpayers generally.

The Prime Minister has acknowledged that we have an economic crisis. He made that acknowledgment in Versailles over the weekend. One wonders whether he learned that only when he arrived in Versailles or whether he knew it before he went. If he knew it before he went, why has he not done something about it other than to sit in this House with his colleague the Minister of Finance explaining that we are waiting for the Americans? We have been waiting for the Americans for over a year. He wants to wait for the Americans for another six weeks. Wait for them to do what? This is a sovereign government. We need not wait for the Americans to do anything. The people of Canada elected this government for the purpose of taking specific measures with respect to the economy and their hopes for the future. It was not elected as a surrogate of a government in another country. Yet if we listen to the government ministers, they would have us believe that they are powerless to do anything, that they can do nothing but wait until they are in a position to transmit to the Canadian public whatever decisions may be made in a foreign country. If that be the case, why do we need the Minister of Finance? Why do we need the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources extracting funds of this kind? Why can we not simply rely upon the administrators in a foreign country. The Canadian people are not prepared for that. They expect action.

I submit that of all the action which can be taken, the most crucial is certainty. We have been waiting since November 12, 1981, for a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. One would have thought that that piece of legislation would have been before the House long before now, but it has not come. In the result, Canadian businessmen have declined to take any action, hoping that the measures which were anti-business, anti-investment and anti-enterprise will be changed. And there was change. They are wise to wait, but waiting is costly for the entire economy. Precision and certainty are absolutely required. This delay, the delay of the year, and now the delay of six weeks, is inexcusable. Measures of this nature strike at the root of all our nation's problems. The government knows and has known for some long time that its economic policies are misplaced. They are for another time, another country, maybe another planet, but not for here and now in Canada. The government has not taken the decisive steps to build confidence. Instead, we are dealing with a piece of legislation which once again imposes additional taxes on Canadians.

These measures that our party recommends in terms of Motions Nos. 4 and 5 would, in the first instance, bring within the level of the promises of the government the price structure for petroleum products which resulted in part, and maybe in whole, in the government's election in 1980. The provisions contained within our Motion No. 5 would see to it that the revenues derived from the compensation levy were, in fact, no greater than those genuinely needed for the purpose of meeting the compensation payment to the refineries. How can any hon. member of this House who believes the purpose to be as set forth in the legislation object to and complain about that kind of logical restriction on the Government of Canada?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, 1982 is the one hundredth anniversary of many towns in southeastern Saskatchewan and it is being celebrated by most of them this summer. One of the thoughts which will be in the minds of many people attending these celebrations is the background to these very motions we are discussing today. I speak with some personal knowledge of this, not only because my people came to Saskatchewan in 1882 when it was a territory of the federal government and went through that long period of struggle for self-government which came in 1905, but also because when I go back to check the statutes of that time, it brings back the names of men who sat in this House, of men who sat in the territorial legislature in Regina and of men who later sat in the legislatures of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The tragedy of that decision in 1905 to set up these two parts of the Northwest Territories as two provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta, was cruelty of the highest order. It gave to these two new territories the right of self-government, but it did not give them the wherewithal to run those governments. The setting up of the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905 did not give to the pioneers of those territories, to keep them out of the hands of the Americans, the right to own their own resources. These people had to fight with railways and grain companies to survive, but it did not give them the rights to their own resources.

• (1740)

Every other province from 1867 had the right under the British North America Act to own and enjoy the income that came from its resources. Little Manitoba, little British Columbia, little Ontario and Little Quebec—and they were small provinces in 1867—had that right. Under the British North America Act, the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia were enlarged. They always had the resources, but Saskatchewan and Alberta did not.

This was remedied after a long battle. They won the battle of self-government, with no financial power, in 1905. It was remedied in 1930 by amendments to the British North America Act which gave to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan the right to own the properties in their provinces, the mineral, water and land properties, and to enjoy all the revenues and royalties from them. Any person who took those revenues was stealing. This is what happened in the period between 1905 and 1930.

The federal government retained those resources, as it does in the case of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Any revenues that came from that wealth went to the federal government and not to the people who lived in those territories. That injustice in 1905 has come back to this House today to haunt us.

I do not think the House would mind if the record showed what turned out to be, and I will quote from it, the Saskatchewan Act. This is the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act which was an amendment to the British North America Act of 1930. I will read just a few phrases:

> And whereas the Government of Canada desires that the province should be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of Confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resource as from its entry into Confederation in 1905—

After all those years as a territory and then as a partial province, it finally agreed in 1930 that this injustice would be remedied. It makes it very clear. I will just read a sentence or two. I quote:

> —the interest of the Crown in all Crown lands, mines, minerals (precious and base) and royalties derived therefrom within the province, and all sums due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall from and after the coming into force of this agreement and subject as therein otherwise provided, belong to the province—

It was part of the Magna Carta of western Canada, in the parts called Saskatchewan and Alberta, that in 1930 in this House Parliament accepted this proposal and made the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta equal in rights and privileges to those of other provinces.

Today we are debating amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act in the form of two tax laws dealing with that act. I want to put very clearly to the House what the background and perspective is. I am not participating in the debate on the details of how these taxes are too high and for common interests, both economic and moral, we should reduce them. I want to talk about the fundamental, moral and legal principles that made this country.

In my opinion, the Petroleum Administration Act, which these two motions are in effect amending, is unconstitutional. I said that at the time of the passing of the act in this House in 1974. I must confess that I got no support from lawyers on either side of the House or from the provinces when I pointed out that the Petroleum Administration Act was an infringement on the British North America Act.

The minute this Parliament said that under the Petroleum Administration Act of 1974 it was going to use the trading power of the federal government to overwhelm the property rights power of the British North America Act granted to the provinces, that, in my view, was unconstitutional. I do not blame the lawyers of this House or the lawyers of the provinces for being reluctant to get into this debate. Constitutional law is strange to the great majority of lawyers I know, certainly those in politics.

At that time I was sensitive to the fact that the Queen's property was being exchanged and moved around without the consent of the Queen, as the debates of 1974 will show, and that the House with its eyes wide open was warned about it. I must confess with sadness that the only people who seemed interested in my arguments at that time were the Clerks at the Table. I want to add a little more meat to that argument for the purpose of showing that some day this House will have to remedy the mistake we made in 1974 by going into the powers of the provinces laid down in the Constitution and for not having paid proper compensation for so doing.

I quoted from the statutes. I could quote similar phrases from the Alberta statutes and later amendments. However, the two constitutional arguments that were used were, first, that in the national interest the trading power of the federal government was superior to the property rights of the provinces. If you think about it, you realize the deep concern, I might say the alarming concern among various members of this Parliament from Alberta and Saskatchewan. They are very conscious of the fact that the property rights of the provinces were infringed by the Petroleum Administration Act and, of course, this tax under these motions. They know in their hearts that we have no right to steal the resources of a province without compensation.

The legal support for this is very simple. There are many cases in our courts which say you cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly. Coming at it on the basis that the Petroleum Administration Act was in the public interest because there was an adjustment of prices going on in the world, that gave the federal government the power to move in and arbitrarily take control of the property of these provinces. Once you allow one level of government to get into the heartland of the other level of government, it is very difficult to take it out.

I listened to the hon. member from Calgary speak earlier. He posed the question: Was this action taken by Parliament deliberately or was it taken blindly, unknowingly? I, like him, do not know the answer. If I were to be truthful, I think many people have already decided what the answer is, namely, that with a little bit of time, there is a given group of people, mostly in Ottawa, who seek and long for the day when the federal government will control not only the property all across the country but also the actions of the people all across the country.

There is much evidence to support this trend, both here and in the United States. In the current effort, we have our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) saying to the cattle producers that he will not help them because agriculture is a joint responsibility of both provinces and federal government, and until the beef producers bow their knee and accept the concept of a marketing board that will apply all across Canada and will control the production, sale and distribution of those animals.

• (1750)

Here we have a force loose upon the people, a force which emanated originally from Europe but which was known in North America 30 years ago. It has been accepted by a large group of civil servants in the department of agriculture in the United States, and it has been accepted by the civil servants in the Department of Agriculture in Canada, that the only way we can run the industry is to get control of the farmers' production and thereby direct things on a planned basis so that we do not have a surplus. We will get prices up by creating a scarcity; they call it supply management. They have it in the dairy industry today; why not apply it to the beef industry, they say? Most farmers, I believe, would not mind a marketing board if it were to market the stuff, sell it, under rules fair to all the participants. But the farmers do not want a board that is a controlled board, particularly one that is controlled by civil service experts—whose track record in Canada is pretty bad. Their track record in other countries is worse. We have seen the dairy industry lose 5,000 farmers a year; the civil servants simply put the dairy farmers on supply management. The beef farmer would rather go broke with his own mistakes than go broke with the mistakes of a group of people who are very good at drafting memorandums and regulations, and so on, but who have not got a sense of the situation and who believe they can take the Lord's place in this moving around in the market field.

I have no quarrel with the sincerity of these people. I am simply saying that there is reason to believe, in the minds of many of our people in Canada, that there are strong forces at work here in Ottawa, as well as in other places in Canada, trying to get control not only of the resource but of the people who produce that resource. I have not yet got to the stage where I can believe that those people are going to succeed.

In my own province, Saskatchewan, where this force is very strong, I saw a complete reversal of the majority vote in that province. I hope that the same feeling will eventually prevail in provinces like Ontario, on the same kind of decision we are discussing now. Put your mind to the question asked by the member from Calgary: Was this Petroleum Administration Act deliberately designed or was it an accident by people who do not know what they are doing? For the moment I think we had better agree, in the interest of respect for each other, that it was an accident by people who did not know what they were doing. The only way we can operate this House is by believing that that was the reason.

That does not change the fact that what we are doing by this amendment today is continuing the error of the original petroleum administration bill, which, I suggest, has some day to be fought out in the Supreme Court. That will have to be done by a reference from Parliament that asks the questions in clear and precise English that we can all understand, questions that ask the court to give us an answer in clear and precise English that we can understand, namely: Where do we stand on this question of property rights that are now within the realm of the provinces? Where do we stand on this priority of the trade power versus the property power? These are rather exotic subjects for this House. They can only be settled by the right type of reference, over an extended period of time, with the time to think it through.

We have a responsibility here as Members of Parliament. If the judges cannot make up their minds what we meant when we agreed to the British North America Act in 1867 and when we agreed to the Alberta and Saskatchewan acts in 1930, then we had better pass a resolution, with support from all sides, that tells the judges at all levels: "This is what we meant when we spoke in 1867 and this is what we meant when we spoke in 1930". This federation system, this federal system, cannot work unless there is a clear-cut understanding of what it means. When you give them powers to restrict the subject to one level of government, that must be honoured and not used indirectly to do something that cannot be done directly.

This is one of the reasons this whole discussion of the bill of rights which we had here for the last year or so was to me a complete fraud. Nothing has been done to clarify the rights of the provinces concerning their property. There is no use in trying to pretend to people that we are putting it into the bill of rights here federally, beause it will not make any difference until we make it clear in the minds of the judges where we stand, so that we do not get these silly decisions that we get from them occasionally.

Once again, the first point is the trade power versus provincial property rights. The second constitutional issue is the question of prices. We have always assumed that, by judicial decision only the provinces have the right to fool around and countrol prices and wages. We have always assumed that and taught our children in school that this was the law. The only exception to that law was where there was a national crisis, where we were in complete extremity, and all the rules go by the board. The only type of extreme necessity really comes down to a shooting war.

The House will remember the imposition of the War Measures Act in 1970. The plea that was made for breaking the laws of Canada was that there was an apprehended insurrection, and the army was moved in. They arrested several hundred people, that is all they could find, who might possibly be considered to be about to organize an insurrection; it turned out that there were only ten or 12 people that they could hold. So we had the shameful experience of seeing Members of Parliament on both sides of this House supporting the government's imposition of the War Measures Act in a time of peace over a problem of a few social drop-outs.

That mistake should be written deeply into the minds and hearts of all of us because we were all guilty, with just a few exceptions, of making that mistake. We should remember—now that we are not in a period of apprehended insurrection or an immediate shooting war—that now is the time to get our thinking clear and to make sure the judges know what our thinking is on these fundamentally important things like property rights and the relative power of the federal government in times of crisis.

• (1800)

The Supreme Court was given a reference on this question of prices and ruled that there was a national emergency because oil prices had gone up. That is part of the background to the legislation we are now amending.

Any person knows—and every person should have known eight years ago—that there was no national energy emergency. This country and the United States had energy running out of our ears, and as long as the industry is nursed, we always will have energy running out of our ears. What there was was a price adjustment. We had been stealing oil from producers, mostly the Arabs but also the people of Alberta, Venezuela and Nigeria, for over 50 years, and the rule of law on prices was set around the world by seven big international oil companies. All this is in the record. The producers to whom I referred had been stolen from—for over 50 years in some cases—and they set up an international cartel. We had to unite to fight it, but all it was was a group of producers making an agreement to get the price up to something equal to its competitive level measured against electricity, measured against the cost of producing oil from tar sands or whatever measure they used. We allowed ourselves as a nation—as the Europeans, the Americans and the Japanese did—to believe that when there is any evidence of a group of producers standing up to protect themselves by a price agreement, that must be fought, because if we had been stealing from them for 50 years that meant we had a God-given right to keep on stealing.

All this has been said, but it has to be said over and over again. There was no energy crisis in 1973. What there was, was a price adjustment going on. You do not bring out the troops when someone is finally getting a reasonably fair price for his product. Parliament acted fairly responsibly in 1973 and 1974 with respect to oil—it did in 1973, at least—when we said that we had to adjust, but by stages, and that we should try to adjust by keeping our prices just a little bit below the world price. All this was said by people of all parties in 1973. However, at the same time as oil prices started moving up, mineral prices also moved up. We have had a political record here for many years of asking the provinces to tax mines more heavily. Their tax level is a little lower than the average tax. Even royal commissions recommended that. Then suddenly when the provinces saw prices go up, they did exactly what we had been recommending; they raised their taxes on minerals and on oil to get the windfall profit, which was theirs by right. They owned the property, but they had to break every agreement in the book to do it, which was immoral.

The faults we are discussing today are not entirely our own. It is a question of the greed of foreign governments. Our own governments have tried to grab as much as they could of this rising value of resources and, as a result, we have gone too far. The National Energy Program was based on an agreement with the provinces in which both levels of government tried to squeeze the most they could out of this resource. Legally and morally it all belonged to the provinces, but the provinces did not fight that issue. They simply fought to get the most they could, and the guy left at the bottom of the heap was, of course, the man who invested money in oil and gas companies. Of course, they had no choice but to move out, and they will not be coming back in for a little while. They had to move out because the moves we made gave a bigger percentage to the oil companies, but the percentage was of a much smaller pie. They still do not have any money.

We are paying a heavy price for ignoring the fundamentals of our Constitution and of what this Parliament is all about. We should be legislating here based on the Constitution, with a sense of equity and fairness; but we are overcome by this great greed on the parts of governments and all levels to get in on this bonanza of rising resource prices.

I say flatly that much of the blame is not only on our shoulders and the shoulders of the provinces and the companies but also on the shoulders of our courts. This is an unusual statement for a member of the Privy Council to make, but I honestly believe we in Parliament are going to have to face up to this issue and get our own thinking clear. If the courts cannot give us a decision according to what we meant in 1905, in 1930 and in 1867, I think we have a duty to propose a resolution stating flatly our interpretation of the legislation. As Your Honour knows, there are not too many precedents for that, but I think we may be forced into that because reality and common sense tell us that none of us is perfect. I would like to have Your Honour believe that what I have just said about the courts is reluctantly said, but I do say it. I have a feeling the courts have just as much frailty as we have and that until we make what we meant very clear in plain English, I think we will have to wait until we can get the courts to give decisions which are based on the real meaning of the legislators in 1867 and 1930.

I have already mentioned what should be done about this. I think we should have a resolution of both Houses putting into plain language what the property rights are and where they stand in relation to the trade power. We should take a look at property rights and where they stand in relation to prices. By juggling prices, can we pretend there is an emergency and change the Constitution? Can we relate property rights to the definition of crisis? These are things about which we will have to speak up if we want to clear our honour and reputation as parliamentarians.

My conclusion is on the political side. Much to the regret of all Canadians, there was a certain amount of politics involved in this whole issue. Originally it started out merely as an attack on Alberta, the "blue-eyed Arabs", and the people of Alberta responded, as we might expect, with pretty violent counter-attacks. Then this got down to realities in 1974 with the Petroleum Administration Act and became an attack on the oil producing provinces.

• (1810)

We had the federal government's response in 1974. All the provinces raised taxes on oil, gas and minerals, and the federal government came back with a sledge hammer response saying that all royalties and taxes of the provinces on oil and gas were non-deductible under federal income tax regulations. That was a complete breach of the Alberta Act and of the Saskatchewan Act of 1930, and a complete breach of the terms of Confederation in 1867. Many members of this House warned the government that an attack on one resource would lead to attacks on electric power in Ontario, Manitoba, B.C. and Quebec, and pretty soon in the Atlantic provinces. It soon moved into the forestry industry. Once the trend is set of the federal government, under very dubious constitutional authority, attacking the provinces, there is no end to it.

I think that in the next two years, and perhaps sooner, the Petroleum Administration Act should be subjected to a complete examination by the Supreme Court of Canada, particularly Clause 16 on page 11 of the bill which reads as follows:

> Where no agreement is entered into under Section 22 with the government of a producer-province, or any such agreement is terminated by the declaration of the parties, or, in the opinion of the governor in council, is not effective or is not capable of being effective, the governor in council may, by regulation, establish maximum prices for the various qualities and kinds of crude—

There is no other way to describe action where the federal government unilaterally takes the power to set prices for products that, under the Constitution, belong to that province, than to say it is stealing. Until the record is cleared of this provision which appears again, word for word, in the clause relating to gas, we in this House have not done our duty to the country.

There is nothing in these amendments that clarifies the principle of compensation. In the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts of 1930, the principle of compensation is allowed if the federal government, for the national good, takes over any part of the property. That principle of compensation was vaguely included in the Petroleum Administration Act, but there was no clear-cut formula for it. The federal government can stake a claim to $50 billion or $60 billion worth of wealth for the next few years and the only compensation offered amounts to less than $2 billion. We have to face up to these things and get rid of the Petroleum Administration Act. Working in co-operation with the provinces is the only way to do that legally.

The final question that we have to ask is what we can do now that the bill is in place. I think the answer is self-evident. All this talk about how Alberta has backed up on the National Energy Program by $5 billion over the next five years, and the declaration that the federal government has backed up by $2 billion, have not solved anything. Certainly this action has reduced the percentages taken by the province and the federal government. It has increased the percentage due to companies, although it has decreased the actual amount so that the companies have not been helped.

Where is the culprit then, Mr. Speaker? Over 80 per cent of the cost in any capital intensive enterprise today is accounted for by interest rates. A person who deals with small figures such as a $50,000 mortgage knows that over 30 years the mortgage will cost him $200,000. Based on 10 per cent money, over 75 per cent of the amount goes to interest.

What bothers the home owner is the same thing that bothers the oil companies. So much of the money they receive each year is spent on paying interest, and they do not have enough money left to pay back the principal. As a result there is a long period of pay-out. When they look at these figures and relate them to present value, they just drop all sorts of oil and gas projects. That applies to the mining industry as well—all sorts of minerals are left in the ground.

Under this method of financing, with long pay-out periods held up by high interest rates, every capital intensive project in the world is doomed, becuase this does not apply just in Canada. It applies to small people, to big people, to farmers and businessmen. There is no difference when it comes to fighting the common enemy.

Interest rates should be decided by the law of the market and not by the theoretical approach of a group of financial experts in world banking. We are part of a world system, so let it decide what interest rates shall be. With the present high interest rates in the United States and Canada, we are driven to Europe to get money at much lower interest rates. We all know where it comes from. The only risk is the fall of the dollar. These people, who have all this money to lend, are now proposing that if governments will borrow from them, they will lend it for a premium. It is just like buying insurance—it protects the borrower and the lender both. If the premium is less than two per cent and the money is borrowed at six to nine the per cent, it is not a bad deal.

I think we should get our house in order and make a deal with the provinces and the oil companies that everyone will get off the back of the industry, and that the industry will not take anything out either, until the debt is paid back. There is hardly an oil field or gas field that I know of, or a combination field, that could not pay back in four to five years at present prices. Once free of the interest load, and the principal load, there would be a big pie to be divided. Under a contractual arrangement all that would be necessary would be to decide how it should be divided.

All these matters were discussed in great detail when the Hon. Donald Macdonald was minister of energy, mines and resources, and when the Hon. John Turner was minister of finance. Both gentlemen are on the public record of this House as agreeing that this is the right way to go about things. The companies would have enough operating capital and also would make a good profit. Mr. Macdonald suggested that the provinces should get 50 per cent because they owned the resource, and the companies should get 30 per cent to meet the cost of the operation so that they could make a little profit. The federal government should get 20 per cent, which would be much more than it is getting now.

This is all on the record, and it indicates that some people were putting some thought into this matter just eight years ago. Now here we are eight years later, caught up in this great catharsis of everything failing: the NEP—zunk. It cannot go forward because it is capital intensive; our big companies—zunk. They cannot go forward because interest rates are too great for their cash flow. All the little companies, the farmers and small businessmen, are caught in the same way.

• (1820)

There is no need to panic. We have had interest rates bothering us for over 3,000 years. Look back at the laws of Greece and Rome. All their major reforms had to do with interest rates. It is not a new problem. In 1919 there was a great uproar in western Canada and Ontario about high interest rates. The farmers threw out the other parties, elected a new party called the Progressives, and scared the daylights out of the government of the day.

We then got an amendment to the Bank Act which put a ceiling on interest rates of 6 per cent. The banks operated for years under that ceiling, and grew and prospered. Now we have changed that.

The banks came in with a very good argument, based on a royal commission report, that if we took off that ceiling they would compete so hard that interest rates would go down, perhaps to 3 per cent or 4 per cent. Well, Parliament bought that argument. But we had not figured on theoreticians saying that high interest rates were good for our souls, and we would have to slow down our growth because we were too greedy and enjoying life too much. They have us slowed down all right, but they are ruining us in the process.

The amendments contained in motion Nos. 4 and 5, Mr. Speaker, say in substance that we should, in our own interests, reduce taxes. But more basic even than the reduction of taxes is that there should be a recognition that there is a lot more to do. I would like to see come out of this debate recognition of that fact by all parties. In the meantime we can show our sincerity, and concern over where we are going, by supporting these two motions.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to follow the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). For a relative novice like myself it is very stimulating to hear the hon. member bring forward a great deal of argument of historical relevance to some of the discussions we have in the House. I think the basic point the hon. member referred to is indeed a question that Canadians must be pondering as they listen to debates like this, read the newspapers, and note the progress of events in Canada over the past months, indeed years.

The question the hon. member raised and responded to was really whether legislation like Bill C-103 has been brought in knowingly and purposely by a government with a particular direction and motive to be served. I, like the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, do not know the answer for sure. What I do know is that many of the measures brought in during the time I have been able to follow politics closely all have a common thread. Through the 1970s right up till now we have seen progressively greater government involvement through legislation in the fields of health care, energy, and business. Maybe that is by accident, but I think we have to question this seriously, as previous speakers have done today.

As I speak on these two motions, Mr. Speaker, I am going to make a specific proposal. I shall not ask for much, but I would like to have the opportunity to suggest to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Lalonde)—who is in the House and I hope will be here when I make the proposal—that we make one change which I believe will help to overcome some of the difficulties created by the NEP. I will get to that specific suggestion in a few moments.

Motion No. 4 was presented for a very specific reason, and people might wonder why we suggested $28 as a possible increase in that motion. The $28 translates into what amounts to an 18-cents a gallon tax. As it stands now, the tax would be $78 a cubic metre of oil, or 48 cents a gallon. The tax is now about 24 cents a gallon and it will rise to 48 cents under the authority of this legislation. We chose that figure of $28 because we have seen over the past few years, the NEP, the minister, indeed the whole government being very seriously compromised in the eyes of the Canadian people.

We have seen how the 18-cent a gallon tax was dealt with by the government when it was in opposition and during the last federal election, and it is in Motion No. 4 to show the Canadian people in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, in fact in the minister's own province of Quebec, that there is a very serious question about the legitimacy of introducing additional taxation. This bill amounts to taxation without representation because it will allow the minister, in his own way and in his own time, without any additional review, to increase those taxes significantly.

At a time when Canadians had been living with energy prices that were well out of line with world energy prices we were faced with a serious political problem, because it was pretty difficult to run a campaign telling people that they should pay more for energy. That is difficult enough, but the hard part is to do that when you have other people in the same campaign telling people that they do not have to pay more, indeed should not pay more because it would not be fair or equitable and "if you voted in a particular way, you would not have to face that kind of increase."

• (1830)

Memories are short. Sometimes it serves a purpose to forget things that happened years ago, but two and a half years are not that long ago. In that two and a half years we have had successive increases in energy prices which make a mockery out of the claims and promises made to the Canadian people at that time. They may have been justified if there was some way to rationalize why those prices should increase or, indeed, what was being done with the money.

I would like to put on the record some of the figures which we were looking at in December, 1979. At that time a gallon of regular gasoline cost $1.14 or 25.1 cents a litre. At the end of March, 1982, it cost $2 for a gallon of gasoline, or 44.1 cents a litre. That price may vary from place to place. In any event, the price of a gallon of gasoline in Canada is higher than in the United States. Our prices have about doubled in two years.

At the time we faced the challenge of having to defend increased energy prices we knew there was a considerable amount of criticism attached to the fact that we suggested energy prices should increase by 18 cents. What were we hoping to gain by that 18-cent increase? First, we could have avoided some of the confrontation with the producing provinces. The excise tax that we were talking about then did not require an agreement. The increase was well within the domain of the federal government.

More important we were looking at a way to bring Canadian energy self-sufficiency and energy security into focus so that by 1990 Canada, as a nation, would not have to depend on unstable and unreliable sources of oil and petroleum products from other parts of the world. Considerable blame was attached to our party for trying to do that. It is somewhat reminiscent of the position the government has now, of attaching blame to other people for the economic crisis in Canada.

It has been a long time since we have heard the government take responsibility for interest rates and the kind of financial policy that we have in our country. Right now we are told that it is the fault of the United States because of its interest rate policy, and that it does not really matter that our interest rates are several points higher than those in the United States. Obviously if you can make the political argument that it is not your fault, that is the best political position you can have. But if Canadians and the Canadian government are not to blame for the kind of economic policy that we have, who is to blame?

The Americans do not make our laws. The Americans have not been in charge of our economic policy for the last 14 years. The Americans have not been in charge of legislation that has controlled energy development in Canada for the past 14 years. The Americans do not determine what the Governor of the Bank of Canada does.

This government continually uses scapegoats. The Government blames the opposition for creating unrest in the Canadian people because it says we talk of things that hurt people, about people losing their homes, their farms and their businesses. Similarly the government has blamed OPEC for setting prices for petroleum products higher and higher. The government blames the United States government because of its domestic interest rate policy. This government continually avoids its responsibility for the programs it has put in place over the last 14 years. The taxes that have been put on petroleum products in Canada are taxes on top of other taxes. But now I think this government is in danger of the Canadian people reacting. It will be a reaction that has never been experienced by any other government in Canada before.

What I am speaking of has happened south of the border. What happened in California is an example of this. The feeling I get from talking to Canadians is that we are on the verge of experiencing a reaction here. I hope what happens here is as peaceful as what happened in the United States. There have been times when reactions to taxation have not been peaceful.

The government should understand that there are a number of serious problems existing in the country. Perhaps I can compare this to talking about a death. The first thing you do is to deny it. I think the Liberal government is denying the real problem now. Canadians are experiencing severe economic stress of unparalleled proportions.

Several days ago I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in this House. I suggested to him that one of the major reasons for a decline in domestic oil requirements was the recession. He quickly responded we did not have a recession at all last year. In fact, he said that our gross national product increased by 3 per cent. That response, I think, points out a very real problem, and it is partly responsible for the introduction of Motion No. 5 by our party.

I think the minister should look at the last six months of 1981 and he will find gross domestic expenditure decreased in the third quarter by minus 0.5 per cent and it decreased in the fourth quarter by minus 0.9 per cent. Therefore, in the last six months of 1981 Canada started to experience a serious and a significant recession. Authorities are now saying that if things continue with the same single mindedness which the Minister of Energy and others have expressed over the last several months, we will be facing an economic situation which will be truly classed as a depression. But from what we have seen so far from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Energy it will be six months or even a year after that before they will even know it has happened.

That is one of the problems of this government. I do not know whether its members think a thing will go away if they first deny it and then blame it on someone else. After that we have to hope there will be some kind of a response. But the question is whether we will get a response that will make a significant difference or whether we will get band-aid measures, in other words, whether we will get an aspirin or the cure. I do not have any confidence that we will get the cure.

We had an example with the changes to the National Energy Program called "Update 1982." These changes were put into a very pretty red document. The update contains a lot of information. For example, at the front it contains a metric conversion table which is helpful. Now we know what an exajoule, a petajoule and a cubic metre of oil really mean. But, more important, within that document we have a $2 billion concession by the government over the next several years to an industry which has been so severely affected that it will take at least four or five years for it to get back on track, to bloom once again and to help fuel our economy as it did before.

This document is really an admission of failure by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is not a change in mentality, the type of change we need if we are to restore confidence in and the vitality of the industry, if we are to get the industry flying as it flew before and providing the petroleum resources we need to achieve self-sufficiency.

• (1840)

The minister must have looked at the 1981 figures to know that there were no significant new discoveries of oil in Canada. Probably that was one of the reasons for getting this document and these concessions. I do not know what he thought of the findings of Dome Petroleum and Esso in the Beaufort in the last week or so. They were hoping for a well which would come in at about 35,000 barrels per day, and what they got was 3,500 barrels per day.

Mr. Lalonde: That is not correct.

Mr. Gurbin: I will correct my figures. They were hoping for 3,500 barrels per day. In any event, they got one tenth of what they needed for an economic find.

Mr. Lalonde: No.

Mr. Gurbin: That is what the reports I have indicate. If the minister has other reports, that is okay—

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps I might help the hon. member in this particular situation. He mentioned that they hoped for a figure of 35,000 barrels per day from a particular well. No one hoped for that amount. Some of the forecasts indicated 3,500 barrels per day for the Tarsiut well. The tests indicate an assurance of 3,000 barrels per day, and the analysis of Gulf is to the effect that the well could produce 3,500 barrels per day on a continuous basis. It estimates on the basis of what has been drilled that there may be 500 million barrels of oil in reserve. It will drill two more wells this summer to find out how big the reserves are. It is estimated that the company will be ready to proceed with commercial production on the basis of one billion barrels, that it has a field of one billion barrels. The discovery is significant; 3,000 barrels per day is a large well by any measure in Canada. Obviously the company feels that it needs two more wells to ensure itself of what are the reserves. These are the facts.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his intervention and for his assistance with the figures. The minister raised several important points, the first one being the size of the well. That was clearly an error on my part, but the figure was significantly lower than Dome had hoped for and indeed did not prove the viability of the enterprise. As the minister suggested, they do need additional wells in order to make it an economic enterprise.

This brings up another important point which has been suggested by Dome Petroleum as well. Canadians should know that the real cost of bringing a barrel of oil out of the Beaufort is estimated at approximately $100. At $100 per barrel, that is between three and four times as much as Canadians are paying now. With the minister hanging a lot of hope for his energy program on that enterprise, we have a serious problem not only with the inflationary aspects of it, but with the environmental aspects, its reliability, and everything involved in what is really a new technology. We cannot count on that. Although there are some high hopes, the initial well and the findings are below expectation. We do not know for sure whether we will get the extra wells which the minister suggested are necessary for economic viability.

In passing, I am pleased to mention that the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is in the chair; he is a very capable Speaker.

The taxes which are being presented to Canadians require some explanation. Most of us would accept the fact that the federal government needs revenue or needs somehow to raise money, because it provides some programs which are of benefit. There are criticisms which can be made of many of the programs, but I think the need for revenue is understood.

What has happened over the past year and a half with the increased price of energy? In 1981 a typical family driving one car, and heating with oil, paid about $550 more per year than in late 1980. The important point is that of this increase, $409, or nearly 80 per cent, was paid indirectly to the federal government. About one third of the total taxes are federal taxes. This massive increase has created many difficulties, whether in terms of heating homes, operating farms, or operating businesses. The massive increase varies, but 80 per cent of it can be related to federal taxes.

With Motion No. 4 we have tried to put a limit on how much the federal government can take from the pockets of Canadians. We have tried to keep the hand of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources out of the pockets of Canadian businessmen, Canadian farmers, and Canadian home owners who have to heat with oil because alternatives are unavailable to them, and there are still a good many such home owners.

Our second motion is designed to try to put some control on the petroleum compensation charge. The charge in this year alone resulted in revenues being taken in that were $1.4 billion in excess of what was required. This really amplifies one of the points I tried to make earlier, that the indirect response or lack of sensitivity to a changing environment, of the federal government, whether it be a departmental problem or a question of not understanding quickly what is going on, resulted in this additional amount being taken directly out of the pockets of consumers when it was not justified in the legislation we have, and not for the purposes for which it was designed.

• (1850)

We have an extra $1.4 billion which has been taken as a compensation charge on energy which must be imported from offshore. That money, which will be used by the federal government to avoid consumer reaction in Canada when prices would have risen in July, has been sitting there and gradually increasing over the past year because the federal government did not have the ability to respond quickly to a changing scene. The original justification given for this charge was to pay for oil imports. It has now collected $1.4 billion more than it needs.

There are several ways to approach the current situation. Through our motion we have attempted to ensure that it be the government's responsibility to prevent an exorbitant amount of money being collected in an unfair or unreasonable manner. A number of other steps could be taken, particularly with respect to resources of that magnitude. I would like to propose a concept to the minister which I hope he will at least consider. It is a positive suggestion which may help him, particularly in the face of his many failures over the past several years. It may be a way to help him to achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990, which we would all like to see, and it may help rationalize some of the inequities which exist in Canada's energy scene.

The hon. member who spoke just prior to me suggested as well that Canada had many forms of energy running out of its ears. It is a known fact that we are net exporters of energy. We also know that there are many arbitrary and unrealistic pieces of legislation and policies regarding various forms of energy. For example, electricity is treated differently from oil. Solar energy is treated differently from other types of energy. Various forms of energy are not considered for their respective values but only when they happen to evolve through various forms of development.

This taxation measure, which has resulted in federal coffers being swollen by $1.4 billion more than is needed, presents an opportunity to introduce a concept of parity in the various energy fields. This may not be a new concept, since I know that the minister realizes that a calorie is a calorie is a calorie. However, as far as I can determine there is very little legislation to show that we are making any serious attempt to address the issue of equally developing different forms of energy.

I believe it is important to realize that while many people are looking at the husbanding of the petroleum industry and its resources, which we know are finite, we now have an opportunity to enter some of the windows of technology and to take advantage of some new opportunities for energy resources which have been developed to the point where commercialization is possible. A possible alternative manner in which this petroleum compensation charge to equalize the difference between domestic and imported oil could be used is to use a small portion of the fund to provide a balance which would allow other energy sources to be developed to the point of competetiveness, and enter through the window where these resources can be expanded at a pace which the marketplace would allow.

Let us use solar energy as an example. We know that each barrel of oil has approximately four gigajoules of energy. An equivalent value of gigajoule solar energy could be determined considering the world price, domestic price and the import compensation charge. On a comparison basis solar hot water heating would cost $100 per gigajoule.

This is what the compensation charge gives in a preferential way to the Canadian energy scene in order to pay for the difference between domestic and imported oil. Why can we not introduce the concept of parity and allow that level of compensation to an energy source which would replace a given amount of oil with an equivalent amount of alternate energy? It would be an equalizer in the system and would help develop a source of energy which is at a commercial stage now, and which can reliably provide 50 per cent of our hot water needs in the domestic situation, and probably a lot more in some commercial operations. This would allow it to earn its way. It would amount to $100 per gigajoule. Although these figures could be refined, I am confident that this is approximately what it would cost. It could be worked out under a grants system or other financing programs. The equalizer would be $100 per gigajoule, which is roughly equivalent to $400 per barrel over a 20-year period. This is one manner of relating different types of energy on an equal and even basis.

The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who will speak after me, will have more to say about the tar sands issue. I am not suggesting that we extend the use of solar energy, which includes ethanol and methanol to the point where we no longer need the tar sands or Cold Lake, but only to the point where it is on equal footing with those petroleum resources. If we relate the amount of spending to stimulate the industry in the Alsands project, to another energy area one can see a significant opportunity to provide the energy which we are missing since it is presently unavailable.

Everyone knows that those projects must and will be developed at the appropriate time, but it probably will not happen until a change in government. However, at this point there are many things which can be done to help provide a replacement for the loss of security and oil production which would have come from those projects. I would appreciate it if the minister would consider that suggestion. We will be presenting an additional amendment to suggest precisely that.

• (1900)

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak on Bill C-103 and the motions to amend it, Motions Nos. 4 and 5 which we are presently discussing. Motion No. 4 states:

> That Bill C-103, an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 31 by striking out line 13 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:—

We should remember that on page 19 the words that our party wants to strike out are the words "amount not exceeding seventy-five dollars", and we want to substitute the words "amount not exceeding twenty-eight dollars".

The change proposed here would lower the maximum level of the petroleum compensation charge to $28 per cubic metre from the $75 set down in the bill as it now reads. The petroleum compensation charge is presently levied at a rate of $39.64 per cubic metre, or $6.30 per barrel, which has the effect of raising gasoline prices at the pump by 24 cents per gallon.

In effect, this amendment would force the government to lower the petroleum compensation charge from its present level and require that the excess amounts collected by the petroleum compensation charge at the rate above $28 per cubic metre since January, 1981, be reimbursed to Canadians through a lowering of the petroleum compensation charge. The $28 per cubic metre, approximately $4.50 per barrel, would limit the PCC effect upon motor gasoline prices to 18 cents per gallon. I think that might sound vaguely familiar. This is the same increase, of course, as was proposed in the Crosbie budget—

Mr. Waddell: Pure coincidence.

Mr. Shields: —and which has more than doubled under the Liberals since December, 1979.

The petroleum compensation charge has been the largest component in the Liberal-caused gasoline price increases, having been raised from a level which translates from four cents a gallon at the pumps to 24 cents per gallon.

The government ended up with a surplus in the petroleum compensation fund last year, 1981, of $1.4 billion. Where is the $1.4 billion? Is it in general revenue? Is it another form of taxation? This is a far cry from what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) acknowledges may be a slight surplus.

It is a reasonable amendment and one which I feel the government should seriously consider. Motion No. 5 which, again, is a conservation motion, would add the following:

> The tariff of charges set out under subsection (1.1) shall be set at such a level that the aggregate of revenues from those charges does not exceed the amount required to pay the compensation payable under the provisions of Division I of this act.

In other words, what we are basically saying is that there should be a sliding scale for the compensation charge. Surely the monitoring board can determine what the compensation charge should be. Surely the monitoring board can monitor the price of oil that we must purchase from off shore and compensate it accordingly so that Canadians are not overtaxed for this compensation fund. If we added this new subsection to the Petroleum Administration Act, it would write into law the rules for setting the charge that is now only implied by the way the scheme is supposed to operate.

It would require the petroleum compensation board to monitor any changes in the cost of imports so as to be able to make the appropriate changes in the petroleum compensation charges as quickly as possible. In other words, we would not then go through what we did over the past eight months when we found we were in the ludicrous situation of importing oil from other countries. At that time, the refiners were able to purchase on the spot market more cheaply, by up to $4 a barrel, because the compensation charge was paid, which effectively shut in crude oil in the western basin. We were importing oil and it was being paid by the taxpayer, the guy who pulled up to the pump to fill his tank. The petroleum compensation charge was actually being used to give windfall profits to the refiners in Montreal. I cannot imagine anything more idiotic or stupid.

As I said before, in 1981 there was a surplus of more than $1.4 billion from taxes to raise revenues for the purpose of subsidizing oil imports. Obviously, the level of charges should have been adjusted and should be adjusted in the future to raise only enough revenue to cover the cost of subsidizing imports. An error of $1.4 billion, as I said before, is definitely more than the small surplus which is possible according to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sorry to see the minister leave.

Mr. Lalonde: I'm listening to you.

Mr. Shields: One thing has become very apparent to me since coming to this House. I suppose it has been partially due to my background in a small business, not a large business. However, I think it also holds true with large businesses, or in the business community in general, that when a mistake is made in a business decision, the people responsible for running that business admit their mistake. They admit it immediately and say, "It is wrong and we have to correct it".

It was very obvious that when the government introduced its tax measure in the guise of a national energy policy, a mistake was made. The government insists on going along the same road with that mistake, instead of standing up and saying, "We made a mistake. We will have to re-evaluate. We will have to change". But, no, we do not hear that. If the government admitted its mistake, I would be the first one to stand in this House and say, "Good for you. You recognized the mistake and you will change it". But instead, we stand here, discussing over and over again the problems that the national energy policy has created for my constituency, for the Alberta and Saskatchewan economies, and, indeed, for the Ontario and Quebec economies. It has affected virtually every province in this great country of ours.

However, these discussions fall on deaf ears. Why? It is because hon. members come to this House, and they can only think to themselves, "We cannot show that we are backing down. The government never makes mistakes." That is absolute, total garbage, and any reasonable man will understand that governments make mistakes as businesses make mistakes, and as individuals make mistakes. However, it takes courage, it takes leadership, and it takes vision to be able to stand up and say, "We have made the mistake and we will rectify it." We do not find that courage in the present government. We do not find it in the cabinet. We do not find it in the back benches. In the government we do not find the leadership which has the vision to see what it is doing to the country. I spend a great deal of time talking to members on the opposite side, both cabinet members and backbenchers. Individually, I find them to be thoughtful, considerate, capable men. As a group, with policy set by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has lost all sense of direction, they lose all this. They lose it the minute they walk into this House and legislation is introduced.

In committee we go through legislation clause by clause. I have had Liberal backbenchers come to me after sitting on the national energy committee and saying that what the national energy policy is doing to the oil industry in this country is a crime. They do not have the courage to say that in committee or to stand up and say it in the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Name them.

Mr. Shields: I find that absolutely sickening.

Mr. Kaplan: Do you have the courage to name them?

Mr. Shields: I suggest that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) talk to some of those members.

Mr. Kaplan: Which ones? Who are they?

• (1910)

Mr. Shields: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) brought in an update on his energy policy. He will give back more than $2 billion. I say give back because the national energy policy is not an energy policy but a tax policy. It is a tax policy of greed of this government which wants money to allow it to continue spending like a drunken sailor all across this country.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is marching backward to the tune of $2.5 billion. Something must be wrong. However, that is the only time Canada starts to march forward. I would say that is not enough. The investment climate in this country today has been totally destroyed. Investors will not invest in Canada. Why should they trust a government which moves in with a national energy policy by which it steals 25 per cent of the assets that have been developed? It does that through a back-in provision of the national energy policy. It is not just foreign investors but Canadian investors as well who do not want to invest in the economy of Canada. They do not look forward to the time when things are going to change.

I travel around my riding talking to businessmen and entrepreneurs. They believed that this country had a future and wanted to invest in it. They wanted to build something from nothing. They wanted to build something by themselves. I talk to these people no more. They are bailing out as fast as they can, those who are still surviving, those who have not gone bankrupt or are in receivereship.

These people are putting their money into cash investments in order to draw interest. Why work 16 or 18 hours a day for a government that is greedy? The government will either heavily tax those people or, with the stroke of a pen on one fateful night in the House, change the economic climate with a budget called the national energy policy.

The only problem with the oil industry today is government greed. The oil industry was making the wheels of the Canadian economy spin, creating jobs right across this country. What did the government do? It attacked the multinationals. It said that "multinational" was a good dirty word and it could use it to swing Canadians behind the government. It was not the multinationals that got hurt. It was those Canadians who were doing exactly what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wanted them to do, those Canadians who, as statistics will show, were buying the oil industry. Ownership of the oil industry was progressing satisfactorily. It was moving ahead.

Time after time we have heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in interviews over television and in press releases, congratulating himself and patting himself on the back for the wonderful things that have been done by the national energy policy. He said it is dong what the government said it would do. He says, "Look how we are conserving oil in Canada, thousands of barrels a day." He says, "We are using less than we were last year or before the introduction of the national energy policy."

That is because the wheels of industry have ground to a halt. Plants are closing in Ontario and Quebec. Oil rigs, service rigs and trucks in western Canada are being sold. I said before in the House that the largest auction sale of all oilfield equipment in the history of the Canadian oil industry took place at Nisku, south of Edmonton. Oil rigs which cost a million dollars to purchase and which were still new, never having been spudded into the ground, sold to American buyers for $510,000. Is that a multinational oil company? No. It is a Canadian oil company.

Two men in Fort McMurray built one of the finest welding and machine shops north of the city of Edmonton to service the industry. Then the national energy policy came in and everything these men had built up over 20 or 25 years went down the tube. I talked to the wife of one of these gentlemen. They had lost their home and their furniture. The sheriff stood in the doorway and told them to take only their personal belongings. She asked me whether there was anything I could do. The sheriff would not let her take a table that belonged to her great-grandmother. I could do nothing because it was classed as household furniture. In spite of this, the minister congratulates himself on the success of his national energy policy.

We were told that after the energy agreement was signed, Alsands and the Cold Lake synthetic oil plants would go ahead. As we all know, they died. We were told that the energy agreement would encourage Alberta's petrochemical industry. Now the economic development minister for Alberta has stated that the Ottawa domestic tax on ethane threatens to make Alberta non-competitive. That is strictly a federal tax imposed by a greedy government, with no thought to what it is doing to the industry. Or, if there is a thought, it is a designed thought, and I do not believe that anyone could be that callous and say, "We are going to teach Alberta, we are going to teach these people in the west a lesson." I do not believe it. I believe it is ignorance on the minister's part. He is listening to bureaucrats who do not understand what they have done.

• (1920)

We were told that Canadian ownership would be accelerated by these policies, that we were going to be able to wave the flag and say that we own the oil industry. Mr. Speaker, we know what has happened to Dome; will Dome survive without massive government assistance? We do not know. Turbo Resources, another Canadian company that took this government at its word, went out on an expansion policy and started to move in and buy out foreign investors. Are they going to survive without massive government intervention? These are just two of the companies that trust the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to their peril; to their absolute peril they trusted him. Now the saying is, with Dome, Jack Gallagher is a pretty sharp cookie, he has got the government now in his corner, they have got to bail him out, and if they do not, maybe a couple of banks will go with him. Mr. Speaker, that is sure some government policy to move toward Canadian ownership.

The national energy policy was imposed on western Canada by a government without representation in the west. It was imposed on the energy industry without any representation or discussion with that industry. The national energy policy seeks to control Canadian economy, with bureaucratic control and government control. This is the government that rewards people like Branny Schepanovich with a directorship on Air Canada. He is the Liberal in Alberta, the one and only Liberal in Alberta, who is supposed to be the superman in the organization field. He has been a Liberal since he left university about 16 or 20 years ago. He has let his neck stick out there. He has received his just reward, on the board of directors of Air Canada. That is the sickness of this government.

There is a survey just released from the Petroleum Services Association. I would like to put it on the record for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has left the House again but perhaps his parliamentary secretary could bring it to his attention. He will not believe it, he will think up some reason why this cannot be, because it is coming from an opposition member. I ask him to get a copy of it. Let us look at this survey. It is a survey by the Petroleum Services Association. It says that 13 oil-well drilling and service companies have gone bankrupt, and that 23 more oil-well drilling and servicing companies are expected to go bankrupt this year. Where are they located? They are all located in Alberta and Saskatchewan. And 12,000 direct jobs have been lost in that area of the oil industry since the national energy policy, that is direct jobs, and I stress direct, because it is too difficult to determine how many indirect jobs are lost, because they are not buying pipe, they are not buying trucks, they are not buying motors. We all know where those materials are produced. They say that 227 drilling rigs have left Canada, rigs that were busy in Canada and working in Canada. Those 227 drilling rigs have left Canada since the inception of the national energy policy.

What is a drilling rig? Let us talk about that, Mr. Speaker. It consists of 227 small factories employing anywhere from 24 to 35 or 40 people. It is a small factory on its own. Can you imagine the hue and cry that would come out of Quebec or Ontario if 227 small factories were forced to close the door because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced that policy into the House of Commons and at one stroke of the pen destroyed this industry? Can you imagine that? But we cry in the wilderness in the hinterland provinces, and it upsets me. Members will get up and say that it is members from the other side of the House, members who go back to their riding, who are causing the division in our land. That is not true and they know full well that it is not true. We have 461 drilling rigs left in Canada today. Of those 461 that are not being put up for auction—some of them will be, they will be going across the auction block soon—out of those 461 drillings rigs there are 84 actually drilling in the western basin today.

What about the downturn in the economy? If they were receiving for their production the world price, the same price that we pay Venezuela or Mexico or Iran or Saudi Arabia, if they were allowed to go in and drill without the tax regime that is being placed in front of them now, they would be finding the oil. But the attack was on. I am convinced that the attack was on the western basin. It was an attack on the oil industry in general, it was an attack that said, "We are going to move all the focus on energy development and finding the oil; we are going to move it to Canada lands, to the north, to the offshore." Even with the collapse of Alsands and the shelving of the Cold Lake project, we still hear the minister saying that the Alsands are not needed, that we will have plenty of oil coming from the Beaufort Sea in the north, that we will still have plenty of oil over in Hibernia. Mr. Speaker, they think they had it tough with Alberta when they were trying to work out an equitable agreement on sharing the exploitation of the natural resources in Alberta. "They ain't seen nuthin' yet" because I do not think Newfoundlanders will stand by and allow this government to steamroll over them, not for one minute. I am absolutely 100 per cent behind the Newfoundland government. This government knows nothing but unilateral action. That was confirmed when this government said the reserves in the Hibernia field and off the coast of Newfoundland belong to the federal government. The federal government has been unable to negotiate because it does not sit down and talk and try to work things out in a co-operative way, in the old way, in the Canadian way. Hon. members opposite emulate our famous Prime Minister, who stood and said, "Co-operative federalism is dead". In other words, "To hell with the provinces, we will do it our way or it will not be done". Where are those members of the Liberal Party who sit in government? Where are those backbenchers with spines who can stand up and tell their leader that enough is enough because what he is doing is destroying Canada?

• (1930)

I have never seen more animosity toward a government on the part of the people generally than I have seen build up over the past two years. That scares me because I love my country. I want my country to become great. I want my country to adopt the vision adopted by people like Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. We have lost that vision totally because of one man and his lackeys in the cabinet.

I have said it before and I will say it again: only ten backbench Liberal members are needed to stand and say to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, "Enough is enough". They are destroying the country, and if they will not admit their mistakes, those ten backbench Liberal members could withdraw their support. That would change the direction of this country.

People in this country no longer have any faith that things will turn around. I had occasion to speak with a chap who had been down in the United States, where the rate of unemployment is high. He was down there on business for a week. He told me he got a real boost when he went down there because the attitude of the man on the street—the people—is that they will work together and beat this thing. Their attitude is that they will drive inflation down, as they are doing. Their attitude is that they will drive interest rates down and get their country moving again. There are problems in the United States, but that chap told me that coming to Canada is like coming to another world. Businessmen are down. They are looking for more of the same that we have seen over the past two years. They are asking us when we will get rid of our incompetent government, which is doing nothing. There is indecision. There is no longer any national will in Canada. It is gone. It is gone because of the divisive, unilateral policies of the present government. I never thought I would see the day when individual Canadians would hang their heads and say, "I don't see a future here." Men I have known intimately since I was in grade school have telephoned me and approached me to ask if I could find out how they could emigrate to the United States or Australia. At least ten have done that, and that is a conservative estimate. There are men who love their country but no longer see a future here because of this continuing idiocy.

The amendments we have moved are very reasonable. All we are asking is that the government stop ripping off the people at the pumps through its National Energy Program. If the government needs a petroleum compensation charge, sure, Canadians do not mind spreading the grief around and compensating those in other parts of the country who have to pay more for gas or fuel. But why should the minister be allowed to gather up in his kitty $1.4 billion, as he did last year, and then say, "Well, there might be a slight increase?" Our amendments are reasonable amendments. They should be looked at, and I hope the government will act on them.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you very much. I appreciate the time you have given to me.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I follow the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) with some sadness. I know him to be a very forthright man who is deeply concerned about his country. I sat here for 35 minutes and listened to the impassioned plea of a representative of a great part of Canada which is, of course, the oil sands centre. What is perhaps even more important, the hon. member for Athabasca is a man who thoroughly understands the industry and thoroughly understands the arduous task of making a living under the uncertain conditions this government has imposed not only on him but also on the men, women and families he represents.

It was disquieting to hear the hon. member for Athabasca talk about the loss of oil drilling rigs and the loss of jobs, not just in Alberta but right across the country. As the hon. member pointed out, we know where pumps are built. We know where pipes are put together. We know where gaskets are made. We know where trucks are manufactured. Indeed, we know where refrigerators, toasters and irons are manufactured. As the hon. member for Athabasca has said, it is not just the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan who are affected.

What bothered me most was the hon. member's despair and his near loss of hope. That is what we must redress, and there must be changes.

Under the leadership of our distinguished energy critic, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), we have put forward a number of amendments. There are more with which we must yet deal. We have put forward amendments attempting to remove, for example, Clause 12. Such amendments would, in effect, do away completely with the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. We have dealt with that. That motion is pending and will be voted upon in due course. It attempts to bring some sense to the direction in which this government is leading us with the support of the National Energy Program.

• (1940)

In our second motion, which has already been discussed, we have attempted to restore some direction as well. In that instance we did so by moving to strike out Clause 16 for the purpose of denying the cabinet the unilateral power to revoke price agreements. This afternoon the hon. member for Calgary Centre spoke at some length about the government's attitude to written contracts. It was a damning comment on the government's regard for agreements.

In our third motion we approach the question of credibility and attempt to restore some rational approach to it. This is a reasonably technical amendment which deals with bringing into balance the pricing of crude oil, which will affect those who do the exploration and consumers who use the product as well as governments.

The motion before the House now extends that attempt to bring some sanity and some thoughtful rationale into the process. The change proposed would have the effect of lowering the maximum level of the petroleum compensation charge to some $28 per cubic metre from the $75 provided in the bill as it stands.

The PCC is presently levied at the rate of $39.64 per cubic metre or about $6.30 per barrel. This has the effect of raising the price of gasoline at the pump by 24 cents per gallon. Our amendment would force the government to lower the PPC from its present level and require that the excess collected above the $28 per cubic metre since January, 1981 be reimbursed to Canadians, through lowering the PCC.

In actual fact, as has been pointed out by others on this side of the House, this is more than symbolic; in a sense it is poetic. It would have the effect of limiting government to its promises of just a couple of years ago. It would also have the effect of reducing the increase in the cost of gasoline to the 18 cents per gallon level promised by the hon. member for St. John's West

(Mr. Crosbie) under the leadership of the right hon. gentleman who then led the government.

The need for these approaches becomes clear in other amendments. There is a need for guidelines that are understandable, credible, believeable, workable and acceptable. Our next amendment would achieve those things. We would require monitoring and adjustments from guidelines that would be understandable, that would be known and would be clear. If we had a projection of the money that will be collected by the government if left untethered, it would be revealing. Already it has been identified as exceeding $1.4 billion, and theoretically there is no end to it. That is $1.4 billion already misappropriated, in effect, from the consumers of this country. It is in excess of the amount required to pay compensation for imported oils.

The hon. member for Athabasca and others have touched on this in recent months. We all know that we could do better on the spot market.

It is pleasant to see that the distinguished Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) from Halifax has entered the House. I trust he raises his voice in caucus—

Mr. LeBlanc: He does.

Mr. Forrestall: Not to much effect, though. I would put this rhetorical question to him: who pays the second highest electricity rates in the country south of 60 and north of 45? Was he effective with his colleagues on that one?

Mr. Regan: How much higher would they be if we had gone to world price for oil?

Mr. Forrestall: We would be at 18 cents per gallon instead of 92! I do not have to calculate that for the minister.

There would be no need for massive increases in the cost of electricity in the Atlantic provinces next year if the minister had shown any concern and had approached the government asking it for compassion to include some cushion for people on fixed and low incomes in its program.

Prince Edward Island is paying two and a half times the domestic electricity rate of any other place in southern Canada, from P.E.I. to Vancouver. From north of 45 and south of 55, no one is paying more than Prince Edward Islanders. Very few people pay more than Newfoundlanders and even fewer pay more than Nova Scotians where the cost of electricity is approaching twice the national average: In part, that is because the petroleum compensation charges are so far in excess of reality that they have driven the price of oil-fired electricity way up.

The distinguished member from Halifax may speak out in caucus and cabinet, but he does not speak out in public very often. He has not been effective because the cost of electricity in Nova Scotia is double, and in some cases is more than double, the cost to other Canadians.

There is a great need for a return to some semblance of reality, and this can be seen in a number of ways. As the oil compensation charge now stands, it hurts farmers, fishermen and those who must find their living in our forests, as well as small industry. It is not just the domestic users of electricity who are affected; the entire secondary manufacturing base is directly affected at a time when it is difficult enough for them to survive the present high interest rates and bad mortgages. It affects our fishermen, and it affects our young people who might very well want to go into fishing or follow their parents on the farm. It is discouraging because there is no end to it. The effect of our amendment would be to take away the excess amount of taxation and allow people a little bit of freedom and a greater opportunity to get on with the development of their own lives.

• (1950)

In addition, Mr. Speaker, as we will be demonstrating in the days ahead, we want to put some sunset clauses into this bill with respect to the charges. We will move amendments which stipulate that the charge will continue only until it has reached $1.46 billion, that being the amount required to buy Petrofina, not including the brokerage fees paid to—the minister's son is with us today in the gallery, Mr. Speaker. Happy birthday. How is he going to get a job? Ask Dave that tonight. Today is a very significant day for David Regan; he becomes a teenager today. His dad is a better fighter than that; he is a better fighter for all Canadians. We look forward to great things from him in the area of oil and gas pricing.

We will move other amendments in this area, Mr. Speaker, which we hope will have the impact of ensuring that the Canadian ownership account is used for its original purpose: to increase Canadian ownership. There is nothing complex about that. As it now reads, the bill allows the government to buy Canadian companies; that is not increasing Canadian ownership. The whole purpose of the Canadian ownership account and these enormously inflated tax levels was to increase Canadian ownership. You do not increase Canadian ownership by buying companies already Canadian owned. At least if you do, I have not quite been able to figure out how. Perhaps someone over there might enlighten us. The points we are putting forward have been designed to try to rationalize this process and return some sanity to the NEP.

The hon. member for Athabasca said that individually members over there are not bad; some of them are reasonably intelligent. The whip is a great man but apparently unable to persuade his colleagues to a sensible point of view. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) is unable to persuade anyone. On his own he is not a bad fellow; reasonably intelligent, smiles once in awhile. Too bad he does not have a military force to play with any more. As you go down the line, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), on their own, after five in the afternoon, are not bad fellows. But something happens to them when they go to work at 8.30 in the morning, and no one has been able to quite figure out what it is.

Three or four times today, directly and indirectly, the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), was asked: have you talked to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? Well, do you know what I believe? Since the Prime Minister went to Versailles, not one of them has picked up the phone and called the leader of this country and said, "Look, we have a problem. What are you doing over there? What are we supposed to say to Canadians?" Mr. Speaker, I do not think there has been any communication whatsoever. Is that the way you operate? Is that what happens to you between 8.30 in the morning and when you leave your office? Do you lose all capacity to communicate with one another except through the bureaucracy? Perhaps if you did talk to each other, the time of the House would not be taken up trying to restore some sanity to the minister's NEP.

All we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to take the excess taxes—which in some cases have been misused or ill used, improperly used certainly—and put them back into the pockets of Canadians. We want to give the little fellow a break, the senior citizens, persons on fixed incomes or low pensions. Give the fellow driving a car a bit of a break. For most Canadians a car is no longer a luxury, it is a matter of necessity. That is what we are trying to do, curb the over-zealousness and blindness of this government in its pursuit of an energy program which has failed this country. They were warned it would fail, and yet they steadfastly and blindly refused to alter or change it.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this debate will carry on. The debate in the country will carry on. Sooner or later, whether or not it is here on the floor of this chamber, the answers to these questions will be given. The questions will be answered in a general federal election. If one were held tomorrow the questions would be answered to the very clear and distinct advantage of the Canadians who have to bear the very unfair burden of this government's National Energy Program. Somebody said the other day that if you cannot talk to one another any more, that if you are so broken down in the treasury benches that no longer are there lines of communication, that if you do not hear direction from the Prime Minister as to what you should be doing here, and if you have lost control of the bureaucracy—the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is one sign of that and the National Energy Program of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is a clear indication of it—why in the name of all that is good and holy do you not do the honourable thing, call a general election and resign?

• (2000)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to speak on report stage of Bill C-103 and the two motions before us tonight. I, like many members, have had the opportunity to speak at some length on second reading of this bill. At that time I laid before the House those things that I thought objectionable in the bill, the philosophies contained therein and the principles which were incorporated in it. In reading the draft which has emerged from committee I do not think many improvements have been made. It is my intention tonight to impose upon myself the rules of relevancy. These are not usually adhered to strictly in the House. But I intend to speak solely on the proposals that came out of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation and the two motions before us tonight. As a consequence, my presentation will likely be rather technical, somewhat dry but, mercifully, quite short.

It seems the changes proposed at report stage by and large are technical changes. There has been no change in policy and no change in substance. We are dealing with rather small technical changes. I wish that had not been so, but what more can you expect from the government in office?

I count about five separate proposals in the bill reported to this House on June 1 by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette). In my opinion, it proved to be somewhat of a disappointment. The first change is to be incorporated into Clause 9 and Clause 33 of the bill. Clause 9 deals with penalties for the non-payment of the oil export charge, Clause 33 deals with very similar penalties to be levied for non-payment of the petroleum compensation charge. I point out that the penalties referred to here are not penalties to be imposed in the case of fraud; they are penalties such as those with which the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) is familiar. They are not cases of deliberate fraud but rather oversights on the part of people supposed to be paying these taxes.

In the original Petroleum Administration Act, the amount of penalty to be levied in cases of default was 1 per cent of the outstanding amount. This seemed quite fair and reasonable. People have lived with that levy for some time and have become used to it. However, in the original version of Bill C-103 it was the intention of the government to increase this penalty charge from 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent of the outstanding balance. I do not know why the government wanted to increase it by that amount. It would seem that 1 per cent per month, which is 14 per cent or 15 per cent per annum, is quite reasonable when there is no case of deliberate fraud. I presume the government thought that inflation would continue and in that case it might be better to levy a penalty charge amounting to some 20 per cent per annum or 1.5 per cent per month.

I am pleased to see that the penalty was rolled back to the original amount prescribed under the Petroleum Administration Act, that is, 1 per cent. In effect, having gone through this exercise, there is no change. I am pleased to support this recommendation of the committee, and I do not think any useful purpose was served by the proposed increase to 1.5 per cent per month.

I would, however, point out that when it comes to deliberate non-payment of the various charges and taxes to be levied, then we have a much different situation. The government has in no way backed down from the vicious penalties that it wishes to impose on people for deliberate non-payment. As an example, I will quote from page 12 of the bill. Clause 18 refers to penalties to be levied with respect to non-payment of the transportation fuel recovery compensation charge. These are very similar penalties prescribed for the non-payment of the compensation charge or non-payment of the oil export charge. In Clause 18 we read:

"(a) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both—

Under the old Petroleum Administration Act the maximum fine for a summary conviction was $200,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. The prison term has been doubled. Similarly, for conviction on indictment under the old Petroleum Administration Act the maximum penalty was imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, whereas under Bill C-103 and the new energy administration act, the penalty prescribed is, as we read in Clause 18:

(b) on conviction on indictment, to a fine not exceeding one million dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both."

I have registered my objection to these penalties before. It seems that if you are convicted for murder, rape or armed robbery you are likely to be back on the streets again in six months to a year, whereas if you refuse to pay your Petro-Canada tax you are fined $1 million and end up in jail for five years in the lowermost dungeon operated by those opposite.

When it comes to prescribing penalties under the law, it seems that those who would break the tax laws of this country are subject to much greater penalties than those who commit crimes against generally accepted moral standards of behaviour. I think that at some point in time we should take a look at the penalties prescribed under the Criminal Code for certain offences and then take another look at the penalties prescribed for breaking the tax laws of this country. In my opinion, the penalties for breaking tax laws are grossly out of proportion.

The second recommendation of the committee deals with a rather technical subject. It deals with overpayment in the EPF payments from the federal government to a province. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we dealt not so long ago with this very subject when we were talking about writing off certain sums of money in cases of provinces having been found to have received too many EPF payments because their estimated population was below that subsequently established by the recent census. Provinces found themselves owing fair amounts of money to the federal government. In certain cases those amounts were written off. If an overpayment has been made under EPF, it can be counted as part of the refund on certain oil export charges which under the Energy Administration Act would be accruing to the particular province. It could deal with agency fees because I understand that the provinces, by reason of their collecting the oil export charge on behalf of the Government of Canada, are eligible for certain agency fees.

• (2010)

This is a technical change. It has certain advantages to it, despite the way in which I have explained it which was rather complex. It should simplify the bookkeeping somewhat and it should get around the problem which we very often have where the federal government gives a cheque to the province and three weeks later the province writes a cheque to the federal government. It should simplify some of that, at least in theory. It will avoid certain double payments.

For these reasons I support the change, but it is illustrative of the very technical nature of the legislation before us. It is extremely complex legislation. I imagine there are very few of us in the House—and even fewer in the general public—who could understand the bill clause by clause. It is technical, administrative law designed for a very technocratic government.

Although I do not expect that it will be the case, I hope we can simplify some of the tax legislation. I am pleased to see the Minister of National Revenue sitting opposite. I am sure he would like to see that happen as well, but he probably suspects, even more than I, that it will not be the case. We find ourselves living with these very complex tax laws, rules and regulations which are very difficult to interpret. The more technical we get, the more likely it is that some technocratically-inclined lawyer will find loopholes in them.

I have another difficulty with Clause 10 of the bill which amends Section 17 of the act. It is difficult to read the new draft of Bill C-103 which was reprinted as amended and reported on June 1. Clause 10 amends Section 17.1 of the Energy Administration Act. Clause 10 becomes Clause 10(1) which deals with four subsections. If we go by the way the amendments have been printed, we come to the end of Clause 10 which deals with Section 17.1(4), and suddenly we are stuck with Clause 10(2). It is very difficult to find out to what that refers. The main difficulty is that subclause (2) is inserted, and it is the only one in the bill which does not amend a section of some other existing act of Parliament. Every clause in the bill, including the short title, amends the Petroleum Administration Act or some other act of Parliament but Clause 10(2) does not. It stands on its own, the way I read it.

If somebody wanted to make an update of all new legislation, he would take various acts of Parliament and all the clauses which amend different sections of different acts and apply them to the various acts. He would find that he had one subclause left over with no place for it to go. After all the other clauses were taken out and applied to the respective acts, we would have an act of Parliament comprised of one subclause. It is inconsistency in drafting, and it is very difficult to explain or to comprehend. Would it not be possible to rewrite or renumber Clause 10(2) so that it applies to the Petroleum Administration Act? It quite rightly belongs there. Then it would amend some section of that act and would not stand on its own in the middle of nowhere. This is a very technical matter which is best addressed by draftsmen in the Department of Justice. I hope someone in that department will read my remarks and take another look at it before third reading.

Now I should like to deal with what I perceive as the third major change recommended in the report on Bill C-103. It alters the wording in three clauses—Clause 11 which deals with the oil export charge, Clause 38 which deals with the petroleum compensation charge and Clause 44 which deals with petroleum compensation payments. Again this is a fairly technical matter, but previously compensation charges and payments were to be levied and made in respect of certain materials. Paragraph 65.19 of the old act gave the governor in council the power by regulation to designate certain products for payment or charges. Paragraph 65.19(a) allowed the governor in council by regulation to designate any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbon resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons described in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition "petroleum" in Section 65.1(1) as a petroleum product. This did not include the possibility of a petroleum-like product such as synthetic crude oil produced from coal. In the first draft of Bill C-103 we see in a similar place in the legislation a redefinition which indicates that the governor in council may make regulations designating any product resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons or coal as a petroleum product.

This so very often happens when we try to be more encompassing with our legislation; when we try to be more specific, we run into difficulties. There are certain difficulties with that definition. Thus, under the new proposal it was necessary to redefine what was really meant. The new definition has certain advantages. It indicates that the governor in council may "designate as a petroleum product any substance resulting from the processing or refining of hydrocarbons or coal if such substance is asphalt or a lubricant, or is a suitable source of energy by itself or when it is combined or used in association with something else." No doubt that is a better definition, but it still leaves us with certain difficulties.

In my opinion it would exclude certain things which should be excluded. Certain oil products should be excluded from the definition, such as aniline, benzene solvents, and various dye stuffs. Also it would exempt certain petroleum products such as solvents, plastics, and these types of things. This was good because we needed to encompass in our definition of these chargeable products certain coal products such as synthetic oil from coal to which I referred earlier. I understand that there is a certain amount of research being conducted by the Canmet division of Energy, Mines and Resources. I was pleased recently to visit that research establishment. I certainly hope, as do many other Canadians, that their research work proves successful.

• (2020)

It would also presumably include synthetic pipeline gas produced by hydrogenation processes, beginning with coal as a raw material. I do not know whether certain products will be included or excluded in this definition. In this respect we have run up against difficulties of clearly defining what is meant. First, coke produced from coal—where does that fit into it? Very little coke is used for heating purposes in Canada but there is metallurgical coke used. Where is the line drawn when metallurgical coke is put into the furnace, because part of it is used for the purpose of reduction and other parts of it are used at the same time as an energy source? Where would metallurgical coke fit into this definition? Where would water gas and producer gas fit into the definition? What about petroleum coke, which is produced in the process from which synthetic crude is derived from the tar sands in Fort McMurray, Alberta? I understand that there are large stockpiles of petroleum coke at the present time for which a market cannot be found. This is a good energy source which whould be used, but if it finds itself subject to taxes and charges which are proposed in this bill it would be very difficult to find a market for it. It is difficult enough now, and if it becomes taxable, as it might under this legislation, it will cause even more difficulties.

The fourth matter arising from the committee report concerns the Canadian ownership account. It has somewhat broadened the scope of the minister to appropriate funds for public ownership. On this side we have a philosophical objection to the way in which the Liberal government has gone about nationalizing everything in sight and saying that it intends to follow on with that process. I will not get into an argument over that tonight but rather will just look at some of the details. Whereas the minister was formerly allowed to appropriate these funds for acquisition of certain investment instruments—debt instruments and equity instruments—he will now be able to use his powers of appropriation of public funds to engage in any form of appropriation. I do not know why the government has wanted to give those all-encompassing powers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), but it has.

I am pleased to see that the drafting of Section 65.36(3) has been tidied up. We now have specific reference to an order which the governor in council must make when these powers of appropriation over the public purse are to be used. There are very complex rules and regulations which deal with a negative resolution on the part of Parliament when the minister desires to use these powers.

I must confess that I have read through about six times both drafts of the procedure to be adopted by the government and in Parliament when such an order is to be made. I find it very difficult to understand exactly how that process is to operate. If you read the proposals coming out of committee it seems that the proposed system has been watered down somewhat, that is if you go from the old draft of Bill C-103 to the new one.

As one illustration of that let me point out that the time period in which the government must table that order in Parliament has been extended from 15 days to 20 days. Originally, under the old draft, if such an order was contemplated and the government wanted to have the force of law behind it, that order had to be tabled in Parliament within 15 days of its issuance. That has now been extended to 20 days. We see a watering down of provisions there.

I find it difficult to interpret this. One can contemplate many things that could possibly go wrong. Where does the House of Commons and the Senate fit into this legislation? What happens in the unlikely event that the House of Commons chooses to agree with the order and say that it is good for the country for the government to spend so many billions of dollars to take over the assets of certain companies to give to Petro-Canada, and the Senate says no? I have read through this on several occasions and I can envision serious constitutional difficulties which could arise if the Senate decides to take a different approach than the House of Commons on a particular order.

From a personal point of view, I would have preferred if the power of a negative resolution, which would have the objective of overthrowing an order proposed under Clause 65, had been confined to one House of Parliament, which presumably would be the House of Commons since it generally deals with money items. Those items are not usually dealt with in the Senate. It is very unusual to give the Senate the power to address money items.

The last point that I can identify in the report which was handed down by the hon. member from York East deals again with a rather minor item. It deals with interest payments on petroleum compensation payments made in error. Under the first draft of Bill C-103, if the government paid a certain compensation payment to a particular refinery and subsequently discovered it had paid $100,000 too much, and that $100,000 remained in the hands of the refinery for a certain period, the refinery would be obliged to pay interest back to the government set at such a rate as the governor in council decided. I do not see anything particularly wrong with that unless the interest rate was set at a punitively high level. However, the recommendation of the committee in the new draft of Bill C-103 says that this interest will no longer be payable. If the government makes an error and pays the refinery or oil importing company too much money, it is the government's fault and it is out of luck. Of course it will get its original amount returned but it will not collect interest on that money. It seems rather unusual that the government itself has recommended in this particular case paying what is in effect a penalty since it will lose the interest that it might have received on that $100,000. It seems rather unusual for it to do that when one considers the UFFI situation where it has made a mistake but is not really willing to make any special form of compensation under those circumstances. In this case, if it makes a mistake it is in fact giving the oil importer or the refinery a bonus for its mistake. The company will be collecting interest on the moneys it has on deposit in the interim. I find it rather unusual that the government has proposed this. It is only a minor matter so I will not raise any great objection.

• (2030)

Now we come to the two motions which have been proposed by the official opposition. The first one deals with the petroleum compensation charge and the maximum amount of the charge which the governor in council will be permitted to make under this proposed legislation. We in the opposition have proposed that the maximum amount of the petroleum compensation charge be restricted to $28 per cubic metre. Believe it or not, it works out to 18 cents a gallon. I guess we must plead that we are somewhat guilty of nefarious objectives in proposing this figure of 18 cents a gallon. Your Honour will recall that some two and a half years ago, in the budget proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the figure of 18 cents was the proposed increase to the excise tax on gasoline. Since that time, I believe taxes in excess of 90 cents have been imposed. The 18 cents we propose would be applied solely to the petroleum compensation charge, not to the myriad of other charges and taxes which have been levied by the government opposite.

When the vote on this motion takes place, I want to see how many hon. members opposite rise to vote in favour of a tax or petroleum compensation charge of $75 per cubic metre, some 54 cents a gallon. At the time of the last election they said that if the people of Canada voted Liberal, the taxes would never amount to 18 cents a gallon. I want to see which way hon. members on that side of the House vote on this very simple amendment we have proposed and put forward.

The second motion we have proposed is likewise very simple, but it addresses a serious problem. We propose that the amount of public revenue the government be allowed to collect by way of the petroleum compensation charge should not exceed petroleum compensation payments made to importers and refiners under this bill. We on this side of the House are scared because, as so often happens when the government first imposes its tax, it says that it will be applied for a certain reason, but after a while that reason disappears and the government still continues to collect the tax. In the case of gasoline, we can think of provincial road taxes which were first applied many years ago. The idea was to apply a tax on "motor spirits", as they were called in those days, in order to build roads, but after a while the connection between the two was forgotten and the taxes on gasoline were increased all the time. That money was not necessarily used to build roads. It just went into general revenue. This continued year after year ans taxes on gasoline are now a constant part of the Canadian provincial tax scene. They will never go away. If Your Honour will recall, the same thing happened at the federal level with income tax. It was first to be levied as a special charge to help fight the war, but then the war ended. Did the income tax go away? No, it did not go away. It has been with us ever since and it has increased and increased. We do not want this to happen with the petroleum compensation charge. I do not think there is the need, but if there were the necessity to have the charge and a compensation system where Canadian oil producers were taxed in order to bring imports for this country, we would live with it. However, when that need disappears, then that petroleum compensation charge should disappear. Our amendment is quite simple. It says that the two must remain in balance and that that particular tax should not exist any longer when the reason for it is gone, and should not be used as a mechanism to collect general revenue.

Those, then, are my observations with respect to Bill C-103. I hope that with regard to the two motions we have before the House, everyone will see fit to at least support Motion No. 5. It has been a pleasure for me to speak on such a technical subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on motion No. 5. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (for Mr. Hawkes) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-103, an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 39 by striking out lines 14 to 17 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"each subsequent month until such a time as the amount of revenue collected under this section is equal to the sum of one billion four hundred and sixty million dollars".

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 6 deals with Part III.2 of the Petroleum Administration Act amendments, Bill C-103, which relates to the Canadian ownership special charge and taxation. During May of 1981, in violation of Liberal election promises, this sneaky little tax was brought in to finance Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. In early 1981, at the urging of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), Petro-Canada made that outstandingly shrewd business decision to purchase Petrofina.

Mr. Speaker, as a player of the stockmarkets, you may recall that in the summer of 1980, before the National Energy Program, before the investment public came to know the true nature of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the ideologues who were advising him, the Canadian oils stockmarket was pretty buoyant. In fact, it was at a high, as some of us have learned rather sadly. At that time, Petrofina's stock was trading in the order of $50, roughly. Then some rumours started to spread. Apparently some believe it was more than just speculative rumours. The stock went from $50 to $80 or $85, even though the general stock market for gas and oil stock remained static and may in fact have gone down slightly.

• (2040)

About that time when Fina stock was going to about $80 or $85, the rest of the stock market in terms of oil was stagnant, perhaps slipping a little. Fina had not made any major discoveries. There is no other reason for the action of the Fina stock than that some people apparently knew something that others of us did not.

The government announced a takeover offer and then shrewdly engaged its agent, Mr. Maurice Strong, well known for his Liberal connections, to purchase Fina at the price of $120 a share. Those people who bought Fina stock at $50 in August were pretty happy. I do not know of anyone in this party who got wind of that information, but those who did came out rather well. The total price was $1,476 million. That was a very shrewd purchase for Canada. It did not create one new job for Canada, did not add one cubic foot of gas or one new service station or refinery. It did not add a thing to Canada unless, of course, the million dollar fee paid to Mr. Strong is considered an addition or the millions and millions earned by those who speculated fortuitously in the stock are counted.

That money had to come from somewhere. In order to pay off the owners of the stock, the money had to be borrowed. Borrowing costs at that time were in the vicinity of 18 per cent and 19 per cent. We had to borrow $1.5 billion at 18 per cent and 19 per cent to buy this company which had been paying dividends on its capital of about 2 per cent.

We did not gain any new jobs, an extra barrel of oil, an extra cubic foot of gas or anything else. For the same capital structure, we were paying 18 per cent and 19 per cent as opposed to 2 per cent. That was a really shrewd deal for Canada. For what cost us 2 per cent, we were now paying 18 per cent or 19 per cent.

Even though the assets of Petrofina were transferred to Petro-Canada, we could not burden that poor Crown corporation with the real costs of purchasing those assets, the 18 or 19 per cent. Heaven forbid! If they would have to bear the real cost, that would make their income statement and balance sheet look a little bit awkward. No, no, Petro-Canada could not be expected to pay the real cost. The consumers of Canada were going to bear the real cost.

Those little geniuses in Energy, Mines and Resources who invented the National Energy Program and the rest of this absurdity which has driven this country to its knees came up with the Canadian ownership charge. They said, "We are loading on all these taxes already, such as the petroleum compensation charge, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, the excise tax, the sales tax, the income tax. Who will notice the Canadian ownership charge—it is only four cents a gallon." It went on and nobody noticed. The Liberals broke every promise they had made during the election campaign. That was all right. A promise broken only hurts if somebody notices it. If nobody notices it, it is a great deal. That little four-cent a gallon tax went on. The little geniuses were delighted because it was politically successful. It was a great success. When Petro-Canada took over the Fina stations, they rushed out and painted the dead maple leaf on it. The television cameras were there and the announcers were saying, "Holy smokes, we are Canadianizing."

The station was there before. The gas was exactly the same. You did not get any better gasoline or any more gasoline. No jobs were created. All that happened was that the consumer was paying four cents a gallon for the privilege of seeing that dead maple leaf on the new station. It was a real deal!

Those geniuses in Energy, Mines and Resources were so happy that they said they would allow the minister to raise that tax to 24 cents a gallon. Then they could buy four Petrofinas a year. We could then have these dead maple leaves painted on every service station in the country. They said that would make them so happy, it would generate jobs and make us self-sufficient. They said it would be marvellous, all the wonderful things that were going to happen.

With the passage of time we realized that the $1.5 billion we paid for Petrofina was at least a billion dollars too much. If Petrofina were still privately owned, the stock today, if it behaved the way the rest of the oil stocks are behaving, would be trading at $20 or maybe $30. We paid $120 a share for shares that today are worth $20 or $30.

It was a shrewd business deal. It really fills you full of confidence. You just wish from the bottom of your heart that the people who made that deal were in charge of the entire industry. If they ran all the oil companies in this country, wouldn't we be well off with those clever people? My goodness, we could have deals like that every day, paying $120 a share for stock that is worth $30 a share.

As things go it is not the habit of this government to admit mistakes or to apologize for blowing at least a billion dollars, and probably more, of public money. It is blowing it, just blowing it. It gathered it in taxes and sent it to Brussels.

If that money had gone to a Third World country in the form of aid, that would have made a little sense. Why, though, for goodness sakes, are we collecting taxes from the consumers of gasoline and heating oil in this country to send to Brussels? Why did we send a billion dollars of unearned income to Brussels? We did not gain a job out of that transaction, we did not gain a barrel of oil, we did not gain a cubic foot of gas, we got nothing. We just took $1 billion and sent it to Brussels. And, because we could not afford it, we have had to keep our interest rates high, to borrow back the equivalent of $1 billion from some place else around the world. So we have this shrewd little business deal worked out by the geniuses in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, it cost us $1 billion, it generated not one job and it contributed something to the higher interest rates that Canadians are suffering from. A few more business deals like that, Mr. Speaker, and we will not have one and a quarter million unemployed, we will have two million unemployed.

• (2050)

These central planners in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, who think they are so much smarter than everyone else in the country when it comes to energy matters, are no smarter than those central planners in Warsaw or in Moscow, and they plan just as badly as the central planners there. And you wonder how many of these horrifying experiences we have to go through before there is a recognition of that fact, Mr. Speaker.

This amendment contained in Motion No. 6, is very simple in its intent. It would merely say, let us stop after Petrofina, enough is enough, let us stop, no more taxes collected to hand over to the bureaucrats to go out and buy companies and to earn fees for Maurice Strong and other people, no more, because that sad experience has cost the country dearly, let us not do it again, let us stop after Petrofina. The amendment simply says that after you have collected $1,460 million, the amount of money to buy Fina, pay off that debt, which is costing us 18 per cent or 19 per cent, just call it a bad experience, a bad decision, and let us not repeat it. That is all this amendment does. It is a very simple amendment, that commends itself on its face.

Surely anyone who would look at the experience of that particular purchase and the consequences of it, would have to say, ah, ah, no more, let us not do that again, let us not have that exercise again, let us not create this little kitty for the minister and his minions to dip into and buy companies when the urge strikes him.

If state ownership of companies were the answer to Canada's problems, we should not have any problems, because we have over 400 Crown corporations. If Crown corporations were the answer to providing us with the window on industry, to let the central planners make better decisions, we should not have any bad decisions. Owning Air Canada, owning CN, how is it possible that we can have bad transportation policies, when we have this monstrous window on industry? If these windows are the thing that will provide us with the information so that governments can make good decisions, then they really have no excuse for not making this a utopia, as they have over 400 windows right now. It is a fallacy that Crown corporations provide anything but a repository for has-been politicians to earn handsome salaries. You may not have guessed that I am talking about Jack Horner and the chairmanship of the CNR.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Hurrah, hurrah, applause. Marvellous. Little toys, that is what they are, toys to give Maurice Strong fees, toys to give the Jack Horners and the Bryce Mackaseys of the world comfortable positions to be collected at the public trough. They do nothing for Canada but cost us money. We have a Crown corporation in the broadcast business and apparently it took 74 of them to report the Versailles Conference—74 accredited persons from the CBC to report at Versailles.

I realize that the ideologues on my left here believe that Warsaw and Moscow are the ideals toward which we should work, where the central planners are in total control of everything. But those who have the capability of reasoning and who look back on the Fina purchase objectively and measure objectively what we have achieved as a country as a result of that purchase, I am sure will reach the inescapable conclusion that it was a mistake and that we should close off that little source of funds, after the Fina purchase has been paid for. That is what Motion No. 6 says, Mr. Speaker.

After they have collected that money from this sneaking tax, pay off Petrofina, to give Maurice Strong and those people what they have not earned but what nonetheless they will receive. Let us close the books on that sad experience and not leave that kitty in funds for the minister and his ideologues to play with at our expense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on this bill and on the amendment, in support of my colleague who has just spoken. He made a good point about the ludicrous position in which this country finds itself because of the lack of co-ordination even between the Crown corporations in the exercise of government policy, whether it is in the field of energy or elsewhere.

Certainly no one could quarrel with his statement that it would be absolutely appropriate, once the sum that was paid for Petrofina has been taxed from the people of Canada, that this particular charge should cease to function. That makes eminent good sense.

Another thing is very obvious to those of us who are watching the way the Crown agencies and government control exist in this country is the difference in other countries. For example, in Japan there is a meaningful relationship between the country and the entrepreneurs who take guidance from the government. In Japan the government is a close partner of private enterprise and helps it to land orders; it avoids regulations and practices which will impede business. On the contrary, it fosters success.

With respect to this particular piece of legislation, I can think of nothing more incongruous than to look at the argument that was made not by politicians but by the Air Transport Association of Canada, ATAC, to a government committee. It pointed out that the government and the national energy policy sought to put on a particular tax, with Bill C-103, called the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge, enough in itself to baffle most people trying to make some sense out of this particular taxation measure.

As the submission made on May 5 goes on to point out, this charges, or purports to charge a tax on both foreign and domestic air carriers. But, lo and behold, we find out that because of treaty and other regulatory obligations our domestic air carriers are forced to pay the tax while foreign competitors are not subject to it. We also find out that the loss that Air Canada, our own national carrier, experienced in the last quarter, about $27 million, probably was caused by a tax approximately equal to that amount which it had to pay under this particular inequitable and stupid tax. Our national air carrier was forced into a loss position because of a misguided tax which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) saw fit to impose on the Canadian air industry. Can hon. members think of anything more stupid? I certainly cannot.

• (2100)

It is obvious that this government is not well inclined toward the private business sector. It is suspected rather strongly that since the present administration can boast of few members with any business experience of any sort, it does not really know business very well, and this particular legislation is a good example of that. This might explain why, for example, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources delights in his new oil consortium which was recently put together by Esso Resources to take advantage of the special grants which are offered under the National Energy Program to Canadian-controlled companies. However, when we look at the makeup of this consortium, we find that it looks as if the minister were going to achieve exactly the opposite of what his policies were meant to do, in the same way as he has achieved exactly the opposite effect to what he intended with regard to the tax on Canadian air carriers and foreign air carriers.

The National Energy Program Canadianization features were meant to put more of the oil industry in Canadian hands and control. This new oil consortium which was created entirely to make it eligible for the preferential incentives accorded Canadian-controlled firms not only will be headed by an American-controlled firm, but the 80 per cent grants it will receive will be the most extravagant financing by taxpayers of oil exploration in history. This will also be very harmful to management standards in the industry.

In a recent column Bill Wilson, the noted business commentator and columnist, said that Lewis Carroll, the creator of "Alice in Wonderland", would have thought twice about writing this scenario in "Through the Looking Glass," but Canadian law makes reality of the most remarkable consortium ever to search for oil in the harsh conditions of the Beaufort Sea. Esso Resources' $600 million deal with this group of smaller Canadian companies—some not even in the oil and gas business, according to Mr. Wilson—is a direct product of the National Energy Program's discriminatory features. Mr. Wilson said:

> Because Esso Resources is American-controlled through Imperial Oil back to Exxon, it was one of the primary targets of the NEP's discrimination against foreign ownership. On its own, it could only have secured 25 per cent grants to aid in exploring the oil leases it holds in the Beaufort, both off and onshore.

To obtain the full 80 per cent grants it found thoroughly Canadian companies with which to make a deal. The only problem is that some of the companies are in the real estate or investment business with no more gas and oil experience than filling up a company car at the service station.

> The biggest of them, Home Oil, is the project operator. The problem is that Home has no experience that would qualify it to undertake a $600 million exploration in the appallingly severe Beaufort environment. So, because Esso is the only company in the consortium with the technology and experience to run it, it will become the project operator's agent, doing the actual work for Home Oil.

Wilson adds that this illustrates with stark clarity the degree to which Esso Resources and other companies like it are needed in Canada, whether they are ultimately controlled in the United States or in Timbuktu. And before anyone gets carried away over the Canadian content aspect of the consortium deal, Wilson warns that they should remember what the last burst of Canadianization did. It produced the takeover frenzy of 1981 that did much to weaken the Canadian dollar by shipping $10 billion out of the country. It rigidly locked the country into substantially higher interest rates than would otherwise have been necessary, despite Washington's levels, and helped precipitate this very serious recession. It also helped determine its depth and severity.

While this consortium scheme does not carry the same risks of exporting capital, it will, however, test with a vengeance the scheme of providing 80 per cent grants from public funds to finance northern exploration. Mr. Wilson concludes in his column:

> It is beyond all rational belief that any company, no matter how well managed, can maintain its own economic efficiency if the funds it is spending come 80 per cent from government, and only 20 per cent from its own cash flow or borrowing. It is not a disparagement of Esso Resources and its management to say that it cannot insulate itself from the effects of this sort of financing, no matter how hard it attempts to maintain its effects. Those cheap dollars will erode the best cost controls.

Meanwhile, the real help companies should be getting is not available to them. The National Energy Program has seriously harmed their cash flow just when they need it most to deal with the high cost of borrowing and just when the budget has further eroded their cash position, and the government now says it does not have the necessary funds to promote research and development as it should be promoted to give our industries a chance to compete on work markets.

So, when one says that only growth will give us jobs, as many of us in this House believe, I have to add that we will never achieve any growth under the present administration unless it changes its posture. Surely we have seen the ultimate irony take place in Versailles. At a time when a summit conference was held to deal with energy and other problems and at a time when the country is full of misery and apprehension, where is the economic conference held? It is held at Versailles. It is one of the most obvious symbols of opulence and luxury the world has ever known. And who is the host? Why, it is a socialist who is the host, President Mitterrand. Who is the man who is the chief centre of attraction? He is the free enterprise President of the United States who is universally vilified by all concerned, including our Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), for taking steps to help his own country. And those steps of President Reagan appear to be working. Surely we are faced with a lot of paradoxes. The Prime Minister is now taking an extended tour. In the old days in Rome they used to say that Nero fiddled while Rome burned. We have seen here today that Pepin fiddles while Trudeau roams! What do they say in Quebec? I wish I were more bilingual, but is it not something like this:—

[Translation]

—the more things change, the more they stay the same.

[English]

We have seen that the more things change the more they remain the same. We have seen other energy policies put forward by Donald Macdonald when he was minister of energy, mines and resources. We were going to have energy self-sufficiency by 1980. We were going to have pipelines to the maritimes. Everything was going to be fine, and now it is more of the same, and the goal of energy self-sufficiency gets further and further away.

If this government is going to do anything to help this country, it has to stop its drifting, ad hoc approach. The Liberal government will do such damage to our economic position that we will find it increasingly hard to hold our place in the world, much less improve it. The November budget should be withdrawn. Incentives to invest and produce should be restored. The National Energy Program should be further amended to allow experienced companies to invest and not have to put together these artificial consortiums. Now that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has seen some light and has reduced the harmful petroleum and gas revenue tax to some extent, he still needs to worry about low investor confidence. The measures he has taken have not impressed the financial markets at all. Meanwhile, these few measures he has taken have just provided a further drift into economic stagnation.

The only way we will get any improvement is for this government and the Minister of Finance, who no longer have any credibility on economic issues, to withdraw the budget, change further the National Energy Program and create better incentives for Canadians to invest in their own country. This government needs credibility badly. Its lack of credibility in energy matters extends back to when the Minister of Finance put those unebelievably crass advertisements in the papers in Cape Breton. He said: "Vote for Allan J., and the price of gas will come down and stay down." Anyone who is knowledgeable—as the Minister of Finance must be held to be; He is a veteran politician—who would say something like that could only be suspected of putting the interests of his party ahead of the interests of his country. This government has come back to power. It has come back bankrupt in policies, and its lack of policies has bankrupted our country.

Surely the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his cabinet colleagues can read the handwriting on the wall. Ever since this country started to do away with incentives, to fool around with capital gains taxes and to pay oil companies to explore for oil when they were perfectly capable and willing to do so on their own, and ever since confidently forecast revenues failed to materialize, surely the handwriting for depression has been on the wall. I hope that members in the chamber will show at least a modicum of common sense and support the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). In this way they can show that this ill-advised and obviously quixotic attempt to buy a service company in the guise of Canadianizing our energy industry when those revenues which have been allocated for that purpose are being taken from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, is enough of this particular brand of taxation. The amendment ought to be enthusiastically supported by all members in the House. That would be a step in the right direction.

• (2110)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my comments I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. MacKay: Certainly.

Mr. Waddell: Given that our oil industry was 75 per cent foreign owned and now is about 68 per cent foreign owned, how would the Progressive Conservative Party propose to Canadianize the industry?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, Canadianizing a diminishing resource when allowing our manufacturing and other sectors to fall into gross undercapitalization and underutilization, is not the priority I would put forward in this country. I think that ownership is secondary to management control in this sophisticated environment. If our energy sector is well managed and efficient, I am not so concerned about who owns it as long as the Canadian people are getting lots of energy at a reasonable price.

Mr. Waddell: I thank the hon. member for being so frank and straightforward, as he normally is. That question bothered me so much that I went back to peruse some old Conservative Party statements. A report of the 1974 Conservative Party conference has this to say:

> To maximize the benefit to Canadians the Progressive Conservative Party believes that as a cornerstone of such a policy for the 1970s and the 1980s Canadians must dedicate themselves to acquiring and holding ownership of more than 50 per cent of the non-renewable resource industries in Canada. A Progressive Conservative government would take the lead in this direction ... (and) would negotiate realistic arrangements for the phased marketing of foreign-held shares to accomplish the objective in an orderly fashion.

Strangely enough, it was the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), the slasher, the member who considers himself the blue Tory, who presented that motion. So we have a blue Tory saying that it is the policy of the Conservative Party to Canadianize the industry and to negotiate the "phased marketing of foreign-held shares to accomplish the objective in an orderly fashion".

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It seems to me that the Conservative policy is simply to wreck Petro-Canada. That is not much of a policy, and I do not think they have an alternative.

The hon. member referred to Versailles and he is right, there was too much splendour there. It is rather ironic while so many people, especially young people, are unemployed in the western world, to see all that magnificence. In my province alone thousands and thousands of people are unemployed and UIC there costs $33 million per month. When hon. members to my right were referring to Versailles, I kept thinking about the philosophical mother of the Conservative Party, Marie Antoinette and her spiritual successor, Ronald Reagan, telling us all to eat cake. That is exactly what their policy is aimed at—except that there is no cake.

Let us try to deal with the Canadian ownership special charge in a proper way. The idea of the special charge was that money would accumulate into a Canadian ownership account and would be used to increase the participation of the Government of Canada in the petroleum industry. I hope it is agreed by all parties that it is unacceptable to have such a key commodity such as oil controlled by non-Canadians. Earlier I said it was about 70 per cent foreign owned. We let that happen and we are all to blame for it in various ways.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that the government should participate in the industry and be more than a mirror on the industry. That is why David Lewis and Tommy Douglas pushed for Petro-Canada in the House. We think that Petro-Canada must be put in the driver's seat because of the logic of dealing with multinational corporations. Anyone who reads about them will realize how difficult that is.

It is ironic that the sources of our future energy, off Hibernia and in the north, are areas controlled by multinational corporations. In Hibernia it is controlled by Mobil of New York, in the north partly by Dome, if it survives, but also by Imperial Oil of Exxon in New York and by Gulf. So the multinationals are directing the area where our new energy is to come from.

We have often said in the House that we do not want to see a Petro-Canada that is a place for patronage appointments. We want a Petro-Canada that is fully accountable to the people. I draw the attention of the hon. member to the speech given by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). As he so often does in the House, he tends to deal with things in a novel way. He was talking about how to make a Crown corporation accountable to the people. If a Crown corporation is not accountable to the people, the solution is not to get rid of it but, rather, to make it accountable.

I think that Canadians like Petro-Canada so far and they are using it. They feel it is their company, and I think they would like to see it expand. There will be problems in future with Petro-Canada, no doubt. It will have to become more accountable. There will have to be some dealings with the gas stations. It may be that it will have to rebate some money to the purchasers of gas. But right now I think Canadian trust Petro-Canada and I hope that trust continues.

While I am on my feet I should like to pay tribute to William Hopper, the president of Petro-Canada. If we are going to have someone directing large government corporations, they should be people like Bill Hopper. He has some guts and is willing to stick his neck out and do things for the people of Canada.

I do not think it helps for the Conservatives to stand up day after day and attack Petro-Canada. I do not think that is good politics either. It is ironic that we in this party are called ideological and not pragmatic, yet we are not standing up attacking the notion of Petro-Canada on ideological grounds. I find it strange that a party which, as Robert Stanfield pointed out not too long ago, is really the founder of the CBC, now stands up and attacks the concept of Crown corporations.

The Liberals are slightly misleading Canadians, Mr. Speaker. Petro-Canada is not the number one oil company in Canada. It is Imperial Oil.

Mr. Regan: I like Petro-Canada better.

Mr. Waddell: The minister may like Petro-Canada better but the government's policies continue to prop up Imperial and keep it as the number one company. The number one Canadian company is not even Petro-Canada. It is Dome Petroleum. Still, the internationals are the major companies in Canada. For all this fuss and bother of the National Energy Program and the Canadian ownership account, there has not been much progress in making Petro-Canada the number one oil company in the country. This Canadian ownership charge has been reduced from a maximum of $4 a barrel to the present $1.15 a barrel. This is a significant backing down from the October, 1980 budget wherein the government indicated that in its pursuit of expanding the role of PetroCan and other Crown corporations in the energy field it was prepared to raise the necessary funds from the special levy. The levy is now at its maximum, and that covers the takeover of Petrofina. It would appear in fact that there will be no further takeovers. In fact, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance have said this. On March 5, 1981, Ambassador Towe said to the National Association of Petroleum Investment Analysts in the United States:

• (2120)

Purchases by Petro-Canada are one way of increasing public ownership, but they are not intended to place the public company in a predominant position in the industry.

So really the takeovers are finished. It is true, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said, PetroCan paid too much for Petrofina. It was grossly inflated. But because they paid too much does not, by itself, make public ownership bad. What is bad is that they paid too much. The gas stations coast to coast was the correct thrust; it gives PetroCan an image, Canadians can see the sign and so on. But they could have done it quite differently because in fact it is window dressing for public ownership.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this Liberal Canadianization is really inadequate because it is basically privatization. The basis of the NEP is not the takeover of public companies—that is pretty well finished with the takeover of Petrofina—it is in fact privatization. It gives to the Dome Petroleum's of this world the chance to take over part of the foreign-owned industry. Well, it is not worth it. The petroleum incentives program, which we will debate in the next bill, is a scheme to give $8.9 billion to private Canadian companies so they can drill in the Beaufort. It is a terrible scheme because, first of all, we should not be drilling in the Beaufort. We should be using the conventional system in Saskatchewan and Alberta. There are more jobs there, Canadians can participate and it will help the industry. The small companies in Alberta told us there was no way they were going to go to the Beaufort, they cannot afford it. It will be the American companies or groups or consortiums controlled by Imperial Oil, or some dummy group or company pretending to be Canadian.

Look at the Canadian ownership rate, Mr. Speaker. It is almost impossible to figure out. I challenge any of the accountants in this House to try to figure out what is going on. This will just build the bureaucracy. It seems to me there is a simpler way, and that is to use tax revenue or some of the revenue from the Canadian ownership charge to get away from PIP grants. These people want private enterprise; let them have private enterprise. Why do they need financing from the federal government? Why do they need 93 cents of every dollar from the federal government to explore in the Beaufort Sea? Take that money and, right out front, pass an act in this House setting up a fair takeover procedure for Imperial Oil. It would cost a heck of a lot less and in a short time PetroCan would be number one in the industry.

I will say this about my Conservative friends, except for the matter which I brought up at the beginning of my speech they are pretty straightforward in their positions. I may not agree with them, as I do not agree with what the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) says, but he says it honestly and in a straightforward manner. I think we in the NDP are at least being out front in our position on this. We make no bones about it, we are not going to play around with PIP grants or COR programs; we would make PetroCan number one by moving straightforward and taking under public control one of the American majors. I think there is support for this in the Canadian public. A group which appeared before us in committee, a number of distinguished people from business and labour, took a poll and said that people wanted 75 per cent Canadian ownership by 1985, not 1990. By a two to one margin they wanted PetroCan to take over one of the large multinationals and be number one in the industry. That is exactly the policy we are advocating here.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Calgary Centre when he tries to tar us with this brush of Soviet central planning, or Polish, or whatever it is he calls it, I suggest he read Geoffrey Simpson's articles in The Globe and Mail. He has written some articles on Statoil of Norway, a government company which directs the exploration and development of oil in the North Sea. The people benefit from it. The United Kingdom has the same thing. The irony there is that it was developed by Tony Benn, who is on the far left of the Labour Party in England, and it was kept up by and large by the right wing Thatcherites. Why? They are not stupid, they realize that they need a directing force for this vital industry in order to benefit the people. There is Pemex in Mexico. By and large all oil-producing countries have state-owned oil companies which act as the directing influence for their oil industry.

The state does not have to own everything in industry; that is nonsense. Small companies are vital. Small private companies in the west should be getting the breaks, and I have spoken in the past about some of the things we could do to help these small companies. I will not go into that now, but what we are saying is: make PetroCan the driving force in this industry in Canada. That seems to me to make some sense and it is a way we can really get energy security for Canada.

Energy security is not something that should be used by the Canadian Petroleum Association or by big oil companies to say to Canadians: give, give, give us more. As I said, Mr. Speaker, I talked to people this weekend who were just astounded at how the government could find $2 billion for Imperial and its friends, but cannot find the money for medicare, job-creation programs or for aid to certain other depressed industries. It cannot find the money to help people with their mortgages but it can find $2 billion to help the oil industry. I know parts of the oil industry are in trouble. I have suggested ways in which they could be helped. I do not think it is good enough to stand up and say that the Canadian ownership charge is a communist conspiracy and to say that Petro-Canada must be broken up or changed. I warned the Conservative Party about this.

We have had experience in British Columbia. The B.C. government tried to BCRIC the state energy and some other companies but it was not the answer. It is not the answer. I know people in other parts of Canada have not seen how BCRIC works. It is simple. What happens is you sell off all the publicly owned corporations. You are told it is going into the hands of the people. But it goes into fewer and fewer hands. The company is controlled outside of the province or maybe of the country. In the end you have a corporation that is responsible to no one, not even to its shareholders. I hope the Conservatives will explain what phase marketing of foreign held shares is and how you phase in that marketing. I know how we in the New Democratic Party would do it. We would simply use the Canadian ownership charge. We would use some of the taxes instead of giving away more money and pouring it into empty holes in the north. We would use the money to take over the company, such as Imperial Oil. Then we would have Canadianization of the Canadian energy industry.

• (2130)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) entertain a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has asked if the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would entertain a question.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacKay: I appreciate my friend's courtesy, Mr.Speaker. I can agree with what the member has said about a straightforward approach toward nationalization. It makes a great deal more sense than the back door approach which is exemplified in the $600 million Esso consortium approach. But does the hon. member agree with me that it also makes a lot of sense to terminate the taxation of Canadian people for purchasing Petrofina once that purchase is a fait accompli and use the revenue derived for some other purpose, public or private, rather than to continue leaving the door open for undetermined and uncontrolled spending by the government, and will the hon. member support our amendment?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss some of these matters. When we talk about Canadian ownership, I like to think of businesses today that are considered Canadian owned. I look upon our farms as being largely Canadian owned. Some Canadian farms are individual proprietorships, some are owned by partners and some are family farms. There are some large corporate farms. The owners of the farms stand on their own feet and they make their own decisions. If they make money, they have a profit. But if they manage badly, they incur a deficit. In my view, however, that is the Canadian way of doing things. When it comes to businesses, we have the same thing. We have hundreds of businesses in this country that are Canadian owned. These businesses are owned by individual Canadians who make their own decisions. They make a profit or a loss according to conditions and the way they manage, etc. But we should make a very distinct difference between a company owned by the state in which individual Canadians have no say in the way it is managed. Canadians receive none of the profits personally if that company does well. They pay for the cost of this state-owned company eventually through taxes. Canadians may get some benefits through government services, but there is no direct link through the company that is nationally owned. It should be made clear that when we talk about Canadian ownership we are talking about Canadians owning the business, not the state owning it. That is what is confusing to people today.

Our friends to the left talk about Canadian ownership. They are talking about state ownership or nationalization. The Liberals opposite talk about Canadianization when they really mean nationalization. The government is taking over business.

Canadians are well aware of the difference between Canadian ownership and nationalization, and we should not be confusing them with terminology.

Let me talk about Canadian ownership in the petroleum industry. In 1976 the tax laws were changed by the government then in power. Canadian ownership started to increase. Canadian ownership was on the increase right up to the time when the National Energy Program started. Then Canadian ownership came to a sudden halt and started going backwards. In the Conservative's 1979 budget we had what was called a Canadian stock ownership program which would have increased Canadian ownership in this country. The Progressive Conservative Party has stood for Canadian ownership and a gradual progression to the point where Canadians own the greater part of the businesses, the farms and the resources of this country. But we draw the line with state ownership. We are asking for Canadians to own things, not for the state to own things, and we want that made very clear.

Our program would enable Canadians to own, manage, control, make a profit, or take a loss, according to the free enterprise system.

I would like to deal now with the matter of the Canadian ownership charge. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr.

Andre) has dealt with this subject so exhaustively that there is little left to be said. The COC was first mentioned in the Petroleum Administration Act. It allows the government to charge up to $4 a barrel or 60 cents per MCF of natural gas in order to pay for the purchase of oil and gas properties by Crown corporations. In other words, it allows the government to take over or nationalize corporations in this country. The current level is about $1.15 a barrel or 15 cents per MCF in order to pay for Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. If the information given to Canadians is correct, namely that this charge was there to buy Petrofina, then every member on the other side of the House will support the amendment because once Petrofina is paid for, it is paid for. If there is something else to be purchased, that is a new deal entirely. We will be watching for that. And I am asking the Canadian people out in the great beyond from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the forty ninth parallel up to the Arctic to watch when the vote is called to see how our friends on the Liberal side of the House vote. People should watch to see whether the Liberals will vote to mark finish when the total amount for the purchase of Petrofina is paid. If the Liberals do not vote for the amendment, it means this government wants the tax to go on and on and on so it can nationalize other businesses.

When Petrofina was nationalized we took something away from those Canadians who owned shares in the company. People who owned shares had some say in the company. They won or lost according to what that company did. If the company made money, they made money and if the company lost money, they lost money. They were part and parcel of Petrofina. But when Petrofina was purchased by the Canadian government people were paid a tremendous amount of money. Instead of it being a highway robbery, it was a highway gift from the public treasury. People were paid $120 a share for shares running between $30 and $50. Now those Canadians sold the shares because they had no choice, but they were Canadian-owned shares and now they are Canadian government-owned shares. If there is anything which shows the difference between nationalization and privately owned, surely it is this. Of course these people received a pile of money through the sale because they owned shares, but now those shares are no longer owned by Canadians; they are owned by the Canadian government. That is the difference between Canadianization and nationalization.

• (2140)

I should like to review one or two of these other taxes. We have talked about so many of these taxes that people are beginning to wonder just how many taxes are involved in the National Energy Program. The NEP did not do anything to bring the oil industry into Canadian hands. As a matter of fact, it did the very opposite. Scores and scores of Canadians who owned small businesses lost them because of the National Energy Program. Is that Canadianization? That is what happened. The NEP was not very profitable to Canadians. It may have been profitable to the Government of Canada, but not to Canadians.

We can see the ill effects of the National Energy Program right across the land—loss of jobs, businesses going bankrupt and farmers going bankrupt. All these things have ramifications. The NEP must take responsibility for many of the bankruptcies and losses. It did not bring the industry more and more into Canadian hands; it took more and more of the industry out of Canadian hands, in fact some Canadian industries went out of the country entirely. I will refer to COC a little later if I have the time, but that is enough for now.

Let us look at the PGRT. On October 28, 1980, the budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) initiated the PGRT effective January 1, 1980, at the rate of 12 per cent of all oil and gas production. The federal-Alberta agreement of September, 1981, indicated that the rate of the PGRT would be raised to 16 per cent but that a resource allowance of 25 per cent of the price of oil would be deducted from the taxable revenue. This raised the effective rate to 12 per cent of the wellhead price of oil. This tax change was given effect in the 1981 budget as well. There we have 12 per cent of the wellhead price going to the Canadian government; it is just one tax.

Now I should like to deal with another tax which was initiated by the government, namely, IORT. In the federal-Alberta agreement the government settled on price increases significantly above those scheduled in the National Energy Program. The increment, that is the difference between the NEP and the agreement prices for 1981, was $2.50 per barrel, with a similar increment in 1982. For the years 1983 to 1986 the increment will be $3.75 per barrel. The IORT will tax back 50 per cent of this incremental revenue. While this revenue is not subject to corporate tax, it is subject to PGRT. In addition to the 12 per cent PGRT tax, we have up to 50 per cent of the incremental revenue coming back into the federal treasury.

Already we have a pretty good sum coming out of the industry, but then we have PCC which allows the government to levy a special charge on all oil consumed in Canada in order to pay for the equivalent in compensation which importers of world price syncrude oil would receive. The maximum levy was originally set at $1 per barrel, but in July, 1980, the government raised it to $1.75. In the 1980 budget the government rolled the syncrude levy into the petroleum compensation charge which was imposed on all oil in order to pay for the import compensation and oil sands production, including the special compensation charge used to pay for Alberta cutback oil. This charge is being levied as high as $8.15 per barrel. A scheduled increase for January, 1982, of $2.50 was cancelled. The current levy is $6.30.

Under Bill C-94, which would have been passed by the Liberal majority had we not started the bells ringing and kept them ringing until that bill was split into several bills, this charge could have gone as high as $20 per barrel. The maximum order of this levy imposed on oil has now gone down to $12 under Bill C-103. Let the people of Canada out there who thought that the bells were a game or something to amuse ourselves know that it saved them $8 per barrel on every barrel of oil. This levy is imposed on oil as it enters the refineries, hence the oft-used reference to refinery taxes. That is the PCC. We have the PGRT, the IORT and the PCC.

There used to be a story in the old Alexander readers about the fellow who wanted to get all the golden eggs from the goose at one time. He killed the goose so that he could pick them out, but got nothing after all. This is what is happening now. The government is taking so much out of the industry that there will be no industry left. It is killing the goose that lays the golden egg. The government has already started to give some back. An hon. member of the New Democratic Party, its energy critic, said that he would like to know where the money came from. That $2 billion came from the oil industry, and the government is just giving some of it back. It should never have been taken in the first place. Killing the goose will not help the country.

Then we have the Canadian ownership charge, COC, which I have already discussed. Then there is the federal sales tax. The government originally imposed a 5-cent per gallon tax on gasoline and diesel fuel. The budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) sought to change the fixed rate to a 9 per cent ad valorem tax imposed on products as they leave refineries. Now we have a federal sales tax on the price of gasoline and diesel fuel. Finally we have another tax—perhaps I should not say "finally" because there may be some about which I do not even know—which is the excise tax on gasoline. This tax is a vicious tax indeed. The excise tax on gasoline was originally imposed in the June 23, 1975 Budget of John Turner at the rate of 10 cents per gallon. In November 1978, in an attempt to curry favour with voters in the pre-election period, the then minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), reduced the tax to 7 cents in order to offset the impact of a crude oil price rise which was due to flow through to consumers. The budget of the hon. member for St. John's West on December 11, 1979, would have raised this tax to 25 cents per gallon. In the mini budget of the Minister of Finance in April 1980, the excise tax was imposed at the rate of 1.5 cents per litre, which is the current rate. This tax is refundable for those using gasoline for non-personal purposes.

That is a list of at least six taxes which are taking money out of the petroleum industry, yet some people wonder why the petroleum industry is dying and going bankrupt, why business after business are going bankrupt, and why some of them have even fled the country in an attempt to stay alive. It also tells some of the story that the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) told the other night about equipment costing tremendous sums of money being sold for a song because there was no use for it any more; it was being sold and taken out of the country, for the large part. This is supposed to be Canadianization? What the government is doing is bankrupting the country.

Let us see what some of the people have had to say about this, people such as businessmen who have been successful through the years and had started from scratch. They started by using their backs and their arms, by thinking and by co-operating with other people so as to build up businesses. There is one chap, Ron Southern, who today is president and chief executive officer of Atco Limited in Alberta. This is a good company. I had business dealings with this company when I was involved with the highways department in Alberta. That company always gave dollar for dollar value and tried to be a good corporate citizen. This is what Mr. Southern said:

• (2150)

> The Canadian government failed to recognize fundamental investment factors in creating the National Energy Program, and the result is a policy which carries the seeds of its own destruction, and will require substantial modification.

It will require this if it is going to survive. The absence of the oil industry itself at the planning table was very, very evident. In other words, the people who did not know the intricacies of the industry decided to tell the industry what was good for it and how it should operate. It is no wonder that there was an absolute and complete failure of the National Energy Program and, along with that failure, it has ruined many other parts of the country.

Mr. Southern went on to say:

> The federal government tried to impose a program as though there were no other players in the game. It avoided debate by refusing to allow the oil industry itself a place at the table.

He went on:

> One does not know for certain whether the federal government knowingly set up a possible situation that could eventually lead to a consolidation of the industry into a handful of huge petroleum companies, the majority of which are government-owned, or heavily influenced, or that the government genuinely did not understand that the elements of the NEP could produce such a result.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said this afternoon that he would give the government the benefit of the doubt. However, there are too many instances like this. We have seen where the National Energy Program has ruined one industry in this country. Now we have something similar happening through Bill C-85 which provides for the creation of Canagrex, a brand new corporation which is to have such control over the food and agricultural industry in Canada. It will even be able to tell the farmers what they can grow and what they can or cannot sell. What are we coming to? Is this government trying to get control of energy and then control of agriculture to make us subjects and slaves to it, subject to an all-powerful government? If it is not, then why is legislation like this being allowed by their own members who will suffer just as much as anyone once they are out of the House?

The people of Canada are angry and afraid of what they see happening. They are fearful when they hear about Canagrex. I received a letter of sadness from a lady who lives on a farm. She said, "It almost makes me feel as if I have to sell the farm and get out of the country." She said, "I am afraid, if our government is going to take this powerful control over the exporting and growing of food in Canada."

There is an attempt to do this in the oil industry and now the government is attempting to do this in the food industry. How much further will it go?

As Mr. Southern said, he does not know whether it was by design that the government consolidated the industry into a handful of huge petroleum companies, the majority of which are government owned or heavily influenced by the government, or whether it simply made a mistake. The government itself will have to answer that.

Mr. Southern went on to say:

NEP has done irreparable harm to the smaller Canadian-owned independent petroleum companies, the contract drilling and well service companies as well as Canadian manufacturing and supply companies. Ottawa will eventually be forced to modify its plans in order to restore lost confidence and revitalize the petroleum sector in particular and Canadian manufacturing and service industries in general.

The other night the government recognized that it had made some mistakes. It is giving $2 billion out of the $6 billion that it has taken from the industry back to it. That is not enough. It will start the industry rolling again to some degree but will do nothing for the consumer. It is not doing anything for the many consumers who cannot get jobs.

What are these taxes doing to our people? Let us examine the price of gasoline. Out of today's price per gallon of gasoline, 77 cents is federal government taxes. Out of heating oil, 40 cents out of every gallon is federal government taxes. I recently talked about the fact that people across Canada who are burning heating oil have had their bills go up, and 40 cents out of every gallon that they purchase goes into the coffers of the federal government. That is where the major charge comes from and that is what makes the big difference. The government calls that Canadian ownership. It is no wonder that the people of Canada are rising up in anger when they say, "You talk about Canadian ownership, but you are robbing me of my income so that I cannot even pay my taxes or my mortgage. I will lose my home and I will lose my business, and you call that Canadian ownership?" That is what these taxes are doing. The government has been entirely too hoggish. It is trying to get every possible cent it can from the industry, and it will not only ruin the petroleum industry, it will ruin the other industries as well.

This is true even in the farming industry. With respect to the excise tax, we urged the members of the House on the government side not to put an excise tax on farm products or food production, such as on fertilizer. Would they listen? No, they insisted on putting it on fertilizer and applying it to the price of food so that everyone who buys food will have to pay more. Home-owners, widows, old-age pensioners, the crippled and the retarded will all pay more because of that excise tax.

We even asked the government to wait a few extra days so that the co-operatives in Alberta would not have to go to the bank to borrow money, thereby increasing their charges and putting a heavier burden on the farmers. The government will not even give it an extra 30 days. It said that they can pay it. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs would not even recommend it. Those people in the co-op came down here and gave sound arguments but could not get anywhere because the government would not listen. Nor would the Finance Committee listen.

Farmers right across Canada, from Ontario, Quebec, the prairies, the maritimes and Newfoundland, who use fertilizer are being penalized. That has been one of the factors which has caused the increased numbers of farm bankruptcies. All the government has to do is to look at its excise tax. Not only does it want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg, it is killing the entire country. It is time that it awakened to the fact that the people of Canada will only stand for so much. When Canadians get to that point, the government better beware. The people are getting sick and tired of this taxation, taxation, taxation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

THE ECONOMY—QUERY RESPECTING CONTACT BETWEEN ACTING PRIME MINISTER AND CANADIAN DELEGATION AT VERSAILLES. (B) PURSUIT OF CANADIANIZATION POLICY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the matter that I raised today with the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). It was obvious to those of us who were in the House today listening to the question period as you were, Mr. Speaker, that the Acting Prime Minister did not have the mandate or the benefit of the party line when he was speaking for his government this afternoon. As you may recall, I asked him what contact he actually had with Versailles. Did he have any knowledge or authority to answer for the government here in the House? Finally, I asked him how much longer it was going to take the government to come to the realization that it could not continue to use the national energy policy and the ill-conceived and capriciously administered foreign investment review legislation. The government could not continue to use these two devices to derive billions of dollars from this country while expecting the taxpayers to subsidize the falling Canadian dollar which was the result of these policies, with still more taxpayers' funds to keep it from falling to a level which the government deemed to be unacceptable. The Acting Prime Minister said: "I thought it would be normal for me not to get in touch with them"—"them" being his cabinet colleagues, I suppose, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan)—"not to take time away from discussions they were having with other people."

I think it is really a shocking situation and an insult to Parliament when the Acting Prime Minister in this administration will admit to the House of Commons that he has apparently had no meaningful contact with his colleagues who were participating in this supposedly high level economic conference at Versailles, to which he has been referring for weeks in all economic questions as being the venue in which some results would be produced. I think that that is absolutely shocking.

• (2200)

The minister was then convicted by his own answer when he said, "I thought that that was the right approach with regard to the causes of the present situation. I think it came out strongly, from everything in the press, that the crisis we are experiencing now is not only in Canada." If we are to take this literally, it means that the Acting Prime Minister, the spokesman for the government, only knows what he reads in the press, and he is here in Parliament not as an enlightened spokesman conveying to the people of Canada and to the members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition the latest developments from a highly touted economic conference; rather, all he is doing is stalling with old, stale press reports, until the Minister of Finance wends his weary way home again.

This whole business of the way in which the national energy policy is being administered, is very interesting. This debate directly follows from what has been said a few moments before and relates to the questions to which I tried to obtain some answers this afternoon. I do not wish to repeat what I said a few moments ago, but the paradoxes are certainly so striking that they must certainly be underlined again. This government is intellectually and, I suppose, practically bankrupt when it comes to advocating any new policies. It can only fall back on whining and complaining about what the President of the United States feels it is necessary to do to promote economic recovery in his own country, measures which appear to be having at least some success. I would like to say something further to what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said some time ago, and it has been noted before in the House. There are areas in which hon. members in my party, and members in the New Democratic Party do not agree. We sometimes have a certain amount of agreement concerning civil rights and environmental matters. We usually take completely opposing stands on our approach to economic management in this country, but I think there is a measure of respect because of that. However, the government opposite stands for very little except expediency. It will embrace any half-baked policy as long as it can achieve a mandate during an election campaign. Then, when it must produce as it is now expected to produce, having convinced the people of Canada that our approach was wrong, it falls back and whines and complains and blames everything on President Reagan. It is really a very shocking situation.

In addition to the other paradoxes that we see implicit in this and in some of the other things which have already been said about the National Energy Program and the government's tug-of-war economic policies, I think the question bears repeating again in this context: just what is the national energy plan doing to its government's own policies? I come back again to what it is doing to the airline industry in this country. Again I repeat the submission which I have briefly summarized but which I believe to be accurate. It is the submission ATAC made to a committee of this House. I may not have put it on the record in its entirety a few moments ago, but I would like to refer to it again because it fits right in with the kind of information and approach many of us were trying to elicit from the government a few moments ago and this afternoon. This particular policy in the national energy plan has been characterized by ATAC as charges imposed on both foreign and domestic air carriers. As they point out, it was effective as of January 31, 1982, to be replaced by this new scheme that will be and has been explained in the House and in committee. They said this:

• (2205)

> In our view, this governmental attitude is incongruous inasmuch as it seeks to legalize a charge which has already been judged by government to be in violation of Canada's bilateral treaty obligations and for which as stated above, government has already informed the foreign carriers that they would be refunded (to the exclusion of Canadian carriers).

How can any national energy policy be held to be rational when, on the one hand, it is driving billions of dollars of capital from our country and, on the other hand, it is discriminating against our own air industry, and when the Acting Prime Minister cannot answer for the government but only refers to press clippings and then begs us to wait until the Minister of Finance, who never had any answers before, returns from Versailles to enlighten us.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has given us the usual Tory Eaton's catalogue of haphazard complaints. His story tonight is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has given him an inadequate answer, based on the fact that that minister has not incessantly telephoned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in Versailles in anticipation of the hon. member's question.

He makes it sound as if the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are off in some hidden, silent world not covered by the press and not accessible to reasonable people. He makes it sound as though the Canadian public have not been exposed to what many observers call the biggest media circus in the world. The poor hon. member has not been able to get information from the media or any other source, and he complains because the Minister of Transport asks him to wait for 24 hours.

If I may add a little conjecture, I would imagine that if the Minister of Transport had been on the telephone incessantly in anticipation of this question, we would have had complaints about the telephone bill. That is the kind of attitude that was adopted in that last address. It was not a reasonable presentation, and it deserves the kind of political answer I have just given.

ASTRA TRUST—POSITION OF DEPOSITORS. (B) MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, on April 26 last, investors in the Astra Trust Company were told by the Federal Court of Canada that even if they could prove negligence against the officials or the ministers with regard to supervision, licensing or inspecting of the Astra Trust Corporation, they would not be allowed compensation.

Since the Government of Canada managed to obtain compensation for itself, I took the liberty on April 26 to ask the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) what he was prepared to do for those individuals who had lost their life savings and hard-earned earnings in the collapse of Astra Trust. I argued then, as I still do, that this government has an obligation to those depositors because Astra Trust was incorporated by this government after it was refused incorporation by the province of Ontario.

It was through that incorporation that the subsidiary mortgage and investment corporations were established as wholly-owned subsidiary corporations of Astra Trust. Because it was incorporated as a trust company with whatever indications that trust really means, it invited the public to make deposits, and so they did. Unfortunately, it went through those subsidiary companies which did not have the protection of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The minister replied that it was the fault of the province. It was the usual shifting of the buck which we on this side are used to. The minister's response was deceptive in that he led this House to believe that the federal government honoured its commitment to its depositors, that it was the Ontario government that left and continues to leave the suffering victims of the subsidiary companies without compensation.

That was the usual manly dodge on the part of the minister and his government as they peeled off the $29 million of the assets in the hands of the receiver and left a measly sum of less than $10 million for the benefit of the great number of individual depositors and claimants.

• (2210)

What this whole matter boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is the incorporation of Astra itself. We know of the heavy and constant pressure brought on the different officials of the federal government in the incorporation of Astra. We know also of the reluctance of those officials and ministers to appear before standing committees to respond to questions why it was incorporated and why it was so licensed to do business.

We know, too, that the people who were set up to do business by this government were one and the same group of individuals who carried on the business in those subsidiary corporations, and they carried it on fraudulently and dishonestly. Not only that, why should the government not bear some responsibility to those depositors? They set the rules. If you walk into a trust company, do you see a sign saying something like this—I do not see one when I walk into any such company—"Deposit more than $20,000 at your own risk?"

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, a federal Crown corporation, one of many, reimbursed individual depositors up to a maximum of $20,000 each, for a total of $21 million. This was in addition to the repayment of $8,400,000 on a loan that they gave that same company to bail them out of financial difficulty—so that they knew they were in financial difficulties. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation then received 90 per cent repayment of those advances, which in turn took more than 90 per cent of the total of the assets in the hands of the receiver—adding insult to injury, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, while others went broke, increased its deposit insurance fund by $33 million in the very same year it paid out the $21 million to the Astra depositors. In other words, the insurance fund would have in effect remained healthy, even if it had not received a penny or a single dollar in return from the Astra Trust when it collapsed.

In review then, Mr. Speaker, if this government has not a legal obligation to those victims, then surely it has a moral obligation to protect them in their life savings and hard earned moneys deposited with that company. First, there was the unusual and irregular incorporation which permitted—in fact, invited—the public deposits. Second, Astra Trust incorporated by this government did then incorporate subsidiary corporations, investment and mortgage corporations. Third, one of the reasons why the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was set up, was to guarantee the public and depositors against such an instance as this of collapsing or going bankrupt. No one could foresee then, and should not be able to foresee now or foretell, that there was the same deposit guaranteeing corporation on the ground, that would get its hand in there first, to the detriment of the depositors they were designed to protect.

The minister did not state his response in the House, but waited until he got outside of the House, to announce that there would be no return for those depositors. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there should still be hope for those depositors, there should still be a chance for them to receive some return; and the only person that they can turn to now is the minister in his capacity to ensure that the depositors in finance companies incorporated by this government are truly and properly protected.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for raising a very serious question that has considerable implications for ordinary people. I think that he has obviously thought out his concerns considerably in detail here. May I say that to the extent that the federal government had an obligation to Astra Trust depositors, such claims have been largely met. Insured deposits in the "guaranteed" fund and the "agency" fund were reimbursed by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation in the summer of 1980. Total payments were about $21 million. In March of this year the liquidator of Astra Trust made a court-approved interim distribution of the assets of the company, and some $15.6 million of the $17 million was paid to the CDIC as reimbursement of its claims against the company. The liquidator has indicated that additional payments may be made in the future, which means that there is a possibility that the depositors in the "guaranteed" fund may be reimbursed in full.

• (2215)

The hon. member has referred to an $8 million loan from CDIC to Astra Trust. This loan to Astra was made for liquidity purposes some time prior to the decision to wind up the company. CDIC obtained repayment of the loan by assuming ownership of the assets pledged to secure the loan. It is simply not true that the federal government received repayment of funds at the expense of the depositors. The federal government met its obligations to the depositors.

STATUS OF WOMEN—PARLIAMENTARY REPORT ON BATTERED WIVES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 I asked a question of the minister responsible for the status of women concerning battered wives. To the horror of Canadians, a number of male Members of Parliament responded with loud guffaws when I told the House that one in ten husbands beat their wives regularly. A protest from all parts of Canada has flooded in to all Members of Parliament. Articles and letters continue to express general outrage and demand redress on behalf of Canadian women. Unfortunately, since neither Hansard nor television cameras identified the offenders, all Members of Parliament have been shamed and must prove their innocence as a result.

Fortunately, this outrageous incident awakened a public and political awareness of the very serious and high incidence of problems of wife battering and the need for government action on recommendations which were made in the report on violence in the family tabled in the House by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The lip service we have had from ministers, and even from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is not enough, however.

On May 12 I asked the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who had a secondary responsibility for the status of women, to initiate immediate federal action on this matter. Her reply was that she would consult with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to try to give some leadership to develop transition houses under the Canada Assistance Plan. This was quite unsatisfactory, since this would require provincial agreement, and the result would be inadequate funds. It seems the minister had not studied the report, which recommends that the federal government should take immediate federal action on its own to provide start-up funds and facilities for new transition houses. The federal government should also ensure adequate ongoing funding to maintain a core staff.

There are over 90 transition houses now in Canada, most of them inadequately funded and barely able to survive, and many more communities need similar and better services.

The minister responsible for the status of women also misled the House when she said she had discussed this matter of battered wives at her meeting with provincial ministers, when actually she merely announced at that meeting the report had been tabled.

I also asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to take immediate action on recommendations concerning justice and law enforcement, and he bragged that he was training young RCMP cadets. The committee recommended, however, that there be retraining and sensitizing of all police officers to deal more effectively with wife assault, not just training of young cadets who have little serious interest or experience in domestic disputes. The Solicitor General also ignored recommendations for affirmative action in the RCMP, which is needed to provide male-female teams on the beat. He ignored the recommendation to have police lay charges against assailants, since this can rarely be done by battered wives who fear reprisals. A large increase in the number of federal judges was also recommended, to deal with exclusion orders and to protect spouses. The minister ignored all these recommendations. These are all matters of federal jurisdiction that can and must be dealt with immediately by the federal government to stop what is criminal assault.

• (2220)

CMHC is to be commended for providing low-interest mortgages and start-up funds to some new transition houses such as the one in Charlottetown. However, the report also recommends that CMHC initiate policy to encourage several units in every social housing development to be reserved as second stage housing for battered wives. These would pay normal rents, and as the minister need not provide further funding he must take action on this matter.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that last week I visited Anderson House in Charlottetown, a typical transition house which has had continually to scrounge temporary funds from the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), and receives inadequate per diem payments from the province. The staff has had to be cut by 50 per cent. This is a costly and inefficient way to provide inadequate funds which should be replaced by a federal advance of permanent core funding to maintain staffing and overhead costs of transition houses. The provinces could then contribute a per diem rate for each resident.

If we are serious about the problems of battered wives, the federal government must take these initiatives immediately. To do less is to continue to treat criminal assault as a chauvinistic joke.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by reminding everyone that when the subject was brought into Parliament by the hon. member opposite the question began as follows, "Madam Speaker, I have an upbeat question for the minister responsible for the Status of Women." I somehow think that might have been the subject of the laughter in the House at that time, rather than the content of the question.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the question from the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) who has been a member of the committee studying the issue of wife battering.

The commitment of this government on this issue is well known. In the Speech from the Throne the government stated that the serious problem of violence against women will also be addressed, along with other amendments to the Criminal Code, and efforts will be made in concert with the provincial and territorial governments to improve health and social services for women who are victims of violence.

The hon. member opposite may recall that both the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have stated that the RCMP now has, as part of their training program, sessions on family violence. This training is presently under review with a view to expansion.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of violence has been addressed by members of all parties of this House through the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs as a result of unanimous consent given to a motion by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). This motion empowered it to examine appropriate measures for the prevention, identification and treatment of abused persons involving intra-family violence and in particular to address the issue of battered wives and dependants.

The minister responsible for the Status of Women appeared before the standing committee early on in the proceedings and made a major, and widely reported presentation on this subject, and several of her recommendations made to the committee were very well reflected in the recommendations brought forward by the committee in its report.

The House may recall that a few weeks ago the first ever federal-provincial conference of Status of Women ministers was held and it was indicated there that this subject of wife battering is a concern of the provinces as well as of the federal government. The minister responsible for the Status of Women has assured us that the area will be examined more closely at the next federal-provincial meeting.

Also, the justice minister has promised that wife battering will be discussed at the next meeting of federal and provincial attorneys general.

In all the work that has been done on this subject, the great concern has been to bring this issue to the public attention. This report has certainly done that. The work of the members of that committee is greatly appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I call on the hon. member opposite, and indeed, all our colleagues in this House to join together to help to protect Canadian women and, as Linda McLeod, in the report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women termed it, put an end to the vicious circle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 8, 1982

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

YUKON TERRITORY

CONGRATULATIONS TO RE-ELECTED CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House congratulates the Conservative government of Yukon on its re-election yesterday and supports the people of Yukon and their government in their struggle to achieve provincial status and ownership of their own land and resources.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

DISASTERS

ASSISTANCE SOUGHT FOR FORT CHIPEWYAN, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas forest fires last year in northeastern Alberta completely destroyed the trap lines of the residents of Fort Chipewyan; whereas commercial fishing on Lake Athabasca has now been banned because of unacceptable levels of pollution of the Athabasca River, and whereas this double disaster has dealt a severe economic blow to the residents of the community of Fort Chipewyan causing severe unemployment and hardship, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately to declare the community of Fort Chipewyan a region for special assistance so that employment projects can be initiated without delay to allow the people of this area to retain their dignity and self-worth.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

SUPPORT URGED FOR LANDED IMMIGRANTS AND REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the concerns of new immigrants were illustrated by the Canadian Federation of Vietnamese Associations at their recent meeting in Ottawa when they unanimously passed several resolutions regarding resettlement assistance and language training, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap)—and I am sure this motion will have the unanimous support of the House:

That the federal government, in the preparation of its immigration levels paper and settlement policy take into account and consider, first, providing financial support to the Vietnamese Association projects of training resettlement workers with a background in legal matters; second, supporting a training program of Vietnamese community workers; third, improving and extending the period of language training; fourth, providing a minimum of 24 weeks of language training with living allowances, regardless of their sponsorship, and fifth, inviting ethnic communities to participate in the formulation of language training policies for immigrants and refugees.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF THREE MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) went to the OECD in Paris last May and discovered unemployment, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) went to the Summit in Versailles last week and discovered high interest rates and the sinking dollar, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the House recommends that the Minister of Finance go to Cape Breton and the Secretary of State for External Affairs journey to Windsor and the Right Hon. Prime Minister drop into Montreal and see the conditions in their own ridings and then if they have any responsibility at all they will all forthwith resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONCLUDE AN EQUITABLE AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Considering the thousands of automotive workers who have been laid off for an indefinite period at Boisbriand, Oshawa, Windsor and Oakville, and considering the failure of the Liberal government to conclude an agreement with Japan on what would constitute an equitable share of the Canadian automobile market, and the government's inability to bring down interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House demand that the government reach an equitable agreement with Japan and that it reduce interest rates and thus enable Canadian production to recover.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL-LEBANON CONFLICT—SUPPORT URGED FOR UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) and the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House support the resolution of the United Nations Security Council calling for an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Israeli military forces from Lebanon and for the immediate and simultaneous cessation of all military activities within Lebanon and across the Lebanese-Israeli border; and that the House urge all parties to the conflict to seek peaceful means of achieving their mutual security and resolving their differences.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the resolution of the hon. member for St. John's West as it is an endorsement of the United Nations Security Council resolution. Whether it is the shooting of an Israeli ambassador, the maiming of a Lebanese child, the drowning of a British seaman, or the death of an Argentine soldier, there never is a time, as General Grant once said, that some way cannot be found to prevent the drawing of the sword.

I hope the House will endorse the hon. member's resolution. I think that would go a long way toward bringing about a permanent settlement of the Lebanese-Israeli dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I must put the motion to the House. I am afraid I did not realize the hon. member was discussing the motion and therefore debating it. Does the House give its consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the said motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

• (1410)

THE ECONOMY

DEMAND FOR REVERSAL OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given the unprecedented outflow of investment capital from Canada which grew by 500 per cent in 1981 to almost $20 billion, while our foreign borrowing has increased by more than $30 billion secured by way of bonds and loans with foreign lenders who enjoy guaranteed rates of return of 16 per cent to 20 per cent annually, and whereas the anti-investment policies of the federal Liberals are the principal cause of widespread unemployment, high domestic interest rates, and untold human misery everywhere in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the government be directed to restore economic confidence by reversing immediately its anti-investment policies embodied in FIRA, the NEP, and the illegitimate November 12 budget or, barring such a reversal, the government is hereby instructed to resign.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

NECESSITY FOR LOWER MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the president of the Ontario Real Estate Association stated recently that it is not the lack of a down payment which has brought the construction industry to a halt, but rather the inability of home owners to meet excessively high monthly interest payments. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government recognize that until it introduces economic policies that will lower interest rates to home purchasers, the real estate industry and the construction industry will never become strong again.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR PROVISION OF EMERGENCY FUNDING FOR FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas high interest rates have caused many farmers to lose all of the equity they have built into their businesses, sometimes over several generations, and whereas there have been repeated calls by members of the farm community for interest rates at 10 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

That this House urge the government to provide emergency funding for farm debt consolidation at 10 per cent interest rates for farmers facing economic disaster, and that such action be taken prior to the summer recess.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, in view of the hardship the federal excise tax on natural gas has placed on all those who have to make use of natural gas as a fertilizer base as well as for home heating, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Minister of Finance remove this cancerous and inflationary tax if and when he presents a new budget to the Canadian people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT AUDIT AND TAXATION POLICIES—CALL FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, whereas fishermen are complaining bitterly at the tax collection procedures of Revenue Canada and the proposed deduction of income tax at source, and whereas the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry failed to convince the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) to appear in order to answer questions on these two important matters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be given a reference by this House to investigate the federal government audit and taxation policies and procedures as they affect Canada's fishermen, and that the committee be empowered to travel and call witnesses, and report its findings to Parliament this fall.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE ECONOMIC STATEMENT BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, either in that capacity or in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. He will know that the Prime Minister of Canada, who is still out of the country, indicated in Versailles that the economic policy of Canada is to wait six weeks to see if some other country does anything. Will the Minister of Finance today give this Canadian House of Commons a firm commitment that the Minister of Finance will introduce either a new budget or a full economic financial statement before this Parliament leaves for a summer recess?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: You are pretty slow.

Mr. Stevens: This is the surrender at Versailles.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: —I would like to answer the Leader of the Opposition because I, too, am somewhat concerned about the interpretation that the Prime Minister had somehow stated that any possible statement or any possible action to be taken by the Government of Canada was somehow delayed by six weeks. What the Prime Minister said, not only at his press conference but at the Summit meeting, was that because of the impact American high interest rates are having on the world economy and on Canada, and because of the impediment they constitute to the recovery, it was impossible for the world to wait until the fall, until after November, for the United States to act and, therefore, action was essential before the U.S. Congress and the Senate adjourned. That is how the reference was made. Obviously the impact of American policies is very important, but that is not to say there are not actions or responses that Canada on its own will have to consider.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance may have noted, he did not answer the question I put to him. What the Prime Minister said—

[Translation]

And I would like to quote what he said for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance:

We shall see whether the Americans are going to act with the urgency—

[English]

That is the Prime Minister's comment on action in other countries. Our problems are in this country, caused by this government in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING AND NATURE OF FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what I and those 50,000 Canadians who will be out of work in the next six weeks if this government continues to delay want to know, is when there will be a full economic and financial statement in this House of Commons. Will it be in the form of a new budget? We want a guarantee that the Government of Canada, which ran away to Versailles, which is running away and blaming the Americans—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —will not run away from the House of Commons but will, instead, deliver that statement when the House of Commons is sitting here. Has the Minister of Finance the courage to give us that commitment now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let's hear it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no difficulty in telling the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as I did when I appeared before the standing committee, that I intend to update the economic forecasts and the consequent fiscal implications. I will make that update in the House of Commons. There is no question about that.

Whatever updating is required will take place in the House of Commons. It will not be made elsewhere on such an important matter as a new statement, a new report, or a new review of the economic situation and the fiscal requirements that flow from the changed economic situation since the budget. I have no hesitation in assuring the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that that will be made in the House of Commons, and I have absolutely no hesitation in facing the opposition at any time on these important matters because I believe, like him, that this is the place where I ought to make a statement of that consequence.

• (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance has not moved very far from the Hall of Mirrors. He has told us that he will give Parliament an update on what might be a forecast, a review or a statement.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGE IN ECONOMIC POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, with a government whose policies have driven investment out of the country and have created thousands of new additions to the unemployed list in the country, I want to know whether the Government of Canada is contemplating a significant change in economic policy? Will that be introduced in the House of Commons, and when will it be introduced?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will be interested in the communique which was issued following the Summit, and to which Canada obviously gave its support and obviously participated in its conclusions. I believe that it does not, in any of its particulars, anticipate a basic change in economic policy.

If the communique indicates anything, it indicates quite clearly the following: "Growth and employment must be increased. This will be attained on a durable basis only if we are successful in our continuing fight against inflation." That is the basic thrust of the communique, and that is supported by Canada. It does not anticipate the kind of change in policy which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seems to anticipate. I would like basically to remove any thinking that that is a result of the communique itself, or is in the mind of the government at the present time.

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance said that they are planning no major change in a policy which has driven away investment, destroyed jobs, and destroyed confidence in Canada; that is what he just said. His Prime Minister has been saying that he will see what the Americans do and then come back to talk with his caucus colleagues, if any of them will talk to him, to see what they think should be done.

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what in the world is the Prime Minister talking about? Why is he holding out this hope of some kind of change six weeks from now, six months from now, or whenever, if the Minister of Finance is saying in the House that there will not be any basic change in the disastrous economic policy which has been imposed upon the country by this government that does not have a mandate and does not have the courage to go to the country to get one?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition obviously misunderstands the situation once again, because it is he who formulated the questions this afternoon, not I. He asked the question whether it was the intention of the Minister of Finance to make a declaration indicating a basic change in Canadian economic policy. I have explained to him that we have just completed a Summit in which we participated fully. We gave our signature to a declaration which was the result of intensive debate and which indicates that growth and unemployment must be increased.

Mr. Wilson: Growth and unemployment?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Employment. This can only be done on a durable basis if we are successful in our continuing fight against inflation. That is our policy. Maybe the Leader of the Opposition would tell us whether he is recommending a totally opposite, contradictory and different policy. If he is, we would be pleased to hear it and to consider it.

• (1425)

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. Surely the minister must understand that his statement today about the policies which he has been following for the past two years which are causing a great deal of concern, great unemployment and many bankruptcies to many Canadians, is a tremendous disappointment to them today, hearing that there will be no change in the basic policy that the government has followed.

The minister talked about the Versailles Summit communique which stated that Canadians will pursue, as a matter of urgency, greater control of budgetary deficits, and at the same time he has allowed his deficits to increase from the $10.5 billion estimate at the time of the budget to the current estimate of around $17 billion or $18 billion. What exactly is he proposing to do to reduce that deficit?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the tenor of the question of the hon. member. Is he suggesting, at a time of very deep slack in the economy and at a time of very grave and rising unemployment, that the government should be taking a more restrictive fiscal policy than the policy that was laid out in the budget? If he is suggesting that, then I think he is recommending a policy that the Government of Canada will not follow, or indeed would not think to be in the best interests of the Canadian people at the present time.

Mr. Wilson: This is not just a forum where we can parry around with words. I am asking questions.

Madam Speaker: Order. We have to move to other questioners very soon. There has been quite a bit of time taken by the Leader of the Opposition. I would ask the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre to be brief.

MEANING OF STATEMENT IN SUMMIT COMMUNIQUE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am asking the minister if he will tell Canadians just exactly what the government meant when ministers signed the communique in Versailles which states that, "we will pursue as a matter of urgency greater control of budgetary deficits." What did he mean?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will tell the House and the hon. member what that sentence actually means. The hon. member can interpret it for himself. The paragraph, as a whole, needs to be read. It begins by saying:

> Growth and employment must be increased. This will be attained on a durable basis only if we are successful in our continuing fight against inflation. That will also help to bring down interest rates, which are now unacceptably high and to bring about more stable exchange rates. In order to achieve this essential reduction of real interest rates, we will as a matter of urgency pursue prudent monetary policies and achieve greater control of budgetary deficits.

Miss MacDonald: What are you going to do?

Mr. MacEachen: That last particular sentence was inserted—

Mr. Clark: What are you going to do?

Mr. MacEachen: —as a result of representations made by the Canadian delegation—

Mr. Clark: Come on, what are you going to do?

Mr. MacEachen: —to bring to the attention of the United States that if the world is to get any opportunity to get out of this recession the United States must take action to reduce its real interest rates. That is the purpose of that sentence. It was directed against the United States, not against Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT NEW ECONOMIC MEASURES BE INTRODUCED FOR EARLY DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as usual the Deputy Prime Minister talks a good battle. He has come back from a conference which did in fact lead to the Prime Minister recognizing in Versailles that there was an economic crisis in Canada for which we can at least be thankful.

I have a specific question and a proposal, assuming that the Deputy Prime Minister takes seriously the words that he reiterated just now, that the government is committed to growth and employment in terms of new policies. Considering that there are roughly three days of debating time left on energy bills which we have all discussed and debated before, and also considering that there are three days allocated to opposition parties remaining in this session, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister is the government now prepared to come to grips in a serious and immediate way with the economic problems of this country, by introducing, say, next Monday, specific economic measures to which we could allocate a full week's time of debate, if the opposition parties gave up their days for debate on other matters so that we could get on with dealing with the economic crisis.

• (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear to the hon. member, as I made it clear earlier when questioned by the press, that the results of the Summit at Versailles will be considered by the Canadian cabinet. I will be reporting to the cabinet this week on what happened at Versailles. We will be having discussions in our own caucus and, as a result of that process, we will determine the course of action and what the response ought to be. But it seems to me that it is absolutely essential to intensify our efforts in this country to reduce inflation because our performance, in comparison with most other countries, is not very good.

Miss MacDonald: It is bad.

Mr. MacEachen: The way to that result is certainly by a moderation of income claims by all Canadians at the present time.

Mr. Deans: While the interest rates are too high.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member is interested in pursuing that kind of policy which has been pursued by colleagues of his, like President Mitterand and Chancellor Schmidt, then of course I would be interested in his support.

OFFER OF PARLIAMENTARY TIME FOR DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister cannot get away with prevaricating—

Some hon. Members: With what?

Mr. Broadbent: —for an unlimited period of time. I am serious about the economic problems of the country. I would hope that there are other people on the opposite side of the House who are serious, as well.

I want to repeat the question and I simply ask for consideration by the government at this time, not for a final answer, but, rather, for a commitment to consider the proposal. We are saying, as one opposition party, that action is needed, and needed quickly. We are also saying that we are prepared to give up our number of days and, cumulatively, there is at least a week's debating time available so that the Government of Canada could act in a number of ways, whether on housing, whether on interest rates, or whether on a longer-range strategy. But it would not be required to take action for at least a week, to give time to the government to consider it.

All I am asking from the Deputy Prime Minister today is a commitment that he will take this proposal back to his cabinet colleagues and give us an answer tomorrow. Will he be prepared to come back next week with economic action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is making some sort of an offer saying, "We are ready to give up parliamentary time." That is an unnecessary gesture, a bit of grandstanding by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Parliamentary time is not a factor. We are quite prepared to stay here as long as necessary to deal with economic problems. If the hon. member is trying to compress things into the month of June, well, that is his problem. But what I am saying to hon. members of the House is that we take the economic situation very seriously. We have just returned from an economic Summit where we had very intensive discussions. We now intend to consider the matter in the cabinet, very deeply and very seriously, and when decisions are taken on what course of action we ought to take, then of course the hon. member and the House will be advised. However, I think he will understand that it is a bit of a grandstand to say, "Come in next Monday and, in order to facilitate that, we will give up our opposition days." Really, it is pretty sad, is it not?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, there is only one sad group in this Parliament today, and that is the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is the sad group.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DETERMINE PLANS WITHIN TWO WEEKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to indicate to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the House leader, with whom he is now consulting, that this party will be prepared to sit all summer if necessary, if that is what is required to get the government to act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Neither the Acting Prime Minister in answer to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, nor the Deputy Prime Minister in answer to the Leader of the Opposition today have told us we would get any action within an early number of weeks. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give us a commitment that within two weeks, if not within a week, the government will finally make up its mind and do something for all the unemployed people in the country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, once again I want to tell the hon. member for Oshawa that surely the important thing is not to seek action within a day or two days, but the important thing—

Mr. Broadbent: Within ten years, with you people!

Mr. MacEachen: —is to consider what proper proposals are appropriate at the present time. Then we will know the attitude of the hon. member. We intend to take this situation very seriously.

Miss MacDonald: About time.

Mr. Broadbent: This decade.

Mr. MacEachen: As the hon. member knows, the Prime Minister is attending the Summit of NATO leaders this week, and on Monday, when he returns, we will begin—we will continue the process of consideration leading up to—

Mr. Clark: You will continue to begin, or will you begin to continue?

Mr. MacEachen: We will continue the process which we will have already begun this week, since my return.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and the Canadian people are not cheering, even if his Liberal claque is cheering; they are groaning under the economic conditions.

The Canadian dollar was valued at $1.02 in October of 1976. It has devalued 22.5 per cent today to 79 cents. It has declined 9 per cent in value since February of 1980 when the government came back into office. During that period the unemployment numbers went up 570,000. The inflation figures went up over 5 per cent, and the bank rate by 5.5 per cent. Obviously a lower Canadian dollar does not help our economy. Can the minister tell us whether it is still the government's policy to prevent any further devaluation of the dollar, and if so, how do the minister and the government plan to accomplish that?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member should know that the Canadian dollar is not on a fixed exchange rate. It moves up and down in response to market forces, and that is still the policy. But I would add in reply to the hon. member that it is not the intention of the Government of Canada, as was recommended by a number of provincial premiers, to seek a deliberate devaluation of the Canadian dollar. To us, that seems to be a very unwise course of action. But the dollar is not on a fixed rate. It is moving and will continue to move in response to basic market forces. That is the policy.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE NEW BUDGET

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the minister said that parliamentary time is not a factor. He has now been in office for two years and three months during which time the situation has gone from bad to very grave. Therefore I would like to ask him a supplementary question. Perhaps I should ask the Secretary of the Treasury down in the United States, if we are to listen to him, but I am asking the minister here. When we return to office we will, and—

Mr. Lalonde: Dream, dream, dream!

Mr. Crosbie: And my question is: will the government now revive our economy and put our people back to work by revoking the November 12 budget and bringing in a new budget which will encourage the risk-taker and the investor, by changing the new energy program in major ways, to treat all investors fairly and to give the oil and gas industry some incentive? Will the government start to welcome foreign investment and restore confidence which will start our economy moving again? Will you do those things, or step aside and let someone else do them?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member is always interested in regaining office because he ends his question with a plea for us to step aside and let that crowd opposite take over the situation.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a failure, a miserable failure.

Mr. MacEachen: The Canadian people had nine months of that—

Mr. Crosbie: Give them another chance.

Mr. MacEachen: —and did not wait very long to change the hon. member and his leader.

Mr. Clark: Ask them today.

Mr. MacEachen: I think the reason for that kind of attitude is the basic misunderstanding—

Mr. Clark: They cannot believe what you say.

Mr. MacEachen: —of the hon. member as to the cause of the current economic situation in Canada. He fails to understand that there is a world recession, that every country in the world is suffering from that recession and there will not be a broadly based recovery affecting the United States, Canada and Europe unless there is a basic resolution to the high interest situation in the United States. That is the first step. The hon. member may talk of marginal changes in Canadian policy, but that is not the way out of this situation. That is why the Canadian delegation at the Summit conference kept its eye on the ball and repeatedly urged the United States to take steps that would give the rest of the world a chance to get out of this recession.

• (1440)

LEVEL OF INFLATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance who, several times, faced with the evidence that is mounting in the country of capital fleeing to other lands for investment purposes, has read from a communique issued in Versailles which calls for the continued fight against inflation. With our inflation level in excess of 11 per cent year over year, as high as it has been in living memory, will the minister tell the House when his fight against inflation will commence, bearing in mind that the Americans at least got their level down to almost 3 or 4 per cent?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have been maintaining a monetary policy and a fiscal policy that are directed against inflationary pressures in the economy. I will admit to the hon. member that in Canada at the present time income settlements are much higher than in most other countries of the world. That is an aspect of our problem which has to be addressed by all the major participants in the economy. If we are to remain competitive and if we are to participate in a recovery that is to come, and will come, we have to be more successful in dealing with this aspect of our inflationary pressures.

I have argued against the introduction of a comprehensive system of wage and price controls. Therefore the only workable alternative is to secure a better understanding among the main participants in the Canadian economy of the result of current economic behaviour. That is really the situation that we face in this country at the present time.

Mr. Stevens: As we all know, somebody else in Versailles said "let them eat cake".

PLIGHT OF WORKERS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance arises from his last answer. Unemployment is estimated to go up another 50,000 in number in the next six weeks, the dollar is now approaching 79 cents, there is an exodus of capital with the bond issue that the minister placed in Europe falling out of bed, down two points alone on $750 million. Has the minister no concern for the plight of Canadian workers other than to insult them with what he just said, that it is their wage increases that are causing the problem, bearing in mind that in the last five years the average wage earner has seen his real buying power fall by 10 per cent in this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that I have no intention and I will not insult Canadian workers. I have not regarded them as the culprit in the present inflationary situation. I do not believe they are responsible for the current situation, but I do say that unless we have greater success in bringing down the level of income settlements in Canada in all groups, this country will not succeed economically. That is the situation at the present time.

When we see the largest industrial union in the world, the metal workers in West Germany, just recently settle for several points below the inflation rate, it gives us some cause to consider what the course of action ought to be in Canada.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

DESIGNATION OF ESSENTIAL EMPLOYEES—EFFECT ON RIGHT TO STRIKE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. At the instigation of the federal government the Supreme Court ruled last week that the federal government had the right to designate large numbers of public servants as essential to public safety, and to remove their right to strike. The specific decision dealt with Canada's air traffic controllers where approximately 1,800 out of 2,200 lost their right to strike. Is it the intention of the government to use this Supreme Court decision to remove effectively the right to strike from public servants? If so, will the government bring this change of policy before the House in the form of legislation so that Canada's elected representatives can debate this anti-union policy?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member obviously was not here in 1967 when the act in question was adopted. The issue was thoroughly debated at that time. Section 79 of the act simply provides that the employer is entitled to apply to have those employees whose duties involve safety or security designated and, once designated, they cannot strike. The issue was debated. The issue was well understood by parliamentarians of the day. The section has been applied consistently. In this particular instance the government elected to use it in the case of air traffic controllers. The Supreme Court has simply confirmed the interpretation that the government has of this section and which all parliamentarians had of this section in 1967.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LIST OF PLANNED DESIGNATION CHANGES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister. It is clear that he is not living up to some of the provisions of the ILO with regard to this matter. It is clear that the government's new tactic on designation is a new policy and is being used to change labour relations. Within the last few weeks groups other than the air traffic controllers have been hit with extreme designations. The ship repair group on the dockyard in Halifax have had nearly 80 per cent of their membership designated. The Public Service Alliance has had its H.P. designation—

Madam Speaker: Order. That really is not a question.

Mr. Parker: I am merely stating there are other groups. Will the President of the Treasury board at least table a full list of the planned changes in designations rather than trying to sneak them through one at a time over the next few months?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am puzzled by the question. There is no planned change. There is absolutely no change in the law. In each instance the employer simply moves forward with a list of proposed designations, and the union has a perfect right to contest them. If the Public Service Staff Relations Board determines that these employees are carrying out duties necessary in the interests of safety and security of the public, surely the hon. member is not against that. This government is interested in protecting the safety and security of the public.

There has been absolutely no change in policy, and the designation procedure used today is exactly the same as it was in 1967. As far as the air traffic controllers are concerned, the circumstances speak for themselves. The issue has gone through two courts. I am pleased, as I hope hon. members will be pleased, that it has been satisfactorily resolved and that the interpretation given to the section by the government has been confirmed.

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHY MINISTER OF FINANCE IS NOT DISMISSED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Earlier, the minister clearly indicated that he intended to maintain a philosophy that he has fiercely defended, with very unfortunate results, during the last two years. The minister said that he still believed in the future economic growth and job creation, provided that we keep up our fight against inflation. As a result of this philosophy, during the last two years Canada has lost 16,000 businessess and 300,000 jobs which provided a living for 1,200,000 Canadians. In the circumstances, and considering the fact that a number of ministers as well as the minister's fellow members have publicly condemned his policies and qualified him as incompetent, does the minister, if he really wants to serve his country, need any further reasons for asking his Prime Minister to allow him to resign?

Mr. Clark: Hear, hear. Resign!

• (1450)

Madam Speaker: A supplementary, the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: I now understand why the Minister of Finance has no new proposals to put before the House, because he has no idea of the harm he has caused this country as a result of the lack of adequate measures. Madam Speaker, I believe that the refusal of the Minister of Finance to—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. La Salle: It relates to my question. I understand, Madam Speaker, that these people do not want—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the option of not answering the question and that is his right. The hon. member may proceed with a second question, but it must be brief as well.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, in my second question I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware of the problems experienced by Canadians today, whether he realizes that at least 500,000 Canadians will have no alternative but to go on welfare by December 31, and whether he has any idea of the hardship he is causing to Canadians as a result of the lack of adequate measures, and in the circumstances, whether the Minister of Finance has anything else to say besides his usual refrain, which is bringing this country to the brink of bankruptcy—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member's second question is a pretty good illustration of the reason why I declined to answer his first question, which was basically a series of rhetorical statements. I am quite prepapred to answer questions, as I do every day, but I really cannot answer them if they are not formulated in a way that they can get an answer.

The hon. member asked me if I am aware of the difficulties that the Canadian people face. Madam Speaker, there is no one more aware of the difficulties that currently exist in the Canadian economy, and there is no one who is more worried about the rising level of unemployment than members of the cabinet, including myself. We are following the policy, no matter how difficult it is at the present time, that we think will bring the country to a possibility of renewed strength. Now, if the hon. member or his party has a different policy, a better policy—

Mr. Clark: We do.

Mr. MacEachen: —I think it is their responsibility to lay it out and let us examine it. But up to the present time they have failed, and have not indicated what their economic policy is in current circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have seen an incredible performance of stonewalling this afternoon. We are in a great recession. We have more than 1.2 million Canadians out of work. We have double-digit inflation. And we have bankruptcies at near record levels. Yet we have the minister telling the House, and I am quoting him, that he needs more time to consider—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not think we have had more than five or six questioners today during question period. I know that some answers have been long; but if hon. members want to give everyone a chance to ask a question, they should not be repeating those statistics, which have been repeated four or five times in the course of this question period. They should go directly to their questions.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, the heads of two Canadian chartered banks have told the finance committee that extended periods of high interest rates will cause serious damage to the economy, that bankruptcies will increase to an intolerable level, and that a time of crisis is near. Is the minister waiting until the crisis does occur, in order to change his economic policy, or is he prepared to act now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the members of the banking community who appeared before the committee have been stating well known facts, that the existence of high interest rates is very damaging to the Canadian economy and to all the economies of the world. That is well known. I share their concern. That is why, at the economic Summit, the Canadian delegation directed its efforts completely in the direction of trying to find ways and means of bringing down interest rates throughout the world, particularly in the United States. So I would agree with the concern that has been expressed by the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, this supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. Since he has been wrong on his economic forecasts, and wrong on his budget measures, and wrong on his National Energy Program revenue projections, and wrong on his claim that a lower Canadian dollar would lead to lower interest rates—

Mr. Clark: He does not know where he is living.

Miss Carney: —now that he tells the House that he believes his policy will lead to renewed growth in the economy, why should Canadians believe him?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, of course I disagree with the premise of the hon. member's question. It is another rhetorical question that is really impossible to answer.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDING

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. It relates to some of the statements the Minister of Agriculture has made as a result of the passing of the farm credit bill. The Minister of Agriculture said he would have an additional $1 billion of funding available for the Farm Credit Corporation after the first of June. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance if he will support the Minister of Agriculture in his efforts to raise that additional $1 billion of funding for the Farm Credit Corporation, at lower rates, through the agribond concept, which is similar to the small business bond concept.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have always supported the Minister of Agriculture in his efforts to improve conditions for the Canadian farmer, and I will continue to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADVANCE CROP PAYMENTS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I would also like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is prepared to look at something that would help farmers without increasing the deficit, that is, an amendment to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in the other place, is in favour of that. I wonder if the Minister of Finance, as a senior member of the cabinet and Deputy Prime Minister, is prepared to support the minister in the other place, to see that as of the first of August farmers will have some additional funding available to them.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the responsible minister brings forward his amendment I will look at it quite sympathetically, but I cannot forecast what the response will be until I see the specific amendment.

* * *

THE JUDICIARY

CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL REPORT ON ACTIONS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA JUDGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns the recent report of the Canadian Judicial Council on the actions of Judge Thomas Berger. The minister stated recently in the national media that the Council accepted the report of their committee of investigation, which was an appalling document that essentially found that Judge Berger's actions would support a recommendation for his removal from judicial office. Will the minister take this opportunity to correct publicly this totally erroneous statement which he made, and confirm that in fact, far from accepting the report, the full Council rejected the report of the investigation committee and found that Judge Berger's actions did not in any way constitute grounds for his removal from the bench? Will the minister set the record straight?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said that the committee reported that Mr. Justice Berger had committed an indiscretion, that it was unprecedented, and that they were not recommending his removal from the bench. I have accepted the same recommendation, to the effect that we should not put this question to the House of Commons and the Senate. Of course, as the Judicial Council of Canada said, he had committed an indiscretion. I have accepted that report.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the minister has had his opportunity, but he is continuing to take cheap shots at this respected British Columbia judge—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —whose only offence was to condemn the shameful betrayal of Canada's founding peoples and our native peoples. This is a travesty of justice.

• (1500)

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF SUBJECT TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister has refused to correct this shameful attack on Judge Berger, and in the process has continued to lie to the people of Canada and abuse his office as Minister of Justice, will the minister allow the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs an opportunity to examine this question and give Judge Berger an opportunity to reply to this serious and unprecedented attack on his credibility?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I said there was a report which was presented to me and, at the request of the hon. member, I made it public. I said I have accepted the recommendations of the Judicial Council, which said that there was an indiscretion but that, as it was unprecedented, there should be no remedial action or the removal of Mr. Justice Berger from the bench.

It was at the request of the hon. member and of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that I made the report public, and I repeat in the House that it is extremely important in our system that we have a complete distinction between the parliamentary and executive powers and the judicial powers in Canada. That is the cornerstone of our system.

We welcome the report, which says that when you want to participate in political debate, you run in politics; if you want to be a judge, you act as a judge. That is all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—WITHDRAWAL OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order, but it is probably more in the form of a question of privilege. It has just come to my attention on reading Hansard that I interjected yesterday following an answer by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), and Hansard quite correctly reported me at page 18147 as having said, "That is a lie". That is unparliamentary, Madam Speaker. It adds nothing to the decorum of this place and I withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member saying he did not make that interjection? At any rate, the Chair did not hear it; otherwise, I would not have allowed it.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, we have a very competent Hansard reporting staff in this place. I did make that remark. It was reported, it was unparliamentary, and I withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member.

Mr. Cousineau: Hey, John, did you hear that?

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—REPLY OF MR. CHRÉTIEN RESPECTING JUDICIAL COUNCIL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following upon the answer of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) to my remarks. The Minister of Justice has refused to correct what is obviously a lie which he has perpetrated, suggesting that a committee of the judicial council—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has just seen a formidable example of someone who has withdrawn such an expression. I ask the hon. member to withdraw it right away.

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I distinctly heard the hon. member say that another hon. member has told a lie. If I have not heard the hon. member correctly, I will hear from the hon. member, who will assure me he has not said that.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, we are dealing with a situation in which a judge has no opportunity to reply to an attack upon himself.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): His credibility has been undermined. At no time did I suggest that the Minister of Justice abused his position by lying in the House. However, at the weekend the minister did unquestionably tell the people of Canada that the report of the investigation committee of the Canadian judicial council—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. As long as the hon. member has not said someone in this House has told a lie, that is fine; no unparliamentary language has been used. As for the rest of the hon. member's invervention, he is obviously debating a question. He does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is over. I have just ruled.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the question period. It affects my privilege as a Member of Parliament because as Members of Parliament we have a responsibility to protect judges who cannot reply. I think we have to put this on the record to give the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) a chance to reply. The fact is that there was a recommendation by a subcommittee—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is still debating the question. It is not a question of privilege. He has no foundation for a question of privilege at this time.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITION

MR. OGLE—WORLD INVOLVEMENT IN NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to the Hon. the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled as follows:

The PETITION of the undersigned residents of the Riding of Saskatoon East, in the Province of Saskatchewan, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Hon. House will therefore provide a remedy,

Humbly Sheweth:

THAT the World involvement in nuclear armaments will lead to the probable destruction of the human race,

WHEREFORE the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Members of Parliament to express their fears and concerns for the future of all mankind.

AND as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

There are 24 names of parents and grandparents who are deeply concerned about world involvement in nuclear armaments. I present this petition.

* * *

[Translation]

COOPERATIVE ENERGY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH THE COOPERATIVE ENERGY CORPORATION AND THE COOPERATIVE ENERGY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-116, an act to establish the Cooperative Energy Corporation and the Cooperative Energy Development Corpopation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,794 and 3,885.

[Text]

SECURITY CHECKS FOR PERSONNEL ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 2,794—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the RCMP or any other branch of the government made security checks on all persons hired to work in any of the buildings on Parliament Hill, including (a) cleaning staff (b) maintenance staff (c) protective staff (d) restaurant and cafeteria staff (e) employees in the offices of the Members of Parliament, Senators and Cabinet Ministers and (i) if so, is this a regular procedure and on what date did it commence (ii) if not, is the government concerned about security clearance for these persons and will security checks be undertaken?

2. Did the government recommend to the Management and Members' Services Committee of the House of Commons or to anyone else that such checks be made and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1.(a) to (d) No. (e) (i) Security checks on employees of Members of Parliament, Senators and Cabinet Ministers are conducted at the request of the PCO or a department whenever such employees require access to classified government documents in the discharge of their duties. In the case of ministers' exempt staff and departmental employees employed in Parliament Hill offices, the procedure is mandatory and a condition of employment under government policy. In the case of ministers of the Crown and parliamentary secretaries associated to ministers involved in defence and external affairs, House of Commons staff who are assigned government-related duties involving access to classified material are subject to a security check, but only after the requirement has been explained to them and their consent has been given to proceed. (e)(ii) Not applicable.

2. No. A government, as such, would not, under normal circumstances, address a recommendation to the Management and Members' Services Committee of the House of Commons. A matter of common interest to elected members would be put to the Speaker for consideration.

DPW EMPLOYEES AT BROCKVILLE

Question No. 3,885—Mr. Cossitt:

1. During the past five years, what were the names and job designations of those employed by the Department of Public Works at the Brockville federal building?

2. Were there any instances where competitions were not held to fill their positions and, if so, in each case, what were the details?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. During the past five years, those employed by Public Works Canada at the Brockville Federal Building are as follows:

Petroleum Administration Act

Names	Job Designations
C.A. Euverman	GS-BUS-1
S.L. Gorgerat	GS-BUS-1
W. Kirk	GS-BUS-2

2. All new employees are recruited and screened by the Canada Employment Centre. A list of successful candidates is maintained by them and they refer candidates at a client's request to staff a position.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Questions enumerated by the Parlementary Secretary have been answered—The member for Central Nova (Mr. Mackay) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, just looking at some of my questions on the Order Paper, on February 9, four months ago, I put on the Order Paper a series of questions in question No. 3,750 concerning our diplomatic staff in eastern European countries and the diplomatic staffs of those countries stationed in Ottawa. On March 22 I filed further questions concerning the penetration of the RCMP security service by communist agents and the pressures exercised by Czechoslovak agents against Canadian citizens.

These are all questions which concern our country, and I hope there will be some effort made to deal with them pretty quickly. I hope the absence of answers is not deliberate.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the absence of answers is not deliberate. I am not aware offhand what stage the answers are at, but I will look into this matter on behalf of the hon. member.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, June 7, 1982, consideration of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motion No. 6 (Mr. Hawkes).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I want to speak in support of the amendment proposed. Debate on the amendment was opened by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). When one looks at the amendment, one will recognize that it is a fairly simple and straightforward amendment but, most of all, it is a very reasonable amendment. It is responsible and contains a great deal of common sense. The amendment proposes to limit the amount of money that can be collected under the Canadian ownership account. According to Clause 39, which deals with Section 65.26(3)(b) of the act as set out on page 29 of the bill, the money provided by the collection of this surcharge can be used as follows:

• (1510)

—for investment in shares, debentures, bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of or for property acquisitions from any person in order to increase Canadian public ownership of the oil and gas industry in Canada and to repay loans or expenses incurred for that purpose.

The amendment would place a limit on the revenue collected under the Canadian ownership charge of $1.460 billion. It is a sunset provision, in effect. Parliamentary approval would be required before any wild and woolly deals such as the Petrofina deal could be made. In this clause the government seeks carte blanche approval to buy a company outright, to buy shares in a company or to buy properties without parliamentary approval. It could use its authority to draw upon a slush fund to be created at the expense of the consumers of Canada in order to buy a greater percentage of the oil industry. Considering the present lack of control we have over Crown corporations and the accountability of the government, I think this amendment deserves to be considered.

What the government is really saying is that state takeover is a way of Canadian life; that it has become part and parcel of the social and economic fabric of our society; that the government has the power and in its wisdom it shall decide when, where and how it shall penetrate the oil industry and how much it shall pay for it without being accountable to the people of Canada or making any reference to Parliament.

My colleague's amendment deserves consideration by all members of the House, Mr. Speaker. If the institution of Parliament is to be preserved and its credibility enhanced, then it must uphold its responsibility for funds held in trust for the Canadian people. Parliament must have the final say in this connection.

There are other areas that I want to touch on briefly, such as the economic climate in the country which is closely tied to the fundamental principles of the National Energy Program and the budget. There is no question that the country is in very serious economic trouble and there are many reasons for this. I would be the first to admit that the international environment is part of the problem but I do not think it is the only reason. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his colleagues on the treasury benches will have to accept their responsibility for the present ills of the country. They cannot continue to plead that it is an international problem and an offshoot of the policies of the United States. I say very bluntly that the problems we face in this country are largely made-in-Canada problems and require made-in-Canada solutions.

There are three components that I believe contribute to the current malaise. The first is a psychological or attitudinal problem. There is a negative psychology in the country which pervades all aspects of our society and all regions of the country. The record of the government in the last two years has created this negativism. It has created a feeling of deep mistrust and now Canadians do not believe anything that the government says any more.

A week ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) announced changes to the National Energy Program. However, people in the industry are so cynical now that they do not believe that the minister's intentions or the intentions of the government are honourable. These provisions are to be in effect for a limited time only. But the fundamental philosophy enshrined in the National Energy Program was not withdrawn; it was a patchwork scheme drawn up to attract a certain amount of support. There may be support in some sectors of the industry but, by and large, the damage has been done. The goose that laid the golden egg that was our once vibrant industry has been killed. It will take more than the announcement made by the minister to revive it.

There is a mood of cynicism in the country. When people remember that the government fought an election on a platform of cheap energy and that in less than two years it has doubled the price of gasoline, it is not surprising that no one believes it any more. Today the Minister of Finance reiterated that the government has a mandate from the people of Canada, but that mandate was obtained on a platform of lies and deceit. If the people of Canada had a second chance, knowing as they do now that the government did not mean what it said, I am sure the results would be quite different. There is a feeling of deep mistrust in the country and a realization that the government would rather confront than co-operate. This has led to division and mistrust rather than to harmony.

Another aspect of this attitudinal problem is that more and more Canadians now realize that the government is incompetent. It does not have answers. It has destroyed the incentive, the desire, to progress that was once alive in the country. It has destroyed industries that were once humming and viable. There is a growing realization that the government is incompetent and is largely responsible for the mess we are in, that it does not understand what makes the country tick or what makes the economy tick. It has run out of solutions.

Rather than having a positive mood in the country and a readiness to tackle urgent economic problems, there is a feeling of hopelessness, despair and helplessness around us. There is uncertainty, confusion, and investment decisions are being postponed. Things are going in reverse, Mr. Speaker.

There is a general view abroad in the country that, given our resources and the opportunities that exist for individuals, companies, entrepreneurs and investors, we should all be doing much better. But the government has stymied initiative; it has stymied investment; it has stymied the entrepreneurial spirit that was the hallmark of this country over the last 20 or 30 years.

• (1520)

Another reason for our present problems is the economic policy of the government which is reflected in the philosophy of the budget. That budget, as we all know—and we are not sure whether it will survive this Parliament—stifles growth, discourages investment, penalizes initiative and enterprise, and advocates greater state control in the growth and development of economic opportunity in Canada. It was interesting to note that Mr. W. P. Wilder, the president and chief executive officer of Hiram Walker Resources Ltd., in a speech to the Canadian Club of Montreal on March 1, said this:

> The biggest single barrier to investment—whether it be the multi-million dollar investments called for by the energy industry or the smaller investments required in other industries across the country—is uncertainty. And this federal government, through its over-all approach to the economy, has raised a basic uncertainty as to whether or not investment in Canada—by Canadians or by anybody else—is really a very good idea in business terms.

I think that summarizes very succinctly the prevailing mood in the minds of investors.

The third issue which has led to the deterioration in our economy is, naturally, the NEP. The fact that we are engaged in this rather long debate, Mr. Speaker, which strikes at the very core of the NEP, is certainly a tribute to my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, and indeed to the House leader of my party. I think it is fair to say that the NEP is not fully understood by the average Canadian, and hopefully through this debate we will be able to apprise Canadians in a more general way as to the real thrust of the NEP, what it has done and failed to do, and how it might be improved.

The short and simple solution would be to have the whole thing withdrawn and to start all over again. I think that would do a lot to lift confidence and improve the investment climate, particularly in the oil sector. Those are not only my views, they are shared by other learned individuals in the country. I would like to quote from an article written by Mr. John Meyer, a very well-known journalist, who has written some very learned articles on the economy, energy, and business in general. This is from an article which appeared in The Executive magazine of April, 1982 and is entitled—and this is the very point I am trying to make—"Canada's collapse began with the NEP". He goes on to say:

> This is a recession which need never have happened. Now that it has, it looks as if it will last longer and hurt more than any previous post-war recession. After three quarters, there is still no end to it in sight.
>
> This recession was triggered and has since been intensified by a succession of federal measures and, to a lesser extent, the provincial responses they evoked. The breaking point came with the National Energy Program.
>
> To attribute this recession to the arrival together of most of the developed countries on the same downslope of the business cycle, or to attribute it to high U.S. interest rates, is to ignore the dominant role of energy among our other natural resources.
>
> Provision for a competitive rate of return on oil and gas production would have strengthened the dollar, improved national productivity and raised the national income. At most, it could have overtaken the deterrents of high interest rates and slumping other countries. At least it would have offered the promise of early recovery. The introduction of the NEP deprived us of both.
>
> Before NEP, the strongly rising volume of investment in oil and gas exploration and development had been driving the whole economy forward. Every dollar invested by the petroleum industry multiplied two or three times through the economy in purchases of equipment and services.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, the purchase of equipment and services not only in western Canada, but indeed throughout all of Canada. I quote again:

> Since NEP, the industry's investment here has been drastically reduced, by 30 per cent to 40 per cent through 1981 and by at least that much again this year. These are not now recoverable funds. They have either been committed outside Canada or absorbed by government.

He goes on to say:

> For the better part of a decade, government has been reaching out to capture key elements in the economy, to transform them into instruments for implementing its vision of the corporate state—that is, one in which political authority is assured by control over investment and production.
>
> An earlier model of the corporate state was Mussolini's Italy of the late 1920s and 1930s. But set aside what the attempts to emulate it here imply for individual rights and freedoms. Consider only what it has cost so far in forfeited economic growth.

I can quote Mr. Wilder again where he says in his speech to the Canadian Club of Montreal:

> And the main point I want to make—a point I do not believe the energy industry has made as clearly as it should have—is that the NEP is not an isolated set of government policies that affect the oil and gas industry alone. The NEP is just one part of an approach to the economy of this country on the part of the federal government that is undermining the ability of every industry in Canada to meet the kinds of economic challenges it faces today.

He goes on to say that:

> In total, because of the NEP, the energy industry is smaller, and weaker, and less capable of finding the new energy sources we will need to achieve self-sufficiency in Canada.

He goes on to talk about trust:

> The people in our industry are less and less disposed to trust the federal government.

He then talks about Canadianization:

> —"Canadianized" industry is going to be much smaller than it would have been under more advantageous conditions.

So the things we are espousing here today have not simply been dreamed up by members on this side of the House. The fact of the matter is that they are shared by many other knowledgeable people throughout the country. Simply put, we can summarize the NEP as being the most destructive measure ever perpetrated on a once viable industry in Canada. It has literally destroyed the western oil industry. Exploration is down by 40 per cent, over 200 rigs have left the country, we have massive lay-offs, bankruptcies, and employment is down by 33 per cent. More than 14,000 people have lost their jobs in the energy industry since the NEP came into being. There has been an exodus of capital, something like $18 billion in 1981. Over $1 billion worth of machines have left this country in the form of drilling rigs and equipment. We have auction sales every day. As my colleague the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has indicated, those sales produce 50 cents on the dollar and certainly that is eroding confidence in the industry and in the economy as a whole. On May 21, 1980, two years ago, there were over 400 drilling rigs working in western Canada. Today there are fewer than 100. Those rigs are like little factories for us in western Canada; they employ 40 to 50 people each. Where have they gone? They have gone south of the border, and some young men and women have been fortunate enough to go with them. They found jobs there and the United States gave them work permits.

I can go on. The cancellation of megaprojects is clearly another example of the disaster which has been caused by the NEP. We are more reliant on imported oil today than we were a year ago. And what are we doing? We are importing oil while shutting in our own domestic sources of supply. Something in the order of 200,000 to 300,000 barrels a day are shut in. Those wells are not pumping so they do not require service, and that is adding to the unemployment rolls, further eroding our balance of payments, weakening our dollar, increasing interest rates, and contributing to the declining confidence in the Canadian economy.

There can be no question that the disastrous NEP has not yet completed its work in the country. The fact of the matter is that its effects are now spreading to the petrochemical industry. In the province of Alberta at the end of 1981 there was a value of $8 billion placed on some 15 petrochemical projects which were identified as having the potential for development. What has happened? A number of things have happened. What with excessive taxation and the National Energy Program, the competitive edge for Alberta's ethane price no longer exists. Feedstock prices in the United States are considerably less and as a result some 15 projects worth $8 billion have been thrown into jeopardy. They are either on hold, postponed indefinitely or have been dropped. That is the kind of climate that exists.

• (1530)

I spoke earlier of confidence. Some people ask how we can restore confidence in the country. There are some people who believe that confidence will not be restored until the Liberals leave the treasury benches of government. Mr. Roy Farran on April 16 wrote the following in the Edmonton Journal under the heading: "When the Liberals go, oil industry will recover". Mr. Farran's article reads:

> Politicians would do an enormous favour to the nation if they would quit lying and start telling the truth. Any chance of Canada's becoming energy self-sufficient before 1990 has been blown long ago.
>
> What do you think it means when Imperial pulls out of a petrochemical plant near Edmonton, when half the companies withdraw from the third oil sands plant, when Imperial disperses its team at Cold Lake, when Shell sells off subsidiaries, when oil lease sales drop by half?
>
> Why do you think Alberta Energy shares fell from $25 to $10?
>
> I suppose there are still pipedreamers up there at the university who will say with a straight face that the oil companies are only bluffing for more. And they'll base their argument on some figure thrown out by Lalonde or Leitch during the energy battle even though by now it is quite clear that neither of them knew what they were talking about.

His article continues:

> They really did kill the goose that laid the golden eggs, didn't they?

Mr. Farran goes on to say:

> Canada is now feeling the joy commonly experienced in the Third World when hated multinationals are driven out. The euphoria of liberation is marvellous. Then come withdrawal pains as they learn too late that these gringos or foreign dogs did bring benefits, too—
>
> The most that can be said is it could have been a lot worse if Alberta had not fought so hard. But the pact was no great day for Canada, believe me.
>
> Only when the Liberals go will it be time to peal the bells. For everything they touch goes bad.

That feeling is very predominant, particularly in western Canada and to an increasing degree in other parts of Canada. What this government has done to the oil industry it is doing to other industries as well. Look what it has done to the dollar. What this government has done to the oil industry and to the dollar will also happen to Canadians. This government will inflict serious damage and hardship on them.

When we look at the value of our dollar these days we can only identify that, through the process of Canadianization, the National Energy Program and the budget, we have had a tremendous outflow of Canadian dollars which has caused the reduction in the value of our dollar, making it necessary to raise interest rates to attract sufficient capital into the country. The investment dollars which left the country are no longer here to stimulate industry and the economy, to retool, to improve our productivity, to engage in greater research and development which enabled Canada to be more productive and competitive in the international marketplace. Everything this government has touched has gone sour.

The National Energy Program is a clear example of that. Back in 1980 Canada's energy industry was coming along. It was going great. There was an agreement initialled and ready to be signed. The Alsands project was going ahead. The Cold Lake project was going ahead. The heavy oil upgrader project was going ahead. There was a mood of optimism. There was a feeling that we would finally achieve the goal of energy self-sufficiency. There would have been benefits for all Canadians, not only for western Canadians. Before the ink was dry on the Syncrude contract, some $250 million worth of contracts were let to the province of Ontario for the machinery and equipment that were necessary to see that project go ahead. The $14 billion or $15 billion oil sands plant would have created some $7 billion worth of economic activity for Ontario. Everyone would have benefited. We would have been more secure. We would have had a greater level of employment. There would have been a positive attitude in the country rather than the negative attitude we have today.

I want to talk briefly about Canadianization, which is really the thrust of this motion. The clause we are now dealing with is the heart and core of the whole question of Canadianization. No one will argue with the objective of increasing Canadian ownership in any industry, particularly the oil industry. I support it and my party supports it. It is a laudable objective, there is no question about that. But in the process of this government implementing its program of Canadianization, it has literally destroyed the very basic component of Canadian enterprise within the energy sector, that is, the exploration and service sector. That industry has been crippled and destroyed as a result of the policies of the National Energy Program. It was an industry that was almost totally Canadian owned. We have expertise in drilling and exploration, in manufacturing and indeed in the servicing area.

In terms of dealing with the heavy oil tar sands and the various methods and the technology that we have, I believe we are second to none in the world. But with the killing of the Cold Lake project, with the killing of the Alsands project and the delay in moving ahead with the heavy oil upgrader, our technical expertise is getting less and less.

The same thing applies to the service and exploration sector. As a result of the National Energy Program and the government's commitment to Canadianization, what has happened? Every day a new outfit goes into receivership or bankruptcy. I will give one example of this. A company called Raydan Transport Ltd., an oilfield trucking company based in Nisku just south of Edmonton, owned a fleet of 39 trucks. It employed 105 people full-time and it hired 36 casual workers when necessary. By last December the company had auctioned all but one truck and the staff had been reduced to four. That is one of the results of Canadianization and the National Energy Program.

During the last week in May in the city of Lloydminster, which is in my constituency, 200 oil industry jobs were thrown into jeopardy. In the Toronto Star we read:

> The jobs of 200 Lloydminster residents were thrown into jeopardy after Universal Industries Ltd. announced it has been placed in receivership yesterday. The company, which manufactures oil-pumping units, faces financial difficulties due to the continuing economic uncertainty surrounding the Canadian oil and gas industry.

I know the owner of that company. It is not a fly-by-night company. This company has been in business for a long time. Last year at this time 350 people were on the payroll. Today that company is in receivership. The owner reduced the number of people employed to 200 but he was still forced into receivership. Whether he will survive will depend upon the co-operation of the receivers and the banks. But that company was a thriving company which employed 350 people. It supported 350 families. As a result of the National Energy Program a community within my constituency is going down the drain.

In the town of Wainwright the lead headline in the Star-Chronicle reads: "Jurassic quitting Canada". Jurassic employed 30 people in oil servicing. The owner decided to move his rigs south to Oklahoma. Mr. Voll, the owner, said this:

> The decision was taken in the light of federal and provincial policies which continue to destroy the small operator, he said. Last fall's National Energy Program, then the Lougheed-Trudeau agreement in September set the stage for the move.

• (1540)

That happened in December, 1981. The following was also reported in The Regional Times of Lloydminster:

> One hundred and fifty local jobs are in jeopardy after four local oilfield companies were placed in receivership Friday.
>
> Management of Petroserv Management Ltd., who also own and operate Weldex Machine Ltd., Midway Oilfield Service Ltd. and G and W Oilfield Service, is now in the hands of a receiver appointed by the Bank of Nova Scotia—

That occurred in February, 1982. I have another example to which I will refer in Vermilion. These are all communities in my constituency. If one drives through my constituency, one sees oil wells sitting idle and not pumping. From where are we getting our oil? We are buying it from Venezuela and Mexico at $40 per barrel. These oil wells are shutin and are laying off people. Companies are going bankrupt. What a disgrace! It does not make sense. The poor Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is trying his darndest to generate jobs. Why does he not talk some sense into the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? It is too bad they are not here. The minister is a very persuasive gentleman. Why does he not visit our ridings to see what could be done? I know he is genuine and sincere about trying to help the unemployed, but he can only generate so many jobs and make-work projects. Genuine jobs are going down the drain.

I should like to refer to an article entitled "Slowdown in oil industry causes lay-offs in Vermilion". It indicated that 19 Bird Oil employees were laid off nearly two weeks ago, most of whom were welders or welders' helpers. They were let go because of the slumping sales of oil storage tanks. These 19 employees made up nearly half of the labourers which the Calgary-based company employed in Vermilion. That is the kind of situation with which we are living. The article in the Vermilion Standard indicated that there was little chance of rehiring anyone for the next few months. It simply does not make sense to the people of Alberta or, more generally, to the people of western Canada. This oil is being shutin and we are relying upon imported oil to serve our domestic needs. We are paying a dear price for it. We are paying a very heavy price both in terms of what it is costing out of our pockets and in terms of how it is further eroding the value of the dollar, further contributing to the balance of payments deficit, and further undermining confidence in the economy.

This is not a fabrication. These are the facts. We are dealing with individual companies and individual lives. We have to give answers when we are travelling around our constituencies. What answers can we give? Our constituents simply ask: "Can you not talk any sense into these people?" The Canadianization concept and objective advocated by the government has been a failure.

The minister will say that we have increased our penetration of Canadian ownership by 7 per cent, but it cost us $6.5 billion. It has not generated one additional barrel of oil. It has not added to our technological expertise. It has not improved confidence within the oil industry. In fact, it has not done anything.

One might very well ask: Do we need Canadianization in our frontiers? The answer is no, they are already dominated by Canadian companies. Panarctic is owned by Petro-Canada and Dome is owned by Dome Canada. Also there is the Arctic Islands exploration group.

In addition to the difficulties which I cited in my own constituency, we know that rigs and companies have moved south of the border. Recently the Houston Business Journal referred to the Canadian connection and indicated that energy, money and politics blur borders. It identified some $2.5 billion of Canadian investment capital which has been invested in the Houston area. It cited about 24 companies which have set up offices in that city. That is one of the results. The outflow of capital has hurt the opportunity to invest and to create jobs. It has further eroded the value of the dollar and put pressure on the people in charge of fiscal and monetary management to increase interest rates.

In the first six months of 1981 the oil company acquisitions or takeovers by Canadians amounted to $6.5 billion. The government was hellbent to Canadianize. It enticed and encouraged people to become involved in the Canadianization process. For example, Dome today is indebted by some $7.8 billion. Unless there are some further concessions or a bail-out is provided, it is uncertain whether Dome will be able to survive. Other companies have been similarly lured into takeovers, such as Sulpetro and Turbo. These companies were lured into the Canadianization process by the government. They are in trouble. There is a breakdown of confidence and there is uncertainty.

The budget is not helping matters. The government moves in and out and changes the rules of the game as it sees fit. The fact is that Canadianization has backfired and has created more problems than it has solved. As a result, the Liberal government will be advocating more and more state control, state intervention and state ownership. This is the thrust of the budget, of the National Energy Program and of the musings of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This is the thrust contained in the document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s".

This administration is so obsessed with centralized power and control that it is prepared to sacrifice a once vibrant private sector for a controlled economy which is steered or guided by an army of bureaucrats and by a group of political manipulators. We are not sure where it will stop.

In an April 19 article which appeared in The Financial Times, it was indicated that an internal energy department study was being conducted in which officials were probing the refining and marketing segments of the oil industry, looking for rationalizations and for new interventions. Also it indicated that there was talk of carrots and sticks to promote different objectives, as well as the possibilities involving forced Canadianization, price controls, profit restrictions, production directives and the continuing erosion of private control fo the industry.

A very learned and respected journalist, W. A. Wilson, wrote the following in a recent article:

> As the National Energy Program develops, bureaucratic regulation and control will increase. One recent government study suggests that upwards of $1.5 billion will have to be spent during the next eight years simply on federal supervision of the oil industry and that hundreds of additional officials will have to be hired.

The only outfit which is hiring new people is the Government of Canada. The productive sector is on the decline and the government is hiring more bureaucrats and more regulators. It is appointing more people to boards and task forces which will monitor and basically interfere with the smooth operation of a once viable industry. Of course, these are paid for by Canadian tax dollars. Mr. Wilson went on:

> One of the worst potential problems is rarely even mentioned and practically never in Ottawa. Administration of subsidies running to many billions a year will demand an extraordinarily high level of honesty. In reality, the level of dishonesty in society is fairly high. The NEP creates the greatest incentive to graft by the unscrupulous which any Canadian government has ever set up.

The amendment proposed by my party is a small mechanism which would serve as a check and balance. It would give Parliament some control over any further acquisitions encouraged by the army of bureaucrats and political manipulators in charge of the country at the present time.

I should like to deal briefly with Petro-Canada because essentially the funds envisioned in this particular provision would be administered and handled by that state oil company. It is in place, and I think it is fair to conclude that it will be part of the Canadian business landscape for many years to come. It enjoys fairly widespread support, but it must be made to work effectively for Canadians. I believe that Petro-Canada has strayed rather dramatically from its primary mandate, which essentially was to provide a mechanism to promote exploration for oil and gas resources in Canada at a pace and in areas which could not be expected of the private sector.

• (1550)

When the creation of Petro-Canada was being debated, there was a recognition of the fact that there would probably have to be public funds injected into those areas of Canada, such as the frontier, heavy oil areas and offshore areas, since the private sector may not be eager to go into those areas. Therefore, one of the primary objectives in creating Petro-Canada was to use it as an instrument to further enhance the security of supply in Canada and to further assist in achieving the goal of oil and gas self-sufficiency.

The second objective was essentially to ensure and promote a more rapid pace of oil sands research and development as a potential back-up source of energy supply for Canada.

Third, it was to give the Government of Canada a window on an international industry which is notoriously difficult to control. It was also given a mandate to improve the government's knowledge of Canadian energy stocks, costs and markets to provide a better insight since energy is a primary engine of economic growth. It was important for the government to have a window on the industry.

Fourth, it was to provide a mechanism to engage in state-to-state trading, which seemed to be a desire that had been expressed, rightly or wrongly, by people and countries with whom we were engaged in trade.

The fifth objective—and this was not the primary one—was to increase Canada's presence in an industry which was overwhelmingly foreign dominated.

I make those points simply to reiterate that Petro-Canada's mandate was not to Canadianize the oil industry or to make the industry more efficient and competitve but, rather, to promote Canadian self-sufficiency in energy by accelerating the timing of high-risk exploration and development in the Arctic, the eastern offshore basins and the heavy oil sands and tar sands of western Canada.

When we examine the record of Petro-Canada we see that these objectives have not been fulfilled. It has not concentrated on enhancing security of supply. It has not added to our known reserves in the country. It has not advanced our technology or speeded up another tar sands or heavy oil development. It did nothing to salvage Cold Lake.

What has actually happened is that it has become nothing more than a downstream refining, distributing and retailing oil company. It has become an integrated oil company. It has essentially established itself as another major oil company to be nothing more than a glorified service station operator. It is another intergrated oil company very similar to the others except operating under somewhat different and preferential guidelines. It has not aided in accelerating the development of heavy oil, a heavy oil upgrader or enhanced recovery systems in Cold Lake. It has done nothing toward accomplishing the development of another tar sands plant. Today it is doing virtually the same thing as those companies in the private sector continue to do, and at an enormous cost in terms both of money and what it has done to the erosion of our economic climate in Canada.

Up to this point Petro-Canada has cost billions of dollars. We are more reliant on foreign oil today than we were a year ago. This has been the succession of Petro-Canada. The cancellation of Alsands and Cold Lake has not brought forth an alternative energy policy from the government. Does the government plan to revitalize a smaller Cold Lake or the heavy oil upgrader? Does it intend to stimulate the exploration and development of our conventional resources in the western basins or will we have to rely upon Venezuela, Mexico and the OPEC countries in the hope that production from our frontier lands and offshore will be developed in sufficient amounts in time to bail us out of the crunch?

What is most disturbing is that the international component of Petro-Canada will be funded rather heavily. It will receive $250 million over the next four years and will be searching for oil in Tanzania, Senegal, Pakistan, Jamaica and Bangladesh. The question which must be asked soon is: What has Petro-Canada done for Canada and the average Canadian lately? What is it doing in terms of ensuring that it is an effective mechanism and is providing fair value for the dollars that have been invested in it? Not only must Petro-Canada fulfil its mandate; it must provide a benefit to the consumers of Canada. It has not done that heretofore.

I believe if Petro-Canada is to work for the benefit of the average Canadian, there must be greater parliamentary control and a greater degree of accountability to Parliament. We know that there is a proliferation of Crown corporations in this country. There are approximately 400 Crown corporations which are becoming uncontrollable. These Crown corporations are not properly scrutinized nor are they subject to the proper checks and balances that any other business owned by individual shareholders is. They are merely carte blanche operations which can proceed to establish subsidiary companies without any reference to Parliament. They operate quite independently without any realistic or effective accountability to their shareholders.

A new framework for the creation of Crown corporations is needed if we are to continue to proliferate our Canadian economy with increasing numbers of Crown corporations. Crown corporation legislation is needed which would provide an effective parliamentary mechanism to monitor them and hold them accountable. Through proper legislation these corporations would be accountable to Parliament and, therefore, accountable to the shareholders of Canada.

We need the Auditor General to audit these Crown corporations. The Auditor General, in his report ending March 30, 1980, had this to say about Crown corporations:

> Control and accountability of Crown corporations has been a major concern of this office for a number of years. As we have stated in previous Annual Reports (most recently in Chapter 8 of the 1979 Report) and in testimony before the Public Accounts Committee, we think that all corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada on behalf of the taxpayers should be subject to comprehensive auditing.
>
> Comprehensive auditing in Crown corporations can help provide the independent assurance Parliament requires as to whether systems and procedures related to financial control are appropriate, whether there is due regard for economy, efficiency and effectiveness, and whether management practices are consistent with the expressed public policy goals of Parliament. This kind of assurance, we believe, is also desirable for directors and shareholders of Crown corporations.
>
> During the 31st Parliament, legislation in the form of Bill C-27 on Crown corporations was introduced in the House of Commons. The bill provided that Crown corporation auditors should conduct value-for-money audits. The bill died on the order paper at the dissolution of Parliament in December, 1979.

Since then, nothing has happened. The government has withdrawn its intention to introduce Crown corporation legislation that is necessary to establish the proper framework.

In the latest Auditor General's report we again hear that call from him when he states:

> Legislation is necessary to provide for comprehensive audits in all Crown corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada. Only through such audits may Parliament be given independent assurance concerning systems and procedures related to financial and management controls.

• (1600)

> The comprehensive audit would monitor the degree to which, in conducting the affairs of each corporation, there has been due regard to the economy, efficiency and effectiveness. This information is especially significant for the Directors of the corporations.

We do not have that framework, but we must have that framework if we are going to monitor and hold accountable the Crown corporations in this country. There is no legislation on the Order Paper at the present time or any indication that the government has any intention of introducing such legislation. The government is, in effect, aiding and abetting this blank cheque exercise which is seen in this particular bill. It is really a blank cheque exercise which is being funded and paid for by the consumers of Canada.

The amendment with which we are dealing goes a partial distance in providing a mechanism which would exercise some control and, indeed, make it necessary for parliamentary approval before Petro-Canada or the bureaucrats went out on a spending spree to buy up more oil companies financed by the taxpayers of Canada. Clearly this is a role for Parliament and a role in which the people of Canada should have some say.

By approving this amendment, we would be ensuring that there will be no more Petrofina deals and there will be no more huge payments to Maurice Strong and friends of the Liberal Party to facilitate deals like this. Such transactions will have to come before Parliament to get the kind of support that is required and envisioned, and which this particular amendment will have the effect of providing. So I urge all hon. members, in the interests of preserving the institution of Parliament and of ensuring that there be proper accountability, to support this particular motion because, as I said at the outset, it is simple, it is pratical, it is responsible and, above all, it is a common sense amendment.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in our discussion this afternoon, but after listening to some of the remarks of the hon. member opposite who has just spoken, I want to make one or two comments. I listened to the hon. member with the respect which I normally accord to him, because he has made a number of very useful contributions to our debates in the past. But I thought that this afternoon he failed in some respects to maintain that standard by introducing material which was either erroneous or anachronistic in some ways irrelevant to the legislation we have before us. In particular, I have in mind the discussion in which the hon. member engaged with regard to that part of the legislation referring to the petroleum compensation charge and the related question of a shut-in oil industry.

I am sure the hon. member opposite would recognize that over the years the amount of shut-in oil in Canada has varied depending on marketing and other circumstances. But as we all recognize, the amount of shut-in oil in Canada substantially increased during a recent period. Indeed, the government quite clearly stated in the National Energy Program update of a fortnight ago that it considers it essential that Canadian domestic oil be used to meet Canadian needs and that it has been deeply concerned about the level of shut-in oil which has existed in recent months. So there is no disagreement in the House or, indeed, across Canada in general that the amount of shut-in oil has been high and that measures should be taken to reduce it.

When the government did recognize that a problem was emerging earlier this year, it announced on April 1 certain actions which have considerably alleviated the problem. However, for a moment I want to touch on some of the reasons the problem occurred and then on some of the solutions which have been put in place.

Initially, some part of the shut-in oil resulted from the cutbacks in production which the Government of Alberta instituted as part of its response to the National Energy Program. Oil companies understandably moved at that time to offset the cutback in Alberta production by seeking the guarantee, the assurance, of offshore supply. Those contracts, of course, simply could not be cancelled or reneged upon in a very brief period. Some of them have already run their course and others will in the near future.

Second, a contributing factor has been a lower demand in the United States for Canadian heavy oils. The recession in the United States has resulted in lower demand for heavy oils surplus to Canadian needs which have been exported to the United States. The result has been additional shut-in oil in western Canada.

Third, of course, has been the reduction in demand here in Canada for refined petroleum products.

Some mention was made earlier, in our discussions of the National Energy Program, of its success in reducing the demand for oil. One of the ramifications of that success has been that within Canada there has been a drop-off in demand for certain types of oil. The eastern refiners have necessarily had to vary their mix of imported oils to match demands in Canada and that, in turn, has had its impact on the shut-in oil problem.

Fourth, some refiners took advantage of lower international oil prices in recent months. A few Canadian refiners have taken advantage of those lower international prices to reduce their costs. That has meant, in some instances, passing up Canadian supply in favour of imported oil. All those factors come together and have contributed to a situation where we have had significant amounts of shut-in oil.

As I mentioned, the government moved on April 1 to ensure that there would be greater use made of our own domestic sources of oil and to ensure that imported oil was not used to displace Canadian oil. On April 1, measures were announced to ensure that heavy oil surpluses were competitively priced in the U.S. market. The National Energy Board took steps to issue licences for the export of such oil for 12 months rather than for shorter periods which had been in place in the past. Additionally, the government moved to encourage eastern Canadian refiners to import only minimum offshore amounts so as to help ensure that Canadian sources were used in place of imported oil.

As a result of those and other measures there has been a quite dramatic drop in the amount of shut-in oil in Canada. There was, in fact, a period in April when shut-in oil amounted to some 65,000 cubic metres. Two months later, in June, that amount has dropped to 5,400 cubic metres. That is, in two months it has dropped from 65,000 to 5,000. All hon. members will agree that that has been a dramatic and sudden reduction in shut-in oil, both of the conventional light and medium crudes, as well as heavy crudes. Now, that is not to say that the amount I have just cited for June, 5,400 cubic metres, will necessarily be the same amount for every month in the future, but it seems evident to me that we have seen a real turnaround in the situation which is very real. I would recommend that the hon. member who spoke before me look into the facts.

• (1610)

I agree that in July or later, during the early autumn, for example, when there is a traditional refinery shutdown for maintenance, there may be some temporary increase, possibly in the magnitude of 5,000 or 10,000 cubic metres of shut-in oil. However, I would submit that it would be nothing of the order of magnitude that we have seen in the past, due to the various measures taken.

I want to draw to the attention of the hon. member opposite the fact that not only on April 1 were measures taken by the government to ensure that the use of Canadian oil was promoted, but also in the update of the National Energy Program there were a number of additional measures taken to ensure that a major growth in shut-in oil does not recur. I draw to the hon. member's attention the fact that the government has committed itself to restricting crude oil imports to those volumes under current contract necessary to preserve continued access to offshore oil.

Perhaps more important, adjustments will be made to the petroleum import compensation program, adjustments fully in accord with the legislation now before us, to ensure that the program is more responsive to offshore oil prices paid by Canadian importers.

When the petroleum import compensation program was developed, it was against the background of increasing oil prices. Now the unusual situation has occurred—perhaps temporarily—of lower world prices. The method of calculation is accordingly being altered to take into account that new situation as well. In addition, we have put in place a program to purchase some additional volumes of western Canadian crude oil for storage. In special circumstances, financial support will be offered to assist the movement of western crude oil to eastern Canada via exchanges with United States refineries. All those programs, combined with efforts to ensure that the refineries review all their import contracts to reduce imports, will, in our view, help to ensure that shut-in oil of the magnitude we saw earlier this year will not recur.

The second matter I want to touch upon is that the member opposite drew our attention to the situation on the conventional oil lands in western Canada where there has been a decline in the amount of new exploration over the past few years. There has been a lot of discussion on that subject in this House. For example, we have had reference to the fact that there was, in the eyes of the oil drilling industry itself, a surplus of rigs before the National Energy Program was announced. The fact that there has been a natural gas surplus in Canada has also had an adverse impact on drilling activity. It is not my purpose today to repeat those factors which have contributed to the present situation.

However, when the hon. member opposite contrasts what he suggests is a gloomy situation in western Canada with a glowing, vibrant and dynamic industry in the United States, he is behind the times. I wish to quote in extenso from an article in the current issue of Fortune Magazine which reads as follows:

> The shock waves that have rippled through U.S. oil since January have been felt in every corner of the industry, among service and equipment companies, independent producers, and the integrated companies.
>
> The ninefold increases in oil prices since 1973 has masked inefficiencies and shielded the business from its own excesses.
>
> What happened is no secret: falling oil prices, dwindling demand, and higher costs encircled the majors' bottom line and squeezed hard. For the remainder of the year, most analysts project that net income of the nation's 17 largest oil companies will be down sharply, in some cases as much as 40 per cent.
>
> The downturn has jolted the entire chain of oil service and equipment companies, whose health derives solely from the spending patterns of oil and gas producers. The count of active seismic crews, which performs the first step in exploration by mapping geologic strata with reflected soundwaves, has been declining for seven straight months in the U.S. Drilling rigs are "stacked" or out of service, all over the oil patch.
>
> Despite the cries of suffering wildcatters and other oil men, the industry that emerges from the current travail should be one well able to serve the public interest by finding oil efficiently—good news for consumers.

That quotation is not from an article about the situation in the western Canadian oil patch. It is about the situation in the United States today. No one takes any pleasure in the drop in drilling activity in the United States any more than one does here in Canada. But the fact remains that the United States does not have a national energy program. These adverse circumstances in the U.S. petroleum industry which are described in the article are clearly the result of other reasons.

I suggest to the hon. member opposite and to the House generally that the drop-off in the United States oil exploration, which is partly the result of lower world oil prices, inflation and higher interest rates, have also contributed to the slowdown evident here in Canada.

One can debate the impact of the National Energy Program on exploration and development. I am willing to do that. However, the hon. member's stand would be more realistic and comprehensive if he were to take into account some broad, adverse aspects in the economy affecting the drilling situation in western Canada beyond those he cites which relate only to the National Energy Program.

In light of those adverse factors, the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada have moved to provide the industry with a greater degree of revenue so that it can undertake more activity both in the conventional lands of western Canada and in the frontier areas in their search for new oil sources. I need not remind the hon. member opposite that the Alberta government has provided a substantial reduction in royalties. Second, the Government of Canada in the recent update of the National Energy Program announced some major reductions in taxes so as to increase the revenue of the petroleum industry.

I do not doubt that those provincial and federal measures, when combined with the fact that any new oil discovered, will receive the new oil reference price, the equivalent of world prices, and the availability of the petroleum incentive program, which in Alberta is financed by that province, will combine to stimulate a resurgence in drilling in the time ahead, both in Alberta and in Canada lands.

Finally, the hon. member opposite referred to the Canadianization aspects of the National Energy Program. I have never been clear in my mind whether his party has a consistent policy on that aspect of the National Energy Program. It seems to depend very much on where a speaker comes from as to whether he is fervent in his admiration for Canadianization or at best lukewarm. In that connection I found the comments of the member opposite surprising when he referred to Petro-Canada.

• (1620)

It seems to me that to describe Petro-Canada as nothing more than a downstream company, and I quote his words, and secondly as a glorified service station operator, is a bizarre description of Canada's national oil company. It is a company that has shown the way in seeking sources of oil in western Canada, in the Arctic and in the Atlantic. Before it, Panarctic played an active part, a company in which the Canadian government provided a major share of the financing, paving the way for many of the activities that Petro-Canada now engages in.

Those activities are well set out in the annual report of Petro-Canada for 1981. I would draw the hon. member's attention to the review therein of Petro-Canada's activities in the frontier, where it is a major player. Indeed, it has been a substantial catalyst in ensuring that exploration on the Nova Scotian shelf, the Grand Banks and the Labrador shelf should go forward. That those resources have been identified in the Atlantic offshore is in part ascribable to the activities of Petro-Canada. All of us should be very proud of the work of our national oil company in that regard.

In the Arctic, Petro-Canada has been an active member of the Arctic Islands exploration group, the Arctic pilot project, and has contributed substantially, both financially and in terms of technical skill, to ensuring that the most promising areas for new sources of petroleum, the frontier lands, are brought on stream at an early date.

In the west of Canada the exploration activity of Petro-Canada has been considerably extended in territorial scope by its acquisition of Petrofina. We have had ample evidence in the past couple of years, and especially last year, of the commitment of Petro-Canada to play an active role in the exploration and development of petroleum areas of western Canada.

When the member opposite talks of his view of Petro-Canada as a glorified service station operator, he does a disservice not only to our national oil company but indeed to the Canadianization program of the government as a whole. That Canadianization program is not in some way limited to the activities of Petro-Canada as he suggested. On the contrary, the principal way that Canadianization of our petroleum industry will go forward will be through the private sector and not through government ownership, as the evidence already shows in the period since the introduction of the National Energy Program.

The acquisition by Petro-Canada of Petrofina has indeed attracted a great deal of attention as a fleshing out of the activity of our national energy company. I would remind the hon. member that in fact the incentives for the Canadianization of our own oil industry have found more expression in the acquisition by private investors of foreign-controlled petroleum companies. Indeed, since October 1980 the acquisition by Petro-Canada of Petrofina was only the third largest of various acquisitions. Dome's acquisition of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, which was larger. So was the Canada Development Corporation's acquisition of Aquitaine.

In any total calculation, Mr. Speaker, of the amounts spent on the Canadianization of the oil industry, the private sector has led the way. It has recognized the opportunities that now exist for Canadian investors and indeed for all Canadians to participate more actively in our own petroleum industry.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a remarkable opportunity to sit here and listen to the member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). What he did today was stand up and admit in public that the National Energy Program was a mistake. He does it so cleverly. He says that we had a shut-in problem but "look at the marvelous thing we did to correct it". You cannot correct something unless you made the mistake in the first place. That is the admission of failure. We had shut-in oil because this government made a great big mistake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Eight days ago in this chamber we had an update on the National Energy Program with a further $2 billion committed. That is $2,000 million. You cannot have an update, you cannot have that $2,000 million, unless you made the mistake in the first place. What he did today was stand up in this House and say "Yes, we made a mistake". That is what he did throughout his speech. Today we have had the clearest demonstration to this point that this Liberal government and the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have run the oil industry just as well as they ran the post office in the last ten years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: That is what they told us in this House today. The minister stands up and says "I do not think the Conservative Party has a clear-cut policy on Canadianization". Well, Mr. Speaker, I am a Canadian and I do not own one piece of Petro-Canada. The only owner is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The only owner is Petro-Canada, not all Canadians.

Our policy in the Conservative Party is clear, our policy is consistent. We believe in all Canadians, those who put their money into pension plans, those who buy a piece of this industry and a piece of that industry. We believe in Canadians who can afford to own their own homes. We believe in Canadians who can start a small business. We believe in all Canadians, 24 million Canadians.

That party over there, and the NDP, the "Liberal Party West", believe in one Canadian, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or in 30 Canadians called the federal cabinet. When they look at this bill and we talk about a Canadian ownership charge and about Canadianization, what they mean, and every Canadian should understand it, is that the minister of Energy shall own everything, or the cabinet shall own everything.

That is not my view of Canada, Mr. Speaker. That is not the view of this party. This party believes in 24 million Canadians, each of whom should own an increasing share of this country. That is what our policies were directed toward and that is what our policies will be directed toward, not ownership by the minister of Energy, not ownership by the Liberal cabinet, but ownership by all Canadians. The bells rang, Mr. Speaker, to restore some sanity to the Liberal Party and to this House of Commons.

The Alberta government cut back production a year ago to restore some sanity to our oil and gas picture. Every step of the way, since their election, this government insists on bull-headed, misguided, bad policies for this nation. They will not listen to gentle advice. They will not listen to logical advice. They have to be hit over the head with a club before they hear anything, Mr. Speaker. I stand here today debating this bill and this amendment because we hit them over the head with a club.

There are ten amendments, Mr. Speaker, that stand in my name on behalf of the Conservative Party of Canada. Each and every one is logically derived and would make sense for Canadians and consumers. They would increase jobs and would reduce the cost of living.

• (1630)

That is the sum total of those ten amendments, and let me deal with the one before us now. We have to read through all the legal language to find out that there is a tax of 4.5 cents a gallon. It does not sound like much, but when one fills up the gas tank in his car, it is a dollar. When we fill up our home heating oil tanks in the wintertime, the sum total of that 4.5 cents tax is $3 million a day. That 4.5 cents a gallon represents $3 million a day. Did the government have the courage to bring in a piece of legislation to say it would tax the people 4.5 cents a gallon until the government has collected enough money to pay for the buy-out of Petrofina and then it would stop that tax? No, it did not. No part of this legislation gives us any indication that when that purchase is completed the tax will stop.

The purpose of this amendment is to stop the tax once the buy-out is complete. If this amendment is adopted, the 4.5 cents a gallon tax would stop. But no, the Liberal Party wants to keep the tax in place forever. Four and a half cents a gallon is about 5 per cent of the cost of our home heating oil, about 5 per cent of the cost of the gasoline which goes into our cars and about 5 per cent of the cost of the gasoline which goes into tractors used in the production of food. This tax makes everything more expensive.

What is the government doing with this money? The first $1,460 million is to buy Petrofina. Canadians should think about that because what that means is that $1,460 million will be sent outside Canada, largely to the people who live in Belgium. People without jobs in Canada should stop and ask themselves whether their unemployment is partly because this government decided to send $1,460 million out of Canada for this one purpose alone. Do the people of Canada want the government to take 4.5 cents a gallon out of their pockets and send it out of the country? When the government does that, it drives down the value of our dollar. Today our dollar is worth just a little over 79 cents American. A few weeks ago it was worth about 83 cents American. When the value of the dollar falls four cents, practically everything we buy becomes more expensive. The cost of living goes up when this government sends dollars out of the country.

If we pay 4.5 cents tax on every gallon we buy, we might ask ourselves what we want the government to do with it. The 1.2 million Canadians who are unemployed today would like to see the government use that money to create jobs. Canadians who cannot afford their mortgages and are in danger of losing their homes would rather their government brought interest rates down a little so that they can keep their homes. Small-businessmen whose businesses are going bankrupt because of high interest rates would rather see the government take that 4.5 cents and reduce interest rates so they will not go bankrupt and all their employees will not lose their jobs. It is a matter of public choice. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, supported by all the backbenchers opposite, has decided to send that money out of the country, and he has decided to keep collecting 4.5 cents after the need for it is gone.

How can members of this House go home to their ridings this weekend and say they stood in the House of Commons and voted to impose a 4.5 cents a gallon tax on gasoline forever so that only the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can decide how to spend it and so that he can send it out of the country? Instead of creating jobs in Canada, he has already decided to send money out of Canada to create jobs in Belgium. Where will he send money next? Will he create jobs in the United States of America? Will he create jobs in Mexico? Will he create jobs in Venezuela? The minister wants to take 4.5 cents per gallon out of my pocket to create jobs in other countries and not in this country where 1.2 million-plus Canadians are unemployed.

Members of Parliament have been sent to this place to help Canadians, and I urge them to vote for this amendment because, at the very least, it would stop this minister from collecting that $3 million a day and sending it out of Canada. If he does not have it, he cannot send it out. It would be wise in the current situation if we took that $3 million a day and spent it in Canada rather than in some other country. I wonder if there are 365 communities in Canada which could use $3 million each to help get projects started, to help get factories going, to reduce interest rates, to encourage businesses to develop and to create jobs. If the answer is yes, we have an opportunity today. All we have to do is vote for this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 39 by striking out lines 4 and 5 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"tions from any non-Canadian person in order to increase Canadian ownership of".

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—Fisheries—Closure of fish plant at Georgetown, P.E.I. (b) Role of government; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—The Judiciary—Nature of character reference provided by Solicitor General; the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski)—Multiculturalism—speech made by Chairman of Race Relations Committee. (b) Minister's understanding of multiculturalism.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motion No. 7 (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, very simply, this amendment seeks to make the bill read in the manner in which the government indicates it intends the legislation to impact on the Canadian economy. The amendment merely says that if in fact there is to be a Canadian ownership charge for the purpose of increasing Canadian ownership—which we do not think is justified, reasonable or appropriate—then the moneys collected should be spent to purchase assets, shares, capital and so forth of non-Canadian-owned oil and gas companies. We simply would change the wording of the appropriate clause to have the legislation do what the government tells us it is intended to do.

Frankly, I do not believe the government will go along with this amendment because I do not believe the government when it says its purpose is Canadianization. I do not think that is any more honest than a number of things the government has been telling us.

The purpose of this whole program is nationalization and state ownership. Big brother is going to run things for us, and that is going to make us very comfortable, secure and self-sufficient! The economy is going to be run by these genuises in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources who have made such a success of this country's energy industry so far that they have driven out $19 billion worth of capital, put thousands of people out of jobs and driven hundreds of companies to bankruptcy! That kind of performance will not deter the true ideologue and the trained donkeys who can be depended upon to support such behaviour. If state ownership is the object, I suppose that is what we will get because we cannot expect trained donkeys to learn from experience, but we continue to hope.

• (1640)

This amendment was put forward with a view to having the legislation reflect what the minister says it was intended to do. We will see whether he was telling us the truth or not when we see how the trained donkeys vote. I am quite confident that they will vote against it.

When speaking to motion No. 6 yesterday, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made a couple of statements that I should like to correct. He suggested that we should read what Jeff Simpson had to say about Norway's Statoil and the Norwegian oil fields. I suggest that he do a little more reading himself. He would find out that in the last few months the Norwegian government has changed the situation considerably and Statoil is no longer the big brother of the Norwegian oil fields. The Norwegians have learned, as we should have learned by now, that Crown corporations in Norway do not work any better than they work in Canada. The hammerlock that Statoil had on the Norwegian oil fields was offered to us as a model to be followed in giving Petro-Canada the same kind of hammerlock on Canada lands, but the Norwegians are changing the situation. They have learned that Crown corporations are not the answer. If were to follow Norway's example we would rescind some of the powers we have given to Petro-Canada, not increase them as the hon. member suggested.

The hon. member also made reference to Britain but I think he should inform himself on that situation as well. He would find that the British national oil company, which was created by the Labour government as a kind of big brother operation to run the British North Sea oil fields, has had its powers curtailed. In Britain, as in Canada, it was discovered that Crown corporations do not work. They do not work in Britain, they do not work in Norway, they do not work in Poland, they do not work in the Soviet Union—they just do not work. I would hope that even the obtuse members to my left would eventually learn that lesson.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway suggested that the Progressive Conservative Party was not being true to its roots when he read from a 1974 policy document in which the party indicated it was in favour of at least 50 per cent ownership of resource industries, including oil and gas. He should have kept reading that document as well. He would have found that among the specific suggestions made by the Progressive Conservative Party for changes in Canadian law that would promote Canadian ownership was a change in the income tax law which at that time contained something called the principal business test for oil and gas investment. Basically, that meant that unless you were already engaged in the oil and gas industry you would not receive the same incentives as those already engaged in it received. The impact was that an American, a German, a Swiss or a British company could drill a well in Canada with pre-tax dollars but Canadians could not. That was the absurd situation that existed in 1974 and for a decade before that. Canadians were at a disadvantage compared to foreigners when it came to investment in Canada. The Progressive Conservative Party was outraged and said that if that were changed there would be a tremendous increase in investment by Canadians in the oil and gas industry.

The provision was changed in the budget of December, 1975. From 1976 onward, for the first time, Canadians were on a par with foreigners regarding investment in the Canadian oil and gas industry. In 1975 the oil industry was 92 per cent foreign owned, but four years later it was only 72 per cent foreign owned. So Canadian ownership increased spectacularly as the result of that simple change in the tax law which was part of our policy in 1974 and was adopted by the government and put into effect in 1976.

The effect of the National Energy Program was to slow down Canadianization, not increase it. The federal Petroleum Monitoring Agency is proof of that. Any member of the House who is interested in what happened should read the latest report which shows that, as a result of the National Energy Program, in the first six months of 1981 foreign-owned companies operating in Canada suffered a loss of 28 per cent of their income while Canadian-owned oil and gas companies lost 52 per cent of their income. The National Energy Program is discouraging to foreign owners in the Canadian oil and gas industry but it is devastating to Canadians. It is an affront to honesty, integrity and decency for Liberals to claim that the National Energy Program is good for Canadianization. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker.

The New Democratic Party and the Liberals talk about Canadianization of the industry but they neglect to examine the whole spectrum of the industry. Their idea of Canadianization is how many service stations have red maple leaves painted on them.

A decade ago the drilling industry, which is an important part of the oil and gas industry, was as much as 80 per cent foreign owned. The big companies that dominated the industry were foreign owned. In 1980 the industry was 95 per cent Canadian owned. It had become Canadianized without big brother, without Crown corporations and without any of this nonsense about Liberal concern.

Mr. Waddell: With a few super depletion allowances.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member speaks of super depletion. I am talking about the drilling industry. He does not even know what I am talking about.

Mr. Waddell: Who do you think pays for all that? You and I, baby.

• (1650)

Mr. Andre: The energy critic for the NDP, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, talks about the super depletion allowance. That does not apply to provincial lands, it applies only to federal lands in the high Arctic. It applies only to wells in excess of $5 million each. The drilling industry does not really participate in those wells; they are drilled basically by the companies concerned. There has been in the order of 60 or 70 in total drilled in the high Arctic, and there has been only a dozen or so eligible for super depletion.

Now, in comparison, I am talking about the 5,000 wells drilled in provincial lands by Canadian drilling companies which were devastated by the NEP. They are now in Colorado, Texas or Kansas. As usual, the hon. member has his facts totally wrong and he shows why the monicker of "Liberal Party West" is appropriate. Facts are not going to get in the way of a good issue!

Another aspect of the industry is that of service companies. They go in after a well is drilled and service it. A decade ago that industry was overwhelmingly foreign owned; today it is overwhelmingly Canadian owned. That industry has been devastated by the NEP. Dozens of companies have been driven into bankruptcy, all of this for Canadianization. Anyone who says, Mr. Speaker, that the NEP has contributed to Canadianization is a fool or a liar; one or the other. Let us not carry on with this nonsense, whether in ignorance or through malicious intent, that somehow we are Canadianizing the oil and gas industry through the NEP. It is no such thing. As my colleagues and I have indicated, the Canadian ownership charge is nothing but a sneaky tax designed to nationalize and put big brother in control of more and more of the private sector. Given big brother's track record, that does not fill with confidence anyone who has any common sense.

If this Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, and the geniuses in the bowels of the bureaucracy who advise the government, are determined to carry on, they could at least have the integrity to do what they say and support this motion, which provides that if you intend to carry on with this stupid tax to Canadianize, at least use the money exclusively for the purchase of non-Canadian-owned shares. To collect this tax from the consumer and then turn around and use the money to purchase private assets from Canadians is not increasing Canadian ownership; it is increasing nationalization. If that is what they are after, then for goodness sake get a mandate from the people. Go to the people and put this program of nationalization, state ownership and socialism before them in an honest way. If the people of Canada decide that they want to emulate Poland, fine. But the way they are gong about it now is—

Mr. Kristiansen: The Tories voted for martial law in Canada, not us.

Mr. Andre: There is the pinko from the Okanagan—

Mr. Kristiansen: You and the Liberals imposed martial law in Canada, not the NDP.

Mr. Andre: He is just bitter because there is no legitimate communist party in Canada that he can be a member of.

Mr. Kristiansen: You and your pals in Warsaw want to ban the right to strike here, too.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member seems to be a little sensitive. I will soon finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and he can stand up and explain to the House why socialism is such a wonderful thing—and why big brother can do such a good job of running things. He can tell us what a marvellous utopia we are going to live in when the state owns the means of production, and how it will be so super for Canada when the NDP ideal of having the minister and his minions run everything in Canada is reached. I await with interest his address about what a marvellous country this is going to be when we achieve that utopian ideal of the state owning everything.

If the government is honest, Mr. Speaker, and the intention is Canadianization as opposed to nationalization, it will in fact support this amendment. But I do not expect the government to be any more honest this time than it has been so far.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a couple of minutes to reply to the eloquent and low-key remarks of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I thank him for his analysis of history and for his speech on dialectical materialism and the role of the state. I listened very carefully to him. He talked about Norway, and I cited Norway the other day. I did that simply to show that there was a role for a Crown corporation in the energy industry. I mentioned the U.K. for the same reason. It is true there are new governments in Norway and the U.K. The problem, as they saw it, was too much government involvement and they cut back somewhat; but they kept the government corporations going because they wanted to give direction to the industry.

Do you know whose idea it was, Mr. Speaker, to have the government of the United Kingdom involved in the oil industry? It was a great communist, a great left-winger, one who followed the Moscow line. His name was Sir Winston Churchill. Around the time of World War I he advocated that the government buy into the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company because he saw oil as a strategic commodity. So that great communist pinko freak, Sir Winston Churchill, was the one responsible and I hope my friend will mention that in his next speech.

I am distressed, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Calgary Centre says, as he does quite clearly on the record, that Crown corporations do not work; not in the United Kingdom, in Poland or in the Soviet Union. He says they do not work anywhere. The same thing was said about co-ops 50 years ago. It distresses me because it is an attack on all Crown corporations, such as Air Canada and the CBC. As I pointed out yesterday, you can criticize them individually, and goodness knows the CBC sometimes deserves criticism as well as Air Canada and some others, but it seems to me you cannot criticize them generally. I think the hon. member, like some of his colleagues—not all—are becoming prisoners of ideology. They are getting so far out on the right wing that they are really putting their party in danger of being in the mainstream of Canadian politics.

He speaks of the government having a mandate from the people. My interpretation of the last election was that the people did not want Petro-Canada destroyed. That is why the government had so much trouble. They had three policies on Petro-Canada. I suggest to the hon. member that he look at his own majority. He knows more about that than I do, but even in Alberta I think there were some reductions in Conservative majorities. I do not think the people were happy with the program of dismantling Petro-Canada. In the House the minister said in the clearest language possible that Crown corporations do not work. He was advocating the dismantling of Petro-Canada. I warned the Conservatives of the ramifications of doing that.

• (1700)

In my province of British Columbia the Social Credit government, which is a conservative government, got very ideological. It sold many energy and mining Crown corporations. It gave free shares to the public and it sold some shares. The government did this through the British Columbia Resource Investment Corporation. The shares in BCRIC were sold for $6. The shares rose to $8 or $9, but after that they slid to $3. BCRIC is responsible to no one. All those assets which were previously owned collectively by the people were sold off. The assets were sold to private interests; many were sold to people outside the province. Difficulties in management occurred and the company is doing poorly. Is that the way to handle resources?

I listened to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) speak. I believe the hon. member has a doctor of philosophy degree. He sounded as though he had not taken a grade nine course in political science and history when he suggested that everybody wanted to put the power into the hands of the minister and the cabinet. He wanted to put it into the hands of the representatives of 24 million people. Who does the minister and the cabinet represent? Has the hon. member ever heard of the parliamentary system of Canadian democracy? A grade nine student knows what that is.

There are difficulties with Crown corporations. If the hon. member from Calgary had been listening to some of the speeches made by members of the New Democratic Party instead of flailing at some dead taxes and dead issues, he might have talked about our ideas for trying to make Crown corporations accountable to people. That is the new thrust in this country. That is what we should be talking about. We should be talking about how to make Crown corporations accountable and how to decentralize power into the hands of the people. Some Conservatives and some New Democrats agree on that. We are trying to find ways of decentralizing power.

I do not think it helps to put all the power into the hands of a few directors of a corporation. It is not decentralizing power to put all power into the hands of a few politically appointed directors of Petro-Canada. We in the socialist context and they in the free enterprise context have to find ways of dealing with these things. We have never advocated production being run by state-owned companies—the total control of the means of production. That is communism. I had three communist candidates run against me in the last election. Obviously they thought we were not advocating that or they would not have run against me. As my colleague from the Kootenays said, which party was it whose members stood up when martial law was brought into Canada? Let us not hear about Poland and so on because it is not relevant to this debate.

One of the two members who spoke last called us the western wing of the Liberal Party. How many times since October have the Liberal Party and the Progressive Conservative Party voted together? The answer is 30 times. How many times have the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party voted together? The answer to that question is 14 times. That does not sound like an alliance to me. It seems to me that the western wing of the Liberal Party is the Conservative Party if you go by those statistics.

Mr. Fulton: Ray Hnatyshyn is a secret liberal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: We do not ask for much. We just ask for the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to come out of the closet and declare his liberalism.

Mr. Cosgrove: We are not proud.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, with reference to this particular amendment I agree somewhat with the hon. member for Calgary Centre that in a sense Canadianization is rather a phony process. The government has said through the minister of energy, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and through former ambassador Towe speaking in the United States that it is not going to carry on with public ownership for the present. The government is relying on private takeovers. But we are not going to have any more private takeovers because of high interest rates in this country. The companies that tried private takeovers, such as Dome, Turbo, Sulpetro and some other companies, got burned. They are now hanging out to dry and are in deep trouble.

Suppose the Government of Canada wants to use some of the moneys that will be in surplus to take over a Canadian company and it is necessary to do so. It seems to me this is a problem and is one of the reasons we cannot support this amendment. I will put an example on the record but I do not want to go on record as favouring it. The situation would have to be looked at very carefully. If Dome cannot get out of its present financial difficulties, the government could take over Dome's assets in the Beaufort Sea.

What about TransCanada PipeLines, which would give Dome some cash and allow the government to have a greater say in the marketing of natural gas, which marketing is in a mess in Alberta right now? If we did that, it would help the small companies. There are possibilities that money could be used to take certain companies under public ownership which may, in fact, be Canadian companies. But then we have the problem of what is a Canadian company. By how much should it be owned and by how much should it be controlled? That problem is not addressed in this motion. We will see groups of Canadian companies in the north that are not really Canadian companies. They will be shells that are American controlled.

The hon. member from Calgary wants to fight down on the beaches and to fight them everywhere, just to paraphrase Churchill. The hon. member forgets the terrible communist and left-winger who understood, which the hon. member from Calgary does not, that there has to be a guiding role by the government, whether federal or provincial, in the development of strategic commodities. That does not leave out small Canadian companies. Good luck to them. Some of these companies perform a lot better in drilling and other areas. I am afraid that my friends in the Conservative Party have become prisoners of Reagan ideology, which is not really part of the Conservative Party. It would be enough to make the former member for Prince Albert and certainly Sir Winston turn in their graves.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make on this amendment. Before I do that, I want to put something on the record for the edification of members who were not privy to the deliberations which took place in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

• (1710)

As we all know, there was a House order determining the length of this particular debate; the legislation had to be sent to committee and then returned to the chamber within a specified time frame. Throughout the process hon. members of the official opposition, the New Democratic Party and the government had an opportunity to review in depth the substance of the various pieces of legislation which were before the committee. In doing so, we called upon a good number of experts. We heard representations from the business and academic communities. A number of individuals put forward their ideas on the pith and substance of the legislation. There were a number of suggestions on how the legislation could be improved. There was some serious debate as to what different clauses meant or indeed what their effect would be.

I, like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), am somewhat concerned, and perhaps in some respects annoyed, by the tone of the official opposition. However, perhaps that tone will continue because it has been part and parcel of its ideology and has been intensified as a result of the last federal election in February, 1980. Unfortunately the official opposition has not recovered from that particular defeat. It is attempting to use any means—and I use that phrase quite liberally—at its disposal in an attempt to recreate the situation which took place in 1979.

Hon. members of the official opposition have made a great many comments against Petro-Canada. It should be noted that according to my latest calculations they have approximately three positions on that Crown corporation. That may have changed; there may be four by the time we conclude this debate, but basically they have three positions. I believe Petro-Canada is something which the people of Canada want. It is important in terms of developing and promoting a national energy policy.

Hon. members opposite made reference to the fact that Petro-Canada is not a good company and is not needed. They have given it a whole host of descriptions. I should like to indicate for their edification that as a member of government I believe wholeheartedly that the people employed by Petro-Canada are extremely competent, concerned and dedicated public servants who believe very strongly in the National Energy Program, that Canada needs a tool—which is what Petro-Canada is—for the National Energy Program. They believe very strongly in their mandate and deserve a great deal more than some of the ill-conceived and somewhat despicable comments which come from the official opposition. They are attempting to do their job, they are doing it well, and I think Canadians all over the country, whether they be in the province of Newfoundland or in the province of British Columbia, are mindful of and respect the individuals associated with Petro-Canada for their great efforts.

Some members of the New Democratic Party indicated that one way to improve upon the activities of Petro-Canada was to have an enlarged board of directors which included individuals with various backgrounds, such as fishermen, environmentalists, sociologists, psychologists and others. I believe the individuals associated with Petro-Canada at the level of its board of directors are indeed very confident and are providing direction to that particular oil company. One individual who comes to mind is the president of the Newfoundland fishermen's association. He is a union man and a professional who is making a very worth while contribution to the direction of Petro-Canada.

Members of the official opposition have made many comments concerning the Canadianization aspect of the legislation, particularly in this amendment. I do not find anything wrong with the Government of Canada owning a piece of the oil and gas industry. I do not find anything overly distasteful about it. When I hear members of the official opposition saying that it is not a good thing, that it is wrong, or that we should not be doing it, I am tempted to ask them whether they would dismantle the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Are they willing to speak with the Premier of the province of Nova Scotia, who belongs to the Conservative Party of Canada, and tell him that that Crown corporation is not needed? Would they destroy Nova Scotia Resources Limited, another provincial Crown corporation? Perhaps the argument could be written or spoken in such a way that if you are a Crown corporation you are okay as long as you are provincial; but if you are federal, somehow that ideology is wrong or no good.

Is Air Canada wrong? Is Canada Post, for which hon. members opposite voted, wrong? Conceptually, no; therefore the concept of Petro-Canada is not wrong either. They may have some difficulties with a particular program of a Crown corporation, and of course they should have an opportunity in which to voice their concerns. That is what the chamber is all about.

The Canadianization program and the energy legislation which is before the House are attempting to meet the needs of both the public and private sectors. We stated very clearly in the National Energy Program that the Government of Canada wanted to acquire more public ownership. I do not think there is any doubt on either side of the House that that intention was a serious one. Our intention to have more Canadian ownership in the private sector is also an intention about which I do not think there is any doubt on either side of the House. We are providing very rich incentives for people to become involved and to participate in the oil and gas industry in Canada. The petroleum incentives program is one which comes to mind. We will debate it a little later.

The opposition, particularly the Conservative Party of Canada, has made reference to Canadianization, public ownership and so on, but it was the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who stated quite clearly that it was the thrust of his party to move on the front of Canadianization.

There seems to be a dichotomy over there. That is not new to hon. members who sit in the chamber, as I do, day after day and find some members of the Conservative Party for this, some for that, and indeed those who are for both views.

Reference was made to the fact that somehow the legislation contained in Bill C-103 was anti-American. That is the line which was picked up by the official opposition. I do not believe for one moment that it is anti-American. I believe, as other members on this side of the House believe, that it is pro-Canada. I do not find anything distasteful about being pro-Canadian. I can understand certain members of the Conservative Party taking exception to that particular concept. Perhaps it is because the Conservatives have a vested interest or are involved in so many ways with the multinationals. They do want to see any Canadian participating in the extremely vital oil and gas sector of the Canadian economy.

• (1720)

However, when they make speeches throughout Canada and suggest that somehow the National Energy Program is anti-American, that is false. The National Energy Program is pro-Canadian and I think Canadians are extremely proud of that ideal. I therefore wish to reject that comment and the views expressed by the Conservative Party of Canada.

As well, hon. members opposite stand in their place to say that the National Energy Program is the cause of the oil and gas industry's present difficulties. I suppose the opposition would like to be able to insulate the oil and gas industry from the conditions which exist in the world economy. If you are a Tory that thinking is logical, but I am not a Tory. I would never subscribe to a philosophy such as that. The economies of other countries in the world, whether France, Germany, the United States or Britain, are in difficulty. The fact cannot be avoided that the oil and gas industry is involved in those economies which have high interest rates, high unemployment and high inflation. It also must bear some of the burden. It is not true to suggest that the oil industry has sustained all its difficulties due to one particular program, the National Energy Program.

I do not believe that the members of the Conservative Party wish to present a scenario without providing all the facts. It is very clear that those members are perhaps prisoners of their own philosophy, as they were aptly described by the member for Vancouver Kingsway. Although the Conservatives are very right wing, it is ridiculous to suggest that the Canadian government should invent policies which would insulate the Canadian oil and gas industry. However, in view of the present situation in the world economy, of which Canada is a part, the government has taken some very serious steps to provide much needed cash flow, such as the reduction of the PGRT, for example, and to create incentives and exemptions to aid the small producers in the oil and gas industry in Canada.

There has also been an update to what many Canadians realize is a successful National Energy Program. I do not believe there is a member on our side who would say that the National Energy Program is the panacea to all the ills of the energy world. That has never been suggested by anyone. Nevertheless, the fact must be taken into consideration that Canadians enjoy some of the lowest gasoline prices in the world, certainly lower than those in many other countries, including Italy, the United States and Great Britain. Gasoline in those countries is more expensive than here.

Members of the opposition will rise to say that is not true and make comparisons in various parts of Canada. In my own province of Nova Scotia the Conservative government introduced a 15-cent tax per gallon of gasoline in its budget. That is a provincial tax but, of course, the opposition would be content to persuade Canadians that it is the fault of the federal government. I believe it is very wrong to do that, and I hope they have the courage to say that the provincial governments are partially responsible as well for higher gasoline prices in some of those jurisdictions which I have mentioned.

While I would like to refer to a few further points in the National Energy Program, I will conclude by saying that the government will vote against this amendment. I urge all members on both sides of the House to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I will only take a few minutes. At the outset I will just say that anyone who brings up the subject of a 15-cent provincial tax, having told the voters that 18 cents is too much and now intending to stand up in the House later today to vote for an increase of 52 cents a gallon in two taxes alone, has a credibility problem that will not quit. Those members who fought an election over an 18-cent increase and who then propose a 52-cent increase are creating a credibility problem which they cannot overcome. It takes a great deal of gall to mention a 15-cent tax when we are dealing with a bill which has a 52-cent per gallon tax hidden in it.

Anyone who has common sense will know that the National Energy Program is a disaster. An update to this program was introduced last Monday evening when a $2 billion mistake was admitted. We indicated in the House that evening that the update was still a mistake. Since that time those who are knowledgeable in the oil and gas industry have judged that mistake. Oil stocks, which only fall when the climate is bad, have fallen 200 points. Of course, the reason for that decline is the update which was introduced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). The dollar has also fallen.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) asks us to appreciate the employees of Petro-Canada. I have many voters who are employees of Petro-Canada and I value them, their work and what they are attempting to do. It is those same employees who tell us the shortcomings of Petro-Canada and what should be done for it to become a strong and vibrant company.

The parliamentary secretary has a lot of gall to stand in the House and say that Petro-Canada is a success story because it has assets of over $6.5 billion and a profit of $63 million after cooking the books. Those same financial statements contain deferred charges that are greater than the bottom line profit. Hidden in those books are several billions of dollars of interest payments which the taxpayers pay and the company does not. If Petro-Canada were an ordinary corporation competing in the private sector, its losses would be staggering and its bankruptcy would be assured.

We have a clear indication of that credibility gap if the parliamentary secretary can stand in the House and say that bankruptcy is a success story for a large oil company operating in Canada. To say that 18 cents is too much and then to vote for 52 cents is a clear-cut example of incredibility; but to say that we have a Canadian oil company success story when, in reality, it loses hundreds of millions of dollars and did so last year, is to defy logic. None of the other similar-sized companies has a financial picture that would give us that indication. It is only one. For him to compare that one with the Power Corporation is also to defy logic.

• (1730)

In Canada today young people who want to get work in the electrical industry know that they will be working for a Crown corporation. The odds are 95 per cent plus, because that is the nature of the electrical industry in Canada, for historical reasons. But if these young people take training in a university to work in the oil and gas industry, they could work anywhere in the world. The difficulty with a Crown corporation in the field of oil and gas is, in reality, the difficulty of competing worldwide for staff people of quality.

An oil company is a gamble. There is never any certitude that when a well is drilled there will be oil at the bottom of the hole. It is a gamble. It is like picking a horse at a race track. What the Liberals would have us believe, with the support of the New Democratic Party, the "Liberal Party West", is that young people fresh out of university have better judgment in picking where to drill the wells than people with 30 or 40 years of experience.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: In essence, that is what Petro-Canada is all about.

Mr. Rose: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I wonder if the hon. member realizes that his party has voted with the Liberals 30 times compared to our 14. The Conservative Party is the western arm of the Liberal Party, sitting right there.

Mr. Hawkes: I am glad the hon. member brought that to my attention. The Liberal Party has the wisdom to vote with us against the nonsense proposed by the NDP.

Mr. Cosgrove: We are not proud.

Mr. Hawkes: I want people to imagine the following: that we take 10 per cent of the federal budget and gamble it in the oil and gas industry. If we were to take 10 per cent of the federal budget and put it on a horse race, would we ask some young people fresh out of college which horse to bet on, or would we instead try to find someone with years and years of experience working at a race track, training and conditioning horses? Whose judgment would we trust? Would we trust the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to pick a horse in a horse race? What experience does he have?

Mr. Fulton: At least he picked the right end!

Mr. Hawkes: What training does he have for proposing that tax? Yet we want to give billions and billions of dollars to that man to put on that horse race. I suggest to Your Honour that that is the flawed logic. If someone wants to bet on a horse race, he will gamble or pick a number at random and see if his luck is good, or he might get advice from people who are knowledgeable about horses and about that race, because one who follows the expert's advice has a better chance of winning.

Another example which comes to mind is this: would we want all the painting in Canada to be done by a Crown corporation? Would we stand up in this House and say that all painting businesses should be owned by the Government of Canada and that all of those who wanted to be painters should become employees of the Government of Canada? What nonsense! Crown corporations do not have the kind of record which suggests that the Government of Canada should be running a painting business. What we have in Canada is a system where many people own different painting businesses. There are many small entrepreneurs and if we are in the market to hire a painter, we have a choice. We may choose someone who charges a little less than someone else because he does just as good a job, but he has discovered a way to do it faster and therefore cheaper. But if the Government of Canada owned all the painting businesses, all the painters would be paid the same amount because the charges would be the same, and 50 per cent would go to administration and 50 per cent to the painter. It would cost us three or four times as much.

That is the logic of the Liberal government in relation to the Canadian ownership charge. It wants a tax which will continue forever so that it can buy out all the little guys and have one state-owned oil company which would charge what it darned well pleased, which would take half the money it earned and put it into administration or some other place and the consumers in this country would pay twice as much for half as much service.

If there is any integrity on the other side, the government must do one of two things. The heading of this section states "Canadian ownership charge". In committee we inserted the word "public" but the Liberal members voted against it. We proposed the word "public" so that it would become "Canadian public ownership charge", because the clauses which followed clearly indicated that the government could use the money to buy property and shares and hold those in the name of the government. So a correct title for the way in which the clause is written would be "Canadian public ownership charge"; but the Liberal Party voted that down. It did not want the honesty of that.

Therefore, today we propose an amendment which would state that when the government collects that $3 million a day, it would have to spend it on increasing Canadian ownership and would not be able to go out into the marketplace and compete with other Canadian companies, to buy out assets of other Canadian companies. All we are asking is that this huge amount of $3 million a day be dedicated to the purchase of non-Canadian companies so that they can become Canadian. If hon. members opposite do not go for that, then it should be clear to every Canadian in every part of the country that the Liberal Party believes in government ownership and does not give a darn for Canadian ownership. Voting against this amendment would clearly say that. The government believes in government ownership and in the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources owning, but the government does not believe in Canadian ownership. That is what a vote against this amendment would signify.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 7. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Andre: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Hawkes) negatived.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 39 by striking out line 23 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"the report has been prepared and that every report laid before Parliament under this section stands permanently referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Public Accounts".

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this motion deals with another aspect of this Canadian ownership charge which should be put on the record because it is one more example of why one cannot trust this government and of how it does not keep its word and its promises. I do not know if any of the trained donkeys over there know it or not, but this Canadian ownership charge—

Mr. Bloomfield: Your ears are awfully long.

Mr. Andre: —does not go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, it goes into a Canadian ownership account. The reason for that is very simple. It does not show up in the blue book, it is not part of the estimates, and it therefore does not show up as part of government spending. So the Liberals can stand there with straight faces and say; "Look at how we are controlling government expenditures. See?"

Through this tax, $1.5 billion is collected from Canadian consumers for actual government spending. It is being spent to buy Petrofina, but it never shows up in the accounts of Canada. That is in violation of the recommendations of the Lambert Commission, which the Liberal Party said it endorsed. It has either forgotten that commitment or it was not honest in the first instance. It is in violation of the recommendations of Auditors General over the last few years. It is in violation of promises made by Liberals about being honest and open with regard to government spending. Through this amendment we are attempting to bring a little integrity to that dishonest bunch of book manipulators.

• (1740)

We would like this report referred to the Public Accounts Committee, a non-partisan, all-party committee, so that it will have the capability of examining the account to ensure that the moneys were properly spent, that there was not an abuse or that the moneys were not used to reward members of the Liberal Party through purchasing of other shares, etc. That is all this amendment does. If the members of the Liberal Party are interested in honouring at least some of the minor promises they made in the past and living up to some of the policy statements they made with all solemnity and commitment, they will vote for this amendment.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 8 is a straightforward request for accountability of funds being collected by the government. One of the bases of parliamentary government that is generally accepted is that money collected by the government must be accounted for. Therfore, this kind of clause is necessary in order to have that kind of accountability.

I agree with the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) that this money which is spent should be allocated through some kind of estimates which are legislated. That is not always done in these cases or in the case of many federal Crown corporations. Therefore, anything that can be done to increase accountability of money collected by the government should be supported.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly about the wisdom of allowing the Public Accounts Committee to examine this kind of expenditure. I put on the record at public accounts a scenario that is relevant to the decision whether or not to vote for this amendment.

When you turn an aspect of the market over to a bureaucracy, you increase the possibility of mistake in the marketplace. I put on the record a series of decisions which have been made in relation to the petroleum compensation charge. One of those is a provision which was exploited by Petrofina.

It is my information that Petrofina increased its bottom line profit through the exploitation of government subsidies by something in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent. At a later point in time, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) used the vehicle of Petro-Canada to purchase Petrofina. The consequence for the Canadian taxpayer was that one set of government subsidies inflated the selling price of a set of shares bought by the Canadian taxpayers through the energy minister. We have suggested in this House that the Canadian people paid about twice as much as they should have paid for the purchase of Petrofina. That is over $700 million too much which the taxpayers of this country had to pay. We inserted this amendment so that a body of Parliament, the Public Accounts Committee, would have the power and the authority to examine situations of that kind and recommend to Parliament and the government ways of avoiding $700 million mistakes in the future.

Regardless of ideology or party, Liberal and NDP members should see the wisdom of this Progressive Conservative amendment which simply says that a report which must be laid before Parliament should automatically be examined by one of the standing committees of Parliament. If we believe in the electoral process and in democracy and believe there is some point to Members of Parliament examining expenditures, then we must support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lewis: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Hawkes) negatived.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 39

(a) by striking out line 43 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"signed by not less than ten members"

(b) by striking out lines 7 to 9 at page 30 and substituting the following therefor:

"than five hours and on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiration of the fifth such hour, the Speaker of the House".

He said: Mr. Speaker, originally this motion appeared in the name of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I can understand the mistake because we are both similar in views and appearance.

This is a very simple motion. In this bill the government proposes to give itself the power to fix oil and gas prices unilaterally if necessary. Having done that, they feel they should allow the House of Commons a chance to debate it. It is called a negative resolution, which is an indirect way of doing things. This will be done, providing 30 members object to what the government is doing. Three hours will be allowed for debate. The draft bill talked about ten members and five hours' debate. In the interest of democracy and protecting smaller parties, not necessarily this party because we expect to have at least 140 members after the next election—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: In the last House we had 26 members. In this House we had 33 and now have 32. That means that we as a party would not be able to object to the bringing in of this extraordinary measure under the Petroleum Administration Act. Therefore we propose this simple amendment. I am sure the government can accept it. In fact, I thank the government for indicating by its attitude and by the smiles of members opposite that it can accept it. The amendment simply states ten members instead of 30 and five hours of debate instead of three. What is an additional two hours on energy matters? I am sure the government can agree to that. The argument for it is that it is more democratic. A government that is interested in democracy would not have any problem supporting it.

• (1750)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to listen to the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He is always eloquent in his presentation, Mr. Speaker, but when it comes to substance I have to differ very strongly. This particular amendment is repetitious; it is a repetition of the one placed before the standing committee on energy. At that time I believe I indicated to the hon. member that the government was not in a position to change again the previous draft of its Bill C-94. We had 50 members and now it is down to 30 members and we believe that is a sufficient number.

On the other hand, if the hon. member is so confident that after the next federal election he and his party will return to this chamber in great numbers, surely he cannot find any difficulty with the way the legislation reads at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: However, Mr. Speaker, I know what he is thinking of. He is thinking about the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). He is afraid that that party after the next federal election will return to this chamber with fewer than 30 members. I know the hon. member and I know well enough that that is probably the reason he seeks to put that amendment in. Unfortunately, the government will not accept that amendment at this time.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in support of this amendment. I do not know why the government is afraid to give ten members the right to call for a debate in the House of Commons if and when they decide to undertake some new nationalization program and buy some oil company and impose this tax. Why do they insist on 30 members and think that ten is too small a number? It makes no sense, unless they are of the view that it is an intolerable imposition in the House of Commons that we should bring forward a motion requiring the government to explain why it is spending taxpayers' money. If they had any consideration for what this House is supposed to be, even in the most modest way, namely a forum to debate and discuss, they would accept this motion.

One could almost make a very good case that one member should have that right, but certainly ten members is not an onerous or unreasonable number. I am surprised and disappointed that the government has taken the view they have.

I would take this opportunity to point out that Clause 39 as amended in committee is a vast improvement over what the government originally proposed. Those people over there in the bowels of the bureaucracy who draft legislation are constantly seeking ways in which they can neuter this House as much as possible, because we are nothing but an imposition upon them as they pursue their good works on behalf of the nation. They produced an original procedure which had the ludicrous effect, Mr. Speaker, of meaning that the government could propose to buy a new oil company, the House of Commons could say no in a motion, but they could still go ahead and do it if they had the approval of the Senate. So you had the ludicrous situation where the House of Commons, made up of elected members of Parliament, could in the majority say no and we could not stop the government from acting; they could still go ahead and spend taxpayers' money.

That is an absolute affront to any reasonble interpretation of democracy. I suggest that whoever dreamed up that little scheme should be fired immediately and removed from the bureaucracy, because he is a danger. Apart from that, this is a violation of the Canadian Constitution because it has the effect of letting the Senate, an appointed body of has-beens, authorize the government to spend taxpayers' money. That is simply not tolerable in a democracy and I think it is in violation of our Constitution. The appointed people in the other place have no right to spend taxpayers' money; yet the original proposal from the government would have had that effect.

After considerable debate in the House, considerable debate in committee, and much more pressure than should have been necessary from our side, the government did make an amendment. And I give credit to the member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) for taking that recommendation to the bureaucrats and saying "Try again". Ultimately they did, and we are pleased to see that change come about.

It is unfortunate that he did not spend a little more time with that bureaucrat or that collection of bureaucrats and convince them that it would have been quite reasonable to have ten members as the necessary minimum for triggering this mechanism, that 30 members is simply an attempt by the government to make it as difficult as possible ever to exercise this one, slim, minor, modest little check on government power.

I consider it unfortunate, regrettable and anti-democratic that the government is apparently going to vote against this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now consider Motion No. 10.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-103, an Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended by deleting Clause 40.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this section is really a retroactive section. Earlier this day the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources mentioned that there had been a cutback in Alberta oil, western Canadian oil. In order to increase importation, the government collected an extra tax for a period of six months.

The House should be aware of two or three points regarding that tax. First of all, it was at 7.5 cents a gallon. The first thing we discovered in committee was that in six short months the government had collected more than $140 million too much. Even if one accepts the logic that a special tax is necessary, the rate of that tax was 40 per cent too high.

• (1800)

The only conclusion a rational human being can draw from that is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) shamelessly used this chamber and his backbench members to make a political statement. He told Canadians it would cost them 7.5 cents a gallon more because of those cutbacks when in reality the extra amount, if there ever was one, would have been less than five cents a gallon. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should be held accountable to this chamber for that tax.

Canadians may remember that in early September an agreement was reached and the cutbacks were stopped. A marvellous thing happened. That 7.5 cents a gallon tax did not disappear. The tax was there for a reason. The reason disappeared, but the tax of 7.5 cents a gallon stayed. What did the minister do? He simply increased another tax 7.5 cents a gallon the day this tax should have stopped.

Earlier today we warned Canadians that the 4.5 cents a gallon Canadian ownership charge is a tax, and last week and all day yesterday we warned Canadians that the 48 cents a gallon for the petroleum compensation fund is also a tax, which once they start this government intends to collect. We were telling the truth. The reality of that truth is here in Clause 40. The tax imposed is 40 per cent too high. It was for a specific purpose, but when the purpose stopped, the tax was simply transferred and it is still collected.

It was marvellous to listen to the testimony given in committee. We asked how the department calculated the need for this tax and were told that in Canada we require all refiners to estimate the amount of domestic crude they will use. When we were told that there would be so much cutback in the western provinces, we said to ourselves that we will have to import that much more and will have to pay extra for it. Production of Canadian crude was down, but imports did not increase because Canadians were learning to conserve. In effect, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his officials had imposed a tax on conservation.

That is what this tax is. That is what this charge is all about. It is an extra price imposed because Canadians listened and started to conserve. They started to drive smaller cars. They insulated their homes. They began to discontinue using oil products and are using natural gas. Canadians did what their government said they should do. They cut down on the need to import oil. As a reward, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, supported by all his backbenchers, said: "We will tax you more. Do what we tell you is good, and we will tax you more". That is what Clause 40 is all about. It is a tax which never was necessary. It was an inflated 40 per cent, and when the political excuse disappeared the tax stayed.

Then about 63 days later the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources blamed the oil companies for increasing prices. Is this a government in which Canadians are supposed to believe and have trust and confidence? It is a sham. This is a government with no shame. Its backbench has no shame. Hon. members opposite went out and told voters 18 cents was too much, but in this bill alone there is a 48 cents tax, a 4.5 cents tax and a 7.5 cents tax. Those are the taxes Canadians pay.

Then there is the export tax, which is the very first part of the bill. It was originally imposed on Canadians in 1974-75 because revenue was needed to pay for imports. In the last few years not one dime of it has been used to pay for imports. All that money goes into the federal treasury. We are taxed for a reason, and then when the reason disappears, the tax remains. That is the history of this government. That is the history of this Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and we have moved this amendment so that we will have the opportunity to point out with the greatest possible clarity that the tax was never necessary. It was imposed—at a rate 40 per cent too much—for a specific purpose, but when the purpose disappeared, the tax remained. Sixty-three days later the oil companies were blamed because prices went up.

If there is a Canadian tax revolt, it will be because of the behaviour of those who stand in this chamber and support this kind of principle and this kind of clause. It is onerous and deceitful, and we should make a statement in this chamber that as Members of Parliament elected by the people of Canada we do not support that kind of deceit in terms of the taxes which come out of our pockets.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 10. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be amended in Clause 42 by striking out line 9 at page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"with the regulations provided that the amounts of such payments shall not cause the price of imported petroleum to a processor, that is the price that is effectively reduced after compensation, to fall to a level below the price of a comparable quality or kind of domestic petroleum."

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this amendment is an attempt to put some discipline into the ridiculous situation we have wherein we are subsidizing Mexican, Venezuelan and Arabian crude. Taxpayers are paying that subsidy to the point where foreign crude is cheaper than Canadian crude, the price of which is set by fiat. This is causing Canadian production to be shut in. It is causing cash flow problems for the exploration and production companies affected. It is causing business drop-offs for the oil service companies which would normally be servicing wells. It is causing a loss in royalties to the provincial governments affected. It is causing a loss of petroleum revenue taxes to the federal government. It is causing a loss to Canada in general of hundreds of millions of dollars.

A few years ago we in this country and in this House had a sense of outrage and indignation when the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency allowed some 28 million eggs to go rotten on the shelf. Members in this House and people generally were rightfully and justifiably angry and upset because an incompetent marketing board allowed that kind of waste. It was a waste of food and a waste of money.

That waste is insignificant compared with the waste which has been going on because of the way the petroleum import compensation program has been working. In the month of April 300,000 barrels of Canadian crude oil production were shut in daily. That meant we were importing the equivalent amount from Mexico, from Venezuela and from Saudi Arabia and subsidizing it to the tune of about $20 a barrel.

• (1810)

The taxpayers of Canada were paying $6 million per day in subsidies to Pemex, the Mexican oil company, and others, while 300,000 barrels per day of Canadian production was shut in. If that production had been in Quebec the roof would have lifted, Mr. Speaker. There would have been outrage, indignation and fury at that kind of treatment by the federal government. But the shut-in production was in western Canada, Saskatchewan and Alberta, so who cares? Some companies went bankrupt because they did not have any business, but who cares? It is not important. Who cares that the government is bungling the import compensation so badly? Nobody cares. It is taking place out there, so no one cares.

If the socialists needed an example of why the state should not be allowed to run anything they need look no further than this program. "Big Brother", the Liberal government with its high-priced officials, says in effect, "We have this brilliant scheme and we will administer it for the benefit of Canada." In the process the taxpayers of Canada pay $6 million per day in unnecessary taxes. That money ends up with Pemex, the Mexican petroleum company, and Petroleos de Venezuela, the Venezuelan state-owned company, or with a Saudi Arabian company. In the process, since we cannot afford $6 million per day, we have to borrow at 18, 19 or 20 per cent interest because there is a current account problem in the rest of the country. This contributes to our balance of payment problems. It is an incredibly stupid move, Mr. Speaker.

It is not as if the problem were a recent one. Last October the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was told about it but he did nothing until April when the action he took was not adequate. He said, "I will phone the refiners and ask them not to buy cheap oil on the spot market". That was his reaction to this insane situation that has existed at least since last October. If it were not so tragic it would be laughable.

One has to wonder what kind of gall it takes for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) to claim that the National Energy Program is a success. Would it be a real success if, instead of $6 million per day in unnecessary taxes, we were paying $12 million and if, instead of 300,000 barrels per day of shut-in oil, it was 600,000 barrels per day of shut-in oil that was affected? I suppose all that would make it an outstanding success! The people responsible for operating the program in such an inept manner would resign if they had any decency, but that is not something we can expect from them.

We put forward this motion which, in effect, says that if you are going to operate an import compensation program, if you are going to subsidize Mexican oil—and heaven knows that is a stupid policy—but if that is what you insist upon doing, at least for goodness sake do not do it in a way that penalizes Canadian producers. That is a very reasonable request, and this is a reasonable motion. It asks that this program of subsidies to Mexico not be run in a way that will hurt Canadian producers.

It is ironic that most of the 300,000 barrels per day shut-in production comes from wholly Canadian-owned companies. It just turned out that the shut-in Canadian production came from fields dominated by Canadian companies. So, while the government is saying that the national energy policy will Canadianize the industry, it is subsidizing imports from Mexico, inflicting economic harm on the nation and, in particular, on Canadian-owned companies. Anyone with a shred of decency would blush, if not apologize, for supporting a government that would maintain and sustain that kind of absurd program.

While acknowledging that there is no likelihood that the trained donkeys will think any more independently about this motion than they have about others, nevertheless I plead with them to examine it, to examine their consciences, to live up to their responsibility as Members of Parliament, and support this reasonable amendment.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I thought that a member of the government might speak and indicate support for this motion. I am disappointed that such is not the case.

Canadians should understand that what the government has put in place is a system that works roughly in the following way. If the government were to put a tax of, say, $1,000 on every vehicle sold in Canada, and then all imported vehicles were to receive a subsidy of $5,000 so that they would be cheaper than a comparable Canadian made car, then under those circumstances Canadians could not be blamed for buying imported cars. But of course more people in the Canadian automobile industry would lose their jobs.

That is what the government has been doing in the oil and gas industry. Imported oil is more expensive than Canadian oil. It is all taxed, then the money collected is given over to the imported oil. When that $18 per barrel is given to the company that imports Mexican oil, all of a sudden, instead of being $9 more expensive than the Canadian it becomes $9 cheaper. Can a refinery be blamed for buying imported rather than Canadian oil under those circumstances?

Could the buyer of an imported car be blamed if our government made it cheaper than a comparable Canadian manufactured car? What about a toaster? Collect a tax on all toasters, Canadian or imported, and then give the money to the people who import toasters. Imported toasters will then become cheaper than the ones made in Canada, and Canadians will lose their jobs. That is what the government has been doing in the energy industry.

• (1820)

It is a peculiar fact of life, Mr. Speaker, that the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) himself directed PetroCan to buy 50,000 barrels per day of Mexican crude. That is the only purchase which the minister directed that company to make, and it is really strange that it is Mexican crude which benefits the most. It costs $9 more a barrel, but he set up a subsidy system which makes it $9 cheaper. If you went to the marketing area of the refinery in Quebec which uses that cheaper oil you would not find gasoline any cheaper. The subsidy makes it $9 a barrel cheaper, but the consumer does not find it any cheaper. The profits go into the pockets of the big oil companies. The minister takes tax dollars and turns around and subsidizes imported crude.

What we propose in this amendment, Mr. Speaker, does not go as far as I would like. I propose that we say to the minister he cannot use our tax dollars to make imported oil cheaper than domestic. You cannot take my taxes and reward the companies which import oil, and punish Canadian companies. You have to give Canadian companies an even break. That is all we are trying to do with this amendment.

Is there anyone with common sense who thinks it makes sense to put a tax on refrigerators, televisions, toasters or automobiles and then give it to the people who import those products so that they can sell at a price lower than the price of Canadian-made products? It defies common sense. Yet, somehow, members of this House continue to support a minister who is doing just that with imported oil. It defies logic. All those Canadians on fixed incomes, all those Canadians who are having trouble paying the high cost of food or transportation, should know that the Liberal Party wants to make all those things more expensive so that it can take the money and give it to Mexico, Venezuela, and Saudi Arabia.

If we do not buy Canadian first, Mr. Speaker, then there will be fewer jobs for Canadians. The figures from last month show that has already happened in western Canada. Unemployment rates are going up rapidly. The government should remember that those unemployed people out there cannot buy trucks which are made in central Canada, or tires or toasters, all those things that are made in central Canada. That is what the government is doing, Mr. Speaker.

We simply ask that this Chamber, through this amendment, indicate to the Minister of Energy that he cannot use our tax dollars to provide a subsidy for foreign oil in order to make it cheaper than Canadian oil. If he really cared, he would go one step further and say it should always be a few cents more expensive per barrel so that there would be an incentive to buy the oil produced in Canada before we buy oil from other countries. That makes economic sense, helps reduce the cost of living, and will create jobs in Canada. We need all those things desperately, and this amendment would help to achieve them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 11. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, with the unanimous consent of the House, to present an amendment to Bill C-103 as follows:

That Bill C-103, an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto be amended in clause 42 by

(a) striking out line 29 on page 34 and substituting the following therefor:

"petroleum or petroleum substitute;"

(b) adding immediately after line 34 on page 34 the following:

" "Petroleum Substitute" means any renewable energy source which displaces the use of petroleum"

(c) striking out line 3 on page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"quality or kind of petroleum or petroleum substitute, the Minister"

(d) Striking out line 45 on page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"petroleum or petroleum substitutes in respect of which compen-"

• (1830)

This amendment is offered in the face of increasing concern for energy security. There has always been a serious question of alternatives developing because of subsidized and depressed domestic petroleum prices. This amendment would allow the minister to equate the comparable petroleum energy replaced by alternatives and then give consumers who choose these alternatives the same level of compensation. As an example, a solar energy system—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I gave the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) adequate time to put his motion to the House and to indicate the purpose of the motion. I thank the hon. member for Bruce-Grey for providing the Chair with a copy of the motion before he actually put it to the House. I have indicated separately to him that he may wish to argue the question as to whether or not the motion is in order. I simply want to bring the argument on the matter of whether the motion is in order to his attention, so that he can address himself to it as quickly as possible.

As the hon. member indicated, Clause 42 of the bill provides for compensation to be made payable by the Government of Canada to producers of petroleum. The purport of this motion would be to extend the compensation factor not only to the producers of petroleum but to producers of petroleum substitutes. The Chair obviously has to conclude that there is a difference between those two groups, namely, producers of petroleum, and producers of petroleum substitutes. In that event, there being a difference, the hon. member is putting to the House a motion which would provide that the Crown expend money in the manner in which he has described. I refer to Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 773(7), which reads:

An amendment is out of order if it imposes a charge upon the Public Treasury, if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the Royal Recommendation.

I have to indicate to the House and to the hon. member that if there is, in the proposed motion of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey, a charge upon the public treasury, then the Chair would have to find his amendment out of order. Perhaps we could hear the hon. member for Bruce-Grey on the matter of whether or not the proposed motion is in order.

Mr. Gurbin: I would like to make three arguments why this motion is entirely in order. I can argue on the basis of a debatable point as well as on the substance of the real question which is now in the mind of the Speaker and which presents itself in this motion, that is, whether we are actually increasing expenditures which would require a Royal Recommendation.

I think the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) was talking a few moments ago about the Conservative Party and the victim it is of ideology. The question of ideology and how people get their minds around the whole question of energy is one of the difficulties which faces this House and faces the Speaker as he considers this question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Ideology is not the matter of the point of order. I appreciate the hon. member's intentions in attempting to explain further the purpose of the amendment. The difficulty the Chair has, at least on the face of the amendment, is that it appears to call for the expenditure of treasury funds. That is the only point that I raised with the hon. member. Ideology notwithstanding, if the hon. member could address himself to the question which is of concern to the Chair, namely, the issue of whether or not he is proposing the expenditure of public funds, he would assist the Chair in ruling whether or not the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I respect the point which the Chair has made. I understand the question of expenditure. My point in raising ideology was not from a political, philosophical point of view. My point was with respect to the set mind that people have with energy, and the question of what energy really is. The fact is that we cannot define what energy is, and the fact that petroleum, as we are dealing with it here and now, is interrelated and interchangeable and cannot be separated from other types of energy resources and sources that we have in this country.

With respect to the question of expenditure, I would humbly suggest to the Chair that I would debate, long and hard, the question of whether this amendment as proposed would increase expenditure. With one brief example, if the Chair will allow me, I would suggest that the expenditure could actually be decreased by the definition and the redefinition that we apply with this amendment.

In Prince Edward Island where all oil imports—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I want to give the hon. member a full opportunity to address himself to the issue that has been raised by the Chair. I will do it again.

Clause 42 calls for compensation to persons in respect of a type of petroleum. I have to assume that the expression "petroleum substitute" means something other than simply petroleum. If that logic is correct, compensation for a person in respect of a petroleum substitute constitutes a different type of expense for the Crown. If that argument is correct, then the proposed amendment is out of order. That is the point to which the hon. member should address himself.

The point is not on a global budget concept as to whether or not money might be saved by compensating the producers or persons in respect of petroleum substitutes. The question is whether or not the amendment proposed by the hon. member is a call upon the treasury by those persons in respect of a petroleum substitute. If it is, then unfortunately, the amendment has to be found out of order. That is the only point to which the hon. member has to address himself.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, the point I was trying to raise, albeit in a circumspect way perhaps for the Chair, is the fact that this amendment would likely decrease expenditures for the Crown. In that case it is not a call on the treasury and, indeed, the amendment should be allowed.

The decrease in expenditure would be in the decreased amount that would be required to compensate those people who were importing oil into this country for whatever use. That is the key point. I think it is debatable at the very least. I would suggest very strongly that it is accurate, and that is the basis on which I think this amendment could be considered so that the members of this House, particularly those who have taken the time and the effort to consider this question in some detail, such as the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), could have an opportunity to express themselves at the time of a vote. That is the key point, and that is why I think I deserve an opportunity to explain this motion briefly, if the Chair will allow me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to focus the hon. member's attention on the particular point. I think this is the third or fourth time. I will hear other members on the same point if that is necessary. But the problem comes down to the fact that it is not a matter of a global budget and, therefore, that what one takes from one envelope one puts back through another envelope. The issue created by the hon. member's motion is that he intends certain people shall be compensated, namely, those using petroleum substitutes. If that is the hon. member's intention, that constitutes a call upon the treasury.

To suggest, for example, that the users of various other products might be compensated—because it is a very good idea or it is a very sensible way of going about things—is not an argument related to whether or not the amendment is in order. The problem is that when one creates a new class of people who are entitled to compensation, that is a call upon the treasury, and the Chair is obliged to find that out of order. I will hear the hon. member for Bruce-Grey for another moment. Apparently there are other hon. members who want to speak on the point and I will hear them as well.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, on the last point that you have made, the compensation fund is a fund separate from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is an established fund. It is not at the call of the government for any other use, as I understand the compensation charge. It is not a question of taking into an envelope an amount of money which, in a discretionary way, is being handed to another party outside that envelope.

What we are doing with this amendment is decreasing—I admit it is an arguable point—the amount of charge that would have to be paid to those people who would normally bring in oil to the country, and allowing that, in a lesser amount, to those people who do not require that oil.

• (1840)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. To understand the rhythm of this proposed amendment and how it sits, having been on the committee and having spent several weeks in detailed study of the bill, I think it might be helpful to look at the National Accounts of Canada. If we look at the National Accounts of Canada, we find that the petroleum compensation charge is netted out at zero for the current year and all projected years. It is an amount of money which does not show up in the National Accounts of Canada, as the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) indicated.

The second principle which I think we find throughout Bill C-103 is that there is no automatic compensation of any kind, for any thing, in any amount. Indeed, it is a bill which requires order in council approval for the setting of charges and for the setting of payments. Of particular interest might be the clause which deals with the definition of petroleum. The first part of the definition reads as follows:

> "petroleum" means any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons other than gas—

But the second part of the definition is of particular interest and reads as follows:

> —and includes any product designated as a petroleum product by regulations made under Section 75.

That definition and other clauses in the bill empower not only the rights but the responsibilities of order in council, which is cabinet, to set regulations, to define and to determine through some kind of descriptive process what in fact qualifies.

My first point is that nowhere in the National Accounts of Canada or in the treasury are any of these amounts dealt with. In all the documents which came before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts not one dime of anything involved in this part of the legislation came to our attention because it was there as zero. Second, both the rights and responsibilities reside in cabinet, in order in council, to define through regulation what in fact is eligible. The impact of this amendment would simply be to remind cabinet that there might be something very useful here which it would want to consider within the powers given it by the legislation.

Cabinet could in fact take all the commodities, or some parts of the commodities which my hon. colleague has in mind, put them on the list, and therefore make them eligible. Perhaps this is a strange piece of legislation in that sense, but I think that citation in Beauchesne's does not deal with it adequately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Since no other hon. members are seeking the floor to contribute to the point of order, I will first attempt to answer the points raised by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). The Chair is seized of the bill. I appreciate the explanation of the hon. member that in the National Public Accounts the costs are netted out at zero, as he indicated. The difficulty is that on a particular bill it is not possible for the Chair to go rampaging through the public accounts to consider whether one aspect of the accounts might net out in a different way than another aspect of the accounts. I am faced with the bill which is in front of me.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) created a new category of person. That category of person is referred to in connection with petroleum substitutes. I understand that some hon. members may feel that that is a rather narrow interpretation on the part of the Chair, but once a new category of person is created and a new category of thing, once the word "compensation" enters between the person and the thing, and once it constitutes the use of public funds, then the Standing Orders are very clear that only a minister of the Crown may propose such a motion.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Bruce-Grey for giving the Chair notice prior to proposing his motion. The Chair had an opportunity to consult with the officers at the table in that regard. I do not want that hon. member or the hon. member for Calgary West to think that the conclusion was arrived at lightly. During the course of the last several minutes the matter was reviewed, and the Chair is satisfied that indeed the motion is out of order. I see the hon. member for Bruce-Grey is seeking the floor on another point of order. He ought to know that, once a ruling is made it is not debatable, but out of courtesy I will recognize him.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, the key point which I neglected to make before is that the definition of hydrocarbon is hydrogen and carbon. There is no question in my mind that, in the purest sense, the measure I have introduced can qualify, but when the Chair intervenes I would ask it to consider whether or not there is any acceptable phraseology which would provide the necessary limitations in order to comply with the spirit and the technical requirements of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must indicate to the hon. member that the Chair is not really permitted to give advice to hon. members on how best to prepare or word a motion. In order to end the discussion as amicably as possible, I remind him that the hon. member for Calgary West indicated that this motion was a reminder to cabinet that there were other possibilities under the regulations for certain products to be considered for compensation. Once the hon. member for Calgary West made that comment, the Chair was satisfied that the reminder was made and that there were other options by which petroleum substitutes could be considered. Therefore, I reiterate my ruling. Now, is the House ready for the recorded divisions on several amendments?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) have some comment in this regard?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I had consultations with my colleagues. Before calling in the members, I have two motions to make. It seems that there will be unanimous consent on both of them.

The first one is that, notwithstanding any order of the House, any division on report stage of Motion No. 1 on Bill C-103 shall apply to report stage of Motions Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, and that, if a division is required on the motion to concur in the said bill at report stage, this division shall be taken separately.

If Mr. Speaker could call this motion I am sure there will be unanimous consent, and then I have another motion to move.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Subject to correction by hon. members present, there may be some change in what the President of the Privy Council has proposed. My understanding is that Motion No. 8 was negatived on division. Therefore he may wish to withdraw his reference to Motion No. 8. Of course Motion No. 12 stands in the name of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey. I have just dealt with it at some length. Unless it is the intention of the House to raise that motion despite the ruling of the Chair, the President of the Privy Council might wish to delete it as well. Is the President of the Privy Council agreeable?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it is by inadvertence that representatives of the parties included these motion numbers. There is no doubt that we will agree to delete or withdraw Motions Nos. 8 and 12. Therefore I so move.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): For the purposes of clarification, it is moved by the President of the Privy Council:

That notwithstanding any order of the House, any division on report stage of Motion No. 1 on Bill C-103 shall apply to report stage of Motions Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10 and 11, and if a division is required on the motion to concur in the said bill at report stage, this division shall be taken separately.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have had prior consultation on this matter with the government House leader, and our party is prepared to agree.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, we too agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Therefore the motion is agreed to and so ordered.

Motion (Mr. Pinard) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand that the President of the Privy Council indicated that he had a second motion.

• (1850)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there is an agreement among House leaders and representatives of the parties that members not be called before 8.15 p.m. later today and that, in the meantime, we shall begin debating the amendments at the report stage of Bill C-104. Following the recorded division after 8.15 o'clock, if you would ask if there is unanimous consent that we deal with the third reading stage of Bill C-103, pursuant to what I have just said, I think you would obtain it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the suggestion put forward by the hon. President of the Privy Council. Is there unanimous consent for that?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we also have had prior consultation on that, and we are prepared to agree on this side.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, the divisions on Bill C-103 and the motions pertaining thereto stand over until 8.15, along with the other details as mentioned by the President of the Privy Council.

* * *

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING INCENTIVES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-104, respecting Petroleum Incentives and Canadian Ownership and Control Determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has some notes relating to 13 motions at report stage of Bill C-104, an act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act. It is the intention of the Chair to group them as follows:

Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 4 causes grave concern to the Chair as to its procedural acceptability. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) in his motion is attempting to establish one or more consultative councils, which would entail the outlaying of public funds. I realize that in subsection 9 of this motion it states that each member of a council shall serve on a voluntary basis. However, the hon. member will admit that in setting up such councils other costs will be involved, such as administrative costs. For the benefit of hon. members, I refer them to Beauchesne's fifth edition where Section 7 of Citation 773 is on this point, and I quote in part; as I did earlier for the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

> An amendment is out of order if it imposes a charge upon the public treasury—

For this reason the motion is not receivable.

Motion No. 5 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 6 and 13 could be debated together and voted on separately. Motion No. 7 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 8, 9 and 10 will be debated together and voted on as follows: (a) Motion No. 8 by itself; (b) as Motion No. 9 is consequential on No. 10, a vote on No. 10 will also dispose of No. 9.

Finally, Motions Nos. 11 and 12 could be debated together and voted on separately.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am told that consultations have taken place in relation to three additional amendments from the government to Bill C-104 and that there will be unanimous consent for them to be considered as if notice had been given 48 hours ago. I will table those three amendments forthwith.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent to the proposal of the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think now may be the time to make a brief submission respecting your ruling on Motion No. 4. May I do that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would ordinarily be inclined to suggest to the hon. member that he do so when we come to that motion. However, it may be more convenient for the House if the hon. member seeks to make his point of order in that regard immediately. It is on the matter of the Chair's ruling. I do not think I need to seek unanimous consent. Unless the House indicates to me that there is some problem, I will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway with respect to motion No. 4 and the argument he wishes to make.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps I could make a short submission to indicate that this is in order. You could reserve your decision, or your review of it, until we get to motion No. 4.

Let me just say that I gather that the reason for the ruling is that the amendment purports to spend money. The proposed councils do not spend money. In my submission, they do not increase the financial burden on the Crown by a cent. I submit that all they do is constitute a council that does not commit the Crown to anything. It does not commit the Crown to providing financial expenses, space, offices or anything such as that. The reason for that is the representatives on the council are people who are paid by other organizations and through other funds.

Even if Your Honour were to determine that the Crown would have to pay money, there are a number of precedent amendments which direct an officer of the Crown to perform certain tasks. Even though his salary must be paid and he must be provided work space, Parliament, in giving him direction, has not passed a financial item. I am told this has been so ruled in the past.

When the government proposed to abolish appeals to the Tariff Appeals Board in 1961, a Senate amendment proposed a procedure guaranteeing expeditious hearings in order to meet both government and opposition concerns. The amendment was never challenged as to its spending money because it would continue appeals and create work which would not need to be done if appeals were abolished.

Further, the provisions of proposed Section 10, A(8) entitling councillors to be paid, does not spend money. I will just have to check on that. In the original draft of the amendment it did mention spending money, and I purposely eliminated that from the amendment submitted.

In effect, I submit that there is nothing in these regional consultative councils which require the Crown to spend any money. The minister is asked to establish the councils. The Dene people are specifically mentioned, but of course their people are funded by the native group in the Northwest Territories. The objectives are discussed. Their meetings are to be determined by the council. Basically, they are to review the Petroleum Incentives Program. They can establish committees.

I now see I was mistaken, because there is a section that deals with payments. I thought that was excluded.

I will have to rely on my second half of the argument. There are, in fact, precedents for the fact that even though you set up a procedure or board you do not necessarily have to rule that it will require expenditures by the Crown. Perhaps Your Honour could look at it and advise whether that is still the ruling of the Chair when we come to that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As a courtesy to the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway I will do as he suggests, which is to take his proposed amendment under brief consideration. Obviously, from the Speaker's ruling which I read earlier, the research has been done and it would appear that the creation of such councils has not yet been considered to be possible without any cost whatsoever. Since the hon. member has made an appeal to that effect, perhaps the Chair can take this into consideration until such time as the House reaches that point.

I will call the amendments standing in the name of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 2 of the English version by striking out lines 35 and 36 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) crude petroleum regardless of density produced at a wellhead in liquid".

• (1900)

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate. I just want to give a brief explanation of this particular amendment. This amendment makes the English version consistent with the French version. "Density" is the terminology used in the metric system. Therefore, I do not believe hon. members opposite would find difficulty in supporting this particular government amendment. However, I would like to expand on some of my feelings about this particular piece of legislation, for this particular act is a fundamental building block in the National Energy Program, the goals of which are energy security, opportunities for Canadians to share in the development of their energy resources, and the establishment of a fair energy system for all Canadians.

Through this proposed legislation we will be able to establish a stronger presence of Canadian owned and Canadian controlled firms in our oil and gas industry. Not only will such Canadianization provide energy security for the country, but it will also enhance the opportunities for Canadians to benefit, to participate in the oil and gas industry. Moreover, Canadian ownership and control of the oil and gas sector will ensure that, in the long term, the benefits of industrial expansion are distributed more fairly amongst Canadians. Once this legislation is in place, approximately $2 billion in incentives will be available to the industry for exploration and development expenses incurred between January 1, 1981, through to the end of this fiscal year.

Bill C-104 is the bill which will provide $2 billion in incentives to the oil and gas industry, a bill which was purposely delayed by the Conservative Party of Canada. The Conservatives stood in this chamber and made reference to assistance for the oil and gas industry. The Government of Canada announced in its National Energy Program a specific item to assist, and it is here, in Bill C-104, but what did the Tories do? They walked off the job for two weeks, allowed the bells to ring, took their big salaries, and ran away from the House of Commons. But they had the nerve to say, through their literature and on television and in articles in the newspapers, that they were concerned and wanted to assist the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Smith: Hypocrisy.

Mr. Dingwall: It is hypocrisy at its best. And who is it from? It is from the Conservative Party of Canada under the leadership of the Right Hon. Joseph Clark.

These incentives will encourage foreign-controlled companies willing to work with Canadians to develop Canada's oil and gas potential. Foreign-controlled and owned companies continue to be welcome to explore for oil and gas in Canada, despite the rhetoric that one hears from the Conservative Party of Canada. The prospective returns for such companies are competitive, if not superior, to similar investments in other western oil producing nations. Nevertheless, the degree of foreign control and ownership in this strategic sector of our resource economy must be reduced. The path the government has chosen is to stimulate Canadian private investment through a scheme of incentives for Canadianization. These incentives are to be given to Canadians participating in oil and gas exploration and development, in order to achieve a 50 per cent ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1990 and energy security for all Canadians. The legislative mechanism for the achievement of such goals is the bill before us today, Bill C-104.

There are three distinct parts to this bill, the first containing provisions for exploration and development incentives to be granted to Canadians in varying amounts according to their Canadian control status and degree of beneficial Canadian ownership. The provisions under which Canadian control and Canadian ownership will be determined are found under Part II. The aim of these provisions is to ensure that the incentives benefit Canadian-owned and controlled companies and that Canadian participation in exploration and development is encouraged.

Part III of the bill amends in a technical way two provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act. The definitions of a non-eligible person and corporation are amended to reflect policy that has been applied by the Foreign Investment Review Agency since the enactment of the FIRA Act in 1974.

Part I, entitled "The Petroleum Incentives Program Act", provides cash incentives to applicants who incur eligible exploration and development expenditures. Generally, the percentage of an incentive will depend on some or all of the following factors: first, the Canadian ownership rate of the applicant; second, the control status of the applicant, and, third, the type and location of the expenditure.

The bill provides for two incentives. The Crown share incentive amounts to 25 per cent of any eligible exploration expenditure incurred on Canada Lands. Entitlement to this incentive does not depend on the Canadian ownership rate or the control status of the applicant. The Crown share incentive will encourage and assist the exploration effort in Canada Lands, while contributing towards a share of such expenditures commensurate with the government's retained interest in the Canada Lands.

There are three higher levels of incentives, again representing a percentage of the eligible exploration or development expenditures or eligible asset costs incurred by an applicant.

Entitlement to this incentive is dependent on the applicant being Canadian controlled and having a minimum Canadian ownership rate of 50 per cent. The incentive levels as a percentage of eligible expenditures increase as the Canadian ownership rate of the applicant increases.

The rules for determining ownership and control status are found in Part II of the bill, entitled "The Canadian Ownership and Control Determination Act". A Canadian ownership rate is based upon beneficial ownership. This ownership determination may require looking through nominees to establish where the real beneficial ownership resides. As well, such measurement takes into consideration an investment in a chain of ownership. Beneficial ownership includes rights to equity in the future and to other forms of participation besides that of traditional equity. The control status determinations are made on the basis of control-in-fact. The Foreign Investment Review Act definitions and presumptions of control-in-fact will be used for such determinations.

Bill C-104 has been before the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation. A number of witnesses appeared before the committee to make submissions on the bill, including representatives from the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, the Canadian Bar Association, the Consumers' Association of Canada, and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. Individual companies appearing with submissions were Dome Petroleum Limited, Norcen Energy Resources Limited, Home Oil Company Limited, Gulf Canada Limited, Texaco Canada Resources Limited, and McLeod Young Weir Limited.

In committee witnesses addressed several issues. One issue raised by many of the submissions and the members of the committee was that there was no mechanism established within the bill by which an appeal could be made regarding an incentive or ownership decision. I am pleased to announce to the House on behalf of the Government of Canada that we have considered these representations and that the bill will be amended so that the determination of a Canadian ownership rate under Clause 39(2), a redetermination of Canadian ownership rate under Clause 44(1), and a finding by the minister that an arrangement is artificial under Clause 30 and 53(1), are all now specifically subject to review by the Federal Court of Appeal.

• (1910)

This amendment will make the COR determination and redetermination as well as the PIP and COR artificial transactions divisions subject to review under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. This amendment is a result of responsible government. We have a committee. Representations were made at the committee level by Members of Parliament, the industry and the academic community to improve this bill. The Government of Canada is attempting to do that. That is what that amendment is about.

Several other amendments were introduced in committee stage. While most of these amendments were technical, one amendment to Part II of the bill is worth noting specifically. This amendment would allow applicants who have begun to determine their Canadian ownership rate and control status on the basis of the draft forms and regulations, published on March 10, 1982, to rely on the provisions in those drafts for their COR.

Several other issues were addressed in committee. One such issue was that the provisions of the bill are complex. In the case of PIP, a key consideration has been the recognition that the benefits conferred by PIP on Canadians could, in a variety of ways, be transferred to non-Canadians. This has led to the adoption of rules to reduce such transfers to a minimum. However, while these rules introduce a complicating factor to the PIP system, they still allow for the self-assessing process to be applied and should be readily understood by those familiar with the terms and conditions commonly found in the wide range of industry agreements in use.

As for the Canadian ownership and control determination act, it is intended to measure real beneficial ownership. Sometimes this can be a relatively simple process, but for other cases it is more difficult. The COR system of rules for the measurement of Canadian ownership is designed to be applied as uniformly as possible to individuals, private and public corporations and partnerships, and many other investment vehicles such as trusts and insurance companies. The equity structure of each one of these types of entities is extremely varied and, of course, the COR rules must parallel them to be effective. It is in this sense that the rules are necessarily detailed.

The degree of ministerial discretion and the fact that many of the measurement and incentive rules are prescribed by regulation was another issue raised in committee. Because financial structures and oil and gas transactions are sensitive to change, it is considered desirable to retain a certain degree of flexibility in order for the government to be able to respond to new and unforeseen situations. However, while these provisions are intended to ensure that the PIP and COR programs are responsive to industry needs and changing circumstances, I want to stress that the flexibility inherent to these programs is not intended to detract from, but rather to reinforce, the long-term nature of the PIP and COR programs. Indeed, the flexibility provided is by way of fine tuning to ensure that relief is provided in circumstances where the rules could otherwise lead to an arbitrary or an unintentionally hard result for PIP and COR applicants.

Another issue raised in committee was the fear that confidential industry information would be disclosed through these new programs. The confidentiality provisions in the statute permit disclosure of information to appropriate officials and departments for purposes of administration of the act, as well as to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency and the Department of Finance for purposes of monitoring the oil and gas industry and development of fiscal policies.

In addition, the statutory disclosure provisions recognize that the public interest in the administration of justice outweighs the public interest in the statutory protection of confidentiality in two circumstances. The first of these is any kind of legal proceedings, civil or criminal, arising out of the administration of the act in which evidence is to be taken under oath. The second of these is criminal proceedings of any kind. The ability to disclose in the latter circumstance reflects the position that when the important issue of criminal guilt, and perhaps the liberty of the subject is at stake, all relevant evidence might be available to ensure a proper resolution.

The officials have been instructed to keep in close touch with the industry to review the provisions of this bill for any changes that may be required. Any such changes will be considered within the context of the integrity of the program. The continuation of this dialogue is an extension of the effort that began with the inception of the program.

The specifics of the petroleum incentives program and the Canadian ownership rate and control status system were first set out in papers for public discussion in late 1980. These were further elaborated and refined in light of subsequent public comments in the spring of 1981. Public comments and reactions to both papers were reflected in the draft bill tabled in this House last June. The regulations for these programs have reflected this interaction with industry.

In addition, a series of workshops on both the PIP and the Canadian ownership and control determination programs took place earlier this year. Approximately 1,500 people attended these sessions in six different centres across the country.

Those attending came from both large and small companies active in the oil and gas sector as well as from the legal and accounting communities and from such financial institutions as banks, trust companies and investment dealers. Indeed, the key role to be played by the latter group has prompted separate follow-up sessions with them. Throughout the course of these and similar contacts, the exchange of information has contributed to both a better understanding and, we think, a more workable program.

In light of the extensive dialogue with industry and the support of the Canadian people across the country for the objectives of these programs, the Canadianization goal of the National Energy Program would appear to be a necessary component of a viable solution to this country's energy problems. Increased Canadian ownership and enhanced exploration activity will enable us to achieve our energy security and ownership goals and will also ensure that the benefits of industrial expansion are distributed more fairly across this country.

I am pleased to recommend this bill to the House as it will be instrumental in enabling us to resolve many of this country's energy problems. It will help this country become self-sufficient in energy by the end of the decade. It will help Canadians achieve control of the petroleum industry.

It is critical that these programs be put in place as soon as possible. There is an urgent need for the incentives by many Canadian oil and gas companies which believed in the National Energy Program and made investment decisions on the basis of the imminent availability of subsidies under the Petroleum Incentives Program. The Petroleum Incentives Program and the Canadian Ownership and Control Program will both play a vital role in securing our energy future.

As I said at the outset, if industry has one concern or, indeed, one complaint, it ought to direct it four-square to the Conservative Party of Canada. Never before have we seen such hypocrisy from a Canadian political party. For two weeks they goofed off. They left Parliament Hill. They had the bells ringing while important legislation like this Bill C-104 was delayed. This Bill C-104 has been delayed by their tactics. They referred to bankruptcies and to hard times in the oil and gas industry, but they did absolutely nothing about it when they had an opportunity. I hope they will have the courage to stand and say to the oil and gas industry and to the people of Canada that they made a mistake. They are used to making mistakes, whether it is in positions on Petro-Canada or something else. We have heard it all and we will hear it again, if they continue to make mistakes and blunders.

• (1920)

They have an energy policy to which they alluded today. It is in bits and pieces. One point is to dismantle Petro-Canada, to cut the prices of oil and gas. That is their policy. They say, "Never mind the agreement of the producing provinces." They never had what we refer to in my community as the guts, the intestinal fortitude, to take those policies before a policy convention of the Conservative Party of Canada and have them voted on in terms of resolutions. Not one resolution emanated from that policy conference.

Mr. Smith: They were too scared.

Mr. Dingwall: We know they are scared. They are scared that this energy legislation will do something for the oil and gas industry. Their intent is to see that industry go down the tube. I say to the Conservative Party: "Shame, shame, the industry will make you accountable in the next general election."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear that we "want the industry to go down the tubes". Would the parliamentary secretary go to Hamilton and see whether they are making tubes any more, or making pipe any more? Two years of this minister and they are not making any pipe, they are not making steel. That is Liberal policy.

In a court of law, in a criminal trial, one of the principles that all of us hold dear is that we cannot self-incriminate, we have the right to avoid self-incrimination. This Chamber is a marvellous place because so often members plead guilty and do not even know they have just done so. The parliamentary secretary stood and said that for two weeks the Conservative Party rang the bells and goofed off. Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we spent those two weeks talking to the Canadian people about the reason why the bells were ringing. The people listened and they knew we were telling the truth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: They supported us then and they support us today. The parliamentary secretary starts there and he finishes there, saying that we were "goofing off while the bells rang." In the middle, Mr. Speaker, comes his guilty plea. He puts it out there for all of us, with pride. Mr. Speaker, do you remember him saying to you and to all the members of this Chamber: "We have changed the legislation; when we listened to the witnesses, we learned; we have put before you tonight 12 amendments, we had a whole lot more in committee."

The bells rang, Mr. Speaker, because the Liberal government was not going to let the bill go to committee, the bells rang because the Liberal government was not going to hear witnesses. Now they stand in this Chamber and admit to the nation that they have 12 amendments tonight and had a whole bunch more in committee. That, Mr. Speaker, is because witnesses were heard, because the government learned. It is a rotten bill, but it is better, and it is only better because the bells rang for two weeks.

Mr. Taylor: Right on.

Mr. Hawkes: I love to stand in this Chamber and point out that the parliamentary secretary has been admitting that those bells rang for a reason. The reason was so that knowledgeable Canadians could be heard, that legislation could be changed, and that it might be made a little bit better. He stood up there and he told us that all those things happened, that Canadians were heard, and that he is proud because the bill is going to be better. And the proof is in the order paper today: 12 amendments that we debate this evening and perhaps tomorrow, and then we go to vote on them. None of those amendments, Mr. Speaker, would have been available for Members of Parliament to vote on if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the House leader and the backbenchers of the Liberal Party had had their way and had rammed this bill through, without witnesses.

What are they so proud of? Do you know what we have here in this package of bills and in this one in particular? In the package we have all kinds of ways of taking money out of the pockets of the consumers and out of the corporations which employ people, the corporations that buy steel and trucks and so on. We take it all away from them and then we get to Bill C-104 and we give it back, not all of it but part of it.

Mr. Speaker, do we give it back to those who have earned it, who have the knowledge to use it rightly? Do we do that in this piece of legislation? No, we do not, Mr. Speaker, we give it back to whomever the minister of energy decides shall get it, whether they know anything, whether they earned it, whether they are going to use it wisely, whether it will add one drop of oil. No, those are not the criteria, Mr. Speaker. The criterion is that the minister of energy shall decide who gets it. Is that wise for Canadian consumers?

Just stop to think about it for a minute. In the city of Ottawa today we have a lot of grocery stores. Some of them do a good job, bringing into their stores the things that people want. They charge a reasonable amount so that they can keep their good employees, and they stay in business. Others do not do so well. They buy the wrong groceries, they put them on the wrong shelves, they do not display them well, people do not buy, and they go out of business. What does that system produce? It produces for us all a system of pretty good grocery stores, because if the manager is bad, he is going to fail; if the store is well run, it will succeed.

Do we apply that logic to the oil industry? No, we do not. We say, "If you are successful, if you find a lot of oil, we will take most of it away from you in the form of taxes." Then we add: "Are we going to give it back to you, because we know that you can do a good job of finding us more oil? No, we are not, we are going to give it back to whomever the minister of energy decides to give it back to." Do they have to have any experience in the oil and gas industry? No. Do they have to have ever drilled a well? No. That is not why they get some of this money back. Could you drill wherever you want, wherever your mind and your experience tells you you are going to find oil? The answer is no. You drill where the government tells you to drill. And you will get money for doing it if he decides you should get it. It has no relationship to experience, it has no relationship to where oil is likely to be.

We have seen some evidence of this. Where is he telling us in this legislation that most of the money is going to go? I will tell you. It will go to wherever it will cost the most. He is going to encourage everyone out there to drill in the most costly places, so that gasoline and oil to heat your house and drive your car will cost the largest amount possible. He will finance it by raising taxes. And somehow he has forgotten that for less cost you can produce gas and oil for people at a lower price. That was the system we had in this country until two years ago, but now the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) stands in the House and brags that his government is going to take money away from successful people and give it to an unknown bunch, but only if they drill in the most expensive places possible. If they find any natural gas or oil, it will cost consumers the maximum amount. It will cost them as much as possible. The government is doing everything it can in this legislation to raise the prices which must be paid to heat homes and drive cars. The parliamentary secretary has the gall to stand in this chamber and brag about that.

• (1930)

Let us think about what it would be like if the government took a little less and left all those companies—there were thousands—to make the individual decisions they had been making. Those companies were asking, "Should we drill here or should we drill over there?" Those companies made those decisions after 10 years, 20 years, 30 years or 40 years of experience, and they used their own money. They decided where they were most likely to find oil and gas, and the parliamentary secretary wants to replace that system with a system whereby a bureaucracy will decide where they should drill.

We were told in the committee that it will take 400 more civil servants to give money back. Who will pay for that? The senior citizens of Canada who are heating their homes will pay for those 400 more civil servants. The minister admitted that, and if his past projections are any indication of the future, that 400 will become 800 or 1,200, and their sole job in life will be to give money back. If we have to have 400, 800 or 1,200 to give it back, I suppose hidden behind are another 400 who had to take it away in the first place. Then, of course, we forget about the 1,200 or 2,400 who work in all the companies and who have to do the book work to decide how much is to be taken away. Then there is another group in each company which has to decide how much is coming back.

What have we done? If we have all those people employed in companies deciding how much is taken away and another group deciding how much is coming back, and if we have government employees who have to work to take it away and another group who have to work to give it back, what will happen to oil and gas prices? None of those people were necessary two years ago, but we are making them necessary. The people who will have to pay will be those people on fixed incomes, on pensions and on unemployment insurance. They are the people who will have to pay for this mess. We have done this to our system; now we tell companies where to drill, not because there is any oil there and not because it is the most likely place to find it but simply because the government wants the drilling to occur in some places rather than in others.

If a person has a summer cottage or a farm and he wants to drill to get some fresh water, will he just drill any old place, or will he seek a little help to find the best place to drill? It is expensive to drill a hole only to find out there is no water. That person will want to drill where he is likely to find water. The same is true in the case of oil. It is very expensive to drill a hole if no oil is found. A company will want to drill in the most likely place.

This legislation deserves the unanimous condemnation of all members of this House because it is based on the principle that big brother knows best where to drill. It is based on the principle that big brother has already decided that where companies will drill will be the most expensive places. Big brother has decided that the cost of gas and oil three years, four years and five years down the road will be incredibly high because big brother is forcing the industry to drill in those expensive places.

The parliamentary secretary stood in the House and said that the program is working because Canadian ownership is increasing. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he owns his own home. Does he own his own home, or does a mortgage company own his home? There is quite a difference between owning a home which is paid for and having a mortgaged home. Interest rates have doubled. People who thought they owned their homes suddenly found they did not own their homes when interest rates doubled, and they are going to lose their homes. The National Energy Program has encouraged Canadian companies to go out and borrow a lot of money to buy other companies. I will give one example. Dome is the biggest of Canadian-owned companies. A couple of years ago about half the money Dome was taking in was used to pay interest on money borrowed, but the other half was used for drilling, expansion, pipeline construction and development. As of about three weeks ago 90 per cent of the money which accrued to Dome was used to pay interest. Since that period two or three weeks ago interest rates have gone up, and the value of the Canadian dollar has gone down. The Canadian dollar closed today at 79.25 cents U.S. My suspicion is that that Canadian company does not have enough money coming in every day to pay for the money it borrowed. If it does not have enough money coming in every day to pay for the money it borrowed, it is bankrupt.

If the company goes bankrupt, who owns it? At first blush one might think it is a Canadian bank because Dome borrowed from a Canadian bank. However, we find that the Canadian bank borrowed from a foreign bank, and the real owner of Dome Petroleum is not Canadian. The ownership certificate says Canadian, but in reality when Dome borrows that much money, it is the people who lent Dome the money who own Dome, and those people are not Canadian. The parliamentary secretary would have us believe this program has produced more Canadian ownership. It has not. It has produced more Canadian borrowing.

Let us examine what borrowing does. If half the money Dome had was being used to build pipelines or drill wells in Canada, that half was being taxed. It was producing income. People were employed, and they paid income taxes. Cars were bought, and taxes were paid. However, when all the money Dome gets is used to pay interest and the ultimate borrower is a foreign bank, all the money consumers pay for oil and gas bought from Dome leaves the country and is not taxed because it is a business expense. No jobs are created, and no federal revenue is generated.

That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has done to this country. Billions and billions of dollars have left the country in this way. The truth is that in the marketplace stocks are down, down, down because they are worthless. The truth is that the value of the Canadian dollar is down, down, down because it is becoming worthless. The truth is that one and a quarter million Canadians are unemployed today because there are no jobs. There is no money to drill wells, to buy cars, to buy trucks, to buy steel or to buy pipe because hon. members opposite blindly follow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister is wrong. He has pride and pizzazz, but he is stupid. What he has done to this nation is a tragedy. Never in the history of this nation has there been a member of the cabinet who has done so much damage to the fabric of our country in such a short period of time. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is an absolute catastrophe. To vote for this legislation, in whole or in part, is to aid and abet a crime. It is a crime which approaches treason for what it has done to this country and what it will do in the future.

• (1940)

A few days ago the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) appeared at the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare. The topic was urea formaldehyde foam insulation, which the government had said was suitable for homes. It gave grants for its installation but later said that it was not healthy. Now people cannot sell their homes. For some the hope of retirement has been wiped out and others have lost their health. What was really disturbing was that when a group of those home owners came to ask the government for help the minister complained, saying the government had given them $60,000 to organize and therefore they had no right to criticize the government. So for $60,000 apparently we give up the freedom of speech!

That is what grants do, Mr. Speaker, they make people afraid to speak up. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is going to hand out grants to people in the oil industry, will they have the courage to tell Canadians what is right and what is wrong? Freedom of speech is for sale, apparently. That is one of the cardinal principles of this minister and of many ministers on the front bench—that they can buy silence.

Bill C-104 which we are discussing tonight gives money to oil companies and in this way the government hopes for increased silence from the industry. There is a threat in this. Once you take the paycheque from the government you had better not criticize, because it can quietly cut you off. The most recent example of this was the civil servant, Neil Fraser, who worked in the tax department. He wanted to speak publicly about the dangers he saw in Canadian society, but he drew a paycheque from the government so it fired him.

The government now wants the whole oil industry to take a paycheque in the belief that once it is on the payroll, it will not be so critical. I have lived all my life around people in the industry, Mr. Speaker, although I have never worked in it. They are a rugged bunch of individualists, well trained and with a lot of pride. They would be just as happy if this legislation were scrapped. But the minister and the parliamentary secretary do not understand that. People in the industry understand the danger to their freedom of speech and freedom of action which is inherent in the legislation. It tells people where to drill and when to drill. If they have any knowledge or experience they know that this legislation is one of the rotten elements in the whole package that will help drag everyone in the nation into increased dependency on foreign oil, a devalued dollar, higher inflation and increased unemployment. They feel as strongly about it in a negative sense as I do and I urge all members of the chamber to vote against it.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just spoke said he lived all his life around the industry. As I listened to him I thought that I lived all my life during the course of his speech, which went from urea formaldehyde to civil servants and finally back to the oil industry.

We are supposed to be speaking to the first amendment, but it looks as if we are speaking to the whole bill. I want to say to the parliamentary secretary that I would like to look more closely at his speech tomorrow in Hansard because he announced some changes that may be significant. I should like to deal with them when we get to the clauses in question. The parliamentary secretary spoke about Conservative hypocrisy in this case. Talk about the pot calling the kettle black when you consider that the government was forced to listen to Parliament and divide the bill! That is the problem the government has with the people—the people do not think that it is listening. This is not a democracy but an autocracy, a government run by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and very few others.

It was good for the government to be forced to divide the bill. I am not sure that it lost much in the long run as the bills will be through the House within a couple of days. In any case, the government did have to eat crow. That is why we supported the division of the bill. It reminds me of the line in Macbeth about the bell— " . . . it is a knell that summons thee to heaven or to hell". We are not sure whether the government will go to heaven or the other place yet. We will have to wait and see.

I want to say something about the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Talk about hypocrisy! The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) wrote to the minister telling him to divide the bill and he might do better with the PIP grants because the industry wanted them. But tonight that party claims it is bleeding for the old age pensioners who will have to pay for all this. That is too much, Mr. Speaker, after they have spoken for about 12 hours putting forward the line of the industry almost exclusively. A brief presented by the Consumers' Association of Canada had this to say:

> Bill C-104 and the philosophy behind it perpetuate the failed energy policies of the past—namely that future oil security can be brought through higher prices and subsidies for oil companies.

Last week the minister announced that $8.9 billion would be spent in PIP grants. That is a lot of money. It means that 80 cents of every dollar invested in exploration in Canada lands in the north and in the offshore will be borne by the taxpayers of Canada, and there will be another 13 cents in the dollar if it is a Canadian company paying taxes. That is 93 cents on every dollar, Mr. Speaker. It is no wonder that consumers feel they have a stake in this. The brief continues:

> What should be kept in mind is that for every $1.00 increase in the wellhead price of oil and an equivalent rise in the price of natural gas, the consumer will pay industry and government $18,000,000,000 in higher prices for existing reserves of oil and gas, because the established volume of hydrocarbon reserves the industry says now remain in the conventional producing areas total the equivalent of 18 billion barrels of oil. With price hikes in excess of $35.00 per barrel in prospect by 1986, in this zero sum game the financial burden on the consuming sector of the economy will likely become unbearable, amounting, as it will, to hundreds of billions of hard-earned dollars in extra payments to the petroleum industry and to governments. The stakes are immense. That is why we see full page newspaper advertisements and multimillion dollar television campaigns sponsored by the petroleum industry.

I say to the consumers of Canada—do not be fooled; you are being hosed. You will have to pay $8.9 billion in petroleum grants and pay more at the pumps. You are dealing with two parties who want to give this money away. This money comes out of the pockets of consumers, Mr. Speaker, and goes into the pocket of the government and the pockets of the oil companies. If companies want to explore, I have no objection; but why do we have to give them $8.9 billion in grants? We are going to introduce amendments to this bill in which we tried to give the consumers in Canada a break, and give native people a chance to participate in the administration of these grants. We try to make sure that the required Canadian content is real and substantial. Those are the kind of amendments we propose, and I reserve my right to speak on the amendments of the parliamentary secretary.

• (1950)

[Translation]

This bill will give the big oil companies a lot of money, eight billion, in fact almost nine billion dollars, to be taken out of the consumer's pockets and put into those of the oil companies. This is incredible, at a time when families are having trouble paying their oil, gas and hydro bills. This legislation is far too generous to the big oil companies.

[English]

Therefore we will be making some amendments to the bill.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the COR program and PIP grants, which are the substance of Bill C-104, are going to last maybe two years and then collapse. The reason for that was exemplified in the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He clearly gave one of the reasons these programs will not survive. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) turned loose those little beavers in his department to work on this thing, these people with brilliant academic credentials and no knowledge whatsoever of the oil industry, they produced this little gem as a way of Canadianizing. They were going to get at the cash flows of the big companies throught the PGRT and the NGGLT, these massive taxes, and recycle the money to Canadian-owned companies by way of PIP grants.

It was a great academic theory, the only problem is that the world is populated by more than just the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) raised the same questions in committee. These huge taxes have suddenly become the property of the government, and the grants are gifts from the people to the oil industry. They forget about the other part of the question and they say "What is going on? How can you give these billions of dollars to the oil industry when hospitals are closing and universities need money?" It is that kind of simple-minded reasoning which will dominate. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway quoted from the Toronto Star and reporters from that paper are going to repeat it ad nauseam. You can bet that anyone in this House with a cause will say "just a minute, you cannot say you do not have any money because you are giving these billions of dollars to the oil industry".

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Andre: You see, the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) forgets the other part of the equation. As socialists, of course, they believe first and foremost that all earned income belongs to the government. Anything left in the hands of the person who earned it represents a gift from the government to that person. Unfortunately that simple-minded approach is going to be adopted and accepted by others who will forget about the other part of the equation.

A second reason this program will die is that it is incredibly complex. The academics sat down and said we will have a grant system based on the degree of Canadian ownership. The more Canadian owned you are, the bigger the grant, and in that way we will be promoting Canadian ownership. That sounds marvellous on the back of an envelope but, as one of our representatives to the committee pointed out, consider a major trust company or insurance company. The majority owners are Scottish, and they in turn manage a pension fund whose major beneficiaries are Canadian, who in turn own stock in the company. Is the company Canadian? Is it British? Who knows? How do you trace the ownership? Well, the only way to keep track of it is to write regulations, so the beavers have been at work writing regulations. They have something like 60 pages of regulations and you have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to understand them. Mr. Speaker, when a member of a large firm of chartered accountants says that he and his partners have been examining the regulations and applications forms for some months—they are in Calgary and expect some of their customers will be interested—and they do not yet feel confident of their ability properly to advise clients on filling out these forms, what hope is there for the small Canadian-owned company which does not have on its staff the lawyers and accountants necessary?

The government has been holding seminars around the country on these programs and I have talked to several people who have attended them. I have yet to find a single person who came out of there and said anything but, "I haven't a clue about how we are going to be able to operate that thing". Remember, it is not just the person applying for the grant who has to be concerned about it. The business world is complex, shares are held in the hands of individuals, banks, stockbrokers, and trust and insurance companies. There is a myriad of ways in which capital stock is held, and there is a myriad of instruments. A lot of companies will have common stock "A", "B", "C", preferred "A", "B", and so on. Stocks can be preferred or deferred in this way and that way. Some have dividends, some do not. There are all kinds of different instruments, Mr. Speaker, held in all kinds of different ways. To find out what percentage of your shares are owned and controlled by Canadians represents an incredibly complex activity. Application forms have to be sent to trust companies and stockbrokers saying, "You have a bunch of our stock in your name that you are holding for another beneficiary. Can you tell us whether that beneficiary is Canadian?" The broker answers by saying, "The beneficiary for this stock is 107652 corporation limited." The address shown is usually a post office box or a lawyer's office. The next thing you have to do is to go to the registered headquarters of 107652 limited to find out who owns that company. You may find the shareholders of that company are 10769 corporation limited, and so on.

• (2000)

Mr. Waddell: It is amazing how complicated business is.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway says it is amazing how complicated business is. That is not what is amazing. What is amazing is how simple-minded some people can be about programs which they design on the back of envelopes.

This program does not have a hope of surviving that complexity. It is not in existence yet, but already there are in the order of some 400 civil servants trying to deal with it. Witnesses who have appeared before the committee have told us that the cost of administering this program within their companies will be in the order of a half a million dollars a year extra in non-productive, wasted administrative effort. That is for the companies with a vested interest. The banks have no vested interest in this program but they are going to have to deal with it. What is the incentive for them to deal with it? As a company, how are you going to get a bank, a trust company or a stockbroker to supply you with the information to fill out the forms? You will have to pay them somehow for that task. Who knows what those costs will be? What we do know is that the costs will be high. But we do know it is a totally wasted expenditure. It will not bring about one extra barrel of oil nor will it bring about one extra cubic foot of gas. It is a totally non-productive expenditure which will contribute to the continuing deterioration of productivity in this country.

It is a source of incredible frustration for me how little the government pays attention to its own policies. We have heard past Liberal governments say, this one did too—it is usually presidents of the treasury board who make the statements that they are committed to deregulation—that they are committed to reducing the paperwork burden and to cutting red tape. We are told the Liberal government recognizes that red tape and bureaucracy lead to excessive bureaucratic influence through regulations, etc., and this leads to a deterioration in productivity. That is the Liberal government's policy. It has been stated repeatedly. Indeed, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) set up an office called the Office for the Reduction of Paperwork Burden. What a fancy title. On the other hand, another government department, in this case the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, has guys sitting down designing the most incredible bureaucratic complex paperwork burden program that you can imagine. They are doing it without even a genuflection to what is supposed to be government policy.

This program will generate a lot of temporary jobs—because the program is going to collapse—for lawyers, accountants and paper shufflers. But none of this will contribute a barrel of oil or a cubic foot of gas. None of it will make us energy self-sufficient, but it will be good for the paper makers and for filing cabinet makers. There will be a ton of application forms and paper floating around from people who are trying to get information. It is the most complex program imaginable. How did it come about? A writer for Maclean's magazine was right. It was a minister who said, "Look, I have been a minister for a number of years and I have accomplished nothing. We are going to accomplish something now. Go out and design a program that will Canadianize the gas and oil industry." The minister turned loose all those bright young fellows with their Ph.D. degrees. They sat down in splendid isolation from the real world and they came up with this program.

One wonders how long it takes to learn something. In the energy pricing agreement of September, 1981, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the government was going to bring us export permits for Canadian-owned companies. In other words, the Canadian-owned companies would get first preference on the export of natural gas. What a marvellous theory. This was a marvellous theory to help Canadian companies. But a junior land man in the oil industry, fresh out of high school, could have told the minister and any one of his minions that was impossible. There is not a man alive or a team of lawyers alive who could tell you the nationality of a cubic foot of gas in less than about six months of continuous effort. It just is not possible. It is just so shockingly naive and stupid that you despair. You despair at that kind of naivete and stupidity that there is this continuing confidence that the government can do things right. The government cannot do it right. It has never been able to and it will not be able to do so in the future. This whole thing is going to collapse.

I understand the parliamentary secretary in his remarks muttered something about the ringing of the bells having been wasteful or something. I have gone over the history, but apparently there are modern attempts to distort history. But let us make things quite clear as to what happened with respect to the Energy Security Act and with regard to this program.

Last fall I approached the then parliamentary secretary to the minister of energy, mines and resources and said "Look, the junior oil companies are hurting badly and they need a shot in the arm. The only thing you have is this PIP and COR programs. Take that out of the energy security act and we will give it reasonably expeditious treatment, even though it is a dumb program and we don't like it, but if that is the way you are going to go, at least go that way. About 15 months ago I know of at least one company that approached the government and said "When is PIP going to come into force? We need it for our exploration program." The company was told that it would be out in May 1981. On the strength of that commitment by the government, it borrowed money, undertook an exploration program and, of course, was severely strapped.

• (2010)

The then parliamentary secretary said that he thought it was a reasonable suggestion and that he would talk to the minister. The minister returned and said that he would split it if we agreed to pass quickly the rest of the bill in one lump. I found that absurd. I had made an offer which I thought would be of assistance to the government, and the minister said that he would let us be of help if we would take the rest of the bill in one lump. It was similar to offering to sweep a neighbour's sidewalk, and he says, "Fine, you can sweep my sidewalk and my driveway as well". Obviously I said no.

Then I wrote a letter to the minister in December making the offer again. He wrote back in January and gave me a flat no. Then we know what happened in terms of the point of order I raised asking that the bill be declared inadmissible. Madam Speaker ruled that the bill could not be split, although I did not ask her to do that. Nonetheless, we were at the end of our tether and had no choice but to ring the bells until the bill was split.

What has happened as a result of the bill being split? We have had the opportunity to have committee hearings and to hear witnesses. I do not know how many witnesses there were, but it was in the order of 25 or 30 who would otherwise not have had an opportunity to present their views, had the energy security act gone through as was intended initially by the government. On Bill C-104 alone there were something like 15 amendments as a result of committee work. This would not have happened if we had not stuck to our guns and demanded that that atrocious piece of legislation be split before it was brought into the House of Commons.

As a result of sticking to our guns, Canadians had an opportunity to examine these bills closer, and on Bill C-104 there were some 15 changes, which means that some 15 mistakes would have gone through had the government had its way and brought in that one massive piece of legislation. We have not counted the total number of amendments to all bills, but a bunch of them were brought about as a result of our efforts to force the government to treat the House with a reasonable amount of respect.

When hon. members of the New Democratic Party say that we did a terrible thing by ringing the bells and forcing the government to break up the legislation, and when hon. members of the Liberal Party say that it was terrible for us to do these things, I say nonsense. It is one of the best things we have done in the last year, because it forced the bill to be broken up in a way that it could be handled by a committee of the House and because it resulted in amendments or improvements to the bill, albeit it is still a piece of trash.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 8.15 o'clock, pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motions at the report stage of Bill C-103.

* * *

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to order made earlier today, the division on Motion No. 1 also applies to Motions Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10 and 11.

Call in the members.

The House divided on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 187)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse	Fennell	Lewis
Andre	Forrestall	Lewycky
Anguish	Fretz	MacDonald (Miss)
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Friesen	Manly
Beatty	Fulton	Mayer
Benjamin	Gass	Mazankowski
Blackburn	Gilchrist	McCain
Blenkarn	Gurbin	McDermid
Bosley	Gustafson	McLean
Bradley	Halliday	McMillan
Broadbent	Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)	Miller
Carney (Miss)	Hargrave	Mitchell (Mrs.)
Clark (Yellowhead)	Hawkes	Murphy
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Heap	Murta
Cook	Hees	Neil
Cooper	Hnatyshyn	Nickerson
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Hovdebo	Nowlan
Crosby (Halifax West)	Howie	Oberle
Crouse	Huntington	Ogle
Dantzer	Jarvis	Orlikow
Darling	Jelinek	Paproski
Deans	Keeper	Parker
de Jong	Kempling	Patterson
Dick	Kilgour	Reid (St. Catharines)
Ellis	King	Riis
Epp	Kristiansen	Robinson (Burnaby)
	Kushner	Rose
	Lambert
	La Salle

Petroleum Administration Act

Messrs.

Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 1 lost.

The House divided on Motion No. 2 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 188)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 2 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 4 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 189)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 4 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 5 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 190)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel

Petroleum Administration Act

Messrs.

Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 5 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 6 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 191)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Lapointe (Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 6 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 9 (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 192)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid (St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson (Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Berger

Messrs.

Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle)
Campbell
(Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson
(Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 9 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 10 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 193)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark
(Yellowhead)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton
Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald
(Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle)
Campbell
(Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson
(Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 10 negatived.

The House divided on Motion No. 11 (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 194)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Anguish
Baker
(Nepean-Carleton)
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bradley
Broadbent
Carney (Miss)
Clark
(Yellowhead)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
de Jong
Dick
Ellis
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Fulton

Messrs.

Gass
Gilchrist
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hawkes
Heap
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Howie
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Kristiansen
Kushner
Lambert
La Salle
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald
(Miss)
Manly
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McDermid
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell
(Mrs.)
Murphy
Murta
Neil
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Ogle
Orlikow
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Reid
(St. Catharines)
Riis
Robinson
(Burnaby)
Rose
Sargeant
Schellenberger
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Thacker
Thomson
Towers
Waddell
Wilson
Wise
Young—99.

NAYS

Messrs.

Appolloni
(Mrs.)
Axworthy
Bachand
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet
(Mrs.)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bockstael
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Campbell
(Miss)
(South West Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle)
Campbell
(Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
Lapointe
(Beauce)
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Masters
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson
(Miss)
Olivier
Pelletier
Penner
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tobin
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Yanakis—121.

Madam Speaker: I declare Motion No. 11 negatived.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill as amended be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Madam Speaker: Motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—I do not care which you are—this bill illustrates the utter treachery of the government which temporarily is in office in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has the floor.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —I appreciate your attempts to still the braying of the asses in the government ranks. They appear now to be somewhat still.

This bill is the bill which incorporates and puts into legislation the nefarious treachery of the government opposite with respect to oil and energy prices in this country. This is the bill that permits the government to raise the prices of oil and gas in this country, as the government has done 16 times since February of 1980.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: Twelve of those increases have been increases in federal taxes on oil and gas and all the products made from a barrel of oil. The increases total not 18 cents, not 20 cents, not 24 cents, not 9 cents, not 38 cents, not 40 cents, not 42 cents, but 62 cents a gallon. The government has raised the prices and taxes paid by the people of Canada by that much not only on gasoline and diesel fuel but also on heating oil and every product made from crude oil. But, Madam Speaker—Mr. Speaker; sometimes I get confused—

Mr. Cousineau: Sometimes?

Mr. Crosbie: —about who is the chair. I will not deal tonight with the sins of this government in the field of energy pricing. I will deal with its attempt to wreck the confederation of our country and to oppress the people of Newfoundland and Labrador with its attitude toward the question of offshore mineral resources. I intend to deal with the conduct of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien)—who has so disgraced himself as the head of the system of justice of this country in this House in the last several weeks—in this connection. I will show how the minister attempted to misrepresent certain facts to the people in this House. I do not want to be interrupted, so I will not say whether it was intentional or not intentional. I will also expand on how the minister attempted to mislead the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with reference to the precedents in this matter and how the government leader in the Senate attempted to mislead the Senators in the other House. Those innocents are not used to being misled, but the leader of the government in the Senate did the same thing.

If I can have a little silence from hon. gentlemen opposite, if the wind will stop blowing through their heads and out their mouths—they have a lot of empty spaces in their craniums—and if they will listen, I will show them how the province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the province of Nova Scotia, the province of Prince Edward Island, the province of New Brunswick, the province of British Columbia and all provinces which have shores and shelves lying off their shores have been betrayed by this government.

I want first to deal with my own province, Newfoundland. If Newfoundland and Labrador had not entered confederation on March 31, 1949, there would be no question as to who owns the oil and gas which has now been discovered on the continental shelf off Newfoundland, the Hibernia field. It would clearly belong to Newfoundland under international law. There would be no question about who had control over the continental shelf and the 200-mile economic zone with respect to fisheries, because 66.66 per cent of the whole east coast, the continental shelf area, was brought into confederation by the Province of Newfoundland. That is the province that for 400 years had to struggle to exist and that today is still not economically self-sufficient. It brought all those resources when it joined confederation.

• (2110)

There is not one word in the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada that says the Province of Newfoundland should surrender its resources onshore or offshore to the Government of Canada. That was 1949 and not too much was known about the offshore resources in those days. A lot more is known today.

For 23 years after confederation there was a Liberal government in Newfoundland; a government that did not care whether Newfoundland ever became self-sufficient. It was satisfied just to be the trained seal in Newfoundland and then, if the Newfoundlanders voted the Liberal way they could come to Ottawa and the government would reward them with the largesse collected from all the people of Canada. That is if we were subservient and dipped our hats to them and were properly polite and swallowed our pride, they would see that we did not starve. That was the attitude of that provincial government in Newfoundland led by the first premier, Mr. Smallwood. It did not care about the offshore. It did now know about the offshore until 1960.

If that Liberal government had thought it had any title to the offshore, it could have been dangerous. It delivered all the rights to the offshore to Mr. John C. Doyle who, as we have seen in recent months, is being investigated by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. He was given the rights to huge areas of the offshore by his friend Mr. Smallwood. The rest of the offshore was given to Mr. John Shaheen, late of the Come By Chance oil refinery who is now in some difficulty in the United States. In other words, two adventurers, two plunderers, two buccaneers, two close associates of the then premier of Newfoundland were given the rights to most of the offshore.

In 1972 a new government took office in Newfoundland under Premier Frank Moores, of which I am proud to have been a member. It appointed a young, intelligent, idealistic Newfoundland lawyer to head the Department of Mines and Energy in the person of Leo Barry, now a member of the Newfoundland House of Assembly. Within 12 months he had the situation under control and had cancelled all the permits given to Shaheen and Doyle and the political plunderers associated with the Liberal Party of Newfoundland.

The position taken by that first Liberal government of Newfoundland which agreed with the Government of Canada that it would be delighted to have 50 per cent of the revenues from the offshore, if there were any, went out the window. The new, Conservative government of Newfoundland decided that the resources were to be developed for the people of Newfoundland and that it would put forward a case for the Province of Newfoundland and let the chips fall where they may. If Newfoundland had any future, it could only come from the wealth that would be generated in the oil and gas it felt sure was off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador.

We immediately repudiated the negotiations that had gone on between the Atlantic provinces and Newfoundland and the Liberal governments of Canada. We said that we were not going to surrender our one chance for economic self-sufficiency. Never. For 400 years tens of thousands of Newfoundlanders had to leave their homes and go abroad to work. They used to go to Boston, New York, all through the United States and all over the world. Now they are going all through Canada looking for work. We said that we aim for the time when the man or woman born in Newfoundland will be able to stay and work in Newfoundland if they want to—and their children and their children's children. This is their only hope.

From 1972 forward that was the theme, the raison d'être of the Newfoundland government—that and the development of the hydro resources in Labrador. We have been thwarted in the development of those hydro resources in Labrador but I will not go into that tonight. For reasons known to people who have been associated with the Liberal Party of Quebec and successive governments in Quebec, we have not been able to develop our hydro resources in Labrador.

When Mr. Smallwood was premier, in one of the most unseeing and saddest contracts ever entered into by a sovereign state, he gave away the hydro's resources of the Upper Churchill Falls to the Province of Quebec for 65 years. The conditions of that contract mean that the company that operates the Upper Churchill would be bankrupt in another five or six years in any event because it will not be able to keep up with the inflation which set in in the last ten or 15 years. But I will set that aside for tonight, Mr. Speaker, as I want to concentrate on the offshore minerals problem.

The government prepared its case. Let me explain to the House that the case will not depend on the question of legal ownership. If any court in the land makes a pronouncement on who technically, legally owns those resources, that is not going to settle the issue. If the Supreme Court of Canada, because it wants to follow the decision it made with respect to British Columbia around 1967 and decides that it does not want to trouble the waters and cannot afford not to be uniform one coast with another—if it decides on technical and legal grounds that the Government of Canada owns the resources, it should not be thought that this will settle the issue. The only thing that will settle the issue is a political arrangement that is satisfactory to the people who brought those resources into confederation. Nothing else, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The federal bully boys, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) do not need to worry. The Supreme Court of Canada is not going to save their bacon. The only thing that can do that is an agreement that is satisfactory and in the spirit of confederation—an agreement that meets the test of a federal state. The test is that in a federal state of Canada, in our confederation, resources are owned and controlled by the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The federal government has huge powers. We know that and we saw them exercised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Gentlemen, just listen. Relax and learn. The federal government has gigantic powers. It could fight Alberta to a standstill. It has powers of direct and indirect taxation; it has the powers of interprovincial trade; it has the powers of international trade—it has all kinds of muscle. We know that it would be a standoff and that the federal government could win, no matter who owns the resources. Nevertheless, it is very important for a province that it own the resources because then it can control the rate of development.

I will tell you something, Mr. Speaker. In Newfoundland we are never going to be a milch cow, milked dry because the federal government wants all our oil and gas in the next 20 years. Because it failed with the tar sands, it failed with Alsands, it failed with Cold Lake, it failed in the Beaufort Sea, it is not coming down to Newfoundland to haul out our oil and gas and minerals to make up for failures elsewhere!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Those resources have to be developed first for the good of the people who live in the surrounding area and who for 400 years have had to leave their homeland to get work. First, it has to mean something for them. First, it has to mean that the oil and gas industry is established in Newfoundland. First, it has to mean that our people are trained for the jobs, and the development must not be too fevered. It must not wreck urban development in Newfoundland. It must not wreck the services that had to be provided in Newfoundland for the development of the oil and gas. That is the first requirement. We are not going to allow it to be hauled out in the next ten or 15 years because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been bankrupt in his policy and now desperately wants to find oil and gas in Newfoundland and Labrador.

That brings us up to the time that the Progressive Conservative government came into power in June 1979. Until then the Liberal Government of Canada had refused to consider any kind of decent, meaningful agreement with the province. It said it owned the resources, was going to control them but this party and its leader who is sitting here tonight, the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), adopted a policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (2120)

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know what is so funny about that, gentlemen. They are not laughing over on these front benches when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asks them a question or two. They cringe.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We saw today, Mr. Speaker, the spectacle of the Minister of Finance, feckless, fearsome, frivolous, not knowing where to turn, frigid, frozen and frumpy, coming back from Versailles. It is a wonder he did not meet in the railway car over there in Versailles so he could surrender to Ronnie Reagan in decent obscurity. He could not answer a question; he was completely inconsistent. On one hand he is going to enlarge the deficit, he is going to be expansionary. On the other hand he reads the communique as though he were the author. He had nothing more to do with it than the president of Lithuania, Latvia or Switzerland. They are going to regulate the deficits tightly and keep them down. Did you ever see a man so inconsistent, so desperate, so pleading, looking so bewildered? All the vim and vigour has gone out of the cunning little trimmer. Now that he is faced with the responsibility, he does not know where to turn. He is going from one end of the griddle to the other and he has nowhere to turn.

To come back to where I was on the offshore, our party, led by the right hon. member for Yellowhead, adopted this policy; our party does not care who owns, in a technical sense, the offshore resources. We care not a whit. If the court says the Government of Canada owns them, we will say fine, that is great and we will get on with solving the problem, because, as the then Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wrote the Premiers of Canada in September, 1979, we take the position that it is in the spirit of confederation and of a federal state that the provinces should have the ownership and management of those resources in any event, just as Saskatchewan has the resources under its soil, just as Alberta, and Ontario do, so should Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and British Columbia have the resources under their soil and under the saltwater off their shores. That is our position, and when we return to power we do not care what that group of bully-boys opposite do with a Supreme Court of Canada decision, if there is one in their favour. We are going to say to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, P.E.I., New Burnswick, British Columbia and Manitoba, and the others who have an offshore: gentlemen, we are proposing legislation and constitutional changes which will put you in the same position in which Canada put Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba during the 1920s. Canada owned the oil and gas and other resources under the soil of those provinces for technical and legal reasons, because it was part of Prince Rupert's Land or the Hudson's Bay Company or whatever. The federal government of the day owned those resources, but it saw that in a federation all provinces had to be treated the same and therefore it saw that the title was transferred to those three provinces. We are going to do the exact same thing with Newfoundland, Labrador, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Even though we have to pull New Brunswick kicking and screaming to the table to accept it, we are still going to do it. British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec, they will all be recognized as owners of the resources that lie off their shore because we think that is the federal system in Canada and we are not there to take advantage. We do not say, Mr. Speaker, that we believe in overcoming regional disparity and then, when a province has a chance to stand on its own two feet, make sure that its feet are taken out from underneath it and it does not even have the resources to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hallmark of this government is hypocrisy from end to end. From their foreign policy to their domestic policy, say one thing and do the opposite. Say to Newfoundland: yes, you are the second poorest province in Canada. I think the only one a little bit poorer than us is Prince Edward Island. They are not much under us, and we are fighting to be at the bottom. I remember, when Stuart Smith went around Ontario saying that Ontario was number ten, the deep spirit of resentment we felt in Newfoundland. Ontario was even going to claim to be number ten now. Well, the people of Ontario showed what they thought about old number ten, and he is now up in the Science Council of Canada, number $100,000 a year.

An hon. Member: You want $100,000 a year?

Mr. Crosbie: I don't want any $100,000 a year from any Science Council of Canada, brother. All I want is a decent cabinet minister's salary and the chance to get this country back on the track again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we believe that no matter what happens in the next couple of years, we make the solemn commitment to Newfoundland and the other offshore provinces that no matter what the blackguards in this government do, no matter what the power grabbers do, no matter what the people who have declared war on the poorest of the Canadian provinces do, no matter what the Prime Minister, who says co-operative federalism is at an end, does, the man who wants to wage war in Canada but outside of Canada loves everyone, he is the soul of love for the governments of Russia and Poland, a man whose heart opens for all the east bloc countries, it does not matter what he does. It is only his fellow Canadians he gives the mailed fist to, as we discovered in Canada. We say to them: do your worst because we are going to reverse it. If you have a chance to do it, we are going to see that this confederation stands and that all of its parts have a fair deal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is because we have a leader who understands how this country operates. Oh, he is not a great theoretician like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who wrote all those fine essays years ago, all those very fine academic exercises which showed us how he was going to lead us to the East European socialist economy which he is now carrying on. No, our leader understands that this is a federation and a community of communities. Of course, all the intellectuals in the media—and God knows we have a lot of them, particularly the national columnists—do not think much of that community of communities idea. They have some other great theory that what is good for central Canada is good for Canada. That is their theory. What is good for General Bullmoose is good for the country. What is good for Windsor is good for the country. Why, the minister in charge of overcoming regional disparity is from Windsor. As I said here in the House the other day, it is the equivalent of the Red Cross appointing Dracula as the blood transfusion supervisor. All he is interested in doing is stopping the Japanese cars coming into Vancouver by putting the customs men on them. That is the answer of our minister responsible for international trade. Here is a country more dependent on international trade than any other, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-three per cent of our GNP comes from international trade. Seventy per cent of our exports go to the U.S. and roughly 70 per cent of our imports come from there. They are big muscle men; they do not care about that. Why, they are going to tell Uncle Sam what to do with his deficit. They do not know what to do with their own but they are going to tell Brother Reagan what he should do with his, which is much lower than ours proportionately. Why, they are going to tell the Japanese what to do with their cars when we already have a trade surplus with Japan of over $1 billion a year. These big bold buckoes are going to tell the Japanese to take their cars and stick them up their customs sheds.

What is to happen to us if the Japanese then say they are not going to take our minerals and our lumber? What is going to happen to us if down on the west coast of the United States next week all those lumber people who have been protesting suddenly start telling the American customs people to start examining every little knot in every little board coming from British Columbia and the rest of Canada into the United States? What about that? What will we hear from the government then? We will hear nothing because they are little knots, little remnants, and a little selfish block which comes from the central part of Canada and can think of nothing but the needs and requirements of the central part of Canada. But to go on with my tale—and I understand, Mr. Speaker, please correct me if I am wrong, but I have a lot to go through, and I believe I have unlimited time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My record is 18 hours in the Newfoundland House of assembly, but I think I have more material here tonight. To go on with my tale, Mr. Speaker, that was the position of our government which our Prime Minister outlined in writing to the Premiers in September, 1979. It would have been put into effect but of course, as everyone knows, we were stopped by the combined forces of the NDP on my left and the Liberal government facing us across the aisle. They defeated us, they stopped us. As I like to say in my speeches, it was seven months. We had time enough to conceive but not to deliver. The Canadian people are the ones suffering because we were stopped at the conception stage and could not deliver. Listen to the bleating, the blurting and the braying from the little red rump on my left. They do not like to be associated with the Liberals because now they see them as disastrous losers. If they are going down, they will take the NDP with them. They will both go because we are the only viable alternative.

• (2130)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: To come back to the offshore, Mr. Speaker, we were defeated and, all right, we accept that. We are doing our best as an opposition today. We are doing well as an opposition. But we are going to do far better for the people of Canada when we are the government. We will bring this country from the depths of despair in which it now lurks and lingers. We will bring Canada back up again. We will give Canadians confidence. We will get the gross national product growing again. We will have more to distribute to the people. We will welcome the investor. We will welcome the foreign investor and we will welcome the domestic investor. We will put it all together and we will get this country moving again. That is what we are going to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The little soothsayers to my left, the half dozen who will be left to whittle away with their frivolous froth, and their leader who is like a galloping Uriah Heep who goes across this country rubbing his hands, who is so concerned about the unemployed. He is so concerned about inflation. He is so concerned about productivity and he is so concerned about the diminution in real wages. But why is he so concerned about these things? He is the gentleman who put the government in power, the government that has provided all of this for the Canadian people. He is going across the country pretending—

Mr. Riis: What have you got against the voters?

Mr. Crosbie: Just listen to them, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing against the voters. I love them because in the next election they will wreak their vengeance on all of you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kristiansen: What about a vote on the Newfie corridor?

Mr. Crosbie: Listen to the noise. I hear the hon. member say he wants to vote on the Newfie corridor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Newfies would give him some corridor. He would go through faster than 100,000 volts if he comes to Newfoundland.

Let us come back to the offshore. In 1980 there was a disaster for Canada. We lost the election. A majority of the Canadian people did not realize it then, but believe you me, Mr. Speaker, they realize it now. They know how they have been codded and how they have been betrayed. They know how they have been doomed to despair by the Liberals. They know now that Liberal times are hard times. They have learned that. What happened with the offshore question after 1980? Eventually the Prime Minister got around to it. First, he took on Alberta and Saskatchewan. He took on the country with his famous constitutional crusade. He was going to change the whole Constitution of Canada without the consent of the provinces. But our leader here fought him to a standstill with the other eight provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister battled for a year on the Constitution. He did not worry about the economy. He is not worrying about it now. He is visiting Spain to welcome Spain into NATO. Imagine, this is the Prime Minister who practically took Canada out of NATO, who has no use at all for our armed services, who does not care a fig for our defences, who wants us defenceless, who is now visiting Spain welcoming that country into NATO. That is some welcome. It is like the spider saying to the fly, "Come into my web and visit me" having our Prime Minister welcoming Spain into NATO.

Mr. Kristiansen: He is like an ex-Liberal becoming a Tory.

Mr. Crosbie: Listen to the bleating of that, Mr. Speaker. He said an ex-Liberal becoming a Tory. I am an ex-Liberal and I was never more pleased than when I became a Tory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I would never make the mistake of becoming a New Democratic Party member, believe me. Never would I do that. No, Sir. I was born again in 1971 and I am never going back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That brings me to 1981, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister of this country went to Newfoundland on a very quick visit. He never lasts longer than five or six hours in Newfoundland. I do not know what the reason is for that.

An hon. Member: I wonder why.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. Liberal gentlemen opposite are very mannerly. They are listening. But constantly I have this bleating and braying on my left. I want to tell the listening audience that when it hears a loud ignorant shout, a bellowing, a bawling, a shouting, a howling and a screeching, it is coming from the New Democratic Party to my left. Do not blame Liberals who are here tonight. The ignorance is coming from my left. Just remember that and mark it down. Members of the NDP do not want to hear anyone else speak. They only want to hear themselves speak. Those are the people who are so protective of the judiciary. Why? Because they want to protect Mr. Justice Berger. One wonders why. What has Mr. Justice Berger got in common with the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Waddell: Come on now, cut the cheek.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am not going to mention why they are so solicitous of Mr. Justice Berger.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I fail to see the relationship between the current discussion and the bill before us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am a constituent of yours, Mr. Speaker. Remember that when you admonish me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Nevertheless, I always find your advice sound and I will follow it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Let me get back to the offshore. In 1981 the Prime Minister of Canada came to Newfoundland. He spoke at a Liberal fund-raising dinner. Why else would he come to Newfoundland? There is only one reason why he goes to most provinces and that is when they are having the occasional fund-raising dinners. At fund-raising dinners they get a lot of people who would like to be judges, a lot of people who would like to be chairman of the CN, a lot of people who would like to be directors of Air Canada, a lot of people who would like to be citizenship court judges; a lot of people who would like to be garbage collectors in the House of Commons and all of those little positions that have to be filled. On this occasion the Prime Minister came to Newfoundland and as usual those who want to sit there with their hands out waiting for something to drop into them from the great Liberal gods were there. It was a motley crowd, the remnants of Liberals in Newfoundland. About 125 of them were there, most of them just released from somewhere.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister made a statement about the offshore. He said he wanted to negotiate a fair settlement with the province of Newfoundland. He did not want this thing going on. I will now quote from a letter sent to Mr. Stephen Neary of the Newfoundland House of Assembly. Mr. Neary is now the opposition leader for the Liberal Party of Newfoundland. He wrote to the Prime Minister on March 26, 1981. The Prime Minister replied on July 6, 1981. The Prime Minister had to check out his credentials. He had not heard of this fellow Neary before. It just so happened that Mr. Neary has twins. They were born around the time of the Liberal leadership convention that elected Mr. Trudeau as the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada. He called one of them Pierre and the other one Justin. I am not going to say whether or not he has regretted it ever since. Several weeks ago in the House of Assembly he said that he would not trust the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of Canada as far as he could throw him. That is the high regard in which the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is held in Newfoundland. He is anathema even to the Liberal Party of Newfoundland. They are slavish devotees of the federal government of Canada and the Liberal Party, but even they have taken so much that they are now saying they would not trust the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, their Liberal colleague here in Ottawa, as far as they could throw him.

They do not trust the Minister of Justice as far as they could lift him because he came to Newfoundland two weeks ago to announce the betrayal of the whole negotiation process. That gentleman was so short of manners that he had his lunch with the defeated Liberal leader of Newfoundland to tell him about what he was going to propose and announce that day at two thirty before he met or told the Government of Newfoundland why he was in Newfoundland. That is the calibre of this Minister of Justice, the fount of the justice system in Canada. That is the kind of tactic we can expect from that gentleman and the others in the front rank of this House. They do not even invite members of their own districts down when they are having some function in the district. Well, we do not care about that. We will win our seats. We do not need to be there for paltry functions when pallid, Liberal hierarchs from Ottawa are down there opening their little parks, opening their little stamp collections, or whatever they are down there for. We do not need that because we will chase them right off our island and right off our territory of Newfoundland and Labrador when the next election comes. Anyway, this is the calibre with which we are dealing.

• (2140)

They had dinner with the defeated leader of the opposition who came out of the dinner and announced at 2.15, before the minister made his great announcement at 2.30, that the Liberal Party of Newfoundland in no way, shape or form would support the chicanery of referring to the Supreme Court of Canada a matter already under adjudication in the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. Never will we forgive the insult to our courts and to our judicial system in which the Minister of Justice and this government has indulged; never, never.

I was kidding about Mr. Justice Berger. I will never forgive him for his cheap and contemptible comments about Mr. Justice Berger or the whole process that that honourable gentleman has been fooling around with.

Let me get back to this. On March 26, 1981, Mr. Neary wrote the Prime Minister a letter about the offshore. On July 6, 1981, the Prime Minister replied:

> Briefly, this offer was as follows:
>
> (i) The question of jurisdiction and ownership should be set aside.

It was the Prime Minister of Canada who said that. He has been pretending for the last month that it was the Government of Newfoundland which was insisting on that, and that the Government of Canada never agreed to set aside the question of ownership. He continued:

> (ii) Coastal provinces should derive maximum benefits from offshore resources. Accordingly, a system of administrative arrangements involving both the federal government and each coastal province was proposed.
>
> (iii) A coastal province should receive the same kinds of revenues as are derived by provinces from onshore resources until it becomes a "have" province. After that point, it would have to share an increasing portion of these revenues with the rest of Canadians.

That was the basis upon which he said they were prepared to negotiate. Well, members of the Government of Newfoundland agreed to negotiate on that basis. They said that they wanted the question of ownership and control set aside while the negotiations went ahead, and that if a successful agreement was reached, they wanted it set aside for the life of the agreement. That in effect was what the Prime Minister had said in his communications in 1981. They said that they wanted and agreed to a joint system of management and control of the offshore, but that they would not agree that the Government of Canada should have absolute control over the offshore.

I will skip ahead a little to deal with this document here. The framework for agreement was presented by members of the Government of Newfoundland on November 12, 1981. They were seriously negotiating when they presented that document to the federal government. There were meetings and negotiations, and then on January 25, 1982, Newfoundland presented a proposal for settlement at Montreal to the federal negotiator which set out, in my opinion, a very fair arrangement for the offshore. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that they have not had a reply from the Government of Canada with respect to that proposal? Never have they had a reply from the deceivers, the deceitful, the twisters and the bullies on the other side of this House. They have never received a reply to that proposal. I will give the substance of that proposal in a few minutes.

There was a case in the Federal Court of Canada taken by the SIU, represented by a Montreal lawyer who also represents many Liberal cabinet ministers in the Government of Canada, Mr. Nuss. They wanted to get certified on offshore vessels and offshore rigs off Newfoundland. They went to the Newfoundland Labour Relations Board. They had problems. They did not like the decision which the Newfoundland Labour Relations Board gave. They then argued that it was federal jurisdiction. They applied to the Canada Labour Relations Board. They turned them down and said that it was not within their jurisdiction. They started to appeal through the federal courts. By the way, it was a case against Crosbie Offshore Limited, controlled and owned by my brother. Unfortunately I have no interest in it. I am just a poor, penniless politician.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am just a poor boy from Newfoundland trying to make his way. I have no interest in that firm, but it was the other side involved in that particular case.

Mr. Smith: We will hold a tag day for you, John.

Mr. Crosbie: That is very good of you. In your district I could probably even make $10 or $12.

The federal Government of Canada intervened in that case, as it was entitled to do, because the SIU raised the constitutional issue of who owned the offshore resources. The provincial government intervened, and other governments across Canada had the right. The Newfoundland government argued that the constitutional issue should not be discussed or argued in this case because the immediate issues were other than constitutional. It did not need to be considered to decide that particular dispute. But the federal government, stabbing Newfoundland in the back and betraying the agreement they had entered into about the question of legal ownership, went to the Federal Court of Canada and argued to the learned judges that the constitutional question should be considered and dealt with. That is what they did in January or February 1982. They argued, they betrayed Newfoundland. They did not go there and argue against it being dealt with; they argued that it should be dealt with. Mr. Smith of the Department of Justice argued the constitutional position and put in all of their arguments there. The Newfoundland government refused to go any further in the case.

On March 5, the Federal Court of Canada decided the SIU case and said it did not need to consider or decide the constitutional issue. But on February 12 the Newfoundland government decided to refer the whole question of ownership of the offshore to the Newfoundland Supreme Court of Appeal on a reference, as it had the power to do with its own highest court in Newfoundland. It decided to do that because it was not going to have the constitutional issue decided by a federal court, without the highest court of Newfoundland having a chance first to deal with the matter and give its opinion. That was the very reason. They were forced to make their reference to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland on February 12 because of the federal government's attempt to introduce and to have this issue decided for the first time by a federal court. That is why that reference was made and negotiations were broken off.

An election was held. Let me remind the House that on April 6 of this year the people of Newfoundland, in a most overwhelming manner in a single-issue election, decimated the Liberal Party in Newfoundland. Over 61 per cent voted for the Progressive Conservative Party. I was there and campaigned for eight days. I can tell the House that there was one issue and one issue only—colonialism. Will Newfoundland ever be put in a position to get on its own feet, or will the Liberal Party of Canada keep it down forever so that our hands have to be put out, looking for alms from central Canada and from the central Government of Canada? That was the single issue of that election. The people of Newfoundland decided that issue then, that they are going for the future. They are not going for the present day hand-out. They are going to fight it all the way. They are never going to risk what they have and should have in offshore resources with which they came into confederation. That was the political issue which was settled on April 6. That government will be there when this government is long gone, gone in a dim memory, gone so that the people of Canada will forget them very quickly. They are going to want to forget them quickly because never has a government deserved to be more quickly forgotten than this bunch of feeble-hearted people. They have led us into economic disaster and made a bad situation worse, as we have seen for the last two and a half years in this House. That is the reference to February 12.

On March 5 a telex was sent to the Newfoundland minister of justice from the federal Minister of Justice. I have a copy of that telex right here. He telexed the Minister of Justice of Newfoundland to ask him if he would agree to have a reference on the issues in dispute on the offshore made to the Supreme Court of Canada. That is what he did.

• (2150)

Incidentally, I am getting a little ahead of my narrative because on March 2, an agreement was entered into with Nova Scotia. The federal government entered into an agreement with Nova Scotia on offshore oil and gas. I have it here, it is March 2, 1982. Nova Scotia is well within its rights to accept what it wants from Canada. It is not in the same position as Newfoundland. It did not join confederation in 1949. It has not got a Hibernia or a Hebron and they do not have a two-billion barrel oil field that we know is out there. Nova Scotia has its own background and it entered into an agreement that gives the federal Government of Canada control over the offshore. There is no question about that. There is provision for a decision-making board which is made up of three members who are appointed by the Canadian government and two members appointed by Nova Scotia. The chairman of the board is the administrator of the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration and is federally appointed.

The minister can override any of the decisions made by that board. Imagine allowing this Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to override the decisions of its board controlling the offshore. That is a fate worse than death.

In addition, COGLA would administer the offshore oil and gas activities. As well, the wellhead price of offshore oil and gas will be set by the federal government after consultation with the Government of Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia government is only to be consulted. The federal government sets the price and everything else.

Of course, this agreement states that if any other province gets any better deal, then Nova Scotia is allowed to put aside the agreement and have that better deal as well. So, Nova Scotia is riding along on the back of the government of Newfoundland who will fight the battle to the end. That is up to them but they agreed to it on March 2.

Do you know what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did? The great conciliator and negotiator, the great statesman, the man who Canada has to thank for wrecking the oil and gas industry, which was one of Canada's most vibrant and prosperous industries up to two and a half years ago when he came to power, proposed that Newfoundland accept the same kind of agreement. But, he said, if Newfoundland did not accept a similar agreement and tried to assert its valid legal claim through the courts, we would not get as favourable a deal as Nova Scotia did, if the federal government won. He thinks he will terrorize and bully Newfoundlanders because our income is the smallest in Canada per capita; because we are at the mercy of fortune; because we have the highest unemployment in Canada; because we are remote from central Canada; because we are not powerful in the national scene. The minister thought he could bully the people of Newfoundland and that they would quake and the government would shiver when he says to them, "You sign a deal now similar to Nova Scotia or, if you give us trouble and go to the courts, we will not give you as favourable a deal if we win."

Has Canada ever seen such statesman-like behaviour by a minister of the federal Crown? Is it any wonder that negotiations are in a shambles and at an end? Can anyone put up or tolerate behaviour like that in a democratic society? I will tell you who is not tolerating it. We Newfoundlanders are not tolerating it. We will not be bullied by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We will not be bullied by the Prime Minister. We will not be bullied by the whole government. We do not give a continental damn for any of you. We do not care for your threats.

When the Peckford administration won the Newfoundland election on April 6, what did the bully-boy come up with then? There was a tirade of abuse from the bully-boy. Why, you would think he had the guillotine in his backyard for what he was going to do to the Newfoundland government if it got the idea that, just because there was a foolish election which gave it an overwhelming 61 per cent of the vote, it would matter to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, it had another think coming. That is what he told us, Newfoundlanders, that conciliator, statesman and follower of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he has another think coming. He had better be moved from that portfolio if there is to be any settlement of this issue.

Let me move on to March 5. On that date the Minister of Justice sent a telex. I have it here, if you will be patient for a moment. If you are not patient with me for a moment I must ask you to be patient with me for a couple of moments, and if you are not patient for a couple of moments I will ask you to be patient for a couple of minutes more.

This is a telex which was sent back by Mr. Ottenheimer to the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice had telexed Mr. Ottenheimer, the Attorney General of Newfoundland, requesting agreement that the offshore matter be referred directly to the Supreme Court of Canada without being considered by the Newfoundland court of appeal. The correct date of that telex is March 4.

The Minister of Justice of Newfoundland wired back rejecting any such suggestion absolutely. I will not read the whole telegram but he made a number of statements counteracting the falsehoods contained in the telex of the Minister of Justice. He indicated in his telex that if there is any urgency, it can be addressed by resuming negotiations on the basis that they were originally commenced under. He indicated that they are still ready to go ahead to negotiate. He went on to state:

> The Government of Newfoundland is of the firm conviction that the people of Newfoundland and Labrador have the right to a decision by the highest court in the province on a matter so vital to the future of this province.
>
> Furthermore, the Government is of the opinion that the Supreme Court of Canada should have the benefit of the judgement of the appeal division of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland before it renders its decision.

In other words, the province of Newfoundland, when asked for its consent on a matter which it referred to its highest court, said categorically no, that we want the decision first. The people of Newfoundland want the decision first from their own highest court and then let the Supreme Court of Canada proceed. That was the reply on March 5. The government of this land then took unprecedented action and ignored the wishes of the province to refer this matter—which is life and death for that province—to its highest court and referred it to the Supreme Court of Canada on Wednesday, May 19. It tried a scurvy trick by saying, "We are only referring the land that is around the Hibernia well." Even there, the government was dishonest. The Prime Minister's statement was dishonest. The Minister of Justice was dishonest. The Prime Minister told a falsehood and the Minister of Justice told a falsehood. He said that they were only referring the area of the Hibernia oil field to the Supreme Court of Canada. That is not true. I believe they referred 825 acres. The government referred the area of the Hibernia oil field, the Hebron oil field, half the area of the Terra Nova oil field and half the area of two other oil fields. That is what they referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. It cannot even be honest and truthful in the release it made about referring that matter to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is just a cheap, scurvy trick, in any event, to try to convince people that the two issues are not the same.

I have not much time left tonight, Mr. Speaker, but I will have lots of time tomorrow and the day after and the day after that as I warm up to my topic.

The government then gave 12 cases of precedents to the Senate and misled the Senate. It then gave 12 cases of precedents to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs but not one of them is a case where the provincial government of a province had referred a matter to its highest court and where the federal government had then come in to move it to a higher court without provincial consent and with its total opposition. Never has this happened before in the history of Canada. Never has the judiciary in this country been put in such an invidious position and been so politically damaged by any action of any government. It is the Minister of Justice who I hold responsible because he neither knows nor cares how a judiciary should operate or how a political system should operate. He is nothing but a braggart and a bully-boy and he will get his comeuppance. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, because I have much more to say.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

• (2200)

[English]

FISHERIES—CLOSURE OF FISH PLANT AT GEORGETOWN, P.E.I. (B) ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, H. B. Nickerson and Sons Limited have not reopened their Georgetown Seafoods Plant on Prince Edward Island for the current season, effectively eliminating over 500 jobs in the province at one fell swoop. On Wednesday, June 2, in the House of Commons, I directed a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) about a proposal put by the Prince Edward Island government to the federal government to reopen the plant. The P.E.I. proposal would require the federal government, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in particular, to allow a fish quota for the plant large enough to make it profitable to operate.

In the past, Georgetown Seafoods has been plagued by insufficient quantities of high quality fish for processing, as well as by high operating costs at a time of poor markets. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in response to my question to him in the House of Commons, rejected the P.E.I. government's proposal. He did so on the grounds that an assured fish quota for the Georgetown Seafoods Plant would "have implied a dislocation in fish supplies to another area in the maritime provinces". The minister's concern was that the Georgetown plant should not be reopened at the expense of transferring fish licences from Nickerson and Sons Limited to a new owner or a new operator—especially if such a transfer would undermine the fishery elsewhere in the region, for example, in Cape Breton.

In my supplementary question I suggested to the minister that, if he was not prepared to accept the P.E.I. proposal to open the Georgetown Seafoods Plant, it was incumbent upon him to suggest an acceptable alternative plan because he had a vital role to play in reopening the facility and in assuring its long-term success. Again, the minister was concerned about, "taking licences away very arbitrarily from an area to put them into another area of the maritime provinces".

But the minister's concern is grossly misplaced. The fact is that any assured fish quota for the Georgetown Seafoods Plant—even if it involved a transfer of licences from Nickersons to another operator, and that may not be the case—would not seriously jeopardize fish supplies anywhere else. The Atlantic fishery is on its knees. Fish processing plants are closing all over the place. There is, consequently, an oversupply of fish for processing purposes. Why, then, would the minister be alarmed about the prospect of a few fish licences exchanging hands, particularly when Nickersons would be the ones giving them up? That company is fast getting out of the fish processing business. It is a matter of public record. Everyone knows that the company has taken steps to dispose not only of the Georgetown Seafoods Plant itself, but also of a number of licences that go with the plant. Even if that were not the case, and it is, what is sacrosanct about the existing disbursement of fish landing rights when fewer and fewer people are left in the industry to exercise those rights?

The P.E.I. government has devised an eminently reasonable strategy to rekindle the flame of prosperity at Georgetown. But the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has thrown water on it even before the match is lit, all in the name of some high principle which has no practical foundation whatsoever. The basic problem is that the minister approaches the issue of Georgetown Seafoods on a totally negative footing. Instead of saying, "Here is a plant, it must be opened and how do we do it?", the minister says, in effect, "We cannot do this and we cannot do that. My hands are tied." The minister's hands are not tied. He has the wherewithal to enable the Georgetown plant to open its doors again. There is no evidence that the Government of Nova Scotia—the very province whose interests the minister claims he is protecting in all of this—opposes the P.E.I. government's proposal to reopen the Georgetown plant. Surely that province would object if the Nova Scotia fishery were threatened in some way by the P.E.I. government's proposal. One can only assume that either the minister is unaware of the facts or is using the question of licences as a cop-out not to do anything.

• (2205)

Much more than the continued survival of a fish plant is at stake. The jobs and livelihood of some 500 people are hanging in the balance. Last year, income tax T-4 slips were issued by the plant to some 570 employees. The truth is that the entire Island economy will be affected by what happens or fails to happen in this matter.

Last week it was shown that P.E.I. experienced the largest percentage increase in unemployment from one month to another since the federal government began keeping unemployment records. That is the largest increase on record. Statistics Canada figures revealed that 15.5 per cent of the work force in the province of Prince Edward Island was unemployed in May compared to 12.5 per cent in April. The job picture would be improved substantially if Georgetown Seafoods were to get on its feet again.

I plead with the minister to play his part in saving the jobs of these fine people. Their future depends largely on his willingness to act. His failure to do so would constitute a most serious dereliction of duty.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the new-found interest of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) in the fishing industry and particularly his interest in the reopening of Georgetown Seafoods. I am glad the hon. member shares the very deep concern and interest that I have been taking in this matter over the past weeks and months as the representative of the peole of that area.

In so doing, however, I must express the hope that he is not acting out of any ill-conceived motivations. I hope that he is not attempting to make cheap political points on the backs of the unemployed people in the riding I represent. I hope that he is not acting in a mischievous manner on this issue because the future of the processing plant in Georgetown is at stake, and we have been working very actively and with a very deep concern and interest to ensure that it reopens this season, and with hope for its continued operation in the future.

In any event, I welcome the interest of the hon. member from Hillsborough in this matter. I only regret the timing of his interest. I wish, for example, that he had been able to demonstrate his interest and support for the reopening of the plant last December when the company placed a proposal before the provincial government to keep the plant open. I only wish that he displayed the same concerns with his provincial colleagues that he is portraying this evening. I further wish he had made those same kinds of representations to the provincial cabinet in late March and early April when that cabinet rejected the proposal which, if accepted, would have meant that the plant would be in operation today.

Now that the provincial government has approached the federal government seeking its assistance and intervention, and now that the federal government is actively exploring solutions for the future of this plant and for the industry throughout the region, I would like to caution the hon. member to ensure that his current involvement in the matter does not jeopardize those very sensitive negotiations that are going on.

We have been and are actively working to find a solution to reopen the plant, to put people back to work and to open up the market for these fishermen. Several alternatives are being carefully examined and so this evening I enjoin the hon. member to put aside whatever motivations may have prompted the question this evening and to work closely with us, with the federal government and with the provincial government, to see that the plant is reopened and its employees returned to work.

I therefore want to assure the hon. member that as a member of the federal government and as the representative of the people directly involved, everything possible is being done to reach an early solution. I welcome his interest and invite his continued involvement.

PUBLIC WORKS—REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION OF WASHINGTON EMBASSY BE POSTPONED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in early May it was revealed that a long-time friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was awarded the contract to design and oversee the construction of the Canadian embassy in Washington, D.C. Canadians are getting so used to political gifts to Liberal friends, that this political and government graft basically goes unnoticed. But it absolutely sickens me, Mr. Speaker, to see this happen at any time, but particularly my flesh seems to crawl when I see this happen at a time when the economy is in the state it is in.

• (2210)

I asked the Prime Minister on May 25 a very simple question:

> Is the government or the Prime Minister considering postponing the design and construction of the embassy building in Washington because of the economic hard times facing Canada, with unemployment at an all time high, farmers going bankrupt, and small businessmen going bankrupt and, if not, why not?

The Prime Minister in his usual cavalier manner said "No, they were not changing their position." In fact, he chastised me because I had asked the same question, or basically the same question, on May 14.

It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that in this country when people do not have the funds to spend they do not spend them. That is the kind of thing that we are hearing daily from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), saying, if you do not have it, then you do not spend it.

Businessmen right across the country who do not have the money to expand are not expanding and are not building the new buildings that are required to operate at so-called efficiency, because they do not have the funds to do it.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider for a moment the $38 million, approximately, that is to be spent, according to the Prime Minister, on the construction of an embassy in Washington, when the embassy staff at the present time are occupying perfectly adequate rented quarters, and could easily operate out of those quarters for the next five years, with absolutely no detriment to their jobs. Yet we in Canada, at this time, because the government, because the Prime Minister says so, Mr. Speaker, and will not look at the deficit and the deficit financing, are perfectly prepared to go to Washington, D.C. and spend somewhere around $38 million. When the architect Erickson gets on the job, that $38 million will increase to $100 million.

Leaving that aside, we go down to Washington and spend this money, money that the Canadian government does not have and will probably have to borrow on the foreign market in American funds at a high interest rate, putting more burden on the taxpayers of Canada—to create jobs in the United States, in Washington, D.C. Mr. Speaker, there is something basically, fundamentally, absolutely wrong, particularly when the Prime Minister, in his very cavalier way, says, and I would like to read you his answer from Hansard at page 17430:

> —the work of the embassy staff is done in Washington, I believe, in a series of buildings—

"I believe"—in other words, he does not even know. He went on to say:

> In view of the fact that the United States remains our most important economic and political power, it would seem to me that it is self-evident that a building housing all the embassy personnel which will make their work efficient and effective should proceed. I believe the amount involved is some $38 million, or a figure in that area. That is an imporant building, Madam Speaker, and as the hon. member knows, the Government of Canada is building more expensive buildings in various cities across Canada which are needed to ensure the federal government is able to discharge its services in various parts of the country.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, they are sure not spending that kind of money to upgrade the facilities in my riding. They are not spending that kind of money to build an air terminal at Fort McMurray, that is now operating, for a city of 30,000 people, having to use construction trailers as a terminal building. They are not spending it in those areas, Mr. Speaker.

They are not spending that money on post offices, they are not spending it in a little place like Calling Lake, that requires something like $5,000 to upgrade its facility, so that the people do not have to wear overshoes and parkas in the wintertime when delivering the mail, when the postmistress goes to deliver the mail to the people coming in that area.

It is absolutely and totally ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, that this government would think at this time to go into massive capital expenditure in a foreign country, in any foreign country, when the rental facilities are quite adequate to carry them over a period of five years until the taxpayers in this country can afford to spend the money. Mr. Speaker, I rest my case.

• (2215)

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Kempling: Now we will hear the bullshit.

Mr. Irwin: Put that on the record.

Right now the United States is probably our most—it is our most—important trading customer. We do $45 billion worth of trade with the United States. The United States does that amount of trade with us. We are operating in Washington out of three buildings. Two we own, and one is rented. It is not as if this decision were made last year or the year before. We started making this decision in 1974. There are now 285 employees in Washington, and that number will increase to 320, but even in 1974 we were overcrowded, and that is when we seriously considered building a new building.

In 1978 the government purchased a new site on Pennsylvania Avenue, and in 1981 we started an in-depth evaluation of the architects. Three hundred firms were invited, and there were 11 finalists. Arthur Erickson, a well-known Canadian architect operating out of Toronto and Vancouver, was awarded the contract, and we hope to go to tender as soon as possible.

Mr. Shields: Over four others.

Mr. Irwin: It is easy to say that it is not necessary, but I suggest Canada has a certain image in the world. It may be my hon. friend's impression that we should operate as a second-class country. That is not the feeling of my party. We are one of the seven great economic countries in the world—the second largest—and we have a certain prestige around the world, and I do not think we should proceed by a third class, fourth class or fifth class method as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) suggests.

Mr. Kempling: That is what I said, bullshit.

MULTICULTURALISM—SPEECH MADE BY CHAIRMAN OF RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE. (B) MINISTER'S UNDERSTANDING OF MULTICULTURALISM

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, on May 19, as reported at page 17589 of Hansard, I put a question in the House concerning remarks made by Israel Ludwig, the government-appointed chairman of the race relations committee of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism. I have no doubt that Mr. Ludwig's remarks were sponsored by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) and they echo what the minister himself has said. Pretending to criticize racism, these gentlemen attacked the basic freedoms and traditions of our society and demonstrated once again the government's intention to impose its will by restricting freedom.

I do not think it was any accident that the minister in his evasive reply to my question made a cheap, derogatory remark which was extremely offensive to the ethnic communities in this country. It was particularly insulting to those people in the area I am proud to represent. It showed once again the lip service which this government pays to multiculturalism and its contempt for the variety of cultures other than English and French which make up this country.

Racism is brutal, inhuman and does not belong in a democracy. When we look at the record of this government, no one who has been around here since the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came on the scene should be surprised by this war against freedom. This government has pursued absolute power at the expense of democracy, Parliament, the press, free employment, business, labour, broadcasting and freedom of information. Through the gruesome Kent commission on newspapers, it is expanding the control of the media which it now exercises through the CRTC.

Dictatorship, by any other name, stinks in the nostrils of freedom-loving people. It always starts with the control of information. We should not forget the examples of Hitler's Germany, Franco's Spain, the Communist bloc—particularly Poland—and, yes, Argentina. It is all too easy to say it cannot happen here but, if we think just for a moment, we will know it is happening.

The manipulation of the press by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism should be seen together with his attempts to increase the censorship powers of the CRTC. They should be put together with the latest dirty trick of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in the long line of Liberal ministerial attempts to influence justice, which are blessed and rewarded by the Prime Minister. We can add the deliberate avoidance of Parliament and the growing dominance of senior bureaucrats who are political appointees of the Prime Minister. And let us not forget the Prime Minister's carefully staged press conferences and the torrent of controlled information from government information departments. Above all, remember that this government spends hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars to cheat democracy by deceitful advertising.

• (2220)

Canadians elect Parliament in a democratic election, but apart from election day there is little democracy left. We have a democracy one day in every four or five years. The people's voice is heard once in every four or five years, and if the Prime Minister has his way, even that will disappear. Right now he ignores Parliament and boasts about it. Right now we have government by decree. One after another the orders in council pour out, dodging debate in this House and escaping the notice of the people. Cabinet ministers do not bother to tell Parliament about their sneaky schemes. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism did not tell Parliament what he and his bureaucrats are going to do to our newspapers. He told an audience at the University of Western Ontario. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) did not tell MPs what the government is going to do with the taxpayers' money they invested in CDC. The subterranean Senator Austin spilled it to the press.

There is no freedom of expression here unless you are a Liberal lackey. The government rammed the metric system down the throats of Canadians; not through Parliament but through a metric commission, a bunch of bureaucrats ordering Canadians what to do under threat of penalties and spending millions of taxpayers' dollars to brainwash Canadians. Metric was not introduced as it was in the United States or Britain or other democracies where people have a say in the affairs of their country. This government does not believe that Canadians can think for themselves, or be allowed to read what they want, or listen to what they please, or do whatever they like. Canadians are not asked by this government, they are told. Neil Fraser, a civil servant, had the guts to speak out against dictatorship, and he was fired. Like him, throughout history men who have tried to light the torch of freedom have been deprived of their civil rights, deprived of their jobs, put in prison, have suffered torture and oppression.

It cannot happen in Canada, you say, but it is happening right now. Ask Neil Fraser. Ask the judge who received the Solicitor General's letter. Ask the newspapermen and broadcasters, and ask those people who cannot get jobs because they do not speak a preferred language.

The Kent commission was appointed by the Prime Minister. Its chairman was a Liberal hack and former Liberal bureaucrat devoted to government intervention. One of the two other commissioners was a career bureaucrat who believes utterly in the CRTC. What a cynical response to concern about the press. Nobody should have been surprised that the commission came up with what the government wanted—more intervention, more government control. We have heard the Minister of State for Multiculturalism rejoicing in the possibility of limitations on press freedom. The Prime Minister has always wanted to muzzle the press.

Newspapermen are rightly furious when newspapers disappear, but the Kent Commission and the government have done absolutely nothing to improve newspapers or increase the number of newspapers.

No newspaperman worth the name should allow regulation of any kind, and the newspaper owners should have refused point blank to talk to the government. Their duty is clear, and if they exercise that duty they deserve their privileged position.

The people of Canada should be on their guard against interference with their newspapers. Whatever the evils of private ownership and the operation of free enterprise, they are far less dangerous than government interference. A completely free press is an essential ingredient of a free society and an essential check on government.

Today, with an arrogant government led by power-crazed men, we need a free press. We need freedom. I hope MPs on all sides of the House will place freedom before party, and join together to stop the abuse of Parliament and the government's sinister attack on democracy.

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to ask the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) what he meant when he said that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) insulted him on May 19.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The normal procedure does not include questions back and forth. This could only be done with unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: He cannot do that in the late show.

Mr. Rossi: The Minister of State for Multiculturalism stated at the time of Mr. Ludwig's speech, and has since said in the House, that he will not fire an advisory council member for expressing opinions.

On specifics, the minister has made clear that he disagrees with several of Mr. Ludwig's ideas. Although some of Mr. Ludwig's proposals have been misconstrued, the minister indicated at the National Symposium on Race Relations in Vancouver, and in the House since, that the government would disagree with any proposal to eliminate Christmas and Easter as Statutory holidays.

The minister is concerned that members know that Mr. Ludwig's comments were made in the context of a number of prominent Canadians from different segments of Canadian society exchanging views on race relations and the law. Police, civil libertarians, visible minority leaders, human rights commissioners and the other thoughtful participants, all agreed that the symposium was a useful exchange of ideas on ways to foster racial tolerance in Canada. If the hon. member for Edmonton North felt insulted, I believe the offending remark may have been a reference to pirogis. Anyone who thinks the minister of multiculturalism's good natured remark about pirogis was racist, obviously does not know the minister very well. Since the minister enjoys and views pirogis as part of Canada's multicultural wealth, he spoke without any wish to demean. Those who shouted racism must have felt there is something derogatory about pirogis. They then may in fact be reflecting racist and negative views. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, the minister invites those with such unfair and short-sighted views to obtain from his office a popular recipe for this delightful Canadian dish, and I am prepared to table this recipe now if the House is in agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 9, 1982

The House met at 2.00 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSING

DEMAND FOR ACTION TO STIMULATE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, in February ten Liberal Members of Parliament from Montreal and two cabinet ministers demanded that the federal government take action to create jobs. They urged the government to stimulate the housing construction industry and create jobs for workers under the age of 25. No action has been taken by the Liberal government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Liberal government take immediate action to stimulate the housing construction industry and create jobs for workers under the age of 25, in accordance with the request of 12 MPs from the Montreal area.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

SUGGESTED FREEZE ON DEALINGS WITH ARGENTINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, yesterday in Vienna, Carlos Madero, the head of the Argentinian nuclear program, told the International Atomic Energy Agency that Argentina reserves the right to develop nuclear weapons. This admission makes a total mockery of Canada's bilateral Candu agreements with the junta, and underlines the hypocrisy of entering into nuclear sales agreements with military dictatorships which refuse to sign the U.N. non-proliferation treaty. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the government add some bite to its incessant barking about world peace and disarmament by announcing a Canadian freeze on all nuclear dealings with Argentina at the Special U.N. Session on Disarmament, and that this House offer its sincere congratulations and gratitude to the east coast longshoremen who have refused to load uranium destined for Argentina.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

ACTION SOUGHT TO LOWER INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, a group of eight Liberal Members of Parliament under the direction of the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) have urged the Liberal government to lower interest rates. That group believes that Governor Bouey is only partly correct when he says you cannot lower interest rates. Since no meaningful action has been taken by the Liberal government to lower interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Liberal government take immediate action to lower interest rates in accordance with the demands of eight Liberal MPs under the direction of the hon. member for Kitchener.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

CALL FOR ABOLITION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON EQUITY INVESTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, equity investment pessimism is pervasive in Canada. Canadians are investing their money outside Canada and in high-interest-bearing bonds and certificates. This has substantively curtailed the ability to generate equity capital in Canada and has jeopardized the survival of small business in Canada because of the high cost of debt capital. A new budget is necessary to create confidence in the Canadian economy, and it must contain incentives for equity investment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That any new budget abolish capital gains taxation on all equity investment in Canadian registered companies.

S.O. 43

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEMAND THAT NOVEMBER BUDGET BE WITHDRAWN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has indicated that the content of the budget indicates that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was unaware of the effect the budget might have. Subsequent events have proven the Minister of Agriculture to be correct. But no action has been taken by the Liberal government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Minister of Finance withdraw his November 12 budget in its entirety, immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR REVITALIZING ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, on April 27, 15 Liberal MPs, including the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), suggested that "radically alternative ways of revitalizing the economy and offsetting current hardships should be considered." To date no such action has been taken by the Liberal government. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

• (1410)

That the Liberal government recognize the quality of the advice, if not the source, and take immediate action to revitalize the economy and offset current hardships.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR OTTAWA CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre recently describing himself as a "voice in the wilderness" stated:

There is a very, very great risk that if we do not clean up our act, when the recovery period comes we are not going to be able to participate.

He also stated:

He was not the only member of the Liberal caucus to voice concern over the government's handling of the growing economic issues.

No action has been taken by the Liberal government across the way. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Liberal government take action on the economy in accordance with the wishes of the members of the Conservative caucus and the hon. member opposite. This would assuage the conscience of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre and allow him to sleep better at night along with 24 million other Canadians who want action from his colleagues as well.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

CO-OPERATIVE INITIATIVES TAKEN BY INSTITUTIONS IN WEST KOOTENAY, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Specific local initiatives between North American auto dealers, Local 480 of the United Steelworkers of America, and the Kootenay Savings Credit Union—industry, labour and financial institutions—are encouraging business and creating service and resource jobs by lowering interest rates 4 per cent, offering targeted sales incentives, and promoting sales and jobs in the Kootenays and elsewhere across Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House recognize the value of these constructive and co-operative initiatives being pursued by local labour, management, and financial institutions within the West Kootenay—to lower interest rates, market Canadian products, spur consumer demand, and create jobs in Canada in the manufacturing, construction, forestry, mining and smelting industries; and that we further urge the government to listen and learn, work to establish trust—not industrial conflict—lower selected interest rates, and immediately launch a new strategy to get Canada back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF NOVEMBER BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), a former minister in the government, stated publicly before he resigned as chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) got bad advice with respect to the budget. The Minister of Finance has refused to withdraw the budget. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Liberal government immediately withdraw the November 12, 1981, budget in its entirety.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) has stated that the capital gains aspect of the budget should be a priority for change. That comment was based upon the thinking of the hon. member's rural constituency. The Liberal government has made no change to alleviate the problems of farmers. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the Liberal government take immediate action to alleviate the problems created for farmers by the November 12, 1981, budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR JOB CREATION ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) has stated:

The country cannot endure another winter of unemployment like this last one.

Unemployment in Canada has reached a post-war record of 10.2 per cent, with over 1.25 million people without jobs. The Liberal government has taken no action to correct the situation. As John Steinbeck said:

Must the hunger become anger and the anger fury before anything will be done?

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Liberal government take immediate action to get Canadians back to work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE JUDICIARY

REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY MANITOBA JUDGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. A number of cabinet ministers, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have expressed concern about statements made by judges on controversial subjects. Appeal Court Judge A. M. Monnin made disgusting racist comments May 18 in court, speaking of "drunken Indians", and further stating:

I practised up north in The Pas and that's all we have.

He also said:

If you eliminate all the evidence from drunken Indians I've heard in the past 26 years you would eliminate it all.

Because of these statements, and in view of the fact that this same judge is in charge of redistribution of federal ridings for the province of Manitoba, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

• (1415)

That we condemn Judge Monnin for his slurs against native people, that an investigation be ordered into this blatant racial prejudice with a view to seeking Judge Monnin's resignation, and further, that he be immediately removed from any responsibility for electoral redistribution.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS TO STIMULATE INVESTMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Monday evening he told a national television audience that he was going to pay additional attention to improving the investment climate in Canada, and particularly to encouraging the productive investment climate in Canada, which would have the effect of generating new jobs. What specific plans or specific steps does the minister have in mind to implement that course of action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to advise the hon. member when decisions are taken on any specific steps. I would point out to him that at the present time, as was revealed or disclosed in the final communique at the Versailles Summit, the leading impediment, or the major obstacle, to productive investment in the world today is the continued existence of high interest rates. The quickest way to resume productive investment would be to register some success in getting interest rates down.

Mr. Mazankowski: We on this side of the House are encouraged by the fact that the Minister of Finance has finally recognized the need for improvement in the investment climate, and for improvement in the degree of confidence in Canada.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, perhaps the minister could clarify some confusion which exists. Yesterday he indicated to the House that he planned no major changes in the government's economic policy which is driving the country into a depression, while outside the House he said that everything would be open for consideration and for discussion at the cabinet table, which further adds to the confusion and the uncertainty. Could the minister tell the House, the 1.25 million unemployed Canadians, and the thousands of people who are going bankrupt, what he intends to do, or will he continue his course of double-talk and do nothing to resolve these problems?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the same question was asked yesterday by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he inquired whether Canada was contemplating a significant change in economic policy. I replied to that question in some detail, and the same answer stands today.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister gives the House a different answer than he gives outside the House. If the minister wants to improve the investment climate in the country, he could start by withdrawing his disastrous budget; he could convince his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to change fundamentally the National Energy Program, or he could come up with some specific incentives for people to invest in the Canadian economy and to improve stability, rather than going around the country blaming working Canadians who are striving to keep their heads above water.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, if the minister will not admit the error of his ways and come up with something positive which would give Canadians a ray of hope or, if he refuses to do so, perhaps he might consider resigning and convincing his leader to resign also because that would restore confidence in the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I have said so often in reply to questions about resignations, it seems to be uppermost in the minds—

Some hon. Members: Of Canadians.

Mr. MacEachen: —of members of the Tory opposition. What they leave unstated, usually, is whose resignation. Usually it is their own leader who they have in mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

• (1420)

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF CANDU REACTOR IN ARGENTINA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday Argentina said that it reserves the right to develop nuclear energy for military uses, a specific statement made by Admiral Madero, head of their National Atomic Energy Commission to the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna.

Will the Government of Canada now put a stop-order on all further carrying out of the contract with Argentina for the construction of a Candu reactor in Argentina, and will it now refuse to carry on business as usual with Argentina which has committed armed aggression in the Falkland Islands? Will it put a stop order on the shipment of nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina? Now that the government has had confirmation that Argentina does not even pretend any longer to observe the provisions of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, will the government stop its business as usual with Argentina, in nuclear energy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for External Affairs has already answered my hon. friend's question in this regard. As far as the commitment by Argentina is concerned, the agreement is quite clear that it cannot use any fuel from the Canadian nuclear reactor for military purposes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It is firm. It is in the agreement. It is subject to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna.

Mr. Crosbie: The Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Europe visiting with his master, the Prime Minister, welcoming Spain into NATO. He was not here when I asked about that earlier.

USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, does the minister realize that Argentina has now confirmed that it will develop nuclear energy for military purposes? Does he feel any responsibility to the people of the world community not to co-operate with a country which declares it will use nuclear energy for military purposes? Has he no responsibility to the United Kingdom, to the people of Canada, or to the U.N. disarmament conference? Is he going to be a collaborator and co-conspirator with the Argentine military in the development of nuclear energy for military purposes?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for External Affairs is in Bonn today with the Prime Minister who is presiding at a Summit meeting of the NATO countries. Canada is very actively participating under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: He is chairing a very important meeting concerning the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, of which Canada is a very strong member and to which Canada is committed.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: I reject the implications in the hon. member's question, in his introductory comments.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

INCREASE IN BANKRUPTCIES—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Since his return from Versailles he has refused so far in this House to commit the government to producing new economic policies in the near future. Specifically, he has not told us we will have a new budget. In my questions to him I would like to raise specific areas which do not require a new budget but would require some action.

The first area concerns the important matter of bankruptcies. So far this year there have been almost 4,500 businesses that have gone bankrupt, representing a net loss of thousands of jobs to men and women across the country. The forecast is for this figure to increase each month in the months ahead. Since it is easier to preserve a well-functioning small business than it is to open one up after it has been forced to shut down, will the government in the next few days, or in the next week, bring in a program which will provide concrete assistance to small businesses in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking me to announce a new program for small business. If a decision is taken by the government it will be announced in the House, and the hon. member will have an opportunity to comment on it. As the hon. member knows, in the last budget a number of steps were taken to improve the situation of small business. The proper functioning of small business in Canada is a very important objective of government policy.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the whole country has seen the effect of those programs. We have lost almost 5,000 businesses since those programs were introduced. It is time the government recognized that its approaches are wrong and that we need new approaches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chénier: What are yours?

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

DOMESTIC PRODUCTION AND CANADIAN CONTENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade, who was here just a moment ago, but I see that he is not in his seat. Here he comes.

[Translation]

There have been thousands of lay-offs in the automotive industry at Sainte-Thérèse, Windsor, Oakville and Oshawa, and the government has done nothing. My question to the minister is very simple.

[English]

Given the fact that other countries have said that automobile companies which want to sell in their nations must produce cars and parts in their nations proportionate to their sales, will the Government of Canada announce, within the next few days, or the next week, a specific policy which will say to multi-national companies selling cars in Canada that they must begin to produce cars and parts in this country proportionate to their sales?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, to my knowledge there is only one country in the world, among the industrialized nations, which actually has any import legislation relating to content provisions, and that is Australia. Australia is in a very unique situation because many tariffs are not bound in the GATT for Australia, so it is different for Australia than for Canada.

As the hon. member knows, we have asked the Japanese authorities to discuss this matter in detail in an effort to reach an agreement on a content proposal. Also the Prime Minister raised the auto issue with the Prime Minister of Japan at the Versailles Summit, and we are still hopeful that we will reach some kind of agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to tell the minister that I will be glad to send him a list. There are countries such as France, Australia, Mexico and Brazil, which all have very tough requirements concerning production within their borders, whether sales take place or no sales take place. I will be happy to discuss the matter with the minister.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The dollar, once again, has gone down today. This will almost certainly mean that the Bank of Canada, following its past practice, will announce another interest rate increase in the bank rate tomorrow, which will lead to more shutdowns of businesses, which, in turn, will cause more job losses. Will the minister get in touch with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and instruct him not to announce another increase in the bank rate tomorrow?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am in frequent consultation with the Governor of the Bank and will continue to have these consultations.

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is evident that the minister's budgetary policies, which he is reluctant to replace, and now his inconsistent skating exhibitions, which are far better than mine have ever been—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —have not only reduced Canadian investor confidence to an all-time low, but have also created the highest unemployment level in our history. Therefore, in view of the fact that small business is the largest potential employer in Canada, and it is hit hardest by the government's high interest rate policies, will the minister assure the House and the small business community that he will reinstate the Small Business Development Bond program to its original form?

Do not give us any baloney by saying that it is too costly because, as the minister well knows, the Informetrica computer study concluded that the original bond program represented a $77 million net gain to the federal treasury in the first year of the program. Will he take action now instead of being the insensitive minister that he is to that community?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have answered this question maybe six or seven times in the last few months. I will repeat the answer that I have given in the past, that the small business bond has proved to be very effective. It has ensured that several billions of dollars in additional funds have been made available to small business at interest rates markedly lower than the market rates of interest.

• (1430)

The reason that we redesigned the bond was to ensure that the available funds provided by the banks through the tax system would be made available to firms most in need of financial assistance. That is the reason for the change. I understand the hon. member's concern that the bond be restored to its original shape, but if that is carried out I fear that those businesses most in need will be the first to suffer from the change that he recommends.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the minister knows full well that the revised bond program is not working. Businesses cannot take advantage of it. He knows it has gone down by 94 per cent. He might as well have stayed with his Prime Minister in Spain to welcome that country into Nato.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON CAR DEALERS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Since the actions of the government have caused even further crises and unemployment in other industries such as the Canadian automotive industry, along with the recent Mickey Mouse tactic in Vancouver, can the minister explain or justify his announcement to allow an increase in the capital cost allowance for daily car rental agencies, many of which are multinationals, while at the same time ignoring the additional $67,000 tax burden that this November 12 measure imposed on our domestic retail dealers, all of whom are small businessmen—

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. members must discipline themselves. We must have questions and not speeches.

Mr. Jelinek: Well, Madam Speaker, the minister—

Madam Speaker: Order. Has there not been a question? I thought I heard one. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I asked a question.

Madam Speaker: Order. Neither the Chair nor a member can force a minister to answer a question. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Jelinek: Give him a chance. He was asleep. Is he going to answer?

* * *

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE MEASURES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Throughout the Atlantic provinces, federal economic policies are strangling the fish industry. Bankrupt fish plants are throwing thousands of people out of work in east coast communities, like Georgetown, P.E.I.; Marystown, Newfoundland; Grand Manan, New Brunswick; and Weymouth, Nova Scotia. Given that the Kirby task force is investigating the long-term problems of the fishery, is the federal government planning any specific emergency measures in the interim to ensure the survival of the important fish industry and to get it back on its feet?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, in areas where the fishermen do not have an alternative counter to sell their fish, we have intervened. The most recent case is St. Anthony. In other areas such as Georgetown, I have no information that leads me to believe that, in spite of the fact that it is the height of the lobster season, fishermen are having any difficulty disposing of their catch. In some cases plants are being negotiated for, and I know that in the case of Georgetown there have been contacts with the company which owns the facility. I have indicated to the provincial minister that as much as it is within my power to intervene, I will try to find a solution. There are areas where owners of plants have decided not to reopen for other reasons. A good number had expanded to the point where there was no way the supply of fish could keep them going.

FUTURE OF FISH PLANT IN GEORGETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries mentioned the fish plant at St. Anthony. In that instance the federal government established a Crown corporation to keep open the fish-processing plant at St. Anthony, Newfoundland, which is in the riding of the Minister of National Revenue. I would ask the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Fisheries why the federal government is not taking similar initiatives or action to open the Georgetown Seafoods plant in Prince Edward Island in the riding of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In the absence of such action, are we to assume that, in the eyes of the federal government, we in Prince Edward Island are less important than the people in Canada's other island province?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Frankly, Madam Speaker, I find the insinuation made by the hon. member rather offensive. He knows, and his provincial colleague knows, that we have been trying to find a solution to the Georgetown problem. The difficulty is that the suggested approach or avenue was to take six licences away from somebody else. I do not think hon. members would support me if I were to suggest that avenue.

On the question of St. Anthony, if the hon. member looks at the map he will see that the fishermen in that area have very few alternatives for almost one hundred miles. If he looks at that coast and the importance of St. Anthony to the fishermen of the area, and the fact that there is no other industry where the fishermen can sell their fish, perhaps he will understand why we tried to find a solution, rather than trying to make cheap political gains.

QUERY RESPECTING PROPOSED AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND SPAIN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Can the minister tell the House whether an agreement will be signed with Spain, and whether that bilateral fisheries agreement will include a give-away of 5,000 metric tonnes of fish in our zones in exchange for a market that, at best, is worth $10 million? When is the government going to stop giving away fish in our zones?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would have expected that sort of question from the hon. member's colleague, the Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland, who has been using this kind of demagoguery to destroy any kind of international regime outside the 200-mile zone, to try to destroy the leverage to get markets that are not dependent on the U.S. market and to have international fisheries relations which are somewhat more mature than the idea of catching fish, putting it in large warehouses, and then asking the federal government to pay the storage cost.

There have been discussions with the Spanish authorities. A possible agreement has been suggested. I have consulted the industry. I want to hear more from the industry and more from the provincial governments, some of which are taking the position that you slam the door on everybody, but you knock again when you need access to their markets. When I know what the Canadian industry and the provinces want to do, I will make a recommendation to my colleagues.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SPORTS FISHING INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF PATROL PERSONNEL CUTBACKS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Eight of ten fisheries officers promised for the sports fishing industry have not been hired. Also, we have just learned that up to 37 person-years will be lost to the fisheries patrol vessels on the coast of British Columbia. Will the minister confirm that those patrol vessels will not be doing the job of patrolling the fishery and protecting the stock? Is he aware of the seriousness of those cutbacks in government person-years?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Obviously, Madam Speaker, I will check the details. We always have trouble finding sufficient person-years to manage all the sectors and meet all the pressures in the industry, which is coast-wide and is subject to damage and to poaching. If I receive facts to support the hon. member's statement, I will make them known to the House.

NECESSITY FOR MANNING PATROL VESSELS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, will the minister also consider that not only are those patrol vessels and crews responsible for patrolling the fisheries aspect of the industry, but they play a very important part in search and rescue? Will the minister look very carefully at his budget and any proposals that his department may have before Treasury Board, and give solid support to them? Will the minister confirm that he will fight for those person-years to protect the fisheries and the safety of fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am the minister who pushed very hard to have vessels in Transport, DND and Fisheries perform a number of tasks, including search and rescue. So I am very supportive of this program and I think, with my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Defence, that it has been very successful. There are limits to the number of person-years that we can dispose of, and I might say to you, Madam Speaker, that I am one of those ministers who always asks for more and sometimes does not get all he requests.

* * *

• (1440)

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

USE OF SUBLIMINAL MESSAGES ON ROCK MUSIC RECORDINGS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It regards product labelling. In London in recent weeks concern has been voiced regarding subliminal recordings, possibly satanic messages, on some rock music recordings. Through various recording techniques such as backward masking, subliminal messages have been conveyed to the public. For example, one of the most popular recordings on radio within the last decade, Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven", contains the following lines subliminally: "Here's to my sweet Satan" and "I sing because I live with Satan." Another line states, Madam Speaker: "There was a little child—".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. I am at a loss to find a question, but I hope there is one in there, because I cannot allow the hon. member more time.

Mr. Burghardt: I was trying to lay the foundation for the question, Madam Speaker, thank you very much. Would the minister be prepared—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Burghardt: And if you would listen, you might learn something, too.

Mr. Nielsen: A subliminal question?

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO HALT CAPITAL OUTFLOW

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister must be aware that the major trading countries of the world have agreed to reduce their tariffs by an average of 40 per cent over the next several years, with the inevitable result that the United States based multinationals will be even more inclined to serve Canadian markets from abroad. With unemployment levels at record highs, exactly what action is the minister and his government prepared to take to reduce plant closings and to arrest the outflow of capital which could be used to put Canadians back to work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to tariff adjustments being made by countries throughout the world. As he knows, Canada took part in the last round of negotiations on multilateral trade. We have accepted our obligations, and other countries have done so as well. That is the course we are following in that respect.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the minister has obviously not addressed the tragic situation facing the nation today. In my constituency alone at least three more factories are threatened with closure, by Liberal insensitivity and anti-American policy. Therefore, my supplementary question to the minister is this: what changes to the Foreign Investment Review Agency is his government considering which would reinstate an economic climate conducive to growth in the market place? Would the minister tell this House today?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in the economic development document tabled last fall, we said we were conducting a review of the existing procedures under the Foreign Investment Review Act, to see whether these procedures could be made more smooth or more effective without in any way undermining the basic principles, for which there is a great deal of support in this country.

I am surprised by my hon. friend's question, because if there is a 40 per cent reduction in tariffs of GATT countries, it means greater opportunities for Canadian production. My hon. friend is expressing concern about tariff reductions, while some of his colleagues in the province of Ontario are calling for higher tariffs against Japanese cars. I repeat what I said last week: why don't you guys get your act together?

* * *

THE PRESS

REPORTED INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENTAL NEWS LEAK

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. On May 25 when he unveiled his proposal to control the daily newspaper industry in Canada, he paid lip service to the concept of freedom of the press; and yet, within a week, the executive assistant to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told Southam News that the department had called in the police to find out the source of one of the Southam News' stories. Was the minister consulted about this action before it was taken? If so, does he consider it consistent with the lip service he gave to freedom of the press?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): First of all, Madam Speaker, I do not believe we did pay lip service, I believe we put forward significant suggestions to protect a free press; and, no, I was not consulted.

NEWS SOURCES OF TORONTO NEWSPAPER

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in that same speech the minister made this statement: I certainly agree that the government must at all costs avoid intruding or appearing to intrude in a manner intimidating to editorial freedom.

Was the Minister of State for Multiculturalism consulted before a new policy was adopted in the Prime Minister's office of badgering the Ottawa bureau of the Toronto Star for information regarding its sources for news stories and, if so, does he consider that consistent with the statement that he made in London?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, in my capacity to consider the Royal commission findings on concentration of the newspaper industry, I would obviously not be approached on any such matter as the member brings forward. I think it is insidious and dangerous to the principle of a free press to suggest, in a democracy, that a government does not have a right to express its concern publicly when it feels it has not been treated justly, or does not have a right to act within the criminal law when there appears to have been an abuse of that law. But that has nothing to do with the principle that, if one or two people own every newspaper in the country, then there will be no free press, and that is what we are fighting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

RIOT AT COLLINS BAY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In the last while the Solicitor General has found time to give advice to the Minister of Finance on his budget, to the Minister of Justice on the prosecution of German Canadians, and to a judge on the sterling qualities of some defendants.

Two weeks ago there was a riot in Collins Bay penitentiary, and two nights ago a prisoner was stabbed at Collins Bay. Has the minister been able to draw himself away from his other interests to give some attention to his department and to an investigation of what is going on at Collins Bay?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have been able to give time to the problems in my industry. In the case of the Collins Bay murder, the local police have been called in and are conducting a full investigation.

RIOT PREVENTION PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): The minister's officials are predicting what they call "a long, hot summer" in the prison system. What extra precautions is the Solicitor General taking to make sure that we do not have another repetition of the Matsqui incidents of some time ago?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, predictions of a long, hot summer are something of a self-fulfilling prophecy. I have not heard officials indicating that this would be a long, hot summer. In fact this is a summer in which our statistical returns show us that there are far fewer major incidents, in fact half the level of major incidents that there were as recently as two years ago. So, I am not expecting a long, hot summer but, of course, I can assure the House that the Correctional Service of Canada is taking all the steps that are appropriate to assure good order in our institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF RURAL SERVICES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for postal service. As Saturday rural mail delivery in Quebec was discontinued as of June 5, last Saturday, and as a similar discontinuation of service for the rest of the country is under active consideration by Canada Post Corporation, would the minister explain to the House just how the Canada Post Corporation can possibly be considering such a cancellation of service to such a vitally important segment of the population as our rural population, who generally receive their weekly newspapers on Saturday and read them during the weekend? We have just seen our postal rates for first class mail almost doubled, and our second-class mail rate increased by 18 per cent. For these reasons would the minister assure the House that he has no plan for going ahead with such a disastrous curtailment of service?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to report to the hon. member that such a service is no longer in existence in many parts of Canada for a number of years. The administrative decision taken in the Quebec region was in order to put every service on an equal footing. The saving is substantial. As you know, the corporation has a mandate not only to improve services all across Canada but to become self-sufficient. The decision that has been taken by the corporation was decided following extensive consultations with the people concerned. In reality, the volume of mail delivered in these regions on Saturday was minimal and the costs were excessive compared to the service given.

• (1450)

INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I should like to assure the minister that, no matter whether these services are provided in the province of Quebec or not, they are very important to the province of Ontario and, I am sure, to other provinces in this country.

With regard to the savings, as I have said, and as the minister knows only too well, the first-class postal rate was recently raised from 17 cents to 30 cents, almost doubled, and is now nearly half as much again as similar service costs in the United States. The cost of second-class mail was increased by 18 per cent recently. For these reasons would he not agree that the Canadian public has been gouged enough to make up for losses on the postal service, and would he therefore assure the House that Saturday rural mail delivery will be continued?

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is labouring a point that has been extensively reviewed before a parliamentary committee when the estimates of the Crown corporation were presented. The hon. member should have made his representation then. I appreciate his concern that some classes of citizens could be deprived of a service, but unfortunately that service on Saturday was already cut off many months ago in many other parts of Canada. That is an internal decision of the corporation. I can only report the view of the hon. member to the corporation.

* * *

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE LEVELS—ROLL OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that there are thousands of Canadians who are paying something close to eight points above the inflation level for mortgages and that, as a result of the recession we are currently going through, frequently the mortgage is larger than the market value of their homes? Will the minister meet with the chartered banks and ask that they produce a program that will set a mortgage interest rate at no more than two percentage points above the rate of inflation, and allow those people access to the program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no objection to meeting with the Canadian Bankers' Association, but I fear that if one succeeded in implementing the proposal made by the hon. member there would be very little money available for mortgage development. Mortgage funds would dry up. I wonder who would step in to subsidize the mortgage between his proposed rate of 13 per cent and the mortgage rate? Has he given any thought to that and what it would cost?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have indeed given some thought to that, and the minister knows full well that the blended rate that the banks would be able to get, taking into account all their investments, would give them a yield at least five percentage points above the rate of inflation if they were to make mortgage money available under a program such as this.

HOUSING FINANCE POLICIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he can explain to the Canadian people how it can be that the Government of Canada can find $2 billion plus for oil companies, and billions of dollars to lend to other countries for nuclear development at seven per cent and slightly above, when we cannot find money at two per cent above the inflation rate for mortgages?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this question falls into that rhetorical category that we hear so frequently in the House of Commons. As the hon. member knows, the minister responsible for housing has introduced and has implemented a program that will provide assistance to persons in Canada who are not in a position to carry what are admittedly very high interest costs. In those cases a program of assistance is available.

Without taking on very large budgetary expenditures it is not possible to implement the program that the hon. member suggests. That is why it is not possible to accept his suggestion. It is a rather obvious suggestion, if one had unlimited funds.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

USE OF SUBLIMINAL MESSAGES ON ROCK MUSIC RECORDINGS

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with reference to the serious issue raised by the hon. member for London West regarding subliminal and satanic messages on records.

Would the minister be prepared to ask the recording industry to label such products, warning the public of such subliminal and unsuitable messages?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Speak of the devil!

Mr. Ouellet: I believe this is a very important matter and I will discuss it with my officials to find out if there is misleading advertising in these presentations. If necessary we will contact the companies and take appropriate measures.

* * *

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS AT RUBBER PLANT IN LINDSAY, ONT.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, the Minister of Finance. Last week the Trent Rubber plant in Lindsay was forced to lay off indefinitely 30 full-time employees, and reduce its three-shift operation to a two-shift operation. This was due to what it considers unfair dumping of rubber products in Canada by South Korea. I am sure that I do not need to remind the minister of the kind of hardship this imposes on these previously long-term employees. Could the minister tell me if the investigation requested by the company has begun, and how long does he expect this company will have to wait for its conclusion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will make inquiries of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and provide the hon. member with the information he requests at the earliest possible date.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPORT OF NUCLEAR FUEL BUNDLES TO ARGENTINA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister which is supplementary to those posed earlier relating to Argentina and Canada's continuing policy of sending nuclear fuel bundles to a country where the head of its Atomic Energy Commission has announced that it reserves the right to use nuclear energy for what he calls non-prescribed military uses. That is a new announcement this week. Does the Government of Canada intend to continue to send nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina which is at war, after it has announced that it is going to consider using these materials for military purposes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition refers to an article which appeared today in The Citizen, I would remind him that it refers to a statement made by Admiral Carlos Castro Madero who reiterated Argentina's support for the objectives of the International Atomic Energy Agency, its commitment to use nuclear energy only for peaceful purposes and the fact that it had submitted all of its relevant nuclear facilities to agency safeguards.

Canadian nonproliferation and safeguards policy expressly demands that nuclear items supplied by Canada shall be used for peaceful purposes only and not put to any explosive use.

Mr. Crosbie: They didn't even invade the Falklands! It was a mirage!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the Argentinians also said they would not invade the Falkland Islands, and they did.

QUERY RESPECTING REASON FOR EXPORT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Argentinians have never signed a nuclear non-proliferation treaty. I will put my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or to the Acting Prime Minister, if he wants to accept his responsibility. I ask one of the ministers why there is a different standard for Argentina when, in the case of Pakistan, the mere fear that Canadian materials would be used for military purposes caused us to stop a contract with Pakistan? Why is Canada sending nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina when the head of the Atomic Energy Commission has just said they are going to be using their nuclear capacity for military purposes? Why is that being done by Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it would be more helpful if the Leader of the Opposition knew how to read and read exactly what has been said. Again Argentina, in its January, 1976, nuclear co-operation agreement with Canada, gave us assurances.

Some hon. Members: Ironclad?

Mr. Lalonde: In addition there is the relevant safeguard agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna. In that agreement Argentina has undertaken that nuclear items supplied by Canada shall not be used for the manufacture of any nuclear weapons, to further any other military purpose, or for the manufacture of any other explosive device. That is under the supervision and control of inspectors of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna.

Mr. Crosbie: Who control nothing.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we had exactly those same assurances from Pakistan. When the threat was made, the supplies were cancelled. Why is there a double standard? Why does the Government of Canada insist on sending nuclear material to Argentina which is at war with Great Britain?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Again the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is wrong in his facts. We did not have the same agreement with Pakistan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REPORTED STATEMENT BY ASSISTANT TO PRESIDENT OF ARGENTINA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have listened with care to what the minister has just said. I have a copy of an exchange between the assistant to the President of Argentina and a questioner. In the concluding part of a question reference was made that the industrial capacity for the development of nuclear weapons for military purposes was a necessity. The last sentence of the question says:

Is that an over-interpretation of what you said?

That is, that they needed the potential for nuclear weaponry. I repeat, the question was:

Is that an over-interpretation of what you said?

The assistant to the President of Argentina replied:

Right.

In other words, they want it for nuclear weapon purposes. If that is the case, how can the minister get up before the House today and give us the incredible kind of assurances he has tried to pass off?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, because Argentina has not signed the nonproliferation treaty there is nothing indeed to prevent Argentina from developing on its own, with its own resources, expertise for the military aspects of nuclear fission. They can do that on their own. Under the agreements we have, since 1975 I believe, with Argentina, there is a commitment, covered by the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Commission, that they cannot use any of the facilities provided by Canadian technology for any military purpose. That is the fact, and I invite my hon. friends to check that.

* * *

PETITION

MR. OGLE—WORLD INVOLVEMENT IN NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and sixty-seventh Report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-26, an act to revive E.G. Klein Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I had given notice to the Chair that I wanted to raise a question of privilege, but the member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will not be in the House and has asked me to wait until Monday. I have informed him that I intend to raise this point Monday.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,119, 4,184 and 4,245.

[Text]

VIA RAIL TRAINS BETWEEN TORONTO AND KITCHENER

Question No. 4,119—Mr. Beatty:

1. Does VIA Rail Canada Inc. have regularly scheduled runs between Toronto and Kitchener and, if so, how many runs a day in each direction?

2. How long is the trip supposed to take?

3. In January, 1982, how many trips was VIA Rail scheduled to make in either direction between Kitchener and Toronto and how many arrived behind schedule?

4. In January 1982, what was the average delay experienced on the run?

5. Did VIA Rail receive a letter from a group of Kitchener passengers that stated in part "We trust that regular delays of 25 minutes on a 95-minute run are unacceptable to VIA's management?"

6. Are regular delays of 25 minutes on a 95-minute run acceptable to VIA Rail's management?

7. Are actions being taken by VIA Rail's management to correct the problems being experienced on the run and, if so (a) what are such actions (b) by what date will they have been taken?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc., advises as follows:

1. Yes. Four trains daily from Toronto to Kitchener and return; one train daily, except Sunday, from Toronto to Kitchener and return.

2. Train No.	Train No.
661—1 hr. 35 min.	660—1 hr. 38 min.
663—1 hr. 30 min.	664—1 hr. 42 min.
665—1 hr. 35 min.	666—1 hr. 36 min.
667—1 hr. 35 min.	668—1 hr. 42 min.
669—1 hr. 35 min.	670—1 hr. 35 min.

3. Toronto-Kitchener: 147 trips; 114 arrived behind schedule. Kitchener-Toronto: 145 trips; 77 arrived behind schedule.

4. Average delay outbound—34.4 minutes; average delay inbound—31.9 minutes.

5. Yes.

6. No.

7. Following action has been taken or will be instituted:

(a) Arrangements made with the operating railway (CN Rail) to review the despatching of passenger trains on the Toronto to London via Stratford service, in order to set up better "meets" where possible.

(b) Commencing June 1 (summer timetable), train service has been adjusted to overcome bottlenecks to permit train 665 to depart ahead of GO Transit's first afternoon train to Georgetown, and in the case of Kitchener to allow train 665 to discharge passengers and depart prior to the arrival of train 668. In addition, schedule departure of train 661 from Toronto will be changed to overcome meet problems associated with GO Transit between Halwest and Toronto.

Order Paper Questions

PARLIAMENTARIANS BARRED FROM UNITED STATES

Question No. 4,184—Mr. Taylor:

1. Were any parliamentarians who are presently holding office in Canada barred from entering the United States between January 1, 1945 and December 31, 1981 and, if so, in each case, what was his/her name?

2. For the same period, were any legislators in Canada barred from entering the United States and, if so, in each case, what was his/her name and what is his/her present position?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The practice of admitting or refusing entry of persons into the United States from Canada is a matter which relates solely to the legislative and administrative authority of the government of the United States.

EXPORTS OF CEMENT

Question No. 4,245—Mr. Herbert:

1. In (a) 1980 (b) 1981, what tonnage of cement was exported and what amount was destined to the United States?

2. Is it known whether an appreciable quantity of cement consigned to the United States is resold to another country?

3. Does the government monitor price changes in exported cement?

4. Was there an increase in the export of cement to Saudi Arabia in 1980 and, if so, to what does the government attribute the increase?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. (a) Canadian exports in 1980 of standard portland cement totalled 1,527,508 tonnes including 1,451,863 tonnes exported to the United States. (b) Canadian exports in 1981 of standard portland cement totalled 1,578,684 tonnes including 1,513,404 tonnes exported to the United States.

2. Cement industry specialists believe that no appreciable quantity of Canadian cement exported to the United States is subsequently exported to another country.

3. No.

4. Canadian exports of standard portland cement to Saudi Arabia increased from 17 tonnes in 1979 to 68,947 tonnes in 1980. The government is unable to comment on commercial transactions by private sector companies since any such intervention may unduly affect their opportunities in the marketplace.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

COPIES OF AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Motion No. 75—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest signed agreement between the Government and the province of New Brunswick under the Canada Assistance Plan.

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Text]

COPIES OF AGREEMENT WITH NOVA SCOTIA UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Motion No. 82—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest signed agreement between the Government and the province of Nova Scotia under the Canada Assistance Plan.

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I hope to conclude my remarks within a reasonable period of time because of course there is an over-all limit to our debate on the energy bills.

I do not want to repeat anything that I said last night, but let me just say that there can be no settlement of the offshore dispute, there can be no development of the Hibernia and Hebron oil fields off the coast of Newfoundland, until there is a political accommodation. Let me say, Madam Speaker, that there will never be a political accommodation while we have a minister of energy, mines and resources who acts as this minister has acted.

I now refer to The Evening Telegram of Wednesday April 7, 1982, with the headline "Tory tide sweeps Newfoundland". In that paper, after the great victory of the Peckford government on April 6, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was asked for his comments, and I quote now from the CP story headed, "Lalonde says the Tories lied". That was the conciliatory position that the minister took after the people of Newfoundland overwhelmingly gave an endorsement to the position of the Newfoundland government on the offshore dispute. The article says:

> The sweeping Conservative victory in Newfoundland's general election will not change the federal government's position in the dispute over control and management of offshore resources, Energy Minister Marc Lalonde said Tuesday.
>
> Lalonde, accusing Premier Brian Peckford's Conservatives of resorting to "outright lies" during the 22-day campaign, said the election results mean nothing as far as Ottawa is concerned.
>
> "Our principles remain the same," he told reporters. "We have no new proposals to put forward."
>
> Lalonde said the federal government held back from intervening in the campaign even though there were "a lot of misrepresentations ... frankly outright lies" from Conservatives about the federal position on offshore resources.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that there is now just about a state of war between the province of Newfoundland, the last province to enter confederation, and this government here in Ottawa which thinks it can ignore the majority opinion of the people of the province of Newfoundland, developed and delivered overwhelmingly in the election of April 6? Then they have a federal minister say that the government has lied and he will not change his position whatsoever as a result of that election victory. Then they have the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), Mr. Speaker, go down to Newfoundland on May 19 and make an announcement. There is a picture of the Minister of Justice down in Newfoundland threatening the government—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Crosbie: —telling the people of Newfoundland that he was going to take this matter out of the purview of the Newfoundland courts and bring it to the courts in Ottawa. There is a picture—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows what I am about to indicate to him. I can keep it brief. Perhaps he can keep his remarks in the category of "tell" and not in the category of "show and tell".

Mr. Crosbie: I accept your injunction, Mr. Speaker, because, of course, your rulings are known for their sagacity.

• (1510)

Mr. Smith: That's thin ice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: On the opposite side of the House we have "assidy". In the Chair we have sagacity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That is the atmosphere. Hon. members over there can bellow and shout but it will mean that I will keep speaking all day and all night. I have unlimited time. Or hon. members can let me conclude my remarks because I have a few pertinent things to say.

That, Mr. Speaker, sets the background as to how the government of Newfoundland has been cheated by the government opposite in a negotiation on something that could split this country apart and which could endanger confederation as it is now in Newfoundland.

Just to put things in perspective I want to give you some economic facts. Why is it that the government of Newfoundland and the people of Newfoundland want so badly to have the administration and control of these offshore resources? I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. Do you know that right now, today, the official unemployment rate in Newfoundland is 16.1 per cent? We are told there are 38,000 unemployed people in Newfoundland and the actual official rate is 17 per cent. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the rate in reality, not the official rate, is double that? I refer you to the study done by the Economic Council of Canada in 1980. It is entitled "Newfoundland—From Dependency to Self-Reliance. On page 48 we find:

> During the month of March when seasonal unemployment in Newfoundland is high, for every four individuals counted as unemployed, there may be three others with rather similar socio-economic characteristics and recent job experience who want a job but are not actively searching work.

People know there are no jobs even if they seek them. The official rate today is not 16.1 per cent. The actual unemployment rate in Newfoundland today, as sure as I am standing here, and let me be struck down if I am not telling the truth, is 32 or 33 per cent. That is why the government of Newfoundland wants to have control and administration of its own resources. That is why this is such an important matter to the people of Newfoundland.

Let me refer you to the magazine entitled Au courant. It is put out by the Economic Council of Canada. It is Volume 1, No. 2, Fall, 1980. It deals with the Newfoundland situation as well. I look now at page 4. Do not think, Mr. Speaker, and let no member opposite think, that we are lazy in Newfoundland, because Au courant reports as follows:

> First, the work ethic is very much alive in Newfoundland. Compared with their Ontario counterparts, unemployed Newfoundlanders made a greater effort to find work. More than Ontarians, Newfoundlanders search for jobs outside of their own locality and even outside the province. Newfoundlanders are also more mobile than Ontarians. They are not only willing to work elsewhere in the province or outside the province, but they have proven that willingness by holding such jobs in the past.

That is an excerpt from a report prepared by the Economic Council of Canada. We do not have this unemployment problem because we are lazy louts, because we are too lazy to get out of our way and because we want unemployment insurance. We want work. This government here in Ottawa is keeping us from getting work. This Liberal government is dedicated to keeping us ignorant and poor and is forcing us to continue for another 100 years looking for work everywhere on the globe. That is what this issue is about, Mr. Speaker. That was from page 4. I am moving on to page 9 of the same magazine.

Just listen to this, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to interrupt the cabinet meeting over there. They do not have enough decency to carry on their conversations outside.

Mr. Ouellet: Why don't you go to hell?

Mr. Crosbie: The minister of "oozlette" should go outside if he wants to have a conversation now.

Mr. Ouellet: What about the other people?

Mr. Crosbie: Then we have the minister who is supposed to be the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray). Let him listen and learn of the conditions in Newfoundland. He was the one who killed the synchrolift for the Newfoundland dockyards and tried to stop employment in Newfoundland.

Mr. Ouellet: What about your two colleagues over there?

Mr. Crosbie: You haven't even got the manners of an ignorant lout. Go outside if you want to talk.

Mr. Ouellet: Two of your colleagues are talking. That is how important you are in your own party. They do not even listen to you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if I thought that minister had a contribution to make to anything, I would sit down and let him speak. He never speaks in this House. He oozes. That is all he ever does in this House.

Mr. Ouellet: Just listen to him.

Mr. Crosbie: The minister responsible for the Post Office should keep his mouth shut.

On page 9 of Au courant we find the following:

> UI benefits in the province amount to $408 for every Newfoundlander; the comparable figure for all Canada is $169. A scant one-fortieth of personal income in Canada comes from unemployment insurance; in Newfoundland, UI is the source of one twelfth of personal income.

Do you understand that, Mr. Speaker, that in my province one twelfth of all personal income comes from unemployment insurance? Do you think we want that condition to go on forever? The average for Canada is one fortieth, but in Newfoundland it is one twelfth. It might suit the Liberal government to believe that we are satisfied in Newfoundland with unemployment insurance. But, believe me, we are not. We do not want Liberal handouts; we want work and we want the opportunity to work. We want to earn income, and that is what this struggle over the offshore is all about, because unless Newfoundland has the control and the administration of the offshore it will never have work. Our people will be like gypsies for the rest of their lives looking for work and leaving their wives and children behind.

I will quote now from a column written by Mr. Don McGillivray of Southam News. His article is written about the report. He writes about the average earned income in 1978, and let me stress the words "earned income". His column, in part, reads:

In 1978, the average earned income for Canadians was $6,928. The comparable average income per Newfoundlander was $3,710 or 53.6 per cent of the national average.

The earned income in Newfoundland is 53 per cent of earned income for the rest of Canada. Is it any wonder that we want justice? Is it any wonder that we want opportunities? Is it any wonder that we detest the government that sits in this House and tries to keep us from being in a position where we can earn our own way and make a contribution to the rest of Canada?

Let me give you some other figures, Mr. Speaker. The per capita income in Newfoundland is two thirds of the national average. That is because of transfer payments. We are grateful, of course, to be a part of Canada and to be receiving these kinds of payments, but we do not want always to be dependent upon the rest of Canada. When we have a chance to become independent and make a contribution, why is there a government in Canada—and there is a Newfoundlander who sits in its ranks, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey), who wants to stop us from ever being independent in Newfoundland—

Mr. Rompkey: Tell us about the hydro corridor.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't open your mouth, my son, or I will have to clean you up. I have no time for you. I have bigger game than you; the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Newfoundland's per capita income is two thirds of the national average. In family incomes, Newfoundlanders have 80 per cent of the national average. We are glad about that. We are glad to be part of confederation and part of the social security system. But now our turn is coming. We want our place in the sun. We want to make our contribution to Canada. We brought with us all of the wealth and the riches which the Government of Canada now wants to take and to control so that we will not have control over our own destiny and we will always be beholden to the Government of Canada. That is not good enough. It is not going to work. No courts can solve it. Only a politically reasonable settlement can solve it.

That brings me to a proposal which the Government of Newfoundland made on January 25, 1982. This proposal was never responded to by the Government of Canada. The lordly minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is here today for a brief few fleeting moments, never responded to the Newfoundland proposal. I do not have time to go into it in any great detail. But for any members who want copies of the proposal, I can provide them. This proposal was more than reasonable. The Government of Newfoundland said that it would like to receive 75 per cent of the total government oil revenues, the traditional share received by the western provinces, until its fiscal and economic situation reached the equivalent of that which pertains across Canada. When that point was reached, the federal government would take more and we would take less. In the economic formula that point would be reached when we in Newfoundland had the same national earned income and the same national unemployment rate as the rest of Canada had. Is that not fair? Are we to receive less as long as our earned income is less than the Canadian average and as long as our unemployment is worse than the Canadian average? Is there anything unfair or improper about that proposal? Of course not.

• (1520)

Then it went on. They wanted joint management. Newfoundland did not claim that it wanted absolute ownership and control. It suggested a seven-member joint agency in which each government would have three members, with an independent chairman and a board to administer it which could not be overridden by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who can override the Nova Scotia board whenever he wants. They wanted joint management. Joint means joint; no one is superior to the other. This is what Newfoundland suggested, but members on the government side of the House would not even respond to that reasonable suggestion.

As I say, I do not have the time to go into all the points. They said that they wanted legislative ratification. They wanted the question of legal ownership set aside for as long as an agreement was entered into. I should like to refer to a few other brief points in the Newfoundland proposal. I will refer to a synopsis of it now, the March 16, 1982, analysis of that proposal. At page 8 it reads:

—we wished to negotiate a broad attack on unemployment using oil as the focus.

Some people think that Premier Peckford is a bit too harsh, a bit too extreme and a bit too excitable. Well, he is harsh, extreme and excitable because he is worried and concerned about the people of Newfoundland. He wants to use the offshore to negotiate a broad attack on unemployment, using oil as the focus. I say, "Premier Peckford, carry on. Whatever the controversy or the criticism is, you are trying to do something for your own fellow Newfoundlanders to put them on their feet, so that they do not have to tip their hats or bow their heads to anyone".

At page 9 it reads:

The Province must be in a position to influence the pace and manner of development and to ensure that the traditional industries of the Province are protected.

Surely to God anyone who has gone to Scotland and has seen what happened in Aberdeen, or anyone who has gone to Norway, will know what the effects of the offshore are on the inshore. The local government or the provincial government must be in a position to control building and to control the pace of development. They have to supply the infrastructure, the roads, the water and sewage and all these things. They have to be provided by the province. We have to protect our traditional industry, the fishery. Are we to let the fishery go just because the greedy-guts federal Government of Canada now wants to hurdle on with the development of Hibernia since the Beaufort is in trouble and the Minister of Energy has assassinated the Alsands tar sands plant, has suffocated the Cold Lake heavy oil plant and has set back the oil and gas industry in Canada by years? Are we in Newfoundland to suffer? Are we to give them control and now let them rush, no matter what happens on land in Newfoundland, to get the oil out of Hibernia? Never, it will not happen. It does not matter what legal decisions are arrived at.

At page 10 in the same document it reads:

> It must be remembered that, even if an offshore agreement was signed with the federal government today, there would be no resource revenues for the province for five or six years . . . until production starts.

We are not talking about immediate wealth for Newfoundland. There is no wealth. It will be five or six years before the province will get a penny if an agreement is signed this year. The province is in dire straits financially, as are most provinces. This is no bonanza for Newfoundland. We will not rush off to the banks and start banking our money. It will be five or six years before there will be any revenue for Newfoundland, even if there were an agreement this year.

Then the document goes on to point out that every proposal advanced by the Government of Canada included federal ownership as the underlying premise. Then at page 13 it points out what the Newfoundland proposal recognized, that our earned income was only half the national average and the need for the tax burden to be reduced on Newfoundlanders. We in Newfoundland have the highest sales taxes in the country and the highest cost of living. The cost of living is 17 per cent higher. It is higher in St. John's than it is on the mainland. We have the lowest incomes and the highest cost of living. We want that changed before we reduce the revenue which should come to Newfoundland from offshore oil and gas. Also it indicated that the provincial debt should be retired. We have a very heavy debt burden.

The document went on to indicate that capital expenditures should be financed from revenue rather than from borrowing, and that the provincial income should be diversified to provide for the day when the resources run out. Is that unreasonable? No, it is not unreasonable. Revenue sharing has to be based upon equity, as was indicated on page 14.

My final quote from this document is at page 17. It reads:

> In summary then, the present federal proposal is faulty because it:
>
> (1) has no assurance of permanence;
>
> (2) represents total federal control not joint management;
>
> (3) denies the Province a constructive partnership role;
>
> (4) fails to acknowledge the Province's right to a fair share in resource revenues and offers instead a new form of welfare payment; and
>
> (5) fails to provide a comprehensive commitment to a program of economic development based on offshore resource development.

That is what was wrong with the federal proposal.

The federal government would not respond to that proposal. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would not respond to it. The Newfoundland Government said two things. It wanted the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to stick to his promise to set aside the question of ownership while negotiations went on, and to set it aside if an agreement was reached. It wanted the federal government to agree again to that, after its treachery in the SIU case. The second thing it wanted was a response from the federal government as to what was wrong with that proposal. I have the document right here. They wanted the federal government to say what was wrong with that proposal for settlement which they presented on January 25. That is all they wanted from the federal government, but the Prime Minister, in his surprise attack on May 20 when he referred this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada, ignored all that and said that they were setting down pre-conditions which he could not meet.

Let me move on to May 19. I will not get into the question of the Minister of Justice and what he did when he was asked a question on May 19. I have put down a private member's motion, which I am expecting the government to call in the House shortly, about the conduct of the Minister of Justice who misled this House.

Mr. Tousignant: You will probably ask him to resign.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, my dear friend, the Minister of Justice will never meet the challenge. He has turned pale and has run so far that we cannot even catch a glimpse of him.

I have a motion. It is the government's obligation to call this motion, which accuses the Minister of Justice of misleading the House. I will not say in what manner because we will get into a little hassle over whether or not it is parliamentary. I have asked for it to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the committee report to the House as to whether the conduct of the minister was consistent with that expected of a minister of the Crown. Unless the Minister of Justice is a complete poltroon, or unless he wants to confess that he misled the House on the day in question, I am expecting the government to vote for my motion as soon as it gives it time to be debated. Then we can put this matter to the test and see.

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Crosbie: I am going to speak to the bill.

Mr. Collenette: Then do it now.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to speak about the Minister of Justice. He is a hopeless case. He is afraid to be here and to get involved in this debate.

I will skip the question of what went on on May 19, but on May 20 the government put out a misleading press release when it referred this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I have a copy of the release in my hand. This copy of the release was filed in the Supreme Court of Canada registry. Never in our history, as far as I could find out, has a political document of the Minister of Justice ever been filed in the registry of the Supreme Court of Canada. It was a political insult to the Supreme Court of Canada. The docket number was 17096, and it was filed on May 20, 1982. It was a statement by the Minister of Justice on the Newfoundland offshore reference. It was a disgraceful piece of action by someone, either in the minister's department or in that registry, to put that in the docket with the notices of motions and other documents. It indicated that the Government of Canada had filed that day with the Supreme Court of Canada a reference concerning jurisdiction over seabed resources in the Hibernia area offshore Newfoundland. That was not the truth; that was an untrue statement. It is not just the Hibernia area. Everyone in the country knows the Hibernia area to mean the Hibernia oil well or the Hibernia oil field.

Also I have here an affidavit of Steven M. Millan.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it Mr. Speaker's intention to ask the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to speak to Bill C-103, which does not deal with the offshore issue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) put his intervention as a question to the Chair. I am a bit awkward about replying directly in that fashion to members who may want to question the Chair. The argument about relevance is extremely difficult. I have been paying attention to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I think the only thing I could say is that if he will attempt to direct his remarks toward the bill, it would probably be of assistance. But I will not find that the hon. member is not relevant.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I know that they do not want to listen to the truth. Bill C-103 defines Canada lands. They have defined Canada lands to include the Hibernia area and all the east coast of Newfoundland and the Labrador offshore area. How can any feeble-minded twit from the government benches opposite suggest that it is not relevant for me to discuss the area that is included in Canada lands?

• (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I should have said honourable twit.

I refer to an affidavit of Steven M. Millan, executive director of the Petroleum Directorate in Newfoundland. He has examined the order in council, and the area described in it comprises 819.9 square acres or approximately 212,000 hectares—this is for the government opposite since they only deal in hectares—and 35 square miles is the area. In that area is the Hibernia oil field, the Nautilus geological structure, the Terra Nova geological structure, the west Ben Nevis and the Ben Nevis geological structure which are all oil fields, or potential oil fields. Therefore, this is not just a reference about the Hibernia oil field, as was pretended by the minister in his release and as was stated by the Prime Minister in his letter. They know not how to be accurate when it comes to describing the facts or telling the truth.

There are pictures of the structure, but I dare not show them to the House since that apparently is not in order. It is also pointed out in the affadavit that even if there was an agreement reached now it would be three to five years before all the environmental and development plans could be approved. It would be over five years before there could be any production. What is the rush? What is the hurry, in other words, for the federal government to slam-bang this into the Supreme Court of Canada when the field, at best, could not be developed for another five years? It will have a life of about 25 years from first to final production.

Incidentally, as you know—I think I mentioned this last night—it was on February 12 that Newfoundland referred this matter to the Newfoundland court of appeal. We are even given false information in the Prime Minister's statement and the minister's press release on May 20. The tissue of deceit, deception and false information clouds the whole issue. One of the questions is this: is there a precedent in the history of this mighty dominion, our confederation, or has there ever been one case or situation where the Government of Canada intervened when a provincial government made a reference to its highest provincial court? Has there ever been a case in our history when the Government of Canada, against the objections of a province, took it out of the hands of the highest provincial court of appeal and referred the case instead to the Supreme Court of Canada without the consent of that province?

I will tell you that the Library of Parliament, legal authorities working for the province of Newfoundland and other people here have not found one precedent. Did that deter this Minister of Justice? Did that deter the man who is supposed to be the fountain of our justice system? It did not. He went to a meeting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on May 27. In giving testimony at that meeting he stated, quite improperly and falsely, that there were precedents. He cited six or eight precedents which, he said, applied to this situation. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Perrault of the other House, spoke in the other place and said there were 12 precedents. Senator Flynn of the other House had the Library of Parliament check into this. He could not believe his ears that the government was claiming that there were 12 precedents of the Government of Canada stepping in against the will of a provincial government to take a matter and refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada although it had been already before the highest court of the province. The report of the Library of Parliament was attached to the Senate Hansard of June 2. If you turn to the appendix of the Senate Hansard of June 2, you will find, on the last page called "A Critical Analysis of Reference Case Precedents", that the research branch of the Library of Parliament had considered all these cases and states:

—whether a question has been referred by the central government to the Supreme Court of Canada for adjudication while the same question or a similar question is pending on a reference before a provincial court of appeal. In addition, it is appropriate to examine the attitude of the provincial government as to whether it supported the reference by the central government, or whether it opposed it and decided to continue with its own reference before its own court of appeal.

It took every case cited by Senator Perrault and every case cited falsely to the House of Commons Justice Committee by the Minister of Justice. In every case, not one is relevant to that issue. The only case which even appears to be in the same league at all is the 1932 Radio Broadcasting Act. In that case, the matter was referred by the central government to the Supreme Court of Canada without any opposition from the province of Quebec to that reference. The reference to the Quebec court of appeal did not proceed because the Quebec government preferred to have the matter proceed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

All 12 of those references cited by the highest legal officer in this land, given to the leader of the government in the Senate to mislead the Senate, were used by him to mislead the hon. members of the House and the Justice Committee and were not precedents at all. It is unprecedented that the head of a judicial system in Canada should carry on in such a careless manner. If we suppose that he did not know that these cases were not references, he should then dismiss all of his staff who advise him. He should do that because, knowingly or not knowingly, he misled the House of Commons Justice Committee and he allowed the government leader in the Senate to do the same.

If that were not bad enough, while he was doing that he said, as recorded at page 8917 of the Justice Committee hearings, that there was a good precedent created by the prime minister of Canada, Mr. Bennett. That is the case to which I just referred, which is not a precedent at all.

He had this insulting remark to make about Senator Lang of the other House. Senator Lang had introduced a resolution in the other House which deplored the actions of the government in going ahead with this reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I refer you to the Senate debates on May 20 as reported at page 4160 where Senator Lang moved a motion that the Senate deplores the decision of the Government of Canada to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of jurisdiction over the seabed resources off Newfoundland called Hibernia while at the same time the appeal court of Newfoundland is seized with the matter that includes this very question.

Senator Lang is a Liberal member of the Senate, but he is a man who has a strong sense of respect for the judicial institutions of this country. He is not a toady of the Prime Minister. He is not a tame tabby or a little pussycat of the Liberal caucus. He is an independent man who moved that motion.

The Minister of Justice, who has never practised law or, if he has, it has not been for the last 17 years—just to show you the breadth and dimension of this man who heads our justice system—said, "It is evident that Senator Lang is retired. He does not work as hard as he used to because he would have found that very easy." In other words, he would have found those precedents that supported the federal action. In the first place, the precedents do not support the federal government's action. In the second place, Senator Lang is not retired. He still practises in Toronto. He has more brains, more nerve, and more gumption in his little finger than the Minister of Justice has in his whole body. If you include the rest of the cabinet, Senator Lang would be far ahead of the 34 of them put together. That is the kind of denigrating remark that this small-minded Minister of Justice made about Senator Lang because he moved this motion in the Senate. He continued with all this misleading evidence about these references, which the Library of Parliament research branch has shown to be false.

The Hon. Eugene Forsey went through all the precedents as well. I hold a list from the former Senator who finds exactly the same thing. None of those 12 precedents were relevant. None of them are on all fours with the Newfoundland case. Mr. Forsey has reviewed them, and I daresay no one will say that he is not a worker.

Senator Eric Cook of Newfoundland quit the Liberal Party because he could no longer stand for this kind of action when the federal government referred this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada. Senator Cook is one of our foremost legal luminaries in Newfoundland and is a man with more backbone and courage than any thousands of others whom I could name. He finally quit the Liberal Party because he could no longer take it. Incidentally, I heard a report of his being denigrated by one of the reporters in our press gallery who said on a radio program, "Who is Senator Cook?" "What has he ever done", this twit asked? This person from central Canada, who I doubt has ever been to Newfoundland, tried to insult Senator Cook and asked, "What does it matter whether Senator Cook had left the Liberal Party or not?" Well, what matters is this: it shows that in our Dominion there are people who believe in principle and still have the courage to carry out their principles, who are prepared to leave the party they have lived with all their lives and have supported and worked for, because they can no longer take what is happening. That takes people of courage. That takes more courage and more character than that particular cretin from the press gallery will ever exhibit. Senator Cook's resignation is a great loss to the Liberal Party of Canada, believe you me.

• (1540)

I know that, unfortunately, we are limited in time. I just want to make one more reference to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You see, I do not think I have repeated myself more than once or twice in this debate. That shows how much there is to say, because I want to ensure that the people of Canada and hon. members of the House who care to listen understand. This is not some greedy, grasping group of people down in Newfoundland trying to take something from Canadians that it is not their right to take, or trying to keep from Canadians some resources which all Canadians should share. This is a group of people in Newfoundland trying to struggle to haul themselves up by their bootstraps. Anyone who has looked at our history and seen what we have been through will realize why there was a 61 per cent vote for the Peckford administration on April 6, and will realize what will happen to the five Liberal members who now sit in the House and have turned their backs on the people of Newfoundland while sitting here. I cannot wait for that next election to come.

Mr. Rompkey: Tell us about the hydro corridor.

Mr. Crosbie: Pardon?

Mr. Rompkey: Talk about standing up for Newfoundland on the hydro corridor.

Mr. Crosbie: The hydro transmission matter is widely understood in Newfoundland. You are trying to cut the guts out of the National Energy Board and are throwing in this little hydro clause as a sop. No one has been fooled by that, and no one thinks that hon. members opposite are friends of Newfoundland. Well, there might be a few out of the 620,000 people down in Newfoundland who think they are interested in Newfoundland.

The former Senator Forsey, who is widely regarded as a constitutional authority, said this about what the Government of Canada has done:

> The Dominion government's action is, as far as I know, unprecedented. It is in marked contrast to the procedure that government itself followed on the patriation resolutions. It is certainly irregular. It interferes with the normal judicial procedure by virtually removing from the Newfoundland Court of Appeal an essential part of the question placed before it. It is highly improper. It is a tactic that undermines the whole judicial system.

Unfortunately, our justice system is headed by the present Minister of Justice who does not understand and who has shown by his behaviour that he is quite prepared to interfere with our court system and the judiciary whenever he thinks it is to his political advantage. He is a man who can insult and denigrate a judge and criticize him obliquely without giving it a second thought. If we had a proper Minister of Justice who had any character or backbone, this incident would never have happened.

The Newfoundland Court of Appeal has set October 6 of this fall as the date when all of the documents and factums are to be in and when it will set the date for the hearing of the issue referred to it by the Newfoundland government, which involves the whole offshore area. The issues in that case are not one bit different from the one concerning the matter which the federal government has now sent to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada has now set the date for its hearing at November 27, I believe. In my view, it was a very bad mistake by the Supreme Court of Canada to set that matter down to be heard while the case is still before the Newfoundland Court of Appeal and a decision has not yet been rendered. They were put in a very difficult position.

An hon. Member: Come on, wind down.

Mr. Crosbie: My friend to the left wants me to wind down. This is exactly what I am doing. They only reason I am doing that, of course, is that we agreed to a certain limited number of hours to deal with these energy bills and there are other hon. members on this side of the House who have a contribution to make.

There is no issue more important to this country than the issue I am speaking on now, because this is an issue which will not be settled for a long time yet and will not be settled unless we have a different government or see a complete change of attitude in the hon. members who sit opposite. It may, in fact, endanger our confederation unless there are changes in attitude.

So I will now wind up. I think I have done my best to try to explain the offshore issue to hon. members of this House.

I will quote from an editorial in the London Free Press of May 24, 1982. It starts off by discussing whether or not the federal Minister of Justice deliberately misled the House of Commons, and said that, whether or not he did, "he certainly was less than candid." I think we can all agree with that. The editorial goes on to state:

> But Crosbie is right to call for an investigation of Chretien's remarks. It would be useful for a parliamentary committee to review the standards of candour to be expected when ministers of the Crown respond to questions in the Commons.

It is very necessary to review the standards of candour to be expected when ministers of the Crown respond to questions in the Commons.

One of the most startling, highly unusual explanations of the Minister of Justice for the answer he had given to the questions on May 19 was when he said that in his mind there had been certain conditions. He now feels that whatever, is in his mind, of course, is something that he has said. He said, "There was a decision which had been made with some conditions attached. I just said there was no decision because some conditions had to be met". The minister said there was no decision because, although there was a decision, there were some conditions which had to be met. The standards of candour of ministers should definitely be reviewed. I am hoping the government will vote for my motion when it comes forward, when the government gives it time, if it has the courage to do that.

The editorial goes on to state:

> As for the oil and gas court case, there is nothing illegal about the reference to the Supreme Court, but it is of questionable propriety.

That is quite right and exactly on point. At the end, in reference to the Newfoundland court, the editorial states:

> Out of respect for that court and in the absence of any compelling need for a quick and definitive decision, the Trudeau government should have left the matter alone, while reserving the right to appeal an adverse ruling to the supreme court of Canada.

That is also quite right, and I highly recommend that the government rehabilitate itself in part by withdrawing the reference it has made and waiting until the Newfoundland Supreme Court deals with the matter. It should then be appealed in the normal way, to be heard in 1983, here in Canada. The government will not see any quicker development of the Hibernia or the Hebron or any other oil field of eastern Canada by following the route it is taking. In addition to that, it has shaken the judicial system in Canada to its foundations. The government is on the wrong course. The people of Newfoundland have right and justice on their side. They want to be able to earn their own income and they want their turn in the sun. Only the kind of settlement that our party proposes for them will be the kind of settlement to settle this issue in a manner which is true to the nature of Canadian confederation. That is why it is important that this government either completely reverse itself or have the courage now to go to the electorate of Canada to see whether the people approve of the kinds of actions it has taken in the last two years and three months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. This will be a matter for the hon. member for Spadina to decide upon, I think. Ordinarily, the Chair looks from left to right, and in the debate on Bill C-103 there has been a tendency by the occupant of the Chair to look to the left, more usually. I just noticed that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) is on his feet, but I have already recognized the hon. member for Spadina. Would the hon. member care to follow the usual procedure in going from left to right, and I will recognize him after the minister?

Mr. Heap: Well, Mr. Speaker, can I have an indication as to whether the minister, in speaking for the government, will attempt to match the length of time of the hon. member who spoke before? If so, perhaps we could make our plans accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will recognize the Minister of National Revenue.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) as well. I want to say at the beginning that I do not intend to match the time used by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He said that he shed some heat on this question, and I hope I can shed some light.

I want to deal in the beginning, however, with the issue of courage because that has been raised as an essential element, courage on the part of the hon. member for St. John's West, courage in the sense of Newfoundland standing up against Canada. Canada is portrayed by the hon. member for St. John's West and other politicians in my province as being the enemy. You are courageous if you agree with the hon. member for St. John's West and the Premier of Newfoundland. However, if you hold a different position, you are somehow lacking in courage. You are considered not courageous and not standing up for your province. In my opinion, that smacks of demagoguery and I do not accept it. There are two points of view and I hope I can put the other point of view on the record today.

• (1550)

In terms of courage and standing up for Newfoundland, I want to ask the hon. member for St. John's West where was he standing up for Newfoundland when this government introduced in this House a bill to give Newfoundland the right to transmit hydro power across the province of Quebec to market. Where was he when that happened? That bill was put forward by a minister from Quebec and voted on by 74 Members of Parliament from Quebec from this side.

The hon. member for St. John's West took his courage in his hands and sat down for Newfoundland. That is what he did. He abstained. His party voted against it. The Conservative Party of Canada voted against the right of Newfoundland to have a hydro corridor to transmit power to market.

The hon. member for St. John's West, who talks so much about courage and for standing up for Newfoundland, sat down. He abstained. He did not vote for that. Let that be on the record. In the years to come, the record will bear out who in this House has courage, who has not, and who stands up for Newfoundland. The Government of Canada, we on this side of the House, want what is best for Newfoundland and Labrador.

This bill encourages Canadianization of the oil industry. It is a step toward self-sufficiency. We have to rely on all sources of oil if Canada is going to be self-sufficient.

I want to talk, as did the hon. member for St. John's West, about the offshore issue because it is crucial to my province at this time. I want to talk about the recent reference to the Supreme Court and about why there was no other option at this time but for the Government of Canada to proceed to the Supreme Court with a direct reference on ownership and the jurisdiction of those offshore resources.

There was no other option. For 14 years we tried to negotiate a settlement, a political settlement between the two levels of government. All the attempts over those 14 years failed. In order to get the matter resolved quickly, to get development going, to create jobs and revenue for Newfoundland and Labrador, if ownership is what is important, let us get it settled as quickly as possible. Let us get it settled in court.

Eventually it has to go to the Supreme Court of Canada, and a judgment has to be rendered. It does not matter what the Newfoundland court decides. Therefore, our position was to put the ownership issue in court if it was the important consideration. It can only be decided in court. I cannot decide ownership, nor can the opposition or the people of Newfoundland. Only the Supreme Court of Canada can decide ownership. The ownership issue cannot be put aside. Nobody can guarantee that the ownership issue can be put aside forever. Anybody can bring that issue to court.

A case in point is the SIU case. It was not the Government of Canada or the government of Newfoundland which brought the SIU case before the Supreme Court. It need not be a government which goes to court. Anybody can go to court. An oil company can go to court and get the ownership issue decided. If that is the important issue, it can ask the court to decide.

It cannot be put aside forever. Nobody can guarantee that. At some point in time it may be decided. If that is the case, why not decide it quickly and get it out of the way?

Newfoundland has nothing to lose with this action. There are those who say that Newfoundland has a good case, that it has a unique case. They say that Newfoundland came into confederation with certain resources. I believe that Newfoundland has a unique case. If that is true, then what have they to fear in the judgment of the Supreme Court? What have they to fear in a reference to the Supreme Court? If the case is good and just, there is nothing to fear from a judgment by the courts.

If Newfoundland wins, then it has ownership and can operate as if it were Alberta. However, if Newfoundland loses, it can still have a political deal. Where is the loss for Newfoundland? In this action Newfoundland is in a winning position no matter what happens. If it wins, it has ownership and can act like Alberta. If it loses, it can still make a political deal.

What is important is the deal. I do not believe that ownership is the important issue. I have never been able to understand why pure, bald legal ownership is the important issue. Let me give a case in point.

The opposition, including the hon. member for St. John's West, wants to make this government appear to be the enemy of Newfoundland and Labrador, this government which just opened up the St. Anthony fish plant in spite of the fact the Newfoundland government decided it would probably not issue a licence to that plant. That province has the highest rate of unemployment in Canada. There are 900 people out of work in St. Anthony. This government wanted to solve that problem, but it indicated it might not issue a licence. They would like us to appear to be the enemy. Are we the enemy of St. Anthony for wanting to put 900 people back to work in that community?

We were also the enemy when we created the Lower Churchill Development Corporation. Several years ago this government, this leader and this cabinet created the Lower Churchill Development Corporation, a 50-50 partnership of Canada and Newfoundland to harvest the hydro resources of the Lower Churchill River. The question of ownership is quite clear. Newfoundland owns every drop of water in that river. Who controls it? Who has jurisdiction? Who are the partners in the Lower Churchill Development Corporation? Canada and Newfoundland.

There is adequate precedent. There is no reason why the Lower Churchill Development Corporation cannot be a model for the offshore. Ownership does not have to be the overriding and overbearing issue. I do not believe that ownership is what is important. What is important is a deal, a settlement.

In that regard, I differ very little from what I heard the hon. member for St. John's West say. After you strip away all the rhetoric, all the denigration of this side, all the attempt to make us appear to be cowards for not standing up for Newfoundland and to make this government the enemy of Newfoundland, the bottom line of what he said was that it does not matter what the Supreme Court decides. That is what I heard him say. I agree with that.

What is important is a political deal. We have a deal with British Columbia, one with Alberta, one with Saskatchewan and one with Nova Scotia. For 14 years we have been trying to get a deal with Newfoundland. We must have that deal no matter what the Supreme court decides. That is the important issue. We must have a deal with Newfoundland that is good for Canada and good for Newfoundland, a deal that will stand up over time no matter what the courts decide. That is the important line. I want to repeat it again.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) went to Newfoundland to tell the people there exactly what we were doing and why. That is what he said in his release, and that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in his letter, that we want a deal that will stand up no matter what the courts decide.

What are the elements of that deal? For us they have not changed. Essentially there are two. The first is maximum revenues to Newfoundland, 100 per cent of the possible revenues to the government of Newfoundland. Why would we ask otherwise? Even if from a moral point of view, we should not give 100 per cent of the revenue to Newfoundland, and we should, look at the practicality. Equalization payments will flow to Newfoundland in any case. It is much better to have Newfoundland economically independent, standing on its own two feet financially. I thoroughly agree with that, as does the Government of Canada. That is why one of our principal negotiation positions has been 100 per cent of the possible revenues going to Newfoundland. What we would take out probably would be the federal corporation tax and no more. Indeed, in that settlement, Newfoundland might get more, and probably would get more than if it owned the resource, because Alberta now gets 23 per cent for a barrel of oil. Whereas in Newfoundland, if a proper deal were made, we could get more out of the deal than Alberta presently gets who owns the resource inshore.

• (1600)

So the first negotiating position is maximum revenues to Newfoundland. The second one is along the lines that I have already indicated, along the lines of the model of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation, that is, a joint administration. It is not Newfoundland or Canada, it is Newfoundland and Canada. We are fortunate to be part of a federation whereby we can have a government that is strong enough to help us when we need to get something developed in our province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: We need the Government of Canada. I do not need to tell Newfoundlanders what Canada has meant to them since 1949. One of the Premiers of Newfoundland has called confederation a blessing. That is the case, Mr. Speaker. It is not simply a matter of handouts, it is our right to expect that, it is our right to expect that Canada will help us now. And she will, if we will give her half a chance. What we want is a joint board, a joint administration on the part of Canada and Newfoundland. It does not have to be the Nova Scotia deal. In the Nova Scotia deal I understand that the power given to Nova Scotia was in the form of a veto.

Mr. Crosbie: No veto. Look at the agreement again.

Mr. Rompkey: That is a possibility. My understanding is that Nova Scotia can hold any decision up for a period of time if they do not like it. That is power, power to Nova Scotia.

Mr. Crosbie: Try and be truthful. There is no veto by Nova Scotia.

Mr. Rompkey: If that is not acceptable to Newfoundland, then there are other options.

Mr. Crosbie: Tell the truth in your speech.

Mr. Rompkey: We went through the 1980 election, Mr. Speaker, and since that time, on the basis of a joint administration between Canada and Newfoundland. I do not want to talk about the details.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister is misleading the House. Can he point to any section in that Nova Scotia agreement that gives them a veto over decisions? The power is in the hand of the Government of Canada and the minister. The minister is misleading the House, unless he can point to a clause.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, in the Nova Scotia agreement I mentioned an option, an option.

Mr. Crosbie: You said "veto".

Mr. Rompkey: There are other options. Newfoundland can have its own unique deal if it so desires, a deal that will be set on that basic principle of a joint administration between Canada and Newfoundland. It does not have to be the Nova Scotia deal, it can be a different deal, a unique deal, specifically for Newfoundland. But you cannot negotiate a deal if you walk away from the table. That is exactly what happened.

We are being accused now of putting an issue in court. It was the government of Newfoundland who put that issue in court, Mr. Speaker. It was the government of Newfoundland who walked away from the negotiating table and put that issue in court. What we are saying now is, if it is in court, let us settle it as speedily as possible. We want to get back to the bargaining table because we want on this side what is best for Newfoundland. I have already cited instances of that. There is a need for oil development now in Newfoundland. It is not going to be the saviour and there will be difficulties. Let us not underestimate that. There is a direct conflict between oil and fish. Let us not paper over the difficulties that we have, let us not paper over the fears of many of our people.

I know there are people with money invested who want to get going on the offshore. But there are also a lot of people in small fishing communities in Newfoundland who fear what might happen as a result of that development. That is another reason I think that we need the power and the support of the Government of Canada in transport, in national defence, in environmental protection, to make sure that we have the laws of both governments on our side.

There is a need to create jobs, there is a need to create wealth. My colleague to the left of me now—who was formerly the minister of regional economic expansion—has said many times that the people whom I represent are among those in Canada who need help most. They need real help, real dollars, real jobs, and the way to give them those jobs is to develop that resource. Let us get it going quickly, let us not put if off, let us not procrastinate, let us not wait for another day. There is need in Newfoundland, there is a need in Canada for that oil development. We have to have the resources in the Beaufort Sea and the resources of the Arctic and the resources offshore, if we are going to be self-sufficient. We can be self-sufficient in Canada. We have tremendous resources, if only we would stop arguing and fighting among ourselves and start working together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: If only we could do that, Mr. Speaker. We are our own greatest enemy in that sense. We are our own greatest enemy in the sense that we have so much to be thankful for, so many resources. We continually fight among ourselves and delay the development of those resources which could bring us such great wealth and such great power and such a great economy.

So there is a need in Newfoundland, there is a need in Canada; and both those needs can be addressed and both those needs can be resolved. That is so if we can have a deal, if we can sit down at the same table and work things out, as we did on the Lower Churchill Development Corporation. We did it in Newfoundland. If we can work things out as we did in British Columbia, work things out as we did in Saskatchewan, work things out as we did in Nova Scotia, work things out as we did in Baie Verte in my province a little while ago on the asbestos mine. In that last case the government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada sat down together at a table and worked out a deal. It is possible, it can be done, with men of good will and men of vision, Mr. Speaker. That is what has to be done with the offshore. I do not think we should play the game of making friends and enemies, who is for us and who is against us, who has courage and who has not. That is rhetoric. What the people of Newfoundland want now is some wisdom and some good will and an earnest desire to develop their resources for Newfoundland and for Canada. There has to be federal involvement. I would urge the government of Newfoundland to come back to the bargaining table.

The leaders of the churches in Newfoundland recently sent a telex to the Prime Minister and a telex to the Premier of Newfoundland. I will not read the whole of it, but I will read part of it, Mr. Speaker. It says this:

—the process of negotiation is the obvious method of reconciling differences and producing some real agreement ... If this is impossible ... it is all the more important that the issues be clearly and decisively resolved by placing them before the courts of the land in some mutually agreed way.

In some mutually agreed way. If there has got to be a reference, let it be a joint reference. We asked for that. We would have preferred that, I think it is fair to say. "It is all the more important," they say. The bottom line in the telex from the leaders of the Roman Catholic Church, the United Church and the Anglican Church in Newfoundland is this:

—to enter immediately into serious and meaningful discussions on offshore jurisdiction. If as a result of such discussions they see no alternative but to put the matter before the courts, we would urge that they do this in a manner which recognizes the legitimate interests and concerns of both parties.

In other words, there is a case for Canada, there is a case for Newfoundland. In other words I think what they are saying is, and I support it—and I did not hear the hon. member for St. John's West not support it; as a matter of fact, if there was a bottom line in his speech it was exactly the same—that this can really only be solved, this offshore question, by negotiation. There really has to be a political settlement, no matter what the courts decide. I would urge Newfoundland to come back to the table, I would urge them to sit down in good faith, with some vision and with some wisdom, and strike a deal that is good for us in all parts of the country.

We do not have to choose our citizenship. I do not have to choose between being a Newfoundlander and being a Canadian. I can be both at the same time, and I can work both for my province and for my country. I think that is possible, and I think that those around that table at that time will be able to do the same thing. That is what has to be done, Mr. Speaker. I urge now that rhetoric be put aside and that all of us who really have the best interest of Newfoundland at heart come to the table and start negotiating that deal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question just as he is finishing. Is the minister saying that the Government of Canada is now prepared to discuss this and to give a response to the Government of Newfoundland in connection with its proposal of January 25, 1982, which up to now it has refused to respond to? Is the minister prepared to put aside the question of ownership while the negotiations continue and if an agreement is reached? Is that what the minister is saying?

• (1610)

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, all sort of responses are possible if you are sitting at the table, if you are discussing, if you are having a conversation, if you are negotiating. All kinds of responses are possible then, but if you are not negotiating, responses become very difficult. I do not think we should be negotiating at arm's length and I do not think we should be negotiating through the media. I think if we have good will and the interests of Newfoundlanders at heart and if we come back to the table with no pre-conditions, then there will be a response. I do not think the Government of Canada has had an opportunity to give a response.

Mr. Crosbie: Why not?

Mr. Rompkey: Because there is nobody at the table to respond to. I am saying we should get back to the negotiating table. Other deals have been struck, and we could have a deal as well.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have chosen this occasion to speak in opposition to Bill C-103, especially because it is an example of what the government's policy is doing to the working people of Canada. In that I include Newfoundland and not least the Province of Ontario of which I represent a part, the mainly working-class riding of Spadina.

This bill deals in part with taxes in relation to the oil industry, the maritime taxes, the airline taxes, taxes for oil compensation, taxes on ownership and so on, while other bills deal with grants and huge giveaways to the richest and most powerful corporations in the world. This bill deals with the method by which the government collects billions of dollars from the working men and women of the country and hands them over to the oil companies.

All this can be illustrated by some figures covering the last two years, Mr. Speaker. In 1980 the average home burned about 4,500 litres of heating oil and would have paid about $400 for it; in 1981 that would have cost $1,170, and in March of this year it would have cost $1,275. In the same way, a family in which the breadwinner has to commute to work by automobile, in 1980 would have paid $216 for about 2,700 litres of gasoline, the following year it would have cost $945, and as of March this year it would have cost $1,030. These expenses which totalled $616 two years ago now total $2,305, so there is a difference of nearly $1,700. That comes out of the pockets of working men and women—if they are lucky enough to have a place to live and a job. In other words, the original cost of a little over $600 has more than tripled in two years.

In the over-all picture there has been a 30 per cent rise in the cost of living, all of which comes from the increase in the price of oil. This is happening at a time when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) daily tell working people to restrain their demands, not to ask for more money. They expect these people to pay 30 per cent more for necessities within two years because the government is taxing them for oil, but they are not to ask for any more money to help pay that tax. In fact, a large part of that increase in the price of oil comes from taxes.

It is interesting that Imperial Oil and its friends are putting out advertisements which, with the usual kinds of half truths, say that $3 out of every $5 of the cost of gasoline goes for taxes. That may well be true, but what Imperial oil and its friends try to hide from the working people of this country is that every cent of the taxes they pay to the federal government is returned to them, and more besides.

In the three years between 1977 and 1980 this government, and the short and unlamented government of the Conservative Party which had six months in which to make matters as much worse as it could—in tax concessions to the oil companies gave them $13 billion at a time when only $5 billion was collected from them. In other words, the giveaway by the Liberal and Conservative governments to the corporate welfare bums that are the oil companies, was $8 billion or almost $700 per worker in this country.

This year the government plans to give away much more. It was announced a couple of weeks ago that Imperial Oil and its friends would receive an extra $2 billion. The government has already taken $1.3 billion out of transfer payments to the provinces for health and education and has given it to the oil companies. In fact, what it is doing is offering the oil companies a subsidy of 80 to 93 cents on the dollar for a great deal of their exploration activities.

We have heard a lot of preaching from members on my right about how the oil companies know where to find oil, but they do not like to practise what they preach because they ask the working people to pay 80 per cent to 93 per cent of the cost of finding that oil. Then when the oil is found, using the taxes of working people, Imperial Oil and its friends to my right in this chamber, want to own the whole thing and cream off the total profit.

The whole system is now collapsing around the ears of the Prime Minister and the former prime minister, now the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark). It has been admitted by the Prime Minister and half admitted by his deputy, who has had to come back from Europe to try to hold the fort on the other side of the House that the fight against inflation was a tragic mistake. All the brave words that the Prime Minister and members on the government front benches have been spouting day after day for the last eight months were not true they now admit. This was their prime argument for enforcing misery on the working people of the country, and now they admit it was a tragic mistake. They have admitted that interest rates are too high and could go higher. They admit that bankruptcies have risen at a rate no one can remember unless they lived in the 1930s. They admit that unemployment has risen at a rate we have not heard of except in the 1930s and that all those evils are still increasing.

• (1620)

The government made cuts to health, education and housing and other services that working people need. It has broken promise after promise, such as the one to fund urban mass transit for the cities of Canada. This government will fund urban mass transit in New York City but not in Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver. It has admitted that factories are shutting down. We have lost about 350,000 jobs in less than a year, and the manufacturing industries which serve the Canadian people are in decline and laying off people by the tens of thousands. The government has absolutely no remedy because its only goal for the last eight months, as its members themselves said, was to fight inflation. The government has now admitted that was a complete mistake.

The Minister of Finance claimed he was going to reduce the deficit, but it in fact has come close to doubling it since he made that claim in November. All that time the one obligation this government honoured is the one to give taxpayers' money to Imperial Oil and its friends. The taxpayers are not in this case the corporations; they are the same people who originally produced the wealth of Imperial Oil and its friends. That system is falling down around the ears of the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance, and around the ears of the Leader of the Opposition and members on his front benches who have admitted publicly that they have no alternative policies and no alternative to high interest rates. They will not lift a finger to cut the profits of the banks or the oil companies who funded their election campaigns. In fact, they are racing each other to give them more. They have only one solution to the problem they created with their huge giveaway of the working people's taxes: cut the workers' pay. Of course, the Minister of Finance told us in the last couple of days that he really does not want to legislate a wage freeze. Well, all you have to remember is the election campaign of 1974 when the Prime Minister ridiculed the idea of a wage freeze and won back his majority government by promising not to implement a wage freeze which the Conservative campaign was placing front and centre. One has to give the Conservatives credit for having been honest. They asked for a wage freeze and, had they been put in office, undoubtedly would have enacted one. But the Prime Minister promised no wage freeze and within a year he froze wages. In other words, the Liberals practise what the Tories preach. We have no reason to believe the statements of the Prime Minister or Minister of Finance when they tell us they do not have a wage freeze in mind. We have every reason to believe they are simply trying to con us, trying to lull the working people of Canada into trusting them so that overnight, as before, the Prime Minister can say we have been living beyond our means so he is going to tighten your belt. He will not tighten the belts of the oil companies or the banks; he will tighten the belts of the people who produce the wealth of this country.

There is a steady campaign, Mr. Speaker, headed by this government, to misrepresent and vilify the working people of Canada. At every point the government ignores the question of profits and points incessantly at wages and salaries as the cause of our economic troubles. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, just after he received his fat raise to $104,000, made a speech in which he said the minimum wage is one of the causes of inflation. He condemns a worker who wants to get $3 an hour for his work as being a cause of inflation. This government is being forced from bad to worse by its absolute adherence and loyalty to the corporate welfare bums. We have the pathetic spectacle of the former President of El Salvador, Napoleon Duarte, lamenting that his friends in El Salvador's assembly, elected in a fraudulent vote, and his friends in Washington who helped do it, have wiped out the land reform program on which he staked his reputation. That is very similar to hearing our Prime Minister say that this whole anti-inflation fight, on which he and his government staked their reputation and risked the future of this country, is a tragic mistake. Just as Duarte's mistake came out of standing rigidly by the land owners of his country, so the Prime Minister's mistake comes from standing rigidly by the corporate welfare bums of Canada, the oil companies and the banks. He will not reduce by one penny the money he chooses to give them after he has taken it in taxes which do not even have a legal foundation. He has not passed the laws but he is collecting the taxes which he hands over to the corporations.

In spite of his brilliance, the Prime Minister of this country will go down in history as a failure. Like the unfortunate President of El Salvador, the Prime Minister has sold our country to people who do not care about Canada, most of whom do not live here and do not care two hoots who starves to death in Canada, and he will go down in history as an enemy of the Canadian people.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I spoke rather extensively on this bill during second reading so it is not my intention to do so again this afternoon. However, I want to make a couple of points. First of all, the $2 billion rebate to the oil and gas industry which was just recently announced is not sufficient to restore confidence in the industry, particularly on provincial lands. Something more is necessary.

• (1630)

A lady came to see me in my constituency office over the weekend. She told me that several years ago the governments of this nation offered working Canadians the possibility for equity investment in the oil and gas industry. In particular she mentioned the Alberta Gas Trunk Line which is now the Nova Corporation. Every Albertan was given the opportunity for equity investment in that corporation, in the tremendous growth of the oil and gas industry in Alberta. She also mentioned the Alberta energy company in which Albertans were given the opportunity for equity investment.

What I want to touch on briefly is the need for equity investment in our nation to get our economy moving. Right now Canada is sustaining itself primarily on debt investment. Debt investment creates a tremendous burden on small corporations and even on large corporations. For example, it was stated recently that the debt servicing of most companies in relation to net income went up from somewhere around 25 per cent to something like 66 per cent per annum.

Our economy is in real difficulty because of the fact that capital investment today is debt capital. Because interest rates are very high, a tremendous burden is placed on all areas of the business cycle, from the smallest corporation to the largest corporation.

The lady who came to visit me asked me when Canada would be getting round to permitting the working people of Canada to invest on an equity basis in Canadian industry instead of providing, literally, all the incentives for them to put their money into bonds, bank accounts and debt equities, through which they can gain a substantive amount of interest. I told her that I would come back to this House and try to put a resolution before it in that connection. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, today I moved, the following:

> Madam Speaker, equity investment pessimism is pervasive in Canada. Canadians are investing their money outside of Canada and in high-interest-bearing bonds and certificates. This has substantively curtailed the ability for equity capital generation in Canada and has jeopardized the survival of small business in Canada because of the high cost of debt capital. A new budget is necessary to create confidence in the Canadian economy, and it must contain incentives for equity investment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):
>
> That any new budget abolish capital gains taxation on all equity investment in Canadian registered companies.

Because this is a taxation bill and because we are dealing with the energy industry, which industry needs other incentives today just as so many industries do too, I want to touch on the matter of abolishing capital gains. Capital gains taxation netted the federal government, both from a personal and corporate point of view, $195 million in 1975, $275 million in 1976, $320 million in 1977 and $450 million in 1978. I do not have the intervening figures for the last couple of years because they are still being worked on, but today the stock market has reached a new low.

Let me say that for the next several years the capital gains taxation process at the federal level will collect very few dollars because losses will be extremely high in every aspect of Canadian society this year and the next several years. If there ever was a time to use the capital gains regime to create some investor confidence, particularly in the equity market, it is today. If there ever was a time to use this tool, it should be used today because it would cost the government very little in terms of generated revenue. It is a tax that will have a very slight effect on the collection of revenues in the next several years, as the cost of collection almost exceeds what is collected. Therefore, it can be used justifiably as an incentive for growth and equity investment.

I would recommend strongly that the federal government look very seriously at the removal of capital gains taxation as an incentive for equity investment and therefore growth of the Canadian market. This will keep Canadian dollars in Canada for investment in Canada on an equity basis rather than investment as debt capital.

I want to make a point again for the second time which has to do with this energy legislation. It is the same point that I made before in connection with the Canadianization of the industry, particularly Canadianization on provincial lands. As I have said, I do not have any difficulty with the federal government moving substantively into the area of Canadianization of the oil and gas industry on Canadian lands where there is a single jurisdiction. But I have increasing difficulty with a policy initiated at the federal level, which is then thrust upon the provinces, having to do with provincial resources in order to Canadianize those resources.

I say again to the government that it should consider very seriously whether it wishes to extend this Canadianization program in a substantive way as it has done with the oil and gas industry on provincial lands. This, more than any other aspect of this energy legislation, is causing instability. It is causing pessimism. It is the antithesis of good equity investment. I suggest that the federal government should think seriously of whether it really wants to force its ideological direction on Canadianization on the corporate structure on provincial lands. I say again that I have no difficulty in doing it where there is a single jurisdiction with regard to Canadian lands. But when it comes to provincial lands, it is a retardant for the regeneration of the economy. I suggest the federal government re-examine its position.

There are many other areas of this legislation about which I could speak. I spoke extensively when we debated the principle of the legislation so I will not go into that again, except to say that the Canadian economy has to be revitalized at the earliest opportunity or we will slide into a level of recession or depression not known since the 1930s. I think some stimulative measures have to be taken at the earliest possible date, stimulative measures in the area of equity investment and not debt investment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde), which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1640)

(Division No. 195)

YEAS

Messrs.

Appolloni (Mrs.)	Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Bloomfield
Bachand	Berger	Bossy
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Blais	Breau
	Blaker	Bujold
		Burghardt
Bussières	Fleming	MacEachen
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Flis	Mackasey
	Frith	MacLaren
Campbell (LaSalle)	Gauthier	MacLellan
	Gendron	Maltais
Campbell (Cardigan)	Gingras	Marceau
	Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)	Massé
Chénier		McCauley
Chrétien	Gourde (Lévis)	McRae
Collenette	Gray	Nicholson (Miss)
Comtois	Guilbault	Olivier
Corbin	Harquail	Ostiguy
Corriveau	Henderson	Ouellet
Cosgrove	Herbert	Pelletier
Côté (Mrs.)	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Peterson
Cousineau		Pinard
Cullen	Hopkins	Portelance
Cyr	Hudecki	Regan
Daudlin	Isabelle	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Dawson	Johnston
De Bané	Joyal	Roberts
de Corneille	Kaplan	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Demers	Kelly
Deniger	Killens (Mrs.)	Rompkey
Dingwall	Lachance	Rooney
Dion	Lajoie	Rossi
Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Lalonde	Roy
	Lamontagne	Savard
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Landers	Schroder
	Lang	Simmons
	Laniel	Smith
Dubois	Lapierre	Tessier
Duclos	Lapointe (Beauce)	Tobin
Dupont		Tousignant
Dupras	LeBlanc	Turner
Duquet	Leduc	Veillette
Ethier	Lefebvre	Watson
Evans	Loiselle	Weatherhead
Ferguson	Lumley	Whelan
Fisher	MacBain	Yanakis—121.

NAYS

Messrs.

Althouse	Gass	McGrath
Andre	Gilchrist	McLean
Anguish	Gurbin	McMillan
Baker (Nepean-Carleton)	Gustafson	Miller
	Halliday	Mitchell (Mrs.)
Beatty	Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Benjamin		Murphy
Blaikie		Neil
Blenkarn	Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)	Nickerson
Bosley		Nielsen
Bradley		Oberle
Carney (Miss)	Hargrave	Ogle
Clark (Yellowhead)	Heap	Paproski
	Hnatyshyn	Parker
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Hovdebo	Patterson
	Howie	Reid (St. Catharines)
Cook	Huntington
Cooper	Jarvis	Riis
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Jelinek	Rose
	Keeper	Schellenberger
Crosby (Halifax West)	Kempling	Scott (Victoria-Haliburton)
	Kilgour
Crouse	King	Shields
Dantzer	Kristiansen	Siddon
Darling	Lawrence	Skelly
Deans	Lewis	Speyer
de Jong	MacDonald (Miss)	Stevens
Dinsdale		Stewart
Ellis	MacKay	Taylor
Epp	Malone	Thomson
Fennell	Manly	Towers
Forrestall	Mazankowski	Vankoughnet
Fretz	McCain	Waddell
Friesen	McCuish	Wise
	McDermid	Young—91.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

The hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Chénier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) entered the House after the beginning of the division. I ask to have his name taken off the list in Votes and Proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The orders of the House provide that a member should be in his chair to hear the question put. Was the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) in the chair to hear the question put?

Mr. King: Yes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member says he was. It is the practice of the House to accept the word of an hon. member. The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I was just going to say the same thing I heard from the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstood the point of order raised. He was certainly not on the floor of the House when the division was called. He should be asked about this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat what I just said, namely that the hon. member may have misunderstood the point of order raised. There is no doubt that we all saw him, and he knows he was not on the floor of the House when the division was called. I realize he just rushed back from Paris or Strasbourg, but that is no excuse.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has made a statement and it is the practice of the House to accept the word of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING INCENTIVES

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 8, 1982, consideration of Bill C-104, respecting Petroleum Incentives and Canadian Ownership and Control Determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the next hon. member to speak, the Chair, as a result of the renumbering of the motions listed on today's notice paper at report stage of Bill C-104, would like to revise its statement made to the House yesterday when this bill was first considered. As hon. members are aware, Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the minister, has been proposed and is now before the House. Therefore, my statement will relate to Motions Nos. 2 to 16 inclusive.

Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 5, previously Motion No. 4, as indiated by the Chair yesterday, causes some procedural problems as to its acceptability. The Chair indicated to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that the motion seems to infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown, and to this end referred the hon. member to Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne's fifth edition. The hon. member strenuously argued in favour of his motion. However, with all due respect to the hon. member, I must inform him that he has not convinced the Chair that the motion does not offend the financial initiative of the Crown, particularly when he said, and here I quote from the hon. member's own words as reported at page 18241 of Hansard for yesterday:

> I now see I was mistaken, because there is a section that deals with payments. I thought that was excluded.

Under the circumstances, I must rule that motion No. 5 is not acceptable.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 8 and 16 should be debated together and voted on separately.

Motion No. 9 should be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 10, 11 and 12 will be debated together and voted on as follows: (a) Motion No. 10 by itself; (b) as Motion No. 11 is consequential on No. 12, a vote on No. 12 will also dispose of No. 11.

Motion No. 13 should be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 14 and 15 should be debated together and voted on separately.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) had the floor when the debate was interrupted on June 8 for the vote.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to add to those I made on the petroleum incentives program and the Canadian ownership rate or so-called COR program. I indicated yesterday my guess is that this program may last for two years and that then it will simply collapse.

It will collapse, first, because of the political pressures that will be brought to bear having to do with the grants. As the New Democratic Party members continually demonstrate, they cannot draw the distinction between the taxes and grants. They conclude somehow that therefore this grant program represents an extraordinary gift to the oil industry and that the pressures in that regard will be tremendous. That simple-minded approach, unfortunately, is going to be frequently heard in this House, resulting in sufficient pressure, I think, to weaken this program very substantially.

Second, the red tape associated with this program, the incredibly complex regulations and applications forms necessary to fulfil the goals of this program, are just so horrendous that the administrative cost and the difficulty of handling this program are also going to contribute to its demise.

There is also a third reason, Mr. Speaker. The third reason is that we were given testimony by the Canadian Bar Association that this program is in violation of the new charter of rights. It is in violation of the Constitution of Canada. The Canadian Bar Association gave two arguments why it is in violation. First, the recipients of the grant program, in order to receive the maximum, must be resident Canadians. As the Canadian Bar Association points out, there is no provision in the charter of rights to distinguish between Canadians on the ground of residency. That is the effect of this program—a Canadian is a Canadian. There is no way legally to distinguish between them, yet this bill tries to do so.

• (1730)

Second, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Bar Association points out that the program may be in violation of the charter of rights because of the freedom of association the charter guarantees. The grants provided under the PIP portion, based on the Canadian ownership rate portion, are given to corporations whose degree of Canadian ownership is at a sufficient level. In reality, a corporation is but a piece of paper; it exists for the benefit of its shareholders. What the act would do is say that if you, as a Canadian, associated yourself with shareholders who in aggregate represent more than 75 per cent of the shareholders of that corporation, then you are eligible for a grant. But if you associate with shareholders who in aggregate do not represent more than 75 per cent of the shareholders of the corporation, then you are not eligible. Therefore, this program discriminates in regard to the types of associations that Canadians are part of. The Canadian Bar Association has pointed out that this is in violation of the Canadian charter of rights.

We are not going to spend a great deal of time debating this portion of the bill, Mr. Speaker. The government has brought in some 15 amendments to try to improve a piece of trash. The effort is probably wasted because the whole thing will collapse within a year or two. In the meantime, the country will have lost untold billions of dollars, tens of thousands of jobs and the credibility of the government will have suffered. That will be the sum total of this little exercise dreamed up by that group of bright PhDs who sat down, in total ignorance of the Canadian industry, to design this program. They have wasted billions of dollars of this country's money and have wreaked havoc on the industry. That is a sad situation. Any reasonable person would suggest we need changes to prevent that kind of uncontrolled, bureaucratic stupidity from damaging the country in this way in the future.

That having been said, we do not have any particular problems with the amendments proposed by the government. Motion No. 16, which appears at our insistence, provides for judicial review of arbitrary decisions, so we are in favour of that. The others are technical in nature and attempt to improve what is not a very good piece of legislation. I think the government has put a new coat of paint on an old jalopy that will come to a grinding halt within a year or two anyway.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to touch on one of the amendments that we discussed at several stages in committee, the judicial review—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but we should be dealing with each amendment as we go along, not all amendments at once. We are dealing with Amendment No. 1, so we cannot debate No. 16.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has some difficulty because the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) seemed to indicate that, from the viewpoint of his party, it might be possible to present several motions seriatim. I was not sure of his intention and I subsequently recognized the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). To that extent I can say the debate is on Motion No. 1 and no other.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there is a clause in the House order which covers this matter. With respect to the amendments that were introduced through the negotiating process, it was agreed they could be brought forward in a block and discussed in a block, or in any fashion we chose to discuss them. The same privilege is extended to each party in the House. We are not following normal procedures; we are following a House order which contemplated a debate such as that which is taking place now.

We might not have much time to discuss all the amendments and that is why the order was made in this way, with the understanding that it would enable members who wished to address any particular amendment out of sequence to do so.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, that is not my understanding. If the hon. member could point that out in the House order, then I would go along with it. Unless he can, I think it would make sense to proceed as we did with the other bills. I do not know why we are changing the procedure now. If the hon. member can point out where the House order says that, I can go along with it; but if not, I insist that we be relevant.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was present at those negotiations and I have that particular advantage over the hon. member, who wants to change the whole intent of the House order. The idea was to use a block approach. The House order contains a clause which was inserted in the absence of the hon. member who is raising this point. It provides that all parties will co-operate and assist in achieving the intent of the House order. I do not have the wording before me but there is a special clause in the order and this is one of the occasions it was intended to meet.

The time allotted to the NDP as well as that allotted to this party within which these matters may be debated is rapidly expiring. That is precisely the reason for the clause being inserted in the House order.

If the suggestion of the hon. member is followed, it may well be that we would never get beyond the first amendment. The time would expire and that would be the end of it. We would have no opportunity to debate the other amendments. That was the reason for the clause in the House order. I suggest that the Chair follow the clause in the House order and allow the debate to continue.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I think it has been the practice since we commenced this entire debate on the various pieces of legislation that the vote on every amendment called be deferred to the end of report stage and then voted upon.

I think the Chair has been extremely "liberal" in allowing hon. members on both sides some leeway. If their debate is not completely and totally on the particular motion before the House, the Chair has been very co-operative in allowing members to continue with the debate. It has allowed members on both sides of the House to behave in that fashion. That is the understanding and the spirit in which I understand the agreement.

• (1740)

Therefore the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is correct; as I understand it, we are on motion No. 1. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has concluded his remarks, and he made reference to other amendments. I think it is in order for other members to comment on Motion No. 1, then the question will be called and we will go on to Motion No. 2.

Mr. Waddell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I was at just about all the meetings and negotiations over the bell-ringing.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Waddell: It is not rubbish. I was at most of the meetings except for the one weekend—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —and the meetings went on all week.

Mr. Nielsen: All weekend.

Mr. Waddell: If the truth were known, the deal was hammered out on Friday but the hon. member wanted to carry it on. But that is not the point. While the hon. member was in the Yukon last week the debate was moving along quite smoothly; we were dealing with bill after bill. When the hon. member gets back we now have difficulties.

All I am asking is that the member deal with Motion No. 1 as we have been dealing with all our motions, properly. If you do not do that, the debate is all over the place. It seems to me that is reasonable and in accordance with House rules. Essentially this agreement was that we would have a block of time, and that is what we decided. There would be no time limits. That is why the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) went on for an hour and forty minutes on offshore. All I am asking is that we go through the bill amendment by amendment, and the agreement has not changed that.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that that is what we are doing. We are on Motion No. 1. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). His comments may not be totally and completely in line with all of Motion No. 1. The Chair has been extremely co-operative and very relaxed in allowing hon. members, if they so desire, to make a few comments on another aspect of the bill. I find nothing wrong with the procedure we have adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have in front of me the House order of March 22. I should think the paragraph to which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) refers and which, although he has not done so specifically, the parliamentary secretary is probably referring to as well, is paragraph (1), which says in part:

> Each party shall be entitled to participate in the debates at report stage and third reading stage of the said bills . . . and each party may apportion this time as between the debates at report stage and third reading stage in such manner as it determines.

The Chair is well disposed towards the remarks of both the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Yukon. I think I contributed to the difficulty here. There is no question that the occupants of the chair during the past two weeks, or whatever the time has been, have accorded to hon. members the widest possible latitude. The House order does not precisely provide for that. The difficulty begins to arise when one hon. member, particularly one who was representing his party in this regard, raises the question of relevancy.

In the circumstances, perhaps the best way to proceed would be for the Chair to suggest that it will continue the latitude which has been the practice over the past several weeks, but should the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) find this is not satisfactory, I think he should take the opportunity to have further consultations with the other parties and then, if necessary, involve the Chair in a ruling. The Chair has no instructions or information officially from the parties in the House on this matter. So I am going to rule, if I may call it that, in favour of the widest possible latitude; but I tell the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, in light of the fact there is so little time left today, I am sure this matter can be fixed tomorrow if he still regards it as a problem.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you clarified the situation because you and I have had discussions previously about staying on the subject. It was going to be extremely difficult for me to stand up here and refer to the difference between "density" and "gravity" for any extended period of time. I have spoken a number of times on these bills at this point, and I have intentionally stayed on the motion; but on this one I am afraid I was stuck, and I did not know if we had any other speakers to stand up. However, now that you have given me the broad scope I will take advantage of it. When you give me an inch, I will take a mile!

I had the honour, Mr. Speaker, to sit on the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation for some six weeks. I believe our party represented the Canadian public extremely well in that period. We did not accomplish what we would have liked, which was basically to abolish the bills altogether, but we did accomplish small points, one of which had to do with Bill C-104 and the amendment concerning judicial review.

During our hearings on this bill we were told so often that we did not need any special clause in here because this was provided for under the Federal Court Act. Finally they relented and gave in to judicial review. The reason we were pushing for that is very simple. These bills give the minister the most unbelievable authority to do whatever he wants, when he wants, without any discussion in Parliament. The serious fear we had was that the House of Commons was losing importance. We were frightened and scared. We deal so often with dictatorial rule, and this bill was giving too much power to any minister. At one point we referred to the fact that perhaps we might get a worse minister than we have now, although I personally could not imagine a worse minister than the one we have right now. It was something we were and are frightened of. It gives total control to the minister, but thank heavens there was some common sense in the Ministry of Justice, through the gentleman that represented that department, which allowed us to get that phrase back in.

What we are talking about in the bill and its amendments, Mr. Speaker, is an attempt to replace tax incentives with PIP grants. The government also has in this bill what is called COR, which refers to the Canadian ownership rate. All I can say is that these PIP grants, based on COR, have effectively removed in excess of $8 billion of investment from Canada.

Gulf Canada appeared before the committee and I asked them whether they ever considered breaking their corporation down so they could have a 50 per cent or greater Canadian ownership. I asked the same thing of Texaco, only I phrased it a little differently. I said that perhaps they should go back and re-incorporate McCall Frontenac, which was one of the first companies they bought, and provide Canadian ownership in that way. They explained to me very simply that it did not really matter how it was done, but it would not work in their situation because this government was determined to remove that multinational expertise in finding oil in this country.

• (1750)

In the second part of this bill is the heading "Canada lands". What are PIP grants doing? They are taking funds directly out of provincial coffers and putting them toward Canada lands. Canada lands can best be described as the Beaufort Sea and the offshore, which we now refer to as Sable Island and Hibernia. The minister has made a fatal mistake in this program. He has put so much emphasis on the fact that we will become oil self-sufficient through those two areas that the cash flow has been removed from the balance of the industry which would develop traditional oil fields. The megaprojects have also been killed. You might challenge me on that, Mr. Speaker, because this bill has removed the tax incentives and the cash flow and thus eliminated the megaprojects.

I asked the chairman of Imperial Oil why his company suspended the Cold Lake project. His answer was: "Because of the National Energy Program." The same question was asked of Gulf Canada and we were given the same answer. Texaco was asked why that company was not going into the Beaufort Sea and the North Sea. Texaco is concerned because it does not feel the investment is worth the return it would get. Representatives of Home Oil were asked questions. They said Home had only one option. Home is Canadian owned and receives 80 cents on every dollar of investment. But Home's representatives told us that even with 80 cents on every dollar, and even if Home finds immense pools of oil, in 1990 it will still cost $100 a barrel to bring the product onshore. In the minister's review I believe the maximum price is $72, but he has dropped that amount for 1990.

He zeroed in on one single potential that we have in this country, and I am referring to the frontier and the offshore. The megaprojects have been destroyed. We have destroyed drilling in the west on traditional lands. We have removed the incentive from the oil industry. Let me just give you an example. I have been challenged about this in committee, but I have the figures which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) says he uses. These are his figures. They are very simple. On May 25, 1982, there were 110 drilling rigs operating in the west. On May 26, 1981, there were 250 drilling rigs operating. That tells you what these PIP grants are doing, and PIP grants can still be obtained retroactively. One hundred and forty out of 250 drilling rigs have gone. Over 60 per cent of the operating drilling rigs in the west have left. This bill is not going to fly, it is going to destroy Canada.

In the committee hearings in April, I said that 70 drilling rigs were operating, but I was told at that time by one of the brilliant men in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that my figures were wrong and really there were 370 rigs operating. I got a copy of Oilweek and brought it to the committee hearings and showed the evidence that 70 drilling rigs were operating. The PIP grants themselves have done only one thing. They have removed the need for geologists in Canada and instead have created a tremendous need for accountants and lawyers.

I do not know if any hon. members in this House have reviewed the forms—I see one who has—which everyone has to sign to get these PIP grants. There are 27 forms involved. Let me explain what happens. Under this legislation, if there are 24 different corporations involved in one well, those 24 corporations have to file 27 returns. That to me is super bureaucracy. Think of the people we can employ reading forms and think of the people we can employ to fill in those forms!

IPAC represents the small oil companies in Canada and the Canadian Petroleum Association represents a group of larger Canadian companies and both associations appeared before our committee hearings. Representatives of those associations told us that the PIP grants will not solve our problem, but when an 11 per cent or 12 per cent PGRT is levied—and thank goodness the IORT has been removed—together with other taxes that have been imposed on the industry, there is no cash flow left. It is fine to get a PIP grant of 35 per cent in the west if you are 75 per cent Canadian owned, but if there is no cash flow the company cannot apply for this grant because the company cannot afford to borrow 65 per cent of the cost of drilling a well at 18 per cent from the bank.

This bill is an abomination. I think there are certain points in it that are prejudicial to Canadian citizens. I am referring to pension funds that have been invested in such companies as Imperial Oil, Gulf and Texaco. Those pension funds have invested people's money and because those companies are American controlled there is no PIP grant available for a traditional oil field, or 25 per cent if it is frontier or off the coast. Of that 25 per cent though, 25 per cent has to be given back to Petro-Canada. People with money in pension funds are suffering because of this bill.

Another group of people who are suffering are those who have retired and those who have moved south. Perhaps they have moved to Arizona for health reasons. Those people are hurt because they do not get any credit.

Once the government brought in this energy bill, it destroyed the market to such an extent that people could not reinvest their money because prices dropped so quickly. Dome is a prime example of that. In the United States today Dome's shares fell below $5, which caused a raft of margin calls. It is a serious situation when a company like that is driven down that far. But Dome helped itself by trying to help the Liberal government to Canadianize the industry. Dome is a fine company and I hope the government will help it out, but I hope the government is not going to help Dome the way I have been hearing it will. The government will probably lend Dome $1 billion and take a piece of the action. That proves to me what Canadianization of the oil industry is. It is nationalization and it is removing the private sector.

May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 10, 1982

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1405)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PARLIAMENT

CONGRATULATIONS TO PARLIAMENTARIANS CELEBRATING TWENTY-FIFTH ELECTORAL ANNIVERSARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion. On June 1, 1957, the people of Canada elected a Progressive Conservative government under the leadership of the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. There are several members in the House of Commons and the Senate who continue to serve the House of Commons and the Senate on behalf of the people of Canada. They are the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. Senators David Walker, Orville Phillips, Robert Muir, and Heath Macquarrie. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House send its congratulations to these honourable Senators and Members of Parliament, wish them good health and happiness, and pray that they may continue to serve the people of Canada in the House of Commons and the Senate for many more years.

Madam Speaker: I am sure members of the House would want to express their sentiments by applauding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

CALL FOR REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS TO ASSIST AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the federally imposed excise tax on natural gas is putting the fertilizer manufacturing companies and the Canadian farmer at an extreme disadvantage with their American counterparts and creating a disastrous economic situation for both, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the federal government, at the very least, drop the excise tax on natural gas to the point where both the Canadian fertilizer producing companies and the Canadian farmers can be on an equitable and competitive basis with their American counterparts.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR REDUCTION OF TAXES AFFECTING AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Liberal Government of Canada is supposed to be fighting inflation, and yet its own regressive taxes, for example, the excise tax on agricultural products, are inflaming inflation—this tax is approximately one third of current natural gas costs and has increased the cost of anhydrous ammonia fertilizer by as much as $93 per ton at the retail level—and the federal tax on gasoline and diesel fuel affects all farm products, which in turn increases the cost of food to the nation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Reed Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House urges the government to be realistic and rescind the present taxes and levies affecting the farm gate prices of fertilizers, fuels, and chemicals used in agricultural production.

This will be a major step in reducing inflation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ATTENDANCE BY CANADIANS AT UNITED NATIONS DISARMAMENT RALLY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing national necessity. During the past week five Canadian supporters of disarmament have been stopped, on orders of the U.S. government, from attending disarmament meetings connected with the U.N. Special Session on Disarmament, and another supporter has been harassed so as to miss her booked flight, although these supporters and many others travelled freely to UNSSOD I in 1978. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) and the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That this House request the Acting Prime Minister to use his good offices with the President of the United States to persuade President Reagan to respect both his obligations as chief of state of the country that is host to the United Nations, and also the United States obligations as a signatory to the Helsinki Accords on freedom of movement, and give assurance that the thousands of Canadians planning to attend the disarmament rally this weekend at the United Nations will not be stopped, delayed, or harassed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SHIPS AND SHIPPING

REGISTRATION OF VESSELS IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, whereas the traditionally unregulated deep sea shipping environment has been changing in the last decade, increasingly influenced by governments, rather than commercial forces, in support of national flag fleets; and whereas Canada relies almost entirely on foreign flag carriers to carry its vast import and export trade; pursuant to Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the government be directed to bring in incentives and measures to create a climate where ship owners will be encouraged to register their vessels in Canada, receive an adequate return on their investment, and establish a Canadian Merchant Marine.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION MINISTER SEEK ADVICE FROM MAYORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the excellent performance of Canadian mayors and municipalities which have consistently given the taxpayer the best value for money of all three levels of government while maintaining balanced budgets and a taxation level only about one third as large per capita as the federal tax levy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Finance be directed to seek the immediate counsel of the Canadian mayors who are visiting in Ottawa this week, so that he might discover from them the common sense rules of competent financial management, and obtain their expert advice in preparing a new budget based on the business-like, yet practical approach which has been applied so successfully over the years by municipal levels of government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

• (1410)

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MINING LAY-OFFS AT GRANDE CACHE, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) has not raised this question in his riding, I rise on the urgent matter of the lay-off of 1,170 workers in Grande Cache, Alberta, which was announced by McIntyre Mines last week. These 220 permanent lay-offs, combined with 950 temporary lay-offs to take effect on June 28, threaten not only the short-term prosperity but the long-term survival of this community, as it is totally dependent upon employment in the mines. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the Intergovernmental Mines Ministers Task Force on One Industry Towns be requested to hold public hearings in Grande Cache so that it can develop plans to ensure the economic future of one of the major towns in the riding of Yellowhead.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF NOVEMBER BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, every day in Canada 1,185 more Canadians lose their jobs. Every day in Canada 3,500 more home owners are forced to renew their mortgages at approximately double the original rate—from 10.5 per cent to 18.5 per cent. These figures, along with all the other alarming statistics, are a direct result of the November 12, 1981, budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the November 12 budget be withdrawn forthwith and replaced with a new incentive-oriented document, failing which, that this House recognize the crisis state of our economy and therefore recommend to His Excellency the Governor General that Parliament be dissolved in order to give the people of Canada an opportunity to elect a new government which would immediately implement a policy that would put us on the road to economic recovery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, in addition to the many serious economic troubles with which Canadians are forced to deal every day, the problem of mortgages continues to be a source of severe hardship. It has been estimated that up to 3,000 mortgages come due each day. Home owners who do not qualify under present programs of assistance and who have to renew their mortgages are faced with escalating rates of interest which shortly may reach the incredible level of 19 per cent. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance immediately institute a further program of assistance to help this group of beleaguered home owners, a plan which would halt this cruel and unnecessary loss of homes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF GOVERNMENT SUPPORTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, in a letter to The Citizen of Ottawa, the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), in her capacity as chairman of the Liberal caucus committee on economic development, stated that the Liberal caucus has responsibility to assess government policies and to offer suggestions for change. Inasmuch as by her own admission it is apparent that it is the whole Liberal caucus—and not just the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—which has approved government actions that have brought economic disaster to Canadians, 730 of whom are losing their jobs every day, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this House call upon decent members of government opposite to accept responsibility for their actions and resign today.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENSIONS

DEMAND FOR IMPROVED BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Frith) revealed in La Presse this morning that the federal government's green paper on pension reform has been postponed again, this time until the fall. The hon. member said that this latest postponement was due to "the bad economic situation". In view of the fact that it is becoming increasingly apparent that the federal government is not really serious about pension reform, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That, first, the federal government dig into the same pocket which produced $2 billion for Imperial Oil last week and bring all senior citizens at least up to the poverty line immediately, and second, since the Liberals admit they do not have the political will to include pension reform as a high priority, that they should stop pretending to the Canadian people that ensuring adequate retirement incomes are an important mandate of this government and give that job over to someone who will carry it through, namely, the NDP.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1415)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BANK RATE—EFFECT ON HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who will know, of course, that the bank rate today has risen significantly, 33 points, to 16.20, which of course means that mortgage interest rates are on their way up to the record highs of last year. As this recession deepens, what advice does the minister have for the 490,000 families in this country who are facing mortgage renewals between June 1, and October 31 of this year, many of whom took out one-year mortgages last year when they were at record highs in anticipation of things getting better this year? These people will be wiped out.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has stated in his question that, in his view, the interest rates are on their way to the record highs of last August. I believe that if he has that view, it is exaggerated. I see no indication that that same record high will be achieved as a result of a significant, but nevertheless a change of 33 basis points in the bank rate which, of course, was a result of the auction held today.

Mr. McGrath: The minister's self-assurance is not very reassuring.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR HOME OWNERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, can the minister go one step further and assure the House and the country that mortgage interest rates will not go beyond their present levels? They are away too high now, and he knows that. He knows that the legislation introduced in his budget is not addressing that situation.

If the minister cannot give us that assurance, and since he knows interest rates are too high already, what can he tell these half a million Canadian families who are facing economic ruin because they cannot afford to renew at these usurious mortgage interest rates or they will be wiped out? It is a very serious situation and one that I do not believe the Minister of Finance appreciates.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the government and the Minister of Finance fully appreciate the impact of high interest rates on the Canadian people, not only home owners but farmers, small-business men, and upon investment generally. We appreciate the consequences of these rates very much, indeed. That is why all of our policies are directed against reducing the cause of high interest rates and high interest rates themselves. That is the basic solution to the problem. We have attempted, within the limits of our budget, to provide assistance to home owners who need that assistance most. We will continue to provide that kind of assistance.

I do not believe that it is within the capacity of the government to protect everyone fully against this situation of abnormally high interest rates. That is my answer to the hon. member.

PLIGHT OF AVERAGE INCOME EARNERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister must be misinformed because he is too good a parliamentarian deliberately to mislead or even try to mislead the House. Of those in so-called dire straits whom the minister's budget was supposed to address, only 12,000 would qualify for the mortgage interest deferral. Of those 12,000, less than 1 per cent have even bothered to apply, because they know full well that if they do not hang today under that plan, they will be hung, drawn and quartered tomorrow.

If the minister holds to the view that everyone cannot be protected from high interest rates, in the name of God will he seriously try to do something for those average Canadians who are seeing their family incomes and savings and their family dreams wiped out by the attitude of this government, and by a budget that even the minister himself should be prepared to admit is in a shambles?

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in a sense the hon. member spoils his own questions by putting in so many unjustified comments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member refers to the budget as if it were the source of high interest rates, as if it were the source of world recession, and as if it were the source of very high income demands in Canada. Each of these is contributing to our present situation, and none of these items has been the result of the budget of last November. The hon. member knows that, and I ask him why he does not take that into account in his questioning today.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE EMERGENCY MEASURES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Truly the minister, stretching credibility, is not trying to expect this House to believe that he bears no responsibility for the 4,400 businesses which have gone bankrupt this year, and for the thousands of Canadians who are facing personal bankruptcy. His budget has not addressed this problem. Will he at least bring in emergency measures until he is prepared to replace that disastrous budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I know the hon. member's interest in these questions is serious and sincere. I have already explained to the House, in reply to questions put by his leader on Tuesday, the process through which the government is going and will go in an effort to deal with the current economic situation.

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to say to him that his policies are directly responsible for the fact that 1,185 more Canadians are without jobs every single day, 1,185 more Canadians with families to feed and mortgages to pay. How long is the minister prepared to condemn 1,200 more Canadians every day to job loss and insecurity because he is too stubborn and too uncaring to change his policies?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not accept for one moment the statement in the hon. member's question that the policies of the government are responsible for the recession which is taking place, not only in Canada but also in every industrialized country in the world. I am surprised that the hon. member, considering her experience, would make such a foolish statement in the House of Commons.

Miss MacDonald: The minister's answer is appalling.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Has the minister no understanding of the fears, the frustrations and the hopelessness which exists in every part of this country because people do not know, from one day to another, whether they will still have jobs? Will the minister tell the House and the Canadian people this afternoon what he is prepared to do to meet the fears, frustrations and anxieties right across this country, which he has created? That is what the people want to know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that all of us in the House, including hon. members on this side, have as much knowledge about the Canadian people as the hon. member.

Miss MacDonald: Do something, then.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members on this side have been elected by the Canadian people to represent—

Mr. Nielsen: They would not be today.

Mr. MacEachen: —the interests of the Canadian people. I want to assure the hon. member that our sensitivity and our understanding are as great as those of any hon. member on the other side of the House, including the hon. member who has just asked the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, we have been hearing a different tune from the Prime Minister at Versailles. He admitted that the government's efforts to wrestle inflation to the ground actually have been wrestling the economy to the ground.

We have heard from the chief executive officers of a number of chartered banks that the present high interest rates policy will devastate the economy in the next number of months. CMHC tells us that if mortgage rates go over 20 per cent, as they will because of the high interest rates, some 40,000 Canadians will lose their homes this year. Will the government consider taking the radical step of reducing the interest rate level, to enable the economic recovery to begin?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously the objective is to reduce interest rates—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That is what we attempted to bring about through our efforts at the Versailles Summit, and that is what we are attempting to bring about through our efforts to reduce inflation. I want to assure the hon. member that if he thinks there is some easy, overnight solution to high interest rates, then he is making a mistake. If there were an easy solution I would be the first to bring it forward and implement it, but there is no easy solution.

The bringing down of interest rates requires a resolution of problems in the United States. And it requires a reduction in inflation rates in Canada, in our own country. If these two things were brought about, then I believe there would be some assurance that interest rates would drop in Canada and some relief would come to the Canadian economy.

QUERY RESPECTING REASON FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, if the efforts of the minister to combat inflation have resulted in increased interest rates, then he should use a different approach, because interest rates have to come down. My question refers to the tactics being used now of taking more and more money out of the hands of working Canadians, a practice that we saw in the 1930s when workers were competing against other workers to get work even at less money, for fewer jobs. Can the Minister of Finance explain to the Canadian people why we are pursuing the same policy that got us into this disastrous situation as a result of the fact that the government does not know what it is doing—or is the economy totally out of control?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the answer to both questions is no.

REQUEST FOR TWO-WEEK DEBATE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My last question to the minister is in the form of a suggestion. We have heard today, and we will hear in the rest of the question period, that our economy is in a state of crisis. This is an emergency situation. I am wondering if the minister would consider recognizing that this is an extraordinary time in Canadian history, requiring extraordinary measures, and if the minister would set aside the next two weeks so that the House of Commons could address the serious situation that is before us and encourage both the government side and the other side to come forward with positive, constructive solutions to fight this economic crisis in which we find ourselves today. Let us set aside the next two weeks to address this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. member, in a way, is depreciating the House of Commons as it has operated over the last several months. I have been in this House almost every day and I believe the House has been addressing the economic situation, in question period. There have been numerous debates on economic matters. It seems to me that we have been given ample opportunity to express our views on what ought to be done about the economic situation.

My distress, my disappointment, is that I have received such little constructive assistance from the opposition in addressing the economic problems of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Resign, resign!

* * *

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES ARE CONTEMPLATED TO HELP GENERAL MOTORS WORKERS AT STE-THÉRÈSE, P.Q.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have the impression that the Minister of Finance, in regretting that proposals have not been forthcoming from the opposition side, has just admitted his incompetence. In my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I pointed out that by December 31, as the Minister of Finance is no doubt aware, more than 500,000 Canadians will no longer be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Perhaps I could help the Minister of Finance by pointing out that 1,750 employees at General Motors in Sainte-Thérèse will no longer be receiving unemployment insurance benefits next November. In the circumstances, does the Minister of Finance have any proposals to make in connection with this dramatic situation or is he going to let 1,750 employees go straight to the welfare office?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member ought to address that question, which has to do with unemployment insurance, to the minister responsible for the unemployment insurance system.

Mr. Clark: He is not here.

Mr. MacEachen: I want to assure the hon. member that we will take every possible step within the law passed by Parliament to help these particular workers.

• (1430)

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE BE DISMISSED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, that is certainly not encouraging for the 1,200,000 unemployed workers we have in Canada today. After the Versailles Summit, the Minister of Finance started off Tuesday morning by mentioning certain proposals. The Minister of Employment and Immigration did not challenge the figures I gave him just now but was not prepared to confirm them. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any proposals with respect to the 500,000 Canadians who will no longer be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. If he cannot give an answer today, considering the fact that yesterday, both bankers and owners of professional hockey clubs severely criticized the minister for his financial policies, I still wonder, Madam Speaker, whether the minister, in his desire to serve his country, would not be better advised to ask his Prime Minister to relieve him of his duties, since he is incapable of answering the questions we have been putting to him for three weeks.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no difficulty in answering questions on the Order Paper addressed to me, but I find it very difficult to engage in the kind of rhetorical abuse in which the hon. member specializes in his questions.

* * *

MINES AND MINING

INCREASE IN LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. A week ago we had an inventory of over 35,000 mine workers whose jobs had been affected by shutdowns, unscheduled summer vacations, and labour disruptions. This week the number is 42,000 or more. We have seen another 6,000 mine workers in the past week, and up to 200,000 mine workers and indirect service workers face unemployment because of the failure of the government to take positive and concrete steps to resolve the difficult problems within our economy.

What advice has the Minister of State for Mines offered to the cabinet? Knowing that the Government of Canada has the power to rectify this situation, what specific and concrete proposals has she made to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to help the thousands of mine workers who must contend with no work and countless human problems?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member does not understand the international mineral situation. He has been told time and time again that this is an international situation and that markets in the world are in a very difficult situation. I remind him that there are mines closing all over the world. For instance, in the Philippines mines are operating at 50 per cent capacity. The only nickel mine in the United States has closed down completely. Our mineral industry is faring better than those in most countries, and in those areas facing lay-offs and shutdowns we are making every effort to see that miners are employed. There are nine make-work projects in my area alone, using Section 38, which are employing over 300 laid-off miners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that is pure poppycock. At least a third of the work force in mining in Canada today is facing unemployment. The new president of the Canadian Mining Association said just two weeks ago that the problem is not a lack of demand for Canadian minerals in foreign markets but that the problem is essentially domestic. The president of the Canadian Mining Association said that "what is needed is the determination by government to restore an environment that encourages mineral development in Canada."

REQUEST THAT POLICIES BE REVERSED

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I want to put a straightforward question to the Minister of Finance. When will he reverse the socialistic, anti-investment policies contained in his November 12 budget, the National Energy Program, and the policies of FIRA which are destroying the mining industry in Canada? Will he answer that question?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I would like to refer to the original question the hon. member raised. He obviously does not understand the international mineral situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: If he was speaking directly to the president of the Canadian Mining Association, he would know—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

GRAIN

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE ALLOWED TO EXCEED SALES QUOTAS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, of which I have served him notice. Bearing in mind the state of the economy and the high rate of bankruptcies among farm owners, and knowing that farmers have large volumes of grain stored—in other words, value stored—on their farms, would the minister give consideration to allowing farmers to sell in excess of quota in those situations where farmers can establish they are in very serious financial difficulties, with the provision that the moneys from those sales would go directly to the relief of debt?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will discuss that with my colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board, but as a general proposition my suggestion would be that, as much as possible, we should not mix objectives. There is already the payment of initial payments; there is already the prairie grain advance payments, which put money into the hands of farmers this year. I understand that the prairie grain advance payments program has already provided $333 million to western farmers. I suggest it might not be wise to intervene too much in the quota system, the purpose of which is to select the grains which can be exported, not specifically to provide money to farmers.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT STUDY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the minister with respect both to the need for the selection of qualities of grain and also the issue of congestion at country elevators. However, I simply plead with the minister again, on behalf of farmers who are in severe debt situations, particularly those who are young start-up farmers, at least to conduct a study or some investigation to see to what extent he can disburse extra money where value from farm operations actually exists but cannot be converted to cash. That could be done for the purpose of keeping people in operation.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat the first part of the answer I gave. I will be in touch with my hon. friend in this regard later.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

USE BY ARGENTINA OF CANADIAN NUCLEAR MATERIAL

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He is busy studying—his briefing notes, I hope.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources assured the House that Canadian nuclear materials will never be used to build an Argentine bomb. He based that naive conclusion on two points. The first was that the military dictatorship in Argentina promised it would not. The second one was that the International Atomic Energy Commission would guarantee that the Argentinians would keep their word, through supervision and inspection by the Commission.

• (1440)

I should like to ask the minister how he expects the people of Canada to accept his blinkered view, considering the military dictatorship's record on civil rights, broken promises, military aggression into the Falklands, and especially in light of the fact that the International Atomic Energy Commission itself, the group that the minister says will ensure compliance with our nuclear agreement, told the Canadian government months ago that there was no way it could prevent or even detect the diversion of Canadian nuclear material into an Argentine military program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to invite my hon. friend to quote from the report he claims he has from the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna as the basis of his allegations. I suggest to him that has allegation is not founded. I indicated some arguments yesterday to which the hon. member has referred. One is the international treaty and agreement that has been arrived at with Argentina, the second is inspection by the International Atomic Energy Commission, and the third is that using the Candu system in order to develop explosive material would be the most expensive and most circuitous route to achieve that purpose. It could be as high as ten times more expensive to use the Candu system than other existing alternatives that any country can develop on its own. As I have indicated before in the House, for the Argentinians to resort to the Candu system to achieve that purpose would be a very stupid decision for them to take.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, not everyone shares the minister's confidence. If the minister has not read the report from the IAEC, it is not up to me to read it for him. I should like to tell the minister that if Argentina goes ahead and builds a nuclear weapon and causes the deaths of thousands of people in that part of the world, it will be the minister's responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER FREEZE ON SHIPMENTS OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS TO ARGENTINA

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): According to the Latin American Weekly Report published on May 21, 1982, and after Argentina had denied it intended to go ahead and build a nuclear capability, two weeks before that date it had finally decided to go ahead and build a nuclear military capability, or a nuclear bomb. Will this change the policy of the minister toward our commitment to Argentina? Will the minister order a freeze on all shipments of nuclear fuel rods to Argentina, at least until the time Argentina signs the nuclear nonproliferation treaty?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already answered those questions in the House.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFUND OF CONTRIBUTIONS MADE BY RCAF PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, to whom I sent notice. It is a question of concern to Canadians for whose well-being he bears responsibility.

A number of RCAF officers taken prisoners of war while serving in Europe during World War II, contributed a part of their pay received under reciprocal agreements with the Government of Germany, to a fund to assist others in the camps who were in less fortunate circumstances. Following the war the Canadian government made representations to the Air Ministry in Britain to effect refund of those contributions to the individual donors. I am informed that the adjustments may never have been completed. Would the minister confirm that RCAF officers held prisoners of war in Germany who contributed to the communal fund at Stalag Luft I and Luft III have never received full refund of their contributions?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): First of all, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving notice of the question. The information available to me would indicate that, as a result of the passing of a Privy Council order on January 4, 1946, provisions were made for the reimbursement of both pay and benefits of Canadian servicemen as a result of their being incarcerated. To my knowledge all have received a refund, but if the hon. member has information about individuals who may not have been looked after by this program, I would be happy to discuss the matter with him.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED KINGDOM GOVERNMENT

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, that is my information. Inasmuch as I am told that these funds were absorbed into the treasury of the United Kingdom, would the minister renew those representations made in 1946 to the Government of the United Kingdom, in order that the injustice be corrected which penalizes persons who have already made great sacrifices for their country?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, I will be happy to do that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADMISSION OF CANADIANS TO UNITED STATES TO ATTEND UNITED NATIONS DISARMAMENT RALLY

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State (External Relations). Last week I brought to the attention of the House the action of the United States government in refusing entry to five Canadians who planned to attend the UN Session on Disarmament. Although the case I raised of Mrs. Kay MacPherson has been happily resolved, will the minister make further representations to the United States government to ensure that the 50 busloads of Canadians leaving Montreal and Toronto tonight for the UN session and peace rally this weekend, are not refused entry at the U.S. border in defiance of the United States commitment to the free movement of peoples, as agreed to by its signing of the Helsinki Accord?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of State (External Relations)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can inform the hon. member for York East that the department has been advised of this matter, and it is now making representations regarding Canadians who want to take part in the conference. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General has already informed the hon. member, on behalf of the government, that the department is giving serious attention to this matter. I shall ask senior officials to get in touch with the hon. member directly, in view of the urgency of this matter.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN FISCAL POLICIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will know that the bankruptcy rate this year in terms of dollars has increased 100 per cent. He will also know that every president of the chartered banks appearing before the standing committee have indicated that if interest rates continue to rise, or even stay at the same level, the rate of bankruptcies will soar. I wonder if the Minister of Finance has paid attention to those hearings and the many suggestions coming from the presidents of banks about what he might do to change the fiscal stance of the government.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have been following the hearings before the standing committee as well as possible. Of course the committee has not reported. It is the views of the members of the committee that I would like to have, rather than the views of witnesses such as the bankers. I have been paying attention to what has been said and will give it careful consideration.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE NEW BUDGET

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, if the minister is giving this matter serious consideration, would he pay attention to the suggestion made by the president of the Royal Bank, for example, who suggested that there should be severe cutbacks in government expenses on a broad base? He mentioned the things he had done in his bank. Would the minister also pay attention to the suggestions made by the president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce that perhaps there should be changes in the capital gains tax to encourage investment in equities? He said the system is too debt burdened. Would the minister pay attention to those suggestions and would he present to the House, before it is too late, and before the end of this month, a budget incorporating some of those suggestions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not propose to present a budget before the end of the month. That is the present situation. I already replied to the Leader of the Opposition earlier in the week with respect to the intentions I had about a financial and economic statement, to use his words. I want to give him the assurance that the same situation prevails today, but some of the proposals that have been made about cutting expenditures obviously have to be taken seriously.

I would remind the hon. member who posed the question that it is possible for Members of Parliament, when they examine estimates and approve them, to suggest where reductions in expenditures should take place. It is easy to talk about expenditure reductions in general, but when it comes to deciding upon particular programs then I think that is where the bullet has to be dealt with, so to speak. I advise the hon. member to show his hand by going into committee and indicating where he thinks government expenditures ought to be reduced.

* * *

• (1450)

RAILWAYS

GILSON REPORT—QUERY RESPECTING SUBSIDIZATION OF FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who should have by now received Dr. Gilson's final report regarding the payment of federal rail subsidies in western Canada. Initial drafts of that report indicated that farmers would be asked to pay 3 per cent of all rail cost increases due to inflation over the next four years, which is equal to some $220 million to $245 million. Will the minister confirm these findings, and explain how he expects western Canadian farmers actually to pay these incredible amounts at a time when most of them are facing bankruptcy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I regret to say that I have not yet received the Gilson report so I am not in a position to comment on it. It is expected that he might present it to me during the weekend, but I have not received it yet. What my hon. friend has seen is the first draft which was given to those who negotiated with him.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I realize it is supposed to be on its way by courier, and I thought it would have arrived by now. Since this report is of great importance to western Canadians in general, will the minister make a commitment to this House to table the report when it arrives, and have it referred to the transport committee so that we can deal with it before the House rises this summer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I already answered that question in part. I said I would receive the report, and when I do I will have it translated and printed—this might take two or three weeks—and then it will be made quite public. I am not really in a position to say that it will be debated in the House before the summer recess, but as my hon. friend knows there will have to be legislation leading to the amendment of the Crow rate. That will have to come to the House and will be looked into, I am sure, in great depth in the fall.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—INVASION OF LEBANON

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for External Relations concerning the Middle East situation. For the past several days the State of Israel has been flouting both international law and a unanimous Security Council resolution, and has caused thousands of innocent civilian casualties. Since Israel seems to be prepared to ignore the advice of even its closest friends, such as Canada, in this affair, will the government give consideration to the possibility of enacting trade sanctions, and consider the possibility of according some form of official recognition to the Palestinian people and their representatives?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the official position of the Canadian government has been expressed directly by the Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of Israel. There is no hesitation in saying that what is going on at the moment in Lebanon, including Beirut, is a most serious and tragic situation. I will not read the cable we received from Canadian officials in Beirut or elsewhere; I will just say that Beirut is being bombarded unmercifully, to use the words of a Canadian official. I think what the Prime Minister has said to the Premier of Israel, that they should retreat immediately and unconditionally, represents the opinion of the Canadian people.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING MEASURES TO RESTORE INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Earlier in the week the minister indicated in a television interview that the most urgent problem facing Canada today was to restore investor confidence. Whereas the first budget the minister brought in turned out to be a national energy policy which destroyed investor confidence in that sector, and his second budget is nearly killing investment right across the country, what is he going to do about those two items?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when decisions are taken on these points I will be pleased to communicate them to the House.

REQUEST THAT ALL-PARTY TASK FORCE BE APPOINTED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, will the minister consider calling an all-party special committee, asking intelligent members from both sides of this House—

Mr. Rossi: You won't be there.

Mr. Shields: —to sit down with him as a task force and address the problems facing Canada? He is listening to the wrong people; the bureaucrats do not know what is happening in the country. The politicians do, so will he do that?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the standing committee set up by this House, made up of very intelligent members, has before it a number of important matters, and I am quite prepared to await and receive the report from that committee which has already been authorized. If it wishes to make recommendations, I will be glad to listen and consider them.

POSSIBILITY OF POLICY CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if I heard the Minister of Finance correctly, in answer to a question about whether or not he would change fundamental elements of the budget and the National Energy Program, he said that when those decisions were taken there would be a report to the House. Is the government now, today, considering major changes in the budget or the National Energy Program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, probably better than I know, that it is quite impossible for me to tell him what is being considered in cabinet.

SMALL BUSINESS

DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who will know that the number of Canadians who have gone from dire straits into severe distress has increased dramatically over the past several months. The one program the minister offered to those people in distress was a small business bond, which was changed from a development bond to a distress bond.

Does the minister understand that two of the largest Canadian banks no longer use that bond, and the Canadian farmers and businessmen who would use that bond in a distress situation no longer have that opportunity, and so there is now nothing in his economic program to deal with those in distress? Does he know that, and what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the reason the Small Business Development Bond was introduced was to provide reduced rates of interest to borrowers because of the tax room available to the banks. If in a particular case there is no more tax room available to a particular bank, then obviously the bond with respect to that bank would become inoperative. But it is my information that the operation of the bond is still quite valuable to large classes of borrowers in Canada. As the hon. member knows, several billions of dollars have already been put out to groups in this country as a result of the benefits of the bond. But I will consider his representations, as I did on a previous occasion and indeed changed the operation of the bond to meet some of his representations.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I am somewhat enthusiastic about the minister's response. I think he knows, when he tells us about the $2.5 billion which has been used, that that in no way applies to the distress area; rather, it is the total investment that the banks have used.

REQUEST THAT NEW ECONOMIC MEASURES BE INTRODUCED

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister. Does he know that every day and a half he delays his new economic program another Canadian farmer goes bankrupt, and that every hour and a half he delays, another Canadian business bites the dust, and that every 20 minutes he delays his new economic measures another Canadian personal bankruptcy is declared? How long, how many days, how many hours, is the minister prepared to go on before introducing new economic measures to help Canadians?

• (1500)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wants to ask me a question about government policy, I will be glad to answer. I have already indicated in reply to a question from his leader earlier in the week what the situation was with respect to any statement to the House of Commons.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader what the order of business will be for the remainder of this week and as far into next week as he can take us?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we had a meeting this morning at which we made a few agreements. For example, tomorrow there is an agreement to deal with three stages of the bill which will be introduced in a few minutes in the name of the Minister of Justice to amend the Criminal Code. Then if we have time we will start second reading debate on Bill C-95.

[Translation]

As far as next week is concerned, on Monday we shall conclude debate on the energy bills, including Bill C-104 and Bill C-108, if the debate on these bills is not wound up today. Also on Monday, the plan is to adopt on second reading Bill C-115 on occupational training, and there is agreement—if there is time—to dispose of all stages of Bill C-116, with one member speaking per party. I understand that not necessarily the duration of the debate but its timing for Monday may be discussed further, in the light of information I have just received and which has been mentioned by the member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen). On Tuesday, we shall proceed with the report stage and third reading of Bill C-111, in accordance with an order of the House, with a vote on third reading at the end of the day. Finally, next Wednesday and Thursday will be opposition days.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, perhaps you might permit me to thank all hon. members of the House for their response to the Standing Order 43 motion which complimented members of the class of 1957 sitting both in this place and in the other place. We appreciate that expression of good wishes.

Can the government House leader tell me when Bill C-60, the northern pipeline bill, is to be proclaimed? I am informed that has yet to be proclaimed. Perhaps there might be an explanation as to why it is not being proclaimed.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will be glad to consult with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and report to my honorable colleague. I understand that most likely the bill will be proclaimed at the end of this month. However, I would like to discuss the matter with the minister of energy and then report to the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader on business of the House. I have a motion on the Order Paper which deals with the Minister of Justice and his conduct in this House. It asks that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. As the House leader knows, this is a matter to which the government, in the British parliamentary tradition, gives time so that it can be dealt with an hopefully referred to the committee. Will the matter be given government time so that we can deal with it, or is it true that the Minister of Justice has said he does not want it dealt with and does not want it allowed any time in this House?

Mr. Wilson: It is being swept under the carpet.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I checked the precedents for the kind of motion presented by the hon. member, but unfortunately, there are none at all. I may remind the House that the hon. member had two options, namely, to raise a question of privilege or to give forty-eight hours' notice and present a substantive motion on the subject. He preferred the first option, and he raised his question of privilege and lost. Nevertheless, he had ample opportunity during the debate on his question of privilege to try to make his point and to formulate his accusation. He had nearly a whole day to speak to this subject and express his views, and today, after losing his case, after his case was rejected and the Chair had decided there was no prima facie evidence for a question of privilege—the Chair indicated in its decision the options that were open to the opposition—he chose to take advantage of the existing procedure and to try another approach. If the hon. member had taken this option in the first place, the reaction of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), to which he referred, would probably have been different. However, first of all, the hon. member has had ample time to express his point of view which is unprecedented in this House, and as a result, we feel perfectly justified in demanding that the provisions of Standing Orders—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am not happy at all with the way the minister commented on the ruling I gave on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He will have to admit that my ruling was based on parliamentary procedure, and that there is no question of a member losing or having his case rejected as a result of a ruling given by the Chair. The minister may wish to explain to the hon. member at what time the motion could be considered by the House, but I would ask him not to refer to my ruling in those terms.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I may refer the hon. member to Standing Orders 15(4) and 20 which clearly establish the procedure to be followed on motions arising from private members' business. As I said before, considering the fact that the Chair ruled that this was not a prima facie case of privilege, the hon. member had ample time to express his views. He is now taking another approach open to him under the Standing Orders, and it is up to the government to decide, under the provisions of Standing Order 18(2), what the order of precedence will be. Once more, if the hon. member had not had ample time to express his views on a previous occasion, it might be felt that to refuse to consider today's request would be inappropriate. However, the hon. member has had an opportunity to make his accusations, and secondly, and this is more important in that it distinguishes the motion from every previous precedent, the wording of the motion appearing on the Order Paper is clearly an accusation, a judgment without due process of the Minister of Justice. Anyone reading the motion will realize that it is impertinent, bold, disrespectful and unparliamentary, and never in the history of the Parliament of Canada has notice been given for a motion of this kind prior to a debate on the actual question. Because of its wording, the motion is inappropriate and unacceptable to the government, and that is why the Minister of Justice feels that he has every reason to refuse to allow any kind of precedence to be given to this motion, which is any case has already been the subject of debate.

129

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have laid a grave charge against the Minister of Justice, namely, that he deliberately misled this House. This matter should have great priority and should be dealt with. Will the House leader give this House and a committee of this House a chance to look into the conduct of the Minister of Justice and my charge, or will the government continue to be frightened to do so and hide behind this piffle that we have just heard? I have followed exactly what the Speaker advised. This matter should be dealt with by this House and now. It is a grave charge against a minister of the Crown.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have just explained that the hon. member had ample opportunity to make some noise, get publicity and plead his case earlier in this House. What I am saying today is that the hon. member has chosen a second way in trying to achieve his goal. He has given notice of a substantive motion which under the Standing Orders appeared on the Order Paper under private member's business.

I think that in all fairness the hon. member is no more equal than any other member on either side of the House. Therefore, I think the hon. member for St. John's West should wait his turn. However, if the matter is so important to him even after having had the opportunity to plead his case one day and the Speaker having found that there was no prima facie case of privilege, maybe the hon. member's party would support him and move his motion on one of the three opposition days that remain in this session.

• (1510)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the action of the government now raises a very serious problem in procedure. As you and your predecessors have so often said, a question of privilege is rare, so rare that the House deals with a question of privilege immediately when it arises, and it should arise at the earliest possible opportunity. That was done by the hon. member for St. John's West and the Chair dealt with that question expeditiously.

I prefer Madam Speaker's version, your judgment on that occasion, rather than the interpretation which has been placed upon it by the government House leader. You made it quite clear that a matter of procedure was involved, as had your predecessor in the case of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland at the time that he raised his question of privilege.

On those occasions the ongoing procedure suggested to both hon. members was that a substantive motion could be placed upon the Order Paper. There is only one reason the Chair made a suggestion like that on both those occasions, and that was to enable the House in the ordinary course to deal with the questions of privilege which were raised. In this instance, a very serious question of privilege involving a charge concerning the conduct of the Minister of Justice was repeated today in the same language which caused the Chair considerable concern on the original occasion.

The serious procedural question which arises now, if the government continues to follow this wholly undesirable course, is that we will have substantive motions of privilege languishing on the Order Paper potentially throughout the whole of a session. I am sure that is not the traditional parliamentary process.

In my submission, the government is obliged to make government time available at the earliest possible opportunity to give the House the opportunity to deal with the motion. We know that with its majority the motion itself will be defeated, but it should be disposed of and disposed of immediately. To adopt any other position or to suggest that questions of privilege should become the subject of allotted days, I really think is the kind of suggestion which the government House leader ought to reconsider seriously. Traditionally it was the government which had the obligation to deal immediately with questions of privilege and in the shortest possible time.

What it means to the Chair is this. If the government insists upon adhering to this stand, it is pointless for the Chair on future occasions which will arise even to suggest the process of putting a substantive motion down, because we now know, if the government adheres to its position, that it will never be dealt with, that it will languish on the Order Paper and indeed die with prorogation. In the meantime, the stigma is hanging over the person charged, and the question whether or not there is substance to the charge remains unanswered. Surely the illogic of that position must present itself forcefully to the government House leader.

I have one other thing I want to say before I finish. We on this side have offered, because we know the government is hard up for time between the targets it wants to reach and now, that we would keep that debate short and indeed restrict it to only two speakers on the question. We believe strongly that the House should be given the opportunity to resolve the question, even if the government were to say to us that it will bring the matter on for a vote without any speakers. The government House leader made a great to do about the hon. member for St. John's West having two swings at the cat, as it were. I think there might be a disposition, even if we made no speeches, to bring the motion on, to allow the House to divide on it and to resolve the matter. It is totally unacceptable and surely totally unparliamentary to have such a substantive motion lying on the Order Paper between now and dissolution.

That is the result of the government's position, plus the other serious position in which the government House leader has placed the Chair, because no longer with any serious intent can the Chair suggest to any hon. member who raises a question of privilege that there is the option of placing a substantive motion. It will not exist if they adhere to their position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Of course, there is no need for me to rule on this because there is no point of order involved. Hon. members know the statement which I made in the House at the time of the ruling. However, the conduct of business in the House of Commons is the responsibility of the government. The Speaker has no responsibility or other obligation to rearrange the business. I think that is quite clear to hon. members.

Obviously this is a matter which the House leaders should negotiate between themselves and as much as possible not in the House. I have allowed this short debate or short exchange to take place because there was a question relating to government business, but I am afraid it cannot be prolonged. I invite the leaders to negotiate this matter between themselves.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. ANDRE—REPORTED COMMENTS OF MADAM SPEAKER RESPECTING PARLIAMENTARY CONDUCT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice earlier this day. The question arises out of a newspaper article in The Calgary Herald on Saturday, June 5, 1982. I became aware of the article on Tuesday, June 8, of this week and yesterday, June 9, would have been the first opportunity to raise the matter. But in view of the unique nature of the question, I felt I should discuss it with my colleagues and examine precedents to see how best to proceed. Subsequently I decided that the best way to proceed was to raise the matter in the House.

The newspaper article in question arose out of an interview which Your Honour had with Mr. Bob Bergen, a staff writer for The Calgary Herald. The interview occurred at the time Your Honour received an honorary degree from the University of Calgary last weekend. The article reads, in its first part, in such a manner as to suggest that Your Honour was reflecting on my actions and conduct in the House of Commons. If I might just quote from the first part of the article, it reads:

"The rules of Parliament have to be changed to deal with radical 1960s-era campus politics which have crept into the House of Commons," says House Speaker, Jeanne Sauvé.

Sauvé also said the methods of Calgary Centre MP, Harvie Andre, during the March bell-ringing crisis in the House of Commons typify that decade's confrontation tactics.

"In the 1960s you had campus unrest and new tactics we weren't used to", Sauvé said in an interview Friday.

"Well those students are now in Parliament and they've brought with them some of their ways of expressing themselves and conducting their battles", she said.

Sauvé said Andre, who engineered the bell-ringing incident in the House over the Liberal government's omnibus Energy Securities Bill, is an example of one who uses the tactics of confrontation.

"He is the one who raised the problem of the omnibus bill, quite obviously", she said.

I received from Madam Speaker's special assistant, Marie Bender, a copy of a telex she had sent to Mr. Murray Ball, news editor of The Calgary Herald, on June 7, 1982. The telex says that your Honour wished to make clear in her interview that when commenting on campus politics of the sixties your Honour made no connection whatsoever with Mr. Harvie Andre's intervention in the House; nor did you in any way convey the bell-ringing incident. The telex goes on to say:

• (1520)

The direct quotes in the article are correct and when one reads them against the first part of the article, they are clearly of a general nature which is the only type of comment Madam Sauvé, as Speaker of the House, would want to be associated with.

As can be seen from the quote in the article I read earlier to the House, the quotes attributed to you, along with the other comments in the article, clearly leave the impression that Your Honour has accused me of somehow utilizing undergraduate tactics from the 1960s in pursuit of my political objectives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Perhaps Madam Speaker would like to quiet the jackals on the other side so I might continue.

Mr. Crosbie: The louts.

Mr. Clark: The Liberals are using that statement.

Mr. Andre: When I became aware of this article I thought I had one of three alternatives. I could have ignored the article but that would have left on the public record an apparent accusation with which I vehemently disagree.

An hon. Member: You were never a radical.

Mr. Andre: The rabble-rousers on my left are not interested in what I have to say either. They can depart the chamber, then.

In the 1960s I was a professor, not a student, and if anything was on the receiving end—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is a long time ago, Andre.

An hon. Member: She is smiling. She thinks it is a joke.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, perhaps if you were not smiling the jackals would not be laughing.

Some hon. Members: Show some respect.

Mr. Andre: My second course of action could have been to respond to the article by Mr. Bergen, but that would have appeared as if I were using the public media to criticize the Chair, which is something I do not feel is consistent with the conventions and practices which require that members of Parliament respect the Chair and its decisions.

My third alternative is the one I chose. It is to raise the matter here in the House. I have been unable to find, and I am certain there does not exist, a precedent for a Speaker to have reflected on the words or conduct of a Member of Parliament in the House or outside the House. Indeed, during the March bell-ringing incident, your Honour was very careful not to reflect on the actions of any of the parties to this dispute, and indeed such is the convention involved here. Not one of your predecessors, even though hounded by the media for reaction, would in fact have commented on the actions or conduct of any member of the House in regard to that incident. That is the strength of that particular convention.

I have had enough experience in politics to know—and have experience first-hand—that news reports do not always accurately reflect what was said or the context in which it was said. It might be that Madam Speaker was misquoted and it might be that the reporter, by taking her quotes out of context, has created a different impression. There might be other explanations.

As things stand now, this article appearing in a major newspaper in my riding, based on an interview with your Honour, clearly leaves the impression that your Honour is reflecting on my conduct as a Member of Parliament for my constituency.

I am sure that your Honour agrees with me that it would be extremely unfortunate and undesirable for this precedent situation to result in a circumstance where Speakers would be reflecting on the conduct or behaviour of Members of Parliament via the media, as it would be equally undesirable for Members of Parliament via the media, as it would be equally undesirable for Members of Parliament to be reflecting upon the behaviour of Speakers in the performance of their duties through the public media.

I feel that the matter is serious enough in terms of the unfortunate appearance that it creates that I ought to raise the matter. As I indicated, it certainly would be unsatisfactory to me, and I am sure to Your Honour, to have a circumstance where, in fact, there would be public criticism of each other via the media. I would not like to have that reflection on my conduct as a Member of Parliament remain on the public record without some correction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his submission. I believe we are both in the same boat. We both feel quite offended by the way this very short interview was reported in The Calgary Herald. I felt so much so that I immediately issued a press communiqué on Monday morning, a copy of which I sent to the hon. member at his office along with my speech.

Mr. Andre: No, I am sorry.

Madam Speaker: This was so that he would at least be aware that this took place and that he would know how I reacted to it.

I feel a bit uneasy because the hon. member is raising a question of privilege and I happen to be the judge of that question of privilege at the same time as I am extremely involved in it. However, I think it would be quite clear to all members that such statements made outside the House by one member about another member do not in themselves constitute a question of privilege. Therefore, I think the hon. member would recognize with me that he does not have a basis for a question of privilege. However, if there were a basis for a question of privilege in the fact that an hon member said something about another hon. member outside the House, I think I would be the first one who would want to raise a question of privilege because obviously the words put indirectly in my mouth give the impression that I might have said things that I certainly have not said, and I have already told the hon. member that.

I am not misquoted because everything that is in direct quotes is exactly what I said. That appears in the latter part of the article. However, in the first part of the article there are a sequence of statements made by the reporter and allusions that I might have said that. The sequence in which these paragraphs are written gives an impression that I did in fact criticize or reflect on the conduct of the hon. member for Calgary Centre at the time of the bell-ringing crisis.

Hon. members know that I gave a few interviews during the course of that bell-ringing crisis. At that time I did not comment on anyone's actions in the House. I think that should be sufficient evidence that this Speaker knows quite definitely that there is no way the Speaker can comment on the conduct of members in the House. Certainly, I never did that.

Since the hon. member is quoting from the report, I would like to quote some of the other things which are in quotes in the article. When I read them to the House it will realize that they are hardly reconcilable with the first part of the article where I appeared to be reflecting on what a member might have said the reporter quoted me as saying:

● (1530

The House sat down and negotiated its way out of the difficulty and that's what has to happen.

Those were my exact feelings about the crisis. In answer to another question, I said:

The temptation was great to do otherwise than let the House get out of its own mess.

The reporter stated in the article:

While Sauvé says she has ideas about the nature of the reform that could take place to prevent such a crisis, she says she will only reveal them to parliamentary committees studying reform if asked.

Then I am reported to have said:

The way society now functions, and how it solves its problem by confrontation, that kind of behaviour is now reflected in Parliament.

I did say that because I was being asked the question why this happens in the House in this way. If one looks around at what is happening, these tactics are admissible in some other quarters and, of course, they are reflected in the House. I certainly did not allude to the hon. member as being one of those "campus students", because I definitely knew that the hon. member could not possibly have been a student in 1960, and we have just learned that he was a professor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Neither could I have been a student. We are in the same boat there.

I did send a press communiqué, so I think the record is straight as far as The Calgary Herald is concerned. The press communiqué stated:

The Speaker of the House wishes to make it clear in an interview she gave at the time that she received a doctor of laws degree—

I thought I would accept that doctor of laws degree to reassure the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

—that when commenting on Canada's politics of the sixties, she made no connection whatsoever with Mr. Harvie Andre's intervention in the House, nor did she in any way qualify the bell-ringing incident.

It went on to state:

The direct quotes in the article are correct—

I admit that they are correct, and I think the newspaperman has them on tape, and that:

—when one reads them against the first part of the article, they are clearly of a general nature which is the only type of comment Madam Sauvé, as Speaker of the House, would want to be associated with.

So I think the public record has been made clear. I regret that the journalist has reported me in this way, but there is not much that I can do about it. As an experienced politician, I can assure the hon. member and give him my word that I do not think I even committed any kind of imprudence in the course of that particular interview. I am quite sure of it, I categorically state it, and I hope the hon. member will take my word, as I always take the word of hon. members in this house. So I did not reflect upon the hon. member's conduct, and I do want to make that quite clear.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I accept Your Honour's indication that you did not intend to reflect on my statements or conduct or somehow relate those to your interpretation of why the House employed the bell-ringing incident, that it had something to do with 1960s style campus politics evolving to the House of Commons. I assure Your Honour that it does have something to do with the sixties. The rule changes in 1969 were what prevented and closed off the opportunity for

hon. members to curtail an excessively arrogant government. That is the only legacy of the sixties which has resulted in other mechanisms being used, but that is a dispute between yourself and myself as to why the House has behaved in the way it has under this government.

Madam Speaker, I did want to indicate that I did not receive a copy of your speech. You may have intended that a copy be sent to my office, but my office did not receive one. What I received was a telexed letter, not from yourself but, rather, from your special assistant, Mary Bender. I did not feel the quotation in the second paragraph entirely corrected the record, but I accept Your Honour's indication that you did not have that intent.

Although I have indicated my acceptance of Your Honour's position, I would not want the record to reflect that I would not have considered it to be a breach of privilege had Your Honour intended to publicly criticize me and had Your Honour intended to reflect on my conduct as a Member of Parliament. I would not have accepted that as a ruling. I would have considered that to be a most serious breach of privilege. However, I accept Your Honour's indication that that was not your intention.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITION

MR. GREENAWAY—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 378 citizens and gun owners of Cariboo-Chilcotin riding in British Columbia. This joins a similar petition which I submitted previously containing 758 signatures.

The purpose of this petition is to protest the introduction of Bill C-451, a private member's bill concerning gun control. The signatories to this petition are legitimate gun owners who use their firearms both for sport and often in the course of their work.

The nature of the petition is to demand the immediate withdrawal of Bill C-451, as well as the denial of passage of the bill should it come up for consideration in the House.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to allow discussion and/or referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time in order that the flaws in this proposed legislation may be pointed out.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-117, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS THAT PROVIDE FOR THE RETENTION OF RECORDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-118, An Act to amend certain Acts that provide for the retention of records.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE REPEAL ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-119. An Act to repeal certain statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,125, 3,687, 4,284, 4,293 and 4,297.

[Text]

ACQUISITIONS BY CORPORATIONS

Question No. 3,125—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to each corporation not included in Schedules C and D of the Financial Administration Act which are wholly-owned by Her Majesty in right of Canada, during the period 1970-80 did the corporation acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. In each case, does the corporation have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Bank of Canada is concerned: 1. (a) Bank of International Settlements (BIS), (b) 1.8 per cent of outstanding BIS shares at the end of its 1969-70 fiscal year, (c) $2,633,196.86, (d) Same as (c).

2. No.

In so far as the Canada Council is concerned: The Canada Council's cultural programs are funded partially from income from the endowment fund and other funds set up from bequests and gifts made to the council for specific purposes. The investment committee follows rules that are similar to those established under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. Under a rule established by council, no single equity exceeds 7 per cent of the total equity market value.

1. The Canada Council does not hold a significant percentage of any corporation. As a rule, the Canada Council does not exercise its voting rights.

2. No.

The following government institutions have no information on this subject: Canadair Limited, The Canadian Wheat Board, de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, International Development Research Centre, National Arts Centre Corporation, Standards Council of Canada.

WORK SHARING AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Question No. 3,687—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, by province, what amount was spent on work sharing agreements?

2. What amount is estimated to be spent in the (a) present (b) next fiscal year?

3. Are only designated sectors of the economy eligible for this program and, if so, which sectors?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. None for 1980 and 1981. The following are the amounts, by calendar year, for 1977 and 1978 (not available separately) and 1979:

Region	1977 and 1978 $(thousands)	1979 $(thousands)
Newfoundland	—	—
Nova Scotia	$ 20.3	—
Prince Edward Island	—	—
New Brunswick	$ 117.7	$ 10.3
Quebec	$ 940.9	$ 18.8
Ontario	$ 174.8	$159.9
Manitoba	—	—
Saskatchewan	$ 3.5	—
Alberta/Northwest Territories	$ 15.9	—
British Columbia/Yukon	$ 49.5	—
Canada	$1,322.6	$189.0

2. (a) No estimate has been made. Present authorities place a limit of $10 million on expenditures in the 1982 calendar year. (b) No estimate has been made and no limit has been authorized.*

3. No. Work sharing is available in all sectors.

* It is anticipated that, if the demand for work sharing approaches $10 million, an increase in the expenditure ceiling would be sought.

NEWCOMBE INQUIRY

Question No. 4,284—Mr. MacKay:

What was the total cost of the so-called Newcombe inquiry of 1979-80 and what amount was paid to Mr. Edmund Peter Newcombe, Q.C., for his services as commissioner of the inquiry?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The total cost of the so-called Newcombe inquiry established on December 13, 1979 by the then Progressive Conservative government was $7,414.83. The total amount of $6,214.83 was paid to Mr. Edmund Peter Newcombe, Q.C., for his services as commissioner of the inquiry.

RECRUITMENT AND RELEASES

Question No. 4,293—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How many recruits were accepted as medically suitable at recruiting stations and later found to be medically unsuitable at CFB Cornwallis during the calendar year (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981?

2. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981, what percentage of recruits were released from CFB Cornwallis (i) for disciplinary reasons (ii) on request by the recruit (iii) for medical reasons (iv) for a false enlistment (v) for other reasons?

3. Is it customary to give complete medical examinations before enrolment and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. Statistics are not maintained on releases at each training base for medical reasons due to pre-existing medical problems. The releases are included in the category of irregular enrolments. The Directorate of Medical Treatment Services (DMTS) does however, review the files of all those who are released as a result of a pre-existing medical problem. The following numbers of files which were reviewed by DMTS are from all recruit training bases.

Year	Personnel Released as a Result of a Pre-existing Medical Problem
1979	557
1980	684
1981	598

2. The following chart shows, by percentages, recruit releases at CFB Cornwallis.

	Year	(i) Disciplinary	(ii) On request of member	(iii) Medical	(iv) False Enrolment	(v) Other
(a)	1979	0.02	1.2	0.04	6.3	9.5
(b)	1980	0.04	0.2	0.10	6.4	6.3
(c)	1981	0.02	0.4	0.95	4.7	5.1

3. It is not and has not been customary to give complete medicals to applicants other than aircrew prior to enrolment since 1976. It was considered at that time the lengthy delays required to obtain laboratory and x-ray results were discouraging many applicants and were one cause of the low enrolment rate. As a result the decision was taken to streamline the enrolment process by modifying the enrolment examination.

DISTRIBUTION OF AIRCRAFT REFUELLER TRUCKS

Question No. 4,297—Mr. McKinnon:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,444 concerning the purchase and distribution of aircraft refueller trucks which indicated that trucks valued at $121,000 each will be distributed at 19 Canadian Forces Bases (a) which bases are to receive the trucks (b) how many trucks will be positioned at each base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) The distribution of aircraft refueller trucks by base and quantity is as follows:

Canadian Forces Base Bagotville	13
Canadian Forces Base Chatham	7
Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake	14
Canadian Forces Base Comox	11
Canadian Forces Base Edmonton	7
Canadian Forces Station Gander	3
Canadian Forces Base Greenwood	8
Canadian Forces Base Moose Jaw	8
Canadian Forces Base North Bay	5
Canadian Forces Base Ottawa	5
Canadian Forces Base Portage la Prairie	5
Canadian Forces Base Shearwater	10
Canadian Forces Base Summerside	4
Canadian Forces Base Toronto	3
Canadian Forces Base Trenton	7
Canadian Forces Base Winnipeg	10
Canadian Forces Base Montreal	3
Canadian Forces Base Borden	2
Canadian Forces Europe	32
Total	157

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1540)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING INCENTIVES

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 9, 1982, consideration of Bill C-104, respecting Petroleum Incentives and Canadian Ownership and Control Determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Lalonde).

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"2.1. The objects of this Act are:

(1) To provide a petroleum incentive program;

(2) To foster greater self-sufficiency of oil and gas supplies in Canada;

(3) To promote development of oil and gas fields on Canada Lands;

(4) To facilitate, in relation to oil and gas development, consultation and coordination with the governments of the provinces, the Yukon Territory, and the Northwest Territories;

(5) To maximize the social and economic benefits from the oil and gas developments on Canada Lands, including the maximizing of the opportunities for employment of Canadians while at the same time minimizing any adverse effect on the social and environmental conditions of the areas most directly affected by the oil and gas developments;

(6) To advance national economic and energy interests and local public interest in social and economic development by ensuring the highest possible degree of Canadian participation in general, and local participation in particular, in all aspects of the oil and gas development in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories."

He said: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to this amendment, but before doing so I have some preliminary remarks that I would like to address in response to some of the comments that were made last night by the "hon. Jerry Rubin" of this House, the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), or "radical Harv", as he is now going to be known around here! I never thought he was a member of the SDS; I thought it was more like the SS!

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we heard from the Conservatives yesterday—and I see the radical member back now—speaking with respect to this bill. I really never heard such hypocrisy in all my life. How about sitting down and listening to this, because I want to quote from the letter that the hon. member has written. The hon. member from Calgary Centre, the Conservative energy critic, stood up in the House yesterday to speak on Bill C-104, a bill to give $8.9 billion in grants to oil companies under the new National Energy Program update, and that is what the figure will be, $8.9 billion over five years. The member for Calgary Centre said he had got some changes in this bill and was quite happy. He got a judicial review of one section. He said nothing about giving $8.9 billion away. Then he criticized the petroleum incentives program grants, the PIP grants, not because they were excessive but because they were bureaucratic in filling out the forms. He should try and fill out some welfare forms or some unemployment insurance forms. He would find that they are just as bureaucratic. There is no one to defend those people, but there are many people to defend the oil companies, as the member for Calgary Centre does incessantly in this House.

Then the rest of the Conservative members got up and gave the impression that they were against this program. But here is the letter, Mr. Speaker, dated December 21, 1981. It is from "Radical Harv", the hon. member for Calgary Centre, to his fellow 1960 radical member and Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who was also teaching university, I believe, in the 1960s. Here is what the member for Calgary Centre said:

> The parts of the proposed bill dealing with the Canadian Ownership Rate and the Petroleum Incentive Program are long overdue and we would be willing to see two relevant acts introduced and dealt with on a priority basis.

What hypocrisy for the Conservative Party to stand up and say, "We are really against this." They are not against it at all. There is the letter. What he wanted was quick dealing with it. They were saying: "Let us deal with the petroleum incentives program, let us get it over with, and let us get those grants to the oil companies as quickly as possible".

This is an incredible gift to the industry. How does the Conservative Party criticize this bill? They criticize it by saying: "Well, it may be against the Bill of Rights because it may discriminate against Canadian companies". I often think, when I hear that, of K. C. Irving sitting there in the Bahamas, the man who owns all the media in New Brunswick, the forest industry in New Brunswick, Irving Oil and a good part of other industries, including the beer industry. And we are to defend his rights as he sits there in the Bahamas!

Mr. Breau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will not want to mislead the House. Mr. K. C. Irving does not own all of the papers in New Brunswick. There are at least two or three French language newspapers that he does not own.

Mr. Waddell: I am glad you pointed out that there are a couple of French newspapers. However, I am not here to attack K. C. Irving. I am here to deal with some of the Conservative allegations on this bill and also to deal with the bill itself. It is just incredible. We are at a time, Mr. Speaker, when the average family are having difficulties and are suffering, as we all heard from some of the questions put in question period. Yet we see this program in Bill C-104 which will give away in the petroleum incentives program more than $8.9 billion. Just think of that, $8.9 billion.

In my province the government is asking public servants and other people for restraint, not to go to the hospital because there are not enough beds, to cut back and so on. And here we are giving away $8.9 billion in grants. Think of that!

From Vancouver today, Allan Fotheringham, the Southam News columnist, writes that we should look into the salaries of some senior executives in the oil industry in this period of restraint. He quotes a report of the United States Securities Exchange Commission. That commission requires that all companies that are traded publicly disclose all facts, material or otherwise that may affect the company's business. We do not have that kind of law in Canada, so you have to go to the United States to find out the salaries of senior officials and senior executives.

According to that report, the salary of the Imperial Oil Chairman, Jack Armstrong, eased upward from $408,850 to $480,700. Poor Mr. Armstrong and Imperial Oil! The government gave Imperial Oil—I found this out in committee—$45 million to continue Cold Lake for a year. It was put on hold and Imperial just pocketed our $45 million. and Mr. Armstrong pockets $480,000 a year.

Mr. Pierce, the chairman of Ranger Oil, managed to get by with an increase from his last year's salary of $233,639 to $398,053. Is that not incredible! Just think of these large salaries and these large increases, and then think of the government in this bill giving $8.9 billion to oil companies!

The Conservatives criticize the bill because they are worried about a clause in the Charter of Rights, which they did not like in the first place. They are worried about bureaucracy in the bill. But at no time do they say that it is obscene to give $8.9 billion to an industry that says "We do not want government looking after us." If they want government to get out of their lives, let government get out of their lives. Let them do their exploration on their own, without $8.9 billion in PIP grants.

The system that we have in this country is screwy; it is upside down. Perhaps "Radical Harv" when he was a student radical in the 1960s had a different way of looking at things, but it seems to me that it is crazy, when we have so much need in medicare, in education, in job creation and so on, to give $8.9 billion to oil companies.

• (1550)

There will be some exploration and jobs will be created, but that will be in the north and offshore. Exploration will be done in the north by Gulf, Imperial and perhaps Dome, if Dome survives. It will be done in the Hibernia field by Mobil. Those are large American multinational companies. Have we not learned the pattern and that oil companies will want more money? Then they will go out and come back and say they have found more oil and gas, and they will want to export it, like they did one-half of their daily oil production in 1970. After they have done that, they will say there is a shortage. They will say there is a crisis, and they will come back and ask for more money. It is a never-ending circle. It is a Catch-22 situation.

I had to sit here the other night and listen to nonsense from members of the official opposition in their attacks on the government in relation to this bill. Members of the official opposition are inconsistent. According to the Gallup poll, if an election were held tomorrow I suppose members of the official opposition would form the government, but it would be a government with no policy. They would give Petro-Canada away to the oil companies. They would give even more money to the oil companies. Do the Canadian people really want that? I ask the Canadian people, through you, Mr. Speaker, and through the media, to think about that. I ask the Canadian people to think about who wants to give more money to the oil companies because that is what the Conservatives have been saying.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre is the "Chicago Sevener" of this House. The other day he said in this House that he would get rid of Crown corporations, including Petro-Canada. That is his policy. That may be the policy of the blue Tories, but it is not the policy of the red Tories. Perhaps it is the policy of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) but not that of Mr. Mulroney. This is a very serious matter and the official opposition should be consistent.

There is another problem, and I have dealt with it in this amendment. The money provided by this bill is to be used to develop the north and offshore, but mainly in the Canadian Arctic. The government is moving out of Alberta, which is a silly policy. We should be developing the heavy oil in the Lloydminster-Wainwright area. That would provide many jobs. I received a call from Mr. Peter Susa, a representative of the steelworkers' union at the Interprovincial pipe plant at Regina. He told me that on July 14, 1982, Ipsco will lay off 516 workers for an indefinite period; 311 at Regina steel, 105 at Regina pipe, 86 at Edmonton, 80 at Port Moody and three at Brooks, Alberta. After September 30, 1982, that number will increase to 1,000. There would not be those lay-offs if the government was operating and helping in the regular industry in Alberta and Saskatchewan rather than going up to the north where American companies will be doing the basic exploration. Small Canadian contractors will not be there.

When the New Democratic Party toured Alberta, we were told at Edmonton by the ESA that its members would not be able to go up into the Canadian Arctic. They want to be close to home; that is where their jobs are.

There is another concern up in the Canadian Arctic when we go—I was about to say "hell bent for development". Perhaps that is unparliamentary. Perhaps I should say "all bent for development". The problem is in relation to the native people there. They live there. It is their home, their land and their country. That is why we are introducing this amendment.

Our Motion No. 2 sets out certain objects and refers to the objects section of the Northern Pipeline Act of 1978, Section 3, which was passed by this House. The purpose of this objects section is to make clear that the petroleum incentives program must serve national and local public interests as well as provide incentives for the development of the oil and gas potential of the Canada lands. The Northwest Territories are singled out in this amendment because the other Canada lands described in Clause 2 of this bill are submarine areas, and the local public interest is accordingly less a matter of local public debate—unless we want to include fish! There are no people there, but there are people in the north. There are native people who are the majority. There are Inuit and Dene people in the Beaufort Sea area, for example. This bill does nothing for them. It does not mention them. They were hardly even consulted about this bill. That is the Ottawa way of doing things. We put one ad in the Yellowknife newspaper to tell the people about this bill and to tell them they could come to the committee. When they came to the committee, at first they had trouble being heard but, thanks to the generosity of the members of the committee, they were able to be heard.

In passing, I want to pay tribute to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) for his chairmanship of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation. He did a good job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: That is the last good thing I will say about those fellows opposite.

Mr. Lalonde: Now you will stop being honest.

Mr. Waddell: Hon. members opposite should be putting this amendment in. The amendment deals with local participation in all aspects of oil and gas. I see the minister over there. We could continue this debate for a long time. I put it to the minister again that one would expect him to understand the interests and desires of a local group fighting for its rights and culture. That is what Canadian people in the north want.

We talked about the issues of the sixties, and I made fun of the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I said he was the Jerry Rubin of this House. One of the issues in the United States in the sixties was the treatment of minority groups, especially black people, with some dignity. The Americans passed a number of civil rights acts. We have never faced up to that in Canada. We have a problem in Canada. We like to talk about how bad South Africa, the United States and other places are, but the way we treat our native people in this country is shameful and we have to change. This House is the place to change. The native people are the majority in the north. This bill deals with giving grants for speeding up exploration in the north, especially in the Beaufort Sea area and the western Arctic, but what do we do about consulting local people? Nothing. This amendment simply says that as part of the statement of objects in this bill, we should try to maximize economic benefits to the people who are there. The amendment reads:

—at the same time minimizing any adverse effect on the social and environmental conditions of the areas most directly affected—

A native chief, Sam Raddi, told a federal government inquiry that there is a story the native people tell. His father told him and his father's father told his father. The story is passed down through the generations. The story is that if the animals ever disappear from the Beaufort Sea area—the cariboo, the whale and the seal—then the people go next.

There is much we could learn from native people. We could gain much wisdom about life from them. If we do not look after our environment, we will disappear because we are part of that environment. That is what we have to learn.

That is why we have introduced a clause like this. It talks about local participation in oil and gas development. It does not require the government to do anything in terms of levying tax. The Crown does not have to spend money. All the amendment says is that the government must consider local development. It must consider the native people and the people who call that area their home. Most Canadians live in the south of Canada along a strip right across the country which is near the United States. Some people still think about the north. There is good will in southern Canada for the north—even in Toronto—because Canadians are a northern people. When we deal with the north in any of these bills we should not forget the people there. I think in southern Canada there is support for northern interests.

• (1600)

All we ask is that the government adopt this amendment which will give firm protection to the north and will show some concern for the native people who call the north their home.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of Motion No. 2 introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and to express my appreciation for the job he has done in raising what I consider the real issues of this whole energy package.

Our concern with this bill is that it proposes a massive incentive program for the oil companies without any guaranteed benefits for the Canadian people. The idea of an incentive is to give some person or some organization a reason for taking action. By making provision for the payment of some $8.9 billion to the oil companies, the government is giving them plenty of reason to act but is rather vague about the actions it requires from them, other than simply that they should spend money on petroleum exploration and development of the Canada lands.

The bill sets out the framework for paying $8.9 billion of taxpayers' money to the oil companies so that the federal government can do an end run around the petroleum producing provinces.

In Hamlet there is an interesting situation in which Hamlet, sitting by the graveside, considers the whole cycle of human mortality—how a person can die and rot and become earth that in turn nurtures food that goes into other human beings. Then he says that in this way a king can do a progress through the guts of a beggar. Under PIP, the money of poor people paid out in taxes does a progress through the guts of the bureaucracy and ends up in the pockets of the oil companies.

This amendment sets out the objects which we believe the act should achieve. If we are to have incentives, then they should be directed toward goals that are in accord with our national purpose. Simply shovelling money out to the companies may be a well-established Canadian custom but it hardly constitutes a national goal around which all Canadians of intelligence and good will can unite.

The amendment sets out some objectives which should be an integral part of any incentive program. Some of these objectives have been overlooked. The amendment states, in part, as follows:

> The objects of this Act are:
>
> (1) To provide a petroleum incentive program;

There is no question about that, Mr. Speaker. Providing $8.9 billion to the oil companies will give them plenty of incentive. The remaining five objectives set out the benefits that should accrue to Canadians as a result of this $8.9 billion. Let us consider the merits of these objectives and ask how well the bill measures up to them. Does the bill promote these objectives as well as it promotes giving money to the oil companies? The second objective reads:

> To foster greater self-sufficiency of oil and gas supplies in Canada;

The question of self-sufficiency in oil and gas has been at the centre of Canadian political debate for the last decade. All parties agree that energy self-sufficiency is a desirable objective. Certainly it is one of the standards against which PIP should be measured.

We have serious questions about whether $8.9 billion for the oil companies is the way to achieve self-sufficiency. That $8.9 billion could be used in ways to achieve much more, such as enhanced recovery, an increased program of conservation and putting money into alternate energy. If we consider some of the situations in which we are involved we find, for example, that Dome, in exchange for Japanese financing, has already promised to export petroleum resources from the Beaufort. We have to ask how increased exports will lead to greater self-sufficiency. We know very well that it will not. We travelled this route ten or fifteen years ago and that is why we are facing the present crisis.

The third objective is:

> To promote development of oil and gas fields on Canada lands.

The act will indeed do this by providing up to 80 per cent of drilling and exploration costs. This is one of the objectives of the act and it should be stated as such. We have to ask how desirable this goal is. Is it to the advantage of Canadians to pay $8.9 billion for a program that ignores more accessible petroleum reserves in the western provinces? Is drilling in the Beaufort Sea, with all the attendant environmental risks, the best way to achieve energy security in Canada? We have to ask if it is in our own best interests as a nation to encourage the economic equivalent of a pre-emptive strike on land that is still subject to land claims negotiations. Is it really part of our national character to deal craftily with the aboriginal people of the north, guaranteeing them aboriginal rights in the Constitution but eroding those rights and circumscribing them by this legislation which gives out incentives for development on lands for which claims are under negotiation?

The fourth objective is this:

To facilitate, in relation to oil and gas development, consultation and coordination with the governments of the provinces, the Yukon Territory, and the Northwest Territories;

Canada is a federal state and co-operation should be the hallmark of any energy legislation. Where the government was unable to get along with the producing provinces which have a degree of sovereignty in their own sphere, it simply picked up its marbles and headed for the territories where it hopes it can still reign supreme. No consultation with the territories has taken place. No revenue-sharing agreement has been reached with them. Instead, the territories will be completely dependent upon the largesse and generosity of the federal government—as the 13 American colonies were dependent upon George III. The government seems to be about as stupid and insensitive as George III. Perhaps it should look at history to see what happened there.

The people of the north are tired of exploitation without consultation. They object to the imposition of a form of development that denies their basic right to determine their own future. There is a need to return to co-operative federalism and to include the territories.

The fifth objective reads:

To maximize the social and economic benefits from the oil and gas developments on Canada Lands, including the maximizing of the opportunities for employment of Canadians while at the same time minimizing any adverse effect on the social and environmental conditions of the areas most directly affected by the oil and gas developments;

The question "What's in it for me?" may not be satisfactory as a total human philosophy, but it is a pretty important question for most Canadians today. We know that each of us will have to pay a pretty hefty chunk of that $8.9 billion, at a time when we have trouble raising money for housing, for health care and for higher education. It is important that we ask what are we getting for it in the way of jobs, and how many. Will there be enough for my kids coming out of school, where will they be, how long will they last and how much will they pay? With two million Canadians out of work these are not frivolous questions. Unfortunately, while this should be an objective of the incentive program, there is nothing in the bill which says how it would meet this objective. There are no guarantees, the incentives are only for exploration and development, and there is no requirement for performance in terms of job creation.

• (1610)

The second part of this objective talks about minimizing adverse effects on the people most affected. We have to recognize that oil drilling and exploration in the north will mean major disruption in the lifestyle of northern people. Unfortunately there is nothing in this incentive program which even asks the companies to raise that as a concern. The record of the government is one of dragging its feet on land claims negotiations and cutting back on money for environmental grants.

I am pleased to see the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is here today and I would be interested in hearing his comments on the fact that the Beaufort Sea coalition has had its grants cut back by some 62 per cent. How are we going to be concerned about the environment at the same time as we are cutting back on the money? There was a promise of $10 million to help the people of the north deal with the social impact of the Norman Wells pipeline, but none of it has materialized. It is important that this bill recognizes as an objective the need to maximize the benefits and minimize the adverse effects; then we can measure the program to see how well it delivers.

The final objective is:

To advance national economic and energy interests and local public interest in social and economic development by ensuring the highest possible degree of Canadian participation in general, and local participation in particular, in all aspects of the oil and gas development in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Basically we want guarantees to the highest possible extent of Canadian and local participation. The people who suffer the adverse effects should get some of the benefits. But the bill does not do that.

When we were debating Bill C-48 last year and looking at its basic philosophy, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway pointed out time and again that the numbers regarding Canadian ownership could be and would be fiddled. If we look at the first major contract given out under that bill, we see that Esso, with about 30 per cent Canadian ownership, has formed some kind of a paper consortium involving ten other companies so that it will have some kind of Canadian content and be able to get the money from the Canadian people.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, does not really achieve the goals it should. I think we should at least have a statement of our objectives, and we can then see whether or not it measures up. Therefore, I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 22 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"the applicant has a prescribed interest or has or had".

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 10

(a) by striking out lines 5 to 16 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"for 1981-1986, 50% or more but less than 65%;"

(b) by striking out lines 18 to 30 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"for 1981-1986, 65% or more but less than 75%; and"

(c) by striking out lines 32 to 38 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"for 1981-1986, 75% or more."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the PIP grants is to promote greater private Canadian ownership in the industry. The higher the Canadian ownership rate, COR, the greater the grant. When the NEP was first introduced in 1980, presumably after much consideration and determination by cabinet—although I wonder—they agreed to push ahead with Canadianization as rapidly as possible. The COR levels were in three categories: zero to 50 per cent; 50 per cent to 75 per cent; over 75 per cent. Because of intense lobbying by the industry, including Conservative members, the COR levels have been reduced and an intermediate category has been added.

The effect of this amendment will be to institute a 50 per cent to 64 per cent COR for level 2 beginning in 1981, a 65 per cent to 74 per cent COR for level 3 beginning in 1981, and a 75 per cent plus COR for level 4 beginning in 1981, instead of phasing in percentage levels as presently in the bill.

The Liberals, Mr. Speaker, have decided to Canadianize. You know their motto very well: "Don't do anything by half that you can do by quarters." This bill is an example of that. Canadianization is not a yacht race, you do not have to tack and weave and so on. It seems to me that if you have a goal, you approach the goal.

We in the NDP would not Canadianize in this way. It is unworkable, bureaucratic, and a big giveaway to Imperial Oil and its friends. But this is the way the government has chosen to Canadianize. It seems to me that if they are going to Canadianize by way of private Canadian industry, then they should do it in a straightforward way. Do not tack all over the place. The government should have some tough Canadian ownership rates. If we do not have some tough Canadian ownership rates, we will have what the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Island (Mr. Manly) said a moment ago—that Imperial Oil will be going into the Beaufort Sea involved in a consortium of companies and the paper consortiums will be doing all the work.

• (1620)

During the committee hearings we were told by representatives of Home Oil that Home Oil goes where it can get the best return. Home Oil will go to Australia, the North Sea or wherever. Home Oil is not perhaps as interested in Canadianizing or exploring in Canada as we may want them to be. Home Oil's representatives said they would look at the north but Home would be part of a consortium of companies. We will have the same old gang going up north. It will include Gulf and Imperial, which is the same old gang.

This amendment points out one of the defects in the government's energy program. It shows one of the patterns that has emerged from the government's energy program and that is the pattern of backing off. When there is pressure from the industry, the government backs off. That is why the federal government gave the industry $2 billion the other day. The government then sells out. It has sold out on consumer prices. Along with the Conservatives, the Liberal Party is a high-priced party in Canada. The Liberals are even worse than the Conservatives because the Liberals are not going to give any money back as an energy tax credit to low and middle-income people. Instead the government is going to give $8.9 billion in grants to the oil companies.

This money will be given mostly to the large companies because the large oil companies are the ones that will go north in phony consortiums. That is why we have brought in this amendment. If the government wants to pursue this form of Canadianization, let the government bring in some tough Canadianization rules. As I have said before, the government should not be backing off and doing things by quarters when the government could be doing it in total.

Canadians are ready for leadership in Canadianization. I do not agree with the Conservatives in this debate when they pooh-pooh Canadianization. Canadians are ready for it. I think Canadians want public ownership. They want us to use Petro-Canada. David Lewis, Tommy Douglas and the rest of us in the New Democratic Party dragged the Liberals kicking and screaming into bringing in Petro-Canada. Now that we have it, why do we not use it? Why give $8.9 billion to companies that say, "We are for free enterprise; we want to get the government off our backs."? Let the government get off their backs and not give them this $8.9 billion. The government can give the money to people in my riding in the east end of Vancouver who had trouble last winter paying their hydro bills. Luckily, we had a mild winter in Vancouver.

Mr. Blaikie: We should get the oil companies off the people's backs.

Mr. Waddell: My colleague says we should get the oil companies off the people's backs, but we will not if we give them $8.9 billion. It seems to me it is the other way around.

In any event, this amendment proposes to say to the Liberals "Quit backtracking; get on with the job. Make it tough if you are going to do this, otherwise Canadianization through PIP and COR will simply fall apart." I invite the government to accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, you were good enough to reply to my submission the other night with respect to Motion No. 5. The Chair ruled it out of order. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) must have passed me his notes because I made mistake when I suggested—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the Chair yesterday again ruled the hon. member's motion out of order. There is no further discussion on the matter.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-104, an act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended by adding immediately after line 38 at page 7 the following:

"12.(1) Notwithstanding this Act, any aboriginal right, title or interest, or any claim under such right, title or interest that any aboriginal people in Canada may have had prior to the coming into force of this Act, in and to the land which is herein described as Canada Lands, continues to exist until an agreement with that aboriginal people is effected which provides otherwise. (2) In this act, "aboriginal people" means those people described in Section 35(2) of the Canada Act."

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Motion No. 6 is similar to an amendment that was accepted for Bill C-48. It is necessary to assure the aboriginal people of the north that we continue to regard their rights as being paramount. The guarantee in the Constitution is not something they regard as adequate. I think it is important that we have this amendment accepted. In the native claims policy entitled "In All Fairness", tabled in December, 1981, by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), we find on page 23 the following:

Lands selected by Natives for their continuing use should be traditional land that they currently use and occupy; but persons of non-Native origin who have acquired for various purposes, rights in the land in the area claimed, are equally deserving of consideration. Their rights and interests must be dealt with equitably.

Other basic access rights must be taken into consideration: rights of access such as transportation routes within and through a settlement area; rights of way for necessary government purposes; rights of access to holders of subsurface rights for exploration, development and production of resources, subject to fair compensation as mutually agreed either through negotiation or arbitration.

This places the whole question of Indian land rights and aboriginal rights on a par with the rights of big corporations that have acquired financial interests in the area. I think it is absolutely essential that there be some protection for the aboriginal rights of the people of the north. This is in accord with previous guarantees. I urge the government to accept this amendment.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on this amendment. I will perhaps say something about the other motions afterwards. As we are all agreed to the government motions, perhaps we can proceed with them right away and have the vote before five o'clock.

With respect to what my colleague said, it is important that we put something in this bill to recognize that there are aboriginal rights in this particular area. I am amazed how powerful the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) seems to be in the cabinet. He is nodding and saying how he appreciates that. But the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) have completely lost in their dealings on the north. The little white knight of the Department of the Environment has been slain by the dragon of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Department of the Environment has really been thrown out of the north and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has won the battle and has developed the north in every respect.

The Minister of the Environment should pay some attention to what the native people up there have been saying. He should pay some attention to the fact that if there is an oil spill in the Beaufort Sea—as there will be, although I hope not—as we speed up exploration, we will have an environmental disaster of a proportion that we have never seen before. It will be worse than the blow-out in the Gulf of Mexico, because we will not be able to stop it.

Mr. Blaikie: Plug the holes with cabinet ministers. They are sticky enough.

Mr. Waddell: My colleague says we should try to plug the hole with cabinet ministers. In any event, what we have tried to do is consult with the Dene people. I understand that the native people from Alaska to Greenland have an interest in the development of the north. They had suggested to us that they have a consultative council so they could be consulted at least when the development went ahead and when the minister authorized grants and directed exploration in the north. They felt they were not listened to when we debated Bill C-48. They do not have the kind of lobby which the industry has. They do not have the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the pimp of the oil industry here, to raise arguments for them. They do not have money to put advertisements in newspapers. They do not have money to do that kind of thing. There is really no one to speak for the native people of the country. That is why we have put in these amendments and we urge the government to adopt them.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the rest of the amendments, unless I am mistaken, are government amendments. Is that correct?

Mr. Lalonde: Correct.

Mr. Waddell: Then I would have no objection on behalf of my party, whatever is the proper procedure, to agreeing to their being put through now and dispensing with the reading of them. We would be prepared to let them go now, and we could have the vote on our amendments, if possible.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the remaining amendments are in the name of the minister. If the opposition agrees to them, of course we are willing to accept that. But I would like to know whether the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) agrees or not. If they still have something to say, perhaps they could say it on third reading. We are openminded.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would like an opportunity to make about five minutes' worth of remarks, and then I would concur with the agreement. First I should like to point out that by last count the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) this afternoon called me a "storm trooper", an "SS", and I think he referred to me as a "pimp".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I have not had a chance—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member used this language, it is unparliamentary. The Chair missed it, I invite the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, if he used the expression just described by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), to withdraw such a remark because it is clearly unparliamentary.

Mr. Waddell: Which expression was it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The reference to the hon. member as a "pimp", I believe I will have to rule unparliamentary.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I originally read the word when it was used by the previous hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, Tommy Douglas. He used it in the House of Commons. He seemed to get away with it, but if Your Honour feels that way, I would be pleased to withdraw it, and I withdraw the reference to the SS. I meant SDS, Students for Democratic Society, which I suspect was the radical group with which my friend was involved in the 1960s.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the hon. member describing me as a radical student from the 1960s, provided that he does not insist that I grow a beard, let my hair get long and shaggy, wear jeans, sandals and the other accoutrements or parts of the uniform that go along with being in that category!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 21 by adding immediately after line 30 at page 11 the following:

"(d) requiring notices to be submitted to the Minister by or on behalf of persons who have received incentives that are greater or less than the amounts to which they are entitled, specifying the time limits within which such notices shall be submitted and providing for the extension by the Minister of such times limits;"

and by renumbering the subsequent paragraphs of that Clause accordingly.

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 30 by striking out line 4 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) For greater certainty the Federal Court of Appeal has jurisdiction, under section 28 of the Federal Court Act, on any ground set out in section 28 of that Act, to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a determination of the Minister under subsection (1) of this section.

(5) Interest referred to in section 24 or"

• (1640)

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 35

(a) by striking out line 27 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"equity within the meaning of the regulations, the percentage of the formal"

(b) by striking out line 31 at page 16 substituting the following therefor:

"more than one class of formal equity within the meaning of the regulations,".

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 39 by striking out line 41 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Subject to subsection (6) and section".

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 44 by striking out line 14 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"subparagraph 43(1)(e)(ii) or (iii), subsection 45(4) or subsec-".

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 45

(a) by adding immediately after line 3 at page 27 the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding anything in this Part, where the Minister is of the opinion that the Canadian ownership rate or control status stated in a certificate was not determined in accordance with this Part and the regulations to the prejudice of the person to whom the certificate was issued, the Minister shall redetermine the Canadian ownership rate or control status in accordance with this Part and the regulations and issue a new certificate accordingly."

(b) by striking out line 5 at page 27 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsection (2) or (4) shall replace any certificate in"

(c) by renumbering subclauses (4) and (5) at page 27 as subclauses (5) and (6), respectively.

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 48 by adding immediately after line 23 at page 30 the following:

"(7) Notwithstanding anything in this section, the Minister may exempt an applicant for a certificate from the application of this section or any provision thereof in respect of any investor that is Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or an entity all or substantially all of the formal equity or assets of which are owned, directly or indirectly, by Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province."

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 52 by striking out lines 4 and 5 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"nation of the Canadian ownership rate of any person or class of".

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended in Clause 53 by striking out lines 14 and 15 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canadian ownership rate of the Canadian ownership rate and control status of the applicant and the effective period".

• (1650)

Mr. Lalonde moved:

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-104, An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 25 at page 34, the following:

"Judicial Review

59. Notwithstanding subsection 28(2) of the Federal Court Act, where a person is directly affected by a determination or redetermination of Canadian ownership rate by the Minister under subsection 39(2), 44(1) or 53(1), he may apply to the Federal Court of Appeal for a review under section 28 of the Federal Court Act, whether or not the determination or redetermination is of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, by filing a notice of the application in the Federal Court within thirty days after the determination or redetermination is made or within such further time as the Federal Court of Appeal or a judge thereof may, either before or after the expiration of those thirty days, fix or allow."

(b) by renumbering Clauses 59 to 63 at pages 34 to 37 as Clauses 60 to 64, respectively.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the remainder of the motions brought forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the bulk of them are technical in nature. The last one, motion No. 16, provides for a judicial review of certain ministerial decisions. I should like to indicate frankly that I welcome that addition by the government. It arose from submissions made before the committee by numerous groups, such as the Canadian Bar Association and so on. I offer it as an example of where this procedure in fact worked very well.

The government has indicated that this is an improvement. It has satisfied the very sincere objections of numerous witnesses who appeared before the committee. I would put it down on the plus side as one of the good things which came out of the radical student activist procedures of the early part of March.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that there is unanimous consent of the House that Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 be carried. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore it is agreed unanimously that these motions be carried.

Motions Nos. 7 to 16 inclusive (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That leaves three of our amendments, Motions Nos. 2, 4 and 6. Subject to what the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the minister have to say, I would certainly be agreeable to having one vote on all three amendments; they could be grouped together. I have not had a chance to talk to my hon. friend. I do not know if he has had time to look at them.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: Perhaps we can work something out while the bells are ringing. We would support motions Nos. 2 and 6 but not Motion No. 4. Perhaps something could be worked out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-104.

Call in the members.

After the ringing of the bells:

Madam Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 2. Do I understand that the vote on this motion will dispose also of Motion No. 6? Is that agreed by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 196)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Andre
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Cook
Cooper
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Dantzer
Darling
Deans
Dick
Epp
Fennell
Forrestall
Fretz
Friesen
Gamble
Gass
Greenaway
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Hovdebo
Huntington
Jarvis
Keeper
Kempling
Kilgour
King
La Salle
Lawrence
Lewis
Lewycky
MacDonald (Miss)
MacKay
Malone
Manly
Mazankowski
McCuish
McDermid
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Nielsen
Ogle
Parker
Patterson
Riis
Rose
Schellenberger
Shields
Siddon
Skelly
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wilson
Young—74.

NAYS

Messrs.

Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Chénier
Chrétien
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Cullen
Cyr
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne (Chicoutimi)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Foster
Fox
Francis
Frith
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde (Lévis)
Gray
Guilbault
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Hudecki
Irwin
Isabelle
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Killens (Mrs.)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe (Charlevoix)
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Loiselle
Lumley
MacBain
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
McCauley
McRae
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Ouellet
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schroder
Simmons
Smith
Tessier
Tousignant
Turner
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Yanakis—124.

● (1710)

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not vote on those motions because I came in after the question was put.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 4.

The House divided on Motion No. 4 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 197)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blaikie
Broadbent
Deans
Hovdebo
Keeper
Lewycky
Manly
Miller
Mitchell (Mrs.)
Murphy
Ogle
Parker
Riis
Rose
Skelly
Waddell
Young—20.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand
Andre
Bachand
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)
Bégin (Miss)
Berger
Blais
Blaker
Bloomfield
Bossy
Breau
Bujold
Burghardt
Bussières
Caccia
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle)
Campbell (Cardigan)
Cardiff
Carney (Miss)
Chénier
Chrétien
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Collenette

Petroleum Incentives Program Act

Messrs.

Comtois
Cook
Cooper
Corbin
Corriveau
Cosgrove
Côté (Mrs.)
Cousineau
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Cullen
Cyr
Dantzer
Darling
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
de Corneille
Demers
Deniger
Dick
Dingwall
Dion
Dionne
(Chicoutimi)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Dubois
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Epp
Erola (Mrs.)
Ethier
Evans
Fennell
Ferguson
Fisher
Fleming
Flis
Forrestall
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fretz
Friesen
Frith
Gamble
Gass
Gauthier
Gendron
Gingras
Gourd
(Argenteuil-Papineau)
Gourde
(Lévis)
Gray
Greenaway
Guilbault
Gurbin
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Harquail
Henderson
Herbert
Hervieux-Payette
(Mrs.)
Hnatyshyn
Hopkins
Hudecki
Huntington
Irwin
Isabelle
Jarvis
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Kelly
Kempling
Kilgour
Killens (Mrs.)
King
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapierre
Lapointe
(Charlevoix)
La Salle
Lawrence
LeBlanc
Leduc
Lefebvre
Lewis
Loiselle
Lumley
MacBain
MacDonald
(Miss)
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacKay
MacLaren
MacLellan
Malépart
Malone
Maltais
Marceau
Massé
Mazankowski
McCauley
McCuish
McDermid
McKnight
McLean
McMillan
McRae
Nicholson
(Miss)
Nielsen
Olivier
Ouellet
Patterson
Penner
Pepin
Peterson
Pinard
Portelance
Reid
(Kenora-Rainy River)
Roberts
Robinson
(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Rompkey
Rooney
Rossi
Roy
Savard
Schellenberger
Schroder
Shields
Siddon
Simmons
Smith
Speyer
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Tessier
Tousignant
Towers
Turner
Vankoughnet
Veillette
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Wilson
Yanakis—179.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Now.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if you seek unanimous consent for third reading to be dealt with later this day, I think you will obtain it.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to this proposition?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I propose to speak at third reading. I understand, however, that there is now to be a private members' hour. I would like to know if the private members' hour is between now and six o'clock. If it is not, I will speak at third reading of the bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Madam Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Works—Task force report on payments of grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Industry—(a) Quality of rails produced by Sydney Steel Corporation (b) Importation of rails; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Petro-Canada—(a) Acquisition of Petrofina—Collection of tax; (b) Canadian ownership charge.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

Shall the order under private bills stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House shall now proceed to the consideration of notices of motions (papers). Shall all items preceding No. 36 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all communications, transcripts or notes of interviews, memos, notes of telephone conversations, applications for grants, bursaries and fellowships between the government through the International Development Research Centre and any other person or group requesting or being considered for financial grants from the International Development Research Centre, particularly relating to financial grants or fellowships or financial sponsorship to individuals who hold or held elected or appointed office in governments of other countries or who were or are members of recognized political parties in other foreign nations.

• (1720)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the most salient point of this debate is freedom of information but there is an underlying point and that is the profligate spending of the Grit government on the other side of the House; in reality, it is the total squandering of taxpayers' dollars and then not wanting to account for it.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Maltais) did not wish to tell me, and thus did not wish to tell the Canadian people, on whom, where and why the International Development Research Centre spends Canadian taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. The IDRC has budgeted for 1982-83 to the tune of $59 million but the government does not want to answer questions about it.

There is no open government on the benches opposite; there is no freedom of information with the government and there is no autonomy either. One thing there is, however, and that is moral turpitude. The government does not believe in or have any appreciation for the British democratic system of responsible government. The Freedom of Information Act, Bill C-43, has finally come before a committee but the warped thinking of the Liberals leads them to want to amend it to make the public establish its right to freedom of information. It looks as if the government wants to make a whole list of cabinet exclusions and exemptions to protect cabinet ministers even further and make them even more irresponsible. Bill C-43 could mean that taxpayers seeking information may be subjected to a judicial review before they can obtain information from this arrogant, unbending and unrepentant government.

This is the government that has destroyed our currency, destroyed our international credibility, that has given us the highest interest rates in history, that will not help the jobless, that will not help the mortgage holder and that will not help the farmer or the small businessman. Now it will not give out information on increased aid spending.

I do not think there is a Canadian alive who does not want to give aid to Third World countries if and when that aid is desperately needed, Mr. Speaker. At the moment, however, 1,250,000 Canadians are unemployed. Interest rates are high. A business is going bankrupt every 20 minutes in this country. But do we cut down on foreign aid, the irresponsible spending part of it that does not make sense? No, Mr. Speaker; instead we increase it.

Let us examine the reasoning behind my request for the production of papers, Mr. Speaker. First, there is the fact that the Liberal Party has been infiltrated by a cell of left-leaning demagogues headed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Second, this government is made up of a bevy of profligate spendthrifts throwing taxpayers' money away with abandon, particularly to leftist states. Third, it is a government that was elected to govern, not to rule, but it has been ruling by orders in council and by secrecy for the last 14 years. It is a government which is not responding to the will of the people. It is a government that is not supplying information not only to the people but to the official opposition, of which I am proud to be a member.

The government is bankrupt of new ideas to increase our own productivity. That is what is needed before we can help any Third World countries and before we can help ourselves. If we are to be successful we must increase productivity and our GNP before we can aid the Third World in a constructive manner.

The government, in the guise of helping the Third World, has mismanaged millions of dollars through CIDA and the IRDC and has flagrantly assisted left-wing regimes with Canadian taxpayers' money. All of this is taking place at a time when we could have used this funding. That $59 million could have been pumped into agri-bonds, into small business development loans, into farm credit, used to help people with their mortgages and to stave off bankruptcies.

Canadians want to know where their tax dollars are spent and so do members on this side of the House. They want to know who is receiving the aid. They want to be assured that it does not go to unstable or communist regimes. We want the government to spell out who receives our largesse and why they receive it. As our businesses go bankrupt, as farmers fail and as interest rates go through the ceiling and our dollar sinks to the lowest depths, we want to know. If the freedom of information bill were before us, this debate would probably not be necessary.

In the time that I have been in this House expenditure abuses have only come to light through the brown envelopes that find their way to members and occasionally through the Auditor General's report. The synopsis provided by the IDRC is vague if not incomprehensible. CIDA is a horror story and everyone in Canada knows that. The figures show that.

An hon. member opposite set down question No. 3,515 on the Order Paper asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) how many people work for the Canadian International Development Agency, how many of them work in Ottawa and how many in countries where the agency gives aid, as well as the total salaries for staff outside Ottawa and in Ottawa. The answers are shocking, Mr. Speaker. In Ottawa-Hull 1,003 bureaucrats work for CIDA. In countries where CIDA provides development assistance, 54 people are employed for a total of 1,057 people. For the fiscal year 1981-82 the salary costs, including overtime and other costs, are estimated at $32,400,000. This is at a time when the government preaches restraint.

I should like to mention a few examples of where our aid money goes, Mr. Speaker. Ethiopia must have the best sorghum crop the world will ever see, because in four separate funding projects we gave that country a total of $1.36 million. In a dozen aid projects to the left-leaning Ethiopia the IDRC invested a total of $3.2 million.

I should like to know why we invested $290,000 to develop the impact of tourism on Asia? Is that very important to Canadians who are losing their jobs? Why did we invest $73,700 in the Cuban lobster fishery? Tanzania, under the dictatorship of Mr. Nyerere, was a favourite target of IDRC. It is one of Canada's favourite aid clients. In the three fiscal years of 1978-79, 1979-80 and 1980-81, Canada gave this Marxist dictatorship $91.541 million. Of this, $78.92 million was in grants—not loans, but grants. If that $78 million had been put into small business or agriculture in this country, we would have started getting back to work again.

We gave that friendly little country of Iran $292,000. We gave Algeria, with its dictator, $380,000. In separate funding and nothing to do with the $100 million we already gave, Mr. Manley of Jamaica received $828,000 for four projects. Mali is another left-leaning country and it received $1.13 million. El Salvador received $385,000. The friendly Belgian Congo received $105,000 for the improvement of nut crops. The biggest crop of nuts is sitting opposite, Mr. Speaker!

All of this money was given to hostile regimes and dictatorships at a time when Canadians are out of work, mortgages are uncontrollable, and interest rates make it impossible for anything to work right—even with all the grease that the government applies.

• (1730)

These are just a few of the giveaways that I wanted to address, which is why I asked for this debate. We would like to know why this money is being spent, where, what the countries are, and we would like to see all the documentation to show that it is nothing but profligate spending. CIDA's budget last year was $1.45 billion, escalating to $1.74 billion this year. This is double the per capita contributions of the United States. What a fallacy! President Reagan has cut foreign aid to $5.1 billion; ours has gone up to $1.74 billion, and the government wants to raise it to 0.7 per cent of the GNP by the end of the decade.

How many more billions will that be to build statues, to build sewage systems which fall into the sea, to help Haiti cancel it because it was not managed property? We are giving the Czechs a $300 million sweetheart loan to build a phosphate pulp mill, the better to compete against our forest products industry. We are helping to modernize Cuba's airports, the better for them to launch bombers and fighters and provide smooth landing for planes from the U.S.S.R. We are lending the U.S.S.R. $1 billion at fire sale interest rates, perhaps as low as 7.8 per cent, for a gas pipeline. It is a litany of trial and error and mismanagement. These are not just my words, believe me. All you have to do Mr. Speaker, is look at the 1979 Auditor General's report which says:

> A significant factor affecting CIDA's Estimates is that it has been obliged to obtain legal authority for its operations through appropriations acts, because there is no act of Parliament establishing the Agency and delineating its authority.

Imagine, they are spending almost $2 billion of taxpayers' money without authority. It goes on:

> For example, in the 1979-80 Estimates, Vote L40 will appropriate $1 to establish authority for a statutory item to purchase shares in the Inter-American Development Bank.

Another one of those dollar votes where you have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to understand the bookkeeping principles of this government. What does that $1 vote mean? It goes on:

> The estimated cost of these shares is $310 million (U.S.).

That is what is hidden in there. The report says:

> The present form of the Estimates is prescribed by the Treasury Board. We found several weaknesses in this format that limited CIDA's disclosure of information to Parliament.

That crew across the way goes on and on. Mr. Speaker, let us look at Volume I of the Public Accounts of Canada for the year 1981 and really get into it and see what is going on over there, and why we are in the trouble we are in. It says:

> Loans to national governments consist mainly of the loan to the Government of the United Kingdom under the authority of the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, and special loan assistance to developing countries.
>
> Table 6.8 presents a summary of the balances and transactions for the various types of loans and advances that were made to national governments including developing countries.

It makes very interesting reading. For instance, the first item is "China—Finance $49,426,118". A little later on it says:

> An interest-free loan to China was authorized under the Export Credits Insurance Act.

We borrow money at 17 per cent or 18 per cent and give $750 million to the Governor of the Bank of Canada to prop up our dollar, but we can lend money to China interest free. Then there is Greece, March 31, 1981, $6,525,000. Then it says:

> An interest-free loan to Greece was authorized by PC 1932-2630.

We know what they are, those little orders in council. Parliament does not get to hear about them. Then it says:

> Partial settlement has been negotiated as at April 1, 1981, and parliamentary authority to write off the balance during 1981-82 is being sought.

It says "partial settlement" and "write off the balance". Write it off, boys! We have all kinds of money. We can go out and borrow more and put some more people out of their homes. Then there is Jamaica, $25 million as of March 31, 1981. This was extended August 9, 1981, with interest at 8.875 per cent.

I can go on and on with this absolutely damning litany, Mr. Speaker. Governments do not make money, governments spend money. When they spend it in this way, they should be turfed out. It is a sin.

Then there is the heading "Developing Countries—Special Loan Assistance". How many Canadians know what this government is doing with their hard-earned tax dollars? It says:

> Special loan assistance is given to developing countries. During the year, additional loans to Turkey were authorized by votes—
>
> The terms and conditions of loans to developing countries, with their year-end balances, are categorized into seven main groups:
>
> (a) 20-year maturity, 5-year grace period at 5% interest per annum, maturing September 2000, $18,958,697;
>
> (b) 25-year maturity, 5-year grace period at 6% interest per annum, maturing March 2001, $1,673,789;
>
> (c) 30-year, maturity, 7-year grace period at 3% interest per annum, maturing at various dates between March 1997 and September 2011, $168,538,287;
>
> (d) 30-year maturity, 7-year grace period interest-free, maturing March 2010, $1,960,057;
>
> (e) 35-year maturity, 5-year grace period interest-free, maturing at various dates between April 2001 and November 2005; $3,820,444;
>
> (f) 40-year maturity, 10-year grace period interest-free, maturing March 2008, $861,654; and,
>
> (g) 50-year maturity, 10-year grace period interset-free, maturing at various dates between March 2003 and March 2031, $1,953,618,922.

Interest-free, isn't that interesting? We sure have a lot of money in Canada. We cannot help home owners, small business or the farmer, but would you believe it, we can give 30, 40, even 50 year interest-free loans to other countries. When you look at those countries it makes very interesting reading to see the way they lean, because the ones that get the most attention are the ones that are the farthest to the left. Chile, Cuba, Algeria, Argentina, Belize, and on and on down through this litany of horrors until you come to a total of $2,149,431,850. That is what the government is doing with the hard earned taxpayers' money, borrowing it and giving it away.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, there is no one who does not want to help the Third World. But before anyone can help anyone else they have to be able to help themselves. That means pouring money into Canada for jobs and increased productivity, until we get our GNP up and then we can start to give it to the people, but only those who need it. These countries I have just mentioned certainly are not the people who need it. Take a look at the 1982-83 estimates. The government expenditure plan says:

> Canada has traditionally been regarded as a country with a high level of active concern for international development.

That is true. It goes on:

> The government has announced its intention to increase its level of Official Development Assistance with a view to achieving a target of 0.5 per cent of GNP by the mid-1980s and 0.7 per cent of GNP by the end of the decade.

In the last three months our GNP has gone down 1.8 per cent. Where is the sense? It says further:

> Planned ODA levels of $1,724 million for 1982-83, $1,946 million in 1983-84, $2,270 million in 1984-85, and $2,631 million in 1985-86—

If half that were spent on creating jobs, on small business and agri-bonds, on reducing interest rates, what would it do for this country and our unemployed? It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to see what CIDA's budget is for 1982-83. It is going to be a nice tidy $1.296 billion, up $188.8 million from 1981-82. This in a time of restraint, as the government talks about it. Tighten your belts. What a laugh! We will build another statue in Algeria, give a little more money to Belize and the skindiving buddy of the Prime Minister.

• (1740)

Let us take a look at the rest of it here. There is $896 million in bilateral loans, $299 million in investment and advances to international financial institutions and $332 million in reserves for new initiatives—I would love to see them—including Petro-Canada International. That is another beauty. We have a finance minister who is now the patron saint of Belgium for buying Petrofina stock at twice the price it should have been. As I said before, $59 million is going into the IDRC.

The questions I put on the Order Paper to have answered are: Who gets that money; what parties do they belong to; what countries do they belong to; and are they communist states? We on this side of the House want to know. The people of Canada want to know. People want their interest rates brought down. People want their mortgage rates brought down. But this government does not seem to be interested in that whatsoever. All of this came about because I asked the Prime Minister a simple question in the House one day.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in presenting his ideas about development assistance today, the hon. member opposite has polarized his argument. He calls upon Canadians to choose between assistance to the needy at home and to the needy abroad. There is no need for such a choice. There is nothing mutually exclusive about providing assistance to those in our own society who require help and providing assistance to those in other countries who also need help. The great majority of Canadians support both such activities. We are not a people so devoid of a sense of responsibility for our fellow man that our sense of responsibility, that our sense of compassion, abruptly ends at our own borders. We are working at home to help ourselves but we are also working abroad to help others in need.

The hon. member opposite has directed our attention particularly to the activities of the International Development Research Centre. I welcome the occasion to say a word about the remarkable accomplishments of the centre during the decade since its inception. The IDRC unfortunately is not an institution well known to the Canadian people. I say unfortunately because it represents one of the real success stories in the continuing and often difficult, complex saga of international development. Were more Canadians aware of the accomplishments of this unique and imaginative organization, they would share the pride that many of us in the House have in that institution. Many of us have watched with admiration its growth, its evolution and its extraordinary success.

The centre was created some 11 years ago in response to a need articulated by the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and a major World Bank study group which involved some of most distinguished experts in the field of development assistance. That commission found that of all research undertaken throughout the world, less than 3 per cent was in developing countries. Of even greater concern, some of that research, dictated by traditions of former colonial powers, was centred on activities not of direct interest to the developing countries themselves.

The commission accordingly recommended that urgent steps be taken to enhance the capacity in developing countries for indigenous research. The accuracy of the commission's assessment was amply borne out a decade later when the prime request of the developing countries at the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology on Development in Vienna asked the industrialized countries for assistance in enhancing their own indigenous research capacities. I recall that the Canadian government spokesman at that conference, the Hon. Martial Asselin, pointed out many of the accomplishments of the IDRC. The government of the day pledged additional resources to permit the centre to undertake a new program of linking needs of developing countries with Canadian research capacity. That new program has now been launched with the provision of funds by the present government scheduled to begin this fiscal year. It was, incidentally, at the Vienna conference that the International Development Research Centre was held up as an example for other industrialized countries capable of providing assistance to the developing world.

In short, from the time of its creation in 1971 until the present, IDRC has enjoyed all party support in this House and the continued confidence of Canadian governments. From the outset, the IDRC has been directed by an international board of governors as provided in its statutes and has concentrated its efforts on what has come to be called the "basic needs" sector. The centre consists of four major program divisions, the largest of which is devoted to agriculture and related nutritional sciences. Another of the divisions deals with health sciences. A third deals with social sciences and the fourth deals with information sciences. In all four divisions, concentration is on those persons living in rural areas of developing countries. In the agriculture sector, for example, emphasis is on the production of food crops indigenous to the area and not to cash crops planted for export, as was frequently the policy of colonial governments.

The International Development Research Centre has assisted through its efforts improvements in such crops as cassava, sorghum, millets and a variety of grain and legumes of sometimes exotic but always of a nutritious nature. Additionally, the centre is active in forestry and agroforestry, aquaculture, animal production and in post-production systems, including harvesting, drying, storage and milling of grain. In this respect, the centre was a charter member and continuing contributor to the consultative group on international agricultural research. For a lengthy period, the first president of the centre served as the Canadian member on the technical advisory committee of that group. The current president serves as a member of the board of trustees of the International Food Policy Research Institute.

In the health sciences, the centre's activities deal with such areas as health care delivery services, co-operation with the World Health Organization tropical disease program, and with sanitation and water purity questions. In the social area, the centre has concentrated on funding of research in a broad range of sectors, including science and technology policy, economics, education and associated problems. These studies have assisted developing countries to formulate wise policies leading to the design of more effective development strategies.

The information sciences division, the fourth which I noted, was created to assist developing countries in the accumulation, storage and retrieval of invaluable research information. It has done so in several successful ways, including the design of a bibliographic data management system for a mini computer which has proved to be highly sought after not only by developing countries but, on a licensing basis, by institutions in developed countries.

During its continuing evolution, the centre has kept two objectives in mind. One is to assist developing countries in the solution of their particular problems, but always to do so in a fashion that enhances the indigenous research competence of scientists and technicians in those countries. Accordingly, the research is chosen by experts in the developing countries and almost in its entirety carried out there by them. Hence, the experience gained stays primarily in the developing countries. The problems dealt with are best known to the scientific communities in those countries.

There is every reason to understand, therefore, why so many other countries have emulated the lead of Canada and have created institutions similar to the IDRC. I speak of the United States, of Sweden and of Germany. I am delighted that some Canadian publications have recently begun drawing to the attention of Canadians the accomplishments of this little known but highly effective organization.

• (1750)

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words today about the International Development Research Centre and about development in general. Of course, development is a word which is difficult to understand. I have difficulty understanding it; practically everyone has a different understanding of the word. I am sure my understanding is somewhat different from that of the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) who introduced the motion which is before the House today.

The hon. member for Simcoe South made quite a scathing attack on the whole program of development which is being sponsored outside Canada. I do not share his ideas. I am sure he realizes that we have quite different views about development in the world.

When a recession begins in a country such as our own, the step below us in the developing world has already reached total depression. If the country is ready to help at a time when it is in good financial circumstances, it is probably helping a group already faced with a recession. The factor we use to indicate recession, 8 per cent to 14 per cent unemployment, is often 30 per cent to 60 per cent unemployment in countries which are recipients of development aid.

The word "aid" is also very difficult to come to grips with. I personally believe that the most difficult action for a human being, a group of people or a country, is to aid in a positive manner. How do we aid someone? How do we aid a friend, a wife, a husband or anyone? Almost invariably when someone is in the position of being able to aid, a relationship is established which is at least difficult if not impossible. The question of how and when aid should be given should be studied in great detail, particularly when it comes to international questions.

The present situation is such that there are now four billion people in the world, which perhaps will grow to six billion by the end of the century. How do we feed, clothe, help and house those numbers? How do we help cure the economic problems with which these numbers of people are faced? This is why I believe the IDRC in itself is an instrument, a tool or a possibility to bring about a study to discover how aid can be given.

The International Development Research Centre is located very close to the House of Commons. It is approximately a five minutes' walk from our front door. I suggest to all hon. members of the House, and in particular the hon. member for Simcoe South, that they should visit this centre to see what takes place there.

Back in 1975-76 I had the privilege of receiving a fellowship from the IDRC. Ten such fellowships are given each year to Canadians who are middle-aged and are not working full-time in the area of development. I met those qualifications, and I happen to be one of the ten who received a fellowship in 1975-76 prior to coming to the House of Commons. I did not even have a thought of entering politics at the time.

Also at that particular stage of my life I had the advantage of studying an area with which I was personally concerned. I am referring to the question of aid, in particular, aid given by volunteer groups in Canada, non-governmental organizations such as church groups, service groups, CUSO and other such organizations. I believe this form of aid is closest to the hearts of Canadians. I studied how such aid influences the development process in other parts of the world. It involves a very difficult series of steps.

After the period of a year I wrote a book on the subject. I will give a copy of it to my friend, because I attempted to describe the difficulty of the process in it. One of the greatest problems associated with aid is that sometimes there is too much good will and not enough know-how. This is why I turn to the IDRC which has the know-how to learn the process of bringing qualified people from around the world to study particular situations. To my mind this is really necessary and has been very, very well done by the centre.

I have also had the privilege of visiting some of its secondary centres in South America, Colombia, Singapore and Asia where they experiment with the development process to find ways to produce food and to help people to provide for themselves. For example, I saw fish experiments when I travelled with the North-South committee to Singapore. The experiment involved the production of protein from shellfish, not in tonnes per acre but in tonnes per square foot. They were finding revolutionary ways of producing food. For that reason the North-South parliamentary task force recommended to Parliament that the government increase the funding of IDRC in order that it may more fully realize its very considerable potential.

The task force was represented by all three parties of the House. I am glad at the way in which the centre is involved in aid, and I am glad that aid is continuing to grow. The report of the task force indicated that another major problem in Canada was the question of education in the area of international aid. How do we bring about the education of our people to ensure that aid is not thrown away, as my hon. colleague said?

In reality most aid never leaves Canada. Most of the money goes to CIDA and remains in Canada. In fact, the statutes indicate that 80 per cent of bilateral aid must remain here. It is called tied-in aid. It is money used to buy things in Canada for other countries. The notion that nothing is brought into the economy in this area, as my hon. colleague said, is just not true. I do not believe it is so. Most of the money stays right in the country.

In the few moments remaining, I should like to tell a story about my colleague and I when we were at the United Nations a year ago. He suggested that we should go out to dinner together in New York and that I should recommend a restaurant at which to eat. I said, "Let us go to a Brazilian restaurant", and I suggested that we should order feijoado. He, his wife and I enjoyed this dish, at which point I told them that it was comprised of sheep's stomach, sheep's entrails, beans and rice. If I had told them before we started that it was sheep's guts, they probably would not have gone. But the point is that we learned a little about another people, which is important in the entire process of development. We must learn how other people do things so that we can help each other around the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We started at 5.20 o'clock; surely we are entitled to one hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sure hon. members are aware that as a result of a House order we are to resume consideration of Bill C-104 at this point. We are sitting extended hours. Therefore, this has become a government order. I do not have the date here, but it was given unanimous consent.

• (1800)

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely every other time we have started late we have gone the full hour on private members' hour. That is why it is called private members' hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. That is done on occasion with unanimous consent of the House, but unanimous consent has already been given—I do not have the date—that we sit extended hours during debate on energy legislation. This is energy legislation that we are concerned with now and that is the House order. I cannot see how we can break the unanimous consent we had previously.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders say that we are entitled to one hour of debate. That is a Standing Order of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I do not want to carry on a dispute with the hon. member. The Standing Orders say private members' hour is between the hours of five o'clock and six o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING INCENTIVES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the third and final reading of Bill C-104. I hope that what I have to say on this matter will be heard by the Canadian consumer. This long debate is coming to a close tonight in the House of Commons, but I think it is the ordinary consumer of Canada who has suffered and will suffer as a result of these energy bills. They will suffer in the pocket because they will be paying for this legislation. The beneficiaries will be the Government of Canada, the Governments of Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and particularly the Government of Alberta. The oil industry, which always seems to be there to get part of the benefits, will also be beneficiaries.

I used the word at the beginning of the debate that the consumers of Canada were being hosed. They are still being hosed and they will be hosed in the future. Some day in Canada the consumers will get together and rebel against this hosing.

We are told that Bill C-104 is a government bill which is designed to give $8.9 billion in the form of petroleum incentive program grants to oil companies—Canada oil companies we hope. It is only a hope because one can see by looking at the details of the legislation that it contains flaws which will allow Imperial Oil and its friends to benefit indirectly from these grants. The bill will give money to these oil companies to go to Canada lands in the Arctic and on the offshore of the east and west coast. However, it will mainly be in the Arctic. The companies will go to those Canada lands to explore for oil and gas.

I would begin my criticism of the bill by referring to a recent article in The Globe and Mail dated June 4. It is headed "Tarsiut Wellflow is Disappointing". The article states:

> Not only did oil flow at a much lower rate than expected, but some analysts thought the well is only "marginally" economical.

It goes on to say:

> "The results are encouraging, but they still fail to prove that oil can be produced economically from Tarsiut . . . Many investors had hopes for this well, partly because of recent comments made by senior executives of Dome Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary, one of the key partners in the exploration program.

Tarsiut is a well up in the Mackenzie. The government has pinned high hopes on the Mackenzie delta and the Beaufort Sea. Its hopes are so high that a large part of the $8.9 billion it is giving to the oil companies in grants will go to this area. Yet not a drop of oil has ever been produced from the area. It seems to me that there have been no real commercial finds in this area so far.

The government is taking a big gamble. It is gambling with the taxpayers' money, it is gambling with the environment and with the lives of the native people who live up there. One wonders why the government is taking that gamble. Would it not make more sense to spend this kind of money on the conventional industry or in the heavy oil of Alberta and Saskatchewan? I suspect that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) wants to go up to the north in order to move around the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. We are back to the old story of the federal government fighting the provincial government.

Mr. Lalonde: Nonsense.

Mr. Waddell: That is the guiding thrust of this program. It is a power thrust which is perfectly in keeping with the style and substance of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

What will happen if oil is found up there, which I hope it is? It is my hope that it will be found in commercial quantities. We need oil in Canada since most of our oil surplus was exported in the 1970s. At one point half of our daily production was exported and that is why we now need to give $8.9 billion, according to the government, to Imperial Oil and its friends to go up to the north to explore for oil.

"The Journal" is a program which comes on after "The National" on CBC. Mr. Jack Gallagher, chairman of Dome Petroleum, was being questioned on "The Journal" on February 9, 1982. His remarks are in the transcripts of that program. He was asked what will happen if oil is found up in the Beaufort Sea. He replied:

> Canada has lived and continues to prosper as an exporting nation, and there's nothing very different about oil or gas or wheat or anything else. If we can prove that Canada has a major surplus of oil, then there is no reason why we won't and can't export a part of that.

There is the thinking. More government money to find oil, and if we do find it it will be exported.

Mr. Kelly: More jobs.

Mr. Waddell: My hon. friend opposite says there are more jobs. Can you imagine how many jobs in Toronto, in your riding, you could create by putting in $8.9 billion? I imagine that you could retrofit every house in Toronto. You would not need the Beaufort Sea resources if you put that kind of money in Toronto. Every small construction firm in Toronto could be put back to work.

However, this is the kind of policy option that the government is taking. It is opting for the big megaprojects and concentrating on the supply side while ignoring the demand. This is not a new idea. It has been said for the last 10 years that there are more jobs in small scale energy, in alternatives and conservation than there are in these big projects. You can create a lot of jobs for $8.9 billion.

Let me explain how the system works. A Canadian company can get an 80-cent grant from the taxpayer on each dollar it spends. If the company is paying some income tax—this is a problem because many of the companies do not pay income tax like you or I—it has another 13 cents taken off. Therefore, the Canadian public is paying 93 cents on every dollar for this grant. This is the heart of the Liberals' Canadianization program. They propose to encourage small Canadian companies by providing Canadian petroleum incentive grants, PIP grants.

• (1810)

The government has a very complicated and basically unworkable bureaucratic structure to decide what is a Canadian company. It is called COR, Canadian ownership rate. It is very complicated. It will be difficult for it to work, because the oil companies, which are pretty good at this, have literally hundreds of accountants and smart lawyers who will plan to go around these Canadian ownership requirements—

Mr. Blaikie: Good corporate citizens that they are.

Mr. Waddell: —just like Shell, Imperial and Gulf have done all over the world, and they will do it here.

I want to quote what the Consumers' Association of Canada said to us. For one brief moment in the committee we actually did hear from a consumers' group instead of hearing from an oil company group. In its brief the Consumers' Association of Canada stated:

> Bill C-104 and the philosophy behind it perpetuate the failed energy policies of the past—namely, that future oil security can be bought through higher prices and subsidies for oil companies.

It warns us about the advertisements we will face, and states:

> That is why we see full page newspaper advertisements and multi-million dollar television campaigns sponsored by the petroleum industry.

Do hon. members know of the ad where the hockey player skates on a kind of glass with Gulf Oil, or of an ad where someone is out on the rigs on the Beaufort Sea, or of ads with a message like that? This is the message the Canadian Petroleum Association is taking to Parliament today. And it refers to energy security.

Mr. Blaikie: More money.

Mr. Waddell: It wants more money, as if $8.9 billion is not enough. It wants more money. The Canadian Petroleum Association is big oil. It is Imperial, which is owned by Exxon, the largest company in the world; it is Gulf in the United States, and it is Shell. That is the kind of people who are directing policies in Canada. They are perfectly right to conduct business in Canada. There are some very good people, such as engineers and so on, who work for those companies, but Canadian energy policy should not be directed by those particular organizations. Beside them, the consumer does not have a chance.

The government is backing off its National Energy Program. Day by day, it is backing off, and I predict that it will back off more. A year ago we said that it would back off and, sure enough, two weeks ago it announced another $2 billion for the oil industry.

I want to tell Your Honour a little about how the program works. The PIP program in this bill, these grants which will possibly amount to 93 cents on every dollar, will replace the past giveaways, the superdepletion allowances. The only real difference from the past, however, is that the beneficiaries will be privately Canadian-owned companies instead of multinational oil companies.

We are hearing many arguments from the oil companies on how they are risking their money to find oil in Canada. But I say, on behalf of the consumers of Canada, that these companies have been drilling and have struck it rich, but they have not struck it rich in the Beaufort Sea, not at Tarsiut. They have struck it rich in Ottawa; that is where they have struck it rich. They have struck it rich in Alberta as well. The Alberta government is administering the Petroleum Incentive Program for Alberta. That was part of the deal with Ottawa.

The PIP grants are only the latest aspect of the supply and demand roller-coaster, it seems to me, which has typified the historical pattern in Canada. I think we all understand that the goal of the oil companies is to maximize profits. They do it by demanding higher prices and more tax incentives in order to find more oil and gas. When it is found, they tell the National Energy Board that there is a surplus and that it must be exported to keep their cash flow going.

After the export permits are granted, that 300-year surplus suddenly threatens to run out in seven years. There is a crisis. There is a shortage. Then the oil companies say, "We must have energy security for Canada." "Energy security" is interesting wording. It is basically oil company wording. How do we get energy security for Canada? The oil companies say, "You give us higher prices and you give us more money." It is a Catch-22 situation. It would be amusing if it were not costly to the taxpayers of Canada. It amounts to $8.9 billion. Just think what we could do with that money in the fields of medicare and education.

In my province of British Columbia people are lining up for hospital beds because we apparently do not have enough money for health care. Students are having difficulty as their loans are being cut back. The government is making it more difficult for students to live. However, we can find $8.9 billion for the oil industry.

I am attacked as being a radical socialist who suddenly, according to my critics, does not understand the industry. Well, I will tell Your Honour that there are a couple of things I do not understand about the industry. One thing I do not understand is when I hear my Conservative friends and the industry say, "We are in favour of private enterprise. Get the government off our backs." Then they want $8.9 billion of the taxpayers money to explore for oil, and they call it their money! We heard a good submission by Home Oil Company, a Canadian company, which was very instructive. It pointed out that Australia does not have a grant system. Why does Canada need this system? It needs this system because it is part of the Liberal Canadianization goal.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) was perhaps radical in the 1960s, but now, in the 1980s, as he is older, he thinks that this is a bureaucratic and unworkable system, as he said in the House. That is the only thing we have agreed upon in these last two months of debate. It is a bureaucratic and unworkable system.

There is one other thing I do not understand, and I am sure some of the Liberal members will correct me if I am wrong. Why does it seem we are in such a hurry to go to the frontiers when there is still action and there are still oil plays in Alberta and Saskatchewan? I point that out to the hon. member. As well, are there not small Canadian companies in the Lloydminster-Wainwright area? That is what I am told in Calgary. I am told that that would be a good area to work.

In Edmonton the Energy Services Association told us that they will have trouble supplying services way up in the Arctic, because they feel that the big oil companies will go to their big American contractors and therefore the spin-off jobs will not go to Canadians.

Why are we going to the Arctic so quickly? I know that there has been a decline of conventional oil in western Canada, but it seems to me that there is a Saudi Arabia of oil in the heavy oil in Alberta. I think we could go there. We are going to the Arctic because the government does not want to deal with provincial powers. It does not want to deal with Alberta or Saskatchewan. It wants to deal with the Northwest Territories or the Yukon because they are colonies.

Today in this House we introduced an amendment to protect the native people. It was not a radical amendment. Our amendment would have ensured consultation with them to get their views and involve them a little bit in this development. Its purpose was not to exploit them. However the government just rejected it out of hand.

The government is intent on falling into a trap, the trap of a rather strange Canadianization. I think the Canadian people want Canadianization. As a matter of fact the Committee for the Canadianization of the Petroleum Industry came before the Energy Committee and submitted a statement dated January 24, 1982, after a conference in Ottawa, which stated:

> These governments should use much of their increased revenues from oil and gas to benefit Canada by increasing public ownership of the industry.

What is the effect of the PIP program and the Liberal Canadianization program? The effect is to increase private ownership. Therefore the Rockefellers are replaced with the Gallaghers of Dome and the Blairs of Nova. It is no wonder that Dome and Nova are so subservient and interested in the federal Liberal Party and so very uncritical of the government's National Energy Program. They are so clearly uncritical of the program. Where does it get us to replace the large American oil companies by the large Canadian oil companies?

• (1820)

Mr. Speaker, do you know what the largest Canadian oil company is? We found this out in committee. The largest oil company in Canada is Imperial Oil. The largest Canadian company is Dome Petroleum, not Petro-Canada. The Committee to Canadianize suggested, and I quote, "That Canada's goal must be increased"—that is, Canadian ownership—"to at least 75 per cent in Canadian ownership of the vital petroleum industry by 1985, with Petro-Canada as the largest oil company in the country."

As most Canadians know, we have an oil industry that is, or at least was, about 75 per cent foreign owned. In the last year or so, $6.5 billion has been spent, and the Canadian ownership rate has increased only by about 6 per cent.

It is a beginning, I admit that, and in many ways the minister has had a certain degree of courage in bringing in a program, albeit a small program, to try to do something about it.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre, the opposition critic, my counterpart in the Conservative Party, also expressed an interest in Canadianizing the industry. He pointed out, contrary to what I sometimes say about him, that he was a member of the Committee for an Independent Canada, in Calgary. So we all want to Canadianize the industry. How would we do it? I am not sure how the Conservative Party would do it. I have trouble understanding them or getting them to state how they would do it. It seems to me that they say it is going to happen naturally.

The government has said: "We are going to do it by PIP grants, we are going to do it by this Canadian ownership rate." It seems to me that there is another way of doing it. This is what the Committee to Canadianize said, and I quote, "We strongly urge the federal government to acquire one of the four major foreign-controlled companies as a new Crown corporation or as a component of Petro-Canada." In other words, if you really wanted to Canadianize, if you really wanted to get 50 per cent control of this industry by 1990, or indeed by 1985, you could do it. But it would take some political courage. Instead of giving $8.9 billion in PIP grants, you could introduce a bill in this House of Commons to acquire the majority interest in Imperial Oil, or Gulf, or one of the other companies. There is support for that amongst the Canadian people out there.

The Committee to Canadianize said they did a poll and the poll indicated that Canadians, by and large, favoured such a takeover. They took a Gallup poll on the question of public ownership. It showed that 55 per cent of Canadians were in favour of taking over one of the big four oil companies, while 28 per cent were opposed. As to increasing the Canadian ownership rate more quickly than the government would like, Canadians were away up in the high 60 per cent region in favour of that. So there is support out there. The government could do that. But instead the government will throw $8.9 billion at the industry. That is the problem.

There are other things the government could do to help this industry, and to stop it from being an export-oriented industry. Let us take natural gas, for example. When the minister was in opposition, before he became known as "Old Ironclad," he suggested that there should be iron-clad guarantees, that we should not pre-build the Alaska pipeline before we had financial guarantees that the whole line would be built. The reason for that, as he correctly saw, was that if we built a large export pipeline, he or some other energy minister would be under all kinds of pressure to export natural gas. And that is what is happening right now in Alberta.

There are other things that we could do, Mr. Speaker. We could broaden the gas market, and the minister has tried this and he should continue doing this, by getting people in Ontario and Quebec to convert to natural gas. We could throw some of that $8.9 billion at further conversion, and we could pay the money more quickly to the people and we might get further conversions to natural gas. Then we could use Canadian gas in Ontario and Quebec and in the Maritimes, rather than export it to the United States.

Also, we could get a proper marketing system of gas, a proration in Alberta, so that some of the little companies would get a better shot at the market rather than the big companies.

You could also put some money into the heavy oil sector through smaller projects. I know that in the recent update the minister has agreed to give certain tax advantages in that area. But a lot more could be done in that area. And it would benefit the small producers rather than the larger oil companies. If it works, you could give some money for oil upgrading.

I do not think that Canadians understand why a government would give $8.9 billion in grants to oil companies. Dome Petroleum told us in the committee that they did not pay any taxes; but they are going to get one third of the grants. That is how we thought the grant was $6.5 billion. They would get one third of these grants in the next three years, which was about $600 million. A lot of the money was being used in that bill in a crazy bid to take over other companies. What are we doing in this country? The banks are financing oil companies and other companies to take over companies, when we have so much need of capital in other aspects. In my province the forest industry is in depression. We will have to consider ways of directing bank investments so that money will be invested in housing and manufacturing and some of the areas where it is needed. What does this bill do? It does not do anything like that.

What do other countries do, Mr. Speaker? Australia does not give grants. In Mexico the industry has been nationalized long ago. In Britain the industry is 50 per cent owned by the British National Oil Corporation, which has the first claim, and a 51 per cent share of oil production. They participate in joint ventures, but they retain control over all the projects.

To whom are we giving control here in this bill? We are giving it to Canadian private firms like Dome Petroleum, which appears to be on its last legs. We are going to give $600 million in grants to a company that is having financial difficulties now. I hope it does not collapse but, if it does, the last remnant of the National Energy Program will collapse with it. I know that those men had some dreams for the Beaufort Sea. Why are we putting all this money into that? It seems incredible to me.

In Norway, StatOil, the government oil company, can take up to a 70 per cent interest in any block of land it does not already hold, and it is an active participant in controlling things. They have learned, in the other countries, not to knuckle in every time the oil industry cries out. We have not learned that yet. We still have these advertisements in the newspapers and we still have the consumers getting hosed. Mr. Speaker, I said it was inconsistent for the companies to argue that they needed $8.9 billion in PIP grants when they also said they wanted the government off their backs. If they do not want corporate welfare, then don't take it.

It is also inconsistent, I might say, of the party on my right, the Conservative Party. On second reading they voted against this bill. Apparently they are still against this bill. Yet, on December 21, 1981, the opposition critic, the "radical Harv" as they call him now, the member for Calgary Centre, wrote to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde):

> The parts of the proposed bill dealing with the Canadian ownership rate and the Petroleum Incentive Program are long overdue.

So there is the Conservative Party saying; "Let us get on, let us give the $8.9 billion."

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Waddell: Every day in this House of Commons the Conservative Party stands up and asks for more money for the oil companies. They also want to get rid of Petro-Canada. What kind of program is that? If we are to believe the latest polls, there could be a future Conservative government, and perhaps the hon. member for Calgary Centre will be the minister of energy, mines and resources. What would he do? We should read his speeches. He would give Petro-Canada away.

• (1830)

The philosophy of the industry seems to be: "Pay me now, pay me later, and keep paying me."

I want to conclude—

Mr. Lalonde: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I do not know about the minister's constituency, but the people in my constituency are ordinary people. The people in the east of the Vancouver-Kingsway constituency are having some tough times right now. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), represents a city constituency. The hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) represents rural areas. My colleagues represent farmers and native people in the north, but we all represent consumers. It is the consumer who has to pay, and the price of gasoline has risen. The average cost of heating a home in my riding has increased from approximately $800 to $1,100 in a very short time. The cost of putting gasoline into a car and driving it for a year has risen from $700 to approximately $800. As statistics tell us and as any senior in Vancouver-Kingsway could tell us—and they have told me—the price of energy has risen 30 per cent in the last year, and it will continue to rise.

If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is really concerned about the consumer, let him not come into this House with $8.9 billion in PIP grants. Let him go to Premier Lougheed and Premier Devine of Saskatchewan and say to them, "Let's give the consumers of Canada a break." Let the minister and his provincial counterparts forgo the scheduled $2.25 a barrel increase in the price of oil on July 1. For a change let them give the consumers of Canada a break.

We in the New Democratic Party oppose this bill. We oppose giving $8.9 billion to one of the richest industries in Canada. Some small companies are having bad times now, but there are measures we could take to help them. We do not need to give $8.9 billion in relation to the Canada lands. Let us develop some of the heavy oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In the next scheduled increase let us give consumers a break at the pumps. Let us see if we can do something for the seniors of this country by way of grants or tax credits. Those are the kinds of things we can do but, instead, the government brings this bill forward and proposes to give the oil companies $8.9 billion. It proposes to pay 93 cents of every exploration dollar and to do that without taking a corresponding equity position.

There is an answer. We can be positive. The answer is to put that money into Petro-Canada, the government oil company, and to put money into conservation, alternate energy, insulation and so forth. That would change the mix. That would be a policy the people of Canada would welcome. The people of Canada are looking for leadership. It looked as if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources finally would start to provide leadership through the National Energy Program and get control of our industry—a vital industry—but instead we have a phony, unworkable Canadianization. It is a sham. It is a bureaucratic scheme. It proposes to give by way of grants what used to be given by way of tax advantages. It repeats all the mistakes of the past.

I quoted Gallagher in relation to exporting oil. I spoke about exporting gas. We are going to make the same mistake. We must be a pretty dumb country to export half our oil.

Mr. Blaikie: Dumb government.

Mr. Waddell: It is a dumb government. It would have to be crazy to repeat the same mistakes in relation to natural gas, yet that is what this government is doing. For all those reasons we in the New Democratic Party oppose Bill C-104.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Earlier when the Chair intervened to end private members' business so the House could revert to government business, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) questioned the decision of the Chair. He said he accepted it, but under protest.

In order to eliminate any doubt in the hon. member's mind I wish to bring to his attention Standing Order 15(4), which refers to private members' business—not private members' hour—on Thursdays between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. It was 6 p.m. when I intervened.

I invite the hon. member to consult Votes and Proceedings for March 22, 1982, which records a motion put, by unanimous consent, by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), which provides in part:

> When the House is considering any of the said bills, Standing Order 31(1) shall not apply and notwithstanding any Standing Order the House shall sit between 6.00 p.m. and 8.00 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays.

This is in relation to the consideration of energy business.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much of the time of the House. I just want to correct a few of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). To correct them all would take a great deal of time indeed.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has never let consistency or facts get in the way of a good argument. For example, near the end of his speech he was talking about giving consumers a break. That is a sentiment with which I am sure everyone in the House would concur, but nowhere in the hon. member's remarks did he acknowledge that when a consumer fills up his tank with gas, two thirds of the cost is taxes. If the hon. member wants to be consistent in his concern for the consumer, he should be suggesting that governments cut back on their taxes because it is government taxes to the extent of two thirds which are penalizing the consumer.

The hon. member suggested in his speech that what we need to do is let Petro-Canada take over another big oil company. Petrofina was not enough. The takeover of Petrofina is being paid for by means of a tax paid by consumers. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway should make up his mind. Does he want to tax consumers more in order to provide Petro-

Canada with more toys to play with, or does he want to protect the consumer? Try as he might, he cannot have it both ways.

Consistency or intellectual honesty will not get in the way of the hon. member's arguments. He thinks it is terrible that all those takeovers occurred last year. I agree with him. I think they contributed nothing to the country. They contributed not one job and not one barrel of oil. Canadianization was the hallelujah chorus of the government. That was a marvellous thing, but in the process many very good companies have been decimated, and nothing has been gained for the country in terms of jobs. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway agrees that all those takeovers were terrible.

Mr. Waddell: Private takeovers.

Mr. Andre: Then he turned around and said Petro-Canada should take over some more companies. He can have it one way or the other, but he cannot on the one hand say takeovers are terrible because they do not create new jobs or find any new oil—they just use up valuable capital—and on the other hand say, "I want Petro-Canada to do that thing which I have just described as a terrible activity." Yet that is the gist of the argument of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. It is unfortunate he did not feel the necessity to be a little more intellectually honest in his arguments. He is a socialist, a social democrat, or whatever name they apply to themselves these days. That is fine. That is a legitimate political point of view. It is a philosophy which has succeeded nowhere in the world in terms of bringing better standards of living to the people who have lived under it.

• (1840)

Mr. Waddell: What about Germany and France?

Mr. Andre: Both those countries were doing a lot better when they were under Christian Democrat governments or Gaullist governments than they are doing under socialist governments. Under the Christian Democrats, Germany had one of the highest growth rates in the world. Since the socialists took over they have one of the highest unemployment rates in Europe. If the hon. member wants to use Germany as an example, he will find it performed marvellously under the Christian Democrats and not so marvellously under the Social Democrats.

The one country that has had a consistently outstanding economic performance in the last two or three decades is Japan. It has had a conservative government through all that time.

Mr. Waddell: It has had a little economic planning as well.

Mr. Andre: If the hon. member were being intellectually honest, as opposed to reflecting the left-wing prejudices he learned in university, he would have to acknowledge that economies around the world work better under conservative governments. What bothers me is the distortion of the position of this party as put forward by the hon. member, and the distortion of things that we have said regarding this program. Intellectual dishonesty is not a capital crime in politics or the hon. member would have been decapitated long ago. It is not playing by the rules, however, to distort the position of another person or party deliberately. I have said repeatedly, as the hon. member knows although he refuses to accept my argument, the whole thrust of this program is a disaster.

The National Energy Program dreamed up by those geniuses in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—who, according to Maclean's magazine, describe themselves as the "enfin" group, that bunch of PhDs that was turned loose to find a way for the government to control the oil and gas industry—proposed the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, excise tax and sales tax—you name it. It was an increase in taxes in the order of $6 billion per year. To promote Canadianization they proposed giving $2 billion back to the oil industry, biased toward Canadian-owned companies.

That kind of program sounds great if one's only experience is time spent at the University of Toronto under Mel Watkins. If that is your economic training, then it is a great program. But the real world does not work the way Mel Watkins would like it to work and his students are no smarter than he is. They produced a disastrous program.

I see that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has left the House. The truth must be hurting him.

As I indicated in my letter to the minister and to his parliamentary secretary privately, the government has hit the industry severely with these taxes. They affect the junior Canadian companies in particular. As the government's figures show, in the first six months of 1981, Canadian-owned oil and gas companies suffered a 52 per cent drop in income over the previous year. Foreign-owned multinationals suffered a 28 per cent drop in income, so they were hurt. The Canadian companies were devastated by the taxes brought in under the National Energy Program, however. To help ameliorate that somewhat, the government proposed another stupid plan, which will fail, but if that is what it is going to do—then it should at least do it. That was the thrust of my letter, and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway knows that.

All I was saying to the government was, if that is what you were going to do then at least do it. Don't just load on taxes and kill these companies—and a lot of junior Canadian companies were killed, but not the multinationals. They will last longer than the minister or the government or any of us. A lot of junior Canadian companies were killed. PIP grants were one way in which a little bit of activity could be restored to the industry to get the service companies and drilling companies back to work. Perhaps some of the small towns in Alberta which rely on the oil industry and now are dying as a result of the National Energy Program, will have some vigor restored.

That was the reason for suggesting to the minister last December that if this part of the program, to match the taxes he was already collecting, were brought forward we would treat it with dispatch. We certainly would not support it. We certainly would not vote for it, because it is a disaster and it will collapse within two years. I guarantee that. The reason it will collapse is because people like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway are, unfortunately, not alone. A lot of pressure will be brought to bear with simple-minded approaches like his, asking how grants can be given to the industry while hospitals are closing—how $2 billion can be given to the industry when there is a desperate need for a home for unwed fathers or some such thing! That is the kind of statement that will be made, forgetting about the taxes. The pressure will be overwhelming, and the program will collapse.

Another reason is that the program has created a bureaucratic nightmare. It would need a Philadelphia lawyer to read the regulations and fill out the application forms. As the Canadian Bar Association indicated, the whole program may be in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in any case.

For those three reasons we are passing a program today that, in all likelihood, will die within a year or two. All of this will have been in vain and it will be left to someone else to try to clean up the mess and restore sanity to the energy sector of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist the temptation to respond to a few of the things the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) had to say about intellectual honesty. I was particularly amused and amazed that he cited the Japanese government as a conservative government which he has reason to admire. One of the reasons that the Japanese have fared so well over the last 30 years is because of the very close relationship between government and industry. This is because of extensive economic planning and the fact that investment decisions have to be cleared by the government. In fact the opposite of what this Conservative Party most often advances is the case in Japan. In his sermon about intellectual honesty I think the hon. member for Calgary Centre would do well to examine his own position, as Socrates said, before he attacks the intellectual honesty of others.

Mr. Andre: How many Crown corporations do they have in Japan?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, of course the monarchy in Japan was disbanded to all intents and purposes some time ago. Whether there are things called Crown corporations or not, it remains true that in Japan there is economic planning of the sort that this Conservative Party has often criticized. That is the reason Japan has the kind of economy it does. And, of course, Japan has been having the best of both worlds as far as international trade is concerned. All countries of the western world are concerned about that, but the hon. member for Calgary Centre did not mention it.

We are talking about the National Energy Program today. The NEP is a failure. It is a failure for a number of reasons, the biggest of which is the Liberal Party, which, in its customary way of not wanting to make hard philosophical and political decisions, has tried to go what I suppose they would call themselves—when they are trying to be positive about themselves, which must be difficult these days—the middle way. And what they have ended up with is the worst of all possible worlds.

• (1850)

The Conservatives and the New Democratic Party have radically divergent but nevertheless internally coherent views of how we are going to develop our energy resources. The Conservative view is that you give the multinationals and others as much money as they say they need in order to find the oil. We say that for too long that particular scheme, which the Liberals have relied upon up until the creation of PetroCan, saw the public interest being sold out time and again. We want to see these resources developed by the public sector through a PetroCan enlarged by the purchase of Imperial Oil, so we can go about developing our energy resources in a way that is entirely different from what we have been used to until now.

The Liberals, Mr. Speaker, could not make that kind of decision because they have certain economic loyalties to the oil companies and the private sector and because, in the final analysis, they are not that much different from the Conservatives on this issue. The Liberals want to appeal to that growing body of public opinion which says these resources must be regarded as a public utility and not be managed in the interests of the profit-motivated private sector.

In this respect I give the Progressive Conservative Party credit. They know public opinion is against their position on PetroCan and in favour of more public ownership in the energy industry. Yet they persist in this criticism of Crown corporations; they persist in pouring out venom in this House day after day about PetroCan and other Crown corporations. I can only say that if this suicidal passion of that party arises out of a deep-seated principle and objection to Crown corporations, then they have my admiration. I personally believe that is one of the reasons why the government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) fell so quickly. Their position on PetroCan helped create the political context for their defeat. They could not come out and say, "I guess this is what the Canadian people want". It is not communism, statism, or all the boogeyman things that so many of the Conservative backbenchers want to make it out to be. But no, the Conservatives, being the sort of principled lot that they are, to this very day still get up and pour abuse on what the Canadian people obviously want.

What about the Liberals? I often say the difference between the liberals and the Tories is the difference between smart capitalists and stupid ones. What we have over here are people who want to give the impression that they are doing something about Canadianization, while at the same time making sure their traditional friendships with the multinationals and private Canadian oil companies is kept well lubricated. How do you do that, Mr. Speaker? With lots of money, $8.9 billion worth in this one energy bill alone. So we have this money going out to the private oil companies, and what have we got? We have a national energy policy which does not work.

Instead of public ownership and having our resources developed in an alternative way, we have this huge bureaucracy which—the Conservatives are quite right—does not work? Why? Because the Liberals do not have the guts to go out and set up a truly Canadian energy sector and begin to develop these resources as they should be developed.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Judas sold his soul for 30 pieces of silver. What we see here is a government spending $8.9 billion on the so-called private sector, when it was unwilling to leave in the established programs financing the $2 billion which would have enabled the government to negotiate improved national standards of medicare. For $2 billion this government sold down the river the future of medicare and gave the provinces a club with which to beat the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) every time she opens her mouth about extra billing. But we have $8.9 billion to give to the private oil companies, these great entrepreneurs.

I get a charge out of the Conservative Party; they are always going on and on about entrepreneurship, free enterprise and risk taking, yet the private sector oil companies and others cannot get their nose in the public trough deep enough and fast enough. Then they go out and lecture people about self-reliance, pulling yourself up by the bootstraps, and all this rhetoric. Socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor, that is what it amounts to. If you are big enough and strong enough you can get yourself into the public trough with Progressive Conservative approval. But God help you if you are poor, or on welfare, or unemployed, because helping you is demoniacal and evil government spending. When it is government spending to help out the private sector, the oil companies, that is something the government should be doing more of, and indeed the hon. member for Calgary Centre, as far back as December last, was encouraging the minister to get on with the job of providing this money to the oil companies.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, a couple of times now in the energy debate, and I am going to say it again because no one seems to have picked it up yet, that the argument we are having about energy in this country is very limited indeed. It is really about who will preside over the last days of the prevailing energy model; will it be the private sector, the public sector, or will it be this bureaucratic nightmare called the Liberal government? Which of those three will preside over the last days of the energy model we have been living in for decades? Sooner or later we must all wake up to the fact that the energy model which now exists will have to be transcended.

• (1900)

We live in a finite world. As long as our energy policy is directed toward the infinite expansion of supply without seriously addressing the demand side of the question then we are living not in a fool's paradise, but a difficult paradise, because you have to spend all this money trying to find that last drop of oil. You have to drill holes irresponsibly all across the Arctic, taking the chance that we may have one of the greatest ecological disasters of all times on our hands. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said earlier today, what can happen up north will make the spills in the Gulf of Mexico and in other places look like kindergarten play compared to what we will have on our hands if we get a blow-out in the Arctic. Yet we are prepared to do that rather than to face up to the fact that we will have to change our way of life. It is as simple as that.

We will have to redirect the kind of money this government is now willing to spend in a desperate attempt to find the last reservoir of non-renewable resources. We will have to begin to redirect substantial sums of money, not token little bits of money for Enertech and that sort of thing, into the development of renewable resources of alternative energy technologies and conservation technologies and of the "will" to conserve. We must have the will to conserve. That is something that will not come easy. We have been taught in this country that we are able to consume, consume, and consume. There will be some difficult transitions because it will not be an easy task. But in that area we are not getting any leadership whatsoever from this government.

People are much more ready than politicians give them credit for to face up to some of these difficult issues. But people want to know that somebody is there who is willing to manage that difficult transition in their interests, not just in the interests of those who happen to own or control our energy resources. We are pouring so much money into the last days of this energy model, and the last days may go on for some time. The resilience of certain mistakes in ways of doing things never ceases to amaze me. Nevertheless, we are at the end of an era. The amount of money which this government, and particularly this minister, who otherwise seems to be an intelligent man, is willing to pour into these last days is astounding. The money that goes into the nuclear industry to keep that Canadian dream alive that somehow we will be the people who will fill the earth with nuclear reactors! To keep that dream alive, we spend millions and millions and millions of dollars to keep our domestic nuclear industry alive and to finance the export of Candu reactors to whomever is willing to pay the price regardless of what they intend to do with the possibilities that having our nuclear reactors on their soil enables them to do.

In this respect I must say, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes those of us who are in favour of Crown corporations realize just how much we need to make Crown corporations more accountable to Parliament, the people and to the political process than they have been under the Liberal government. I am thinking of the nuclear industry in particular. Here we have Atomic Energy of Canada in Manitoba which is doing environmental impact studies on its experimental laboratory for underground disposal of radioactive waste. What has Atomic Energy said? Atomic Energy has said it will not harm the environment. But I did not expect Atomic Energy to say anything else. It is in the business of selling nuclear reactors. That means Atomic Energy is in the business of creating nuclear waste. That means Atomic Energy also has to be in the business of pretending this stuff can be disposed of safely. The same people are involved in all three areas, and some very serious questions have to be raised about Atomic Energy of Canada as an example of we do not want when we talk about Crown corporations.

A little while ago somebody across the way said something about jobs. Apart from the consideration that the kind of alternative energy development that we are talking about I think, in the final analysis, will produce more jobs, and more long-term jobs at that, it will produce clearner, less dangerous jobs and it will provide more meaningful work than the kind of boom and bust employment situation which the kind of development the government is talking about creates. In spite of all that, I want to say a word about the whole question of jobs, and development, of jobs and the environment, and jobs period.

We are in a time when a lot of people are unemployed in this country which is an underestimation when over 1 million people are unemployed. Therefore, anything that is critical of job creation has to be very carefully said. But I think one thing needs to be said, and I will say it now. Just because something creates jobs does not make it right. It is as simple as that. There is no moral axiom anywhere that says simply because something creates employment, that makes it right and it makes it wrong for people to attack and criticize a project and say that it should not be happening.

I will use a biblical example to back up my argument. Recall that when St. Paul came to Rome and converted Rome to Christianity, one of the first things that happened was that he put a lot of people out of work. He put a lot of people out of work, those who were making idols. They used to make graven images which had to do with local religion. St. Paul didn't say, "No, We can't Christianize Rome because, by God, it puts people out of work. Jobs come first. Jobs come before morality. Jobs come before the right and jobs come before everything." He said "No, we are going to do this anyway."

I think we have to decide what kind of society we want, what kind of energy development we want and what kind of an economy we want. We have to have the confidence that we will find ways within that framework go give people meaningful work. That is the kind of leadership the Canadian people are seeking. I think my colleagues and I are able to provide that kind of leadership and we are going to be doing that in the weeks and years ahead.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just spoke talked about loyalty. I want to say the loyalty of the Progressive Conservative Party is to the people of Canada. Our policies would be fair to the people in every part of Canada with special privileges for none. I think that is the type of policy the people want.

As for the national energy policy, it has been a disaster for Canada. It is a disaster now. I have just a few comments on that and why this bill should not proceed. Action is being moved from parts of Canada into the north land. I have no objection to the development of our north. It is a very worthwhile endeavour. I do object to the fact that it is being done with a view to discriminating against conventional oil in other parts of Canada. There is no reason at all why some of this money should not have been spent on conventional oil in Alberta, Saskatchewan and perhaps other places. To move it out entirely ignoring conventional oil has destroyed a large number of small Canadian companies. It is not fair and it is not a sound policy. I think the policy should be fair to native people, and it does not appear to be.

• (1910)

A few months ago Bill C-48 placed the ownership of all land in the north in the hands of the Canadian government. Consequently, the opportunity for provincial status for native people in the northwest territories or northland has almost vanished. Once the Canadian government obtains control of the resources and takes off the cream, there is little hope of provincial governments having sufficient finances to operate. It is not being fair to native people.

Also the government is not being fair to native people in connection with land claims. Native people have been in those areas for a long time. They have been through hard times, they have been through difficult times; they have been through some good times and some times of famine. When an opportunity comes for them to have a break, then they should get it. With the work which is going on in the north, I think there should be a definite policy in terms of hiring northern people. This would give them a fair chance at being employed close to their homeland, which I do not think is contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The National Energy Program has taken money out of the pockets of people. If all the taxes which have been enumerated a number of times already could be totalled and were left in their pockets, we would find that consumers would be doing all right. If the money which has come out of the pockets of oil companies had been left there, they would have been able to make it on their own rather than go bankrupt. If the government continues to extract and extract from companies, whether small or big, and to expect them to stand on their own, it will simply defeat the purpose and drive them into bankruptcy. This is exactly what the national energy policy has been doing. They have penalized consumers through taxation on their heating oil. Not only have they penalized those who are working, but those people who are unemployed, crippled, or senior citizens. These people are being penalized because of excessive taxation. Every pocketbook in the country is affected by the National Energy Program, the disastrous budget and high interest rate policies.

I will not make comments about others who believe differently than I do. One's argument is not very good when one starts to ridicule, to call other people stupid, and so on. The country was built by free enterprisers and the vast majority of Canadians today are free enterprisers. I make no apology for being a free enterpriser. Free enterprise, without the shackles of government through excessive taxation, can give the people of the country the highest possible standard of living. In fact, it has given Canadians a high standard of living and can continue to do so, if the government does not continue to shackle it and prevent it from working. Of course that responsibility is on the government.

I hope there will be no ecological disaster in the great north. I do not agree with the current policy, but public money is being spent and I do not want to see a disaster in the north. The government should have realized that the money would have been safe and would have almost immediately brought in returns if it had been used in the area of conventional oil. The situation is entirely different when one looks at the far north. In the area of the Arctic islands tankers are faced with 20 feet of packed ice. No way has yet been found to extract the oil. There might be icebreakers which are big enough, but they have not yet been invented or found. I think they can be found if we are given the time. The industry must find a technical way of raising the oil to the surface, of putting valves in place and keeping them there; of protecting the valves when the ice moves so that the well is not wiped out, of getting the tankers in to load them and of getting them through the northwest passage to market. There are some gigantic problems. I do not begrudge the spending of this money in the north, but some of it should have been spent on conventional oil. It would have kept thousands of people working and scores of companies from going bankrupt both in the oil industry and others.

As I see it the policy has been a disaster for Canada. The effects of the National Energy Program will be felt for a long time before people can start producing and have faith in the government again.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on Bill C-104. First I should like to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who worked very hard in committee. Also I should like to refer to exactly what is happening in regard to this energy debate. We are talking about billions of dollars going to the oil companies. We know at election time that the oil companies give equal amounts to the Conservative Party and to the Liberal Party. We know the oil companies have directors sitting on various boards of banks across Canada. Let us not fool anyone as to who is representing whom and who will be given the biggest grants in the programs offered to the oil companies.

I am pleased and proud of the approach of the New Democratic Party in this matter. On behalf of the almost two million people unemployed across Canada, I should like to indicate to the House that they are finding it very difficult to obtain jobs, to save their homes or the environment around them. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) came into the House and presented a statement which gave an additional $2.5 billion to the oil companies. This was at a time when there were real needs in the lumber industry, in the mining industry and in the automobile industry across Canada. I hope the minister is paying attention to what I am saying this evening. I should like to refer to a letter I wrote to him on April 29, 1982, to which I have not received the courtesy of a reply. First, I should like to build up to the reason for writing this letter. On February 10, 1981, Bill C-60 received first reading in the House. On March 6, 1981, it received second reading, was considered in Committee of the Whole and received third reading in the House. Then it went to the Senate where it was amended, and the Senate actually held up the bill with the approval of the minister from April 8 to December 11, when the minister finally had the courage to bring the bill back to the House. On December 11 the House unanimously agreed to the amendments, and then the bill returned to the Senate. On December 18, 1981, Bill C-60 received royal assent. To this day the minister has not given my constituents the privilege of using the provisions of the bill.

Therefore, on April 29 I wrote the following letter to the minister:

> During the past year and a half, some constituents in my riding have been trying to negotiate a settlement with the Foothills Pipe Line Ltd. for trespass and damage to their property during the construction of the pipeline in southeastern British Columbia.
>
> I have raised this matter in the House and you are aware of these grievances which the residents wish to pursue through the provisions of Bill C-60.
>
> Bill C-60 received royal assent in December 1981, and I feel it is imperative that your government proclaim this bill so that my constituents can have the opportunity to have their cases heard through its provisions.

If the minister is so concerned about oil companies and ongoing programs, he should take a look at the provisions of Bill C-60 and ensure that the grievances of my constituents, whose property was trespassed and damaged by this company, will be settled. They should be given an opportunity to be heard and to put their case. I urge the minister to proclaim Bill C-60, which amends the National Energy Board Act, so that my constituents will have their day to present their case in a fair manner. I think it is unfortunate that the minister sits on this bill when not only has it been approved by the House but by the Senate. It is now just waiting for the will of the minister to proclaim it and have it gazetted, so they will be given the opportunity to use it.

• (1920)

I also want to say something on behalf of our senior citizens on fixed incomes who have seen their energy bills increase. We have heard some of the proposals presented by the minister with regard to assistance under the conversion program. While he is doing this we are seeing electrical costs in British Columbia going up by as much as 40 per cent. I believe if we are to look at programs that will be of assistance to various groups, we should look at their incomes so that the assistance to be provided can be created by better policies of this government.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a few moments to make a few remarks about the energy debate and the energy problems which face Canada and the world. For almost the past year, many hours have been spent in the House on the energy debate. There have been many opinions expressed, many ideas and suggestions developed, which I am sure each member delivered with the truth as he saw it.

Since it will only be a matter of minutes until this debate is finished and the whole energy question will be settled for this session, I would like to go on record as speaking about the future. I do not mean the future six months, six years or even 600 years from now, I am talking about the future of our planet and of the people who will live on it. I feel that as we vote on this energy bill tonight and then proceed with our lives for whatever number of years each of us has left, we must remain concerned about energy. Let us think for a few moments about the people who are to follow us generations from now. What we are doing tonight will affect the lives of all those billions of people to come.

This week I received a petition from a group of people in my riding. The petition began, "We are parents and grandparents—." That petition asked that I present to the House their concerns about the lives of their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and I have presented that petition. These people did not want their future generations wiped out or destroyed by atomic war. Of course, I am totally in accord with this.

Let us put into perspective this $8.9 billion we are considering handing out to the oil companies in order to preserve, in a sense, the future with respect to energy. I do not believe that $8.9 billion will accomplish that or that all the oil companies in the world can do that unless the people of this planet, including people like myself, all hon. members, every Canadian and the rest of the world, decide that we do only have a limited amount of energy available. Let us not kid ourselves when we talk about new oil and old oil. Relatively speaking, all oil is old. It takes 500 million years for our planet to process and evolve one drop of oil. Oil which is now being formed on our planet will evolve 500 million years in the future. Yet there seems to be almost a madness which, I must confess, I share myself about using it all up as quickly as possible. There seems to be a feeling of unconcern about future generations and a feeling that we are entitled to use it all ourselves. I was born into a society which felt that there are no limits. I realize now that there are limits.

The oil industry in Canada has evolved during my lifetime. I can remember Leduc and the first pipeline across the prairies. I worked on it. It has not been that long since the industry began to develop. Oil in Canada is a new commodity.

This morning, as I came to the House of Commons, I drove my car. It is a small one.

Mr. Andre: Japanese?

Mr. Ogle: Not a Japanese car, a small Canadian car. The fuel which went into that car was refined from a process which began almost 500 million years ago. It was burned up and no one will ever use it again. Tomorrow, when many hon. members return to their ridings in an airplane they will see the vapour trail left behind. The fuel which takes us home tomorrow will be finished and never used again. Therefore I must ask myself the moral question of how much energy can I or anyone use if we are to concern ourselves with the plea of those parents and grandparents to look after the future of their children and to leave something for them.

The idea that was common when I was young—although I am not that old yet—that there are no limits to resources is being challenged today. The confidence that there were no limits to resources was prevalent not so long ago. I have seen forests that seem to have no end. However, if one visits the Amazon forest today one realizes it has a limit and an end and is being chopped down very, very fast.

The purpose of my small interjection into this energy debate, which I want to share with my colleagues and anyone else who is interested, is to somehow bring myself to task and to ask others to realize the need to conserve a little bit of what is on this planet for the people who have not yet been born. New sources of energy are just not evolving fast enough. It may not be the most significant interjection in a debate which is to decide how to spend this money, but I would like to see some that $8.9 billion being spent to encourage a company to find more gas to create more traffic jams put to better use. It is said that the world will end in a traffic jam. I am inclined to believe that. As you drive on the road today you see one person sitting alone in 2,000 pounds of steel. There are thousands of people who sit in their cars by themselves. Everyone is stopped at a red light with their motor running. It is the beginning of the end.

I would like to end on a slightly different note. I had the privilege to represent our party when a Canadian delegation went to Rome for the beatification of Brother André and several other people. The leader of our delegation was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Although we did not discuss energy, it was an experience which I think we can share. It concerns the city of Rome, one of the great and beautiful cities of the world. I have been to Rome many times in the last 25 years. Rome has changed. There is now a perpetual traffic jam there. People no longer park their cars in single rows. Every street now has a double row of parked cars. You cannot go anywhere in Rome without being in a traffic jam. The beautiful skies of Italy are now smog, and the same situation is true in Rio, Tokyo, New Delhi and Lagos. That is what has happened to the world. While the automobile and the use of its fuel has given us the service which we all appear to want to sustain, we must see what it has done to the planet and our environment at the same time.

Those were a few of my thoughts which I wanted to give the House before we come to the final votes on these bills tonight. Whether we like it or not, these pieces of legislation will influence the lives not only of Canadians today but of their children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and all our future generations in the centuries to come.

• (1930)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-108, to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House may now wish to consider Bill C-108 and motions with respect to the amendments thereto.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-108, An Act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 27 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the Governor in Council and subject to relevant provincial laws and regulations, make regula-"

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just so that we can clarify this situation with regard to Bill C-108, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to enter another two amendments. I understand that the mover of the first motion will get the chance to speak first, and then I suspect the minister may be speaking. Perhaps what I could do is to speak to my amendments when it is my turn to speak. However, those will be the only amendments, other than the ones printed here. I understand that there is Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), then Motions Nos. 2 and 3 standing in my name. I would like to move two other amendments which would really follow Motion No. 1. As a matter of fact, the first one really deals with Motion No. 1.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps it might be appropriate and in keeping with what we have done concerning other bills, as I understand it, if the minister would seek unanimous consent for his motions and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would do so, then we could have all the motions before us.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: As I understand it, the number of hon. members who will speak is relatively limited in terms of the parties concerned. It may be more expeditious to follow the procedure of general report stage debate and then deal with motions seriatim at the end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The proposal of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) sounds very reasonable.

Mr. Lalonde: I would like to support the proposal of my friend the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

I would like to indicate that I also have two amendments which I would like to propose, with unanimous consent, and which could be debated as part of the general report stage debate. So if that is agreeable, we will put these amendments forward together with the other amendments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. minister seeks unanimous consent to put forward two amendments. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That clause 32 of Bill C-108 be amended

(a) by striking out line 31 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"33. (1) Subject to subsection (2), this Act or any provision thereof shall"

(b) by adding, after line 33 on page 20 the following:

"(2) Sections 12, 13 and 32 shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but no proclamation issued under this subsection may purport to have been issued on a day that is prior to the day that is six months after this Act is assented to."

He said: I also propose the following:

That Clause 31 of Bill C-108 be amended by striking out line 15 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"province."

32. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 90 thereof, the following heading and section:"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Table officers will consider the admissibility of the two amendments proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and one presumes that, in all probability, they will be in order.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has stated that he wishes to renumber certain of the motions standing in his name. I believe he indicated that Motions Nos. 4 and 5 ought to be placed for consideration after Motion No. 1. I do not think the House wants to discuss which motions ought to be placed in which order, but if any hon. member or minister wishes to indicate that some of these motions should be considered in a certain order, the Chair will be pleased to listen to that advice. If there is no intent on the part of hon. members to renumber motions, the simplest solution would be to take them as they now stand, and Motions Nos. 1 through 5 and the two amendments suggested by the minister would become Motions Nos. 6 and 7, and we would debate them seriatim.

Shall we agree to this, or do we have other suggestions from hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, Motions Nos. 6 and 7, attached to Bill C-108, will be two amendments proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As I have indicated earlier, we will check the admissibility of the motions which, I presume, will be in order.

Therefore, the Chair will hear those who wish to enter into debate on Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I understood my hon. friend, we will consider this first stage as a general debate at report stage on the various amendments, with Your Honour's indulgence. I listened with great interest to the previous debate that took place and to the exchanges that flew between the Conservative, and the New Democratic Party members in the House on the previous bill. I followed it with great interest when I saw those two extremes on the political spectrum shooting at each other. If we on this side did not intervene much in that debate, it was because, as we say in Latin, in medio stat virtus. We can easily come to the conclusion that the policies pursued by the government stood between those extremes. They were not for absolute, unbridled free enterprise which could exploit people, but, at the same time, we were not out to nationalize the oil and gas industry. We believe that in this country there is room for both a public and a private sector and that the private sector must be kept in a position where it can do what is required in the oil and gas field to ensure that this country will have the security of supply that it needs.

The hon. members of the NDP spent a lot of time referring to $8.9 billion. What they did not mention is that those amounts, spread over a period of five years, are in substitution for tax concessions which existed before. In effect, these figures illustrate a system whereby we will be able to encourage the growth of Canadian enterprises in the oil and gas industry. Moreover, we will not put it all into the Canada lands, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) suggested. As a matter of fact, as he well knows, I spent much time referring to the heavy oil industry in Saskatchewan and all of that, and the PIP grants will go to Saskatchewan and will go to the hon. member's native province of British Columbia. They will not be reserved for the Canada lands.

These are some of the points we could have gone into at great length, but I thought I should at least point out to my hon. friend that he is certainly not adequately representing the reality of the situation by talking as he did, but I am sure that energy is a constant subject of reflection and debate. We will have other opportunities to debate these issues. Obviously I am looking forward to other opportunities to debate with my friends issues with regard to the National Energy Program, the objectives we are trying to achieve, and the assurance that we want to give the Canadian people in regard to fairness of prices and security of suppiy, and full participation.

• (1940)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Is that when you are minister of finance?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, we are discussing Bill C-108. This bill has been considered in committee and has been the subject of representations and testimonies by a number of people, including the Newfoundland Minister of Energy, Hydro-Quebec, the Independent Petroleum Association and several other persons and groups. It has been the subject of debate within the committee and has been amended on a number of points, following representations made before the committee and proposals that were put forward. I believe we now have a bill that is a considerable improvement over the bill we introduced initially, and I wish to thank those who appeared before the committee to express their views, and I also wish to thank committee members for their contribution to the debate on these bills and especially on Bill C-108.

I may recall that one of the basic objections raised, and I am thinking especially of the president of Hydro-Quebec, concerned a provision that would have allowed the National Energy Board to modify existing export licences if public convenience and necessity so requires. The case against this provision was examined very carefully, and we reached the conclusion that the point raised by Hydro-Quebec was a valid one, and that in view of this very serious objection we should amend the bill accordingly. I feel that the subsequent amendment, which removes the electric power matter completely from the purview of the National Energy Board, will settle this particular contentious point.

A more emotionally and politically charged question was also raised, namely, the provisions in the bill that allow the National Energy Board to authorize construction of power lines for interprovincial transmission and which provide new authority with respect to international transmission lines. I referred to the debate as being emotionally and politically charged, because without wishing to give these adjectives a negative connotation—they are a fact of life—I am especially reminded of the testimony given by the president of Hydro-Quebec who appeared before the committee and was asked by my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway what he thought about this feud between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Newfoundland. Very wisely, President Bourbeau said in his testimony on May 26, 1982, before the committee, as reported on page 2715 of the proceedings, that as far as the so-called power corridor was concerned, he could not care less, implying that it was not a real problem, and that for all practical purposes, it was not a matter of any concern at all to Hydro-Quebec.

Understandably, there have been some wild and wonderful things said on the subject. In Quebec, the Parti Québécois presented a motion in the National Assembly. There was a long debate and an attempt to raise public sentiment by telling everyone who would listen that Quebec's territory was being violated and that Quebec's autonomy and the inviolability of its borders were in danger. Fortunately, I think the vast majority of the people kept a clear head throughout this debate, and realized that the whole discussion really could not be taken seriously, when the Parti Québécois claimed that attempts were being made to violate Quebec's borders, to take over its territory or to extend Newfoundland's territory across Quebec, and so forth. Those were, if I recall correctly, some of the expressions being used. As I said in my speech when we first considered this bill, there is no legal difference between the construction of an oil or gas pipeline like the ones being built right now across Quebec and the construction of an electric power transmission line.

These are two techniques for transmitting energy, and following representations which included those by Calgary Power in Alberta and by the Newfoundland government, we had to deal with what the Premier of Newfoundland qualified as flagrant injustice, namely, that we did not put the transmission of electric power on the same level as gas and oil pipelines. In fact, in conferring powers on the National Energy Board, we did not go as far as we did with respect to the transmission of gas and oil. That being said, we still wanted to take into account the actual situation, since we had to deal fairly with the citizens of Newfoundland and Alberta who made representations on the subject, but at the same time, as I said before, the Government of Canada is generally in favour of a negotiated solution and feels that the only valid solution to the differences separating the government of Newfoundland and the government of Quebec is a negotiated agreement between the two governments, and that any other solution, though theoretically possible, would be an absolute last resort, and only if all other avenues had failed would the Government of Canada, the National Energy Board in this case, be called on to intervene, and that all things considered, if the provincial governments were able to reach some kind of agreement, the government would certainly prefer this arrangement to any other kind.

In recent months, I had a number of meetings with my Quebec colleague, Mr. Duhaime, and with my Newfoundland counterpart, Mr. Marshall. I had an opportunity to explore this question with them in detail and I tried to persuade them to come back to the negotiating table and try to reach an agreement. In fact, my colleague, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), urged me to do so, and pointed out that we had to persuade both provincial governments to settle their differences. I understand the hon. member perfectly, because having seen the attitude taken by his own colleagues from Newfoundland, who refused to vote either for or against this bill when the Progressive Conservative Party voted against it on second reading, it is clear that there are considerable regional differences of opinion in Canada on this subject. As the Government of Canada, we felt that we had to recognize our responsibility in this area, and that we did not have the right to hide behind the curtains or remain seated when there is a real and serious problem that is causing Quebecers and Newfoundlanders to lose hundreds of millions of dollars every year and also thousands of jobs which would otherwise be created by construction projects for dams on the Churchill River or on the North Shore rivers.

During the debate in committee, the hon. member for Joliette urged me to try to get the parties together and to give them time to settle down to negotiations. At second reading he had already suggested a six-month postponement, and in committee he asked whether it would be possible to allow for more time, so that the parties would have another chance to meet and carry on negotiations. Mr. Speaker, in the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, May 27, 1982, on page 2921, I said, and I quote:

> If you agree, I will consult my cabinet colleagues and the caucus; we will propose the amendment you have put forth, namely, to postpone enforcement of this part of the bill for six months.
>
> Is your party ready to support such an amendment?
>
> MR. LA SALLE: Yes.
>
> MR. LALONDE: Are you ready to support such an amendment?
>
> MR. LA SALLE: Yes.
>
> MR. LALONDE: I want that to be recorded.

• (1950)

Then, on page 2922, I stressed my point when I said:

> My question was quite clear: an amendment which would provide that that part of the bill would only come into force six months later.
>
> MR. LA SALLE: Yes.
>
> MR. LALONDE: Yes, that was it.

We must add to this the discussions which I had with my colleague, Mr. Duhaime, during the weeks before and after the report stage of this bill, that is during these last few weeks. Once again, Mr. Duhaime asked me to postpone if possible the coming into force of this bill so that he and his Newfoundland counterpart could sit down and negotiate. In view of these representations and as evidence of the wish of the Canadian government to promote an agreement between the two governments on this issue, we decided to introduce an amendment which I hope will receive the support of all the parties in this House so that, when this bill is proclaimed, if it is approved by Parliament, the provisions relating to power transmission lines would come into force only six months after proclamation to allow the two provincial governments additional time to sit down and make a genuine effort to come to an agreement, because as I have noted, the Canadian government is convinced that it is through a negotiated settlement of all the problems which now oppose these two governments on this issue that this matter can be settled the most effectively.

Obviously, if the two provincial governments cannot come to an agreement after a new effort and a further attempt at negotiation, we shall not indefinitely let billions of dollars' worth of hydroelectric power which is greatly needed by the people of Newfoundland and Quebec flow into the ocean, we shall not indefinitely allow people to remain unemployed when they could be put to work building dams on rivers, we shall not indefinitely deprive the Canadian economy of the very substantial economic benefits this could entail.

I therefore wrote today to my two counterparts, Mr. Duhaime in Quebec, and Mr. Marshall in Newfoundland, telling them of the government's proposal and informing them that the government was giving them another six months to come to a definite agreement. We believe that, with good will from both sides, the two provincial governments could find a beneficial solution. Indeed, it would appear that the two governments should meet to discuss all the aspects which now divide them, and this includes the Churchill River and the rivers on the Quebec North Shore. Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to table immediately copies in English and in French of the letters to Mr. Duhaime and Mr. Marshall with the consent of the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. de Corneille): Does the minister have unanimous consent to table the letters?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, once again, our position is clear. We are willing to take our responsibilities as the Canadian government, but, on the other hand, we want to make every effort so that the two provincial governments involved will use the time available to them to settle this question themselves. I can assure the House that if those provinces come to an agreement, we shall be the first to applaud and to rejoice since, unfortunately, this issue is now causing great divisions between two provinces which both have a very high rate of unemployment and a great many financial problems generally and which could reap great benefits from an economic development such as that which could result from such an agreement.

[English]

I would like to say that in proposing this particular amendment today the Government of Canada will ensure that the provisions of Bill C-108 concerning electrical transmission will not come into effect until six months after the passage and the proclamation of the bill. This is being done in order to give one more chance to negotiations during those six months. We favour a negotiated settlement between the two provincial governments. We believe that for technical as well as economic reasons a negotiated settlement for the integrated movement of power from Labrador through the Hydro-Quebec system is infinitely superior to any system of dedicated line transmission of power through Quebec.

From the discussions I have had with the Quebec minister in the last few weeks, I have had a very strong perception that Quebec is ready and willing to show flexibility and good faith in those negotiations. I have had an indication from the Quebec minister that as part of negotiations on the development of the lower Churchill River as well as the Quebec northshore rivers the Quebec government would be willing to improve appreciably the payments related to the upper Churchill power. In addition, the Quebec government would be willing to discuss arrangements under which Hydro-Québec would not be the exclusive buyer of additional electricity produced in Labrador.

I think these proposals from the Quebec government indicate that that government is genuinely interested in proceeding with dispatch to serious negotiations of the issues dividing the two provinces concerning the production and distribution of electrical power.

As I have indicated, we also believe that the only truly satisfactory way of resolving this dispute between the two provinces is through negotiations covering a broad range of issues dealing with the production and transmission of electricity. We are therefore giving some time—not an infinite amount of time, obviously—to the two governments to resolve the issues which are dividing them at the present time.

I regret that the opposition parties have opposed this bill at second reading. I hope upon reflection—and in view of this particular amendment—they will revise their position and agree to support this bill which, I hope, we will be in a position to pass tonight, including the provisions concerning electrical power transmission. As I have indicated, in order to encourage both provincial governments to return in good faith to the bargaining table, the Government of Canada is asking Parliament to amend Bill C-108 so that any part of the legislation concerning lives for the transmission of electricity would come into effect six months after proclamation.

• (2000)

The spokesman for the Conservative Party in the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation stated quite clearly and categorically that his party would support such an amendment, and I hope that the New Democratic Party will see fit to do so as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, while we are encouraging both governments to return to the table and resolve their disputes, we have also indicated that if the two provincial governments feel that the Government of Canada can play any useful role in resolving the issue, we will be available to them.

These are the main points I wanted to draw to the attention of the House. I urge the House to give favourable consideration to these amendments and to support them and pass this bill with dispatch.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister a double-barrelled question. The first part is, why did he sit around all evening in the House listening to the speeches without giving us a copy of this amendment? It is a significant and important amendment. This is an important issue, so why did he spring it on us at the last moment?

The second part of the question is what happens after six months under the minister's proposed amendment? Will this bill automatically go through with the corridor expropriation powers in it, or will it come back to Parliament for Parliament to decide?

Mr. Lalonde: First of all, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member and the NDP would stop using a lot of the time of the House to make histrionic speeches on Bill C-104 we would be further ahead. I was waiting to get to Bill C-108 so that I could introduce the amendments. I would remind the hon. member that I did not get any notice of the amendments he has introduced. I have not seen them.

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I have a point of order. The parliamentary secretary got the amendments. They were sent to his office this evening.

Mr. Lalonde: I apologize. If they were sent to my parliamentary secretary's office this evening—

Mr. Waddell: Sent to him.

Mr. Lalonde: What time was it?

Mr. Waddell: A couple of hours ago.

Mr. Lalonde: There it is, Mr. Speaker. As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, as I indicated in my comments in committee when we debated this issue, I asked the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), as is reported at page 29:22 of the proceedings, if the amendment would provide that that part of the bill would only come into force six months later. The hon. member answered yes. So that is clear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is in possession of seven amendments to Bill C-108. I want to indicate that the two amendments proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) have been found to be in order. For the purpose of making matters go forward more easily hon. members have agreed that rather than alter the number of the motions and attempt to relate them to one another, we would simply take them seriatim.

I think it is incumbent upon the Chair to indicate that hon. members need not feel that they must address themselves to the particular amendment which may be before the House. General reference to the bill will be considered adequate in terms of the rule of relevance.

That being the case, any hon. member may seek to speak at any time on any amendment without feeling he would be in any way out of order. I am therefore, if the House so wishes, prepared to put the question to the House on motion No. 1.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should tell you at the outset that I was pleased to hear the suggestion made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the amendment which had been discussed in committee. I am delighted to see that the government will implement a recommendation which I had made personally in this House and I would be even more delighted of course, as the minister pointed out, if there had been no need for this amendment and if the two governments were to agree to set their sights on the best effective and profitable objectives for both provinces, namely Quebec and Newfoundland. Once or twice the minister has reminded this House of the remarks I made in committee to the effect that my party and I would support such an amendment. We said so ten days ago already and we are quite pleased to support the amendment this evening.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that as an elected member from Quebec I am especially interested in this bill. I know that the minister, who comes from Quebec, spoke twice, on second reading and earlier this evening, but I do not know of any other Quebec members having taken part in this debate, although I expect they will have an opportunity tonight to give us their views on this bill. I too would like to commend and thank the president of Hydro-Quebec who appeared before the committee and tabled a very interesting brief which caught the attention of the minister and enabled him to see some of the drawbacks of his bill. Indeed, with respect to Clause 25, the minister agreed to amend his bill to avoid the pitfalls which became apparent after the very relevant documentation presented by Hydro-Quebec. I might add that we on this side have deemed appropriate to introduce an amendment since the president of Hydro-Quebec was praised for his knowledge of the subject and since he was the one who pointed out another danger. I hope the government will support our amendment as readily as we are prepared to approve the minister's amendment.

It would seem that Clause 10 might generate conflicts with respect to the new provisions, having in mind the provincial legislation applying to the agricultural sector, that is the environment legislation. Besides, in light of the remarks, the know-how and the evidence submitted by the president of Hydro-Quebec concerning the technical aspects, it must be recalled that in his brief he did state that Clause 10 might conflict with the provincial statutes. Nobody has yet raised that issue. Finally, Hydro-Quebec is concerned over the fact that Clause 10 authorizes the National Energy Board to set environmental standards which differ from those of the provinces with respect to international power lines. The construction of those lines is already fully covered by provincial laws and regulations on environmental protection. According to Hydro-Quebec, Clause 10 will open the door to the establishment of different and conflicting systems and the utility company is afraid that certain line sections may be needlessly subjected to requirements which are totally alien to the entire network. That is why, considering that very relevant remark, the people in charge have shown their competence and deserve our full respect. This has prompted my colleague from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) to move that amendment to force the governor in council or the National Energy Board to respect existing provincial legislation, considering the new provisions contained in this bill. I hope this amendment will gain support, if only to show respect for the true principle of co-operative federalism, if only to show respect for provincial jurisdictions and provincial legislation. This amendment applies to all provinces, of course, not only to Quebec, let us not think for a moment that it is aimed solely at Quebec. I hope that my colleagues opposite will show no hesitation in supporting this amendment which would greatly improve this measure.

• (2010)

I listened to the minister who tried once more to reassure people by stating there was absolutely no danger of conflict with provincial laws, and I must refer again to his statement on second reading. The minister said that if we looked at the current pipeline experience in Quebec, for instance, we could see that the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline is now under construction and should reach Three-Rivers before the end of the year, and hopefully Quebec in the next year, and therefore, that the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes company who were building the pipeline under the National Energy Board licence were now expropriating to build that pipeline, and also that the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes company was operating in accordance with provincial legislation now applicable in Quebec, whether it be legislation on environment or protection of farm lands, and so forth. The case of the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes company over these last few months, over last year was used as an example. That company had to comply with applicable provincial acts regulating some forms of activity within the Province of Quebec. The same thing happened when a pipeline was built, whether in Quebec or elsewhere. When lines were extended, the corporation involved complied not only with federal laws but also with provincial laws that might be applicable. What was involved here, and I am still referring to the minister's comments, was that there was a proposal for granting in respect of transmission lines the same authority that now lies with the National Energy Board for pipelines. This meant that the practice followed in Quebec as I said for the gas pipeline by Trans-Canada and Maritimes was the same as in the case of an international interprovincial transmission line, and I shall come back to this.

I remind hon. members that the minister in respect of transmission lines referred to the same power that now exist. There was no problem when the minister spoke on second reading, and once again when he spoke last night before the proposal was accepted. He is now referring to existing authority. Mr. Speaker, under the existing authority the National Energy Board must comply with provincial laws. The legislation would enable the National Energy Board to ignore them, as proposed under Clause 10, which would become Section 11 of the amended act. Therefore, the minister is not quite honest when he states that the authority granted the National Energy Board in respect of hydroelectric power transmission is identical to the existing one.

The minister knows full well that the National Energy Board will have powers that will extend beyond those existing now and the House of Commons will not be in a position to discuss whatever regulations the National Energy Board will establish. For that reason, and this is a point I feel members will understand, Section 11 of the amended act would enable the National Energy Board to regulate and make its own regulations on environment and farm zoning. Therefore, I will not be made a party to that kind of argument. As stated by Hydro-Québec in their submission, this might lead to conflicts and will give the National Energy Board the power to establish new environment and farm zoning criteria. Therefore, if the government have any respect for the provinces they will have no hesitation in accepting an amendment to that clause to ensure that the governor in council complies with existing laws, whether in Quebec or elsewhere. This means that any project that might be implemented would need the agreement of the province where it is undertaken. Such an amendment is extremely important for any province and since the project involved concerns Newfoundland and Quebec, I believe that the six dozens of Quebec members will understand the importance of this amendment and will not hesitate to stengthen the powers of this House, because it has become increasingly clear that every piece of energy legislation which has been discussed here would give additional powers to the National Energy Board and therefore reduce the powers of the legislators. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that the members from Quebec especially will understand the situation in this case, and I am also aware of the interest shown by my Newfoundland colleagues in this issue. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) recalled earlier that some of my colleagues from Newfoundland were not here to vote on the amendment which I had moved. I shall certainly not criticize the position taken by my Newfoundland colleagues about this project, but I would invite the members from Quebec to have as much courage and integrity concerning the interests of their own province as my colleagues from Newfoundland, and if they do, I am not worried about the results concerning this bill, Mr. Speaker.

I do not want to delay the proceedings on this bill. Once again, I have had the great pleasure to hear the minister move an amendment which could allow the governments of Newfoundland and Quebec to come to an agreement. The minister has repeated many times that the best solution would be a negotiated settlement between the two provinces. For our part, we, of course, ask the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland to come to an agreement as quickly as possible and to tax this great wealth for the benefit of the people of the two provinces. There can be no doubt that we agree in principle. Of course, we blame the government for forcing the provinces to do something which normally should be left to the provinces themselves. We have too much respect for provincial priorities and the provinces themselves to give them instructions and set deadlines for them. In the absence of a negotiated settlement, we now have an amendment which could allow the two governments to negotiate diligently, and I believe that both governments have expressed the wish to do so.

As I said before the amendment moved by my colleague from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) would mean that provincial laws would be obeyed. I honestly believe that the members of this House should not hesitate to reflect on the purpose of this amendment which simply aims at bringing about the equity often mentioned by hon. members opposite and which would result in a truly just society concerning the respect of our rights and the system in which we function. I hope that hon. members will have no hesitation in supporting this amendment which would bring about the equity justly claimed by Quebec and which would be equally available to the ten provinces which make up this country. I do not believe this is a special situation. This is not a special condition or a special status; it simply recognizes the wish of all the provinces to have their views respected. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall have positive votes in this regard and that my friends from Quebec will give me their support, especially regarding the amendment moved by my colleague from Calgary Centre this evening. I repeat that I shall not hesitate for my part to support the amendment moved by the minister. I shall now give the opportunity to some of my colleagues to make their own comments.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, coming from British Columbia I thought I understood Alice in Wonderland politics. But when I hear Newfoundland and Quebec politics, I wonder if British Columbia isn't simple.

Some hon. Members: Careful.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there has been a substantial amendment to this bill tonight and I really do not understand the minister and the way he presented it. His problem is that he is too clever by half. He sat in this House for three hours listening to speeches with a substantial amendment to this bill in his back pocket. He then springs it on the opposition at the last moment, gives a speech and leaves the House. That is permissible. You can do it. Maybe it is good politics, but I do not think it is the proper way of working, and I think that is the reason the minister gets into a lot of trouble, whether with the oil industry in the west, with consumers in Ontario, with the Péquistes in Quebec City or with the Newfoundlanders in St. John's.

• (2020)

When this bill was introduced in the House the minister spoke and said that it did not affect the existing contract between Newfoundland and Quebec. That is what he said. He put out a press release to that effect. If it does not affect it, why is the minister now bringing in an amendment to postpone the applicable provisions for six months? There is something strange and inconsistent there. I am glad that he has postponed it, however. I would like to see Quebec and Newfoundland make a deal. I have been afraid from the beginning that this was an inopportune time to bring in a bill like this. I am not a Quebecer. I am from as far away from Quebec as you can get. Maybe that makes me objective. Maybe it is an advantage. I have been listening to Quebecers and I have been reading this bill very carefully. It seemed to me bad timing to bring in a bill like this, given what went on between the government of Quebec and the constitutional accord. This bill could possibly inflame Quebec. I do not know whether Quebec is grandstanding, as the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) said: "Un gros show—" I know I met with some of the Quebec MNAs when they could not meet with other members.

An hon. Member: That is a lie.

Mr. Waddell: That is what I understand. Hon. members will get their chance to reply. I do not understand whether or not they had a chance to meet with them. I know I met with them and I listened to some arguments on the bill. I listened to the minister tonight. He almost gave the impression that he and the Quebec minister of energy were in agreement. But that is not what I got from the Quebec minister of energy.

Mr. Dingwall: What did you get?

Mr. Waddell: I will explain in a few moments what I understood was Quebec's point of view.

The minister hopes the opposition parties will support this amendment. He asked for certain good faith. But he did not come in with good faith tonight in the way he introduced the amendment.

I see the minister is now entering the House. I will repeat what I just said. I did not think the minister showed good faith in the way he introduced this amendment tonight without giving us any notice. He is too clever by half in my opinion. He is often inconsistent. He originally gave the line that it would not affect existing contracts. Now he says it may. If he wants to do a proper job with respect to this matter—and he is right, we should have a deal between Quebec and Newfoundland—why does he not bring in an amendment to postpone the matter for six months and then come back to Parliament after six months with a bill? That was the motion moved by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on April 27. It is slightly different from this one.

I asked the minister what happens after six months. The answer he gave was that it was obvious from reading the text that the bill will just be proclaimed in six months, so it will not come back to Parliament. If the minister really wanted to be fair, reasonable and consistent, he would come back to Parliament. I think he is trying to put something over on us. I think—I say this as an outsider and I hope I am wrong—that the federal government is trying to play games with Quebec. It is like a continual battle or a blood feud between the minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of Quebec. I hope for the sake of Canada that they will all cool it. I am sure I will hear from some of the Quebec members who will indicate the situation. Maybe I have missed something.

I see a number of problems with respect to the bill. I will tell you what they are, Mr. Speaker. One is that Quebec is concerned that the bill will not respect Quebec laws on environment and on agriculture. We offered an amendment to try to get the bill to respect Quebec laws on environment and agriculture. Our amendment is a little different from the amendment offered by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). If you look at our amendment, we say that where there is a conflict they have to look at provincial laws. If there is an overriding conflict, then they have to look at the law dealing with property and environment. A good example would be Ontario Hydro exporting power to the United States when it does not put in scrubbers in a coal-fired generator. Many Members of Parliament signed a petition with respect to that issue.

There is an issue respecting Quebec lands. We offered an amendment to help, and I think we should consider it. The minister quoted the chairman of Quebec Hydro. But he did not quote the chairman completely, he quoted him selectively. The chairman of Quebec Hydro said there is a difference between a pipeline and a hydro line. The difference is this: a pipeline goes through a province and you do not need other facilities, but a hydro corridor has to be part of a grid. That is the key difference. I think that is what the chairman of Hydro-Quebec meant when he said he is ni chaud ni froid, that is neither hot nor cold about the sovereignty issue. That is what he meant because he thought it would be impossible to build the corridor. If it is impossible, and if there is a difference between a pipeline and a hydro corridor, as hydro said, but which the minister does not agree with, why do we have this bill? As Alice in Wonderland said , "It gets curiouser and curiouser" why we have this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Quebec's concerns about the impact of Bill C-108. I have met quite recently with representatives of the Quebec government. I also listened carefully to the comments made by the chairman of the board of Hydro-Quebec, Mr. Joseph Bourbeau, when he appeared before the Committee on the Energy Legislation. Quebec has therefore stated its objections against this bill and I feel that those objections are worth considering by government members. Indeed, it is unfortunate that the Liberal members from Quebec, those self-styled champions of their fellow citizens' interests, persist in disregarding those concerns about the disastrous consequences of some provisions of the bill. For example, this bill would empower the federal government to build a hydro corridor on Quebec territory at the request of the Newfoundland government but without Quebec agreement. The Liberals may feel that they could thus settle the hydro dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland. We believe on the contrary that such action would not only go against co-operative federalism, but would only delay the resumption of negotiations between the parties involved. Obviously, such a dispute can only be settled through negotiation. Moreover, the bill gives a new regulatory power to the NEB. Quebec is concerned that such power might make it more difficult to enforce the provincial laws on environment and agricultural zoning. In his speech on second reading, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said he would respect Quebec laws. I hope then that he will support our amendment to that effect, which would give Quebec the assurance that its powers relating to conservation of the environment and farm lands will be safeguarded.

• (2030)

[English]

I apologize for my pronunciation, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Well done.

Mr. Waddell: Basically there is the issue of trying to follow what the minister said on second reading, that as far as possible he was respecting the Quebec laws on territory, on environment and on agriculture. Perhaps it does not bother anglophones that the National Energy Board has these powers, but apparently it bothers the people of Quebec. Thus, why do we not respect them? It seems to me that that would be co-operative federalism.

My other amendment deals with the matter of deleting the words "public interest" from the power of the National Energy Board. The Liberals made a major amendment in committee. They tried to please hydro by changing the act so that it could raise money and obtain export contracts to the south. Hydro felt that the wording was dangerous, that the National Energy Board could change a contract on the grounds of public convenience and necessity. The government eliminated those words, so why can it not eliminate the words "public interest"? They are of great interest to hydro as well.

I have proposed two other amendments on which I would like to speak now and perhaps shorten the debate. The bill dropped the provision in the draft bill and the National Energy Program which promised that a degree of Canadian ownership of energy companies wishing to export oil and gas would be a factor in whether or not an export licence was issued. In other words, they were to consider whether a company had Canadian ownership before it exported gas. It seems to me that this is backtracking from the National Energy Program. It is not in the bill, and I have made the appropriate amendment to include it.

My other amendment concerns the fact that the bill still allows export licences for oil and gas to run for 25 years. In view of the dismal record of the National Energy Board supply projections, we think the maximum is too high. We think ten years would be more appropriate. We still have oil contracts which we are honouring when there is a shortage of oil. I may be wrong but I think there are still some. When we have these long-term contracts and we suddenly discover that the National Energy Board made a mistake in the amount of natural gas which we have, for example, we may not want such long contracts. Therefore I made an amendment on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we reduce the length of the contracts.

I should like to put on the record a telegram which was received from British Columbia Hydro. It is dated June 10 and is addressed to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation. Since the committee has concluded its work, I thought I would read it into the record of the House of Commons. It reads:

Re: Bill C-108, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3).

British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority is greatly concerned with the provisions of this bill as they would affect the control, use and ownership of its land and other resources. I refer particularly to Section 90.1 and related sections which would authorize discriminatory treatment of interprovincial facilities and the press release which accompanies the predecessor bill entitled, "Energy Security Act" which clearly identifies British Columbia and inferentially B.C. Hydro as a reason for the legislation. There can be no justification for federal intervention and interference to require access for a private utility in one province through another province to an export market in a country which has a common boundary with both provinces or by so doing interfering in interprovincial and inter-utility transactions based upon mutual support and recognition of respective interests. Everyone should be equally concerned with the constitutional and interpretive difficulties created by the drafting device used in treating a power line as a pipeline to justify the legislation in order ostensibly to base the amendments on political precedent. British Columbia Hydro also adopts and shares the concerns of Hydro-Quebec in its submission signed by its secretary and dated 7 May 1982 directed to "clauses" (sections) 25, 13 and 10 dealing with the uncertainty this legislation will introduce into export contracting.

It was signed by R. W. Bonner, chairman of B.C. Hydro and Power Authority.

We have come full circle. We have B.C. Hydro asking why we have this bill, and we have the government saying that it is to solve the problem in western Canada. Then we have the minister coming in and saying that it will not affect Quebec and that he will respect Quebec's rights and laws. Now he is bringing in an amendment which admits that it will affect Quebec, or at least it gives the illusion to Newfoundland and Quebec that this bill will affect the status quo. That is the danger with this bill, that is the problem with it. It is a most confused piece of legislation. I know hon. members will say that it is the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who is confused, but there are many inconsistencies in the bill.

Mr. Kushner: You said it first.

Mr. Waddell: I am not confused about the bill. It is a strange bill and it has other ends in mind; it is an unnecessary bill. Why do we have Quebec ministers and Quebec MNAs visiting Ottawa? They are obviously worried about the bill. Perhaps they are grandstanding, but they seem worried about it and they seem to have made a couple of good points. This is why we offer the amendment tonight and we urge the government to support it.

In conclusion I should like to say that the people in Quebec near Labrador share many things in common with the people in Labrador. It seems to me that they are both alienated from the government in Quebec City and the government in St. John's because they are in the frontier and away from the centre. They experience ups and downs, booms and busts. They do not need a fight between Quebec and Newfoundland. They need some regional plans and some help. Representatives from Quebec have told me that there are some local programs in that province such as Reynolds Aluminium at Baie Comeau. There are regional developments but they are having problems because these are difficult times. The people in that area need some development. I think Quebec and Newfoundland would do better to get on with the job of development and to solve this particular problem. I do not think they need the federal government, least of all the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, sticking its nose into the situation. They need the federal government to stay out of it.

• (2040)

If the minister were really serious about adjourning or postponing this for six months to let the parties negotiate, he would not just make a proclamation, he would make an amendment to bring it back to Parliament so we could deal with it in Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I heard a while ago my colleague apologize for the poor quality of his French; I can assure him that if all members of the House, including those in his own party, in the official opposition and in my own party were trying as hard as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) does to learn French, Canada would be a better place to live. I suggest that there is no need for him to apologize, for he is doing just fine. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid he is extraordinarily naive about the province of Quebec and its government, because when he refers to what Quebec and Quebecers want, he does not differentiate between what Quebecers want and what the PQ government wants. But I will come back to that in a little while, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact that this is probably the last or next to last day of debate on the energy bills, I should like first of all to thank all the people who have worked on this legislation for nearly eight weeks, the members of the Official Opposition, the New Democratic Party and the government, my colleague the hon. member for Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), who devoted a lot of time and energy to this committee, and all the members of the opposition for their contribution to these eight energy bills. I should like to pay a special tribute to the chairman of the committee, who has done his utmost to ensure that the legislation was considered and returned to the House as expeditiously as possible, so that we may be able to pass these bills in early June instead of by June 30, as scheduled. Finally, I should like to pay tribute to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his officials for the work they have done during committee meetings and also for their willingness to consider the proposed amendments. During this process, Mr. Speaker, amendments by the dozens were presented in the House, including several from outside the House, I mean by organizations involved in the oil industry or by financial institutions, as well as members from both sides of the House.

As to the lobbying by the PQ government, I should like to say that these people oppose federal Bill C-108. The hon.

member for Vancouver Kingsway indicated that he had the opportunity to meet members from the PQ government this week, and also Mr. Duhaime a few weeks ago. I congratulate him, Mr. Speaker. He is certainly more lucky than we are, even if we represent the government and the majority in the House, because they never came to see us. I see that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway are having a little conversation, but I suggest that they had better listen, especially the very naive member for Vancouver-Kingsway. As for the hon. member for Joliette, everybody knows that he is a lost cause anyway.

Mr. Speaker, when representatives of the PQ government come on a pilgrimage to Ottawa, they are not coming in good faith, for if they had wanted any changes in the bill, they would not have been dealing with members of the opposition, but with members of the government. Considering that we are not permitted to say that a member of the House is a liar, Mr. Speaker, we may nevertheless say that about a member who sits elsewhere; and it is a fact that the member—

Mr. La Salle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) means well when he says that the representatives of the PQ government should have met members from the government as well as members from the opposition. I should like him to know that these representatives tried to meet the Chairman of the Liberal caucus, the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), but they were told that he was too busy to receive them.

Mr. Dawson: This is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member for Joliette is again making representations on behalf of his PQ friends. I am not surprised, but I should like to tell the hon. member for Joliette that Mr. Ouellet discussed the matter with me. In fact, I offered to meet him but Mr. Ouellet asked if it would be possible to meet us before the standing committee ended its hearings on Bill C-108. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette made a bit of a scene in committee; he should know that the hon. members who sat regularly on that committee completed their work on Thursday last, and that Mr. Ouellet did not call from Quebec until Thursday morning asking me if we could wait for them before completing the deliberations of the standing committee on the energy legislation. I am sorry but I must say to the hon. member for Joliette that I had to tell him that we should have been pleased to meet them but that unfortunately the committee would be completing its work within the hour. So as far as that meeting goes, I must say that once again the hon. member for Joliette, considering his provincial aspirations and his friendship with the provincial government, is more concerned with pleasing the Parti Québécois than fighting for the interests of his constituents.

Mr. La Salle: They asked for a meeting!

Mr. Dawson: Indeed they did, Mr. Speaker, and we agreed to meet them. They came last Tuesday, and met the hon. member for Joliette. Big deal! They met with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. What good does that do to them. Mr. Speaker? There are 74 Quebec members. We would have been pleased to meet them rather than see them make a show in the House, give press conferences and speak to reporters. They could have come and discuss with the Quebec representatives and not with the member for Joliette. They could have come and meet the 74 Quebec members. Mr. Speaker, as far as the matter is concerned, certain things must be said. The PQ members have made a big fuss over the corridor issue and for the most part it will be settled through the minister's amendment which gives them six months to negotiate, but those were not the real Quebec claims. Those claims, Mr. Speaker, among others dealt especially with clause 25 which will probably jeopardize their exports and contracts abroad. In connection with the corridor, I would like to quote Mr. Bourbeau:

[English]

"I think that you mean corridor that could be built according to this law." I will say it in French.

[Translation]

Cela ne me fait ni chaud ni froid.

Is that clear? Such is the position taken by the president of Hydro-Quebec, as opposed to that taken by the PQ MNAs. It is not the position taken by the hon. member for Joliette, obviously. But since when does anybody think the hon. member for Joliette will do differently than the Parti Québécois? Under the headline, "The Churchill Falls issue does not worry Duhaime, the newspaper La Presse published an item on May 31 in which Mr. Duhaime is reported as saying that whichever way the case goes, Quebec has nothing to worry about even if the Supreme Court of Canada rules in favour Newfoundland.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the minister and the president of Hydro-Québec say so. Of course, there are three or four PQ MNAs who want a little publicity, who want to make a show, as I said to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. But our purpose was to meet the needs of Hydro-Quebec and Quebecers, and this is why the Quebec caucus proposed changes, with the co-operation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). A second amendment has been moved this evening, and this will fully satisfy Quebecers. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to satisfy the PQ MNAs, it is a lost cause. Neither am I trying to satisfy the hon. member for Joliette, he is a lost cause. Our concern is with Quebecers, and if the PQ members really were sincere when they came here Tuesday night, they would have approached Liberal members, they would have approached one of us, we were two: the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and myself were sitting on the Committee on Energy Legislation. But they never met us. They told us: Delay the bill for us, delay the development of Canada because we, PQ MNAs are extremely concerned with the quality of life in Canada. Of course, Mr. Speaker, everyone knows this is a farce.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the corridor as such is concerned, the minister referred earlier to conditions, the impact on Trans-Alta, the fact that we are simply trying to have uniform responsibilities in respect of both pipelines and the hydro corridor, on the environmental aspect, Mr. Speaker, at the Canadian government level. I listened to the Progressive Conservative member who referred to his amendment on environment. I am looking at the Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts). Again, the federal government has absolutely no lesson to take from the Quebec government on environmental protection matters, whether Parks Canada, federal institutions under the Minister of Transport, or others. We have always respected environmental needs, and not only those of Quebec. We have much more severe restrictions because, for all practical purposes, we have no lesson to take from them.

Why an amendment to Section 25? I referred earlier to the representations made by the Quebec caucus. I also referred to the information we obtained, for instance from PASNY and the New York Hydro Power Pool, which were concerned that the export license might be withdrawn. However, further to the representations made by Mr. Bourbeau in committee, and I quote Clause 25 of Bill C-108, "Section 83 of the said Act is repealed", etc. he went on to state, we feel the phrase "public convenience and necessity" has a meaning that is difficult to measure or define, it can be interpreted in all sorts of ways. Clause 25 will complicate our export negotiations, especially excess power sales negotiations, in a situation where this is more and more a buyers' market. Mr. Speaker, the amendment put forward in committee on that aspect simply solves the problem and, for all practical purposes export licences are no more covered by the amendment. For all practical purposes, that was our objective.

• (2050)

Mr. Speaker, if we consider a little more closely the over-all question of the Quebec-Newfoundland negotiations on the development of the Lower Churchill, we find that once again the Quebec government, which for six years now has proved it is totally incapable of negotiating in good faith with anyone, has met with failure. It has proved its weakness during the constitutional negotiations. It has set aside the interests of Quebec and dwelt only on those of the Parti Québécois. It has failed in its negotiations with its civil service, and we see what such a failure is forcing them to do now, Mr. Speaker. It has failed in all its endeavours, whether interprovincial or international, over that six-year period. Once again, I feel that neither the Liberal nor the Union Nationale governments which preceded them in power have any lesson to learn from that rump of a government. Mr. Speaker, we have seen it fail in its relations with the anglophones of the province of Quebec, where once again in bad faith, instead of striving towards solutions to please the people, to achieve compromise, it acted in an arrogant fashion. We see this arrogance in the way they negotiate with the municipalities, the Quebec Urban Community, the Montreal Urban Community. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious they do not know how to negotiate in good faith.

What is important with regard to the Newfoundland issue taken as a whole, as the minister pointed out a while ago, is the fact that Quebec and Newfoundland workers want jobs and if no agreement is reached, those jobs will be lost. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, Quebec cannot afford to lose them. It is also true, with all due respect to my colleagues from Newfoundland, that their government has nothing to teach us as far as its negotiating talents are concerned. I think the Quebec government was every bit as flexible as the one in Newfoundland; unfortunately, the two governments have never been able to agree, not only with us, but amongst themselves and with their own employees.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that with the six-month extension the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has granted them, they will now manage to come to an agreement, because the major concern here is not the interests of the Parti Québécois, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Joliette would have us believe nor the three or four members who came to Ottawa on a bit of a pilgrimage to visit with them, but rather the interests of Quebecers in this area, Mr. Speaker, as in all other areas, and the fact that those interests are best served by negotiating an agreement in good faith, and not by means of petty demagoguery.

[English]

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is the first time I have heard applause from the other side for this side, and I turned to find out that it was the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Lalonde: Infiltration.

Mr. Fennell: I hope the hon. minister listens to what I have to say. First of all, I would like to point out that it was in second reading that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) brought in an amendment for a six months' delay respecting the interprovincial power lines. That is on the record. No one can deny that. The next point I will be proving to the minister is that he had to make this change, this delay, and that he may have to make some more changes arising from what I am going to bring forward, because he must get provincial agreement.

Our amendment, which refers to subsection 39(2) of the NEB, would be amended by clause 11, which was clause 10 in the first reading, giving powers over the environmental and safety concerns, public and construction workers, for oil and gas lines. Section 41 extends this to international power lines and, by clause 19.1, would include the interprovincial power lines.

Hydro Quebec expected conflict between provincial standards and those standards to be set by the National Energy Board. Under this act, the provinces have extreme concern over the National Energy Board standards versus their own standards. Our amendment would have required the National Energy Board, when formulating regulations under subsection 39(2), to take into account any relevant provincial regulations or law. That is what we are discussing.

This amendment must be considered in the light of the means by which the NEB will exercise its new-found authority. Its main concern is environmental. The electrical fields omitted from power lines and how they affect car radios when cars travel under them should be considered, as an example. The National Energy Board has long been exercising a passive role in this area. International power lines have always been assessed by the National Energy Board experts to see if they meet prevailing standards. The problem is that the National Energy Board did not foresee the need to hire any new people for its new, over-all responsibility in the area of construction safety where our concern is being raised.

The National Energy Board has given no thought as to how it will implement and enforce its standards. It is hiring no additional people. It has taken all these new power lines and the responsibility for them. It does not see the requirement to hire any more people at this time. Even today, it does not employ any construction safety people. The provinces have had that jurisdiction until now. They will be able to apply existing standards, safety equipment and construction procedures, but they do not have the facilities to enforce these standards.

Once this bill has passed into law, the provincial authorities will have absolutely no jurisdiction. They will have no jurisdiction over the construction site of international and interprovincial power lines. At that point there will be an enforcement vacuum. This is something that we raised in committee. We tried to bring it to their attention, but we did not get down to the final point because the government kept ducking around it.

What is happening in this bill is exactly what happened in 1976 when the government put through the Atomic Energy Control Act. The federal government's responsibility was for the health of Atomic Energy workers, but no one considered the uranium miners. The minister will be aware of that. Those people were floating through the gaps in the floorboards. No one looked after them until, finally, the Atomic Energy Commission set the standards and reached an agreement with the provincial governments which enforced those standards. The National Energy Board has admitted that it did not take this into consideration when drafting the bill. It is a mistake and must be changed.

That brings me back to the first point I was making, that it needs those six months to clean up the mistakes and to sit down with the provincial governments and come to some understanding. This bill is another example of the federal government taking more and more power and intruding, more and more, into provincial rights. In this case, Mr. Speaker, they have left the construction workers at bay with no protection from anybody. They have made a serious mistake in this bill and they must do something about it. The National Energy Board should already have the know-how today before this bill is passed, if they are going to enforce on-site standards. They do not have anyone employed to protect the safety of the workers; they have given no thought to the workers.

• (2100)

This is pretty common with all Liberal legislation. They do not care about the Canadian workers. This National Energy Program has put many of them out of work. Now they are bringing in legislation that will not protect the workers, and the National Energy Board does not have one person available today to look after that problem. The federal government has avoided this because it did not want confrontation with the provinces. Well, Mr. Speaker, they are going to have their fair share of confrontation with the provinces. They have made the mistake and they have left the employees of the provincial Crown corporations unprotected.

They could have had their agreement a long time ago, if this minister had had any belief in co-operation. They could have had the agreement with all the provinces, but the minister is bullying this bill through. It may be that it is his swan song, Mr. Speaker, but when he leaves I hope he remembers that all the electrical construction workers are totally unprotected by this bill. I will be supporting this, and I plead with the other side to support our amendment. I think it is very important. I believe that we must respect the provincial authorities, we must respect their rights, and I urge the hon. members opposite when we vote on this amendment to vote with us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not be taking up too much time of the House.

An hon. Member: That is long enough.

Mr. Andre: I guess that shows that my remarks get through.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: The amendment in Motion No. 1 that we have proposed at this stage of the game is asking, in a sense, that the law reflect the reality, because the reality is that federal-provincial agreement is necessary to accomplish anything. In the last analysis, it really does not matter who has the upper hand in a legal constitutional sense, because both levels of government have within their capability the legal authority, the constitutional authority, to frustrate the other level of government, if that becomes the course of action that is decided on. Therefore, what we suggest by this motion is that when the federal government makes orders in council in regard to the provisions of this act, they be subject to provincial laws and regulations.

It is really asking that the law reflect the reality of Canada. I think that having the law reflect that reality and having this House express that opinion will contribute to better harmony between the two levels of government, better responsiveness by the government to the needs of Canadians and better government for Canadians.

The minister proposed a couple of amendments, one of which is fairly technical. One relates to a six months' hoist. That one is exactly the same as the amendment our party proposed on second reading, which the Liberals voted against. I am pleased to see that they can learn, albeit slowly, and have come around to recognize the wisdom of putting in at this point in time that period of six months during which it is hoped that sincere negotiations can occur between the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland and that that question of the Labrador power can be resolved in the way things must be resolved in this country—by way of agreement and not by the use of legal muscle, or electoral muscle, or otherwise.

The great preponderance of concern about this bill has dealt with the question of electrical power transmission, the export of electrical power and so on. That has been the issue which has dominated the public and private debate. There has been the expression in the House and elsewhere that the issue was one of the province of Newfoundland wanting a corridor across Quebec so that they could export Labrador power, and the province of Quebec resisting that. That really is not the truth, Mr. Speaker. The reality is otherwise. I have in my hand a copy of a telegram from British Columbia Hydro, which says that the British Columbia Hydro Power Authority is greatly concerned and objects to the provisions of this bill.

We had before the committee, tabled with the committee, a letter from the government of New Brunswick, indicating that the government of New Brunswick is concerned and opposed to this bill. We had representations—

Mr. Lalonde: Not from the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Andre: —from Hydro Quebec expressing their concern. So we have a situation where we have the government of Quebec, yes; the government of British Columbia, yes; the government of New Brunswick, yes; all opposed to this bill. So it is simple minded, and I do not think it contributes to better understanding, to say that somehow this bill has to do on the electrical side exclusively with this Quebec-Newfoundland problem, and that the government is trying to respond to one of the legitimate concerns of the Province of Newfoundland in its attempts to develop its hydro-electric potential.

In all of this debate about the electrical power aspects of this bill people have missed the fact that this bill also affects the oil and gas industry very substantially. There are some provisions in this bill which, in my view, are undesirable, if not offensive.

Clause No. 17 in the bill as reported by the committee indicates that decisions of the National Energy Board under Sections 52, 53 and 54 to change the tolls or pipeline tariffs can no longer be appealed to the federal court. Up to now, when the National Energy Board made decisions respecting the tolls that a pipeline may charge for transportation of its gas or oil, there was the ability to appeal the decisions to the federal court as part of national judicial system of the country. This bill would amend that and remove that right of appeal. Why, Mr. Speaker? We never received any adequate reason for that. Of course, if you are big brother, it is nice to know that your decisions are final and that no one can appeal your decisions to another body and have them overturned.

Clause No. 18 would allow the National Energy Board to order a pipeline or gas distributor to transport someone's gas on a common-carrier basis. That could be a desirable thing, but it could be abused, Mr. Speaker. There are situations where, because of the way the legislation is drawn, a municipal distribution company, for example, could find itself in the position of being ordered to transport someone's gas, to its own detriment. One can envision a large industrial consumer pruchasing its gas supplies directly from a gas producing company and having the National Energy Board order a distributor to distribute it. That could be very detrimental to the distribution company, other consumers and so forth. There should be some better definition of that part of those changes. It is not there.

• (2110)

Clause 26 of this bill contains provisions which can only be described as exceedingly offensive. The original bill given first reading in this House on April 7 of this year stated in Clause 25 that it would amend Section 84 of the old National Energy Board Act. Clause 25 says:

> Subject to subsection (2) and the regulations, the Board may by order, with the approval of the Governor in Council, revoke or suspend a licence if
>
> (a) any term or condition thereof has not been complied with or has been contravened; or
>
> (b) in the opinion of the Board, the public convenience and necessity so requires.

This bill says that the governor in council can in fact cancel an export permit when the public convenience makes it necessary. What is the public convenience?

Mr. Deans: What is it?

Mr. Andre: That is going to be defined by—

Mr. Deans: I would like to know because I do not know. Nobody does.

Mr. Andre: That is right, nobody does. The public convenience will be defined by the minister and his minions. It can mean whatever they want it to mean. Understandably, there was a great deal of concern expressed about that provision that a contract could be cancelled. A company could get a contract to export some electricity or some natural gas and invest, these days, billions of dollars on the facilities to transport those energy commodities and then find that that export contract could be cancelled when the public convenience dictates. How can a company justify that kind of expenditure when a contract can be cancelled on the basis of what the minister and his minions decides is the public convenience? Ontario Hydro, Hydro-Quebec, the New Brunswick hydro utility company, the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada all said this was a terrible provision. Showing how responsive it was, the Liberal Government of Canada amended that provision to read:

—in the case of a licence, other than a licence for the exportation of power, the Board is of the opinion that the public convenience and necessity so requires.

The government exempted electrical power. On the one hand that, frankly, is an example of a responsive government. It is an example of another success as a result of the bell-ringing incident. If we had not had separate bills and opportunities for these utilities to make their views known in the committees, we would not have this improvement, which certainly is an improvement for electrical utilities. However, on the other hand, it is offensive, because it does not exclude natural gas. For goodness' sake, why in blazes can this government not be as responsive to the concerns of western Canadian gas producers as it is to central Canadian electricity producers? That is not to criticize the government for being responsive to the power utilities. That is an example of good government, but if we are to keep this blooming country together, and if this government is to be a national government for the whole nation—all of it from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island—at some point in time it must start to be as concerned about the problems and concerns of natural gas producers in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan as it is about electricity producers in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick. We applaud the change but for goodness' sake why could the change not reflect the fact that this is the Government of Canada, all of Canada and not just central Canada or eastern Canada?

Clause 27 would allow the governor in council—again the minister and his minions—to set the prices for oil and gas exports. Again, how is the producer going to be able to negotiate an export sale of gas or oil when the governor in council can set the price? The United States has a deregulated oil and gas industry.

Mr. Lalonde: Not gas.

Mr. Andre: Not gas yet. I am sorry. The minister is right, but oil is certainly deregulated, and soon gas will be. That means there is a marketplace. The price a producer can get for what he has to sell is the market price.

Mr. Lewis: And it is getting lower.

Mr. Andre: Incidentally, it is coming down, while ours is going up.

Mr. Lalonde: Not gas.

Mr. Andre: We will see. We will see. There is a marketplace. The price at which a commodity can be sold is the market price, so why in blazes put into law that the governor in council or the cabinet—the minister and his minions—will set the price? They might as well put it into law that the governor in council has the right to order that there shall be no rain on weekends. That would be a nice law and we would all approve, but the government is not capable of doing that. It is not capable of doing this either, but it can frighten potential buyers and make it more difficult for potential sellers. Of course, that is what the government is doing.

Clause 29 is even better in terms of big brother gone mad. This clause would set up a whole new part to the National Energy Board Act which would give the National Energy Board the right to regulate all aspects of interprovincial oil and gas trade. Since 1980 and 1981 there have been various spokesmen for the government saying we have to change the Constitution of Canada so that we are at least a common market; if it is nothing else, Canada at least has to be a common market. No one argues about that. We should be a common market, but if we are a common market, then why in blazes do we have to have big brother regulating interprovincial trade in oil and gas through the National Energy Board? Is it trade when Saskatchewan Power buys gas from Alberta, or is that just persons in the same common market doing business with each other in the normal way? Is big brother going to treat Canada as some sort of collection of ten independent states which are to be regulated by the National Energy Board? Why is that in there? Why in blazes do we do that? The government will never admit it, but I think it has to do with federal-provincial conflicts. Big brother—the federal government—would like to have the legal authority to say to any province: "By cracky, if you want to sell your gas or your oil or if you want to buy some gas or oil, you are going to have to come through us." The federal government wants to control that. It wants to be in control of all aspects of interprovincial trade. That is offensive to my definition of Canada. That is offensive to any reasonable definition of Canada.

• (2120)

Hon. members opposite are getting a little bit impatient. I recognize that it is not their role to read and understand the legislation before they cast a vote. That would be an intolerable burden for backbenchers of the Liberal Party.

If I might be permitted an aside, Mr. Speaker, it is for that reason that we will probably never see electronic voting in this House so long as that party is in power. Could you imagine the chaos if hon. members opposite had to come up and vote electronically all by themselves without the example of their leader saying, "This is what to do; follow me."? They would have to think whether to vote for or against a particular motion. The situation would be chaotic if backbenchers opposite had to come here and listen to speeches now and again to know what is going on. That is, those who can read might have to do that.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that through the amendment the government brought in tonight—which was our amendment on second reading—calling for a six months' hoist it shows responsiveness by exempting electrical power from the cancellation of contracts on the basis of public convenience. However, by failing to show the same responsiveness to the concerns of oil and gas producers it has shown it is still not a Government of Canada in a complete sense, but a government of a very narrow part of Canada.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a statement that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) made. He spoke about 25-year licences for the export of oil. If he knew anything about the industry he would know that oil is sold on a monthly nomination basis and not by 25-year contracts. I keep trying to educate him. He is not in the House at the moment but I will keep trying and perhaps eventually he will learn a little bit about this part of our economy.

We will support the government's amendment, Mr. Speaker, and will look for a vote on our amendment. In total, although the bill is somewhat improved, it is still not sufficiently improved to justify our voting for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has motions Nos. 1 through 7 in hand. I will watch in the event that any hon. member wishes to speak on a particular motion. The question is on Motion No. 1. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on Motion No. 2. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is lost on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 3. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 4. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 5. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 6. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on Motion No. 7. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Lalonde) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The vote on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Andre) and the deferred divisions will be taken presently.

Call in the members.

The House divided on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Andre) which was negatived on the following division:

● (2130)

(Division No. 198)

YEAS

Messrs.

Althouse	Blaikie	Cooper
Andre	Cardiff	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Benjamin	Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Darling
Blackburn
Deans	Jarvis	Murphy
Epp	Keeper	Nielsen
Fennell	Kushner	Oberle
Forrestall	La Salle	Ogle
Fretz	Lawrence	Parker
Friesen	Lewis	Patterson
Gurbin	Lewycky	Riis
Gustafson	MacDonald (Miss)	Schellenberger
Halliday	MacKay	Shields
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)	Malone	Skelly
	Mazankowski	Stevens
Hargrave	McKnight	Taylor
Heap	McLean	Towers
Hnatyshyn	Miller	Wilson
Hovdebo	Mitchell (Mrs.)	Young—55.
Huntington

NAYS

Messrs.

Allmand	Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Lapointe (Charlevoix)
Appolloni (Mrs.)	Dubois	LeBlanc
Axworthy	Duclos	Leduc
Bachand	Dupont	Lefebvre
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Dupras	Loiselle
Beauchamp-Niquet (Mrs.)	Erola (Mrs.)	Lumley
Bégin (Miss)	Ethier	MacBain
Berger	Evans	MacEachen
Blais	Ferguson	Mackasey
Blaker	Fisher	MacLaren
Bloomfield	Fleming	MacLellan
Bockstael	Flis	Malépart
Bossy	Foster	Maltais
Breau	Fox	Massé
Burghardt	Francis	McCauley
Bussières	Gauthier	McRae
Caccia	Gendron	Nicholson (Miss)
Campbell (Miss) (South West Nova)	Gingras	Olivier
	Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau)	Ostiguy
Campbell (Cardigan)	Gourde (Lévis)	Ouellet
Chénier	Gray	Penner
Chrétien	Guilbault	Pepin
Collenette	Harquail	Peterson
Comtois	Henderson	Pinard
Corbin	Herbert	Portelance
Corriveau	Hervieux-Payette (Mrs.)	Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)
Cosgrove	Hopkins	Roberts
Côté (Mrs.)	Hudecki	Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore)
Cousineau	Irwin	Rompkey
Cyr	Isabelle	Rooney
Daudlin	Johnston	Rossi
Dawson	Kaplan	Savard
De Bané	Kelly	Schroder
de Corneille	Killens (Mrs.)	Simmons
Demers	Lachance	Smith
Deniger	Lajoie	Tessier
Dingwall	Lalonde	Tobin
Dion	Landers	Tousignant
Dionne (Chicoutimi)	Lang	Turner
	Laniel	Veillette
	Lapierre	Watson
		Weatherhead
		Whelan
		Yanakis—123.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Now!

Madam Speaker: By unanimous consent, now.

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members. Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 199)

YEAS

Messrs.

Allmand	Daudlin	Guilbault
Appolloni	Dawson	Harquail
(Mrs.)	De Bané	Henderson
Axworthy	de Corneille	Herbert
Bachand	Demers	Hervieux-Payette
Baker	Deniger	(Mrs.)
(Gander-Twillingate)	Dingwall	Hopkins
Beauchamp-Niquet	Dion	Hudecki
(Mrs.)	Dionne	Irwin
Bégin (Miss)	(Chicoutimi)	Isabelle
Berger	Dionne	Johnston
Blais	(Northumberland-	Kaplan
Blaker	Miramichi)	Kelly
Bloomfield	Dubois	Killens (Mrs.)
Bockstael	Duclos	Lachance
Bossy	Dupont	Lajoie
Breau	Dupras	Lalonde
Burghardt	Erola (Mrs.)	Landers
Bussières	Ethier	Lang
Caccia	Evans	Laniel
Campbell	Ferguson	Lapierre
(Miss)	Fisher	Lapointe
(South West Nova)	Fleming	(Charlevoix)
Campbell	Flis	LeBlanc
(Cardigan)	Foster	Leduc
Chénier	Fox	Lefebvre
Chrétien	Francis	Loiselle
Collenette	Gauthier	Lumley
Comtois	Gendron	MacBain
Corbin	Gingras	MacEachen
Corriveau	Gourd	Mackasey
Cosgrove	(Argenteuil-Papineau)	MacLaren
Côté (Mrs.)	Gourde	MacLellan
Cousineau	(Lévis)	Malépart
Cyr	Gray	Maltais
Massé	Pinard	Schroder
McCauley	Portelance	Simmons
McRae	Reid	Smith
Nicholson	(Kenora-Rainy River)	Tessier
(Miss)	Roberts	Tobin
Olivier	Robinson	Tousignant
Ostiguy	(Etobicoke-Lakeshore)	Turner
Ouellet	Rompkey	Veillette
Penner	Rooney	Watson
Pepin	Rossi	Weatherhead
Peterson	Savard	Whelan
		Yanakis—123.

NAYS

Messrs.

Althouse	Hamilton	McKnight
Andre	(Qu'Appelle-Moose	McLean
Benjamin	Mountain)	Miller
Blackburn	Hargrave	Mitchell
Blaikie	Heap	(Mrs.)
Cardiff	Hnatyshyn	Murphy
Clarke	Hovdebo	Nielsen
(Vancouver Quadra)	Huntington	Oberle
Cooper	Jarvis	Ogle
Crosbie	Keeper	Parker
(St. John's West)	Kushner	Patterson
Darling	La Salle	Riis
Deans	Lawrence	Schellenberger
Epp	Lewis	Shields
Fennell	Lewycky	Skelly
Fretz	MacDonald	Stevens
Friesen	(Miss)	Taylor
Gurbin	MacKay	Towers
Gustafson	Malone	Wilson
Halliday	Mazankowski	Young—54.

[Editor's Note: For correction of Divisions Nos. 198 and 199 see page 18385 of June 11, 1982.]

• (2220)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege. Because of the importance of this bill to Atlantic Canada and the fact that it deals with the corridor it had been my intention—and I withdraw that intention—to vote in favour of this measure, not against it. I was not recognized, and I simply want to record the fact that I am in the chamber to speak out for Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, the same situation pertains to me as that which my colleague just expressed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, my vote was properly recorded against this abominable piece of legislation.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—TASK FORCE REPORT ON PAYMENT OF GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 31 last, I directed a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove). If you remember, my question dealt with Bill C-4, the Municipal Grants Act, 1980.

In evidence brought before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, it had been suggested that the minister set up a task force whose reference would be to consider the key factors having an impact on municipal budgets, especially as far as the payment of grants in lieu of taxes was concerned. The minister had undertaken to submit to a task force the issue of the right of appeal in cases of differences of opinions on the real property assessment. In addition, an important matter, the use of the minister's discretionary power was to be considered by the task force chaired by Mr. Pollack. We know that in several clauses of Bill C-4, especially in Section 3, it is provided that the minister will have an absolute discretionary power. This, according to several witnesses heard before the committee, would give rise to some considerable problems with respect to municipal revenues.

• (2225)

Mr. Speaker, in almost all Canadian municipalities, we find several buildings for which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) pays grants in lieu of taxes. It can be easily understood under the present circumstances that those municipalities whose budgets are more restricted are especially sensitive about that issue. For some of them, a relatively substantial part of their budget is based on those grants and it seems essential that a consultation or appeal process in case of differences of opinions be set up to provide them with some assistance.

Besides, we have seen this week, Mr. Speaker, that economic matters were the main concern of municipalities. Indeed, everyone knows that the Canadian Federation of Municipalities held its 45th convention right here in Ottawa and that the theme of the convention was precisely "The municipalities and the economy". Various economic themes were discussed during the convention, including the financial imputability of municipalities, the drawing up of municipal budgets, housing, employment and energy conservation as well as technological change.

That is why, considering the concerns of the municipalities, I asked the minister last week, before the convention was held, whether the task force had made its final report and whether the minister would table or make public, before the convention in Ottawa this week, what seemed to me as being the rather significant findings of that report. The minister replied that indeed the task force had completed its work and that he was looking into the recommendations. Since then, he has said that the report will be made public in the near future.

As the committee has already completed its work, if the minister could table the report shortly, the participants to this convention would have been able to read this report and return to their respective regions to study its content. Since the representations made by the municipalities to the Pollack committee dealt with increased consultation in the decision-making process on matters concerning them, I suggest the minister would be well advised to let them express their views on the final recommendations of the task force before they are implemented. That is why I urge the minister to make public this report which is of tremendous importance for municipalities as soon as possible. This would contribute to a healthy dialogue between the parties and result in a happy agreement between the federal government and the municipalities concerned.

• (2230)

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I shall, if I may, congratulate my hon. colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on his foresight in raising this very important matter of grants in lieu of taxes. I shall now take this opportunity to provide a detailed answer to the question he put on May 31.

During the hearings held by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works early in 1980, before the new Municipal Grants Act was passed, many representatives from the provinces, municipalities and various associations submitted briefs criticizing the absence of an appeal procedure—as the hon. member mentioned—which would make it possible to resolve differences of opinion, and also the minister's discretionary powers. At his suggestion, the minister set up a task force that would analyse the situation and submit a report to the minister. The task force, chaired by Mr. Isidore Pollack of Quebec City, had a work plan which included the following elements: a documentary research program on key factors affecting grants to municipalities, the development of various possible appeal procedures, an intensive program of field trips including meetings with recipients of grants and evaluating authorities, and finally, the drafting of a report to be submitted.

I have been informed that the task force has completed its mission and will submit its final report to the minister within the next few days. As the minister noted in the House on May 31, he will make this report available to members of the Standing Committee in due time. However, I can say at once that this report will probably recommend, subject to certain provincial mechanisms, the setting up of some type of a review board to which the recipients of grants, including municipalities, will be able to submit their case. This board will then make recommendations to the minister.

According to information available to me, the Pollack Report will be substantial. I have to hurry, Mr. Speaker, since it is getting late. This report will deal with this issue and other related matters in detail and will provide all the facts, all the motives and every possible alternative. As I have already mentioned, this report will be made available to the members of the Standing Committee, where it can be the subject of an in-depth examination. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in my opinion, this is an excellent initiative on the part of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and I am convinced that the speedy action taken by our Department will meet with his approval.

[English]

INDUSTRY—QUALITY OF RAILS PRODUCED BY SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION. (B) IMPORTATION OF RAILS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is very difficult to get any degree of accurate information around this place concerning matters involving transport. We have seen this with respect to Mirabel and with respect to a number of issues, but the one I wish to discuss tonight is the situation involving orders for the Sydney Steel Corporation in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

On May 11, I attempted to raise some questions in the House. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in his usual way, seemed to, as Allan Fotheringham would say, "fuzzify the modification". First, the minister said quite clearly that there was a problem with Sydney Steel as far as the quality of the rails was concerned. When outside of the House he said that, of course it was a mistake. There was nothing wrong with the rails. What has happened recently is that the people of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia are getting terribly concerned at what precisely is going on for the future of this vital regional industry. It is quite clear there is a certain amount of responsibility upon the government, whether it is on the basis of regional industrial expansion or whether it is on the basis of simply good transportation policy, to make certain that an institution, which is what Sydney Steel is, that over the years has received so much help and assistance from various political parties and levels of government is maintained in a reasonable way so that the 2,000 people who reside in that area can continue to earn a decent living.

The impression has been given, whether rightly or wrongly, by certain members and by the minister that indeed the matter is under control and that there is an order imminent for SYSCO from the CNR. I learned, much to my shock today, in the Standing Committee on Transport when I had a chance to speak and question directly the chief executive officer of the CNR, that, despite the impression that has been left in certain quarters, the Minister of Transport has not, and I repeat, has not in any way given a direct order or a directive to tell CNR to buy any amount of rails whatsoever from Sydney Steel. I think it is time this was clearly put on the record, and that is why I am doing this tonight.

In answer to his own colleague on June 7, 1982, the minister indicated, in his own inimitable style, that a contract is a contract is a contract. It reminds me of some of the statements he made about Mirabel. He cannot make a decision there either. The problem is that he wants to be all things to all people. He is sort of a parliamentary push me-pull me. He wants everyone to love him and to think he is great, but he never makes a decision. As far as Sydney, Nova Scotia, is concerned, there are many people—municipal leaders and ordinary working people—who are tired of misinformation. On June 7 he said that a contract is a contract is a contract, but that having made a commitment he was willing to press CN to honour it.

• (2235)

I found out in the Standing Committee on Transport today that he has not done a damn thing. He has not said a word to top management of CN. CN used to advertise itself as a business as well as a responsibility. I have no quarrel with that at all. If CN wants to run a hard-nosed business operation, that is fine. But it is a Crown corporation, it is ostensibly owned by the people of Canada, and it is controlled by the government. The Minister of Transport has the authority, as Dr. LeClair conceded today, to order CN to do something, and CN will do it.

The point is that the minister has not yet done a damn thing as I said, and an impression has been created in the House and in the province of Nova Scotia that something is being done. I fail to see why in the past it was necessary to import rail from outside of Canada when Sydney Steel Corporation had the capacity to do it. I fail to see why at the present time it is urgent that about 50,000 tonnes of rail be ordered from Algoma. I cannot understand that either.

I cannot understand why there is not some co-ordination between the Department of Transport and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, or whatever is the amalgam of these two hybrids now that we are rid of DREE. I cannot understand why the government will not take some step or why there is no co-ordination. I remember when a former minister of transport, now the distinguished Speaker in the other place, used to get headlines from time to time by saying, "Transportation is a component of regional development." Now we have a situation where a Crown corporation, which is receiving about $100 million in aid from the federal government, is being hung out to dry because the government would not spend $1.4 million and use its influence to ensure that some rails are purchased from that corporation.

Some $1.3 billion has been guaranteed to Canadair by the government to take the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce off the hook and so Russ Harrison can sleep nights; some $400 million is involved in a subsidy to Bombardier so that it can make railway cars to export, and that is fine with me; about $400 or $500 million is guaranteed to Massey-Ferguson, that great non-winner; but it is not possible for the Minister of Transport to make available $1.4 million, to use a figure which the minister himself used in the House of Commons, to guarantee the survival of about 2,000 people in Cape Breton, their jobs and their livelihoods.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just last Saturday I personally visited Sydney and, therefore, I know how important this issue is to the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and his constituents.

Indeed the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) made reference at the time of the hon. member's question to problems encountered by CN with respect to the capabilities of Sydney Steel Corporation to produce rail which would meet the requirements of CN. But the hon. member was present at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport where he heard from the CN president himself who confirmed that yes, there is a contract for 88,000 tonnes of steel. But he did make it very clear that in that contract is included soft rail, hard 136 rail and the alloy type of rail.

• (2240)

There have been discussions between CN and Sysco on this matter as recently as today. These discussions are continuing. We all hope that the problem can be satisfactorily resolved. I am also pleased to report on behalf of the minister that the government of Nova Scotia has agreed, by a telex yesterday, to meet the federal government's offer to pay half of the $1.4 million cost of advancing the 1982-83 rail order by two months ahead of the time when the shipment would normally be required by CN. I think that this is welcome news.

I would also like to indicate to the House that, as confirmed yesterday in the other place, workers who were laid off at the SYSCO plant, will, indeed, receive unemployment insurance benefits in accordance with applicable regulations.

I thank the hon. member for Central Nova for giving me the opportunity of bringing the House up to date on this important issue. I commend him, as well as the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), and the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) for their constant interest and intervention in this matter.

ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—COLLECTION OF TAX—(B) CANADIAN OWNERSHIP CHARGE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 I received a letter from Mr. Reynolds of Surrey. He says the following:

> You may not have had time to look at your personal hydro bills over the past nine or ten months, but they must be similar to mine as we both live in Surrey, although I do pay my hydro bills on an equal payment installation to spread the load and you may not.
>
> Please peruse the attached copies of three of my hydro bills from June 81 to April 82 ("June, $45.00, September $66.00 and now May will be $72.00, a 50 per cent increase in ten months"), whereas, my annual negotiated settlement ranges from 8 per cent to 12 per cent last year, over the past few years.
>
> My hydro bills may be low compared to some, but I have spent considerable monies on insulation and doublepane windows and I do not qualify for CHIP.
>
> This hydro bill, along with the telephone increase, the car/gas increase which is ridiculous and the general increase in all items especially food is beginning to break the camel's back. What you can do about it, I don't know but someone has got to do something pretty soon.

The taxes he is referring to are the federal excise tax and the Canadian ownership tax. The first problem with the Canadian ownership tax is the accumulated squeeze of human misery that that tax, along with other federal taxes, is weighing down on the Canadian taxpayers.

It is because of that letter and others like that, and remarks made in the House on the evening of May 16 by one of the government backbenchers regarding the Canadian ownership charge, that I raised the questions on May 17 with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). At that time I asked:

> Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last Thursday, here in the House, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex indicated that while the government is collecting the Canadian ownership charge to pay for Petrofina, it might well continue to collect that tax even after Petrofina has been paid for. Could the minister tell the House if that is indeed government policy to collect that tax after Petrofina has been paid for in order to pay the purchase of other companies it wants to take over, as the hon. member suggested might be the case?

That was the question. The minister's reply was:

> —that is obviously a question which the government will have to decide when the time comes.
>
> This is not a matter which is being considered at the present time.

We do have some slightly contradictory statements between that of the backbencher, who is a former parliamentary secretary, and that of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What is common to the two answers, however, is the fact that the government is not ruling out the possibility that the Canadian ownership charge could well be collected beyond the time which the government has paid for Petrofina in full. It does remind one of that temporary tax which was placed on the backs of Canadians during the First World War. It was known as the income tax, which was also a temporary tax. All of us know how temporary that is.

It is that accumulation of taxes which loads on to the backs of Canadians the kind of human misery that is killing them. When the takeover of Petrofina was announced, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the purchase may have to be made by the Canadian ownership charge, but no figures were given. Mr. Hopper of Petro-Canada said the whole deal would be financed out of taxes. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources also said that the deal would be financed over 25 months. But when the company is paid for, the average energy consumer will have paid $130, and all of those dollars will have flooded the country and have gone back overseas to Europe. They will have done nothing for Canadian self-sufficiency, they will have done nothing to increase our energy security, but they will have continued to increase the taxes on the backs of Canadians.

• (2245)

The second part that is offensive about all of this taxation is that the government has no mandate for it. All of us clearly remember the election campaign of 1979-80 when the Liberals strenuously campaigned on the commitment that they would not increase taxes on gasoline by more than 12 cents or 14 cents, and certainly under 18 cents. The Canadian ownership charge increases the tax on that alone by 4.5 cents per gallon of gas, and the total has been something like 60 cents already. I find it repugnant that the government will campaign on one issue and then assume that the elections it has won on that one issue gives it a mandate to lead in any direction that it wants to lead.

The third problem rises out of the question that I placed before the minister. What are the government's intentions with regard to the future of the Canadian ownership tax which is being loaded on to the back of the consumer for a very sterile investment? What is the future of that? The minister has not been clear in the House as to his intentions. Is he planning to continue that tax beyond next fall when Petrofina will be paid for? Will he continue collecting that tax? Can we have an assurance tonight that when Petrofina is paid for, the Canadian taxpayers will not be saddled with a continuation of that particular tax in order to make up a shortfall incurred and caused by deficiencies in other departments, but, rather, that that tax will be taken off so that there can be some relief for the Canadian taxpayer? Does the parliamentary secretary have an answer for my constituents tonight, and all other Canadians who are incensed at the imposition of a tax for which the government had absolutely no mandate?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to be able to conclude this evening with a few remarks in answer to the questions raised by the hon. member. The first part of the hon. member's question, relative to the continued collection of the Canadian ownership charge in order to finance new acquisitions once Petrofina has been paid for, is obviously one which cannot be answered at the present time. When initially responding to this question during the question period, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stated, "The government is not currently considering such policy and it is a matter which will have to be dealt with at the appropriate time".

With reference to the second part of the question as to whether we can afford to Canadianize the oil and gas industry, I think the question ought to be rephrased and should read, "Can we afford not to Canadianize the oil and gas industry?" That is the substantive and, indeed, crucial question.

May I take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to remind the hon. member of the Canadianization goals as defined in the National Energy Program. One of the goals is an increase in the oil and gas sector owned by the Government of Canada. The National Energy Program also says that the Government of Canada intends to acquire several of the large oil and gas firms. To finance a company acquisition, a special charge, which the hon. member has referred to, the Canadian ownership special charge, is levied on all oil and gas consumption in Canada. The proceeds of this charge are placed to the Canadian ownership account, which is a non-budgetary trust account.

I might add that this particular piece of legislation was thoroughly reviewed before the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, when Members of Parliament from all parties had an opportunity to question the government and the officials as to the intent of that particular account.

The Canadian Ownership Account was designed to ensure that the government's program of increasing public sector ownership would be self-financing. By imposing the Canadian ownership special charge as a means of financing public acquisitions, there is no drain on the general revenue fund. Canadians, the beneficiairies of the acquisition program, will be paying for the acquisitions through a special tax on their oil and gas purchases. The Canadian ownership account has already been used by the Government of Canada to finance the Petrofina acquisition.

I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by reiterating that the government is not in a position at this time to state very clearly whether or not further acquisitions will be made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. This House is now adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow morning.

At 10.51 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 11, 1982

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

INEQUALITY OF AVERAGE INCOMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing urgency, under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Figures released this week by Statistics Canada show that the average income for women in 1980, the last year for which reports are available, was only half that earned by men. This situation is grossly unfair in a country which recently adopted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms guaranteeing equality for men and women. To ensure that women have equality in fact and not just in theory, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House urge governments, business and labour unions to recognize that true equality for women will only come about when there is true equality in the workplace, and that immediate steps be taken to redress the inequity that presently exists where the average income of women is only half that of men.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the question of equality for women in this country is one which surely speaks to every Canadian who feels that all individuals in this country should have the opportunity to make full lives for themselves. They should have that opportunity whether they live in the eastern part of the country, the central part, the western part, the northern part, whether they be men or whether they be women. There should be equality for every person to carry out his or her full development. This equality does not exist at the present time for almost half the population. In 1980, the latest year for which we have statistics from Statistics Canada, the average income for women was only $8,200 compared to $16,700 for men. This inequity is something which all of us as legislators should work together to remove.

I urge upon all members of the House that they appeal to governments, to businesses, both large and small and to labour unions right across the country to tackle this situation as an immediate priority so that this inequity could be redressed, without saying redress is something that has to come about in 1990, or the year 2000, or some long way down the road. It should be an immediate priority now for a country which sees itself as civilized, humane, and enlightened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I agree completely with what the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has said. But I would go even further and suggest that society's attitudes be examined in this country. We should look at our system of education and the way we treat each other as human beings.

I suggest that hon. members of this House take a good look at one of the most recent reports put out by the Science Council of Canada called "Who turns the wheel?" It takes a very close look at what is happening to women in this country, how they are educated and how their attitudes are shaped at a very early stage in life. Though the hon. member is quite right in saying that we must address the problems that exist in the workplace today, we must address our attitudes immediately to see that those attitudes are erased and changed so that we can look forward to a society in which men and women are indeed equal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, clearly the fact that women earn only half of what men earn in our society is totally unacceptable. The fact that this condition continues shows the inadequacies of policies that have been used to attack this problem to date.

It is time now to look for some new and effective measures, including the use of contract compliance and mandatory affirmative action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

S.O. 43

• (1110)

INDIAN AFFAIRS

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDING FOR NATIVE PEOPLE IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the estimates approved recently in the House allocate funds for programs and services to the native people of Newfoundland, and realizing that these funds have not yet been received by the rightful recipients, and that these people are now at the end of their bank credit limits and are in serious financial difficulty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be instructed to direct his counterpart in Newfoundland immediately to see that these federal funds are allocated as soon as possible to the legal recipients.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

CITY OF NEPEAN OPPOSITION TO HIGHWAY 16 EXTENSION ROUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That, in view of the concerns expressed by the Corporation of the City of Nepean and the residents of Nepean concerning the extension of Highway 16, the National Capital Commission refuse to allow any lands under its jurisdiction in the City of Nepean or elsewhere to be used for the proposed extension of Highway 16 along the route identified as the Cedarview corridor route.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN NICKEL INDUSTRY AT SUDBURY, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in light of Falconbridge's announcement of its intention to reduce its permanent work force by 25 per cent, or approximately 1,000 workers at its Sudbury operation, and considering that the poor state of the nickel market is a reflection on the disastrous mismanagement of the Canadian economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House instructs the government to recognize its responsibility to get the Canadian economy going again, and also resolves that the government recognize its responsibility to provide assistance and alternative employment for the Falconbridge workers and their families in Sudbury.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

GRAIN

CONGRATULATIONS ON ACHIEVEMENT OF RECORD-BREAKING EXPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to propose a motion which I trust will receive the unanimous consent of the House. Two years ago, Canada exported a record 21.7 million tonnes of grain. Last year we fell just short of this record, with 21.2 million tonnes. Later today, or on the weekend at the latest, with seven weeks still remaining in the crop year, Canada will break its all-time export record. We are well on our way to reaching the Wheat Board's target of 26 million tonnes. This is an unparalleled achievement. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That this House recognize the outstanding efforts by all those involved in the production and transportation of grain in surpassing the all-time export record well before the end of this crop year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the said motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

MINES AND MINING

SUGGESTED EMERGENCY MEETING OF TASK FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the serious unemployment crisis within Canada's mineral industry, resulting largely because of collapsing economic confidence and the anti-investment policies of the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That the Joint Government-Industry Task Force on Mining be requested to meet immediately on an emergency basis to develop a strategic action plan which will save the jobs of more than 200,000 mine and service workers faced with extended shutdowns and lay-offs, and that the task force be requested to report its recommendations to the Parliamentary Committees on Natural Resources and Public Works, and on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, before the end of June.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

CANADA RENTAL SUPPLY PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation bulletin for builders advertises the Canadian Rental Supply Program which promotes the construction of rental units. In Manitoba, the Winnipeg regional office has restricted this program to Winnipeg and Brandon. Contractors in other areas, such as the riding of Dauphin and the riding of Churchill, where there are centres with either a zero or low vacancy rate, are calling this discriminatory. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

• (1115)

That the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing look into this situation and immediately take some action so that contractors in communities outside of Winnipeg and Brandon can benefit under this program.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO AVERT BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the chairman of the Trust Companies Association said that there could be casualties in that industry if the present economic conditions last for another six months. Since many companies in other industries besides that one are now talking in terms of how many months they will be able to survive under the economic conditions which exist today, will the minister commit to the House that he will present alternative policies in his forthcoming financial statement that will avoid those disasters and lay-offs which will come if companies go bust over the next six months?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a preview of what will be in that statement. I have already indicated to his leader that I intend to make a financial and economic statement, in the words of the Leader of the Opposition. I have assured hon. members that it will be made in the House. I cannot give the hon. member any preview of what will be in that statement at the present time.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I am not asking for a preview of the statement. What I am asking, and what Canadians are asking, is whether there is any sense of understanding on the part of the minister that there is a crisis on our hands. The minister's head is in the sand. Both he and the Prime Minister seem to have more interest in going to international meetings than acting to solve these problems in Canada which we can do something about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Is the reason for the minister's dithering about these problems the fact that he still thinks his 1981 budget is the answer to our economic mess, or is it because he has totally lost confidence in his ability to present these policies since he is now batting zero for two in budget making?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is really not directed either to government policy or government administration. It is a series of political comments which generally decorate his rather futile questions in question period.

* * *

FORESTRY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The British Columbia forest industry, which directly or indirectly accounts for half of the total output of British Columbia, is in such dire straits that companies are borrowing money just to keep their plants operating. The president of MacMillan Bloedel now warns that Canada faces the possibility of economic collapse within 90 days unless the government brings forward emergency measures. Is the minister meeting with forest industry officials in order to avoid impending bankruptcies in an industry which supports entire communities, and which is the largest foreign exchange earner in the country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member may know, I have had extensive consultations with representatives of the private sector in Canada. In the course of that series of consultations we did hear the views of representatives of that industry and discussed their difficulties which, in the main, arise from depressed markets in other countries. Undoubtedly, that is a source of great concern, but it is a matter that can only be permanently solved with a resumption of economic growth and recovery in the countries to which these industries sell their products.

* * *

• (1120)

THE ECONOMY

FORECAST OF DECLINE IN EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, in the last week, has been defending the decline of the Canadian dollar on the basis that the U.S. dollar has been strengthening. Given the minister's argument, how does he explain the fact that it has been reported in this week's Business Week that international money traders believe that the U.S. dollar will decline over the next year, against the mark, the Swiss franc, and the yen, but the Canadian dollar will fall yet further, even against a declining U.S. dollar?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would not agree with that forecast for the Canadian dollar. I believe that to some extent the market is not reacting to some facts which have become apparent in the past few days, namely, the very strong trade figures, and the fact that in the first quarter of this year the current account has moved into surplus. On an annualized basis, if carried on throughout the year, we would probably have either a balance or a surplus on our current account. Therefore I do not share the views of the persons reported in Business Week, with respect to the Canadian dollar. The fact is that all currencies have been depreciating against the American dollar, including the Canadian dollar, but that with respect to the value of the Canadian dollar against most other currencies, it has either held its own or appreciated against these currencies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING STATE CONTROLS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, those who deal in money deal in facts—real facts, not the minister's facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: It is so bad now that money market traders and foreign exchange dealers, recognizing what this government is doing to the country, are now beginning to refer to the Canadian dollar as "the banana". That is how bad it is in world markets.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. Bosley: That is not nonsense. One can check that on the exchanges in Toronto this morning.

Will the minister finally recognize that more investor confidence in Canada, not less, is the only solution to our economic problems and the only way to get Canadians back to work? If he is not prepared to give us a preview of his program for the next two or three weeks, will he at least give us a commitment today that more intervention and more control by government, which would only hurt us even more, will not be considered by the government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to the importance of the improvement of the investment climate. That view has been expressed by the Prime Minister and myself, and I believe that the restoration of confidence in the possibility of recovery and growth is one of the most essential ways of improving the investment climate. On that point I certainly agree with the hon. member.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well. Like other hon. members, during the course of this week I have been listening with great care to what the Minister of Finance has had to say. On Tuesday, following the Summit in Versailles, when pressed about the future direction of Canadian economic policy the Minister of Finance said, as reported at page 18204 of Hansard, that he did not anticipate "a basic change in economic policy". Does the Minister of Finance stand today by what he said just a few days ago?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do stand by what I said a few days ago. I have repeated that same answer since it was first given on Tuesday in reply to a question put by the Leader of the Opposition.

MINISTER'S VIEWS ON UNITED STATES POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): On that same day, Tuesday, in reply to a question in the House the minister said that because of circumstances in the United States we could not anticipate more than marginal changes here in Canada until there was a major reversal in economic policy in the United States. Does the Minister of Finance stand behind that statement today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the questioning of the hon. member is leading him or the House. I repeat my view that, because of the importance of the American economy in present circumstances, unless there is some easement in interest rates, some beginning of recovery in the United States, the prospects are not as bright as they would be if we saw some immediate relief in the United States on the interest rate front, and if we saw some definite signs of recovery. I do not believe I have changed my view on that particular point. I do not believe that I have ever urged that, in these circumstances, the Canadian economy does not have problems of its own that have to be solved within Canada. I made reference to some of these problems in my answers earlier in the week.

• (1125)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would remind the minister that earlier this week he said that we could not expect anything other than marginal changes because of American policy and what was, in his view, its overwhelming impact on Canadian economic circumstances. He said that because of that we could not expect more than marginal changes.

Given the disaster that we are now confronted with in the state of the Canadian economy, the depression state forecast yesterday by the Chairman of the Guaranty Trust Company, is the minister saying to the House that after the Liberal caucus meets next week, and after the Liberal cabinet meets next week, if it finally makes a basic change that recognizes the real need is to stimulate the Canadian economy and produce jobs, that he, who has been stubborn in his persistent unwillingness to change policy, will at least have the integrity to submit his resignation to the Prime Minister?

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough.

* * *

ENERGY

CANCELLATION OF DEAL TO EXPORT ONTARIO NUCLEAR GENERATED ELECTRICITY TO NEW JERSEY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. A Canadian Press story released a few moments ago has revealed that the General Public Utilities Corporation of New Jersey has announced plans to cancel its multi-million dollar electricity purchase from Ontario Hydro in the Province of Ontario. As the minister will know, with proper environmental controls the deal would have had enormous benefits not only for the Province of Ontario but also for the whole country in terms of jobs, energy costs, the balance of payments, and the abatement of acid rain on both sides of the border.

Even allowing for the fact that costs were the main factor in the decision of the corporation concerned to cancel the deal, will the minister not concede that his failure to get the federal cabinet to make an early decision on Ontario Hydro's application to export massive amounts of electricity to the United States, bought time for the relevant United States interests to get out of the deal at the expense of Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): No, Madam Speaker, I would not concede that. The news to which the hon. gentleman refers is quite recent. As I understand it, the factors which led to the decision not to proceed with the project stem entirely from considerations regarding financing in the United States. I would have to say to him as well that if it were the insistence of the federal government that a proper environmental review of this project be done, and it was that insistence that caused the delay and that that delay had an impact, I would not regret the delay. It is absolutely crucial that a full and thorough environmental assessment be done. That was the responsibility of the Government of Ontario. It did not fulfil its responsibility, and it was in that vacuum that the federal government had to take the approach that it did to this problem.

DELAY IN GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. The fact is that the federal government dithered. It was indecisive, and it procrastinated on the National Energy Board's decision on Ontario Hydro's application to export electricity to the United States. The clear impression has been left that the federal Minister of the Environment is the reason for the cancellation of this project, or at least he gave the Americans time to get out of the project, even allowing for the fact that an environmental assessment may have had to be done.

• (1130)

Does the minister not realize that his indecision, his procrastination, and his failure to get an early decision by the federal cabinet have at least left the impression that it was environmental considerations that caused the cancellation of this project? That means setting back the environmental movement by decades, without any economic or environmental benefit to the country.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I think what I will do with that question is call upon the hon. member for Northumberland, his colleague, to speak to the hon. member, because we are doing exactly what the hon. member for Northumberland urged us to do, and I believe he was representing the official opposition, that is, to apply exactly the procedures and environmental concerns that we did apply.

Oral Questions

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPORT OF NUCLEAR FUEL BUNDLES TO ARGENTINA

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I have several questions for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The first question is with regard to the sale and transport of nuclear fuel bundles to Argentina. The minister has consistently failed to respond adequately to questions posed by many members of the House regarding this potential transport of fuel bundles to Argentina. Madam Speaker, I think that Canadians deserve a commitment from the minister to make sure that Canada in no way aids or abets the development of nuclear arms in Argentina. Will the minister openly, clearly and firmly state his position? Will he make that commitment to Canadians and, if not, why not?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY INTO NUCLEAR INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): That is the same kind of answer we have been getting from the minister for many days now. That is an example of Liberal morality. I think Canadians know that there is in no way any guarantee, any kind of reasonable expectation, that the kind of answer the minister gives us will prevent Canada's involvement.

Madam Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member could give an example of a short question.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I will do my best. I have a little extra time now, because the Minister of Energy does not care to make any commitments here. My supplementary question to the Minister of Energy is in regard to the two announcements today, that Mexico has withdrawn, has sent back our tenders, that GPU has backed out of its agreement and its intention to put an underground cable under Lake Erie to export nuclear electricity, and the fact that the "National Energy Program Update" has looked to that sale, the export of nuclear electricity, for the survival of Candu. In the face of those failures, the repeated failures that the minister has had in all areas of energy, will the minister, on behalf of the nuclear industry, bring about an open parliamentary inquiry into the nuclear industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I do not know whether my hon. friend would be more satisfied if I were to answer "maybe" this time.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

WOMAN'S SUCCESSFUL APPEAL AGAINST DEPORTATION ORDER

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and I gave notice yesterday to his parliamentary secretary because of the seriousness of the question and the concern. A Mrs. Jennifer Popen, a landed immigrant, was found guilty of manslaughter for killing her child, was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, and a deportation order was signed. The order was to be effective on her release, but it was appealed at a hearing in camera at the request of the immigrant, and a decision was made setting aside the deportation order. I note now that the time for further appeal has expired and that the government did not appeal this particular decision. Why was no appeal filed, and can we be appraised of the reasons for the decision?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in relation to that particular question, as the hon. member knows, it was a case that took place several years ago. The decision was made by the appeal board, which is a quasi-independent body. It judged those circumstances and decided on humanitarian grounds that this particular woman should be allowed to stay in the country. On those grounds the department saw no reason to make an appeal. The grounds were such that it really is a matter of judgment by the appeal board.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

FINANCING FOR CANDU EXPORTS—REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE REALLOCATED TO HOUSING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will know, I am sure, that the Mexican government has decided not to proceed with its nuclear power program. Canada, in making a bid, had set aside some $5.5 billion from general revenue to finance this over a long period of time, about 20 years, at 7.5 per cent. Can I ask the Minister of Finance whether he is prepared to reallocate at least $1 billion of those funds to housing, in order to create something in the order of 60,000 jobs and to meet at least half of the shortfall that exists with regard to the number of housing units required?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, if I might be allowed to answer, the hon. members information is incorrect. The government did not set aside anything like $5 billion in respect to the financing of the Candu reactor in Mexico.

Mr. Deans: How much?

REQUEST FOR REDEPLOYMENT OF FUNDS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I go back to the Minister of Finance, since the Minister of State for International Trade has indicated that it was not $5 billion. Since I am not asking for $5 billion anyway, and it was certainly in excess of $1 billion, I therefore ask the Minister of Finance will he redeploy those moneys, set them aside, put them to work in Canada to build housing for people that people need, at a price they can afford, and create jobs for Canadians who are currently unemployed?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is still incorrect with regard to the amount of money set aside for the nuclear reactor in Mexico, as I have indicated to this House on several occasions. At the present time the Export Development Corporation is looking at a possible $12 billion to $13 billion worth of projects which it is asked to finance, and never at any one time knows exactly what it is going to be financing in the immediate future. So the hon. member is basically incorrect in his assumption.

* * *

FINANCE

HONOURING OF INCOME TAX REFUND CHEQUES BY WESTERN BANKS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. I and several of my colleagues have received repeated reports to the effect that income tax refund cheques are not being accepted and honoured in banks in western Canada. Can the minister tell me whether that is a reflection of the serious financial position the government is in, or does he know of any other factors that would explain the banks caution with respect to cashing government cheques?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, this is the first time I have heard that accusation. As far as I know, we can make good on any cheques that we issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: As far as you know?

Mr. Rompkey: The cheque for the hon. member for St. John's East is in the mail! We will honour our cheques, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I will, of course, supply the Minister with information I have received from several banks refusing to cash income tax refund cheques. There must be some other factors involved. At least today the minister assured us that the government cheques can be honoured. There is no guarantee, of course, for tomorrow. Will the government undertake to investigate this matter and provide us with a reason why the banks should be so cautious in this matter of honouring these cheques?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Well, tomorrow is Saturday, Madam Speaker, and the banks are not open, of course.

An hon. Member: So the government is safe until Monday.

Mr. Rompkey: If the hon. member will provide me with the names of the banks and the managers and the phone numbers, maybe I could call them and talk to them myself.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Just a few moments ago he indicated that the easement of interest rates in the United States is fundamental to economic recovery in Canada. Given that situation, surely he appreciates that the easement of interest rates in Canada is fundamental to economic recovery in this country. If that is the case, why does the minister not instruct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to stop forcing interest rates up in order to prop up the falling value of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is no need to issue that direction, because the Governor of the Bank of Canada has not been following the course of action which the hon. member alleges; and certainly that course of action was not followed yesterday.

FOREIGN AID EXPENDITURES

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, we know that the effect of the endeavour to increase interest rates in Canada has not in fact supported the declining value of the dollar.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance asked in this House whether members would give him specific illustrations of items in the estimates which might be reduced so that those funds might be available for other purposes, and he said that members consistently failed to do so. I have already raised in this House the issue of the very substantial expenditure on foreign aid, $1.742 billion, and asked the minister's colleague whether he would refer the matter of the quantum of foreign aid to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for a quantum analysis. Having regard to my raising this issue again, would the minister refer that matter to the standing committee for a quantum analysis to determine whether that amount might be reduced and reallocated to some useful purpose in Canada?

● (1140)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as far as I am concerned the hon. member has picked the wrong item because I believe we ought to maintain our international obligations, particularly in the field of aid to less-developed countries. However, having said that, I point out to the hon. member that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are normally before the committee. The estimates have to be called in the committee, and it would be appropriate for hon. members to engage in a discussion on foreign aid and the amount recommended for approval. Indeed, if hon. members wish, they could make proposals on how to reduce that amount. That is open to hon. members. I would not support that particular expenditure cut, but it is the hon. member's right to attempt that and to see how much support he would get for it among other members, including members of his own party. I would be surprised if they would support him on that.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGE SCHEME

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure he is aware that under the new Progressive Conservative government in the Province of Saskatchewan mortgages will be offered up to a maximum of $50,000 at 13.25 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: Will the minister assure the people of Saskatchewan that, along with the grab made by the Minister of Finance on the assistance offered to other people in relation to mortgages through corporations and through their businesses, the federal government will not tax home owners on the benefits which would result from the difference between a mortgage rate of 13.25 per cent and whatever a conventional mortgage would be?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity to visit and meet with the minister for housing in the new government of the Province of Saskatchewan, and we discussed this issue. I have indicated that I have raised the matter with the Minister of Finance and his officials, but I caution that if provinces and new governments have plans to assist in relation to housing, and if that assistance is at the expense of taxpayers generally across Canada, they at least should have the decency to inquire of the Government of Canada before they are so good with their largesse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Have you ever heard of federalism?

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has requested the government of the Province of Saskatchewan and other provincial governments time and time again to assist the federal government in the field of housing. When one province decides to do so, why would this government want to tax the benefits the people of Saskatchewan asked for and are willing to receive?

REQUEST THAT MORTGAGE BENEFIT NOT BE TAXED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Mr. Ben Ward, information officer in the Department of Finance, was quoted by the Saskatoon Star Phoenix of June 3 as saying that there is a possibility that the program in Saskatchewan may be taxed. The Minister of Finance is the architect of the budget which took benefits from people in Saskatchewan and the rest of Canada. Will he assure us that the difference between 13.25 per cent and whatever a conventional mortgage rate might be—it might be 20 per cent with this government—will not be taxed in the Province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will give the hon. member's representation consideration, but I am not prepared to make a judgment in reply to his question today.

PROVINCIAL TAXATION AUTHORITY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in a similar vein I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. I asked him a question on May 19 which is reported at page 17589 of Hansard. I asked him what the position of the federal government was in relation to the taxing by a government of another level of government, and the minister indicated that he would get back to me after he had studied the question. Could we now have his answer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do have an answer for the hon. member. I would like to read the answer. I have had this matter carefully looked into and advise that the federal government has consistently taken the position that a province does not have the legislative jurisdiction to impose a tax on the federal Crown.

PAYMENT OF MANITOBA PAYROLL TAX

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, that being the case and that opinion being in keeping with constitutional convention, I point out to the minister that reports in Manitoba are that Ottawa intends to pay the so-called payroll tax which was in the recent Manitoba budget. Does the federal government now stand by that statement, namely, that it will pay it regardless of the constitutional convention the minister has read out today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we would observe the law of the Constitution.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON—REQUEST FOR AID FOR LEBANESE POPULATION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Now that a ceasefire, uncertain as it may be, has been proclaimed between Israel, the PLO and Syrian forces in Lebanon following the invasion of Lebanon, can the Deputy Prime Minister advise this House whether the government will be providing humanitarian aid to the innocent people of Lebanon who have suffered so frightfully as a result of the ravages of war?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The Canadian government has consistently responded to appeals for assistance for humanitarian purposes, and this certainly would apply to the case the hon. member has mentioned. The International Red Cross has made an appeal for assistance and for medical teams in Lebanon. It is preparing to make another more general appeal, and certainly Canada will be prepared to respond sympathetically to these requests.

* * *

MEDICAL CARE

EXTRA BILLING BY PHYSICIANS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister has been going around the country in recent days trying to redefine the problem of extra billing by doctors and calling it the lesser of two evils, and so forth. The minister has been trying to put on a brave—but transparently superficial—face because of her failure at the recent health ministers' conference to get provincial agreement to eliminate extra billing.

Has the minister given up on her intention to eliminate—not to control but to eliminate—extra billing by doctors and, if she has, will she also tell us whether she was ever really serious about her intentions in this regard? There has been one meeting, the minister has packed it in, and she is now going around the country trying to redefine the problem.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as usual, the hon. member is engaging in rhetoric instead of attacking the real problem. It has always been our goal that extra billing should be eliminated. How can we reach that goal? I hope in due time we achieve a consensus among all the 11 governments, including the ten provinces, which have a direct role in banning extra billing by way of provincial legislation.

I am curious to see if the hon. member makes the same representation to Mr. Larry Desjardins in Manitoba, to see if Manitoba is ready to move. We never saw that in Saskatchewan when the hon. member's party was in power there. It is very easy to talk and talk, and repeat false allegations.

I would like to inform the hon. member again and Canadians generally that the last federal-provincial conference was a success in that for the first time all provincial ministers agreed that extra billing existed and was a problem which would be a threat to medicare. All ministers agreed that control of this was essential. The day before the meeting this matter was not even on the agenda as far as some ministers were concerned. I think there has been great success; the first step has been taken. We will succeed in strengthening medicare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1150)

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, obviously the minister is easily satisfied. She thinks it is an accomplishment to get people to recognize that extra billing exists. Speaking of rhetoric, she is the grand old lady of rhetoric herself. I warned the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I warned the minister, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I assume members opposite would not have been as happy had I called her the grand old man of rhetoric. I don't know what I was supposed to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, during the debate on established programs financing I warned the minister that the Minister of Finance was rendering her powerless with his cutbacks in support of health care and post-secondary education, but she was too weak to stand up to him at the time. Will she now admit that this pack over here, the government, through the Minister of Finance, has done serious harm to the future of medicare? Will she admit that mistake now, after seeing what the provincial health ministers can do to her using these cutbacks as a club with which to beat her over the head?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, my colleagues around me say that they hope I do not have to establish either that I am old or a lady. I am past that point, so I will not comment on the remarks of the hon. member.

I would like to repeat that he must understand, if he is sincere—and I think he is—in wanting to strengthen medicare once and for all, that confrontation is over. He must understand that. He must accept co-operation and collaboration, if he wants, by the way, to dream of being in government one day. But he does not want to recognize that fact. Provinces must work together with the federal government on medicare, and not get into a confrontation situation which, of course, makes better headlines.

He must also realize that although federal transfers to provinces have increased everywhere but at a smaller rate than anticipated by the provinces, the health budget, by reason of the priorities of this government, has fully increased. The provinces will get on average, for every one of the next five years, a 13 per cent increase in funds earmarked for health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY RESPECTING LEGISLATION FOLLOWING ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Finance who has promised there will be a major financial and economic statement made in this House. I ask the minister whether, as a result of that major financial and economic statement, there will be new legislative measures introduced to this House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the word "major" is the right hon. member's word, not mine. I think he will have to wait to see what is in the statement. As I indicated earlier, I cannot tell him today what the results of the cabinet deliberations might be.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, this is probably the first time we have seen a retreat before the step was taken. What the minister is indicating to us now is that he is promising the people and Parliament of Canada nothing but a fraud at the end of this month, nothing but some decoration with no content.

CONTENTS OF FORTHCOMING STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Finance give this House a firm commitment that the economic statement which, he promised Parliament will be made while Parliament is sitting, and will contain new measures bringing help to the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are suffering because of the economic policies of the government? Will it be a real economic statement, or simply another public relations exercise by this government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I disagree with much of what the Leader of the Opposition has said in his rather colourful and exaggerated Friday morning eloquence. I have no intention of telling the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition what I propose to say. I have already told the committee and the House that I will be reporting on the economic and financial situation. I told him that on Tuesday last, and he is now characterizing the statement in various ways. I think he will have to wait to hear the statement and analyse it before he can make up his mind finally. I do not want to preview my statement, and I wish he would not preview his response.

Mr. Broadbent: You already have.

Mr. Clark: The minister has already said that his statement will not be major. He has already indicated there will not be the kind of help that Canadians require from the government if it had any sense of responsibility for the current economic situation.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DESTINATION OF NUCLEAR FUEL EXPORTED TO ARGENTINA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister of state responsible for external relations. Can the minister say with certainty that the Government of Canada knows the final destination in Argentina of the nuclear fuel bundles being sent to that country from Canada?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN JAPANESE MANUFACTURERS AND CANADIAN PARTS SUPPLIERS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, recently in the House the Minister of State for International Trade indicated to me that two Japanese auto manufacturers were negotiating with Canadian parts suppliers. I presume he was referring to Mazda, which over a year and a half ago inspected some 15 plants but nothing has really transpired, and Honda, which received a list of 61 suppliers in April, and now apparently because of delays the negotiations will continue until at least August.

The minister must have more details of these negotiations than I do, but I ask him, without making any allegation, whether he is satisfied that they are being carried on in good faith by the Japanese manufacturers, or it is just window dressing, because the minister knows it is impossible to achieve fair trade without fair negotiations?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I will not be satisfied until such time as we see a substantial increase in the sale of Canadian auto parts to the Japanese automobile manufacturers. I am not aware whether Mazda is one of the companies. Honda certainly is, and I think Nisson is the other company. However, according to the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association there has been a substantial increase in interest by the Japanese automobile manufacturers in purchasing Canadian parts.

ACCESS BY CANADIAN FIRMS TO NECESSARY SPECIFICATIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, assuming the minister shares our concern, as I believe he does, for these Canadian auto part manufacturers, and more particularly their tens of thousands of workers who are unemployed, I would like to ask him about another aspect of what appears to be an unfair trade practice, that is, the after-market or replacement parts for Japanese cars already in Canada, as compared to new parts.

What steps, if any, is the government prepared to take to permit Canadian manufacturers access to the prints and specifications necessary to manufacture replacement parts; second, what steps does the government propose to take to break down the absolute barrier whereby a Canadian parts manufacturer is not allowed to sell to Japanese car dealers here in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, when he first raised his question several weeks ago in the House, which was the first time I heard of the complaint, I asked our officials to undertake an investigation and I also talked to the auto parts association. They are in the process of trying to obtain a contract in order to validate the allegation made by the hon. member. At this point in time, although we have had some verbal confirmation, there is no written indication that this process in fact does exist.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PAYMENT OF MANITOBA PAYROLL TAX

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as a follow-up to the answer he gave to the hon. member for Provencher, because the minister was not especially clear in his answer. Is he saying that even though the federal government has paid a similar payroll tax in the Province of Quebec for some years now, it will not now pay the new Manitoba tax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my answers were in reply to the hon. member for Provencher. Those answers still stand.

Tabling of Documents

PETITION

MR. GREENAWAY—RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the two hundred and sixty-eighth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

• (1200)

POINT OF ORDER

MR. EPP—REQUEST MR. MACEACHEN TABLE DOCUMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order about which I shall be brief. It arises out of the question period today and a question of mine to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). This question which I asked earlier on May 19 concerned a ruling about the view of the federal government on the constitutionality of one level of government being able to tax another level of government. The minister, and I believe I am correct about this, read from a document. I do not know whether that document was a letter, a legal opinion, or indeed what it was, but I believe the rules of the House indicate that if a minister reads from a document, the document is then tabled. If that was the case, should that document not be tabled at this stage?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I was not reading from any official document. I was reading from my own notes.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Editor's Note: For above report see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Order Paper Questions

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,116, 4,313 and 4,323.

[Text]

DAIRY FARMERS BRIEF ON CHEESE IMPORT QUOTAS

Question No. 4,116—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Dairy Farmers of Canada in their brief dated January 21, 1982 advocate that cheese import quotas be reduced commencing January 1, 1983 over a period of the next three years amounting to an approximate decrease of 20 per cent and, if so (a) is the government giving favourable consideration to this request (b) on what date will the government reach a decision on the matter?

2. To the knowledge of the government, is the demand for variety cheeses in Canada to a very great extent being adequately met by products produced in Canada and, if so, does the government agree this should warrant consideration of further cheese import reductions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. (a) Yes. Officials are giving consideration to the implications of this request. (b) Changes, if any, would normally be announced at the beginning of the dairy year, which is July 1.

2. In 1981, domestic production of variety cheese consumed in Canada represented 80.7 per cent compared to 68.3 per cent in 1975. This increase in the consumption of domestically produced variety cheese reflects the strength of the variety cheese industry in Canada. The domestic variety cheese industry is slowly reducing the demand for imported variety cheese by its production of high quality world class cheese. However, any substantial reduction in cheese imports could have an adverse effect on over-all variety cheese consumption. Canada presently manufactures about 60 different varieties of cheese and imports about 125 varieties.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION PURCHASED BY DE&I

Question No. 4,313—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the Department of Employment and Immigration purchase hotel accommodation and meals services from the Avion Motor Hotel in Mississauga and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) what was the total cost of the services (c) how many meals were involved (d) what was the average cost per meal?

2. Were any costs related to damages or renovations and, if so, what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. A contract was awarded, by DSS, on behalf of the Department of Employment and Immigration, to Avion Motor Hotel, Mississauga, Ontario.

(a) To provide hotel accommodation and meal services to persons detained for immigration pursuant to the authority of the Canadian Immigration Act for the period May 1, 1982, to April 30, 1983.

(b) This information is not available at this time. However the estimated contract value for the period May 1, 1982, to April 30, 1983 is $518,500 based on a firm rate of $39,279.19 per month for 30 rooms including 8,540 detainee day meals per annum. Any renovations or costs related to damages that the hotel is required to do is included in this firm price monthly rate. The difference between the annual firm price of $471,350.28 and the estimated value of the contract of $518,500 is to cover extra meals.

(c) Not available. See 1(b) above.

(d) The average cost per meal is estimated to be $5.

2. See 1(b) above.

RESERVE FORCE PERSONNEL EMPLOYED AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 4,323—Mr. Howie:

1. How many Class C and Class B reserve force personnel are employed by the Department of National Defence at CFB Gagetown?

2. Are any plans underway to reduce these numbers?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of April 30, 1982, the numbers of reserve force personnel employed at CFB Gagetown were as follows: under Class C conditions of service, 72; under Class B conditions of service, 95.

2. Yes. For the remainder of this fiscal year, it is intended to reduce the number of reserve personnel called out under Class C conditions of service to nine by September, 1982, and to four by December, 1982. The number of reservists serving under Class B conditions will fluctuate from the present 95 to approximately 200 during the peak summer months and then in September decline to about 30 for the balance of the current fiscal year.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Government Bills (Commons):

June 10, 1982—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-117, an act to amend the Criminal Code—The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it should be noted that while there is no agreement between the parties as to the number of speakers, there is agreement, I believe, and this can be confirmed, that this bill will be completed through all stages today and accordingly will go to Committee of the Whole.

Madam Speaker: If that is the agreement of the House, I am sure the House will conform to it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-117, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and deferred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we gave first reading to this bill to amend the Criminal Code. We are asking hon. members to consider legislative changes which will strengthen the horseracing industry. Without these changes, the industry will suffer continued decline. Some tracks will be forced to close down. Some horse breeders will be put out of business, and some communities will be deprived of a pleasurable sporting event.

Before I discuss the specific changes which we are seeking, I would like to express my appreciation for the co-operation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and of parties on all sides of the House.

I want to outline first the over-all size and importance of the Canadian horse racing industry. Despite stiff competition from the lotteries, pari-mutuel betting at horse races is still the number one area of betting in Canada. I should explain that "pari-mutuel" means "among ourselves". It is an apt phrase when you consider that 80 per cent of the total bet is returned to the bettors.

In 1981, Canadians bet about $1.7 billion on horse races, which was up about 8 per cent from the previous year. Attendance held steady at about 14 million people. Gross purse money rose by 11 per cent to about $108 million, and the provincial tax revenue rose by nearly 10 per cent to $129 million. Of the $1.7 billion bet, tracks and horsemen received only 10 per cent, about $173 million. That amount is insufficient when so many people, businesses and communities depend on racing. There are more than 100 horse racetracks across the country. More than 40,000 people are employed in the industry and more than $2 billion is invested in land, buildings, equipment and breeding stock. It is big business.

Track operators' expenses and the cost of maintaining the horses have risen year after year, and yet the percentage which tracks are permitted to retain from pari-mutuel betting has not been increased for more than a decade.

If I may repeat some of the key figures, $1.7 billion was placed on bets; $173 million was retained by tracks and horsemen, split about 50-50; provincial tax revenues amounted to $129 million, which was a substantial amount; and the industry employs about 40,000 Canadians.

My responsibility as Minister of Agriculture with regard to horse racing is twofold: to provide protection for the betting public, and to ensure a viable Canadian horse-racing industry. My department's race track division, in co-operation with provincial racing commissions, supervises betting at race tracks to ensure that a fair race is run. The division staff takes blood samples of the horses to make sure they have not received drugs; we provide photo-finish service and video tape monitoring; and we make sure that the tracks abide by the terms of the Criminal Code with respect to commission rates, betting procedures, racing dates and so on.

How do we do this? We do it strictly on a cost recovery basis. The federal levy on bets is six tenths of 1 per cent. It has been said by some that the federal government makes a lot of money. The federal government does not. Ours is strictly a cost recovery program. This federal levy on bets of six tenths of 1 per cent generates about $10 million per year. That just covers the department's expenses, including the cost of running the new equine drug evaluation centre in Jerseyville, Ontario that we have just established.

As an aside, I would like to mention that many of the top people in the race track division came to us from the RCMP. They used to be permanent members of the force but most of them are now those who have retired from the force. They have experience and an understanding of the Criminal Code. They have maintained the public's confidence in seeing a fair race, and that is very good for the industry.

• (1210)

The changes in betting practices which I have introduced in the past year and the additional changes which will come into effect when Parliament passes the amendments we are considering today will not only improve the marketing power of racetracks but will also discourage the use of illegal bookmaking by making legal gambling more convenient and, if I may say so, probably more appealing.

The four programs which I have introduced through regulations are: more pools per race; new betting pools, such as Win 6 and Big 6; advanced betting; and telephone account betting. These programs are all optional and individual tracks will make their own decisions about whether or not to pursue these new marketing possibilities. Basically these programs have been well received by the industry and are slowly resulting in improvements in revenue earned by the industry.

I should add that there is some reservation on the part of small tracks. I have made it very clear that it is my intention to make the total racing industry healthy, not to hurt it. In no way will I allow that to happen.

The changes at which we are looking today will build on to the reforms I am talking about. First, we are seeking approval for inter-track betting. In simple terms, inter-track betting will allow a person at one track, or a person who has a telephone account with that track, to bet on horse races at another track. Inter-track betting will be optional, and before any track can use it, it must have the agreement of the other participating track.

Let us take a look at some of the advantages of the system. First, it will allow tracks to make better use of their capital investment by using their facilities to handle bets on other races. Second, it will give bettors a legal way of placing a bet on major national races such as the Confederation Cup in Flamboro Downs, the Prix d'Eté in Montreal, the Queen's Plate in Toronto, or the B.C. Derby in Vancouver. It would discourage betting illegally on the same races through a bookie.

The track commission would be deducted on behalf of the track sponsoring the race, but other tracks participating in inter-track betting would also receive a share of the moneys bet through their own track. We do not know exactly how much new business would be generated as a result of this kind of system, but we know that major tracks such as the one at Fort Erie may be forced to close unless it has the opportunity to expand its marketing base.

The second of the three changes in Section 188 which we are putting forth is to provide for an increase in the scale of commissions charged by race tracks. At present the legal scale is between 9.5 per cent and 12 per cent of total bets. The proposed scale would extend the 9.5 per cent rate to 10 per cent for large tracks, and from 12 per cent to 15 per cent for small tracks.

There is an acute need for higher commission rates. The daily average revenue received by tracks from the commission rate since 1971, measured in constant dollars, has dropped by 11 per cent. As a result of that diminished return, tracks have been forced to increase their charges for things such as admission, parking and food. This has had a detrimental effect upon attendance which, on an average daily basis, has declined year after year.

When the new maximum fees are in place—and again it is optional for tracks to charge the maximum; they do not have to do it—tracks could take in an additional $17 million or an approximate 10 per cent increase, plus an additional $11 million if they opt to vary their pool percentages. If tracks choose to deduct the maximum percentage, plus the variance from the pools, the potential maximum increase would be approximately 17.2 per cent, based on actual betting figures for 1981.

The third and final change we are seeking is to allow for the transfer of certain administrative matters to regulations. The bill proposes that the maximum number of betting races permitted and the track commission rate be transferred to the regulation-making authority of the Minister of Agriculture. The new regulations would permit 12 races instead of ten on Saturdays and holidays, without permitting a substantial increase in the total number of races per week. Also, by allowing the track commission rate to be adjusted by regulation, we would be able to react more quickly to the changing needs of the industry.

In closing, I stress that these proposed changes have been requested by the industry and that there is widespread support for them. They will not only improve the marketing base for race tracks and horsemen in the face of serious competition from lotteries, but they will also reduce the betting public's use of bookies. I know there are those who say that we should do nothing which encourages or facilitates gambling. However, we must bear in mind that betting on horse races has been going on for as long as horses have been domesticated. Historians have proof of horse racing in Asia Minor 3,500 years ago. In Canada, betting on horses has been a common practice for more than 100 years. Today, more than 14 million people attend race tracks annually. Many of these tracks are in small rural communities and need support.

I want to make clear to people who have said that I have gone to off-track betting that we have not and we do not intend to. Race track facilities and pari-mutual betting equipment will be used. Some people are already saying that they want to operate the first off-track betting shops. I want to make clear that we will not have off-track betting shops. We will use the system which is in place.

Race tracks that opt for this system will have to hire extra employees to work in their facilities. Inter-track betting can also mean less use of automobiles, etc. For instance, if one track is idle and it has decided to use a screen in its dining room, people can watch a race which is taking place at another track. In that event they all share in the revenue, and people can spend an enjoyable evening without driving 100 or so miles to another racetrack to participate in their favourite sport of betting. I do not intend to try to take away their favourite sport, but I intend to make it a better operation and a more legal operation than it is. There will be less betting with bookies than at present. There will be more revenue for racetrack facilities, for horse owners, and for all people concerned with the program.

Some people almost intimate that it is sinful to bet. I do not think it is. Even in my church we have such things as bingo, etc. Some people say that our whole system in one big gamble.

Mr. Epp: With this government you had better believe it!

Mr. Whelan: I am sure no one is suggesting, even the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), that we abolish the entire system under which we operate in Canada. Much of it is a big gamble—

Mr. Epp: Canadians gambled and they lost.

Mr. Whelan: I am sure the voters in the hon. member's constituency gambled on him. He is sure that they made a good bet. He approves of that kind of gambling and that kind of betting, so I am sure he will approve of this. There is not that much difference. There is a lot of good horse sense, common sense and economic sense in what I am suggesting.

I urge hon. members to approve the three amendments to this bill to strengthen the Canadian horse racing industry, which is a very important industry in the country.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the motion which is before the House should be corrected so as to accurately reflect the agreement of House leaders, namely that the bill go to Committee of the Whole.

• (1220)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. parliamentary secretary earlier referred to the possibility that members might be agreeable to putting the bill through all stages today, including the Committee of the Whole. The Chair put the motion as referring to second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I take it that there is unanimous consent that that ought to be amended so that the motion reads "and reference to Committee of the Whole". Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has some indication that hon. members wish to speak. I just want to point out that, given that correction of the motion, members may prefer to speak to second reading or to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to compliment the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on a speech with which I basically agree. Some of his comments with respect to off-track betting I found offensive but basically his remarks were quite proper and I have no hesitation in endorsing them.

I would begin by saying I have got hoofprints on my heart. I have a mother who was born in the Kentucky blue grass country and a father off an Ontario farm. I guess horse racing, by choice as well as being hereditary, is in my blood. My mother used to take me to all the western movies when I was a little boy to see Ken Maynard, Tom Mix, Roy Rogers and Gene Autrey.

Mr. Wilson: What about Hopalong Cassidy?

Mr. Cook: Hopalong Cassidy too. I thought she was taking me to the movies because she wanted to see the "shoot-em-ups", as I did. It was later, after I grew up, that I found out that she wanted to watch the horses instead. My first trip to a race track was when I was ten years old and I went with my mother. I have been returning to them ever since. Polo Park in Winnipeg certainly saw a good deal of me during my teenage years.

I make those remarks in advance to indicate from whence I am coming in regard to this bill. The purpose of the amendment to the Criminal Code is to permit inter-track pari-mutuel betting on horse races, thereby enabling a person to make a bet in person or by telephone at one racecourse in respect of a race being run at another racecourse. The amendment would also remove the requirement that bets on horse races be made only during the actual progress of the race meeting. It thereby permits advance betting on horse racing to be conducted in accordance with regulations made under subsection 188(7) of the Criminal Code.

What does this really mean when we remove the legal language from it? First, it means telephone betting. How will this operate? The first requirement is that you must deposit your money in advance. You open an account, similar to a bank account, at your favourite racetrack. You give your name, you receive a number for the account and you will have a code word so that there is at least a double check to ensure that no one can use your account and make bets which are unauthorized by you. Therefore, you phone the racetrack, give them your account number and your code word and the telephone operator will tell you how much money you have on deposit. At that point, you indicate to the operator what horse, what race and what amount you wish to bet. This is then recorded and entered into the mutuel system of the race track.

There is one other double check which is absolutely necessary and which is done. The entire conversation is recorded and maintained. Therefore, if you later discover that a mistake has been made, all that is necessary is to make an application to the racetrack and it will retrieve the tape recording of the telephone conversation which will absolutely determine if a mistake was made. It is a system which we are adopting in Canada that has worked very successfully in the states of Connecticut, New York, Kentucky and Florida. It seems to be almost fail safe and is working extremely well. This is a necessary part of the system.

The other aspect concerns inter-track betting. This means that in my province of British Columbia, for example, there can be a link-up between Exhibition Park and Cloverdale Raceway, a link-up between Sandown race track on Vancouver Island and perhaps some other smaller tracks in the interior which may wish to participate in such a scheme.

In Ontario, it would mean link-ups for Woodbine, Fort Erie and Greenwood, which are three typical examples. The only racing dates in the months of August in Ontario are held at the Fort Erie race track. Fort Erie, with its flowers and lawns, is one of the most beautiful race tracks in North America.

I am pleased with this legislation because it will give the Fort Erie track a real opportunity to survive as a viable race track with all of the employment it provides in the Fort Erie area. Under inter-track betting during the month of August, the Ontario Jockey Club may, if it so decides, open a portion of the clubhouse at Woodbine or at Greenwood where racing will not be taking place in the afternoon but where the racing fans of Toronto may then be able to go to watch the races being run in Fort Erie on large-screen television and also be able to bet on those races. Of course, this means considerably more employment in the Toronto area as additional staff will be required to operate those tracks.

It is also a considerable benefit to those who are most interested in the racing game. I might add that it also means that Blue Bonnet in the Province of Quebec as well as other tracks in that province will now survive. We should be thankful for that because Blue Bonnet is too much of an institution in Quebec to be turned into a shopping centre.

I believe that the statistics on racing would be shocking to many people who do not understand just how large an industry it is. I will relate a number of figures just for the province of British Columbia alone to indicate to my constituents what we are talking about. There are 3,000 thoroughbred and standardbred breeders in Canada. There are 450 breeders in British Columbia. There are 10,000 racehorse owners in Canada, including 900 in British Columbia. There are over 8,000 people employed in the racing industry in British Columbia, of which some are part-time employees. Over 40,000 people in Canada are employed in racing.

In British Columbia alone the thoroughbred breeders have over $100 million invested in land, buildings, equipment and livestock. The total thoroughbred investment exceeds $300 million in British Columbia. Total purchases in British Columbia in 1981 for standardbreds, and thoroughbreds was $11.1 million. The 1981 national total was $107.8 million. Most of this money goes to the agricultural industry in the form of wages and purchases of supplies.

What about wagers? How much money is really involved? British Columbia harness racing wagering was $62.7 million. British Columbia thoroughbred racing wagering was $142,719,000. Total wagering in the Province of British Columbia was $205,421,528. In 1981, B.C. racing generated just over $14 million in direct wagering taxes for the B.C. government. The national total, I might add, for all provincial governments was $129 million. If only the provincial governments could be made to understand that if they would reduce the take-out, they would undoubtedly make more money. Anywhere that this has been done has resulted in more revenue for provincial governments rather than less. The latest example in recent years is British Columbia itself, where the take-out of the individual dollars bet was once 22 per cent, but when it was dropped to 18.2 per cent, guess what happened? The provincial government made considerably more money. The same thing happened in New York state, as well as in other jurisdictions.

• (1230)

It is unfortunate that provincial politicians allow greed to get in the way of what makes more sense in terms of raising revenue for themselves. The fairer the break to the bettor, the more revenue that results. Referring to attendance in British Columbia, 468,804 attended B.C. harness racing last year. B.C. thoroughbred attendance was 1,085,858. There is an interesting sidelight in those figures, and that is the fact that this attendance total is in fact larger than the combined totals for attendance at all Vancouver Canuck hockey games, B.C. Lions football games, Whitecap soccer games and the Canadians baseball team. Put them all together and racing in still the largest sport, not only in my province, but also in North America.

I would like to mention a few Canadian racing statistics to emphasize the point again as to how important this legislation is to an industry which has been hurting. The total Canadian attendance at racetracks in 1981 was 14,001,942. This total was greater than the total attendance at all National Hockey League games, Canadian Football League games, North American Soccer League games and all professional baseball games. Put them all together and the total does not equal the attendance at racetracks.

Do hon. members know what is the largest single sporting event, if not in the world, certainly in North America? It is the Kentucky Derby, in a city of 300,000 named Louisville, Kentucky. At that track 140,000 people paid attendance for the one race. On the particular day this year, $5 million was bet through the mutuels at the race track on one race. Over $11 million was bet for the one day at Churchill Downs.

What is the amount of money that was bet on races in Canada in 1981? It was $1,709,659,905. In terms of its effect on the tourist industry in Canada, what does racing do? Manitoba is the only province in which statistics are kept. In 1981, $9 million was generated in spending by tourists coming into the province for the horse races at Assiniboine Downs in Winnipeg. Most of these tourists came from North Dakota and Minnesota. That amount of $9 million was generated because of a track well over 60 miles from the border. Consider the impact on our tourism of the Fort Erie racetrack across the river from the city of Buffalo, or of Exhibition Park in Vancouver, less than 20 miles from the Washington state border. The same applies to other tracks across the country which are close to an American audience.

I think that if we are really to understand this legislation and its importance, we must talk about some of the people involved in this game and some of the skills which are an absolutely vital necessity for the successful conduct of a race meeting. I am thinking of people like Grubb and Carberry on the prairies, Doug Reid in Vancouver and Darryl Wells here, men who could memorize 12 horses by their colours in less than three minutes and then accurately call a race being run, with very seldom a mistake. I am thinking of the jockeys who are, without a doubt, the highest paid athletes in the world, who take their lives in their hands several times a day when climbing on the backs of 1200-pound horses. These jockeys weigh 115 pounds. Imagine a 115-pound jockey on a 1200-pound horse which is supported by very thin and fragile legs, going at a speed of 40 miles an hour.

Consider the trainers, the crafty ones. Frank Christian in British Columbia is an example. He raised his horses in the Okanagan Valley. Every spring he would bring a few of them onto the racetrack. They would win a few races, he would sell his horses, and they would be gone by the end of June. Consider British Columbia's Sonny O'Connell, president of the Horsemen's Association of British Columbia, who once told me that if he had spent as much time with the bible as he had with the racing form, he would be a saint today! These are some of the people involved in racing.

Consider George Cummins who likes nothing better on the west coast than to pick up a horse and keep running it against better and better stock, winning all the way. Or take Frank Passero, for example, here in Ontario, who can claim another man's horse the race before it will win. Or a man named Tammaro, at Woodbine who can talk to two-year-olds, I believe.

Look at the working executives in this industry across the land, such as Jack Kenney, Irv Klugman in Ontario and Merv Peters in Vancouver, who run and work with a million problems every day. Bill Veeck, who is more well known for baseball, once ran Suffolk Downs in Boston for a while. He wrote one of the funniest, most enjoyable books about racetracks that anyone could read called "Twenty Tons a Day", and hon. members know to which he refers.

Take a look at the men with the finances and their love of racing who have provided enjoyment for so many millions of people over the years. Consider Jack Diamond from British Columbia, who almost single-handedly resurrected racing on the lower mainland. Consider Charles Taylor and what he has done with Winfields Farms and the breeding industry and racing in Ontario. Consider Jean-Louis Levesque of Quebec and the famous Speers family on the prairies. These dedicated men have done a great deal, and this government has brought in a bill to help continue the good work.

Then there are the owners of the racehorses as well, men of vanity who have found their relaxation and pleasure in horse racing. Consider a man like Bill Kocken on the west coast who literally flew all night and all day to get to Vancouver from the Arctic because he had a little two-year-old running in a race that night which he simply had to see. Well, he got there, and his horse did, too. We may hear more of Vance's Bay. As Jim Coleman has stated, "A rich man needs two things, a worry and a hobby, and he can solve both needs by buying a race horse."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: Consider Hunky Bill Konyk of the west coast, the owner of a successful chain of restaurants. He finds his relaxation by owning his own horses. They do not often win, but that is where a lot of the restaurant profits go.

My Dad once became involved in owning a race horse. He went to Polo Park in the middle thirties and I suspect he had had a drink or two; but anyway, at the end of the day he owned a racehorse. It took him several months to realize what had happened to him, before he could sell the racehorse, and he gave me some advice on that occasion. It was one of those treasured maxims of a father to a son. He said, "Son, if I have learned one thing, I hope you learn it easier, and that is, never own anything that eats!"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: Finally, the individual racing fan is the most maligned person in the world. He is abused, dishonoured and ridiculed by an ignorant and uninformed public. Yet he is the salt of the earth, Mr. Speaker.

• (1240)

Let me mention, to his embarrassment I am sure, Desmond Kimmitt, who is known as the punting priest in British Columbia. Besides running a major parish in West Vancouver he serves on the B.C. Racing Commission. He grew up in the horse country in Ireland and now can be found at the racetrack whenever he can find the time.

Then there is a Chinese family of father, mother and a couple of children who for years have gone to the racetrack every day. Jack Short, who is a legend in himself having spent 44 years announcing races on the west coast, told me that he once asked his father if he made any money going to the track day after day, season after season. The father answered that he made money on occasion but on other occasions he would lose. He had worked it out that for the family to go to the racetrack as often as they did cost him about $3,000 per year. Short mentioned that they could take holidays for that money, but the father pointed out that it was very easy to spend $3,000 on a holiday within two weeks and that his family could have about 100 holidays every year by going to the racetrack.

Those are some typical fans, the type of people that you run into at race tracks. The president of an insurance company and the swamper in an office building are equal when they pick up a Racing Form to determine the winner of a race. Often the swamper can prove wiser than the president. That is part of the appeal.

I know people who would swim a raging river to see a good horse race but could not care less about making a bet. There are more thrills, there is more emotion, more enjoyment for the recreational dollar to be found at the racetrack than anywhere else. It is the most participatory of spectator sports. No one should disdain the $2 bettor; he is to be envied. A $2 bettor will tell you that you must always remember that the less you bet, the more you lose when you win! Damon Runyon made a statement to the effect that all horse players die poor. Any horse player knows that is not true. Even if it were, he forgot to add that all horse players die broke—but with a smile on their face, having found great joy in their recreation and hobby.

Jim Coleman, who is probably the best sportswriter Canada ever produced, wrote an autobiography called "Hoofprints on My Heart". I stole the line for the introduction to my speech. Without a doubt it is one of the funniest, most sympathetic, most understanding books about racing in Canada that has ever been written. Anyone who does not like racing and who took the time to read Jim Coleman's book will change his view.

Let me turn to the unfortunate side of racing, Mr. Speaker. When I say unfortunate, I mean the criminal element. I am referring now to bookies. I have some statistics which are fascinating. In June of 1981 in the city of Toronto, the average daily sale of the Racing Form was 88,000 copies; in the month of July it was 99,000 copies daily and in August it dropped somewhat. But the connection is this, Mr. Speaker: in June, 1981 when 88,000 copies of the Racing Form were sold daily, approximately 10,000 people attended Woodbine race track. Even assuming that everyone at the race track bought the Racing Form, even though the actual figures indicate that each Racing Form serves 1.5 persons, that still leaves 78,000 in the hands of people who did not go to the track. In the month of July over 80,000 Racing Form were sold daily at $1.75 each to people who did not go to the track. I do not think it takes a mental giant to figure out that if someone paid $1.75 for a Racing Form and did not go to the track, there was some other way he could make a wager. The bookmaking industry is obviously flourishing in Toronto.

One thing that this bill will correct is this. During the month of August when racing does not take place in Toronto and the horses are at Fort Erie, which averages 5,000 to 8,000 people per day, still 41,000 copies of the Racing Form are sold in Toronto. Surely with telephone betting, with inter-track betting and the big screen, some of those 30,000 people who are now contributing to the welfare of the underground and the scoundrels who are bookies will instead place their bets honestly. This bill is a blow to bookies, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to quote a statement made by Mr. Don Winterton, the former chief of police of the city of Vancouver. He stated:

> I have reviewed the general regulations which were proposed for telephone account betting, and feel they will be a help in controlling illegal bookmaking activities as they apply to horse racing. It has been my experience that most people when provided with a legal alternative to an illegal activity, will choose the legal avenue. Consequently, I would expect that telephone account wagering could significantly reduce illegal bookmaking on horse racing, thus diverting revenue from the underworld to the racing industry and to provincial governments.
>
> I am fully supported in this matter by Harold Adamson, former chief of police of metropolitan Toronto.

That is what the former chief of police thinks.

If we are to eliminate the illegal bookies totally and drive them out of business, the next stage must also be contemplated by government if only to allow the provinces to decide for themselves. The Government of Ontario is in favour of off-track betting and would introduce it. That is the next stage. Off-track betting must come and it will remove the leech of the bookmaker from legitimate racing. The bookie contributes nothing to the support of racing or to provincial revenues, but off-track wagering could contribute substantially to provincial revenues.

Is there any real reason in this day and age why people of this country should not be allowed to make a small wager on the Kentucky Derby, the Japanese Cup, the Queen's Plate, the British Columbia Derby, the Arlington Million, the Longacres mile or a number of races in Europe? Those events could be brought in by television, although the regulations proposed by the Minister of Agriculture do not permit it at this time. Hopefully he and his officials will see the light and realize that it is good for the sport to have maximum exposure of some of the finest horses to be seen in the world.

• (1250)

Let us turn to something else. Let us turn to the major danger facing racing and one of the main reasons this legislation was eventually brought about. I refer to the despicable question of lotteries. Let me go over some of our lotteries and give some indication of what the individual person is up against. Super Loto, $10 per ticket; the top prize, $1 million; the odds, 800,000 to one. The Provincial lottery, the top prize, $500,000; the odds 800,000 to one. Wintario, for a dollar, the top prize, $100,000; the odds, one million to one. Lottario, for $1 and up; the top prize fluctuates weekly; the odds on winning are 3.2 million to one. The Cash for Life lottery, for the $2 ticket, the top prize $50,000 per year for life, taxable, or $300,000 lump sum, non-taxable; the odds, 1.4 million to one. The Pot of Gold lottery, a $2 ticket, the top prize $100,000; the odds one million to one.

Let us deal with the newest little gimmick, Loto 6/49. If you think you are lucky, Mr. Speaker, really lucky, here is your chance to prove it. With odds of 13 million to one, you can risk a buck to win a million in Canada's latest lottery. Loto 6/49 was introduced on June 4 of this year. It is similar to Lottario, except that the odds are longer and the winnings bigger. One person in 3.2 million wins Lottario's average jackpot of $300,000 per week. Loto 6/49 will offer a million dollar jackpot after a year.

Forty-five cents of every dollar taken in goes to prizes, on average, in all of the lotteries. Let me contrast those figures with a couple of things out of the horse racing world, for those who wish to gamble rather than intelligently handicap and speculate on horse races. It is 3.2 million to one for an average jackpot, top prize $300,000. In the Pick 6 in Vancouver, in the Pick 6 at Woodbine, there have already been pots of $300,000, and all you have to do is pick the six consecutive winners of six races. Now, compared with 3.2 million to one odds, it is almost lead-pipe cinch. You have only 10 or 12 horses in each one of the races. You have only to pick one from each, so you might say 12 times one times six, and sure, the odds are that you have a chance; also you have a good opportunity to use your intelligence in determining what is taking place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: Now, aside from the jackpots, in this new one, Loto 6/49, players can win cash prizes of $10 weekly for matching three numbers. Shared cash prizes, determined on a pool basis, will be given for matching four and five numbers as well. Now, let us get right down to the basic $10. The chance of winning any prize is estimated at one in 53. You could get better odds on a long shot at a race track than that, for better odds and far more for your $2. Lotteries really have drained off a lot of recreational dollars. It is a system and a despicable thing which gives people dreams, but if they would only look at the 3.2 million to one odds!

I had the occasion to draw a lottery once and nothing brought it home to me as much as that. It was for $100,000. I went into this room. There was a 20-foot wall which was filled with shoe boxes. I mean that the wall was filled, column after column after column, from the floor to the ceiling. The first thing we did in picking this winner was to spin a little wheel and pick out a number. That gave us row of boxes No. 15. So we went over to the fifteenth row and we knew the winner was going to come from that fifteenth row. Then we spun the numbers again and came up with the number nine. Then we counted down nine and pulled out that one box and opened it. In that box there were 1,000 individual tickets. My function then was to take a knife and stick it into that box somewhere and they would remove a ticket. We did that and someone won $100,000. But I think anyone who has paid money for one of those lottery tickets, if they could have seen that wall, if they could have seen the fantastic odds against them, would have felt much better about placing $2 in a horse race where at least at worst they get a ten-to-one chance of winning something.

There are several things that have yet to be done for the benefit of racing in this country. Whether our present Minister of Agriculture has the intestinal fortitude to do it or not I seriously doubt. One of them is to allow the provinces to decide for themselves whether they want off-track betting. Another one is to attempt to persuade them, and to provide statistics in support, that the government's share must be reduced and that they will take less out in order to gain more money.

Mr. Whelan: Which government, this government?

Mr. Cook: All governments.

Mr. Whelan: It is 0.6 per cent to the federal government.

Mr. Cook: It is 0.6 per cent to the federal government, says the Minister of Agriculture. What he did not report was the surplus that the government keeps from that 0.6 per cent, to the detriment of the individual bettor across Canada.

The implications for racing with this new legislation, which I fully approve of, are substantial. It is a good move this government has made and I am pleased that they have done it.

As a final word, Winston Churchill in his declining years was once asked by a reporter, if he had to live his life over again, what would he change, what would he have done differently? After much thought, his statement was: "I wish I had bet more on the black at Monte Carlo!" I suspect that if I am asked that same question in my declining years, my answer would be: "I wish I had found more time to spend at race tracks!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I have a few more brief comments, but because of the nature of them I wonder if we might call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If that is agreed, it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) had the floor, but the chair has been advised that there may be a point of order with respect to last night's proceedings.

Point of Order—Mr. MacKay

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MACKAY—BILL C-108—REQUESTED CHANGE IN RECORDING OF VOTE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is very brief. It has to do with the vote I registered last evening with respect to Bill C-108. Due to some confusion or juxtaposition of my seat at the time the vote was taken, the vote I cast was wrongly ascribed. I wish to be on record as having voted for Bill C-108—with the government in this instance—and I request that the record be changed. If it requires a motion to accomplish this, I would be pleased to put a motion; but if that is not required, I would just like to have this on the record, and I have already spoken to Journals about it.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, if it is required to seek unanimous consent for the purpose of reverting to motions to present a motion which would clarify the anomaly referred to by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), I as well would be quite prepared either to move or to second that motion.

In any event, the point of order is to clarify any anomaly at the time of the taking of the vote last night. At the conclusion of the taking of the votes from the side opposite and when the last vote had been recorded, both the hon. member for Central Nova and I rose with the intent and purpose of supporting the bill. As I pointed out on a brief question of privilege last night, the bill before us at that point did contain a matter of importance and urgency to maritime Canada. It is incumbent on me to join with the hon. member for Central Nova and to inquire about whatever the proper procedure is to remove any anomaly with respect to the recording of that vote last night. It was my intention—and it remains my intention—to support the content of Bill C-108 at third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) have both been so kind as to advise the Chair of their intention. Of course, being in the chair last night, I was also aware of the events in relation to the vote. I think probably the best way to do this is to seek the unanimous consent of the House to have the hon. member for Central Nova and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East recorded as having voted in favour of Bill C-108 last night. That constitutes a correction of the House of Commons Debates record, Hansard, and I presume there would be no difficulty for hon. members throughout the House in that regard. However, it is procedurally necessary to seek the unanimous consent of the House to make that change in Hansard. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan (for Mr. Chrétien) that Bill C-117, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

• (1410)

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in checking the blues I see there is one thing I forgot to include in the statistics, particularly when I was comparing lotteries with racetracks. That is that the average lottery returns approximately 45 cents on the dollar to those who buy lottery tickets. I do not believe there is a racetack in Canada where it is not over 80 cents on the dollar. I want that on the record to indicate my total displeasure with the proliferation of lotteries which seems to be taking place to the detriment of my favourite sport.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I thought a long time about whether or not I would discuss the matters I am going to discuss now. I came to the conclusion that it was probably better if I did as someone who has enjoyed racing most of his life. That, Mr. Speaker, is the other side of racing. I personally believe I have seen the odd housewife who has lost the week's grocery money at a racetrack and is going home to face an irate husband.

A personal story: a number of years ago an older man who knew that I knew something about racing came to see me and informed me that he had inherited $8,000, which was his total savings at the time, and that in the course of a three-month period he had managed to lose all but $50 through ever-increasing bets and in ever-increasing desperation. He wanted me to do two things. One, tell the racetrack in hopes that they might return his money. Of course, I had to explain very carefully that a racetrack only provides the means to bet and it was something that could not be done. Second, he wanted me, of all things, to give him the name of the winning horse in a race so that he could bet his last $50 and start on the road to recovery. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have found over a lifetime that the minute I tout someone on a horse, that is the kiss of death! Believe me, if Seattle Slew were running a race against a billy goat and I told someone to bet on the horse, I am convinced that somehow or other the billy goat would win the race! So I did not do that either.

The question that bothered me, Mr. Speaker, and one I have thought a great deal about over the years, is what responsibility does the racing industry have to those who cannot look after themselves. Really, I do not believe there is an answer. Do you stop gambling on horses because of the very few that get themselves in trouble? Of course, there are many rationalizations such as, if it were not that, it would be something else, and I suspect that is true. No racetrack wants or encourages people to risk more than they can afford. The track does not have the climate of a Nevada casino. It is a place where people go to have a thoroughly good time and not lose too much. If people lost more than they could afford, the game would soon stop because it was destroying people. But there is the odd person this does happen to and I hope I do not do a disservice, whether to myself, the industry or this House, by suggesting that on the same basis, because automobile accidents kill people, we should do away with the automobile. I finally came to the rationalization that the joy this sport has for literally millions of people, the enjoyment people in and out of the industry get from it, far outweighs the odd person—and it does not happen that often—who cannot control themselves and are hurt severely by the fact that they get carried away at a race track.

I wanted to mention that because I know there are many religious people in Canada who feel it is sinful to gamble. I suggest to them it is sinful to buy a lottery ticket or play bingo in church basements, that those are sins of equal magnitude, in the moral sense, to that of placing a wager at a racetrack. It is very simple for anyone to buy a racing form which contains more information about horses than perhaps any other publication in the world. It makes The Sporting Life published in England look like a rank amateur in terms of information on horse flesh. If a person does that, then it is an intellectual game of matching their wits, intelligence and ability in comparing horses with everyone else at the racetrack. As Will Rogers said, what makes a horserace is a difference of opinion, and that you find in substantial amounts at any race meeting.

The moral issue involved in racing is something which has been with us from the beginning and always will be with us. When you look at the history of racing, going back 3,500 years, it is obvious that it is an old and honoured entertainment medium—sport if you will, but entertainment as well. Certainly an afternoon in the sun watching horses run is far superior, to my mind at least, to sitting in a dark theatre watching flickering shadows on a screen.

I wanted to speak on the moral aspects of this issue for the simple reason that I would sincerely hope we never reach a time where we deny pleasure to so many because the odd person will hurt himself or herself. Note that the hurt is self-inflicted and they are not encouraged to continue. In fact, anyone in the industry would say: "Come and have a good time but do not bet too much." But of course, someone does periodically. To those people we offer our sympathy and understanding, but at the same time they did it to themselves and hopefully most of them realize it.

I am pleased with this legislation, I certainly intend to vote for it, and I think having covered that one small point I will conclude my remarks.

• (1420)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any great length on this bill, but I must confess that when I do arrive at my conclusion it will not be quite the same as the one arrived at by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook).

At the beginning I do want to say that what the hon. member said was both entertaining and informative. I thought that his presentation on behalf of the industry was very worthwhile. I have rarely heard anyone speak as fondly of a sport as did the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby both this morning and again this afternoon. As I listened to him speak I came to the conclusion that perhaps he thought the bill was brought into the House for the purpose of banning horse racing. He pleaded eloquently for its continuation. Although I have no particular interest in horse racing at all other than from a purely spectator point of view, I do, however, what to make a few comments on it.

What we are talking about really is extending the opportunity for people to bet without going to the track. We are calling it by the interesting phrase "inter-track betting". It is, in fact, off-track betting. It is off-track betting because it will be possible for a person to go to a track where there is absolutely no horse racing taking place, go to a wicket and place a bet without ever being involved in either seeing or enjoying the event. In fact, it will even be possible—if I understand it correctly, and I will eagerly await the minister's correction if I am not reading the bill accurately—for an individual to place his or her bet by telephone. In all fairness, I must say that is off-track betting. That is not inter-track betting. Inter-track betting is where you go to a track to watch the races and while you are at the pari-mutuel window, as a result of knowledge you have about a race going on at another track, you want to place an additional bet on a horse or on a number of horses that are running at the same time at another place.

I want to suggest to the minister that it is entirely possible, if you read this legislation and think about it, that rather than being beneficial in terms of encouraging the maintenance of racing at those tracks which are currently undergoing financial difficulty, this bill may well discourage people who otherwise may have gone to the likes of Fort Erie from Toronto. These people would have paid admission, purchased their lunch, would have paid to park their vehicle and would have contributed to the general maintenance of that track other than in a betting sense. It is now possible under this legislation for the tracks to run and to operate without anyone ever going to see the races.

I say to the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby that that surely flies in the face of everything he has been speaking about. That surely is not encouraging the sport to flourish. That is not encouraging horse racing as a spectator sport. What we are doing today, and let us make no mistake about it, is facilitating the desire of those who bet on horse racing to bet in any way they want without having to go to the track. I must confess that does not appeal to me. I do not happen to think that we should be seeking new ways to encourage people to bet money. I do not think that is a particularly useful exercise.

Mr. Lapierre: That is not your business.

Mr. Deans: It is my business. If it were not my business, this bill would not be before the House of Commons. I suggest to the hon. member that his interjection is both inappropriate and inaccurate. If it were not my business, the bill would not be here. Therefore, it is my business.

I think this legislation will ultimately have the opposite effect which the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby in all good faith indicated was his desire and his hope. I think it will undermine the sport. I do not think it will undermine the betting angle. In fact, I think it may well encourage more people to risk their pay cheques, like the lady about whom he spoke. It may well encourage people to risk their pay cheques because they no longer have to find the wherewithal to get to the track.

The next step to this is clear. The Jockey Club in Ontario, if you want to speak of Ontario, will say that not only is it inconvenient for people to have to go all the way to the track where the race is being run, but it is a bit inconvenient for them to have to go to the track in their own municipality. We do not have racetracks in every municipality. In order to encourage people to take part in this sport of horse racing, maybe it, the Jockey Club, should be given the opportunity to open an adjunct to the track—maybe one in every small town which will be called part of the track—to be run by the Jockey Club. That would enable everyone to have access to this marvellous sport. But what it will also do is enable everyone to have access to the betting operation which has nothing at all to do with the sport itself.

I have serious reservations about this legislation. The hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby, in setting out the financial condition that is being enjoyed by the majority of the horse racing fraternity, indicated quite clearly that there are now, and have been for years, substantial sums of money going into horse racing. He pointed out that more people attend horse races than attend any other sport. On balance, the sport is in reasonably good shape. I am not suggesting that it might not have the urge or the need to improve its financial position, but at the moment it is certainly in reasonably good shape.

The hon. member pointed out that last year in Canada $1.7 billion was placed on bets. With some pride, and I can say with some justifiable pride, the hon. member, who has spent his entire life at the racetrack or thereabouts, told us that about 14 million people have attended horse races. He is in this House a great deal and I do not know how he gets to the racetrack all the time. Be that as it may, the industry seems to be flourishing quite nicely. Therefore, why do we want to discourage those people from going to the horse races? Why do we want to make it unnecessary for them to go? Why do we want to open this up so that whatever number of people who would go to the racetrack, only half of them will now go? Instead of going to the track they will simply nip down to the corner and place their wager. Why would we want to do that? It seems to me that this bill is undermining the very soul of the industry that it is intended to support.

Mr. Lapierre: It's energy saving.

Mr. Deans: My colleague who does marvellous research on things such as this has brought to my attention a letter sent by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). It concerns inter-track betting. It states that if Greenwood opens its pari-mutuel system in order to bet on races at another track, it is not expected to generate nearly the attendance figures realized at racing events. Perhaps the minister will find it in his heart to answer, when given the opportunity, the following question: Is it not reasonable to assume that people who go to race tracks for the purpose of placing bets and enjoying racing, but who have to travel some 50 or 100 miles in order to do so, will choose simply to go down to the closed neighbourhood track or to telephone the local track to place their bets? Of course attendance will be detrimentally affected by the legislation, and the end result will be a further deterioration, as the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby indicated, of a fairly progressive, reasonably lucrative and well-run operation. It will be a further deterioration of the industry, and we will be back here in the not too distant future looking for other ways to get more money to compensate for the loss in attendance, and therefore the loss of revenue to people dependent upon race tracks for their livelihood.

• (1430)

I must confess that I am having difficulty with this bill. I am trying, and I know the minister realizes it. It is difficult for me to bring myself to vote against this legislation, given the priority the government has placed upon it. It is difficult, but I think I might be forced into it.

Mr. Young: I might join you.

Mr. Deans: The hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young) indicates that he may even join me, because he is as worried about it as I am.

I am sure Mr. Speaker is wondering why we are dealing with this matter today. Why is the government attempting to undermine the stability of racing in Canada with this legislation, given that there are many other important matters with which we could be dealing, such as unemployment? Imagine what we might have been able to do in an afternoon discussing the major unemployment problems confronting people from coast to coast in the country.

An hon. Member: This won't cost jobs.

Mr. Deans: The hon. member whose riding I cannot recall at the moment, who is sitting over there in the back where she ought to be, is interjecting and saying that there will be no loss of jobs. I suggest to her that there will be a loss of jobs at the tracks as a result of this piece of legislation. It will make it unnecessary for as many people to work at the tracks as were needed prior to its implementation. I am absolutely positive—and only the future will bear me out—that as a result of this legislation a deterioration in the crowds at the tracks will inevitably occur.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: What is out of order? I am entitled to speak to the bill.

Mr. Cook: Would the hon. member accept a point of clarification?

Mr. Deans: No. I will be happy to accept it when I am finished. Clarification is not something one offers, and on top of that, obviously it was not a point of order.

I do not doubt for one moment that the crowds will dwindle away as the punters make their bets by telephone. Local tracks will only require people to relay the bets. There will be a loss of direct employment, such as the people who sell at concessions or work at the kinds of employment which go with crowds in attendance. I think the legislation is self-defeating. In fact, I was really surprised when I listened to the hon. member that he himself did not come to that conclusion.

Then, of course, there are all the other various arguments. What next, I say? The hon. member said that there has been horse racing since there have been domestic horses and that as a result there has been betting of one kind or another since the inception of horse racing. That is not really a good argument, nevertheless. Many things have been in existence since the beginning of time that we do not condone or support, so I can hardly think that that argument is persuasive.

Then he went on to explain, as did the minister, that the racing industry needs this legislation. I suppose the same argument could be used by those who run football teams in Canada. For example, Montreal lost substantial sums of money over two or three seasons. Its football team may feel that it would be helpful to have pari-mutuel betting on football so that it could derive some revenue from the betting which takes place to offset its losses. Then there are the various hockey teams across the country which are not really making it at the gate. They might feel that pari-mutuel betting on hockey games would be useful.

Mr. Lapierre: Wait until the next bill.

Mr. Deans: This is why I am talking about it. That is exactly why. The hon. member is a good straight man. I need him, I really do. Then there are soccer teams which are barely ekeing out a living. I am sure they would like to have the benefit of pari-mutuel betting. We could have it at the local ball diamond. If it is baseball, one would nip down to the local ball diamond, go to the concession and place a wager on the ball game. One might not bet on the game which is being played at the time—and there might not even be a game taking place—but on some other game which is being played in some other part of the country or some other part of the world. It could be argued that this would really be helpful and that it would be one way for them to make up their losses. The hon. member opposite who interjected said that I should wait for the next bill. That is exactly what worries me.

I know Mr. Speaker will be interested in what I am about to say, and that is that I do not like the drift toward more and more legalized gambling. I am no moralist, but I do not like the drift which is taking place. I did not like it when I was a member of the Ontario legislature and we began with—what was the name of it?

Mr. Cullen: Wintario.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Wintario. At that time I said that it was the thin edge of the wedge. Incidentally, it was to be used for research, for medical care, and for all those marvellous things which the world was being denied.

Mr. Collenette: It was a Tory pork barrel.

Mr. Deans: The hon. member opposite says that it was a Tory pork barrel. Perhaps that is an unfair description of it, but it is not that wrong.

This piece of legislation further encourages people to gamble. It does not encourage them to attend horse racing, to enjoy the sport, or to participate in it in any way. It encourages them to gamble, that is all. Within days of the passage of this legislation we will be asked to approve further legislation to encourage people to gamble even more. If that is the level to which the government has sunk, if that is the level of administration which we have in the country, if that is the sense of priority of the government—and given the serious economic problems of the day, I say, as many have said over the last number of months, that the government has been in office too long—then it has lost touch with reality. It is no longer responding to what affects average families in every community across the land.

There are two million people unemployed today, and industry after industry is closing its doors. Industry is operating at 50 per cent of its capacity. People are looking for homes and cannot find them. People are paying mortgages at 19.75 per cent. People owe more on their homes than their homes are worth.

• (1440)

This legislation is before us at a time when the government is unable to find money to sustain medical care at a level that is acceptable across the country. Its priority seems to be to open up gambling a little wider in order that more people can be trapped and pulled into the net. I find it very difficult to see my way clear to support this legislation in the face of those other matters. I do not want to become emotional about the question and if everything else was accomplished which needs to be accomplished in this country I might consider this legislation even worthy of consideration. However, under the current prevailing conditions I simply cannot agree with it.

I cannot help but feel that we are being conned somewhere along the line. I want to join with the hon. member and say with all sincerity that I find no problem in encouraging people to go and watch horse races or to see football, tennis or whatever sporting or artistic event they may find enjoyable. I believe that people do not have enough opportunities to seek release from the pressures which have been brought upon them as a result of the government's economic and social policies. But it remains unclear to me how the passage of this piece of legislation will give people that enjoyment.

It has often been said that lotteries and betting in general are, in fact, a tax on the poor. That statement is as true today as it was when it was first made. It is the dream of sudden wealth. I found the example given by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby about the odds of winning lotteries most enlightening. It is quite clear that lotteries are a tax because the chance of winning any of those lotteries is virtually non-existent. It is true that someone wins, but the odds are almost impossible.

It is equally true that if the necessity to go to the event itself is removed, then all that has been accomplished is the creation of another lottery. Instead of horse racing being a sport, it will have been turned into another lottery where a person can run down to an off track betting office or phone in to put his bet on the line for a win, place or show or perhaps a triacta. In effect, it is another attempt to extract additional money from the public. A substantial amount of revenue that comes from betting goes to the government and God only knows for what it will be used. I certainly do not know and I am sure the minister could not explain it. It goes into the general revenue, in any event.

The benefit which flows to individual farmers who sell, grow or provide any of the necessities for the breeding or maintaining of horses is not enhanced one iota by this piece of legislation, even though those supplies are substantial.

I wish I could see the merit of this legislation. I am always reluctant to oppose ideas. I would like to be positive and in favour of the matter but the merit of it escapes me.

I talked to my colleague who will undoubtedly raise these matters. He represents an area in Beaches which has a race track. He will talk about the problems attendant upon that track and its surrounding area.

As I have said, I am trying to understand it but I cannot see how this bill can be supported. Perhaps the minister would care to enter the debate again. I would be happy to give him that opportunity because I would like to hear once more, without going into the details of horse racing or its merit as a sport, why we want to encourage betting or gambling. What is the merit of that? Frankly, it escapes me and I do not understand it. Unless a subsequent speaker is able to convince me, I frankly do not feel that I could inflict the necessity upon my colleagues even to consider voting for this piece of legislation. I believe that we must draw the line somewhere.

If it is true that certain tracks are in financial difficulty, it may be a reflection of the public's sense of value of horse racing more than anything else. It may be the attitude of the Canadian public toward the general sport of horse racing. If that is so, it cannot be claimed that if the public is not supporting it more people are needed to bet in order for tracks to continue operating. I look forward to hearing the answer because I must say to the minister, who is a very sensitive soul at the best of times, that I am sure that deep down below his green hat he has views about the concerns I have raised.

I ask him to show me how the farmer will benefit from this legislation. If the sport is to become more desirable within society and more appealing to people as a sport or form of entertainment—regardless of betting—then show me how this can be accomplished by opening up betting even wider than it is today. Show me how this can be done by discouraging people from attending the event itself. How can you encourage the development of a spectator sport if you encourage people not to go to it? Does that not strike the minister as being odd? It certainly strikes me as being odd. Therefore, I am unable to support the bill.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there time for the hon. member to answer one question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Collenette): The hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby wishes to ask a question. This requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cook: The original part of the hon. member's speech dealt with the fact that people will stop going to race tracks since they would be able to make a bet by telephone. In the state of New York there are off-track betting shops on practically every street corner throughout the cities in that state, yet attendance at New York race tracks has dropped insignificantly as a result. How does the hon. member explain his position with those facts staring him in the face?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am delighted to have given the hon. member the opportunity to ask a question. He has answered the question himself. It is true that if you provide alternative methods for betting then fewer people go to the track. The hon. member has said so himself. There are fewer people attending the tracks in the state of New York than there were prior to the introduction of off-track betting. Therefore, I can only assume that, having answered the question himself, the hon. member feels no necessity to have me answer it for him.

• (1450)

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I will start my remarks by saying, firstly, that I do not know anything about horse racing, and then I will speak for 25 minutes!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Why I am discussing this matter is because I was raised by a grandfather who owned racehorses, and for as long as I can remember I have heard about horse racing. My in-laws, too, have been great fans of the sport for many years, but as I am a mother and a Member of Parliament, I do not have much time for it. I must say that I have been in close contact with that industry for over 25 years.

I just want to answer a few questions in the mind of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). For instance, he is quite interested in knowing whether less people would go to the track and whether there would be a loss of jobs at the track. The hon. member might know that the jobs we are discussing are not only those located at the track. For every one job at the track, there are three or four jobs related to that industry outside the track. Of course, I am referring to the farms and those who train horses and all the related industries which make the necessary equipment. For instance, in one evening there are usually ten races with ten horses in each race, which means 100 horses for one single track. Considering the number of tracks in Canada, this means that many horses must be trained, which necessitates much investment. For those who are involved it is an industry, and for those who are attending it is mostly a sport.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my grandfather was involved in this sport for several years in Berthierville, where up to a few years ago they still had a racetrack that operated on a regular basis almost year-round. Unfortunately, because of the economic situation, and despite government assistance, the racetrack had to close down.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding there is a racetrack which is worth over $10 million with the buildings and everything around it. The track has been closed for several years. We are talking about an industry that is losing money every year, not as far as the betting is concerned, but because racing is becoming more and more expensive. In fact, I think this bill will help the industry considerably, because at the present time, one of the problems is to have enough income to be able to afford good quality horses and trained staff to run the industry.

I do not think my colleague quite understands the fact that the bill will provide for inter-track betting. He seems to forget that first of all, we must have races, and with races, everything that is necessary to run them including equipment, horses, jockeys and trainers, and if all these elements are present, then the race will take place no matter where the bettor happens to be. More people will be involved in races, and I hope that thanks to modern telecommunications, some day races will also be shown on television. I do not see anything here that is against public morality, since this activity is very strictly regulated and controlled by the authorities of the various provincial and federal departments and agencies concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should realize there is all this "underground" money which never gets to the track, which is not converted into taxable wages, and in the final instance, we have millions of dollars circulating under the counter, which are not benefiting the Canadian economy but are benefiting an underground network, and are of no direct benefit to the industry. This money circulates in shady circles only and does not go directly to the owners and drivers and the entire racing industry. It is this money that we, as a government, want to bring back into legal channels. Will this create jobs? Yesterday, a number of mayors made statements on the subject, including the mayor of Quebec City, who said that probably more than 300 jobs in Quebec City would be saved thanks to this bill. If in Quebec City, which has 500,000 people and has had a racetrack for a number of years, municipal authorities feel that 300 jobs will be saved, this bill adds up to several thousand jobs across Canada.

That is why it is a real pleasure for me to support this bill and I hope it will be passed by the House with the requisite speed, as agreed, so that money spent by Canadians on this type of recreation will be channelled to an industry that creates jobs, that will make it possible for farmers to make a decent living—an industry that formerly saw mostly American horses racing on Canadian tracks—and for Canadians to raise good quality horses and racing fans to see a good race.

Mr. Speaker, every year the summer Grand Prix is held at Blue Bonnet race track. Last week we celebrated the track's 75th anniversary. The statistics for the last few years show that a track like Blue Bonnet has been losing from 500 to 1,000 spectators each year, and I think that by allowing pari-mutuel betting and helping the industry, it will be possible to save several hundred jobs in the Montreal area alone. Some day, I hope it will be possible to open the Richelieu race track, which is in my riding, because it would provide a magnificent showplace for off-track betting. I can imagine the giant screens and people going to the wickets in the back placing their bets on the tracks in Toronto, Quebec City or Trois-Rivières. The whole point of the exercise, which will be strictly controlled by government authorities, is to generate income for the industry and the Canadian public in general through the taxes paid by people working in the industry.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a correction, because earlier it was said that the federal government was getting a very generous slice of the tax levied at the track. Perhaps I should make it clear that out of every dollar generated at the racetrack, 81 cents goes back to the bettors, 7.5 cents goes to the provincial government, the owner of the horse receives 5.7 cents if he wins the purse, the track gets 4.4 cents and the federal government .06 cent. The bill makes it quite clear that the purpose is not to get rid of the federal government's budget deficit but to encourage this part of the private sector, and I feel that this type of privately-owned industry which is very well regulated and is able to operate very smoothly with private funds and government assistance, will benefit from a bill like the one before the House today. It will no longer be necessary to make telephone calls to bookies, since now calls will be made directly to the track. Perhaps I should explain. Telephone calls will be made, but the money will have to be deposited beforehand. People who enjoy betting on races will have to have the money. They cannot get credit to bet on a race. The money will have to be deposited in advance, and the bettor will use a code number to indicate the track and express his preferences.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any reason to worry about people running up debts. At every corner store, bettors can buy tickets for all kinds of lotteries, which, as my colleague so aptly said, offer the worst odds imaginable, namely, one to two or three million, and the proceeds do not go to any of our industries and are really indirect taxes in disguise. In this particular case, I feel that we are supporting a viable industry that will give thousands of Canadians—here again, I think this has been abundantly demonstrated by my colleague from North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook)—an industry that will open new horizons for Canadians and give people who want to have fun their money's worth. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we must not forget the recreational side of our lives here in Canada. Of course, we can be serious. From my vantage point on this side of the House, I see that since the beginning of this session, we have passed quite a lot of very serious bills, which were still being debated yesterday evening. The energy bill was passed. I feel that if this bill is used to give thousands of racing enthusiasts a chance to get actively involved in this sport, we shall have opened new horizons for these people, and the industry in general will benefit.

• (1500)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the Chair has been advised that there may be a disposition to complete all stages of this bill before four o'clock this afternoon, at which time we would ordinarily go to the private members' hour. I wanted to indicate to the House what I have indicated privately, that in the event that the debate were to be completed prior to four o'clock, then, upon the understanding of hon. members, regardless of the time, the Chair would call it four o'clock and proceed with private members' hour. That is, as I understand, the wish of hon. members.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have an opportunity for a more lengthy speech on this very important piece of legislation but because of the pressures on the time of the House I shall try to keep my remarks short. I am sure the minister will appreciate my forbearance in that regard.

I am not an expert on the subject of this legislation but I find the pastime of horse racing a most enjoyable entertainment and a good way to meet friends for an afternoon.

I am very conscious of what the economic impact on the industry could be if we do not pass the legislation. As the minister has pointed out, the industry employs in excess of 40,000 people. I believe the proposal to increase the commission rates as well as to broaden the economic base of race tracks, particularly the small ones, will have a favourable effect upon all concerned—the tracks, the horsemen and the breeders. We should consider the legislation as a package, and I propose to examine it in that light.

Many small tracks are losing money today, and for some there is the threat that they may have to go out of business. That would have an important impact upon a number of communities. There are upwards of 100 tracks in Canada, so 100 communities would be affected if they went out of existence. That is what could happen if this legislation did not go through.

As the last speaker pointed out, it is not just the racetracks but the people who supply the tracks, the restaurants and the breeders who are affected. Some participants in the industry have viewed inter-track betting as a threat to their wellbeing. I have been concerned with this aspect of the legislation because it is the smaller tracks that have expressed such concerns, and I think we have to be aware of them.

In assessing the legislation it occurred to me that the limited season and the limited market base of the smaller tracks will be expanded. The state of the economy today, with high interest rates and increased operating costs, could mean losses to many of the small tracks, so there is the danger that a number of them could be shut down. This legislation offers a very wise and practical way to approach that problem by allowing the tracks to make more use of their facilities by lengthening the season, thus spreading the fixed costs of a very expensive facility over a broader market base.

The bill does not authorize off-track betting. There are some people in the industry who would like to see that come about right away, but the minister has not chosen to introduce it. There are arguments pro and con but I do not propose to get into them at this time.

In order to take part in telephone betting that the minister introduced earlier as well as inter-track betting, the participant will have to go to the local track. For inter-track betting in particular, he has to use it in a very extensive way. He makes the bet there, he will probably have a meal and spend the evening there. This pastime has been popular in the United States. I understand that in the recent running of the Preakness, 20 tracks broadcast the race on their facilities. This allowed them access to one of the major races in the country. This can be done for a one-race event such as the Preakness or for a full racing program.

The smaller tracks are concerned about the impact upon them of this change in the legislation. I would have preferred the minister to be more forthcoming about the direction in which the legislation will be administered. There will have to be protection for the track and for the horsemen. I am sure the minister is aware of this and will probably express his views on it at third reading.

I understand that the minister is considering a limitation of the use of inter-track betting and that no track will participate unless it wants to and that no track can participate if it will infringe upon the operating market of a neighbouring facility. Geographical regions will have to be established. The way this is administered over the years will obviously be very important to the smaller tracks. There must be protection for the horsemen, and I hope the minister proposes to administer the legislation so that no track will be allowed to offer programs of inter-track betting to the detriment of the existing program of live racing.

This legislation offers some very important advantages. Obviously it means more revenue for the tracks. The smaller tracks can broaden their market base and show the top races in the country. That is a very important element in the better use of their facilities.

As I pointed out, there is a disadvantage to the degree that protection is not provided to the smaller tracks and horsemen. The economic position of these participants in the industry could be hindered rather than helped by the legislation. I hope the minister will respond on that point at third reading.

I think the government should consider actions such as this in a much broader way.

• (1510)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has on many occasions said we cannot do this or we cannot do that because it will cost us money, or that we cannot do it because it would cut across the United States policies or European policies which are undermining our programs here. This is an action which the government is proposing to take which is totally within our control and proposed to be taken in a way that will not cost the treasury any money. It may well result in increased revenues for the provinces, certainly it will result in increased revenues for the race tracks themselves, to the extent that they pay corporate and personal taxes. There will be increased revenues for the federal government and for the provincial governments.

This is why we have been saying, Mr. Speaker, that the government should be trying to identify a number of these things. We have identified the higher profile in so far as changing certain provisions of the budget and certain elements in the way the Foreign Investment Review Act is being administered is concerned. In the National Energy Program, changes there again do not necessarily cost the treasury money but can result in a much healthier economic environment. This is a smaller example, but a very important example to those people who are directly affected.

Let me comment briefly, Mr. Speaker, on the effect that this can have on a community. I was talking to my colleague from Erie (Mr. Fretz) in whose riding the Fort Erie race track is operated. I asked him what the impact would be because I had heard that there was a possibility that the Fort Erie track might be shut down. Unemployment in that part of the country is 15.6 per cent. There is less tourism this year because the cost of gasoline in Canada now is in excess of the cost of gasoline in the United States. People are not coming across the border.

Mr. Cullen: Ahem, ahem.

Mr. Wilson: I hear someone clearing his throat over there, and I would welcome a challenge from the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). I will show him figures on the cost of gasoline as between Buffalo and Fort Erie, showing that gasoline is cheaper in Buffalo than it is in Fort Erie. I can show him that in the British Columbia marketplace, I can show him that in the Quebec or New Hampshire marketplace. That is what is happening in the energy market today.

Mr. Breau: In Canadian dollars?

Mr. Wilson: That is in U.S. dollars, it is in comparable dollars, in comparable sized gallons. I say that for the benefit of the member who does not understand what is happening in the energy industry. It is affecting directly a community in the country, Fort Erie and the Niagara Falls area. This is in addition to lay-offs which Inco has caused in Port Colborne, where several hundred people are affected by a strike, also in Fleet Industries, where 300 people have been laid off. So there is a very serious economic problem in that part of the country. If on top of that we layer a shutdown of a major employer such as the Fort Erie racetrack, we could have a very serious situation in what used to be a thriving part of our country.

I would also point out that the Fort Erie track in itself has lost a secondary market. That secondary market is Kitchener and Toronto and the communities around the major population centres of Toronto. The price of gasoline is causing people to think twice before they will drive 70, 80 or 90 miles. That market is shrinking, and that is having a direct impact on the attendance at the Fort Erie racetrack. That same problem, that same phenomenon is affecting a number of racetracks in the country today. Therefore, it is important that there be this legislation to allow those tracks access to the former market base that they had. To that extent it is important that we proceed with this legislation.

Moral considerations have been raised in the House. I have had these raised also with me in discussions I have had with my colleagues and with others outside the House. We cannot ignore the impact of the increase in any breakdown of the morality of our people. My colleague from North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) has outlined it very clearly. He said that there will be a greater degree of control on organized crime as a result of this legislation. He has pointed out the comments made by Don Winterton of the Race Track Security Canada organization as well as the comments of Mr. Harold Adamson, the security director of the Ontario Jockey Club. These gentlemen have a clear understanding, being former police chiefs themselves, of the impact of organized crime on betting. I always feel concerned when it appears that there could be an increase in betting as a result of some action taken by government. But this is not one of those situations where the direct result of this legislation will be an increase in betting. It will be a more controlled, more organized betting and more under the auspices of the government than has been the case in the past.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, as a humorous sidelight, that there is one little anomaly here, an ironic situation. About three or four years ago one of the exercise boys at the Ontario Jockey Club did hit the jackpot, that one in three million, or one in a million and a half chance of winning the million dollars. He did win. He got this money and he went directly to the president of the Ontario Jockey Club, took his advice on how to invest the money. He is now living in the same elite apartment building in my riding that the president of the Jockey Club used to live in.

Mr. Cullen: Where is the president?

Mr. Wilson: So it is not all one way. There are some winners in the lottery game.

There is one other aspect of this, and I am quite serious about it. The minister changed the legislation here so that there is a much greater degree of administration of legislation under regulation at his discretion. We have seen this shift from legislative control into regulatory control to a much greater extent recently. We saw the minister enacting the telephone betting through order in council. In this bill we have seen that he has taken a large chunk of the legislation and switched it so that it will be done by regulation.

I pointed out some of the problems that the industry is concerned about. It is now subject to his regulatory capability and to the guidance that his department will give him on how the regulations should be administered. Bureaucratic control here again is taking over another industry to a greater extent.

We saw in Bill C-48 last year that the minister of energy said time and again: "This is the way we will administer this act." Now, less than a year having passed since that legislation was enacted by Parliament, we have seen the minister changing the direction that he had told us originally was the way in which he was going to administer the discretionary elements of Bill C-48. It is a very serious matter that we are considering here, the shift from legislative to regulatory control. I will not get into a great debate on this today but I just comment to the House that this is something that we on this side take very seriously. We feel that there must be a reversal of this trend. I encourage the minister to take that message to his cabinet colleagues.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe, we should be going ahead with this legislation. I recognize that there are some problems on the moral side. People are concerned that this will increase betting. I am satisfied it will not increase betting but will control it to a greater extent.

• (1520)

I repeat my request to the minister. I think it would be helpful to us in voting on this legislation if the minister would be somewhat more forthcoming about how he proposes to regulate those protective elements to which I referred earlier in my remarks. If the minister is able to satisfy our concerns, I believe we should be able to pass this bill quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The few comments that I want to make in this House are in fact in support of this bill, and I must admit first of all that I am prejudiced in favour of the bill as I have owned racehorses in the past and, as soon as I can afford it, in other words as soon as my political career is over, I intend to buy more amblers and trotters to take part in this sport which is really exceptional and important for the economic life of our country.

I therefore believe that it is important to recall, Mr. Speaker, that in Quebec, for instance, over 4,000 workers are directly employed because of horseraces and that there has been a problem these last few years because the purses have not increased at the same rate as inflation, with the easily understandable result that good horses raised in Canada have left the country for New York or New Jersey, where the purses are much larger precisely because these American states have tax systems which benefit the owners of good horses.

The growing concern about small racetracks was mentioned earlier. I believe that what small racetracks have to fear is the disappearance of the larger race tracks which allow their good horses to graduate to a better track. If race tracks are closed, such as Richelieu Park, as they have closed elsewhere in Quebec, it is precisely because there are fewer bets in Montreal, which means that less money can be earned, and if there is not as much money in the purses, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand that the demand for grooms, blacksmiths, oats and pari-mutuel employees is lower. This therefore causes the loss of jobs. If bets are placed legally, there is nothing immoral about it. What was immoral was to have to go through people who had no right to do what this bill will allow. The Queen's Plate will be held in Toronto next week. I shall be there, Mr. Speaker, to see the horse owned by Jean-Louis Lévesque, Le Danseur, win the race. Last year, the winner was the horse owned by Jack Carmichael, who is a good friend of mine. I must tell the House that these men are great citizens who do a lot to help Canada and their province.

The pari-mutuel is a legitimate and beneficial system. I am certainly not afraid to see this system grow, as the previous speaker said, because if it grows, it will mean more revenue for the provinces. Our deficit will thus be reduced, but what is most important is that more money will be re-distributed to the racing industry. This indutry has never received much assistance from the government. On the contrary, for the provincial governments, the racing industry is often a sector which has been milked dry, and if this industry wants our assistance today, I believe that it is our duty to do immediately everything possible to guarantee that racing will survive. The example of the Fort Erie track was mentioned earlier.

We could also mention the case of Windsor. In the case of Windsor, Mr. Speaker, where the unemployment rate is high, many people who worked for the pari-mutuel at the Windsor racetrack did this as a second job, but this has now become their main source of employment because there are no more jobs in the automobile industry. What will happen to these people if we drop the pari-mutuel system today, Mr. Speaker? The racing industry creates a lot of jobs and produces a lot of spin-off employment, and too often it has been neglected by the government which only saw races as a way of raising money. In fact, contrary to what people think, if the big racetracks are in good shape, the smaller tracks will be as well, and it only makes sense.

During the past few years, Mr. Speaker, we have set up various programs, including advance betting, where the bets vary according to the pool. We initiated telephone bets and today, we are introducing inter-track betting, and I hope that soon we will be able to revise the commissions taken by governments on each $2 bet to give the tracks a larger percentage, and finally, that we shall have a form of all-track betting which is similar to what already exists in the State of New York.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook). As a racing enthusiast myself, I could appreciate his comments. He mentioned that his parents are from Kentucky. Personally, I was able to go to Churchill Downs several times to see the Kentucky Derby, when the winners were River Ridge and Secretariat. This year, I had an invitation, but I had to stay here. But rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as I leave Parliament for good and start to make a little money, I am going to buy some race horses again. Maybe some day, I will have a horse that will race in the Queen's Plate in Toronto, and maybe even in the Kentucky Derby.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, while I have no problem with this legislation and hope it passes through the House speedily, I do take exception to some of the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Like many other Canadians, I do not think he realizes the importance of this bill and the fact that thoroughbred horse racing and standardbred racing industry in this country is an industry. Coming from Hamilton, I think he sees an industry as something with a smokestack which belches out thick clouds of smoke and does not realize there are 40,000 people directly employed by this industry and another 60,000 employed on the sidelines.

This industry is in trouble because of the times we are in. It needs all the help it can get, and this legislation will give the industry some good new management tools it can use to make a profit. The bill would encourage the industry to grow.

I would like to read from my notes just one statement which I think lays this matter out pretty clearly.

Inter-track betting will increase revenue-producing opportunities in two ways. First, it will enable a track to draw additional patronage from its existing market. Second, it will allow a track to generate revenue from its racing in broader markets. In these ways inter-track betting will permit racing associations to make more effective utilization of their assets in today's high cost and fiercely competitive environment. Horsemen, of course, will benefit through improved purses.

In recent years, Garden City Raceway in St. Catharines, the Brockville and Owen Sound receways in Ontario and Sherbrooke Raceway in Quebec have all been unable to attract sufficient patronage and have ceased to operate. Numerous other Canadian tracks have been forced to suspend operations for extended periods. In the absence of the kinds of opportunities promised by inter-track betting, more closures are probable. The consequences of track closures extends beyond the industry, of course, into community considerations such as employment, support of local suppliers of goods and services, tourist trade and property and business taxes. Implementation of inter-track betting will not only help to preserve existing benefits to communities in which tracks are located but will also create substantial additional employment.

I feel very strongly that this legislation will go a long way toward giving tracks the boost they need in these difficult times.

As a veterinarian I would just like to spend a couple of minutes talking about horses because if these race tracks in Canada start to collapse and the business starts to go under, breeders will not be able to stay in business, and gradually we will lose the thoroughbred industry in the country. We will lose the thoroughbred horse. The thoroughbred horse is a very important part of the entire equine picture because he is an important part of breeding in many, many aspects of the equine scene. Our hacks and show horses, show jumpers, rodeo horses and chuckwagon horses are all important parts of the equine business. Without the thoroughbred behind all this, we will lose.

I feel very strongly that we should get this bill through the House and give the tracks the help they need. It will not do any harm. There might be a moral issue involved, but I cannot see that as a big thing in Canada nowadays. In view of the various lottery programs we have, I discount that.

Let us get this bill through the House and give the tracks the help they need.

• (1530)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill not because I am an expert in horse breeding or racing but, first, because I am an enthusiastic fan; second, because I want to see an important Canadian industry survive and prosper; and third, because I want to do all I can to reduce the amount of criminal activity in this country.

For several sessions now I have had a private member's bill to legalize off-track betting, the present bill being Bill C-534. My interest in the subject goes back to the days when I was solicitor general and I was convinced by many police chiefs that off-track betting would be a responsible move if we were to transfer the illegal betting made through bookies to legitimate betting authorities. At the present time, because we do not have off-track betting, millions of dollars are going through the bookies into organized crime, which in turn helps finance the drug trade, prostitution, pornography and so on. Therefore, any measure put forward by this government which will help reduce the flow of funds into organized crime, through bookmaking or otherwise, I would support, and I think this measure does so. I mentioned that I am an enthusiastic fan, although I do not frequently attend. I have had the opportunity to go to the Preakness twice, the Queen's Plate several times, and because Saratoga is the closest thoroughbred track to Montreal I have been down there many times. It is a beautiful track with some of the best thoroughbreds in the world racing there. However, I want to say to those who oppose on moral grounds offtrack betting on horse races that there is a bit of hypocrisy in that position. Very often these same people will tolerate betting at the racetracks, but they will not accept it off the racetrack. They will accept bingo in churches or community halls but they will not accept betting on races.

Mr. Patterson: They are not all like that.

Mr. Allmand: I know, I am not singling anyone out. I am just saying there are some people in this country who are inconsistent in their moral principles.

I want to deal with some other points, Mr. Speaker, raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). He said he does not know how this bill will help employment in the horse racing industry. In fact, he thinks the bill will hurt horse racing. First of all, I want to point out that this industry directly employs approximately 40,000 people in Canada. That is more than the oil industry. These people are employed in breeding, training and racing horses, and in various jobs at the racetrack. There are in Canada about 7,000 horsebreeders, and in 1980 there were 116 racing associations carrying on pari-mutuel racing. In addition, federal and provincial government revenue from horseracing in 1980 was approximately $126 million, money which did not go through the bookies into organized crime. In addition to the 40,000 direct jobs, there are very important economic spin-offs for feed suppliers, veterinarians, harness and equipment manufacturers, and the people who sell and service horse trucks and vans. Another very important economic spin-off is in the tourist business. In Ontario and Manitoba it is estimated that Americans crossing the border to visit our racetracks left behind about $90 million in 1980.

While I would prefer a complete off-track betting system, Mr. Speaker, which is what my private bill would do, this bill goes part of the way, and consequently I support it. To those who oppose it on moral grounds I ask them to look at their moral principles, be consistent and avoid hypocrisy. For those like the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain who think this bill will hurt employment, I ask them to examine the figures I have put on record to see that in fact horseracing and horse breeding is a very important business in Canada and will do a lot to help our economy and employment in those areas where this is an important function.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Collenette): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Collenette): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-117, to amend the Criminal Code.

On Clause 1—

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 2—Coming into force:

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister when it is the intention of this government that this bill be proclaimed?

Mr. Whelan: All I can tell the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, is as soon as possible.

