If the syndicate should be driven to the wall by the powerful combination which is attacking it, how would it fare with Mani-toba and the Northwest? Construction would cease, and the road already built would doubtless be shut down. The devel-opment of this country would be put back fifty years. The fail of the syndicate would empty Manitoba of its wealth and popula-tion, and ruin every man who had anything to lose. Syndicates as strong as this one have come to grief. In 1873 Jay Cooke & Co., engaged in the construction of the Northern Pacific, fell, and brought down with them scores of well-known houses and hundreds of private investors. The context now going on between

Next year the syndicate have to construct the 400 miles is of heavy work lying between the Saskatche-wau and the Rocky Mountains, and to brgin the construction of the 700 miles of rock section lying between the Landing and Lake Nipissing. Money, and an enormous amount of it, must be obtained, or else the company will go under. It is no exaggeration to say that Mr Stephen and his colleagues are face to face with a most trying orisis; and say that Mr Stephen and his colleagues are face to face with a most trying orisis; and as the fortunes of Manitoba are bound up with theirs, our position is also a critical one. At this juncture is is our duty, as it is also to our interest, to put no weapon in the hands of the syndicate's great opponent. The fate of Mr Norquay or of Mr Greenway is a triffing matter compared with the life or death of the Pacific railway company.
