as many tons of Bessemer steel rails as Great Britain, the production of the former country having been 2,044,819 gross tons from ingots made in its own works, and that of the latter country having been 1,021,847 gross tons. It has been stated that little or no development has resulted from the protection which has already been afforded the iron industries, and I am rather surprised—diverting for a moment from the main question-that this article of iron should be singled out by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) more than any other article, because during his administration as Finance Minister we know that he maintained a higher rate of duty on the petroleum produced in Ontario than this duty upon iron. It is said that iron is an article of general consumption. If so, the duties paid upon it will be evenly distributed over the country, much more so than the duties on petroleum, which the hon gentleman maintained when he was Minister of Finance. As an index to the development of the manufacture of iron in Canada, the statistics compiled by the Geological Survey show that the production of iron last year, in those branches, amounted to $2,210,062. In 1885-86 we imported from Great Britain, of bar iron, rolled or hammered, including rounds and squares, 28,759 tons; while last year, of these same articles, we imported 15,552 tons, or a decrease of 13,207 tons, indicating an increased manufacture in those articles to that extent. Now, in examining the Trade and Navigation Returns, we find that, last year, we imported of crude iron, steel and scrap for the making of finished iron and steel, and manufactures thereof, 118,446 tons, as against 77,254 tons in 1885-86, being an increase of 41,192 tons, or 53 per cent., showing that 41,000 tons of these crude materials had been imported and converted into finished articles last year, more than in 1885-86, before these additional duties were put on. The advantage in extending the bounty until 1897 is to give capitalists confidence in the stability of the protection offered. The large amount of capital required to start works on a successful scale, involving ore mining, limestone quarrying, railways, smelting, furnaces, &c., makes it indispensable to secure capital for new works, that confidence exists as to the maintenance of a needful measure of protection. Of all branches of manufacture, pig iron making is that which requires the heaviest investment of capital in proportion to the value of the product, and the greatest hazard to the investor, as if unsuccessful his money is absolutely lost, the plant being useless for any other purpose. object of the bounty is to neutralise these deterring influences, which exist strongly in a new country, and to encourage capitalists to risk their money, by giving ar adequate protection, extended over a sufficient period, to inspire confidence and ensure stability. The importance of the industry—the large investment of capital in the country resulting from it—and the fact that it employs a larger population than any other—ore, fuel and all the other articles used being home products—are such well established facts that it is not necessary to occupy time now in adverting to these points. It has been said certain localities, we have to pay the same wages, and the amount of capital necessary is not so easily obtained as it is in the United States. In 1887 the United States produced more than twice ment cannot be maintained. The influences that Mr. McDougald (Pictou.)

have prevented a greater development than now exists do not arise from that cause. The nondevelopment arises largely from the difficulty encountered in securing capital to commence these undertakings. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) adopted a different line of argument to-day from that which he adopted some days ago, in dealing with this question. former occasion, he expressed the opinion that iron manufactures would not be successful in this country, and that our policy should be to ship our iron and our coal to the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I said it was desirable to ship our ores to the United States, but I did not say that we should encourage iron manufacture here.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). I understood the hon, gentleman to say that it was our policy to ship our ores and our coal to the United States for the true development of these industries. I may say that, so far as coal is concerned, it is the opinion of those gentlemen engaged in that industry in the county I have the honor to represent, both Americans and Canadians, who thoroughly understand the business, that no advantage whatever would result to them, but the contrary would result, by the free admission of their coal to the United States in exchange for the free admission of coal into Canada, and they would not accept that arrangement without opposition. I wish now to refer to a statement made the other day by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). In discussing the pig iron duty the other day he stated that the manufacturers were drawing more bounty than they should, because he was informed that they used about three-fourths pig iron and one-fourth scrap iron, so they could get a bounty for using old scrap. I think if the hon. gentleman had been better acquainted with the facts, he would not have made that assertion. I made an enquiry of the managing director of the Londonderry works, and I received this reply:

"The statement you mention as made in the House by Mr. Watson is absolutely untrue, in so far as this company (which, being by far the largest producer of pig iron in Canada, may be presumed to be aimed at) is concerned, and you are authorised to contradict it. I am quite satisfied that it is equally untrue in regard to other makers, but, of course, I cannot assume to speak positively on that point."

Now, in relation to a statement made by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), I do not suppose he intended to mislead the House, but his statement is inaccurate as to the production of iron in 1887. He stated that the production that year was 39,000 tons. I have been unable to obtain statistics to verify that statement; the statistics I have show that the production was something like 25,000 tons. There is a payment made in some previous year which probably would lend color to his statement; but the production for that year was only 25,000. The largest production was in 1883— 84, when it was 29,000 tons. He says that the production of iron to-day is less than it was ten years ago, but he should not forget that in that interval production had ceased to be profitable, the Londonderry works had to suspend operations, and the company went into liquidation. If this measure of protection now proposed is adopted, I am certain that within production more than doubled. These works at Londonderry are running at a fair way, and with the prospect of an additional furnace being started: and in my own county a large work which represents now about half a million dollars, is being formed into a joint stock company for the smelting of iron, and the enterprising parties connected with that work are throwing all their present investment into a new concern which will extend its operations to the production of pig iron. Under all the circumstances, and in view of the importance of this industry to the people of Canada, I shall support the resolution now before the House as being in the direction of giving employment to Canadian labor to develop the iron industry on Canadian soil.

Mr. WATSON. The hon, gentleman has mentioned my name in connection with a statement I made the other night while discussing the tariff resolution. I did make that statement, and I believe that my informant is as good an authority as his informant. I do not suppose for a moment that the men who are engaged in using scrap iron and drawing a bounty for pig iron, would inform the hon. gentleman that such was the case. I am entirely opposed to the resolution now before the House. I think it is one of the most unjust and unfair taxes that could be placed on the people, and I believe, if the members of this House truly represented the people they are supposed to represent, they would reject this proposition to increase the bounty on iron. We are told by gentlemen in the Lower Provinces who live in the vicinity of those iron works, that they have all the natural advantages possible for manufacturing iron ore. If that is the case why should we give them an additional bounty beyond the \$4 a ton protection? The protection they have is equal to about 41 per cent. I find that the price of pig iron in Glasgow is \$12.10 per long ton of 2,240 lbs., or \$10.80 for a ton of 2,000 lbs., and it is upon the latter ton that the bounty or duty is paid. Now, \$4 a ton of 2,000 lbs. is equal to $41\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and I submit that that is quite a sufficient protection for an industry enjoying the natural advantage which it enjoys in Nova Scotia. The Finance Minister has felt bound to admit there were many disadvantages to offset the advantages, and the principal advantage, he considered, was, that this amount was paid directly to the people as a sort of guarantee to them on going into the business. The people of the North-West are entirely opposed to contributing this bounty towards the establishment of one industry in Canada. It is well known that at present nearly all agricultural implements are made entirely of iron, and while you place a duty of 412 per cent. on the raw material of the manufacturer, you give him a protection of 35 per cent. on the manufactured goods. I consider that the manufacturers of implements are much more to be considered than the producers of pig iron. I should like to know the value of the labor employed in producing a ton of pig iron. It is not only \$4.48 per ton of 2,000 lbs. we are paying on iron, but we are about to pay \$2 additional bounty. We are even doing more than this. We are carrying the coal and the iron at a loss over Government railways, the loss under these heads on the two or three years we will see the existing Intercolonial being placed at \$2 per ton. Weare, in fact, paying too much to maintain one or two industries in the Lower Provinces, the advantage of which only accrues to those engaged in them. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald) has said there is a falling off in wrought iron duties on account of the iron not being imported. That being the case, the country suffers a loss, while the people who benefit by the loss of public revenue are those directly interested in the This is a system we should not encourage, for it is one of taxing the whole people for the sake of two or three manufacturers in the Lower Provinces. The hon, gentleman has also told us that competition after a time will lower the prices. We have heard that statement ever since 1878, but the prediction has never been realised. If you compare the prices of Nova Scotia and Glasgow iron you find that the prices for the same quality are about the same, the Nova Scotia manufacturers obtaining every cent they can for their iron in competition with the imported iron which pays When industries do grow up under protection, in our limited market here, half a dozen large establishments are erected while there is only business for two or three. The result is they form a "combine" and put up the prices, and the people have to pay interest on the total investment, including the whole plant lying idle. Coming from the west, I am the only member who opposes the present tariff arrangements of the Government, but I think it is my duty to say to this House that, while I am the only representa-tive from Manitoba out of five, who opposes the Government on their high tariff, the present members do not represent the Conservative party in that Province. I will read an editorial from a Conservative newspaper, published in Brandon, which refers to a speech delivered by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) in answer to remarks made by me. This paper is edited by a Conservative and has always been Conservative. I affirm that 90 per cent. of the people of Manitoba are opposed to the present system of high tariff, as they feel that in every instance they have to pay the total amount of duty on agricultural implements. What did the manufacturers ask in 1883? Not increased protection on manufactured goods, but a reduc-The Governtion of the duties on raw material. ment would not, however, reduce the duty on raw materials, but they gave an additional 10 per cent. on the manufactured articles, making 35 per The Brandon Times, in commenting on the speech delivered in this House by the hon, gentleman, who lives in Brandon, who was supported by this paper, which, no doubt, considerably assisted in his election, says as follows, and I think it expresses the honest sentiments of the great majority of the people of Manitoba:

"MR. DALY AND THE TARIFF.

"Mr. Daly, in speaking on the Budget at Ottawa last week, is reported to have said:
"That the 35 per cent. duty on agricultural implements enabled the different manufacturers in the country to put more money in their business and thereby enable them to give a cheaper and better article. He took issue with Mr. Watson that 90 per cent. of the people of Manitoba were in favor of unrestricted reciprocity, and held that his own election, where this cry was urged against him, was proof of it. He admitted that some of the tariff changes might pinch the people of Manitoba, yet they ought not to forget that they were only a component part of the Dominion and the tariff changes were for the best interest of the country as a whole. For himself he never forgot he was a Canadian.

Mr. WATSON.

"We have on former occasions dissented entirely from the views advocated by Mr. Daly upon public questions affecting Manitoba, and this is another case in which we are bound to oppose the position he takes. He does not we believe, express the sentiments of his constituents and the fact that he was elected at the last general election is no proof that he does. Mr. Daly can't go to the country to-day in this constituency upon the platform above laid down and be returned. The contention that our farmers should lie quietly under a 35 per cent. tariff upon agricultural implements, in order that the manufacturers in the East may be allowed to amass fortunes which will enable them to turn out better and cheaper machines, is simply all bosh, and the farmers of Manitoba, who are to-day paying 12 per cent. interest on overdue notes because they had short crops last year, and were unable to meet their engagements when they fell due, know that what we say is true. They have paid 35 per cent. duty on their machinery in the past in order that the infant industries of the East might get a footing and be in a position to compete with American manufacturers and they have paid the assessment with a good grace, but they did not and do not expect that that heavy tax shall continue for ever. In this Province, the great necessary of successful farming is machinery. The farmers must have agricultural implements or they can't succeed. And still Mr. Daly pretends to voice the sentiment of these farmers, when he advocates from his place in Parliament a 55 per cent. duty on the implements they must buy. If we know anything of the from his place in Parliament a 35 per cent. duty on the implements they must buy. If we know anything of the sentiment in Manitaba, the farmers are tired of the high tariff and they want at least a measure of relief."

That is sufficient evidence to show that in my remarks, and in the view I take of the tariff question, I represent not only the views of my constituents, but the views of Conservatives as well as Liberals, and I am perfectly satisfied, that 90 per cent. of the people are in favor of doing away with the high protective tariff; and for that reason I strongly oppose the proposal of the hon gentleman to increase the bounties on iron, which is simply another system of protection. If manufacturers cannot get raw material at low rates of duty, they have to add the duty on the raw material to the cost of the manufactured goods, and the consumers have to pay it. I maintain that it is simply a system of class legislation, and that it is taxing the masses for the sake of the classes. I, for one, feeling that I am representing the sentiments of a large portion of the people, not only of Manitoba, but of the North-West Territories, will oppose this high duty.

Mr. DALY. It was not my intention to take any part in the discussion of this afternoon, as I do not pretend to be an expert, the same as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Watson) pretends to be, on every subject which comes under discussion in this House. To apply a well known quotation, the hon. gentleman "rushes in where angels fear to tread." He gives his opinions to this House in opposition to opinions of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald) who speaks of what he knows, when he deals with the question of the iron industry. I simply rise to reply in a very few words, to the reference which the hon. member for Marquette has made as to the sentiments of the Conservative electors of Manitoba, on the protective tariff.

Mr. WATSON. I read your own paper.

The hon. gentleman has not read my Mr. DALY. own paper. He has read a paper which is just as "gritty" as the hon. gentleman is, and I want the hon. gentleman to understand, that I utterly repudiate that the Brandon Times is Conservative, or ever was Conservative. The editor and the proprietor of the Brandon Times is like a great many other people who would be Conservatives for revenue purposes only, and just so long as he could get whatever he could obtain, he was a Conservative. He is no longer a Conservative, he does not represent the views of the electorate of the district which I represent, nor does he represent the public opinion of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. He was a Conservative.

Mr. DALY. He called himself such, but I do not know whether he was or not. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the position which I take upon this tariff, I have the courage of my convictions. I do not care whether there are Conservatives in the Province of Manitoba who differ from me. They have a right to differ from me, if they so wish, but I say now, as I said on previous occasions to this House: that we must look to the fact, and the people of Manitoba must look to the fact, that they are but a component part of this great Confederation. This tariff which is building up this great country-no matter what hon, gentlemen on the other side say to the contrary—may work a little harshly against one particular Province, or against one particular portion of a Province, but we have the resulting benefits of it. If by this tariff, we can build up manufacturing industries in the Province of Ontario, which will give employment to hundreds of men, who will consume the products of our western country, we are by that means benefiting Manitoba and the North-West Territories. If, on the other hand, by building up these industries in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, we can give to our people machinery just as good and as well made as can be got on the other side of the line and at as cheap or a cheaper price, we are pursuing the policy which we ought to pursue, namely, the policy of building up a great country for ourselves, with mutual advantages to all classes of the people. The hon, gentleman for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has referred to the question of farm machinery. I am tired of quoting to the House, as I have done for the last three or four Sessions, figures to show, that so far as agricultural implements are concerned, they can be purchased in the Province of Manitoba to-day, cheaper than they could be purchased before the 35 per cent. duty was imposed.

Mr. WATSON. You are wrong.

Mr. DALY. I am not wrong.

Mr. WATSON. What are the prices across the line ?

Mr. DALY. The fact of the matter further is, that we can buy, even American machinery, cheaper in Manitoba to-day, than we could before the tariff was imposed.

Mr. WATSON. What is the comparison between the prices in Manitoba and the prices across the line?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DALY. I do not think I interrupted the hon, gentleman when he was speaking. If I am hitting him very hard, he should take his medicine like a good little boy.

Mr. WATSON. You are not hitting me hard at all.

Mr. DALY. Then keep your mouth shut. I was about to sav-

Mr. WATSON. I rise to a point of order. I do not think any hon, gentleman has a right to address to me language in this House which he dare not address to me outside of the House.

Mr. CASEY. He addressed it to the Speaker. Before you decide on this point, Mr. Speaker—— Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to discuss this matter, Mr. Speaker, before you decide this point. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will, I know, withdraw the expression.

Mr. DALY. If I have said anything unparliamentary, I withdraw the words, but I want the hon, gentleman to understand distinctly that I am not going to be interrupted by him or by anybody else. I think I conducted myself as a gentleman when he was speaking; but the hon. gentleman is continually in the habit of interrupting members. on this side of the House, when they are speaking, and when he says that I would not dare to say anything to him inside of the House which I would not say outside of the House, I want him to understand that I fear him neither inside nor outside of the House. I was going to say, Mr, Speaker, in relation to agricultural implements in the Province of Manitoba, that our farmers are able to get in Canada just as good implements as they can buy in the United States and at as cheap a price. I stated to the House, in the speech which I made on the Budget, that the Massey Manufacturing Company had sent up a number of agricultural implements to the North-West Territories, and that the Massey Company's binder, which was equal, if not better, than any binder manufactured in the United States of America, is sold for $180 on time payments, and $160 cash. I did not state upon that occasion, as I will state now, that the Massey binder took the first prize and the gold medal at the Paris Exhibition last year. It did not take the medal in competition with other Canadian machines only, but it took the medal in competition with machines manufactured in the United States, France, Great Britain and Canada, and that too after an actual field contest. I do not wish to take up the time of the House by referring to what took place at that field contest, but I may say that among the machines in competition were the McCormick binder of Chicago, the Wood binder, the Osborn binder and the Johnston binder, which were manufactured in New York State, as well as with another binder which is made in France. In all the tests which were made, the Massey binder came ahead and received the gold medal. It is a proud thing, Sir, as a Canadian, to stand on the floor of Parliament and to be able to say: This Canadian farming implement took the first prize at the World's Fair, at Paris. I may say that the people of Manitoba are satisfied with the machinery which is being made in Canada, and the proof of that is that they are purchasing it in large quantities. There may be men who prefer the American implements and if they do they can purchase them cheaper than before the 35 per cent. duty was imposed. I will not take up the time. of the House further than to say that when the hon.

gentleman rises to remark that the Brandon Times voices the sentiments of the Conservative electors of Manitoba, I utterly repudiate any such statement. I want the Brandon Times and its editor to know that, so far as I am concerned, I do not care a straw what his opinions are upon the position which I take here in reference to the question of the tariff, or upon any other question.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has been rather severe on my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson). He has said that the hon. member for Marquette rushed in where angels feared to tread. He meant to be very severe on the member for Marquette, but of course we are all familiar with the proverb criticising those who pursue that line of conduct. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is anybody who has been rushing in where angels do not care to take their daily walks, it is the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), because it so happens that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has been speaking in the interests of his The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. constituents. Daly) on the other hand, has been speaking against the interests of his constituents, and I think the member of this House who defends a policy which takes money out of the pockets of his constituents, without doing them any good in return, is certainly one of that class who rush in where angels fear to tread. I am sure the hon. gentleman's memory is sufficiently good to supply the word which designates that class of persons, but I do not suppose it would be parliamentary for me to quote it here. In all probability the constituents of the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) will let him know how they appreciate that proverb, and how they can apply it, at his next election. A friend on my right suggests that probably the angels will meet him on the cross-roads when he goes home, and will explain to him how foolish he was to go where even they dare not take a walk. The hon. gentleman is very much exercised about the Brandon Times. He says that it is not now a Conservative organ—that it has ceased to make money out of the Conservative party, and has been disowned by the party. A little bird has whispered to me that the Brandon Times has disowned the hon. gentleman, and that may be the reason why he has disowned the Brandon Times. However, it appears from the hon. gentleman's statement that the Brandon Times was supporting the party for revenue only, and the revenue failing, it has gone back on its party. It may be as Conservative now as it was before, although it is not supporting the hon. gentleman; according to his explanation, it would remain Conservative as long as it was paid to do so. now be proper for the Brandon Times to resent and explain this statement of the facts, if it be not an absolutely correct and unprejudiced statement. The hon. member says that agricultural implements are cheaper in Manitoba to-day than they were under the late Administration, when the tariff was lower. Of course they are, and the hon gentleman has told us the reason. He admitted that they are cheaper in the United States than they they are years were ten ago; cheaper all over the world than they were ten years ago; for the reason that invention and the processes of manufacture have improved, and they are now produced on such a large scale that they are produced a great deal more cheaply. But the hon. Mr. Daly.

gentleman says that all this is the result of the protection on iron and on agricultural machines. Now. Sir, I do not think that even a man who will go where angels do not care to go, is sufficiently of that character to expect the House to believe such an assertion as that—that these agricultural implements are cheaper to his constituents, because we tax the machines 35 per cent., and the raw material that goes into them to the extent of $4 per ton, or altogether about 41 per cent. The hon. gentleman says that the Massey binder achieved a great triumph at the late Paris Exhibition, and that he is proud of it. Well, of course we are all proud of the success of Canadian manufactures anywhere; but he says that the people of Manitoba are satisfied with the quality and the price of this Massey binder, and have shown their satisfaction by purchasing it largely. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is an agent for the Massey Manufacturing Company or not; I do not suppose he is; but he has given that company a certain amount of cheap advertising by this remark, which probably they will appreciate. Still, I do not agree with his conclusion that the people of Manitoba prefer the Massey binder to any other they could buy because they buy it so largely. There is another reason, one which, I think, is usually decisive with the farmers, that is, that there is a duty of 35 per cent. against American machines brought into Manitoba, which is a practical prohibition of the importation of those machines; and, therefore, the farmers of Manitoba are obliged to buy some Canadian machine. But whether they prefer the Massey machine or any other is a question for themselves to decide, and not a question that need be discussed in this House. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) objected strongly to the interruptions of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), but he failed to answer one pertinent question put to him by my hon. friend. He was asked: How do the prices of agricultural implements in Manitoba compare with their prices in the United States? He forbore to answer that question, I think, wisely. He was not quite such a replacer of angels as to answer it, for the reason that he knows very well, as every member of this House does, that if the tariff were now what it was during the regime of the revenue tariff, before protection came into force, the farmers of Manitoba could import equally good if not better machines from the United States at a much lower rate than they are now paying for them. If it were parliamentary—but I know it is not, and I do not use the term—I would say that it is a fraudulent statement to compare the prices of agricultural implements to-day with the prices ten years ago, without telling the House at what rate they could be imported if the same tariff were in force to-day that was in force ten years ago. But, after all this argument to show that the farmers of Manitoba are paying nothing for the privilege of fostering the Canadian home manufacturer, the hon. gentleman admits that they are losing something by it. He says that this policy may bear hardly on one Province or on another, but that we have a resulting benefit. What is the resulting benefit? It is that it builds up a large industry in Ontario, and thereby creates a market for Manitoba products; in other words, if the farmers of Manitoba have to pay too much for binders, the men who make those binders consume a great deal of Manitoba flour. If the House will think for a moment of the additional demand for Manitoba wheat caused by the additional number of men employed in the manufacture of Massey reapers, they will see the absurdity of this contention. There are no more people in Canada to consume Manitoba wheat for all the people employed on the Massey machines. I do not say this out of any disrespect to the people so employed; but the price of Manitoba wheat is regulated by the market that regulates the price of all other wheat throughout the world, namely, the Liverpool market; and the number of men employed by the Massey Company has no influence on the price of the wheat the Manitoba farmers have to sell. When a manufacture springs up, it does not bring any more men into the country; it simply diverts a number of men from one occupation to another. It may be a more appropriate occupation, but it does not as a rule, in this country, increase the number of mouths which have to be filled with Manitoba flour, and that seems to be the point my hon. friend was trying to make. With regard to the question really before the House, as to the proposed increase in the bonus on pig iron, I want to say a few words. There is one respect in which a bonus is We perhaps preferable to a protective tax. know just what we are paying, whereas in the case of a protective tax we do not. In the latter we are probably paying a good deal more than the nominal amount of duty, and in the former we know what we are paying; but it does not follow that it is sound financial economy to give a bonus. Why should we give a bonus to one industry rather than another? For a long time this bonus system has prevailed. Let us compare the results of these bonused and protected industries with the results of other industries which have received neither bonuses nor protection. The amount of profit derived by the country from any manufacturing industry is best gauged by the amount of exports in that particular line, and the same test will apply to other industries as well as to manufactures. The amount we make out of our agricultural operations, as a country, is gauged by the amount of agricultural produce which we send abroad. Of course there may be profit to the individual manufacturer, as well as to the individual farmer, from the sale of their products in the country, but the amount the country makes by their industry is gauged by the export; and it is the exports we that a certain industry should be protected or bonused for the sake of putting money in the proceeds of certain individuals. All that we should do in the way of a protective tax, if we admit the principle of protection, is to make such arrangements that the country as a whole shall derive benefit from the outcome of that system. Let us compare the exports of the iron industry with the exports of farm products. We find by the current Trade and Navigation Returns that the export last year of pig iron amounted to $151. That is the magnificent result of the protection we have given to that industry for many years, and of the bonuses we have given it for a shorter number of years. It must make the heart of every Canadian swell within him; it must make the heart of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDougald) swell within him, to think that his ments. I do not intend now to mention the other country exported pig iron to the value of $151 taxes, but we all know that they all fall ultimately during the past year. In another direction, perhaps, the tax and the bonus have been more successful. We have exported iron ore to a very considerable extent, not, of course, as largely as we might have done if we had free trade with our neighbors, but to an extent in glaring contrast with the export of the manufactured product. After giving an encouragement of $5.50 a ton-$1.50 bonus and $4 dutyto the manufactured iron, we have only reached this magnificent result, that we export $150 worth a year; but when we come to iron ore—the raw product as taken from the bowels of the earth-we find we have exported $60,289 worth. It does not look as if the past encouragement given to the manufacturer of pig iron has led to magnificent results, since we export of iron ore more than three hundred times the value of the manufactured product, after twelve years of protection. This does not show that protection has done much for the iron industry. Of all the products of iron, including machinery not otherwise specified, of which a part may be in wood, for all I know, we only exported $300,518 worth. This is the result of the high protection we have given to the iron industry—in the first place by the duty and bonus to encourage the production of pig iron, and in the second place by the heavy duties levied on iron manufactured in various stages. After all this, we find that, in 1886, we imported over $8,000,000 worth of iron; in 1887, we imported $9,760,000; in 1889, $8,800,000 worth; while we exported the enormous amount of $300,000 worth of iron and its products. Even looking at the iron trade itself, it is clear that the protective system has not created an iron-producing industry in this country.

Mr. AMYOT. It was not sufficient.

Mr. CASEY. If a protective tax of $4 a ton, which amounts to about 40 per cent., and a bonus besides of $1.50 per ton on the raw material, has not been sufficient to create this iron industry, I do not think the increase of 50 cents a ton now proposed is going to convert this industry from an insignificant portion of the wealth of the country to an enormous resource. Take, by the way of contrast, the industry which has practically defied protection in all its respects, the results of which, at all events in the way of exports, may be considered without reference to protection at all, because we have to sell, in common with our neighbors, in a free trade country, where there are no circumstances in our favor. The products of the farm, other than animals and their products, exported last year, amounted to $17,193,000, while animals and their products exported amounted to $24,693,000. On the whole, we exported $41,886,000 worth of farm products, as against an export of $300,000 worth of iron. Which of these industries is doing most to add to the wealth of the country. The agricultural industry is the mainstay of the country, the main source from which the greater part of the wealth of the country is derived, and yet that industry, so far from having any protection or encouragement, so far from being bonused, is taxed to the extent of 35 per cent. for the benefit of the manufacturer of the implements used in producing this wealth, and to the extent of over 40 per cent. on all the raw iron material which enters into the manufacture of agricultural imple-adds it on to the price charged to the farmer. The wholesaler adds it on to the retailer, the retailer to the purchaser, and so on; and as nearly all the wealth of the country, at least of Manitoba and the part of the country I live in, at all events, comes from the farmer, the farmer is the man who finally pays these duties. And he, while he is taxed to benefit the other producers, has added to the wealth of the country, $41,750,000, as compared with $300,518 contributed by the highly protected producer of iron, out of which the producers of pig iron contribute the sum of $151. Yet the farmer is refused the right to import free the raw material for his industry; he is refused the right to import corn free with which to feed his cattle. I contend that, if it is proper to bonus the iron industry, it is also proper to give the farmer a bonus of so much a bushel on his grain, of so much a head on his cattle, and a proportionate allowance on every kind of produce that he exports. The whole system is rotten, but, if you begin to adopt this rotten system in favor of the iron manufacture, you are bound in logic, you are bound in fairness, you are bound in honesty to extend that system to all the other industries of the country. If you bonus the production of iron, you should bonus the production of cattle for the English market, the production of wheat and barley, and also the production of lumber for export to the United States market. Knowing that the House has already made up its mind on this subject, I will content myself with this protest.

Mr. KENNY. Considering the very eloquent and successful protection speech which the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) addressed to the House the other day during the discussion of the tariff item referring to the duties on pork, I was surprised that he should be opposed to granting any protection to the iron industry of Canada. I suppose the hon. gentleman confines his sympathies entirely to the little pigs in Prince Edward Island, and has no sympathy for the big pigs of iron at Londonderry. If we have in Canada in a crude state all the ingredients essential for establishing a great iron industry, I think it is decidedly in the interest of the country generally that that industry should be protected, for the reason that in no other country in the world, as the history of the iron industry shows us, has the iron industry prospered in its early stages unless it was protected. I have stated, on a former occasion, that in my opinion the iron industry is eminently indigenous to the Province of Nova Scotia, because we have there the ore, and the fluxes, and the coal, so situated that we must ultimately attain great eminence in the development of that industry; but, in order to satisfy the House that this is not a matter of mere assertion on my part, I desire to strengthen the statement I made as to the opinion of the Local Government in Nova Scotia on the subject by reading to the House an extract from a letter written on the 19th December last by the Hon. Mr. Fielding, the Premier of Nova Scotia. The letter was addressed to the editor of the Boston Herald. Mr. Fielding says:

"I send you herewith a letter from Mr. Edwin Gilpin, jr., Inspector of Mines for Nova Scotia, which, I think, will satisfy those interested in the iron industries of New England that the iron and coal deposits of Nova Scotia are very extensive and of great value. It is the Mr. CASEY.

on the farming community. Every man who has to pay a tax in any other line of business adds it on to the price charged to the farmer.

I know that the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia does not, from what I have heard in this House, represent the opinion of all Nova Scotians, or of all the representatives of Nova Scotia in this Parliament, but such was the opinion of the hon. the Provincial Secretary, who has necessarily given this matter special study. In the same paper, I find a letter addressed by Mr. Gilpin, Inspector of Mines in Nova Scotia, which confirms entirely the statement of the hon. the Provincial Secretary. I will not detain the House by reading the whole letter, but I will read one or two extracts. He says:

"The Londonderry company have only two stacks. Necessarily it is frequently the case that one is idle for repairs, and they have had both running together. The Londonderry ore has yielded an average per cent. of metallic iron running from 42 to 45 parts in the hundred. Its quality is good as respects sulphur and phosphorus." Again:

"The amount of available ore in Nova Scotia alone may be gathered from the fact that large bodies of Bessemer ore are known in Pictou County, besides numerous beds from 4 to 50 feet thick of red hematites, running from 40 to 50 per cent, of metallic iron, and large deposits of limonite ore."

That is the opinion of the officers of our own Province in regard to the iron ore of Nova Scotia, and confirmatory of that opinion I wish to read to the House an English opinion, the very best opinion that can be given on this point by any journal in England. I will read an extract from the Iron and Steel Trades Journal, which is considered in England the highest authority on all matters appertaining to the iron trade:

"A good deal of attention is being given to the question of native production of pig iron in Canada. An abundance of all the necessary materials for iron making exists in several of the Eastern Provinces; but the attempt to utilise them has hitherto been only partially successful. This is the natural order of things, for rarely is an industry transplanted to foreign soil without unforeseen obstacles preventing it from budding forth at once into a prosperous undertaking; and we see no reason why pig iron production on a large and profitable scale should not soon be an important feature of Canadian industry. It is only a question of time, and we believe that movements now on foot are likely to accelerate the event.

only a question of time, and we believe that movements now on foot are likely to accelerate the event.

"The enormous production of pig iron in the United States has now rendered the great Republic practically independent of external supplies of crude iron; and we must be content to accept the inevitable and see Canada also become self-supporting in the matter of pig iron. The demand for our iron and steel in Canada is not what it once was.

"In the early part of this year, travelling in Canada, we found that a strong prejudice existed against importing any material that could possibly be manufactured in the Dominion.

"Canadian customers now rely, as far as possible, on their own resources. It, therefore, seems probable that in the near future iron smelting will be an established industry on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of British North America."

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not an ordinary expression of opinion by an ordinary newspaper. This is the result of the impressions produced on the editor of this paper when he visited Canada, and I think it is an infinitely better authority than the wild statements of gentlemen who, actuated solely by a desire to make a point against the Government and against the policy of the Government, attempt to traduce the country and say that the condition of things in the Province from which I come and from which they come are such that the iron industry is not indigenous to that Province on the question of protection, as applied to the iron industry. Hon members of this House are perfectly familiar with the fiscal policy of the neighboring Republic. But let us revert for a few moments to the policy which the British Government have applied in the past to the great iron industry in that country. We find that formerly the iron industry was largely protected, and the British duty on foreign iron during the early years of this century, was as follows:—

Now, what are we to infer from this statement? That England's supremacy in the manufacture of iron, a supremacy which she still holds, was only attained under a protective policy, and that it was in that manner that that great trade was fostered in the mother country. Now, let us, for a moment, glance at the manner in which the iron industry, and its importance, have been recognised by the Congress of the United States of America, for I contend that the statistics which we gather from that country are infinitely more interesting to us. and the condition of things there is more analogous to ours, than the condition of things which prevail to day in the mother country. The development of that industry is shown by the following table :--

It will be within the recollection of the hon. members of this House who are at all familiar with the trade of the United States, that in years gone by nearly every steel rail used in the United States was imported from Great Britain. At present, however, it is a remarkable fact that steel railsand I would point this out, in reply to hon. gentlemen opposite who stated that domestic competition would not lower prices-in the United States of America to-day, under a protective tariff, are as cheap as they are in free trade England. I desire to point out the effect of the protective policy, as applied to the United States, in the production of pig iron, the same policy as applied to Germany, and the effect of the free trade policy of England, during certain contemporaneous periods. I find that in 1865 there were 4,819,254 tons of pig iron produced in Great Britain; in the United States during the same year there were 831,770 tons; in 1867, Germany's production of pig iron was 1,113,606 tons.

Now, not to weary the House with too many statistics, I will give the production of pig iron in Great Britain in 1883, it was 7,250,657 tons; in the United States during the same year, it was 4,044,526; and in Germany 3,751,775; or during the period from 1865 to 1885, in free trade England, the production of pig iron had only increased 76 per cent, whereas in the United States, under the policy of protection, it has increased 456 per cent., and in Germany, where it is also protected, it had increased 237 per cent. Now, we have in Canada to-day, as I contend, the same natural conditions as exist in the United States, and if we have the ores, and the fluxes, and the coal in close proximity, I do say that, considering that Canada uses per capita more iron than most nations of the world—I think it ranks third—I contend that, under these conditions, we can develop an immense iron industry, and, for my part, I think there is no motion which has been made by the Government this Session which has received more hearty support from me than the motion now before the House will receive; and I only regret, as it is now nearly six o'clock, that I have not time to point out to the House many interesting statistics which should confirm us in our desire and our determination to protect the great iron industry of this country.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

RESIGNATION OF THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. RYKERT. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I desire to speak to a question of privilege, and to make some observations in respect to what has been transpiring in this House during the last seven or eight weeks. It is within the recollection of hon. members that upwards of twelve weeks ago certain correspondence appeared in the Globe newspaper purporting to have been written by myself, which correspondence was subsequently brought under the notice of this House by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). At that time there were no charges made against me of a formulated character, but the correspondence was simply referred to in this House, and I was called upon to make an explanation of it. I then stated to this House that that correspondence had been published broadcast throughout the County of Lincoln previous to the throughout the County of Lincoin previous to the last general election, that a large portion of that correspondence had become public property, and had become known throughout my county prior to the election in 1882. I felt that that correspondence having been so widely promulgated among my electors, it having been the property discovered in the presence of the hone. thoroughly discussed in the presence of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), in the County of Lincoln, I had the right to claim at the hands of this House and of the Committee, protection under the law. I thought that correspondence of a private and confidential character had no right to be investigated by this House, no matter what it might be found to contain. I felt also that two Parliaments having elapsed, and I having been returned with the endorsement of my electors, who had had full knowledge of all the facts contained in that correspondence, I was free from any inves-tigation at the hands of a committee of this House. Nevertheless, when that correspondence was produced, and I was called on for an explanation, I asked this House to refer the matter to a committee for the purpose of investigation. I felt at that time that I had the right to demand that charges of a specific character should be made against me. I felt that in a matter of that great importance, one affecting my seat as a member of this House, which I had occupied for nearly thirty years, I had a right to demand that specific charges should be made before I was called on for my defence. This Committee, instead of formulating charges, as they were asked to do by me, called on me to enter on my defence, and not one single letter was singled out by any person on the Committee as being objectionable.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. I understand, Mr. Speaker, it is contrary to the Orders of this House to discuss proceedings of a Committee which has not yet reported.

Mr. KENNY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman not to discuss the proceedings of the Committee, but only to refer to the fact that the matter had been referred to the Committee.

Mr. BLAKE I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman proceeded to discuss the conduct of the Committe.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not go to that extent.

Mr. RYKERT. I do not wish to infringe upon the Rules of the House. I did feel, and I do still feel. that I have not had fair play, at all events, at the hands of this House or at the hands of the Committee. I had hoped that when these charges had been investigated, and these charges had been finally disposed of, and the Committee had taken the matter into their consideration, that the question would not be opened again. However, it has been opened, and I understand, to-day the proceedings of the Committee have been again opened up. I have felt that in a charge of such a serious character, reflecting on myself as a member of Parliament, and to a large extent reflecting back on the constituency returning me, it is my duty, if the trust reposed in me has not been properly discharged, to place that trust back in the hands of my constituents. I do not feel I have been fairly dealt with by this House or by the Committee, and the rules of Parliament appear to prevent me from going into the matter in detail, which, however, I may have another opportunity of doing. At the same time, as I say, having been charged by a member of this House with having committed a breach of trust, and having been elected by my constituents when they had a full knowledge of all these facts, which it was alleged in this House was the case, and having been charged, also, with having violated that trust and betrayed it, I feel I can no longer occupy a seat in this House. I feel it to be my duty, in the interests of those I have represented so long, and whose confidence I have enjoyed so long and uninterruptedly, if a reflection is cast on them, to place myself entirely in their hands, and I feel it to be my duty to tender my resignation as the representative of the County of Lincoln and Niagara and to return that trust to those who sent me here, and give them the opportunity of doing what they desire, of electing whoever they please, and I hope they will elect some person who will discharge the duties as faithfully as I have done for thirty years. I, therefore, beg to tender my resignation as a member of this House.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

House again resolved itself into Committee on resolution (p. 4321).

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAWSON. I had intended making a few remarks on this subject before the Speaker left the Chair, and I shall not detain the House very long now. In my estimation, this is one of the most important resolutions which has come before the House this Session, and in the effect it is likely to have on the country, it must be considered of the very greatest moment. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in his remarks on this matter, gave us some very valuable information in regard to the iron mines generally throughout

Canada, and more especially in regard to the cost of producing pig iron in the different Provinces of the Dominion. He argued that the facilities for the manufacture of pig iron were such, that it could be produced at a larger profit here than in the United States, but that it was from the want of enterprise on the part of the people of this country that its production had not progressed as it should. Now, Mr Speaker, if that be the case, it requires some stimulus to push on the industry, and, in my opinion, the proposed bonus of $2 per ton is very likely to have a good effect in stimulating the production of pig iron in Canada. When we consider our vast extent of country from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, in many portions of which iron ore of the very finest quality is to be found in abundance, we must see that if it can be brought about, that an industry will be developed in the production of pig iron, it is difficult for us to conceive the extent of the good effect it will have. It will open up vast tracts which are now a mere wilderness; it will give trade to our canals, freight to our steamers on our navigable waters, and it will lead to prosperity in sections of the country which are now unsettled and barren. It has been clearly shown by the hon, member from Pictou (Mr. McDougald) that this bounty would be productive of great advantage to Nova Scotia. I have no doubt that it would be equally so in British Columbia, and in the Province of Quebec; but there is an intermediate country—the Province of Ontario-to which, I believe it would be productive of the greatest good. In the district which I have the honor to represent, as well as south of Lake Superior, iron ore of a quality which is not to be found in any other part of the world, is very abundant. On the south side of Lake Superior, near Ontonagon and at Marquette, iron ore of the very finest quality for making Bessemer steel is found, and the quantity exported from the former locality, last summer, reached nearly 2,000,000 tons. On the north side of Lake Superior we have a great deal of iron ore quite equal to that on the south. The ore found in the celebrated Vermillion range, just west of the boundary line, is quite as good as the ore on the south shore of Lake Superior, and probably hon. members are not aware that, within the last few years, an immense traffic has arisen in the exportation of that ore in its crude state. Last year, according to the official returns, there were exported from the Vermillion range, 840,000 tons of iron ore, to the port of Two Harbors, a place about twenty or twenty-five miles east of Duluth, and thence shipped to Cleveland and other ports in the United States. When you consider the enormous traffic this has given rise to, and when we remember that on our own side of the boundary, we have iron ore of an equally good quality, extending across the boundary line to the west and running to the eastward for immense distances within our own territory, you can conceive what opportunities we have for developing this iron industry. The quality of our ore has been tested and found to be just as good as that on the other side of the line. Last year, American capitalists purchased from the Ontario Government, 20,000 acres of land to the westward of Port Arthur, with a view of mining and exporting iron ore. There are other sections in the same district in which extensive purchases have been made, and exporting iron ore. How much better would it be if, by means of this bonus, or by means of any encouragement which the Government can give, our people could be led to smelt the ore in our own country? It was mentioned that charcoal could be obtained in abundance in Canada. The whole country north of Lake Superior, and far to the eastward, is one vast forest, and there can be no doubt that charcoal might be easily produced. It is well known that the iron manufactured from charcoal is much more valuable than the iron made from coal, or even from coke. We had in this country, many years ago, iron produced from charcoal. I allude to the iron works which, under the French régime, were carried on north of Three Rivers. At one time the St. Maurice district produced pig iron for making into stoves and also wrought iron. The Kings of France had a royalty upon those mines, and so successful were they that several large fortunes were made by the manufacture of stoves and other articles at the forges of the St. Maurice. Lately they have been manufacturing railway car wheels from the St. Maurice and Radnor ores. Now, Sir, when you consider the vast areas over which those iron deposits are spread in this country, and when you consider, moreover, that we have not only charcoal at hand, but that we have, also, coal in our own country within 150 miles of Lake Superior, it must be seen what facilities there are for carrying on this industry in Canada. The coal on the Moose river north of Lake Superior is, I think, equal to the lignites of the North-West. At all events it is not inferior to Souris coal. Whether it is fit for smelting iron ore or not is more than I can say; the probability is that it may be largely used for that purpose. If we go still further north than a distance of 150 miles from Lake Superior, we have the true coal at the north end of Hudson's Bay; coal like the English coal, coal of the carboniferous period, and to bring that by water and land to Lake Superior would be quite possible when a railway is built to James' Bay. There is no doubt that between the charcoal, which there is every facility for making, and the coal, which is not very far off, iron works might be erected at Lake Superior and carried on with large profits; and this bounty of $2 per ton on pig iron will be a powerful stimulus towards establishing such works. It will give a stimulus to the development of mines in general in that district, It is well known that the nickel of Sudbury is becoming quite celebrated all over the world; there are copper mines not far from the same place; and near Sault Ste. Marie, as well as north of Port Arthur, there have been recent discoveries of very large deposits of iron ore. These are quite accessible to coal, which can be imported from the United States and delivered at those points at very moderate rates; and the establishment of smelting works there would be productive of a great deal of good to the country. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) gave us much valuable information this afternoon in the extracts he read from the report of the Ontario Mining Commission; and the statistics were put in very good form. It is very much to be regretted that that hon gentleman, instead of we look to the Americans coming over and fighting imaginary enemies, such as the Pope carrying on a large trade in mining and and the Jesuits, and indulging in wild fancies about the equal rights of man and free trade, does not more frequently make such speeches as the one he delivered to-day; they would be a great deal more useful. He shows that the inducements for the smelting of iron ore at present are very great, that the average cost at which pig iron can be produced in Canada is $13 per ton, whereas on the other side of the line it costs $17 per ton, leaving a very large margin in favor of operations on this side. That advantage, with the bonus of $2 per ton, will in all probability lead to the establishment of smelting works in this country. In view of all the circumstances, and in view of the fact that it will stimulate the settlement of those wild regions to have iron works established in them, I have a great deal of pleasure in supporting the resolution. I think it one of the most important, in the interests of the country, that have come before the House this Session.

Resolution reported.

THE SEAMEN'S ACT.

Mr. COLBY moved second reading of Bill (No. 135) to amend the Seamen's Act. He said: The object of this short Bill is simply to give the power of removing the convictions of seamen by certiorari to a superior court. The law has been found to work very hardly in certain instances, and it seems unreasonable that any class of citizens should be liable to severe fines or imprisonment at the hands of a single justice of the peace without any opportunity for revision under any circumstances what-It is not proposed to give an appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace; it is simply proposed that in the case of manifestly illegal or irregular proceedings, the case may be taken by certiorari to a higher court for revision. The law as it stands would seem to be harsh and quite out of harmony with the spirit of our entire legislation, and the object of the Bill is to remove the extreme stringency of the law, which is not found to be necessary or desirable.

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill is certainly in the right direction, but the only fault I have to find with it is that it does not go far enough. legislation which the Bill is intended to remedy is quite exceptional in its heartlessness. party convicted under it is absolutely without any remedy, except that usually allowed to all parties convicted by an inferior court, of taking the case before a superior court, when the inferior court has exceeded its juris-It is now proposed simply to allow the exercise of the right of certiorari to break an illegal conviction. So far, so good; but the hon. gentleman must admit that this is a very inadequate remedy. All other cases of summary conviction can be tried again before a superior court. Not simply to have the case reviewed, but, in reality, to have a new trial. Why not extend the privilege of having this trial apply to this class as well as to other classes of offenders? For my part, though I quite approve the principle of the Bill, in my opinion it does not go far enough; and in Committee I shall move in that direction.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with the observations of my hon. friend. A number of years ago, I think in 1882, this class of persons was subjected to extremely stringent legislation at the hands of this Parliament; and the legislation was framed Mr. DAWSON.

in the port of Quebec. It was then provided that a stipendiary magistrate might convict without appeal, and without any method being given for reconsideration, in cases in which penalties of from two to five years' imprisonment in penitentiary could be inflicted. Upon that occasion I was unsuccessful in endeavoring to secure a trial by jury to persons who were subjected to so grave a penalty. It was upon the 15th of May, 1882, that the Bill to amend the Seamen's Act of 1873 was moved by the right hon. the First Minister, seconded by Sir Leonard Tilley; and upon the second reading I moved, seconded by the hon, member for Bothwell, to recommit the Bill to the Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same, so as to provide for a trial by jury of any person liable to be sentenced, under the said Bill, to from two to five years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. My motion was defeated upon that occasion, as, I presume, any like effort will be upon this, the ground given for the exceptional rigor of the procedure, which deprives the parties accused that exist in of those securities ordinary cases, being the transitory nature of the occupation of the parties who would be the principal witnesses, and the fact that the offence having generally to be proved by captains and crews of ships, an appeal would mean a defeat of justice. I cannot reconcile to myself the view that the circumstance that there is a difficulty in prosecuting an appeal successfully, should leave the party accused without some protection against the possible injustice of the primary and sole tribunal analogous to that which exists in other cases. It may require some special legislation as to expedition of the trial, some special legislation as to the facility of taking and recording evidence; but I hold that that protection which the subject at large has against injustice inflicted by primary magistrates, should, in some shape or other, be given to the class of subjects treated in this Bill as well as to the others; and I maintain that the simple alleviation which the Minister rightly proposes in this Bill, and which restores to the subject in this case the right to a certiorari, is but an imperfect and inadequate alleviation; that while other classes of subjects, convicted before magistrates, of the same class of offences, of the same description and gravity, to punishment of the same kind, have other means of redress, we ought not to limit this particular class to the inadequate, partial, incomplete, and oftentimes wholly abortive remedy of a certiorari.

with special reference to a difficulty which existed

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

. (In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest for the consideration of the Minister of Justice, that there is no reason why there should not be an appeal granted as well as a certiorari from this conviction as well as any other summary convictions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was not present during the whole of this discussion, but heard sufficient of it to understand its general trend. This provision is not the only one which imposes severe restrictions in regard to certain classes of offences. We have, under the Canada Temperance Act and various other enactments which do not occur to me at the moment, a like provision, namely, that the convictions shall be final and shall not be the subject either of appeal or removal by certiorari. Such provision is made, sometimes, in consequence of the peremptory manner in which it is desired the offence should be punished; sometimes, as in this case, on account of the transitory occupation of the witnesses and persons concerned in the case. We have considered fully the subject of removing the restrictions which exist in these cases. In the Seamen's Act, it was principally on account of the difficulty of the witnesses for the prosecution remaining, that this procedure was made so restrictive. There is no doubt, however, that other reasons, as, for instance, the desire to punish with great rigor, severity, and promptitude, persons who may be convicted of certain offences, was present in the mind of Parliament when this procedure was adopted; and both reasons remain to a great extent. The two classes of persons who are likely to be charged under this particular provision are, in the first place, the class referred to by the hon. member for West Durham, who are said to ply a very nefarious occupation in the port of Quebec, and some other maritime cities as well—an occupation known as "crimping," which was exceedingly prevalent, and which it was considered necessary to put down with a very strong hand. In that view, not only severe penalties were imposed, but the procedure was made restrictive. The second class are the seamen themselves, who are liable to be charged in this manner by their masters or other officers, and against whom the witnesses are almost always persons engaged on board ship. The insertion of an appeal under these circumstances, requiring, as it may, a trial de novo will practically destroy conviction and the effect of any prosecution; because in nearly all these cases, the witnesses are persons who cannot remain in port long enough for another trial, even if that trial took place immediately. In the case of crimping, seizing and imprisoning seamen and conveying them on board ship for the purpose of obtaining the advance wages which the seamen are entitled to draw on their advance notes, the charge is one that must be instantaneously made and instantaneously tried. And to assert an appeal from that conviction, as it always would be asserted for the purpose of tiding over the time when the vessel must leave the port, would practically be to render the prosecution nugatory. These views, however, I have thought do not extend to the remedy by certiorari. In the case of that remedy, it is not necessary that the witnesses should remain, and, if we give that remedy, it simply entitles the complainant to have his case removed to a superior court to review the legality of the judgment arrived at. Inasmuch as that writ does not ordinarily or necessarily require the presence of the witnesses, and inasmuch as the investigation as to the correctness and legality of the decision can as well take place after the witnesses have left the court as before, I have always thought the objection to an appeal did not apply to a writ of certiorari. Therefore, we propose to remove the restriction as regards that writ, but I think the objections still remain in regard to the appeal, and I think it would be a mistake to make any change in that respect for the two reasons I have given, both as regards the necessity for rigorous punishment and as regards the absence of witnesses on the appeal.

Bill reported.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Colby for second reading of Bill (No. 118) further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.

Mr. LAURIER. I had hoped that, when this Bill came again before the House, the hon. gentleman would be disposed to modify it in the sense indicated in the former discussion.

Mr. COLBY. The matter has had some consideration, and I am not inclined to make the modification which the hon. gentleman suggested.

Motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 2,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this is a very objectionable clause. It provides that an applicant for a certificate shall be a British subject, and a resident of the country for three years. He may be perfectly qualified when he comes here. This may have been his occupation during his whole life, but he cannot obtain a certificate. If a man were to come from Norway or Sweden to settle in this country, would the Minister deny him the right to engage in agriculture; or if he were a carpenter, or a bricklayer, would he deny him the right to pursue his avocation, until he had been three years in the country? It seems to me that this is a monstrous regulation, and that persons who come here as residents should be allowed to engage in whatever business they have been engaged in before. There is no reason why the business of agriculture or any mechanical pursuit should be open to any one from any part of the universe, while one who has been engaged in engineering should be denied a similar privilege. We ought not to engage in class legislation of this sort. The persons now engaged in this business are no more entitled to special protection by Parliament than any other class of the community, and, in a country which is endeavoring to get people to occupy its waste lands, and engage in agricultural pursuits, it is very unwise to prevent any class from engaging in any pursuit for which they are best qualified.

Mr. COLBY. This simply makes the law regulating these matters uniform and consistent. This provision exists in the Masters and Mates Act, and there is no reason why it should not exist in regard to this analogous case. We have abundant material in this country from which to provide serviceable and useful men of this class. The business is found to be already overcrowded. Representations have come from British Columbia, from Toronto, from Montreal, and, I think, from the Maritime Provinces, to the effect that it is felt to be a serious grievance by this body of men in Canada, that, while they are not permitted to obtain employment on the other side of the line—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, they are.

Mr. COLBY. There it is necessary not only that they should have resided but that they should be naturalised.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is retaliation.

Mr. COLBY. It is not retaliation. The hon. gentleman does not call reciprocity retaliation, I hope. Reciprocity cannot be considered, surely, in the light of retaliation. It is not with a view to retaliation, but it is to guard the rights of our own citizens, who are clamoring and calling upon the Department to protect their interests in this particular. They say the business is quite sufficiently supplied already. In many instances they have gone abroad to seek employment, and have been compelled either to be naturalised and become citizens of a foreign country, in order to prosecute their avocations there, or to return to this country. It was stated in the other branch of the Legislature by an hon. gentleman, when this matter was under discussion, that circumstances had come to his knowledge of persons who had been obliged to throw up their situations when this law was in force, and to return to Canada. It was felt to be a hardship, and a hardship which, in the interests of these people, it has been thought proper to endeavor to redress and to rectify. As I stated before, it is not initiating any new legislation whatever. If the hon, gentleman will turn to the Masters and Mates Act, section 2, chapter 73, of the Revised Statutes, he will find this:

"Examinations shall be instituted in the several Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and British Columbia, for persons domiciled in Canada, for at least three years, who intend to become masters or mates or second mates of seargoing ships registered in Canada, or who wish to procure certificates of competency for sea-going ships hereinafter mentioned; and persons serving in ships registered in Canada shall be deemed to be domiciled in Canada while so serving."

This has been the law for some years. It is assimilating the law, it is making the same provision in the case of engineers that has existed for some years in the case of masters and mates, without any objection, so far as I know, or complaint what-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the argument of the hon. gentleman is by any means conclusive. I think this section is utterly indefensible. The hon. gentleman will see, if he turns to the Act, that before anybody can get a certificate as an engineer he must produce, in support of his application, certificates of character, habits of life and knowledge and experience of the duties of an engi-

Mr. COLBY. To what is the hon. gentleman referring now?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To the statute that you are seeking to amend. You are going, therefore, to add on to all that, although a man may be qualified in every respect by his character, his habits, and his experience and knowledge of the business, he shall be disqualified unless he is a born British subject, or has resided here three years.

Mr. COLBY. We have the very same requirements in the Masters and Mates Act with regard to sobriety, experience, ability and general good conduct.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Even so, the argument is not by any means conclusive. If you have done wrong in one instance, there is no reason why you should do it in another. Engineers are a special class. Those who purchase steamships in England very often, when the ships come out here, have engineers of their own on board. Why exclude that analogy which the hon. gentleman drew between Mr. Colby.

class of people? They are educated men; they are the very class of men we want to encourage to come here, the more the better. But you want to insist that if a man purchases a steamship in England, and finds on board a German, a French or a Norwegian engineer, he must immediately discharge this man; he must say to him: You cannot enter here, or if you enter, you must take some other employment, or you must live in this country three years before you will be allowed to go as engineer on board a steamship. I deny and oppose the principle underlying the hon. gentleman's Bill. He talks about reciprocity. Where is the reciprocity in his Bill? What does the hon. gentleman mean, by asking whether we are in favor of reciprocity? You may have some object in keeping out the American engineers on the lakes, but how is that going to apply to the Maritime Provinces? How to the steamships purchased abroad? You know, nowadays nearly all our steamships are purchased abroad, and when they are brought here they are registered as Canadian ships, and you have got to discharge the engineer who comes with them, if he happens to be a foreigner. The thing is utterly indefensible. My hon, friend behind me remarks that there is another difficulty in the way. The custom is, in buying steamships, that the vendor guarantees them for twelve months, and, as a matter of course, takes care that a most necessary officer for the guidance of the ship, which is the engineer, shall remain here for twelve months. Now, you are going to tell the vendor: We are very sorry, but in this civilised country of Canada, you must not send anybody as an engineer, unless he is a born British subject, or a Canadian. The fact that the hon, gentleman finds a clause somewhat analogous in the Seamen's Act, is no justification for the introduction of this clause.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand that iron vessels built in Europe are now upon the lakes, and that the builders of those ships insist, as part of their contract, that an engineer of their appointing shall be in occupation of the ship for twelve months. The hon gentleman has said that the law in the United States is similar. Well, it is a very extraordinary arrangement that we must legislate according to the legislation of the United

Mr. COLBY. We are making our own legislation harmonious; that is what I said.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is not all he said. The hon, gentleman said they had legislation of this sort on the other side, and because they had it there, we must have it here. I say to the hon. gentleman, they have not legislation of this sort. According to their legislation a man must declare his intention of becoming an American citizen. He may make that declaration the next day after he has gone into the country, and the moment he makes it he is entitled to engage in that particular pursuit. But the hon. gentleman, by this Bill, insists that a party who may not be qualified to engage in any other pursuit, shall reside here three years before he can engage in the one business in which he can earn anything like a liveli-It seems to me this is a monstrous hood. proposition.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is a fault in the the legislation of the United States and this country. In the United States they have not the privilege of buying British ships and bringing them into the United States and transferring the flag and sailing them under the American flag. Therefore, the difficulty which arises here does not arise there. If they buy an English ship they cannot transfer it to the American flag. They must continue to sail it under the British flag. Therefore, the difficulty you are imposing here between the purchaser and the vendor of British steamships, does not exist in that country. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he is going to do if he goes to Glasgow, or London, or Germany, and buys a ship with a German engineer on board, and the vendor insists on having his engineer on board that ship for 12 months—what are you going to do in that case? Are you going to compel him to change his engineer?

Mr. WALLACE. Not many weeks have elapsed since we heard hon, gentlemen opposite advocate that a British subject from England, Ireland or Scotland coming to Canada should not be employed by the Government unless he had resided here for five years. These same hon, gentlemen consider it an outrageous act for an American citizen to be compelled to reside here three years before he can secure a certificate under this Act, and it must be remembered that we do not ask him to become a Canadian citizen, but simply require a residence for three years. But we are told that the American law is much less stringent than ours, and that a man does not require to become a citizen in order to obtain employment; but it does require a declaration that he intends to become an American That is much more serious and stringent on British subjects than the clause which requires a three years' residence. This Bill is drawn on the line of legislation we should pursue to keep Canada for the Canadians, to keep our profitable employment for our own people, more especially so as to-day we have an abundant supply of such engineers, possessing certificates of qualification, to fill all the positions in Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I ask the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) whether he is prepared to apply that rule as to three years' residence to all people coming into this country, and to say that a man shall not come here and purchase a farm and cultivate it unless he has resided here three years prior to the purchase. The hon. gentleman says he wants Canada for the Canadians. It he wishes to apply that rule, let him keep out everybody. Why did the hon. gentleman vote, a few days ago, sums of money for immigration purposes? The hon. gentleman says: If you come here you must remain three years without doing anything. What position does he take with re-gard to the farmer? Is he prepared to keep the agricultural lands for the Canadians, and deny to persons coming from abroad the privilege of purchasing farms and cultivating them? What reason has he for undertaking to apply special restrictions to one class of laborers which he does not apply to another? It would be infinitely wiser, not to pay any one to come to this country, but to say that whoever does come here, if he is an industrious and honest man, may engage in that industry, whatever it may be, he is capable of doing best, let him alone, free to decide what his employment shall be.

Mr. WALLACE. I am afraid the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has not read the Bill, or he would have noticed that British subjects, no matter from what part of the Empire they may come, have certificates granted to them and pursue their occupation. Therefore, this Bill does not apply to British subjects. Again, as to giving employment to men who come here: we do not refuse them employment, but this a question of granting a certificate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Can he be employed without a certificate?

Mr. WALLACE. This is a question of giving a man special privileges, and, in order that he may procure them, it is proposed to require a residence in Canada for three years. What would be the position if we allowed all engineers to come here and take the positions when there are plenty of engineers in Canada to fill them, and not require a residence in Canada? What is the conduct of Americans towards Canadians? The factory operative, who gets employment in the United States, is driven out unless he takes up his residence on the other side; and even sewing girls, who cross the river to get employment in the United States, are deprived of their employment unless they reside on the other side. I hold that we should protect our own people.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is a child-like simplicity about the hon. gentleman which is quite refreshing. He says that by the principle which he supports, Canada will be reserved for the Canadians. How has the hon, gentleman carried out his principle? I remember that not a week ago an hon. member on this side of the House moved that the Civil Service of this country should be reserved for Canadians, and that Englishmen coming here should not be employed unless they have resided here three years. How did the hon gentleman act on that occasion? He was one of the first to shout his approval of the First Minister, who denounced the measure as ridiculous in the extreme. . He was one of the first to laugh the measure out of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. How did you vote?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I had not the privilege of voting, but I will tell you how I would have voted. I would have voted on the line of freedom. I want every respectable, educated and well-to-do man who makes Canada his home to take his chance here without fear or favor. I want him to stand on an equal footing with the rest of us. We are to-day voting tens of thousands of dollars to promote immigration, and the hon. gentleman supports a Government that has issued a pamphlet inviting people of this class, skilled artisans and mechanics, to come here. That pamphlet sets forth that such classes should come to Canada, where there are abundant openings and employ ment for them; and now, by a single clause of this Bill, it is declared that so far as engineers are concerned, they can come; but they must starve, for they cannot obtain employment for three years. What are such people to do? A steamboat is not capable of turning his hand readily to any other kind of employment, and the Government should keep its hands off and for he is really a specialist. We have no trouble in the Maritime Provinces with respect to this question when Americans come in from the States and obtain employment as engineers on our steamboats. Foreign engineers also come from France, Germany and other countries on vessels purchased abroad. There is no ground on which hon gentlemen opposite can uphold this proposition.

Mr. WALDIE. I am not objecting to it except from a business standpoint. The Hamilton Steamboat Company has purchased two steamboats in Glasgow, and they are now running on Lake Ontario, and one of the conditions on which the agent guaranteed the boats for a certain time was that they should have their own engineers on the boats. One of their own engineers is still employed on the boats.

Mr. COLBY. What countryman is he?

Mr. WALDIE. I do not know. Engineers belonging to any country, when employed in England, should be able to accept employment here, and our legislation should be copied from that of England. One of the effects of this kind of legislation is, that vessels will not be registered as Canadian vessels until the term of the guarantee has expired, and as the experience of the United States shows when restrictions are imposed on vessels built in foreign countries, their marine declined and what is the condition of the United States Navy to-day? If there is obstruction offered to the registration of foreign iron ships it will be against the interests of this country.

Mr. COLBY. Does the hon, gentleman happen to know if any French or German engineers are employed on British ships built in Glasgow?

Mr. WALDIE. I am not acquainted personally with the men.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I must say at the outset that I cannot feel any sympathy with much that has been said by my friends on this side of the House. Unless it can be shown to the people of the country and to the members of this House, that there is a deficiency in the number of our engineers, it is, I think, our duty to consider first the rights of our Canadian engineers. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said: Would you exclude an American farmer, who came to Canada, from buying a farm and working it, or would you exclude a carpenter or any other tradesman from coming into Canada? I certainly would not exclude them, but in the case of a man coming to Canada, and requiring a certificate for competency for the discharge of responsible duties, it is entirely a different matter. I would ask my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) whether they are not two living examples of a profession which refuses to allow Americans and others coming to Canada to practice that profession? My hon. friends know very well, that if an American comes to Canada, however skilled he may be in law, he is refused leave to plead before the courts of this country. The profession to which I belong excludes Americans from coming here and practising their pro-fession, unless they are domiciled here for a certain time and go through a form of study. While I am enjoying the advantages arising from a position of that kind, it would be unfair for me, and dishonest on my part, to refuse to the Canadian engineer the privileges which I am myself ehjoying. If these hon, gentlemen will consider the matter, they will see that there is no wrong being done to any individual, but, that on the contrary, we are protecting the rights of our Canadian citizens. I believe this law is in the right direction.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask the Minister of Public Works, who has purchased vessels and tugs in the United States, if it is not a fact that the Americans who furnished these tugs, asked to send an engineer with them until they are in service for a certain time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not remember that my Department has purchased any such tug.

Mr. WATSON. Did not you buy the tug on Lake Winnipeg, from an American firm?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have several tugs, but I am not aware that any of them were purchased in the United States.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the Sir Hector a true Canadian?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think that tug was brought in in parts, and built here.

Mr. WATSON. The hon, gentleman's memory is not fresh on the matter, but I think that there are tugs which have been bought or hired from the United States. I can easily understand the arguments of the hon, member for Halton (Mr. Waldie) that where a company furnishes a steamboat, they ask to have the engineer to operate that steamboat, as far as the machinery is concerned. You deprive a person buying a vessel in any country abroad if you do not allow the engineers to come into this country to work them for a certain time.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There has been no argument yet given from the Government side of the House to justify this Bill, so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned. This legislation seems to have been aimed entirely to suit a state of affairs which exists on the great lakes, and I am sorry to see that the Marine Department seems to be controlled so as to suit the exigencies of fresh water business. Let me congratulate the Imperial Federationists on the other side of the House on the $strides they are \ making \ towards \ the \ accomplishment$ of their purpose. Here they are endeavoring to engineer a Bill through this House, declaring that it will not do for a man who has been ten or twelve or twenty years engineer of a British steamer, sailing under the British flag, to follow his business under the Canadian flag, but that he must be under the Canadian flag, as distinct from the British flag. A man may have been twenty years engineer of a British steamboat—and there are thousands so placed—but when he comes to Canada he will find that we do not recognise the Imperial Federation fad in this matter. It does very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to talk about on the platform, but when they come down to business they are going to draw a broad distinction between the British and Canadian flag. The hon. gentlemen opposite propose here, that although a man may serve twenty years under the British flag, it will all count for naught when he comes to this great country of Canada.

on my part, to refuse to the Canadian engineer the Mr. MITCHELL. I think my hon friend is a same protection, the same right, and the same little wrong in the construction he puts upon the Act. The objection is not against a man being an engineer of a British steamer, but it says distinctly: "that such person, if not a British subject," and so on. It is a question of his being a British subject and not a question of his being an engineer on a British steamer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What I want to call my hon. friend's attention to is, that if a Frenchman, German or Norwegian, or other foreigner has been from his boyhood on board a British ship, and has sailed under the British flag for twenty years, it will not avail him anything for service in Canada, and he cannot get a certificate to be an engineer on a Canadian ship, although he has sailed ander the British flag.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that, but I merely took exception to the last speech of my hon. friend, in which I understood him to refer to the engineer of a British steamboat. My hon. friend has correctly stated, as I understood the Act, the position of affairs. He states that if a Frenchman. German or Norwegian, happens to be the engineer of a British steamboat which comes to sail in our waters, he is excluded from being an engineer on that vessel, while she is in Canadian waters, until he is domiciled three years in Canada. I have no hesitation in saying that, to my mind, that is all wrong. In the administration of affairs in this Parliament of Canada, we thought it necessary for the protection of life and property to adopt certain rules for the examination of captains and officers of vessels with a view to ascertaining their qualifications, and to prevent them from occupying these important and responsible positions unless they receive certificates after due examination by the Department. The same thing applies to engineers, and in addition to that they were graded into classes. This is about the first time I have seen any legislation coming from the Marine and Fisheries Department, which makes a distinction as to the nationality of an individual. To my mind, it is clearly wrong to discriminate against the nationality of an individual in a free and young country like this. I admit that the position of marine engineers is very responsible; the lives and property of individuals are under their charge, and their capacity and efficiency should be properly ascertained. That, I think, could be done by the examiners who are under the control and direction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. We have hitherto had every security and protection taken in the administration of our marine affairs, and I think affairs have been conducted with as much security to life and property in Canada as in any other country in the world. But when it comes to excluding a certain class of people who come into Canada to look for employment because they happen to be born in a foreign country, I think our legislation goes too far. There are as competent engineers who are not British subjects as those who are, and we certainly ought not to discriminate against that class of people. I have no doubt that this legislation is inspired by some difficulties on the other side of the great lakes which separate Canada from the United States owing to American engineers obtaining employment on vessels sailing under the Canadian flag; but that is no reason for an exclusive law like this, discriminating against all engineers in the world who are not British subjects. To my mind, such legislation is entirely in a wrong direction. feel that it not only places people of that kind in a false position, but it interferes seriously with the operations of trade and commerce in the country by limiting shipowners to the employment of British subjects as engineers. I do not mean to say that a man coming from the United States, or France or Germany, should be allowed to act as an engineer because he held a certificate in the United States or France or Germany. We have examinations to test the efficiency of engineers, and if these men are not efficient or are discreditable as to character, the examiners will refuse to give them the certificate which is necessary to their employment. Our examiners have always proved themselves efficient men, and no instance has come under my notice in which an incompetent man has been able to get a certificate from them. On two grounds, therefore, I oppose to this provision: First, because it is wrong in principle, in limiting the sources from which people engaged in maritime pursuits shall get their employés; and in the second place, because it tends to prevent efficient engineers from coming into the country and making Canada their home.

Mr. COLBY. In this clause the Minister of Justice recommends a verbal amendment. In the 17th line, are the words "and service as engineer of any class on any Canadian steamboat." We have no classes in Canada, and I would suggest that "Canada" be struck out and the following substituted: "on any steamboat registered in Great Britain or in Canada, and plying in Canadian waters."

Mr. MULOCK. Supposing a Canadian vessel so registered should visit a foreign port, and her engineer should become disabled, how is that vessel to engage a new engineer? If it cannot find a British engineer in the foreign port, is the vessel to remain there until she can send to Great Britain for one?

Mr. BOWELL. The law does not provide that.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why does the hon. gentleman wish to confine it to steamboats plying in Canadian waters? The hon. gentleman has his mind fixed entirely on the lakes; what about steamboats plying between the Maritime Provinces and the United States.

Mr. COLBY. Do you want the restriction applied to them ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; I do not. The mere fact that one of the termini to which the boat runs is in a foreign country surely is not going to disqualify its engineer from receiving a certificate.

Mr. FOSTER. It will not if it is a British boat.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The Steamboat Inspection Act does not apply to a boat of that kind at all. Section 3 of that Act says:

"This Act shall not apply to steamboats belonging to Her Majesty the Queen, or to steamboats registered in Great Britain and Ireland or in any foreign country, and plying between any port or place in Canada and any port and place out of Canada."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That Act does not apply to steamboats registered in Great Britain, but how about steamboats purchased in Great Britain and registered here?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They are all registered under the Imperial Shipping Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; if you buy a ship in England, the register is transferred to this country.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Not necessarily. We have vessels plying on the inland waters and registered in Glasgow and London.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman will get his eyes away from the inland waters, we will understand this better. I know of vessels which have been purchased in Great Britain and registered in Canada, and which are plying some of them between Canada and the United States, and others between Boston and the West Indies, and between New York and the West Indies carrying fruit, and those steamboats, owned and registered in Canada, have engineers on board who are put outside of this Act even though they may have served twenty years on board those vessels. The limitation to vessels plying in Canadian waters is most unjust. pose a ship sails from Halifax to Boston, and one of the engineers gets ill, what is going to be done? The vessel may lose its whole insurance if it takes another engineer on board. Is the owner going to tie up his steamboat? She may be under heavy demurrage, and the owner may be greatly injured unless he sends to Canada and gets a Canadianborn engineer. The hon, gentleman must consider the circumstances of the whole marine fleet, and not those of the fleet on the inland waters alone. If he confines this Bill to the inland waters, I have nothing more to say, because I do not know their

Mr. MITCHELL. In conversation, the acting Minister has called my attention to a Bill respecting masters and mates of ships which was passed in 1870, when I had the honor to be myself Minis-ter of Marine. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that with regard to masters and mates, it is more a question of experience than anything else, but with regard to engineers, scientific knowledge and skill is required, as well as character and experience; and, therefore, the law which would apply to masters and mates does not necessarily apply to engineers. I, therefore, think, after what the Minister of Justice has said, that the matter should be reconsidered in Council in relation to this particular point, and that the words "domiciled in Canada for at least three years" should be struck out. If the object is to provide for some evils or grievances existing in the inland waters, a Bill may be framed to suit those; but I am sure this measure will not suit the people in the Maritime Provinces as it now stands.

To meet the views of the hon. member for Queens, it would be better to strike out the words "plying in Canadian waters." quite agree with the hon. member for Northumberland with regard to the difference between engineers and masters and mates. Engineers certainly require more technical knowledge and higher qualifications, in a certain sense, than the other class, and another qualification is more especially required in their case. Engineers in charge of vessels, being responsible for the safety and the lives of those on board, require other qualifications even than scientific attainments and experience. They require certain moral qualifications. Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) must be men of sobriety, of character and standing, men of some morale as well as experience, and in this view the limitation in the Bill is one worthy of support. A man may come to us from any country, from Norway, France and Germany, and the United States, whose antecedents we cannot possibly know; yet, under the law as it stands, on passing the examination he can get his certificate, although he may be a scuttler, or a wrecker, or a man who has been dismissed from some other country for still grosser misconduct. This restriction is not altogether without its advantages in this respect. As the hon. gentleman suggests, this is not a matter upon which there is any great fixity of opinion, and it may be further considered; but I think we have sufficiently discussed the Bill on this occasion, and would ask that it might pass this stage, and be further considered before the third reading.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am astonished at the observations of the President of the Council. He says that a party might pass this examination and yet be thoroughly unfit to be trusted with the care of property. The proprietors of the vessels are the proper judges of that. This House cannot undertake to regulate the business of every party in the country. This House will have discharged its duty in seeing that people have the necessary qualifications, and it is then the business of the owners of property to say whom they will and whom they will not employ. I would ask the Minister of Justice how far has this House the right to go in this kind of legislation? The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill, has clearly indicated that he not only desires to provide for the necessary qualifications, but he desires to adopt a particular policy under which persons must, though they may be qualified, be excluded from this particular employment. Would it not be an abuse of the authority of this Legislature if this House were to say that no colored men should be entitled to a certificate, that no one born in a particular Province should be entitled to a certificate? The hon, gentleman must see that all we have to do in this matter is to provide the necessary legislation pertinent to shipping; and that to say that a man must be a resident of this country for three years before he can obtain a certificate, is going a long way afield from the subject of legislation on shipping. The question of the civil rights of any party who is a resident of a Province is wholly within the province. The Government might ask Parliament to go further and legislate so as to exclude a particular class, who may be Canadians and may be residents of a Province, on obtaining certificates. I submit that it is really an abuse of authority to undertake to put into the Act any other qualification than that which absolutely pertains to the particular business the party is about to engage in, and when we require any other qualifications than that, we are legislating outside of the subject altogether. I think that the hon. gentleman does not, by the amendment he has suggested, satisfactorily meet the objection raised by the hon. member My hon. friend has pointed out that for Queen's. the only parties to be excluded from this legislation would be the proprietors registered in the United Kingdom or some foreign country, and that every vessel registered in Canada, whether it be for the They inland waters or for sailing upon the high seas, would be brought within the purview of the disabling provisions provided for by this section.

Mr. COLBY. I wish hon. members, especially those from the Maritime Provinces, and particularly the ex-Minister of this Department, to understand that their opinions have, as they are entitled to have, great weight in this matter. We desire to make what progress we can, and I would be glad to have the clauses pass this stage, with the understanding that we will leave the Bill still in Committee, if they so desire.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is reasonable, and I am satisfied that, when the Council reconsider the arguments pro and con, they will make the change desired.

Mr. COLBY. We want to make it right.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The examination on which a certificate is granted is not simply in regard to technical knowledge, but also as to habits of life and character.

Mr. DAVIN. As a supporter of the Government, I am very glad to hear that the hon. gentleman intends to have this reconsidered, because I was trying to find some reason for defending the clause as it stood, but it seems to me contrary to true business principles.

Progress reported.

FIRST READING.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved first reading of Bill (No. 146) to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories (from the Senate).

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting banks and banking.

(In the Committee.)

On section 86,

Mr. FOSTER. The only change in this clause is that "fifteen" is put in place of "twenty" in

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would suggest that the number of days for the banks to make their returns should be left twenty as it was before. The law has worked satisfactorily and there is no reason for changing it. If anything caused a delay of a day or two, the bank would be subject to a heavy penalty.

Mr. FOSTER. The only reason for making it twenty days was in regard to British Columbia before the railway was opened, and that has ceased to be a reason. Practically the banks can put in their returns within ten days from the furthest parts of the country, and fifteen days are quite that the returns are to be dispatched within that time, it is another thing.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The clause says that the returns are to be made and sent in within that That must mean, that they are to be received by the Finance Minister.

Mr. TISDALE. If a bank has twenty or thirty agencies, it practically evades the law, because it is given to commence the returns sooner than it ought in order to send the report in promptly. If banks are established, as I hope they will be, in the mining regions in the North-West Territories, where they will not be able to send returns with the promptness they do now, there will be considerable difficulty, and very heavy penalties are imposed for a violation of the statute.

On section 89,

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to this clause and the sub-sections contained in it, I have a word to say which will, to some extent, modify what I stated upon the introduction of the Bill, and upon its second reading. There were two things included in section 89. The first part of the section, and a vital part, was that which provided for publicity being given to unclaimed dividends and balances in the bank. The second part was to provide that these unclaimed dividends and balances, or deposits, should, after a certain time, revert to the Government and be held by them for the public uses of the country. It will be remembered that I stated that we proposed to hold by this clause in its essence, but I foreshadowed at the time that certain amendments might be made. The change which I propose to ask the Committee to make in that is this: That we shall hold by the principle embodied in the first part of this section, and that we shall give up to a very large degree the principle that we contended for in the second part. With regard to the unclaimed dividends and balances in the hands of the bank after a certain period returns shall be made of them to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General; but these balances shall remain in the hands of the banks with the publicity given by the return enabling those who have a right to claim them to know that they are there, and to proceed to claim them and make what disposition they please with regard to them, saving that, with reference to banks which become insolvent, I shall have a clause to submit to the Committee which will provide that unclaimed dividends and balances in these respects shall revert to the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. Revert to the Government for what purposes?

Mr. FOSTER. For the very same purposes as we proposed that the whole of them should so revert, always subject, of course, to the claims of individuals who may have a right to them. What I propose in the place of the 89th section, is this:

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Must the return be in the Finance Minister's Department before the expiration of the fifteen days?

Mr. FOSTER. It must be sent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There might be some difficulty in getting the returns in from Prince Edward Island, when the steamboat is unable to run on account of the ice. Sometimes it takes eight or ten days to get a letter. If it is simply

2. Such return shall be signed in the manner required of the monthly returns, under section of this Act, and shall set forth the names of each shareholder or creditor, his last known address, the amount due, the agency of the bank at which the last transcription took place, and the date thereof; and if such shareholder or creditor is known to the bank to be dead, such returns shall show the names and addresses of his legal representatives, so far as known to the bank.

3. Each bank which neglects to transmit or deliver to the Minister of Finance or Receiver General the return above referred to, within the time hereinbefore limited, shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every day during which neglect continues.

It will be seen by this provision that the main object the Government had in view, which was to make sure that parties who had any claim to moneys which were lying in the banks as unclaimed dividends, or balances, or deposits, should have the best possible means of knowing of their existence will be attained by virtue of the return made to the Finance Minister and Receiver General, so that the public may know that these are lying there and that they may be claimed by the parties who have a right to claim them, and that the money should go to its rightful owners. With reference to the other part, as I have stated, that was a minor matter. As the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) intimated, it was never intended by the Government that this should be taken as a mere matter of revenue. It was not supposed that the revenue from this money was so great as to make it a matter of consequence to the Government to desire to get possession of it; and at the present time the Government is not so in need as to require to take charge of these moneys, even in trust, for the sake of adding to its revenue.

Mr. BLAKE. I had intended, when we reached this clause, to refer it to the Select Committee on the North-West furs; but in view of the change which the Minister proposes, I shall abandon that intention.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister of Justice where he thinks these unclaimed balances would go under this provision?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The unclaimed balances which are paid into the treasury?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; the unclaimed balances of the bank.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That would remain as it stands.

Mr. TISDALE. In view of the great changes made in this section I would ask the Minister of Finance to allow it to stand. There are some other matters which I would like to see delayed, and we cannot discuss this section to-night, without fully understanding the purport of this new clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) asked how these balances would stand. Irrespective of the effect of that return they will be subject to the operation of the statute of limitations, under the decisions on that subject. I understand the sub-section which my hon. colleague will propose, with respect to the payment of those sums into the Treasury in case of the insolvency of a bank, will likewise deal to some extent with the question of banks availing themselves of any defence of prescription or statute of limitations. If those are the points to which my friend the hon member for South Norfolk (Mr. Mr. Foster.

Tisdale) refers, perhaps he will discuss them on the sub-section.

Mr. TISDALE. There is an objection in regard to the form in which it is attempted to carry out the principle, in regard to the shortness of the time. It will also compel those who do not wish the fact to be known that they have funds in banks to disclose it to Parliament, and to any one who examines the returns. While I am perfectly willing. and think it proper in the public interest, that these returns should be made so that people can ascertain whether there are any moneys in the hands of the banks that belong to other parties, it is necessary we should carefully guard the privacy of those who have funds deposited. If every year all deposits on which no transactions have taken place shall be made public, I know, from my personal knowledge, that it will prove a serious annoyance to parties who do not want their private affairs known. So that, while we should make the banks disclose somewhere the facts so that parties having just claims can find out whether moneys are deposited in the banks, it is equally important that we should protect the secrecy of banking transactions. I have a letter here from my town written by a man who, I thought, would be about the last man to have a deposit in a bank. He writes asking me to oppose this provision, because he has money deposited in the bank for each of his children, and he is leaving it there to accumulate. The first amount will be drawn twelve years hence, and the other in fifteen years, and he does not wish the fact of the deposit to be known. According to this Bill, the fact will be announced at the end of five years. If we compel this disclosure to be made in every case, the people will discover some other place in which to make private deposits, and allow them to accumulate outside of the banks. I understand the Minister does not want the secrecy of transactions to be exposed, and in that he is quite right, while at the same time he is determined that the bank shall make such returns as will enable the people who have moneys there to obtain them. In the second place, I do not agree with the proposal that the amount should be stated in the return. names and addresses will be sufficient, and information as to the amount can afterwards be obtained from the bank. I desire further time to consider the clause.

I sympathise entirely with Mr. FOSTER. what the hon, gentleman has said with respect to the class of transactions about which there is any implied contract or agreement, and this clause has been especially carefully drawn in order to avoid that danger. The only idea in view was to cover that class of dividends and balances with respect to which no transaction had taken place and no contract or agreement involving secrecy, which for various purposes is often a condition in the deposit of these moneys. Only those that had none of those conditions are to be made public, so that the persons who could legally or rightfully claim moneys might know of their existence and consequently be able to claim deposits of that kind, which such depositors would have a perfect right to do. To show that this is the case the clause is guarded in three ways. It is provided that the banks shall make return of all dividends which have remained unpaid for more than five years, and also of amounts or balances in respect of which no transactions have taken place within five years, or upon which no interest has been paid during the five years prior to the date of the statement; and a proviso is added that in the case of money deposited for a fixed period, the period of five years above referred to shall be reckoned from the date of the termination of such fixed period. So it entirely covers the case which the hon, gentleman has stated of a person who wished to deposit money for his children or for his wife or for a friend, and does not wish the fact to be made public. If the money has to be paid only when the child comes of age, that makes it a fixed period, and this provision I think covers all that class of cases. Then when you take the other two classes in which interest has been paid, or in respect to which transactions have taken place, they cover all possible dividends or balances about which there can be any desired secrecy, any agreement or any contract. It is quite right that all those three points should be carefully guarded in the interests of those who deposit in that way. So there is nothing substantially new, and I would like very well, unless there is very decided objection offered, that we should discuss this provision and pass it, and that would not prevent any hon. gentleman here after coming back to the clause.

Mr. MULOCK. The only thing which causes me to have any doubt on the matter is, that a very high financial authority in this country, on two occasions at least in my presence, declared that the language of the provision could not be improved. I refer to the proposition contained in this Bill when it was first introduced into this House, and in regard to which, the Finance Minister, after a month's consideration, declared that while there might be some other defects in this measure, it was simply perfection in regard to this question of claimed balances, and he stood on that principle with both feet.

Mr. TISDALE. The Minister of Finance did not understand me on the point I raised, or else I did not make myself plain. Most of the cases I referred to will not be for fixed periods. They do not deposit them for fixed periods, because they always want to take them out when they please, or in case of their being dissatisfied with the strength or arrangements of the bank. For instance, take the case of a wife who has an improvident husband, and who is putting by a fund to provide for a rainy day. She does not fix the period, but at the end of five years the fact of her having that fund would be disclosed, What I endeavored to make plain, as one of my objections, was, that a large number of these cases would not be for fixed periods.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand the hon. Minister of Justice to say that he was clearly of opinion that when money had been deposited with a bank, and no interest had been paid, although instead of accumulating it it had been entered to credit in the bank's books during a period of six years, that the statute of limitations would apply?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would not say that if the entry were entered to credit in the account, the statute of limitations would apply. I am assuming that there is simply a deposit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What you might call a deposit on current account without interest?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In such a case the statute of limitation would apply.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the majority of cases, even where there is a fixed deposit, as on a deposit receipt, the interest is not carried to credit, unless the receipt is produced and the interest drawn and recredited on the receipt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. of banks differs materially in that respect. No doubt, in many cases it is so, but in some cases it Although no doubt the law is as the Minister of Justice stated, I think that the general custom of banking nearly all over the world, deters banks from ever making use of the statute of limitations against their customers. It is, I believe, both the custom and in the interest of banks, not to put the statute of limitations in force against any party establishing a claim to a sum of money deposited with them. That being the case, the question arises whether the term of five years which the hon. gentleman has fixedand which I presume from some of the statements made, had some reference to the statute of limitations—is not unduly short. I should be disposed to think, taking all things into consideration, that that might be very considerably extended without any detriment to the object sought by the Government, and without any risk of injury or inconvenience to the public. If that reasonable extension were made, it would, I think, remove pretty much all the objections to the clause as now proposed to be amended.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think there is a great deal in the point raised by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), and as he has asked that this clause be allowed to stand until he has an opportunity of considering it, I think it would be desirable that his request should be acceded to. There ought, in my opinion, to be a special clause in this Act, stating that the statute of limitations should not be used by a bank against persons who claim the unpaid balances such as we referred to in the Bill. I think there is also objection, as my hon. friend stated, to the manner of making these returns. There should be a return made somewhere, and there should be a source through which people who may imagine themselves interested in a balance or balances at a bank or banks, should be able to get that information. The objection taken by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), is that a publicity is given to the general public who have no interest whatever in the individual accounts, in so far as this concerns that secrecy which ought to surround transactions in banks. No doubt a great many people have a great aversion to have other people know their business. The instances the hon. gentleman has given are such as to convince this Committee, I think, that a great deal of care should be used to guard against any undue publicity being given to the public, with reference to these unpaid balances. I think the request of my hon. friend, to have a little time to consider this matter, is reasonable and should be granted.

Mr. GUILLET. After listening to the objections made by the hon. member for South Norfolk

(Mr. Tisdale) it occurred to me that there were several reasons why depositors would object to depositing for a fixed period. They might wish to reserve the right to draw the deposit in case of urgent need, or in case that the bank became weakened, and they considered their deposits were not safe there, and wished to place them in another institution. These are reasons why a depositor would not desire to make a deposit for an indefinite period. I know of the case of a friend of mine who left for foreign parts, and deposited his money, expecting to return soon; but he was not heard from for ten years, when he sent for and obtained his deposit. The case of another gentleman occurs to me, who deposited a considerable sum, expecting to return to Canada the following year, but he was required to leave for India on business, and did not return to this country for nine years. It appears to me that no return should be made in these cases. The fact that there are respectable and strong private banks in the country, which have the confidence of the people, will, it seems to me, cause this clause to operate in favor of these institutions and unfavorable to the chartered banks, inasmuch as the private banks are not required under the Act to make this return. There is a valuable institution of this kind called the Midland Banking Company, in the county adjoining mine, and it has obtained a large measure of confidence from the people, and receives a large amount of deposits. I am quite sure that it would be unfair to the chartered banks to impose upon them these restrictions, especially for the limited period which is named, when the unchartered banks not being subject to the provision will thereby receive perhaps great benefit and advantage. It seems to me that this provision will operate in favor of other institutions-for instance, trust and loan societies--which receive large deposits. There is no provision requiring them to report their unclaimed deposits. For these reasons, I think there should be, at least, an extension of the period.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now that the Minister of Finance is put upon the track of other moneys that may be got, I have no doubt that we will follow up this Bill with one to amend the Loan Companies' Act.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) with regard to the objection made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). If I understood him aright, the principal objection he made was to the expose of a private transaction between a bank and an individual. He instances the case of money being deposited to be drawn by certain beneficiaries at a certain time. I submit that the amendment proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance makes abundant provision for that case. If the money is deposited for a fixed period, the return is not to be made until five years after that fixed period expires. If it is not deposited for a fixed period, all that the depositor needs to do is, a little while before the five years expire, to go to the bank and pay in a dollar or two, or draw a dollar or two out, and the deposit is not subject to a return. I think the amendment exactly meets the case; I fully approve of it; I do not think believe that the banks themselves take such means the hon. Finance Minister could have done anyMr. Guillet.

thing better; and I intend to support it just as it stands.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the period of five years is too short. I think it might be well to extend it to ten years, which would go a long way to meet the objections of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). Then, I do not think it is absolutely necessary that the return Then, I do not should be laid before Parliament every year. I think it would be sufficient to have the return presented to the Finance Minister or the Receiver General. Then it would always be subject to the order of Parliament, and could be brought down when wanted, by a resolution of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the section might be amended by providing that all unclaimed balances or dividends remaining unpaid for a term of five years or ten years, whatever the limit may be, should be returned provided the owner is unknown to the bank. As to the proviso with regard to moneys deposited for a fixed period, I am not aware whether there is such a thing as a fixed period in the depositing of moneys in banks. I think money is deposited either on current account or by deposit receipt, or on the savings bank plan; but I am not acquainted with any arrangement for fixed periods, and I would like hon, gentlemen who are interested in banks to say whether there is any or not. Then, what is meant by the phrase, "where no transaction has taken place?" If the money is in the bank and the interest is added to it every six months, is that a transaction? If these points are made clear, perhaps the clause as it stands will answer the purpose; but I should think that unless the owner of the money is out of the country or is unknown to the bank, the bank should not be called upon to disclose his account.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I understand that it is not usual to deposit money for a fixed period. Money is sometimes deposited on the condition that unless it is left on deposit for a certain period, it may be for one or two or three months, a certain rate of interest will not be allowed; that is the only fixed period that I know of. As regards the statute of limitations, it has certainly not been understood by the banks to apply to any moneys or deposits left with them; in fact they have acted entirely in the contrary sense. In the case of one bank which has been in existence for a long time, deposited moneys have been paid out, not merely after five or six years, but after fifteen, twenty or thirty years. I do think myself that the period spoken of is far too short, and I should like to see it extended, not to ten years, but if we are to have that clause at all, to twenty years.

Mr. FOSTER. Say a hundred.

Sir DONALD SMITH. We might not be able to keep track of it for a hundred years; many might be able to do so for twenty years, and I trust that the hon. gentleman is among that number, although I cannot, perhaps, look forward so far. But we are speaking at this moment of things which are practicable. It may be proper that there should be some means providing for the banks communicating with those who are interested.

been made to them within a certain number of years, to find out if the people who have deposits with them are in existence or not; and it might be very well that there should be some provision requiring the banks, when they cannot find an owner for moneys on deposit, after having made proper enquiry through the post in the usual way, to make a return of the names of those who have money on deposit and who cannot be found. And it should be so made that it will be sufficiently explicit for those who have an interest in it. For myself, I should much prefer to see the clause struck out altogether. The present law has worked well, without any injury to anybody, and it would be found that there would not be any great hurt done to anybody for the next ten years by leaving it as it is. I trust the hon. the Minister will see his way either to leave it as it is, or to extend the time very materially, and also to eliminate that portion which calls for amounts which may be due.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not rise to add anything in a lengthened way to the discussion, but I want to ask the Committee not to consider only one class of illustrations. There is another class. Suppose a laboring man comes out from England to this country, leaving his wife and family behind. He works upon a railway here for several years and amasses, over and above what he has sent to his wife and family and what he required for personal expenses, say $1,000, which he has deposited in bank. He meets with an accident, is drowned for instance, and his bank book disappears with him and is never recovered. There is a case in which his wife and children would be deprived of this money. Whose money is it? It certainly does not belong to the bank. The man's family have no knowledge of it, and no way of finding out, unless the fact be published. I think that woman and her family would consider five years long enough for the bank to keep this money which belongs to her. I shall not consent to strike out this clause. The Bill may go, but the clause shall not, as far as I am concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It occurs to me that such a person as the hon. gentleman describes would be more likely to deposit his money in a savings bank, and, perhaps, by preference, the Government savings bank. Has the Government given orders that such lists should be published with reference to the savings banks under their control? If they have not they should do so forthwith?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is hardly worth while to do that until we test the policy of this House on the subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Your sense of justice should move you to do it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Private institutions should have no right to keep other people's money as their own, or, at least, they should be made to disclose what balances they have. I should have been exceedingly surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal (Sir Donald Smith) if he had not explained, at the close of his observations, that he was opposed to the clause entirely. Any person opposed to such a provision of the Bill can suggest means by which it can be made practically useless. The hon. gen- the hon. the Finance Minister in favor of the tleman suggests that the clause should only apply to balances lying unclaimed for twenty years. I think such a provision would be quite as useful, and not more useful, than a provision applying to balances lying unclaimed for 100 years. It might also be rendered perfectly useless by saying that it can only apply to names and not amounts. It may be of some importance to prevent absolute publicity as to the amount, but there cannot be a doubt in the mind of any one who is in favor of this return being made, of the necessity of having the return made to the Finance Minister of the amounts as well as the names. The great object of the return is to indicate to those persons, who are rightfully entitled to the money, not only the bare fact that the person himself, or those who represent him, has a sum of money in a bank, but the amount which they are entitled to claim from the bank. Let us suppose that a deposit to which this section shall apply is only returned under the name of A. B., without any indication of the amount. What means would there be of rendering that practically useful for the purpose of recovering the amount from the bank. The bank would say: "We have made all the return the law requires; we admit that A. B. had money in this bank; prove how much or how little;" and the representative would be forced, in order to recover the balance, to commence an action, the costs of which may be $300, while the balance may turn out to be You can likewise succeed in defeating all the usefulness of the clause if you surround it with the other guards which the hon, member for Montreal (Sir Donald Smith) mentioned, as, for instance, making it apply only to cases where the bank has endeavored but failed to find out the whereabouts of the depositor. That endeavor might be made in a perfunctory manner; there is no check on the fidelity with which it is made. We ought to have a return of all the balances, irrespective of any efforts that may or may not be made to discover the whereabouts of the depositor. With regard to the period, it seems to me that five years is a very convenient and proper time. It is the period of limitations in Quebec, and it is desirable to have the period uniform all through Canada. It might have been made six years, to suit the statute of limitations in other Provinces, but we thought it better to have it uniform; and, therefore, made the period that fixed by the law of the Province of Quebec, not because the statute of limitations will apply to these deposits, because we intend to prevent that, but because for a very long period that has been considered, and wisely considered everywhere, as about the time when a debt should be collected, if it is to be collected at all. The policy on which the statute of limitations was founded is the policy which indicates that that is a fair period to fix in this regard. Upon that ground it would be well not to enlarge to any great extent this period; and on the whole, I am strongly inclined to think the period is a fair one, and the most convenient one to work, being the one generally followed.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I doubt very much, and I do claim to know something of the matter, if there would be found one case on the list of unclaimed balances, such as that conjured up by orphan and widow. I doubt if any one case can be found such as that. Some such balances of small amounts there may be, but when you speak of anything like $1,000, or even $100, it will be found that there are none such on those lists.

Mr. FOSTER. The same principle would apply if only $25.

Sir DONALD SMITH. The principle would apply certainly, but, it is a very different thing from saying that to propose to extend the time to twenty years, we are not to have any list at all. But if twenty years is too long, although I cannot think myself it is, then it should be made ten years, which will bring us to the next period for dealing with bank charters. I do trust, that even now the hon. Minister will see his way to modify what he proposes, and to extend the time, and not to require the publication of the exact amount.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked what the practice was among the banks in regard to these balances which would be affected by this clause. Speaking only from a knowlege of the manner in which the banks in the Maritime Provinces are conducted, I may say that these balances arise either on current accounts or on deposit receipts. The deposit receipt, bearing interest, is usually a demand obligation, the bank claiming at the same time that it shall not be compelled to pay without a certain notice. As regards the unclaimed balances on current accounts, the Minister of Justice has said that the information which the banks endeavor to obtain is obtained in a perfunctory manner. The hon, gentleman must permit me to say, that that is hardly an accurate description of the manner in which the banks discharge their duty in regard to current account balances. Hon. gentlemen who are acquainted with the management of banks will recognise that it is absolutely impossible for a correct inspection of a bank to be made unless each current account is certified to. It is within the knowledge of everyone who keeps an account in a bank that at least once a year the bank sends to each of its creditors a certificate for him to sign as to the accuracy of the balance which he has at his credit on current account. When an inspection takes place at any bank agency, it is one of the most imperative duties of the inspector to ascertain that the balance at the credit of each current account is so certified. I think hon, gentlemen will recognise that it is essential in the interests of the banks that they shall ascertain positively and beyond peradventure that the current account balances shall be certified to every time when an inspection takes place at an agency, and at least once a year at the head office. Everyone who has a bank account must know that this is done, and that, if the certificate is not given, he is importuned by the bank until he certifies to the correctness of the balance account. That is one manner in which the banks have adopted for their own protection, that they endeavor to satisfy themselves as to the accuracy of current accounts. As to the deposit receipts it is not so easy for the bank to ascertain the whereabouts of each depositor, and a deposit receipt, like a bill of exchange, may be negotiable anywhere, and the bank may be called upon, ten, fifteen or twenty years after issuing a deposit receipt, to pay the amount. As to the Sir Donald Smith.

question of the unclaimed balances, I do not think you will find in the history of the oldest bank in Canada any amount which appeared either at the credit of a current account or the amount of an old deposit receipt, ever carried to the profit and loss account. It stands as one of the liabilities of the bank, and has invariably been so recognised by every bank in Canada. Reference has been made to the statute of limitations, and the possibility of a bank pleading that statute in regard to a balance due either on current account or on a deposit receipt. I think this House should so legislate that it should not be possible for any bank to plead the statute of limitations. The Minister of Finance stated that his proposal contained nothing substantially new. As I understand the bank charters of Canada, they have been twice renewed since Confederation, and this is the first time when it has been considered necessary to insert such a clause as we are now considering. Therefore, the hon gentleman must reering. cognise that it is very substantially new, and he must not be surprised if the chartered banks of Canada seek for some very satisfactory ex-planation before they are prepared to accept an innovation like this upon the charters under which they have been working for very many years. I think it is hardly fair to say that the banks desire to pocket other people's money, when we see that they make every effort—in the matter of current accounts and deposit receiptsto ascertain the whereabouts of their depositors. It would seem to me that, as far as the public interest is concerned, if it was thought wise, where the address of a depositor is not known, or after the lapse of 10, 15 or 20 years his whereabouts cannot be ascertained, it might be well that a return should be made of his name, of the fact that he is a depositor in a certain bank, that on a certain day he made a deposit in a certain agency of that bank, and the return might state the last known address of the depositor, or, if that is not known, the last known address of his heirs or of those known to be interested in his estate. If that was given, I think all the protection necessary would be accorded to the public. That such must be the feeling of the Government is evident from the fact that they have never thought it necessary to advertise or to notify the public in any way as to the amounts lying to the credit of depositors in the Government savings banks. If this matter is so important, I should think it would be the first duty of the Government to advertise the names of those persons to whose credit stand the unclaimed balances which have accrued in their own savings banks. With all due deference to my honfriend the Minister of Justice, he must permit me to say that five years seems to be an unconscionably short time. He says that in the Province of Quebecit might be possible for the banks to plead the statute of limitations. I do not think that statute has ever been pleaded by any bank in Canada, and I do think we should legislate that it should be impossible for any bank in Canada to plead the statute of limitations. I should think it would be possible to incorporate a clause in the Bill to prevent any bank pleading the statute of limitations. I think the time should be very much extended even if the Government insists upon this provision.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. KENNY. Especially as regards deposit receipts. That is a contract made with an individual where the bank binds itself to pay that individual or his representative a certain sum of money whenever he calls for it. Now, the bank stands in a little different position relative to a current account, because in a current account balance a man has money immediately available at his credit, but he holds no voucher from the bank. But the deposit receipt is very often put away; the money is put in by individuals who do not desire to touch it for a lengthened period. Now you compel these persons to go to the bank at the end of some fixed period, and I say that for that reason, and for many others, the period of five years is decidedly too short.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I congratulate the Minister of Finance in making one modification of this clause as he originally proposed it, and I think he has gone in the right direction. I am sure the House could not have approved of the original proposition which was practically confiscation of the money, But the changes he has made, while they are in the right direction, I think, do not go far enough. He has limited the time for making a return of these unclaimed dividends and balances, to five years. Now, why is that period taken? I suppose it is taken for the reason given by the Minister of Justice, that it is the period at which the statute of limitations in the Province of Quebec bars actions, and he says it is desirable to make the same limitation of time throughout the Dominion. But I think this will not be a good reason. We can change the statute of limitations, so far as regards the setting up of the statute against such balances, and we can provide in this Act-and I understand it is the intention of the Government to provide—that the bank accepting a charter under this Act shall not be allowed to plead the statute of limitations to any action brought to recover unclaimed dividends and unclaimed balances; and if a clause of that kind is inserted, then the reason of this term of five years disappears. I think the term of five years is too short. The reason we are asked to give this return at all is to give publicity to the names of persons who are dead, or have disappeared, or who have lost sight of the money to their credit, and five years is too short for that. People may have left it there willingly for five years, they want tolet the interest accumulate; they may have died a year after, and if they have, there is no reason why their heirs should not wait. But I think a sufficiently short time would be the duration of the charter which we are giving the bank. We are giving these banks a charter for ten years, let that be the period. Let any bank hold a balance for ten years, and then let a return be made. I think and then let a return be made. I think that is quite short enough time to require them to make a return, especially if the people are not known to them. If the people are known to them, the bank will find them out; in order to make a return the bank will hunt them up, and it is reasonable that they should have, at least, ten years before disclosing the names of their depositors. Now, a very practical question comes in here with regard to one class of these deposits, it is the case of deposits for which a deposit receipt is given. Now, a deposit receipt is a negotiable order. He endorses that over. John Brown makes a deposit of $1,000 in the bank and he takes a deposit receipt, and six months afterwards he disposes of that deposit receipt to Richard Doe, and Richard Doe puts it in his strong box, and perhaps it happens to him, as in the case the Minister of Finance has depicted with such vividness, that he is lost in a ship, or he is burnt up, and he disappears, and then the return is published that this money is at the credit of John Brown, whereas John Brown is not entitled to it, nor is John Brown's representatives. John Brown has gotvalue for it, John Brown has sold the depositreceipt, and Richard Doe or his representatives are entitled to it. How are you going to meet that

Mr. BOWELL. The bank will let him keep it. I suppose.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Then, what is the use of the return here? I submit that the publishing of these returns will not meet the case of deposit receipts. Suppose George Foster is a party to the transaction. I say if John Brown deposits money and transfers a receipt to George Foster, it is George Foster who is entitled to the money, and not John Brown, and there is no use in publishing that name. Again, this principle that you are bringing in here for the first time is a new principle, and any new principle of legislation ought to be adopted only to redress some grievance, and there is no practical inconvenience here, no grievance has ever been suggested to exist, in fact we find here in the statutes of the Dominion the very contrary provision, we find that with regard to Post Office savings banks the postmasters and their officers shall not disclose the name of any depositor. There is a statute passed in 1886 by this Government in which the principle of secrecy is recognised, by which the names of depositors in the Government savings banks shall not be disclosed. And why should the names of men who deposit money in one of the chartered banks of the Dominion have their names disclosed to the public, and the amounts standing to their credit? I say that even if the names are published, there is no reason why the amount should be given, and I hope the Minister of Finance will strike out that clause regarding the amounts to be given, and that the names and addresses only should be published after a period of ten years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose it would answer the purposes of the banks as well not only to strike out the amounts, but to strike out the names, too. My hon. friend calls attention to this fact, that deposit receipts are negotiable instruments, and because deposits are sometimes transferred, the publication of the name, he says, would not be useful. It is not difficult to suggest cases in which the publication of this return would not be useful. There may be cases in which the person having a deposit has left no living relative, and the publication would serve no useful purpose in his case. We are using a return, and we are proposing legislation for the great class of cases in which it may be useful, although it is quite possible to conceive that in some cases it may be of no use at all. With regard to the proposal that it shall be for the life of the charter of the bank, it amounts to this: the Government having instrument, it is payable to the depositor or his conceded all that the banks professed to wish, namely, that the money should not be taken from them, and at the same time the banks having proclaimed in the loudest tones their anxiety that there should be a publication of the names of depositors, that there might be the fullest publicity and frankness with the whole public—the banks now say this: Oh, don't put that into force until this Act expires, then we will use some force and pressure again to prevent it being put in the new charters. There would be no return and no publication, except as to past balances, until a Banking Act should be brought down at the end of the next decade, and there would be the same fight on the floor of Parliament to defeat that to which the bankers have agreed every time they have opened their mouths on this subject. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) said I had asserted that the way in which the banks made their enquiries as regards the whereabouts of depositors was purely perfunctory. I did not say so. But from the manner in which this clause is objected to, obstructed and its operation endeavored to be defeated, I would not wonder if it should be so. All I said in that regard was this: that if you say that returns need not be made, if the banks have ascertained the whereabouts or taken reliable measures to ascertain the whereabouts of the depositors, you will have no supervision over the operation of your section, and no check whatever. The most perfunctory method may be adopted. I have not said that all this business is done perfunctorily now. I am pointing out now that, if Parliament should require no restriction, the whole operation of the section would be defeated. The banks themselves would be the only judges as to whether they had proper information as to the whereabouts of their depositors or not, and it would be equivalent to saying that the returns should be made as the banks please, and that if the banks did not please there should be no returns at all. My hon. friend has almost intimated that the pleading of the statute of limitations is unknown in the history of banking. Perhaps it has not been pleaded in Canada. have no doubt that banking in this country, as regards unclaimed deposits to which the statute of limitations applies, is fair. I do not dispute that the banks have not set up the statute of limitations, and no respectable bank in Canada would do so. But the point has been raised, it has been raised by a wicked bank somewhere else, and it has been made the established law of England; and being so, shall we reverse that principle or not, and shall we give the relatives of depositors, before they are greyhaired old men and do not want the money, or have passed out of existence, the information that there is money in the name of their deceased ancestors, or shall we simply say that John Doe or Richard Roe had some money there, and that it is none of your business what it was or what is the amount. Inasmuch as this is an entirely new question, I admit authority does not count for very much; but if we can get a little light from authority on such a question, it is useful, because it brings to our notice the reasons which may exist with respect to the usefulness of such a provision. Among legal practitioners the Law Journal, I need not say, is one of very great value and of high authority. In its number of 22nd March, 1890, of "Chitty on Contracts," emphasises the rule laid view is not so clear. Sir John Thompson. it calls attention to the fact that a recent edition down in the case of Pott vs. Clegg, 16 M. and W. 321; 16 Law J. Rep. Excheq. 201, 11 Jur. 289, to the effect:

"That moneys left with a banker if not drawn upon for six years becomes at the end of that time the absolute property of the banker by virtue of the statute of limitations. The suggestion has been made that some legislation is desirable to avoid or mitigate the occasion of great hardships which this rule might cause as where a person should die leaving a large balance at this bank unknown to his executors, and this suggestion seems reasonable enough."

As regards the period of time this authority says:

"We do not think, however, it would be desirable to extend the period of limitation. A fair and just reform would be to provide that during the last two of the six years bankers should be compelled to advertise particulars of such unclaimed balances, and at the end of six years they should become the property of the bankers, indeed as at present, but subject to a very substantial claim for special duty on the part of the transfer of the exchequer."

The provision that unclaimed balances should be divided between the banks and the Government, would not be considered a fair proposition in this country. But the Committee will observe that those who make such a proposition to readjust the law with respect to the operation of the statute of limitations, as regards bank deposits, contend that particulars of all deposits should be published at the end of four years. Such legisla-tion exists in New Zealand, but there, not only is the list with all the amounts of deposits and the names published in extenso in the official organ of the Government, but the list is sent to the office of the High Commissioner or Agent for New Zealand, in London, and an advertisement is there inserted calling the attention of the British public to the fact that the list is in that office for their inspection, in order that relatives of persons who have gone to the colony shall have ready access to full particulars as to moneys that lie unclaimed in the New Zealand banks. Let me refer to a book familiar to all of us. I admit, with respect to the whole of this matter, I am not using these references for authority properly so-called, but for the little light they give and for the illustrations afforded. I refer to Whittacker's almanac, which, referring to this subject, says:

"By the East India Unclaimed Stocks Act, 1885, provision is made for the transfer to the Government of India of all unclaimed Indian stocks till claimants appear, and, judging by discussion at the recent colonial conference, legislation may shortly be looked for with reference to unclaimed dividends on all colonial stocks."

As to unclaimed dividends of companies, and dividends generally, the author goes on to say:

"That the public would largely gain by the proposal of publicity may easily be judged of by the perusal of the balance sheets of the leading railway, banking and insurance companies. The amount invested in railways exceeds £800,000,000, and the item, unclaimed dividends, amounts in most cases to several thousand pounds. A very remarkable claim against the Royal Exchange Assurance Company may be noted; the representative of an original one hundred pound stockholder recovering no less than £3,600, and after 163 years non claimed."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The statute of limitations was not pleaded.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Evidently not. Whether that poor man would have fared as well in Canada, in view of the attitude taken by certain hon. members in this House who take the banker's view is not so clear.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a reflection on some of us which is unjust. I advocated that the statute of limitations should not be pleaded.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood so. The hon. gentleman took the view of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale).

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon, gentleman cannot refer to my position. I understood the hon. gentleman was going to introduce a clause stating that the statute of limitations could not be pleaded

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I did not refer to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KIRKPATBICK. Then the hon. gentleman must refer to me. I made the same remark, that I thought a clause would be introduced providing that the statute of limitations could not be pleaded.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not mean to refer to the hon. gentleman as a poor man. On the contrary, by the attitude he has taken on this question, I supposed he had largely invested in bank stocks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Well, I have not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. It must have been the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), the hon. gentleman referred to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let us proceed a minute until we see some of the instances which my hon. friend from Montreal (Sir Donald Smith), might say, if we suggested them, here were cases that we had conjured up.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I hope the hon. Minister will not direct any remark to me.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think I can possibly make any more exceptions.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I do not think there were any such instances in Canada 160 years ago. Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let us see further what this says about unclaimed bank deposits:

what this says about unclaimed bank deposits:

"Unclaimed bank deposits.—Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless a fact that many deposits made with bankers years ago for safe custody, are still lying musty, dusty, and, in some cases, rotting away. If particulars of these deposits were published, many interesting and valuable 'finds' in the shape of family title deeds, plate, jewellery, &c., would be the result. For instance, in the case of the winding-up of a Dublin bank the following (among other) items were advertised in the newspapers:
"Box, containing diamonds and articles of jewellery, lodged by Doctor Andrew Blake and George Jennings on 22nd December, 1795.

"Box, containing thirty-nine articles of plate, some of them bearing a coronet.
"A perusal of the foregoing facts and figures would seem to show the desirability of the Government introducing some comprehensive scheme, dealing with all unclaimed funds. The result would be a great public benefit. Newspapers would no doubt give publicity to the Government returns, while sums unclaimed for a certain number of years, might then, without injustice, fall into the national exchequer, and be utilised as many other unclaimed funds have been, towards the reduction of the national debt."

These are illustrations which indicate that in a

These are illustrations which indicate that in a growing country like Canada, with its growing commerce, and I hope, its growing wealth, there will be cases in which the provisions of a Bill like this will be found eminently useful.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I put a question to the hon. Minister of Justice some time ago, and I saw from his answer that the question was not that in dealing with this matter we have to rightly apprehended. I suppose I did not put it thoroughly guard the interests of the public, and with sufficient clearness. I do not exactly know upon what ground the Government are proposing legislation, in the direction they have intimated it is their intention to legislate. Of course, if the it is their intention to legislate. Government chooses to declare banks the trustees of all these unclaimed balances, then the statute of limitations would not apply, because the statute does not apply against trustees, and by publication it would be known for all time to come to whom this property belonged, if there was any rightful claim upon the property. My enquiry some time ago arose from the fact that I thought the legislation that the Government proposed in the Bill as it now stands, that the alteration which the Minister of Finance had proposed, proceeded upon the assumption that the Government of Canada was the rightful claimant of all these balances, when no heir could be found to the persons who deposited the money in the bank. I do not know whether that is the position taken by the Government or not, but it seemed to me that both what was contained in the Bill previously, and that which is now proposed to be substituted for it, are based upon this assumption. I cannot see that property in bank stock, or in bank deposits, would in any way differ from any other kind of personal property. It belongs to the person, and is under the protection of the law of the Province in which he resides. so far as it is his property. It seems to me, that where there is a depositor residing in the Province of Ontario, and if he dies without heirs, his property deposited in the bank would pass to the Attorney General of the Province, as representing the Crown in that Province, and so in other Provinces, and if his home was in England, it would pass, not to the Government of Canada, or to any one of the Provinces, but to the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom. The Government, it is true, in making provisions for banking may provide that it shall become the trustee for persons who die holding either bank stock or deposits in banks; but it would be equally proper and serve an equally efficient purpose, if the Government were It could be as well to make the bank the trustee. provided that the bank should be the trustee, as that the Government should be the trustee, or the personal representative of the parties. I can see a very great deal to be said in the favor of notice of unclaimed balances being given, at least as often as once in five years. There may be creditors of the parties who have money deposited who may have an interest in knowing whether there are such deposits or not, and in making distribution among the creditors of the deceased person, the amount which they receive may often depend upon the fact of the deposits in the bank being known. It is, therefore, important that this information should be given. There might be serious objections to publishing the exact amount, because if that were done it might invite spurious claims from persons who thought there was an opportunity of successfully imposing upon the estate of the depositor. I am at a loss to know upon what ground the Government are proceeding, or whether they are really making a claim to the property where the person dies without heirs.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I fully agree with the remarks of some hon. gentlemen who have spoken, at the same time to do what we think is just to the monetary institutions of the country. It is conceded by the Committee that the law should be that banks shall not be able to plead the statute of limitations in regard to any unclaimed dividends, or unclaimed balances of deposits. As I understand it, that, at present, is the practice of the banks of this country, and I think it would be a very sorry day, indeed, for any bank which would introduce the practice of pleading the statute of limitations against such claims. I fancy their deposits would diminish in proportion as their conduct deserves. This section provides for a return in two classes of cases, that is to say, a deposit in respect of which no transaction has taken place, or in which no interest has been paid during the five years prior to the date of such statement. It has been stated that the difficulty might be easily overcome by the deposit or withdrawal of a dollar during the period. That is a formality which would prac-tically be a farce; and it would seem to be too much to require that formality to be gone through in order to protect the deposit from publication. I have a suggestion to make to the Finance Minister which I think will meet the case. The meaning of it is that an account which is not a live account at the end of five years, or in which no dealings have taken place during the five years, should be published. It is said that in many cases the publication would be of great value to the public, and I agree that it would. At the same time, there is another class of cases in which the publication would not be desirable. Take the case of a man who has a deposit which has existed for four years or a little longer, and who is about going away on a trip to Europe. He does not think anything about the account, and he does not want it made public; but his absence is the cause of the bank publishing to the world his whole business with them. I would suggest, therefore, that you should provide for another class of cases in which the bank should not be required to make the publication, by adding, "or in respect of which the bank has been requested in writing in the year next previous to the expiration of the five years, not to publish any particular in respect of such deposit or such money." Then, a person being absent, would simply require to write to the bank prior to the expiration of the time, saying: "I do not require you to make any publication of my deposit." I am very glad that the Minister of Finance has adopted what I believe is the general view of the Committee in respect to taking over the unclaimed dividends, and we have now only to settle this one question of the publication. When the period is decided upon, I think some such addition as I have submitted might, with very great service to depositors, be added.

Mr. TISDALE. The great objection I have to the short time, is based on the very principle which the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) mentions; and if you can draw a distinction in words between a live account and a dead account, I do not see that the extent of the period makes any difference. I have not the slightest objection to five years, if that distinction can be made; in fact, in that case, I think the sooner we know about the dead accounts the better. But if the provision applies simply to an account existing for a certain Mr. Moncrieff.

I have the strongest repugnance to together. making any changes in the bank charters unless for good reason. The Finance Minister has acted very fairly in regard to this matter He has changed this clause, expunging the portion which I consider the most objectionable, and introducing a new principle, of which I heartily approve; and the only thing to be done now is to qualify that, so that it will not do more harm than good. I have looked up some statistics, and I find that in the State of Massachusetts, where there is $294,000,000 on deposit, there is less than one-eighth of one per cent. of unclaimed balances or dead accounts. If the distinction between live and dead accounts could be clearly drawn, I am satisfied that the unanimous feeling of the Committee would be met on that point. I see a difficulty in wording the clause, but I thought there was a good deal in the suggestion of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), that the banks should publish only the names of people whom they did not know to be alive.

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to the desire which the hon member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) evinces, of having only dead accounts dealt with, I really think the accounts the Government propose to deal with are dead enough, because it is only in the cases of balances, in respect of which no transactions have taken place and no interest has been paid during the five years, that this provision is made. Whether the people are alive or not, the account is practically dead.

Mr. TISDALE. A credit of interest would not keep it alive, as-that would not be a transaction.

Mr. EDGAR. Most people in the legal profession who have had to do with the administration of the estates of intestates have had experience of many cases where justice would have been served by a publication of balances of this kind. I have, in my own practice, seen many instances in which it was only by the merest accident that balances were found to exist in the banks, though, I admit, chiefly savings banks. There is another class of cases in which I have seen the same practical difficulty arise—the administration of lunatics' estates. It will be a great advantage, when lunatics have been confined in the asylums for years and are unable to give information as to the condition of affairs, to have these returns published. I cannot really see why there should be any objection to having the name and amounts stated. There is no objection in the case of bank shares.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). It is not claimed that the legislation on the subject of the statute of limitations would be based on any claim of the Crown to succeed to personal property by analogy to escheats. I do not say that it might not be based upon that, but the law upon that subject is too unsettled to justify its being based upon that principle. I think it comes within the principle of the Banking Act. We say that no institutions, except those authorised by Parliament, shall carry on the business of We have the right to limit the extent banking. to which they shall do business, and decide what kind of business they shall do. We have the right to authorise their receiving money on deposit or to prohibit their so doing; and we have the right to say on what terms they shall receive the deposits, number of years, live and dead accounts must go in what interest they shall pay, and how long they shall keep them without availing themselves of any period of prescription. We might provide a form of return of unpaid dividends and balances, which should itself contain an admission that would take the case out of the statute of limitations. I would rather not discuss the way it should be dealt with several ways it can be done, and it will be inconvenient at this stage to discuss the propriety of any particular method.

Mr. HESSON. I cannot understand the argument of the hon. member for South Norfolk. speaks strongly against the existence of this clause as an injury and injustice to depositors through the fact being made known that there are moneys lying to their credit, and then he tells us that there are no such funds worth speaking of—that $\frac{1}{8}$ of 1 per cent. would cover the amount. I do not see how it can injure anybody to have it made public that he has a balance at the bank. It is not a question of breach of faith or trust between the depositors and the banks, when the banks are only carrying out the law which requires that this thing should be done. If any depositor objects to having his balance made known, all he has to do is to have a change made in his account, which he can do very easily by drawing some money, or making a deposit, or having the interest entered up; and if five years have been allowed to elapse without any change having been made in the account, that is good ground for believing that something is wrong and that those entitled to the money should be made known of its existence. If it is not offensive to shareholders of banks to have the stock list published, I do not see why it should be offensive to depositors to have their deposits made known after the five years' period.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I think we are unnecessarily drawing suspicion on the good faith of the banks by suggesting that they would discharge in a perfunctory way the duty of finding out to whom balances belong. As the hon member for Halifax has mentioned, the banks not only give the balances every year, but, further than that, they remind all their customers of anything they may have in the bank's keeping, in the shape of bonds, debentures or other securities; and these depositors are asked to sign a certain form to show if the statement is correct, and if there is no response the bank takes it for granted that it is. The following six months there is a similar intimation made. The hon, the Minister of Justice pointed to certain things that were found to have been left with the Dublin Bank, but these were of an entirely different character. A bank does not assume a responsibility for diamonds, plate, or other similar articles, left with it merely for safe keeping, and consequently does not consider it necessary to make a return. But all I wish, in rising now, to say is that I consider that the banks take the best possible means within their power of informing all who have balances that those balances are there for them at any time that they may desire to call for them.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had a pretty long discussion on this clause, and I think, or at least I hope, that I will be voicing the sense of the House when I state that I do not think the period of five years can be increased. I would rather make it reference to what several gentlemen have spoken about very strongly, I have to reiterate what I said before, that there is no intention to make the banks, against their own interests, or the interests of the depositors, divulge any agreement entered into in secrecy, and we believe that these clauses most effectually guard against that. I think it would be well if the Committee can see its way to pass this clause now. Afterwards I will go over it very carefully with the Minister of Justice in order to see if it is necessary to guard it in any additional way. Several suggestions have been made, and they will not be lost sight of.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think it would be fair to ascertain the feeling of the Committee in regard to the time. I, therefore, move that five years be changed to ten years.

Mr. KENNY. I would ask the Minister of Justice if it is correct that before this time would elapse—the bank charters having expired—it would really have any legal effect?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It would have no effect at all. It is simply during the life of this

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Then would it not have any effect in reference to the balances which had accrued during the currency of the last charters?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It will apply to the past balances, but not in regard to transactions where the ten years have already accrued. It will apply where the time is unexpired.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose that, to-morrow, the several banks who have had these accruing balances for the last 10, 20, 50, and 100 years should transfer them to profit and loss. Would the passage of this Act have a retroactive effect against a transaction of the kind? It has just struck me that it is possible that all the past balances might be provided for in that way, and that would be a way of defeating the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think the Bill could be defeated in that way by any transaction of that kind, but I can only say that, if such a thing were possible, we would prosecute to the last resort the fraudulent bank that would attempt such a vile proceeding.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. As I read the Act, after it comes into force, the very first year and every year thereafter, the banks will have to make a return of the balances that have been lying with them for five years or more. So, if the word "ten" were substituted for the word "five," it would not be nugatory.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not entirely so.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Minister of Justice says he would prosecute banks which acted as I have suggested with the utmost rigor of the law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What I meant to say was that we would certainly test the validity of their action.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the banks now can plead the statute of limitations, as I understand, if they appropriated all unpaid balances that accrued during the period before the last six years, that would be no violation of the law. It is quite posmuch less, if I had my own way about it. In sible, though I do not say the banks would do it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We would take away the charter of any bank that did it. It would be conspiracy.

Mr. McMULLEN. When these lapsed balances are published the first year, would the Provincial Government have the power of imposing a tax upon those unclaimed balances?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think they would. Mr. McMULLEN. If they did, could they call upon the bank to pay the taxes?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Provincial Legislatures have the right to tax banks as they have the right to tax any person doing business in the Province.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I think it is very likely that the Provincial Government of Quebec, who have exercised great ingenuity in their financial methods, will be likely to follow the example of the Minister of Finance and to secure plunder in that way.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose the Provincial Government has power to impose that tax, then would the payment of that tax on the part of the bank be a transaction in connection with that Amendment of Mr. Kirkpatrick substituting the word "ten" for "five" negatived.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Do I understand from the Minister of Finance that in arranging this clause the Government will take suggestions?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Then I have one to make. I voted against a motion made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), not because I agree with the object and spirit of this section at all, but because I believe that a preferable modification can be made. Now, I understand that the Government desires to get at the case of depositors of the bank who have died, leaving heirs possibly, possibly leaving no heirs, but whose heirs, if there are any, are unaware of the fact that those deposits remain in the bank to their credit. It was the intention at first to appropriate this money to the benefit of the Treasury, but the Government has thought better of that determination, and has dropped the clause altogether. Now, it seems to me that there is a broad distinction between the case of a dead account and a live account, a distinction pressed by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) with a great deal of force this evening. What the Government are aiming at in this clause is to make this distinction manifest in the wording of it, and I would suggest that it should read something like

The banks shall deliver to the Finance Minister and Receiver General, to be laid by him before Parliament, a statement of all amounts or balances in respect of which no transactions have taken place, or upon which no interest had been paid during the five years prior to the date of such statement, and in respect of which the whereabouts of the principal is unknown.

And also to provide that when the whereabouts of the principal is known to the bank, the bank shall notify him at the end of every five years that certain balances remain to his credit. Now, the consequences of such a change would be this: that where a depositor died leaving heirs, the name at

Government and laid before Parliament and published to the world, so that the heirs might become aware of the fact; and that where, in the case of a live account, the principal depositor was known to the bank, he should be notified at the end of every five years, by the bank, of the fact that he had this money remaining to his credit. In that way it seems to me the distinction between a live and a dead account would be observed, and that justice would be done to the banks and to the depositors. I do not move this as an amendment, but I merely offer it as a suggestion.

Primary amendment of Mr. Foster agreed to. Progress reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 5th May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that John Charles Rykert, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Lincoln and Town of Niagara, having in his place in the House resigned his seat, I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. DAVIN presented third report of the Committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the Debates of the House.

HEREFORD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. IVES moved:

That all rules and orders of the House be suspended as regards the Bill respecting the Hereford Railway Company and Maine Central Railway Company, and that leave be given to bring in the said Bill.

He said: I do this under the authority of Rule 69, which provides, that in Acts of urgent and pressing necessity, the rules may be suspended. I presume the House would like to have some little explana-tion. The original Act of incorporation of the Hereford Railway Company, passed in the Session of 1887, gave power to that company to make arrangements, by lease or sale, with the Boston and Montreal Railway Company, and also the Atlantic and North-West Railway Company, but at that time it was not contemplated that the Maine Central Railway Company would be in a position to connect with the Hereford Company, and power was not taken in the Act of incorporation to make a lease with the Maine Central. Since that time, the Maine Central has become a very active and enterprising corporation and has been extending itself in the direction of the Canadian frontier; and on the 1st of May last, the end of five years, would be returned to the a preliminary arrangement was made for the leasing of the Hereford Railway by the directors of that company, to the Maine Central. Of course the matter has arisen suddenly, and there has been no time to give notice, and at this stage of the Session there is no time for pursuing the ordinary formalities of referring to the Committee of Standing Orders the petition, &c. It seems to me, however, that it would be a mere matter of form, and the matter is one of very considerable importance to that section of the country. It is of great necessity that connection should be made with the Maine Central, giving access to Portland, Boston, and all the southern seaports. There has been no time to give notice, and I propose, not that we should pass the Bill, as has been done in some other cases, on record in our Journals, but to take, with the permission of the House, the first and second reading to-day, and refer the Bill to the Railway Committee. That Committee will have time on Wednesday to consider this Bill, and if there is no objection to it and it is reported back to the House, we should have a chance of examining it in the Committee of the Whole, and it seems to me there will be no difficulty about it. There are only two clauses in the Bill. The first clause authorises the Hereford Railway Company to make a lease of their railway to the Maine Central, upon the usual conditions contained in the model Bill, namely, the approval of the share-holders and the sanction of the Governor General in Council. The second clause provides that, in case the lease be made before the passing of the Act, it shall be legal and binding, provided the approval of the shareholders and the sanction of the Governor General in Council be obtained.

Mr. LAURIER. Of course I take it for granted that everything stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives), is correct, and the proposed reference to the Committee on Railways, will give an opportunity of the Bill being sifted, so that we can weigh its provisions before deciding on its merits.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the best course.

Motion agreed to, and Bill introduced.

Bill (No. 147) respecting the Hereford Railway Company was read the first and second times.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—EX-MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. GIROUARD presented the first report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask my hon friend the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on what day he proposes to ask the House to proceed to the consideration of this report?

Mr. GIROUARD. I do not know, because every day now is a Government day.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend the First Minister gave an understanding to the House that an opportunity should be afforded to consider this report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before that is done, I think the evidence should be printed in the Votes and Proceedings. At all events, I will make a statement on the subject to-morrow.

THE BREMNER FURS.

Mr. LAURIER. I would remind the hon. gentleman at the same time, that the evidence taken by the reporters in connection with the committee on Bremner's claim, has not yet been brought down.

LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 148) to provide for the collection and publishing of Labor Statistics. He said: The character of the Bill is already known. It has often been mentioned in the public press, that a necessity existed of publishing special statistics concerning the relations between capital and labor. Without entering into the question itself, I may say that it has often been stated as one of the grievances of the laboring classes that the different statistics obtained by Governments and published by them were not such as would put their claims, their wants, their just demands before the public and before Parliament. The necessity for the establishment of a Bureau of Statistics has been often admitted, and it has been brought under the consideration of the Government and of Parliament, by the trades unions and the other labor organisations of the country. Promises were made that the attention of Parliament would be called to this matter, and that a measure would be introduced with that effect. This is the measure. this we are following the example given to us by the neighboring country, where a Labor Bureau is established. This Bill consists in provisions for the organisation of such a bureau. It is proposed to establish a new branch under the Minister of Agriculture, as a branch to attend to labor statistics. The Minister presiding over that Department will be the Commissioner of Labor Statistics. He will have the right to appoint an assistant, whose duty it will be to collect these statistics. I may say here that, if this measure has not been presented by the Minister of Agriculture, it is because I was charged at the beginning of the Session with matters of legislation affecting the relations between capital and labor. I have prepared this Bill, which is a very inoffensive, if not ineffectual, one, and there should be no need to say, as some of the press of the country have said, that it was a slur upon one of my colleagues because this Bill was prepared by the Secretary of State, and not by the Minister of Agriculture. It is provided that it shall be the duty of the commissioner to collect from Dominion, provincial and municipal officers, and of all officers of any public institutions in the nature of boards of trade, harbor commissioners, and of all trades unions, mutual benefit associations, and other workingmen's associations, all the information in their power necessary to assist in carrying out the objects of this Act. The amount of $10.000 is to be approx priated to provide for the working of the new Department, including the publishing of the report of the Commissioner of Labor. The objects of investigation will be agriculture, mining, mechanical and manufacturing industries, transportation, clerical and all other skilled and unskilled labor, that amount of capital invested in lands, buildings and machinery respectively, and the means of production and distribution generally; the number, age, sex and condition of persons employed, the nature of their employment, the extent to which the apprenticeship system prevails in the various industries requiring skilled labor, the number of hours of labor per day, the average time of employment per annum, and the net wages received in each of the industries and employments in Canada; the number and condition of the unemployed, and their age, sex and nationality, together with the cause of their idleness; the sanitary condition of lands, workshops and dwellings, the number and size of rooms occupied by workers, &c.; the number and condition of the Chinese in Canada; the number, condition and nature of the employment of the inmates of prisons, and so on, and all such other information as the Commissioner deems essential to further the objects of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE GRAIN TESTER.

Mr. HESSON (for Mr. Marshall) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government, this present Session, to make any changes in the grain tester now in use and which has been so strongly objected to by the farmers and others throughout the country? If so, what are the probable changes?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On Friday last I gave an answer to a question on this subject, and I have no need to repeat it to-day.

FISHING FOR SALMON WITH NETS.

Mr. KIRK asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to enforce the laws this year, prohibiting fishing for salmon with nets above tidal waters? Have instructions been issued to fishery officers to enforce the law?

Mr. COLBY. It is the intention of the Government to enforce the law. Instructions have been issued to fishery inspectors in some rivers to enforce the law. In others, on which there is a doubt as to the tidal boundaries which have not yet been defined, instructions have not yet been issued.

PURCHASE OF LAND IN ST. HYACINTHE.

Mr. BÉCHARD asked, Whether the Government employed an advocate in connection with the purchase of a lot of land whereon to erect a public building at St. Hyacinthe? If so, what is his name, what amount of fees did he claim, and how much has been paid to him?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government did employ advocates in connection with the purchase of a lot of land. The names are Messrs. Beauchemin & Mallette. The claim for their services was $220; amount paid, $100.

CALVIE, ST. HYACINTHE.

Mr. BÉCHARD asked, Whether the Government employed advocates to take charge of the case of one Calvie, before the Criminal Court sitting in November last at St. Hyacinthe? If so, what are their names, what did they do in connection with the case, and how much did they receive for the said case?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government employed an advocate to take charge of the case; Mr. Hall was the advocate. Calvie was prosecuted and sentenced to one month's imprisonment and Mr. CHAPLEAU.

$100 fine. Mr. Hall has not yet rendered his account, nor has he been paid.

THE SEAMEN'S ACT.

Mr. COLBY moved third reading of Bill (No. 135) to amend the Seamen's Act, chap. 74 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I beg to move, in amendment, that said Bill be now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to amend the same by providing:

The right of appeal granted by the general law against summary convictions shall also apply to summary convictions pronounced under the Seamen's Act.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say a word with 'reference to this proposed amendment in renewal of the discussion which took place the other day. As I understand the Act which the present Bill is proposed to amend, it has reference only to the inland waters and does not apply to ocean voyages; at any rate it does apply to the inland waters. The great bulk of vessels engaged on inland voyages are engaged on a regular course, in sailing from point to point, and the extreme voyage is, I think, two or three weeks in length, from Lake Superior downward to the port of Kingston, and return. There is, therefore, with reference to the bulk of the cases, an opportunity of reaching once again a point at which the difficulty arises within a very short time, and if I am rightly informed, the bulk of cases which come under the provisions of this Act, arise in the Welland Canal, about midway in the voyage. I make this statement because it seems to me to be not unimportant to consider whether there is, in any point of view, an absolute necessity for what I must call a denial of justice. I think there is in no case such an absolute necessity as that you should wholly deny justice, but I say that here the inconvenience which is suggested as a cause for the denial of justice, is a minor degree of inconvenience altogether, and that, by the adoption of the right of appeal with reference to the inland voyage, possibly with some further precautions, possibly with some precautions as to the facilities for taking and recording evidence for use on the appeal, and with some other provisions suitable to the case, we could overcome any of those difficulties and prevent the risk of gross injustice resulting. We have found it necessary to establish appeals from courts composed of judges of great experience, of great dignity, of much learning, who discharge their business in the light of day, with the assistance of trained advocates, and with all the advantages, and also with all the checks and precautions, which the ordinary course of a public court provides. How much more important it is that we should, with respect to magistrates such as those who are called upon to deal with the cases, give some better opportunity than a certiorari gives-we all know how very poor and narrow that remedy isagainst the injustice which such a magistrate may commit. A case which has been laid before me, and, I think, it is a case which has been laid before the Minister of Justice also, I bring before the notice of the House as the kind of thing which may happen, because it is a kind of thing which has happened under the law, and is not remedied under the law as it will be altered by this Bill. At a certain time the person of whom I am speaking was summoned to appear before the police magistrate at Port Colborne, charged with the offence of persuading, or trying to persuade, the crew of a schooner to leave or quit their work. He appeared, and asked that the case might be adjourned till the next day in order to secure the services of a lawyer; but that was refused, and the magistrate declared that the case must proceed at The captain, who swore out the warrant, could give no direct evidence that he had seen the person either on board the vessel or talking to the men. The men were necessarily sent for, and when they were summoned, they were asked whether they were under articles, and they proved that they were not under articles, in which case the Act had really no application The individual charged then demanded to be acquitted, but the magistrate determined that he must be convicted, and he sentenced him to gaol for one month at hard labor. He said to the magistrate that he would appeal, but the magistrate told him there was no appeal for him. He telegraphed for the assistance of a lawyer, and the lawyer came down the next day. He saw him. The lawyer told him there was no appeal under the law. An effort was made to get a copy of the evidence, but there was great difficulty in procuring it, and a threat had to be made to proceed against the magistrate before even a copy of the evidence could be procured and sent to the Law Clerk at Welland, and then it was made That is clear that there was no appeal or redress. the state of things, I am informed, which has happened under the Act, and that state of things may happen under the Act notwithstanding this amendment. It seems to be a blot upon the administration of justice that such a condition of things should continue, and, so thinking, I propose to vote for the amendment, in the hope that, with certain precautions, it may be effectual.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should like to ask if the hon member is sure that the Act only applies to inland waters? I was so informed, but that is a mistake.

Mr. BLAKE. The law to which I referred was confined to the waters about Quebec, and it was so stated at the commencement of the statute.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is an Act relating to the shipping of seamen.

Mr. BLAKE. I was told that there was a statute that did so confine it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I, also, was so informed, but I was informed incorrectly.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a statute which contains these provisions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not that which contains the provisions we are amending. This is an Act in regard to the shipping of seamen, and it refers to sea-going ships as well.

Mr. BLAKE. If that be so, all the observations I made as to the inland voyage would apply to this proposed amendment, and the change might be left to the inland voyage, the outgoing voyage being left as it is.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not able to favor that proposition. The Act is one which is of the greatest importance in carrying on the shipping business of the country. It relates to all sea-going ships, as well as to vessels on the inland waters. It is the statute which relates not only to offences committed by seamen, but also to offences committed against seamen, as, for instance, the crimping business, which was put down by this Act, it provides also penalties for desertion and other offences committed by seamen themselves. particular character of the offences against seamen or by seamen, I pointed out the other evening. They are offences which must be speedily tried or not tried at all, and to establish a different rule with respect to vessels on the inland waters from that which prevails with respect to sea-going ships would be very unwise and rather unphilosophical. The offence of crimping is, perhaps, not well known outside seaport towns, and even to the people of some of the seaport towns outside of Quebec. We know it was very prevalent, and that it required to be put down with a strong hand in Quebec city. It has existed to some extent also in the Maritime Provinces, in St. John and Halifax. It is the offence of taking charge of seamen, keeping them, as is often done, in a state of intoxication, and carrying them on board ship forcibly for the purpose of procuring their advance wages. This is a very serious offence. It is an offence that should be put down by immediate prosecution, and if we are to permit an appeal to be had and the ship kept in port and witnesses summoned, every crimp will take an appeal for the purpose of defeating justice. It is in the interests of the seamen themselves that such cases should be promptly decided. If we allow an appeal to be taken in every case, the witnesses must be held or the prosecution be abandoned, and it would be, in my opinion, a retrograde step in regard to offences of this kind, to have the remedies in one Province different from those prevailing in another. There has been a very strong remonstrance from the Board of Trade of the city of Quebec, against the passage, even, of this Bill, on the ground that it is one liable to lead to a revival of the crimping business. I do not think that is a fair judgment on the I think it is reasonable and fair, that after the offence has been committed and conviction has taken place, and even after the ship has sailed, there may be an enquiry as to the regularity by the Superior Court. But to permit an appeal and a new trial, is to afford doubtful justice to ship owners and ship captains.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the only objection the hon. Minister seems to think arises with respect to the right of appeal, is, that as it will virtually involve a new trial, the witnesses would all have left the country when the trial came on. The difficulty might, however, be obviated in the same manner as it was obviated in a Bill proposed by the hon. gentleman himself during this Session, in which it was provided that in certain cases when an appeal was heard, and the witnesses cannot be secured, the depositions given by those witnesses before a magistrate were accepted. If we adopted that principle some three or four weeks ago, I see no reason why it should not apply in this instance. We all desire to protect the navigation interests of the country, but there are certain rights belonging to the individual which we are bound to guard, and cases of gross injustice, under the present Act, have been brought to our attention.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was not in the House when the hon. Minister of Justice explained the Bill on a former occasion, but I am glad to observe the strong ground he has taken on this measure. Connected, as I long have been, with the shipping interests of the country, I have found it of the greatest advantage to be able to deal with these questions promptly. When sailors engage to ship on board a vessel, and which they have always done some days before the vessel is about to proceed to sea, and when, as it very frequently happens, they refuse to go on board, we can deal promptly with them by bringing them before a magistrate, and if they still refuse to go on board a vessel, he has the power to send them to gaol for a certain If the Act requires longer delay, and that the captain and the witnesses also remain, together with the ship, until an appeal is heard, it will cause very great hardship and loss to the ship-owner. If the Act contemplates that, it is one that will be strongly opposed by the shipping interests.

Amendment of Mr. Wilson (Elgin) negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. FOSTER moved that resolution respecting bounty to be paid on all pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore, reported from Committee, be read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. SMALL. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) has not voted.

Mr. KIRK. I am paired with the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron). I would have voted against the resolution.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 149), to provide for the payment of a bounty on pig iron made from Canadian ore.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved further consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 6) relating to Bills of Exchange, cheques and Promissory Notes.

On the third amendment,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is an amendment to section 19 which refers to a qualified acceptance, that is to say, acceptance payable at a particular The object of the amendment made by the Senate is to provide that a bill payable at a particular place is not thereby a qualified acceptance. They leave out sub-section 3 of the Bill, and, later on, it is provided that the bill shall be presented at the place indicated, and the effect of non-presentment is, as to the acceptor, simply a question of costs in the discretion of the court, in any suit which may arise. The amendment gets rid of the words: "payable only there and not elsewnere." It establishes the principle that an acceptance payable at a particular place is not a qualified acceptance within the meaning of this Act, and that, therefore, an acceptance in that form, does not discharge the other parties to the instrument. goes on to provide that there must be a presentment at that place.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to ascertain from the hon. Minister, whether there can be a qualified acceptance, as to place?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, there can be; but the result of that qualification is not the discharge of any previous party to the bill. The result is simply that it must be there presented, under the penalty of costs in regard to the acceptor.

On the fourth amendment,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This amendment is subsidiary to the last. It merely leaves out subsection c of section 19, regarding a local accept-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So that, suppose a bill is made payable at a particular place and not elsewhere, it is not a qualified acceptance.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; there is no qualified acceptance, within the original meaning of the term, as the Bill left this House except as to the endorser.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E. I.) Then, the Senate have deviated from the English statute.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. If a man accepts a bill payable at the Bank of Montreal and not elsewhere, he is still liable at any place, provided the bill is presented at the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How about the endorser?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is in the same position as before. Presentment is necessary as to him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that by the common law, which this Bill leaves when not expressly altered, if an acceptor accepts payment at a particular place and not elsewhere, you must, to hold the endorser liable, present the bill on the day it falls due at that place.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand that there is any express stipulation in this Bill altering that common law by making the endorser continue liable, whether the presentation be made according to the expressed contract or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think, if we find that the Senate amendments have not worked out that properly, we should amend the amendments, so far as the endorsers are concerned, but I think I found the other day that that was worked out.

On the fifth amendment,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This embodies an amendment to the law with regard to forgery. The House will remember that, the other afternoon, when the Bill was before the House, I urged that a section should be adopted to relieve the bank from the consequences of paying on a forged endorsement. The Senate has gone to some extent in that direction. They provide the following amendment:-

amendment:—

"Page 8, line 8.—After 'forgery' insert 'And provided also, that if a cheque, payable to order, is paid by the drawer upon a forged endorsement out of the funds of the drawer, or is so paid and charged to his account, the drawer shall have no right of action against the drawer for the recovery back of the amount so paid, or no defence to any claim to the drawee within one year from the date at which he has received notice of such payment, by the delivery to him of such cheque, of any book or statement containing an entry of such payment, or otherwise; and in case of failure by the drawer to give such notice within the said period, such cheque shall be held to have been paid in due course, as respects every other party thereto or named therein, who has not previously instituted proceedings for the protection of his rights."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think that is reasonable enough, with the exception of the pro-that were struck out, the banks would still have to be notified, but not necessarily in writing. In these days, business is done to a considerable extent through the telephones or verbally, and when a merchant finds out that a forged check has been charged to his bank account, he may, not being acquainted with the law, simply notify the bank through the telephone. If the bank clerk to whom the notification was given omitted to attend to the matter, the merchant, thinking no more about it, might at the end of the year be held responsible through having given insufficient notification.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman would get rid of a very small amount of present trouble at the expense of a great deal of future There is nothing more calculated to litigation. bring about trouble than telephone communications in matters of this kind, and nothing concerning which there would be so much contradictory testimony. It is a very easy matter for the merchant to send a notice in writing, and no practical inconvenience would arise from this clause.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the case mentioned by the hon, member for Brant of a telephone message, an investigation would follow, as a matter of course, but to allow the notification being made verbally would only create confusion. There is no evidence so conflicting as that with regard to verbal statements.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The practice has always been heretofore that if the bank pays a cheque bearing a forged signature, it is held liable. great many people do business with banks, who have very little knowledge of the forms of law, and would not be likely to know what is required under this law; and as soon as the bank got notice, whether by telephone or in any other way, that the signature was a forged one, that ought to be sufficient. If you insist on notice being given in writing, you will create a great deal of confusion among those who are not conversant with the requirements of the law. When you provide that the bank shall have notice, I do not think it matters much whether the notice be by telephone or

Mr. WELDON (St. John). When the cheque is charged against the account, the merchant will soon see that proper notice be given.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But as soon as the notice is given through the telephone, the cheque would be struck off his account, and there would be no charge for it against him; but at the end of the year, simply because he did not give written notice, the cheque might be charged again.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There are so many circumstances surrounding a forgery, that an investigation would be sure to be held, and a verbal notification would give rise to a good deal of contradictory evidence.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In 99 cases out of 100 the information comes to a person who is charged with a cheque within a month or two after the forgery can have been effectual or after the money has been paid, and, if we allow a year, I think we are giving a very liberal time. If we allow the notice to be given verbally, there may vision that notice must be given in writing. If be some misunderstanding in the conferences that will ensue, and the result may be doubtful as to whether the bank understood that the cheque would be repudiated or not. I think it is better that this should be clearly stated.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This amendment provides that the notice may be given by the delivery of the cheque, or any book or statement containing the cheque, or otherwise. I think the delivery of the cheque should be sufficient. The delivery of the pass-book containing an entry of the cheque would not be sufficient, because most people receive their pass-books at the end of the month and see a cheque they have given charged to them, and do not enquire further.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If any man received his pass-book he would certainly check over the cheques which were entered against him and see whether they were forgeries or not.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This is a question of a forged endorsement.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I can see the difficulty. The delivery of the pass-book would hardly be giving notice of a forged endorsement.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The cheque may have been properly issued, but, if the cheque itself is not shown to the drawer, he cannot tell whether the endorsement has been forged or not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It must be remembered that this is a concession to the banks in comparison with the old law. It might be impossible for a person, even after he had the cheque in his hands, to tell whether it was a forgery or not. It has been customary amongst business men, that when a person who has an account sends them a cheque payable to their order, they are careless whether they get a receipt or not, because they take it for granted that the cheque is properly Here you require that notice must be given in writing. A great deal of this business is done over the telephone. A conversation might take place over the telephone with the bank, and that would not be sufficient. The Minister of Justice and some of my hon friends on this side of the House say that it would lead to litigation afterwards; but it seems to me, that two or three verbal communications of that kind with the bank would prove beyond a doubt that they had the notice, because the bank clerks could not forget that they had received the notice in regard to that particular note. A person not conversant with the law might allow the note to remain in abeyance, thinking it was perfectly understood in the bank, and would not give the notice in writing.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I can understand the difficulty suggested in reference to the passbook. But a man finds a cheque charged against him payable to John Smith. He has given a cheque to John Smith, and he thinks it is all right; but, if he gets the cheque returned to him, I think, in nine times out of ten, he will know the handwriting of the endorser.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Not at all.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that if you sent a cheque to a man and did not get it back within a year, you would enquire in regard to it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think there is something in what my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Sir John Thompson.

White) says, but I think the return of the cheque should be sufficient, because the drawer is the person primarily responsible for having made it, and it is for his convenience that it was made, and if he gets an endorsement he ought to be responsible for it. That does not deprive the endorser of any rights against the drawer of the cheque. I would propose an amendment to amend the amendment.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before that is moved, I would say that my hon. friend (Mr. Weldon, St. John) is quite wrong in stating that it would be known whether many of these endorsements were forged or not. Many cheques are made payable to order, and you do not know the signature of the party to whose order the cheque is made payable. This is a concession to the bank. The cheque is given from Ottawa payable at Montreal, where it is cashed. The diligence of ascertaining that this is not forged should rest upon the bank in Montreal, who have better means of knowing it than the person here. It requires caution on the part of the bank. By adopting this provision you relax the vigilance required on the part of the bank.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is not the case, as my hon. friend puts it, that the bank can wait 48 hours before making enquiries. It would be unfair to the bank that a man should wait five years and eleven months and then come in and say that the check was forged. If the cheque is given to the individual himself and he loses it, the drawer is charged, but if he sends the cheque through by letter and it never reaches the drawer and falls into the hands of other parties, then of course the drawer is not relieved. If my hon. friend, in the course of business, sent a cheque to a firm in Montreal and did not get an early acknowledgment, he would feel disquieted.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is no doubt, that in the many hundreds of thousands of cases where these cheques have gone through banks, we have very seldom heard any cases of payment of forged cheques or forged endorsements. The reason of that is, that the banks have been heretofore liable for it, they have exercised great vigilance in seeing that the person to whom they pay the cheque is known If the cheque is sent from here to to them. Montreal, it is paid through an agent to the bank there, and the man who goes to get that cheque cashed must be known to the bank. They could refuse to pay it at Montreal, unless they were satisfied of the identity of the applicant. It is only done there as a matter of courtesy. He has not got his account there. It is paid to whom it is sent, and the party generally deposits it in his bank. Any amendment to this law which will relax the vigilance of the banks, I think, is to be deprecated. I think we would be better without any amendment at all.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Then my hon friend would say that a man could lie by until the expiration of six years and then come in and say the endorsement is forged. What position would that bank be in then? In England, where they understand these things, they have chosen to alter the law, and I think we have a right to do it also. According to the hon. member for Frontenac, the bank has got to run the risk of refusing the cheque, and be responsible to the drawer of the check for damages.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; the account is here. They do not promise to pay that cheque in Montreal. If the agency of the bank pays it in Montreal, they must have the person identified who comes for the money. They ought to be vigilant in seeing that the person to whom it is paid, is the person for whom it is intended.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, cheques are paid at the bank in the place where they are drawn.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that the Minister of Justice accepts the amendment of the member for Renfrew (Mr. White). I think that removes any grievance that can exist.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think we can appreciate the full weight of the objection to the change by testing the illustration of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson). He puts the case of a merchant, say in Ottawa, sending a cheque to his creditor in Montreal. He admits that there is no hardship at all, provided the drawer knows the endorsement of the person to whom he makes the cheque payable. There, surely, can be no hardship in that case. He receives back his cheque. He either knows, or does not know, that the endorsement is a forgery; he ought to know it, because he has required his bank to pay on the endorsement of that person. Surely he cannot say the loss by any forgery should fall on the bank for not knowing the signature of the person to whom he has made the cheque payable, and whose signature he does not know himself, and if he does not know it, he has twelve months to find it out, and there is hardly one business transaction in a thousand in which he would not find it out by having information from his creditor that he had not received his remittance. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the bank in Montreal would not be obliged to pay and could demand identification. But the bank in Ottawa on whom, perhaps, the cheque is drawn, would not be bound by the identification in Montreal either, nor would that be any information to the bank in Ottawa. The bank in Ottawa must pay on its judgment of whether the signature is forged. The true test of the genuineness of the signature, I think, is to give the man back his cheque, and give him twelve months to ascertain whether that is a correct signature or

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister must not lose sight of the fact that we are speaking about what has been the law and the custom. If this clause is struck out altogether and the law stands as it has been for years, I do not see what hardship it could be to the bank. The established custom for years among business men has been to draw a cheque payable to the order of one of their creditors, and when that has been done they have been very careless as to whether the receipt was given or not, because the very fact of drawing their cheque payable to order and getting that cheque back, paid by the bank, having it in their possession, they have considered it equivalent to a statute. It would be quite natural if, not having heard from the creditor, not having received a receipt from him, they should be careless and say: Well, according to our custom we have made it payable to order, and the cheque is either not charged against us, or if it is charged against us, it stands as a receipt.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not see why any change in the law, which has always worked well and in respect of which no complaints have been made by the banks, should be made. It is one that is now thoroughly understood and to which the people have become accustomed. If I draw a cheque on the bank of Ottawa to the order of John Smith payable in Montreal, and John Smith takes that cheque to the Bank of Montreal in Montreal, the bank need not pay the cheque unless they please to do so. But before they do pay it, they use due diligence to see that the cheque is properly endorsed by John Smith, and if they do not know him, they ask that he be identified. If payment is made by the Bank of Montreal, the onus rests on that bank. A long period may elapse before a forgery is discovered, as you may have a running account with a business man and no settlement be arrived at, and you do not take the trouble to notice whether you receive an acknowledgment of every cheque or not. Unless there can be some reason shown why the law should be changed, and unless the banks have suffered some hardship, we should not readily change the law to which the people have become accustomed, and which has given general satisfaction.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This matter is, in a large degree, one of convenience. In the vast majority of cases there is no loss sustained, either by the banks or by the makers of the cheques. Under the present law, and with the responsibility resting on the banks, they are called upon to ascertain whether the party who presents the cheque is the party entitled. If it be presented by a stranger, the bank usually asks him to come with some one known to the bank. Do away with that responsibility, and that precaution taken by the banks is not adopted. A dishonest man very seldom likes to face the bank, and a refusal to present a person to identify him at once places the bank on its guard.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The argument of the hon, member for Bothwell would have been a very good one in favor of the original clause of the Bill, which would have relieved the banks of all responsibility. If this amendment is adopted, the banks will not relax their vigilance in regard to the payment of cheques; but, if the maker of a cheque has ascertained that a forgery has been committed, he is bound to give notice to the bank at an early day. At the present time that notice may be delayed five years and eleven months, until it is impossible to find out the guilty party.

Mr. TISDALE. I have a very strong objection to any change being made in the law. The clause was thoroughly threshed out before in this House, and no cause for any change has been adduced. The people have become accustomed to the practice, and the bankers are not put to any unnecessary trouble and meet no losses. I am opposed to any provision that will tend to relaxation of diligence on the part of the banks.

Mr. CHARLTON. I thoroughly agree with what has fallen from the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). I am unable to see why the Government should not with as great propriety legislate for the repayment of money which one party has handed to another party, but has been lost by him. Under the old law when a man drew a cheque payable to order, the bank was responsible if they paid that cheque to the wrong party. That was an equitable arrangement, because the bank had the benefit of the deposit, and the cheque was paid out of funds left in the hands of the bank for such purpose. The law has worked well as it is, and as no cause of complaint has been made out, it should be allowed to remain, and this amendment should not be agreed to.

Mr. BLAKE. I would not object to a provision that if we limit the time to a very short time after the drawing of the cheque within which to ascertain whether it was a forgery, a notice should be given to the bank.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister of Justice previously yielded the point in deference to the wishes of a large number of members of the House, and I ask the hon. gentleman to maintain his position and strike out this clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will try the sense of the House first on the motion which I now move to strike out the following words in page 8, line 8, "on any book or statement containing an entry of such payment or otherwise." Subsequently, I will take the sense of the House on the clause as amended.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I move concurrence in the amendment as amended.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the expression of opinion given on both sides of this House, by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), should meet with the general approval of this House. The business transactions of the country in the use of cheques, have been carried on in the past without any serious complaints from the banks, and I do not think this innovation should be made. If a man makes a cheque payable to a person at a distant point, it facilitates his business, and it is the duty of the bank to take precaution to see that the endorsement of the party to whom the cheque is made payable is properly made. The best evidence that the old system has been successfully operated in the past is that few, if any, difficulties have arisen under it. When this law has worked so admirably in the past, it would be imprudent on the part of this House to alter the principles on which business has been transacted in this country for many years. If this amendment is accepted you will find that banks will overlook the precautions they have taken in the past and the drawers of cheques will be put to considerable inconvenience and loss. I think we should continue in force a law which has given such general satisfaction, and not make an alteration in it which will place the trading public in an awkward position. In my opinion it is the duty of the bank to see that a cheque is properly endorsed.

Mr. BLAKE. I move "that the amendment be further amended by leaving out all the words after "one" down to "payment" and inserting the words, "a month after he has acquired notice of such forgery."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before the question is taken I would like to say that, for my part, I would be quite willing to adopt that amendment. Instead of going to the trouble of taking a vote, I would like to have some expression of opinion from hon. gentlemen on the matter.
Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that amend. ment seems to meet the case.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would prefer to have the amendment dropped out altogether, and leave the law as it formerly stood.

General LAURIE. I should prefer to see the clause dropped out altogether.

Mr. TISDALE. So should I.

General LAURIE. The system at present prevailing has worked exceedingly well in the past, especially for those who live at long distances from banks. Our only means of paying accounts has been by sending cheques, and we have had to trust to parties receiving them endorsing the cheque as a receipt. I have very much to regret that any other plan should be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman will see that the proposed amendment is not open to this objection. The amendment is: that if you have acquired notice of the fact that the cheque is forged, you ought, within a month, to give notice to the bank. You are not to hold it in your pocket for five years and eleven months.

Mr. TISDALE. This amendment is sure to lead to a great deal of trouble and confusion as to what notice is. I think the safer way is to leave the law as it stands at present.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My opinion is, that if the drawer of a cheque gets notice of a forged endorsement, he is not likely to keep it in his possession for five years and eleven months. He is more than likely to give the bank notice just as soon as it comes to his knowledge that the cheque is forged. But the law as it has stood heretofore seems to have worked without any considerable friction, and, for my part, I would prefer leaving it as it is, and striking out the Senate amendment altogether.

Mr. BOYLE. I prefer the amendment of the hon, member for West Durham to the proposition of the hon. Minister of Justice, but I prefer the old law to either of them. But I am in this difficulty, that by voting for the amendment of the hon. member for West Durham, I would commit myself to the amendment of the hon. Minister of Under these circumstances, I feel that Justice. the only safe course for me to take will be to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for West Durham and also against the proposition of the hon. Minister of Justice. The law has worked so well that I think no change should be made, unless some improvement on this amendment is proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will observe that by voting for my amendment, which he prefers, he may carry it; and after carrying it, he is quite at liberty to vote against the amendment as amended; whereas, if he votes against my amendment, he may have the worse proposition carried, instead of the better.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A cheque payable to order is really an innovation. The effect of the amendment will be that the bankers, to protect themselves, will revert to the old system.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not see how anyone can object to the amendment proposed by the honmember for West Durham. That a man who has drawn a cheque and receives notice that its endorsement has been forged, should give the bank notice within a month, is not an unreasonable proposition. There can be no possible injustice to any one in such an arrangement.

Mr. CHARLTON. With regard to the assertion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), that cheques are generally made payable to bearer, my experience has been quite the reverse. For my part, I never make a cheque payable to bearer, in order to guard the interests of the person who receives the cheque. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Durham is a very great improvement, which I am willing to accept, if afterwards I shall be free to vote to leave the law as it was before. I would ask whether we can do that?

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly. If my amendment were carried, the clause as amended would be before the House, and the hon. gentleman could vote yea or nay on the clause.

Amendment of Mr. Blake agreed to.

House divided on amendment as amended-

On amendment 30,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This it to omit section 96 altogether.

Amendment concurred in.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 140), to amend chapter 127 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled: "An Act respecting Interest."

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me it is desirable to repeal those special sections regarding New Brunswick, namely, from 18 to 23 inclusive, as they are not necessary.

I do not see why There are special Sir JOHN THOMPSON. they should not be repealed. provisions all through this Act relating to the different Provinces, the policy being apparently to keep in force parts of the old usury laws of the Provinces while there was a possibility of contracts made under those parts of old usury laws having force, and preserving likewise the penalties so far as they relate to such contracts. We have, however, run through a period of twenty-three years, and I think that the effect of these provisions has ceased. It is on that principle, apparently, that the Senate has adopted the second clause of the Bill which repeals certain provisions relating to Ontario and Quebec. I have no objections to the hon. gentleman's proposal to repeal the special provisions relating to New Brunswick.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My view is to make the whole thing uniform throughout the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The last three sections, which relate to Prince Edward Island, are quite unnecessary. The interest is controlled by subsection 2 of section 1. It merely enacts that where there is no special contract 6 per cent. shall be exacted. That is provided for by subsection 2 of section 1. These three sections, 28, 29 and 30, might well be repealed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, member for St. John wants sections 18 to 23 repealed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Would it not be better that the Committee should now rise in order that the subject may be further considered?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). At the time the Provinces went into Confederation there were various statutes in force regulating the rates of interest, which were different in the respective Provinces. In 1875 a general Act was passed, of which this is a consolidation. I think it would be better to repeal all the sections after section 8 and make the law uniform throughout the Dominion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We had better pass the clause we have in the Bill.

Progress reported.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

On section 91,

Mr. FOSTER. There is a slight change in this section. The old Act provided that the suspension of payment by a bank for ninety days constituted a bank's insolvency. The words "consecutively or at intervals within twelve consecutive months" are added.

On section 96,

Mr. FOSTER. After the word "or," in line 39 of this section, I wish to substitute the following:—

Or persons whose subscriptions to the stock of the bank have been cancelled in manner hereinbefore provided, within a period of three months before the commencement of the suspension of payment by the bank, shall be liable to all calls on such shares held by them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see the period is changed from thirty days to three months. It seems to me that unless there is some very good reasons for this, the change would be very undesirable.

Mr. FOSTER. The change is to afford greater security against the transference of shares, and of responsibility, on the bank becoming suspected of being weak. This section makes the different classes of shareholders, namely, those who transfer their shares, those who have had their shares cancelled in accordance with the powers given under section 30, and those who have had their shares forfeited on account of non-payment or otherwise.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is very hard to defend the fixing of any arbitrary period, and we must just take such period as in the good sense of the Committee it thinks would be a fair time to cover fraudulent transferences. It does seem to me that the thirty days limit was reasonable, and that the extending of it for three months would make the time so long that it would impair contracts which are made bond fide in the open markets by those who could not have knowledge or even suspicion of the possible failure of the bank. If a man buys or sells stock in the month of May or June, the presumption is rather against his having any knowledge that the bank might fail in September. I think a bond fide contract of sale, made three months before the bank becomes insolvent, ought be protected. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell me, if the thirty days arrange ment, in the old Act, was found to be inconvenient. Instances may have arisen out of the Exchange Bank, which may have suggested this change. With regard to the bank I had a personal knowledge of and whose failure took place one or two years ago, we found this period of thirty days to act very well. It does seem that three months is rather an abnormal extension of the time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the thirty days period has been found in practice to be too short. It is very easy for a bank whose condition is hopeless to be kept running for thirty days, and in that thirty days the directors themselves and their friends could get out of the liability. The old provision has been found in practice to work so that the extension of the period is thought necessary.

Sir John Thompson.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Perhaps that provision could be directed so far as the directors are concerned, but it seems to me very hard that it should apply in relation to bond fide transactions. I know that in nearly every instance in the Maritime Bank case, that the sales were all bond fide up to a very short period of the bank's suspension. If this could be directed against the directors or persons connected with the bank, it would be a different thing, for the very instant they attempt to sell or put their stock in the market, it creates a suspicion. In the case of the Maritime Bank there were some cases of very great hardship, both parties believing the stock good, and they had not the least suspicion of the bank.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think that opening up all sales for three months before the suspension of the bank would be rather dangerous.

Mr. FOSTER. The period of one month will be admitted by the Committee to be too short. Suppose we make it sixty days?

Some hon. MEMBERS. That is satisfactory. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you throw the onus on the party, if the transaction was a bond fide one, or do you cancel the sale altogether?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The sale is not good. The transferee is practically liable for the double liability.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The man who accepted the stock is also liable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He has recourse against the vendee unless he sold to a man of straw.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose the holder of the shares at the time the bank fails, does not pay, and you go back to the original vendor who sold the shares three months previously; what recourse would he have unless you give him special recourse by statute? I cannot see where the implied contract would come in under the common law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The vendee has purchased the shares, and the contract implies that he will take them with the liability that attaches to them. It is not worth while to discuss what the vendor's remedy will be, because the liquidator of the bank will find out that the vendee is worthless before he calls on the vendor.

On section 99,

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Minister whether this section will apply to private banks doing business throughout the country. Some years ago, a provision was adopted in this House requiring private banks to put on their signs the words, "not incorporated." There are still a number of these banks doing business, and some of them think this clause as it stands, may interfere with their operations.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Only the names that are expressly mentioned here would be prohibited.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If they use the words, "not incorporated," could they then use any of the titles mentioned in this section?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

On section 102,

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to change this, to make it read as follows:—

The bank shall not charge any discount or commission for cashing any official cheque of the Government of Canada, or of any Department thereof, whether drawn on itself or on another bank.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This change, as I understand, merely removes the compulsion, and requires that the banks, if they cash Government cheques, shall not charge any discount.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

On schedule D,

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest a change in schedule D. I would suggest that, in the column of liabilities, after the figure 8, the word "balance" be struck out and "deposit" substituted, and the same after figure 9; and that in the column of assets, after figure 7, the word "balance" be assets, after figure 1, the word "sums" be substituted, and the same after figure 8. At present you will see, by looking at the list of liabilities, that it reads: balance due to agencies of the bank or to other banks or agencies in foreign countries. Under that provision, the bank is only obliged to publish a return of the net balance of its assets over liabilities, or vice versa, so that the official return to the Government does not give a full statement of the liabilities of the bank or of its assets. To illustrate that, I have just made a rough comparison between the return made in December last by a certain bank, under the general Act, and its return to its own shareholders. I find, according to the London Economist of 8th March, 1890, a return showing the assets and liabilities of a certain bank. I will only take the column of liabilities as a matter of comparison. Under that column it appears this bank had liabilities amounting to £5,555,989 13s. 11d. Deducting from that column certain liabilities to certain shareholders, it leaves a balance of liabilities due to the public of £3,257,506, or, in currency, $15,831,479. That was this bank's admitted liability to the public according to its return to its own shareholders, which, I presume, is a return according to the requirements of the English Act. Turn to the return made under the Banking Act here, and you find that its liabilities to the public at large amount to $8,827,014; so that, according to the return under our Banking Act, the bank only owes to the general public $8,827,000, whereas, under its return to its shareholders, it owed to the general public $15,000,000. The reason of the difference of the result is that, according to our Act, the banks are not obliged to give the full extent of their liabilities in foreign countries, but are allowed to deduct their assets in foreign countries, for example, money deposited with them in foreign countries, and only declare their net balances, whatever it be. If the form is to be complete, this other information should be given as well. I do not think it would be wise to prevent Canadian banks, to a limited extent, from being able to carry on business outside of the Dominion. We know there are times—it may be at all times when it might be well that a bank might have a considerable amount of assets invested in a foreign country, say in New York, where its assets could be immediately convertible, and therefore, available in our own country in a few hours. I am not making this suggestion with any view to hamper the banks, but simply to have a full return made.

Mr. KENNY. I do not think the Committee thoroughly appreciates the object of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). I understand that he advises the change of the word "balances" into the word "sums." The hon. gentleman will see that No. 8 shows the liabilities of the Canadian banks to their foreign correspondents and amongst the assets is also shown the indebtedness of their foreign correspondents to them. Taking the return of the 31st March, I find that the Canadian banks show indebtedness to their foreign correspondents amounting to $193,921, and the same statement shows that they had at their credit in the hands of their foreign correspondents $10,393,027. I contend that that shows the exact business relations at that date of the Canadian banks with their foreign correspondents.

Mr. MULOCK. That is all of them grouped together.

Mr. KENNY. It gives the accurate condition of those accounts with our banks.

Mr. MULOCK. I say, that at present there is no obligation upon any bank to show how much it owes to a foreign agency as gross liabilities, or what are its gross assets in that foreign agency. It is only obliged to show the balance. A bank may, at its foreign agency, owe $15,000,000 to the general public, and yet, according to our present law, it is only obliged to show a net balance or liability, which might be $8,000,000.

Mr. KENNY. Does the bank to which the hon, gentleman refers enjoy any special privileges? Is it a bank working under an English charter?

Mr. MULOCK. Every bank in Canada has to work under the same provisions. The schedules are sent out by the Government. The Government have no right to demand further returns than the law requires. Any bank in Canada which has an agency in New York may have a deposit there of $15,000,000. It owes that amount beyond all question. It may have discounted American paper there for $20,000,000. What is the state of the bank? There is no doubt about the $15,000,000 which it has to pay. Then it reckons $20,000,000 owing to it by the Americans. If that is all paid, there is a net balance of $5,000,000, but there may be a loss. Still, that $5,000,000 is the net balance shown under the present law, whereas I contend that they should show that they have liabilities of $15,000,000 to that agency and that $20,000,000 is due by that agency. It is for the public then to say what inference they draw from the operations of the bank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that my hon friend Mr. Mulock is right, and as a matter of fact that state of things may and probably does exist. If we want an accurate statement of the banks affairs, the liabilities and the assets ought to be both put in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. While that matter is being considered, I will ask the Committee to revert to clause 37, in which I propose to insert after the words "null and void:"

"Saving, however, as to a purchaser not having knowledge of the defect, his rights and remedies under the contract of sale."

Another amendment is required in line 20 of the same section. Just before we come to that are these words "unless he shall be at the time thereof the registered owner in the books of the bank of the share or shares so sold or transferred, or intended or purported so to be." I want to add the words: "or shall have the assent of the registered owner to the sale, or acting with the assent of the registered owner."

Mr. TISDALE. There is no provision for the recording of proxies in section 18, and I propose to put in after the word "hold," in line 5 of subsection 1, the following:-"A record to be made of proxies and the time prior to the meeting when proxies must be produced and recorded in order to entitle the holder to act thereon."

Progress reported.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on resolution (p. 4261) respecting the proposed contract of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will explain what he proposes to do, and give his reasons?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This resolution is for the purpose of giving similar pecuniary_aid, and in a similar way, to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Prince Albert Railway. The House will remember that last Session there was an agreement, or contract, made with the railway giving it $50,000 a year as a loan, or an annual payment for ten years of $5,000 a year, as soon as the railway was completed to Battleford, which was increased to $80,000 when completed to Prince Albert. The railway company had up to 1892 to finish the work. As the House knows, there has been series of charters granted with land subsidies attached, but, with one or two exceptions, these land grants have not been sufficient to induce investors to undertake the task of constructing those roads. In order, therefore, to make a connection between the railway line across the continent and our great line of water communication, also across the continent, the Saskatchewan, the Government asked Parliament to make an arrangement, and Parliament did so, by which, in addition to the grant of 6,400 acres of land, they should receive an annual grant of money, and for such grants the road was obliged to do all the transport work, carry the mails, officers and other passengers on Government business, transport all goods and Indian supplies and supplies for the Mounted Police, and so on, and that an annual account should be kept of all the work done, fair prices to be agreed upon between the Government and the railway, and the earnings for the year should be credited against the advance of $80,000 a year. One-third of the land grant was to be held as security for the annual deficiency, if any. The proposition worked like magic, and a contract was made at once. Capitalists were found to build the road, and I am glad to be able to inform the House that, although the time allowed for building the road will not expire until 1892, the railway will be finished by 1st July to Saskatoon, and by 1st January next year to Prince Albert. So there will be a connection of 240 miles made between our great means of trans-port across the continent by water and land. Indeed a grant is concerned, that were given to the The other great line which the Government, and I other railway companies. The additional assist-Sir John Thompson.

hope Parliament, will see to be equally important is the line connecting Calgary with Edmonton. The House knows that is the great ranching country. It is at present one of the most favored localities in the great North-West for immigration, and for the investment of capital in cattle-raising and other industries. The necessity of a railway in that region has long been admitted by Parlia. ment, but that district has been singularly unfortunate in regard to securing railway accommodation. A charter was granted with the usual land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, some years ago, to a number of gentlemen, some Americans and some Canadians, to build that road. They failed altogether. Two years ago negotiations took place with some English capitalists, including two leading members of two banking establishments in London. of those houses are exceedingly respectable, and the individual members of the two houses, who became promoters of the undertaking, are gentlemen of very good standing, and they made every bona fide exertion to raise sufficient capital to build that railway. As the Government and Parliament thought it was of great importance that the road should be built as speedily as possible, and as an inducement to construct the road within three years, the land grant was increased to 10,000 acres a mile, instead of 6,400 acres. The syndicate did all they could to obtain sufficient capital for the purpose of completing the work, but they failed and acknowledged that they had to give up the task. When that country was almost in despair, the same parties who raised the money to build the Qu'Appelle and the Prince Albert roads, and the same contractors, agreed to build a road from Calgary to a point near Edmonton, and also to build from Calgary to the frontier. The $80,000 a year subsidy which we propose to give, is applicable only to the line between Calgary and Edmonton; that is the purely Canadian portion of it, and the company is to earn for doing Government work, in the same way as the They propose to commence the road other roads. next year and to complete it in 1893. While they stipulate this period for commencement and completion, they intend to finish it much before that period, as they have done in the case of the Qu'Appelle road. For fear of accident, however, they want to have the time I have mentioned specified, and the House will admit that is to be a very speedy construction of a road upwards of 200 miles long.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the distance from Calgary to Edmonton?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 200 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you propose to give 10,000 acres?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. As they are to get this annual payment, they are only to get, as in the case of the Qu'Appelle Railway, 6,400 acres; but they will receive no money contribution for the road south of Calgary running to the boundary.

But they Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. would get the land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They would get 6,400 acres. These were the terms, as far as the ance, without which I think there would be no chance of the road being built, is the $80,000 a year, and we retain a-third of the land, in addition to any earnings of the company, as security for the ultimate payment of the whole advance. Whether we will do so or not, one cannot say, as that depends on the amount of the earnings, I fancy. They have made arrangements, also, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, similar to these made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Qu'Appelle Railway, that is, the Canadian Pacific Railway undertakes to run the line, furnishing the rolling stock, and doing all the work of the railway, in fact, for six years from the time of the completion of the road, when it is handed over to them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Canadian Pacific Railway, as I understand you, are virtually going to lease this road?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They lease it in fact for six years, furnishing the rolling stock, as is done in the case of the Qu'Appelle road. I hope, and indeed I am almost satisfied, that the expecta-tion that the road will be completed as expeditiously as the other road was, will be fully realised. As I said already, the parties who furnish the money, undertake to negotiate the loans in England, the same as in the case of the Qu'Appelle road, and the contractor, Mr. James Ross, whom perhaps the hon. gentleman opposite knows, has undertaken to build the road and to push it forward to completion, with the same energy that he displayed in the construction of the Qu'Appelle road. He expects to finish one hundred miles this year, and to complete the line to Edmonton by 1891, although, in the terms of the contract, the time is extended one or two years longer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, no doubt in the present position of affairs in the North-West Territories, any proposition to open up that country, and to increase settlement there. deserves our best consideration. But there are two or three things in connection with this, to which I would like to call the attention of the House, and as well, the attention of the First Minister, who is especially charged with this matter. I dare say the right hon. gentleman recollects that last year, in reply to a question put by myself to the Minister of the Interior, it appeared that he had almost entirely parted with the control of the arable land between the Red River and the Rocky Mountains; that is to say, that we had pledged ourselves to grants, which, if we continue our present practice of giving acre for acre to the settler there, would practically exhaust the land at our disposal. I think the First Minister was in the House at the time the discussion took place; but if not, he can refresh his memory by looking at Hansard. My impression was then, that very great care would need to be exercised against making indiscriminate grants in the future, if we desired to realise anything at all—as the hon. First Minister in former times hoped to do—to-wards recouping the people of the older Provinces for the enormous sums of money which have been expended in our western country. However that is, perhaps, a minor consideration. There is another point connected with these grants to railroads, to which I would like to call the hon, gentleman's special attention. A good many years ago when we were induced-at the earnest request of the railway companies themselves, and also at the request of the Government—to give up to them, without any payment, the lands which had been granted heretofore to certain railroads similarly circumstanced, on which the Government had reserved a dollar an acre; I called the right hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there was great danger that these lands would to a large extent go into mortmain: unless some precautions were taken by the Government, when making these grants, to see that they would be put on the market at a reasonable rate, so that settlers, if they choose, might get possession of them. I am alluding more particularly to the case of the land which we granted in Southern Manitoba to the Manitoba and South-Western Railway, and which afterwards passed into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have had innumerable communications from settlers in that country on this matter, and I am personally acquainted with the fact, that after these roads were handed over by the Government, free of charge, and after we had abandoned our prior lien, of a dollar an acre on these lands, the company, for reasons best known to themselves, put these lands in the market at a practically prohibitory price, and the settlement and progress of Southern Manitoba has been in consequence enormously retarded ever since. I doubt whether even at the present moment, these lands are offered at a reasonable rate, but my information is that they are not. By some arrangement, which I am not exactly conversant with, the company are able to hold the land without paying taxation, and one of the worst evils that was apprehended, has resulted from the neglect of the Government to take the course which I then advised. Now, if we are going to give to these roads bonuses to the extent proposed, which I think amount to something like $1,000,000 in cash—that is converting the $80,000 for twenty years into its present cash equivalent—together with 1,280,000 acres of land, I think we ought in all conscience, in our interest and in the interest of the public, to insist that these lands should be offered to the public, at least for a term of years, at a reasonable rate. Of course, I would not object to reasonable reservations for stations and other purposes of that kind. I do not object to this rate being placed fairly high, but it ought to be reasonable, and based on reasonable terms of payment. If we put out of our hands huge tracts of land like this, the settler, who is the person we desire to encourage, and for whose benefit alone we are justified in using the money of the people to this extent and parting with any portion of the public domain, should not be, as he has been elsewhere, excluded on one pretence or another from a large part of the land. Nothing has retarded the settlement of portions of that region more than the introduction of what is called the checker-board system, whereby each alternate mile has been handed over to the companies, and in many cases practically taken out of the market. I do not know whether the Government have altered their policy in this respect, as the late Mr. White stated they intended to do, and purpose granting the land in alternate townships. I think, however, that it would be in the general interest, if it appears good to the House to make these grants, that some precaution in the line I have indicated should be taken to ensure actual settlers being able to get lands at a reasonable rate. At present I shall not make any suggestion, but I hope the Government will consider the advisability of fixing some rate. I can assure the hon. First Minister that the evil I speak of has resulted in great injury to the southern part of the Province of Manitoba, where, if I am not misinformed, it has cost us many thousand settlers, besides greatly retarding the progress of the country for the settlers already there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With regard to the danger of the land being held in mortmain, I do not think there is any real danger of the land being held by the railway companies from purchasers. The hon. gentleman knows that they look for traffic as their chief source of income; they cannot have traffic unless they have population; it is to their interest; and so far as I hear, they are aware of that, and have offered their lands at reasonable rates. The hon. gentleman says one thing that is true to a certain extent, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by their charter, are not obliged to pay taxes on their land until it is sold.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, in the case to which I referred the charter did not apply. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company held the lands as the assignees of the Manitoba South-Western Railway Company, who had no such privilege; and it was their arrangement, not with this Government, but with the Local Government, by which they succeeded in having their lands exempted from taxation in Southern Manitoba. The point to which I called his attention was this: When I took this objection with respect to the lands in Southern Manitoba, the hon. First Minister stated then, not unreasonably, precisely what he says now, that the interest of the companies would prevent their doing this thing. More than five years have elapsed, and they have continued to do it during the whole time, and I can assure him that if he enquires, he will find that settlement has been enormously retarded in consequence. I think myself that the company has been injured also. But it has occurred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot see how that could have occurred to any great extent, because the even-numbered sections are free homesteads, and I scarcely think they have all been We grant lands to the railway comtaken up. panies in the expectation that they will make money out of them. The chances the shareholders of the different companies have of ultimate profit are rather doubtful. I have not lately enquired at what prices the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are offering their lands; but I know that they have been offering a great portion of them at $2.50 an acre. In more favored positions they have sold them at $4 or $5 an acre, while for village or town lots they may have charged and got more. But unless they make money out of the lands, they are really of no value to them. With respect to the block system, I may state that in this instance the land is to be granted in alternate townships instead of alternate sections.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can assure the hon. gentleman, speaking from my personal knowledge, and with the list of prices furnished Šir Richard Cartwright.

Winnipeg, that in the section to which I refer. where the company got us to throw off a dollar an acre on the ground that we were asking too much, their minimum price was $5 an acre, and the price ranged from that up to $10 an acre. The result was that after the free homesteads were pretty well occupied, settlement was wholly checked by the action of the railway company in Southern Manitoba, and many thousand settlers who were desirous of going there, were driven out by the high prices, and many of them fled to Dakota and became settlers there. A grave injury has been done there, which I think might have been easily averted by taking the precaution of compelling the company to sell at reasonable rates, which would have amply indemnified them for the construction of the road. By the present proposition the hon. gentleman proposes to give 6,400 acres a mile for 200 miles, and a cash bonus of about $1,000,000, in instalments of $80,000 over 20 years. The 1,280,000 acres which he proposes to give would, at $2 per acre, realise about $2,500,000, which, with the cash subsidy of $1,000,000, makes a bonus equivalent to $3,500,000, or $17,500 a mile for the construction of this road, which I think is a prairie road chiefly. Unless it is exceptionally difficult of construction, the gentlemen who take up the enterprise do not risk much, provided any population at all goes in. Of course there may be circumstances that would modify that, but having seen and known what I have seen and known as to the conduct of these companies in holding public lands, in the case I have named more particularly, I think it would be well to consider whether we ought not to put some limitation on their power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to this region, it is not prairie country, every acre of which, with the exception of some arid sections, is fitted for agricultural purposes. It is a cattleraising country, and this road will be exceptionally expensive in comparison with a prairie road, because it is in that rolling country as it approaches the Rocky Mountains, and will have to cross all those streams which flow between Calgary and Edmonton from the Rocky Mountain boundary. Again, the company will have to get their land in places not in the immediate vicinity of their road, as the reserve north of Calgary, including the regions north of the Saskatchewan, belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway, approximates 18, 000,000 to 19,000,000 acres, and the odd-numbered sections in that reserve are kept as homesteads for homesteaders. Therefore this company will be obliged to look for land perhaps to the north of that reserve, and it will be some time before that land will be sought after by settlers, though eventually it will be an exceedingly valuable portion of the North-West. There are good indications of petroleum there, over a large area, which will make this country eventually of very considerable value.

Mr. LAURIER. Do not promise too much.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will look at the report of the Director of the Geological Survey, he will find a very satisfactory statement as to the existence of that material north of the Saskatchewan. It is of great importance that the flow of capital and the immigration of gentlemen from England, who have taken a me by the Canadian Pacific Railway land agent at | fancy to that country and are spending large sums of money in ranches, raising cattle and horses, should not be checked, as it will be pretty soon if means of transport are not furnished for the cattle; and I am therefore extremely anxious that this road should be built as soon as possible.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I cannot approve of the policy indicated by the Government in the proposition now before the House. I think it has been unfortunate for the country that railways were extended or projected all over the North-West Territories, when we have so very small a population there. It would have been a great deal better for the settlers and the country if an attempt had been made to confine the population within narrower limits; and it does seem to me that with so large as extent of fertile territory lying within the Province of Manitoba still unsettled, it is not in the public interest to undertake to spread the very small number of settlers we are likely to receive for many years to come, over such an extent of territory. The right hon. the First Minister says it is of great consequence that no check should be given to those engaged in ranching. If there is any employment in the world in which a railway can be dispensed with, in the immediate vicinity of those who reside in the country, it is the business of ranching, for there is no difficulty in driving cattle one or two hundred miles to a railway station for shipment. It has also been unfortunate in the railway projects all through the North-West Territories, that they should have been taken up, in many cases, by parties without any capital, merely for the purpose of speculation, merely for the purpose of being hawked about New York or London in order to secure a certain amount of money for the charter from those disposed to invest in railway enterprises. It seems to me it would have been of very great value if the Government had secured a topical survey of the country in advance of those railway enterprises, in order that some attention should be given to the location of the roads before the charters were given, if the system of incorporation by charter granted by Parliament is to be continued. I do not see what the particular object is in building a railway in this section. The hon, gentleman proposes a road that is to be but 200 miles in length. That will carry the produce of the ranches but a very short Almost 200 miles, in the business of ranching, is in the vicinity of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the number of persons who are likely to go into the country for the purpose of sustaining railway traffic is very little indeed. If there was likely to be a settlement of the country at all, it seems to me that the interests of the population would be much more likely to be promoted by the road which has been projected in the direction of Battleford and the Saskatchewan River, and from the districts the hon, gentleman has mentioned the navigable waters could be employed, because the railway which will run to Battleford, which road is now under construction, will take parties, who wish to go to the country, very nearly to the district to which the hon. gentleman refers; and the road running from Edmonton near the base of the Rocky Mountains southwards, would be a road running one side almost of a right angle triangle. It is not running in the direction in which the produce is carried, and is simply length-carried. I do think all our expenditures in this way have been, to a very considerable extent, a waste of the public resources. Because, in a very short time, if the progress of settlement were to go on and extend westward, the necessities of the country would secure the construction of the road with hardly any cost to the public treasury. With the immense territories we have, with the millions of acres which are unoccupied in Manitoba and in the immediate vicinity of Manitoba, I do not think it is in the public interest to assist railway construction further west, with the result of scattering a population which ought to be converged within more narrow limits.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite and this House will not suppose that that country is only a ranching country. When I spoke of ranching in that country, I spoke of it as being the industry which seems to attract a great many immigrants there at the present time. There are several who have gone there with considerable sums of money, and have had large ranches and large flocks and herds; but that country is admirably adapted for farming. It is beautifully watered, and all the banks of the rivers are bordered by most fertile lands. I have no doubt that by degrees the horse, and the cow, and the ox will be supplanted by the agricultural

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the rivers will furnish ingress and egress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think very few of those rivers are navigable. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the people in the districts of Edmonton and Prince Albert went in there in the expectation that they would soon have railway accommodation. The railway, as first projected, went considerably north of the present line, and many settlers have gone north of the North Sas-katchewan. That is a fine river, but a very unsatisfactory river for navigation. It is only a question as to what amount of snow will come down from the mountains whether that river is navigable for three or four months. It is very shallow, and is, unlike the St. Lawrence or any of our large rivers in the east, not a satisfactory mode of transport. The company which is constructing, or I may say has constructed, the line to Prince Albert, has asked for a vote for the line to Battleford. There has been no advance for The money advanced is only to Prince Albert, and this is only for the line to Battleford.

Mr. CHARLTON. We seem to have a very comprehensive railway system blocked out in the North-West, and I see but one defect in relation to the scheme, and that is the want of population. If we were receiving 200,000 or 300,-000 immigrants a year into that country, if we had two or three million people there, then the railway schemes we have on foot would be comprehensible; but, with a population of not more than 300,000 souls between Lake Superior and the Pacific Ocean, this policy of railway construction seems to be one of a very extravagant character, and the policy of the Government seems to be one of a scattering nature. If, in marking out a Canadian Pacific Railway policy, we had extended that road westward as the settlement of the country required, we would not have built it so rapidly, but we would have ening the distance every day that produce must be concentrated the population, we would have saved money, and the condition of the country would have been much better. Now we have a number of railway schemes proposed. There are 200 miles to be built along the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains. Then we have the Canadian Pacific Railway running through that country with very little population along the line, and one result of embarking upon those railway enterprises is that we are obliged to give charters to companies and lock up the lands, or to offer undue inducements to companies to build railways through the wilderness. If the country were being settled, if the mixed farming to which the First Minister refers were being prosecuted extensively, there would be very little difficulty in obtaining the capital required and in finding the people to embark upon these enterprises; but at present the Government feels bound to offer as much in money and land at a moderate price as this line will cost. The line will be built at the cost of the country, and, if we are to embark in this business, we ought to adopt some safeguard to protect the interests of the settlers who are to go into the North-West. ought to realise the fact that the land there is now being placed in the hands of corporations and monopolies, and that there will be very little land left for settlers, but that they will have to look to land companies and railway companies for the land they desire. It is very well to say that the interests of these companies will dictate to them that they should sell the land at a reasonable price, but it is quite possible that they may not know what their They may take the Governown interests are. ment subsidy, issue bonds and raise money, and it may be to their advantage to hold these lands for many years in order to sell them at a price they think they may ultimately obtain. I, therefore, think there should be a reasonable limit fixed as to the price at which these lands shall be sold, so as to guard the people from the extortion of the companies. That is a common sense provision which the Government should make, but, in locking up the public domain in the hands of corporations, the Government is not adopting proper safeguards in the interests of the great mass of the people. Undoubtedly the provision for the construction of this road is premature. The settlement is not in the country, and the inducements offered to secure the construction of the road are too great. If the hon, gentleman would wait for a while, the outlay would be much less, and the road would be constructed as soon as the country re-If the First Minister would look at this matter in the right light and would place a limit beyond which the company could not go, he would confer a benefit on the country at large.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no desire on this side of the House to prevent the hon. gentleman from taking the stage he desires on these resolutions this evening, but, before we come to another stage, we expect he will give more information than he has given us this evening. Of course, we are all pretty well informed as to the general character of the country. As to that we may differ with him, but it is only fair to the House that the hon. gentleman should give us all the information he has concerning this company, and the reasons which have induced him to give them this aid. This is not the first time this company has come to this Parliament for aid; we have already given them, as explained this evening, a subsidy of 10,000 acres Mr. CHARLTON.

per mile, but it appears this is not sufficient, and I presume the company have asked him for more. I think he ought to inform us what are the grounds of their expectations, and we ought also to have the correspondence which he has on the subject, before we finally consent to this grant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think my hon. friend quite apprehends the position of matters. This is a new company; the charter was only granted this Session, and it received the royal assent the first time that His Excellency came The first charter was granted some years ago to a company composed partially of Canadians and partially of Americans living south of the line. That company failed altogether. It was, I am afraid, a good deal of a speculative enterprise, and was not formed so much for the sake of constructing a railway as for the prospective profits that might be made out of it. Then, two other gentlemen, Mr. Praed and Mr. Wiguelin, belonging to respectable banking houses in England, took it up with a bond fide desire to raise the money and construct the road. They are gentlemen of high standing, and their banking houses, as no doubt the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is aware, are most respectable moneyed institutions. But they were not fortunate enough to be able to raise the money, so they candidly wrote out that they could not raise it, and they abandoned the enterprise. And so instead of going by the circuitous route of getting them to assign over their interest in the old charter, I thought it better to advise the present promoters, who I believe will build the road, to apply for a new charter, which was granted here the other day, so they have no connection with the two companies that failed. They start now as if there had been no previous charter to anybody. I do not know that I can give the hon. gentleman any further information than I have already done. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, as every Canadian has done, has informed himself about that beautiful country; I do not know whether he has visited it himself, but if he has, I have no doubt the charm of the country will induce him to desire very much to see a railway built there, so that he might visit other portions of that magnificent region.

Mr. LAURIER. That is a very pertinent argument.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I forgot to say that the company are going to build simultaneously to the south, that is from Calgary to the boundary, 130 miles. They expect that the Canadian Pacific Railway in running it will generate a very large business almost immediately; we are only giving, however, as I have already stated, 6,400 acres for the railway running to the south. The whole road will then be 330 miles long, and I am satisfied from the character of the parties who have taken it up, and from the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway have taken hold of it and agreed to run it for six years, that it will be a very valuable road. I will not trouble the House by going into a discussion as to the propriety of originally putting a limitation on the price of the land; but I can say, with respect to this road, that that would be an exceptional restriction, and being an exceptional restriction on this road, would destroy all chances of getting money. There was no such chances of getting money. There was no such restriction on the Canadian Pacific Railway nor on the other railways that have got grants; especially there was no restriction put upon the Qu'Appelle and Prince Albert Railway; therefore, if this road had less favorable terms than the other one, it would just completely throw over all chances of its being built. We have discussed in years gone by, when we had the Canadian Pacific Railway question up, the policy of spreading railways all over the country, and of endeavoring to restrict settlement within comparatively small limits. I ventured to differ with some of my hon. friends opposite on that question. I believe that the experience of the United States has shown us that there is no means of limiting settlement, or the area of settlement. People will go where their fancy takes them, they will scatter all over, as they scattered all over the western counties of the United States, and they are still doing so. It would be one means of keeping immigration out altogether to say to them that they must settle there and nowhere else. am satisfied that policy has been a failure. Whether, my hon. friends opposite were right or whether we were right, the policy has now gone on so far that we cannot go back to any mode of limiting the settlement of that country. I would again press my hon. friend and this House to agree to this measure; I feel that it would be a great mistake to lose this chance of building this road, and I think on very favorable terms.

Mr. LAURIER. Am I to understand there is no application on the part of this company for this subsidy?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes; there is an application. I have the letter in my hands, and I will send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. TROW. I was going to remark that it is commendable, in my estimation, on the part of the Government to endeavor to develop that portion of the North-West. If there is any portion of that North-West country that we ought to develop by railway entreprises, it is that portion from Calgary to Edmonton. I think, however, it was a mistake, on the part of the Government, to divert the Canadian Pacific Railway through a territory that is not adapted for successful settlement for three or four hundred miles. Had this line followed the old original Mackenzie survey, it would have passed Prince Albert and gone through Edmonton, through a portion of the country that is well timbered and well watered. The present line of the Canadian Pacific Railway for hundreds of miles passes through a section denuded of its timber, if it ever had any, and is not adapted for successful settlement. this portion of the country, which the Government are now going to develop, I think, is nearly the best portion of the North-West, and I predict that in a very few years after that road is constructed there will be thousands of settlers in that section as soon as people become aware that they will have good facilities of getting out their surplus produce. I hope the Government will place sufficient safeguards so that settlers will be protected from any monopoly in being charged extra prices for their lands. Settlers require all the leniency you can possibly give them on account of the great hardships they have to undergo, and, I repeat, that I hope the Government will place sufficient safeguards to protect the honest settler and that the company will be compelled to sell their lands at moderate prices.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to offer a few remarks, as I have some knowledge of the working of land grants in the North-West. Some suggestions thrown out by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are well worthy of the consideration of the Government, and one is in regard to giving the land grant in alternate townships instead of in alternate sections.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is going to be done in this case.

Mr. WATSON. I am very glad to hear it. I also think the Government should place a limit on the price of the land. This policy has long been advocated by this side of the House, and any one living in Manitoba knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway lands there are held entirely for speculative purposes and are held at extravagant prices. A settler cannot buy an acre of their lands in Manitoba for less than $4 to $10 an acre. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), who is well acquainted with Southern Manitoba, knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway land there is held at those prices, which are speculative prices. In the interests of the settler there should be an upset price placed on the lands of this railway company, and a settler looking for land should know that he can take up vacant land at a certain fixed upset price. It has been argued that $2.50 should be that upset price, but even if it were $5 it would be better than no upset price being fixed. It is, moreover, I argue in the interests of the company as well as in the interests of the country and the settler. In regard to the railway lands being exempted from taxation, I suppose they will be exempt for a certain time, so long as the company holds them, probably 20 years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no such a stipulation. That applies only to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and this is not the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WATSON. Will their lands not be exempt?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So long as they are Crown lands they are exempt from taxation, but when they are conveyed from the Crown to the company they are no longer exempt.

Mr. WATSON. Certainly; that is the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Canadian Pacific Railway have only got a very small portion of their land grant transferred, and the balance stands as Crown lands and is non-taxable. The right hon, gentleman says that every squatter would be protected. Do I understand that if a squatter settles on an odd section, he will be protected in his holding?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not state that. If he has taken a homestead and walks over and squats on the next lot, he, of course, has no claim. He has his homestead, and that should be sufficient.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose his homestead is on an odd section. I am not going to oppose the Bill, for it is a desirable road and a good country to settle. It is not a country that is only fit for ranching, for outside of the 24-mile belt of the Canadian Pacific Railway you immediately strike a good country for mixed farming. I do not anticipate that any portion of the land grant will lie in the ranching country, because the Canadian Pacific Railway monopolises most of that to the North. In regard to the company seeking to place settlers on their land, I may say that the only company pretending to do so is the only road independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, and that is the Manitoba and North-Western. I consider that this road now under the consideration of the House will be built, for I look upon it as nothing more than a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is true the charter is granted to other gentlemen, but the Canadian Pacific Railway will no doubt acquire it, and it will be another means of procuring for them a large tract of land and a handsome The right hon gentleman is doing a good deal for that country, and I was a little surprised that he should have shut off, as he did the other day, in the Railway Committee, another road that would have been built, within 100 miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which would have struck more settlements than many other roads to which he has granted charters. It was proposed to build it through a tract of country well occupied, but the hon. gentleman refused to grant it a charter; and yet he goes 800 or 900 miles further west and comes here and tells this House that that section of country should be covered with railways, leaving portions well settled inside of Manitoba still without railway communication.

Mr. DALY. In regard to the remarks that have been made as to the value of Canadian Pacific Railway lands in Southern Manitoba, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is perfectly correct that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are selling them at from $4 to $10 an acre. That is the true value of those lands, and the farmers there will not sell their lands, the even sections for which they have patents, for one cent Three or four years ago that price was a very high one, but during the last three or four years lands have doubled in price in Southern Manitoba which is one of the most thickly settled portions of the Province, and you cannot buy lands from private individuals in that section for less than from $5 to $10 per acre, that is for unimproved lands. As to placing restrictions on the lands to be given to this particular railway company, it is not very likely, from the knowledge I have of the Canadian Pacific Railway land subsidy, there will be any land available for this railway, company along its own route between Calgary and Edmonton. Most of that land will be covered by the Canadian Pacific Railway 24-mile belt. No doubt land will be taken further to the north and it would be unfair, under such circumstances, to place a fixed value on that land. Such a restriction has not been made to any chartered railway to which a land subsidy has been given. When the Canadian Pacific Railway built the road in Southern Manitoba, I took exception in a communication to the land commissioner to the high prices at which the company held their lands. That was some years ago. To-day it is a moral impossibility to buy land there for less than the Canadian Pacific Railway are asking for their lands. In Souris County, the most western and south-western in Manitoba, since the Souris branch was proposed, land has risen in value 50 per cent., and the state of affairs that existed in Southern Manitoba will not exist in the country through which this line the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that there is no settlement in that country, and that what the country wants is people, and we should not build railways until we have people. I have heard the hon. gentleman speak of the wonderful development of the Western States. Did the people who built railways across the western prairies of the United States wait for settlement before they built the railways? The whole Reform party in our western country will take issue with the hon. gentleman on this statement. We all agree, no matter what politics we may profess, that what we need are railways, and the true policy of filling up the western country is shown to be by railways, by the wonderful development of the Western States. Railways are our best immigration agents, and when you get a company with a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, that company is as much interested in populating the district as is the Government or any one else. Nearly all the companies that have land subsidies are now interesting the people in England with a view to settling immigrants on those lands. You will find in to-day's despatches that the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company have sold their lands to a land corporation at $2 per acre. The people who bought those lands do not only expect to make money out of them by selling them at so much per acre, but they intend to bring people here to settle on these lands. I am satisfied, so far as this line of railway is concerned, that it is going to open up a magnificent tract of country. I had the pleasure, in company with the hon member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), to listen recently in this city, to a lecture delivered by the Rev. Leonard Gaetz, and any one who listened to that reverend gentleman could not but come to the conclusion that he was located in one of the most magnificent portions of that grand country of ours. Mr. Gaetz is settled at Red Deer River, which this line of railway will cross, and the statements he made in the course of his lecture were such as to justify me, as well as any person who listened to him, in coming to the conclusion that this was one of the choicest portions of that whole western country. There has been a large settlement at Edmonton for years past, and as the right hon gentle-man has stated, there are petroleum wells, and valuable mineral deposits to the north of I am satisfied, that as soon as this line of railway is built, the settlers will come into the country, and that they will not come if there is not a railway. I maintain that every acre of land granted by the Canadian Parliament, for lines of railway, both in Manitoba and the North-West, will bear tenfold fruit to the whole of Canada. As to the policy of scattering the settlers, which hon gentlemen opposite have referred to, I can only say, from my knowledge of the early settlement of that country, that it would be a moral impossibility, to keep settlers within any particular bounds. I remember very well, in the spring of 1882, when the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway was at Oak Lake, some 150 miles west of Winnipeg, that the settlers passed through thousands of acres of the choicest lands of the Province of Manitoba, and rushed to the Qu'Appelle Valley, where there was not a line of railway, and where there is not a railway to-day. You cannot confine people in a western will run. I must take exception to the remarks of country like that, within any particular bonds.

Mr. WATSON.

An hon. MEMBER. Yes, you can.

Mr. DALY. I beg your pardon, sir, if you can confine the settlers of that or any other western country within certain limits, you will do something that the people of the United States have not been able to do, and something that our people in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories have not been able to do either. people will go where they think the choicest land is, and no matter from what part of our country a man comes, he will tell you that he lives in the choicest portion of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, as the case may be. I am satisfied that, if the House assents to the proposition now made by the right hon, the Premier, not one hon. gentleman opposite, nor one member of this House, nor will the country either, have any reason to regret giving this aid to that railway. I believe that the prophesy made by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), who has been through that country, will be fulfilled, and that this railway will open up to settlement, and will develop, one of the choicest portions of the North-West Terri-

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I will not detain the Committee but for a few moments, on the subject of this resolution. I do not agree with the observations which have been addressed to the House by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) to the effect that you cannot confine the settlers of the North-West to a particular district. Now, Mr. Speaker, our experience in our Territories—and it does not differ from the experience of our neighbors in the United States—is, that settlers go where they expect facilities will be furnished them for entering the country, and for sending their products out of the country. When the settlers went in the direction of the Little Saskatchewan and Battleford, and up the Saskatchewan River, they went there because the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway had been surveyed through that country, and because they expected the road would be constructed there in a very short time after they had settled. The hon. gentleman says: we require to construct these roads to furnish facilities for settling up that country. Why, we have hundreds of miles of roads there, where there are very few settlers. The whole population of the North-West Territories is far less than the population settled along some railways in Ontario, which are less than 100 miles in length. It is no facility for the settlement of the country if we construct an immense mileage of railway in advance of settlement. It is true that in a prairie country your railway ought to be in advance of settlement, or at all events along with settlement, but you have done that already. You have now roads built far in advance of settlement. These sections of territory have yet to be developed, and you have every possible motive for securing immigration with the present railway facilities, which you will have if this proposed road were built. I suppose, Sir, that the right hon, gentleman has determined upon the construction of the road, if possible, and that the amount will be voted, and the lands granted, and the enterprise pushed forward if possible.

might, therefore, consider some matters in connection with that, upon the assumption that that road will be built. The hon, gentleman says that the question as to whether you will scatter the population over the entire country, or seek to confine it within narrow limits, has already been settled. I know that the attempt had been determined upon, but I thought that the actual settlement had fallen so far short of the right hon. gentleman's expectations, he would have found by this time, that it was still an open question. It is an open question at all events, so far as the actual population is concerned, and the hon gentleman must be satisfied that his ten years' experiment of the course which he believed best in the public interest, has not been successful; that in fact it has been a failure, and that if the other experiment had been tried and had not been more successful, it would have been a failure likewise. So, the hon. gentleman has not at the present time an open question before him, because the experiment has been tried for a long period. There are thousands of miles of railway constructed and the people are not there, and as the idea of populating the country was the chief object for undertaking these works, the experiment cannot be said to be a success, notwithstanding the confident expression of opinion made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly). There are some other considerations connected with this matter. We know, if that country is settled, Provinces will be established, and revenues for the maintenance of the Governments of these Provinces will be required. Where is that revenue to come from? Some of the older Provinces have not shown a very great anxiety to give up indirect taxation and to rely upon direct taxation for the purposes of revenue. They relied very largely upon the timber products of these Provinces, as a means of revenue, for the purpose of supplementing the grant which is received from the treasury of the Dominion. Now, there are in the North-West Territories considerable sources of revenue in the mines, if a proper policy is adopted in regard to them. I never could understand why we should part with the fee in the mines as well as in the soil in that country, or why a man engaged in agriculture should receive with his patent the mines in his land, which are of no use to him except for speculative purposes. I do not see why all the mines should not be put upon the same footing as those containing the precious metals. The hon gentleman has spoken of the large petroleum springs in the very portion of the country where he is granting these lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; north of them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why should the Crown not reserve these mineral beds as a source of revenue to the Provinces which are to be established there in the future, instead of allowing them to be squandered? The hon, gentleman has said that it is desirable not to set a fixed price on those lands, because that might hinder the enterprise. The Government could go this far: they could say that after a certain sum was realised from the sale of these lands, the interest of the company in them should cease, and revenues thereafter derived from them should belong to the Crown. Then the company would have an interest in not asking an excessive price from the settlers, because they would know that when they approached the utmost limit fixed, they would be obliged to hand over the revenues remaining to the Crown. I think a maximum sum could be fixed which would be no impediment whatever to the settlement of the country or to the company undertaking the enterprise; and in fixing it, the Government would prevent abuses such as those described by my hon, friend. I remember myself a case which was brought to my notice of a young Englishman who entered on a lot which he had got from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company expecting to pay $2.50 an acre for it. He told me that after he had spent $1,600 on improvements, the company had added $10 an acre to the price, equal to the whole cost of his improvements, leaving him free to pay for his own improvements or to leave his land, like the landlords in Ireland. I have no doubt there are other cases of the same sort.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that my expectations as to the settlement of the country have failed. It is my great disappointment that settlement did not go on as fast as I predicted; but when I did so I underrated the influence of hon. gentlemen opposite, not only on this continent, but on the other. I bow to the superior power of hon. gentlemen opposite, and confess that I really did underrate the influence of their arguments. I will say one thing about the The hon. member from Selkirk price of the land. says that the price of the land in that section has increased very much—that the price of land in the hands of private individuals ranges from $5 to $10 an acre. I dare say some hon. gentlemen opposite do not know that; perhaps the hon. member for South Oxford, who has been very enterprising in that part of the country, has found out that land has increased considerably in value, and has found —I am very glad it is so—the advantage of that increase. The only consequence of putting a limit upon the price of the land in the hands of the railway company would be this: We might require the railway to sell it at $2.50 an acre, and enterprising gentlemen like the hon. member for South Oxford would buy it and afterwards sell it at $9; unless we adopted this other provision, which has been tried both in Canada and the United States, and has always resulted in failure, of saying to the settler: "You shall not get your deed unless you have made certain improvements." The settlers will not go on the land under such a condition. Suppose these lands are given to the railway companies to be sold by them so as to recoup them to a certain extent. It is to be hoped, unless my expectations are again disappointed, that settlers will settle along this line, and that traffic will spring up. But in the meantime it is the case of "Live, horse, and you will get oats." We know that some of the railways in the United States, as was the case of the Northern Pacific, were originally utterly insolvent; although they had large quantities of land they could not sell it. Therefore, these railway companies must sell their lands at once in order to pay their interest on their bonds; and if we limited them in price, we should really be giving them little or nothing. If the grant were altogether in money, instead of in land and money, you might as well say to the company: "Now, you must keep an account of what the cost of the railway is, and what a fair profit to be and 12,000,000 acres of land, to have obtained in-realised from the road is, and you shall hand back formation from these parties as to the character of Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

all the money you make over what will be a reasonable compensation to you." That would be an absurd bargain if applied to the money, and equally absurd, I think, if applied to the land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has indulged in some chaff, which has not been infrequent on his part, as to the influence of this side of the House. If our word goes for a great deal more than his with the people of this country and the people of other countries, there are good reasons, I have no doubt, why that should be the case. However, that is not, as he very well knows, the reason. The reason is that his railway policy, and his land policy, and his tariff policy, have been singularly ill-adapted to develop the North-West. We have expended over a $100,000,-000 in trying to settle up the North-West; and had that money resulted in bringing us a million settlers, as it might have done, I would have said that the money was well spent. But when I remember the records of the census, it appears that all we got for about one hundred millions of money spent in the North-West was the bringing in probably of 12,000 families. I cannot but feel, and the country cannot but feel, that the very grossest mismanagement alone could have produced such pitiable results in a country naturally so well adapted for settlement as a great deal of that is. However, that is a point we have over and over again discussed in this House, and concerning which I shall not alter my opinion, and I am afraid the hon, gentleman is too old to alter his, at any rate, until the public at large force my views upon him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hope told a flattering tale.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; when the hon. gentleman promised us $55,000,000 by the first of January, 1891, as the net proceeds of the sales of land in the North-West, almost as flattering as his colleague's prediction that we should have 640,000,000 bushels of wheat as the annual product from that territory. I wish to point out one or two matters. First, as regards the disposition of the lands at reasonable fixed rates and condition of settlement. That is precisely what has been done, and pretty successfully done, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, as their land commissioner informed me. That company fixed its condition of settlement, and succeeded in carrying them out in many cases. I only state this to show the thing can be done. There is another consideration, but I do not know that it applies to this case, because I suppose these lands will not be exempt from taxation. The difference between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the private holders was this, that the private holders were taxed to the full selling value of their lands and the Canadian Pacific Railway were not; consequently no benefit whatever accrued to the people there from holding, and there was no inducement for the company to sell unless they thought they would get more by selling at once than by holding, which is by no means always the case. This road is not before us for the first time; this charter was granted four or five years ago. I think in cases like this at any rate, it was a duty of the Government, before making propositions to the House involving a grant of a million of money, or the equivalent, and 12,000,000 acres of land, to have obtained inthe road and the cost of building it; and I wish to know whether any surveys have been submitted to the hon gentleman's Department. I do not mean elaborate surveys, but any rough location surveys, from which a fair idea can be formed of what this road will actually cost and how much?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot state that to the hon. gentleman just now, but Mr. Ross, who is the contractor of the QuAppelle road, and who, I hope, will be the contractor to build this road, had his men go over the country and look at the general lie of the land, the quantity of bridges and all that kind of thing. It was simply a rough examination rather than a survey. I have not the particulars of that, but no doubt Mr. Ross who is in town will give them to me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon, gentleman supply us with them before the next

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Billgoes through I will do it. The Minister of the Interior informs me that the calculation of the last company, which was in the first place promoted by a Mr. Lloyd, a well known railway man in England, and subsequently examined for Mr. Ross, is from $24,000 to $26,000 a mile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman stated that the Qu'Appelle were to lease this for some six years, with, in all probability, a right to purchase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I guess so. I understood something of that kind was in contemplation. It appears to me we had better deal directly with the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves. What are these gentleman going to do? Are they going to put in the difference of money or to get the Canadian Pacific Railway to finance for them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.. They will finance themselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And then lease the road?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; for six years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A curious arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the same arrangement which has been successful with the Qu'Appelle company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the Cauadian Pacific Railway agree to lease that also?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; for six years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On terms submitted for approval by the Railway Department?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; the terms and the contract.

Mr. DALY. On the line of the railway there is the Bow River, the Red Deer River and the Saskatchewan, which are all large streams to bridge, and there are, besides, ten or fifteen small streams running from the mountain. The expense of building that road will exceed that of building an ordinary prairie road.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In reply to what the First Minister said with reference to fixing the price of land sold to railways, I would inform him that the Minnesota Railway have fixed the price for their lands at $2.50 per acre. The lands were sold, and they remitted one-half to the settler on every acre brought under cultivation. That was found to be a profitable arrangement, because they made a larger sum from the produce of the lands thus brought under cultivation than they did by adding $1.25 extra per acre.

Mr. DALY. That same policy was adopted by the Canadian Pacific Railway. All the lands they sold in the counties of Brandon and Denis and south of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line were sold in 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884, at the same price as to-day, $2.50 per acre, with a rebate of $1.25. But they have ceased to give the rebate, because it imposed conditions which the parties could not carry out. For instance if a party purchased 320 acres, he found breaking 160 acres was too much for him. I would not like the House to run away with the idea that, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, they have not sold lands at $2.50. Nearly all the lands sold in Turtle Mountain, Brandon and Souris River, with the exception of the last two years when there has been a rise in the value of the land, was sold at $2.50, and until four years ago on the principle of $1.25 rebate.

Mr. WATSON. The conditions were such that the settlers could not carry them out. The settler got 160 acres, and he had to bring half of that under cultivation, and could not comply with that condition. Not one-tenth of the settlers are able to comply with the terms at all. The First Minister has stated that, if these lands were held at a low price, hon. gentlemen would have no opportunity of speculating. It is not in connection with speculation that I speak. I do not ask the Government to provide a lower price for speculators, but I do say that, when an actual settler is willing to go in and perform his homestead duties, he should get the land at an upset price. I do not care if the railway company charges speculators $10 an acre. If all the lands in Southern Manitoba to-day were held at an upset price of, say, $4 an acre, which I think would be ample to pay a company to build a road through a prairie country, I think all the settlers would be satisfied and the people would settle on those lands instead of going to the far west. There has been too much of a rush to the far west for speculative purposes and not for settlement. The speculators have thought they could get town sites and other advan-tages, and so they have gone far west. For some years it was impossible to get homesteads in Manitoba at the very time when we were getting people to come to that Province to settle. Unfortunately they went south, but I am glad to say that many of them are coming back now, because they find that Manitoba is better than the land to the south.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. WATSON. There is no doubt about it. If the hon, gentleman had pursued a better policy we would have had these people in Manitoba to-day, settled, instead of their migrating back and forwards as they have been doing. There should be an upset price on those lands in Southern Manitoba of $4 or $5 per acre. I know some of the lands that would be occupied at once if they could be got for $5 or $6 an acre, but they are held for what they are worth, $10 or $12 an acre, just as a private individual would hold them for speculative purposes. I think we, as guardians of the public domain, should make arrangements in the interest of the Dominion as a whole.

Resolution reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Within what limit do you propose to allow the company to take this land?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As they earn it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the limit of time. I mean within what distance from the line of their railroad are they to be allowed to select their land?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Order in Council states that they may take it within twelve miles on each side of their line, and any balance of the land from contiguous lands at the disposal of the Govern-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you give them the right to choose anywhere?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It must be as contiguous as

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But if there is no available land contiguous, how far can they

Mr. WATSON. As I understand, the Canadian Pacific Railway have reserved for them all the land north of latitude 52. Does the Government intend to keep that immense reserve now that they have taken back a portion of their land? That is an immerse blanket of land reserved from any other company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, we must take back our lands.

Mr. WATSON. Where are you going to take them from?

We hope to Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. have all that settled during 1890. I have no doubt the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will make their selection during this year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is very little doubt that the 17,000,000 acres, or whatever it may be, which the Canadian Pacific Railway still claim, are equal to all the lands which have been reserved for them, and that the Government lands which have been bought back from them are nowhere.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government lands have to be equal in average value to the land retained by the company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But, as I understand, the area the company are still entitled to may be taken within the belt, or from the reserved district, and these very lands lying alongside this road may be claimed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and this company may have to go elsewhere.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The land will run twelve miles on each side of this road from the northern extremity of the original grant of land, known as the Canadian Pacific Railway belt, until it strikes the 52nd degree of north latitude, which is, the southern boundary of the reserve. This for the better securing the safety of certain road cannot go into that reserve until the Canadian fishermen. He said: This bill passed the Sen-Mr. Warson.

Pacific Railway and the Government make an arrangement as to where the balance of the land is to be taken within that reserve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far is the 52nd degree north of Calgary? I think it must be about 40 miles.

Mr. DEWDNEY. More than that; but I have had a map prepared which I will bring down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is 120 miles from the boundary line to Calgary. That is two degrees. If Calgary is two degrees north of the 49th parallel, you have only one degree between that and the southern boundary of the reserve. Then you have to deduct 24 miles for the Canadian Pacific Railway belt, so that you would have only about 35 miles before you struck the belt from which the lands for this road could be selected.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have to get the rest of the land where they can get it.

Mr. WATSON. I thought they would be able to get their land within the railway reserve north of line 52.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not unless the Canadian Pacific Railway Company consents, but, as the Canadian Pacific Railway is to run the road, there will probably be less difficulty than under other circumstances in arranging this matter, if the Government conveys to them the land lying along their line.

Mr. WATSON. That is the great trouble I see -that a great tract of country is reserved for the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no disguising the fact that this road is practically a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That being the case, we are now allowing another million and a quarter acres of land to be reserved in some other locality outside that tract of country, and the whole North-West country will be tied up under that company, and no other railway company can get a land grant in that reserve unless they make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. It would be well if the Government would profit by the experience of the United States in the matter of railway grants. They have been very liberal with railway land grants in that country, and their experience shows that the policy pursued in that respect is a very unwise one. Roads, when required, have been built without land grants, and the Government of this country are actually squandering the heritage of the people in the lands of the North-West by granting to these corporations land to induce them to build roads in advance of the wants of the country. It is a most lamentable policy, and we shall see the evil effects of it soon enough, no doubt.

Resolution concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 150) respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE SAFETY OF FISHERMEN.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 96) ate after a very full discussion. It is a Bill that has been considered necessary in the public inte-rest, to provide some means of greater security for the fishermen engaged, notably, in the bank fisheries of the Maritime Provinces. This question has been discussed at considerable length in the United States, and I notice that a proposal has been made there to introduce similar provisions into their laws. This Act has also engaged the attention of our people at various times, and has been suggested here, as the hon. Minister is aware, on a previous occasion. It is intended to provide by the first section that no boat shall be launched or set out from any vessel engaged in the deep or bank fishery for the purpose of fishing without having on board an accurate and serviceable mariner's compass, and unless there is placed in such boat at least two quarts of drinking water and two pounds of solid food for each man of the crew of said boat. That is intended to remedy an evil which is found to exist in the prosecution of the fisheries. Sometimes the boats are set off from the vessel in a hurry, and unfortunately they have sometimes been lost in the fog, and the people have suffered great hardship before they could reach their vessel again; and in some cases these boats have never regained the ship which they left. The Act provides that when these dories, as they are called, leave the vessel for fishing purposes, they shall carry enough water and provisions to last them at least 48 hours. The expense will be very small; in that respect it is a very small matter indeed; perhaps the compass would cost a couple of dollars, not more, and the food and water can easily be placed in one end of the boat in a place which will be provided when the boat is originally constructed. Those interested in the bank fishery in our Province, notably the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), have long seen the necessity of some provision of this kind. In many instances the fishermen have voluntarily provided what this Bill calls for, and at other times these precautions have been neglected; therefore it has been thought advisable to make it compulsory on owners of vessels to provide these safeguards for the preservation of the crew engaged in the bank fisheries, and to impose a moderate penalty for their failing to do so. I have not heard of any opposition to this Bill from people in our own Province who are largely interested in this fishery; I think there can be no solid argument against a measure of this kind which is intended to benefit a class of people who require the protection of Parliament.

Mr. COLBY. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman has been animated by philanthropic and humanitarian motives in introducing this Bill. But so far as I am able to ascertain from the officers of the Department, and so far as the Department has been able to ascertain from practical men who are consulted by the Department under such circumstances, the Bill is not considered a necessary one. It is considered to be a useless Bill, to be inconvenient, expensive, and burdensome upon the class of people whom it proposes to protect. If I understand correctly the fishing on the banks—and I understood the hon. member to say it was mostly to protect that class of fishermen—fishing on the banks is mostly done by the fishermen who are themselves interested in the catch, who charter their own vessels, who select their own captains, and who benefit in the result of the voyage. Now, I think that is not always the case. I think the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) is an exception, and I think there are some other fishermen like him; but I have the authority of a gentleman from the Maritime Provinces whose opinion is entitled to weight, that the statement I have just made is The hon. gentleman himself, of course, correct. knows whether I am correct or not in this statement. Now, if that be the case, it is simply saying to these fishermen who charter the vessels, the interested parties, that they shall be compelled to adopt precautions for their own safety, which they are privileged to adopt now or not, as they choose. It is their affair altogether, if the rules which regulate the safety of vessels and of passengers are not enforced and observed in case of these fishing vessels this is a matter which concerns the fishermen themselves. Now, I am very confident that no representations have come from the fishermen asking for this legislation. I have taken particular pains to ascertain this fact. The Department has not been applied to by the fishermen whom the hon, gentleman's Bill is designed to protect, for any such legislation. There is one feature of the hon. member's Bill, which, I think, certainly ought not to be adopted, and that is the clause which imposes a penalty upon a master of a vessel who permits, under any circumstances what-ever, a dory to leave the vessel without carrying on each occasion a compass and provisions. If I understand the matter rightly, 8 or 10 dories start from the vessel in the early morning, and if, by any neglect in any instance a dory should be permitted to leave without this equipment, the master of the vessel would be liable to a very severe fine, $100, or imprisonment. I think that is a very hard imposition, and a very severe restriction. If it was a matter affecting the safety of passengers whose lives where dependent on the regulations to be observed, it would be a different matter altogether, but it affects fishermen, who, if they chose, could for a very small expense outfit themselves, if they thought this a necessary and proper protection. I am told that this compass would be of no earthly use so far as regards returning to the vessel in case of fog, or in case of drifting away unless the bearings of the vessel were first taken. I am told also that in very many instances these fishermen would be incapable of using the compass. I am told further that in the construction of the dory there are no places to which the compass could be attached and provisions stored, and that the equipment would have to be attached to the person and not to the boat. That kind of compass would be rather a toy compass, I fancy. While the motive was evidently a good one which caused this Bill to be introduced, yet, inasmuch as it was not asked by the only class of people who could be affected by it, the fishermen themselves, men of mature years who are accustomed to the perils of the sea and inured to a seafaring life, I do not think it should be proceeded with. I understand they are not a wealthy class, and not a class that can bear very heavy burdens, and this class should be permitted to judge for themselves as to whether they desire to take on themselves the expense of this outfit. If they do think so, it is optional for them to do it now.

If not, I think it would be burdensome if we compelled them to do it. I am informed no such With the legislation exists in any other country. long experience of Great Britain, United States and Newfoundland with regard to these fishing vessels, those countries have not thought it necessary in any instance to impose similar legislation and similar requirements upon their fishermen. If the fishermen came to Parliament and said that their calling was made more hazardous in consequence of this provision not being made by the owners of the vessels, that would be another question altogether. I would say at once that such a request should be acceded to, and perhaps a charge should be levied on the owners of the vessels; but it is not asked by them in a single instance, and, on the other hand, it would prove a positive burden on them, and inasmuch as there is no analogy for it in any country, I do not think at this time that we should initiate this legislation. This is not the first time this Bill has been before the House; I think it was before the House last Session, and it did not receive favor at that time. have voluminous reports here on the subject. The Department, of which I am the unworthy representative, had no prejudice against the Bill, and if it was a useful Bill they were prepared to accept it; but the result of enquiries which had been made from persons in whom the Department have great confidence, has led the Department to believe that it is not desired by the fishermen, that it would not be wise legislation, and the information which the Department has collected is not favorable to the passage of the Bill. I therefore feel it my duty to move :

That all the words after "That" be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:—"the House do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the said Bill this day six months."

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is evident the hon. gentleman has been misinformed in several particulars, judging by the observations he has addressed to the House. He said this Bill would be expensive and burdensome to the fishermen. The hon. gentleman is perhaps not aware that when a vessel fits out for the bank fishing, whether owned by several parties or by one individual, the outfit forms part of the expenditure of the voyage, and under the circumstances there would be no additional expense whatever in taking those provisions on board of the dories when they leave the vessel to go to their trawls. The provisions and the compass are there. The hon, gentleman is aware that the compass is a very small instrument, and can be placed in any part of the boat, and all that would be required would be a small cover for The owners of the vessel find the provisions and outfit for the voyage, and the fishermen do not pay one cent towards that expense. They go on the vessel for the trip or for the season, and when the vessel returns the owners receive one-half the catch as belonging to the vessel, while the other half is divided between the captain and the crew, and in that way they receive compensation for their sum-mer's work. The hon, gentleman says that the compass would be of no value to them. That statement occurred no doubt from the hon. gentleman not having been informed by those who made representations to him that the trawls are set in certain position from the fishing vessel, and when the men leave the vessel they take the incident to the hazardous calling of the fishermen Mr. Colby.

bearings of the trawls, and consequently when they reach the trawl and have taken their observations before leaving, if the weather is foggy, all they have to do is to go back again by the compass to reach the ship. The hon, gentleman has been informed on this point by a person who is not familar with the modes in which this very important industry is conducted; he has evidently been informed by some person in the Department, I presume in Halifax, because this Bill did not originate in the Department, and he thought fit to make objection. But there is not any objection raised by the hon. Minister that cannot be met by any practical man at all familiar with our mode of conducting our fishing. It is only in the deep sea fishing where people leaving vessels may be exposed to the danger of being left in the fog not only for hours but for days, away from their vessel unless the fog clears up, and if they have no provisions or water to sustain them, they may be unable to reach their vessel again. The hon, gentleman says he is not aware of this law having been required or in force in any other country. I am not aware that there is, but within the United States that has been the subject of discussion for some years, and I have no doubt it will become law before long. In Newfoundland, they have almost entirely a shore fishery, and therefore they do not require the same protection which our Nova Scotia vessels do, in the deep sea fisheries. Under these circumstances no comparison can be made. The hon, gentleman says there has been no application from the fishermen requiring this Act. Well, we pass a great many Acts in this House which have never been asked for by parties interested. The Government has adopted measures year after year, for the preservation and safety of people on railroads, steamboats and otherwise, which have not been asked for, but simply because it was considered that it would be wise and prudent to make such provisions. In the present case accidents have occurred with us and dories have been lost, because of neglect to take the precautions which the Bill proposes shall be taken. In my opinion the hon, the President of the Council has not given any argument against this Bill. I am aware he is not familiar with it himself, and acting as the head of the Department, in the absence of the Minister of Marine, he has taken the information which has been given probably by some person in Halifax, who, I repeat, cannot be as familiar with the question as my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) who has been engaged very largely in that branch of commerce, and who recognises the importance and necessity of this Bill. I think the Government would have done well to have accepted this Bill, because it is in the interest of the fishermen. The fishermen are a peculiar class of people. They would go on from year to year, and would probably not ask for any of these precautions. They are naturally a careless class of people. They are careless about danger, they hardly know the risks they run themselves, and they are so accustomed to the dangers of the sea from their boyhood, that they look with indifference upon them, and accidents do occur frequently, because of the neglect of precaution which we are endeavoring to remedy by this Bill. It is the duty of the Government to see that the dangers should be minimized. This Bill was not of my own introduction, it was proposed by an hon. member of the Senate and brought down to this House, but when it was explained to me, and when I had a conference with the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) and other hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, and from my own experience, and the discussions which have taken place from last year to the present time, I was persuaded that the Government would do a great injustice to the fishermen if they did not allow this Bill to become law. I hope the hon. Minister will even now reconsider his statement, and allow the Bill to pass.

Mr. EISENHAUR. I think that with the exception of the heavy penalty provided, this Bill is a good one. It would not, however, affect our fishermen, for we have already complied with the provisions of the Bill, and the necessary water, and food, and compasses are carried in their boats. know to my personal knowledge, that since they have taken these precautions, the loss of fishermen has been far less, and there has been less hardship and loss of life experienced in cases where they strayed away from their fishing vessels. As my hon, friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) has stated, the expense will not devolve upon the fishermen at all, as the articles specified are found by the owners of the vessels. In the county which I have the honor to represent, the fishermen, I believe, have found their own compasses, which are small brass instruments, three or four inches in diameter and which cost only about 75 or 80 cents. men are quite willing to procure these compasses at their own expense, but as it is well known the provisions are supplied by the owners of the vessels. The hon. the President of the Council is altogether mistaken in stating that these vessels are chartered. As my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) has stated the men get half the proceeds and everything is found for them. I think the $100 penalty mentioned in the Bill is altogether too high, for in many cases, if the Bill became law, it would be violated unintentionally. Sometimes these crews are called upon to jump into their boats in a great hurry, and probably they might forget the necessary supplies. This might be the case also when the fish are plenty. There is great rivalry as to who will bring in the most fish, and sometimes they leave the vessel without taking time to provide for supplies in the boat. If this Bill is adopted, I would suggest that a penalty not exceeding $50 would be ample, instead of the $100 fine now proposed.

General LAURIE. My hon, friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has given the very strongest reasons why the Bill should not pass. The Bill provides what is required to be placed in the dory, and the penalty is to be inflicted on the captain or owner of the vessel, if the regulations therein set forth are not carried out. As my hon, friend from Lunenberg (Mr. Eisenhauer) says the food is provided by the owners of the vessels, and if the men do not take it in their boats, it is their own fault. Why should a penalty be imposed on a captain or owner, if the fishermen being provided with these things, do not see fit to take them for their own safety. It is quite true as the hon, gentleman states that the vessels are, in the main, worked by the crews on shares, and there is great rivalry among them as to who will take the most fish. They get away in their dorys as quickly as they can in the early morning, and it would be practically impossible for the captain to keep the whole of the crew around his vessel, with the boats bumping against the sides, if a heavy sea was running, while he examined the dories to see if food, water and compasses were carried in every It is out of the question that the captain of a vessel should be held responsible in a fine of $100 or imprisonment because the men may so far neglect their own comfort or safety, as not to take the necessary articles in their boats. Then, again, to insist on finding the owner or captain of the vessel in case the men go out without a fog-horn in their dory, seems to me unreasonable. The object is that the dory shall get back to the vessel, and not that the vessel shall go to the dory. The vessel is provided with a fog-horn, or bell, or guns; and when the dory is absent, and a fog comes on, the fog-horn is sounded on the vessel, and the dory in that way is brought back. Even if the men had fog-horns with them, the vessel could not go to them; she would be at anchor, and she would not lift her anchor every time the dory was away. It seems to me that the men's self-interest in their own safety, is the best precaution we can have; and it would be most unreasonable to inflict a heavy penalty on the captain or owner of the vessel because they neglected their own safety. The fishermen are often reckless and daring; their desire is to bring back a full take to their vessel, and, if possible, to make her high line in the fleet when they come back to port, and in their desire to excel they often neglect their own safety; and I think it would be hard to inflict the penalty of their neglect upon the owner or captain of the vessel.

Mr. KIRK. If the penalty alone is the only objection the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) has to the Bill, that is a matter which could easily be remedied in Committee. For my part, I think the principle of the Bill is a very good one. There does seem to be a necessity for something of this kind being done to protect the lives of the fishermen. Scarcely a year passes without our hearing of fishermen getting astray in consequence of fogs, and enduring great suffering. A few years ago two or three men went away in their boat, and lost their vessel in a fog, they were away so long that one or two of them actually died, and the survivors were actually obliged to drink the blood of their comrades, and I am not sure but they had to eat their flesh also to keep themselves alive. It seems to me that if anything could be done to prevent such suffering, it ought to be done. is quite clear that the hon. gentlen is quite clear that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Fisheries Department, and who has objected to the Bill, is not at all acquainted with the business. His statement that the fishermen would incur great expense in fitting out their vessels if this Bill passed, has already been shown to be incorrect by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer). The fisherermen do not share in the expense of fitting out the vessel; that is done by the owner of the vessel, and I am sure that the expense would not be very heavy if they were required to furnish a compass for every boat. I do not think it would be a hardship on the owners of the vessels if this Bill were enacted, and I am sure it would not be a hardship on the fishermen themselves, but a great relief to them.

Mr. KENNY. I am sure that the House will recognise that it is a duty incumbent upon us to do all we can to protect the lives of the fishermen engaged in the prosecution of their very precarious calling. I have listened carefully to this discussion and the arguments advanced in favor of the Bill now before the House. I do not pretend to have that intimate acquaintance with the fishing industry which the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) possesses. I am aware that during the past few years many of our fishermen have lost their lives while engaged in dory fishing; but I cannot see that in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries, who has, I believe, paid special attention to this matter, any great harm could result in letting the Bill stand until next year. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) has pointed out a fact with which we are painfully familiar, that during the past year or two some of these dory fishermen have died of starvation; but we must recognise that two quarts of water and two pounds of bread in each dory would hardly have saved the lives of these men. My hon. friend from Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) has pointed out that the penalty, which is really the most important part of the Bill, would be very oppressive on the owners and captains of the vessels. It has also been mentioned in the course of the debate that these vessels are now amply provided with provisions and with compasses, and that, consequently, it must be the fault of the fishermen themselves if they do not take the necessary provisions and the compass with them. hon member for Lunenberg says that the fisher-men sometimes forget to take them, or intentionally violate this precaution. Well, does my hon. friend contend that if the fishermen forget to take the provisions or compass, or intentionally violate the regulations of the vessel, the captain, who is really to some extent a co-partner with them in the enterprise, should be subjected to the whole penalty? While I am very anxious that we should adopt such degislation as would protect the dory fishermen, I do not see what great harm could result from allowing this Bill to stand over for one year; and I would respectfully suggest to the Department of Fisheries that they might, during the coming season, institute enquiries along the fishing coasts of our Province, as to the manner in which the dory fishing is prosecuted. The fact has been elicited that in no other country in the world has similar legislation to that proposed in this Bill been enacted; and if it is not demanded by the fishermen who are the most immediately concerned, I think no great harm can result in letting it stand over for another year.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) does not pretend to call in question the statement which has been made that loss of life has resulted from failure to comply with the precautions which this Bill provides shall be complied with; but he deems this matter to be one of small importance, evidently, as compared with the inconvenience of dealing with it during the absence of the Minister. Now, if the statement made by the hon. member for Guysborough | Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of Mr. Kirk.

(Mr. Kirk) is correct, that instances have occurred of boat crews starving in consequence of their failure to provide themselves with food, and if these occurrences are liable to happen again, surely there is reason for the passage of this Bill. The expense to be incurred is a very slight one—a small compass which can be procured for $1.50 or $1, and a small quantity of provisions. It may be true that the fishermen should make provision themselves to secure themselves against distress; but let it be incumbent on the owners, and loss of life and much suffering would be prevented. If the facts are as presented there is pressing necessity for the passing of this Bill. It is not sufficient reason to assign that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is absent from his post, and therefore the condition of things which we deplore should continue for another year.

Mr. ELLIS. The argument with which the Government endeavor to head off this proposed legislation is entirely inconsistent with the argument they advanced last year in the case of protecting seamen on the upper lakes. It was then contended that it was a matter of free will to these seamen, to engage on board of the old vessels complained of, but nevertheless the Department supported its legislation entirely on the ground that it was in the interest of the seamen and necessary for their safety. Now the argument is entirely opposite. It is that the men can protect themselves. Everybody who knows anything of the fisheries in the fishing season knows that cases are constantly occurring of boats getting lost during foggy weather. Sometimes for three or four days the whole fishing population, indeed the whole population of the Provinces, are excited over the fact that three or four boats have gone astray and have not been picked up. The men no doubt have neglected to make any arrangements for themselves, and the owners make no arrangements for them, and the consequence is that the men suffer great privation and often die. This may be a matter of no great concern to the Legislature, but the Legislature does deal with questions of this kind, and in this case it ought to take hold of this matter and make some provision for the fishermen who are largely at the mercy of the captains of vessels and the men who employ them. With regard to the penalty, it seems to me a heavy penalty, but a provision could be made requiring these dories to be provided in the way prescribed by the Bill.

Amendment of Mr. Colby (six months' hoist) agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Tuesday).

THE BREMNER FURS.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would ask the Government whether we will soon receive the printed evidence in the Middleton and Bremner case. I understood it was to be printed as soon as possible.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think it has been printed.
Mr. CASGRAIN. It has not been distributed.
Mr. CHAPLEAU. My neighbor here shows me a copy he has received.

Mr. LAURIER. We have none.

Mr. DAVIN. It cannot have been distributed, for I did not get one.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will see that it is distributed.

Mr. BLAKE. I have understood that the hon. gentleman got many things in advance. A statement was made yesterday, that to-day we would be informed when the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections would take place.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Prime Minister is not here now, and the hon. gentleman might repeat his question when he is here.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I receive anything in advance, I do not desire to keep it to myself.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 146) to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories. He said: The principal provisions in this Act are the following:—It is deemed advisable to define the Territories more particularly than they are at present defined, and to change their name to the Western Territories of Canada. This is proposed to be done by section 3 of the Bill. Sections 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 contain the provisions which are to govern the composition of the Legislative Assembly, the periods at which sittings thereof are to be held, and the mode of proceedings for electing a new Assembly, or for filling a vacancy. Section 10 defines the classes of subjects respecting which the Legislative Assembly may make ordinances. By section 13 of the Bill the powers of a single judge are to be extended and defined. the same section the confirmation, reversal, or modification, by the Court of Appeal, of the decision of a single judge is to be provided for. By section 14 provision is to be made for the perform ance of the duties of a sheriff or a clerk in the event of a vacancy through death or otherwise. By section 18 provision is to be made to empower each judge of the Supreme Court of the Territories to be ex-officio a district magistrate for the Territories, and also to sit as a criminal court to try and determine charges preferred against any persons for the offences which are specified in that section. By section 22 of the Bill provision is to be made as to the manner of indicting persons so charged. By section 23 provision is to be made for the transmission, by a justice of the peace or magistrate holding a preliminary investigation into any criminal offence, which may not be tried 140 under "The Summary Convictions Act," of the records of such investigation; and for the notification of a judge, with the object of affording the person charged with the crime, a speedy trial. By section 24 those persons convicted of a breach of a municipal by-law and sentenced to imprisonment on account of such breach, are to be excepted from the provisions of section 79 of chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes, unless the municipality shall arrange with the Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police for the maintenance of the person so convicted during the period of his sentence. By section 30 the wording of section 108 of the said chapter 50 is to be slightly changed, and two sub-sections are to be added thereto. The first of these sub-sections fixes the width of public highways, roads or trails which existed in the Territories prior to survey, and also provides for the improvement of the location thereof by the surveyor, if necessary. The second retains the title to the highways in the town for the public uses of the Territories, and provides that such roads cannot be altered and that the land cannot be sold except by consent of the Governor in Council. The amendment proposed by section 31 to section 110 of the said chapter 50 will give the Legislative Assembly which will be elected to succeed the present one the right to regulate and to decide the manner of recording and publishing its proceedings. By section 32 of the Bill it is to be provided that no change shall be made in the existing law of the Territories concerning intoxicating liquor until the dissolution of the present Assembly has afforded the inhabitants an opportunity of expressing their opinion with regard to the nature of such change. The other sections of the Bill contain no material alterations of the present law.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has only given us a synopsis of what the Bill contains, but no explanations as to the reasons of the alterations made in the Act. I think no more important subject could be brought before this House at the present time than a Bill legislating in regard to the North-West Territories, and the House, I am sure, will be disappointed at the more than dry manner in which the hon. gentleman has introduced this subject, but I cannot blame him very much for that, because the Bill itself is a very dry one, and the changes made in the present law are mostly technical, with the exception of section 13, which is clothing the Legislature of the North-West Territories with powers similar to those now enjoyed by the Provinces. In fact, section 13, as amended by this Bill, is largely borrowed from section 92 of the Confederation Act, which gives the powers now enjoyed by the Provinces. I do not find fault with the Administration for enlarging, to that extent, the powers now enjoyed by the Legislature, but it seems to me that while the Government was making that concession, it would have been opportune to supplement it with another concession by giving responsible government to the Territories. The Territories are not progressing very fast, but still the population which goes there is an advanced population, well educated, and already showing great powers of self-govern-ment. There are some subjects of a nature which had better be entrusted to them than kept in this House. They are the best judges of what is best for them in their present condition. It is felt that the powers which they have already received are inadequate, and I question very much whether this small measure of reform, though it may be accepted for what it is worth, will meet the condition of the people of the Territories. If the Government had seen fit to give them a responsible government, or at least a larger measure of self-government, than they have at the present time, many of the difficulties which may come before this House at some time or another, and many of the difficulties which may arise in the Territories themselves, under the present system, would in all probability be avoided. All the difficulties that have arisen between the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislature-and they have had some difficulties during the last Session-arose from the fact that the Governor had not a responsible body of advisers who were answerable to the House, and this fact shows the necessity for some larger measure of responsible government. Under the circumstances, I do not venture at this moment any further criticism of this Bill than to say that, in my judgment, it falls short of what should be the proper remedy for the difficulties which may arise, not only in this House but in the Territories themselves.

Mr. DAVIN. I sympathise, to some extent, with the remarks that have fallen from the leader of the Opposition. Those remarks are not couched in a spirit of hostility to the Government or to this Act. In fact, this Act is travelling along the road that the hon. and learned gentleman wishes it to go, but he would have it go further. I think that so long as the Act remained as it was there was a very large section of the people in the North-West who were well content. I may tell the hon. gentleman that though there was some difficulty in the Assembly last year, I believe as a fact that the weight of opinion in the North-West was with the minority of that Assembly. By the 11th sub-clause of section 10, that is to say, section 13 of the Revised Statutes, which has been put in by the Senate, all the powers that call for responsibility are given, as we find by these words:

I am afraid that unless some form of responsible government is given, that money will be worse than wasted; that money will be expended— how? It will be expended by the Lieutenant Governor by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly. Why, Sir, what will happen? You will have that money log-rolled, as we know has often happened in the history of such Governments. Suppose moneys were voted here in Committee of Supply; if you allowed those moneys to be expended by the advice of this Parliament without any Government to be responsible therefor to the people, the result would be that vast sums that are now carefully expended, would be worse than wasted. With regard to the local fund which they raise now, amounting, I think, to some $16,000 or $17,000, that sum is logrolled. The manner in which that sum is expended is this: It is divided by 22, and the quotient given to each member, and whether he needs it or not, he to fall back upon his inventive faculties for ways of expending it. Yet, of course, he does expend it. One case happened where an hon, gentleman spent the money on purposes that never could have been contemplated when it was voted; and, therefore, I think, as we have gone thus far, probably it would be as well to go still further and to give them a little government. I think there are some parts of the Bill that will be found an improvement; but, when we come to the clause dealing with the appointment of deputy sheriffs, I will ask the Committee to accept an amendment. It seems to me that is indefensible; it is vicious in principle. to have the Assembly provide for the appointment of deputy sheriffs; it would be much better to have the judges provide for the necessity of the appointment of deputy sheriffs, because if you have this work devolving on the Assembly, every member of the Assembly will be troubled with requests from every little town in his district to have a deputy sheriff appointed, because every little place would think it would obtain a certain importance if it had a deputy sheriff. The subject was discussed elsewhere, if I may refer to it in passing, and all the North-West opinion was in the direction which I now express myself. I will ask the Government to consider that point, because, as I say, you will have such a large number of deputy sheriffs that the receipts will not be enough to give them bread and salt. I think, on the whole, there are very good reforms in the Bill, and the North-West will welcome it.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it impossible to attach too much importance to the point on which the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has just enlarged. We are proposing to make a departure from the principles of responsible government, as we understand them, in a most important particular. I admit that it is difficult to deal with the exigency otherwise than it is dealt with by this Bill, without responsible government. The principle, as I understand it, is that, with respect to the expenditure of public moneys, it is the Crown that initiates, not the Assembly. The Assembly is supposed to be a check, a guard, to keep the drag on; that is the function of the popular body. I quite agree that eminent statesmen, not theorising, but dealing with actual results in late years in the mother country, have pointed out how far the English House of Commons has departed from the ancient traditions; how far it has ceased to be a bulwark and support to the Administration in matters of prudence and economy in public expenditure. But, none the less, I hold it to be the most important ingredient in securing economy, and also good direction, in public expenditure, that there shall be an initiative somewhere else than in the popular assembly, and, deeply as I differ from the hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) as to his characterisation of the expenditures that have taken place in this House, or rather with the sanction of this House, I say they are, beyond all comparison, better, more prudent, and wiser than they would have been if such a system as we are proposing to give the North-West Territories had existed here. We have had a few instances, I am glad to say only a few, of attempted departure from that system. There have been perhaps three cases, three only occur to my naturally takes it, although sometimes he may have mind at this moment, in which select committees have substantially, though not nominally, been allowed to deal with old claims in order, I am afraid, that the Executive might escape the responsibility, with the inevitable result that the claims were allowed; but, subject to those trifling exceptions, which only mark the rule, we have observed the rule. We are not without experience in this matter in the old Province. In the early days of the old Legislature of Canada, prior to 1840, when, as you know, we had a system which was not a system of responsible government, although there were Ministers representing the Crown, at that time, as Mr. Bourinot says:

"All applications for pecuniary assistance were addressed directly to the House of Assembly, and every Governor, especially Lord Sydenham, has given his testimony as to the injurious effect of the system. The Union Act of 1840 placed the initiation of many votes in the Crown, and this wise practice was always strictly followed up to 1867, when the new Constitution came into force."

And we know the language of the present Constitution provides expressly:

"It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a Message of the Governor General, in the the Session in which such vote, resolution, address, or Bill is proposed."

A similar provision is inserted in the Constitution of each Provincial Legislature. Now, as I have said, I see the difficulty in which hon, gentlemen opposite were plunged when they came to deal with this question, because they have got one or two alternatives to adopt. They have to adopt the language we find here, which says:

"The expenditure of such portion of any moneys appropriated by Parliament for the Territories, as the Governor in Council may instruct the Lieutenant Governor to expend, by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly."

That is to say, the advice of the Assembly is to rule. They had that course open to them. Or the course was open to them of providing that the Lieutenant Governor should send down his Message, and without that Message it should not be competent for the Legislative Assembly to deal with the question at all. There you would at once be face to face with irresponsible rule. The Legislative Assembly cannot condemn the Lieutenant Governor, or dismiss him, or alter his position in any way, his advisory council is not responsible; and you are brought face to face with a difficulty which must subsist for the want of responsible government. But, on the other hand, what are we doing by the proposed plan? We are deliberately initiating that system which was deliberately abandoned in the early history of the old Province, where it was tried with injurious results, which has been deliberately rendered impossible by the constitutional Act, as to this Assembly and as to the Provincial Legislatures, and which is decidedly opposed to the spirit of the British Constitution. The hon. gentleman from Assiniboia has told us of the method of the expenditure of the scanty funds, which up to this time the Legislative Assembly has been allowed to expend. It is not an entirely new method of expenditure, because, I happen to know, that in the Province of Nova Scotia there are certain moneys called "road moneys," the disposal of which has been placed under the control of members; but, even there, the question of deciding as to how much shall go to each county is decided according to constitutional principle, while the detailed application has been left, with very injurious results, to the local members. But the hon. gentleman tells us, that in this case the total fund to be disposed of is divided by the number of constituencies, and each member is given his equal share. Of course, it is impossible to suppose, that in a territory like the North-West, in which, with the best possible desire, you cannot have equal areas with equal wants all over, that an equal division of money all over is a just division. Why, it is beyond all possibility that such an arrangement can be just, and it is important that what scanty funds are available should be expended for such objects as may on the advice of responsible Ministers, be submitted to the Assembly and as shall by the Assembly be deemed to be for the general good. It might be that a particular district might be infinitely more benefited in reality by the whole fund being expended outside of it, in an adjoining district; its own immediate local interests might be better served by a large expenditure on a bridge or other means of public communication, than by being frittered away in the district itself. Such a system as this is one which certainly does not encourage us in the scheme of placing more funds in this present fashion under the control of the Assembly. I think, therefore, we are face to face with a very serious question when we are engaged in the work commenced in 1875, that high and noble work for any Legislative Assembly, the task of improving, as we were engaged then in the task of inaugurating, the institutions under which a large territory, to be inhabited at some future day, we hope, by millions, may grow up and prosper.

Mr. LARIVIERE. In the early part of this Session, a question closely connected with the present legislation which we are now called upon to examine was raised in this House, and it was then stated although the population of the North-West Territories was largely composed of a class of people using the French language, it was astonishing that in the North-West Council, composed of 22 members, not one had been returned who belonged to the French Canadian nationality. This was due to the fact that the electoral divisions were so arranged, that the French population could not muster a sufficient number of electors to elect one of themselves to represent their interests in that Council. I expected that the present Bill would contain such provisions, as would alter the electoral divisions so as to give the French popula-tion of the North-West Territories a chance of having representatives upon the floor of their Council. The hon, member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) made at the time a suggestion, that when amendments should be framed to the North-West Territories Act, they should contain such changes as would help the French population properly represented; and if be memory serves me right, the promise given to him, that when such legislation would be brought before this House, it would contain a provision whereby the desired change would be effected, and whereby the interests of those which are to-day unrepresented in that body, would be protected. I am sorry to see, that when a suggestion was made to the Senate to that effect, it was not accepted by those who had the Bill in charge; and the Bill which now comes before this House is, consequently, without such provision. Out of 22 members composing the North-West Council, as I have said, not one belonged either to the French nationality, or even to the Catholic religion, although one-fifth of the North-West is French. The population of the North-West Territories, according to the last census, was 22,000 or 27,000 inhabitants, out of which 4,800 were of French origin, and these people, as I repeat, are without representation in the North-West Assembly. Before this Bill is adopted by the House, I hope that such an amendment as will rectify this state of affairs will be incorporated. When a Constitution was given to the Province of Quebec, at Confederation, the framers were very careful to set apart a certain number of counties which were called the English counties; and by the Constitution, the Legislature of the Province of Quebec could not interfere with the limits of these counties, so that the Protestant minority of the Province would have their representatives, and would thus be protected against the majority. I say that this was well done. Although there was no danger, still it was right, I believe, that the minority should be protected against the majority. If we had this protection in the Province of Manitoba, we would not have had to regret the legislation recently adopted in that Province. I maintain that it is within our duty, as representatives of the people here, to see that the minority is protected in the North-West Territories, as it is in the Province of Manitoba by the Constitution, and as the Protestant and English minority of the Province of Quebec is also protected by the Constitution. I repeat expressing the hope that, before this Bill is put through all its stages in this House, such provision will be incorporated as shall protect the minority of the North-West Territories, as far as their right to fair repre-

Mr. McCARTHY. I agree with a great deal which has been said by my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), but I do not think he has quite stated the law; he has not stated it, at all events, as I understand it. The difficulty with the North-West Territories is, that the Advisory Council is not responsible as a Government would be : although it is stated that the Lieutenant Governor has to consult the Advisory Council with regard to the expenditure of moneys. It is a hybrid system. It is neither a system of responsible government, such as we are accustomed to understand it, nor is it a system by which the Executive—that is, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories --is responsible, and, I suppose, solely responsible to his official head. But I think the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) was wrong in this respect. As I understand the effect of the amendment now proposed, it is this: that in addition to the moneys which the people of the North-West vote themselves, and which, according to the present practice, they are supposed to have control over; they are to have control over such further sums of money, under the 11th sub-section:

sentation at least, is concerned.

"As the Governor in Council may instruct the Lieutenant Governor to expend, by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly."

My hon, friend will see that under another clause of the North-West Territories Amending Act of Mr. LARIVIERE

1888, these moneys so expended will have to be recommended by the Lieutenant Governor; so, in point of fact, one of the mischiefs he pointed out, that that would be an expenditure without any responsibility, is, as I conceive, the result of the present scheme; the Lieutenant Governor is not responsible, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, but no money can be expended by the Council without his recommendation. To my mind, that is a most unfortunate condition of things, and I join with the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition in thinking that, if the day has not come, it is fast approaching, when responsible government might well be given to the North-West Territories, in some degree at all events. I do not mean to say that we should give them control of the public lands, but I believe that responsible government might well be given in a very large degree to the people of the North-West Territories. A Bill of a similar nature to this is now before the British Parliamene with regard to West Australia, and although the population there is 65,000 only-not so much at the population of the North-West Territories, if my memory serves me right—the Imperial Government have introduced a Bill proposing to confer on West Australia responsible government, though not giving them absolute control over the great public lands of that country. With that exception, I do not know why our North-West Territories, with 100,000 inhabitants, as, I think, they claim themselves to be, should not be entrusted with responsible government, instead of the extraordinary system which is perpetuated to some extent by this measure. Any one who reads the difficulties of the last session of the North-West Assembly will see how important it is in the interests of that country that this question should be settled, and settled promptly. We find that in the early days of the last meeting of the Legislative Assembly, Mr. Haultain's Administration resigned, because the Lieutenant Governor declined to account for the expenditure which had been voted by the Assembly the preceding session. Then we find, that a new Advisory Board having been selected, the Council promptly voted want of confidence in them, and the Advisory Board having refused to resign on account of that, the Legislative Assembly refused to vote money which had been recommended by the Lieutenant Governor. There is a deadlock; it is a deadlock that this measure is certainly not going to get rid of in any way; the same difficulty will arise next session; and I really think that when the Bill is before us, some more adequate provision should be made for getting rid of a difficulty which is calculated to create uneasiness and disturbance in the North-West, the result of which we must all deplore. I notice, too though it is perhaps not intentional that the effect of the Bill is rather to limit the authority of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West. The 9th sub-section of section 13 simply gives power to the North-West Assembly to constitute courts of civil jurisdiction; but that Assembly has up to this time had power, which it will cease to have if this Bill becomes law, to constitute courts of criminal jurisdiction as well. I do not know the reason for that change. However, these are provisions which will, perhaps, undergo discussion in committee, and I merely refer to them now, without in any sense opposing the second reading. I regret that this Bill has not been brought down earlier in the Session. Dealing as it does with a territory of such vast extent and with such a large population, I think it is not too much to say, that it is one of the most important, if not the most important measure of the whole Session, and I think it is a pity that it has been left to be considered in the dying hours of the Session. But, when the proper time comes, I will move with regard to one or two clauses—one clause which I see in the Bill, and another which I object to not seeing there, if that is not a Hibernianism. I propose to ask the Committee to reconsider the resolution which is now to be found embodied in the 31st clause of the Bill:

"Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the Legislative Assembly of the Territories and in the proceedings before the courts; and both those languages shall be used in the records and journals of such Assembly; and all ordinances made under this Act shall be printed in both those languages: Provided, however, that after the next general election of the Legislative Assembly, such Assembly may, by ordinance or otherwise, regulate its proceedings, and the manner of recording and publishing the same; and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the Lieutenant Governor in conformity with the law, and thereafter shall have full force and effect."

Now, I submit that this clause does not at all dispose of the question of the dual language. I notice that the hon, gentleman who represents the Government in the other House calls it a compromise. If it is a compromise, I do not know who were the parties to that compromise. I do not know why the Upper House should have felt bound or precluded by some arrangement or compromise made with regard to this question. Who were the parties to the compromise? Were the people of the North-West consulted? Had they any notice of it, or did they assent to it?

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

CHARLES H. MACKINTOSH, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of the City of Ottawa, introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Robillard.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was pointing out that it had been urged in the other branch of the Legislature that this compromise had been agreed to, and that by reason of the compromise it was not in the public interest that this agitation, as it was termed, should be prolonged or renewed. What I want to know is, who were the parties to the compromise, and why should we be bound or precluded by an arrangement when we cannot even tell who were the parties to it. It was not stated on the floor of this House that there had been any arrangement; certainly no arrangement was agreed to on the floor of the House other than that found in the vote that was cast. Then, was the arrangement made outside of the House? If so, who were the parties to it? It was stated, I see, by the hon. gentleman who represents the Government in the other Chamber:

"The reason is precisely the one which my hon, friend from Ottawa stated, and it is the one which actuates probably nearly every man in this Chamber who votes for the proviso, namely, that by the introduction of the proviso it is intended not to prolong or increase or renew the agitation on this subject, but, by accepting it, to seek to put an end to the agitation on this subject, because it represents something in the nature of a compromise which has been impliedly entered into and agreed upon by the leaders of all parties in politics in this country—with the exception of this new and small party which has lately sprung up—as a solution of the difficulty which can reasonably be accepted."

Well, I do not understand, and on endeavoring to recall the discussion, I cannot now derive from it, although I paid pretty close attention to it, how this compromise was agreed to. I do remember, that my hon, friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) moved a resolution proposing that the whole subject should be left to the people of the North-West after the general elections; I understood that a large proportion of the House were in favor of that; I heard the right hon, gentleman who leads the House applaud the sentiment, and I think, if I am not mistaken, that he spoke in favor of it. Shortly afterwards, the hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) made a proposition, he not being satisfied either with the Bill or the amendment of the hon. member for West Assiniboia. Within twenty-four hours afterwards, this other amendment was suggested, but it was not suggested as the result of a compromise or anything of the kind. Perhaps the leader of the other House knows more about it than I do; all I know of it was what took place on the floor of this House. But what I protest against, is that Parliament should be supposed to be bound by any arrangement come to on that occasion. I ventured to say then, and I repeat now, that that is not going to settle the difficulty. If this dual language discussion is calculated to arouse passions and feelings which had better not be aroused, then the proper thing for Parliament to do is to settle the question once and for all. This is no settlement of it. What does it do? It merely leaves to the Assembly of the Territories the power to say that the Journals shall be printed in the way they think fit; in other words, they shall not be printed in both languages; and further, that but one language. if they please, shall be spoken in the Assembly. I have not the slightest doubt that, without any law at all, any reasonable body of men—and I take it that the members of the North-West Assembly are reasonable men-would permit one of its members to speak in any language which suited him, in which they could follow him. do not think they require any law for that. I do not think that is the grievance which was complained of. What the people of the North-West complained of, and what they still, if I read their press aright, complain of, is that this is a perpetuation of the system of dual languages, and, therefore, calculated to do a great deal of mischief, unless put an end to at an early day. That system is still maintained in the courts. I do not object, nor need anybody object, to the printing of the laws in as many lan guages as the Assembly thinks necessary; it is not necessary to impose by this Act imperatively upon the Assembly that the laws shall be printed in French and English, as that is a matter which reasonable men would deal with properly and fairly. What I feel, and what I think most people feel on this subject, is the mischief resulting from the policy of perpetuating the dual system of language. I do not propose to renew the discussion at any length upon that subject; but ask the attention of the House to an omission which is perhaps still more serious in this Bill, and that is with reference to the question of education. By the law, as it now stands, separate schools have been, since 1875, absolutely imposed upon the people of the North-West Territories. The majority constitutes its school and then the minority, whether Protestant or Catholic, has a separate school. This system differs from the system prevailing in Ontario in this way, that in Ontario we have the public schools, which are the general schools, and then we have the separate schools which are the schools of the Roman Catholic minority. But in the North-West Territories the law is the same as in the Province of Quebec, I believe; at all events, it is that the majority having formed their school, the minority, whether Protestant or Catholic, are then entitled to form theirs. So that there are in most of the districts two schools-the school of the majority, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, and that of the minority. The intention of our Constitution is to give the Local Assemblies absolute and complete control over education. That is the scheme of our Constitution. In the cases of Quebec and Ontario, special restrictions were imposed on both these Provinces; but in all the other Provinces of the Dominion there is no restriction whatever, and the question is left to be settled by the local authorities, who are the most competent to deal with it. I propose to ask the Committee, when this Bill is in committee, to place the law in the North-West Territories exactly in that position. When this law was passed, it was said there were only five hundred people in the North-West Territories. It was passed, so far as the Senate was concerned, in opposition to a very large number of Senators. I have here the debate on the subject, and I find that this clause of the Bill was only carried by a majority of two, it having been opposed on a motion made by Senator Aikins and strongly supported by the Hon. George Brown. The late Mr. Brown opposed it on the ground that it was contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, as the British North America Act gave the matter of education absolutely to the Provinces, and that, as at that time, the North-West Territories were being endowed with certain powers, the power should be given to them of dealing with this question. Mr. Brown spoke, according to the official reports of the Senate, as follows :-

"He held this provision was quite contrary to the British North America Act. Nothing was more clear that each Province should have absolute control over education. He held that was the only principle on which the Union Act could be continued. If the Dominion Government interfered in local matters we would get into inextricable confusion with the Provinces. The safe way for us was to let each Province suit itself in this matter. The country was filled with people of all classes and creeds, and there would be no end to confusion if each class had to have its own peculiar school system. It had been said this clause was put in for the protection of the Protestants against the Catholics, the latter being the most numerous. But he, speaking for the Protestants, was in a position to say that we did not want that protection. In this case, it was proposed that the national machinery should be used for the imposition and collection of taxes upon persons of peculiar denominations for the support of schools of their kind. It was an attempt to enforce upon that country peculiar views with regard to education."

Now, what was the argument against this contention? It was that the system of separate schools and public schools was prevailing in Ontario and Quebec, and that it was the subject of very great regret that there was not in New Brunswick—because at that time the New Brunswick question was up—a similar law. Well, I have learned from members coming from New Brunswick that the school system there has acted satisfactorily, and that there is no substantial grievance complained of by the minority, who do not find that, in attending the ordinary public schools, they are suffering any great wrong. We know that in the Province of Ontario, in many places, all classes of religion attend the public schools. I know of one place in my own riding where the Roman Catholics have always refused to have separate schools, although they are a very large body in that particular township. They are quite content, rather more than content, to send their children to the schools, confident that by joining with the others they would get a much better education than by dividing the schools into two smaller bodies. The suggestions, therefore, which were made in the Senate in support of this clause of the Bill, experience has shown to be not warranted by the results. It is urged that this and kindred questions should not be dealt with until after the next elections, and I propose to move an amendment in that sense. The Legislative Assembly has unanimously petitioned that the clause to which I refer should be amended in the direction I speak of. I find, upon the 29th of October, on motion of Mr. Richardson, seconded by Mr. Brett, it was resolved:

"That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency, the Governor General in Council, the Senate and the House of Commons, praying that an Act be passed to amend the North-West Territories Act by repealing subsection 1, of section 14, after the word 'education' in the second line."

In other words, simply giving the North-West Assembly power to deal with the subject of education. A special committee was thereupon appointed to draft a petition, and both these motions were carried unanimously; and I find on page 65 of the Journals of the North-West Assembly, that a petition to the same effect was presented and again unanimously adopted. However, if there is any doubt about the propriety of asking the North-West Assembly to deal with this question at present, I am quite willing to yield to that doubt, because a year or two cannot make any great difference. Therefore, I propose to move in Committee that after the next election they shall have power to deal with this subject of education in an unrestricted manner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I regret I was not able to be present during the previous part of this debate, and that I had not the advantage of hearing all the argument of the hon. member for North Simcoe. This Bill, however, does not pretend in any way to be either a consolidation of the laws respecting the North-West Territories or to make any substantial amendments, except to remove the clause dealing with education and leaving to a future Parliament the discussion of the whole system of governing the North-West. I presume that, in a very few years, the population there will be such as to call for the division of the Territories into Provinces. Then I have no doubt a constitution will be adopted similar in substance to the constitutions that prevail in the various existing Provinces of the Dominion. The Legislature of Canada has proceeded, with reference to the organisation of the North-West, with great care and caution. It will be remembered that at first that country was governed by a Lieutenant Governor with a council appointed, I think, altogether by the Crown, and afterwards with a council composed of a certain number of Crown nominees and a certain number of elected councillors. governor was practically without responsibility to the Legislature, and I have no doubt that was designedly so, the Governor being responsible to the central Government, and that central Government or Cabinet being responsible to the Dominion Parliament. The amended measure which was introduced, I think, by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) made a further advance and provided that when the population amounted to a certain number-

Mr. BLAKE. That was introduced by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg the hon. entleman's pardon for the error. That provided gentleman's pardon for the error. that, when the number of the elected members amounted to 21, the nominated council should disappear, and it should be changed from a council to an assembly, and the Governor would then sever himself-if I recollect aright-from the council of which before he was merely a member, and would assume a more distinct political existence, in fact, would assume by degrees the position of the representative of the Crown in a Province. Still, there was no responsible government provided for in so many words in that Act. In 1888, the last Act was passed, by which without the Lieutenant Governor having a responsible government as we understand it, without having advisers selected from the assembly and obliged to go back to their constituents for re-election upon being appointed advisers of the Crown, it was provided that further steps should be taken towards the assimilation of the system there to that which prevails in the Provinces, so that the Lieutenant Governor should have an advisory board taken from the Assembly, and so on. The difficulty—if difficulty it may be called—the difference of opinion in the North-Westarose from the fact that the Assembly at once assumed that they had a constitution similar to a Provincial constitution. As to the danger that was alluded to by the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), or rather the practice in the olden days-I am old enough to remember them—the Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada did not look after the finances at all except those which were derived from Imperial revenues, such as Customs, for instance.

Mr. BLAKE. And the post office.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Also the post office and the Indian revenue quoad the Indians. The Lieutenant Governor managed those revenues autocratically, but, I believe, with a praiseworthy desire to meet the views of the people, though he was not obliged to do so. As to the revenues which came within the governance of the Legislature, I am afraid there was a great deal of what the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) calls log-rolling. At all events, there were Acts passed appropriating the revenue at the instance of any member who moved a Bill-something like the system which now prevailsin the American Congress. There were ludicrous instances of Bills being passed for certain purposes when there was no money in the treasury to carry out after year statutes were adopted enabling the Province to borrow money when there was really no power to borrow, and when, if there had been the power, they had not sufficient credit to raise the money required by the Bill. You will find a semi-indignant, but somewhat cynical account of these proceedings in the report of Lord Sydenham. This state of affairs was cured in 1863. In this case no such action can be taken except on the initiative of the Governor, who is responsible to the Parliament of Canada as a Dominion officer, but he had always the power in that country to act at first on his own discretion. 1878, there was an attempt made to provide an embryotic Ministry or Council, to allow the Lieutenant Governor to select four advisers, from those he thought, from their commercial and financial experience, were best fitted to discharge that duty. That was all that was then done in the direction of establishing responsible government. Whether the time has come, or not, when responsible government in its fullest extent should be established in those Territories, I am unable to say, but I can say this, that almost every gentle-man from the North-West with whom I have communicated, either personally or by letter, on the subject, has objected very much to the premature introduction of the system which now prevails in the Province of Manitoba. They say that they are warned by the results of Provincial Government in Manitoba; that, there not being included in the population of that Province men of political experience, men acquainted with constitutional principles; they say-I am not expressing my opinion on the subject—that the experience of Manitoba, and the enormous expenditure in that Province, has warned them against having that system prematurely extended to the North-West. I shall not enter into the discussion as to the dual language or the separate The hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has promised to express his views by resolution when we are going into Committee of the Whole. I hope, therefore, that the Bill will pass the second reading, and will be set down for an early day, when we can discuss those questions. I regret that my absence from the House at the time prevented my hearing the speech of the hon. gentleman, and, therefore, no doubt, my remarks are very much short of being an answer to that speech.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), in saying that the measure now under our consideration is one of the most important, perhaps the most important, that has been before the House this Session, and I feel in my own mind that it is quite impossible at this period of the Session to give to a measure of this importance that full and exhaustive consideration which it ought to receive from this House. The principles involved in the measure are of very great importance, and ought to receive very full consideration, and ought to be discussed from every possible standpoint by the members of this House, before any final action is taken. Now, the hon. gentleman has stated that it is not proper at the present time that responsible government should be introduced in the North-West Territories. Well, it does seem to me an the purposes for which they were adopted. Year extremely unsatisfactory condition of things that you have given to the people of that country a representative Assembly, but that you should withhold from them executive responsibility. The hon, the First Minister has referred to the Lieutenant Governor as a party who is responsible for the executive government in those Territories. Well, he is only responsible in the same way that the Governor appointed by the Imperial Ministry for this country was responsible to Downing Street before responsible government was conceded. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is responsible to the Administration here; he is not responsible at all in the sense in which we understand the expression. It is an Administration, or an Executive, that is responsible to the representatives of the people within the Territories for the purposes for which that representative Assembly is constituted. Now, there has been a good deal of discussion in the House, not on this question but on another question that preceded it this Session, which shows that to some extent there is confusion in the minds, I think, of the members of this House, and also perhaps, in public estimation, with regard to the differences that exist between a Territorial Government and a Provincial Government. We recognise this difference in every Bill that we introduce to this House, and we have recognised it in the measure that is now before us. But whether we give to the Territorial Legislature large power, or whether we give to it little power, whatever power is conferred upon it should be exercised, it seems to me, under the control of a responsible Administration. I do not see how it is possible that you can have anything like permanency in public policy in regard to measures which may be brought before that Legislature for consideration, unless you have an Administration controlling the legislation and responsible for its due execution. You may have measures carried through the Territorial Legislature to-day, which will be repealed next Session, because there is no Administration existing which will, in any proper sense, be responsible for the conduct of public affairs. Now, I admit that in a new country people must be content with narrower powers than we have in an older country, which is more densely settled, where the population has grown more wealthy, where their wants are more varied. recognise this difference in the growth of Provincial establishments under responsible governments. We are not content to-day with the amount of power that was possessed by the old Legislature of the Provinces after responsible government was first introduced. Our population has become more dense, their interests have become more varied, they have external as well as domestic relations, and so they require and ask for a voice in controlling their external as well as their domestic affairs. This may make a difference between the extent of power which we confer upon a Local Legislature under a territorial system, and upon a Local Legislature that is constituted under a Provincial organisation. But all these matters are matters that require very careful consideration. I was astonished at the change of sentiment indicated by the speech of the hon. member for North Simcoe here to-day, in discussing the subject of the dual language. The hon. gentleman expressed sentiments to-day with which I, in a great measure, cordially agree; they were those which I enunciated in discussing this Bill at an earlier period of the Session. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

The hon, gentleman has had new light, and I am glad to see that the views which he expressed today are more nearly in consonance with those entertained by the majority of this House. Now. I am sure that some of the parties outside of the House will be disappointed. Let me tell the hon. gentleman this: A Frenchman and a countryman of his, in this city, were discussing this question of the dual language yesterday, and his countryman said to his French friend: "Ah, ye may use your French lingo to-day, but wait till the Great McCarthy has done wid ye, and ye will only be able to make signs then." I am sure if the hon. gentleman's countryman had heard his speech here to-day, he would be satisfied that the Frenchman, after all, might be able to do something more than make signs after the hon, gentleman had done with him. The hon, gentleman has recognised to day the principle that language used for public purposes, like language used for private purposes, is a matter of convenience. The hon. gentleman said that we ought not to force two languages upon a population. Well, I do not think we are doing population. that. I was opposed to that in the first instance, but I never supposed for one moment that if the members of the Council were Frenchmen and could not speak English, they would be debarred from speaking French. That was their privilege. When that Council was first created the Crown appointed to the Council, upon our advice, a half-breed who could not speak a word of English, and we appointed him because he was a man of immense influence over the half-breed population and one in whom they had the utmost confidence; and I am perfectly sure that we carried on the government of that country during the remaining period of our administration, with very much smaller police force to maintain peace in that country, than if we had appointed a member to the Council in whom the people of the Territories had not the utmost confidence. I observe that the hon. gentleman has by this Bill, in section 3, provided that the "territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the North-West Territories shall be" so and so. Well, the hon. gentleman will see, from looking at any old work on the subject of Hudson's Ray or any old work propagation. ject of Hudson's Bay, or any old map representing that territory, that Rupert's Land embraced the territory east of Hudson's Bay as well as the territories on the west, and that the designation of the North-West Territories applied rather to the territories extending eastward from the Bay, and that Rupert's Land was, on most old maps, marked as the territory laying on the east and south-east of that Bay. The hon, gentleman will remember that the territory is not embraced in any Province at the present time; it is not embraced in the Territory of Keewatin, and so there ought to be some phraseology used to show what precise territories are intended to be embraced under the provisions of this Bill. I notice there are some provisions providing for the appointment of legal experts, for the appointment of a fixed number of members of the Territories, which is, no doubt, right and proper in the first instance; but the limits of the territorial districts and the number of members to be elected, ought to be left to the people of the Territories through the Legislature which they have constituted. I would just say one thing more with regard to the general principles embodied in this Bill, and that is with reference to any appropriation that may be made by this Parliament and placed at the disposal of the Legislature of that Territory. I think that an amount of money ought to be appropriated upon some principle such as was recognised in making an appropriation out of the revenue for the use of a Province, and it ought to be as absolutely under the control of the Legislature and its responsible executive as an appropriation that is made by this Parliament under the constitution is under the control of the Legislature of the Province to which it is made. It is impossible that the government of that country can be fairly carried on with the very small appropriation that is made, nor is it at all adequate when we compare the number of the population with the number of the people in any one of the Provinces. It does seem to me, when we look at the fact that the Territories have no resources whatever except those received by direct taxation or those derived from grants made by this House, that an appropriation ought to be placed at the disposal of the Legislature of the Territories for territorial purposes, and it should be as completely under their control and as free from interference as if it were made to a Province regularly constituted.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. DAWSON. Perhaps the hon. Minister will allow me to direct his attention to a technical matter; if is that, I think, the description might be somewhat improved. It at present reads:

"All that portion of the Dominion of Canada which is bounded as follows, that is to say: Beginning at the point of intersection of the western boundary of the Province of Manitoba and the international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States; thence westerly along the said international boundary line to the line of the watershed dividing the waters flowing into the Pacific Ocean from those flowing into the Arctic Sea or Hudson's Bay."

The international boundary line does not touch the watershed of the Arctic Sea at all, but it crosses the watershed separating the waters flowing into Hudson's Bay from the waters running to the Pacific Ocean. The description would be better in this way:

"Dividing the waters flowing into the Pacific Ocean from those flowing into the Gulf of Mexico and Hudson's Bay."

I believe that in the Rocky Mountains the international boundary line actually touches on the sources of the Mississippi, but certainly it does not touch on any river flowing into the Arctic Ocean. It also touches the head waters of the south branch of the Saskatchewan. The hon. Minister has officers in his Department who could draw up a very good description. As it stands now, it is not a great deal better than the description drawn by the Imperial Privy Council of the boundaries between Manitoba and Ontario, where a very large portion of the United States is given to one of the Provinces. I merely throw out the suggestion.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The officers of the Department have taken much trouble in preparing this posed to lie to the south-west of Rupert's Land. I description; but if the hon, gentleman will send to me in writing any suggestion he has to offer, it will be considered.

Mr. CHARLTON. I doubt very much whether it is advisable to change the name of the country from the North-West Territories to the Western Territories of Canada. The new name is not as convenient as the old one, because there are more words in it. The country has been for many years known as the North-West Territories, and it will very likely continue to be so known despite this legislation changing its name. I question very much the propriety of making any change, and I move that we retain the old name, North-West Territories.

Mr. BLAKE. It occurred to me that it is a very awkward name that is proposed. If you do not use a name that is easily spoken, it will not be used at all. I felt some difficulty about making a change, but it occurs to me that if a change is to be made it would be a much easier mouthful to say, Western Canadian Territories.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The name might be changed to Western Territories. Objection has been taken to the word "North" as conveying to the general public the idea of an arctic condition, that the country was not very like the American North-West, but was further north, and possessed a more severe climate, a shorter summer and a longer winter, and for these reasons it was suggested to drop the word "North."

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that the old name, after all, was not devoid of truth, and the change proposed will not alter the thermometer in winter or in summer in any way whatever. My impression is that any announcement made to the world at large, and particularly to the immigrating public, with the view of persuading them that they are not going to cold winters in the North-West, will not have any effect on any sensible man.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These Territories have been designated by the present name for half a century, and are known to the geographical world by that name, which we should retain. The name merely expresses its relation to the other portions of Canada. In 1787, the territories between the Ohio, Lake Erie and Mississippi, were called the North-West Territories of the United States, and they were so-called because of the geographical position of the territory to that embraced within the thirteen States of the Union. So I think those territories may very well retain the name of North-West Territories, considering their relation to the rest of Canada. This section would require to be somewhat altered so as to describe the Territory of Keewatin, and the north and west of the Province of Manitoba; otherwise you have not a proper description.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As to the name, I do not suppose there will be any serious quarrel about it. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), as did my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson), suggested that the description was inaccurate. My hon. friend said that Rupert's Land was understood to be the land that lay to the south and south-east of Hudson Bay. If that is the case, the North-West Territories, which was one time held under license, would be supposed to lie to the south-west of Rupert's Land. I would suggest that the clause should be allowed to stand until the Minister of the Interior has time to consider the matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Rupert's Land lies east of the Territory of Keewatin. The hon. gentleman does not propose to embrace all that territory under this jurisdiction. All the territories this Bill deals with lie west of the Territory of Keewatin, and, therefore, it should not refer to Rupert's Land at all.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The simplest way would be to leave out "Rupert's Land" altogether.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think it is a great mistake to change the name. There is a sort of historical interest attached to the name of the "North-West," and when you speak of the North-West in Dakota or the Western States, the people know at once that you refer to the North-West Territories of Canada. It is a more euphonious name than the one you now propose, and in all respects a better one in my opinion.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). I think we should call it the South-West Territories instead of the North-West, for there are plenty of lands which remain there which you can call the North-West if you so wish.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In that case the hongentleman ought to propose to exclude from this Bill all the territories lying north of the Saskatchewan, but this Bill embraces all the territories to the mouth of the Mackenzie River, and the hon gentleman will hardly call the territories lying around the Mackenzie and Copper Mine Rivers the "South-West."

Mr. CHARLTON. The change proposed by the hon, gentleman would lead to the supposition that we had been acquiring territories in Central America.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are a number of people throughout Canada who have a very strong feeling on this matter. The name of the North-West often leads to a confusion between our country and the United States. I saw, no later than a few days ago, in our local paper here, a statement as to a snowstorm in the North-West Territory, and people looking at the item though it referred to the North-West of Canada, and congratulated themselves that the snow would do good to the fields. I have frequently had letters from the old country, sympathising with us on account of storms and cyclones, which were experienced in the Western States of the Union, but the people thought they had occurred in our North-West. That is one of the principal reasons that we proposed to change the name. I do not think the name should be struck out of the Bill without consideration, and I think it is better to allow the clause to stand for

Mr. AMYOT. I did not raise an objection that this Bill was not translated into French as I did not wish to delay the House at this late period of the Session, but I should like to know from the Minister of the Interior before I vote for this, what is the translation into French of the name he has suggested. If the hon. Minister cannot answer me, perhaps the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) can.

Mr. McCARTHY. I decline. Sir John A. Macdonald. Mr. CHAPLEAU. Nobody knows that better than my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot).

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sorry 1 cannot give the hon. gentleman the name in French.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) is too good a French scholar not to be able to translate that himself, but no doubt he wanted to have a little joke on my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, who is not, perhaps, so fluent in French as he is in English. I suppose the translation would be: "Territoires Occidentaux du Canada." That will be rather a long name, but I believe it will be a good translation.

Mr. AMYOT. I am glad this has drawn some compliments to my humble self from the Minister of Public Works. I am not used to them.

 Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will let the section stand.

On section 5,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think this section is objectionable in this, that it ought to provide for a fixed number of members until the Legislature otherwise determines. The Legislature ought to have an opportunity of altering the boundaries of constituencies, or increasing the number of members. It may be convenient, on account of settlement going on more rapidly in one division than in another, to divide it and give it two representatives. Then, I can see no object in having three legal experts.

Mr. DEWDNEY. With regard to the twenty-two electoral districts, I may state, that that number was agreed to during my term as Lieutenant Governor, and a great deal of trouble was taken in the division of the electoral districts. The members were naturally jealous for their districts, desiring to get as many members for them as possible; but after a good deal of negotiation, the number of twenty-two was agreed to as a compromise. I am not aware whether there will be any objection to giving to the Legislative Assembly power to increase their number; I think they would probably know the position of affairs better than any one else. With regard to the legal experts, during my time they were of very great service in the Council, and I believe they are still felt to be of great service, and I think it would be a pity at present to make any change with regard to them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If it is found necessary that parties with legal knowledge should be in the Assembly to advise, the constituencies ought to do just as is done in regard to this House—they ought to return a certain number of legal gentlemen to the Legislature, who would give them the legal advice they require.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think there is any substantial reason for changing this clause. It is only a temporary arrangement, and at present it works very well. I may say that the members of the North-West Council pretty well fixed on the number of the constituencies before we fixed on it here. I do not think there is any sense of grievance with regard to this clause at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Bill of my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Mills, Bothwell) made provision for twenty-one elected members whenever the population arrived at a certain point; and there was frequent request from the North-West to alter the constitution to allow of twentyone elected members. When the Council met together, they found that it would be more convenient, that it would make a better readjustment-a better gerrymander, as the hon. gentleman would call it-if there were twenty-two elected members instead of twenty-one. That was their own deliberate recommendation, and I think we ought to leave the provision as it is until they ask for an alteration; because the House must remember that the expenses of the Legislature are defrayed out of the Dominion treasury. By-and-bye, when the North-West Territories become Provinces, they will, of course, have all the powers which Provinces

Mr. LAURIER. There are at present nineteen territorial divisions, two of which, Edmonton and Calgary, I think, elect two members each. I think it would be wise to adopt the suggestion made by my hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that as the population increases in any division, the Legislature should have power to increase the number of representatives for that division. Not later than yesterday, the hon, gentleman introduced a Bill which he hoped would very much increase the population in a certain section of the country, that is to say, the section which already returns two members, Calgary and Edmonton. Under such circumstances, it seems to me that the suggestion made by the hon, member for Bothwell has a good deal to commend it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The difficulty I see about it would be this: that if one district proposed to increase its number, every other district would also insist on an increase.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why should you undertake, once you have created a representative body, to tie it up in this way. There is none of the Provinces tied up by the Constitution in that way. The hon, gentleman is just creating a diffi-culty similar to the one which was raised here during this Session over the clause relating to the dual language, a clause which was wholly unnecessary to secure the use of both languages. Now. you propose by this restriction to force these people to come here and occupy the time of this House in making a change which they could, if you gave them the power, better make for them-selves, as they are better judges in that matter than we can be. Suppose one of these districts in the next few years increases in population while the others scarcely increase at all, that district will require additional representation; and that is a point which the Legislative Assembly is best fitted to pronounce upon. All that it is necessary is to say that the Legislative Assembly shall be composed, until the Assembly otherwise determines, of twenty-two members. There is no danger of the Assembly wasting its resources lightly by undertaking to increase the number of representatives beyond the actual requirements. If any such a thing were attempted, the people would send other men to represent them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The money does not come out of the local revenues, but out of the Dominion treasury.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These people are contributors to the Dominion treasury. You give to every Province a certain revenue per head according to the population. Are you prepared to give them the same revenue to be at their own disposal? I think we should. I think, that as soon as they increase in numbers sufficiently to be entitled to have a competent representative Assembly, they ought to have control of the revenues required to carry on the Government, and those revenues should be voted by this Legislature on some intelligible principles recognised by the British North America Act as applicable to the Provinces.

Mr. DAVIN. I have always contended that we should have a revenue granted on the same principles as those on which revenues are given to the Provinces. But the reason I do not think it necessary that this clause should be changed, is that I have heard no desire expressed on the part of the members for a change, and have seen no evidence of grievance whatever in that connection. The only thing I have noticed in connection with this clause, is that there is a kind of defiance on the part of the members—of three judges who are there. I do not know why they should dislike to have them there, since they cannot vote, and only one of them speaks.

Mr. McCARTHY. He speaks very long.

Mr. DAVIN. No; he does not. He has only spoken once or twice. The experience, patience and labor of Judge Richardson, as the hon the Minister of the Interior well knows, are invaluable to that Assembly; and Judge McLeod is a man of considerable experience and ability; and I cannot understand why there should be, among quite a number of the members, a certain impatience at having these gentlemen there. So far as I can see, they do nothing but good. They do not vote, and take no part in the discussions. There is only one subject on which the learned judge ever took a prominent part, and that is the subject of the dual language clause. I do not see much necessity of changing this clause; but if, later on, when you come to the clause giving the Assembly power in great part over the revenue, you should make a change so as to give it a little executive, then, on the third reading, you could recommit this Bill, and alter, as you logically should, this clause. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that three or four years hence it may be found necessary to add to the number of the Assembly. Why, Sir, before three or four years pass, we shall require to have another North-West Territories Bill in this House. We shall have a census taken; and I venture to say that we shall find a far larger number in the North-West Territories than hon. gentlemen, who always speak disparagingly of that country, give it credit for; and that being the case, something will have to be done then in order to readjust the representation. the hon, gentleman had proposed a practical plan, I should see no insuperable difficulty in altering this clause; but, as a matter of fact, there is no grievance. I have never heard a single complaint about the number; I have never heard any of the members declare that they ought to be able to control it; and the only murmur I have heard—in fact they have petitioned—was that they objected, for some inscrutable reason, to having the three legal experts there. At present I think it is an advantage to have them there. Our experience has shown that the members of the Assembly found it convenient to make use of these gentlemen's experience and legal knowledge.

Mr. BLAKE. As long as we have not decided to alter fundamentally the system which exists, and which it is proposed by this Bill to continue, I do not see, in the absence of any complaint from the Assembly, why we should interfere with the three legal experts who do not vote. The only complaint that can be made is that which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) suggested, that their speeches are rather long.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is a petition against them.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not aware of that; I did not find, on looking at the petitions, that there was any complaint against them. My own impression strongly is, that if a small executive council were granted to the Territories, which, I think, ought to be granted, the experts should disappear; and my opinion is that the people of the country themselves would find it necessary to elect to the Assembly a certain limited number of gentlemen experienced in the law, so that their Assembly might not be a parliamentum indoctum, as a well-known Parliament was, from which, I believe, the lawyers were altogether excluded. They would thus obtain as much trained assistance as they thought necessary; and if they chose to do without it, nobody but themselves would be the sufferers. With reference to the number of members, I was not in a position, of course, to hear the whispers of the North-West; but I heard what were not whispers here. I heard the hon, member for Saskatchewan, at an early period of the Session, declare that complaints were made with reference to the distribution of districts in the North-West, and particularly with reference to those in the region he represents; and, if necessary, some remedy ought to be applied to that. If there be a subject with which the Territorial Assembly might be supposed to be better competent to deal than any other, it is in what way the country should be divided for local representation. How is it possible for us to form an intelligent appreciation of that subject? have to take upon trust the statement of the Minister who studies the subject, with his knowledge of the country from the maps, and the statements of the four members from the North-West Territories. We cannot judge how things are. We cannot give an intelligent vote upon the question of the arrangement of districts. They are, in a country of that description, arrangements which require an intelligent acquaintance, not merely with the census, but with the prospects of growth and with the particular regions in which those prospects are brightest. It is an evil to change frequently, and in this country we know that, in older days, when changes were made, we recognised the view that newer sections—as, for example, the County of Bruce and the County of Renfrew—should be, as regarded population, overrepresented for a while, because we expected that an influx of population would redress the difference. That is all a matter to be best considered by the Assembly itself, and, therefore, I think that the readjustment of the electoral districts might be well left to the Assembly. The only question is whether we should give them the power to increase Mr. DAVIN.

the number of districts, and the only difficulty in regard to that is what the First Minister has suggested, that they may unduly increase the number of districts because it is a popular thing to do, because there are many who in small districts might thus obtain positions of prominence, and possibly of emolument, which they otherwise could not. If we think it necessary so far to hamper and restrain the action of the Assembly, that difficulty might be remedied by providing a maximum number which would cover all demands for increased representation for the next few years. We might say the number should be thirty. We might give the new Assembly, elected after the people have had that question before them, the power to readjust the districts, while not giving them the power to increase the number of districts beyond a certain maximum.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The advantage of not confining the number of the Assembly to twenty-two is that, if you have a large increase in population you have it met by a division of the districts, but, if you fix the number at twenty-two, it may entail a readjustment of the entire territory.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am entirely in favor of the view expressed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). It seems to me that we are treating the people of the North-West as if they were unfitted for responsible institutions. Most of these people come from the older Provinces, and they are generally well trained in regard to political institutions. From the short visit which I paid to the North-West, it appeared to me that they were particularly well fitted in that respect, though the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) seems to think that they do not occupy the same plane as members of this House.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. That seemed to be the tone of the hon, gentleman's remarks. We ought not always to be tinkering with this question of the North-West. We cannot here be competent to reassign and readjust the boundaries of the districts in the North-West. If the Legislative Assembly there are to have the power to readjust the boundaries, we should give them the power to increase the districts when, in their judgment, it is It may be said that these 22 men have necessary. not the ability to do anything until after the next That, at all events, is the theory which has been already adopted by this Parliament. At all events, they might be given the power to do it after the next election. I dare say that, if you take many of the districts since the Act was passed two years ago, you will find the changes in population so great that the present representation is not a fair one. I press upon the Committee that a change should be made in the direction suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to repudiate in the strongest manner the language of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). He said that I put the representatives in the Assembly on a lower plane than the members composing this Parliament. On the contrary, I have again and again asserted in this House that we have a representation in that Assembly which would do credit to any Assembly in the world. I congratulate the North-West on the sudden accession of popularity which it has obtained, because in 1887, 1888 and 1889, when I brought forward the question and moved for a representative government there, I found there was very little interest taken in the subject either by hon. gentlemen on the Reform side, or by hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side of the House. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) must remember that he should not taunt me, who have been a veteran in the service of the North-West, because he is now animated by the warm zeal of a I am glad to welcome him as a convert, but confessedly it is a recent interest on his part, confessedly it is a new love, and it has all the warmth and perhaps some of the imprudence of a new attachment. So he must not taunt me, who have been fighting the battles of this people. and have contended in this House for responsible government for them. If you give them representative government now, I want to be logical, and I think that clause should be changed. I think now, when you are going to give them control over the funds, you should do what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) contends, namely, strike an average as to the populationyou can easily find out what the population is, you can go far below what the actual population is, and still give us far more than we get now; you can give us an adequate income, loose our bands and set us free; give us our majority and let us do the best we can for our country; give us our executive, and then we can go back to this clause and change it, if necessary. But the reason why I desire not to change the clause now is that, after the census which is close at hand, is taken, you cannot deny us responsible government. My hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) says he has been in that country, and he must know that the people of the North-West are, in intelligence, above the population of any other part of Canada. I mean that there is a greater average intelligence amongst them than there is amongst the people in any other part of the country. In fact we have had an immigration

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Dual language. Mr. DAVIN. I do not feel anxious about this clause, but I congratulate the North-West, and I may say, I congratulate myself, on the deep interest which is shown in the North-West this year, because, when I came first in 1887 and in subsequent years to advocate their cause, my words fell on languid ears; but each year this House has taken more interest in the North-West, and I think nothing could be of more happy omen than this fact.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) seems to think that until he came here no one took any interest in the North-West, but the fact is that the North-West owes whatever it possesses of responsible government to the wisdom and prescience of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), who, in 1875, proposed a measure which contained the germ of all the representative institutions the North-West has to-day. The hon. gentleman may learn, what he evidently does not know, that for many years gentlemen on this side of the House pressed upon the Government, by speech and by vote, the necessity of extending the representative principle here to the North-West of responsible government; and I am sure that, whatever doubts and fears we may have had before, we may now congratulate ourselves upon the inestimable blessings conferred upon the whole of Canada, upon the North-West, and upon ourselves, in having introduced my hon. friend to this House. He says in the North-West there has been an immigration d'élite, and we here have the élite of the élite, and we may judge what is left there by the sample which they send us. But the hon, gentleman is quite right. So far as the emigration from Ontario is concerned, and I presume it is the same from the other Provinces, there can be no doubt that by a process of natural selection they have got amongst the best and most energetic men that were to be found among us; and I have no doubt whatever that that immigration, taken on the whole, is of a very superior characterjust as, upon the same principles, the upper Pro, vince was originally settled. I amold enough to remember the character of those settlers, at least of some of them, living at an extreme old age, and I can bear testimony that a great many of the earlier settlers who came to this country at a period when it was very different from what it is to-day, when there was no assisted emigration, no steamships, no cleared lands, when bears and Indians were supposed to be the attractions of that country, were men of the first rank. Those circumstances indicate of themselves that the early settlers were men of superior force of character, men, I am afraid, we must confess with humility, better, upon the average, than many of their sons and grandsons are. So, in degree, though not to the same extent, is the character of the immigration to the North-West; and we must not, of course, keep such people as that in leading strings; we must deal with them as men of capacity, as men of will, as men of resolution and ability; and we must trust them with their own fortunes, confident that if they make mistakes, as it is they who will suffer the consequences, so they will be able to repair their errors. Such is the general principle upon which we ought to deal with them, and in that view I am disposed-not forgetting that we have certain responsibilities towards them and towards Canada until such period as we give them full Provincial rights-I am disposed largely to listen with great respect and attention and deference to the decided and clearly expressed voice of the Territories themselves as to what is for their advantage.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps an apology is due by me to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) for the insinuation I ventured to make, but really, if I misunderstood him, he is himself to blame. In the observations he made on the second reading of the Bill, he rather intimated that the representatives in the North-West Assembly were in the habit of disposing of public moneys by lot, by some system of log-rolling, to use his own expression, dividing it amongst them and expending the money in some way, being even driven to imagine how they could expendit. Well, I should have not imagined that was the way in which the North-West Legislative Assembly were in the habit of discharging their duties. But if that was a true and correct statement, as no doubt it was according to the hon. gentleman's light, he does not represent them to be a very high class of legislators. That is what I referred to; therefore, I think the hon. gentleman should see that I was not altogether to blame for the statement I made. Now, Sir, as to the new zeal that I am displaying in regard to the North-West. In admitting it is new, I hope it will be permanent, and I hope it will not be imprudent either, as the hon gentleman seems to imagine. But I was astonished at the proposition that the people of the North-West were not able to govern themselves; perhaps I had judged the North-West too much by the élite of the élite they had sent to this House, and not enough by what was left behind. When I visited the North-West, from what I saw of the people up there, I am satisfied that this House would be making a very great mistake indeed if they do not realise that they are quite competent to manage their own affairs, and that we ought to give them the power to do it, instead of keeping them in leading strings, and dealing out authority piece by piece, as if they were children.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend refers to the remarks I made on the second reading. Now, Sir, permit me to explain that what I meant by log-rolling is a thing that any Assembly, that this Assembly, the hon. gentlemen around me, might fall into it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not condemn them for doing so; but let me point out my meaning by facts. What did one gentleman do?—and he is not the least intelligent member of that Assembly, not the least energetic, not the man with the least ambition. When he got his quotient of the sum divided by twenty-two, he had such difficulty in knowing how to spend that money that he took a legal opinion as to whether he could not spend it on sidewalks for his own town, and he spent it on sidewalks. Another gentleman, a member of that Assembly, told me frankly that as the roads and bridges had all been made in his district, he did not know what to do with the money. As the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) pointed out, when you have money administered by an Assembly like that, you will have it expended in one quarter where it is not needed, whereas the money of another man will be expended in another quarter where it is direly needed. As the hon, member pointed out, it would sometime be the proper way to govern the country, and best for the whole of it, that the great portion of the sum should be expended in one district. Suppose in one district there is absolute need of a first-class bridge, the road of which would serve not merely that district, but half a dozen districts; is it not clear that the half a dozen districts would be better served if all the money that is given to the most of them, or the greater portion of that money, were to be spent in the one district where the work that related to the whole of them belongs? Now, I was not ignorant of the fact that the hon. member for West Durham and his colleagues have taken in the past an interest in the North-West. I have listened, from that gallery, to some of his very brief speeches on that subject; I have listened to that compressed and caustic eloquence of which he is master, when dealing with the North-West, and, of course, I have been proportionately struck. But I have noticed this in the speakers on the Opposition side of the House—although the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mackenzie) did Mr. McCarthy.

bearing fruit-I have noticed that there was not the same evidence of insight as to the needs of the North-West, and as to those things that are necessary to give to the North-West progress, that I have seen on the side of the House to which I belong, since the right hon. gentleman and his friends came into power. I do not forget those long and interminable speeches of the hon. member for West Durham, I do not forget all the eloquence that has been lavished upon the North-West; but, Sir, I say this, "nevertheless and notwith-standing," to use a locution of which the hon. gentleman is fond, that when I came forward in 1887 and proposed a motion to give the North-West responsible government, the Opposition benches were dumb—I got no support from them whatever. I got no support from the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). At that time he was not enlightened, at that time his eyes were not open, at that time he was in the gall of bitterness, in respect to true views regarding our great western country; but now his eyes are open, and he thoroughly understands the wants of the North-West. I am very glad of it; I do not care whether he assists me or I assist him; I do not care who does the work provided the work is done. For there is much work to be done for the North-West. I am sure that I am expressing the belief of every hon. gentleman who listens to me when I say that there is, to-day, more interest in this House in the North-West than there was in 1887. I do not say it is due to the humble voice-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not say it is due to what my hon, friend from West Durham called the élite of the élite, or the crême de la crême—I do not suppose that, Sir, as the hon. member for West Durham seems And let me congratulate the hon. member for West Durham, and congratulate the North-West, on the genial manner in which he has dealt with this question to-day. The North-West, that vast country, with its great capacities, its inspiring possibilities, has acted on his imagination and on his heart, and I never heard him speak more genially; because, Sir, I sometimes think that that hon. gentleman, so superior, so learned, is not merely the crême de la crême, but he is the cream of tartar as well.

Mr. WATSON. We are all gratified to listen to the hon. gentleman. He says the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) is cream of tartar; probably it is because he makes a fizz when united with another mixture. The hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is a kind of mixture, and it is very difficult for the House to understand what he wants and what were the requirements of the North-West from the hon. gentleman's speeches. He delivers himself on every occasion on any matter connected with the North-West that comes up for discussion. Only a short time ago, he told us that he had in 1887 and 1888, advocated a full measure of responsible government for the North-West, but that, after going home and visiting his constituents, he found out he had made a mistake, and he found only one man in his constituency in favor of such a step.

Mr. DAVIN. That is so.

Mr. WATSON. Still the hon. gentleman calls inaugurate a certain policy that is even now for responsible government for the North-West, when, on his own admission, the people do not want it. I would not have said anything on this question except for a reflection passed on the Province of Manitoba. The First Minister stated that nearly all the representations he had received from the North-West were to the effect that the people would be in a very much worse position than they occupied to-day if they were governed by the sort of Government they had in Manitoba. I consider that a reflection on the Government of that Province, whoever may be the right hon. gentleman's informants, whether members of this House or persons outside the House; and as a resident of Manitoba, and I know I am speaking the opinion of the great majority of that Province, I say the people are thankful we have a responsible Local Legislature there, and the right hon. gentleman no doubt would much prefer to have a Council similar to that in the North-West, and one subject to his dictation. But we have a Legislature which has protested against the unjust acts of the right hon. gentleman, and we are now reaping the benefits of responsible government. I do not think we should consider the individual acts of any member of the North-West Council to-day, as has been done by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). It is sufficient for us to know that the Council is composed of an able body of men, as has been admitted by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and I am satisfied, although I do not know the individual members of that body, that the representations of the North-West Council should have more weight in this House than the views of an individual member from the North-West; and if the North-West Council recommend to this House the granting of responsible government to that country, it is in the interest of this House to consider the advisability of granting it, and if they object to having legal advisers appointed, who must have certain weight in the Assembly, the gentlemen composing that Council are men who are quite competent to elect men who are able to fulfil the positions of the legal advisers. I have no doubt that if the North-West Council and the people, through their representatives in this House, were listened to by this Parliament, and if it would act on their advice, we would do very nearly what is right for the North-West. They are more interested in its welfare than are people 2,000 miles away. We should endeavor, as nearly as possible, to carry out the wishes of the North-West Council, and I repeat, if they wish to have the legal experts abolished, this should be done. In the North-West, as in Manitoba, we must have minorities, and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) represents a class that think they must have all the rights and privileges which the majority possess in the Province and in the Legislature. We must expect these things to occur, but the rights of the majority under the British North America Act must prevail, and those constituting the minority must submit to such legislation as is carried by the majority.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that no doubt I would prefer to have Manitoba governed as the North-West Territories are governed, because it would bring the Pro-

Government of which I was a member gave the constitution to the Province of Manitoba. hon. gentleman might, if he had looked back at Hansard of that day, have found that when I proposed there should be two representatives from that Province in this House, the proposal was opposed by hon gentlemen opposite, on the ground that the population of the Province did not authorise the returning of such a number, and I was laughed at when I said that I wanted more than one to come, as one would be lonely coming such a long distance. It is quite true, what the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has said, that the credit of giving representative institutions to that Province is to a certain extent due to the Government of which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was the head. the hon. gentleman must not deprive me of my four lambs from the North-West, the four representatives from the North-West, and the fact that representation was given to the North-West Territories by the Government of which I was a member. But, speaking in regard to this measure now under consideration, the discussion has gone on as if we were settling a new constitution for the North-West, as if we were applying ourselves to the remodelling of that whole system. If that were so, it would require more consideration than can possibly be given to the subject at this period of the Session, and it must be remembered that this Bill was introduced for the purpose of making such amendments as were wanted for the present, and not for the purpose of arranging a new constitution for the North-West, as when we were settling the Quebec resolutions giving a constitution to the Dominion of Canada. It is impossible that we can endeavor in the discussion of this Bill, which is a practical one, to discuss it with any such view. In order to do justice to the measure, we would be kept here for weeks and weeks. And, therefore, the Government must either ask the House to take such provisions as are unobjectionable and adopt them for the nonce, for this Session, or we must ask the House to support the majority, or we must withdraw the Bill. We cannot set to work and settle now a new constitution for the North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. The right hon. gentleman is quite correct in the two statements of fact he has made. It is quite true that the right hon. gentleman gave to Manitoba its present popular Constitution; it is also true that the right hon. gentleman gave the North-West Territories their representation in the House of Commons, and obtained his four lambs, as he called them, but I prefer to call them sheep, and I will not say of what color. Revenons à nos moutons. I should like to tell the reason why the right hon. gentleman gave popular institutions to Manitoba, and gave representation in this House to the North-West Territories. That supervened which generally does supervene before a Tory reform. There was a rebellion first. The right hon. gentleman gave the people of Manitoba a paternal Constitution; he sent up there a Lieutenant Governor, who never got into the country; and an alien Council, which could not get in either. The people rose in rebellion against him; and then he came down here and gave them, for sooth, provincial rights. And he now claims vince more under the power of the Government. credit for having given that which they obtained The hon. gentleman must have forgotten that the at the point of the bayonet. So much for Manitoba.

Then as to the Territories. Year after year we in this House, sitting on this side of the House, inveighed against the absence of representation from the Territories. We pointed out their distance, their remoteness, the murmurs of complaint which came from that country, and we said it was absolutely essential there should be a safety-valve, at all events, for them, and guidance for ourselves. We did not indeed know then how extensive, or expansive, or expensive, that safety-valve would be; but we called for a safety-valve for them, for light and information for ourselves. We asked for it, we called for it, we pressed for it, we moved for it. Deaf ears were presented to us on those benches. Another rebellion came, and the year after his second rebellion the hon, gentleman gave representation to the North-West Territories.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to say, that there have been petitions presented from the North-West Territories asking for some changes in the system of Government. I think it is material that the Committee should know what were the views submitted to the Government by the representatives of the North-West Territories.

 $\ensuremath{\mathrm{Mr.\ McCARTHY}}.$ The papers were brought down, and are now before the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are they printed?

Mr. McCARTHY. They are printed in the proceedings of the North-West Assembly.

Mr. BLAKE. Are they printed in both languages?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am afraid not. The Bill of the Minister of the Interior of last Session, which was submitted to the Legislative Assembly, was criticised by them, and they say that section 10 of the Bill should be amended, so as to dispense with the sitting of legal experts in the Assembly.

Mr. MULOCK. How does the Minister propose to get over that? I presume it is the expression of opinion of the people of the North-West Territories. I am glad to have the question introduced by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I can congratulate him on his increasing light, for I think it is only a year ago since he professed to be a Tory of the Tories.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am still.

Mr. MULOCK. At any rate, the hon. gentleman is repudiating some of the old Tory principles. I think we ought give effect to this expression of opinion of the people of the North-West.

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—SUP-PLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June 1891; and, in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, 6th May, 1890. Mr. BLAKE. Mr. FOSTER moved that the Message of His Excellency and the Estimates be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 151) respecting Railways.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means. $\,$

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I have moved the House into Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of moving an amendment to item 5 in the Tariff Bill, which now reads as follows:—

"Animals, living, viz.: cattle, sheep and hogs, 30 per cent. ad valorem."

I desire to take out the word "hogs," and to make another item, as follows:—

"Live hogs, 2 cents per lb."

The object of this is to equalise the duty on the live hog with the duty of 3 cents or $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per lb. on the dead product of the hog, so as to prevent the live animal being imported and made up into meat here in competition with our own live hogs, at a lesser rate of duty than that imposed on the dead meat.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume that the hon. Minister makes this change with the view of carrying out the National Policy, and encouraging the Canadian farmer. Now, as there is a certain class of hog that is not raised in this country, I mean the hog that makes the clear and mess pork, does he not think that it would be more in accord with the course decided upon when the duty was reduced from 6 cents to 3 cents per lb. on clear and mess pork, if we were to make a distinction between the hogs that make mess pork and the hogs that make prime and prime mess?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I imagine 2 cents per pound live weight would be an enormous increase in the heavy duty which the hon. gentleman originally proposed. The average value of a hog could hardly exceed $6 or $8, so that this would be a duty of at least 50 or 60 per cent. It appears to me that this is practically a prohibitory duty, and a mischievous duty in every sense, inasmuch as it will probably lead to a suspension of trade, and expose our people to retaliation. Now, as far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, the practical result of this tax would be that, as we imported two live swine, our farmers would receive a protection to the extent of $4.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we would not get a large increase of duty in that case.

Mr. MITCHELL. No; but you would inflict serious charges on the lumbermen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You may possibly interfere materially with trade in other quarters. Of all that the hon. gentleman has said nothing, and I do not know whether he has considered the question at all. It would be worth our while to look into it. So far as Ontario is concerned we imported two live swine and we sold a thousand thereabouts, so that the practical result would be that we would exclude these two swine and would lose the sale of the thousand.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is in keeping with their general policy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In British Columbia, which is a small Province, they imported nearly 3,000; and no doubt under the new law the hon, gentleman would pretty completely extinguish that traffic. If the British Columbians like that, it is their own affair; apparently they do. I must again point out to the hon. gentleman, that the more he raises these taxes, the more he invites retaliation, and the more sure he will be of getting it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know if the Finance Minister is not disposed to admit for feeding purposes hogs which are not fattened, without imposing that duty? If he did that, the farmers might bring in foreign hogs, and produce the pork here. I sympathise considerably with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Northumberland, who seems disposed to pronounce it a hoggish business all through. My impression is, that this is not going to be any advantage to the farming community, and I would suggest to the Finance Minister, if it would not be well to make the change I recommend.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that the argument applies so much to what was brought in in the past, as to what is likely to be brought in in the future, under the change in the tariff. there was a difference made between the dead meat and the live meat in favor of the live meat, the effect would be to bring in more of the latter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you think it likely to increase the amount to four?

Has the hon. Minister of Mr. SCRIVER. Finance any estimate of what this duty would represent on the dressed product?

Mr. FOSTER. My object in going into Committee of Ways and Means in order to put this duty of 2 cents per pound on the live hog, is to make an equalisation as far as possible between the duty on the live hog and the duty upon the dead product. A hog of 250 or 260 pounds, allowing for the waste and shrinkage, would about make a barrel of pork of 200 pounds. If that were mess pork at 1½ cents per pound, the duty would be $3. If it were other than mess pork, at a duty of 3 you take a live hog of 250 pounds, the worth of that would be about 4 cents per pound, or $10, 30 per cent. on which would be only $3; and as the dead meat coming in may be charged 6 cents, you could import sufficient live stock to make a barrel of 200 pounds and pay only $3, and thus defeat the object of the tariff. You would allow the product, which is ready, or nearly ready to be slaughtered, to be brought in at a less rate of duty than the finished product in the dead condition; and it is to equalise the two that the duty on the live product must necessarily be higher than 30 under the idea of protecting the meat industry, would allow the raw material, ready to be slaughtered, to be brought in at half the duty placed on the dead product.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman makes a distinction with regard to dead pork. Was it not clearly understood, on a former occasion, that the clear pork should come in at the same rate as mess?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend knows that when that subject was last debated, it stood over for revision, and I will have something to say with regard to it in a little while.

Mr. MITCHELL. The reason I spoke of that now was the fancy distinction which the hon. gentleman made in discussing the raw material and the dressed product.

Mr. BROWN. The hon gentleman for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has evidently conveyed a wrong impression to the House. I understood him to convey the idea that the importation of live hogs into Ontario amounted only to two hogs. The thing is too ridiculous. It amounts to something like 5,000,000 lbs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Brought in alive?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; and paid the duty. The idea of two hogs coming into Ontario from the States is absurd.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am a little surprised at the hon, gentleman for Northumberland opposing an increase on the duty, because I find, from the Trade and Navigation Returns of last year, there was imported into New Brunswick one hog-

Mr. HOLTON. Who was he?

Mr. LANDERKIN-and into Nova Scotia three hogs, and into Ontario two hogs. Now, the boon which the Minister of Finance is going to confer upon the farmers in those Provinces, is to prevent this one hog, and these two and three hogs, from being brought in to slaughter the markets in these Provinces. The hon. member for Hamilton had better look at the Trade and Navigation Returns before he begins to speak on this subject. He is generally well informed, but in a matter of this kind he is informed without the book. In British Columbia some hogs are imported, but I presume they find it necessary to import them, or they would not do so, and on all they do import there will be an additional tax. The only result to them from this change is an increase tax on the people of British Columbia, but if they are willing to stand that, we can.

Mr. BOWELL. It is quite evident the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, as well as the hon. gentleman for South Oxford, did not look at the full return when they made their remarks. It is true only two live hogs were imported into Canada, and sold alive, but if these hon gentlemen will look at the sixth line below that they will find that swine were imported and slaughtered in bond in Canada to the extent of 4,823,475 lbs. Now, if the duty of 30 per cent. was the only duty imposed upon the swine brought into Canada for slaughter, they could be slaughtered and sold in the market here at a much less rate of per cent. Hon, gentlemen opposite would be the duty than the 3 cents a pound imposed upon the first to speak of the anomaly of a tariff, which, lighter kinds of pork, while the duty on the others would be as low as $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. The intention of the Finance Minister in making this change is to prevent the tariff being evaded by the importation of the live animal, its being slaughtered in Canada, and sold in place of that pork which would be imported at 3 cents per pound for general consumption, at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he intends to tax swine imported in bond for exportation abroad; because that would be a new departure with a vengeance. Swine are imported and slaughtered in bond in large quantities to the profit of our carriers and pork packers. Surely the hon. gentleman does not intend to interfere with that. That would not affect the argument one way or the other. We want, if possible, to allow our people to bring in pork in bond and export it after slaughter, and that does not conflict with the interests of the farmers or of any one else.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think my remarks could by any possibility be twisted into any such meaning as the hon. gentleman has attempted to convey to the House. I said nothing about live animals imported to be slaughtered in bond for exportation, but I said that an animal which is imported in bond and slaughtered, and then put on the market, must pay the duty. There is no intention on the part of the Government to interfere with the trade to which the hon. gentleman refers. On the contrary, the slaughtering in bond for exportation, which gives our people work, the present system will be continued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend states that the only swine imported into Ontario for consumption last year were these two hogs, that all the rest were for exportation abroad, and, therefore, this does not affect the question at all.

Mr. BOWELL. As the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) must know from his experience in the Government, there are many articles entered in bond for the purpose of exportation which afterwards go into consumption when the duties are paid.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Public Accounts would show that.

Mr. BOWELL. No. If 1,000 lbs, weight of pork was imported alive and slaughtered in bond, with the original intention of exporting, and the party who slaughtered it and packed it found he could do better by putting it on the market here, he would make the entry, pay the duty, and sell it in the market. In such a case the entry would have to be made and carried into the statistics as having been entered for consumption.

Mr. MITCHELL. Surely the hon, gentleman does not mean that. If I understand his contention, it is that, as 4,000,000 lbs. of hogs have been imported in bond for the purpose of slaughter and exportation, if 2,000,000 lbs. should be diverted from the original intention and put upon the local market for domestic use—does my hon. friend mean to say that would not be shown in the Trade and Navigation Returns, because if it would not be shown those returns are very defective?

Mr. BOWELL. These returns show that any other no portion of the 4,000,000 lbs. was entered for home consumption. But what I said was that, if third line.

the disparity in the duty between the live and the dead hog was so great, that would be the effect.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So you are speaking in futurem.

Mr. BOWELL. The live hog would be entered in bond and slaughtered in bond for exportation, and yet that could go into consumption as pork paying much less than 3 cents a pound duty.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then the contention of my hon. friend from South Oxford is correct, that the only pork which went into the domestic market of that which was imported was these two hogs.

Mr. BOWELL. The disparity between the duty on the live hog and the dead pork did not exist then.

Mr. HESSON. I see that 3,900 hogs were imported last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Into Ontario?

Mr. HESSON. We are not talking Ontario politics. The hon. gentleman desires to convey to the people the idea that only two or three hogs were imported into the country, but he overlooks the fact that 3,900 hogs were imported into the Dominion last year, and slaughtered for home consumption. Beyond that, the Minister desires to protect the people against the importation of hogs in bond for the purpose of exportation, which are afterwards slaughtered for home consumption, and the duty of 25 per cent. was not sufficient to prevent that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hesson) has apparently been asleep. I stated the results in several Provinces. I quoted the case of British Columbia, and I said that, if the members for British Columbia were willing to stand this tax, we could stand it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one more resolution I wish to offer:

Resolved, That section 276, 49 Victoria, chapter 33, be repealed, and that it be enacted as follows:— Glove leathers, when imported by glove manufacturers for use in their factories in the manufacture of gloves, namely, kid, buck, deer, antelope and water hop, tanned or dressed, colored or uncolored, to be rated at 10 per

That is the old section of the Act. We reduce fine kid, imported for making gloves, from the present duty of 20 per cent. to 10 per cent.

Resolutions referred to Committee on Bill.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 143) to amend the Acts respecting Customs Duties.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I find, in taking up this Bill, that the Law Clerk has left out from this section, one item which was reported from the Committee, and I wish to have that inserted. It will be item j in the first resolution, stating that the initials "F.O.B." represent the words "free on board." In section 2, there have been left out of the report as it came from the Committee the words "or in any other Act relating to the Customs," which I wish to have inserted after the word "Act" in the third line.

Mr. Bowell.

On section 3,

Mr. MITCHELL. I will make one last appeal to the hon. gentleman on this corn business, to see whether he will not allow corn to come in free as well as cornneal. I am not going to make a speech, but I am only going to appeal to the hon. gentleman, as a matter of common justice, whether he will not allow corn to come in free of duty for human food and the cornmeal to come in free

Mr. FOSTER. I am very sorry to say to the hon. gentleman that, after the very full discussion we had on this subject, and the agreement arrived at by the House, I hardly think I could go against the expressed will of the House, even to oblige the hon. gentleman, which I would otherwise do.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not like any hypocrisy about this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I was trying to be as pleasant as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman ought also to be honest. This course is taken because the Government have so determined, not because it is according to the will of the House. The hon. gentlemen behind him would as soon support what I asked, if the hon. gentleman had adopted that view, as they have supported the Government view. The Finance Minister should consider the condition of some other portions of the Dominion outside of Ontario, in regard to the corn question.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one point in regard to the corn question to which I would like to call attention. A change has been made to prevent the importation of a certain class of pork except at a very high duty. It is well known that that class of pork cannot be produced without using corn. If you permitted the importation of corn for feeding purposes free, you would greatly aid in producing the quality of pork required for lumbering operations. When you exact a duty on corn and make the farmers pay it, you hamper them in producing a commodity which you tax to keep out of the country. Pease will not produce the quality of pork that corn will produce, and in order to make the production of the quality of pork required by lumbermen a lucrative calling for the farmers, you should permit corn to come in free for feeding purposes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am ready to believe that the Government, in framing this clause, were animated by a desire to relieve the consumers of cornmeal from the duty which formerly applied to it. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he thinks it is possible to frame an Order in Council that will enable the Department to completely control the meal after it leaves the miller's possession? I have thought the subject over and I have conversed with merchants who handle cornmeal, and I am satisfied the Government will be unable to frame an Order in Council which will enable them to keep track of the cornmeal and establish the fact that it is to be used for human food. It would be better to strike out the provision, because the seller will have to take an obligation from the party who buys a single barrel that none of it is to be used except for human food. An old woman could not give her chickens a feed of cornmeal without violating the provisions of this Bill. In regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), as to having the corn ground, I think that clause should be removed as well. I invite the attention of the Ministers to these two points, as the adoption of the suggestions made by me would relieve the Department of much trouble, and would also place the consumers of cornmeal in a better position.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have had some communications on this subject from those in the trade, and it has been pointed out that an honest miller will not be able to make a declaration that the cornmeal is used for human food, because he sells it in small lots and does not know how it will be used. On the other hand, a man less conscientious would be able to get such a statement and get the benefit of the rebate.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter has been very carefully considered. As the hon members are aware it was discussed before in committee, and I do not see any way of making the clause different from what it is at present, namely, that all corn shall be kiln dried before it is ground.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the object?

Mr. FOSTER. The keeping qualities of the cornmeal are increased by the corn being kilndried before it is ground. It is quite true that you may grind corn without its being kiln-dried if it is for early consumption, but that does not militate against the fact that the bulk of the cornmeal used for human food and an article of commerce is kiln-dried. As to the Customs regulations, the Minister of Customs and myself have very carefully considered that. It would not be well to leave this matter without any regulations for the prevention of gross frauds. It will be found possible to give very great relief to those who import corn for meal for human food, amounting to nearly the whole of the duty paid on the corn which goes into the meal, without any ill effects resulting in other respects. I do not see how this provision can be changed.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon, gentleman says the Government will return nearly all the duty. That is another reason why the hon, gentleman might as well dispense with the restriction. If they returned only a small portion of the duty, I could well understand the objection of the hon, gentleman. In this, there is only 10 per cent. retained on the duty, and it would amount to very little indeed. The hon, gentleman says it is usual to kiln-dry meal so that it will stand longer, but sometimes it is not kiln-dried, and if the millers who handle the corn are willing to run the risk, I think it would be a great deal better not to place any restrictions upon them.

Mr, GILLMOR. I do not know whether it is any use speaking about this matter further; but if the Minister of Finance wants to encourage manufactures in Canada, he has now an opportunity to find work for the grist mills on the frontier. In my county, there are four grist mills grinding corn. It is not at all important that this meal should be kiln-dried, because it goes into immediate use for consumption, all over the county, to a population of 26,000 people, and it is not even barrelled, but placed in bags. You will encourage these mills, if you allow them to grind the meal without kiln-drying it. If it were going to be exported, or to remain a long time in barrels, it would have to be kiln dried, but we have only a very small export of meal from Canada. This meal goes into immediate use, and a restriction should not be put upon its manufacture. This kiln-dried meal is used for animals as well as for the food of human beings, and my neighbors and myself have been in the habit of using it for cattle. The Government would be doing a great favor to the mills in my county, if they allowed them to use their corn without kiln-drying it. If you do not allow them, they will have to put up some sort of a pretence of a kiln, and go to that expense, which will not add a single cent to the value of the corn. I think it is consistent with your National Policy to encourage these grist mills to grind the corn which is used in the country, instead of compelling them to bring their kiln-dried meal from the States and to pay a duty upon it. If you enforce this provision, the difficulty remains that it is almost impossible to tell when a man takes a bag of meal from the mill, whether it is going to be used for human food or food for animals. Some of it is used for feeding the turkeys and the hens, and of course if the people eat the turkeys I suppose they would be complying with the law. This kiln-dried meal is also fed to the cows, and the cow suckles the calf, and when you kill the calf you eat the veal. Now, what is the difference whether you take it in meal or take it in veal?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). After the statement made by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) I think that this word "kiln-dried" should be struck out. If not it will cause a great deal of expense to the millers.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not expensive.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is expensive, and, besides, it is utterly useless.

On section 10.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose, in item 5 of this section, to strike out the word "hogs" and make that item read "cattle and sheep, 30 per cent. ad valorem," also I propose that item 5½ should read "live hogs, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance, that he should substitute the word "horses" for "hogs." My opinion is, that, in the interest of the part of the country from which I come, there should be this protection afforded for the breeding of horses. We have been breeding horses for about five years, but they can breed horses in the United States cheaper than we can, as they have been at it longer. They send them in here, suffering from glanders and other diseases, to spread the contagion throughout this country, and they pay only 20 per cent. duty. If there is any industry in the country that should be protected, it is that of raising horses in the North-West. We have taken a great deal of pains to introduce a first-class breed of horses into that country. During the last five years there have been introduced from England, the United States, and other countries, at least 150 of the best stallions in the world. are trying to breed a class of horses that will be suitable for shipment to the old country for the English army, and we also expect to supply the Mr. FOSTER. After item 22, the following Provinces of Ontario and Quebec with all the item which was agreed to by the House, has been Mr. GILLMOR.

draught horses they need. Therefore, I think we are entitled to some protection for that industry.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that every vacant and undisguised statement of the objects of protection ought to entitle the hon. gentleman's claim to the favorable consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. Item 5 was inserted as part of the general policy of the Government with respect to the protection of meat products; and the three kinds of animals mentioned here, cattle, sheep and hogs, are those from which the meats are produced. Horses come under a different category. They have now, I think, a duty of 20 per cent, which is a pretty fair duty. My hon. friend speaks about diseased horses coming into the North-West from the United States; but a duty of 30 per cent. would scarcely prevent their introduction, I suppose, if a duty of 20 per cent. does not. I think there is a pretty large proportion of horses at present imported into the country; but by and bye, when the North-West develops, and the production of horses is carried on there on a larger scale than at present, perhaps my hon. friend's suggestion will have more weight. the present time I do not think the Government feel themselves in a position to increase the duty

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is very hard, Mr. Chairman. Here, when we import two hogs from the United States, the hon. gentleman is willing to put a duty upon them; but when we import only 4,000 horses from the United States, valued at $175,000, and send to the United States only 56,000 horses valued at $2,113,000, it is quite contrary to the hon. gentleman's principles to give the trifling favor which his supporter seeks. It is all in accord with the hon. gentleman's whole policy.

Mr. BLAKE. Besides, I thought the principle of protection was to protect the infant industry and nurse it into vigor; whereas the hon. gentleman says that when this infant industry has increased itself and gets stronger, then he may give it some protection.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must, for the last time, enter my solemn protest against this duty of 30 per cent. on sheep. It is well known that at the present moment the United States are considering a proposition to increase their tariff on sheep and lambs going from this country to the United States, where we send about a thousand lambs per day. I think it is to be regretted that the Government of the Dominion should take the lead in increasing the duty on this article. They are assuming the responsibility of virtually saying to the Americans: "Go on, gentlemen, we are ahead of you." If they had waited until the Americans had imposed their duty, and had been driven to the necessity of retaliating, the increase might have been pardonable; but to act in the way they are doing, in the face of the enormous trade which exists at the present time, is simply to strengthen the hands of the party on the other side, who are moving in the same direction.

Amendment agreed to.

inadvertently omitted from the Bill, and I propose that it be reinserted :-

Buttons of hoof, rubber, vulcanite or composition, 5 cents per gross and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

In item 32, "collars, of cotton, linen, celluloid or xylonite," I wish to add "xyolite." In item or xylonite, "I wish to add "xylonite." In item 45, I wish to insert the same word. In item 67 there is an error in the print; "one cents" should be "two cents." In item 69 after the word "manufactures," insert the words "of glass," making it "all other glass and manufactures of glass." The next item is No. 83, which has crept into this by mistake. It was repealed in the Committee and should be left out. That is the item dealing with wrought iron tubes. In item 84, insert in the last line the words "N.E.S." Items 85 and 86 I wish to drop and leave the duty exactly as it was before. This is iron sheared and unsheared, sheet iron, common or black, not thinner than No. 20 gauge, " N.E.S."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason for that?

Mr. FOSTER. I made the change in order to take skelp iron out of the duty placed upon it under the impression that it was not made in this country. We found out it is made by nearly all the rolling mills in the country. The only reason which induced the change, namely, that it was not made in the country, having fallen to the ground, we revert to the original duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that an increase or a diminution?

Mr. FOSTER. It is exactly what it was before. It is practically an increase on skelp iron, as proposed in the new item. Items 85 and 86 are dropped. After 95, I wish to introduce a resolution passed by the Committee with reference to glove leathers. We will call it 951. Glove leather at present pays a duty of 10 per cent., and I wish to add to that the item of kid glove leather, which now pays 15 or 20 per cent. I now come to the item of pork. It will be remembered that the result of a discussion on this item went to show that the definition was a loose one, owing to the different brands and great variety of mess pork which comes in, in various ways, and is put up in different sized pieces, and very different parts of the hog, consisting of parts of heavy hogs and of light hogs as well, branded each in a separate way. After taking into account the varying character of the pork coming in branded as mess pork, and then the inconvenience which might arise from the definition of mess pork as stated in the general Inspection Act, it is considered best to define the pork which comes in at 11 cents per pound as follows:-

Barrelled pork in brine made from the sides of heavy hogs, after the hams and shoulders are cut off, and containing not more than sixteen pieces to a barrel of 200 pounds weight.

That is a definition which can be easily deter-

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How are you going to

Mr. FOSTER. In the same way as now, by actual inspection; there is no other way to carry out the idea with which the Government started, put a duty of 11 cents per pound upon the heavy pork commonly known as mess pork, made from the sides of heavy hogs, according to the definition in our own Inspection Act of hogs not less than 200 pounds weight, and which is used very largely in the lumber districts. This definition takes in no part of the pork except between the ham and the shoulders, and the size of the hog is defined by the number of pieces which must be in a barrel. It takes a hog that weighs 250 pounds or thereabouts to make a barrel of sixteen pieces which will come under this definition.

Mr. MITCHELL. The definition given by the Minister now is not that which he gave to this House in the previous discussion, because my hon. friend will observe that what he is now describing is clearly what is purely known among business men as mess pork, and not what we were contending for before, namely, clear pork. Clear pork may have more than sixteen pieces in a barrel. It may be cut out of the portions of the hogs, as described by my hon. friend, between the shoulders and the ham; but yet, having more than sixteen pieces in the barrel, it would come under the duty of 3 cents per pound. Now, that is not what was tacitly understood and practically agreed to by the hon. gentleman when this subject was discussed in detail before, and I think my hon. friend is not carrying out what he led this House to believe would be consented to by the Government. would ask him to reconsider that and include in the 1½ cents per pound rate those portions of the hog between the shoulders, whether or not there are more than sixteen pieces in the barrel.

Mr. GILLMOR. This definition will drive all the clear pork into the class of $6 a barrel, because there must be fifteen or sixteen pieces or more in a barrel of clear pork. This definition is just the opposite of what I understood from the Finance Minister was his intention before. This is throwing all the clear pork that I know of, cut from the same part of the hog as the mess pork, into the duty of 3 cents a pound, because the thin part of the belly of the pig is made into bacon, and the Minister of Customs understood that exactly. He said he would take that off and call that bacon. The part next the backbone of the pig, which is mess pork, is cut into pieces of four pounds, five pounds, six pounds and seven pounds, and this is just throwing all the clear pork, which comes out of the same part of the hog, with the bones taken out, into the 3 cents a pound duty. It was understood that you had fixed upon a definition and that it would not be necessary to say any more about it, but now we see that all the clear pork will come under the duty of $6 a barrel.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I presume that is the object of the Minister. He gave the Committee to understand that mess pork and clear cut pork corresponding to mess pork, would come in at the lower rate of duty. That was the impression left on this side of the House by the Minister. but, when the discussion came up on the second occasion, he was taken rather roughly to task by some of his followers, who, I suppose, have brought pressure upon him to make this definition. But he is only making trouble more confounded. He says this must be cut from a hog weighing not less than 200 lbs. Is he going to obtain a butchand which I explained to the Committee - to er's certificate or a coroner's certificate that these hogs, when they were slaughtered, weighed not less than 200 lbs? He must have some certificate, or it will not be possible to enter these at the lower rate of duty. Then, if the bones are taken out of the mess pork, and it is made clear pork, which is of more value, of course, these pieces will weigh so much less, and it may take more than the sixteen pieces which the hon. gentleman has stated are to constitute a barrel of pork. Consequently, that will be under the higher rate of duty. I think this interpretation will cause end-less trouble. The Department will have to open every barrel and have every piece counted, the brine will have to be taken off, and they will require a certificate of the birth and the weight of the hogs when they were slaughtered. The hon. gentleman is going to give himself endless trouble, and is going to make the clear pork subject to the higher duty. Our fishermen do not always use the same kind of pork, but whatever pork they do use will come under the higher rate. I again protest against this interpretation. I think it is a most ridiculous one and one which the Government will find it difficult to carry out with any regularity, because what may be called mess pork in one Custom house may be given another character in another Custom house, and there will be favoritism which will lead to a great deal of difficulty, with the result that the honest man will be defrauded, while those who desire to defraud will escape.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman cannot have listened to the explanation. I understood that the pork must be made out of a hog weighing not less than 200 lbs., but that this classification contemplated using heavy hogs requiring only sixteen pieces to make a barrel. I think this definition is preferable to that which was proposed before.

Mr. MITCHELL. The objection I have taken has not been answered. The class of pork now recognised as clear pork will often contain more than sixteen pieces to the barrel. class of pork largely used by fishermen and lumbermen, as well as by the laboring class in the towns. That will not be classed as mess pork, and will, therefore, be charged at 3 cents a pound, according to the interpretation which the Minister now contends for. In Chicago, while the clear pork realises more than the mess pork, seeing that mess pork is the pork of commerce, when speculation is rife and pork is largely speculated upon, the mess pork, which is inferior to the clear pork, will sometimes sell for \$1 to \$1.50 a barrel more than the clear pork, which is worth from 50 cents to \$1 a barrel intrinsically more than the mess pork. seems that I have failed to convey to the hon. gentleman the distinction I have made between the two classes of pork, but I think it would be well for him not to put such an inconsistent regulation as this in force, but while he permits the mess pork to come in for half the price of the clear pork, he should, to be consistent, let them both in at the same rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents. They are both cut from the same part of the hog, between the shoulders and the hams. The people who cut up these hogs often cannot cut up the hog so as to get only the sixteen pieces into the barrel, and, if there is one more piece in the barrel, it will be liable to be charged 3 cents a pound instead of 1½ cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Carried. Mr. Jones (Halifax). Mr. MITCHELL. Well, if hon. gentlemen choose to treat reasonable objections from this side of the House with that silent contempt which they have chosen to adopt towards me during the last hour, all I can say is, perhaps, it will not facilitate getting on their business. I would like to have the hon. gentleman explain to this House why it is that reasonable objections are not answered, and why the Finance Minister treats with silent contempt just objections that are made from this side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure that my hon. friend would not ask me to be always on my feet answering every objection the hon. gentleman so often reiterates; though it is not out of any want of courtesy to himself or to the House that I did not answer him. The very same objection that my hon. friend made to-night he made when we discussed this for hours in the Committee, and the answer was given at that time over and over again. It was simply because of that state of things that I did not reply to my hon. friend, but if he wishes, I will give him again the reasons which I thought I stated a moment or two ago. The Government set out with the idea of placing a less rate of duty upon that kind of pork made from heavy hogs which has been less produced in this country, and is, at the present time, less produced in this country than pork of lighter hogs, and which is used by the lumbermen more especially, and by the fishermen to some extent. We set out with the idea of placing a lighter duty upon that than upon the lighter pork. Then came up the question of the definition. The definition that was discussed in the House before was admitted on all sides to be indefinite, and the object was to make a definition based upon the principle which I have just stated and which would clearly define the article to be introduced at 11 cents a pound, in order that the trade and the Customs officials should understand just what was dutiable, and to what extent. Now, in pork which is made and barrelled from hogs of more than 200 pounds weight-and that was the definition with which we set out, and it was based upon the principle on which we set out, and that is the same principle which is kept in view the present clause which I am proposing to substitute for the other-that pork, made from the sides of heavy hogs, with the ham and shoulders off, whether it be clear pork or rib pork, whether it be mess pork, as is generally understood, or with the rib out, and therefore clear pork, if made from the heavy hog, and if it fulfils those conditions with which we set out that it should be made from hogs of 200 lbs. and more, that pork shall come in at the lesser rate. This tariff was framed for the purpose of putting a higher degree of protection upon that class of pork which is more largely raised and which is more easily raised in Canada, and to allow this heavy hog pork to come in at a less rate of duty. For the reasons I have stated this definition carries that out. I would be infinitely sorry if my explanation does not satisfy my hon. friend. But that is the definition which we intend to submit to the sense of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon, gentleman has stated that the definition which he has placed upon this class of pork was the same that was under${\rm stood}$ to be adopted when this matter was discussed before.

Mr. FOSTER. I say it is based upon the same principle.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not the same. He led this House to understand that this pork, known as clear pork, should come in at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. The hon. gentleman now comes in with another explanation. I have no fault to find with the explanation. He has at last treated me courteously—

Mr. FOSTER. I always do.

Mr. MITCHELL—by giving such explanations as I think I had a right to demand. But still, he says on the one hand that the pork which is allowed to come in at the 12 cents per pound duty is pork cut from the shoulders to the hams of hogs over 200 lbs. in weight, but in the next breath he says there shall not be more than sixteen pieces There is where the whole rub in the barrel. comes in. The fact is that pork is not all cut up so as to make just sixteen pieces in the barrel. In the case of clear pork you will find, as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) correctly stated, sometimes twenty or thirty pieces, but it is all pork cut from between the two points mentioned, it is cut from between the shoulders and the hams, but in consequence of the way it is put up, which gives it the definition of clear pork, there are more than sixteen pieces in the barrel. I object to that limitation of sixteen pieces. I quite agree with my hon, friend that the pork to be admitted at a cheap rate shall be pork from hogs over 200 lbs. in weight, cut from the shoulders to the hams. That is right enough, but let it be all the pork that is cut between those points, and do not put any limitation as to the number of pieces in the barrel; then you will get clear pork in as well as mess pork at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per b. I am sure my hon. friend, in one portion of his explanations, led this House to believe that by the wording of his resolution he cuts away clear pork and allows it to come in at 3 cents a pound. If my hon. friend means to let clear pork come in at 3 cents a pound, we can understand it, but if he means, what his words would imply, that all pork cut from the shoulder to the ham of pigs over 200 lbs. weight, should come in at 1½ cents duty, then I say the resolution does not carry that out.

Mr. FOSTER. Now that my hon. friend is down to a more reasonable basis, I want to say one word to him to show that there is no inconsistency between my present reasoning and the statement I made before. I have only to recall his attention to this fact, that by the definition given in the general Inspection Act, it was very plainly stated that the hog must be of more than 200 lbs. in weight.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not object to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, if my hon friend admits that, he admits that I am consistent, because today I allow to come in by this definition the parts from the same hogs, cut between the shoulder and the ham, of more than 200 lbs. weight. But my hon friend says, we ought not to define the number of pieces—"that is where the rub is." If there were no pieces defined there would be no rub at all, for the smællest kind of pork, so long as it is cut from between the ham, and the shoulder, could come in. You might take hogs of 100 lbs., or 50 lbs., and as long as you cut them up between the ham, and the shoulder and have no rule as to the number of pieces, they could all come in, and the very object we had in introducing this measure, which was to provide that the largest rate should be paid by the smaller kinds of pork, would not be attained. So my hon friend sees that I am consistent, and the very fact that I am consistent drives me to adopt the definition I now propose.

Mr. MITCHELL. Your hon. friend sees that you are not consistent. I agree with you that hogs, making mess pork and clear pork, should be over 200 lbs. in weight. But there is a great deal of pork cut out of these hogs besides these large round pieces that go to make up mess pork; it is those smaller pieces out of the large hogs out of which mess pork is cut, that makes clear pork. My hon. friend, in pretending that I am inconsistent, has failed to realise this fact, that in the hog of 200 lbs. weight, in addition to the large pieces that are cut from the centre of the back around to the belly, there are pieces that are not cut in that way; there is still pork from a 200 lbs. hog cut between the shoulders and the hams, that is clear pork; and what I want to accomplish is that the whole of these portions of the hogs of over 200 lbs. in weight, cut between the shoulder and the ham, shall be included and come in at 1½ cents a pound.

Mr. GILLMOR. I thought this was well understood. The Minister of Finance and Minister of Customs in conversation across the floor both publicly and privately stated there was no difficulty about the definition. The Finance Minister now has rightly said that the number of pieces is what fixes his definition. What is the difference whether you get 32 pieces of pork in a barrel or 16 if they come out of the same sized hog?

Mr. FOSTER. How do you propose to find out whether a barrel of pork, which has 50 pieces of clear pork in it, contains pieces every one of which came out of a 200 lbs. hog?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is one of the difficulties of your system.

Mr. GILLMOR. You would ascertain it precisely the same as you would ascertain any such matter in a private transaction. The difference would consist in the size of the pieces and their weight. The Minister of Finance will not deny that all this is clearly defined, and we felt satisfied that clear pork imported would cost only 1½ cents a pound duty. New light has, however, dawned on the hon. gentleman's mind, and the result is that lumbermen and fishermen will be called upon to pay a duty of $6 per barrel instead of $3, because there are 32 pieces in the barrel and not 16. I regret very much this change in the definition has taken place, but the result is we will have to pay $6 per barrel duty instead of $3.

Mr. COOK. To what duty will mess pork be subjected?

Mr. FOSTER. If it is cut from a hog that weights 200 lbs. or more it will come in at 1½ cents, provided that there are not more than 16 pieces in the barrel.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose in accordance with the hon, gentleman's plan he does not propose to reduce the duty on lard.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is a fair duty considering the rate of duty on the meat product.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). In regard to item 152, I should like the duty to be struck off timothy and clover seeds, which we are not able to raise in sufficient quantities for our own consumption. Almost all of that imported should be admitted free of duty.

Mr. FOSTER. The former duty was 15 per cent. and it has been reduced to 10 per cent. Last season was a rather poor season for raising these seeds and consequently a pretty large importation is shown, but the returns also show a large exportation. A fair protection of 10 per cent. is due to the farmers who raise those seeds in this country. I do not think better timothy seed is grown anywhere than by our own farmers.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman takes credit for giving the farmer 10 per cent. protection on his seeds, while the implement manufacturer, from whom the farmer has to buy his implements, has to pay 35 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman ask me to raise the duty of 35 per cent. on timothy and clover seeds?

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask the hon gentleman to take the duty off agricultural implements and also seeds. We do not grow enough timothy and clover in our country for the needs of the farmers.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the reason why the duty was made low. It is a question of farmer against farmer to a certain extent. One farmer produces the seed, but the majority must buy it.

Mr. MITCHELL. As a matter of fact, a large quantity of timothy and clover used in this country is imported, and that is so, particularly in the part of the country I come from.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). We raise some timothy, but we have been unable to raise almost any clover for five or six years past, since the clover midge came in.

Mr. FOSTER. The clover midge cannot last for ever.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). It may last as long as the Government last.

 $\mathbf{Mr.}$ FOSTER. It would have a long life if it did

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do not prophesy unless you know.

Mr. McMULLEN. Judging by your past prophesies, they are not to be relied upon.

Mr. FOSTER. On item 152, I propose to add after the word "bases" the words "matrices and copper shells."

Mr. MITCHELL. I appealed to the hon. gentleman on a former occasion in relation to these electrotypes. I suppose there is no use appealing to him again when he has made up his mind he would change nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, there is use; and in consequence of the fervent appeal of my hon. friend, added to other representations that have been Mr. Foster. We have to import them.

I believe there is a one-horse shop in Toronto made, I have introduced this change in order to reduce the duty on these from 2 cents to $\frac{2}{3}$ of a cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite approve of that reduction, but I did not hear the hon. gentleman make that statement at the outset.

Items 178 and 179.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to reduce the duty on these to 3 cents instead of 4 and 5 cents.

On item 254,

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the ensilage corn, the Committee will see that this limits it to two varieties; the variety known as "Southern Dent Corn," namely, "Mammoth Southern Sweet," "Western Dent Corn," and "Golden Beauty." I have found that that limits it altogether too much, and that there are kinds of corn of a different name, but in which there is very little difference of quality, which are just as good, and which are more used for soiling and for ensilage purposes. I propose to widen that clause by making it read:

Indian corn of the varieties known as Southern White Dent, or Horse Tooth ensilage corn, and Western Yellow Dent, or Horse Tooth ensilage corn for soiling or ensilage.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I would just say to the Finance Minister, that I pay double the amount for corn for seed purposes that I do for corn for feeding purposes, so that no farmer will buy corn for seed and feed it to his cattle.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you pay for seed corn?
Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Sixty or 70 cents for seed corn, and 35 or 40 cents for corn for feeding purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. In item 305, I wish to add to the free list, "and hard rubber in sheets but not further manufactured." I wish also to add to the free list, "florists' stock, namely, palms, orchids, azaleas, cacti, and flower bulbs of all kinds."

Mr. MITCHELL. In item 151 the hon. gentleman charges 2 cents per square inch for stereotypes, and in 152 he charges two-thirds of a cent for the same article.

Mr. FOSTER. In 152 they are used for books.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why should the same articles, when used for newspapers, be charged 2 cents per square inch, and in other cases be charged only two-thirds of a cent? That is not treating the press fairly.

Mr. FOSTER. The object of 151 and 153 is to make the printers do the work here. All that class of work can be done as well here. With reference to the books, these matrices and copper shells must be imported.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is matrices and copper shells in 151 also.

Mr. FOSTER. But the class of work there is almanacs, calendars, illustrated pamphlets and other like work for commercial purposes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I cannot see why the book printers should get their stuff in at $\frac{2}{3}$ of a cent per square inch while the newspaper men have to pay 2 cents for the very same thing. We cannot get these things here. We have to import them. I believe there is a one-horse shop in Toronto which does something in that way, but it cannot supply the demand for the trade.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we can change this.

Mr. BROWN. There is the article of sumac and the extract of sumac which is largely used as dye stuff in the cotton mills. I would ask that that go into the free list.

Mr. FOSTER. I will put that in.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the hon member for Hamilton kindly interest himself in one or two things, which I wish to have considered? He appears to be the only man who can get anything done.

Mr. MULOCK. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to say that the duty in item 151 of 2 cents per square inch on stereotypes and electrotypes is in the interest of printers employed on newspapers and that such was the reason for that duty?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then how is it that in item 153, stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of newspaper columns are charged only \(^2\) cent per square inch, if 2 cents are necessary in item 151?

Mr. BOWELL. The first is to protect that kind of work which can be done and is done in every printing office in the country. It refers to almanacs, calendars, illustrated pamphlets, newspaper advertisements or engravings. I might add that since the high duty has been placed on this kind of work, it has increased a thousandfold in this country. It used to be imported principally from the neighboring republic. In 152 the duty is at a low rate to cover books, whether copyrighted or not, and which are produced principally in England. In purchasing the copyrights, the parties also purchase at the same time either the matrices from which the stereotype is made in this country, or the stereotype in England. In 153, the three-fourths of a cent per square inch and the 2 cents is to protect the typos in this country, who set type in the different printing offices.

Mr. MULOCK. On one class there is only a duty of three-fourths of a cent.

Mr. BOWELL. Three-fourths of a cent per square inch on the stereotypes, but it is 2 cents per square inch on the matrices or copper shells.

Mr. MULOCK. The three-fourths of a cent is for one thing and the 2 cents for something else.

Mr. BOWELL. The 2 cents is on what they call plate matter imported from the United States and put in the newspapers as reading matter.

Mr. MULOCK. The duty on that is threefourths of a cent and that is for newspapers, yet in 151, the duty on stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids for newspaper work is 2 cents per square inch. In item 151, a part of the material used by printers is protected 2 cents per square inch, and in item 153, part of the same material is protected at three-fourths of a cent per square inch.

Mr. BOWELL. If you reckon that up, you will find it is equal to what is paid for composition in newspaper offices.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you going to have two classes of duty for the same thing?

Mr. BOWELL. That is what is intended in order to prevent the importation of stereotyped plates which are put into newspapers, of advertising matter chiefly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why should you prevent that?

Mr. BOWELL. When advertisements of quack medicines or matters of that kind are brought in for newspapers, they should pay a higher price.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why not charge the same duty upon the bookmakers' material in item 152?

Mr. BOWELL. That distinction has always been drawn in the tariff.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I desire to refer to section 154.

Mr. FOSTER. That has reference to binding twine, and was fully discussed in Committee, and the sense of the House was tested in regard to it on a motion of the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). Surely my hon. friend does not desire to press the matter any further.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I only desire to say that this is very hard upon the farmers. We have first to pay 35 per cent. duty on implements, that is on the binder, and then we have to pay 25 per cent. on binding twine, which places the farmer in such a position that he is likely to put his binder aside and tie up his grain by hand as formerly.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Committee rise and report the resolutions.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is very much to be regretted that before the tariff was changed the Budget Speech should have been printed in full. If the tariff had been amended first, that speech might have been of great service to the country. Last year we paid for the Budget Speech something in the neighborhood of $2,500. Now, the Budget Speech goes forth as the tariff was brought down, and with the tariff incorrect in that Budget Speech. If we could only have had that speech printed after the tariff was amended so that the people could have been benefited by it, I do not think they would have objected to the money being spent for it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend sees that the Budget Speech must be the Budget Speech if it purports to be so, and that has been printed and distributed, and is the speech as it was delivered by the Finance Minister. That has always been the custom. The tariff changes as proposed by the Finance Minister are a part of the speech, and are printed with it. They do not purport to be the tariff as it is enacted, that is, the Budget Speech does not purport to be the law, but simply contains the propositions brought down by the Finance Minister. The tariff, when it becomes law, will be distributed by my hon, friend the Minister of Customs, who then puts it into the hands of all his officers, and, with his usual generosity, gives copies to any person who may wish for them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Finance Minister will see that if it were not issued so early, all these amendments could be included, and the people would be better informed on the tariff.

Bill reported.

Order that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply, read.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is objec-We have not had time to examine these tionable. items, and a good many of them require to be examined in detail. · I do not want to obstruct business, but it is not fair to bring down Estimates embracing a million and a half dollars, covering nearly a hundred items, at six o'clock, and ask the House to pass them at eleven o'clock, with a long intervening debate.

Mr. FOSTER. As the House is anxious to get through with the business we might take up those items to which there can be no objection, and allow those to stand which hon, gentlemen desire to discuss at length.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no reason in the world why these Estimates should not have been brought down before to-day. The hon, gentleman is not treating the House fairly, when he brings these Estimates at the eleventh hour and asks the House to go into them at the twelfth hour.

Mr. FOSTER. I am willing to acknowledge that the Estimates should have been down before.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is not fair that the House should be asked to take up these Estimates to-night. They involve a million and a half dollars of the people's money, and they were only made known to the House at six o'clock this evening. Now, I think that a great deal of time will be saved by allowing the members to have an opportunity to consider these items. If you force the House into committee on them to-night, I very much doubt if you will make as much progress as you would if you allowed the House an opportunity to consider them. If it is despatch you want, I think the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford will promote that end. For my part I I believe it is a strongly object to this course. vicious course. It is a bad precedent, it is encouraging the Administration next year to repeat the very shortcoming which the Finance Minister says he has been guilty of in this instance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that as the hon. gentlemen opposite have been assisting the Government a good deal to-day in carrying on business, and as we are in sight of prorogation, perhaps if we allow hon. gentlemen to go home tonight they will return to-morrow with renewed spirits prepared to carry the Estimates. So I will move that we now adjourn, and we will go home and sleep over mess pork.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at II p.m.

Mr. Landerkin.

seventeenth report of the Committee on Railways. Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

P. R. A. BELANGER.

Mr. TURCOT asked, What is the daily salary of P. R. A. Bélanger, surveyor, of L'Islet; how many days did he work in 1889; and how much money remains due to him?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Bélanger is not now in the employment of this Department. He was employed for 232 days. Mr. Bélanger's accounts with this Department are yet unadjusted, and it is, therefore, impossible to state at present whether any money remains due to him.

CUSTOMS OFFICER McLAGAN.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) asked, Have the charges of improper conduct made against Customs Officer McLagan, of Sarnia, been brought to the notice of the Minister of Customs? If so, what action has been taken?

Mr. FOSTER. In the absence of the Minister of Customs. I may say that charges have been made against him, and they are now under investigation.

THE NEW YORK MERCURY.

Mr. SCRIVER asked, Whether the attention of the Postmaster General has been called to the fact that a newspaper called the New York Mercury, containing matter of an immoral character, is being circulated in the Dominion? And if so, whether it is his intention to take steps to put a stop to the further importation and circulation of the said newspaper?

Mr. HAGGART. My attention has been called to the fact that a newspaper called the New York Mercury, containing matter of an immoral character, is being circulated in the Dominion. What is to be done in the matter, is at present under the consideration of the Government.

THE QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. BARRON) asked, Has the attention of the Government, or of any member thereof, been called to the following publication contained in the issue of the newspaper called Le Canadien, published at Quebec on the 30th April, 1890, that is to say:

"STATEMENT OF MR. O. E. MURPHY.

We (Larkin, Connolly & Co.) became aware of the position we held as tenderers before being informed officially, and governed ourselves accordingly by the withdrawal of John Gallagher's and George Beaucage's tenders; and in consideration of $25,000 paid to R. H. McGreevy, in presence of the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, we obtained the contract. This payment of $25,000 was made in June, 1883, by promissory notes made by one member of the firm and endorsed by another, which notes were subsequently retired by the firm at maturity and were subsequently retired by the firm at maturity, and charged to expense account.

"II. On or about the 23rd June, 1884, Larkin, Connolly & Co. signed a supplementary contract for certain works for completion of the Graving Dock at St. Joseph, Lévis, and erection of the Caisson, with the Harbor Commissioners, for the obtaining of which contract Larkin, Connolly & Co. paid the Messrs. McGreevy the sum of $22,000 in promissory notes of one member of the firm to another, which notes were subsequently paid.

"III. On or about November, 1884, Messrs. Larkin, Connolly & Co. spined a contract with the Department of Public Works of Canada for the erection and completion of the Graving Dock at Esquimalt, in British Columbia, Mr. R. H. McGreevy being, with his brother's (the Hon. Thomas McGreevy) knowledge, a partner in the said contract. That immediately after the signing of the said contract, I paid the sum of $5,000 in promissory notes of Larkin, Connolly & Co., for obtaining said contract and for his services to be given to have changes made for the benefit of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co.; and later on, and to the end of the work, various large sums were paid to, or for him on said contract, amounting in all (exclusive of R. H. McGreevy's share of the profits) to $20,000, as per statement of the accountant of the firm.

2nd. Is the majority of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners appointed by the Federal Government? 3rd. Is it true that 35 cents per yard for dredging in the works of the harbor mentioned in said publications has been paid to the contractors instead of 27 cents, as affirmed in the statement above referred to? 4th. Has the contract for the building and completion of the dry dock at Esquimalt, referred to in the above statement, been granted to the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., and has the Government approved of said contract? 5th. Have there subsequently been any changes or additions to said contract, and have the Government approved of the same? 6th. Has the steamer Admiral been subsidised by the Government, as stated in the foregoing quotations from Le Canadien?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the first question, the attention of the Government has been called to that publication. In answer to the second question, that Commission was only partially appointed by the Government. that, in the first instance, there were three appointed by the Government, and the others were appointed by the Board of Trade and the shipping interest, I believe. Since 1875 the majority are appointed by the Government, one is appointed by the Boards of Trade at Quebec and Lévis, and the others by the shipping interest. In answer to the third question, that is a matter which is under the control of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec. I understand that the contract given by the Harbor Commissioners was for 27 cents in the inside basin and in the tidal basin it was 47 cents.

When that portion of the contract had been executed, the Harbor Commissioners wanted to have a greater depth in the inside basin, or the wet dock. They asked the contractors what amount they would charge for that. The contractors, if I am rightly informed, stated that having taken 27 cents in one case, and 47 in the other and putting them together and dividing the sum by two, they would charge 37 cents. Evidently the Harbor Commissioners would not assent to that, and gave them 35 cents for the depth to be acquired. My information is obtained from the Quebec Harbor Commission, whose statement will be laid before the House, with some other documents that I will speak of in a moment. In reply to the fourth question, my answer is, yes. The contract for the completion of the dry dock at Esquimalt was granted, after public tenders had been invited, to Larkin, Connolly & Co.; their tender was accepted by the Government and the contract given to that firm. These papers, as well as the others, will be brought down. In reply to the fifth question, my answer is that I understand there was some change made with respect to large blocks of stone. The papers in connection with that matter will also be brought down. In reply to the sixth question, my answer is that the steamer Admiral has been subsidised by the Government, and the contract was given to Mr. Julien Chabot, the steamer to ply between Dalhousie and the ports on the way to Gaspé. That contract will also be brought down.

I. C. R.—COAL RATES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, The Minister of Railways, in reply to an enquiry, having stated that coal was carried over the Intercolonial Railway from Pictou mines to the Londonderry iron mines at 30 cents per ton, being at the rate of one-half of a cent per ton per mile; does the Government intend to make the same proportionate rate apply to coal carried to Halifax for local industries and for exportation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the intention of the Government to make the same proportionate rate apply to coal carried to Halifax for local industries similar to that to Londonderry for the manufacture of iron from the ore, turning out an equal quantity of pig and other manufactured iron to transport over the Intercolonial Railway; but it is not intended at present to make it apply to coal for exportation.

HEREFORD RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 147) respecting the Hereford Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COLBY. I desire to make a change in the Bill, changing the head office of the company from Cooksville to the city of Sherbrooke. I have here three clauses to that effect.

Mr. LAURIER. Have these changes been considered by the Railway Committee?

Mr. COLBY. No; but the whole Bill was considered and reported.

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill was introduced at a very late stage of the Session; and while I have no objection to its adoption in the form it left the Railway Committee, I object to any further change being made.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. COLBY. If any hon, gentleman can conceive of any reasonable objection to the proposed change, I would certainly defer to that view; but about 2 o'clock this afternoon I received a telegram from Mr. Ives, who is in Portland, and who is in conference with gentlemen to whom the road is to be leased, requesting to have this change made. It is not of essential importance, but it might obviate the necessity of another Bill being introduced next Session.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think it is advisable to look into these amendments at all.

Mr. COLBY. If the hon, gentleman sees any objection, I will not press the matter further.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. First Minister stated last night that he would, on the House meeting to-day, mention when the two questions, that affecting the report of the Rykert Committee and that connected with the Bremner claim, would be taken up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have come to the conclusion that we can, without inconvenience, devote the whole of next Monday to these two subjects. We hope to get through all important Government business to-day and the two following days.

Mr. CHARLTON. I should like to enquire from the hon. Minister of Agriculture with respect to a return moved for on the 12th February, asking information about six persons who were designated as Pagans in one of the parishes of Quebec, and wanting the original return so as to know who they were.

Mr. CARLING. I will make enquiries at the Department and see that the return is brought

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Minister of Railways inform the House when the railway subsidies will be submitted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I stated yesterday that they would be brought down to-morrow. My answer will remain the same, in order to be consistent. We have been going over the proposed subsidies a good deal, and there is considerable difficulty in regard to the descriptions of the various railways and portions of lines to be subsidised. I hope to be able to devote this afternoon to the settlement of these technical questions.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to call again the attention of the First Minister to the fact that a return I moved for, with respect to the cost and number of the official cars on the Prince Edward Island Railway, which was ordered by the House very many weeks ago, has not been brought down yet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We had to send down to Moncton for the particulars which the hon. gentleman wants. He will have them to-morrow or next day.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I wish to ask about a return ordered in reference to the revenue of Digby wharf.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We had to send to the wharfinger for the particulars. They will be here soon.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact, that the members have not yet received the report of the Committee on the Bremner furs case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not wish to be considered as the messenger of the House. If there was an Order of the House given they should be brought down.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I thought they should be distributed, because they have been received by some members of the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I enquired from the Clerk of the House, and I find that no order was given for the printing and distribution of these documents. It is for the House to give an order, but it is not my duty to do so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I certainly understood that a motion had been made to have the documents printed, when the report was presented.

Mr. BLAKE. We certainly understood yesterday that the report was to be printed, when the Secretary of State produced a copy of the printed report, which the Minister of Justice handed him. I do not know that there is any special distribution to members of the Government, or to members of the House, of papers which are not distributed to other members of the House. It seems an extraordinary course that an order should enable hongentlemen on the Treasury benches to obtain papers, and that there should be no order to distribute them to members.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No doubt they were distributed to members of the Committee, but there is no order of the House to distribute them to members.

Mr. GIROUARD. I think I recollect the facts of this case. I examined the report exhibited yesterday, and I find that it was one which was printed for the use of the Committee.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I never received the report myself, and I never said I received it.

Mr. GIROUARD. I think I recollect, when the report was presented, that there was no motion made that it should be printed.

Mr. LAURIER. When that report was brought down, I asked the Government to fix a day for the discussion of it, and the Prime Minister told us he would require time to look at the papers, and that then he would give me an answer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should explain how I came to have in my possession a copy of that report. I found one on my desk, which might have been left there by some member of the Committee; and in handing the copy to the Secretary of State, I presumed it had been generally distributed.

Mr. WELDON (8t. John). My hon. friend the chairman of the Committee (Mr. Girouard) had the papers prepared, and I understood they had been sent to the printing office.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not say they are not there, but I say I am not a messenger of the House, and if there is no order of the House, I cannot give one myself.

Mr. HOLTON. I think there must be some distribution of this report, because I have received a copy of it, bound in blue book form.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Is not the hon. gentleman a member of the Committee?

Mr. HOLTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose a member of the Committee has a preferential right to receive these books.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. An order of the House has not been given.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the papers are not printed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They are printed.

Mr. LAURIER. Who is to distribute them?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know. It is not my business to give an order for the distribution.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that these papers are in the hon. gentleman's office.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They are not in my office.

Mr. LAURIER. Then, where are they? If they are printed they must be somewhere.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They must have been printed since some members have received copies, but I have not yet received one. They are probably in the Distribution office at the Government Printing Bureau, and that office is at the disposal of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose it is for the purpose of distribution that the printing took place. The printing was either authorised or unauthorised. Either these papers have been printed by authority, and in that case ought to be distributed, or they have been printed without authority.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend knows that the report of the Committee of which he was an important member, was printed by order, for the use of the Committee. If they had been distributed to the House, in that case it would have been an infringement on the rights of the Committee. This case is exactly similar. The evidence is printed, but the Distribution office of the Printing Bureau is waiting for an Order of the House to distribute them.

Mr. LAURIER. I move that an order be given to have the report of the Committee, the evidence and the minutes of proceedings distributed among the members of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Since this discussion commenced, I sent in to my box in the post office, and I found a printed copy of the report distributed there, among the other blue books.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the Secretary of State will enquire who has been guilty of this awful infringement of the rule, in distributing that without authority.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Perhaps my hon. friend would see that the officers of the House have done their duty by ordering the distribution, and that the papers are in his box, as in the boxes of other members of the House. All I have to say is that I am not the distributor or the messenger of the House.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to take up the sections we passed over. In section 2, line 26, I wish to strike out the words, "and includes also specifications of timber." I find that these specifications are only in the certificate given by the culler to the cove-keeper, upon which the cove-keeper gives a receipt, upon which the advance is made. Then, I propose to drop out sub-section f of the same section, defining the expression "ship" or "shipment," as it is only used in one clause, and it does not seem necessary to include it in the interpretation clause.

On section 18,

Mr. FOSTER. In accordance with the suggestion of the hon. member for North Norfolk, I propose, in the fifth line, after the word "held," to provide for a record to be kept of the proxies. It will read as follows:—

A record to be kept of the proxies to a time not exceeding thirty days, within which proxies must be produced and recorded, previous to the meeting, in order to entitle the holder to vote thereon.

On section 28,

Mr. FOSTER. This section stood because of the objection that the directors might reduce the stock below the amount of paid-up capital which a bank must have in order to start, and I think the objection was well taken. I propose to add sub-section 6: "The capital shall not be reduced below the amount of $250,000 of paid-up stock."

Mr. MULOCK. With reference to section 26 I quite approve of the direction of the proposed legislation, namely, that there should be some restriction placed on the powers of the bank to increase its capital. What would be reasonable ground for causing the Government to withhold the certificate? Do the Government propose, when application is made for a certificate to allow an increase of capital, to enquire into the correctness of the statement made to the Government before they grant such a certificate? I think the power heretofore used by banks to increase their capital, of their own motion, is capable of being abused, if in fact it has not already been abused. The Federal Bank, for instance, increased its capital stock and issued new stock at a very considerable premium, on a statement which was unsupported by the true condition of the assets of the bank. Had there been an examination into the affairs of the bank by independent authority, that would probably have resulted in the withholding of the certificate. The report made was misleading and caused wide disaster.

Mr. FOSTER. What is sought to be obtained here is a sort of supervisory power by the Treasury Board. What form that may take will have to be regulated by the circumstances in each case. Take the circumstance alluded to by my hon. friend, where the bank paid a very large dividend and then increased its stock, which it did not put upon the market, but sold to another corporation within itself, and so got very large deposits. That was at the time fairly well known, and a subject such as Mr. Chapleau.

that should be taken up by the Treasury Board, provided it had the supervisory power, and fairly sifted.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Government take to themselves a veto power, they also resume the responsibility of its exercise; and if they assent to an increase on capital stock, they, to a certain extent, endorse the statement given to the shareholders and the public, on which the directors propose to make the new issue. The Government can only properly discharge that responsibility by having a proper examination made into the report issued by the directors, on the face of which the shareholders and the public are asked to take up the increased stock.

Mr. BLAKE. I fear very much that what has fallen from both sides may lead to considerable The suggestion of the Finance misconception. Minister is, taking the particular instance to which reference has been made, that some enquiry would be made which would result in the discovery, in such a case, that a considerable portion of the stock had been floated by means of an in-stitution created by the bank itself. That is impossible. That did not and could not take place in the case mentioned, until after the authority for the issue of the stock had been obtained. It was not until the stock came to be placed on the market that the machinery referred to was used for the purpose of facilitating its being taken up. I do not know of anything that could have been done in that matter, and I am somewhat familiar with the circumstances, unless the Treasury had taken the very extraordinary and invidious course, as a preliminary to giving the certificate, of making such an examination as would result in ascertaining the value of the assets. The difficulty there was that there were enormous assets which were alleged to be, and I have no doubt were, regarded by all the directors as being—I cannot say what the temperament of the cashier might lead him to believe -but they were regarded by the directors, at all events, within a few weeks of the collapse, as being perfectly good. The condition of the bank appeared, long after the increase of capital, to be perfectly good. Its real condition was only to be shown by analysing the value of its assets, by determining whether an enormous sum should be written off from notes and other securities which it held. Is it suggested that the Treasury Board, as a preliminary to deciding whether the capital stock shall be permitted to be increased, shall enter into such an enquiry as that? If that is not the suggestion, then I am afraid nothing can be done. If that is the suggestion, and if it is adopted, I fear a very great responsibility will be incurred by the Government of the day which announces that it has made enquiry and that the proposal is a sound one. In this particular case, I think the proposal was to double the capital at a premium of forty, so that there would have to be an enquiry into the condition of this institution, showing that its present stock was worth at least forty, and that its earning power was such as to justify the public in sub-Nothing could be more fatal scribing at forty. to the public credit than to make a slight and colorable enquiry; nothing more arduous than an exhaustive enquiry, and I am afraid that this clause will lead to nothing but difficulty.

Mr. FOSTER. What my hon. friend has stated as to the responsibility of the Treasury Board, by placing this clause in the Bill, is undoubtedly true.

I suppose we would have power to go into the examination of the affairs of a bank as a condition precedent to allowing them to increase their capital stock, but that is not the intention. It might be that the shareholders would decide by a majority to increase the stock, while a large and respectable minority might not agree to that, and any representation by that minority as to the increase or decrease of stock might very well be taken into consideration by the Treasury Board. If we do not go so far as to make a thorough inspection of the condition of the bank, which is not contemplated, I do not think this involves the grave responsibility which the hon gentleman suggests in regard to the affairs of the bank.

I would suggest to the hon. Mr. BLAKE. gentleman that his present view would be met by putting in a provision that a certain majority shall be required. If a respectable minority is to have its weight, let that be potential; but the suggestion that the hon. gentleman is going to make an inspection as to the expediency or the justifiability of this increase in stock, is a very dangerous one.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I cannot agree with the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) as to a majority being allowed to regulate this matter, because it must be recollected that we have not only the interests of the stockholders to protect, but also those of the general public. There might be an object on the part of a majority to float the stock at the advanced rate, and to get out just after. It is true that, if this power is taken by the Government, they assume very great responsibility. And, if they make only a perfunctory examination, they will not only be misleading the public, but will be placing themselves in an indefensible position. I think there is a great deal of danger in that clause.

On section 53,

Mr. FOSTER. In this section I propose a new sub-section. We have two banks, the Bank of British North America and the Banque du Peuple, which are different from the other banks in not having a double liability of the shareholders as security for the notes in circulation. It is difficult to make a change and put these two banks directly upon the same footing as the others, as it would disturb very much their franchises, the business in which they are engaged, the standing of the banks and the position of their shareholders. At the same time, it does not seem quite right that they should have the same limit of circulation as the other banks, whose shareholders give a double I propose to introduce a clause with reference to the Banque du Peuple and the Bank of British North America, limiting their circulation to 75 per cent. of the paid-up capital. If they do not give the double liability, then they shall not have the same limit of circulation, and that, I think, would be a step towards bringing them more on a parity with the other banks. I propose the following as a sub-section :-

Notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding sub-section, the total amount of circulation existing at any time in the Bank of British North America and the Banque du Peuple shall not exceed 75 per cent. of the House and the hon. gentleman is a hard money unimpaired paid-up capital of such banks respectively, and each of such banks may issue such notes in excess of the said 75 per cent. per annum upon depositing, with respect to such excess, with the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General, in cash or bonds of the Dominion of Canada, an amount equal to the excess; provided always, that in no case shall the total amount of notes of either of the said banks exceed the unimpaired paid-up capital of such banks, and the cash or bonds so deposited shall be available by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General for the redemption of the notes issued in excess as aforesaid, in the event of the suspension of the said banks respectively. banks respectively.

Mr. BLAKE. They are all bound to make a certain deposit.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not for the circulation The Banque du Peuple, for instance, have fund. $1,200,000 paid-up stock, and they can issue up to We say they shall not issue beyond 75 per cent. of that upon the security they now give. they go beyond they shall put up cash or bonds to that extent.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the penalty apply to these two banks now?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the penalty applies to all the banks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. gentleman will recollect that a little discussion arose between the Minister of Justice and myself on a point of grave importance with respect to the total amount that might be drawn from the banks, and I understood the Minister of Finance to say that his intention was that under no circumstances should the banks be called upon to contribute more than 13 or 14 per cent. Is that matter now ad-

Mr. FOSTER. I have a section for that which I will move shortly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, with respect to sub-section After some conversation across the House, the notice was changed to six days, and the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), thought six days was too long. I propose to suggest that three days notice should be given.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. In sub-section 8 the following will be the sub-section that will regulate the payment by banks towards the impairment of the guarantee fund :-

Provided always, that each of such other banks shall only be called upon to make good to the said fund its share of such excess in payments not exceeding in one year I per cent. of the average amount of its notes in circulation. This circulation is to be ascertained in such manner as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General shall decide, and his decision shall be final.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. On section 57 discussion arose with reference to the payment of notes circulating by the different banks, and I will suggest that instead of the word "payment" we put the word "circulation.

Mr. BLAKE. What does that mean?

Mr. FOSTER. That means just what we are driving at, that the notes issued by different banks shall not go below par, and that the banks shall make what arrangements are necessary in order to man. I do not understand how we can declare that the circulation of the bank shall be at par without providing that it shall be payable at par.

Mr. FOSTER. The bank will have to look after that matter.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is getting to soft money very fast.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know if by enacting the first part of the section, declaring that they shall make such arrangements as are necessary to ensure the circulation of the notes at par, the banks have to establish agencies at other places than at those mentioned?

Mr. FOSTER. If it is necessary to ensure the circulation of the notes at par, other agencies must be established.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It will impose a very heavy duty on the smaller banks, especially those in the Maritime Provinces, if they have, in order to ensure payment at par of the circulation throughout the Dominion, to establish agencies in every town and city in Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. The latter part of this clause is not an adequate provision for the fulfilment of the first part of it, and if it is to be interpreted as an exposition of what the banks are to do in fulfilment of the obligation of the prior part, it is altogether an inadequate fulfilment. The clause would be stronger with its original wording, and with the latter part struck out. I feel there is a great deal of difficulty in the direction which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has pointed out. The difficulty will be very small indeed in regard to the large banks, each of which possesses a considerable number of offices, and each of which can compensate the other by making mutual facilities for redemption. It is different, however, in regard to the smaller banks. Take, for instance, a note issued by the Bank of Prince Edward Island, which is handed in for redemption at Vancouver. If an arrangement could be made between the banks for their mutual accommodation in this regard, the difficulty might be solved.

Mr. FOSTER. The arrangement which is indicated in section 56, is one which the banks have voluntarily taken on themselves. It is not a compulsion laid on them against their will, but it is an arrangement into which they are quite willing To the representatives of the banking to enter. institutions, I pointed out the very objections which the hon, gentleman has taken. The bankers which the hon. gentleman has taken. said, that practically those objections were not formidable, because they were even now, and had been during the last year, very materially altering the condition of things by agreements made amongst themselves, and no difficulty whatever would be experienced. It would of course be a quite different matter, if we proposed this compulsory clause against the wishes of the smaller banks.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman's statement. If the smaller banks were satisfied, we should be satisfied.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the hon gentleman come to the conclusion as to the desirability of inserting a clause, providing that notes should be taken at par all over the Dominion and not subject to discount by banks on each other's notes?

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the arrangements we have made will bring about the object we have in view, of preventing the notes of different banks from circulating below par. There are some objections, I think, to the proposition of the hon. gentleman to making it compulsory on every bank, if it pays or takes the note of another bank, to do it without discount. What we have already enacted is sufficient to obtain the object which is so desirable, namely, that the notes should be taken at par.

On section 57,

Mr. MULOCK. This makes the banks liable to redeem their bills at but one place, namely, the place where they are made payable. That is an old section which no doubt has crept in by mistake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you want to make that intelligible you ought to add the words "except at the place designated."

Mr. MULOCK. You have introduced a new idea in one section, and you let the section of the old Act stand as it is. That is where the difficulty comes in.

Mr. FOSTER. We will strike out all after the word "not" in section 57, line 50.

Mr. BLAKE. Do not you think that sections 56 and 57 conflict? In the earlier part of section 56, a person is to get cash or the equivalent for cash, and he cannot get any more than that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the earlier part of section 56, we state the purpose of the section, and the means taken to accomplish that purpose have been found adequate by the banks. We have nowhere made it compulsory for banks to take the notes of other banks, nor have we in any place made it compulsory, unless we make it compulsory in section 57, for a bank to receive its own notes at other than the place of payment mentioned in the note.

On section 61,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to strike out all after the word "dollars" on the 46th line. I shall have an amendment to offer later on.

On section 66,

Mr. FOSTER. The new words which are in this section, over and above what were in the preceding section, are the words after "bank" in the second line of the section. We propose to drop out the words "which has accrued and become payable," and leave it as it was in the old Act. There was no limit specified in the old Act, but if there is any great objection to the six months mentioned here being too short, we can make it read twelve months.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it would be in the interests of all parties concerned to make it twelve months.

Mr. BLAKE. As I pointed out before, I think it is very important that the bank should, as soon as possible, cease to be the holder of its own stock. During this time, the double liability which appears to the public is wholly illusory. Any bank, which is in a position to go on at all, ought be able to sell its stock in six months.

Mr. TISDALE. The people who are interested ought to be entitled to some consideration. The bank might be willing to sell, but it might not be in the interests of the other parties concerned, that within such a short time as six months they should be forced to have their assets realised upon. As there was no limit mentioned in the old Act, surely twelve months is not an unreasonable time to specify here.

Mr. COCKBURN. It may be in the interest of the bank as well as in the interest of the debtor and the other creditors not to sell. Considering that the time was indefinite in the old Act, I do not think the extension to twelve months is dangerous.

Mr. McCARTHY. Besides, the double liability is not affected. The bank only holds a lien, and the double liability still remains for whatever it is

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; but it is the double liability of a man who cannot pay.

Mr. COCKBURN. The same privilege should extend to the case of an overdue debt. It might be that the directors would carry a man for twelve months and grant him an extension from time to time. I do not think it fair to the other creditors, apart from the bank altogether, that their interest should be sacrificed to the convenience of the bank directors.

Mr. TISDALE. Under the section as it stands, a bank could not even renew a debt.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask whether, under the wording of the clause, the bank would be obliged to sell in the event of the debt having matured, or whether it would be allowed to renew the debt? It might happen that the bank would desire to renew it, and I would suggest that you add the words, "having regard to any extension or extensions of time."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That would defeat it altogether.

Mr. MULOCK. As a matter of law, could the bank renew a note for which it had this lien, or would the lien apply to the renewed debt?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The lien would remain as long as the party owed the debt. I see nothing in the section to prevent the bank granting a renewal.

Mr. TISDALE. That is a very good reason why the old law was a wise one. I do not object to a limit, so long as we are careful not to go too Under the old law the bank could renew indefinitely; but I am inclined to think that this new provision would take away the power of renewal from the bank. Unless the Minister's object is not to encourage such transactions, I do not see any reason for changing the old law; but if we do change it, let us allow twelve months, at any rate, in which to realise on the security.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the law ought to be made perfectly clear one way or the other. The hon. Minister of Justice says that if we allowed any extension at all, that would defeat this law. Then, the moment the debt becomes due the time in any other places where they occur, the words limit begins, and when it expires, the bank cannot have a lien on the shares with respect to that debt. If that is the case, we are face to face with Another difficulty mentioned to the Committee is a peculiar state of affairs. A shareholder might the use of the word "wholesale." It is true that have a current account, which might be in the form of renewals; but if it could be shown that his debt were part of the original debt for which the security was given, it would be possible to defeat the security. I think it should be made perfectly clear whether the provision does or does not apply to renewals.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know that my hon. friend quite understood what I said. My idea was that we should not give power to extend the liability merely to extend the lien. If we did so, that would defeat the provision by making it work indefinitely. But I do not see that the clause, as it stands, prevents the six months beginning to run from the date of new transactions. It certainly would prevent the period beginning from an extension of the original indebtedness; but if there were a new transaction and a new consideration, it certainly would not apply.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It seems to me that this security ought to be dealt with just in the same way as other securities obtained by the bank for loans, and it ought not to be realised on unless, in the judgment of the bank, the best time has arrived for realising upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that twelve months be inserted in place of six months.

On section 67.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to insert after "conveyed," in the 27th line, the word "either," and after "acts," in the 30th line, these words: "Or in like manner and subject to the like restrictions as a private individual might in like circumstan ces deal with, sell and convey the same.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the different Pro vinces there are two modes of realising on collateral securities. One is the method in force in the English-speaking Provinces by which the lien holder can sell without process of law. In the Province of Quebec, it is necessary, in order to realise upon collateral security, that the creditor shall recover judgment and seize the collateral in execution and bring it to sale. With the view of harmonising these two systems and making the remedy perfectly available, we say that the bank shall sell, either as a private individual may, or-and this is to suit the Province of Quebec-as a bank may do in respect of its own shares. This will make it clear that in any case the bank will not be required to resort to a judgment and execution in order to bring the collateral to sale. I propose to add at the end of these words "sold and conveyed," but without obligation to sell the same within twelve months."

On section 75,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is the section which enables manufacturers to give a lien, by way of security in analogy to warehouse receipts. The changes proposed to be made in that will meet the point raised in the discussion the other evening. That discussion showed the extent to which the words "or producer" might lead us, and I propose, for that reason, to strike out in the second line, and the continuance of that word may possibly exclude some classes of manufacturers who manufacture agricultural implements and musical instruments of large value, and who can hardly be said to be wholesale manufacturers. Nevertheless, there will be very considerable difficulty if we leave the word "wholesale" out, by extending the clause to manufacturers on a small scale. On the whole, I think it would be preferable to retain the word. There is this to be said in favor of its retention, that by retaining it we are not depriving any manufacturers, who come within the present law, from giving this security. We are widening the clause as regards manufacturers, and I think the insertion of the word "wholesale" will enable the clause to apply to every manufacturer named in the present Act as entitled to give warehouse receipts, to give that security which is in analogy to warehouse receipts. I propose the definition of the word "manufacturer" to be as fol-

The word "manufacturer" includes maltsters, distillers, brewers, refiners and producers of petroleum, tanners, curers, bakers, canners of meat, pork, fish, fruit and vegetables, and any person who produces by hand, art, process or mechanical means, any goods, wares or merchandise.

The word "produce" was inserted in order to cover certain classes of persons who are manufacturers in the strict legal sense, but not in the ordinary understanding of the term, such as the distiller and the brewer, who might not be supposed, in popular understanding, to be whiskey or beer manufacturers. The mere curer of pork might, also, not be understood to be a manufacturer.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have great doubt with regard to this clause, as it will enable secret conveyances to be made, and third parties will have no means of knowing that they have been made. A manufacturer may transfer to a bank in this way, by a bill of sale, everything he has, and still enjoy the credit resulting from his presumed ownership of his stock on hand. This is contrary to the policy followed in the Maritime Provinces, and in Ontario, where the law, I believe, is the same as with us. In these Provinces, when a party gives a chattel mortgage on a bill of sale, he must register it, or it is of no avail against other creditors. The effect of this clause will be that transactions of this kind will not require to be registered, if this Parliament has power to pass such a law. Assuming it has the power, this clause will enable parties, who are ostensibly owners of their property, but whose property is really mortgaged to banks in this way, to deceive the public as to their business standing.

Mr. McCARTHY. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. I think that the warehouse receipt, which the banks were permitted to take, extended as it has been, has gone far enough. I have some doubt as to whether our present provision does not interfere with the power of the Provincial Legislatures. It is one thing for us to say that the banks may take a warehouse receipt, and it is another thing to declare how it shall effect the transfer of property. Now it is proposed to allow any manufacturer, and so on, by a secret conveyance to mortgage all his property to a bank, so that the bank shall acquire the same rights and powers in respect to the goods, wares and merchandise covered thereby as if it had acquired the same by virtue of a warehouse receipt. In fact, you are putting the banks in a different position from that of any other creditors in the country, which, I think, is unwise, and, I believe, is unconstitutional.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry that my two hon. and learned friends from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and from St. John (Mr. Weldon) were not present in the House when we adopted this clause after a long debate and a division, the only questions left being the definition of the persons to whom it would apply. Of course, their absence does not prevent their raising the question again, but I will state, for their benefit, the points which were taken at that time. As my hon. friends are aware, the original legislation on the subject of warehouse receipts proceeded on the principle of bailment. That is, that one person being the custodian of the goods of another, undertakes, by a warehouse receipt, to hold those goods for the bank or for any other person who has a lien upon them. But we have departed from that principle entirely, and have extended the giving of warehouse receipts to persons who were in possession of their own goods. It has been a struggle on the part of one class of dealers after another to get into the Act and to be allowed to give warehouse receipts, so that practically the provisions of the present banking law extend to a larger number of persons than this clause does. These documents are fictitiously called warehouse receipts, though the property may be in the possession of the owner, and may never have been in a warehouse.

Mr. MULOCK. But the giver of a receipt must be a warehouseman.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; he may be the captain of a boat, or a miller, or a man who never saw a warehouse in his life, or who was never entrusted with any other person's property. The change we make is to provide that the term "warehouse receipt" shall be restricted to the instrument properly so-called, given by the ware-houseman. But we do not want to cut out the manufacturing classes of this country, who have been accustomed to use the warehouse receipt system, and to get large advances from the banks on that system. We propose to leave that, although the privilege is enjoyed by some persons in respect of their own goods, but it will be confined to the manufacturers, and we shall call it not a warehouse receipt, but a security. It cannot be a warehouse receipt, because the goods are not in the warehouse, but are in possession of the manufacturer himself. We are not widening the clause at all, but we are really cutting it down to the manufacturing class only, and I think that that will be less objectionable than the present law, mainly from the fact that we are confining it to a class of persons who have been accustomed to receive this aid from the banks and in regard to whom the public credit has been guarded in view of the provisions already passed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am very glad to hear the explanations of the Minister of Justice. I am glad to hear that the clause herefers to has been omitted from the statute, and I would not at all object to the banks having the power in the limited sense which he has explained; but I think that, when the question is tested, it will be found that we have not the authority to say what the conveyance shall vest in the banks. I think it should be left to the Provinces to say how it should vest. If the Provinces choose to say that this security can be given to the banks in this way, well and good; but I think that, when it is tested, it will be found that we have no authority to deal with the question of vesting the property.

Mr. TISDALE. The constitutional point raised by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has always existed, but the banks have gone on under the warehouse receipt system very well, and it would be a very serious blow to our industries if any interference took place with the rights and privileges of the merchants and others in obtaining money in this way from the banks. This is confined to a class of men who have these connections with the banks generally. If this right is taken away from the wholesale manufacturers, it will seriously interfere with their power to carry on their business. If there is anything in the constitutional point, I shall be somewhat surprised, because these warehouse receipts have existed ever since Confederation. I think it would be an unjust infliction upon a most important class to be compelled to do their banking in any other way than They are willing to take their chances on it; and I think the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) showed conclusively the other night that, though there might be a doubt in regard to the matter, it would be well for us not to narrow the provisions of the statute ourselves. This subject was very fully discussed the other night, and I thought the whole question was settled except the definition. There may be members here who did not hear anything in regard to that matter, and I would point out the serious interference with our industries which would result, if this privilege is taken away from them, particularly as regards the manufacturers, to whom it would be a great hardship.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend seems to think this section is an old one. This is entirely a new section.

Mr. TISDALE. I am speaking of the principle of allowing these people to finance in this way.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would like to draw the attention of the Committee again to the question brought up by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) the other night. I was not able to be here on Thursday night, and I asked the member for Frontenac to move an additional subsection, providing that banks might loan money upon the security of licenses to cut timber. I see by the discussion that took place upon that occasion that the Minister of Finance took the objection that these securities were rather incorporeal, that they were not of a very safe character, that in view of the fact that licenses only extended for one year, and expired within one year after their issue, the security is not what might be desired. But I think my hon. friend overlooked the fact that under the regulations, both in Ontario and Quebec -- I cannot speak with regard to the other Provinces-license holders who shall have duly complied with the regulations of the Department of Crown Lands shall be entitled to renewals of their licenses, provided they have done certain things that are spoken of in the regulations themselves. I do not know whether it would be in order for me to move this amendment again, but I desire to say that I cannot conceive of any class of security which it is more desirable that a bank should be allowed to take, or a manufacturer be allowed to give, than the security upon these very licenses. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), as I see by the discussion the other night, took the objection that it would be constituting these banks land banks. Of course, I do not pretend to set up my opinion respecting the nature of these securities against the great legal knowledge of that hon. gentleman, but I have always under-stood that licenses for such timber did not in any sense convey any right in the lands themselves, that they simply convey the right to cut the trees standing upon those lands. As a raw material for the manufacture of lumber, it seems to me it is a class of security that might very well come within the purview of this Act. For instance, let us take the case of a young man having great experience in lumbering, but with no capital, and having a license to cut timber. Under the law as it stands at present he is unable to go to a bank and say: Here, I have got good tangible security to give you; can you advance me a sufficient sum of money upon this security to enable me to manufacture a certain quantity of the raw material that is standing upon this land, and which I have a right to cut under the license? Under the law, he being unable to do that, the result is that this man must go to some private individual and give securities to him, by subjecting parties to a very large imposition in the way of commissions as a go-between between the bank and the person who desires to manufacture the raw material upon these licenses. As I said, I do not know whether I have the right now to move this resolution, as it was moved the other night; but if I have, I will place it in your hands, and ask the consideration of the Committee upon it.

Mr. BLAKE. It having been once moved and disposed of, the hon. gentleman must wait till the third reading before he moves it again.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 89,

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to move a new clause, as sub-section 4, with reference to the disposition of unclaimed balances in the case of insolvent banks. The Committee will remember that part of that first clause was left out. This is a little solatium.

If, in the event of the winding up of the business of a bank in insolvency, or under any general winding up Act or otherwise, any moneys payable by the liquidator and due either to shareholders or depositors, should remain unclaimed for a period of three years from the date of suspension of payment by the bank, or the commencement of the winding up of such business, if such should take place before the expiration of the said three years, such moneys and all interest thereon shall, notwithstanding any statute of limitations or other Act relating to prescription, be paid to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, to be held by him subject to all rightful claims on behalf of any person other than the bank; but in case a claim to any moneys so paid as aforesaid should be thereafter established to the satisfaction of the Treasury Board, the Governor in Council shall, on the report of the Treasury Board, direct payment thereof to be made to the parties entitled thereto, together with interest on the principal sum thereof, at the rate of three per centum per annum for a period not exceeding six years from the date of payment thereof to the said Minister of Finance and Receiver General as aforesaid: Provided, however, that no such interest shall be paid or payable on such principal sum, unless interest thereon was payable by the bank paying the same to the said Minister of Finance and Receiver General; and on payment to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General; herein provided, the bank and its assets shall be held to be discharged from further liability for the amount so paid.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I move the insertion of the following new clause:—

The liability of a bank under any law claim or agreement to repay money deposited with it, and interest, if any, and to pay dividends declared payable on its capital stock, shall continue, notwithstanding any statute of limitation or any enactment or law relating to prescription. This section applies to moneys heretofore or hereafter deposited and to dividends heretofore or hereafter declared.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With reference to the provisions regarding penalties, I propose the following:—

The amount of all penalties imposed upon any bank for any violation of this Act, shall be recoverable and enforceable with costs, at the suit of Her Majesty, instituted by the Attorney General of Canada, or the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General, and such penalty so recovered or enforced shall belong to the Crown for the public uses of Canada; but the Governor in Council, on report of the Treasury Board, may direct that any portion of any penalty may be remitted or paid to any person so employed, in any manner best adapted to secure the object of this Act and to promote the administration thereof.

Motion agreed to.

On section 61,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In respect to this section, it seems to me that the penalty ought to be different in respect to the procedure and application, from the penalties imposed upon banks. We have just passed a provision to strike out of the section the manner in which the penalty should be recovered and the disposal of the penalty, namely, a moiety to Her Majesty and a moiety to the prosecutor. It strikes me, however, that that provision ought to remain in this section. This is a penalty not upon a bank, but upon a person or corporation other than a bank. In respect to this it may be thought proper to use the service of a common informer, as the Minister of Finance or Attorney General may have no means of knowing anything about the prosecution in such a case, which might probably be brought at the instance of a bank.

Motion agreed to.

On schedule D,

Mr. FOSTER. I propose, in deference to the member for North York (Mr. Mulock), to substitute in this schedule the word "sum" for "balance.'

Mr. MULOCK. An hon. gentleman opposite, who takes an interest in financial matters, whom I do not see in the House, asked me to illustrate this case, and we went together to the library and found that the gross liabilities of one of our banks to the public, according to our Canadian returns, amount to $8,000,000, whereas, as a matter of fact, they amount to $27,000,000; but from that amount we deduct the amount of domestic liabilities, which left its liabilities to outside creditors twice the amount that they appear to be by the returns. The requirements of the present schedule enable any bank in Canada to transact any amount of business it chooses outside of the limits of Canada, and to make no intelligible return whatever of that business to the Canadian public; so that the return to the Government is absolutely misleading. It is worse than no return, because it is supposed to give the public an idea of the actual position of the bank, while it gives an entirely erroneous one.

Mr. Foster.

Mr. COCKBURN. The hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) wants a return to show the entire liabilities of the banks doing business outside of Canada. An attempt was made, eight years ago, to have the returns include outside business, but it was found that that system created such an amount of confusion that the House passed a law doing away with it. If the hon, gentleman desires to obtain this knowledge, I would suggest that it might be better and clearer if, instead of throwing these statements into one, a supplementary statement of outside business were given by those banks doing business outside of Canada.

Mr. MULOCK. I have no objection to its being made in that form.

Mr. TISDALE. I think we had better leave well enough alone. It was found under the old law that the system proposed did not work well, and a special Act was brought in, a short time after the Banking Act was passed, to change it to the present form. Now, the Department, the banks, and the public are all satisfied with the present system, and it is now proposed to change it without any consultation with the banks. I do not pretend to understand it, but it seems to me quite unnecessary to make a change.

Mr. BLAKE. I confess that it is very difficult, for me at any rate, to judge which form is best. We ought certainly to obtain all the information which we can without unduly hampering the operations of the banks, and we ought even to obtain such information as is essential to a fair view of the situation, though it may, to some extent, hamper them. But we know that some of our banks occasionally place large sums of money at particular points in the States, and do considerable business there. A bank, for instance, may have a large sum of money at an agency in New York and another at an agency in San Francisco; and if you take into account the gross sums due by and to these agencies, you might get, I will not say a perfect view, but a considerable insight into the amount of Canadian funds invested in the United That would be very interesting, if it did not unduly hamper the operations of the banks in the United States. We do not at present ask how much of a bank's capital it is using in Toronto, Montreal, London or other places where it is doing business. Is there any public ground why we should do what is now proposed, if it is going to interfere with the business of our banks in the States? The only ground that has been suggested is, that if it is found that they are investing any large sums of money there, some business tax may be imposed upon them. We know that some of them are obliged to pay a business tax now. I suppose they would like to be in the position of some people who are taxed on income, that nobody but themselves should know on what income this business tax should be computed.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think it is material to find out the details of the balances, if these balances exist as cash; but I think it is unsound to take the amount of the notes which they hold in their agencies, and deduct from them the amount they borrow from the public, and say that the balance represents the true state of that agency. I may tell the Minister one reason, it appears to me, for the adoption of the existing form. At any rate, we know when there were two systems of payment in the United States—legal tender and gold—Canadian banks had two separate accounts in the United States agencies. There might be gold to their credit, and there might be a debit against them in currency; and, in that case it was very usual to strike a balance between these two accounts, according to the market value of the gold and currency at the time. But to extend that principle to the particular notes of customers, which may be in the possession of a New York agent, as gold, and to deduct them from what is due the public, and call the balance a true representation of the position, is wholly illusory. I say, therefore, that the term "balance" is not an appropriate term.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has had full opportunity of laying his views before the House, and as it is now six o'clock, I propose that the Committee settle this matter at once. Taking all things into consideration, I know of no reasons which have arisen in the practical working for changing the present system. I therefore think that the word "balance" should be left in this second clause.

Schedule agreed to on a division.

Committe rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself in Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would beg to move a sub-section to section 89. It is intended to provide for this case. We have to guard against the possibility of the liquidator of an insolvent bank distributing the assets of the bank in liquidation, while some of the notes of the bank remain outstanding. If we do not make some special provision on that subject, we shall find that the assets of an insolvent bank have all been distributed, and that the outstanding notes will remain a charge upon the redemption fund. There are two principles to be kept in view. The first is that the outstanding notes ought to be redeemed, notwithstanding the lapse of time, because it has been shown by experience that in the liquidation of an institution of that kind, many years elapse before all the notes come in; and the Government agree that a bank note, once in circulation, should be susceptible of redemption, no matter how long it may be outstanding. The second principle is that these outstanding notes ought not to form a charge on the fund put up by the other banks after the distribution of the assets of an insolvent bank; and I propose in regard to this, as well as to the unclaimed balances and dividends, that the liquidator shall pay an amount to the Government sufficient to cover the notes still outstanding. The sub-section I propose is as follows :-

Upon the winding up of a bank in insolvency, or under any general winding up Act or otherwise, the assignees, liquidators, directors, or other officials in charge of such winding up, shall, before the final distribution of the assets or within three years from the commencement of suspension of payment by the bank, whichever shall first happen, pay over to the Minister of Finance and the Receiver-General a sum, out of the assets of the bank, equal to the amount then outstanding of the notes intended for circulation issued by the bank; and upon such payment being made, the bank and its assets shall be relieved from all further liability in respect of such outstanding notes.

Sub-section agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the only provision remaining is the one to which the hon. member for South Oxford gave some attention when the Bill was in Committee before. It is desirable to provide, as far as we can, for penalties in the case of notes issued by way of over-circulation. That is not so simple as it appears, in expressing the term "over-circulation," because the fraud, which he pointed out as quite possible under the present system, and which he pointed out as having more temptations under the new than under the old system, is not merely the fraud of issuing a larger amount of the notes than the bank has power of issuing, but of issuing them within their power for fraudulent purposes, but in excess of any legitimate want of the bank. For example, the Bank of Montreal, having power to issue notes to the full extent of its paid up capital, has now the power to issue, I think, $12,000,000. Its issue has never reached half that amount, so that if we merely provide a penalty for issuing more than the bank is entitled to issue, there might be a fraud anywhere within the margin of the $6,000,000 which still remain. The fraud the hon, gentleman dwelt upon is really the fraud of issuing notes not then in circulation, for the purpose of defrauding, and I think the following section will cover it as nearly as possible :-

Every person who, being the president, vice-president, director, principal partner, general manager, or cashier, or other officer of a bank, with intent to defraud, issues, or delivers, or authorises, or is concerned in the issue or delivery of the notes of the bank intended for circulation and not then in circulation, and every person who, with knowledge of such intent, accepts, receives or takes, or authorises or is concerned in the acceptance, receiving or taking of such notes, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding seven years, or to a fine not exceeding $2,000, or to both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has any limitation been fixed within which the guarantee fund shall be liable for notes?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. Of course, the whole fund is available for the redemption of any outstanding notes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is no period fixed within which these notes shall be presented?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is already provided that, if all the notes are not presented when the bank is wound up, the liquidator shall pay to the Government a sufficient amount to meet all outstanding notes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But in the case of a bankrupt estate?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course the liquidator can only pay out of the assets of the bank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, that leaves it undetermined as to the time within which the holders of notes must apply for the redemption of those notes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no limitation of time with regard to that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is for the hon. gentleman to determine. I should have thought that a limitation of time would have been fair and reasonable, but, if the bankers do not want it, I say nothing further.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Committee rise and report the Bill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the Committee rise, I wish to draw attention to a matter in connection with the banks that causes a great deal of inconvenience to business men and to the public generally. The members from Ontario are aware that the general practice is, all over the Province, to close the banks at one o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and I understand the same practice prevails in the other Provinces. I need not tell this honorable House that Saturday, for business men, is generally the most busy day in the week. That is the day on which the largest sales are made, and it is a matter of great importance that the bank should be kept open as long as possible in order to enable business men to make their deposits. It is not only a great inconvenience to business men but it is a great inconvenience also to the farming community. For instance, a farmer comes on Saturday to the market town, after travelling, perhaps, fifteen or twenty miles, with a load of produce; he sells it to warehouses, which are always crowded on those days, and it is, perhaps, after one o'clock before his goods are discharged and he gets his cheque for the money. There is nothing for him to do but to go back all that long distance and come into town again the next week, in order to get his money and make the purchases he intended to make on Saturday. That is found to be an intolerable hardship amongst the farmers generally. Business men have complained to me about it bitterly, and letters have been written to me about this matter since this Bill came before the House. Now, I submit that it is not a great hardship for the banks to keep their branches open on Saturday until the same hour as on other days. That makes only thirty hours in the course of the week that the bank is kept open, and if it is necessary to shorten that time by two hours, it could be done on some other day which is not a large market day. The custom prevails in the city of London, and, I believe, in most of the towns and cities in Ontario, of making Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays the principal market days. If you go into most of the towns and cities on any other day of the week you will see little or nothing being done. I think it is the duty of the banks to the public to make this change. I need not tell the Committee that the banks receive large franchises from the country; they are chartered to do business with the public; they receive their profits and emoluments from the public, and I think it is the duty of this House to provide that these institutions be run as far as possible, for the convenience of the public in this respect, if that can be done without any serious inconvenience to the bank. For these reasons, I move that the following clause be inserted in the Bill:

That all branches of the various banks chartered under this Act be kept open for business on Saturdays until three o'clock in the afternoon, save and except when a bank holiday falls upon a Saturday.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt an inconvenience arises to parties who come in from the country on Saturday, as one of the market days, and who find being quite early in the afternoon. That, however, is an inconvenience of which the House heretofore has not taken cognisance by means of an enactment. It is a thing, I think, which is more to be remedied by the law of demand and supply. These banks wish to do all the business they possibly can, and I think they are always found ready, for the sake of doing business, to accommodate the largest possible number of customers; but I do not think that we could go so far as to fix the hours during which the banks are to be kept open.

Mr. TROW. I entirely concur in the remarks made by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong), and I am in favor of his resolution. If Parliament has anything to do with making rules and regulations for the banks, I think it would be a great convenience to the public that this regula-tion should be adopted. We all know that Saturday is a very busy day for business men, and for the farmers who bring their produce into market on that day, and after they have sold and delivered it, and have partaken of refreshments, it is usually after one o'clock, and the result is that large sums of money that are paid after banking hours cannot be deposited in the bank, nor can cheques be cashed after that hour. I have had experience myself of this inconvenience. Parties have put thousands of dollars into my hands to be kept until Monday, because these parties had not received it until after banking hours on Saturday. I do not know if the House has anything to do with this matter, but if it has, it would be a great convenience to the public to make this regulation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We make regulations for the banks in other matters, why not in this, too? The Minister of Finance says, that competition amongst the banks for business will regulate this matter. But that has not proved to be the case. There is not one iota less business done by the bank, but it is done at inconvenient times, and that is what the public complain of. All that is asked is that Saturdays be made the same as other days of the week, and that the bank be kept open until three o'clock the same as other days, for the accommodation of the public. I submit that this House would be failing in its duty if it does not make some provision in this respect. The banks agree among thomselves to close at that hour. Formerly the banks were kept open Saturdays until the usual hour; of late years an arrangement has been made amongst themselves to close at one o'clock in the afternoon. Some of the banks, I understand, wish to make a change, but none of them desire to be the first to break this agreement. I insist that the people have a right to this accommodation; that is the way in which business is done.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the House cannot fix the hour on Saturday for the banks to close, let it be understood that the banks that close at one o'clock on Saturday cannot protest a note on that day.

Mr. MULOCK. They cannot protest it until three, anyway.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Before the Committee rise, I desire to revert to a point, that seems to me important, in relation to the monthly returns made by the bank. The public of Canada, I believe, the banks closed after a certain hour, that hour have been under the impression that the monthly returns gave the exact condition of the banks making those returns. But, as stated by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in an earlier part of this discussion, it appears these returns are largely misleading. He cited in support of his contention the case of the Bank of British North America. I do not think that bank is singular. I believe the Bank of British Columbia, the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Commerce, the Merchants' Bank, and other Canadian banks having agencies in the United States stand in the same category. The fact appears to be this: That when they return their liabilities in the monthly statement to Ottawa as being so and so, their actual debts are very much in excess of that amount. have here a statement from the return to the Government on 31st December, last year, of the Bank of British North America, and a statement made to the shareholders for the same date, from which I find this, that whereas the deposits were represented to the public of Canada as only $7,500,000, the actual deposits in that bank exceeded $11,000,000, namely, $11,300,000. circulation in both returns is identical, because the bank has not the privilege of circulating its notes outside of Canada. The total liabilities are returned to the public of Canada as $8,827,000, whereas, as a matter of fact, the total liabilities of that bank on 31st December last year exceeded $21,000.000. There appears in the statement of the Bank of British North America to its shareholders this extraordinary item: "Bills payable and other liabilities, $8,650,000," a sum which cannot be found in any part of the return made to the Government of this country. So it is if you look at the assets. The total amount of loans by the bank is returned to the Government as $9,500,000; the estimated total loans of the bank, according to the return made to the shareholders, amounted to $21,000,. 000. I do not say for one moment the bank is not in a solvent state, I believe it is one of the strongest banks we have in Canada; but I do say this, that the creditors in Canada, who accept the notes of the bank and entrust their money to the bank, rely to a great extent on the faith of the double liability, and if it so happened to the bank that in its operations in New York, Chicago or London, engaging as they do in large commercial transactions in those cities, if its assets of a merchantable character proved insecure, if at the time of a commercial crisis they involved a heavy loss to the bank, the security implied would be largely reduced so far as the creditors in Canada were concerned. It is the duty of the Government to so regulate the returns that the true and exact condition of the banks is really known to the creditors in Canada. I know in the case of insurance companies doing business in the United States, the Canadian Life Insurance Company, the Royal Canadian Insurance Company, and other companies of that large class, they are required by law to make a return, not only of their business in this country, but in the adjacent country. The same principle should apply to the banks. Yet to-day we are passing a Bank Bill which does not call on any bank to return its business outside of Canada; and I, therefore, say that the returns hereafter, as in the past, will be utterly misleading in regard to any bank doing business outside of Canada, so far as its creditors in this country are concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in the House before recess when this subject was discussed upon the motion of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), to change the words "balances due at the agencies in foreign countries, and the United Kingdom," by inserting the word "sums," which would give the total gross amount of both assets and liabilities, and thus enable the balance to be arrived at. opinion of the Committee at that time was, that it was not necessary to obtain from the banks a statement as to what business they might be obliged to carry on in the United States, as they very often have to carry on business there, in New York, in San Francisco or Chicago. Of course it is a matter for the Committee to determine, but the determination of the Committee having been given before recess, I do not think it is best to reopen the question.

Mr. BLAKE. I sympathise with the statements of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), and I suggest to the Finance Minister that, as I do not suppose he intends to take the third reading to-night, he should consider the subject and communicate with the banking authorities to ascertain whether there is any real difficulty that can be stated by him on the floor of the House in the way of the suggestion being carried out, because the statement of the hon. gentleman certainly shows that we do not get anything like approaching the facts in the return.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to allow it to go in that way.

Mr. KENNY. I understood the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) to refer solely to the Bank of British North America.

Mr. BLAKE. No; he said there were several others doing business in the United States to which his remarks would apply.

Mr. KENNY. The Bank of British Nort America makes no return to the Canadian Govern ment of its business done in New York, or in San Francisco, or points outside the Dominion, but simply a return of its Canadian business. It is working under an English charter, and it is not under a double liability provision. So it stands in quite a different position from the other chartered banks of Canada. I quite agree with the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) that it is most desirable the returns made by the chartered banks to the Government should be as accurate and as full as possible, in order to give the public the most correct information as regards the condition of the Canadian banks; but I do not see it is advisable that we should call upon the large banks of Canada, to which the remarks of the hon. gentleman evidently referred, to give us the exact details of the exact amount which, every month of their existence, they may have deposited in the United States.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I move in amendment:

That every bank which closes before three o'clock on Saturday shall not be allowed to protest any notes on that day.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill reported.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 143) to amend the Act respecting Customs duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion for the third reading I desire, although I am sorry-I am afraid we on this side of the House cannot give effect to my desireto enter a protest for the last time against the policy the Government has adopted in imposing these additional burdens on the people of Canada. The case before us is one of a very singular character. We have here the Minister of Finance, coming down to the House in his official capacity, informing us that he had a surplus of $2,500,000 or thereabouts—a little less, perhaps, as I calculate it, $2,000,000 I think—on last year's transactions, that he anticipates a surplus of about $2,500,000 on the present year's transactions, that he expects a further surplus of $2,500,000, be it more or less, for next year; and yet, in spite of the surplus for last year, the surplus expected for the present year and the surplus expected for next year, the hon. gentleman, contrary, I may say, to the practice of all civilised nations, proposes, instead of using that surplus for the purpose of alleviating the burdens of the people, he proposes, notwithstanding his surplus, to add largely to the taxes already inflicted on the people of Canada. I am at a loss to understand how the hon. gentleman can justify such conduct to himself, or to the people for whom he is guardian and trustee. I think that the matter is made the worse in the present case, from the extraordinary fashion in which these new taxes are being imposed. If there be any principles which are well established, and which ought, I think, to commend themselves to the common sense of everybody, they are: That particularly in a country which desires immigration, and particularly in a young country, with large areas to settle up, we ought to avoid imposing taxes on articles of prime necessity to the whole people. We should take care to so adjust our taxation, that it should be, as far as possible, equitably distributed over the whole country, and that, above all, taxation should be so arranged that it should not press unequally on the various classes of the population, and most of all, that it should not press heavily on the poorer That we should take care that taxation would be so adjusted as to avoid increasing the taxes on the raw material, and that in a Confederation like ours, no particular section, or no particular Province, should say that a tax was imposed in favor of one Province and to the detriment of another. I might add, Sir, that under existing circumstances, and bearing in mind the relations existing between ourselves and the United States, we ought to be particularly careful not to impose taxation in such a way as to invite retaliation by our neighbors. I doubt whether any tariff was ever submitted to this House, or to this country, or to any other country, which flew more directly in the face of these plain and obvious principles than the tariff which we have now before us. In the first place, that tariff, with the expected surplus of $2,500,000, is likely to add something like $1,000,000 to the burdens of the people, whether or not it brings that amount into the treasury. Mr. Landerkin.

The hon, the Finance Minister did not give us, at the time he made his Budget statement—as I think he ought to have done-anything like a fair estimate of the total amount of the burdens placed on the people by this taxation. But looking at it, as far as I can see after the discussion which has taken place here, I should say that his tax on flour and his tax on meats of various kinds will, in all probability, result in an addition to the burdens of the people of at least $300,000 or $350,000; and more likely the latter than the former sum. The total amount of taxation which he proposes to levy on the various kinds of fruit and fruit trees, is not by any manner of means, easy to estimate; but, apparently, it will approach something like $200,000. At least, that would be the amount which we would have to pay, if our people continue to import as many of these articles in the year now approaching as they did in the past year. The duty on woollen goods and other articles of that description will apparently involve an increase of $125,000, and the duty on minor items, such as animals, fancy goods, cloths, &c., will, I think, approximate very closely to $150,000; that is to say, on the basis of the importations which we are at present making. If, to these, you add the extra duty on spirits—whether you take the hon. gentleman's computation, or the computation made on this side of the House-you would have an increase ranging from $150,000 to $200,000. These calculations do not take into account divers minor increases in the tariff, but the total increases of the burdens of the people will amount to at least a million dollars; whether you get that sum into the revenue or not it is very difficult at present to form an idea. More than that, Sir, you find when you come to examine these various taxes that they are open, in detail, to pretty nearly every objection that can possibly be urged against taxes. The tax on flour and the tax on meat, of necessity, must and will add to the cost of articles of food, and articles of food which are consumed among a very poor class of the population. They will, in addition to that, injure an industry which we are able to do nothing to benefit. They will, more or less, increase the cost of the production of lumber, and they will, more or less, therefore, interfere with that important industry. I can only repeat here what I have said before: that, if the hon. gentleman desires to benefit the farmers of this country, the way in which to do that is, not to increase the duty on pork, but to admit free of duty the corn which is the raw material out of which the pork is made, and that would be in reality a very great and important benefit to the people of Canada. The duty on woollens is bad in itself in every way. That duty, as is perfectly clear, will, as a specific duty, press with special severity on the poorest classes of the population, and will add to their burdens. It is a most objectionable duty on that score alone. I have spoken on the duty on fruit in some detail, during the discussion in this House previously, and I content myself with saying that I cannot imagine a duty which has less to recommend it. It is a duty against health, it is a duty against a wholesome luxury, it is a duty which presses very unfairly upon particular portions of the community, and especially on the Maritime Provinces. It is a sectional tax, therefore, and it is a duty also which practically invites retaliation on the part of our neighbors. Moreover, a useful and important trade was growing up in these articles which the hon. gentleman's policy tends to check, if not to altogether destroy. So it is with the extra duties on iron, and, I may add also, the bounty of iron; in this case we had already a most enormous duty. We had a duty which interfered with the raw material on all kinds of manufactures, and we had a duty which pressed with special severity on the agricultural portion of the community, to whom the hon. gentleman gives no sort of practical protection, and to whom he can give no sort of practical protection, because the price of the great majority of the staple products of the farmer is not and will not be regulated by anything which the Government can do, but by the price in the markets of the world. What the hon, gentleman practically does to the farmers, is to add to the price of everything they have to buy, while he cannot materially increase the price of any important portion of the articles which they raise. Sir, I may ask—and it is a question which is being asked very earnestly throughout the country, even by those over-protected manufacturers, or by many of them whom the hon. gentleman especially desires to conciliate—why meddle with this tariff at all? Many of these persons are aware that the hon. gentleman's policy has done them no good. They are aware that he has disturbed and injured trade, and that he has, by piling on these taxes, added to the opposition which is fast gathering head against the whole protective system. Now, Sir, these changes are mischievous in themselves, and the hon. gentleman and his friends, by reason of their policy, have succeeded in making Canada a very dear country to live in. It is utter folly on the part of the hon. gentleman, and it is utter folly on the part of his friends, to attempt to justify their course by the example of the United States. As I have often and often stated in this House, and as, I think, every man who considers the position of the two countries must feel, even admitting, for argument's sake - although I would not make the admission except for the purposes of argument—that the United States have benefited from their protective system, that is no sort of reason why we, in Canada, should benefit from a protective system here. The truth of the matter is this: The market of the United States is so large, their range of climate is so extensive, their population is so great, that, to a very great degree, they are able to produce, within their own limits, everything a nation can require. In Canada we have no such advantages. We are much more competitors than customers of one another, and, therefore, I repeat, Canada is a country in which it is singularly unwise for us to introduce a protective system; and I may add that all this has been to a very great extent, responsible for the deplorable failure—which every man who has the interest of Canada at heart ought to deplore-not only to attract immigrants to Canada in anything like the numbers which we ought to expect, but, what is much more important in my opinion, to keep our own Canadian-born citizens in our own country. If, to-day, we find a million of our people in the United States, and three out of every four immigrants who come to this country leaving us, there is no greater cause for it than the policy of to prevent importation, then it will prevent which this identical tariff is an extreme example. I do not want on this occasion to do more than record my protest, and with these few remarks I will move:

That all the words after "That" in the main motion be left out, in order to add the words: "in view of the official statement of the Minister of Finance, showing a surplus revenue for the past year, and a probable surplus for the present and succeeding year, the increased taxation proposed to be inflicted upon the people by this Bill, is universities belond upon the people by this Bill, is unjustifiable and unnecessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentle man who has moved this motion has been laudably short in his presentment of his side of the case, and in that respect I shall endeavor to follow his example. The first objection my hon. friend took to this tariff was, that it was brought down by a Finance Minister who had only a few weeks before declared a surplus for the past year, and probable surpluses for the current year and the coming year; and that the effect of the tariff being, in some respects at least, to increase the amount of revenue to be collected, it was against all principles of finance, and therefore reprehensible, that a rate should be levied in advance of what had formerly been levied. I may say, in answer to that, that the changes in this tariff were not made with any idea of increasing the amount of revenue of the country; that was not the purpose for which these rates were levied. As I stated in bringing down the propositions to the House, the changes were necessary, in the opinion of the Government, for two reasons: First, to adjust certain anomalies which had arisen during the years which had intervened between the former arrangement of the tariff and the present; and, secondly, certain other changes had taken place which called for a readjustment of the rates of duty in accordance with the general policy which has guided our legislation in tariff matters for the last ten or twelve years. It was to correct these anomalies, and to provide for certain industries new in themselves, which were not sufficiently protected, and especially, and largely, for the protection of certain farmers' products in this country, that this tariff was introduced and pressed to a conclusion in this House. Now, it is not clear at all, as my hon. friend has admitted, what amount of increased revenue will be the result of these different My hon, friend has been swift to menchanges. tion all the cases of the increases in the rates of duty from which he supposes an increased revenue will be obtained; but he has not been swift to mention the cases, not inconsiderable in number, in which very large reductions have been made in the duties on articles which come into consumption in this country. Now, I want to point out to my hon, friend, and the House, that there are two elements to be considered before come to any conclusion as can what will be the net result in regard actual revenue that will be obtained. In the first place, there are certain articles in which large reductions have been made, and which, on the basis of the importations of former years, will give us a largely decreased revenue, such as the items of glass, molasses, and other items which I might enumerate. On the other hand, there are certain items on which the tariff has been raised; but if the effect of the increase in the tariff, as my hon, friends opposite have for years contended, is the gathering of extra revenue in proportion to the amount of reduction in the imports from foreign countries of goods which are consequently produced in our own country. For instance, we have received large revenues during the past years from meats imported from the United States. If the result of the tariff be what we claim it certainly will be, to reduce the importation of those meats from foreign countries by the increased production of the same classes of meats in our own country for the supply of the necessary consumption of the country, the practical effect of that will be, not to increase the tariff, but to decrease it; and we require to have some months, or perhaps a longer time, of actual experience to know just what will be the net result of the changes we have made. For my own part, aside from the increased revenue that will result from the increased rate of duty on intoxicating liquors, I do not think the increased revenue will be a very large amount, taking the average of the two or three years next to come. But, on the other hand, we have gained, what it was the object of this tariff to gain, and what I think the people of this country, and especially the farming community, will, consider a very great boon. We have, by this tariff, protected the products of the farm to an extent to which they have never yet been protected. We have given our farmers, by protecting them against the importation of meats from the United States especially, the monopoly of the meat supply of this country; and the good to the farmers in that respect will, I think, be appreciated by them. from one end of this country to the other. that, in the first place, it is not sure at all, that we shall have made, in the net result, any very large increase of revenue; and in the second place, if any increase of revenue should come to us in the net result, it will be more than balanced by the good which will result from giving an increased impetus to the agricultural industry. I am free to state that, as the intention was not, by the imposition of these higher rates, to increase the revenue, if, after the new rates have gone into operation, it is found with tolerable accuracy that their net result has been to make the revenue much larger than it is at present, it will be the duty of the Government to see where reductions of taxations can be made, which will inure to the benefit of all classes. My hon friend's next objection is that the result of this legislation will be to destroy the prospects of immigration. He contends that if we make of this country a dear instead of a chear country to live in, we, to the extent to which we succeed in doing this, repel immigration from our Well, there is no country in the world which has been, and still is, a more signal example of the attractive power of new lands to immigrants than the United States, whither immigrants go by hundreds of thousands every year; and the immigration to that country has never been greater than since the inauguration, some twenty or twenty-two years ago, of its protective policy, which policy has ever since been continued in force in an increasing degree. The argument of my hon. friend is not standing on all fours, when he says that by a protective policy we necessarily repel immigration, because the absolute consequence of such a policy is to make the cost of living greater. Immigrants ask for two things. They ask especially that the country to which they go such a statement before, and feel like charac-Mr. Foster.

may be a country where they may earn a fair wage, where they may be able to keep their families in ease and comfort; and it is a very poor argument to say to a man who wishes to leave the old world for the new, that the country he is going to is one where he can get food for next to nothing. He asks for something else; he wants to know whatare the means of employment and what are the wages he can earn; he wants to know something about the conditions of society there, the state of its Government and the nature of its institutions. Sir, I believe to-day that Canada can put before intending immigrants from the old country, who are full of vigor and energy, and wish to make homes for themselves under the best conditions, a country second to none in all the countries in the world which are now inviting immigration. If the effect of this policy has been marked in any one respect it has been in this, that while it has not increased the cost of the necessaries of life to any appreciable degree, it has induced a development in this country which gives to the honest, earnest, industrious man assurance of employment for every working hour and a fair return for his labor. I do not think my hon, friend has at all proved that the fiscal policy which we have adopted and are to-day carrying out, is raising a barrier against that immigration which Canada so much needs. Taking into account the industries which have been developed in this country and the amount of labor engaged in those industries; taking into account our development through the immense lines of communication which we have built, through the facilities for transport we have furnished by means of large expenditures of public money, and the advantages these facilities for cheap transport give us in competing in the markets of the world, we have secured by means of this policy, counteracting compensations which go far to diminish any disadvantage that may be conjured up by hon. gentlemen opposite, and have made this country one of the most desirable fields for earnest, honest and industrious immigrants that the world affords to-day. My hon. friend has also stated, as an objection to the tariff, that it is exceedingly offensive to and invites retaliation from the country to the south of us. I do not need to argue that point to-night. I think we have heard something of that before in this House. I think it would be unworthy of a great and generous people like the Americans to find fault with a country like Canada, or with any other country, for undertaking to advance its own interests by carrying out its own independent line Whoever hears that prominent politiof policy. cians in the United States, that the organs which influence public opinion in the United States, have ever uttered one word, since this tariff has been introduced, in the line of calling it a petty or an audacious piece of retaliation, or offensive legislation? The people of the United States are too great and too generous for that. They carve out their own line of policy; they regulate their own fiscal arrangements, in the best interests of their own people, and are generous and great enough to allow every other people on the face of the earth to do the same. We do not hear anything said about offensive or retaliatory legislation except from hon, gentlemen opposite; for what good purpose they say it, no one can well understand. I have characterised terising it again, as imprudent and not designed to inure to the best interest of our people. It is stated that our policy will be a bar to possible reciprocal trade relations between us and the United States. I ask every gentleman, whose memory runs over the history of forty years, whether or not, as the teaching of all this history and the legislation and counter legislation in both these countries during that period, they would feel justified in deferring any longer carrying out any policy, which they think best in the interest of their own people, out of deference to the idea that possibly by doing so they might be doing something which might militate against the probability of developing trade relations between us and the United States? I say that the student of history for the last forty years cannot point out any broad trend of sentiment in the United States which could lead him to believe that by holding our hands and hesitating and refusing to downat we think is in the best interest of our people, we shall thereby approach any appreciably nearer betterment of trade relations between Canada and the United States. If they could point that out, it might be an argument for this country and this House to stay its hands and to wait awhile longer, but I may point out that the legislation which we have undertaken and which we are about completing now does not militate one iota against any betterment of our trade relations with the United States, the moment that the United States shall meet this country half way, and shall sit down together with us in order to see what can be done to improve the trade relations between the two countries. We are in the same position as we have been for several years past, always holding out a hand to the United States, always giving it to be understood, that, when the people to the south of us are willing to sit down with us and discuss this matter, are willing to meet us half way and to arrange a basis of reciprocal trade with us, this country is willing to conclude such an arrangement But what do we find in the history of the past forty years? In 1846 and from that on, there was a large sentiment in this country, and there was also a large sentiment in the country to the south of us, that reciprocal trade relations in natural products would be beneficial to both countries, and would be especially beneficial to this And why? Because at that time, our manufacturing industries were not developed; the market for our agricultural products was not developed; we had to import our manufactures, and we had to seek markets abroad for what we produced. Therefore, we felt that if we could get reciprocal trade relations with the country to the south of us, it would be a benefit to this country. That reciprocal trade was brought about, and it was undoubtedly a benefit to us, and also a benefit to the United States. Why is that reciprocity treaty not in force to-day? It is not the fault of Canada, but it is because of the dissatisfaction felt in the United States with that treaty and with its results that, notwithstanding all the efforts made by this country, and by Great Britain on behalf of this country, that treaty was abrogated on the first opportunity, and never since has there been any period when there has been any fair, any practical, any earnest effort on

Treaty of 1854, which was abrogated in 1866. There are certain statements which are put forward, but you have to put up against them the practical trend of sentiment in the United States. They tell us that President Cleveland opened the way to such an arrangement when he proposed in his Message to Congress that an international commission should sit to take into consideration the best means to be adopted, not only for the arrangement of the fishery question, but also for the arrangement of the general trade relations between the two countries. They handed that out to us as being the absolute feeling of the United States of America, showing that they desired to give us reciprocity in trade relations on broad and generous lines. But what did that amount to? A few days afterwards, the Senate of the United States, the dominating legislative body of the United States, by an almost unanimous vote, declared that no such commission should sit. Later on, when Mr. Bayard wrote some letters showing a kindly and a broad sentiment as to trade relations with this country, we were told that he voiced the feeling of the people of the United States. But what did that amount to, put side by side with the result when Sir Charles Tupper was in Washington in 1888, when he proposed that we should sit down side by side with them and try to arrange these fish-ery difficulties on the general basis of trade relations between the two countries, and when he was told that his proposition could not be entertained, because, if it was entertained by the Cabinet, it would not be entertained by the legislative body of the United States. Now we are told that Mr. Hitt's resolution, which is as general as possible, and as thin as air, which is sent to a Committee and reported back from that Committee, voices the opinion of the people of the United States as to trade relations with this country. Yet, Mr. Hitt's resolution is not dry on the paper on which he wrote it when Mr. Mc-Kinley, representing the dominant party in the United States, representing the Republican party which was victorious in the last election on a platform of increased and strengthened protection, as voicing the views of that dominant party, puts forth a tariff resolution in a series of items every one of which, as far as the interests of Canada are concerned, is prejudicial to freer trade in the products which Canada has to sell to the United States of America. I put this practical view of the case against these individual statements of general good-will, and I reiterate that no student of the history of the last twenty-five years can show any broad general trend of sentiment on the part of the people of the United States in favor of freer trade relations with this country. Mr. Hitt's resolution were practicable, what does it amount to? It amounts to this, that we shall give up our right to make our own tariff regulations, that we shall build up a wall against the whole world, and take down every barrier between us and the country to the south of us, that our internal taxes shall be placed on a level with theirs, and, I may ask, at whose domination? At that of the people of five millions or at that of the people of sixty millions? Any one can answer that question without difficulty. That is the sort of trade relation which is offered to us. Trade with the part of the United States to renew that treaty, trade relation which is offered to us. Trade with or to build up a better one on the ruins of the the United States, and a Chinese wall against the rest of the world, based on a tariff which is at a low average 20 or 30 per cent. higher than the tariff we now possess, and yet the free traders of the Opposition are willing, in that case, to put a tariff wall against the world of 40 per cent., and to adopt trade relations with the country to the south of us on that principle. Giving my individual opinion, and in that I believe I voice the opinion of the party to which I belong, I say that, although we are willing to sit down with the people of the United States, or those of any other country, and, after mature deliberation, to enter into a trade relation which would be mutually beneficial, we are not willing to adopt any such scheme as unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union opens up to us. I repeat that we have waited long enough, that the trend of sentiment in the United States does not justify us in waiting any longer, and that what we have to do is to sit down here, as the citizens of a great and free country, and to make our own tariff square with our own interests, and, in a spirit of courtesy and a spirit of prudence, with the heartiest goodwill towards the country to the south of us and to every other country, to do what we consider best for our own interests. That is what we are doing now. Our hon, friends opposite say we are trying to catch the farmers' votes. We do not legislate in order to catch votes, but, if we are charged with desiring to catch votes on this side of the House, with what greater degree of truth can that charge be pressed on hon, gentlemen opposite. Sir, when every cry has failed from 1878 up to the present time, what is the latest cry that has gone forth in trumpet tones from almost every seat on that side of the House, and from almost every hustings in the country? It has been a cry raised by hon, gentlemen opposite to catch the farmers' vote, by trying to persuade them that they are overridden with tyrannous taxation, by telling them that we have legislated against their interest; and the fact that accounts for the milk in the cocoanut to-day is that while hon. gentlemen opposite have been talking, talking, talking about the farmers and doing nothing, we have come down and done something real and tangible for the farmers. Now, Sir, when we have gone so far to protect the farmers as we have in this tariff, a step that is appreciated by nine-tenths of the farmers in this country-and hon. gentlemen opposite know it-a step which commended itself of the House that I have not heard a miller on that side protest against the increase of the duty on flour, though I have heard one of the most rabid-using that word in its qualified sense — free traders on that side of House get up a storm in this committee because the duty on pork was not 3 cents per pound all round. Sir, I like a consistent free trader like the hon. member from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) opposite, who is looking at me now, but I cannot understand that kind of free trade, founded on a principle as everlasting and as solid as the rocks, according to which, when the item of pork comes up in which his own constituency is vastly interested, the member for Queen's, P.E.I., raises a storm in this House because we propose to put 1½ instead of 3 cents a pound upon some species of pork. Now, if my hon, friend and his party think that it is unjustifiable, that it is wrong, and not in the interest Mr. Foster.

of the farmer to protect the producers of pigs and the producers of beef in this country, against the ruinous competition from the other side, let them vote against it. They may vote against it, they will not vote it down; but the very moment that they rise to vote against that which the farming interest of this country, despite all they say, know and believe to be to their interest, that very moment they not only fail in voting it down in this House, but they go a long way to voting themselves down in the country at the next election.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is rather an unexpected and a lively episode.

Mr. BOWELL. Who began it?

Mr. CHARLTON. We may ask that question after a while. The hon, gentleman in his speech told us that upon this side of the House we are fishing for the votes of the farmers. Sir, since 1878 there has been one party in this country that has made it its special duty and business to fish for the votes of the farmers, and that party is the party advocating this so-called and mis-called National Policy. Every argument with regard to that policy has been so placed before the country, as to seek to induce the agricultural population of Canada to believe that it was a policy conceived in their interest. Now, after that policy has been in operation for some years, after the farmer is beginning to feel the evil effect of the policy that wrings money from him in every way, that increases the cost of every article that he produces, that wrings from him a vast revenue which the Government derives from Customs duties, that wrings from him in indirect taxation in the enhanced cost of the domestic productions of this country, twice as much as he pays to the Government, a policy that is making him poor, which is driving the popula-tion of this country from Canada, which is depressing the value of real estate in this country, which brings upon this country a gloom and depression that are sitting like a nightmare upon every agricultural interest in Canada—when this fact is beginning to be appreciated by the farmers, then the hon. gentleman comes down with this miserable subterfuge that he has to offer to the farmers, and seeks, forsooth, to make them believe that he is giving them some degree of protection that will compensate them for the robbery they have endured at his hands for the last ten years. Sir, the farmers are getting too well instructed in this country to believe any such statement as that made by the Minister of Finance to night, and he will no more benefit the position of the farmer by this tariff than will the McKinley Bill benefit the farmers of the United States. That tariff is now being pressed through the Congress of the United States in order to secure the farmers' votes in the congressional elections this fall.

I do not know whether the hon, gentleman and his colleague, the President of the Council, will seek to reconcile their divergent views with regard to reciprocity. The other night the President of the Council informed us that we did not want reciprocity in natural products, that it was not necessary, that Canada did not require anything of the kind. But the Minister of Finance to-night tells us that we are willing to accept reciprocity on a fair basis. Well, what do those two hon, gentlemen mean, and how do they reconcile the respective views they have placed before this House and before the country with regard to this important question-this question of more importance to the future of Canada than any other question with which we shall be called upon to deal? The one is not in favor of it at all, the other is in favor of it upon certain conditions and terms. Now, I would ask the hon. Finance Minister what he would consider a treaty of reciprocity upon fair terms? Would he consider that reciprocity in natural products alone would be reciprocity based upon fair terms? Would he consider that if he made one step in advance of reciprocity in natural products, he would be accepting the conditions required for reciprocity upon fair terms? I presume the hon. gentleman would say that; I presume he would tell this House that reciprocity in fair terms was a reciprocity treaty confined to free trade in natural products between the two countries. Well, I can tell the hon. gentleman that that would not constitute a reciprocity treaty upon fair terms, even if it was on that basis that the Americans agreed to the last reciprocity treaty. was a treaty which enabled us, during the eleven years that it was in operation, to sell to them something like double the amount of productions free of duty that we bought from them; we sold to them about $120,000,000 worth in excess of the amount we purchased from them under the operation of that treaty; and the Americans very justly urged that if the reciprocity treaty was to be one upon fair terms they should be allowed to sell to us some of the products of their labor in return for the products of our labor that they purchased from us. We were selling to them our natural products, and we were not buying natural productions of them except such as came in transit to our country for export. We had very little demand for their wheat for consumption, very little demand for their oats, very little demand for any production of their far-mers except corn. We did not buy lumber of them, we did not buy fish of them; scarcely any of the natural productions of the field, the forest or the mines, produced in the United States, found a market in Canada for consumption, and the Americans said: if we are to have a reciprocity treaty on fair and equitable terms, we must have one that will enable us to sell to you some of our own productions in exchange, for the productions that you raise and sell to us. Well, Sir, that is just such a treaty as we must make with the Americans if we ever make one at all; it is just such a treaty as, in the nature of the case, they may fairly demand, and if the Government of the day in Canada are not prepared to negotiate for a reciprocity treaty upon a fair and equitable basis, a treaty that will enable the Americans to sell to us as well as enable us to sell to the Americans, then they are not in favor of a treaty upon fair and equitable terms, they are mocking the country, and the assertions they are making are a delusion when they assert that they are in favor of a treaty upon fair and equitable terms. Sir, they are not in favor of such a treaty; no reciprocity that is attainable, no reciprocity treaty that can be defended upon grounds of equity and justice, would be accepted by the Government that now rules Canada with regard to this and all other matters. The hon. gentleman, in the statement he has made to night, is misleading the country, and he is endeavoring to mislead this House when he makes the assertion that his party and his Government are willing to accept a reciprocity treaty on fair and equable terms. He told us that the High Commissioner said the Americans would not listen, when he was in Washington, to a trade proposal. Why would they not? Because of the wretched fatuity, because of the recklessness of the Government in its dealings with the United States, because of the irritation caused by their fishery regulations, because of the irritation created by their canal toll discriminations, because of the irritation created by various other acts of this Government, acts that seem to have been expressly designed to create that degree of irritation that would prevent the possibility of opening negotiations for a reciprocity treaty, or of carrying such negotiations through to a successful completion. That is why the High Commissioner when at Washington found the state of things existing in that capital that he did find existing there. He declared that the acts of this Government, the folly of this Government in its treatment of and its dealings with the Government of the United States had brought us to the very verge of war, and one or two more steps in the very direction in which we were going might have precipitated hostilities. The Finance Minister in his speech has told us that the Hitt Resolutions were scarcely cold before the McKinley Tariff was introduced. The McKinley Bill was introduced first this session, and its provisions were invited by the actions of this Government, by the idiocy of the policy of this Government, in its trade relations with that great We are unable to dictate terms to the United States, and it is folly for us to attempt to do it. Five millions of a tail is hardly able to swing sixty-five millions of a dog, and although we are a very great people according to our numbers, we cannot intimidate, we cannot coerce, we cannot by a hostile tariff control a nation of 65,000,000. It is an utter mistake to imagine we can do so.

Mr. DAVIN. We are not the tail of the dog. Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member, the blatherskite from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I withdraw the expression. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to withdraw the expression.

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly, I have withdrawn it. I did it inadvertently, I thought he was outside, when an unpalatable truth might be stated. The hon. Minister of Finance in speaking of the Hitt Resolutions told us that they were hardly cold before the McKinley Tariff was introduced. The McKinley Tariff Bill is a measure of the character we might expect to have, judging by the policy of this Government towards the United States. It is a specimen of the legislation that this Government has invited, it is a specimen of the condition of things that will exist between these two Governments so long as the policy is pursued that has been pursued and is being pursued by the present Government of Canada. The Hitt Resolutions on the other hand, constitute an offer. They are holding out the olive branch, and they are an indication that if we wish to treat the United States in a spirit of amity and fairness, and if we are actuated by a desire to have more intimate trade relations with that country, notwithstanding the McKinley Tariff, with all its obnoxious provisions, the United States Government are ready to enter into negotiations with Canada. Those resolutions are not, as the hon. Minister of Finance has told us, a proposition to accept commercial union. It is not a defined proposition of any character or nature whatever, but, it is a broad general proposition on the part of the United States, that whenever this Government indicates a desire to secure more intimate commercial relations, and we appoint three commissioners for the purpose of negotiating asto the terms on which such relations can be secured, the United States will proceed to meet those overtures, by appointing three commissioners to meet our own, to arrange, not the terms of any treaty already definitely defined as to its character, but to seek to arrange a reciprocity treaty, without definitely stating in advance what the basis of that arrangement shall be. And we are not warranted in saying that it must be this thing or that thing, we are not warranted in saving it must be commercial union, we are not warranted in saying it must be unrestricted reciprocity; but we have an offer placed before us, inviting us to see whether the two countries can reconcile their differences and can agree upon a plan, a plan of unrestricted reciprocity, a plan for greater freedom of trade. And if our commissioners were appointed, and if they were to meet those of the United States, and if a treaty could not be negotiated satisfactory to this country, we are not obliged to ratify it. But we believe it is disregarding our highest and best interests in this matter in refusing at least to make the attempt. If the offer is made inviting us to enter into negotiations, surely no one has a right to assert that an arrangement satisfactory to both countries cannot If the Government refuse that be negotiated. overture, if they refuse to enter upon negotiations, if they refuse the offer made by the United States to make an attempt to secure reciprocity, they indicate on their part a determination that they will not have reciprocity, that they have no desire for reciprocity. If they spurn the offer made by a friendly power to see whether our differences cannot be adjusted and whether we cannot arrange a treaty, the Government refuse to take the first step, and they say, in effect, that they will have nothing to do with the overture, but they will endeavor to persuade the country that they could not accept such an offer because, forsooth, we could obtain nothing but terms which would be unadvisable and unacceptable to our people. They have no right to make such an assumption. refusing to make the attempt to secure such a treaty they are not acting in the interests of the people.

The hon. Finance Minister has told us that the United States tariff wall is very much higher than ours. The amount of revenue derived from customs in the United States is lower than ours by over $1 per head, and, if that is the case, our own tariff wall must be the higher of the two; and if we entered into an arrangement for unrestricted reciprocity, if we were obliged to accept the American duties, the amount exacted from the people would be less than it is to-day. No; we are not invited to enter into any arrangement, we are not invited to enter into any arrangement definitely defined. We are merely asked to enter into negotiations to see if an arrangement can be made, and I repeat that the hon. Finance Minister is deceiving the country, whether purposely or not it is not for me to say, when he tells this House it is impossible to negotiate a reciprocity treaty except upon onesided terms that are not fair and equitable. It is possible that we might negotiate a reciprocity treaty on the broadest and most equitable terms, on terms perfectly fair and in the highest degree advantageous to this country, and I venture to say if the hon. gentleman to my right (Sir Richard Cartwright) were Finance Minister, and if the Liberal party of Canada occupied the seat now occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite, that six months would not elapse before a treaty would be arranged between these two countries that would be conducive to the highest interests of Canada, and which would cause this country to enter on that era of prosperity which never will come so long as its affairs are mismanaged as they are being mismanaged to-day, and as they have been mismanaged for the last ten years.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat has closed with the remark that if the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) were in the position of Finance Minister, and if the Liberal party were enthroned in power where the Conservatives are now, that everything would go on well, that an arrangement would be made with the United States which would exactly suit his view, that a reciprocity treaty would be effected on broad and liberal grounds according to his own statement, and an admirable commercial policy would be inaugurated. You have only to go to Hansard, because we had Hansard when the Liberal party were in power, and when that hon. gentleman rose and denounced the policy adopted by the Liberal party as its commercial policy, to ascertain that he brought forward a proposal for protection, a strong statement, the strongest statement ever made in this House in favor of protection. I know that I am speaking by the book when I say that he was a protectionist then, as he has remained a protectionist ever since, and as he is a protectionist to-day, and the hollow sound of his oratory in this House, if oratory it can be called, can be accounted for by the fact that it is founded on insincerity; it has the ring of insincerity about it. The hon, gentleman does not mean what he says, and the consequence is that if you listen to him by the hour, you will find that he lays down one proposition at one moment and the next moment he lays down a proposition that contradicts The hon, gentleman has left the Chamber now. I remember that on another occasion, outside of this House, and the first time that I had to reply to him, he slunk away from the platform, and they brought their band to drown my voice and to take away the crowd, but they did not succeed in doing either. The hon, gentleman has to-night shown what the result would be if parties crossed the floor of this House. In that event, I suppose the hon, gentleman would have a seat on the Treasury Bench, and the effect on the tone of this House would be that we should see the elegant manners which belong to our friends across the line introduced here. It is a proper thing to interrupt a member when he is speaking, if you do not interrupt him in a way which is intended to disconcert him, and when the hon, gentleman stated that the 5,000,000 tail—it was an elegant expression—could not wag the 6,000,000 dog, I remarked, "but the tail in this case does not belong to the dog, and 5,000,000 in this country are perfectly independent. The 5,000,000, instead of being a tail to the 60,000,000, is a complete and organic animal. It is a political animal destined probably to grow to something even more formidable than the 60,000,000 may come to, and my remark ought to have given the hon. gentleman an opportunity of seeing that this was after all an argument to be met. Now, Mr. Speaker, the speech we listened to from the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to-night, is the same speech precisely which we have listened to session after session, and what is the character, invariably, of that speech? Why Sir, if any stranger were to come in here, would he suppose that the hon, member for North Norfolk represented a Canadian constituency? Would he suppose that he represented a British constituency? No; he would fancy that by some extraordinary freak, a citizen of the United States had surreptitiously got in here and taken a seat amongst us, and that he had risen in this House to advocate the claims of the United States, and to denounce everything that could promote the welfare of this country. One need not proceed to refute such arguments as he has advanced. I say that the tone persistently adopted by the hon. member—a tone invariably adopted not only by him, but by other members of the Opposition, although he is the most flagrant offender in that line is invariably pro United States, and against Canada; and against everything that could exalt this young and great country of ours. One is accustomed to hear language of humiliation in this House used by gentlemen on the Opposition benches in regard to our vast country with its splendid resources, and with a population as large as England had in the great Elizabethan days, when she began her career of empire. We are accustomed to hear men talking here as though this country, with its vast resources and its splendid population, need to veil its crest and to bow its head before any nation of the world. We have, I maintain, in Canada, with our incohate wealth, with our developed and organised resources, with our institutions and with the character of our population, a country that instead of talking with bated breath, and going as it were on her knees to other countries to beg favors, can hold proud language in the face of any country in the world, and can hold a strong faith that it will culminate in a great nation. I do hope that the attention of the electors, who have sent such men as the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to this House, will be directed to the humiliating rhetoric which we hear from him, and that they will send men to us who will have a Canadian note in their utterances, and who will express a feeling of Canadian and British sentiments, instead of sentiments which are degrading and grovelling and which ask Canada to go on her knees to the United States. It is not necessary, Sir, that I should enter seriously into the statements made by the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), because they have been refuted again and again in this House. He is perpetually twisting the same rope of sand. There is nothing new whatever in his statements, and if we were to sit here up to the crack of doom, I believe the hon.

gentleman would be found twisting the same rope of sand. Probably, I might have gone on a little longer if the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)——

Some hon, MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. DAVIN. No, excuse me, allow me to finish the sentence. If the inspiring presence of the hon. gentleman from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) were here—because it does one good to see that inspiring presence—I might continue longer, but in the hon. gentleman's absence, my inspiration is gone, and so I will not trouble the House any further.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not consider it my duty to allow the speech made by the hon. the Minister of Finance to pass without a few remarks in reply. The hon, gentleman took the opportunity, at the close of his Budget speech, to attempt to present to the country arguments in favor of what he thinks is protection to the farmer. This is no new argument for the farmers of the country to hear from members of this Government. They have listened to promises of that kind ever since the inception of the National Policy. The hon. First Minister, when the National Policy was inaugurated, declared, that he was going to find the farmers of this country a lucrative home market for their products. There is not one single promise which has ever been made by hon, gentlemen opposite to the agriculturists of this country which has ever been fulfilled. The hon. Minister of Finance puts his points very logically and presents his arguments with great force, but I tell him across the floor of this House, that the farmers of this country have their eyes open to the ruin his policy is causing them, and he will not be able to close them. When he goes before the farmers, and pretends to show them that they are benefited by the operation of the National Policy, and by putting a duty upon pork, in order, if possible, to get them out of the financial embarrassment into which his policy has plunged them, they will realise the fallacy of his statements, and they will tell him that they have suffered too long under the burdens of this policy which has robbed them, and which to-day has them mortgaged to such an extent that they are not able to pay their encum-brances. The farmers have listened too long to the false promises made by members of the Government. They were disposed at one time to alter their political allegiance, so as to give the First Minister a trial. They have given him trial after trial, and were it not for the blinded confidence they have reposed in that man, year after year, they would have spewed out of their mouth the men who robbed them and who deceived them; the men who made statements which have never been realised, and who inaugurated a policy which has driven them to the verge of ruin. Now, Sir, does the Finance Minister fancy that the farmers of this country, in their jeopardised condition, are so foolish as to listen to his statements about the advantages he is going to bestow on them by the duty on pork? He knows perfectly well that we export large quantities of pork. If he had permitted hogs and corn to come in free, our people would have been put in the position to produce the pork which our lumbermen require. But he will not give them that chance. The hon. Finance Minister said that the hon, member for South Oxford was very apt at picking out the items in which increases were made, but very slow in finding those in which reductions were made; and he gave us two items in which reductions were made. I challenge him to give us two more items in which any substantial reductions were made. He cannot do it. They would not amount to more than $50,000 or $60,000 altogether. Now, the hon. Finance Minister, and those around him, will make very determined efforts to persuade the farmers of this country that they are going to be benefited largely by this policy. He is something like a man I once heard of who was travelling along a road, and who met a very simple, innocent creature carrying the mails from place to place. He was riding on a pony and he had the mail bags in front of him. The man felt great sympathy for the pony, and he said to the mail carrier: "The best thing you can do is to take the bags on your back, so that you will carry the bags and the pony will carry you, and in that way you will carry part of the burden." My hon. friend tries to persuade the farmers of this country that the Government are going to carry part of their burden for them; but the farmers have been so long listening to the wily statements made to them as to how the National Policy was going to make them rich that they will be slow to believe the statements which the hon. gentleman may make to them, and he will find that such statements will not go far to secure their votes. If he wanted to do the farmers any good, why did he not reduce the duty on iron? He admits that he had a surplus last year and that he anticipates a surplus this year and next year. Iron enters largely into the commodities the farmers use, and if he wants to benefit them, why not take the duty off iron and enable them to buy their machinery at a lower cost than they are able to do to-day? The hon, gentleman stated that in the United States a protective policy had secured an enormous influx of immigration, and a great increase of wealth in contrast with Canada. I ask my hon. friend why he did not go to Victoria, Australia, and compare that country with New South Wales. But it did not suit his argument to go there. He would have found that Victoria, But it did not suit his argument since introducing a protective policy, has not had the prosperity that has been enjoyed by New South Wales, whose population and wealth are increasing to an extent not found in the other protected colony. Now, the United States are proposing to put a duty on eggs, and what have hon. gentlemen done? Simply to encourage the manufacturers of egg boxes in Canada, they put a duty on the boxes, and they will not allow Americans to bring their egg boxes to this country without paying a duty on the them. It is by such pernicious and contemptible acts that they have driven the Americans to do what they have done; and I say to the people and farmers of this country that they will never get an unrestricted treaty with the United States or even a treaty in a modified form, such as we had before, so long as hon, gentlemen opposite occupy the Treasury benches of this country, simply because they have pinned their colors to the mast and have declared themselves absolutely in favor of the manufacturing institutions of this country. They have taken the manufacturers under their wing, and the manufacturers, in return, when the time comes for an election, will see that money is forthcoming. It is a bargain that I have no doubt will be faithfully carried out as between the Government and the manu- Dawson, facturers. But I tell hon. gentlemen that they will realise that the farming community of this country are not going to shut their eyes and ears to the facts and arguments presented. They are not going to be deceived as they have been in the past. They are in the position of the poor man to whose house a preacher went to talk religion, and who said: "What is the use, when there is no flour in the house?" You go to them and talk your theories of protection, and they will tell you: "We are reduced to-day to the verge of financial ruin, and you tell us that your National Policy makes us rich." I earnestly hope that the arguments that have been used from time to time with regard to the pernicious results of this National Policy will wake up the farmers of this country, as I believe they are now waked up, to the actual facts of the case.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon member for Lévis has voted, and I understand he paired with the hon member for Haldimand.

Mr. GUAY. I think the hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. The hon. member for Haldimand asked me, a few minutes before the vote, to pair because he had to go away. I told him he could pair with the hon. member for Quebec Centre or the hon. member for Dorchester, but for my part, I would not pair with him.

SUPPLY—TIMBER LIMITS.

m Mr.}$ FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HICKEY. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring before the House a matter in which it is interested and of the particulars of which I think it should be in possession. Some time ago the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) made a statement in this Chamber, which I then strongly denied and as strongly characterised. In order that I might speak with more definiteness on this subject at variance between us I caused a motion to be placed on the Order paper, asking for the correspondence and papers relating to the timber limit license for which it was claimed I was an applicant. Finding it impossible to reach the motion, I embrace this opportunity of placing before the House all the facts regarding that transaction, and I believe the evidence will clearly substantiate the correctness of my denial and as truly make bare the base and unadulterated wickedness of the statements of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I do this, not only out of regard for this House, and through it to the country and to my constituents, whose good opinion I properly respect and cherish, but also to myself, for in this matter I have done no wrong either to Parliament or to society, and I will not allow my name to be clouded by the evil machinations of polished hypocrites or by the sophistries of moral charlatans. As to the accusation I find in Hansard of 1886, in a speech made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in regard to the granting of timber limit licenses, on page 1033, the hon. gentleman said:

"I have gone through it carefully, and some of the results of that investigation I will give to the House later on,"

And on the next page, 1304, the hon. gentleman said, under the heading of "Members of the House of Commons and Senate who have received Timber Limits by Order in Council for themselves," he specifies that:

"C.E. Hickey, M.P. (00-applicant with Wm. Broder)—Order in Council for self and partner, fifty miles, Lake Kogwankok, Man., April 30, 1884."

On 11th March last, in referring to this matter again, the hon. gentleman said:

"I propose to call attention to some of the things done under this Government; some of the things that the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) voted were right and refused to vote were wrong, when a motion was made in this House in May, 1886, concerning them. I found, on examining the records of the Department of the Interior, that there had been timber limits granted, upon the personal application of members of this House and the Senate, to seventeen different members of those different bodies."

He then mentioned several names, and continued:

"I find that C. E. Hickey was an applicant, in connection with his partner, Wm. Broder, for one limit."
Being out of the House at the time and returning shortly afterwards, I took the opportunity of saying:

"I understand that, when I was out of the Chamber, the hon member for North Norfolk said that I had been an applicant for a timber limit. I wish to say, that I never made an application for a timber limit in the North-West, or in any other part of this country. The same statement was made by the hon member for North Norfolk a few years ago, before the last election, and it was brought up against me in my county."

I made some further remarks, but they are not pertinent. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in reply said:

"I rise to an explanation in answer to the hon, member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey). The return to my motion for the names of those who had acquired timber limits was received in 1886. There are some 400 or 500 pages foolscap to examine. I went through these returns and selected out the correspondence and Orders in Council making grants to various members of both Houses. I did this in discharge of a public duty, and endeavored to do it impartially; and among the Orders in Council, I found one for C. M. Hickey, M. P., coupled with the name of Wm. Broder. The Order in Council was granted for at imber limit of fifty miles on a lake in Manitoba, and was dated 30th April, 1884. I was governed by the document."

I replied:

"I would like to remind the hon, gentleman that that is his own language. I do not believe that any such Order in Council was ever issued. It is not right to say it is an Order in Council. It is some time ago since this happened and I have not looked the matter up, but I know I never made an application. All I did was to urge the application of Mr. Broder on the Government, and they would decide as to whether he should have it or not."

That is the record with respect to the matter at variance between us. I hold in my hand the return of the Department of the Interior in regard to the application made by Mr. Broder and my association with it. It will be necessary that I should go through the record, but I will do so as rapidly as possible. On 2nd November, 1884, Mr. Broder made this application:

" Morrisburg, 2nd November, 1882,

"Sir,—I beg to make application for a timber limit fifty square miles situated as follows: On the west side of Humbug Bay commencing at the mouth of the Washow River extending west along said river 8\frac{1}{2} miles, thence north by a depth of 6 miles, as shown on the annexed plan.

plan. "I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) "WILLIAM BRODER."

Hon. members will see by that letter that my name is not mentioned, and that the application is made by William Broder, and made for himself. On 8th November same year Mr. Broder wrote:

" MORRISBURG, 8th November, 1882.

"SIR,-On 2nd I made application for a timber limit and as yet am without reply with reference thereto. I trust my application will receive favorable consideration.
"I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,
(Signed) "WILLIAM BRODER."

On 13th November there is a letter from the Department, signed by Lindsay Russell, addressed to William Broder, as follows:

"WILLIAM BRODER, Esq., Morrisburg.

Department as follows:—

"I have, &c., your letter of the 8th inst., having further reference to your application for a timber limit on the Washow River, and to reply that the ground in question is covered by a grant to the prior applicant.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "A. RUSSELL,
"For the Surveyor General."

For the Surveyor General."

On the 22nd November Mr. Broder wrote to the

" Morrisburg, 22nd November, 1882.

"Morrisher Rg. 22nd November, 1882.

"Sir,—I beg to amend my application of 2nd November for a timber limit on west shore of Humbug Bay, said limit being partly covered by a grant to Mr. D. Macmillan. I hereby substitute the following: Commencing at a point on the said west shore of Humbug Bay, distant three miles northerly from the mouth of the Washow River, thence westerly along the northerly limit of the berth granted to Mr. D. Macmillan, eight and one-third miles, thence due north six miles, thence easterly parallel to the said southerly limit of Mr. D. Macmillan's berth, to the shore of Humbug Bay, thence southerly along the shore to the place of beginning.

"Your obedient servant.

"Your obedient servant,
"WILLIAM BRODER."

I wish to call special attention to this letter, because it will explain the letter I wrote in reference to this matter when I read it; that is in regard to the part covered by D. Macmillan's application. Then, on the 24th November, Mr. Broder finding it was necessary to write another letter in reference to the same application, sent the following :-

"Morrisburg, 24th November, 1882.

"Morrisburg, 24th November, 1882.

"Sir.—On the 2nd instant I made application for a timber limit on the west side of Humbug Bay, north of the Washow River.

"Finding said limit partially covered by a grant to Mr. D. Maemillan, I amended my application on the 22nd instant, by moving three miles north. I now find that my amended application conflicts with applications made by Mr. W. H. Cooper, who has made application for four limits, although but one can be granted. As it is uncertain which of those four limits will be granted him, I am obliged to further amend my said application so as to take in territory enough to secure a limit of the regulation size, fitty square miles, and beg leave to amend my said application as follows:

"Commencing on the Washow River, sixteen and two-thirds miles westerly from Humbug Bay, thence north three miles, thence westerly along said river, eight and one-third miles, thence south six miles to a point three miles south of the said river, thence easterly eight and one-third miles, thence north six miles to the place of beginning.

one-third miles, thence north six miles to the place of beginning.

"Also a limit commencing on the west shore of Humbug Bay, six miles northerly from the north-east corner of the limit granted to the said Mr. D. Macmillan, thence northerly along the bay six miles, thence westerly parallel to the northerly line of said limit granted to Mr. D. Macmillan, eight and one-third miles, thence southerly six miles, thence easterly parallel to the said northerly line of Mr. D. Macmillan's limit, eight and one-third miles to the place of beginning.

"I have the honoret be

"I have the honor to be,
"Your obedient servant, "WM. BRODER."

On the same date there is a letter accompanying this, in which Mr. Broder says:

Mr. HICKEY.

"I forward herewith an amended application for a timber limit. I am anxious to secure a limit of fifty square miles, but find one or two men have been allowed to cover so much territory with applications that it is difficult to locate, not knowing which of the limits they have applied for may be granted them."

On 5th December, 1882, Mr. Broder writes the Department again:

"MORRISBURG, 5th December, 1882.

"SIR,-On 24th November I made application for timber limit. As yet am without reply to same.
"I am anxious to know if my application has been considered favorably.

"I have the honor to be,

"Your obedient servant, (Signed) "WILLIAM BRODER."

Then comes a letter which I wrote, and which I suppose is the foundation of the hon. gentleman's accusation-in fact, I am sure it is. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that all the correspondence so far shows that Mr. Broder's application affected the limit applied for by Mr. Macmillan and some others. Mr. Broder having visited the Department along with me and finding out that Mr. Macmillan's survey was to have been in on the 17th April, and it was then understood that I should go to the Department and see if it was presented on the 17th April. It was understood from the Department that if that survey was not in, then Mr. Broder should be an equal applicant with Mr. Macmillan, as Mr. Macmillan having the survey, had a prior claim. But if his survey was not completed on a certain date, he would stand in the same position with Mr. Broder. On the 20th April, 1883, I wrote the following letter:-

" 20th April, 1883.

"Sir,—Macmillan having failed in his agreement to have survey of timber limit in on the 17th inst., I claim, on behalf of Wm. Broder, the right to be a co-applicant for the limit covered by the application of Macmillan. "I trust we will get that equal consideration.
"Yours truly,

"CHAS. E. HICKEY." (Signed)

Now, Mr. Speaker, no person can possibly mistake that letter, unless he wishes to have it mean what it does not. It is plain that I, on behalf of William Broder, claimed that he should be a co-applicant with Mr. Macmillan—not that I should be a co-applicant. There are no words there to show that I was a co-applicant in any sense, but that I claimed that Mr. Broder should be a co-applicant with Mr. Macmillan, and I trusted, as representative of a county of which Mr. Broder was one of my constituents, that he would get that equal standing, and so I used the pronoun "we." Mr. Broder had repeatedly asked that his application should be considered, and the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) seems to have jumped at the conclusion that the Order in Council was granted upon my letter. Now, the proof that my statement in reference to that is correct will be found in the following memorandum from the Department:-

"MEMO.—Mr. Macmillan should have filed the returns of the survey of his berth on the 17th of this month; he states that the survey is made, and I believe he has the plan and field notes in his possession.

" Respectfully submitted. "G. U. RYLEY, (Signed) "G. U. RYLEY, "Department of Interior."

On 26th July, 1883, Mr. Broder addresses the Department again :

"Morrisburg, Ont., 26th July, 1883. "Str.—Re my timber limit on Humbug Bay, which was held pending surveys Macmillan and Walkley and Burrow's limits that the number square miles left for me could be determined Macmillan's three miles on either side Washow River, mine comes next north on the bay. "Have the surveys been completed, that my application can be decided?" I have the honor to be "Your obedient servant, (Signed) "WM. BRODER."

It is, I think, clear to the House from this correspondence, that I had no relation whatever with that application of Mr. Broder, directly or indirectly. It is true I wrote that letter, and the correspondence will show the bearing of that letter, and nobody could have mistaken it, unless with a malicious intent, which I believe must have actuated the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Here, we have Mr. Broder's letters subsequent to that date, and previous to that date, in which he speaks of that timber limit application as his, and signs himself in his own name, and for himself, and is associated with nobody. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the statement which the hon, gentleman made, and which I read in Hansard, was that I had made an application and that the Order in Council had been granted to me as a co-applicant, with William Broder, for this license. I have a letter from the Department which shows that no Order in Council was granted on this application whatever, so that there is not one syllable of truth in the statement which the hon. gentleman has made repeatedly to this House, and has circulated throughout the country. The letter is dated Ottawa, 5th February, 1887, and is in answer to one I had witten to the Department, and it

"I am unable to send copies of all the papers this afternoon, but enclose herewith a copy of a letter dated the 20th April, 1883, from you to this Department, concerning the application from Mr. William Broder for a timber limit of 50 square miles on the shores of Humbug Bay, an arm of Lake Winnipeg, in the Province of Manitoba, which letter I expect is the one upon which Mr. Charlton makes his charges. The berth in question, however, was never granted to Mr. Broder."

So you will see that the evidence of the Department is that Mr. Broder renewed his application repeatedly in an amended form. In the correspondence which the hon. gentleman said he had gone through carefully, but which it is clear he could not have, he seized on my letter in order to injure me. I have shown that my letter had reference only to the application of Mr. Broder, and that I claimed on his behalf that it should be equally considered with that of Mr. Macmillan who had applied for the same limit. A child who could read could not have mistaken the language in Mr. Broder's letter except with the malicious intent of doing me an injury. But, Sir, to show the artfulness of the hon. gentleman to do wrong, inspired certainly not by a humane motive, but by something of a lower grade, I may refer to an application which Mr. Broder made for another timber limit on the 27th of

February, 1884:—

"Morrisburg, 27th February, 1884. "SIR,—I beg to make application for a timber limit of fifty (50) square miles situated as follows: commencing at the third rapid on Nimicon River as shown on sketch and extending up said river toward Lake La Croix eight and one-third miles, by a depth of three miles on either side (both sides) of the river.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

(Signed) "WM. BRODER."

I read this simply to show that Mr. Broder was acting for himself, that he had no relations with anybody, and especially not with me. Then, on the 11th of March, there is a letter from the Department to Mr. Broder:

Department to Mr. Broder:

"Str.—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo applying for a timber berth of 50 square miles on the Nimicon River, Province of Manitoba, as shown on the sketch accompanying your application. In reply, I am to inform you that the sketch and description disagree. So far, however, as can be made out, the application stands thus: If the berth is intended to be on the north side of the Nimicon River, as shown on the sketch, then it is covered by an application of an earlier date. If, however, as stated in the application, it is on both sides of the river, then it partially covers lands already disposed of. The sketch seems to be on no scale, and the third rapid not being shown on our plans, the position of the berth cannot consequently be plotted.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "JOHN R. HALL.
"Secretary."

On 10th April 1824 Mr. Broder made a third

On 10th April, 1884, Mr. Broder made a third application for a timber limit, which I will read:

"Morrisburg, 10th April, 1884.

"To the Honorable the Minister of the Interior.

"Sir,—I beg to make application for a timber berth of 50 square miles, described as follows: Commencing on the south shore of Lake Kasgaskok, where it is intersected by the north-eastern boundary of Mr. H. Robinson's berth, thence to extend easterly along the shore of said lake ten miles, by a depth southerly of five miles.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant, (Signed) "WILLIAM BRODER."

That application, you will see, is for a timber limit on Lake Kasgaskok, while my letter was associated with an application for a limit on Hum-This application of Mr. Broder was bug Bay. granted; and to show that my name was not associated in any way, directly or indirectly, with the Order in Council to which the hon, member for North Norfolk has referred, I will read the Order in Council:

CERTIFIED COPY of a Report of a Committee of the Honorable the Privy Council, approved by His Ex-cellency the Governor General in Council on the 30th April, 1884.

30th April, 1884.
"On a memorandum dated the 21st April, 1884, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting an application from Mr. William Broder, of Morrisburg, in the Province of Ontario, for a yearly license to cut timber over a berth of fifty square miles, on Lake Kasgaskok, situate south of the 49th parallel, and as shown on the annexed sketch colored in pink, and more particularly described as follows that is to say:"

Then comes a description of the timber berth.

"The Minister recommends that the license be granted on the terms and under the conditions as to survey of the berth, erection of mills, and payment of dues, that are provided by the regulations approved by Order in Council on the 8th March, 1883, and to be subject to any prior grants or reserves, and upon the survey of the berth being made within one year under instructions.

"The Committee advise that a license be granted as recommended."

That is the Order in Council which the hon. gentleman saw in the correspondence, in connection with Mr. Broder's application, with which he immediately associates my letter, and the character of which nobody could have mistaken, except with malicious intention; yet my name does not appear in that Order in Council, and is not hinted at in one way or another. The only thing correct in his statement, is the date of this Order in Council, which is the 30th of April, 1884. Every other syllable of the hon. gentleman's statement to this House and the country, is incorrect and without foundation. Then, on the 27th of May, a letter is written from the Department to Mr. Broder, informing him of this Order in Council, and there are the two letters sending me the correspondence, which I asked for at the time of my election. balance of the letter which I read before, is as fol-

"On the 10th April, 1884, Mr. Broder made an application for a timber berth of fifty square miles on Lake Kasgaskok, in the disputed territory, and by an Order of the Council dated the 30th April, 1884, the Minister of the Interior was authorised to issue a license in his favor upon complying with certain conditions, as set forth in the regulations of the 8th March, 1883, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. The regulations required that a survey of the berth should be made at Mr. Broder's own expense before the issue of a license to him, and after the license had been issued the regulations required that he should erect a saw mill of a capacity to cut 10,000 feet board measure daily, and that he should pay a yearly rental of $5 per square mile and a royalty of 5 per cent, on the product of the berth.

"Mr. Broder never filed in this Department the returns of the survey of the said berth, and never received a license to cut timber thereon. There is nothing on record in this office to show you are in any way interested with Mr. Broder in the timber berth on Lake Kasgaskok."

So. Mr. Speaker, you will see from this record

So, Mr. Speaker, you will see from this record that the charge made by the hon. gentleman was wholly unfounded, and does not deserve to be characterised by any very light language. Sir, I might well afford to leave the case as it stands with his own conscience—if there is a vestige of it left-with reference to truth-telling in this country; but what will this House think when I tell them that the hon. gentleman not only made these false statements to the House and the country, but he actually sent an affidavit to my county in which he swore to the correctness of his statements, in which I have proven there is not a word of truth. I had been threatened with his affidavit, but in making the derial the other night, I had forgotten at the time that it had been circulated. It did not do me very much harm before my electors, because I openly defied their proof, and all they could threaten me with was the affidavit of the hon. member for North Norfolk; and while he would not frighten this House or those who know him well, he did not succeed in frightening my constituents. Then, the Grit paper published in my county, called the Herald, on 10th February, 1887, in order to give the statement an imposing appearance, published the testimony given by Mr. Millar, who came to the Department and examined the records in the case. His affidavit is an innocent It says:

"I, Haldane Millar, of the City of Ottawa, in the County of Carleton, student at law, do solemnly declare that I have carefully compared the paper writing thereto annexed, and paged 1752 to 1766, inclusive, with the official copies of the sessional returns to Parliament, during the Session of 1886, and the said paper writings are true and correct copies of the said return from page 1752 to 1766, inclusive; and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: 'An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths.'

"F. R. LATCHFORD, Commissioner, &c."

Mr. HICKEY.

That affidavit is correct, because it only states that the record which he examined was what he stated it to be before. Then this paper gives my letter and emphasises the term "co-applicant;" but a mere novice in language would know that I could have written the letter in many different ways; and it was plain to any body who wanted to know the facts that I was making an application on behalf of Mr. William Broder, one of my constituents, because I stated so. The paper has in addition to this, the following sworn declaration:

this, the following sworn declaration:—

"I, John Charlton, of the village of Lynedoch, Ontario, do hereby solemnly declare and say that I was a member of the House of Commons in 1886. That during the winter of 1886 I made examination of certain returns regarding timber limits. That the returns were voluminous and not printed. That the said returns contained an application from Wm. Broder. That Charles E. Hickey, M.P., was a co-applicant. That the application was made 20th April, 1883, and that an Order in Council for 50 miles on the south side of Lake Kasgaskok was issued upon said application, 30th April, 1884."—

"That my information is derived from returns made by the Department of the Interior in answer to an Order from the House, and purporting to be copies of letters, communications, Orders in Council, &c., regarding the granting of timber limits; and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and under and by virtue of an Act passed in the 37th year of Her Majesty's reign, intiluded: 'An Act for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial oaths.'

I have shown this was a complete falsehood. seems this was made on the very day the record was examined here. The information must have been sent by telegram, I suppose, in order that it might injure Dr. Hickey in the County of Dundas. I might stop here and leave the matter with the hon. gentleman's conscience, if he has any; but that is not enough. I will read for his further satisfaction the affidavit of Mr. William Broder. I am not reading this for the information of the House or the country, but simply for the satisfac-tion of the hon. gentleman, and I do not know that I owe any gratitude to him for any kindness he has shown me:

"I, William Broder, of Morrisburg, in the County of Dundas, do solemnly declare that Dr. Hickey, M. P., had not at any time, directly or indirectly, an interest in any time ilimit license applied for by or granted to me. That I did not consult Dr. Hickey with reference thereto before making such application, but on not getting satisfactory replies from the Department, I requested Dr. Hickey to write the Minister on my behalf, which I believe he did.

Now, these facts are appalling. They remind one that the habit of bearing false witness, like a noxious plant which spreads itself over a garden, shows itself in every phase of life, rendering the individual detestable alike to those who know him little and to those who know him much. language of Trollope might be applied directly to the hon. gentleman. He says:

"There are few liars who can lie with the full roundedness and self-sufficiency of truth."

How near the hon. gentleman's statements which I have read approach that axiom, I will leave the House to infer, but we do find, as a rule, that this role of bearing false witness is generally played by the assumed lamb, who poses as a moralist before his associates. What is the essence of this charge? The hon, gentleman has accused the Government of corruption, because I have, as he asserts, made an application for limits. Supposing I had made an application, I would not have felt that I had done any wrong, or committed any offence against Parliament, or against society But, he charges the Government with corruption and embezzlement, with being supported by a servile Parliament, and with maladministration. And why? Simply because they followed the course which had been adopted by their predecessors in office and gave effect to it. In one part of his speech, he says the conduct of the Government is incompatible with a nice sense of political honor. wonder what his course would be compatible with in this matter. He says the Government have outraged decency in every manner. Well, if they have, how much has the hon. genrespected decency or respected his astleman sociates in this House? After making these charges against the Government for corruption, he goes on to state that members of the House of Commons and the Senate made application, as much as to say that those who made application had done wrong. What is the evidence of their wrong-It is that hon. gentlemen in this country saw fit to take advantage of the law of the land, which law had been made by the predecessors of this Government. If this logic were applied to the hon. gentleman or any body else, it would be made to work in this way. If I were discoursing ing the third commandment; he is violating the Sabbath day. That is the logic of the hon. gentle-The abandoned woman who flaunts her skirts with tempting art is actuated by an equally virtuous motive as the man who endeavors to delude the people of this country into believing that because A., B. or C.'s name appears in connection with a timber limit, he is guilty of some base, suspicious conduct. That is the some base, suspicious conduct. That is the logic of the hon. gentleman, which, if applied to himself, he would be the first to resent. He might as well accuse me if I make application, as many members have done, for a new post office, of being guilty of conduct in violation of my duties as a member of Parliament. That is the whole crime I have been guilty of-of endeavoring to secure for a constituent of mine a decision in reference to an application of his. Therefore, the hon. gentleman concludes that I was his partner and guilty of wrong-doing. I do not think I would have been guilty of wrong, if I had been an applicant. It is the want of truth which characterises the hon, gentleman's accusation that annoys me. If the hon, gentleman thinks he is deceiving the public when he tells us he is but doing his duty in making these mis-statements concerning members of the House of Commons and the Senate, he is counting without his host. The people will understand the intentions of the hon, gentleman and will give him the credit accordingly. The public has no confidence in a drunkard preaching temperance, in a liar pretending to talk the truth, in a roué talking virtue, or in a corrupter of female morals preaching continence. They know from what sources a nasty stream flows, and that the ninth commandment is not kept by daily and malicious transgression. I had intended to move the following resolution had my motion on the order paper been reached, but I have no other

That inasmuch as on the 4th of May, 1886, John Charlton, the then member for North Norfolk, delivered a speech in this House, in which he stated, referring to a return presented on 27th March, 1886, in respect of timber limit licenses, that "I have gone through it earefully, and some of the results of that investigation I will give to the Honse later on."

means now of bringing it before the House than this. I have not much hope that it will be acted upon at this stage of the session, but I will move that all the words after "That" be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:-

That later on, in a list tabulated by himself, under the heading of "Members of the House of Commons and Senate who have received timber limits by Order in Council for themselves," he specifies that "C. E. Hickey, M.P. (co-applicant with Wm. Broder O. C. for self and partner, 50 miles, Lake Kasgaskok, Manitoba, 30th April, 1884."

1884."
That at the village of Lynedoch, on the 14th of February, 1887, the said John Charlton made a solemn affidavit declaring, among other things: "that the said returns contained an application from Wm. Broder; that Chas. E. Hickey, M.P., was a co-applicant; that the application was made 20th April, 1883, and that an Order in Council for 50 miles on the south side of Lake Kasgaskok was issued upon said application 30th April, 1884."
That on the 11th of March, 1890, John Charlton, the present member for North Norfolk, repeated the same specific statement.

present memoer for North North, repeated the same specific statement.

That inasmuch as the said Chas. E. Hickey has not at any time made an application for a timber limit license for himself; nor has he at any time been a partner, in any sense, of Wm. Broder, and, therefore, could not have been a co-applicant with him and was not with any other person, and that Wm. Broder made the said application himself and for himself, all of which the correspondence fully sustains made the said application himself and for himself, all of which the correspondence fully sustains.

That no Order in Council was ever issued granting a timber limit license to the said Chas. E. Hickey as has been stated and sworn to have been by the said John Charlton, the member for North Norfolk.

Therefore, the conduct of the said John Charlton in the premises was and is discreditable, dishonest and scandalous.

Mr. CHARLTON. I sent over to the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) ten minutes ago, a request that he would allow me to see the correspondence to which he refers. I sent over to him again the same request but I have not been permitted to see that correspondence, which I believe has now passed out of his hands. I think the hon, gentleman might have had the courtesy to show me the correspondence. However, in its absence, I have only the memorandum which I have been able to make during his speech. The returns to which he has referred occupied 12,000 pages of manuscript. They were examined in 1886 and I think I found in them a letter of 20th April making an application from the hon. gentleman as co-applicant for William Broder, and using the term "we", and I was naturally led, by the use of that term, to imagine that the hon. gentleman was a co-applicant with Mr. Broder, his brother-in-law.

Mr. HICKEY. There is no such letter in exis-

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentlemen read the letter himself, and I would like to see it. I have no intention of doing him any injustice.

Mr. HICKEY. Mr. Broder is no relation whatever of mine.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was informed that he was. I may have been under a mistaken impression.

Mr. HICKEY. You have been mistaken all the way through.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believed that the hon. gentleman was a co-applicant for the limit on the 20th April, and there was a limit granted on the 30th April. If the hon, gentleman says he was only officiating on behalf of a constituent, I am willing to accept his explanation. But the hon-gentleman has waited four years before bringing up this matter in the House. I have not had time to go through 12,000 pages of manuscript to verify the statement which I made at that time or to discover that I was mistaken. I do not think that in a mistake of that kind, under the circumstances, and considering the phraseology of the letter, although it may be a matter to lament—and if a mistake is made I do lament it—but I do not think there is anything criminal in making a mistake of that kind, with a letter of that character.

I am greatly gratified to see the amount of conscientious scruples that members of this House now evince as to the charge of having been interested in any way in applications for timber limits. This matter was treated very jauntily some four years ago. There was a great deal of indignation expressed on the part of hon. members when any person on this side of the House called in question the propriety of their making applications for themselves or for their friends; and the hon. gentleman is the only one, so far as my memory serves me, of all the members who were said to have made applications for themselves, directly or indirectly, who denies the charge. The matter is in a somewhat different position now from whatit was then. In 1886 a great number of licenses were given through Orders in Council, 25,000 square miles of timber limits were covered by these Orders in Council, they were hawked about the streets, lumbermen were solicited by members of Parliament to take timber limits, they could be very easily got, and there was a state of demoralisation existing here most discreditable to this House and most demoralising to the country. consider that I performed a public duty, and if, in the performance of that public duty, in going through that great mass of documents—and the work was so onerous and so vast that I was liable to make mistakes—if I fell into errors in doing that duty, I greatly regret it; and if any statement I made is not borne out by a critical examination of the documents, it was made innocently and not Mr. CHARLTON.

obliged to the hon, gentleman for the choice epithets he used towards me, in characterising me as a false hypocrite, as a moral charlatan, as one who did all these things with malice prepense and aforethought, on purpose to injure him. I have no feelings of animosity towards the hon. gentleman. I could have wished he had indulged in more gentlemanly language in addressing the House, but that is a matter for himself, if he chooses to use those expressions. I have not called him to order, and have not taken any exception to it. It is satisfactory to see hon, gentlemen opposite evince some tenderness about this whole business at the present time. It is a most discreditable matter in all its bearings as regards the Government, and as regards very many of their followers, one respecting which I rejoice to see they feel now that they would like to excuse themselves, one that I rejoice to see is discredited now. I am glad to see that the Government have now abandoned this system of granting timber limits to their friends without competition in the way it was done a few years ago.

I am in this matter, of course, in the hands of the House. If, in pursuing the investigations I have made, it is found that I have in any case made a mistake, I am ready at any time to acknowledge and express regret for that mistake. If it is found I have made a mistake, I am in the hands of the House, and if the House chooses to pass the drastic resolution the hon. gentleman has placed in your hands, why they are at liberty to do so, of course. But I do not think that the country will accept that statement of the case; I do not think that the country will say that my conduct was scandalous and dishonest in the matter of having probed and unearthed this great iniquity that existed, this great iniquity that is a blot resting upon the Government of the right hon. gentleman and all his followers behind him who have supported him in this matter. I have denounced this thing, I denounced it then, I have denounced it since, and I denounce it now as one of the most scandalous episodes in the political history of Canada. The hon, gentleman was securing a limit for a brother, I believe, of a member of the Local Legislature of Ontario.

Mr. HICKEY. You are mistaken again.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very glad to hear the hon, gentleman say so. Had he been a member? Mr. HICKEY. No; he never was a member.

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps I have made some confusion in the names. I understood he was a member of the Legislature; I do not know whether it was this one or not.

An hon. MEMBER. He was a member.

Mr. CHARLTON. But this gentleman, and my friend from Dundas assisting him were operating upon property that did not belong to this Government; they were operating upon that disputed territory of a hundred thousand square miles that the right hon, gentleman parcelled out amongst his followers before he could say that his title was good, before the title was confirmed, before his contention with regard to that title had any basis-he was parcelling it out knowing it was disputed territory, having every reason to know that he had no business to meddle with it at all, and with any intention to injure any person. I am the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided he had no business to meddle with it, that he was dealing with property not his own in all matters connected with this business. The whole affair is one discreditable to the Government. Sir, I repeat that in the course I took, and the labors that I incurred in developing this matter, I do not think I was worthy of condemnation or censure by this House, and if I made a mistake I am ready at any time to offer an ample apology. If there is any statement in that return which is not strictly true, the mistake is due not to malice, not the intention, but to oversight—it was purely a mistake.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman has listened for some little time to a series of charges brought against him by the hon, member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey). It appears that the hon, member made these charges against the member for Dundas four years ago, but he repeated them this Session—

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; in good faith.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With some variation, with some omissions, and some additions, perhaps. He says he has no feeling of animosity against the hon. gentleman; he was very sorry that he made a mistake four years ago, and here in this present Session. Then, what was the object in making that affidavit, I would like to know? There was a very malicious attack upon one man by another; his getting up that affidavit could have been for no other purpose but to injure the character and affect the election of the hon, gentleman. There he stands convicted from his own home of preparing this affidavit and publishing it to the world for the purpose of injuring a colleague in Parliament, a member against whom he says he had no animosity, no desire to injure. Now, the hon, gentleman gets up cringingly to say: If I have done wrong, I am very sorry for it; I did not mean to hurt the hon member, I did not at all mean to injure him, but a sense of duty compelled me four years ago to make an unture statement and I repeat it here now. In this fashion, and between the two periods, he has made a solemn affidavit for the purpose of injuring a man, and he now says that it was a mistake and he is very sorry, that with such a pile of papers to go through he could not help making a mistake. Why did he not put that into his affidavit—that perhaps it was untrue, perhaps he made a mistake? He swore positively to what has been proved to be a falsehood.

Mr. McMULLEN. Produce the letter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hold your tongue, sir. The hon member for North Wellington is out of order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to order. The hon member has no right to use such language to a member of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I ask for the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope discreditable scenes will not take place, though, of course, the subject is very apt to produce these scenes. I do not feel like calling the right hon. gentleman to order, because I think the hon. member for North Wellington had no right to interrupt him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If he had no right to interrupt me, I had a right to tell him so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, after finding that he was in a scrape, tries to draw a herring across the track-under the nose of the House, if I may use that expression, and he begins with an attack upon the immorality, and the misconduct, and the corruption of the Government. I deny the corruption, I deny his statement, and his statement in that respect is just as true as the statement he made with respect to the hon. member for Dundas. He is equally unscrupulous as to facts, whether he deals with the Government as a whole, or with those who are opposed to him as a whole, as he is proved to be unscrupulous with regard to this individual member. But I think the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion would have adopted a better course if he had moved it as a separate and distinct motion, and then it could have been dealt with as other similar cases have been dealt with, and the hon. gentleman could have moved that the motion be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. As it is now, it is too late in the Session, and I would advise the hon, gentleman to withdraw his motion, and to follow it up afterwards as he thinks best.

Mr. LANDERKIN. About five years longer, when he has studied it up better.

Mr. HICKEY. In view of the lateness of the Session, and what has been said, and not in reply to the hon, gentleman who has just spoken across the floor, I will withdraw the motion. I may say that I did not think so much about it until the statement was repeated in March last by the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I fought it out in my county, and I did not suffer very much by it; but when it was repeated in this House, I thought it respectful to the House and to myself that I should bring it up, and I have done so at the earliest day available. I now beg to withdraw the motion, with the consent of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the motion is withdrawn, I must protest against the language which has been used by the Prime Minister of this country. The hon gentleman has not only no right whatever, but he has no cause, to use the language he has used to the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). What are the facts? The facts are these: That the hon gentleman brought an accusation against the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) which that hon. gentleman, after four years, now says is not true. It may be so; I am very glad for my part to accept the denial of the hom member for Dundas, and to believe his denial is true, as he says it is; but the hon, gentleman must remember that, if the statement is true, he was singularly unfortunate when he wrote that letter which was found against him in the record, and which was brought forward by the hon, member for North Norfolk. He was singularly unfortunate when, in making an application for his friend, he used the word "we," thereby conveying the impression that he was applying for himself and not for his friend. Such things may occur. The hon gentleman made an affidavit, no doubt in good faith, and no one has a right to say that it was not made in good faith, and even if the affidavit was made under a false impression, no one has a right to taunt him and say he was not acting in good faith. I am very glad to hear that the hon, gentleman was acting, not for himself, but for his friend. The fact may be correct, but I protest against any insulting language being thrown across the House to my hon. friends on this side.

Amendment withdrawn.

ALBERT RAILWAY GRANT.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to call the attention of the House to a question in connection with the Albert Railway. In 1886, the Government submitted a proposal to this House to grant the Albert Railway Company $15,000, and the First Minister in making that motion said:

in making that motion said:

"This road is about forty miles in length, and extends from the Intercolonial Railway station at Salisbury to Hopewell. It has been built for some years and paid working expenses, but very heavy storms of unusual severity have so injured the works of construction that it is impossible to keep it in the same condition—in fact they are unable to repair it, and unless assistance is given the road will be closed. It is very important to the district that the road should continue to be operated, and for that purpose, a loan of $15,000 is proposed. It is an important feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, and its close would seriously disturb the business of that section of the country. The transport and freight will go over the Albert Railway to the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway to time out of the freight and pay itself from time to time out of the freights, and recoup itself for this temporary loan which, I think, is absolutely necessary."

The hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), then leading the Opposition, made these remarks:

"The Intercolonial Railway will not have anything to do with the recouping, it is a loan from the Treasury. If I rightly understand it, the Albert Railway is bonded up to the hilt. I think the bonds were issued upon the London market by one of those arrangements by which a certain sum is deposited to answer for the interest for a certain time, so that it does not require that the profits of the road should pay more than the working expenses for that time. It is said that about $600,000 is the nominal emission of bonds on this railway. It seems to me clear that under the present circumstances it does not pay working expenses, and it will very shortly have to pay interest on its bonds as well, as soon as the period for which interest is provided expires. It seems to me perfectly plain that this money will never come in again, and we might just as well propose in pain English to made a gift of it, as to propose that it shall be loaned in this way. The hon, gentleman has just hinted a mode of security upon the freight of the company, but I can assure him that if the company has to part with its freights the road cannot be kept open. We will never see a dollar of this money again."

The House voted the money. Some months afterwards, I think in October, 1886, according to a deed which is registered in the office of the Registrar of Wills and Deeds in the county of Albert, an arrangement was entered into by the Minister of Railways of that day (Mr. Pope) and the officers of the company, by which it was agreed that this sum of $15,000 should be advanced to the railway. Attached to the deed is a memorandum of the services for which the money is to be expended. I need not read the memorandum, but it will be quite sufficient to say that under it $10,-164 were to be spent on works which are specified and $4,836 were to be available to pay laborers on the road. It was no part of the understanding when the money was asked from this House that any portion of it was to be used to pay wages; but in the agreement it is stated that $4,836 shall be paid for laborers' wages and the balance on the different works enumerated. The road at the time was bonded in England, and this mortgage came in after that of the English bondholders. I do not object to the fact that $4,836 of that amount was to be paid laborers on the railway for amounts due them: but the fault I find with the Government is that they did not see that the agreement was carried out. because I am assured, and I think it will not be controverted, that out of the $4,836 not more than $1,000 was paid to the laborers, if that sum was paid, on account of the amounts due at that time. The money was paid over in five different sums. It appears from a letter from Mr. Bradley, secretary of the Department of Railways, to Hon. Mr. Jones, who became a trustee and receiver for this road under an order of court, that the amounts were paid over in five different sums, as I have stated, namely, on October 27, 1876, $4,836; on December 15, $3,585; February 7, 1887, $422; March 7, $2,592; August 22, $3,321, making in all $13,778, which appears to be the total sum paid over of the $15,000. But according to the Public Accounts, the total sum paid is $14,725, the Government, it appears, having added the interest up to a certain time, to the amount which they had advanced. It appears from the accounts of the company that although this $4,836 was granted to be paid for labor, the sum of $3,232 was not paid to the laborers, but was divided up among the officers of the company. Within a few months of the time they received this money, three directives the sum of the time they received the sum of the time they received this money, three directives the sum of $1.00 to $1 tors in the city of St. John, divided among themselves $2,400. They paid their secretary, $378; their solicitor, $320; their auditor, $124; and in addition to that, a railroad that probably spent $5 or $6 in the course of a year for postage, paid a postage bill of $45. This matter has created a great deal of scandal in the county. It is a well known fact, that although the Government agreed to give this $4,836 to be paid directly to the laborers, the money was not paid to the laborers, but was taken by the officers of the company, in the city of St. John. These facts are well known to some members of the Government, I believe, but they have made no effort whatever to call upon the parties to refund the money, and as a result of the condition in which matters were left, the railroad was closed up for a long time after the whole amount of the money was paid over. In the meantime, of course, the road has been sold out by order of the court, and thus the security which the Government has, is entirely valueless. I do not wish to say anything very harsh on the matter, but I do think the attention of the country ought to be called to the fact that this money was practically squandered, that the laborers are still unpaid, and that the intentions of the Government were defeated by the mode which they undertook to do the work.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a matter which should require some explanation at the hands of the Government. As I understand the case as laid down by my hon. friend from St. John, (Mr. Ellis) this railway had been voted a loan of $15,000, and one of the conditions of the loan was that a sum $4,836, which was at that time due to the laborers, was to be paid to them out of the first moneys which were advanced to the company, and out of the $4,836, the laborers were only paid about $1,500. The balance was paid not to the laborers, but to the manager, secretary, and solicitor of the company, so that the money was altogether misappropriated. It may have been well appropriated in one sense, but it was not appropriated according to the terms of the agreement entered into between the Government and the company. It seems to me it was the duty of the Government to see that the agreement was faithfully carried out by the company, and the moment they advanced the money, it was their duty to see that not a cent afterwards should have been paid out of the loan, unless the company showed the money was expended in a manner according to the agreement. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that the Government should give some explanation of the very serious charges made by the member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) as to the manner in which the money has been appropriated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Ellis) has not taken the course which was most calculated to elucidate this subject, or to benefit the laboring men, if any of them have suffered in this matter. The hon. gentleman has brought up the matter on going into Supply at this late stage of the Session, without giving any previous notice, or without giving an opportunity to myself, as Minister of Railways, to look into the matter, to revive any recollections I may have of it, and to find out if the statementswhich I have heard very imperfectly by the waymade by the hon. member, were accurate. I do not at all doubt that the hon. gentleman desires to be strictly accurate in the matter, but having given no notice that he was going to bring up the question, he cannot expect, and no reasonable man could expect, that any answer could be given to it. As for myself, beyond the fact that there was a loan made to the Albert Railway Company, I am as ignorant of the circumstances, as possibly my hon, friend the leader of the Opposition was before he heard the statement of the hon, gentleman for St. John (Mr. Ellis).

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the facts would impress you as they impressed me; that if they are as stated by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) the Government is very much to blame.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not catch all the facts, and, therefore, I cannot say whether the Government are to be blamed or not. At all events the hon, gentleman having called my attention to the matter, I shall look into it. If I find there is any wrong done I will admit it at once, and if it can be remedied it will be remedied, but I am slow to believe that the Department or the Government have made either a mistake or an error in the matter.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I wish to say a word or two on the matter now under discussion. Some three years ago, and before the leader of the House had taken the portfolio of railways, I had my attention called to this matter immediately after the election of 1887, and I proceeded as promptly as I could to do what lay in my power to protect the workingmen, who had not received the back pay which they ought to have received. There was so much noise and clamor in the House just now, that I could not hear all my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) said. But so far as I did hear him, his statements of facts were entirely correct, and they agree with my own impressions gained from an intimate acquaintance with the matter. The hon. gentleman's figures tally with my recollection. I remember seeing, on a file of the papers in the Department, a statement to the effect that one of the grounds on which the loan was asked was that $4,836 and some odd cents were needed to pay back wages to the men on the railway, and I know that the first cheque drawn by the Government against that $15,000 loan, was for the exact sum there stated. I remember the exact identity of the figures, and the Government did this no doubt in perfect faith and with a desire to have the wages paid. I have said to the late Minister of Railways, and to the subordinate officials of the Department, that in my judgment, a blunder was made in sending that money to a company which was moribund, which was in extremis and which was made up largely of men of straw. I make bold to say in my place in this House, what I have said in the Department; that this struck me as a blunder. If that money had been given to a trustee, or to the member for the county, or to some independent person, to take charge of, the workmen would undoubtedly have got their back pay. To be just to all parties, I should say that the men themselves were somewhat at fault. There was some $10,000 left, and I have no doubt the men would have got every dollar of their back pay if they had struck; but they continued to work for the company after there was $3,000 or $4,000 due. The company paid them their weekly wage, but they have never made up that balance to this day. I have tried every conceivable way that seemed open to me to recover this back pay for them. At the time I was elected, all the money had been spent except little more than enough to pay the interest on the loan. I made enquiries about the company but they seemed to be men of straw. If we could have proceeded against them for what was practically a misappropriation of money, that would have been a source of hope to the employes; but the company seemed to be men of straw. Two the company seemed to be men of straw. years ago they disappeared altogether, and the road was taken over by the bondholders. I think rather more than one-fourth of this back pay of $4,836 was paid.

Mr. ELLIS. About $1,000.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The county of Albert, in connection with the events growing out of that railway, has acquired perhaps a worse name than any other county in Canada. Certainly a most deplorable swindle was perpetrated in connection with this railway nine or ten years ago; but I am happy to say, for the credit of the people of my own county, that they were in no way responsible for it; the whole fraud was perpetrated by outside speculators who had got control of the railway. We hope, however, that, in the future, this road will be administered in the interest of the locality.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I agree with the hon. member, that the people of Albert county were not in any way to blame for the gross swindle perpetrated in connection with that road. If I could get the prospectus by which the English bondholders were induced to put their money into that road, I could show it to be as great a fraud as was ever perpetrated. But I do not see why the Government should have come forward, at a time when the railway company were in a state of bankruptcy, and lend them $15,000, which we were assured would be repaid from the freight, although it was well known at the time that the road did not begin to pay expenses. That $15,000 is sunk forever beyond recall, because the road is now foreclosed by the bondholders, and has gone into the hands of other parties. what principle was that money lent? The road was no part of the Intercolonial, and had nothing to do with it at all. At that time, I know, there were considerable difficulties in the way of getting that county into line with the Government, and just before the election of 1887 down comes this loan of $15,000 to this railway. At that very time it was loaded with bonds to the extent of $600,000, and when it was sold it only realised $100,000. There was no justification for the lending of that money at all, because the possibility of its repayment was entirely problematical. that time, as my hon. friend from Albert has stated, the road had got into the hands of other parties, who were supporters of this Government, and who, instead of paying the laborers, divided the money among themselves, paying themselves as solicitors and directors, and leaving unpaid the men whose labor had built the railway. The right hon. Premier says he was not aware of this. The hon, member for Albert states that he has been to the Railway Department putting forward the position of affairs. He has shown that the company, instead of carrying out the agreement they made with the Government, violated it and put the money into their own pockets which was got on the pretence that it was to be paid to the laborers.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood my remarks when he said that I had made these representations to the present Minister.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I said to the Department.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). It was during Mr. Pope's time that I made the representations to the Department. For my part, the matter had become a perfectly dead issue; the company had disappeared, and the money could not be got hold of.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not deserve the animadversions of the hon. First Minister for bringing this matter up. In 1888, I asked the Government to whom the money had been paid, and I was told to the company. I might as well have been told that it was paid to the man in the moon, because there was no company. I also made enquiries about the matter in the Public Accounts Committee. I did not go to the Minister of Railways, but otherwise I did all I could do. I regret that the hon. Minister did not hear my remarks, because I think he would insist on an enquiry with regard to these people, and I would suggest that that should be had. The hon, gentleman will now appreciate the difficulty we on this side of the House have sometimes in hearing him.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. BARRON. I was not here this afternoon when the question on the Order Paper was asked relating to the McGreevy scandal. I understand, however, that the hon. Minister of Public Works, promised to bring down some papers in relation to it, and it is in consequence of that statement that I Mr. Weldon (St. John).

minutes ago, and which I think the hon. Minister should be in possession of, because it may possibly suggest some papers which he might not otherwise bring down. It is evident from the second part of the statement of Mr. O. E. Murphy that there were two tenders which the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. by some instrumentality got withdrawn, and it is to that portion of the question that this telegram refers. It is as follows :-

"MR. BARRON, M.P.,
"House of Commons.

"House of Commons.

"I can produce unquestionable evidence in support of charges published by Le Canadien, and prove, moreover, in a conclusive manner, that Mr. McGreevy, a member of Parliament, and of the Quebec Harbor Commission, worked up in Ottawa the charges for dredging from 27 cents to 35 cents in 1887; also that he suggested and advised, himself, the withdrawal of the lowest tenders in the contract for the crosswall in 1883, so that the contract might go to the highest tenders, Larkin, Connolly & Co. You may use my telegram.

"J. ISBAEL TARTE." " J. ISRAEL TARTE."

I think I am justified in reading that telegram now, so that the hon. the Minister of Public Works may have knowledge of it, and may have the papers brought down which may have any bearing upon it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman I may inform him that, without that telegram, all the papers in this matter were to be brought down, so that the telegram will not make any change in them. I have ordered the papers to be copied and they will be down, perhaps, by Friday.

LIEUT.-COL. FORREST.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Some few days ago, I gave private notice to the hon. Minister of Militia that I would ask an explanation from him of a charge, appearing in the Public Accounts of last year, of a payment to one Lieut.-Col. Forrest, of Quebec, amounting to $1,235, That charge appears in the Auditor-General's Report, page F-136, as follows:

Staff and officers— Lt.-Col. Forrest, War Claims Commissioner, 1st March till the 30th June, 1886, 122 days at $15 per day .. $1,830 00 ... 594 14 Less pay of rank, 122 days at $4.87......

As a member of the Public Accounts Committee, my attention was called to that payment, and I moved in the committee that the Deputy Minister of Militia be summoned before the committee to explain the meaning of that charge. He came before that committee, and the committee asked him with respect to it; but he was unable to give the committee any information whatever. The the committee any information whatever. The facts appear to be as follows: The War Claims Commission, consisting of Lt. Col. Jackson, president, Lt.-Col. Whitehead, and Lt.-Col. Forrest, sat for some months. It does not matter, for the purpose of this enquiry, but, as a matter of fact, Lt.-Col. Whitehead and Lt.-Col. Forrest left Ottawa, having completed their labors, on the 26th February, 1886, and they were paid up to that date. Four or five years afterwards there appears this amount paid to Lt. Col. Forest and not paid to any other member of the Commission; and when the Deputy Minister of Militia rise to read a telegram which I received a few was summoned before the Public Accounts Committee, he was obliged to admit that, so far as he was concerned, long as had been his experience in the Department, and intimate as his knowledge was of the affairs of the Department, he was unable to give the committee any information whatever as to this gentleman's claim or the work he did. The commission did not sit; no claims were submitted to them; Col. Forrest did not act as a member of the commission; he was not at Ottawa attending on the Department here. He may have come to Ottawa for a day or two, but if he did, the Deputy Minister had no knowledge of it and did not know of any work done by him, and was unable to state any reason why this payment should be made. Under these circumstances, I thought there was a small scandal in the payment of $1,200 or $1,300, to Col. Forrest at a time when he was in Quebec discharging the duties of storekeeper and paymaster, for which he received $75 per month, besides $4.87 per day as the pay of his rank; and this claim was admitted four or five years after the commission had closed. The circumstances were suspicious; the evidence of the Deputy Minister rendered them still more suspicious, and the impression left on the minds of the committee was that a gross job had been perpetrated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am indebted to the hon, gentleman for his courtesy in notifying me a few days ago that he intended making an enquiry into this matter. I do not know exactly what the Deputy Minister stated before the Public Accounts Committee, as I could not possibly leave the office the day he was called to attend the Committee, and was not present to hear the explanation he made. I am confident that when the facts are brought to the notice of the hon. gentleman, he will find that not only there is not a little scandal but that there is no scandal at all in the transaction. Col. Forrest was one of the officers who, in the beginning of the outbreak in the North-West. was sent there to act as paymaster and attend to the financial portion of the expedition and the different contracts which were entered into between the Government and the different contractors for the supplies and teams required. When the commissioners returned to Ottawa the claims against the Department were submitted to them for examination, as the most of them required to be carefully looked into. I tried, as it was my duty, to reduce the expenditure as much as possible, consistent with the efficiency of the service; and in this view I retained Col. Jackson, the President of the commission here, and for a short time Col. Whitehead; but from the position which Col. Forrest occupied in the North-West during the troubles, from his intimate connection with several of the claims which he himself had looked after in the North-West, it became necessary tor me to retain his services as one of the commissioners. The only point, as far as I can judge upon which the hon. gentleman might require any explanation, would be Col. Forrest's employment during his stay at Quebec. I can tell the hon, gentleman that several claims which had to be investigated, were submitted to Col. Forest. I was reducing the expenditure by keeping him in Quebec, and moreover he was sent there to look after a portion of the report which was subsequently published, and which has been submitted to the House. The hon. gentleman will see from the papers that Col. Forrest was returned to the Department of Militia as paymaster. His pay from the 1st March to the 30th June, 1886, as commissioner, 122 days at $15 a day amounted to $1,830, from which we deducted the pay of his rank 122 days at $4.87,$594, leaving a balance due him of $1,235.86. I think the only explanation that could have been required was as to the nature of the services that Col. Forrest rendered. I can tell the hon, gentleman that he was occupied during the time he was in Quebec in arranging the claims which originated in the troubles in the North-West, and in making the report which he had to attend to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman fails to appreciate the point which I put to him, which was, that the War Claims Commission ceased to exist on the 26th February, 1886, and that Col. Forrest returned to his place in Quebec, continued to receive his payment as storekeeper at $75 a month, and the payment of his rank, while the hon, gentleman continued to pay him under the War Claims Commission which had ceased to exist; and the Deputy Minister said he did not know for what Col. Forrest was paid after that date.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman says my deputy could not give him the information, but I have been supplementing that by stating what Col. Forrest did in Quebec. It is true that the commission did not sit as a commission in Quebec, but Col. Jackson and Col. Forrest were employed as commissioners long after they sat in Winnipeg or in Ottawa. The payments made to Col. Forrest are explained by the account which I read, showing that a deduction was made of his pay for 122 days, which left a balance of $1,235.86.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state what work he did?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The work he did was to attend to claims of which he had a personal knowledge, and also to attend to the report which was subsequently published.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state the claims he attended to ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman would not expect me to be able to state those claims at this moment, when the whole of the claims occupy a volume of several hundred pages.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We summoned the hongentleman's deputy before the committee and asked him to state the claims which Col. Forrest attended to, and he said he had searched the records, and could not state the claims.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know that Col. Forrest is a first rate-officer, and that he knew everyone of the claims in the North-West which arose from the troubles there.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. CURRAN. In regard to the question which was previously discussed, I was desirous of making a statement when my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Barron) sat down, but I was prevented from doing so by the floor being granted to the hon. member for Queen's, P.E. I. I think it is important on behalf of my friend the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy), that I should now make that statement. This afternoon when the question was brought up, I did not read the document which I had in my hand, because the question was addressed to the Government, but, seeing that the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) has now read a telegram he has received from Mr. Tarte, of Quebec, and has thus again brought the matter before the attention of the House, I deem it my duty to read what was placed in my hands sometime ago, in the event of this matter coming up, by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. McGreevy). is as follows:

"With reference to the charges made against me I am moved by feelings of sorrow as well as indignation.
"Of sorrow at the thought that my own brother who has received nothing but favors at my hands and who has grown rich at my expense, should, now at the latter end of our days, be found conspiring against me, in the company of a fugitive from justice.
"And of indignation that a man who has taken shelter in this Dominion to escape the penitentiary in the country from which he fled, laden with the spoils of a plundered treasury, should dare become the accuser of men known in this community to be above suspicion and that any hon, member of this House should be so far imposed upon by the two conspirators, as to lay before it so transparent a series of calumnies.
"The accusations although apparently specific, are mere insinuations against myself and others, and the only way in which I can meet them here, is by a simple but positive denial." The accust to the description of the provides of my hyeother's allowed."

"I deny that I had knowledge of my brother's alleged connection with the contracts or contractors mentioned

"I deny that I had knowledge of my prother's alleged connection with the contracts or contractors mentioned in the accusations.

"The statement that I personally participated in profits accruing to my brother out of such contracts—or that I benefited by them, or that I was paid any sum or sums of money—or that any consideration was ever promised to me, are totally unfounded.

"Therefore, as a member of this honorable House, of twenty-three years' standing, I assure you, Sir, in all candor, that in so far as I am personally concerned these accusations are false, they are only a part of a deep conspiracy to try to ruin me and two or three other gentlemen, who in a fair contest, and to protect our own property, defeated these conspirators in their attempt to gain control of a large navigation company. Having been baffled on that occasion they now seek revenge.

"To this end Murphy concocts his accusations, and my brother endorses them and says they are true.

"I have now to deal with the supplementary accusations added to Mr. Murphy's by my brother, Robert H. McGreevy.

tions added to Mr. Murphy's by my brother, Robert H. McGreevy.

"In the year 1866, upon my retiring from active business, he bought out my plant and material, becoming my debtor in a large sum, which with the other large sums of money I have frequently advanced since, to extricate him from the many unfortunate enterprises in which he embarked, has gone on increasing, until it reached nearly half a million dollars. Whenever he was in difficulties he came to me.

nait a million dollars. Whenever he was in dimensional came to me.

"It is true he has paid me various sums on account, but feeling myself obliged to press for settlement, I, some mouths ago, sued him for $354,000, balance still due me.

"I now come to the last accusation relative to the Admiral. I never owned the steamer, nor never was I contractor with the Government for same."

LIEUT.-COL. FORREST.

Mr. MULOCK. To return to the question which was brought up by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies), there appears to be nothing of record showing the appointment of Col. Forrest to act in any capacity after the termination of the War Claims Commission. I would ask whether the instructions given to him were verbal or are on record. It appears to me that, when any one is appointed to discharge public services extending over weeks or months, as in this case, the appointment ought to be made in a proper business-like way by a memorandum or in some way which should be of record in the Department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman evidently forgets that Col. Forrest, Col. Jackson and Col. Whitehead, after the troubles were over, were appointed a commission by Order in Council to investigate the claims arising out of the troubles in the North-West. That was their authority to act as commissioners.

Mr. MULOCK. In the North-West?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the North-West and also in Ottawa, and the fact of their being in Ottawa, or going to Toronto, did not at all change the character of the duties which had been entrusted to them under the authority of the Council appointing them a Commission for the purpose of investigating these claims. There was no interruption at all in the appointment of Col. Forrest. The hon, gentleman wants to know by what authority he acted as commissioner during these 123 days. By the authority of the Order in Council appointing him. The only way of putting an end to his services would have been to notify him that he ceased from a certain date to be a commissioner to investigate North-West claims. That was done when, in the discretion of the Department, it was considered that his duties were over. During a portion of the time he was working in Winnipeg, during another portion of the time he was investigating claims in Ottawa, and another portion of the time his duties, in the discretion of the Department, were considered to be better fulfilled by his being in Quebec than by being in Winnipeg.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Were all three of the commissioners dismissed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some of the commissioners were dismissed before others were. Instead of paying all the commissioners for the whole period, we paid Col. Jackson who remained a commissioner long after the service of the others had been dispensed with. It would be easy to find out the claims that were submitted to Col. Forrest which he dealt with in Quebec, in Ottawa or in Winnipeg.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say to the hon. gentleman that it is a very common business economy, after a commission has sat for a time and performed the major part of the business, to dispense with the services of some of the commissioners and let one or two members finish the business. In the case of settling the half-breed claims by the Commission of which the present Justice Street was the head, the Commissioners received all the claims that were presented to them, and visited different points, but some of the claims were left unsettled and one of the Commissioners was left to wind the thing up. In this case, I understand, the commission as a whole sat and considered the claims, and Colonel Forrest and Colonel Jackson, whom the hon. gentleman knows, and knows to be a very good Reformer, were retained to wind up the scattered cases that the Commission as a whole began to settle.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This was in Quebec after Col. Forrest remained there, and Col. Jackson was not there at all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I admit that Col. Jackson was here.

Mr. LAURIER. According to the statement of the First Minister, after the Commission had sat for a certain time one or two of the Commissioners were discharged and Col. Forrest was employed further to investigate these claims. Then there must be a report of these claims.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is a report.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand there is a report up to the month of March, but I do not understand there was any subsequent report made. If there was one made, well and good; but if there was no report made after the month of March, surely Col. Forrest could not have been employed in Quebec as Commissioner. Did he make any report of that subsequent period when he remained alone?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may surprise the hon, gentleman when I tell him that even to-day Major Guy, who is in my Department, is giving a considerable portion of time to this Commission, and, acting as one of those who investigated the claims, is employed still every day in settling The hon, gentleman will see in the Estimates, which are brought down, there is an amount of money by Governor General's warrant for the purpose of paying certain claims, which up to that time had not been settled and could not be settled. Some of those claims arose out of teaming. For instance, in the extreme north, some witnesses were away, or else some of the vouchers could not be found, and they turned up only after the first report had been published. Two reports were published. The first report was the most extensive one, and the second report was less so. kept Col. Forrest in Quebec, as we employed him here, because we required his services there, just as we still keep Major Guy, who is employed on some of the cases. The hon. gentleman will see in next year's Estimates some amounts which have not yet been settled, because we could not get all the evidence which we considered necessary before authorising the payment of these claims.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. Minister inform the House if this service was rendered at the time he refers to, why the payments were not made at that time, why three years were allowed to elapse before these payments were made to Col. Forrest?—because this is the first time his name appears in the Public Accounts. I fail to see that the Minister has given us a satisfactory explana-tion. I understand the explanation he gave with reference to his discharging the duties of the Commission after the service of the other two Commissioners had been dispensed with; but after three years had elapsed between that date and the date at which this payment was made, and now when it appears for the first time, it looks on the face of it as requiring some more explanation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have given all the explanation I possibly can. I evidently made a mistake in taking so much time to make up my mind, because it does not seem to have satisfied hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, the hon. gentleman ought to state what the facts were by reason of which he took so much time to make up his

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have stated all the facts I consider necessary.

LICENSES TO FISHERMEN IN THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I desire to call the attention of the Government to the case of the fisher-men on Lake St. Peter. Formerly the Department of Marine and Fisheries forced them to take out a license, and to pay a tax on fishing materials. At ment has been made by which the whole service is the request of some hon. members that provision was repealed in 1887. In 1888 it was re-imposed. In 1889 I drew the attention of the Government to the matter, and orders were issued not to require a license from those who were unable to pay for them. In the year 1889 no complaints were made on that score, but since the month of May has commenced, it appears that licenses are again required, and the fishermen have been called upon suddenly, both at Sorel and Berthier, either to pay licenses, or desist from fishing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must ask the hon, gentleman to renew that question when the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), who is acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries is in his seat. He will be able to answer that question, I think, satisfactorily.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee).

To provide for the position of Accountant S. L. Shannon, omitted from the main Estimates, 1890-91......

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe this gentleman received $1,100 last year according to the Auditor General's Report. Under what circumstances does the Minister recommend an increase to $1,500 now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Shannon was appointed to the House of Commons as an extra clerk in 1880, and he was transferred and appointed as a permanent third class clerk in the accountant's branch of the Department of Railways in 1881, with a salary of $500. Mr. John Short, first assistant accountant, died in 1886. Mr. Shannon performed his duties, and was appointed second class clerk in 1888, with a salary of $1,100. He was appointed only a second class clerk although his predecessor was a first class. The accountant in the Department, Mr. Bain, died in November, 1888, and, subsequently, Mr. Shannon was appointed accountant without an increase of salary. By Order in Council he was promoted to be a first class clerk on 6th January. The late accountant's salary was $2,400; Mr. Shannon's salary if voted will be $1,500, making a saving of $900. Shannon is reported to be an exceedingly clever fellow and a good accountant, and although at the time a third class clerk he was found to be fit to perform the duties of Mr. Short, and as a second class clerk the duties of Mr. Bain, and he is now accountant of the Department, and we propose to give him $1,500 as against $2,400 received by his predecessor.

Additional amount required for Contin-gencies, Department of Railways and Canals.....

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is this amount required?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is merely a The collection of canal tolls was formertransfer. ly made by the Department of Inland Revenue, but as the Department of Railways and Canals had officers in charge of the canal works and the Inland Revenue Department had their own officers there simply to collect the revenue, a new arrangetransferred to the Railways and Canals Department and a considerable economy will be effected. This change, however, necessitates the transfer of four clerks at the united salary of $1,786.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To what statistical diagrams does this refer?

Mr. FOSTER. To those diagrams which form a large part of the printed public speeches of the Minister of Finance in 1888 and 1889, and to the graphic statistics. These diagrams were also published in book form.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a vote to which we must object. It is not a proper or judicious expenditure of public money, and I must say those statistical diagrams reflected no credit on the party who prepared them. In one or two cases they were distinctly deceptive and intended to deceive. Such was the case in regard to the diagrams prepared with respect to the number of bankruptcies for a number of years. Instead of going back as they should have done and was done in other tables, to the years 1868 or 1869, and placing the statistics as ought to have been done, to show there was no material alternation in the revenue tariff between 1870 and 1874, the statistics were so arranged as deliberately to deceive the public, and to make it appear that a large number of bankruptcies had taken place under a revenue tariff and the number had been diminished under a protective tariff. In order to have made these tables of any value to the public the number of bankruptcies ought to have been given at least from 1870, if not for 1867. And more than that, they should have stated, what is known to be the fact, that the bankruptcy law was abolished, I think in 1879, and consequently after that time it was not possible to obtain accurate statistics. The Minister of Finance well knows that the statistics we now obtain are by no means as reliable as we obtained when the bankruptcy law was in operation, the fact being that an enormous number of compositions are made which are never publicly known. In any case an enormous sum has been voted for these statistics, and it is utterly improper to bring forward in the Estimates for 1891 a sum for payment, under any pretext, for work done at the time Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of This is in no respect a reasonable vote, and it is one on which we most certainly divide unless a much better explanation is offered.

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation is I think simply Whatever the hon. gentleman's opinion this. may be as to the value of the statistical diagrams, the fact is they were printed. When I came into office the matter was being settled. I went into it very carefully myself with the Queen's Printer, and especially with his assistant, Mr. Gliddon. went through it very carefully, and we cut down the bills that were presented so far, that he reported that as being a fair minimum cost. There is no doubt but that we have paid large sums for these diagrams. The process of making them was much more expensive than I am informed it is now, owing to some improvements having been made. These diagrams were all printed and used, and this is for a balance which is due to the engraver, and which I think ought to be paid. Sir John A. Macdonald.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very odd thing that an account of this kind should be allowed to remain unpaid for three years. appears to me that it should have been settled by Sir Charles Tupper, before he left office, or by the hon, gentleman on his coming into office. This is not a proper way of doing business, and it is the very best way to ensure unreasonable charges being made. I think that the total amount for these diagrams was $7,000 or $8,000 in addition to the charge for printing the Budget Speech, and I cannot see that we have received any value for our

Mr. FOSTER. There were some diagrams also published in the graphic statistics, and they were printed in different colors which made them cost a good deal more than ordinary work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Seven or eight thousand dollars for this purpose, in addition to the cost of printing the Budget Speech, was a most outrageous charge, whether the statistics were accurate or not.

Mr. FOSTER. It was a very accurate and a very excellent speech.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was as accurate and as reliable as some of the declarations which the hon. Minister made before. It was as accurate as his declaration that we would have 640,000,000 bushels of wheat from Manitoba; as accurate as his declaration that we would have $58,450,000 on the 1st January, 1891, both days inclusive; and as accurate as his declaration that the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway would save 45 miles, when the First Minister told us the other night that at the most it would save us seven miles only.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is a little too sweeping in that last declaration. I do not think any one has pointed out an inaccuracy in those statistics. The selection may have been found fault with, but not the accuracy of the description.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. spect to the bankruptcy statistics, it was deliberately intended to deceive. I do not know whether the man who compiled it did so of his own proper motion, but I say that the manner in which they were placed could, and did, and was intended to deceive.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to these statistics, I might say, that at the time Sir Charles Tupper made this speech, he spoke with regard to the duties on iron, increasing the number of smelting furnaces throughout this country. He mentioned Kingston, Cobourg, Port Hope, Belleville and several places in which we were going to have smelting furnaces in a short time. These graphic statistics also showed the importation of iron, and Sir Charles Tupper pointed out what an advantage would accrue to the country by the adoption of his policy. This has also to be put down amongst the false prophesies mentioned by my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). should not be asked to pass this item without knowing how they were distributed and where they were distributed. I received only about half a dozen copies.

Mr. FOSTER. They probably thought you appreciated them so little that they did not send you any.

Mr. McMULLEN. I appreciate anything that is worth appreciating, but this was not worth appreciating, and the money of the country should not have been squandered on it.

Mr. HESSON. I trust that they have been appreciated, for they are one of the most valuable works that have been presented to the House. I hold one of the copies in my hand. The business failures and the notes overdue are the only two items that do not go back to the time of Confederation; I do not know why they do not go back to 1868 instead of to 1873; but it is one of the most interesting works that have been prepared, and it shows the progress of the country in an excellent manner. As to the distribution, I do not suppose that I have been specially favored, and I got a dozen or two of them, and I think the hon. gentleman could have got them also, although they were grabbed up by everybody, who wanted to circulate them through the country.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is talking about statistics. It is not the statistics we are talking about, but the diagrams.

Department of the Interior—to increase the salary of H. H. Rowatt, from 1st July, 1890, to 30th June, 1891................... $200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what ground is this asked for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Mr. Rowatt is one of our most experienced shorthand and type-writer officers. He joined the service two or three years ago and passed the civil service examination at a time when it was not obligatory to pass the optional subjects at the same time. Subsequently the Treasury Board altered the regulations, which prevented him going up for his optional subjects. He is one of our best officers and is worthy of the salary which we propose to give him, and which he should have had at the time he joined the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is his present salary?

Mr. DEWDNEY, $450.

 $\operatorname{Mr.}$ MULOCK. You are paying him on the same scale as all others ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The same.

To pay the salary of A. H. Whitcher, Agent of Dominion Lands, Winnipeg, who is to be transferred to Department at headquarters as a first class clerk...........$1,700

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is this arranged?

Mr. DEWDNEY. When our main Estimates were before the Committee, I asked to strike out $3,600, of which $2,400 was the salary of Mr. Whitcher. I stated at the time that I proposed to ask for a vote of $1,700 for his salary in the Supplementary Estimates, as I proposed to bring him to the head office, and he was willing to come here for that salary.

Mr. WATSON. Did Mr. Whitcher resign the position of land agent at Winnipeg, or why is the change made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no necessity for the office. The business of the office can be conducted, and it is proposed that it shall be conducted, by Mr. Stevenson, the Crown Timber Agent. He will carry on both duties.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the reason of this?

Mr. HAGGART. Some time ago he left the service, and was reappointed at the salary he had before

Mr. McMULLEN. Was he dismissed or did he leave the service?

Mr. HAGGART. He was suspended for inattention to his duties.

Mr. McMULLEN. For how long a time was he suspended before he was reengaged?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have some knowledge of the circumstance. He was removed from the Post Office Department by the late Postmaster General, for inattention to his duties, and the Postmaster General, with the view of giving him a second trial, agreed to engage him as a temporary clerk for the purpose of seeing whether he would reinstate him. He was in that position for upwards of two years, and having been found attentive to his duties and deserving of being reinstated, this vote is to reinstate him at the salary he had before. In order to qualify himself he has had, in addition to the loss for two years of his position as a civil service clerk, to undergo an examination and qualify himself.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who filled the position while he was suspended?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. During two years he was employed as a temporary clerk doing the same work.

Mr. BOWELL. This is to put a young lady by the name of Miss Fraser upon the permanent staff. She has been employed for the last two or three years in the Corresponding Branch. She passed the examination, and also passed on an optional subject as short-hand writer and type-writer, and I thought it only just to the young lady that she should be placed permanently on the staff.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask whether the Government, under the Civil Service Act, have power to appoint at a higher salary than the minimum, or whether they are tied down by the Act.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a provision that temporary officials must be paid at the rate mentioned in the Act unless we come to Parliament for a higher rate. Miss Fraser has been paid at about that rate.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I explained this when the other Estimates were up. Mr. Byshe had been performing two duties, messenger and packer, and had been paid in two appropriations for a couple of years—$350 as messenger and $15 per month as

The Auditor General said this was irregular, and I said I would bring down this item in the Supplementary Estimates.

Contingencies—Further amount required for care and cleaning of Departmental buildings, including amount required to pay for firing noon gun, $100, which amount may be paid to a member of the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $7,150

This is an increase asked for for Mr. FOSTER. several years. Chief among the charges is the expense of looking after the new Department-cleaning it and seeing to the rooms and fires. Formerly a good deal of this help was paid out of contingencies of the different Departments, largely out of Public Works and some out of the Marine and Fisheries Department. All that has been placed under one head. The vote is aggregate instead of being paid out of contingencies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the vote in 1889-90 was $197,000 and that the hon. gentleman increased it to $209,650, an increase of $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. This item simply has to do with the care and cleaning of the departmental buildings. All other contingencies in that $209,000 in 1889 include the contingencies of the different offices, but not the care and cleaning of the departmental buildings. For the care and cleaning of the departmental buildings in 1889-90 we asked $20,300, and for 1890-91 $20,000, and I am now asking for $7,000 more, making $27,000 for the coming year. The previous vote only included the work which was in charge of Mr. Conroy, but outside of that a large sum was paid out of contingencies from the different Departments. Now this has all been drawn together and placed under the charge of Mr. Conroy, who is under the control of the Finance Minister and the Treasury Board.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not observe any deduction in the other contingencies.

Salary of the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, P.E.I. $300

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is that for the whole vear?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is for the half vear.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If the Vice-Admiralty Courts are abolished next year, the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island may be put on the pension list and will get as much as if his salary were $600 more than it is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I cannot sufficiently express my regret that the Government do not see fit to deal with this matter in a manly and straight-forward way. This is simply to increase the salary of the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island in another way. I have again and again contended for years past that the salary of the Chief Justice of that Island should be increased. His salary now is $4,000. In the Province of Ontario you pay your assistant judges a much larger salary than that, and I do not see why the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island should be paid less than any other official in the Dominion occupying a similar position. If his salary is increased, however, it Mr. Dewdney.

of the assistant judges, who are now paid only $3,000 a year, should also be increased. One of those assistant judges happens to be a very wealthy man. He has occupied his position about forty years, and he does not care very much whether his salary is increased or not; but the other judge does not possess a large fortune. At the Bar he made more than twice the salary he receives now, and he accepted his present position when he was not in the best of health. He is also Vice Chancellor, and is worked from one year's end to the other, and I think that common justice and decency would dictate that he should be put upon the same footing as the judges in other Provinces. I have referred to this so often that I almost apologise to the House for referring to it again.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Finance Minister says "hear, hear," but he does not do justice to the judges in Prince Edward Island. In fact, there seems to be a malignant disposition to keep the salaries of the judges in that Island below those of any others. Why should they be paid less than the judges in Manitoba or British Columbia? The population of the Island is as large as the population of Manitoba, and I think more business is done in the Island, as we have a marine port there. These judges are the equals in education and ability of the judges in any other Province, and I speak with some knowledge of the judges of the other Provinces, because I have had the honor to practise before them. What I object to is singling one judge and increasing his salary in this indirect manner, while the salaries of the other judges are not increased at all. It is unfair and unjust. I take this opportunity of thanking the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) for the kindly expressions he uttered the other night in favor of the House listening to the prayer and recognising the claim of these judges to an increase of salary. I must again raise my protest against the treatment of these judges, and my objection is intensified when I find that one justice is singled out for an increase and the others are left without any.

Mr. HESSON. While I have no reason to complain of what the hon. gentleman has said, I desire to point out that the County Court Judges in the Province of Ontario discharge just as important duties and deserve consideration. The judge in my county who discharges the duties required for a population of 65,000 which I think is more than half the population of Prince Edward Island. I have no doubt that he was able to make $10,000 a year at the Bar. That gentleman receives some $2,200 or $2,300 a year and I think that, if the Government are going to be liberal, they should take up the case of the County Court Judges of Ontario first. I object to any increase being given to the salaries of the Superior Court Judges when the County Court Judges are left out.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I quite appreciate the zeal with which the hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) has pressed the claims of the judges of Prince Edward Island. We have not dealt with the subject of the judges' salaries. We would not, in any case, have dealt with them in the Estimates, but by amendment to the statute regulating their salaries in a comprehensive way. But I cannot allow his remarks to pass unchalshould be increased on its merits; and the salaries lenged when he says we are singling out one judge for the purpose of increasing his salary. It is not for the puppose of increasing the salary of the Chief Justice at all. Every thing the hon. gentleman has said with regard to discrimination between the other Provinces and his Province is pertinent in support of this vote. The Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island holds the position of Vice-Admiralty Judge; the same officer in Nova Scotia receives $600 a year, and the County Judge in St. John, perform-If I had ing the service, receives $600 likewise. omitted to provide for the salary of the Vice-Admiralty Judge of Prince Edward Island, I would have expected the hon. member for Queen's to have insisted that this sum should be put into the Estimates, and to have asked me why it was that in every other Province, including Quebec, where we know a not much larger business is done than in St. John or Halifax, the judge receives $4,000 a year, and he would have asked why the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island should be expected to discharge the duties of that office for nothing; and I should have no answer to make to him. The circumstance that the judge has to discharge somewhat less business, is somewhat pertinent, although not entirely conclusive. If he holds the office and has to discharge all the duties that devolve upon him, he should receive a reasonable remuneration. But when it is a question of only $600, it is not worth while making deductions on that account.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman quite misunderstands me if he thinks I was complaining of the increase to the salary. On the contrary I think the salary of the Chief Justice should be placed at \$5,000; but I think it would be better, when you $\mathbf{\check{T}}$ he do increase the salary, to increase it fairly. late Chief Justice filled the position of Vice-Admiralty Judge for 13 years, and I hope that the Minister of Justice will consider the propriety of recognising the services he performed during that period for nothing. The new judge is receiving \$600; that is right enough, but why should he be paid \$600 extra a year while the assistant judges, who do as much if not more work, remain at \$3,000 a year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are not Vice-Admiralty Judges.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But they discharge the duties of Chancery Judges which the Chief Justice does not, and they sit as many as 50 or 60 days in a year. What I ask is that when you do attempt to rectify the injustice which has existed there, you should do it fairly as between the three judges and not single out one alone. The hon, member from Perth (Mr. Hesson) always brings up the question of the County Court Judges. What in the world has that to do with this case? When the salaries of the County Court Judges come to be discussed they will be discussed on their merits, all over the Dominion. I say the system of making a broad mark upon the judges of Prince Edward Island, and saying they should be paid a less salary than another judge in the Dominion, is an indefensible one; and knowing as I do the high qualifications and attainments of those judges, I cannot refrain from expressing the opinion I do.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would remind the Minister that the judge performing the business of the Divorce Court of New Brunswick, is obliged the Divorce Court of New Brunswick, is obliged to perform a great deal more labor than is performed in the Vice-Admiralty Court of Prince Edward Island, and if the Minister of Justice thinks that the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island should be paid for performing the duties of the Vice-Admiralty Court, I do not see why the same principle should not be applied to the Judge of the Divorce Court, who does not receive one penny beyond his salary as Supreme Court Judge.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to say, with regard to the salary of judges generally, that it appears to be popular with hon, members to criticise unreasonably that branch of the service. I regret that the Government have not dealt with the question in a more comprehensive and satisfactory way. For my part, I think it is the duty the Government owes to the country to see that the gentlemen who, from time to time, fill those important positions, are placed in such a position of independence that they will feel perfectly free from all cares and anxieties, and have nothing to disturb them in discharging their high du-ties. I think there is no branch of the service that is more entitled to be considered, and it is unfair to the judges themselves who are supposed to be entirely removed from the ordinary struggles of life, that their position should be subjected to the small criticism that takes place from time to time on the floor of Parliament. I hope the Government will have the courage to deal with this matter properly before another Session has gone by.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.55 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 8th May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. DESJARDINS moved the adoption of the third report of the Select Committee to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the present Session. He said: The report embodies a recommendation to increase the salaries of the amanuenses of the official reporters of the House, and that they be placed on the same footing as the sessional clerks. At present they receive $12 per week. For last Session they received only $168; for the present Session of sixteen weeks the amount will not exceed $192. Under these circumstances, it is considered just that they should be paid at the rate of $3 per day, instead of $2 per day. I might add that, perhaps, we ought to have gone a little further, and have considered the claims of the translators for an increase of salary. As the Committee has not thought proper to make such a recommendation, I propose the adoption of the report in its present form.

Mr. CURRAN moved:

He said: From a remark which fell from the chairman of the Committee, I think his sympathy is with the translators, who have also very arduous work to do, and the work has been done this Session in such a way as to avoid the complaints made against the translators in former Sessions. Those gentlemen sent in a memorial to the Committee, in which they asked that their claims be considered. It does not appear from the report that any action whatever was taken on the prayer of the petitioners, and it is not even referred to in the report. It is agreed on all hands, that the translators' work is one of very great difficulty and requires great expedition, and necessitates very many hours' work every day. It is not a mere matter of handwork, but it requires a great deal of skill and intelligence, and as such should be properly paid. I hope the House will take my amendment into its favorable consideration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that this amendment will not exactly do, because it is simply an indication to the Committee to raise the salaries of the translators. I have no objection to the report being sent back to the Committee to consider the case of the translators, but it can hardly be sent back for the purpose of increasing their salaries.

Mr. IVES. I do not think my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) would have any difficulty in securing a sufficient number of translators at the present salary. I believe they are all Montreal men, and the patronage seems to be confined to Montreal, principally. As nearly as I can find out there has been no scarcity of applications for the position of translators at the present salary, and, as far as I am concerned, I should not be disposed to consent to an increase in the salaries of the translators until it is made to appear that competent men cannot be obtained for the present salary. I am perfectly certain that if the gentlemen who now fill the position are not satisfied, others can be found who would fill it equally as well at the same salaries.

Mr. CHARLTON. This question was fully considered in the Debates Committee, and, after full consideration, the proposal to increase the salaries of the French translators of the Hansard was voted down by a very considerable majority.

Mr. AMYOT. Only one.

Mr. CHARLTON. A considerable number of the members of the Committee were absent, and that is a very large percentage of the number. The information before the Debates Committee convinced us that there was no difficulty whatever in securing all the translators we require at the present salary, and that if a position became vacant at the present time, half a dozen at least were ready to take it. Under these circumstances, it was not considered necessary to make a representation to the House, that the salaries of the translators should be increased.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am very much surprised to see that a proposal is made this year to increase the salaries of the translators. We had a good set of translators some years ago, perhaps the very best we ever had, and there never was a proposal made to increase their salaries then. Three of these gentlemen, the very best of the entire number, were dismissed two years ago—

Mr. CURRAN.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was not for translating; it was for traducing.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Last year the translation was very badly done. It was a perfect disgrace to see the way in which the translation was made, and I stated to the House last year, that I considered the translation of the debates into French a perfect waste of money. I have not yet been able to ascertain, this year, whether the translation is so backwards; but I may mention a fact which has become public property lately, that the speeches of the leader of the Opposition, which were published in French, lately, by a certain gentleman, had to be re-translated for publication. He found the translation so bad that the hon. gentleman was made to say, by the translators, the very reverse of what he stated in the House. I remember that during a debate in the early part of the Session, a great outcry was raised in the Tory French press of the Province of Quebec, against the leader of the Opposition, which was attributable to the abominable translation made by the translators of the remarks made by the leader of the Opposition. That hon. gentleman was made to say, by these translators, that practically, the French race was to be wiped out of the country, while the hon. gentleman, as every one knows, made no remark which could be even remotely construed into such a meaning. Although those gentlemen who were dismissed two years ago, were dismissed because of their political opinions, which they wrote in the newpapers, and because they had the misfortune to belong to the Opposition-

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Who says "no?"

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman demanded their dismissal on that very ground.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It was on that very ground they were dismissed. They were charged with having written unfavorably on the Secretary of State in the newspapers, and the great complaint against Ernest Tremblay, one of the very best translators we ever had, was that he had published a pamphlet about the Riel matter against the Secretary of State. I read that pamphlet myself. It is not a violent pamphlet. It is, of course, an Opposition pamphlet, but it is written in very moderate and very proper terms.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Probably the hon. gentlemen who say "no" have not read the pamphlet; but I have read it, and I repeat again that there is nothing improper or insulting in it. Tremblay was dismissed because he wrote in the Opposition press. It was considered a crime for a public employé to write against members on the opposite side of the House, but it is no crime for the translators now to write against members on this side of the House, and most of the present translators are members of the Tory press of the Province of Quebec. I would be glad to see them getting an advantage, but I do not like to see a system adopted whereby, since all the translators who were Liberals have been dismissed, an attempt is made to increase the salaries of the present translators. If this increase of the salary of the translators is necessary now, it was necessary two years ago when those gentlemen who have been dismissed were in office.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend who proposes this amendment assumes that the Debates Committee did not fully consider this application of the translators. It was not only considered once, but it was considered at two meetings of the Committee, and we went fully into the matter. There were gentlemen present who are fully competent to discuss the question, gentlemen who understood what translating is, and we had present the representative of the translators and also the representative of the official reporters, and examined them. We went very fully into the question, and at each meeting, the overwhelming sentiment of the Committee was against raising the salaries of the translators, because the feeling of the Committee was that the $1,000 they are paid at present was an adequate remuneration for the services they If there had been a full meeting of the Committee, I believe that the proposal to add $200 a year to their salaries would have been snowed under. I was willing to yield that point, but we must remember that the claim made by the translators was for $2,000 a year, because they say they ought be paid the same as the official reporters. It is of course preposterous to suppose that the duties of the translators are in any way so onerous, or call for such skill, or entail such responsibility, or require the same nervous strain as the duties of our official reporters. We have a There is not a responsibility in that Committee. year since I have been a member of this Committee, that applications are not made either to raise the salary of some person, or to recommend the employment of some additional person on the staff. But, Sir, we have a responsibility, and I am bound to say that the Committee are fully conscious of that responsibility, and I think they have done and are determined to do, their duty. The hon. member for Montreal Centre seems to assume that we did not consider this matter. I reply that we fully considered it and discussed it from every We had the principal translator there; we estimated the time in which it would be necessary to translate a page of Hansard; there were three or four gentlemen there who knew something about the matter; and it is my firm conviction that what actually took place was the sense of the Committee at large; and if the report is referred back at this stage of the Session, I do not think any result favorable to the view of my hon, friend will follow. It will be much better to let his motion stand over tor another year, and let this report be adopted. If the report is referred back, I know very well that his view will not be adopted, because I know the sentiment of the Committee. On the other hand, if it should be referred back at this stage of the Session, and a large number of the members of the Committee should be absent, and a catch vote should take place, then I am perfectly certain this House would not respect the recommendation of a very small committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. As a member of the Committee to whom this matter was referred, I may say that some members of the Committee made the statement that the translation which is now costing us $9,000 could be farmed out for $3,000. I think the best solution of the whole difficulty would be to wipe out the whole expenditure of $75,000 which the publication of Hansard is now costing, or, at any rate dispense, with the reporting of the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole, which will do away with half the cost and shorten the Session. If the matter is referred back, the same report will have to be made again, for the members of the Committee are fully satisfied that the translators should not receive a larger indemnity than the members of Parliament.

Mr. CURRAN. With regard to the observation of the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier), that the translators who were dismissed were the most competent men we had on the staff, I can only say, so far as my experience goes, that in certain speeches I remember very often the exact reverse of what was intended to be said was translated into French. Those men were dismissed because they took part in political discussions and wrote political pamphlets. It may be the hon, gentleman's idea that there was nothing offensive in what they said and wrote, but, so far as my memory goes, the mildest expression they used towards the hon. Secretary of State, or any member of the party on this side of the House, was that we were a lot of hangmen. My hon, friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) states that the translators are all Montreal men, and that their employment is Montreal patronage. I may say that I had nothing to do with recommending any of them to the position; I was not aware until my hon, friend stated it that they were Montreal men; and I do not think that the hon. member for Montreal East (Mr. Lepine) either had anything to do with the suggestion of their names. I am informed that on the staff there are gentlemen from Montreal, Three Rivers, Sorel and Quebec. I do not know them personally; and it is not at all on account of the place they come from that I have thought it proper to take charge of this matter. Although the motion is in the exact words used by my late colleague, Mr. Coursol, on a former occasion, if the form does not suit, we can change it, so that this matter may be referred back for the further consideration of the Committee. Then, if the Committee in their wisdom think that we should not increase these salaries, I shall have sought to do my duty to those gentlemen who have a very arduous work to perform.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose no one can seriously contend that the translators who were dismissed were not the best members of the staff we have had. It is true, some of the translation was not as good as it might have been, because the work was distributed, and all the pages of the same speech were not done by the same men and were not done equally well. You find that to-day. But we certainly did a poor service to the translation of the debates when we dismissed those three translators. It is true, some of them may have spoken strong words against the hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues; but, after all, that is not a serious thing. I know some members of this House, whom I have in my eye, who used as harsh or harsher language, but who have not received as bad treatment from the Government. An hon. member says that the chairman of the Committee, whose report we are now discussing, used equally strong language; if he had been a translator, he would have been dismissed, but being a member of Parliament he was raised to the position of chairman of the Committee. As I understand, the Committee, having looked into this matter, say there is no reason for an increase, and I see no reason why we should depart from the report of the Committee.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This is not the first Session this question has been before the Com-The translators have been applying for an increase from year to year, asking to be placed on the same footing as the reporters. The Comthe same footing as the reporters. The Committee, not only this Session, but in previous Sessions, have fully considered and discussed the matter in all its bearings, and have almost unanimously arrived at the conclusion that the translators are sufficiently paid now. I cannot see what is to be accomplished by the motion of the hon. member from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) being adopted, because, if the Committee have to take this matter into consideration again, I cannot understand how they can come to any other conclusion than that at which they have arrived. They have no desire to increase the expenditure of publishing Hansard, which is apt to run up from I think the Committee have economical in all matters. With year to year. endeavored to be economical in all matters. regard to the recommendation increasing the pay of the amanuenses, I think that is an increase which this House will justify; but I do not think the Committee will consent to increase the salaries of the translators, and I think it is useless for the hon. member for Montreal Centre to press this motion. If he gets the House to pass an order that the salaries of the translators shall be increased, all right; but there is really no use in sending this report back to the Committee, for the Committee have already determined on that matter, after the fullest and most complete investigation, and they can receive no further information than the information they have now, on which they have based the report.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The price usually paid for translating an ordinary page of blue book is $1 per page. I do not say that is not a very good price. It is, but a page of blue book and a page of Hansard are very different things. A page of Hansard is one-third more than a page of blue book. When we consider that the Hansard today has reached 4,639 columns, and that by the end of the Session it will reach between 5,500 and 6,000 columns, the Hansard translators will not be paid more than 25 cents per page as compared with the $1 per page for the translation of the blue books. I am not making a motion to increase their salaries. I am not one of the Committee which has been examining into their petition; but I say that for translators who have to possess the intellectual faculties and the knowledge of the two languages, which the translators of Hansard require, to be paid at a rate less than 25 cents per page is not treating their work fairly. I need not add a word to what has been said about the old feud concerning the translators who were dismissed. said they were not good translators, but I said they were very good "traducers;" and it was not for translating, but for traducing they were dismissed. They were not dismissed because they had political opinions, but because they gave expression to them in an improper manner, in a manner discreditable Mr. LAURIER.

to themselves and this House; and I may add that the example made of them has already produced good fruit.

The hon. Secretary of State has Mr. BLAKE. delivered a most convincing speech. At least it has convinced me; but what it has convinced me of is, not that the salaries of the translators of Hansard should be increased, but that the salaries of the translators of the blue books should be reduced. Because we have learned from hon, gentlemen who have examined into the question that they are satisfied, first of all, that the salaries of the Hansard translators are adequate; and, secondly, that plenty of translators can be found of the same class at the same price. And yet the hon, the Secretary of State alleges that they only get about onefifth of the price paid for the translation of the blue books, which, he says, is a work requiring much less skill than the translation of the Debates.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand so. It seems to me, therefore, while not sending this report back to the Committee, the Printing Committee, if it has anything to do with the translation of the blue books, should, when it next meets, have some regard to the speech of the hon. the Secretary of State in With reference to the other this connection. feature of the controversy, the hon. gentleman says these persons were not dismissed because they were bad translators but because they were traducers. But they had great examples of the fact that traducing of this description ought not to lead to such results. One example has been quoted, and I will refer to another. I remember the language used by the late Senator Rolland, when but a simple citizen, language more violent than any I can recollect being used by the translators, and he received his reward for that language, which he used on the Champ de Mars, by being elevated to the Senate.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The historical reminiscence of the hon. gentleman is wrong. Senator Rolland presided at that meeting, and he it was who prevented any resolution being adopted by the meeting.

Mr. BLAKE. I speak of his speech which I read.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. His speech was not as represented.

Mr. LAURIER. I was there and heard it.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend was there with his musket.

Mr. AMYOT. I fully concur in the proposition that the part of Hansard which relates to the Debates in the House when in Committee of the Whole should be dispensed with. I think that part of the Hansard is a great means of extending the Session to undue length. But as far as the translation of what appears in Hansard is concerned, some gentlemen do not seem to understand the importance that should be attached to having a proper translation. There is certainly a certain tendency, not only in this House but all over the Dominion, to do away with the French language, and we must protest against it.

An hon, MEMBER. No.

Mr. AMYOT. I will quote facts to prove what I say. If the Committee, on a question concerning the French, do not find it advisable to do justice, we must feel it and say it. The Hansard is not translated into French in the Senate, and I, for one, say that is a gross injustice. Our constituents have the right to have those debates translated. They have that right, under our constitu-tion, which makes both languages official. I do not see upon what authority any branch of this Legislature can dispense with the French language The idea of doing away with that language has originated in some very noble minds and hearts! but the fanaticism which animates them is too prompt. The time has not yet arrived when it can be given effect to; we are still too numerous to endure it. The dream of these people may go like a nightmare, and in any case they will have to wait some generations before it can be realised. At all events, the Hansard is not translated into French in the Senate, which is a gross injustice. A great many documents are filed of which we receive the translation only six or seven months afterwards. Those documents are communicated to the English press, which receive and publish them at once, and the French press have to go to the expense of translating them when that translation should be done by Parliament. This is not a laughable question, but a question of right. An hon. gentle-This is not a laughable man has said that the characteristic feature of a people is its language. Well, our characteristic also feature is the French language. We are entitled to M it, and I tell hon. Ministers that we will hold them responsible before the people if justice is not done. We do not like to delay proceedings, and we thus discuss Bills which often have not been printed in French, and which we receive in French only after the discussion is finished. We do not complain; we do not throw any embarrassments in the way; but we do not want to give in when it is a question of principle. We do not want to give in when the attempt is made to do away with the French language as it is made in the Senate. Next year I intend raising that question in the beginning of the Session. We are entitled to have the Hansard of the Senate translated. We have the right to be on an equal footing with our English countrymen. If Confederation has been established on wrong principles let us say so, and we will alter it if we obtain the unanimous consent of the interested parties; otherwise we must stand by the terms of Confederation. With regard to the Hansard translators, the hon member for Richmond and Wolfe says we could find any number of translators who would be happy to have the position. That is a method of reasoning which is not worthy of the hon. gentleman. We might find hundreds and thousands of persons ready to take his place; but when we employ a man, we must do him justice. I think that those translators who are employed, not only during the Session, but who have to stay here a month or a month and a half after prorogation, and cannot have any permanent employment any where else, but have only that to depend upon for the sustaining of their families, should be considered. I think that, under circumstances like this, when the Session lasts over four months, we should take into consideration what is necessary for them to live and to keep up their families. The Committee, on a division of five to four, came to an adverse conclusion. Of course, the feelings of the Committee might have something to do with that. Perhaps they would have arrived at a different conclusion if they had been otherwise advised. Now, it is complained that the French translation costs $9,000 That is immense! But the whole English Hansard costs $66,000. That is natural! That is the tendency everywhere, and I protest against it. It is not for myself that I protest, but for the people I represent, and for the future of this country. The two races and the two languages are necessary for the welfare of this country, and the rights of each must be respected. For my part, I will not yield one inch when it is a question of our rights, which have been secured by treaties and guaranteed by Imperial charters.

Mr. DAVIN. I would desire to make an explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon, member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) had a perfect right to oppose the amendment of my hon, friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), but I think it was out of place and most unfair to the translators of the Hansard to treat them as he has thought proper to do. He knows that, last year, owing to the diffiulties which arose and the sickness of the chief translator, some delays occurred.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). And this year

Mr. DESJARDINS. This year they have done their duty well. They have done their work in such a way as to claim the praise of everyone who has taken the trouble to read their translation, and, if the hon. member was not led astray by his political feelings, or as to the treatment of his own political friends, I think he would have shown a better spirit than he has. I think his remarks were altogether undeserved.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think the insinuation of my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), that the members of the Committee were actuated by any national feeling, is altogether unfounded. I repudiate it on my part, and I say emphatically that the members of the Committee had nothing of the kind in view, and that they considered the matter altogether in view of the claim of the translators for increased compensation.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sorry that the amendment introduced by my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has created so much discussion. Somehow, whenever you discuss anything in regard to the French, it creates a row. It reminds me of a statement made to me by one of the translators, when this question was before the House on a previous occasion, that the only increase the translators had was that they had some more pages to translate. I believe, if the matter was referred back to the Committee and properly weighed, the result might be different. I think last year the Committee proposed to increase the salaries of the translators by $200, which shows that the question might be again considered. However, I rose simply to answer a statement of my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Langelier). It is the second or third time that insinuations of that kind have been made, no doubt from perfectly good motives, by my hon. friend for Quebec East, and, some time ago, by my hon. friend for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). To-day the hon, member for Quebec East says that certain Ministers and certain supporters of the Government could not be very proud of some speeches made by them in 1885 and 1886, and that some of the members of Parliament who are sitting here to-day are in the same position. I do not know whether the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Langelier) looked at me in that connection. He looked in this direction, but I could not tell at whom he was looking, as there are two or three of those miserable men of 1885 and 1886 sitting in this neighborhood. I wish it to be understood plainly, and I leave it to my hon. friend himself, with whom I was travelling during those bad times, when I had the honor to go into forty-two counties in the Province of Quebec, that I do not deny that I did everything, politically speaking and in every other proper way, to hurt the Government, because of their policy in regard to the North-West; but I will leave it to the hon. gentleman to say if I uttered one word which could prevent a Minister of the Crown from meeting me, shaking hands with me, and even asking me to his house. This insinuation has been thrown out very often. Some gentlemen may have been heard to say so, but I came to this House to occupy a seat here independent of everybody as to what I should do afterwards, and leaving it to my constituents to decide whether or not they had confidence in me after that, Mr. ELLIS. I have no political feeling in regard to this matter, and had none in the Committee. I am not very well acquainted with the political feeling in Quebec. The Committee simply looked at the amount of time taken by the translators to do the work and the amount they received. The Secretary of State has said that he pays $1 a page for other translation, and that he considers Well, if you count the number of that good pay. words in an ordinary blue book, say the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, and the number of words on a page of Hansard, you will find that you obtain, at least, $2.50 a page at the present rate of translating the Hansard. The Secretary of State will not deny that. The Hansard, when it is completed this year, will, according to the calculation of the Secretary of State, make about 5,550 columns. Well, we will pay $9,000 for translating somewhat less than 3,000 pages. Now, I think the Secretary of State must admit that this is paying $3 a page for translating the Hansard, and that it is a pretty fair price, and the Committee viewed it from that point of view alone. I may say for myself that I am in favor of abolishing the Hansard. I have observed since I came to this House and became a member of the Committee, that the cost of Hansard rises like the tide in the Bay of Fundy, and it does not fall off at all. It is constantly increasing, and I do not believe it is worth what it costs the country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In looking at the French translation I find that it is only completed up to the 27th March last, therefore it is hardly of any use to those of us who wish to send off the speeches that we made five or six weeks, or two months ago. Like my hon. friend who just spoke, I think we had better abolish the Hansard, or at least make it less expensive.

Mr. Bergeron.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to make one observation in relation to this matter. I think the debate has travelled entirely beyond the question before the House, and I think we should come down to our moutons now, as they say. What strikes me about this is that a respectable Committee of this House, whose particular duty it is to deal with this question, and which have, as it is admitted on all sides, dealt with the question after the most mature consideration, have come to a conclusion. and I, for one, am prepared to support the conclusion of the Committee, unless I hear some reasons to induce me to alter that decision, and I certainly have heard none since. I think it is wasting the time of this House to raise a discussion on the question of the French language. The question of the French language is not up now; it is too important a question to be dealt with as a mere side issue on a matter of how much the translators should be paid. Therefore, I shall support the recommendation of the Committee

Mr. POPE. In order to settle this question of the languages, I would suggest, that for the future every member should pay for the printing of his own speech. I think, that would save a good deal of expense to the Hansard.

Amendment negatived, and main motion agreed to.

THE HARBOR OF PICTOU.

Mr. COLBY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) to amend the Acts respecting the Harbor of Pictou. He said: The object of this Bill is to lighten the charges on ships entering that harbor, and it is done at the request of the Harbor Commissioners themselves. Their proposition is, that the Act shall be so amended that in the future, vessels entering that harbor shall pay dues three times a year instead of each trip, as heretofore. As this proposition comes from the Harbor Commissioners, I suppose it will be very acceptable to the commercial public.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PIERS AT NICOLET.

Mr. BOISVERT (Translation) asked, Whether the Government have received petitions from several parishes of the county of Nicolet, asking that works may be carried out in the River St. Lawrence with a view to prevent the overflow of the water in the spring? If so, what do the Government purpose doing in the matter?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In reply to the hon. member, I will say that petitions dated the 6th of March last have been sent by the residents of Nicolet, and that petitions dated the 18th of March last have been sent by the residents of Bécancour. Those petitions were transmitted by the hon, member for Nicolet (Mr. Boisvert) himself. The mayor and residents of St. Grégoire, the residents of the municipality of St. Jean Baptiste of Nicolet, have also sent petitions dated the 3rd of March last, asking for the construction of wharves and piers at Cap à la Roche, with a view to prevent the overflow of the water in the spring. The chief engineer of the Department has reported that a survey was necessary to decide about the usefulness of those works. According to his idea those works will cost at least $2,000,000.

SUBMITTING LOANS TO A POPULAR VOTE.

Mr. GUAY asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to propose a measure to the effect that no more loans be negotiated on behalf of the Dominion of Canada without submitting them to the test of the popular approval?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:

1. Resolved. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line to be constructed from Glenboro' westerly, a distance of the statement of of about sixty miles, to a point on the proposed branch railway of the said company running from Brandon southwesterly.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, I have that in my desk.

Motion agreed to.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to consider the following resolution:-

That it is expedient to provide that the sum of ten thousand dollars per annum be appropriated for the expenses in connection with the Bureau of Iabor Statistics.

Motion agreed to.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Mr. FOSTER moved third reading of Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the Bill is read the third time, I wish to propose an amendment. Yesterday I moved in Committee that a clause be inserted requiring banks to keep their various branches open until three o'clock on Saturday afternoon. I do not intend to take up the time of the House by going over the reasons which I then urged in favor of this amendment. I now move that the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to insert the following clause:-

That all branches of the various banks chartered under this Act be kept open for business on Saturday until three o'clock in the afternoon, save and except when a statutory holiday falls upon Saturday.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Before this Bill is read the third time, I desire to call the attention of the House and the Government to a section which, I think, is very objectionable and which has not so far received due consideration from this House. I regret I was not in my seat when this section was discussed. But, if I am correct, certain points of the section have not received due consideration. I refer to section 54. This section says:

"The payment of the notes issued or re-issued by the bank and intended for circulation, and then in circulation, together with any interest paid or payable thereon as hereinafter provided, shall be the first charge upon the assets of the bank in case of its insolvency;"—

I do not object to that part of the section; but it goes on and creates a privilege with respect to payments due to the Government, in these terms : "and the payment of any amount due to the Government of Canada, in trust or otherwise, shall be the second charge upon such assets; and the payment of any amount due to the Government of any of the Provinces, in trust or otherwise, shall be the third charge upon such assets. I know this section has been fully discussed as to the advisability of creating such privilege, and my intention is not to deal with that part of the question, but to raise the question as to its constitutionality. I believe this section is ultra vires of this House and this Parliament. It is of no great consequence so far as the majority of the Provinces are concerned, because, I think it is conceded that this privilege existed before in all the Provinces, except the Province of Quebec. However, I believe that if it does not affect the other Provinces, and if this Parliament has no jurisdiction over this question, at all events, so far as regards the Province of Quebec, it should be left alone. I understand this section is framed for the purpose of convenience. As to the question of advisability, I entirely agree in the opinions expressed by the hon, member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) who proposed an amendment to strike out that privilege. I do not see any reason or justice in placing the Government of Canada in a more advantageous position than the ordinary creditors of the bank. There is a further reason why this privilege is not advisable. Parliament provides ample legal machinery to give the Government control over the banks. It provides for a very severe system of inspection of audit and of return, and I think the Government are in a better position to guard the public moneys than are individual creditors of the bank, because the Government receive the bank returns monthly, and while it is true that these returns are published in the Official Gazette, I believe no one will contend that the Government are not in a better position than are individuals in regard to knowing the condition of the banks. But the point I wish especially to raise is that of constitutionality. I cannot see any other provisions by which this legislation could be claimed by Parliament than that the words contained in section 91 of the British North America Act: "banking, incorporation of banks and issue of paper money;" and a little further on: "bankruptcy and insolvency." I quite understand that everything which is necessary for the efficient organisation of the banks, and for the efficient working of our banking system, is within the power of the Dominion Parliament; but I question whether it is a necessary element of our banking system that this privilege should be given to the Government. It is doubtful whether this privilege exists in other Provinces, although I understand by the decisions given in two cases that it is generally conceded that this privilege does exist in Provinces other than the Province of Quebec; but in the Province of Quebec this privilege has never existed, and the law on the point is very clearly laid down in our Civil Code. Two articles deal with this subject, and it is not necessary that I should trouble the House by reading them, but they are very well known in that Province. Moreover, the question has been tested, and it was tested in the case mentioned in the discussion before the Committee, the Exchange Bank of Canada and the Queen. The case is reported at page 12 and at pages 130 and following of the Leyal News, volume 9. The facts are quite simple: In September, 1883, the Exchange Bank of Canada was put into liquidation under the provisions of the Act 45 Victoria, chapter 23. Liquidators were appointed. On the 15th of March following the Attorney General for the Province of Quebec filed a claim against the estate of the bank for $75,000, being the amount of a deposit made with the bank in September, 1883, payable with interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and demanded that the amount due in principal and interest be paid by privilege out of the assets of the bank. Two creditors, Mr. Massue, a creditor for $20,000, and the Merchants' Bank, a creditor for $3,050, contested that claim. On the 10th of March, 1884, the Government of Canada filed a claim for $237,840. The question was raised in this House the other day as to the difference between deposits and money loaned to the bank. The question arose in this case. This claim of $237,840 was composed of $200,000 for Mr. LAVERGNE.

two loans of $100,000 each and $37,840 for an ordinary deposit. The Government of Canada also demanded that this last claim, in principal and interest, be paid by privilege, in preference over the other creditors, out of the assets of the bank. Mr. Massue and the Merchants' Bank contested that claim also. The judgment of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec dismissed the claims of both Governments for privilege. The Governments appealed from that decision to the Court of Queen's Bench, which reversed the decision of the Superior Court, one judge, the Chief Justice, dissenting. The case was then brought before the Privy Council, which, by a unanimous decision, reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal, and confirmed the decision of the Superior Court. It had always been admitted in the Province of Quebec that no such privilege existed; but the question was raised in regard to an article of the Code of Civil Procedure, which created some doubts. The holding of the Privy Council is as follows :-

"Held, that Article 611 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be modified so as to give full effect to Article 1994 of the Civil Code, and that the intention of the Legislature in these articles was to enact to the following effect: That, subject to the special privileges provided for in the Codes and Statutes, the Crown has such preference over chirographic creditors as is provided in Article 1994 of the Civil Code; and that the expression persons accountable for its moneys, in the latter article, is not applicable to a bank receiving money of the Crown on deposit or current account."

The only privilege granted by Article 1994 of the Civil Code is contained in paragraph 10 of that Article:

"The claims of the Crown against persons accountable for its moneys."

The Privy Council decided that the bank were not persons accountable to the Crown for its moneys. Their decision went further: Lord Hobhouse, in giving the judgment of the Court, said:

"Their Lordships are also clear that the law relating to property in the Province of Quebec or in Lower Canada, from 1774 to 1867, when the codes came into force, must be taken to be the "Coutume de Paris," except in such special cases as may be shown to fall under some other law. Probably such was the true effect of the statute 14 Geo. III, cap. 83, but at all events there has been an uniform current of decision to that effect in the colony, dating back forty years or so before the date of the codes, which ought not now to be questioned."

It is very plain that this is our law in the Province of Quebec. It is very plain also that, in the opinion of the Lords of the Privy Council, this question is one relating to property; and if it is, it certainly comes under section 92 of the British North America Act, enumerating the exclusive powers of the Provincial Legislatures. Paragraph 13 of that section says:

"Property and civil rights in the Province."

I can quite understand that the Government should assume this privilege if it were really necessary to the proper working of our banking system; but I cannot see that the existence of that privilege is a necessity of this Banking Act. The only ground on which this privilege can be created is that it is necessary to legislation on banks and banking; but surely, if we have a right, on the ground of convenience, to assume jurisdiction over this matter, which is exclusively within the power of the Local Legislature, we could, on the same ground, assume jurisdiction over every matter which the British North America Act stipulates to be within the exclusive power of the Local Legis-For the Federal Government to assume this privilege might not create any new privilege in any other Province; but, so far as the Province of Quebec is concerned, it is an encroachment on our Civil Code, and a law which was in existence before the Confederation, and which has been conceded to us by the British North America Act; and I feel that it is a duty on the part of all the members of this House, more especially the members from the Province of Quebec, to defend our rights and If we allow this enprivileges in this matter. croachment to-day, anything of the kind can be repeated at another time. I especially call the attention of the hon. Ministers who belong to the Province of Quebec-the hon. Minister of Public Works, the hon. Secretary of State, the hon. Minister of Militia, and the hon. President of the Council-to the fact, that this House is undertaking to deal with a matter which properly comes within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature. I do not wish to deal at length with this question, but I thought it my duty to call the attention of the House, and more especially of the hon. gentlemen who take an interest in the matter, to it. believe, Sir, that if ever a constitutional objection could be raised to a Bill, it is on this occasion; and in accordance with these views, I beg to propose the following amendment to the third reading of the Bill:

That this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the whole House, with instructions to amend section 54 of the said Bill, by striking out all the words after the word "insolveney" in the said section.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will call attention in the first place to the fact that the hon. gentleman's amendment proposes to leave entirely out of the Bill the provisions respecting the rights of the Crown; the priority of the Government in Canada, and the priority of the Governments of the Provinces, and to leave these questions to be settled by litigation in the way they have been dealt with heretofore. Having said that much, I will refer to the hon, gentleman's argument upon the other points, namely, that we are proposing an unconstitutional provision, and one dealing with property and civil rights. The subject which the hon. gentleman refers to did not escape the attention of the Committee of the whole House or of the Government, and it was discussed in committee, although I admit we had not the advantage of having it so fully considered as the hon, gentleman has enabled us to consider it this afternoon. Without undertaking to make an elaborate argument on the question—and I hope the hon, gentleman will not suppose that I do not do so because of any want of respect for his arguments, as he has given so much study to the question—I merely wish to state, briefly, my views, for the purpose of showing that the matter has not escaped the attention of the Government who prepared the Bill, or the Committee who passed it. I think the hon. gentleman has much overdrawn the effect of the decision he has quoted. It is quite true that it recognised the right of the Provincial Government to certain priority upon the assets of an insolvent bank, but the hon, gentleman seemed to think it led to the priority would be ultra vires of this Parliament. I every citizen of the country, if he takes care to submit to him that such is not the conclusion to be drawnfrom that decision. In the first place, although the decision relates only to a claim of priority on the part of the Crown, in relation to a bank in the Province of Quebec, the question really stands in the same position in all of the Provinces, and a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada has recognised that right of the Crown, in respect to the Province of New Brunswick. With regard to the foundation of our right so to legislate, I submit to the House, that we have a right to do it in pursuance of our power in relation to banks and banking. Inasmuch as we have the right to constitute the banks, and inasmuch as we only have that right, we have surely the right to control the banks as to all the business they may pursue, and all the liabilities which they shall incur, and we have the right to say what liabilities shall be imposed on the shareholders who engage in the business of banking from time to time, and how their various creditors shall stand as regards priority. Besides that, it seems to me to come directly under the powers of this Parliament, in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency. We have the right to say what class of creditors, as regards citizens generally, shall have priority upon the assets of insolvent citizens, and we surely have the right to say, in respect to banks above all others, they being the creations of this Parliament, what right their creditors shall have in regard to the assets of the bank. We thought it better to state the priority distinctly on the face of the Act, rather than to leave it to be inferred from the Code in Quebec, or from the common law in the other Provinces, what the law is upon that subject, as to give fair notice to everybody who takes the pains to examine the Banking law, as set out in this statute. The transactions with banks are by no means so large on behalf of the Provincial Governments, as they are on behalf of the Government of Canada. In some of the Provinces the bank account consists principally of debits for the greater part of the year, but in some, I dare say, sums to their credit in respect to which they may require to be made effective from time to time. However, in the collection of revenue in all parts of the country, the banks stand in a different relation to the Federal Government from that which they hold in relation to the Provincial Governments. We are under far greater necessity to use the banks. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken with regard to the superior means which the Federal Government has of judging of the solvency or standing of a bank. The hon, gentleman has referred to the audit provisions by which we might be enabled to make inspections and to ascertain, from time to time, what the condition of the bank is, but all these provisions have been eliminated from the Bill. Even the provisions with regard to the audit by persons appointed by the shareholders have been dropped, and there is no provision in this Bill which was not in the old law with regard to any-thing of that kind. The returns which are furnished to the Minister of Finance afford the same information to the Provincial Governments, to all the creditors of the bank and to all the shareholders, as they do to the Federal Government. In point of fact, nothing of the transactions of a bank is conclusion that legislation with respect to that open to the Finance Minister which is not open to examine the returns which are published in the Canada Gazette from time to time. These are the grounds upon which I venture to think, notwithstanding the very careful argument presented by the hon. gentleman, that this is not a matter affecting civil rights, but that it is a question affecting banks and banking, and bankruptcy and insolvency, and therefore within the powers of this Parliament.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—I. C. R. BRANCH LINES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you leave the Chair, I desire for a few moments to invite the attention of the House to a matter which arises in consequence of some views expressed here by some hon, members of the House within the last two weeks. When discussing matters concerning the Inter-colonial Railway, the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) proposed, as a way to deal with the various branch railways connected with the Intercolonial Railway, that they should be consolidated with the Intercolonial Railway, and should form one line. In the course of that discussion, it was stated by the hon. gentleman that there were some sixteen or seventeen branch railways in that position, operated under separate managements, but connecting with the trunk line of the Intercolonial Railway. It came out in the course of that discussion that a few weeks before the general election of 1887, certain encouragement was held out to the people of the Maritime Provinces by Sir Charles Tupper, then a member of the Government, that such a proposition would be favorably entertained by the Government. The hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) was endorsed in this statement by the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), and thus it would appear that there is a movement on foot at the present time to induce the Government to adopt the policy in question, to take over these numerous branch railways and make them part of the general railway system of Canada. It is only fair to say that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), in making that proposition, only urged that these roads should be taken over at their fair value. It may be a question, however, whether some of these roads have any value at all. I did not understand him to make an exception, but he proposed that the consolidation of these branches should take place at the expense of the country. If the Government is to undertake any such policy, I think it is material that the House and the country should know in advance the nature of some of these enterprises, in order to see whether it is in the public interest that such a policy should be adopted. I, therefore, venture to call attention to one of these which is known as the Caraquet This railway, as the House knows, Railway. commences at Bathurst on the Baie des Chaleurs, and extends $67\frac{1}{2}$ miles in an easterly direction on the south side of that bay, running through the whole distance in close proximity to the water, and terminating on the east at Shippegan Harbor. find that, in 1883, a proposition was made to Sir John Thompson.

On that occasion, the proposal was brought into the House by Sir Charles Tupper, who did not give to the House any information in regard to the prospects of the road or the financial basis of the company, but stated that the then member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), who now also represents that constituency, would afford the House such information as would enable it to decide on the proposition to give aid to the road. Accordingly, on the 17th May, 1883, in response to the invitation of the Minister of Railways, the hon. member gave to the House his views as to the arguments in favor of granting aid to that road, and his utterances are of record on page 1266, of the Hansord of 1883. After quoting from Sandford Fleming, the hon. gentleman goes on to state his own views as matters of inducement for the vote the House was asked to grant. He says:

"Therefore, I say that on that ground alone—"."
That is, the ground of short distance—

That is, the ground of short distance—

"the promoters of this scheme would be warranted in asking this House to aid a railway which, in the future, at all events, will be of incalculable benefit to this Dominion at large. But, Sir, the scheme is not put forward on that ground alone: it is put forward, perhaps with even greater force, on other grounds, and this is the immense trade the road would develop, and would tend to build up, not only in that particular locality, but over the Dominion as a whole. By the construction of that road, an enormous trade would be given to the Intercolonial Railway; as a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway; it is not second in importance to any other road."

I commend this statement to the attention of the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). Here it is stated that the trade of the proposed Caraquet Railway is not exceeded by that of any other branch line which we are asked to purchase. It is interesting to know that this is a sample of the sixteen or seventeen roads we are asked to purchase. He goes on to say:

goes on to say:

"And, because it is a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, I assume that my hon, friend opposite can have no objection to it. As I understand him, he is in favor of any road that will feed the Intercolonial Railway. To give an idea of the amount of trade done along that road, and of the population interested in it, I may inform the House that, between the point where it is proposed to connect with the Intercolonial Railway and the terminus of Caraquet or Shippegan, a distance of 45 miles, there is a population of 18,000 souls. The whole country, from end to end of the proposed road, is settled. The value of the products of that section of the country during the past year amounted to some $1,000,000, made up as follows: Lumber, $300,000; fsh, comprising canned goods, codfish, salmon, herring, mackerel and cysters, $50,000; grindstones, $50,000; farun produce, $150,000. There are a number of other industries which would find its way to the Intercolonial Railway. To the West this road will be a great benefit, inasmuch as it will afford the people an opportunity, which is now denied them, of getting their fish in a fresh condition, and they will have a larger market for their products, as well as the East a larger market for theirs."

material that the House and the country should know in advance the nature of some of these enterprises, in order to see whether it is in the public interest that such a policy should be adopted. I, therefore, venture to call attention to one of these railways, which is known as the Caraquet Railway. This railway, as the House knows, commences at Bathurst on the Baie des Chaleurs, and extends 67½ miles in an easterly direction on the south side of that bay, running through the whole distance in close proximity to the water, and terminating on the east at Shippegan Harbor. If find that, in 1883, a proposition was made to the Dominion Parliament to grant aid to that road.

this Government, the construction of the road was undertaken; but the aid of this Government and of the New Brunswick Government not having been sufficient for the construction of the road, it became necessary to appeal to the English capitalists, and accordingly two prospectuses were issued to the British investor, one through a firm of brokers named Mee & Billings, and other through the Imperial Bank of London, England. The prospectus in regard to the enterprise, I presume, duly set forth the substance of the remarks of my hon. friend the member for Gloucester; I have not the prospectus by me, but from what I have read from the English journals, I presume it told a flattering tale. The first prospectus intimated to the public that the gross earnings of this road would amount to about £660 per mile, or, in rough figures, $3,200; the next prospectus, the one issued through the Imperial Bank of London, estimated that the net earnings of the road would be not less than £200 sterling per mile, which implies a gross earning power of about £600 or $3,000 per mile. The second prospectus was issued in the month of June, 1886, and it contained the following statement made by the president of the road, the member for Gloucester:

"The receipts from both passengers and freight had exceeded the company's most sanguine expectations and since regular and daily trains have commenced running, the carrying capacity of the line has been taxed to the utmost."

At this period a portion of the road had been constructed and was under operation; I am not aware that the whole line was finished at that date, but I find from the communication of the president of the road that, at all events, the full line of 67½ miles was completed in the month of May, 1888, and I will assume, for argument's sake, it was not fully completed at the time of the issue of this prospectus; but you observe that it was running, and that the carrying capacity was being taxed to its utmost, and that the results had exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters. That was the paragraph on which the second issue of bonds was made. Well, it is interesting to know that that statement may have been literally correct, because the carrying capacity of the road appears to have consisted of two passenger cars, two box cars, twelve flat cars and two locomotives; so I do not think we can quarrel with the statement at that particular point. that the earnings which had I may say exceededmost sanguine expectations of the promoters, amounted, for the year ending June, 1886 that is the month in which that prospectus was issued—to $11,359.72; the operating expenses for the period amounted to $11.181.20, leaving a net surplus of $178.52. That was the financial result of the operation of this enterprise which was on that occasion presented to the public of Great Britain as most attractive, and likely to be most attractive. There were at this time 40 miles of the road in running order, and the figures which I have giving indicate that the gross earnings of the road at this particular time amounted to $283 per mile as against what was intimated in the prospectus as the gross earnings. Thus the prospectus on which the capitalists were further invited to put in their money, indicated that the gross earnings were $3,000 per mile, the fact being all connected with the issue of the prospectus.

that they had only up to that moment realised $283 per mile, something less than a tenth of what the prospectus held out. The gross earnings for the following year amounted to $12,635.04, operating expenses $12,002,53, leaving a surplus of $632.51. Then for the year ending June, 1888, the gross earnings were $11,631.94, and the expenses were $11,311.94, leaving a surplus of $320. In May, 1888, the road was fully completed. It may be said with regard to these other figures that they were not complete, but as regards the last statement, issued about the close of the fiscal year ending June, 1889, no such observation can correctly be made, because the road had then been in operation from end to end. The gross receipts of the whole road of 67½ miles for the last fiscal year, amounted to $18,210.67, while the working expenses for the same period amounted to $27,409.23; in other words, the road was operated at a loss, during that period, of $9,198.56. In other words, if that statement is correct, and it was the statement made by the Government on the floor of the House, this year, in answer to a question put by myself to the Government, then in such case the road is of no value, it is of no commercial value, it is a loss to any person or company that is obliged to operate it. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is another feature in this case. The bondholders, having discoverd that they were likely to lose, held a meeting in London, England, and the result of that meeting appears in the Canadian Gazette of the 11th April, Mr. Mee, one of the firm of brokers which floated the first loan, is reported as having explained to the indignant bondholders how he came to broach such a rotten scheme upon the London markets. He said:

"In regard to the statements made in the prospectus, I may say that they were based for the most part on official reports made to the Canadian Government at the time when the subsidies were granted to the company by the Dominion and New Brunswick Governments.

Now, if those statements made to the Government, on which this Government induced Parliament to vote this money, had been laid before this House in proper time to be examined and investigated, perhaps this matter might have been intercepted. But what happened here is happening to-day; that the proposal to grant subsidies was submitted within a few days of prorogation, just, as I suppose some more subsidies are going to be submitted, and the result again will be that the House would have no opportunity to investigate the statements. It is true that the same remark cannot be made in respect to the Government, because it was the duty of the Government before, having decided on the policy of recommending the House to grant this aid, to ascertain whether the statements made were likely to be sustained or not. But this course does not appear to have been adopted. The Government appeared to have endorsed those statements, and on those statements, which now turn out to be wholly false, the House was induced to grant aid, and the action of the House in granting aid was used as an argument to induce the public to follow suit, and not only was public money so lost but the credit of the country was also impaired. The Canadian Gazette, commenting upon this meeting, said:

"The recent meeting of the Caraquet bondholders discloses a state of things which assuredly reflects disgrace on the president and directors of the company, and upon "We had surely a right to assume that, in making a free gift of nearly £80,000 towards the construction of the line, the Dominion and New Brunswick Governments were satisfied of its importance and would see that the money was properly and judiciously expended."

I call the attention of the House to the fact that when this Government guarantees aid to such enterprises, it has not only to consider, in my judgment, the question of voting away so much of the public money, but the effect of the endorsement by this Government of such a scheme when it is called upon to require further financial assistance. In this case the Government, by its unwise action, has become instrumental in inducing investors to embark in this enterprise, whose capital is now absolutely lost. A year rolled by and the bondholders again had a meeting, and in the Railway News of March 29, 1890, there is a further report as to the state of the company. In the published report of the proceedings of the bondholders it was disclosed there was a movement on foot to induce the Canadian Government to buy the road, and remedy, as far as they could, the wrong they had been instrumental in doing, through their negligence or recklessness, to English investors. Let me read some extracts from the proceedings. The meeting was held on March 25, 1890, at the offices of the English Association of American Bond and Shareholders (Limited), in London, Mr. Joseph Price occupying the chair. After referring to the financial position of the company, the chairman said:

"It was suggested that negotiations had been going on with the Canadian Government, and might be carried to a successful termination, to obtain something for the railway. The members of the committee thereupon suggested that they should see Sir Charles Tupper, the High Commissioner for the Dominion, and ascertain his views."

I should say, that prior to this meeting, a committee of bondholders had been looking into the matter, according to a previous portion of the report with which I will not trouble the House, and it was in reference to the doings of that committee the chairman spoke. The members of the committee saw Sir Charles Tupper and obtained his views. The report continues:

their confidence, and they did not know why they should act in a different way to what they had done."

Further on, it appears a letter was sent to Messrs. Mee & Billings, and the chairman read their reply, from which I read an extract:

"GENTLEMEN,—You are no doubt aware that a meeting of the bondholders of the Caraquet Railway is to be held here to-morrow. From an interview with Sir Charles Tupper, at the beginning of this month, I learn that you and the trustees and the president had been to see the High Commissioner with reference to a petition to the Canadian Government."

I have substituted the word president for the gentleman named-

"It was surprising that, knowing, as you do, the existence of a company representing the bondholders, you did not inform them of the steps which would be taken." Further on there is another statement:

"Certain negotiations are proceeding with the Canadian Government, but we have not the permission of any of the parties moving in the matter to make the same public, and, indeed, during the progress of the negotiations re-ferred to, which it is hoped will be carried through satisthe bondholders, it is considered very undesirable that there should be any comment thereon."

Further on, Col. Sparks said:

"So far as he knew, the trustees and English directors had asked the Government to take up the whole organisation, take over the railway, and so on."

Mr. Brown, the manager of the Imperial Bank of London, wrote upon the subject, his bank having been censured by the bondholders for having floated a portion of the loan. He said:

"He hopes that you may be able to make some favorable arrangement with the Dominion Government, and so on."

It turns out that we have a movement disclosed to induce the Government to unite these branch lines, among others the Caraquet Railway, and have them taken over and operated by the country. We have evidence in what I have read that the bondholders of this company feel they have a claim on the Government in this particular case, to pay the bonds that have been issued, relying his views. The report continues:

"When he went down to Westminster he was astorished to find that the petition had been sent out from this country, and it was more astonishing to him because the parties knew that there was a committee in existence. He was more greatly surprised to find that the president had been in this country and the committee did not know of it, and that he had attended a meeting at Sir Charles Tupper to do him that the negotiations. Sir Charles Tupper to do him that the negotiations had been going on the action of the Government is on foot, unless it is anticipated, and that he had attended a meeting at Sir Charles Tupper to do him that the negotiations had been going on the action of the Government is on foot, unless it is anticipated, and that it will materialise at an early day; in other words, at about the time of the next general election. It is unfortunate the fact was not known before the vote was granted, that the president was the owner of a large portion of the road, in fact was the principal owner. It may have been an accidental omission on his part. The position of matters now is: The Government, but his secretaries telegraphed up to him to say they had not received any answer, and the position was, that there was a petition over there, and that subsequent representations would be made on Mr. Burns' arrival, and no doubt he was there now. Of course, it would be far more satisfactory if they could come to some arrangement with the Canadian Government rather than resort to law proceedings; but the question was, what were made in the prospectus with regard to assurances from the Government engineer with reference to this line receiving certain support and that it will materialise at an early day; in other words, at about the time of the road; in fact was the owner of a large portion of the road, in fact was the principal owner. It may have been an accidental omission on his part. The position of matters now is: The Government with the Canadian Government rather than resort to law upon the action of the Government. We have also and in the name of those whom I have the privilege of representing on the floor of this House, I protest against any further addition to the burthens of our people, by the purchase of bankrupt and rotten railways, which are of no advantage to the country, which might as well not have been built, for all the use they are, and which now the country is asked to pay for. Why, Sir, look at that line of railway. Had the Government shown proper foresight; had they laid before themselves the map of the country, they would never have asked the House to consent to a subsidy for building this line. The inducements offered to Parliament were, that it was to be a part of the through line, sending the wealth of the East to the West, and carrying the products of the West to the East; and an enormous trade was to be built up; a trade which, in 1886, was said to have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters, but which realised only one-twelfth part of that what was represented to be the case. That is the enterprise which the members for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) and Albert (Mr. Weldon) ask us to take over at its value. Its value would be, that the Government should receive half a million dollars for working it, the interest of which might be sufficient to enable the Government to make up the annual deficit. If there is any other proposition than that on which this railway is to be taken over by the Government, it will have to be viewed with the utmost care, and, therefore, I raise my warning voice on this matter.

THE CARAQUET RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE. I take the opportunity of speaking on this matter now, as I think it only right that the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) should hear what I have to say, before he addresses the House in response to the remarks of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). I regard this case as a typical case, illustrative of the policy of the Government in many aspects, and as an important case historically, for the purpose for which history is mainly useful to us, namely, as teaching us what to do and what to avoid. It is important with reference to those lessons for us, to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, and as proving the care which ought to be taken, and which has not been taken, with reference to the character of the enterprises which are aided by the Government. It is important with regard to the care which ought to be taken, and which has not been taken, in reference to the construction of subsidised roads; the care which ought to have been taken, and which has not been taken, with reference to the solvency and the bond fide character of these enterprises; the care which ought to be taken, and which has not been taken, as to the results which may accrue to us-the injurious results to Canada in a financial and moral point of viewwith reference to the business honesty and with reference to the financial solvency of the schemes which are undertaken. It is an important case, also, with reference to the relations of members of Parliament to the Executive of the day, and to the Parliament of the country. In all these respects, Sir, this is a typical case, which has engaged my attention from an early date, and to which I have called attention in some aspects, although in some aspects only, in my own Province, in respect to which hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches attacked me for the course I took. thereupon decided that I would take the first opportunity which should arise to express my views on the floor of this House, in the presence of the Government, and in the presence of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns). Now, Sir, the Caraquet Railway Company was brought to the attention of Parliament in the first place, at the close of the Session of 1883, upon a proposition made by Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Railways, that Parliament should grant it, in common with a number of other enterprises, the subsidy which was then fixed at the mileage rate, of $3,200. The Minister of Railways then made a statement, which was a little fuller, I imagine, than my hon. friend from North York thought, and which, in order that justice may be done to the Minister and to the Government which he represented, I want to place before the House. Charles Tupper then said:

"Then it is proposed to provide a subsidy for the Caraquet Railway Company for thirty-six miles of railway from a point near Bathurst to Caraquet, in New Brunswick, not exceeding $3,200 a mile, and in the whole $115,200. I may say to the House that this is also another branch of the Intercolonial Railway. During the time that the Intercolonial Railway was being located and constructed, the House will remember that Mr. Fleming brought forward a project of reaching the sea by constructing this branch of forty-five miles from the Intercolonial Railway down to Shippegan, and that this project was viewed with very great favor by a large portion of the press, and by a great many people in this country. The Government made a survey of the line, and found that it could be constructed at a comparatively moderate expense, and erament made a survey of the line, and found that it could be constructed at a comparatively moderate expense, and that there were no serious difficulties in construction; but it has not been proceeded with as a Government work; a company, however, is organised for the purpose of constructing the line from the Intercolonial Railway to the harbor of Shippegan, where navigation is reached; and they have also obtained from the Government of New Brunswick, a subsidy of $3,000 a mile for forty-five miles from the Intercolonial Railway to Shippegan. They have applied to this Government for additional aid; and after having given to the subject the most careful confrom the Intercolonial Railway to Shippegan. They have applied to this Government for additional aid; and after having given to the subject the most careful consideration, we feel that we would be warranted in asking Parliament to provide $3,200 a mile for thirty-six miles, which is the shortest distance that will take them from the Intercolonial Railway to tide water where they will be able to reach navigation. This line also runs through a very interesting section of country that is susceptible of great development, and we believe that it will afford, in the same way as the Baie des Chaleurs line, to which I have already turned the attention of the House, means for enabling the fishermen of that portion of New Brunswick to have infinitely greater advantages than they have at present and increase the value of their catch, because, as in other instances, they will be able rapidly to send fresh fish at a small cost by rail to the western portion of Canada, and to the various markets of the United States. This line will also so develop that section of that country, and so increase the receipts on the Intercolonial Railway by giving us additional value of traffic, that we believe it will make an ample return to the Government for the subsidy which the House is invited to give. I have nodoubt that if any further information is required with reference to either of these lines, my hon, friends who represent the line provided for in Ouelece. and my hon. doubt that if any further information is required with reference to either of these lines, my hon. friends who represent the line provided for in Quebec, and my hon. friend the member for Gloucester, with relation to the Caraquet Railway, will be able to satisfy the House that this is a wise and judicious appropriation of public money, looked at in the light of the commercial results which are to occur in the increased development of the country, and in the increased value of traffic over the Intercolonial Railway, which has cost this country so large a sum of money, and which it is desirable should be rendered as useful as possible to this country by promoting the construction of these subsidiary lines and branches that will throw traffic into it."

So you see, Sir, that having made a general statement, rose colored and not detailed, as most of the statements of that Minister we know were, laying out the general lines of the particular discussion which was to follow, the hon. gentleman appealed, and by anticipation, entrusted the detailed statement which was to be made to the hon. member for Gloucester. Well, that hon, gentleman began, as my hon, friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) said, by reading a report of an earlier date, by Mr. Sandford Fleming, in which he detailed the glories and advantages of the harbor of Shippegan, and the probable result based on mileage distances, and on sundry calculations, which, after all, have very little to do, indeed, with the complicated questions which are involved in the success of an ocean terminus, and a combined land and water communication. I say, reading some of these calculations with great unction, the hon, gentleman pointed out that this was, after all, the short route to Europethat it was through the great port and entrepot of Shippegan that the commerce and oceanic travel of this country were to flow in the future. Nor, Sir, have we been altogether without ministerial warrant for so considering the port of Shippegan, for I well remember when the then Minister of Railways, in his annual orations on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, approached the subject of the trans-continental connections, and when, to avoid any undue rivalry, he used to hurl at the head of the House the names of half-a-dozen or more different Atlantic ports which were to be the terminal ports on the Atlantic, the name of Shippegan was to be found in the long roll of Atlantic ports. Then, Sir, the hon. member for Gloucester, summing up the results of that part of his case, said:

"The railway will in the future, at all events, be of in-calculable benefit to the Dominion at large."

That was the general statement of the hon. gentleman; and I think on this occasion I must admit—and it is doing him high honor—that he " went one better" than his predecessor, the Minister of Railways, the greatest master of tropes that I know of. Then the hon, gentleman proceeded to deal with what, after all, might be supposed to be more within the grasp of an ordinary member like myself. He said

"But, Sir, the scheme is not put forward on that ground alone; it is put forward, perhaps with even greater force on other grounds, and that is, the immense trade the road would develop and would tend to build up, not only in that particular locality, but over the Dominion as a whole. By the construction of that road an enormous trade——"

It was an immense trade a moment ago; it is enormous now .-

enormous now.—

—"an enormous trade would be given to the Intercolonial Railway; as a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway; is not second in importance to any other road, and because it is a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, I assume that my hon. friend opposite can have no objection to it. As I understand him, he is in favor of any road that will feed the Intercolonial Railway. To give an idea of the amount of trade done along that road, and of the population interested in it, I may inform the House that between the point where it is proposed to connect the Intercolonial Railway and the terminus of Caraquet or Shippegan, a distance of forty-five miles, there is a population of 18,000 souls. The whole country, from end to end of the proposed road, is settled. The value of the products of that section of the country during the past year amounted to some $1,000,000, made up as follows: Lumber, $300,000—"

Who was the lumberer?—

Who was the lumberer?-

—"fish, comprising canned goods, codfish, salmon, herring, mackerel and oysters, $500,000; grindstones, $50,000; farm produce, $150,000. There are a number of other industries which would contribute to give the road a large trade, and all of which would find its way to the Intercolonial Railway. To the West this road will be a great benefit, inasmuch as it will afford the people an opportunity, which is now denied them, of getting their fish in a fresh condition, and they will have a larger market for Mr. Blake. Mr. BLAKE.

their products, as well as the East a larger market for

Can you doubt that after those statements the Opposition was dumb? Of course, as happened before, as has happened ever since, as is happening to-day—nay, not to-day—to-morrow, to use the hon. gentleman's favorite word, at the earliestthree weeks after the normal termination of the Session, we are not placed in a position to consider properly the rose-colored statements made with reference to proposed railway grants. - We had then no opportunity of checking those figures, discounting those tropes, dissecting those flowers of rhetoric and figures of speech with which the Minister of Railways and the hon. member for Gloucester overwhelmed us; and so the vote was passed for those 36 miles which were represented as necessary to reach the coast by the shortest route; and to ensure these great advantages $115,200 was voted. But, Sir, you know, the way politic people do these things is not to alarm at first. They ask for a little; they make a beginning; they do not put the blunt edge of the wedge to the timber and hammer on the thin edge, but they put the thin edge in, and give the wedge a gentle tap, and when the timber is well opened, they insert another wedge a little further. And so, with regard to this enterprise, we were seduced by the statement that $115,200 would give us all these grand advantages to which I have referred; and, for my part, I frankly confess to you, taking them at their word—nay, giving that appropriate discount which one ought to allow in valuing the statement of a Minister and the statement of an interested representative—I did think the road was cheap at the money—that the grant was very small for those great advantages. Well, a year passed, and the happy time arrived for those who had been expecting their fortune in railway subsidies in the Session of 1884; it came on the 10th of April in that year, when the same Minister was called upon to deal with the question of further subsidies to railways, and what did he say? Sir Charles Tupper said this:

"Then, Sir, at the last Session of this House, we provided for a line of railway from the Intercolonial Railway to Caraquet, and it has been found, as in the other cases adverted to, that the line was too short to enable the parties to make the necessary financial arrangements."

Too short, Mr. Speaker! I have always thought that for a great through line of railway, the shorter your line the more likely you would be to succeed; but it seems that the line was too short:

"It is now proposed to ask the House to extend the subsidy granted last Session for twenty-four miles further, from Caraquet to Shippegan Harbor, thus making that short line of communication to which great importance was at one time attached, I know, by this Government, and I believe also by my hon, friend opposite, from the Intercolonial Railway to the harbor of Shippegan."

So you see we begun by making a grant for 36 miles, and then it is proposed, on the ground that the railway is too short, to go 24 miles further, and so obtain the further inestimable privilege of access to the port of Shippegan.

" And I am instructed-

Says the hon. gentleman, who on this occasion took instructions-

--"by my hon, friend the member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), that the appropriation of $3,200 a mile for the additional 24 miles will enable him to secure the prompt construction of the 40 miles between the Intercolonial Railway and Shippegan, furnishing, as I have said, a most valuable feeder to the Intercolonial Railway."

Well, a little discussion arose on that occasion. The First Minister proceeded to discuss, upon the same day, to some extent, the general policy and its propriety as applicable to the case in hand. He said:

"The present policy has been already explained by my colleague. There are very many tracts in the country which would be very much aided and developed by reasonable assistance. The people say—"

The people, mark you.

The people, mark you.—

"The people say: We would like to have a railway, but we cannot start it; we have not capital enough; we cannot start it; we have not capital enough; we cannot interest capitalists in our line; our municipalities are not rich enough to commence these lines, and, therefore, we must do without them. So that, if a tract of country is really eligible for a railway, which is likely to be ultimately a commercial success, the Government are encouraging the people by giving them a subsidy of $3,200 a mile, and if there is anything in the scheme the people will undertake it. They will go to the municipalities along the line of railway, get the stock lists up, and start a real basis to work upon. Thus, without overburdening the Dominion Treasury, you will have a number of really good schemes, having some real merits in themselves started. As my hon, friend has said, that is a good test whether a railway scheme has any real merit. Parliament grants a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for a particular line; if it has any real merit the road will be established, and, if it has no merit, it must, to be built, throw itself upon the public treasury altogether, and then—"

What do you think?

"It will never be built."

The Oxford and New Glasgow, the Great European and American Short Line, and other enterprises, speak in trumpet tones to prove the truth of the hon. gentleman's statement. Subsidies were granted those lines; assistance was given to them; but the test, which the hon. gentleman suggests, of real merit being applied to them, they could not get on. The road, not having any real merit, was not established, and in order to be built:

"It must, if it has no merit, throw itself upon the public treasury altogether.

It had no merit; it did throw itself upon the public treasury; and then—I must alter the words in the record, and instead of saying, "it never will be built," say: "it will be built accordingly." That is what history tells us. We are building these roads out of the treasury to-day. A little further, in the course of the same discussion, when the vote came up for the extension of the line of railway from Caraquet to Shippegan, N. B., -a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 a mile, nor exceeding in the whole $76,800 — which was the second instalment, Sir Charles Tupper said:

"I propose to amend this resolution, so that it shall read: To the Caraquet Railway Company, for the extension of the railway from Caraquet to Shippegan Harbor, which makes a distance of 60 miles. A company has been already organised for the construction of the work, and this is to enable them to cover the entire distance from the Intercolonial Railway to Shippegan Harbor."

I ask the attention of the House to that statement, for a reason which will presently appear. We get into Shippegan Harbor, we have the statement of the Minister that 60 miles will cover the entire distance from the Intercolonial Railway to Shippegan Harbor, and that the vote proposed would enable the company to cover that entire distance; and once again we grant a subsidy, and an increased subsidy. Would you not imagine, Sir, that we had got to the end? We began with 36 miles, which was to give us all these advantages. Then the road was too short to be built, so we had to add 24 miles, and we are told this is to be the end. But in 1886 the present First Minister, being then in charge of the business, had occasion to bring up the Caraquet Railway Company again, and being asked for some explanation, gave the explanation I am about to read. I congratulate the hon. Minister and the country at large that there was one session—the session of 1885-in which the Caraquet Railway did not turn up. In 1883 it was to the fore; in 1884 it came to the fore; in 1885 the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) was, happily for us, dumb, perhaps sucking the sweets already secured; but in 1886 he was back again milking the cow. The First Minister then said:

"That railway is destined to leave the Intercolonial Railway at Bathurst, and run in a north-westerly direction to Shippegan. Sixty miles have already been subsidised-

Now, we knew all that before, and we thought we had certainly got to the end of it.-

-"and the present subsidy is to extend the road to

This is a conundrum of which I did not find out the meaning for some years, and the meaning of which I will tell you, Sir, presently. Sixty miles brought us to Shippegan as long ago as 1884, but, in 1886-

"the present subsidy is to extend the road to Shippegan, which is favorably mentioned by Mr. Fleming in his report of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, as a deep harbor."

He recommended it as-

"being the stepping-off place to Europe."

There was the hon. First Minister's statement that we now wanted 10 miles more to get to Shippegan Harbor from the Intercolonial Railway. First, it was 36 miles to Caraquet; then 24 miles more were to bring us right on to Shippegan; and then a further 10 miles—how many miles more shall we have to subsidise to get to the same point, I wonder?

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the debate is proceeded with, I desire to say that I see it stated in the Empire that the Canadian Copyright Act is to be allowed by the Imperial Government. I would ask the First Minister if he has any information in regard to that matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have no official information; we have only seen the statement in the papers.

THE CARAQUET BAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE. When the House adjourned, I had just read the observations of the First Minister on the proposed additional ten mile grant of 1886, and I had pointed out the circumstance that this extension or expansion had taken place without any explanation. Upon that subject I made an enquiry, being puzzled as to how the land lay and as to how the railway lay, in these terms:

"The prior grant was to a point called Lower Caraquet. I do not observe this to be mentioned at all. The first grant was to Caraquet, and then to Shippegan Harbor, and this grant is from Lower Caraquet, which is presumably the termination of the present subsidised portion. I do not know the ground, but perhaps the hon. gentleman does.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know the ground."

So neither of us knew anything about it. It was not my business to know the ground, but it was the business of the hon. gentleman, as he was proposing the additional ten-mile grant. Not finding anything about the lay of the land, I thought I might find something about the company, and so I asked:

"Can the hon, gentleman tell me something about the names? A person named Burns is the owner of eleven out of the twelve shares of the stock of the company, and the application is made by him. Has he any connection with the member for Gloucester?

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the hon member himself, and, if the hon gentleman enquires, he will find that it is due very largely to the enterprise of Mr. Burns that this very important road is built. He has thrown himself into it with enthusiasm, and without that enduring the read-outle rock bears at the form thusiasm the road would not have got so far.

"Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has exhibited so much enthusiasm. Why should he not, when he owns eleven-twelfths of the enterprise? If that amount should not give him enthusiasm, I do not know what the hon. gentleman could be enthusiastic about.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. His enthusiasm was manifested by his becoming the owner."

Well, so much passed in 1886, at which time we find the Caraquet Railway to have uncoiled, like some great serpent, and to have expanded itself to the length of about 70 miles between Caraquet and Shippegan. I have now to open a new scene in the drama, because, in 1887, on the 23rd June, a proposition was made to substitute seven miles for the last ten miles of that road. The road which had grown so much, which had grown so portentously, was shrinking now, and it was to be cut down to 67 miles instead of the 70—but not so with the subsidy. The subsidy was to stand for the 70 miles, though the road was to be cut down to 67 miles. The proposition of that date was to continue to subsidise the last hypothetical ten miles at $32,000, though only seven miles were to be constructed. Not all the contrivances of the hon. member for Gloucester, to which I shall subsequently call attention, could stretch that road to 70 miles, but still it was to have the subsidy granted for 70 miles. The late Mr. Pope, then Minister of Railways, said, on this occasion of 1887, that this was a very important road and connecting with a very important point on the Bay. My hon friend from Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) pointed out that the proposal was practically almost doubling up the subsidy; in fact, that it amounted to $4,570 a mile instead of $3,200 a mile, but no explanation whatever was vouchsafed in regard to that. The same thing has been done elsewhere. I admit that the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) is not unique in this respect. There are other cases where persons have asked for a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for a greater length of road than they constructed, and Government have afterwards come here and said to Parliament: You voted that $3,200 a mile; it is true that the railway is not more than two-thirds of the length; still, you were willing to give $32,000, when you thought you were getting ten miles, and you may as well give the same amount for the short length as for the long length. That is what was done in this case. I believe that a mystery which has remained undeveloped so far may find some solution here.
We have been trying to discover where Shippegan vote on any measure in which he is personally interested, Mr. BLAKE.

We know that it is somewhere in the Gulf, we know that it is an important terminus, we know that it is one of the termini proposed for the ocean steamships. My opinion is that the failure of the negotiations with the Andersons in regard to the new mail line must be owing to the insistance of the Government that they should include Shippegan among the points at which their fast steamers were to call. It will be observed that, in the debate of 1886, I pointed delicately to the fact that the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) was the owner of at least eleven-twelfths of the Caraquet enterprise, and upon that occasion the First Minister pointed out the meritorious character of the attitude of the hon. member for Gloucester in that regard, and stated—and I cordially agree with him in that respect—that, but for the enthusiasm. as he called it, of the hon. member for Gloucester, the railway would not have got so far as it had. During the electoral campaign of 1886-7, I quoted, and I admit not infrequently, the facts which I have narrated here to-day. I stated these facts, and I used the member for Gloucester as a shocking example. On various platforms I pointed out the circumstances which, I conceived, rendered it inconsistent with the independence of a member of Parliament that he should occupy the relation to the company and to the Executive which he did in connection with this railway. For that course I was the recipient of a very severe rebuke, nay, of two very severe rebukes from a pair of Ministers who were perambulating Ontario upon the occasion of the campaign. At London the First Minister said this:

"Mr. Blake said in his speech at Ottawa the other day, with respect to the system of granting bonuses to rail-with respect to the system of granting bonuses to rail-ways:

"What we wanted to show was the relation which existed between the members of Parliament and the Executive, which prevented the former from independently exercising their duty in Parliament. How could a member of Parliament be supposed to vote conscientiously on a question when he knew that the memorial for his railway subsidy was in the Minister's office, and its being granted depended upon whether that vote was yea or nay? It was not in human nature to do otherwise when business was being conducted in this way. The influence of party was strong. The difficulties of a man separating himself from his party—more especially when that party was in power—were many; and if the influences of the Executive were added to these, and the relations the member bears to both, the greater become the barriers in the way. Why! the member's vote is in the Minister's pocket."

And the hon. gentleman went on to say:

And the hon. gentleman went on to say:

"So Mr. Blake was of opinion that no subsidy should be given to any railway in any part of Canada if a mem-ber or his constituency was in any way interested in it. How could a member be independent, said he, if a rail-way going through the constituency was before the Gov-ernment or before Parliament?"

You will observe that the hon, gentleman adopted that method of argument which we have heard so often from him for these many years, and with which we are quite familiar—he misapprehended, I will say, the point, and misapprehending it, of course, he misstated it. He alleged here that I objected to a member of Parliament advocating the interest of his constituency in reference to a railway. I objected to nothing of the kind. I objected to a member of Parliament putting himself in such a position that his pecuniary interest conflicted with his public duty. The hon, gentleman went on:

and if he is not personally interested it is his duty, gentlemen, to do all he can for his constituents. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) Why, according to Mr. Blake's interpretation of the duty of a member of Parliament, your good member, Mr. Carling, would be guilty of a dereliction of duty, if he had fought for the railway going through here westward, and so with all members of Parliament."

This, Sir, was an unfortunate allusion; for many in that audience must have remembered with shame, that it had been discovered that the present Minister of Agriculture, to whom the hon-gentleman was referring, had, while retaining the outward appearance of disinterested independence, entered into a private bargain in connection with the first, the Allan, Canadian Pacific contract, under which he secured to himself a half share in the interest of the late Major Walker, one of the directors and chief subscribers, with whom Mr. Carling was a secret partner; and thus became personally interested in securing contract terms the most favorable to the company, and the least favorable to the country he was professing to serve. hon. gentleman continued:

"If this doctrine be true, no member of Parliament can fight for any railway which directly or indirectly benefits him or his constituency. I do not believe in that doctrine. I believe the people send members to Parliament to do the best they can for their constituents, and the more he works for his constituency the better. To show you how unjust these charges made against some members of Parliament are, I will give you one instance. There is Mr. Patrick Burns.—" Mr. Patrick Burns

It was not Patrick; but he was speaking largely to an Irish audience, and he thought he might thus insinuate that the member for Gloucester was an Irishman. His name is Kennedy, not Patrick.--

"There is Mr. Patrick Burns, the member for Gloucester, in the Province of New Brunswick. He is a Roman Catholic gentleman"—

Therefore, of course, he is a Paddy!—

Therefore, of course, he is a Paddy!—

"He is a Roman Catholic gentleman, coming from Ireland, and he has, by hard work and good character and great ability, made a considerable fortune. He was anxious to assist his constituents; he was anxious that a railway should be built—the Caraquet Railway—to the sea. He found that nobody would come forward—because railway enterprises have not been profitable in Canada—and out of public spirit he put his hands in his own pocket and spent his own money, and after doing so, so far as prudence would allow, he came to Parliament in order to get assistance. We had only to consider whether it was a good road, one for the advantage of the country, or not. We found it was to the advantage of the country, and we gave the road a grant, and Mr. Blake attacked him by name, charging him with corruption, because he held the stock of that road, when nobody else would come forward to his assistance. I said, when the matter was brought up, that he deserved great credit for his public spirit and for having put his money into the enterprise. Why, his independence was not gone, because he was already a Conservative of the strongest type, elected to support the Government (hear, hear and cheers); and it was certain he would support the Government whether he got the money or not. We were only too glad to assist Mr. Burns in his patriotic efforts, by giving it a reasonable grant to help him to build the road."

Then the hon. Minister of Justice followed in the

Then the hon. Minister of Justice followed in the same strain.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did he call him Patrick, too?

Oh, no; I do not think his Mr. BLAKE. dignity would have permitted him to do that. It is only the First Minister who can afford to unbend Says the Minister of Justice: in that way.

"We have the policy of slander in the Province of Ontario. The men who represent you, you are told from platform to platform, have been soiling their hands with public treasure. I observe that in the speeches delivered in Ontario that matter is not so lavishly handled as it used to be, and special prominence is given to members 145 living in the more distant portions of the Dominion. For a time a set was made upon dozens of members of the House of Commons, who, one after another, came forward and, with most conclusive evidence, showed those charges to be false. (Cheers.) Lately it has suited the policy of Mr. Blake, as Sir John A. Macdonald has told you, to select for a victim a gentleman who is not so well known as a representative in Ontario; a gentleman who comes from the Province down by the sea. The case of Mr. Burns has been repeated from platform to platform as if select for a victim a gentleman who is not so well known as a representative in Ontario; a gentleman who comes from the Province down by the sea. The case of Mr. Burns has been repeated from platform to platform as if he were the most abandoned wretch who ever disgraced a Parliament in any country. Let me tell you that Mr. Burns is a man of the highest character—a man who, if Mr. Blake had ten times the courage he possesses, he would not dare to assail in his own Province (cheers); but it suits, perhaps, the moment, to slander a man like Mr. Burns in places where he is not so well known as in the Maritime Provinces. Without repeating the statement of Sir John A, Macdonald, I may be allowed to repeat some of the points of the case, to show you how extravagant was the course pursued by our opponents in that gentleman's case; to show you how strong the language was that was used respecting Mr. Burns. It was simply the case of a member of Parliament desiring to obtain the construction of a railway for the people he represented. They are people thrifty, economical and not noted for enterprise, but have a reasonable and strong claim upon the Government to give them a public work like that to encourage their industries. (Cheers.) Mr. Burns felt that his duty as a representative of the people, and being one of them, was to put his hand into his own pocket and contribute to the full extent he was able. (Hear, hear.) Having done this, a contribution which no man of common sense would expect to get a profit from, and which was made entirely out of sympathy for the people he represented, he came to Parliament and said: We have done all that men can be expected to do, will you deal with us as you have dealt with railways in Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia? and we said in honesty to the people he represented: 'We will give you the ordinary subsidy to railways of that kind.' This is known to everybody in Parliament, and yet Mr. Burns' conduct has been made the subject of reproach. Mr. Blake has stated on platform after platfo

Well, the Minister of Justice, with what I should have been disposed to call sophistry, declared that I had said, or used language from which it might have been inferred, that this money went directly into Mr. Burns' pocket. I cannot conceive how any fair reader or hearer of anything I said could have supposed such a thing for a moment. statement made throughout was that Mr. Burns was the owner of eleven-twelfths of the enterprise, and was, therefore, interested in eleven-twelfths of the subsidies and aid which made the enterprise valuable. But you will see presently how far and how long they remained out of the member's pocket. In substance it was hardly in truth the company that was subsidised, because the hon. gentleman was the company, he was a corporate Burns; there was but one-twelfth in other names, of which, if my information is correct, a portion belonged to himself. But at any rate he represented and owned eleven-twelfths of the subsidies of the company, and the corporate Burns received, even if we allow that there was an alien interest of one-twelfth, out of the subsidy a very large sum. There were $224,000 of a Dominion subsidy, of which his eleven-twelfths would be $205,000. There was a New Brunswick subsidy of about $180,000, of which his share would be $165,000, making a total for the corporate Burns from both Governments of $370,000. As to the New Brunswick subsidy it was simply an element in the financing of the road, and in regard to this particular part of the transaction, in which I am dealing with the hon. gentleman's relations to the Executive and to this Parliament, it is not material. But being thus interested in the road, being, in fact, the company, and, in fact, the road, the hon. gentleman was kept on tenter-hooks for three or four years. He was doled out something in 1883, he was doled out something more in 1884, he was doled out something more in 1886, and he was doled out something more in 1887. That was the condition of parliamentary independence in which the hon, gentleman stood for all these years. Now this is said to be not a singular case. I observe in an address which has been issued in a constituency now vacant, the candidate says:

"Why I should be singled out for public censure when there are dozens of members in the same House, who, not only have applied for and obtained limits for themselves, but sit there daily voting moneys into their own pockets, I cannot understand."

Mr. CHARLTON. Who is he?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. His name is John Charles Rykert.

Mr. BLAKE. I take the earliest opportunity of repeating here the view which I have expressed elsewhere on this subject, and of repeating the distinction, obvious I should have thought to anybody, between an hon. member who, interested as he ought to be, in the welfare of his constituency, does exert himself for the benefit of that constituency, and an hon. gentleman who, being a member, becomes substantially the proprietor of an enterprise, and is substantially the person subsidised by the Executive, through the action of Parliament on its advice. But I have something more to add. The case in hand is one which exemplifies in almost all its aspects the mischief of the Government's course, as that course has been carried out, and the recklessness of their methods in carrying out that course. The greatest harm has been done to us as to the character of our investments, as to the character of our Parliament, as to the character of our Government, and as to our financial and commercial morality, and it seems to me it is eminently needful that Parliament should intervene. Some time ago, I caused further enquiries to be made as to this railway and as to the methods which have been used in respect to the course of financing this enterprise, to the extent to which it was financed in England, apart from the two Government subsidies to which I have referred. I believe that it was represented that the capital stock was subscribed to the full amount of $950,000, that it was paid up to the extent of a little over three-quarters of a million, some $751,000 odd, leaving of course about $200,000 uncalled and available. I believe, as a matter of fact, that statement was not true. Possibly on a small part cent. had been temporarily paid, but even that trifle, I believe, had been recouped out of the subsidies or other assets of the road, to those who paid it. I believe the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) was the contractor, the company, the railway. In truth, he seems to me to have beaten Poo-Bah "out of his boots." He was the shareholder, he was the president, he was the manager, he was the contractor, he was the customer, he was the financier, and he was the supplier of the railway company. He was all these things; and so you may call him everything in connection with this company, however inconsistent, rolled into one. I believe the alleged cost of the construction of this road, as represented in England, was the modest sum of $23,200 per mile, while, in fact, it would not cost, at fair values, rails included, and with contractor's profit, more than about one-third that sum. I believe that the whole cost of the enterprise, rails included, at fair values, with contractor's profits, was provided out of the Government subsidies and the sales of the bonds in England for £100,000 sterling; and not merely was the whole cost, at fair values, with contractor's profits, so provided, but there was left an excess of a very considerable amount, which went into the pocket of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns). So that he received eleventwelfths of the stock, and he made a considerable fortune out of his construction contract. It is quite possible to project a railway which will result as disastrously as this railway has resulted, and yet to make a fortune out of the undertaking. The railway may be useless, but the contractor may become a proprietor and a man of fortune. I believe the hon. member paid a very large proportion, probably about three-fourths, of the wages and local supplies in truck out of his store; and that he issued a sort of ticket, which passed as a local currency in the country to some extent, and by this means of paying in truck he made a very considerable addition to his profits. In fact he could give a wrinkle to his colleague the Finance Minister, who was troubled a good deal in getting the Banking Bill through the House, which has now fortunately gone to the Upper Chamber, with respect to the redemption and circulation and the keeping up of our currency at par. I am told that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) by means of these little tickets, which came down to very low denominations, managed, for the cost of paper, type and ink, to keep in circulation a considerable sum, and to subsequently redeem it, I will not say at par, but in a manner that left him very handsome profits indeed. I believe there is an explanation of the lengthening of the line, which must have puzzled us all, which puzzled me for a long time, for I could not at all understand how it turned out that this line which was to be only 60 miles from Bathurst to Ship pegan could afterwards be represented as being 70 miles in length, and how even when that extreme length had been curtailed there could still remain 67 miles. It is to be accounted for thus. hon. Minister, as I have told you, stated, during the progress of this affair through Parliament, that it was a great misfortune to have too short a railway; and, carrying that view into available. I believe, as a matter of fact, that statement was not true. Possibly on a small part of the subscribed stock, somewhere about 5 per Gloucester (Mr. Burns) has a couple of mills in that neighborhood. To one of these a branch somewhere about a mile long was built, which forms part of the mileage, and to reach the other mill he deflected the road, increasing its length in that way, five or six miles. Thus it was, and in these two ways, that he found a method by which to swell sixty into sixty-seven or sixty-eight miles in getting from Bathurst to Shippegan. Why, Sir, the great highway between the East and the West, the great link stretching from the ocean port of Shippegan, connecting with the Intercolonial Railway, and thence with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and so on to Vancouver, thus linking England with China and Japan, was lengthened seven or eight miles, in order that the traffic to be derived from the mills of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) might not be lost to the world! Well, seven or eight miles may not be much, but it is between twelve and thirteen per cent. on a mileage of sixty. Now, Sir, I have acquired some verbal, and some written information on these subjects which I wish to communicate to the House. A correspondent says:

"But, according to my mind, the most objectionable point on the line is the curve to Burns' mill. It makes the road longer by at least seven or eight miles, for which, not counting the extra expenses for building the road, the expenses of travelling and freight will be much higher than if it followed a straight line to Caraquet, which could have been very easily done. If, at the mill, there was a kind of town, there might be some reason for a deviation from the straight line, but the only traffic there is that of the mill. As far as I know, the right of way has not been paid yet, which causes more or less murmuring among the people,"

This letter was written some years ago; I hope it has been paid since .-

"But Mr. Burns promises that it will be all right by-and-bye. The people who worked upon the line have been, I think, pretty well paid, although I heard many com-plaints, that they had to wait long for their pay, and even forced to accept store pay; but I cannot say to what extent these complaints were founded."

Then, Sir, I have another letter from another correspondent who says:

"I do not know how many stockholders there are, but feel safe in saying that there are not more than eight or nine besides Burns. The original stock list contained a large number of names and the amount subscribed was in the vicinity of $1,000,000. In order to get rid of such an unwieldy number a call of 5 per cent. was made on the subscribed stock. The stockholders were, of course, unable to pay, and many of them transferred their stock to the president, others declined to pay and their names were struck off the list. Some say that the stock was sold and Burns bought it in, but as I never saw the required notice of sale in the Royal Gazette—although it might have been published—I am inclined to the belief that the stock list was reopened. Seven of the subscribers were allowed to hold sufficient stock to enable them to act as directors and went through the form of paying I do not know how many stockholders there are, but that the stock list was reopened. Seven of the subscribers were allowed to hold sufficient stock to enable them to act as directors and went through the form of paying the 5 per cent. call. I heard that two others were retained. Burns then took the balance of the stock allowed by law, $950,000. I camot speak with certainty, but it is generally understood and believed that the amount which was paid upon the stock by a few of the stockholders has been since refunded. I was told by a man who had a contract for grading a section of the road that the grading would not exceed $2,000 per mile. I judge that the cost of grading and bridging from Bathurst to Caraquet did not exceed $2,000 per mile. From all the information that I have been able to gather I should say that about one-fourth of the whole was paid in cash, and three-fourths in goods from the stores of the president; the sleepers cost 8 cents apiece and were paid for chiefly in goods. Then men employed on the road, placing the sleepers and rails, ballasting, &c., are nearly all paid in goods, as so far as I can learn nothing has yet been paid for land taken for the road, nor for damage to crops, except a trifle, nor for lumber cut upon the lands through which the roads runs and used in building culverts, &c."

As I said before, this letter was written some years ago, at the end of 1886.

"They have two pretty old looking second-hand locomotives, one cheap second-class passenger car, two freight cars and ten or twelve flat cars. This fall they bought a snow plough. There is a station house at the junction worth about $700, one at Burns' Mill, Bathurst, one at Clifton, one at Grande Anse, one at Burns' Mill, Caraquet — now alled Burnsyille—" -now called Burnsville town if he has not got his name in the railway.—

So that the hon, gentleman has got his name on a town if he has not got his name in the railway.

"and one here at the village of Caraquet. The average cost of these would not exceed $350 each. You will have a better idea of the cost of rolling stock and rails than I. I heard the company's engineer state, at a dinner given by the president, that the subsidies would be sufficient to build and equip the road. He had then about completed his survey and based his estimate upon it. The roadbed is very good for a new road, and rails, although considerably lighter than those on the Intercolonial Railway and New Brunswick roads, are, I believe, of very good quality. Besides the station houses there are eight small platforms along the road for landing and receiving freight. I have not gone over that portion of the road from Caraquet towards Shippegan ten miles, but speaking from my knowledge of the country, there is not one bridge in that distance and not more than four culverts on small streams."

Then from another correspondent:

put into the enterprise by any here connected with it. It is true there was a deviation in the line of the railway permitted to reach and take in a mile of Burns, adding six miles to the length of the road."

Then from another correspondent about the same

Then from another correspondent about the same date:

"The road starts from the Intercolonial about one half mile south of the Nepesiquit River and runs down following nearly the course of the river about four miles; there is a branch from there to Mr. Burns' mills about one mile. From Grande Anse the road curves running south to Burns' mills on Caraquet River, eight miles from Grande Anse: this deflection lengthens the road about five miles. The bridge across Bass River has a small granite abutment at each bank, one granite pier in the centre of the stream and two box truss spans of about thirty-five feet each. The bridge on Caraquet River has only one span of about thirty feet. At Bertrand's Brook, about four miles below the mill, there is a wooden bridge about 400 feet long, built upon bents and trestles, and a small wooden bridge at Pokeshaw. At Little River, Caraquet, there is a cedar bridge built in blockwork, about 500 feet long. These, I think, are the only structures on the whole of the line that can be called bridges. There are, I should say, eight to ten wooden culverts, large and small, on brooks and hollows, with earth fillings from six to twelve feet. The grading of a considerable portion of the road was let in short sections to several contractors by private contract. One of those contractors told me that the grading would cost about $1,000 per mile. The grading and bridging of the whole road would not exceed, I should think, $2,000 per mile. The rails are very good, of medium size. There is a station house at the Junction, one at Grande Anse, one at Burns' Mill, Barburst, one at Clifton, one at Grande Anse, one at Burns' Mill, Caraquet River, and one at Caraquet, average cost of each about $350. Mr. Burns appears to be building the road himself; whether he has gone through the form of having a contract from the company, I do not know. I cannot say correctly what proportion of the work was paid for in goods at his stores, but I think it safe to say that three-fourths of it were paid in that way a build and equip the road as it is now equipped; in fact, I heard the engineer of the company state that they would, after he had made a survey. First mortgage bond was sold in England for £100,000 sterling on the 60 miles, at £98, at 6 per cent. interest. A call of 5 per cent. was made upon the subscribed stock; of course only a few responded. I believe just a sufficient number to form a board of directors (7), others transferred their stock to Mr. Burns; this is how he got possession of nearly all of the stock.

Mr. Burns; this is now no government the stock.

"The cost of the road is represented in England to be about $24,000 per mile.

"It is generally believed that whatever was paid has since been refunded from the subsidies."

Now, Sir, I turn to the English business. were two prospectuses issued in England, the first of which I have not had the opportunity of seeing, but of the second I happen to have a copy. It appears to have represented that there had been a prior allotment of £30,000 out of a total bond issue of £100,000 stg.; and the prospectus was for the issue of £70,000, being the unallotted portion of £100,000 of 6 per cent. first mortgage sterling bonds of £100 each, redeemable at par in 1904, and secured as a first charge. They appear to have been issued at 98. The prospectus states:

secured as a first charge. They appear to have been issued at 98. The prospectus states:

"The Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of New Brunswick have given a joint guarantee to the Caraquet Railway Company of £1.280 per mile, amounting in all to a free grant of £76.800, being more than one-fourth of the cost of construction. As security for the payment of the interest on the whole amount of the bonds for three years, viz, up to the 1st of July, 1889, inclusive, a sufficient sum has been set aside and will be deposited with the Imperial Bank in the names of the trustees. The Caraquet Railway is a branch from the Canadian Government's main line, connecting with the Intercolonial at Bathurst, and thus with the Canadian Pacific and the whole of the Canadian railroad system. It runs from the Bathurst, and thus with the Canadian Pacific and the eastern extremity of the Province of New Brunswick, establishing a through communication right across British North America from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard. The line has been built in the most substantial manner by contract, at a cost of £290,000, under Government supervision. Already over forty miles are in operation, and the remaining twenty miles being far advanced towards completion, will, it is expected, be finished and opened by September. The location of the Caraquet Railway is eminently favorable for the earning of steady revenue; its course being through a long settled country whose communities are engaged in important mercantile pursuits, the resources of the district being very large. The amount of mortgage bonds take priority before the share capital, both as to principal and interest, and are further secured by a mortgage bonds take priority before the share capital, both as to principal and interest, and are further secured by a mortgage under a trust deed of the value of the railway, rolling stock and other assets of the company, besides the uncalled capital, namely, by mortgage of sixty miles of railway, whereof forty miles are i took place. Now, what was the result of all this financing? Ostensibly, the subsidies amounted to $404,000, Dominion and Provincial, or $5,950 a mile for sixty-eight miles; the bonds, allowing off 20 per cent. for the reserved interest and for the discount at which they were sold, should net $400,000, or $5,900 a mile; making a total of bonds and subsidies of $804,000, equal to $11,850 per mile; there was an alleged cash result from the paid-up stock, represented at $751,887, being equal to $11,050 per mile; making the pretended cost of $22,900 per mile; or, if you take the bonds at their face value, $23,200 per mile, which was the price set up in this English prospectus. The true value of the work, as I have stated, was probably, including contractor's profit, a good deal under $8,000 a mile, instead of $22,000 or $23,000 a mile, and the facts I have given indicate that, subject to the question of the margin of profit. You will observe that it is stated here that the work was done under governmental supervision, which I do not understand to be correct. It is quite true the Government engineer has to report to the Government that the work is so far constructed as to entitle the subsidy to be paid; but that that is the sense in which this term is used here, it is not fair to suppose. It is unfortunate that the Government of Canada was brought into this prospectus. It is also said that the road is a link of the transcontinental highway, a statement which, of course, unless the port of Shippegan is to be made, in fact, an ocean terminus, cannot be in any sense correct. It is said that the road cost $1,450,000. That is false. It is said that three-quarters of a million of stock was paid up. That is false. The road cost only a little over half a million; and nothing was paid on the stock. Then there are observations made with regard to the eminently favorable character of the location, and of the country through which the line runs, and then you have the report of President and Manager Burns as to the results. There you get the statement that it will require only £100 per mile of earnings to pay the interest on the bonds, which is correct; it would require, in truth, only about $450 per mile, to put a fine point upon it, to pay the interest on the bonds of $30,000 a year. It is stated by Mr. Burns that, according to this careful estimate, a most careful estimate, based upon the actual result of the traffic at that time, a revenue of £200 or $1,000 per mile, or double the amount required to pay the interest, may be expected. Net earnings of £200 or $1,000 mean, of course, gross earnings of three times that amount according to the ordinary accepted calculation for roads of this description, which is that you will net only about one-third of your gross returns, so that the net estimated earning of $68,000 a year, which is alleged in this report to be justified by a careful estimate based upon the traffic existing at the time, would require a gross earning of $204,000 a year. Now, if you turn to the railway statistics, it will be found that in the earlier years, although this line was in part completed and in part running, no details were supplied; but details were supplied for the year 1888, and have been supplied and are in the hands of the Government for 1889, although we have not got The details for the earlier year indicate, I think, two engines, which quantity, I believe, has been increased by as much as 50 per cent., because I believe there are now three engines, one first class car, two second class and emigrant cars and fifteen platform cars, so that it would not be extremely difficult to tax to the full, or even to over-tax, the resources of a company so scantily equipped. The return of the operations of 1888 shows a total tounage of 11,195 tons moved, namely:

	Tons
Flour	600
Grain
Live stock
Logs
Firewood	1.280
And all other goods	4,275
Total.	1.195

The return shows besides 3,500 passengers moved, and a total train mileage of passenger and freight trains of 23,500 miles, and it shows a cost reported to the Government of the enterprise of $1,135,000. The gross return in money from the passenger traffic was $2,432.75 and from freight $9,199.19, making an aggregate gross return of $11,631.91, while the expenses, I believe, were $11,311, or a handsome net profit of $320 on the year's running. There was, however, I admit, a very great and extraordinary development in one branch, that of railway casualties. The losses by collisions, or trains thrown from the track were such as would amply meet the emergencies of a much larger and more important enterprise. In that respect, if in no other respect, the hon member for Gloucester was equal to the situation, because he produced a number of casualties which might fully satisfy the ambition of a much greater road, and of even a larger railway manager than himself. In that year of 1888, these railway statistics show that there was one passenger killed, and seven employés, or, in all, eight deaths, and there were besides five injured, making in all, thirteen casual-I am afraid that one of those very substantial bridges must have gone down or some other dreadful accident must have happened to produce that loss of human life in this year, and, perhaps, to produce unhappy results, as to the running expenses of the road, in the following year. I believe, also, this road is closed up frequently, in fact for several months in each year, so that notwithstanding the very active industry of the district, and the great demand existing there for a railway, the inhabitants are obliged to suffer for the want of an open road for some months each year. For this year Government have not brought down the railway statistics, but the Minister of Railways gave us the other day the general returns of the expenses and earnings. He gave us $18,000 as the receipts and $27,000 as the expenses; and this is the year in which the money was wanted to pay interest on the bonds, for up to this year the interest was provided, I presume, out of the amount realised from the bonds, and put into bank; and the calculations in the prospectus, therefore, have reference to this period. At this time the fund provided for payment of interest is exhausted, and the calculations of the prospectus declare that out of the revenue ample funds will be obtained to meet the interest for the remaining period. How are those calculations verified? In this year, $18,000 are the gross receipts, and $27,000 are the expenses, making a deficit of $9,000. I cannot account for that at all, unless it be that it is utterly impossible to keep the railway open at all on such a nominal amount of traffic without incurring a larger expenditure than you can charge for, at any reasonable rates, on that small amount of traffic. Or, taking the other alternative, that some serious accident took place involving an additional charge on the earnings of the year. For the hon, gentleman has no longer a capital account to which he can resort, as can the right hon. the First Minister, who, when an accident happens on his road, or he wants to buy some new cars, or build a new bridge, has only to call on us and charge the amount to capital account. But the hon. member, having no capital, except that uncalled capital, which is fructifying in the pockets of the one shareholder, himself, the hon. gentleman, I say, when he cannot pay any demand out of running expenses, has to charge it somewhere, and makes a debit bal-This year the road was to have earned gross $204,000 in order to earn a net $68,000; but instead of that it shows a gross of $18,000 only, and a deficit of $9,000 on the year's work. It is perfeetly obvious that the English people who were induced to subscribe to the bonds have been gulled. It is perfectly obvious that this prospectus is false; and one immediate result of it is that an application has been made this Session to the Government to take over the road. First Minister has told us, and as the communications which the hon, gentleman for North York (Mr. Mulock) read indicate, negotiations are going on for the assumption by the Government of this valuable asset. All these matters must be seriously considered. They have a direct bearing on, and should affect our consideration of the general result of the Government's policy of subsidising railways. They affect the question of the duty of the Government as to the information they ought themselves to obtain, and to communicate to this House, upon which a decision is to be based by them, in the first instance, and then acted upon by us, as to whether subsidies are to be given or no. They affect the question of the great policy of assumption by the Governmeet of these lines, which the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) and the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) have raised, the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), himself, not being wholly indifferent, and which the right hon. the First Minister said was a subject eminently deserving serious consideration and would receive that consideration. They affect, both here and in the mother country, our own financial and moral standing as a people, as a Government, and as a Parliament. They affect the honor and the independence of this Parliament itself. And we are bound to consider them all, if we would preserve the public consideration for ourselves.

Mr. BURNS. I have no fault to find with the utterances of the hon. gentleman who initiated this discussion. I must, of course, ascribe to him a desire to influence the House in case any proposition should be brought forward by the Government looking to the acquirement of the roads connecting with the Intercolonial Railway. I cannot find fault with him in trying to produce hostility to the Government in respect to its railway policy. No matter what his object may be, he has succeeded in giving the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) an opportunity of launching out into a tirade against the Government, against the Caraquet Railway, and incidentally against your humble servant. I cannot, with my limited powers, attempt to follow the hon. gentleman in dealing with this matter, in any way approaching his language and style. All I propose to do is to call the attention of the House to a plain statement of facts, which I hope will have the effect of dispelling any false ideas which may have been created by misrepresentation in regard to this railway. Many of the statements read by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Blake) are not founded in fact. With my limited knowledge of parliamentary practice, I do not know whether it is due to me or to the House that that hon. gentleman should produce the letters he has read, or name his correspondent. Whether he is bound to do that or not, I can, metaphorically put my finger on the writer of the communication he has read to the House. I have heard these statements over and over again. They were brought forward against me at the last election. They were and they were then entirely disproved. I will refer to one or two statements in reference to the construction of the line. The hon, gentleman seeks to create an impression on the minds of those listening to him, that the longer the line was, the more money was put in the pockets of the shareholders, meaning myself. That is the plain statement which the hon gentleman has made, and he argues, that if that line was increased in length, a certain amount of money for every additional mile went into my pocket. I say, that the longer the line was, the more money was taken out of my pocket. In point of fact, the line was not lengthened to any degree greater than, I think, three miles, and that was in order to reach a mill, which I owned, and which was an important point for the railway to reach, as the trade and the traffic which that mill would give to the road would be an important item in the earnings of the road.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BURNS. Some hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear," but I should like to know what a railway is built for. Is it intended to carry traffic or simply to go through a country where there is no traffic? The road was built to that mill, and obtained that traffic, and that was financially important in connection with the line. There were two considerations in that. The bridging of the Caraquet River, where it was very wide, and the reaching that mill, influenced me—I take the responsibility on my own shoulders—to build the line by way of the mill. The hon. gentleman has tried to say that other considerations existed. First, he says, there was an appropriation for 36 miles, to bring the road to deep water. It is true that the first appropriation was to bring the road to Caraquet Harbor. In 1884, there was a further appropriation for 24 miles to extend the road to Shippegan Harbor in Lower Caraquet. Hon, gentlemen who are familiar with the geography of that country know, and those who are not can see by reference to the maps, that Shippegan Harbor is at the eastern extremity of Caraquet. In fact, Shippegan proper is on one side, and Caraquet proper at the other side of Shippegan Harbor. This appropriation for twenty-six Mr. Burns.

considered desirable to extend it to Shippegan village, which is on the other side of the harbor, necessitating a detour around the head of the harbor, and, therefore, it was that the appropriation for the additional ten miles was granted. At that time, the actual distance had not been ascertained. After it was ascertained, I made application to the Government to appropriate the whole amount of $32,000 for the distance built, which was about six and a half or seven miles, and thus it was that the extreme end of the road received about $32,000 for about seven miles of railway. The subsidy from the Government of New Brunswick was only for sixty miles, so that for the extreme end we had no subsidy from the Provincial Government at all. This company was chartered in 1874. At that time I had no connection with it. I believe it was organised with the view of carrying out the scheme propounded by Sandford Fleming in connection with a line of steamers to Newfoundland, a railway across that Island, and a line of fast steamers thence to Europe, Subsequently, It think, in 1878, the charter was revived. A subsidy of $5,000 per mile was granted by the Assembly of New Brunswick, but notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding that authority was given by that Assembly to issue bonds to the extent of $12,500 per mile, no company was found to take up the scheme. Let me explain how authority for the issue of bonds for $12,500 per mile The popular idea of the length of was given. the line, as there had been no survey, was that it was about 40 miles. Subsequently to 1878, the Assembly of New Brunswick reduced the subsidy from $5,000 per mile to $3,000, and thus the matter stood till 1882. In that year a new company was organised, and at the solicitation of those interested in the construction of the road, I consented to take the presidency. Those who know me, those who are familiar with my position in my county, need not be told that the chances of having that road constructed, even if I were not a member of this House, would be very much better -I do not say this in any egotistical spirit at all would be very much better in my hands than in the hands of anybody else in my county. At the time of the reorganisation I subscribed for $10,000 in stock, an amount which I felt I could pay, and an amount which I felt was all I could afford to put into an enterprise of that kind. A survey of the road was made, and in order that the necessary expenses attending that survey should be forthcoming, and in order that the company might start on a fair business basis, a call wasmade. After that call was made, one after another -now I want you to understand, Mr. Speaker, I am making a plain statement of facts—one after another of the stockholders came to me and professed, either their inability or their unwillingness to pay the calls on their stock. I, having gone into the enterprise, having regard for my position, commercially, socially, and politically, said to myself: I will put my shoulder to the wheel, and I intend to keep it there and push this scheme through if it is possible With that object in view, and animated to do so. by that spirit, I said to the subscribers: If you cannot and will not pay the calls on your shares, transfer them to me and I will pay those calls. did so, not that I expected to make any money out miles was to extend the road to Shippegan Harbor. of the operation, but solely with a desire to start With a view of getting traffic for the road, it was the company on a business basis, that it might

When I came here in commence operations. 1883, I was the possessor of $10,000 in stock of that road, and not a holder of eleven-twelfths of the stock of the road, as has been represented. Moved by a desire to benefit my county, and impelled by a desire to promote my own business interests, which were the interests of the county, I asked the Government to appropriate an amount in aid of the construction of that road. In doing so I felt I was discharging my duty to my county; I felt I was but doing what had been done by many other members of this House on both sides, who sought to advance the interests of their counties. I have a practical and a particular interest in it which I did not conceal from my constituents when I asked them to elect me. I said: "I believe your interest will be safer in my hands, I believe they will be better guarded and promoted if you elect me than if you elect one living a couple of hundred miles distant from you, who does not hold an acre of soil in this county, who has no in terest whatever in it." I said to them: "If you elect me as your representative I will have a double motive in serving you, a motive that should animate every public man to serve his constituency, and also a motive to serve myself, because my interests are bound in this county." That, Mr. Speaker, is a frank statement of what I said at that time. Well, Sir, moved by these motives, animated by a desire to serve my county, I came here and made representation to the Government which led them to accede to my request; and they asked Parliament for an appropriation in aid of the construction of that road. The statements I made then were made in good faith, they were based on statistics I had before me, on the census returns, and on my own knowledge of the county. The Government shared my view, every man who had given any consideration to the matter shared my view. I was not singular when I looked forward to a very large trade being done on that road. In 1884 I came back, and I asked the Government to complete the appropriation necessary for the construction of that road. At first, I asked the Government to ask Parliament to grant an amount sufficient to build to Shippegan harbor, but they only asked this House to appropriate a sum for thirty-six miles of road. Subsequently, I asked them to complete the undertaking by granting an appropriation for the other twenty-four miles, and that was acceded to. In 1882 I went to England with the view of securing the construction of that line. The result of my mission there was that I secured the rails and fastenings for that line, as has been truly said by the hon. member for West Durham, by hypothecation of the bonds. It was the only means we had of getting them, and parties in England had sufficient faith in the enterprise to furnish them on the hypothecation of the bonds. I came back, and the work of construction was commenced, and went on with very little intermission until its completion in the fall of 1888. While I felt that a large traffic would develop on that road, and that in time it would be self-sustaining and pay interest on the bonds, I thought it was necessary that I should deposit in London an amount sufficient to cover the interest on these bonds during the construction of the road, and that amount was deposited. Well, shortly afterwards, I think it was in the fall of 1884, a sum of £30,000 of those bonds was taken, I think, by a syndicate connected with the firm who furnished the rails and fastenings. On the construction of about forty miles of the road, the remaining £70,000 was offered to the public, and, I think, with rather indifferent success. Speaking from memory, and subject to correction, I am of opinion that the whole amount of that £70,000 was not taken by the public, but that it remained in the hands of the underwriters; and that to-day, there is no very considerable amount of those bonds in the hands of the general public. I believe that a very large block remains in the hands of the original syndicate. In 1888 the line was completed. During the early days, or when only a portion of the line was completed, a large traffic was done over the road, and I felt rather elated, and believed that the road would pay not only its working expenses but interest on the bonds, and might almost give a dividend to those who had put their money in it. Thus it was that the statements I made in a private letter to my correspondent in London were incorporated into the prospectus. In estimating or in stating that the road would pay interest on £100,000 in bonds, I do not think I did, I am certain I did not wish to draw an exaggerated picture, but I simply stated what I believed would be a fact. A careful estimate was made by myself and others as to the traffic which was expected to be secured for that road, and the result of our enquiries was that we felt that, in time, at all events, the road would earn quite enough to pay interest on its bonds. I have stated to the House, in answer to the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), how it was that I became possessed of a large amount of stock. Let me explain how it was I became possessed of the larger amount of the stock. Shortly after the commencement of the construction of the line it was found that the company as a company were not in a financial position to carry out the undertaking, and it became necessary that the firm, of which I am the head, should take over the line and construct it. It was then deemed advisable that the whole amount of the unsubscribed stock should be transferred to my firm as part and parcel of the contract for the construction of that line, and that stock remained in my name. As regards that stock I have to say this, that from the statements made by hon, gentlemen opposite it has been shown that the stock is useless, and therefore all the worse for me; and I will be prepared at any time, and I am now prepared, to hand over that stock to any persons interested in the road who believe that they can make more money out of it than I can. Unfortunately, the road has not earned enough money to pay interest on its bonds, and that fact no one regrets as much as I do, not even the bondholders. I have put my money into the road, I have bent all the energies I possessed to the construction of the road, and naturally I feel much chagrined and disappointed that my expectations have not been realised. While it has not paid interest on its bonds since 1st January last, for the interest on the bonds has been paid up to 1st January, I yet feel sanguine that in a short time, in the course of time at all events, that road will pay well. We have had a great many difficulties to contend with, and I believe, were it not that hostile influences were at work in London and elsewhere to decry the road and to decry me, the stockholders with a plain statement of the facts before would have been content to wait in the same expectation as I entertained that in time they would receive interest on their money. If you compare the receipts for the first year with those of the last, and it is quite true the receipts for the first, second and third years were small compared with our anticipations, yet if you compare them with the last returns, you will find that the last returns show nearly double the amount. I feel hopeful that this year's earnings will be still larger, considerably larger, without any increase in the working expenses. I think, and in saying this I am subject to correction, that the answer given by the Government, in reply to a question as to the earnings and expenses of the road for the year ending 1890, was incorrect or based on a misapprehension. I speak subject to correction, but a memorandum I have, and which is incorporated in another document, goes to show that the earnings for the year ending 1889, were $17,000 and the working expenses $20,000. Let me here ask this question: Who will be the greatest sufferer if the earnings of the line fall short of the expenses? Hon. gentlemen I am sure can very readily answer that question for themselves. Every dollar expended over and above the earnings has to be paid out of my pocket, or out of the pocket of the firm of which I am the head. I can say this, that the Caraquet Railway has no floating debt further than anything it may owe to my firm. Every employé on the road is paid, every account is paid, every bill for rolling stock is paid, all its obligations have been discharged by the firm of which I am the head; and, therefore, I ask hon. gentlemen who will suffer most if the earnings of the line fall short of the expenses? Speaking on this particular question, let me reply to the statements made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), or rather statements repeated, because they have been given to him by an anonymous correspondent; a correspondent, at all events, with whose name the House is not familiar, but whose name, I think, I know perfectly well. He here makes a statement, which I most emphatically denied in my place in this House a few days ago, that the bulk of the labor for the construction of the road was paid out of my store or out of the store of K. F. Burns & Co. In answer to that assertion I have simply to repeat what I said the the other day, that on the 20th of every month the paymaster went along the line and paid every man the last cent due to him. True it is that in this case, as in the case of all public works of such magnitude, the men require supplies during the month; and naturally under these circumstances, considering that K. F. Burns & Co. had the contract with the line, the men took their supplies from our firm; but I want to impress this fact on this House, that the men were not precluded from getting their supplies at any place they chose. They were told: Get your supplies where you will. Storekeepers were invited to furnish the men with supplies; and as regards the amount coming to them, they were paid at the end of every month. So much with regard to that statement; and I may be permitted to repeat that every dollar of the wages due to the men at the end of the month was paid them in cash. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has also alluded to a matter, a very painful matter, which has Mr. Burns.

given me very great concern, and that is the casualty which happened on the road. He was not quite frank in his statement in regard to that matter; at all events, I am afraid that hon. gentlemen would draw the inference from what he said that a number of casualties occurred.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not know more than what was in the railway statistics.

Mr. BURNS. I think I am right in saying that the inference drawn by hon. gentlemen from the statement made would be that there was more than one casualty. Unfortunately there was one very serious casualty, caused by the displacement of the top of a bridge, from the ice, with an extraordinary high tide and a gale of wind. That led to the disaster which the hon. gentleman has made reference to, and which entailed on the company and on myself a great deal of pain and grief, knowing, as I did intimately, a number of the men who had lost their lives, and it also entailed on the company-which is a very unimportant matter compared with the loss of lifeconsiderable monetary loss in rebuilding the The hon, gentleman was good enough to tell the House, that the letter he read was rather an old one, and dated as far back as 1886. His correspondent says that the right of way had not been paid on that road, or at all events that it had only been paid to a minor extent. Let me tell this to the House. The charter of that company, granted by the Assembly of New Brunswick, practically gave the right of way free, and every dollar paid out of the pockets of the company, or out of my pocket if you will, for right of way, was money paid gratuitously. The Act of 1874 stated that in order that any land owner should be entitled to any compensation for the land over which the road ran, he should give notice in writing to the company within twelve months. That was generally known. That charter was granted at a time when people were very anxious for railways through their district, and in point of fact were quite willing to grant the right of way free. It was in view of that, and also to safeguard the interests of those who did not wish to be compelled to give the right of way, that there was a provision inserted, giving the right to any land owner to obtain compensation for damages, by giving notice to the company within twelve months from the time of commencement of the construction, or the appropriating of the lands. Thus, Sir, the company were entitled to the right of way free, and in only a few cases that I remember of just now, was there any demand made by any land owner on the company for damages; and I am frank enough to say one stands unpaid to-day, for the reason that the owner was so hostile to the construction of the road, that he, or some member of his family, stood with an axe upon his land, in order to prevent the surveyor or the contractors from entering upon it; and that because he demanded ten times as much for his land as it is worth, and as the company were willing to give him for it. We are quite willing to give him the fair value of the land, on the same valuation as was given to his neighbors. In 1886, the line was still under construction, and these land matters had not been all arranged, but I think I am right in saying that with a few very unimportant exceptions, the right of way has been paid in cash, and that without our being under any obligation to do so. I do not claim credit to myself for having done this; I think we simply did what was due to the people, and I believe they appreciate the fact. I wish the believe they appreciate the fact. House to understand that in paying for the right of way, no matter whether large or small, the company acted in the most liberal manner and gave what was, practically, a gratuity to the land owners. Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman has alluded to the statements made by Sir Charles Tupper, when the resolutions were introduced, looking to the obtaining from Parliament, of authority to pay these subsidies, and he also alluded to the speech that was delivered at London, by the right hon. the Premier and the Minister of Justice. I will not attempt, in my humble capacity, to defend these gentlemen, but I can say that, if the High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, were here, I am quite sure he would be able to give the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) a Roland for his Oliver. I am certain that the right hon, the Premier can defend his conduct and the conduct of the Government, in appropriating money for this and for other roads, and the hon. the Minister of Justice is able to do the same. The right hon. the Premier has stated that I, actuated with the desire to discharge my duties to my constituents, had gone with all the energy I possessed into that enterprise, and that I put my hand in my pocket and aided in the construction of that railway. The right hon, gentleman has stated what is quite true. I did go into the enterprise and I went into it largely with a view of benefiting my constituency, and somewhat with a view of improving my own business position in the county, because my business in the county was bound up with the county, and the county's interests were bound up with my business to a very large extent. Now Sir, I do not know that I have much more if anything to say. I have endeavored to make a plain statement of facts, and I think I have succeeded. Let me add to what I have said, this: that taking out the commissions, and taking out the interest which was deposited for three years, and the expenses attending the issue of the bonds, and interest during the time of the construction, and the discount on the New Brunswick bonds-because it must be remembered by the House that this $3,000 a mile was not paid in cash by the New Brunswick Government, but in 4 per cent. bonds -taking the discount on these bonds, which if I remember aright brought an average of about 93 or 94, and summing up the whole of these deductions, it will be found that only about $600,000 cash was available to that company outside of its shares, for the construction of the road. That is a sum equal to about $8,500 per mile, certainly not $9,000, and I ask this House: is that an extravagant amount? I do not know that it would be quite proper for me to go into the particular figures here, because I think it is a matter which the House does not require, but if any hon. gentleman is desirous of obtaining any particular information, I shall be most happy to furnish it to him, and I shall show him beyond question that the statement I made, as to the net amount of of 70 miles in length was constructed. It is constructed as well as, if not considerably better than, any local line in New Brunswick, and in making that statement I cannot be contradicted. I assert that the Caraquet Railway, from beginning to end, is the best local line in New Brunswick. Several station houses, as has been stated by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), have been built, but not at a cost of $350. The man who made that statement economised truth in a most remarkable degree. These stations are very good ones, and they cost on an average $1,200 each. The bridges and structures of every kind on that road are very good; the road is well ditched and well graded; it has snow fences where they are required; and in every respect it is a road which will do credit to any part of the Dominion of Canada, and, I think, does credit to its constructors and to those interested in it. The hon. member for West Durham has made allusions to the fact that a mile branch was constructed to the mill of Mr. Burns at Bathurst. Let me explain that. Mr. Burns' mill at Bathurst, happens to be located just where it is necessary to have a station for the accommodation of the town, and it was necessary to construct what might be called a branch, but what is really part of the main line, to that particular point in order to bring the railway as near the town as it could possibly go, without bridging the Nepesiguit River. This part of the road joins the Intercolonial at the junction, and in point of fact, for all business not going to the Intercolonial Railway, it is the terminus of the road, and cannot be styled a branch; and, therefore, I am not open to the imputation of deflecting the line by the construction of that portion. The hon gentleman has attacked the Government on their railway policy generally, and he has referred to the fact that these railway resolutions have been brought down and hurried through at a very late day in the Session. I am informed that that hon, gentleman himself was a party to a similar move during the time he was a member and perhaps the leader of the Government of Ontario. I am informed that at that time, though he had frequently denounced the subsidising of railways, the Government of which he was a member brought down some railway resolutions which were hurried through in as rapid a manner as any resolutions were ever hurried through this House. If that is the case, it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to attack this Government for having done the same thing. Why do the Government bring down the railway resolutions at the end of the Session? It is because they require all the time to ascertain the wants of the country before they can appropriate public money to meet those wants; they require all that time in order that they may obtain from the members the information necessary to enable them to come to a correct judgment as to the railways to which they should grant subsidies. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am done. I think I have explained my position in connection with this road; I think I have shown the House that I have done nothing that I should be either afraid or ashamed of. Every statement I made in connecmoney available for the construction of the line, is perfectly correct. Now, Sir, with that $8,500 in good faith, on information which I believe to be per mile, or at the most $9,000 per mile, a railway sound and good, without the slightest desire to mislead anybody; and if any harm has been done to any person by the construction of that line, the greatest harm has been done to myself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall only occupy the time of the House for a very short period—in the first place, because it it of very great importance that we should get on with the business of Parliament at this stage of the session, and in the next place, because the main portion of the speech of the hon. member for West Durham was directed against the position and standing commercially, socially, and politically of my hon, friend who has just spoken; and the House will have seen that the hon. gentleman prepared himself to deliver a most exhaustive and elaborate speech, with his usual amount of labor bestowed upon the attack; and it was addressed to us with the zeal and energy of the skilled advo-cate, whose duty it was to obtain a verdict of conviction, rather than in the style of a representative of the people trying to do justice to the country and the House, and to ascertain the truth. manner was histrionic, and the matter was so arranged as sometimes by ridicule and sometimes by sarcasm to crush the hon. member who has just spoken. On the other hand, the House has heard spoken. On the other hand, the House has heard the plain, straighforward statement of my honfriend, which I think will commend itself to the good feeling and moral sense of the honnembers of this House, and, I think, they will feel that it was unjust and unworthy of the honnember for West Durham, to use all his long experience his great ability, and his elemants. long experience, his great ability, and his eloquence, to make an attack on a man who he knew, from his previous training, was quite unable to do battle of a like kind with him. But my hon. friend has made his plain statement; he has told all the facts; he has stated what we must know, that he has been pecuniarily a great loser from his connection with this railway; and why the hon, gentleman should go out of his way in order to injure a fellow creature, I cannot see. As regards the attack, if it be an attack, on the railway policy of the Government, I need not keep the House long in discussing that. It is an old story. Our policy has been well known; it has been carried out for years; it has received the sanction of Parliament; it has received the approbation of the country; and notwithstanding the strong opposition of hon gentlemen opposite, the Government are convinced that they have done a great and lasting service to the whole of the Dominion by carrying out a liberal railway policy, and they will not be deterred by the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite from continuing to carry out that policy with prudence and caution, but yet with enterprise. Yes, Sir, the policy of the Government was announced by myself in that speech which the hon. gentleman quoted, in which I said that it was the desire of the Government to assist all parts of Canada, by every reasonable proposition for the development of the means of transport by railways; and we promised to make the moderate advance of $3,200 a mile to any railway in a fitting portion of the country where a railway would seem to be required, if sufficient additional means should be furnished otherwise to build it. It was a matter of no consequence to the Government or Parliament how the balance of the money for the con- advantages are recognised everywhere by the struction of the railway was obtained, whether by people. Hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon-Mr. Burns.

stock or bonds, or by voluntary aid for a philanthropic purpose. It was a matter of no consequence to Parliament, provided the several localities were The reason why the $3,200 was selected at first, and why it was continued, was that it was held by the Government, and sanctioned by Parliament, that whenever, in any particular portion of the country, a railway was commenced and graded, the ties laid down, and the road ballasted, Parliament should assist such a railway to the extent of furnishing the iron. That $3,200 was then the current price for railway iron, and, therefore, it was considered a sum sufficient to enable any railway company, undertaking the enterprise of constructing a railway to purchase their iron, when they had all the rest of the road ready for the iron. The hon. gentleman says we ought in this case to have been more particular in our enquiries as to the probability of the road being a paying road. Well, I do not think that in this case we are open to the charge of not having made the proper enquiries. In the first place, we had that report, which has been mentioned, by Mr. Sandford Fleming, who was the engineer, under both Governments, for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. He made elaborate reports during the progress of the Intercolonial Railway, of its advantages and its means of extension and He took up enthusiastiimprovement generally. cally the idea that a railway running from the Intercolonial Railway as far as Shippegan would be a great advantage. He was fully impressed with the idea that a railway running to Shippegan and connecting with a steam ferry running across to George's Bay, Newfoundland, and then making connection with a railway across Newfoundland, would bring England within four days of America. Those who have taken the trouble to look back so far, will find that was strongly impressed upon Government and upon Parliament by an eminent civil engineer, such as Mr. Fleming was. That same opinion was given in the most marked manner by the Government and Legislature of New Brunswick, who knew, or ought to have known, all about that country, and who made a grant in aid of this railway. But who made a grant in aid of this railway. remember, Sir, that the Parliament of Canada, in helping these railways by subsidies, does not do so for the purpose of building up roads in order that the shareholders should become wealthy. The object of the Government was to furnish to the people of Canada means of transport by aiding the building of railways wherever the people desired to have them, and all that the Government cared for was that by means of such assistance these railways should be built. The only caution that ought to be taken by the Governments in that regard would be that railways should not be built which would not afterwards be run; and I think that any one who will look over the list of railways which have been constructed with the assistance of this parliamentary grant, will find that, with one or two unimportant exceptions, all these roads have been completed and are running and in every instance whether they have returned any interest to the investors or not, the country has had the advantage of them, and the people have had the advantage of them, and those gentlemen on this side, are well aware of the advantages which the several localities have reached from these roads and the proof of that is that a good many hon. gentlemen on both sides have been with me this Session, as being the Minister principally in charge of railway matters, pressing for an extension of the same privilege and the same assistance as were given to the Caraquet and other railways, being given to the railways in their counties. So that the policy has been successful, and the pressure now is from all parts of the country to have that policy carried out to an extent much larger than the Government think the credit or the means of Canada will at present allow. Now the hon, gentleman sarcastically spoke of the railway being, first, for 36 miles, and then 57 miles, and 60 miles, and so on. Why, that happens very frequently. The Government assists a railway by degrees, so that the company can construct a portion of the road and then continue the road to some other point, and then year by year the Government will come to Parliament and ask for additional grants until the whole projected line is finished; and I cannot see any objection in the world to that policy. It is a prudent policy. It encourages the localities through which these lines are projected and the municipalities, where there are municipalities, to contribute to the construction of the road, and so, by degrees, without unduly taxing themselves, in one, two, three or four years, they secure the desired railway accommodation. The only thing I will further allude to will be the remark of the hon. gentleman that he thinks it exceedingly unfortunate that members of Parliament should engage in enterprises of this kind. I differ with him altogether on that point, and, if he will look at our great exemplar in England, he will find that such a doctrine would be scouted and laughed at if it were said in the House of Commons in England that men who were engaged in railway enterprises, or in any other industry, should not, for the advantage of their constituents—aye, for their own advantage-press any legislation for their benefit or the benefit of similar industries or enterprises, but that they should stay out of Parliament if they are engaged in any industries that may be the subject of legislation. Instead of that doctrine prevailing in England, it is understood that the leaders, the great men at the head of any of the great industries, or enterprises, or professions, or trades, should be represented in Parliament, and the only restriction known there is that no member of Parliament shall vote on a measure in which he is pecuniarily interested personally. We all remember one gentleman who was long and favorably known in Canada as a railway man-I mean Sir Edward Watkin. He is the exponent of railway matters in the House of Commons in England. He is at the head of one of the greatest networks of railways in England. He is the president and the manager of all these great roads.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are those roads bonused by Parliament? That is the point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman ought not to interrupt me. Sir Edward Watkin is not only connected with railways in England, but with steamship lines running to France, and with railways in France; and, facts which up to the present time have attended though they are not bonused by Parliament, they his administration of the Intercolonial Railway, have great interests, which are involved in parliamentary legislation; their interests are prejudiced or promoted by legislation. These gentlemen cannot vote themselves when any measure immediately affecting them is before Parliament, but they are there, and all their influence is used to secure legislation to the advantage of the business in which they are engaged. See what took place the other day in regard to the brewers in England. They are all represented in Parliament, and see what the course was which they took in respect of the duties on malt and on beer. It was said that they ought not to be in Parliament, or to use their influence or to endeavor in any way to influence legislation on that matter because it might be an advantage to their own busi-The other day when we had the Banking Bill before this House, I have no doubt that many members who voted on it were interested as shareholders in the banks, but I did not observe any hesitation on the part of any hon. gentleman on either side in voting on that measure, although the effect of some of the clauses was such—if we are to believe the deputations of the bankers-as were calculated to injure the banks, to reduce their profits and to injure the interests of the several institutions they are connected with. This kind of affected purity, which does not mean anything, is a very cheap kind of morality and is only from the teeth outwards. I, therefore, differ with the hon. gentleman on these two points: first, that the policy of the Government is a mistaken policy in regard to railways; and second, that the pressure brought to bear on the Government to lay measures of aid to railways before Parliament, has been such that the Government has been reckless in its course. I think the policy of the Government has been very beneficial to the country, I believe it has been a wise policy, I believe it has not been imprudently exercised, but that the country has gained great advantages from that policy. Until I am convinced—and I have not yet been convinced—that the policy is wrong, I shall adhere to the opinion that the do-nothing policy is not a policy to adopt in a young country, or, for that matter, in any other country. One thing more and I will sit down. There is an apprehen-sion expressed that the Government are going to buy up all the branches and railways connected with the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway is burdened enough, and I do not think.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is no burden to you. You bargained for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell) is irrepressible, and I suppose I must submit. He is a chartered libertine, and neither you, Mr. Speaker, nor any one else can keep him in order. I will not try to do so, but I will submit with as much Christian resignation as I can. Meanwhile I may proceed to say that no one in or out of the House need be alarmed that the Government are going to absorb any of the railways referred to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is one statement made by the hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) with which I am able entirely to concur, and which the country, in view of the will receive with satisfaction, and that is the statement-made, I fear, for the moment onlythat he has no intention at present of further burdening the country by acquiring these branch lines, unless political exigencies should compel him to do so. But, Sir, if the hon. gentleman ever made an unfortunate statement in his life, it was when he undertook to compare the railway policy in England, and the well understood conditions under which members in the English Parliament act with the system which has prevailed here of late years. Can the hon, gentleman state, does he dare to say, that he knows of one solitary instance in England in which one member of Parliament has supported a government and received a subsidy for a road in which he was interested? Can he show in the whole history of English legislation, one case in which a subsidy was given to a road in which members of Parliament were known to be interested—let alone their being the principal proprietors? I am willing to give the hon. gentleman the floor if he will state such a case. If the hon. gentleman knows a case in which a member of Parliament in England has voted in regard to a railway bonused by the Government of the day, I should like to know it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They do not bonus any railways there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; they do not, and, therefore, the statement of the hon. gentleman is wholly false, is wholly misleading, and is simply designed to blind the members of this Now, I think that the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) deserve the thanks, not merely of this House, which, perhaps, they will not get, but of the people of this country, for the pains they have taken to bring to our notice an object lesson calculated, if it be possible for any lesson to do so, to open the minds and the eyes of the people of Canada to one of the main modes by which the right hon, gentleman has retained power up to the present time. Sir, the facts which were stated, first, by the member for North York, and, secondly, and more at length, by the member from West Durham, show us what is the natural fruit of a throughly rotten system, supplemented by a thoroughly rotten method of administration. A few days ago I was taken to task in this House by some hon. gentlemen, because, in dealing with another sort of case, I told this House that the particular case I then alluded to might best be described as a peak, representing a mountain of undeveloped corruption; and I think that the lesson of to-night's proceedings will show that one other portion of the peak, at any rate, is fast emerging from below the waters. Up to the present time the hon, gentleman appears to have been able to maintain himself in power chiefly by these four methods: First, by the free distribution of the public domain to certain favored parties, of which we had recent, eminent and notorious example; next, by a system, I was going to say of thinly disguised bribery, but I will say instead, by a system of open bribery on the part of contractors in testimonials and otherwise; next, by a system of tariff corners and subsidies; and lastly, by the method of which we have had so notable an illustration just now, the method of railway subsidy distributed among various constituencies and among various members of this House. Now, Sir, Sir Richard Cartwright.

I shall proceed to call the attention of the House again, and in particular the attention of the hon. member for Gloucester, to the several charges and statements which were submitted by my hon. friend, and I call the attention of the House, also, to the manner in which these charges were answered. It was stated here, and so far as I heard it was not denied, that whether or not the member for Gloucester was in the first instance the chief proprietor of this road, shortly after the subsidy had been got, or at the time the subsidy was got that hon. member was, to all intents and purposes, the sole owner of the road, that is to say, that he owned and controlled so vast a portion of the stock that he was, to all intents and purposes, the Caraquet and Shippegan Railway. It was stated, in the second place, that the hon. gentleman had put no money whatever into it. Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman did not venture to state definitely that he had put money into it, he made some general statements to which I will allude in a few moments; but he did not venture to assure the House that he had put any definite sum of money into this work. It was stated, in the next place, that the hon. gentleman had been concerned in most grossly misrepresenting the condition of that road; the prospectuses on which the hon. gentleman's statements were based were read to the House, and minute details were given, and the hon, gentleman did not venture to deny one word of the statements read to the House by my hon. friend from West Durham. As to the question of the cost of the railway, I shall proceed to speak a little more in detail. The gentleman did not give us what he believed to be the real cost, although, I think, he led us to understand that it would be something like $9.000 or $10,000. The hon, gentleman did not, and, I presume, he could not, deny the further statement made that he had constructed the road himself, a fact which, as everybody acquainted with railroad matters knows, would enable him, and has often enabled other persons than himself, under pretence of securing a road, to turn into their own pockets a most undue proportion of the cost of its construction. But, Sir, the member for Gloucester put one or two curious queries to the House. The member for Gloucester desires to know: What is a railway built for? Well, Sir, it is built for two purposes, as a general Sometimes it is built on fair and good grounds, for the purpose of developing traffic and of making a fair return to the shareholders and bondholders, out of fair earnings. But, I am sorry to say that our annals and those of the United States show that in far too many instances a railroad is built and bonuses are obtained from the public treasury there and elsewhere, and loans are received from confiding bondholders, not for the purpose of honestly constructing a railway, not for the purpose of honestly developing traffic, but for the purpose of enabling the fortunate contractors, or the fortunate parties who have obtained the construction or the control of the road, to put a large sum of money into their private pockets, without risking one penny themselves. The hon, gentleman was good enough to tell us that he does not expect to make any money out of this road. The hon. gentleman further told us that he was prepared to hand over the stock to any one, and I do not doubt him in the least, under the circumstances; I should say, under the circumstances, that it would be a very dangerous gift for anybody here or elsewhere to accept. He was good enough to enquire of us, lastly: Who, for sooth, would suffer most if the earnings failed to pay expenses? Well, Sir, I do not think it would be the hon. gentleman for Gloucester, I think it would be those unfortunate and deluded English bondholders who were induced to put £80.000 or £100,000 sterling into this enterprise, by representations which have been shown on the floor of this House, and not denied by the hon-gentleman himself, to be most grossly incorrect, not to use a harsher word. Now, I want to call the attention of the member for Gloucester to this fact: the hon. gentleman told us that only $600,-000 were available out of the subsidies paid by New Brunswick and Canada, and out of the £100,-000 sterling of bonds floated in England for the construction of the road. Now, on our $225,000 there was no discount whatever; on the $180,000 obtained from New Brunswick, there may have been a discount of $10,000, and I give the hongentleman the benefit of it. That makes $415,000 in hard cash out of the $600,000. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that after reserving three years' interest and the requisite commissions, his £100,000 sterling sold in London, only yielded $175,000 or $180,000 ?-because that is what the hon, gentleman's statement results in. If the hon, gentleman declares to the House, in his place, that the net result of the £100,000 sterling was to leave him $185,000, a little more than £35,000 sterling, all I can say is that the hon, gentleman must have contributed very largely to the enrichment of somebody in England, or somebody elsewhere. I cannot for the life of me see how or under what circumstance the hon, gentleman could make the statement that only $600,000 were available. I do not think the bondholders in England will receive that statement, when the report of this debate reaches them as it surely will, in a spirit of perfect credulity. But there is another side to this question. hon, gentleman tells us that this road cost $600,-000, as I understood him, he may correct me if I am wrong; that $600,000 were available. prospectuses read by my hon. friend, endorsed apparently by the hon. member for Gloucester, known at all events to him, put forward as a statement under his authority, stated, if I followed my hon. friend correctly, that the road had cost £290,000 sterling, that is to say $1,400,000. Now, if there were but $600,000 available it might interest this House, and it would add materially to the exculpation of the hon. gentleman, if he would kindly inform us where the other $800,000 came from. Who supplied it, or how was that money furnished? The question will be of interest. It would throw a flood of light on the method of financing this road, which, the hon. gentleman has told us, is the best feeder of the Intercolonial and the best built road in New Brunswick. that matter is cleared up, until the difference between the $600,000 available and the $1,400,000 of cost has been explained, I must say that the hon. gentleman places himself in rather an odd position either before this House or before the English bondholders by the statement he has made. hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) put another question, and it is an interesting one. Why, he asked, did the Government bring down

There are many reasons. One I will suggest is, that it is infinitely easier to get through jobs like this when they are brought down at the end of the Session than it would be if full time was given to discuss them, as we ought to have, while the House is fresh, when information can be obtained, when we can send, if necessary, to the portions of the country where the roads are to be constructed, and when, in a word, we can obtain reasonably full information to govern us in making the grants we are asked to make. The First Minister was good enough, following up the line of the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) to insinuate that this hon. gentleman was a loser. If we had possessed, as we ought to have possessed, some reasonable estimate as to the probable cost, if such an estimate had been laid on the Table of the House, if we had the reports of surveys we might have known something more about the undertaking, and we might have formed some reasonable idea as to whether, in view of the subsidies advanced for such a road, any one would, under any circumstances, have come out a loser. The First Minister defends his policy on the ground, he says, that he is prepared to grant $3,200 per mile to every road that applies. hon, gentleman cannot do it. He told us the other day there were a hundred applications made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Ninety or a hundred applications.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not say that we were prepared to make a grant to every road that applied.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I took down the hon, gentleman's words. Perhaps he did not mean to say that, but when Hansard appears he will see that that was what he said—that he was prepared to grant it to every road, with the restriction that the people should show they were willing to contribute. If the hon, gentleman wishes to modify that statement, I will accept his modification, of course. I can understand that had the hon. gentleman adopted a plan somewhat like that prevailing in parts of the United States, where everybody is allowed to construct railways under certain restrictions and in compliance with certain well established rules, of which giving estimates is one, showing the public that the individuals who propose to build are able to construct the road is another, under these circumstances I can understand there might be something to be said for this policy, that is to say there might be something to be said for this policy, if we were a legislative Government such as exists in England. But in a confederation like this, one composed of Provinces in different states of development, this is a most ill-advised and unwise policy, and although in a few individual cases out of many scores, some good may have resulted, in the vast majority of the cases it has been simply a source of injury and corruption to the people of the country. The hon, gentleman talked of the pressure brought to bear upon him. I do not doubt that an enormous pressure is brought to bear upon him constantly for the construction of roads; I do not deny that in the least. There is nothing which a great number of persons in this House, or outside of it, desire more than to conthe railway resolutions at the end of the Session? trol a charter with a subsidy attached.

Mr. BLAKE. Or a subsidy with a railway charter attached.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Whichever There is no one thing which many members of this House, to their proper shame be it said, have trafficked in more than railway charters, and the possibility of trafficking, the making of improper gains, of filling their pockets at the public expense, has been infinitely increased by the policy inaugurated by that hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) has not denied the main facts, or indeed any of the material facts alleged by my hon. friend. He has not denied the receipt of a subsidy, he has not denied that in the various prospectuses issued in England a misstatement of the most extraordinary character was made, he has not denied that in one of those prospectuses it was claimed that this road would develop a traffic of $3,200 per mile, that it was claimed in another prospectus that the road would have a net profit of $1,000 per mile; he has not denied the fact that the total revenue of this road did not even pay the running expenses, let alone a profit of $60,000 or $70,000 a year. He has not denied any of these statements. He has not denied the statements made in the newspapers; he has not paid the slightest attention to the language used in the public press with respect to his undertaking, nor did he state that any material portion of the $700,000 or $800,000 subscribed had been paid up. On all these points the hon. member for Gloucester practically let matters go by default. Some things, however, remain exceedingly clear. It is perfectly clear that the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) was the sole proprietor of this road to all intents and purposes, that it was very largely subsidised by the Government, that year after year, first in 1883, then in 1884, then in 1886. then in 1887 or 1888 the hon, gentleman was dancing attendance on the Government of the day, he was a supplicant and applicant for further favors at their hands. Such a position is wholly and utterly inconsistent with the position of a member of Parliament. I say that the man in this House, be he who he may, whether a Minister or a member, whether a member of the Opposition, or a supporter of the Government, who being largely interested in a railway, is an applicant to the Government for a large sum of money for the benefit of that road in which he is largely personally interested, that man to all intents and purposes is merely a bond slave to the Government, he has ceased to be a free agent, he cannot be a free agent, he is unfit to sit in this House or to vote in this House, for the simple reason that he is no longer a member for a constituency, but a member for a railway, be it the Caraquet and Shippegan or any road you please. How can such a man pass an honest judgment on any demand made from any quarter of this House for a grant of money for the purpose of constructing a railway elsewhere? His mouth is tied, his vote is gone to all intents and purposes. Such a practice opens the door for the grossest imaginable irregularities of all kinds and to corruption in every shape and form. I do not wish to go over the long list of men we have known or have heard of as trafficking in charters within the bounds of this Parliament. I will recall one case. I do not see my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) in the chamber, Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

but there was a case brought up-I am sorry to say too late in the last Parliament to enable us to investigate it -- in which if my memory is correct it was stated on the floor, and was admitted by the accused party to be true, that a member of the late Parliament had obtained a subsidy of $3,200 a mile and had charged somebody else a commission of $320 per mile for transferring that subsidy and a charter of which he got control. I am speaking from recollection and therefore under correction if I have overstated the case, but at all events there is the Hansard in which the statement will be found recorded. My recollection is that the statement was made and that the facts were admitted on the floor of the House. Now, Sir, what are the lessons to be adduced from all this? One of these lessons is, the gross and extreme folly of granting subsidies as we have been doing, and are likely to be asked to do within a few hours. I say, Sir, that if the Government continue this practice, if they choose to go on with what I believe to be the mistaken practice of granting subsidies in the fashion they are now doing, they are bound in all honor and conscience to take reasonable precautions to prevent just such occurrences as those which have been detailed to-night. I say that no Government which was true to the country would grant one of these railways a subsidy until there were first laid before the Minister of Railways and submitted to Parliament, sufficiently fair and accurate plans of the country to be traversed, to enable the Minister and the House to form a reasonably accurate estimate of the total cost of the road. In the second place, evidence should be given to the Minister, and should be transmitted by him to Parliament, to show that the parties in connection with it had reasonable facilities, and reasonable means to enable them to construct the line; that they were not men of straw, and that they were willing to invest a fair amount of their own property in the enterprise. Lastly, Sir, and, perhaps, as important as any: it is a gross violation of all propriety, and of all constitutional rule and precedence that these propositions to grant subsidies to railways should not be laid on the Table of this House several weeks before prorogation in order that we may have time to examine them, we must go on with this policy, in order that we may have time to ascertain which are reasonable and fair applications likely to benefit the country, and which on the other hand are likely to result in disaster and injury. In this present case, it is perfectly apparent that everyone of these conditions were utterly disregarded. There is not even a pretence that when the Government came down here to ask for the original subsidy, or, for the matter of that, for any of the other subsidies, that they had before them any plan or survey, or any proper estimate of what this road would cost. There is no evidence at all that they took any pains to ascertain what amount of money the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), or any of the other parties connected with him, were going to invest of their own proper funds; and it is notorious, as was stated by my hon. friend, that we were forced-to discuss these matters and to vote upon them in some twenty-four or forty-eight hours from the time they were brought down, and that they were purposely delayed until the last moment before being brought down to this House. For what reason was this? It was for the reason, that while important discussions were going on; while sometimes the fate of Ministers, strong as they are, had been trembling in the balance, it was very convenient to have railway subsidies, dangling before recalcitrant supporters, and to hint to these gentlemen that if they did not choose to support the Government of the day, they would find themselves left out in the cold when the time came for dividing up the plunder. There is a fourth reason which goes to show how great and grave has been the injury done to the country by the hon. gentleman's policy. These facts which my hon, friend recalled to the attention of the House, have been already made a subject of most unfavorable comment in the mother country. The English shareholders who were induced to put £80,000 or £100,000 sterling into the Caraquet and Shippegan Railway, on representations of a net profit of $1,000 per mile, on representations of a traffic of $3,200 per mile; what will they think, when all these facts are brought before them? When they know that the total sum re-When they know that the total sum received from this road scarcely amounts to $300 per mile, let alone $3,200; when they know that a road that was to pay $1,000 per mile net profit, according to the statement of the member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), showed last year a dead loss of $3,000 on running expenses over receipts, and which showed, according to the statement made by the First Minister, something like $8,000 or $9,000 dead loss of expenses over receipts. I can tell the hon, gentlemen opposite that we have very little credit to throw away in this respect. Why, Sir, only the other day I was obliged to call the attention of the House to a matter which I was compelled to characterise as an atrocious swindle. I refer to the Canadian Dead Meat Company. In that, also, representations of the most astounding character had been made, apparently under the sanction, or at any rate with the knowledge, of our High Commissioner in London, and of one very important member of the Ministry. I was glad to hear that gentleman deny that he knew anything whatever about the matter with which his name was connected, although, I must say, that as member for Three Rivers, he might, I think, have been a little better informed. What do we find with respect to other matters? My hon. friend referred to the fact that he supposed this Caraquet railroad was connected with a scheme of a fast mail service. The other day a paper was placed in my hands in which we find that the gentlemen with whom the Government were negotiating for the purpose of constructing a fast mail steamship line, published to the world, a statement which reads as follows:—

"The inspired statement in the Montreal Gazette, to which your article refers, aggravates the injustice with which the Canadian Government appear to be determined to treat us in this matter. So far from it being true that the main reason for our surrendering the contract was 'inability to interest sufficient capital for so large an undertaking,' we are able to say without hesitation that if the representations made to us when we undertook the business, and on the faith of which alone we embarked upon it, had been fulfilled, we should have had no difficulty whatever in finding the necessary capital.

"We area.sir.

"Your obedient servants." "ANDERSON, ANDERSON & CO." "PROPOSED CANADIAN ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

"To the Editor of the Times (London):

"To the Editor of the Times (London):

"Sir,—From a telegram published in to-day's papers it appears that in the Dominion House of Commons on Wednesday last the Hon. G. E. Foster, Minister of Finance, reiterated a former misstatement, which we have already had occasion to contradict, viz., that 'he had cancelled the contract with Messrs. Anderson & Co. for an Atlantic steamship service, because Messrs. Anderson were unable to raise the capital necessary for establishing the promised service."

"We shall be obliged by your affording us an opportunity of stating (1) that Mr. Foster did not cancel the contract and had no power to do so; (2) that we surrendered the contract, not for the reason given by Mr. Foster, but because, in the words of our telegram of October 12, 1889, to Sir John Macdonald, intimating with regret such surrender, 'we can no longer reckon on the cordial conventions of the Canadian Pagifa Pailmen."

surrender, 'we can no longer reckon on the cordial co-operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Sir George Stephen having intimated that he has ceased to take interest in our scheme.' We would only add that we are willing and, indeed, anxious that the whole correspon-dence should be published, and we do not understand the repeated refusals of the Dominion Government to produce it.

"We are, Sir, your obedient servants, "ANDERSON, ANDERSON & CO."

Now, I tell the hon, gentleman that matters like the Canadian Dead Meat Company, contradictions given in this fashion, by men with whom the Government have entered into engagements, and, over and above all, matters such as those which my hon. friends have brought to the attention of the House to-night—showing, as they do, to say the least of it, gross carelessness on the part of the Government in granting subsidies to roads which cannot pay their way-are things calculated, in a very high degree, to injure the interests of Canada, and to prevent enterprising Canadians, who have really good and valuable schemes to submit to the English people, from obtaining that assistance from them which they ought to receive, and which would help them and us largely in developing the latent resources of this country. But I say for the last time, that there is no safe ground for members of this House to take other than this, that they are essentially and above all things trustees for the people; and being trustees for the people, it is no part of their business whatever to use their position for the purpose of deriving an advantage, whether in the matter of timber limits, land grants, railway subsidies or in any other matter or thing whatever; and until we take good care that that shall be the established rule of conduct for every man in Canada, just such occurrences as this, and just such occurrences as those which we discussed some weeks ago, will continue to lower the position and degrade the character of the Parliament of this Dominion.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, we have heard for a number of years past of these courses of corruption of constituencies being debauched by railway subsidies, and of money being made by representatives in Parliament; but we have at last one charge formulated against a gentleman who occupies a seat in this House. We have stated, in reply to these hon. gentlemen, that a member of a particular constituency, having an interest in it and favoring its development, and perhaps being the man of the greatest means in the constituency, would naturally try to benefit it by getting assistance for some railway or other enterprise in it. We have also stated that the members who embarked in these enterprises, did so with great pecuniary loss to themselves, and that in no case could it be shown that those gentlemen had benefited personally to any extent in the undertakings in which they were engaged. I have never heard or read much of the particulars of the Caraquet Railway until this evening; but I listened to the financial enemies of this company this evening, and I think, when I get through, hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the hon. member who engaged in this railway came out a poorer man than he was when he embarked in it. What man than he was when he embarked in it. are the facts of the case? There was a railway built from Shippegan to connect with the Intercolonial Railway, a distance of seventy miles: it received a subsidy from the Dominion Government to the amount of $3,200 a mile, and from the Local Government to the amount of $1,800 per mile, that is, $6,000 per mile in cash; and according to the statement of the hon. gentleman who spoke a few moments ago, he went to London and negotiated the sale of £100,000 sterling of bonds for the purpose of assisting in the building of the I have had the curiosity to ask the hon. gentleman what was the actual amount of cash he received from the sale of those bonds. He tells me they were sold at 75 per cent., which would realise $375,000, or, with $55,000 deducted for expenses and commissions, a net amount of $320,000, and that he deposited with the bankers in London $100,000 for the purpose of paying interest on the bonds, leaving $220,000 which he received for his £100,000 sterling of bonds; but of that $220,000he received no cash at all, but received the whole amount in the shape of rails and fixings for laying the track of the railway. Those were the cash receipts on which this charge against my hon. friend is based, that he took the contract from the company for the purpose of building the road and pocketing a large amount out of the receipts. This road, which the hon. gentleman says is excellently well built and equipped, not, perhaps, in the manner some roads are, but having a certain number of engines and a certain number of cars, was built for $6,000 a mile; he graded the road, laid the track, built the stations, and supplied the equipment to the extent of $220,000. There is the charge made against the hon. gentleman—that he, for his own benefit, for the purpose of pocketing a large sum out of the enterprise, built the seventy miles for the $220,000 which he received from the bondholders. Is there any hon. gentleman in this House who knows anything about railroad enterprises, who does not know that the man who built that road for that money came out of the undertaking a poorer man than he entered into it? There is no mistake than he entered into it? There is no mistake about the facts of the case. I have no doubt that any person, in any constituency of the Dominion, having faith in the resources of the country, would be perfectly honest in promising to the bondholders that the prospects were that he would be able to pay the interest on the bonds; and the hon, gentleman has still faith in the enterprise, and has hopes that he may be able to pay the interest on the bonds. But there is the financial statement showing the amount he received in all, and I leave it to the members of this House and to the country to say whether there is any probability that he pocketed a single cent from the undertaking. We have had a good many of these charges, and I am glad to hear some of them formulated in the House, where railways and railway building, are able to divest them of all verbiage, and get down to the naked facts; and they are just as I have presented them—there is nothing in them. The hon. gentleman says that the policy of the Government is one which is not in the interest of railway construction in the country. Let me read a short account of the money we have expended from 1884 to 1889 in all the Provinces, and I will ask hon. gentlemen if the money has not been well expended for the development of the country. The amount we have expended in those five years hardly reaches $1,000,. 000 a year. I could give the details, for I have the full information here; but that small amount which the Government have paid out in cash for the purpose of aiding in the development of the different parts of the country, has returned to the country tenfold the amount which has been expended in carrying out a policy which is a credit to the Government, and which will redound to the future advantage and advancement of the country in very respect. The hon, gentleman asks why were not these resolutions brought down in the Does he forget the beginning of the Session. example which the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) set him a few years ago? Does he forget that the railway subsidy resolutions were brought down on the 29th of February by the hon. member for West Durham, and the House was prorogued on the 2nd of March? An hon. friend of mine remarked on that occasion that if it had not happened to be leap year, the resolution would have been brought down one day and passed the next. Is it a reflection on a scheme, which is all right in itself, that it happens to be brought down at the close of the Session? As a whole, the policy of the Government of giving assistance to roads in different parts of the country is one which has benefited the country, and indirectly returned tenfold more to this country than the amount expended. I had not the advantage of hearing the whole of the speech of the hon. member for West Durham, especially the statements he made in reference to the prospectus. It may be very well for the hon, gentleman to state what the road may have cost, but perhaps that was the contract price for it. Perhaps the hon member for Gloucester was only receiving $6,000 in cash, and the balance in the form of stock in the road; stock, which he states himself, and which the statement of the condition of the road bears him out in saying, might not be worth ten cents. But he may have conscientiously entered into a contract for the purpose of building that road, and received only $6,000 or $7,000 in cash and the remainder in stock. I say, if this is the only charge of corruption in the form of bribing a constituency—bribing or corrupting a member of Parliament by giving assistance to his county and making him a poorer man, as he must have known he would be when he went into the undertaking—which the hon. gentleman can bring, it is one which will receive due appreciation by the people of the country.

amount he received in all, and I leave it to the members of this House and to the country to say whether there is any probability that he pocketed a single cent from the undertaking. We have had a good many of these charges, and I am glad to hear some of them formulated in the House, where practical business men, and men acquainted with chosen however to give a statement of the cost of that road and the net results proceeding from the sale of the bonds and the subsidies received, but as we have had the statement of the member for Gloucester himself, this statement coming at second hand from the hon. the Postmaster General, does not carry very much weight. I will therefore take very little time in answering him. There is only one thing I notice in the statement of the hon. member for Lanark, and that is his failure to touch the gravemen of the charge brought by the hon. member for Oxford, namely, that this granting of subsidies to members of Parliament for lines in which they are interested, as in the case of the hon. member for Gloucester, is an indirect bribe to the member and destroys his independence in dealing with public questions before this House. That question the hon, member for Lanark has never touched. I will say this with reference to the hon. member for Gloucester. I do not disapprove of his course in trying to build a road in his county. It is laudable and perfectly right in so doing; but what I do disapprove is that he should stand in the position of being the sole recipient of the public moneys which he voted himself. That is what I object to as a matter of principle, and that, I contend, is a practical violation of the independence of Parliament Act, and one which should be put a stop to by this House. When, in the Railway Committee the other day, I stated the proposition that these charters should not be granted promiscuously as they had been in past years and that the duty specially devolved on the Government to see that no charters were given to persons to build railways with concessions from the public treasury of the country before the Government, and the committee, and Parliament, were perfectly satisfied of the means and ability of these parties to carry out their charters, the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government approved of the position I took; and I have no hesitation in saying that if that condition had been attached to the passing of this charter—which was not granted by this House, I believe, but granted by the Local House-I doubt if it would ever have been granted to the parties who hold it. I do not know that I would have interfered in the charges against the hon. member for Gloucester had it not been for the fact that the other day he deliberately projected himself into a discussion, and charged me with making statements concerning facts I knew nothing about. If the hon, gentleman is not convinced of the truth of the statement I then made by the correspondence read by the hon. member for West Durham, which shows the manner in which the hon. gentleman, by his own admission, made payments to the men, I leave it to the House to say whether I was right or wrong in relation to the matter. am not going to discuss the question whether the hon. gentleman is right or wrong in relation to some of the matters referred to. The only point I will deal with, as regards his conduct, is to the effect of the representations made in the prospectus which he sent forth upon the character and credit of Canada. I say that those two prospectuses, giving statements of the probable earnings, the character and numbers of the population, which my hon. friend knows is over-

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. What was the population by the last census? I speak from memory and under correction, but I believe it was between 21,000 and 22,000 for the whole county. My hon. friend knows there is scarcely one-third of the county represented from where the road starts at Bathurst to Caraquet.

Mr. BURNS. Including the parish of Bathurst, fully 22,000 people are served by the line, not including the people in the hon. gentleman's own county.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not asking how many people are served by the line. The hon. gentleman stated in the prospectus that the line ran through a population of something like 18,000. I would like to ask him whether I had correctly stated the whole population of the county, when I say it is between 21,000 and 22,000 at the last census.

Mr. BURNS. The population at the time of the prospectus was between 24,000 and 25,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. The population of the whole county at the last census was something like 21,000 or 22,000. The hon. gentleman admits that when the prospectus was issued it was 24,000; and I venture to say, from my knowledge of the locality, that the portion of the county through which the railway runs does not contain one-third of the population of the whole county. Therefore, the statement of the prospectus with regard to the population is incorrect. I think it is of great importance, when Parliament sanctions schemes and grants bonuses for the purpose of making public improvements in this country, and when gentlemen who get concessions go to the other side of the water for the purpose of raising money, that no misstatements should be made in order to induce investors on the other side to take stock in such enterprises. The earnings of the road show that in that particular the hon. gentleman is also entirely in error. With these remarks, I quit the Caraquet Railway. Now, I have something to say to the right hon. gentleman. He stated, as a justification for granting this subsidy, that the road was for the purpose of making a part of what an eminent engineer said would be a great line of communication between Europe and America. What the hon. gentleman refers to is a visionary scheme of Mr. Sandford Fleming years and years ago, to carry the Intercolonial Railway down to Shippegan, thence by a ferry—as the right hon. gentleman described it— to Newfoundland, thence by a railway across Newfoundland, and then to start the ocean steamers from the eastern cost of Newfoundland. That was the visionary theory Mr. Sandford Fleming had, and I doubt if there was one man on this continent of America, except himself, who ever endorsed such a scheme. It was one of the most visionary and fallacious schemes ever thought of, but the promoter of this Caraquet road, knowing that this scheme was not practicable, knowing that it was not endorsed by one man out of ten thousand, put that in his prospectus, and thus further misled the people who advanced the money to build that road. The right hon, gentleman says the Government were justified in granting this subsidy without further enquiry, because the Province of New Brunswick had granted a bonus from Bathurst to Shippegan. What the Province of New Brunswick did was to pass what they called a Lobster Act, which comprised some twenty railways in New Brunswick. In regard to the particular line we are speaking of, they granted a subsidy of $3,000 a mile from Bathurst to Caraquet, and that formed no part of the Sandford Fleming's suggestion for a line to Shippegan and thence to Europe, as that scheme was exploded. I will read the particular part referring to that. The Act, after enumerating the various line, describes this one as follows:

"A line of railway from a point in the parish of Caraquet, in the county of Gloucester, to some point on the Intercolonial Railway in the parish of Bathurst, in the said county of Gloucester, $3,000 a mile."

That line, therefore, was undertaken separately, and I quote that now to show that the right hon. gentleman is wrong in stating that it was to form part of the scheme of Mr. Sandford Fleming for a line to Europe viû Shippegan. That was not the reason why the Province of New Brunswick gave a subsidy to the road. It was not thought of at the time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say it was.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood you to say so. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said in the first place that Mr. Sandford Fleming had pointed out this as a most eligible place for that railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did you believe him?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did at the time, and I was very much taken with the idea. Then, in the second place, I said the New Brunswick Government had not only granted a charter to this railway, but had also aided it, and that, as it was in their own Province, it might be supposed to be a good place for that railway, and that we might take their word for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course, I accept the right hon. gentleman's explanation. However, the Act which the Province passed was a lobster act. They did what my right hon friend often does when he cannot do a thing alone, he does a lot of things in order to catch everybody, and that is what the Province of New Brunswick did in order to catch almost every county in the Province; but as not one out of five of these roads could be built, they were pretty safe in relation to their scheme. The hon. gentleman has attempted to justify the policy which he introduced in regard to subsidising railways. I approve of railways receiving subsidies of public money where they cannot be built otherwise, but I do not approve of the manner in which this Government has voted the public moneys. When, in 1880, the treasury of this country was opened for the local improve-ments of the Provinces, under the overbearing influence of Sir Charles Tupper, I say that this Parliament adopted one of the greatest sources of bribery and corruption ever initiated in any country. We then left any member of this House, who was pressed by his constituents to obtain grants for railways, or canals, or other improvements, open to the pressure of the Government on the other hand. We left it open to the Government to bring these men practically as slaves to their feet. The hon gentleman attempted to justify that course by illustrations taken from the British Parliament. If he wished to improve by expenditures on railways, on canals, and on other public works, the facilities for travel and traffic through the the House. It will be in the memory of this Mr. MITCHELL.

country, there was a proper way in which to do it. That was to increase the subsidies paid to the Provinces to be expended on these improvements, and to let the Legislatures of the Provinces, who know better how to deal with these matters than we do, attend to them. Then we would not have such an anomaly as the Dominion Government giving a subsidy for the Caraquet Railway and the Local Government giving a subsidy for the line over the same route. But that would not suit the policy of the right hon. gentleman. He wants to control the men when they are here, and, in addition to the question of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) as to why these subsidies come down late in the Session, I may say-it might be improper for me to assume that hon, gentlemen are controlled by expectation of subsidies—but let any man walk around these lobbies to-day, let him hear the whispered conversations which take place, let him see the depression on the faces of some hon. members, and let him hear the muttered curses of others at their disappointment in regard to the expectations which have been held out to them. These are some of the results of that system, which I believe is a cursed system, a system which has corrupted the constituencies, and has corrupted the representatives of those constituencies, and is fast degrading the character of the men who come here to sit in Parliament. The right hon, gentleman has referred to that distinguished man—as he called him-Sir Edward Watkin, who is so well known in this country, as an illustration of men engaged in making public improvements who are in Parliament, and he said it is no objection to their being in Parliament that they are engaged in making public improvements. Who ever said it was? It is known that sugar refiners, and tanners, and lumbermen, and millers are in the halls of this Legislature. Has any one ever raised any objection because these and other men engaged in large private enterprises are members of this House? Nobody has ever contended that. The right hon. gentleman made a far-fetched illustration when he referred to Sir Edward Watkin, who is largely engaged in railways, never having been objected to for sitting in the English Parliament. Does Sir Edward Watkin get subsidies from the British Parliament? I put the question to the hon. gentleman and he declined to answer it. I will answer it for him. Sir Edward Watkin never got subsidies from the British Parliament for any such purposes. The hon, gentleman said some one on this side of the House had been pressing for subsidies; I will apply my principle equally to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, when I say that any man who is given subsidies for his county, or who is seeking favors of that character, is placing himself in a position to lose the independence which a member of Parliament ought to exercise. I shall not take up any further time in discussing this matter, but I will merely say that the sooner this system of granting railway subsidies is changed the better it will be for the independence and for the morality of this country, because the practice is immoral, the practice is degrading and it ought to be put a stop

GENERAL LAURIE'S MILEAGE.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before you leave the Chair I wish to bring another matter to the attention of House that I drew its attention to the fact that an hon. gentleman who had come from London, England, to attend this Parliament, had drawn a sum of $631 for mileage. I put the question to the First Minister, and asked whether the Government considered that it was a proper interpretation of the statute that permitted that hon, gentleman to draw that money. The reply of the First Minister to my question was very indefinite. I also enquired whether it was the intention of the Government to alter the statute, if they considered that was a proper and legal interpretation, and to that question I got a very indefinite answer. I consider now that it is the duty of this House to place upon record their opinion as to whether they consider it is right that any member of Parliament, living outside of Canada, should be permitted to draw a mileage indemnity from such a distant point beyond the bounds of this Dominion. In order to test the opinion of this House, I beg to move an amendment, that you do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved:

It having come to the knowledge of this House that Licutenant General Laurie, member for Shelburne, Nova Scotia, has drawn 8631 for mileage from England to Canada, to attend the present Session of Parliament, this House affirms that no Member or Senator should draw, or be permitted to draw, mileage from any distant country to attend Parliament, beyond the limits of this Dominion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may say a word upon this subject before the question is submitted to the House. This is a resolution that cannot be adopted from any view of the case. In the first place, it is in direct contravention of the provision of the statute on the subject, and the whole subject of mileage, as well as of members' indemnity, is regulated by statute. The 30th section of the Act relating to the Senate and House of Commons lays down distinctly a provision which gives to members of this House and to members of the Senate a right to draw their mileage and indemnity according to certain rules. The hon, member's resolution, if it is in the line of the statute, is unnecessary; but it is not in the line of the statute, it is an addition to the statute, it is a restriction further than that which the statute imposes, and is in direct conflict with the law of the country. The statute law having provided how much a member of this Parliament. whether a Senator or a member of the House of Commons, shall be entitled to, the hon. member proposes by a simple resolution to declare that no member of this House, nor any member of the Upper House, shall have a right to draw that which the statute gives him the right to draw. Section 30 of chapter 11, states:

"There shall also be allowed to each member of the Senate and of the House of Commons ten cents for each mile of the distance between the place of residence of such member and the place at which the session is held, reckoning such distance coming and going according to the nearest mail route, which distance shall be determined and certified by the Speaker of the Senate or House of Commons, as the case may be."

Parliament has not thought proper to make any restriction as to where the place of residence shall be, nor, in case of the residence being outside of Canada, has it thought proper to make any restriction that the travelling allowance shall be from some place nearer than his residence. The law of Parliament, as declared by this statute, is that as regards members of both Houses, they shall draw mileage from their residence, whether their residence is in the country or out of it.

General LAURIE. This matter has been brought before the House once or twice, and I did not think it necessary to speak again to make an explanation, but as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has again alluded to it, I feel it necessary for me to reply, and I shall have to give practically the same explanation I gave before. I was called upon to sign a declaration stating where I lived, and I found I could not draw travelling expenses except by signing that declaration. The declaration showed that I lived in London, and as it seemed a high amount to charge, the matter was referred to those who were authorities on that point, to find out whether it was right or wrong that I should draw that sum, and it was decided that I was right, and that I should draw it. Now, I have seen it stated that I drew this money to put it into my own pocket, and that is a point upon which I would like to say a word. The hon. member for North Wellington, who poses as the great financial reformer here, and who undertakes to set us all right in financial matters, has himself taken the advantage of the law in 1885, as I find, from the Auditor General's Report, that there was paid to Mr. James McMullen, in that year, the sum of $1,476 as indemnity for the Session of 1885, a part of which sum, I believe, was extra indemnity voted by this House in consequence of the length of the Session. This same hon, gentleman is recorded in the Debates as saying:

"I shall not cheat my constituents out of the money. If I take the money I shall give it to them for the benefit of agricultural work. I say I am opposed to the idea. I am opposed to it on all grounds. I believe the sessional allowance granted to us is quite sufficient, and I think any man who takes it should do as I intend to do with mine."

Now, Sir, as he has posed as a model to us of financial purity, I took it for granted that what he said and what he did was right, and that I might reasonably follow his example. I took the money and I appropriated it, not for agricultural purposes, but for the benefit of the fishermen in my countythat is, for the widows and families of drowned fishermen. I have taken upon myself to do that. Whether the hon. gentlemen did, as he said he was going to do, give that money or not, I am not prepared to say; but I have notified the trustees that I have placed the amount at their disposal. I have been simply desirous of following the example of a financial purist; whether he carried out what he intimated he intended to do or not I am not prepared to say, but I took him for an example and I copied what he announced he proposed to do.

Mr. LAURIER. It is, perhaps, just as well to look at this question from a business point of view, without any of the personalities with which it may be connected. The true test of the question is whether the law contemplated that the mileage for the sessional allowance should be granted from any place outside of Canada. The statute says that the mileage shall be calculated from the place of residence to the capital. I question very much, under such circumstances, whether the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) had the right to draw his mileage from any place other than Oakville, but he drew it from London. I question if he had any power to draw it from any place outside of Canada, that is to say from London. If I correctly understood him on a previous occasion I understood him to say that his residence at London was not permanent but simply temporary. A man cannot have two domiciles, he can have but one; and if a man is domiciled at a certain place, and if for reasons of his own, for health or pleasure, or any other cause, he goes abroad for one or two years that does not change his domicile. That is what I interpret to be the law. Of course, if the hon, gentleman says that he has changed his domicile, that his domicile is no longer in the county of Shelburne but that it is in London, I believe he comes within the statute, and I would have nothing to say; and my conclusion would be that under such circumstances the law is in his favor, and that he had a right to draw his mileage from the place he did draw it. That may be the letter, but I question whether it is the spirit of the law; I do not believe it is so, and I am sure when the law was first enacted it contemplated that the place of residence would be within Canada. I question very much if an hon, gentleman were to reside in England, or in any part of the British Empire, outside of Canada, and if he were to offer himself to the electors of Shelburne, or any other county of the Dominion, he would have the support of the elec-I do not think he would receive such That is not an argument on the legal support. point, but it has a direct bearing on the question, because it shows, in my opinion, that the spirit of the law is, not that the mileage shall be drawn from any place where at the time the domicile may happen to be, but that the domicile should be in Canada; and the question affirmed in the motion is that this is the spirit of the law and that it should be acted upon. If there is any doubt on this point, if it be pretended that the mileage can be drawn from the domicile of the member though he may have changed his domicile to any part of the universe, it is a question for this House to decide at once that the law be amended so as to make it agree with what is the understood principle of the statute, namely that the mileage shall be drawn from some point in Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is very probable that the question as to whether a member residing out of Canada should receive mileage from any point outside of Canada has not been authoritatively decided. It was most probably only in contemplation when the statute was passed that the members would reside in Canada and have The hon. gentletheir residences within Canada. man is mistaken in supposing that domicile is mentioned in the statute; the word is residence, and there is a great difference between these two words. A man must have his residence somewhere. The hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) has told the House that he has no residence in Canada, that he has given up his house, and that he now resides in England. Under these circumstances I take it that under the strict reading of the statute he would have a right, if it were claimed, to receive travelling expenses from the place of his residence, as the statute says that the travelling expenses shall be from the place of residence to the place where the session is held. If the hon, gentleman could not claim travelling expenses from England, they could not be claimed Mr. LAURIER.

from anywhere else, as he must claim them from his residence, and as he has only one residence he must claim them from England. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is a subject for consideration whether, next Session, we should not deal with the question as it has been brought up. In the meantime it seems to me the law is plain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will neither dispute the statements of the hon gentleman nor the view of the law enunciated by the Minister of Justice. I have a recollection, however, of a similar case, decided in the other way, which is very likely known to the First Minister. This identical point was brought up in the case of Mr. Sydney Bellingham, who went to Ireland to reside, and who claimed his mileage allowance from Ireland, but his claim was disallowed. Whatever the law may be, it never was intended or contemplated that mileage should be paid from points outside of Canada; and if there be, as the hon. Minister of Justice states, a doubt, or if the law be the other way, the sooner it is changed the better.

General LAURIE. The hon member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) has alluded to the fact that I do not now reside in the county of Shelburne. I never did so. I asked when I resided in the county of Halifax whether I could draw my mileage from the county of Shelburne, and the reply I received was that I could not draw it from my constituency. I submitted that point.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). According to the interpretation of the statute given by the Minister of Justice, the majority of members of this House, if they choose to reside at Melbourne or Sydney, could draw their mileage from distant points, and they would receive over $3,200 for mileage. Of course the statute never contemplated the election of non-residents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). On the same theory there could be no objection to any British subject being returned to this Parliament, if over twentyone years of age, if he lived in Australia, South Africa, or New Zealand. That is sufficient to show the absurdity of the idea that the election of non-residents was ever contemplated. When the statute speaks about mileage being reckoned from the place of residence, it was assumed that the members would be residents in this country. doubt, according to a strict construction of the statute, the opinion of the Minister of Justice would be followed, as it would be followed in the case of the criminal statute. But the First Minister will remember that he had the same question before him not long before Confederation. gentleman elected for a county went to reside in the Isle of Wight, and he claimed mileage under exactly the same words as these, and the right hon. gentleman refused to entertain his claim. The right hon. gentleman will remember the case of Mr. Scoville.

Mr. BOWELL. Is the hon. gentleman sure the law was precisely the same as it is now? My recollection is that it provided for the payment of the mileage from the constituency.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). From the residence; the words are the same. The present First Minister in that case ruled that Mr. Scoville was not entitled to mileage from the Isle of Wight.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before this matter is passed over I wish to say a few words in reply.

 $\ensuremath{\mathrm{Mr}}.$ BOWELL. The hon, gentleman has spoken already.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to refer to something the hon. gentleman said, and I have a right to give a personal explanation. The hon. gentleman says that I drew the additional sessional allowance in 1885. I opposed that increase at the time it was granted, and when the money was voted to me, I took it the same as any other member. I think I earn my sessional allowance as well as any member in this House. Some hon. gentleman said that I did not give the money in the way I promised on that occasion. I tell that hon, gentleman that that statement is untrue. I gave every single dollar to my constituency, in the way I said I would give it to them. With regard to making a declaration, I may say I have been here for eight years and may say I never was asked to make a declaration. I do not know how the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) was asked to make a declaration, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite if they were ever asked to make a declaration? The accountant will give you the mileage set down without any declaration.

Amendment negatived on a division, and House again revolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To pay J. G. Moylan for services on Royal Commission in making an investigation at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary with Mr. Baillairgé... $250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Moylan is our Chief Inspector of Penitentiaries; in fact our only inspector, and it appears to me that this is a duty which fell entirely within his province, and for which he should hardly be paid extra.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The item is recommended under these circumstances: About the time of the appointment of Warden Laviolette, a very protracted investigation took place at the penitentiary, under the direction of my predecessor. Mr. Moylan thought that the conduct of some of the officers was to be reprimanded, and he maintained there was want of discipline among the officers, which was due to the fact that his instructions had not been followed. Lest it should be supposed that he should be influenced by the previous judgment he had formed, he had associated with him Mr. Baillairgé, who was allowed for his services, $500, and Mr. Moylan claimed the same amount. I am aware of the objection the hon. gentleman has taken, but the practice of paying officers who serve on royal commissions has been pretty well established. In this case it was decided to give to Mr. Moylan half of the amount paid to Mr. Baillairgé, in consideration that to some extent he was performing duties of a special

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can understand that this might be done in the case of an officer taken from one department to another, but I do not recollect at this moment a case in which matters so clearly falling within the purview of the inspector's duty, was made a reason for a grant.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was one of the reasons why only one-half of the sum was allowed. There is an illustration of the same kind in the case of Mr. Schreiber, who was a member of the Royal Commission and also Chief Engineer of Railways.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not sure if I do the Minister of Justice an injustice by saying that he does not appear to be quite satisfied that the course suggested to the House is a good one. I believe that if he were to follow his better judgment he would not have asked this money. The fact that this claim has been allowed to remain unpaid since 1885, shows that the hon. gentleman has been considering it for a long time, and it was, perhaps, after due consideration that he came to adopt it. I think there are grave objections to giving extra pay for extra services, which each officer is bound to perform under any circumstances. The principle seems to be a wrong one, and ought not to be sanctioned in the future.

Mr. McMULLEN. We pay Mr. Moylan $3,200 as inspector of penitentiaries, and I find by the Auditor General's Report that last year he drew $1,600 additional for travelling expenses. I cannot see how this Government are disposed to encourage claims of this kind from men who are getting large salaries. These claims for extra services are increasing very rapidly, and it is not much wonder when the Government are continually sanctioning claims of this kind which are two or three years old. It should not be permitted.

Manitoba Penitentiary—Maintenance and repairs of buildings...... $5,362 65

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The House during the last year or two voted the salaries of one or two trade instructors for the penitentiary service. That enables us to have small repairs made by convict labor, instead of calling on the Minister of Public Works continually. I have in my hands a memorandum of the various items of this expenditure, extending over several pages. The principal item consists of $1,500 for 2,000 feet of picket fence. It was stated by one of the hon, members for Elgin the other night that it was very desirable to have a fence about the prison reserve in order that the prisoners might be employed more freely out of doors, and it is intended to make a beginning this year.

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although we are not now going to pass the items in the Supplementary Estimates connected with agricultural statistics, I wish to make a suggestion to the right hon. the First Minister with regard to the census to be taken this year. In our various census returns taken heretofore, we have taken no precaution to ascertain the descriptions of buildings and the number of rooms they contain. The First Minister knows that in almost all other censuses taken in other countries, pains are taken to describe the nature of the buildings, whether stone, brick or wood, the number of stories and the number of rooms. This is an extremely valuable item of information, as it affords a good indication of the progress of the country and the way the population are lodged.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take a note of it.

Two monuments to be erected on battle-fields of Canada.....

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When this matter was brought up in the House before, we had a discussion on the advisability of making a beginning in building up monuments to commemorate the historic events of Canada. The intention is to make a beginning by erecting two monuments, one on the battlefield at Lundy's Lane and the other at Chateauguay.

Mr. DENISON. I was in hopes there would be something in the Supplementary Estimates for the drill of the rural militia this year. I would like to know whether it is possible yet to have an appropriation for that purpose brought down.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Estimates have been brought down, and I feel just as sorry as the hon, gentleman that we could not bring down the amount required to drill the whole force every year, but I hope on a future occasion we will be able to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. When we are charging $6 a barrel on prime mess pork, which is the chief food of the working classes, it is no time to spend money in building monuments.

Mr. GORDON. I would ask the hon. the Minister of Militia if it is his intention to establish a battery of garrison artillery at Nanaimo. It has been recommended by the different adjutant generals of the Province from year to year, and I have frequently called the hon. Minister's attention to the matter. The importance of the coal mines there should not be overlooked in case of war, which I hope will never occur; but at the same time they are the source of fuel supply for all the trade and commerce of the Pacific coast.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My friend has been most energetic in pressing that question upon the attention of the Department. Of course it is very difficult, when we find it difficult to drill the whole force, to increase the force as it now stands. I hope that at some future day we will be able to give Nanaimo the battery the hon. gentleman desires. I hope that at some future date we may be able to give the matter further attention, but I do not see that it is possible to do so at present on the money which is voted by Parliament.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some time ago I suggested the advisability of furnishing helmets to the Militia force. The Minister of Militia said he would take it into consideration, but he had not at that time enough money to propose to furnish the Militia with helmets. I would like to know if he has taken that subject into consideration?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no item under the head of Militia to furnish helmets to the force. I do not think that it is possible this year. It would require $10,000 per annum for three years to furnish the helmets required for the whole force.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not altogether agree with the Minister of Militia as to the amount required, but I think this is a necessary thing to do, and I believe this Parliament would agree to the vote if it were proposed by the Government. I think it is a case of very serious neglect on the part of the Militia Department. I had hoped from the answer which the Minister gave before, that | complete the drainage of the town of Perth?

Sir Richard Cartwright.

he would have considered the subject, and that we would have had a more favorable answer. I think $10,000 a year for three years is a very small matter in promoting the efficiency of the force and the comfort of its members.

Mr. GORDON. I would ask the Minister what is the intention of the Government in regard to Nanaimo next year. I know that the young men there are as loyal and as desirous of enrolling themselves in the Militia for the defence of the country as any young men in Canada. If occasion should arise for their services—which God forbid-they would be ready to do their duty. I think proper encouragement should be given to our young men. They are full of vigor and full of energy, and they are now held back simply because the head of the Department, through a dread of expenditure, will not give life to an organisation which could easily be established and formed in that country.

General LAURIE. I was deputy adjutant general in British Columbia for some time, and I tried to reorganise the volunteers there, because I recognised that Esquimalt and Nanaimo were very important strategic points. Nanaimo especially is an important point, because it is a coaling station and is used for the supply of coal to the vessels on the Pacific coast. I think we should protect that place, and should give every encouragement possible to the inhabitants to reorganise themselves into a Militia force. It is simply replacing the old infantry company by a battery of artillery.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to ask if the repairing of the drill shed and armory in Chatham is to be gone on with this year? The building is in a wretched state.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think I told the hon. gentleman when the Estimates were first brought down that there was an item under the head of repairs which would allow me to do what I thought necessary in that direction.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to hear that the supply of helmets will cost only $10,000 for three years. In that case, however, I think the Government are neglecting not only the comfort but also the health of those young men who enroll as volunteers, in not providing the accommodation represented by so small an amount. If the Minister had himself to turn out in a forage cap after living indoors for a great part of the year, as many of the volunteers have to do, I think he would see the necessity of providing something to protect their heads from the sun. It might be said that farmers' sons would not suffer from this, but I have found that they suffer more than any one else, because, when they are on the farm they are in the habit of wearing wide-brimmed hats when at work.

Mr. AMYOT. I got helmets in London for our battalion, the 8th, consisting of eight companies and 42 men in each, and it cost over $700 for the men in my battalion, and of course, the helmets of the officers were separate from that. Of course it is necessary that the men should have helmets when they drill in summer.

Tay Canal..... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a re-vote. There has been expended up to the 1st March, $15,000, and it is supposed that $5,000 will be expended up to the 30th June, making $20,000 in all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this canal going to be equally profitable with the Rideau Canal? On the latter, if my memory serves me, we received $$,000, and spent $60,000, and I should like to know if the same proportion is expected to apply to the Tay Canal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The business of the Rideau Canal is increasing considerably within the last two years.

Construction of a wharf, St. Peter's Canal, $12,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is that a new structure? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. The hon. gentleman must have seen that there was great inconvenience and annoyance to vessels mooring near the lock, and also in unloading freight. It is to provide a wharf for vessels to load and unload, and to which they can moor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is to cover the probable amount of claims in British Columbia, along the line, and some outstanding claims on the Pembina Branch and east of Selkirk, and towards the probable expenses of the arbitration now going on, and the salary of Mr. Jones, who is clerk to the arbitrators.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, he has figured for a good many years. What has been the total cost of the arbitration to date?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps $25,000. will ascertain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will get off cheaply if you get off for $25,000. I think we had granted large sums already towards that in other places. I should be glad to know if the Minister of Justice can give us any idea when this business will be disposed of—these Onderdonk arbitrators.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot give any information on that point. The last stage that was reached was an argument before the arbitrators for the purpose of ascertaining if a principle could be arrived at on which the decision should be based. It was believed that if the arbitrators could decide at that stage of the case on a principle on which the award might be made, they could then lay down principles on which the amount should be computed, if the award should be made against the Government, and then cease their labors. Decision is reserved on that point.

Lachine Canal-Electric light..... $11,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What system is being adopted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is for the purpose of changing the present system of incandescent lights to arc lights. It is proposed to transfer the present system from Lachine to Chambly and Beauharnois.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you going to work this with water power derived from the canal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so. This is plant for an electric light, and the expenditure will not be repeated.

Welland Canal $15,450

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not in a position to say whether these works are demanded, but in addition to the enormous expenses chargeable to income for Canals, a sum of nearly $60,000 more is required. Can the First Minister tell me, putting everything together, what is the cost chargeable to income alone for the maintenance of these canals now, all told?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not got the figures with me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me as running up to very heavy figures indeed. I called his attention to the enormous disproportion between the receipts and expenses, when the main vote was going through. I am almost afraid to speak from recollection, but it seems to me that the total expense on these canals is getting up to the better part of a million.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The expense is very considerable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And our receipts are getting small by degrees and beautifully less, all the time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope when the canal is built we shall have more revenue, unless the Americans build another Welland Canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would inform the hon, gentleman that when concurrence comes down, I shall ask him for the total cost, all told, of the canals, chargeable to income. He will have to look over two or three different points in the expenditure to get it. I want to know the total annual expense, and the total receipts.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I desire to ascertain whether an item will appear in the Estimates to construct a canal from Port Stanley to St. Thomas, the surveys for which were made last summer. The work will only cost about a million dollars. The promoter has been made a junior judge of the county, and so the duty of pushing forward the work will devolve on myself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If I thought it would secure my hon. friend's election against the Equal Righters I might be inclined to bring down such a vote.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon, gentleman need not trouble about my election. Last time I won against combined influences, and the right hon, gentleman is as strong as the Equal Righters.

St. Peter's Canal—To pay H. F. Perley, C.E., two years' services to December, 1890, in superintending St. Peter's Canal......$500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an addition to his regular salary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Perley is engineer of the Public Works Department, but he had special knowledge of this work and was persuaded to attend to it, although it was against his wish. The payment will cease on 31st December.

Mr. LOVITT. He received his regular salary all the same, but he went to the seaside to have a change from his office duties.

Carillon and Grenville Canals-Repairs.... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been informed, although I do not make the assertion from my knowledge, that a good many frauds have been committed in connection with the payments on the Carillon and Grenville Canal. Has the hongentleman received any information of late touching frauds in connection with pay-lists?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I have not

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On page 4--F of the Auditor General's Report the hon. gentleman will find a detailed statement of the parties to whom money has been paid on this canal. He will observe the name of William Bestwarwick, to whom $36 are alleged to have been paid. Ít is stated that this man has been in the United States for two years. Antoine Boyer is down for $90; it is stated that he departed this life a good many years ago. Then there is a carter named Charlebois, 176 days, $264. It is stated that this man has also been in the United States for two years. There are some other cases, but I will not trouble the hon. gentleman with them. I call his attention to the fact that allegations are made that the items have been improperly placed on the paylists, and that a system of plundering is going on. I had been informed that the matter had been brought to the attention of the First Minister himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I have not heard of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, letters may have been sent to the Department, which the hon. gentleman never received.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Did the hongentleman learn when the frauds commenced?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not aware. The statements made to me are simply that a number of men entered on the pay-list as having been employed could not have been so employed, because they were either dead or absent from the country a long time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will see about it to-morrow.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 9th May, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock. Prayers.

PATENT BALLOT BOXES.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Before presenting the report of the Select Committee appointed to enquire into patent ballot boxes, I beg to move:

Sir John A. Macdonald.

That the Select Committee appointed to examine and report upon newly invented ballot papers and ballot boxes to be used in parliamentary elections, have power to send for persons, &c., &c.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Committee ought to have the power of fixing a sum which would pay certain small expenses incurred by persons who appeared before the Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought this must be an expost facto arrangement, and that it was not really designed that the Committee should send for persons at this late stage of the Session. I do not think that these persons should be paid their expenses for coming here in pursuit of their own business, and, for my part, I shall object to it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We invited, by our action, a certain number of persons to appear before the Committee and present certain devices which might have been an improvement on the system already existing for receiving votes at an election. Some of these persons incurred expenditure in attending the sittings of the Committee, and it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee that their travelling expenses to come here and to return, should be paid, as well as a sum of $10 for attendance before the Committee. The Committee had three sittings, and some of these persons who were not in a very good financial position were obliged to remain here. It is but just, I think, that a small compensation should be paid them.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that this is very objectionable. These persons have come here at their own risk and peril, intending, perhaps, to benefit by their trip, with a view of having their inventions adopted by the Committee. Under such circumstances, they having come here on their own errand, I do not see any reason why they should be paid.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite agree with the remarks made by the leader of the Opposition. If people come here with their fads and inventions, not for the public good, but for their own benefit, and fail to get their inventions adopted, I do not think the House should be asked to pay them. I have heard no indication that any of the ballot boxes have been adopted by the Government. If they had been adopted I would have looked upon it with grave suspicion, as they might be loading the dice for the next election.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend says "oh;" but I think I have the right to make a remark of that kind.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I know that Parliaments are not generally remarkable for generosity, but it would be really a case of hardship if these people were not paid their expenses. This is not a proposition which emanates from the Government or from myself, but from the Committee, and members on the other side of the House, who were members of the Committee, will support it.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. the Secretary of State. If any one of these ballot boxes had been adopted, it might have been in the public interest, and I think the small sum asked for paying the expenses should be allowed.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to know what conclusion has been arrived at by the Committee?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will present the report now, but I may say, to satisfy the curiosity of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock), that the Committee has recommended a trial of three of these devices.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the House made a mistake at all, it was in the appointment of a Committee in the first place. The moment our Parliamentary proceedings contained a notice that there had been a Committee appointed for the examination of these ballot boxes, all those who had inventions of the kind were anxious to have them investigated. These people came here and submitted their ballot boxes and returned with the expectation of not making a single farthing out of their trip. These ballot boxes were submitted to the mechanical engineer for his report, and these people were again notified to return. If the House is not disposed to pay the expenses of these people, they should not have held the investigation. I think it would be unfair to bring these men here twice without paying their expenses. Although I was not on the Committee, I advocated that they should be paid their expenses, and I think so still.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the case is at all parallel to any case we have had before. It was purely in their own interest that these people came here. They came in the hope that their inventions would be adopted, and that they would make money out of them. It seems to be out of the question that we should pay them for three attendances here, and their travelling expenses besides. If we sanction this now, where are we going to draw the line? There is a trial recommended of three of these ballot boxes, and are we going to pay these men for the preliminary use of their invention?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman evidently thinks that anything but his own advice or conclusions are absolutely to be disregarded.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Instead of making the remarks that the hon. gentleman has just favored the House with, he should have appeared before the Committee and witnessed what was done. He sent, it is true, a suggestion from one of the returning officers; one of his own friends, I presume.

Mr. BLAKE. No, it was for Mr. Blackburn, the former editor of the London Free Press, and now registrar of Middlesex.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At any rate, the suggestion of the hon. gentleman has not been followed, and necessarily the whole action of the Committee is null and useless. The persons who brought their inventions to be examined were not, of course, entitled to be paid, and were notified to that effect; but after the Committee had examined their inventions we had them remain to enable the Committee to put their inventions to the test of an examination by a special officer. They were kept by the Committee in the city for some time, and that is the reason why the Committee unanimously, without exception of party, made this proposition. I do not insist upon it if the House is disposed not to agree to it.

Mr. BERGERON. I am surprised to hear some hon, gentlemen oppose the granting of this small amount. It seems to me that this Committee was struck because the House of Commons wanted some new means of counting the votes cast in elections. Most of the inventors who make these boxes are poor men; in fact, we know that genius is almost always poor; and I feel convinced, though I do not know it as a fact, that most of them must have borrowed money to pay their expenses in bringing their inventions here. The hon. member for West Durham says they expected to make money. Well, it is quite natural that a man who has worked at one of these boxes for five or six months, would expect that his box would be accepted by the Government. They understood that the Government of Canada were not making a childish offer, when they were asking any man in the Dominion who had made a ballot box to submit it. Every one who came there was perfectly convinced that his box was better than all the others. The hon. Secretary of State says that the Committee have recommended three boxes, and I suppose out of them some choice will be made. Although I like economy as much as anybody else, it seems to me it is not economy to refuse to pay these men their expenses; it is stinginess rather. The House of Commons were asking something in the public interest, and these people had a right to believe that they were bringing their inventions here for the purpose of doing some good to the country.

Motion negatived.

RAILWAY STATISTICS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg to lay on the Table the Report of Railway Statistics of the Dominion for 1889. It is rather imperfect, from the fact that some of the railways have neglected, in fact refused, to make the returns required by law.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you propose to take any steps as to that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a matter which we will consider before next year.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a very old complaint, and I think if the existing law does not give the Government power to compel the companies to make these returns, the Government should take such power, or we will never really have complete returns, which are very valuable, in time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only provision is, that it shall be the duty of the railway companies to make these returns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You must provide a penalty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There ought to be a penalty. I will consider that.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That the sixth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses for the Printing of Parliament, be concurred in, with the exception of the tenth paragraph, which recommends a mode of collecting accounts due for members for printing ordered during the Session.

Mr. INNES. As one of the members of the Sub-Committee, I may say that we have had the various matters under our consideration, which we considered carefully before bringing down Perhaps not all of the members are aware that, under the provisions of the Act for the establishment of a Printing Bureau, the outside distribution of all parliamentary documents now devolves upon that bureau, and in consequence we have recommended that the distributing staff be divided. At the same time, we retain complete control of the distribution of all Parliamentary documents within the House, to members of this House and the Senate. We have recommended that the distribution staff be divided, but have also recommended that Mr. Botterell, the head of the Department, be retained at an increased salary on account of his long and faithful services. Mr. Botterell has been thirty-four years in the service and has been twenty years at the head of this Department; in fact, it was he who organised the present excellent system, and has kept the records and attended to all the distribution outside in a most efficient manner. As regards the further distribution of Government documents, referred to by the Secretary of State, I think some method should be adopted by the House for further distribution of the documents besides the ordinary copies given the members. system should be adopted for supplying extra numbers required by the members. A recommendation with regard to this is contained in the memorandum of the Secretary of State now before the House, and it is for the House to say whether they will adopt the method recommended or not. With regard to the memorandum of the Queen's Printer, which has been expunged from the report, we thought at first it would be an excellent method of collecting accounts for supplementary printing ordered by members; but, on reflection, we found it would be contrary to the statute respecting the payment of indemnity of members. At the same time we recommend that some method should be adopted by which accounts should be collected, or these accounts will run up. I do not know what better method could be adopted than, perhaps, to enforce the system of payment at the time the work is ordered, otherwise many of these accounts will not be collected. Even under the old system, while the parliamentary printing was in the hands of the contractors, considerable balances are due to the contractors, which, perhaps, will never be paid. With respect to the messengers, we found, in consequence of the distance between the Bureau and the building here, it was necessary that you, Sir, should employ a pony express, and we recommended that, as the chief messenger thoroughly understands his business, the whole matter should be left in your hands and those of the chief messenger to arrange for the work of carrying messages between both places during the Session.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not intend to discuss the merits of the report as regards the work of distribution, but there is a certain feature of the report of which I would like to have some explanation. The present office is composed of Mr. Botterell, head officer, Mr. Boulet, Mr. Botterell, a son of the head officer, who replaces another son of his who died, and the messenger, making a total cost of $4,400. It is proposed to retain Mr. Botterell, who has $1,600 a year, and give him an increase of $200 on account of his long services; it is proposed, secondly, to keep Mr. Botterell, junior, who Mr. INNES.

has $800 a year, and grant him an increase of $200; it is proposed to keep the present messenger-all which will cost the country $3,600. I do not say that is too much or too little; but I say that though we are asked to take away from that office about three-fourths of the work and to increase the salaries of the two officers, the other officer, Mr. Boulet, is sent to organise another department in which the three-fourths taken away from the present department will be done, and to give him one messenger, and we will not diminish his salary, although he has to work the whole year round. Mr. Botterell, senior, has been twenty-one years in office, and so has Mr. Boulet. Mr. Botterell has had four months' holidays every year, and Mr. Boulet has had none. Practically all the work had to be done by Mr. Boulet.

Mr. MULOCK. Bully for him.

Mr. AMYOT. Yes, they want to bully him. We increase his work three-fourths, and we do not increase his salary. We say Mr. Botterell's son is entitled to an increase of $200 on account of his four years' services. I do not think that is a reason, because Mr. Boulet, who is a most competent officer, and has been working there for twenty-one years, is entitled to something more than a declaration that we will not diminish his salary.

Mr. LAURIER. What is his salary?

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Boulet's salary_at present is $1,200, and he has been in the Distribution office for twenty-one years, the same time as Mr. Botterell. I have seen the way in which Mr. Boulet has been treated. His chief has kept him in a dark room, and has used his own son as secretary in the light of the open room. Now, we propose to send Mr. Boulet to organise a new department without any increase of salary, while we increase the salaries of Mr. Botterell the father, and Mr. Botterell the son, and diminish their work by three-fourths. There must be some feeling at the bottom of this. Of course, the Committee will say they have examined the matter. I say that, if they examined any one except the chief, they would have seen that there was some one else who deserved consideration besides him and his family. We will see next some member moving for the number of messengers and their nationality, and the number of employés of the Library and their nationality, and he might possibly ask for the number of washerwomen and their nationality, and the result of the return would be spread over the country with an intent to mislead the reople, because it is certain that, if we are fairly represented in the lower kinds of employment, we are not represented in the employments of real importance. I presume the Government are not animated by wrong motives in this matter and that they desire to do justice; but I call their attention to the fact that this is a gross injustice. We will have three or four employés here with high salaries and nothing to do during the recess, while we chase one from that office who will have all the work to do and without any increase of salary. This is an injustice.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If Mr. Boulet has not been fairly considered by the Committee, the fact that he goes from the present Department to the Department of the Secretary of State, is likely to be for his benefit. I have never heard that my hon. friend the Secretary of State has any particular prejudice against a French Canadian. The Committee could scarcely propose that Mr. Boulet's salary should be raised, when he is transferred to another Department. That question will be no doubt fully considered by my hon. friend the Secretary of State. Another matter has been spoken of. I am very sorry to hear that there was any necessity for this memorandum in regard to accounts outstanding owing by members, who have taken parliamentary documents without paying for them. I object, however, to this clause being in the report.

Mr. BLAKE. That clause is expunged. I quite agree in the view that it ought to be expunged, because it would be contrary to the statute which provides for the payment of the indemnity. At the same time, we have been made acquainted with this regrettable fact-I think by the Auditor General's Report—that a very considerable sum is owing in the way of arrears on this account. That ought not to happen, and, if hon members take advantage of the provision, by which they can obtain public documents at cost price, and do not pay for them, I think the circumstances should be made known. I propose, on the first day of the next Session of Parliament, to move for the names of the members who remain in arrears. talked a good deal about clubs here to-day, and we know there is a very good system in clubs of posting the members who are in arrears. I shall propose to post those members of this House who are in arrears in this way.

Mr. INNES. In regard to what the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has stated, I may say that we had nothing to do with Mr. Boulet's salary. We simply recommended that his salary should not be decreased, and that, as there was to be a division of the Department, he should be placed at the head of the new Department, and we left the question of his salary to the Secretary of State, believing that he would see that justice was done to him. We had no ill-feeling in regard to Mr. Boulet. On the contrary, we thought we were doing him a service when we recommended that he should be placed at the head of the new Department, and that the question of his salary should be left to the Secretary of State. There are not three parts of the work taken away from the Department here, as the hon. gentleman said. There is only the outside mailing of the parliamentary papers which go to members of Parliament, to judges and courts, and so on. In addition to that, Mr. Botterell is charged with, and is responsible for, keeping all the documents in his hands which have accumulated for twenty-one That is a very responsible position.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was exceedingly sorry to hear the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) cast a reflection upon Mr. Botterell as to the way in which he treated Mr. Boulet. I have met Mr. Botterell almost every day for the eight years that I have been here during the Session, and have found him to be a most courteous and kind man, and I do not think members of this House should permit such a reflection to pass without protest as to Mr. Botterell's acting unkindly or cruelly against any one under him. He is not that kind of a man to treat any one in that way.

Mr. DAVIN. With respect to the arrears which have been referred to, some of the trifling arrears can be easily accounted for in this way: Last year the Committee thought the Government Bureau was charging more to members than it ought to charge, and we agreed that, until a more satisfactory rate was fixed, we would not pay for what we got. I do not think that the rate is satisfactory now, and if it was not so trifling a matter I would go into it and show my hon friend the Secretary of State, that the amount the bureau is charging members, is in excess of what it ought to charge.

Mr. AMYOT. With the permission of the House, I would like to say that the hon. member behind me stated in the beginning of his speech, that the two officers would be kept under the control of this House; therefore it is no excuse to say that he did not recommend the increase of this salary for the reason that it will be under the control of the Secretary of State. In the second place, he says they ought not to recommend anything about his salary, although they say in the report "and that his salary be not less than at present." What I want to know is, the reason why, since these two officers are kept under the control of this House, since there is an increase to the son of Mr. Botterell, who has been twenty-one years in the service—I do not say unduly; but why increase it, and why increase the salary of Mr. Botterell's son by $200 for his four years' service—I do not say unduly-why do they do that, and why do they not increase Mr. Boulet's salary, whose competency nobody will deny? My hon, friend said a moment ago that both remained under the control of this House. But why decide that his salary shall not be less? The power to say that it shall not be less implies the power to say that it shall be diminished or increased. They say it shall not be less; then they should have given some reasons why that discrepancy exists, why they discriminate in that way. They do not give any good reasons. They leave it to the Secretary of State to take the responsibility, and they might just as well have left to the Secretary of State the responsibility concerning the others.

Motion agreed to.

DUTY ON SAWN LUMBER.

Mr. BRYSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, with the permission of the House, I would like to ask a question which has been put on the Notice paper by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). The question is this: Whether, in the event of the United States Congress reducing the import duty on sawn lumber to one dollar per thousand feet, the Government will remove the export duty on pine and spruce logs? It is very important that this question should be answered at the present moment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will answer that question. In the event of the United States Congress reducing the import duty on sawn lumber, the Government will remove the export duty on pine and spruce logs. I will take an opportunity of conveying that decision to the proper quarters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A sensible decision, and highly complimentary after the policy announced the other night.

THE BALTIC OUTRAGE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whether he will be able to lay on the Table of the House, this Session, the report with reference to the outrage upon the boy Hambley. In asking that the report be laid on the Table, I do not wish in any way to reflect upon the Department. I have had an opportunity of looking into the evidence and reading the report, and I think the Department has done all that could fairly be expected of it in the matter. They have appointed to investigate this subject, perhaps, the best man to be found in Canada, certainly one of the very best men, and they could scarcely be expected to go beyond the report that he makes. I understand that in such cases the suspension of the certificate for a year is the greatest punishment that is inflicted, short of taking away the certificate altogether; and the Government can scarcely be expected, I think, to take away the captain's certificate altogether, in view of the fact that Lieutenant Gordon had only recommended that it should be taken away for a year. I may mention

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman is out of order, unless the House is willing to permit him to proceed.

Mr. McNEILL. I merely wish to say that there is a great deal of painful interest taken in this matter in my constituency, and I am quite sure it would be in the public interest if the report were laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. COLBY. There is no objection whatever to laying the report on the Table, if the hon. member desires it.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 118) further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, chapter 78 of the Revised Statutes. (In the Committee.)

Mr. COLBY. When we were last in Committee on this Bill the clauses were all passed with the understanding that clause 2 would be subsequently considered, with a view to meet, if possible, the objections raised by some hon. members from the Maritime Provinces, who were very familiar with the subject under discussion. My intention was to have consulted those hon. gentlemen with regard to preparing an amendment to the clause. I was not aware they were then intending to leave,—I refer to the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). Under these circumstances, I have nothad an opportunity of consulting them, and I, therefore, withdraw that clause, and we can, if it is thought proper, consider it some future Session.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 5, respecting the Electoral Franchise.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. On page 3, the following sub-section is inserted:—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

But no lists now in force shall be deemed illegal on account of any polling district therein described, containing a larger number of names of voters than is permitted by 'The Electoral Franchise Act,' and in the case of an election taking place before the next revision of such lists, a sub-division of such polling district may be made in due time for such election by the returning officer for the electoral division where such polling district is situated.

The clause has special reference to a case that presented itself in British Columbia. Judge Walkem, one of the revising officers, made a polling district covering over a thousand names. When representations were made to His Honor in regard to the matter, he answered that he interpreted the law as not making it illegal to give such a number of names to a polling district. In case of a difficulty being raised against the list, this clause provides that because the number of names in the polling district exceeds 250, the number prescribed by the Act, that fact shall not invalidate the list; but, if the election were to take place before the next revision, the returning officer could make a sub-division.

Mr. LAURIER. This amendment is one which can hardly be approved by the House. I do not object to the first portion of it, for I do not see any reason why, if a returning officer through error or otherwise, places more names that 200 or the prescribed number in a polling district, the list should be illegal. But after making such an error, power is given to the returning officer, at any time before the election, to sub-divide the polling district, and this is giving the revising officer power which he might exercise to the undue advantage of the candidate in whose favor he might happen to be. I have known in my own experience, before this law was in force, a returning officer to divide polling districts so as to give an undue advantage to one of the candidates.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The revising officer has been specified as the officer who might remedy any defect for the moment. The law declares that the returning officer has the right to divide the votes into as many polling booths as he deems convenient for the proper carrying on of the election. The amendment is harmless in that sense. He may sub-divide a polling division which is too large to come within the provisions of the law.

Mr. DAWSON. Does this give power to place more than one polling booth in one polling subdivision? I think the returning officer should have power to do so, especially in such a district as that I represent, where polling districts are as large as ordinary counties. The population is often very thin and scattered, and the returning officer should have power to establish two polling stations in one polling district, in order that the people may have the opportunity to vote.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be desirable to have a special provision for a particular case, although it is obvious that there would be danger in adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), because it would give the hon. gentleman's voters the opportunity of voting "early and often" with greater facility. But it is very dangerous to apply the argument that because a special district requires special legislation, that legislation should be made generally applicable. Let me make this suggestion to the hon. Secretary of State:

The hon. gentleman says the reason for his change is because a particular revising officer has been under the impression that the law permitted him to make polling districts of any size he pleased. I think, Sir, that while it might be expedient to provide against injustice arising from some error of a revising officer, so as to avoid the disfran-chisement of voters; it is very inexpedient that we should open any wider door for the revising officer to decline doing his full duty. I would suggest to the Secretary of State the advisability at the same time at which he makes provision for a possible neglect or error of duty, of making it still clearer what that duty is. He tells us that a revising officer, who is also a judge of the Superior Court, has construed it to be within his duty, deliberately to make a polling division comprising some 1,100 voters. I do not understand that to be the intention of the law. I understand it to be the duty of the revising officer to restrict the number to 250 voters. If we alter the law as it stood, and add this provision, we will be rendering it more likely that similar results will happen in the future. There are two several classes of cases which occur to me. I think it may very often happen that a revising officer, through error, or perhaps thinking it reasonable, may allow a small number of fifteen or twenty votes in a polling division, more than the maximum. That would be amply satisfied, I think, by just leaving things as they are. I believe there is no difficulty in polling at the one place a larger number than our maximum, and I believe it would be less evil to permit, within a moderate limitation of that kind, the division to remain undisturbed, than to allow the returning officer, a week before the election, in the case of an error of that kind, to dislocate the appointed There is really no necessity for it in the divisions. great number of cases for which we may be expected to provide. Such an exceptional case as the hon. the Secretary of State cites to us as one to be provided against, would be provided against chiefly by making the law very plain, so that he who runs may read, and by stating that it is the duty of the revising officer to divide the polling sub-divisions for each 200 or 250 voters. As my hon, friend has said, we have known in days that are past, very great improprieties committed by returning officers in reference to the discharge of discretionary duties. I have had before me an authenticated instance wherein, at the last general election, a polling station was established, not in the most convenient or central place, but in a place extremely inconvenient to the greater number of the voters who happened to be of one party, and thus creating an absolute injustice. I am not disposed te give to the returning officer, who is appointed shortly before an election, who is appointed at the will of the Government, frequently upon the nomination of the candidate, and who is acting in the heat of a contest, and largely at the suggestion of a candidate—any more discretionary powers than we can avoid. Some such powers he must have, but I think we should limit them to the utmost.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I agree with the hon. gentleman, that the amendment proposed by the Senate is not at all fraught with the danger which is It is provided that the polling divisions should consist of 200 names, but the revising officer has the latitude of adding fifty more names.

was before the Senate, my attention was called to the fact that in one electoral division there has been a polling district of some 1,000 or 1,100 names. I think the clause says that it is only in case of an election taking place before the next revision of the list, that the returning officer may make a sub-division. I state as a fact that there is only one case in the Dominion where it has occurred that this large number of names was put in the one polling division.

Mr. MULOCK. This work should be done by the revising officer, and we should not hand over his duty to the returning officer. The returning officer is as yet an unknown man, and is only appointed after the writ for the election has been issued. If we require to deal with an existing flaw in the law, let us deal with it. If this one returning officer in the whole Dominion has made a mistake, let us enable him to correct it, and to that end I suggest that we should strike out the words "returning officer" and substitute" revising officer," and specify the riding, and the time within which he has to make this correction.

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to the suggestion which I made, the hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) says, that the voters would have an opportunity of voting often in the same polling district. Let him imagine a polling division 500 miles from one end to the other, as we have in Algoma, and he will see it would be rather difficult for the electors to vote. If there were two polling booths allowed to be opened in such a large district as that, I do not think it would open the door for any more fraud than may or may not exist at present. A great many voters of that large district are certainly disfranchised, because they cannot get to the polling places.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The case mentioned by the hon member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) is one entitled to the consideration of the House, and, I hope, that next Session the subject will be dealt with. In newly settled districts, or sections of the North-West Territories, where the population is very sparse, a provision ought to be made that the polling districts should be re-divided, although the number of votes may be less than the number now specified in the Act. I think the returning officer might have power to re-divide such large divisions.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I do not think there can be much objection to the suggestion made by the Senate. Of course in the old Provinces where the population is more compact, and where the polling districts are not so extensive, there may not be the same necessity for it as there is in our western Provinces. In my county, at the last election in January, we found, that in one of the polling districts the revising officer had no option at all, and had to confine himself to the number of electors on the list; in one of the polling districts, where the distance some of the electors had to travel to get to the polling place was about 50 miles. In that case, I must say, the other candidate and myself agreed to allow the returning officer to put an extra polling place in the district, in order to facilitate the voting. It was not legal, I admit, but the fact of the matter is, we did not want to deprive about 50 electors of the opportunity to record their votes. I believe the suggestion made is a proper At the last minute, when the Bill one. It is said that the votes might be duplicated; but we have a law against that, and under the present law it would be equally possible for persons qualified in different districts to duplicate their votes. On the other hand, I believe the lists are so made that it would be impossible for any elector to vote twice. I believe the provision is a wise one, and if it is not necessary in the older Provinces, it is in the newer Provinces, where population is sparse, and where at certain seasons of the year, when the weather is very unfavorable, the electors have to cross streams and other obstructions to get to the polling places.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) and the hon member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) misunderstand the amendment somewhat. It does not relate to the Election Act at all, nor does it touch the subject of providing polling stations. At present, the Franchise Act clearly and distinctly requires that the revising officer shall sub-divide the electoral district into polling districts. He has not done that. The returning officer only has power to sub-divide the polling districts in order to provide convenient stations for polling; but it is provided by this amendment that the revising officer having failed to divide the electoral district into polling districts, the returning officer, in the event of an election taking place before the next revision, shall do it, and if an election does not take place, the revising officer shall do it when he makes the next revision. As the electoral district now stands undivided, there are no polling districts for the returning officer to sub-divide.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that this provision is exceptional for time and also for place. You have made it exceptional for time, as it is only to apply to the list at present existing and not to a future revision.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand that it is limited in point of time, but that it will be perpetually engrafted on the law, so that after the next revision, if you should find that a dozen revising officers had made the same default of duty, you would find a dozen returning officers performing the same duty.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection to striking out the words after "Franchise Act," and I move that they be struck out.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into Committee on the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line to be constructed from Glenboro' westerly, a distance of about sixty miles, to a point on the proposed branch railway of the said company running from Brandon southwesterly.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six Mr. Larivière.

thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line of railway from a point at or near Brandon, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, south-westerly to or near Township three, Range twenty-seven, West of the First Principal Meridian, and thence westerly, a total distance of one hundred miles; and also a similar grant, at the same rate per mile, for the said company's proposed branch railway from a point on the line just described at or near Township three, Range twenty-seven, West of the First Principal Meridian, easterly to Deloraine, a distance of about twenty-five miles, making the total of railway to which this grant is applicable, one hundred and twenty-five miles.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Brandon and South-Western Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not less than six thousand four hundred acres per mile for the line of railway from a point in Township one, in either Range twenty-three or twenty-four, West of the First Principal Meridian, to Deloraine, a distance of about seventeen miles.

4. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Lac Seul Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a line of railway from a point at or near Shelley Station, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point at or near White Mud Lake, on the Winnipeg Railway, a distance of eighteen miles.

5. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Calgary to a point at or near Edmonton on the, North Saskatchewan River, a distance ceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Calgary to a point at or near Edmonton on the North Saskatchewan River, a distance of about one hundred and nine miles: and also a grant of six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Calgary to a point on the International boundary between Canada and the United States, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles.

6. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the North-Western Coal and Navigation Company, Dominion lands to the extent not exceeding three thousand eight hundred and forty acres for each mile of the company's railway from Lethbridge to the Crow's Nest Pass, a distance of about one hundred miles.

to the Crow's Nest Pass, a distance of about one hundred miles.

7. Revolved, That it is expedient that the said grants be made in aid of the construction of the said railways respectively, in the proportion and upon the conditions fixed by Orders in Council made in respect thereof, and that, except as to such conditions, the said grants shall be free grants, subject only to the payment of the grantees respectively, of the cost of survey of the lands and incidental expenses, at the rate of ten cents per acre in cash on the issue of the patents therefor.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1.

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres per mile for a branch line to be constructed from Glenboro' westerly, a distance of about sixty miles, to a point on the proposed branch railway of the said company running from Brandon south-westerly. railway of the south-westerly.

Mr. BLAKE. I recollect very well that, during the discussion on the charter which was proposed to be granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with all its aids in land and money, one of the reasons given for the large subsidies granted at that time was that they were necessary for, and in the interest of the country because the company were expecting themselves to construct and were to count on their constructing branch lines through the North-West by means of these grants. I find now that it is proposed to give large subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of those branch lines which we were told they would build in consequence of receiving those large grants of money and land. I would ask the Government to say why this departure is made from the policy enunciated in 1880-81?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The line from Glenboro' westward constitutes a portion of a line which, I think, was originally called the Winnipeg South-Western. There were two South-Western Railways, and the charters were purchased from the parties who held them by the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that the first resolution would not come under the objection of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite aware, from the lie of the ground and from seeing the map, that this piece does not run from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but is connected with a branch line which the company has acquired. But it was a part of the understanding with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that the branches were to be constructed at their expense. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company took over a branch which had been subsidised by the country, and now it is proposed that an additional piece shall be added to that by the company at our expense in part.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That portion of country, if any in the territories, needed railway communication, and the only possible way was to offer certain When there was a clamor for inducements. railway construction there, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made a proposition to the Government which was considered to be fair and reasonable and which was accepted. An Order in Council was passed on the 11th June, 1889, in reference to granting the usual subsidy to this road and confirming the previous grant of the 17th May of the same year from Glenford to Deloraine. Both these applications were carefully considered, and a strong appeal was made from the south-eastern portion of Manitoba and the south-western portion of Assiniboia, that means of communications with the coal fields should be afforded. If the application for this subsidy had been made by any other parties who showed their bonâ fides, the same consideration would have been given to them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman's statement appears to show that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have chosen to discharge themselves of their obligations as entered into by their political godfathers, and that, I fear, is the result which we have achieved in our relations with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that that company is not doing anything whatever except for special consideration, and now they require even further consideration in regard to the construction of these side lines. If I understood correctly the statements which were made last year by the Minister of the Interior, we were practically giving away our control of almost all the lands in the North-West by these railway grants. According to the statement made last year by the hon. gentleman, there was in the tract of about 400,000 square miles, that is, the tract substantially extending from the Red River on the one side to somewhere on the Rocky Mountain line on the other, by a width of about 400 miles, about 130,000,000 acres of land more or less fit for agriculture. A portion of the balance, he stated, might be fit for pastoral purposes, but he did not venture to estimate that there could be more than 130,000,000 acres, including Manitoba, which were fairly fit for agricultural purposes. I am not quite certain how much should be deducted for Manitoba, where the land is for the most part good, but I presume I would not be far astray in saying that it should be about 35,000,000 That would leave something like acres. 90,000,000 acres of agricultural land at our disposal. I put on one side lands not fit for agriculture but fit for pasturage. We are aware that we have pledged ourselves to give half of the land to actual settlers, so that there remains to us of agricultural land, on the statement of the hon. gentleman last year, something like 45,000,000 acres. Of that, we have already departed with, or made railway grants to the tune of 33,762,000 acres. Now we propose to give about 4,000,000 acres more. We will have, however, to make a further deduction for the Hudson's Bay Co. and the school lands. Practically the result of the proposals now before the House will be that we will leave ourselves, if we carry out the policy of giving half the land to the actual settler, without any land in that great territory of 400,000 square miles—that is, any land fit for agricultural purposes, unless we are to suppose that the railroads will be content to take a large quantity of inferior land, which I, for one, consider unlikely. That seems to be the practical result, that we will get rid of all control or means of making money out of the huge territory lying between the Rocky Mountains and the Red River and between the parallels of 49 and 54. If I am incorrect in that, I should be glad if the Minister of the Interior would point out how and in what degree I am incorrect.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think, if the hon. member will look at the return—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have examined the note of the hon. gentleman, and I know what it refers to.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When I made the explanation last year, I did so on a return prepared for me by my deputy; but, in looking over the debate which occurred then, and enquiring into the matter since that time, I find that the statement I made was not as nearly accurate as I think I could make it to-day. I could not understand from the returns that were given me at the moment, what area of country was included in the estimate that I gave the hon. gentleman; but on subsequent enquiry I find that the estimate had been made by one of the old deputies, Col. Dennis, from a plan which he had prepared, showing what he considered as the fertile belt, and also showing the portions of country which he considered, from the information he had, were of a dry character and hardly fit for settlement. Our information since that time with regard to that matter, has changed our views and changed every one's views; so I went to the trouble of making another estimate; I have got the plan here, and will lay it on the Table of the House. It really includes, ap-proximately, the whole fertile belt, and is more reliable than the return he made before. The hon. gentleman will see that it makes a better showing than the description I was able to give to the House last year. I calculate that in the area of what we describe as the fertile belt, we have 135,000,000 acres, included in which are: School lands, 15,000,000 acres; Indian reserves, 1,459,740 acres; sales, &c., 2,000,000; railway grants, as per schedule attached to this return, 33,672,186, making a total of 52,141,926 acres, which to-day we may consider we have appropriated, but that does not include the grants which we are asking Parliament for to-day. That would leave a surplus of 82,852,074 acres at the disposal of the Government for other purposes. Of course, when one thinks of the Territories at present, one only thinks of those portions which will be rapidly settled up, which we read of every day, and these would be included within the 49th parallel north of the Canadian Pacific Railway upper reserve. I have another plan which I will also lay on the Table, which the hon. gentleman asked me for, and which will show the Canadian Pacific Railway grants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, I am aware, and the House no doubt is well aware, that there may be, and I trust there are, valuable territories north of latitude 54; but, for the purposes of this argument, I am taking latitude 54 as the northern limit, and I am taking the Red River as the eastern limit, and the base of the Rocky Mountains as the western limit. think I am rather exaggerating the area when I put that at 400,000 square miles; in fact, I know I am exaggerating it, but it is better to be on the safe side. Now, 400,000 square miles are, as nearly as possible, 270 million acres, as the hon. gentleman knows. The essential point I want to get at, is this: I have always been under the impression, and I think the majority of the House have been under the impression, that something like one-half of that 400,000 square miles is not fit for agricultural purposes, although a part of it might, perhaps, be fit for pasture land. That the hon. gentleman admitted last year. Do I understand him to say that he has reversed his opinion on that point, or is he still of opinion that I would be correct in saying that no more than one-half of that can be fairly put down for agricultural purposes?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; I think there will be a far greater area than the hon. gentleman supposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Remember, I am speaking now of agricultural lands, not of pasture lands, but what we may describe as agricultural lands fit to be used by settlers. Last year the hon. gentleman stated that he believed it would be about one-half.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I forget whether it is the same area or not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to ascertain what proportion the hon. gentleman thinks may be put down. As I now understand, he thinks that his estimate was much too low last year, and that there is more than one-half.

Mr. DEWDNEY. My impression is that my remarks had reference, particularly, to that portion of country along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Moose Jaw, towards the Mountains. I think the hon. gentleman asked with regard to that. I recollect having stated, at any rate, with regard to that, that there was a great deal more agricultural land in that part of the country than was generally supposed, that in all the dips there was a very extensive agricultural country, some valleys three or four miles in width, and all the bottom lands were of first-class quality; whereas on the ridges that have been exposed to winds, the land is dry and stony. That has been proved, I think, since Sir John Mr. Dewdney.

Lister-Kaye began to cultivate his farm and has ploughed up a large area of land, and there, we may say, the soil is just as good as in any other part of the North-West. I have also another reason for thinking that if I did make that statement last year, it was an under estimate, because I have gone very closely into the quality of the land in the northern reserve of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I find there is a very small portion of it that is not first-class land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Every man in the House will be very much gratified if the hon. gentleman is correct, and the quantity of good land that he estimated last year proves to be under the mark. All the same, it is quite clear that we are parting with an enormous quantity of land in these various grants. Even after taking what we have purchased back from the Canadian Pacific Railway, the hon. gentleman will know, and the House will know, that for every mile we give to the railways we are bound to reserve another mile for the actual settler. So, as the matter now stands, 38,000,000 acres of land are to be given away for railway purposes, say 40,000,000 in round numbers, and then there are the Hudson's Bay and school lands and road grants to be added, all of which, it will be observed, constitutes an enormous proportion of the lands available, making the most liberal additions possible. The distance does not exceed about 400 miles from 49 to 54 degrees; while from Red River to the Rocky Mountains the distance is not quite 1,000 miles. Deducting the area of Manitoba, and allowing the grants to railways and the grants for school lands and Hudson's Bay lands and roads, we are rapidly depriving ourselves of the ownership and proprietorship of the region which the Government now owns or controls. These grants appear to be likely to be attended with considerable embarrassment, and, more especially so, if the Government do not take the precaution of compelling the railway companies to sell the lands to actual settlers at reasonable rates, leaving on the companies the onus as to actual settlers.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We have become so accustomed to dealing with large figures that I am afraid we do not thoroughly realise what we are doing in dealing with this matter. The Government's proposals cover 4,000,000 acres of land, or about three times the size of the Province of Prince Edward Island, and one-thirtieth of the whole area, good, bad and indifferent, of the Province of Ontario. In addition to that fact, there is one consideration which I have not heard mentioned, and it is one which, to me, is one which may involve serious consequences. We are now dealing as a Dominion with these lands, and we are dealing with them under conditions that will very materially change before these lands are sold. In a very short time, speaking comparatively, all these territories will be divided into Provinces, and these Provinces will, in the end, demand the control of the lands within their areas. But even supposing they do not, shall we impose on these various Provinces the same difficulties which have existed at various times in other Provinces? We are establishing large tracts of land over which neither the Provincial Government, the Dominion Government, nor the public at large will have any control; and those who know how much grumbling and dissatisfaction have existed in the Province of Ontario in regard to a comparatively small tract of land held by the Canada Company, can realise a state of things that will exist in those Provinces, extending over millions of acres held by one great corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are very likely to have in the future, as a result of these grants, just such difficulties as have, to a very great degree, existed in Ontario from the existence of a land corporation, so comparatively local and so comparatively liberal as the Canada Company. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is able to carry on its operations without selling those lands, why should they sell them? How can we expect them to sell them? If their lines prove to be sufficiently profitable to enable them to pay interest and to carry on their various operations, even with the disposal of a comparatively small portion of their lands, they would naturally hold the balance for speculation, and we would have, when those territories come to be divided into Provinces, and the people fall under the control of the Provincial Governments, a serious difficulty to deal with, one which, I think, this House hardly realises at the present moment.

Mr. BLAKE. When first the policy of aiding railways in the North-West by land grants was brought before the House, independently of the great grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in regard to which grant somewhat special reasons were adduced, I advanced this view: that although it was eminently advantageous, and it was absolutely necessary, that railways should be built through the North-West; although it was extremely reasonable that that country should bear, by the means we were proposing, a considerable portion of the burdens involved in the construction of those enterprises; yet, still, it was of the greatest possible consequence that we should devise some means to avoid the locking up of large quantities of land, and particularly the locking up of those areas of land alongside the lines of railway, which would be the first desired for settlement, and more especially when these were alternating with free grant sections, which would be sought for before the sections which were to be obtainable only by payment. We know that, during the period in which there was a considerable immigration and an excitement with respect to the values of land in the North-West, the suggestion that advantage would be taken by the railway corporations of their power as land holders, was realised. We know that their behavior was such as indeed we could not complain of; that it had respect to what they thought their interest under the circumstances; and that they raised the prices of their lands, as they had a legal right to do, as we who granted them without condition had no right to condemn, to the highest point that the then inflated condition of the market would, it was thought, allow. Lands, which had been saleable at $1, $1.50 or $2 per acre were raised to $5, $6 and even $8 per acre, and sale and settlement were checked, and the country was injured. The settlement of the country is effected very satisfactorily indeed under those conditions which allow two or three members of a family or two or three close and intimate friends to go together. One of the great difficulties in a new country like the North-West is the separation of the settlers, at the best, from the aggregates of would leave open on plain terms to actual settle-population. That difficulty they must encounter until towns grow; that difficulty is made greater in the North-West by reason of the large areas which we allow for the individual settler, and which make him in a sense remote even from his immediate neighbor. But that difficulty is intensified when under our principles of settlement there is going to be settlement in the first instance only in alternate sections; when you have a set of sections for sale along the railway, and a free grant set of sections, alternating with each other. It is obvious, except in the case of an immigrant who has considerable capital, that a settler will be almost driven to say "the capital I have must be put into fencing and buildings and into implements and breaking the land, and I cannot afford to pay a price for the land;" and, therefore, you have these inevitable difficulties to some extent intensified, even by any system under which there will be a check on free settlement. We cannot avoid that, we cannot eat our cake and have our cake. If it is necessary to make these railway grants to secure the construction of roads, we must do so on the least disadvantageous terms to the public consistent with reasonable advantage to the railways. When these grants were proposed and submitted to the House, I submitted a motion, which will be found recorded in the Journals of the House, for a vote was taken upon it, that the grants should be made only on condition that the areas granted of agricultural lands (I did not speak of land with mill privileges or station grounds or town sites, or other special values, but only of ordinary agricultural lands) should be open for sale on reasonable conditions for actual settlement and in reasonable areas, at a price not exceeding a maximum to be fixed. My object was to ensure that a man who goes out to that country to hunt for land, and takes a map on which he finds the alternate sections indicated, would know that if he has found a choice section on railway lands, he would be as certain to get that section if it had not been entered before, on coming back to the railway office and paying the stipulated price, as he would be certain on coming back to the Government office of getting the free grant which is adjoining it. He could thus choose his free grant, and for his neighbor or friend with whom he wished to live in proximity he could choose the railway land. By this means you would provide against the lock up of land which the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has referred to, and which may be a very serious evil. You would make this land as freely open for settlement as the Government lands, except on the addition of having to pay a certain sum. In the old times when I had an opportunity of taking an interest in these matters—an interest which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) doubts a little sometimes, but which I can assure him, however misdirected was, at any rate, very sincere-I received complaints from persons who had been in that country and who said: "We went here and there and every-where, and on coming back, having made one or more selections, we found either that the land was a railway grant and we could not get it, or it was held by the Canadian Pacific Railway under that blanket grant of theirs, or it was in the hands of speculators, and we came back disheartened." Your system ought to be one which ment, irrespective of the will of the railway company, the agricultural lands, out of which, notwithstanding your arrangement, the railway company shall derive a reasonable price. Name a maximum price, and let the lands, subject to the payment of that maximum by reasonable instalments, be open to settlement in reasonable areas. If you do that you diminish the difficulties inseparable from this question, to the greatest possible extent, and, if so minimised, the advantages of securing the construction of a railway are greater than the disadvantages of causing the partial lock up of lands necessary for its construction. I do fear, that if there comes again a time of considerable immigration to the North-West, and of considerable hunting for land, the reckless manner in which we have given, and are giving, these grants will prove in the future, as it has proved in the past, to be a greater obstacle to the settlement of that country than might exist if a different system were adopted. It is all very well to repeat the arguments with which I was met in former years, namely, that it is in the interest of the railway company to sell, and that we may be quite sure they will be glad to set a low price on the land. We have heard that before, and we have had an example of the shortsighted policy in the period of inflation to which I have referred, which prevented settlement just because it was thought a little more money might be obtained later on. I do not want these lands to be used for speculation, either by the individual buyers or by the railway company itself. I want them to be charged, in favor of the railway company, with a reasonably fair price for the settlers to pay; and while subject to that charge, that they shall be as free and open to the settlers as if they were Government free grants of lands.

Mr. DAVIN. I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and there cannot be any doubt that the subject which he has brought before the attention of the House is one of vital importance to the North-West. The solitude which is almost enforced at present is oppressive, and we have again and again discussed, in the North-West, the best way of dealing with it. If the Government can make some arrangement with the railway companies, that the land henceforth will be open to settlement on some such conditions as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has pointed out, it would prevent for the future the evil which at present we feel keenly in the North-West. There cannot be the least doubt that any railway will do exactly what the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has pointed out; it will hold its land and sell at the greatest profit. human nature to do that, it is what any business corporation will do. But if a maximum of $3 or $4 an acre were fixed—it need not be so low a price as the hon. member for West Durham has stated—that would compel the railway to sell, and it would relieve us of the difficulty we have to deal with in regard to these railway sections. We have in fact many times discussed in the North-West, the possibility of making an arrangement with the railway for getting rid of these lands, and the statesman who devises a means to secure that the railway at the greatest profit, will try to bring settlers on to the land, and be content with a comparatively small profit for ready cash; that statesman will confer a lasting benefit on the North-West. I consider that the railways adopt a short-sighted policy in holding these lands. If they went pair passu with the Government in settling the townships in which they have sections, they would be well repaid by the passenger and freight traffic which they would have to and fro, as the result of this settlement. There cannot be the least doubt that this is a problem to the solving of which our statesmen should devote themselves. This is a question of vital importance to the comfort and welfare of all classes of settlers in the North-West. Look what happens under the present system. You have thirty-six sections in a township, and when you take away the school sections and the Hudson's Bay sections, you have not half the number of sections of a township to support the schools, and the various other taxes which must be borne by the settlers of the township. If we could devise some means of bringing settlers on to these sections that are given to the railway, and if the railway would co-operate with the Government in this, we should have thirty-three or thirty-four inhabited sections in each township. If you suppose that each one has a homestead and pre-emption, it would give something like seventy settlers to bear the burdens of the township, but if you have only 160 acres to each, you will have a good deal more than a hundred to bear the various little burdens which have to be borne by the township, such as dealing with schools and other matters of great importance to the settler. This is a problem which will rebound to the credit of the statesman who will solve it, so as to make the railway, whether it be the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other which gets a grant of lands, co-operate with the Government in settling the townships. Any statesman who will provide a means of doing that will command the gratitude of the North-West and the confidence of the country.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

On resolution 1,

Mr. WATSON. I think the arguments advanced on this side of the House show that some restrictions should be placed on railway companies which hold lands in the North-West. We know that two railways, the Regina and Long Lake Railway and the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, which are both practically branches of the Canadian Pacific Railway under other names, have secured cash subsidies as well as land grants. It is well understood by this House and the country that when the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was originally granted, power was given to the company to build branch lines in any direction they saw fit in consideration of receiving 6,400 acres a mile. The land grants already obtained by the different railways-the Manitoba and North-Western, the North-West Central, the Canadian Pacific, the Regina and Long Lake, and the Calgary and Edmonton—take up a great portion of the odd-numbered sections in Manitoba and the North-West Territories; and company, instead of keeping these lands to be sold on looking at the map, I have come to the con-Mr. Blake.

clusion that the land grants now under consideration will almost entirely absorb all the valuable odd sections north of the Canadian Pacific Railway reserve up to the 52nd degree of latitude. Under these circumstances, I think that in making these grants, a certain maximum price should be fixed for the land for actual and intending settlers. is well known that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company hold their lands to-day just as any company of private speculators would hold them. It was expected, and with a good deal of reason, that it would be in the interest of the company to throw open their lands for settlement at the earliest possible moment; but they have apparently thought differently, and have come to the conclusion that it is better for them, from a financial point of view, to hold their lands as a matter of speculation, than to allow them to be occupied by settlers. I do not know at what price they hold their lands in the North-West, but in Manitoba they hold them to day at from $4 to $10 an acre. appears to me that it would pay the company to sell their lands at a much less price, when they would derive the advantage of their being settled upon and cultivated. These being my views, when the proper time arrives, I will test the feeling of the House on this question of fixing a maximum price.

Mr. ROSS. With regard to the suggestion that there should be a maximum price fixed upon the lands, I think it would be utterly impossible to earry it out. In some parts of the country $3 an acre would be quite sufficient for them; in fact, in certain parts you could not get $3 an acre, while in other parts the land would be cheap at double the price. Then, in the same locality there might be one lot which would be more valuable than another, on account of the hay, or coal, or timber it contained, or because of its close proximity to a station or a town. Such lands might be worth $12 or $15 an acre, and it would be unfair to put a maximum price of $3 an acre upon them. such a maximum price, the good lands would have to be sold at a figure much below their value, while the poor lands would not be worth the fixed price. In this respect a railway company occupies a different position from an ordinary land company. The Canada Land Company had no object besides that of making money out of its land; but a railway company has two objects -to settle up the country in order to obtain traffic, and to obtain as large returns as possible from the sale of lands. There is no railway corporation in the North-West that is more anxious to hold its lands at a high price than it is to get settlers into the country; on the contrary, I am satisfied, from the efforts made by the railway companies in the past, they are more anxious to dispose of their lands and get settlers into the country, than they are to hold their lands and wait for high prices, because it is only by getting settlers into the country that the value of their lands will be increased. Knowing these facts, and holding these views, I am utterly opposed to fixing a maximum price on the lands held by the railway companies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In answer to this, I know, and every one of us who has the slightest knowledge of the state of things in Southern Manitoba knows, that whatever the railway companies consider to be in their interest, 147½ as a matter of fact, settlers have been driven out of that part of the country by the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and in support of the proposals made by my hon friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), and self, who, knowing what has taken place, been endeavoring to compel these companies to bring the lands into the market, we have these facts staring us in the face, which show that it is impossible that these companies can be depended We are practically locking up and abandoning the control of 100,000,000 acres in that country; and I have no hesitation in saying, that no policy could be devised more likely to retard settlement, than giving these railway companies control over enormous blocks of land, without any restrictions whatever. I trust that my hon. friend will persevere in his motion, and put on record the names of those in this House in favor of settlers obtaining lands at a reasonable price.

Mr. BLAKE. To the difficulties that beset the consideration of this question, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) has added other alleged difficulties which do not in fact exist. He has spoken about coal lands, timber lands, and lands in the immediate vicinity of stations and town sites being included. What is the suggestion I made to the House? I excluded lands of this character; I limited my suggestion to ordinary agricultural lands. Lands which the company might have a right to hold as having special values, which did not come within denomination—lands having a special value, such as coal lands, timber lands, town sites or expected town sites, could, by a very easy arrangement, be withdrawn from the operation of the regulation which would apply, by arrangements to be prescribed by the Government, under the general direction of Parliament, a maximum to ordinary agricultural lands alone. I admit that there are some real difficulties to which the hon, gentleman has alluded, but which also he has exaggerated. He has supposed that my suggestion necessarily applied one maximum to all railway grants. Not at all. It is not necessary, when you are dealing with the lands of one railway company, to apply the same maximum which you would apply with reference to the lands of another. For instance, there is a railway enterprise in which I understand the hon, member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) takes a great deal of patriotic interest the Hudson Bay Railway Company. No one can suppose it would be reasonable to apply the same minimum or maximum to that, which would apply But why complicate unto some of the others. fairly and unreasonably a practical suggestion, whatever its difficulties, by adding these absurd notions of difficulty which the hon. gentleman entertains? We are now dealing with one grant; we are now dealing with one locality; we are now dealing with a certain mileage of railway in one part of the North-West Territories; and we are called upon therefore, if we deal with it intelligently, to determine what maximum should be applied to ordinary agricultural lands in the region of that grant. Even there, there may be great variations in the characters of the lands which will be allotted to the company. There, also, you cannot have a perfect plan because your maximum must have regard, I will not say to the choicest morsels, but to the highest class of agricultural land properties in the grant. No doubt consideration has been given by the Administration to those questions. I presume the Minister who is proposing the grant, and the Minister of Railways -for I suppose they are jointly responsible—have considered what are the difficulties and probable cost of construction; what the prospects of traffic are, and the general qualities of the lands along this proposed railway, in respect of which this grant of 6,400 acres per mile is to be given. this, as a branch railway, is going to cost $12,800 a mile, and if we are to suppose those lands, including timber lands, coal lands, sites and so forth, have only to-day an average cash value of $2 per acre, we are giving the cost of the road. If the road will cost $18,000 or $19,000 a mile equipped, we still are making a free gift of two-thirds of the cost, averaging the lands at $2 per acre. I do not know, we have not the slightest information as to whether there are any special difficulties of construction, whether there are "any more rivers to cross;" whether the bridging, the grading, the excavation and so on, is expensive. I do not know what the particular character of the land is. Upon that no Sir, the Government information is vouchsafed. policy does not regard the difficulties suggested by the hon. member for Lisgar. The grant is 6,400 acres per mile all round, no matter whether the road be easy or difficult to build; no matter whether it is one immediately promising a large traffic or promising only a large traffic in the future; no matter whether the lands are more or less valuable. Except in the case of the Galt Road, 6,400 acres is the general acreage given per We are entitled to ask the grounds of the mment's conclusion. We are entitled to Government's conclusion. know whether the Government have considered these things-whether they have considered what the probable cost of the road will be, what will be the probable results to the company of the road, what the probable value of this land grant will be? We are entitled to know whether the Government have been appropriating this land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, with some regard to those considerations, or whether it is all pure guess work, or whether there has not even been a guess.

The Government have con-Mr. DEWDNEY. sidered this matter, and have come to the conclusion, from the experience of eight or ten years, that land grants will not build railways. If land If land grants could build railways, we would not come down to this House and ask a guarantee for certain roads proposed to be built in the Terri-tories—one of which is under construction, and one which we hope will be under construction in a short time. It is well known that companies have not been able, on land grants, to raise sufficient money to build railways. I might instance the road which has been most successful in the country, the Manitoba and North-Western. They have, even with one of the largest financial backings in Canada, not been able to raise sufficient money, or anything like it, from their land, in order to carry out their undertaking. Now, with regard to some observations which fell from the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), he, in looking over the plans, stated that he found that all the railway land, north, I think, of the Canadian Pacific Rail-Mr. Blake.

way belt, had been given away to railway companies and that virtually, after this appropriation is made, there will be nothing left. I can tell the hon gentleman that we have in that portion of the country, from the 49th parallel up to the southern boundary of the northern Canadian Pacific Railway reserve, still on hand 20,000,000 acres, and we are only asking out of that about 3,500,000 to cover these subsidies. Now, with regard to some observations which fell from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) before recess, one of his objections to the policy of the Government in regard to lands, was the giving of them in alternate sections. Well, we propose, in the subsidies we are asking, to give, and the parties applying are anxious to accept, alternate townships in preference to alternate sections. That will free us from one of the difficulties the hon. gentleman mentions. The hon. gentleman states that the price of land in Manitoba varies from $4 to $10 an acre. Well, that may be so.

Mr. WATSON. They are held by the Canadian Pacific Railway at that.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon, gentleman must recollect that those lands have been in the market the last 8 or 10 years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I, myself, in 1885 and 1886, saw the lists of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the lands were then actually held, I believe, at higher prices than they are to-day.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The land commissioner, I know, held these lands at a very high figure then, but the land commissioner who has had charge lately, within the last year or two, has reduced the price considerably of Canadian Pacific Railway lands generally.

Mr. WATSON. Do you know what that price is now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not. I know they are reduced considerably. With regard to the North-West, to my own knowledge, the Canadian Pacific Railway are selling lands at $2.50 per acre. I certainly agree with the hon. member for Lisgar, (Mr. Ross), that the scheme proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, to build railways in the North-West, is utterly impracticable. If we want railways built, we must give lands, and allow the railway companies to dispose of them according as there is a market demand for them. If not, the result will be, instead of giving one acre, we will have to give four acres. I recollect the proposal of hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were considering this scheme. They did not propose to give 6,400 acres per mile, but they proposed, I believe, to give 12,000 or 20,000 acres.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was sixteen years ago.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Minister of Interior tells us that the land grants will not build railways. If that is so, we had better abstain from giving land grants. Why should we give the heritage of the people in the future away to speculators now, when they are considered by the Minister of Interior not to ensure the building of the railway?

Mr. DEWDNEY. What I mean to say is that the land grants will not be sufficient in themselves to build the railway. The companies will have to put money in as well.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that it is for the Government to furnish all the money necessary to build the road?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Certainly not.

Mr. CHARLTON. That has been done in some cases, no doubt, and now, if the 6,400 acres a mile can be sold at $2 an acre, that will, in the majority of cases, pay the cost of building a road in a country of that kind. We are embarking in a reckless system of bartering away to speculators the land which will be required by settlers in the future, and that is a matter which many hon. members and the average elector fail to comprehend. If my hon. friend and his colleagues would condescend to learn wisdom from the experience of others, they would look to the experience of a country to the south of us.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; any parallel case which is cited from that country calls from the super-loyal members on that side of the House nothing but groans. In that country, they have had the experience of designing speculators, of railway contractors who designed to make a great deal of money out of a very small capital by means of the grants of land. There might be a reason for these grants in the case of a great trunk line like the Union Pacific, or, in the case of Canada on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but the promoters of other lines, with their lobbyists, came to Congress and obtained enormous grants of land, as now they are coming here and obtaining enormous grants of land, not in the interests of the people either to-day or in the future, but in the interests of speculators. has been the result in the United States? The Central Pacific was organised with a capital of $12,500. That is, that was all that was paid in. The result was that men like Huntingdon, and Crocker, and Sanford, made profits out of that speculation ranging from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 each. The last returns that I saw show that the assets of that company are valued at $287,000,000, and that enormous profit was secured by just such schemes as these, by grants of land which are sufficient to pay the cost of the road twice over, or, perhaps, in some cases, five times over. The whole system of land grants and money grants for railways is a vicious one. Last night we had an example of the system in the bald swindle in connection with the Caraquet road, to which the Government was a party. The action of the Government in granting subsidies in advance of settlement, far in advance of the needs of the country, away in the wilderness, is a reprehensible one, and I think they should wait until these roads are required, because the experience of the United States will show them that, where roads are required, capital will step in and build them. The great difficulty nowadays is to obtain employment for capital. The great monetary centres are overflowing with redundant wealth, and wherever there is a reasonable prospect of return for an investment, the money is forthcoming. Wherever a railway can show that it will pay expenses and return a dividend, the money will be forthcoming to build it, and it is not necessary for the Government to step in ten or fifteen years in advance of the requirements of the country and give large grants of land to secure the premature and unnecessary construction of roads. I repeat that the system is vicious, that it is not in the interest of the country, and I predict that, within ten years from this day, the population of Canada will regret the adoption of this system, and will curse the Government that squandered millions of money and millions of acres of land on these wild-cat enterprises.

Mr. Larivière. I believe my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton), in citing the United States as an example, has not been looking into the recent history of the Western States. It may be that the Union Pacific or some other railways may have given great profits to their promoters, but, in Minnesota, Montana and Dakota, he will find that the local legislatures are now granting lots of land to railways in order to promote their construction.

Mr. CHARLTON. In Montana and Dakota the Local Legislatures do not own any lands, because they belong to the Federal Legislature.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. At any rate, I know these grants are made in Minnesota. If you do not give these railways aid in land, you will have to give them a cash subsidy, and I believe it is better to give them lands, because in that way the companies are interested in colonising the country through which their lines run. I believe the through which their lines run. I believe the present policy of the Government is the wisest and the best that can be adopted. A misinterpretation has been given to what was said by the Minister of the Interior in regard to his statement that the land subsidy did not build the railways. He did not mean to say that by giving that land subsidy we did not secure the construction of railways. We know that the 6,400 acres per mile which we give has no value until the road is constructed, and, therefore, the grant does not ensure the construction of the road. The railway companies have to wait for years before they can dispose of these lands, and then the interest on the money they have invested, and the cost of management of these lands and other things, amount to such a sum that, even if they get $2.50 or $3 or $4 an acre, they hardly get $1 an acre for the land in comparison with what those prices would have represented when the subsidy was granted. But these grants increase the value of the security for the bonds which the promoters have to issue in order to build the line. The present policy of the Government is the proper one, and the only one that can be adopted under the circumstances.

Mr. DAVIN. There seems to be a difficulty in the way of the proposal to bring the railway lands into the market. Since I made a few remarks here this afternoon, I have been thinking about that matter, and I think this would solve it. Let it be reserved that by Order in Council, at any given time, and in regard to any given lands, a certain maximum sum should be fixed. The hon. member for West Durham stated, a couple of hours ago, that some lands might be more valuable than others, and my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Ross), pointed out that some lands would be more valu-Well, I think, that if it were able than others. reserved that by Order in Council-and I think it would be safe to confide in the fairness of the Government—a sum should be fixed at any given time, and in regard to any given lands, the difficulty would be got over. I see a great difficulty in fixing far ahead a maximum sum, but an elastic system might be introduced by which, by Order in Council, a maximum sum should be fixed at which the railway would have to alienate its lands. As I said this afternoon, it would be to the advantage of the railway, and as the hon. member for Lisgar points out, nothing can be more to the advantage of a railway than to fill the country with population. Now, it is very important to do this, because, as the Minister of the Interior points out, we have 20,000,000 acres of landstill left. If we gave 160 acres of land to each one of the settlers, 1,250,000 will take up that 20,000,000 acres, and if you give four to each family you would have about 5,000,000 of a population. Then, if the railway lands adjoining are reserved, you will have that 5,000,000 there, and yet a large amount of territory besides, still unoccupied, that will support five or six millions more people. I grant it is in the interest of the railway to fill up the country, but I do think it would not be unbecoming or unstatesmanlike to take guarantees that they would act in accordance with their interest; for it may happen—it happens in regard to other matters than railways—that the greatest wisdom does not always prevail in their management, nor the most far-seeing views control. I would urge this upon the attention of the Government, if they entertain the proposal of putting into legislation what is undoubtedly the wish of the North-West people, and what would be a great advantage to the North-West. I think the difficulties that have been raised against the plan may be got over if, instead of fixing now, far ahead, a maximum sum at which the lands should be alienated, the Government reserved for themselves power by Order in Council to fix the sum at any given time in regard to any given lands.

Mr. DEWDNEY. How would the hon. gentleman propose to deal with the Long Lake Road, for instance, who have already got their land?

Mr. DAVIN. That land grant has been given; that is a finished job.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Then why did not the hon. gentleman say this last year?

Mr. DAVIN. The reason why I did not say it last year was, that the thing did not come up.

Mr. WATSON. This point was discussed last year.

Mr. DAVIN. Perhaps, then, I may have got a little more enlightenment since then. I dare say my hon. friend the Minister of Interior thinks that because the Long Lake Railway goes north from Regina, I may have taken so deep an interest in it, that I was glad to see it go through, irrespective of these considerations; but the fact is, this thing did not occur to me last year. It has been discussed in the Territories, and the necessity has been recognised of bringing as quickly as possible the railway lands into settlement, and I believe that if the Government will look into this matter they will see it is the interest of the railway, not less than in the interest of the country, or the Government, that some means should be devised whereby those lands will rapidly be brought into settlement. I believe the suggestion I make has not been made before in this House, but I think it would meet the views of the railway and the views of the country, if power was reserved by Order in Mr. DAVIN.

Council at a given time, and in regard to any given land, taking their value, taking their situation, taking the settlement around them—taking all these things into consideration, and fixing at certain periods a maximum sum at which the land would have to be alienated. The moment the objection was pointed out I saw the difficulty. I see the strong objection against fixing now a maximum sum. What would be a reasonable sum now might be an unreasonable sum, and a most unjust sum, for the railway, ten years hence; but if it is left to the Government by Order in Council to fix the sum, say, five, ten, or fifteen years hence, I think we may rely upon it the Government will not do any injustice in regard to the railway.

Mr. DALY. I certainly cannot agree with the remarks made by the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), because I think if we were to surround the land grants of any railway with restrictions such as he seeks to impose by Order in Council, it would be impossible for that railway company to sell its land grant bonds. It seems to be the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite that the land subsidies that are proposed to be given to these railways are along the line of these railways. None of the railways that are mentioned in these resolutions, with the exception of the Lac Seul Railway and the railway running from a point 17 miles south of Deloraine, to Deloraine, will receive any land whatever in the Province of Manitoba. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) complains that the Canadian Pacific Railway hold their land in Southern Manitoba at a greater price than they should have done. It should be remembered that these lands were at the time in the most thickly settled portion of the Province of Manitoba, and the line of railway ran through these lands, and consequently gave them a particular value. Now, in this case take the first line of railway upon the list, that is the Glenboro' branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a so-called extension of that branch. None of the lands will be given along that line of railway, because they are all taken up and sold long ago, and form part of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line subsidy, and the chances are that the 6,400 acres per mile given to the Canadian Pacific Railway for that branch will lay away up in the north-western portion of the North-West Territory. Now, I think it would be very unfair, those lands being situated in that western pertion of the Territories, to fix now a price upon them. It may be, as was stated by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), that they might have an unusual value on account, as he remarked, of being coal lands, or having valuable timber limits, and it would be simply impossible at present, and until such time as these lands were selected, to put any value upon them. Now, it seems to me that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is opposed to building railways in the North-West Territories and Province of Manitoba. He takes issue with all his Reform friends and the whole Liberal party in the Province of Manitoba upon that question. It is only a short time ago that a contract was entered into between the Greenway Government of Manitoba and the Northern Pacific Railway by which they were to get an enormous subsidy, but so glaring were the terms of that contract that, subsequently, they had to withdraw it. At all events, people of Manitoba have contributed $750,000 out of their treasury towards building branch lines of the Northern Pacific into the Province of Manitoba, and that policy was inaugurated and carried out by the Liberal Government of Mr. Greenway. Therefore, the Liberals of Manitoba have a different view upon this matter from the hon member for Norfolk, and I have no doubt that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), who represents the Liberal party of Manitoba in this House, also differs from the hon. member for North Norfolk upon the question of giving aid to railways. It seems to me that that hon, gentleman is never himself unless he is inconsistent. He was in this House in 1888 when a resolution was introduced by Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Finance, in reference to granting $15,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the withdrawal of the monopoly clause. An amendment was made to that resolution, and the final clause of the amendment was to the effect that the principal moneys of the $15,000,000 should be applied to building branch lines in the Province of Manitoba. The hon, gentleman voted in favor of that amendment. Having done so, his remarks to-night are very inconsistent, because the Glenboro' branch and the Souris branch are the very lines to which they sought to have these $15,000,000 applied, and it was through the instrumentality of myself and those who urged the granting of this land subsidy that the Minister has submitted this proposed land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and any other hon. gentleman who opposes this motion will not be thanked by members of the Liberal party in Manitoba for the action they have taken, because when I state that not one acre given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for either of these branches I have named will be in Manitoba, but will be in the north-west portion of the North-West Territories, it would be unfair for Parliament to declare that this railway should only hold lands at a certain fixed price per acre.

Mr. SPROULE. The object of giving lands is for the purpose of assisting the building of the railway, and is to create a basis of security on which the company can raise money. Government were to reserve for themselves the right to fix the price for the land, no capitalist would think of lending a dollar on such security. Suppose the proposal were made, the reply would at once be offered that they did not know the price for which the lands would sell; that the Government had the power to name the price, and after the company had spent money and thereby increased the value of the land for their own selfish purposes, the Government might afterwards fix the price so low as not to be sufficient to pay the interest on the investment. Such a policy would be a most unreasonable one. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), has said that this might be in the interest of the railway companies and the country. It might be so, provided the railway companies were able to secure money to build the roads, but even in such a case, it would be practically impossible for railway companies to go on the money market and raise loans With which to carry out their undertakings.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Idonotthink there is any such difficulty in fixing the price as the hon. gentleman has indicated, nor do I think the land would be as valueless as the hon, gentleman who has just spoken would have the Committee suppose, if the price were fixed. The scheme for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway proposed in the first instance provided that the prices of the lands held should be from time to time agreed upon between There was the Government and the company. really no difficulty in agreeing on a price. What the Government desire in the construction of railways, I suppose, is to promote the public interest, and the reason why this House sanctions these appropriations is simply as a means to accomplish this end. We have in establishing railway companies and conferring benefits on them nothing to gain, except so far as these roads are capable of conferring benefits on the community. If the railway corporation created in this case was not going to assist the early settlement of the country, the very object for which aid is given would be frustrated. We have two questions before us that are of importance. There is the question as to whether the time has come when railways should be constructed in that district. The hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) spoke as though it were the immediate duty of Parliament to build all the railways required for all time in that country. The hon, gentleman argued that because certain parties who settled in Manitoba desired the early construction of railways in that Province, we would be inconsistent if we did not desire the immediate construction of a railway at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. It is not in the interests of the people that the population coming in should be scattered. There are a great many advantages in having early settlements as dense as possible, and the tens of thousands of people, if we can secure such numbers year by year, who go into the North-West had better settle as near Winnipeg as possible; and these settlements should extend gradually westward, and railways should be provided from time to time to meet the wants of the community as the country is settled. There is a very great advantage in adopting such a system. We have to consider whether the railway facilities, already offered at very great expense to this country, owing to the disposal of a very large portion of the public lands, have all been made use of? Have new settlers availed themselves of those facilities as they exist? I do not think the Government have made out their proposition, or submitted to the House anything that justifies this expenditure, and it is a very great waste of the public money and public resources to construct railways to different points when large sections much nearer are open to settlement, and the settlement of which, at an early day, ought to be secured. Passing from that point for the present, the next question is, how are we to give this aid to such railways so as not to impose an impediment in the way of settlement? An hon. member opposite urged that the lands in Southern Manitoba held by the Canadian Pacific Railway at from $4 to $10 per acre, were worth that price. If that was the real value of those lands, they would be settled more rapidly than they were settled. We know that that country is not being settled, that there is nothing like the population in that country which was supposed before the census was taken two or three years ago; and any one who will fairly consider the appropriations of public lands made to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the railway facilities furnished, must be disappointed at the slow settlement of Southern Manitoba. There must be some reason for this. The climate is fairly good; the soil is excellent; the country is in its natural state inviting, and yet, notwithstanding these railway facilities, settlement does not go on as rapidly as it does in Dakota or Mon-We know that the settlement in Dakota. even of Canadians, has exceeded by a large majority the settlement in our North-West Territories. And the prices at which our lands are held is an explanation of the cause why settlement has not more rapidly developed in that section of the country. There are many ways in which the Government might meet the views expressed on this side of the House. Let me say this: Suppose the Government were to provide that the amount of money which the company should receive from these lands should be a fixed maximum sum, and that the Government should have the privilege of retaining the control and sale of these lands, if they thought proper, so long as the proceeds were paid to the railway until that sum was received; it seems to me that you would keep the country fairly open for settlement, that you would prevent the stockholders, for mere speculative purposes, seeking to make the most out of these lands at the expense of the settlers. It would be in the last degree a mistaken policy to hand over these lands without any restriction to railway corporations, and to depend wholly upon the interests of the companies for their immediate settlement. Why, Sir, experience has already shown that that is not a sufficient consideration upon which to rely, and that the public interest is not likely to be served by that course. Take, for instance, the increase of the value of real estate during the period of the boom in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, when it was supposed that a very large immigration was about to go in there. The Canadian Pacific Railway, looking at its immediate interests, acted upon the principle which everywhere governs the holders of real estate for the purpose of sale. They held on to the lands for a larger price, they put impediments in the way of settlement, and they turned away immigration from the country. No doubt, in the long run, they have suffered by that policy, but it is a policy which under like circumstances will be adopted again and again. It does seem to me that this Parliament is dealing altogether too loosely with the public domain in giving effect to these resolutions, and to the policy which has hitherto been pursued in respect to this matter. I think the Government ought to provide means to retain the control of these lands, and a voice in determining what the priceshould be, subject to the paramount consideration of Parliament. The more rapidly the lands are settled the better it will be in the public interest, and it is the public interest that we are here to consider.

Mr. DALY. I wish to draw the attention of the House to some figures which I gave in my address on the tariff question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) has referred, as did another hon. gentleman before him, to the high prices at which the Canadian Pacific Railway held their lands in southern Manitoba. I said the other night that Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

I took exception to the price at which these lands were held four or five years ago, and I stated that I believed the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway at that time was a very mistaken one. However, a great portion of the land sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Canada North West Land Company, which has been mentioned here to-night, are in this very portion of Southern Manitoba which has been referred to. In the figures I have quoted, on another occasion, I pointed out, that for the six months ending the 30th June. 1889, the Canada North-West Land Company sold 32,320 acres as against 20,620 acres during the corresponding period of 1888, the value of the land they sold in 1889 was $191,402.65, as against $113,432.80 in 1888, an increased acreage sold of 11,700 acres in 1889, and an increase of $77,969.85 in value. Now, the great bulk of these lands are in Southern Manitoba, and the people must have thought the lands were worth the price they paid for them or they would not have bought them. I do not think that the price at which these lands are held in Southern Manitoba to-day. results in retarding settlement there, because that country is well and thickly settled, and the men who are living there are increasing their holdings year after year, and are willing and able to pay the prices asked. I would impress upon members on the other side of the House that in relation to the branch lines of railway in the Province of Manitoba, which it is now proposed to aid, there is not an acre of the land which it is intended to give these railways that is within a hundred miles of them, and I say it would be unfair to restrict the price at which these lands should be sold.

Mr. WATSON. From the arguments which the hon, gentleman (Mr. Daly) has addressed to the House, it appears that it is unnecessary to give assistance to these railroads. He has told us the high price at which land was sold, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway are not building that road for the sake of the land grant, but for the sake of the traffic. I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway have been promising to build this road for the last seven or eight years, and in consequence of their delay and neglect to do so a large number of the settlers in south-western Manitoba have been deprived of railway communication up to the present time. I have no doubt. that had it not been for the move made by the Liberal Government of Manitoba, the Canadian Pacific Railway would not undertake to build that road even now. They are building it at this late period only because the Northern Pacific obtained a charter last Session, for the purpose of constructing a road without any assistance whatever from this Government. I may say that the Local Government has assisted us in securing the construction of some 250 miles of road, by building competing lines with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may also say that the Local Government have succeeded in securing the construction of a road at a less price, than this Parliament has ever secured the construction of a road for in the North-West. They secured the construction of that road for a cash bonus of $1,500 a mile or a portion of it, and $1,750 for the balance of the road. They have built that road without any other assistance than this; they obtained no land grant aid, and I am happy to say that that same company proposes extending their road during the present year, without any assistance from this Parliament. The other argument which has been used by the hon. gentleman goes to show that the road to be built from Glenboro', west, and Brandon, south-west, will pay, without the assistance of a very large bonus from this Government. This, I think, is a very strong reason why we should limit the price which the railway companies should receive for their lands to actual settlers. I am under the impression that there is quite a large quantity of land in south-western Manitoba which will be available for these land grants. I may be mistaken, but I think I am right in saying so. It should be remembered by this House, that the land grant given to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the construction of their road, are not for alternate townships, but alternate sections, and they are lands fairly fit for settlement, and I venture to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway have not, to-day, for sale in the Province of Manitoba, one acre of land at a less price than §4.

Mr. ROSS. The average is less.

Mr. WATSON. I know it runs up as high as $10 an acre. I live in Manitoba, and I am in a position to know the prices of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands in Manitoba, at least, as well as the hon. gentleman who resides in British Columbia. The hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) states that the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) did not know what he was talking about when he spoke of the price of land in Southern Manitoba. As I have said, I live in Manitoba, and I know that, up to the present, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not accepted lands from the Government unless they were fairly fit for settlement. I do not know of any lands in the Province of Manitoba, fairly fit for settlement and cultivation, which are not worth $4 an acre, and that being the case, I think it is our duty to guard these lands. I was rather amused at the remarks made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) in speaking of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) voting that the $15,000,000 granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway should be spent in the construction of railroads in Manitoba and the North-West. I find in the Votes and Proceedings of this House that the hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) actually voted against that. He is not in favor of money being spent to build railways in Manitoba and the North-West, but my hon. friend on this side of the House did favor that proposition. As a rule, railways are more cheaply constructed in that country than in any other portion of the Dominion. This Government have secured the construction of railways in other parts for a cash subsidy of $3,200 a mile, and they propose now granting 6,400 acres a mile, which means a valuation of 50 cents an acre. As an evidence of what I say, I have stated that the Government of Manitoba have secured the construction of 250 miles of railway in that Province for $1,500 a mile for a portion, and $1,750 a mile for the balance. That ought to be sufficient evidence that people can be got to build railways in that country where there is a necessity for them, for a much less sum than is granted by this Government.

On resolution 3,

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Brandon and South-Western Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not less than six thousand four hundred acres per mile for the line of railway from a point in Township one, in either Range twentythree or twenty-four, west of the First Principal Meridian, to Deloraine, a distance of about seventeen miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the parties concerned in this road? Is it at a complete road of seventeen miles, or is it an extension of a road now existing?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This railway, the Brandon and South-Western Railway, is promoted by gentlemen of Winnipeg, who hold a charter from the Local Government to construct the line from Brandon to the Turtle Mountain District. They applied for a land grant for the whole of that distance, which was refused, and subsequently they applied for a grant from Deloraine to the coal district of Turtle Mountain, a distance of 17 miles; and the Government agreed to give them this land grant on their obtaining a charter from this House, which they have obtained this Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the corporators?

Mr. DEWDNEY. David Hyssop, George R. Crow, George H. Campbell, Horace Edgar Crawford, Wm. A. Macdonald and Colin H. Campbell.

Mr. MITCHELL. A question arose last night on the discussion of the Caraquet Railway, as to the manner in which railway aid is given by this Government. While I am in favor of acting liberally towards any railway corporation which undertakes bond fide to open up and develop some district of the country where railway accommodation is required, I must say that the Government, before granting assistance, should satisfy themselves of the ability of the parties to carry out what they undertake. We should see that we have no more of these Caraquet Railway scandals, by affording facilities to parties to engage in wildcat operations in the hope of selling their charters or bonuses. I must say for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they have done a great deal for this country, and there may be a justification for these grants; but, speaking generally, I say that before giving away the whole of that territory in the North-West, the Government should see that the persons who apply for grants are able to carry out what they undertake.

Mr. DALY. With regard to this Brandon and South-Western Railway, I may state that the object of the railway is to open up and develop the Turtle Mountain coal mines, and thereby afford cheap fuel to the people of Manitoba.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is one thing to be said with regard to this granting away of the whole of the North-West. I recollect that when we bought that country, and paid our money for it, certain expectations were held out to us of being recouped from the sale of lands. Now, we are practically granting away the whole of that territory without any definite statement being presented to this House as to any particular necessity for it. I can understand specific grants being made when reasons are given why they should be made; but I cannot understand giving away wholesale the country, which we have bought and paid for, and for the development of which the older Provinces are heavily taxed.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In addition to what the hon. member for Selkirk has said, I may say that this railway is intended to supply coal to the people of the south-western portion of Manitoba, where fuel is now very scarce and dear. I could show the hon, gentleman appeals from different parts of that country to the Government asking us to assist this road for that very purpose. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have offered to give it every assistance in distributing coal through that country. At present the people there get their coal from Winnipeg by the Manitoba South-Western Railway, and by the time it reaches them its price is very high indeed.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the Government will not make this grant without seeing that a maximum rate is fixed at which this railway will carry the coal, because otherwise it will have a practical monopoly of the coal supply. We have had an experience of that sort of thing in connection with the Galt Railway, and many people in the North-West now regret that a maximum rate for carrying coal was not required in the case of that railway.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon, gentleman will see that if the railway is constructed for which we have just passed a resolution, the Souris coal fields will be opened up, and there will be competition which will keep down the price of coal.

Mr. WATSON. The Souris coal field will be operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. branch line will be operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, to whom it practically will belong, and they will be able to control the price at which coal can be sold in that country. simply a question of competition. It will just be laid down as cheaply as the Galt Company can lay down their coal, because they have practically a monopoly of all the coal fields in their section, since they own the road and fix what rates of freight they choose. A man might have a coal mine close to the Galt Company's mine, and yet not be able to compete with them because they can charge him what rates they please to carry his coal to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I hope the hon gentleman will see the point I take and guard against this company charging over a fixed rate, because I expect in that section there will be more coal mines opened and developed than the one owned by this company. If such be the case this company should not be allowed, as the Galt Company is, to charge arbitrary rates of freight.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Minister has chosen to give an illustration of the advantages to be afforded by getting cheap coal delivered over this road for which we are asked to give a subsidy. I recollect a very noticeable instance when a territory worth $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 was given away on similar pretences, and with about the same information furnished the House as is given to-night. I recollect when a proposition from the combina-tions with which the late Mr. Dunsmuir was connected, came before this House late in the Session, just as this has come, and we were asked to vote away, and we did vote away, properties worth hundreds of millions of dollars. That vote has been since deeply regretted by every man who has given the question any consideration. Take the people who control the Canadian Pacific Railway, take the people of British Columbia, take every statesman or gentleman connected with the legislation of this country—there is not one man of them who does Mr. Dewdney.

not regret and condemn that action. coal mine of any extent on the Pacific coast of Canada was granted away on that occasion to a corporation largely controlled by Americans. It was an outrageous thing that an immense estate, one of those properties to which we look forward to recoup the eastern Provinces for the outlays they have made in that country, should have been granted away on so little information and with so little consideration; and we are asked to repeat the same outrage to-night. It is a disgrace that such a contract should have been made. Every man Every man regrets it to-day. That coal mine alone is worth hundreds of millions of dollars-its value no man can calculate; and it is a disgrace to this country that the Dunsmuir transaction was passed on just as little information and in the same manner as we are asked to pass these votes to-night.

Mr. DALY. I was going to say, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that I do not think the extent of this coal mine in question will ever reach the extent of the Dunsmuir mine.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope not.

Mr. DALY. It has been developed by local capitalists who have faith in being able to make money out of the scheme; and it is in order to get the coal from the mine to the Canadian Pacific Railway that this line is to be built. When the hon, member for Marquette talks about the hon. the Minister of the Interior incorporating in the grant restrictions as to freight rates, he talks most ridiculously. The idea of talking about restricting rates on seventeen miles of railway! All the distance this railway carries freight is from the mines to Deloraine, and in connection with this grant they cannot restrain the Canadian Pacific Railway from charging any rate they choose. As to the information which can be given, the hon. member for Halton probably knows as much about this grant as any person in the House, and I have no doubt he can give an opinion to the hon, gentleman as to the extent of the property owned by the incorporators of the company. All I can say is that I know coal is there, and that it is being developed and used, and that the people of Manitoba expect to get cheap bituminous coal, which they have not been able to get up to the

Mr. CHARLTON. The reference made to the Dunsmuir transaction on Vancouver Island brings to my recollection the fact that when the resolutions with regard to that transaction were before the House, there was scarcely a member of the House to protest against it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I protested against it.

Mr. CHARLTON. Half a dozen members protested against it possibly, and yet it was forced through by the Government, and when it was stated that connected with Mr. Dunsmuir were Mr. Huntingdon of San Francisco and Mr. Croker of San Francisco, two magnates of the Central Pacific Railway, and that it was an American transaction controlled by American capital, the statement was received with jeers and the taunt thrown out at me that I had always a leaning for the Americans and should be gratified. Since that time I have passed over the road from Vancouver to Nanaimo, a road right along the sea-coast, a road built ostensibly for the purpose of developing the coal mines of Vancouver, and yet which has not afforded facilities for the development of those mines to any material extent. The property on that Island then granted away may in the future reach in value to some hundreds of millions of dollars; it was granted to keen, shrewd speculators, who appealed to the Government in that keen way in which speculators always know how to make their appeals; and their demand was secured through the supineness, the want of knowledge, and the want of care, on the part of the Government as to the interests they had in charge. We have had that thing repeated again and again. There are abundant instances of it in other countries, and we have to-night grants being made of precisely a similar character—grants made in the interests of a few individuals, against the interests of the future millions who are to people this country. I say the Dominion Government are deserving of all blame for their recklessness in this matter, they are doubly deserving of blame because they will not even put a limit to the price at which those lands are to be sold by the companies to whom they are granted. Surely the Government might at least so far, having squandered the heritage of the future, place some restraint on those corporations and secure to the people who are to settle on these lands, some measure of justice, by fixing for the protection of the settlers, a maximum price which will be amply sufficient to build the road. If they will not do that, they will sacrifice utterly and entirely the interests of the people to the interest of speculators and moneyed men.

Mr. WATSON. The hon, member for Selkirk thinks it is ridiculous of me to ask this House to fix a maximum rate for the carrying of coal over this line. Now, I think the hon. gentleman ought to know by this time that my suggestion was not at all ridiculous. The same The same contention was made in the case of the Galt Company's road, and we have since found in Manitoba and the North-West that it was a pity the Government did not see fit to fix a maximum rate for the carrying of coal over that road. That company is in the position of making \$4 per ton on its coal. It controls the output, and only sells the coal at the price at which it can afford to sell it and meet American competition. We suffer in that country from high rates on coal. This Government are carrying coal over the Intercolonial at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, and yet in Manitoba the rate is $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per ton per mile. Now, when we are suffering in that way, it is the duty of the representatives of Manitoba to guard against legislation of this kind, and see that fuel will be furnished to the people at the lowest possible rate. It is my duty on such occasions to rise and offer suggestions to the Government, and whether they accept them or not, I will have done my duty. I would not be doing my duty if I sat here silently when I saw the Government aiding a road for the benefit of a company owning a coal mine without asking that the public should obtain some of the benefits and that all the benefits should not go into the pockets of the company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it would be well for the Government to consider, in regard to the minerals in the North-West, whether they beds, the propriety of not parting with the fee, but of retaining the proprietary interest in the Crown, in order to secure a royalty or a revenue for the community which may subsequently settle in those districts. I do not think it is much advantage to the man who purchases lands for the purpose of cultivating the soil to own the minerals under-neath those lands, and it would be of advantage for the Crown to retain the property in them. It would be far better to deal with the Crown in a matter of that kind than with half a hundred With regard to retaining ordinary proprietors. control over the public lands, and not leaving it to the railway companies to fix a price, I would call the attention of the Minister to a Bill which I introduced not many years ago, the Colonisation Railway Bill, in which it was provided:

"Should the Government in Council deem it expedient, instead of conveying lands to the company, the company may be paid the moneys received from the sales of lands on the line of and within six miles of such railway from time to time until the company shall have received a sum not exceeding $10,000 per mile."

The Government may fix what they think a fair maximum value, and then it will be to the interest of the company to part with the land at a reasonable price. If the land proved to be of a higher value, the Government would have it in their power to say so, but they would not lose control of the price.

Mr. WATSON. As to the price of coal, I find, on enquiring from my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), that the price of the Galt coal was $8 a ton at Regina while the same coal is delivered in Winnipeg for $7 a ton, with 370 miles longer haul. That is because of the American coal coming into competition with it in Winnipeg. It is, therefore, a question, not of the value of the coal, but of the freight rates.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Since presenting these resolutions, I find there is an error in the distances mentioned in regard to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company. The distance from Calgary to Edmonton is 190 miles, and from Calgary to the boundary 150 miles. I ask the Committee to allow the change to be made.

Resolutions reported.

SUPPLY—ATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want again to call the attention of the House to the statements which have been made by the Messrs. Anderson, which I alluded to last night, with respect to the correspondence that went on be-I have tween the Government and themselves. already expressed my_opinion that the Government are treating the House like a parcel of children in refusing to bring down that correspondence. They are now confronted with statements made by these gentlemen, whom they must have regarded as respectable and responsible persons, in which something like a contradiction in terms is given to the statements of the Minister of Finance and of the Prime Minister himself, as these hon, gentlemen can see in referring to the letter of well for the Government to consider, in regard the Messrs. Anderson, which I read last night. to the minerals in the North-West, whether they Now, I say we ought to be put in possession of be precious metals or ordinary metals or petroleum that correspondence. The Government are not acting with due regard to their own honor, under the circumstances, nor with regard to the honor of the people of Canada, in making statements on the floor of this House which are flatly denied in public newspapers of large circulation in England, by the other parties, and we ought to have that correspondence.

We have no Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. objection to bring down that part of the correspondence which relates to the surrender of the contract by the Messrs. Anderson. We object to bring down the whole of it, for this obvious reason: that there are a number of conditions and arrangements made with the Messrs. Anderson connected with the contract, which they had undertaken, and which they threw up two months after they had signed it. Those particulars may be important to us when the time comes for us to call again for tenders for the Atlantic service. That is the only reason why we declined. But as regards that portion of it which is concerned with the surrender of the contract, we have no objection to lay it before the House. It is simply a difference in terms, but not in substance. The Messrs. Anderson agreed to build the ships under a particular contract, and they asked for two months in order that they might go home to England and see whether they could make satisfactory arrange-ments to raise the money. They said, I think, the vessels would cost some £2,000,000 sterling, and that was not a sum that could be easily arranged for; therefore, they asked for two months in order that they might surrender the contract if they found they could not make satisfactory financial arrangements. We were aware that the two gentlemen who were named, Sir Donald Smith and Sir George Stephen, had agreed to invest a certain large sum of money in that undertaking, I suppose, subject to certain arrangements between them; but, Sir George Stephen, as Mr. Anderson mentioned, withdrew from that arrangement, and I suppose Sir Donald Smith did likewise. In consequence of those great names being withdrawn, they surrendered the contract. The fact of the matter is that they could not very well go on 'Change without having the important sanction of two such prominent capitalists so intimately connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is the reason—those gentlemen having withdrawn from the arrangement they were obliged to throw up the contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When will that be brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On Monday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because I may call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the language used by the Messrs. Anderson is this:

"We are able to say without hesitation that if the representations made to us when we undertook the business, and on the faith of which we alone embarked upon it, had been fulfilled, we should have had no difficulty whatever in finding the necessary capital."

They imply that representations had been made by the Government which were not fulfilled. That is the obvious meaning of their letter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Anderson does not mean that, I am sure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have heard it rumored that after the Canadian chief men of the Canadian Pacific Railway had agreed to go into this operation, they did it under an arrangement which was rumored to have been made between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, in reference to giving them through means of communication, on the basis of that short line arrangement of last year, to Halifax. When the Government withdrew from that arrangement Sir George Stephen and Sir Donald Smith, not being able to see an advantage to the road, in failing to get the right of way over the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax. as was agreed by this rumored arrangement, felt it necessary, in the interest of their company, to withdraw from it. I do not know how much truth there is in these rumors, but it is well that we should have information on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say, with reference to the letter which was read here last night, in which Mr. Anderson speaks of something that was said by myself, that he appears to have taken a rumor, or a statement made by me, as a fact, which was not a fact. I had no authority in stating, and certainly did not state, that I had counselled, or that the Government had counselled, that the contract with the Messrs. Anderson should be entered into provisionally. What I stated in the House was, as any persons can see by referring to it, that they surrendered their provisional contract, which was in accordance with the Act.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To complete additional Public Buildings, Wellington street, Ottawa.. $155,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total sum which has been spent on this building, and what is the total sum which will be spent in order to complete?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount that has been expended, up to the 1st of March, 1890, is $711,000, and the estimated additional expenditure up to the 1st of July, this year, will be $1,038.09 more. The vote asked for by this resolution is to cover the whole expenditure, according to the report of my chief architect.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That makes a total expenditure of $867,000. What was the estimated cost of the building in the first instance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say that. We could hardly make an estimate at the beginning, because we did not know what the land would cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had an estimate of the cost of the building, outside of the cost of the land. My impression is that the statement made was that the building would cost half a million dollars, but it now appears it will cost $867,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site cost $96,566; drainage $6,348; various contracts for building iron roof; iron staircases, &c., $462,360; iron joists, $15,000; elevators, $38,000; heating apparatus, $24,000; electric bells, $1,555; or a total of $542,070. Smaller sums, including amounts for granite, iron work, gas meters, mantles, hose racks, gratings, &c., $13,343; contingencies, &c., $11,000. All these items bring the total expenditure to $867,000. This vote of $155,000 may not all be expended, but we require it in order that when the final estimates are made all the claims may be paid.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it a fact that in the contract given out for this building the roof was accidentally omitted, and when the building was supposed to be completed a further demand was made for putting on a roof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. The contract was for the stone work without the roof, because the building roof was to be a metal roof, in order to make the buildings as far as possible fire-proof. The roof was a separate contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was it made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In September, 1886.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was a very long time after the original contract was given out. Is it the practice of the Department to give out a contract at two different periods? Were tenders invited for the roof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Tenders were called for from different parties for the roof.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Were they advertised for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it the practice to advertise for the construction of a building in 1882, and to again advertise for the construction of a roof for that building two or three years afterwards.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief architect recommended the adoption of that course at the time as this was the largest and most costly building we had under construction. He thought as this was to be a special roof, it should not be included in the ordinary tender for the building, because a contractor might be well able to do the masonry work and not be competent to put on an iron roof. He, therefore, thought we should have a contract for the building and separate contracts for different other works, such as the iron roof, the iron staircases, joists and steel girders, elevators, and so on.

Mr. WATSON. Was the roof mentioned in the specification of the original contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. WATSON. What was the total contract price, and what was the amount of the claim made for extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The claims for extras were very large. I think about $400,000.

Mr. WATSON. What was the amount of the original contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $460,000 or $470,-000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the contract for the roof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $60,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Were many tenders sent in?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were several.

Mr. WATSON. Who was the contractor for the roof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contractor for the building itself.

Mr. WELSH. Do I understand that the first contract was for $500,000 and that there are extras for over $400,000? If this is the case, a change in the Department is very badly needed. You talk about the dead meat business—this is dead meat business.

Mr. LISTER. This matter requires some further explanation. The Minister of Public Works, in answer to a question submitted by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) the other day, stated as follows:—

"The buildings are completed. The entire sum paid on the building up to 1st March, 1890, is $608,096.70, exclusive of land purchase. In reply to the third question: Yes-Mr. Charlebois, the contractor for the building, has put in claims for extras amounting to $393,954.19. I understand that Mr. Charlebois is ready to reduce his claim to $200,000."

Either he has put in an excessive and exorbitant claim to which he has no right at all, or else there must be something wrong in the matter which induces the contractor to reduce his claim to $200,000. Will the Minister explain to the House how it is the contractor is willing to knock off $193,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contractor put in his claims after executing his contracts, and his claims for extras and additional works amounted to nearly $400,000 in round numbers, or about $396,000. The claim was examined by the Chief Architect, who told the contractor that there were some items which he could not entertain and which must disappear, because they could not be allowed at all.

Mr. LISTER. Were these extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They were claims for delaying his work, &c. It was pointed out to the contractor that if there was delay on one side, there was also delay on the other, and, therefore, the Chief Architect would not entertain the thing at all. These accounts of nearly $200,000 have been examined and are being examined by the Chief Architect, who has special instructions, as he should have: that he should report only on the claims that are included in the contract, and if there is any additional work which may have been ordered from time to time, as the work proceeded, these must be reported on specially. He is also instructed that if there is any doubt about the legality of any one of the items, they must be referred to the Minister of Justice, and that the other claims that cannot be decided according to the contract must be rejected. If the contractor is not then satisfied he will have his recourse by presenting a petition of right.

Public Buildings, Nova Scotia...... $10,000

Mr. LAURIER. I see nothing here for public buildings in the town of Lunenburg. I find that some three or four years ago, at a period anterior to the last election, the Government had decided to erect public buildings at Lunenburg, and their determination was so well understood that they actually bought a site for these buildings. Am I correct in that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site was purchased. There is nothing in these Estimates to erect a building now.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the reason?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is not the first time that a site has been purchased, and we did not go on with the building. For example, sites were purchased at St. Hyacinthe and Vancouver, and we did not go on with the buildings immediately, but will do so next summer. We cannot do everything at the same time.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the Government cannot do everything at the same time; but I understand further, that the Government had determined to erect buildings at Lunenburg, and they carried out their determination so far as to purchase the site. The logical consequence then would be to have the building erected.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the intention.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot understand why the Government having purchased the site, should leave it unoccupied and unprofitable for four years. The reason given by the hon. gentleman, that this has been done elsewhere, is no reason whatever. I do know the circumstances of the Lunenburg case, because I have been informed of them, and I cannot conceive any reason for buildings not being erected there, unless it be that Lunenburg has returned a Reformer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Some years ago a site was purchased in Lunenburg, in Arichat, in Annapolis, in North Sydney and in New Glasgow and other places. The buildings in North Sydney and New Glasgow were completed. The building in Annapolis is still uncompleted, but as soon as the Government can provide the funds, the buildings, I hope, will be erected in both Arichat and Lunenburg; especially in Lunenburg which is a very thriving town. It has, during the last winter, been connected with the railway system of the Province, and I have no doubt that the Government will be perfectly willing, as soon as funds are available, to erect that building. Lunenburg is a town and a county which has fair claims to a public building of that kind. Unfortunately, however, the Government have not been able to provide in the Estimates this year for any buildings in the Province, except for the purchase of a site in Dartmouth, where a post office is very desirable, it being a town of more than 10,000 inhabitants and doing a large business, and for the completion of the building at Annapolis. I do not think the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has fair reason to complain, or to think that this has not been done on account of his politics, for there are no buildings to be erected in the Province this year, although there are sites for that purpose in other places as well as in Lunenburg

Mr. LAURIER. I am glad to hear that these buildings will be erected as soon as funds are available. We were told the other day by the Finance Minister that we would have a surplus of at least $1,000,000 next year. I hope the Government will be able to take out of that large sum the little amount required for these public buildings at Lunenburg.

Mr. LAURIER.

Charlottetown Dominion Buildings.... $2,000

Mr. WELSH. I am glad Prince Edward Island appears for something at last in the Estimates. It is a beginning at all events, and I hope it will not stop here. I will certainly not object to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is rare to find the County of Northumberland get anything, and it may seem singular that I should rise to make enquiries about this vote; but there is a post office and Custom house in Chatham now, and I think the least the hon. Minister of Public Works could have done was to have asked for information from some one who could give it to him, as to whether any repairs are necessary on this building or not. I should like to know on whose authority this amount is asked for.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for repairs to the present building. They are called for as absolutely necessary by the chief architect in my Department.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask that this item stand until I am able to examine the basis on which it is put in the Estimates. I was in this public building last year, and I could see no necessity for any such amount of repairs. I do not want to see money expended even in my own county if it is not needed; I certainly have not asked for this, and I do not see on what principle the hon. Minister comes down here and asks for an expenditure of this kind when the representative of the county has not asked for it, and when I believe it is not needed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not necessary that we should ask the member for a county whether repairs are called for or not; these things are done, not by the members, but by the officers of my Department. They go and enquire, and then they report whether such repairs are necessary or not. Of course, if I thought the money was being squandered, I would ask that the vote be struck out; but I have a duty to perform, and I believe these repairs are required.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not object to the hongentleman sending his officers around, but I would like to ask, at whose instance the officer was sent to examine this building? I think it will be found that the request was made by a gentleman who has opposed me for years. There is a substantial stone building there, and there is no opportunity for spending $1,500 for improvements that I know of. What I want before the vote is passed, is the report of the hon. gentleman's officer, as to how he proposes to spend that money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Post Office Inspector has also reported that the building required repairs, and that is the reason for this vote. Of course, if the hon. gentleman will insist absolutely that my officers must not go into his county, I will have to consider whether the repairs should be made or not; but, I think, my hon. friend will see that he is on a false track in finding fault with me, or my Department, because we take care of a building in his county. It is not because it is in his county, but I am in duty bound to take care of that building as all others, and I state on my responsibility, that the building requires these repairs.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have endeavored to find out what the repairs are, and I have not found out yet. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to give me some advice as to what my county wants; but I may say to him, that not a single request that I have ever made in the last three years on behalf of my county has been granted, and here I find a vote, which so far as I know, is not required at all, simply because the gentleman who opposed me in the last election has, as I suppose, asked for it. The hon. gentleman may drop it or pass it just as he pleases, so far as I am concerned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not a matter for me to drop or pass just as I please. It is my duty to put it in the Estimates. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong in saying that the gentleman he speaks of has asked for this vote. I do not know his name, and I have not had any information from him. If the hon. gentleman wants the information, I will give it to him. The Post Office Inspector says that the building is hardly fit for occupation, being deficient in light and out of repair, and destitute of the ordinary convenience for personal cleanliness, and the comfort of the employés. Then the Customs Department requires some repairs. The drainage requires to be attended to, and the flooring renewed, and a number of other repairs require to be made.

Mr. WELSH. I think the explanation of the hon. Minister ought to be quite satisfactory to my hon. friend from Northumberland. I see that the hon. Minister has put a sum in the Estimates, based on a report by the Government inspector. I am glad he laid down that platform because I have a report in my hand from the Government engineer, which, when the vote comes on, I will put to him and nail him pretty hard. I hope the hon. member for Northumberland will not say anything more, but allow this grant to pass, because I think the explanation very satisfactory—at all events to

Mr. MITCHELL. Since the hon. Minister has given information in detail which he ought to have given at the outset, I cannot resist the grant, but I must say, I am still not convinced of its necessity. If the hon, gentleman would take information and suggestions from the responsible representatives of the people as to what is wanted, he would place, I think, amounts in the Estimates which he has previously omitted. The hon, gentleman knows to what I refer. The hon. gentleman is a victim of a policy. There is no man in this House whom I respect more, and I am satisfied if he were permitted to perform the acts of common justice to representatives of the people, he would accept suggestions as to what the counties require, not from outside and irresponsible people, but from the people whom the constituents send here to represent their views. The hon. gentleman is a victim of a system. He would accept a suggestion from me, but he will not be allowed to do so. policy of the Administration of which he is a member, is, as they stated in a correspondence to me some years ago: We cannot accept suggestions and views from people who oppose us, and the price of the consideration for your recommendations is the clearest support and the tamest following in everything we do.

Richmond Post Office, &c.....$ 4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the revenue of this office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The postal revenue last year was $1,991.45; Customs, $7,071.74; other revenues collected, $8.40.

Grosse Isle Quarantine Station...... $ 20,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a quarantine station for Quebec and Ontario. The architect has reported to the Department of Agriculture that a number of repairs are required, and that they ask for a new building to be erected.

Mr. LAURIER. I believe this work is necessary, but I am informed also that a pier is absolutely necessary, as it is impossible, in stormy weather, to land the patients from the ship to the hospital.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A pier would certainly be very useful, and the attention of the Department has been called to its necessity the past year and this year again, but the Government thought they could not afford this year a sum for that purpose. It is a wharf which will cost from $60,000 to $80,000.

St. Hyacinthe Post Office, Customs House, &c......$2,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the third grant. The first grant was for the purpose of purchasing the site. Then we called for tenders, and we think this will be sufficient until we can obtain money at another Session. This is to continue the payment of the contract.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much is the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is about $15,000. That is for the building itself, but it does not cover the fittings and matters of that kind.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it a port of entry also?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see the receipts for the post office were about $6,000. What were the receipts for the port of entry?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The revenue from the post office was $6,059. The inland revenue amounted to $57,810, and the Customs revenue to $25,211.

Public Buildings, Ontario..... $78,900

Mr. McMULLEN. How much has been expended on the Peterborough Customs house, for which $7,000 is asked?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $3,900. That was for the land.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this vote intended for the post office also?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; this is for the Customs house.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This land was purchased for the post office, was it not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was not the intention to purchase that lot for a post office, but for a public building. Afterwards we thought we should purchase a lot for the post office which would be useful, not only for the town of Peterborough, but also for the village of Ashburnham, which is adjacent to Peterborough, but on the other side of the bridge, which is an extension of the street on which the post office is built.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is customary to place the post office and the Customs house in one building, but the ordinary custom seems to have been departed from in this case, and we want to know the

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has been explained several times. One lot is Protestant and the other lot is Catholic.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the post office completed, and what did it cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is completed, but I cannot now state what it cost, as I have not the particulars here.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the estimated cost of the Customs house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The building, with the fittings and heating, will cost about $16,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose the post office cost about $24,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think about

Mr. McMULLEN. That is $40,000. One building is placed on one side of the river and the other on the other side of the river. I believe there was a little row in that town in regard to this. There was a grant voted for a post office on one side of the river, to which some of the people objected, and the Government, in order to make it generally acceptable, decided to build the Customs house on the other side. Is that not so

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The river does not run through the town of Peterborough. The village of Ashburnham is on one side of the river and the town of Peterborough is on the other side. The post office is built on a proper site close to the bridge, so that it can serve the postal requirements of Peterborough and Ashburnham, but the Customs house is being built in another direction, towards the market place.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose this is a division to prevent division, or a division to secure

Mr. LANDERKIN. The lot upon which the Customs house is now being built was purchased originally for the post office. I saw the agreement. It was shown to me by Mr. Phelan, just before the election. They paid all Mr. Phelan asked for that lot, and they were to put up a post office upon it, but some other parties got hold of the other lot upon which the post office was put up, and they had more influence than Mr. Phelan. After the election, Mr. Phelan's usefulness was gone, but another election was coming on, and now they are building the Customs house on Mr. Phelan's lot. They are keeping up two staffs of officials instead of one, but they have a supporter from Peterborough here. I see him over there in his seat—and we should like to hear from him.

Mr. BARRON. I think we ought to hear from the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson). This is really a very serious matter. There is no doubt of the general opinion of the public with regard to it, and I think the hon. member for was voted in the main Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Peterborough should give some explanation with regard to it.

Kingston Military College-New dor-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to this, because I believe it is very much wanted. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman proposes a new building on the third side of the square?

Mr. KENNY. I would also like to ask the Minister if any portion of this building is to be used as an infirmary. In all well equipped educational establishments there is an infirmary, I visited the Military College the other day for the first time, and I was very much surprised to find that in the basement of the main building there are a few rooms which are allotted to the cadets who happen to be suffering from any sickness. The place is exceedingly damp-so damp in summer that when the dormitories were crowded, and the cadets were obliged to live in it, those who were there told me that when they cleaned their brass accoutrements in the morning, in the evening they were mouldy. I think the House will agree that that is hardly the place into which to put sick boys. These rooms are alongside of the boiler house, whence the building is heated, and the pipes pass over these rooms, and the temperature is not unusually up to eighty. Owing to the fact of these rooms being occupied by invalids, the windows cannot be opened, because that would create draughts. As the State is conducting that institution, it becomes our duty, if possible, to remedy that state of things, and, I think, some provision should be made for an hospital or an infirmary.

This vote, as Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. stated in the resolution, is for a new dormitory. I do not know the location there, but I have a note stating that it is a new east block. This is for a dormitory to accommodate fifty cadets.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $10,000 will not build a dormitory capable of accommodating fifty people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is going to be a plain building, but it is going to be calculated for fifty students. There will be a dispensary and some rooms for those who have slight illnesses. On full consideration, and on the recommendation, I think, of Colonel Hewitt in the first place, followed up by Senators, it was thought that serious cases of illness would be better attended to at the General Hospital at Kingston. I believe that is a very well conducted institution, with all the appliances of the hospital, and it has always been well managed-at least, it was when I lived in Kingston. It has been though; that for serious illnesses the patients would be much better cared for at the hospital where there would be more professional science and better attendance for the few boys who might be ill. I believe the rooms below are liable to the charge made by the member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny). That will be remedied and there will be comfortable rooms in the new dormitory for slight cases.

Mr. FOSTER. This item drops, as I find it

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister has made a mistake in simply adding the word "re-vote." I have no doubt that it was the intention of the Government to grant this extra $10,000, and the word "re-vote" has gone in by mistake.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a mistake. It was the intention of the Government to vote $10,000 towards building a drill shed in Brantford, and that is already voted, as my hon. friend will see on looking at page 40 of the main Estimates.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The regiment are certainly under the impression that there was to be an additional amount. Plans were prepared by the Department for a drill shed last year, and the work was not gone on with, and the tenders have not been asked for. The estimate of the Department is, that the plans will cost much more than the amount voted, and the regiment confidently look for an additional grant this year. I trust that the Minister of Finance, now that the amount is in, and that it is provided for, will leave it there, and all that is requisite would be simply to strike out that word "re-vote" and let the $10,000 stand. The Minister need not expend it if he does not like. I would like the Finance Minister, and the First Minister, and the Government to understand the position. The city of Brantford voted $10,000 for a drill shed, and there was $10,000 put in the Estimates last year. The drill shed of Brantford has cost the Government for the past twenty-two years comparatively nothing. The town of Brantford, in the first place, put it up, and the Government contributed a very insignificant sum towards it. The town found the land and put it on one of the public squares; the lease expired a year or more ago, and the building stands there, and has all gone to decay. I have a letter from the colonel of the regiment in which he expresses the greatest regret that the work has not been gone on with. He says:

"It is really too bad that we should be flooded with rain for another year on our arms and clothing and accoutrements."

This has been kept up at large expense by the officers themselves, and it will be discouraging to them if they should be treated in this way. I do think when the city granted the land for the building, that the Government ought to help them in erecting the building. I have no desire to encourage, on the part of the Government, expenditures that I do not think are warranted, but the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice will themselves see the necessity for it, and I think they will consent simply to strike out the word "re-vote" and let the sum stand. It need not be spent if it is not wanted. The plans have been already prepared, and the chief architect of the Department reports that the grants are wholly insufficient. The regiment have seen these plans and they very much like them, they are in love with them, and if you alter this and cut them down to a plan that will require only the balance of the money left out of the $10,000 granted, you will utterly discourage the regiment. You must remember that this is a city regiment, all the companies are in the city, and I ask, as a matter of fairness on the part of the Government, who have been building drill sheds Brantford. What they have done for Brantford is nothing in comparison with what they have granted for drill sheds in other places. This regiment took part in the general inspection in Toronto, on which occasion the highest praise and credit were bestowed upon them. They are, however, without a drill shed; they are in an old building where their arms are constantly flooded, and, moreover, this building is only on sufferance, and if we do not pass an extra amount there will be delay in changing the plans, which will break the heart of the regiment, and the building cannot be erected this year. An amount of $10,000 was voted by the city of Brantford, and the people thought they would be fairly entitled to adequate Government assistance, and $6,200 have been expended in purchasing the lot, under instructions from the Militia Department. It cannot be denied, that even if the plans are altered, a suitable building for such a regiment cannot be erected for $13,200. The Minister of Public Works will admit this fact, and the Minister of Militia, taking an interest, as I trust he does, in the regiment, will notice that the present action will necessitate the postponement of a building for another year. I have stated the case, not in a pleading manner, for I do not desire to expend any more money than is required, but according to justice and the circumstances of the respective cases, and also in view of expenditures made in other cities, towards the erection of militia drill sheds. I do not find fault with these expenditures, but if any one looks at Hamilton, which I admit has a fine regiment, they will find the expense is not in comparison, but even that city does not possess a more efficient regiment of officers and men than the regiment in whose interests I now speak. I feel this is a serious matter in regard to the regiment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am very much afraid that if the amount is there, we shall have to expend it. When I saw the hon, gentleman the other day, I stated that the plans prepared for the drill shed were too expensive, the estimate being $50,000. Under these circumstances, I mentioned that this vote had been placed there by mistake, and I found that this had been the case. A new plan must be made on a smaller scale, otherwise we cannot proceed with the work.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not know Cabinet secrets, but I think the Minister of Militia must have submitted a request for an additional amount of money, and that fact accounts for the insertion of this amount in question. I submit this is an exceptional case, for the men are without a building of any kind, and even as regards the building which they are occupying on sufferance, it is constantly flooded and the accountements are damaged.

Mr. FOSTER. The amount in question was entered by a mistake. The Government were not to build a drill shed for Brantford, but were to give their contribution of $10,000, as was done in the case of Belleville.

this and cut them down to a plan that will require only the balance of the money left out of the $10,000 granted, you will utterly discourage the regiment. You must remember that this is a city of Finance is wrong in assuming that this building regiment, all the companies are in the city, and I is in the same position as that which was erected ask, as a matter of fairness on the part of the Government, who have been building drill sheds in other cities, that they do this simple justice to and a grant was asked to finally complete the same. It was not so with the Brantford drill shed. There was a recommendation on the part of the Militia Department for a new drill shed, and towards the erection of this new drill shed, $10,000 was granted. The Minister of Finance will see that he is all wrong, because the Militia Department got out the plans and specifications of that building, and they are now in the hands of the Minister of Public Works, who states that the plans were so expensive that they could not go on with them.

Mr. BOWELL. The statement of the hon. gentleman with reference to the grant last year, was, I think, quite correct; but I never understood that the grant which was made to the Brantford drill shed was to be in any other position than that of the grant made to the Belleville drill shed, with this difference: that the officers of the 15th Battalion, and the citizens, had contributed largely to the construction of the drill shed, and that $10,000 was appropriated by the Government to assist them in that undertaking. As the city of Brantford had passed a vote granting $10,000 for the purpose, the Government was to supplement that, but I never understood that the Government was to build the drill shed. The Minister of Finance says that the word "revote," in the Supplementary Estimates, shows clearly it was not intended to be an addition to the $10,000 which was voted as a revote in the main Estimates, and therefore it is evident that this was inserted in error.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who prepared the plans and specifications for the drill shed at Belleville?

Mr. BOWELL. They were prepared by the Battalion and as I understand they were submitted to the Militia Department and received their approval. That is my recollection.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My impression was, as the Minister says, that these men went to work themselves with a very laudable spirit and having erected this drill shed, and involved themselves in debt, they properly came to the Government and asked for a grant. This work had been done by the city of Belleville in that way.

Mr. BOWELL. The city corporation did not give them a dollar.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It was done by the public spirit of the men themselves and the citizens, but in the case of Brantford there was a recommendation of the Minister for the erection of a drill shed by the Government. As a proof of that, the plans have been prepared for months, and are now in the hands of the Minister of Public It was understood that it was the Government who were to build the drill shed. The battalion is now virtually without a drill shed. The building they occupy now is city property, the lease of which has expired. It is an unsightly building, in ruins almost, and as it is in a public park, the citizens are asking to have it removed. What are you going to do with your regiment, if they have no drill shed whatever? Are you going to allow this regiment, which has been a credit to the Province, to be disbanded? I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works what his intentions are, and whether we may expect the buildings will be erected? I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me, that a grant of $10,000 by the Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Government and $10,000 by the city is not sufficient, after the purchase money for the site is taken out of it, to erect a suitable building for this regiment.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The understanding arrived at between the Department and the gentlemen who represented the battalion whose headquarters are at Brantford, was that the city of Brantford should contribute $10,000 and the Government $10,000. The hon, gentleman will, I think, admit that that was the proposition that was made to the Department, and as I understand it, the question of who made the plans, does not in any way affect the undertaking of the Department which I have just explained. The same understanding was arrived at in reference to Belleville, with this difference: that the officers of the Belleville Battalion had a building which they had already erected, and which under the report of the officers of the Department of Militia, was considered to be quite equal to anything we could have built ourselves. Hence it was that the officers representing the force in Belleville offered to the Government the building for the same amount which had been expended upon it, and the $10,000 was granted and the building secured.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would ask the Minister of Militia if he is not in favor of a larger grant for the drill shed at Brantford? Does he not think that the requirements of the regiment, and the position they stand in with reference to accommodation, demand that there should be a drill shed erected there at once?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am in favor of having a drill shed, and the fact that there is $10,000 in the Estimates for this purpose, indicates that the Government is in favor of it. If the question is whether I am in favor of giving $20,000, when we only promised $10,000, I say no. As a member of the Government, I view it from the standpoint of the Government, and I say that the understanding was that we should contribute $10,000, and the city of Brantford $10,000. We have carried out our part of the undertaking, and I have no doubt that it will secure a drill shed adequate to the requirements of the force. It may not be as good and as handsome a building as the hon. gentleman would wish to see in his city, but that cannot be helped.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When is the work to go on?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was waiting to see what sum of money would be put in the Estimates before I would undertake that. When I know what I have at my disposal, then I will be in a position to have plans prepared; or we may say to the city of Brantford: You have contributed $10,000, go on with your drill shed, and when it is erected to the satisfaction of the Department, we will give you the $10,000 that have been voted by Parliament.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is not the position the matter is in at all. The lot has been purchased under instructions from the Militia Department for $6,200. If that had been the plan proposed to the city or ever dreamed of, the city might not have gone into the enterprise at all, or bought a lot where it did; but the city has been acting under the direction of the Militia Department all along. If the matter had been in the hands of the city, it would have taken some action long ago, but it has been in the hands of the Militia Department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to represent that the site was purchased under instructions from the Department of Militia. The Department never gave instructions to purchase the site; but when the gentle-man who took an interest in the purchase of the site submitted it to the Department of Militia for its approval, the Department said that if it suited the force at Brantford to have that site, the Department saw no objection to the selection. If the Department had been called on to express an opinion whether one site or the other was a good one, it would have said, "you must consult the local militia force, and if the site suits them, it will suit the Militia Department." This is a matter of understanding and agreement between the The Government have agreed to contribute $10,000 and the city has agreed to contribute $10,000, and I think, instead of fighting over it, we should agree to put up as good a building as we can for the $20,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister sent up there and selected a site. If he is still determined, I want to know when the work will I have explained that the regiment are without quarters, and the matter has been hanging fire, waiting for the Militia Department; the plans were prepared months ago, and the Department have never said anything as to whether they will be altered or departed from, and the force are virtually without a building for the protection of their arms and stores. It seems to me that this is a case which the Minister is vitally interested for the maintenance of an efficient militia force.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I admit all that. admit the necessity of building a drill shed. But the city proposes to contribute $10,000 provided we contribute $10,000. We have contributed $10,000. The fact of plans being prepared for a building costing $25,000 does not at all imply that the Government are responsible for the expenditure of that amount of money. We have carried out our side of the undertaking. What I suggest to the hon. gentleman is that we have to cut our coat according to our cloth; we shall have to build a drill shed according to the amount of money we have got. Beyond that I do not see that we can go.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) I want to know when the building is going on. I want to know whether the regiment in the city of Brantford are to be told that $10,000 of public money is at their disposal, and they are expected to go on with the work, or whether the Department intend to go on with it, and if so, when it will be proceeded with, and when we may expect the building to be completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I had to wait until I saw what amount of money would be voted for that drill shed this Session. The $10,000 voted before would cease to be at my disposal on the 1st of July, and therefore I had to wait. Now that I know I have the $10,000 voted here and the one to be erected for the money put at my disposal. But if the city of Brantford prefer to say: "We will erect a building for ourselves, provided you will give us the $10,000," I have no doubt the Government will assent to that, provided the building is erected in conformity with a plan that will be approved by the chief architect.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think they prefer that the Department should go on with the work, as it is to be subject to the approval of and according to the plan made by the Department. like to know whether the work can go on this year, so that the regiment can expect to have a drill shed before the winter storms.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman had better leave it in my hands.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then I only again urge immediate action on the part of the hon. gentleman, because the hon. Minister of Militia knows the urgency of the case.

Petrolea Public Building...... $4,000

Mr. LISTER. I hope the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) will succeed in getting this post office building sooner than the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) appears to have got his. So far as this vote is concerned, I have no objection at all to raise to the amount asked for the erection of a public building at Petrolea, for, on looking over the list of public buildings throughout this country, I find that Petrolea is as much entitled to one as nearly all the places that have received them, except the cities. When this matter was discussed during a previous Session, the hon. the Minister of Public Works laid down the principle that the buildings should be erected in places where the population and the revenue justified such public expenditure; that the principle of their erection should be uniform; and that these should be the only reasons guiding the Government in the erection of public buildings. Since then the hon, gentleman has falsified this statement distinctly and frankly. When he states to this House that any principle at all guides him in the erection of public buildings, he states what is not correct and takes a position he has never observed since he has been Minister of Public Works. I charge him distinctly and plainly with prostituting the position he occupies for the purpose of gaining public support. I charge him with having erected buildings in the most insignificant places for the purpose of securing support for this Government, ignoring entirely places large in population, giving large revenues to the Government, where the public interest and convenience require such buildings. The hon, gentleman prostituted his position for the purpose of bribing contituencies throughout the country to return members to support his Government. in the blue-books fully bear out my statement. The town of Petrolea is much more entitled to a public building than many of those places where public buildings have been erected; but while I say that, I say that other places are entitled to those buildings before Petrolea. Woodstock, with a net revenue of $10,875, is entirely ignored by the Government, while they place public buildings in Cayuga, which only gives a net revenue of $918; balance of $3,800 from the city, I have to say that in Strathroy, which has a net revenue of $3,180; in I have $13,800 for that drill hall, and I will cause Trenton, which has a net revenue of $3,485; in Almonte, which has a net revenue of $2,930; in Amherstburg, which has a net revenue of $1,176; and so you can go on though the list. There are public buildings in Alymer, Quebec, with only a revenue of $681; in Joliette, which has a revenue of $1,764; in Lachine, where the revenue is only $292; in Rivière du Loup, which has a revenue of $1,789; in Sorel, whose revenue is $1,863; in St. Jérôme, with a revenue of $890; in St. John's, with a revenue of $2,771; and Three Rivers, which is the largest outside the cities, which has a revenue of $4,416. Then going to Nova Scotia, I find a public building in Annapolis, where the revenue is $1,188; in Antigonish, the county which sends the Minister of Justice here, which has a revenue of $1,775; in Arichat, with a revenue of $434; in Barry, where the revenue is $776; in North Sidney, which has a revenue of $1,462; in Pictou, which has a revenue of $3,078; in South Sidney, the revenue of which is $1,582; in Windsor, which has a revenue of $3,018; in Yarmouth, which has a revenue of $537. Then coming to Prince Edward Island, I find public buildings in Montague, which yield a net revenue of $465; Summerside, which gives a revenue of $2,466. And coming to New Brunswick we find Bathurst having a public building, although its revenue is only $1,019; Carleton, St. John, whose revenue is $841; Chatham, where the revenue is $2,459; Dalhousie, which has a net revenue of $628; New Glasgow, which has a revenue of $1,374. Out of the total number of public buildings erected in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, 52 public buildings, not one is in a place which yields as much revenue as the town of Woodstock; a few of the places yield half the revenue it does, and there are only five that yield revenue equal to the post office revenue of the town of Sarnia. I do not object to the hon. gentleman getting his post office, or any other public building in the town of Petrolea, but I desire to say to the Government that the town of Sarnia is the county town of the county of Lambton; it is a port of entry and has a population of 7,200, while Petrolea has under 5,000. Sarnia is a port and gives a net revenue to this Government of $5,619 as against a net revenue from Petrolea of $3,997. About $30,000 are collected by Customs at Sarnia, and I have been unable to ascertain what is collected from Inland Revenue. So that if the Government had followed out the policy laid down by the Minister of Public Works, the first place in Lambton to have received a public building would have been Sarnia. the Government have entirely ignored the position taken by the Minister of Public Works, and have put up buildings in places which they thought would give them support. As I have stated, there are 52 towns in the Dominion outside of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia, and the town of Woodstock has a greater revenue and a larger population that any one of those places; and in all those 52 there are only five which exceed in receipts and population the town of Sarnia. In addition to that, Sarnia is used as a distributing point for the mails of the county. The mails are made up there for the different sections of the county. I repeat, if the Minister of Public Works were sincere in the statement he made, Sarnia would have been given a public building before this. I know that it will be Then take the Customs revenue: Mr. LISTER.

urged that the Inland Revenue have to look after the inspection of oils, but that does not require an office, because the inspector has to make his rounds to inspect. That is no reason for taking away from the principal town in the county the right it has to be first considered. I repeat that the Government must be held responsible for spending the public money in erecting public buildings in order to obtain political support for themselves, and I say that the intelligent electorate will take this as an insult and will see that it is an attempt on the part of the Government to buy up support for themselves at the expense of the country.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), with a great deal of interest, and I am astonished at the course which he has taken. To begin with, he generously concedes that the town of Petrolea requires facilities of the kind proposed by the Government, and I do not know that I would have troubled the House, if the hon. gentleman had not stated that the Minister of Public Works was prostituting his position in order to obtain political support for his Government. The closing remarks of the hon. gentleman were practically to the effect that this grant of public money to the town of Petrolea was intended to obtain a stronger political support than the Government now have. It was not public buildings or Government support that secured my return at the last elections. It was nothing else than the policy of the Opposition in this House, which was distasteful to the farmers in that constituency, and was particularly distasteful to the miners and refiners of oil. Before that, the constituency returned a Reform member by a majority of 160, but I was returned by a majority of 140, making a change of 300 votes. When the hon. gentleman says that this vote is given for the purpose of buying up votes, I desire to give that an unqualified and absolute denial. The hon. gentleman knows the town of Petrolea; he knows its peculiarities; he knows the immense amount of business it is doing, and also the rapid increase of business in that place. If he does not know that, I may give him a few figures to show the rapid increase in that town, and the absolute insufficiency of the offices which are there now. The Customs office is by itself in one building. The Customs office is by itself in one building. Inland Revenue has been in a small room about eight feet wide, but I believe they have had to move. We are now paying a large rent for a post office. Thus we have the Inland Revenue office in one place, the post office in another, and the Customs house in another block; and neither of these offices is sufficient for the service required. I desire to show the gross revenue from the sale of postage stamps in the last few years, in order to point out the rapid increase which has taken place, and consequently the prospective increase which the Government may look forward to:

Year.	Gross Revenue.	Year.	Gross Revenue.
1880	$2,788 06	1885	. $4,163 03
1881	3,049 12	1886	. 4,857 85
1882	3,706 60	1887	. 5,167 41
1883	3,517 20	1888	. 5,701 24
1884	4,053 42	1889	. 5,960 49

Year.	Revenue.	Year.	Revenue.
1889	$20,376 29	1884	$16,541 86
1888	22,269 62	1883	25,209 53
1887			19,976 34
1886	18.156 41		14,162 81
1885	11,304 15	1880	5,043 52

Mr. LISTER. That is a dropping off.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. There is a difference of $2,000 in the last year; but it is evident that in ten years the amount has been quadrupled.

Mr. LISTER. That is not the point.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. If the business required to be done in such a place is not a guide as to the accommodation the officers require, I do not know what is. The hon. gentleman may have some different view on the subject.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The revenue in Woodstock is $15,000. How do you explain that?

Mr. MONCRIEFF. It is clear that nearly $30,000 were derived from these two branches. We know that the officers of the Inland Revenue Department require to use valuable instruments, and that they have valuable records, and that these have to be kept in safe places. The Canadian oil inspected in Canada for some years past—and I might almost say in Petrolea, because seven-eighths or perhaps nine-tenths of the Canadian oil was manufactured in that particular place-was as follows:-

1882	6.169.353	1886	8.341.203
1883	7.135,580	1887	8,436,938
1884	7,836,949	1888	9,769,265
1885	7,843,033	1889	9,684,336

That shows a rapid increase in about the same proportion as the other items. These inland revenue officers have to inspect all this oil in from five gallon cans to forty gallon barrels, and so on up to larger tanks. I shall not take up any more time except to give the House an idea of what the value of this oil really is. From 1882 to 1889, there were 65,216,557 gallons of oil of Canadian manufacture sold in this country. At an average price of 10 cents a gallon, which would be low, that would be worth $6,521,655. The other products from the oil would amount probably to a value of about $3,500,000, which would make a total of about $10,000,000. As I have already shown, the trade in Canadian refined oil was 9,684,336 gallons last year, which is equal to a revenue of about $5,000 a day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How much in Sarnia?

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I feel that the Government in doing this, have done what is almost a necessity, for buildings of this kind are almost a necessity in that town. I would also suggest to the Minister that if he proceeds with the erection of these buildings, he would do well to consolidate the offices in one building, for the greater convenience of the public. Very many people have business at the same time with the Customs, the Inland Revenue office and the post office, and it would be more convenient to have these offices in one building. I think there is no vote that has been passed by this House which is more needed than this particular one.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has been beating the wind. Nobody when I rose to speak that Petrolea was more entitled to public buildings than most places in which they had been built throughout the Dominion. I know that Petrolea is a prosperous place, I know that it is getting along. But that is not the point here. The question is as to the statement made by the Minister of Public Works, that the rule which should govern him in the construction of public buildings, would be population and the revenue received in the place. My hon. shown that in the town friend has \mathbf{not} of Petrolea the receipts from Customs, or from post office, or from inland revenue are at all equal to those of the town of Sarnia. If the Minister's statement is to be taken as true, if it is a correct rule that is to be adopted by the Government, then I say that in this case he has violated the rule. If Petrolea is entitled to these public buildings, surely the town of Sarnia is equally entitled to them. Now, I charged that the Minister of Public Works and the Government were using these means for the purpose of bribing the constituencies. I did not refer to the town of Petrolea, but I referred to other constituencies throughout the country. Take, for instance, the town of Cayuga, with a net revenue of $910; I ask the hon. gentleman who has just spoken if that item itself does not show that the Government have deliberately put in that item for the purpose of buying support? Do they not know that before the election which was pending in the county of Haldimand, this was brought down and held up to the electors as a reason why they should elect the present hon. gentleman who represents that county, that is that the Government were going to build a post office there? -not because the public service required it, because the revenue received there is most insignificant, and the total amount of the revenue will barely more than pay the interest on the money it costs to erect this public building. Then take the town of Lachine, with a revenue of $293. The Government deliberately go to work and put up a public building in that town, while places like Woodstock and Sarnia are not given these advantages. I ask my hon. friends opposite if that is not the strongest possible evidence that the Government are not carrying out their policy of erecting public buildings where the revenue justifies it. Take St. Jérôme, with a revenue of $890; I ask the hon. gentleman and I ask the Minister of Customs how he reconciles the erection of public buildings in places that return such a revenue as that, with the statement he has made that he is always guided by the revenue derived, by population and by public convenience. The hon. Minister receives a great deal of praise often in this House for being a fairminded man, but we have all heard the statement of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) who says he does not believe a word the Minister says. Sir, one is almost inclined to believe that the hon, gentleman does not always adhere to the truth, when you come to examine his statements. I never stated that this vote was held out to the town of Petrolea to help elect the hon. gentleman, I never made the statement that it was a bribe to the electors of the county of East Lambton. I stated over and over again that the town of Petrolea was more entitled to these public buildings than most places in the Province of Ontario, and more than all the places in the other Provinces that I said anything against Petrolea. I expressly said mentioned. So the hon, gentleman must not get off the track, he must not beat the wind or kick against nothing, because I made no charges of that kind. I did make the charge, based upon the returns laid before this House, that the statement made by the Minister of Public Works is not borne out by the facts, inasmuch as he has not considered population, he has not considered revenue, he has not considered any public interest which he stated guided him in the erection of public buildings; and there is but one conclusion to be drawn, and that is that the Minister of Public Works is prostituting his position by giving public buildings to places that are not entitled to them, for the purpose of securing support for himself.

Parliament and Departmental Buildings $3,200

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a complaint that has often been made this Session with regard to the cold draughts in this chamber. All this winter, since Parliament assembled, we have suffered very seriously from the cold; I have suffered myself, and I think I could refer to every member on this side of the House. I think there must be something wrong with the windows, and I earnestly beseech the Minister to see that something is done to remedy this inconvenience next winter. The members here, all along the centre benches, have suffered. I know that the hon member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) has had to wear his overcoat in this chamber. There must really be some cause for this enormous draught that comes in at the top and goes out under our seats. There is a continuous flow of fresh air that brings the cold into the chamber.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon, gentleman is perfectly right in what he says. The complaint has been made repeatedly. I may say that we have a draught of cold air on this side also. The architect and the mechanical engineer who have made a special examination of the building say that we can hardly prevent that. The doors upstairs are constantly being opened, and that makes a draught. Then we have the doors below, and the upper part of these boxes, if I may so call them, quite open, and as soon as the doors open a very strong draught comes in.

Mr. AMYOT. Not only are there great draughts in the chamber, but the acoustic properties are very defective. I do not hear one-tenth part of what is said by hon. members; except those members on the front benches, members cannot hear anything unless some member speaks with a loud voice. The chamber is erected without regard to its acoustic properties, and the voice of the speaker is lost behind the columns in the recesses. Parliament must build another chamber, erected in accordance with acoustic principles. There are buildings in the United States where the acoustic properties are perfect in every particular, and I do not see why such a chamber should not be constructed here. Members suffer from not being able to listen to the discussions, and if there was a proper chamber as regards acoustic properties, there would not be such a repetition in Hansard of similar re-marks made by members. In fact, there is no use in our sitting here unless we can hear what transpires, for in such an event we might as well go for a holiday and have our indemnity sent to us without our attending.

Mr. LISTER.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Smith's Falls is no doubt a highly respectable town, but it cannot be compared with Woodstock or Sarnia. The Government a few weeks ago accepted a motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), declaring that they intended to be guided by the terms of that resolution, and they further declared that they have never violated its terms in their lives. Under what circumstances is this vote proposed?

Mr. HAGGART. Smith's Falls is one of the most important postal towns in Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the postal revenue?

Mr. HAGGART. $6,285. It is largely in excess of most towns in Canada which have post offices.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has about one-third the revenue of Woodstock and about one-half the population.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This subject should be fairly considered in view of the appropriation submitted. The resolution carried by the House was as follows:—

"Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, that in the expenditure of public money, the public interest and not party favoritism should control; and in the choice of places for the erection of public buildings for Post Office, Customs House and Inland Revenue purposes, regard should be had to the amount of revenue collected and of public business done."

A list of fifty-two different places where public buildings have been erected has been read, and a large majority of these places are very much below many of the towns and villages in my own county. Woodstock has, however, a population of 12,000, a large postal revenue, and a large Customs and inland revenue. Sarnia has a very much larger population than either Petrolea or Smith's Falls, and contributes very large sums to every department of the revenue; yet Sarnia is unprovided for, and the other two places I have named are provided for. That action is directly in the teeth of the resolution which the Government adopted as their future policy.

Mr. HAGGART. Taking the population of Smith's Falls and the receipts from the revenue, I do not think there are more than four or five places in the whole Dominion which have larger receipts and have not a public building.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why should there be any. What I contend is that there are larger towns unprovided for.

Mr. HAGGART. In regard to Woodstock, there is a satisfactory arrangement made by hiring a large building.

Mr. BARRON. Take Lindsay. Up to a recent time there was a suitable building rented, yet the Government erected a building. I justify the expenditure in the town of Lindsay, and I approve of it, but when they say that they are only doing these works because there are not sufficient buildings elsewhere, I say it is not a sincere reason.

Mr. LISTER. The net revenue from the town of Smith's Falls, is $4,375. I have reason to know that the people of Woodstock are not satisfied with the postal arrangements of the city. They think that a town of the importance of Woodstock, is entitled, as much as any other town in this country is, to have public buildings. It gives a larger revenue than many of the cities, and it certainly gives the largest revenue of any of the towns of the Dominion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before this item carries, would it not be well for the House to rescind the resolution passed at the beginning of the Session, which was proposed by the member for Bothwell? It certainly stultifies the House in passing this item while that resolution stands upon the records of the House. It is an insult to Parliament to proceed with this vote until that resolution is repealed; and it certainly should be repealed in keeping with the honor and integrity of this House. As long as that resolution remains on our records, this vote should not be allowed to pass, This is the if we were to stay here all summer. proper way in which to meet a thing like this. We should stand up for our honor and dignity even if we have to stay here all year. I think the people of the country will uphold us, and that they will condemn the Government for having violated a solemn pledge which they gave, which was unanimously carried by this House, and which they break on the very first occasion, when it is necessary to retain a supporter in the House, or to conciliate a constituency. It is an outrage on the people, and an outrage which this House should not assent to, and we should protest against it, and not allow it to pass, no matter how long it takes. Either do one thing or the other. Be fair or otherwise; but while you have that resolution on the Order paper, this vote should not pass, when there are other cities and towns of greater importance which are neglected by the Government. The towns of Woodstock and Sarnia have been neglected, the town of Bowmanville, the town of Whitby, the town of Durham, the town of Kincardine, the town of Hanover, the town of Mount Forest, and any number of other places of greater importance than Smith's Falls, which should deserve the consideration of the Government. So long as that resolution remains, and so long as the Government will defy the resolution they have assented to and boasted of that it was their policy, this vote should not pass, and this House should teach the Government the lesson that they cannot betray the principles they themselves have laid down. They should be taught that they cannot pass such a resolution as this, and on the very first occasion, depart from this resolution. We should show our constituents and the people of the country that they lied and deliberately lied, in the passage of this resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What? Is it withdraw the truth? No, Sir.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask the hongentleman again to withdraw that expression.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, Sir. A resolution has been passed stating that those towns which have the most business—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows very well the course which has to be taken, and which I do not wish to take, if he does not withdraw the expression.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There has been a departure from the truth, I will say that. There has been a departure from the principle contained in this resolution. Call that departure what you like. I call it a falsehood, and I will not withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes; order. It is order to stand by the truth, and I will stand by it every time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw. I know he will do so.

Mr. LAURIER. If my hon, friend would say that the Government have betrayed their principles, he will state truth and fact as well.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If I said they departed from principles every day, and every week in their lives it would be truth.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentlemen to withdraw the expression, to preserve the dignity of the chamber.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They have departed from the principle which was laid down,

Mr. FOSTER. Do not fool with the Houselike that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am not fooling with the House, and I won't be fooled with by the Deputy Speaker, the Finance Minister, or anybody else. While I have truth on my side, I will not take it back for the Minister, the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, or any other power. I say they laid down the principle, and they have departed from that principle. Will anybody deny they have departed from that principle?

Some hon, MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must again ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the obnoxious expression used by him, and which was wholly against parliamentary practice, which he, as an old parliamentarian, knows well.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will take back that word, but I will say they have departed from the principle they have laid down. They have departed from it once and twice in these Estimates to-night; and I say it is a burning shame and a disgrace to the country that we should allow it.

Government Printing Bureau -Additional amount required to complete. $7,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of that building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With this amount the total expenditure will be $248,647.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not include any of the plant?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I speak of the building.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is well that the House should understand, because my impression is, taking all that has been expended, that this same Printing Bureau cost us for the plant and building a cool half a million dollars at least, and unless I am mistaken, you will find that the work will be more expensive and in some respects less satisfactorily executed than it was under the contract system.

Mr. DAWSON. While the votes for public buildings in Ontario are being passed, I take the opportunity to say that there are certain public buildings becoming a very great necessity in the district which I represent. A public building is needed at Port Arthur, which is a large place; yet the want of it is the fault of the people themselves to a great extent, because there was a grant made for a post office and Custom house, but they could not agree on the site, and the work did not go on. Another public building we want there is a drill shed. The people are making over a magnificent lot of land to the Government, and they are willing to contribute half the cost of a drill shed, so that before another year passes I think we ought to have that building erected. In that district the revenue is increasing very fast. Last year the Customs revenue in Western Algoma amounted to $80,000 and the Inland Revenue to $24,000, making in all a little over $100,000; the revenue derived in Eastern Algoma during the year ended the 30th of June last amounted to about as much more, so that the whole district of Algoma, I think, yields a yearly revenue of $200,000, apart from postal revenues. At Port Arthur we have a postal revenue running up some years to $6,000. Therefore, I warn the Government that by the time another year comes around we shall be down upon them for public buildings for Port Arthur and other towns in Algoma. We have a magnificent battalion in Algoma, the 96th, who take a great deal of interest in keeping up their drill. They have rifle ranges, and there is not a more spirited battalion in the whole of Canada; and we want to be up with the rest of the country in buildings and everything besides.

Manitoba—Public Buildings$6,250

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister if it his intention to go on with the immigration sheds in Winnipeg during the coming summer? Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories — Court house, lock-up and police accommodation $5,000

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that this sum is to go towards building small court houses at Moose Jaw and Maple Creek, and Medicine Hat. have already voted $10,000 for this purpose, although the vote embraces court houses in Eastern Assiniboia also. The sum is small, but I hope we may count on these court houses being commenced this year at Moose Jaw and Maple Creek and Medicine Hat. I can assure the hon. Minister that the administration of justice is greatly hampered for the want of them at present. I spoke to the Minister of Justice about this item, and he told me it would be for those western towns. Last year there was a sum voted, and the people expected that they would get that accommodation. It is very necessary that it should be commenced this year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reason they were not undertaken last year was, that the plan suggested for them was too expensive and on too large a scale, and I could not undertake them without going far beyond the amount voted by Parliament. Under the circumstances, I thought it was better to wait and ask for a new vote. Of course I will have to consult with the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the administration of justice in the Territories.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Regina Industrial School......$2,000

4720

Mr. WATSON. What is the total cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not quite $40,000, including this rote.

Mr. WATSON. I do not object to this item, for I think it is important to have those schools, but I regret there is no vote for purchasing the school at Birtle. I understood the Minister of the Interior favored its purchase as an industrial school for the Indians. There is quite a band there, and since the school has been running, quite a number of them have attended it and made considerable progress.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The school was offered to the Government, and I took the opportunity of inspecting the building, as we had been assisting it by giving so much per head for a certain number of pupils. It appeared to be very well cared for. After my return I sent an expert and an inspector to examine and report on the building. It was found that the building itself was very substantial but it required a great deal of work to be done to it, to make it habitable; and as the cost of doing this would be considerable, we did not, with the many obligations we have, like to ask for an appropriation.

Mr. WATSON. What was the amount asked for the school?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think it was offered for $8,000. An estimate was made by the parties who examined it, and they reported the price was not excessive, but the building would require so many alterations and additions that the whole expense would be about $15,000. Besides that, there is no land in the neighborhood at less than $15 or $20 per acre.

Mr. WATSON. If suitable land can be purchased around the school, will the Government favor the purchase another year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would not like to make that promise at present, but will see what land there is available in the immediate neighborhood at a reasonable price. None of our institutions have less than from 300 to 600 acres. I think we could do with 100 acres.

Residence of the Lieutenant Governor, $4,000

Mr. ELLIS. How much will this residence cost? This will make $35,500 voted for this residence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the figures here, but will give the information later on.

Port Maitland or Green Cove...... $1,000

Mr. LOVITT. Does this complete the amount to be voted?

Mr. LOVITT. Have the contractors started with that work at the wharf yet?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say exactly.

Mr. LOVITT. This wharf was washed away four years ago. The result of its not having been repaired has been to drive most of the people away. Money was voted for it last year, but the Minister did not go on with the work, and I think there has been delay enough.

Digby-New pier at the Raquette-revote of lapsed amount.....

Mr. LOVITT. What is this vote for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That money was voted two years ago, but we thought that, with some repairs, we could keep the old wharf for four years more, and avoid expending the money at the time. However, the pier is now in such a state that we think we should build a new pier.

Mr. LOVITT. Are you going to build an entirely new pier, or are you going to have two piers? Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The old pier will disappear.

Mr. WELSH. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) represents that district, and I think there are some other items required in his constituency. I have been applied to and asked to see that something was done for the harbor of Port Elgin, which would make connection with his railroad. I think it would do his people a great deal of good if a larger amount were put in the estimates for that district, and with the influence he has and the open ears of the Minister of Public Works, I should have thought he would have obtained some further amount for the benefit of Tidnish Harbor.

Mr. LOVITT. How long before the Minister will put the contractors to work on the breakwater at Port Maitland?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I thought I told the hon. gentleman that we would go on with that work at once.

Mr. WELSH. We had a principle laid down to-night by the Minister of Public Works that certain repairs to some buildings to which my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) called attention, were caused to be made on a report by the Government surveyor or engineer. I see here a vote put down for New London of $1,000. want to know on what principle the Minister has inserted that amount, because I have here a return to an Order of the House in reference to the survey of New London, dated the 20th January, 1890. will read the report of the Government surveyor of what is required for that harbor, and if the Minister of Public Works will cause these works to be made according to the report of the Government surveyor, he will hear no more about it:

ment surveyor, he will hear no more about it:

"The harbor of New London is situated on the northern coast of Prince Edward Island, about ten miles southeast from Richmond Bay. The entrance is about 1,200 feet in width, and the bay, on an average, three miles wide. Several rivers and the South-West River, the French River, and the Stanley and the Hope Rivers, empty into it, the two former being navigable by vessels drawing ten feet of water, for a distance of five or six miles. New London harbor is a convenient fishing port, and also an important shipping point for the producers of a large and fertile farming district. The works constructed by the Department for the improvement of the entrance into the harbor of New London, consist of: First, a breakwater 1,050 feet in length on the sand beach at the eastern side of the entrance, built partly of piling, brush and stone, and partly of crib work. Second, a breakwater 460 feet in length on the depth at the work, brush and stone, with a squared timber block at the outer end. Third, a dam 1,600 feet in length off Campbell Point. The breakwaters were constructed with the intention of confining the ebb current, and are crected on the bar outside the harbor, as well as to prevent the stream from washing the sand into the navigable channel. The results of piling have been so far very satisfactory, the depth of water on the bar having increased from six to fourteen feet in a channel about 400 feet in width, thus making of the harbor of New London one of the best on that coast of the island. The dam at Campbell's Point was constructed with a view to increase the force of the ebb current out of the South-West River, and thus deepen the shoal obstructing its mouth, but so far the desired object has not been obtained. In file No. 96,123 it is asked: First, that repairs be made to the eastern breakwater. This has been made the subject of a special report, dated 20th January. Second, that the eastern breakwater did to the eastern breakwater be extended further seawardly. A small channel is forming past the end of the eastern breakwater, running in an easterly direction, which channel may assume larger proportions to the detriment of the main channel, which runs in a north-easterly direction, by dividing the volume of the ebb current, and therefore diminishing its beneficial effect on the bar. To remedy this possible occurrence, it will be necessary to extend the eastern breakwater in a northerly direction, a distance of 200 feet. The cost of this proposed extension I estimate at $3,500, made of pile work, with brush and stone, and a stone slope on the seaward side."

Will the Minister please take note of that, and

Will the Minister please take note of that, and not let it be a dead letter.

"In the autumn of 1888 the depth over the bar had de-"In the autumn of 1838 the depth over the bar had decreased to six feet, but owing to the construction of the breakwater, the depth is now from 10 to 14 feet, and as this depth is as much as the depth at the shipping wharves, no survey was made. Dredging on the bar would only be of temporary benefit, as it would undoubtedly fill in again with the first heavy easterly gale. Any improvement in the depth of water over this bar can only be obtained by further contracting the entrance of the mouth or harbor. Fourth, that some dredging be done to the approaches to the Bay View pier in the Hope River. This will make the subject of a special report.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant, "LOUIS COSTE."

Now, Mr. Chairman, here we have the report of the Government engineer; the date is not given upon which he held this survey, but I fancy it was held somewhere about the month of June last, so that the Minister of Public Works has had all the information before him, of what is required for the improvement of this harbor, before these Estimates were made up. Now I want to know from the Minister of Public Works what is the meaning of putting $1,000 into these Estimates to do the work that his engineer says will require $3,500 to accomplish. Another thing I want to mention is The dredge employed about the Island harbors is at present engaged in dredging Rustico harbor. Well, I am very glad she is engaged there and I hope she will do good work. I would recommend that after the dredge completes that work she be ordered to New London harbor, as it will cost only a trifling item to move the dredge and the scows there to complete New London harbor; whereas if, after Rustico harbor is completed, the dredge is moved round to the southern side of the Island, at an expense of $1,500 for towage, and then move her back a year or two after to complete New London harbor, it will be a very costly work. After the dredging is done at Rustico harbor, if she is moved five or six miles to New London harbor to complete the work as advised by his own surveyor, it will be a saving to this country, I will be bound to say, of at least $15,000 or $20,000. I am honest about I tell the Minister of Public Works that if he has the public interest at heart, it is his duty, as soon as the dredging is complete at Rustico, which is only four or five miles from the entrance to New London harbor, to move her into that harbor and do the dredging as required by this report, and to expend this $3,500 to complete the work. On the north side of the Island they have not many good shipping ports. New London is about one of the best, Cascumpec is something similar, and there has been a large amount of money laid out there. But this $1,000 is not going to be of any benefit to New London harbor. I tell you I would sooner put it in the dead meat business.

An hon. MEMBER. Strike it out.

Mr. WELSH. Yes; I tell you honestly, strike it out, or else do the work as it ought to be done. If the Government will only go by the report of their own engineer, which is a creditable report—and it is a credit to the Government that they have a man who can make such a clear and distinct report as that—it will be more creditable to the Government to see that his report is attended to. That is about all that I want to say. I would like to say a good deal more, but I do not think that will do any good. I would dearly love to see something done there. I do not expect much from the Minister of Public Works. He and I are not chums, but if he will do what his engineer recommends, I will let him off very easily.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount is placed in the Estimates for repairs on the wharf. The report which the hon. gentleman has read is perfectly correct in regard to the amount of $3,500. But that amount was not placed at my disposal by my colleagues. and, therefore, I cannot ask it to be voted by this Committee, and that is the reason why it does not appear in the Estimates. The hon. gentleman stated that the $1,000 placed in the Estimates is not required.

Mr. LAURIER. Was not sufficient.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon, gentleman alludes to his position towards me. That is none of my doing. The hon, gentleman says he intends to forgive me and so on. In so far as forgiveness is concerned, I have forgiven him long ago.

Mr. WELSH. I have nothing to forgive. The boot is on the other leg. The hon. gentleman has deceived me, he has broken his word to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WELSH. It can be seen in Hansard, and the hon. gentleman does not deny it. I am honest about this matter. Of this $1,000 how much will go on that breakwater? About $500 will go to political hacks, to some old fossils such as he has in his Department. Why could not the hon. gentleman get the $3,500, which the engineer said was required for the work? Why did he put $1,000 here? It is no good, it is no use. If it is expended it will go to dead heads, and political fossils will get hold of it for supervising, overseeing and travelling and all sorts of things. The hon. gentleman might as well take the $1,000, and rub it out of the Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I move that this item for $1,000 be struck out.

Mr. LAURIER. I submit there is force in the contention of my hon. friend, and that this motion is now warranted. The explanation given by the Government is a most childish one. An officer of the Government is sent down to ascertain the necessary expenditure requisite on a certain work, reports that it will cost $3,500, and in answer to Mr. Welsh.

that report $1,000 is placed in the Estimates. What is the reason given? The reason given is that the amount is not placed at his dis-posal by the hon. Minister's colleagues. If the country were short of money, I could understand this explanation; but when the surplus is so large as at present, what is the reason that the colleagues of the hon, gentleman would not place at the Minister's disposal the amount which, according to the report of the engineer, is required to carry out the work? It has been manifested for some time in the House and in the Committees of the House that no justice can be had except it is done for political partisans of the Government, that no county represented here by a member of the Opposition can hope to have justice done, and only those counties whose representatives are ready to support on every occasion the Government will receive, not to say favors but that justice to which they are entitled. Under such circumstances the Government may strike out the amount, I do not care; but the people of Prince Edward Island will understand the measure of justice they have to receive at the hands of the Government of this country.

Motion agreed to; yeas 23, nays 16.

Souris East—Breakwater, &c., at Knight's Point $3,700

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It appears that on account of a remark made by the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Welsh) the Government considered it to be their duty to strike an item out of the Estimates.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order. The hon, gentleman is discussing an item that has already been disposed of.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion before us is: "Souris East Breakwater, &c., at Knight's Point, $3,700." The remarks of the hon. gentleman thus far led me to believe that he is going to make a motion to strike this item out.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not think I am obliged to move to strike the item out. The Minister of Justice must feel keenly the vote he has just given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman is discussing a past debate, and he has already disavowed his intention of moving an amendment, on which understanding he was allowed to refer to a past debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon gentleman will now submit a motion he will be in order.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I move that the Committee rise. If there has been anything to cause regret to members supporting the Government it is their action in voting to strike out the last item of $1,000. This amount was thought to be necessary for repairs made in the locality, and if after due deliberation and consideration the Government have come to the conclusion that the expenditure was necessary, and if owing to an expression made use of by an hon member of this House the item has been struck out, it is an unfair act to the people of Prince Edward Island. Why have they acted in this manner? It is because the hon member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Weish) opposes the Government? There can be no other reason, and the Minister of Justice as well as the other members of the Government know full well that they have not acted in any spirit of fair play or justice to the Province. They know, on the contrary, that they have struck out this item or. account of pure spite towards the representative of that locality. It is another proof of the arguments which have been time and agai. presented to this House, that the Government intend only to give work to counties represented by their supporters. If my hon, friend (Mr. Welsh) had been a supporter of the Government he would have had $3,500 granted for this work. We have in these estimates evidence of a deliberate violation of the resolution that was passed in this House a few weeks ago, in which the Government announced to the country that in future, if not in the past, they were going to act on the same principles of justice to the various constituencies, regardless whether they received the support of the members of these constituencies or not. night we see them violate their promises deliberately, by striking out a paltry item for $1,000, when the engineer stated it should be $3,500, and they did this to punish a constituency for not sending here a supporter of the Government. action of the Government to-night is devoid of principle, and I feel we are justified in asking the committee to rise, so that the Government may try to repent of the evil they have done to-night. Perhaps they have a little conscience left and they may reconsider their action, which I maintain was outrageous.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When any hon, gentleman on either side of the House takes counsel of his passion, he is not likely to judge very correctly. I think my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island used pretty strong language towards the Minister of Public Works, and I think the Government have made even a greater mistake in striking out the small sum of $1,000. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) felt very strongly because the amount was so very much less than the engineer recommended. It does seem to me that the Government have not acted upon the advice of the hon, member. The Government have acted upon the advice of their engineer. They did not put this sum in the Estimates to please my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island and if the item were not put in the Estimates, with a view of promoting the public interest, there is no justification for it. If this money was for a proper object and in the publie interest then it seems to me it is a most improper proceeding to strike the estimate out, simply because my hon. friend, at one o'clock in the morning, used language that was not conciliatory to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. WELSH. Your hon, friend is not going to take one word back. He is going to add a lot more to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the committee ought to restore this item in the Estimates, and then pass on to the next item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the matter which is engaging the attention of the House, I must point out this fact. By the terms of our arrangement with Prince Edward Island, we undertook the charge of a great number of these harbors and breakwaters; whether that was wise or not, we have done it. Now, I believe that this harbor of New London is one of the most important harbors in the Province of Prince Edward Island. It is tolerably certain that if this money was required for necessary repairs, and if it is not now expended, this country will shortly be put to a greater expense to put that harbor in order. Everyone who knows anything at all about these matters is aware that the worst possible policy is to allow wind and tide and sea to work their will on these harbors, and that it has generally resulted in inflicting four or five times as great a cost on the whole community. Now, we have the question as to whether my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) or the hon. Minister of Public Works may or may not have possessed their souls in patience in this discussion; but there can be no doubt that the Government do not occupy a very creditable position in this matter. They brought down this item of $1,000 which my hon. friend (Mr. Welsh) says is too small, and his opinion is entitled to weight, as being that of a man who knows the country, and who is a professional expert in these matters. His opinion is backed up in the strongest manner by the engineer of the Department. There is no doubt that the Government adopted the responsibility of introducing a vote of $1,000, when their own engineer recommended nearly four times as much, and there is no doubt that they did not act in a very dignified fashion in abandoning the vote, because one hon, gentleman had a quarrel with another. My reason for interfering is this-and I shall take occasion later on, if not this Session, to call the attention of the House to what I say—that it is almost certain, that if you neglect to make the requisite repairs to this harbor now, we will be compelled within one or two years to spend eight or nine times as much as is now asked.

Motion, that the committee rise, withdrawn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much has this breakwater cost us?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $436,000. As the hon, gentleman knows, that is for the protection of the harbor of St. John.

Berthier (en bas)-Repairs to pier..... $500

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I think something should be given for the wharf at Berthier. This sum is not for the planking of the wharf nor for a building to be used as a beacon. When the works were commenced last year, I believe that a certain sum was voted for that purpose, but it was inadequate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for a new slip.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It is for a pier that has been damaged.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The railing has been carried away during a storm, and we must replace it.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. The wharf, I believe, has been damaged.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, if any repairs are required, they can be made out of the general grant.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government have considered the engineer's report recommending that $3,000 be given for works on the Rivière du Sud. Is the Government aware of it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have noticed that report, and it is now before the Council; perhaps this will satisfy the hon. member.

McGregor's Creek-To complete......$1,500

Mr. CAMPBELL. Could the Minister of Public Works inform us where and for what purpose this money is to be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is required for a length of 250 feet opposite Taylor's warehouse, to prevent damage to the foundation of the building by undermining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what he proposes to do about the dredging of the bar at the River Thames?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will be better able to answer the hon, gentleman on Tuesday.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At the early part of the Session a deputation was sent down to interview the Minister of Public Works in reference to this matter, and upon that occasion the Minister promised the deputation that a sum would be placed in the Supplementary Estimates to complete this work. I fully expected it would appear in the Estimates for that purpose. This work has been promised for a number of years. It was promised in 1887 and 1888, and last year there was a vote of \$4,000 in the Estimates. That \$4,000 was spent during the summer; and the moment it was exceeded, although the work was two-thirds done and the bar had a cut dredged two-thirds of the way, the Minister of Public Works telegraphed to stop the work at once. The Board of Trade immediately met, the Town Council immediately met, everybody interested met, and petitioned the Minister of Public Works to allow the dredging to go on a few days more, so as to complete the channel through this bar. The reply was that it was contrary to the law, and he regretted that he could not spend any money in this work until it was voted by Parliament. But every single dollar expended last summer was spent contrary to the rules of Parliament, as the amount voted had run out on the 30th June, and this work was not completed until the 4th of September. Consequently the \$4,000 was spent without warrant from this House at all, but was afterwards covered by the Governor General's warrant. The people consider that the work having been promised so often and being of so much importance, it was only reasonable the Government should have gone on and spent a little more to complete it. Unless the cut, which has been carried two-thirds through the bar, be finished, every dollar spent will have been thrown away. What has been done been thrown away. What has been done will be of no use, because until the cut is finished vessels drawing over $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet of water cannot get in. If, however, a little more money were spent to finish the work, we would have a channel there for a number of years, and the Government would not be required to Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

spend any more. The hon. Minister has had his at. tention drawn to this over and over again. I presented a petition last year signed by over 1.000 residents of the county, Conservatives and Re. formers, praying that this work should be completed, and I do not think it is treating the county right when the work is so important and can be completed for so little, that there should be any hesitation in the hon. Minister saying what the Government intend to do. For 25 miles, after you cross the bar, you have from 18 to 20 feet of water. The largest vessels can come in and sail up the river for 25 miles after they get across the bar. From 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 feet of lumber come to Chatham every year from Georgian Bay and parts north. It is not treating the county right to neglect so long carrying on this work. especially after it was promised so often and partly done. A couple of thousand dollars more will carry the cut through and give us 12 feet of water, so that vessels can come in without having to unload. If the hon. Minister cannot give me an answer to-night, I trust he will the first opportunity, and before the last moment; and I will be much pleased if he would make up his mind to expend a small amount more and finish the work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the hon. gentleman is entitled to an answer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If I do not answer, it is not through want of courtesy, but because I cannot. I told the hon, gentleman that I could not give him an answer to-day, but would give him one on Tuesday. The hon, gentleman, however, thought he would make a speech, and he has made it, and I will give him the answer on Tuesday.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In making the remarks I did, I merely wish further to impress upon the hon. Minister the necessity for this work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon gentleman has already on many occasions impressed its importance on me, and I am fully aware of all the arguments he has to bring in its favor. I have had no report or information as to what is likely to be done.

Goderich Harbor..... $2,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About Port Stanley, I promised the information to the hon. gentleman, but I also told him that the question was before Council. It has now come out of Council, an Order in Council has been passed, and I am trying now to see whether I cannot bring the company to put the harbor in proper repair. If that cannot be done, we will have to take other measures necessary for the purpose, either to resume possesion of the harbor altogether, or compel the company to do what I think they are bound to do by their contract with the Government.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am quite satisfied with that reply. It is all that I desire in reference to the matter.

Harbors and Rivers, B. C..... $8,500

Mr. GORDON. I would ask if the Minister of Public Works remembers receiving a petition from the people of Cowichan for the improvement of the navigation from Cowichan River to Somenos Lake, also an application presented by myself to the Department for the improvement of Kokisalah River; also an application from residents of Comox for the protection of the banks at the junction of the Courtenay and Tso-lon Rivers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We could not put in these Estimates every work that was petitioned We could not put for. I assure my hon. friend that, if these works are not in the Estimates they are in very good company, probably two or three hundred other applications which are not put in. We could not do all that was asked this year, and we will not be able to do it all next year. I am under the impression that two or three of the matters of which the hon. gentleman spoke require examination and report. There was one of those rivers, with a very nice name, which I never saw before in my Department, and I think I must have an examination made in regard to that. I intend to take up the matter during recess, though I do not promise what will be done next Session.

Mr. GORDON. I would remind the hon. gentleman that two years ago he very kindly granted 8500 towards the improvement of the River Kokisalah. If that is the river with the nice name, to which the hon. Minister refers, his Department cannot be unfamiliar with it. That is quite as important a river as the McGregor Creek, which I knew very well in the days of my youth; and many of these rivers in each of the older Provinces which are improved by the Government are of much less importance than those for which I have asked the favorable consideration of the hon. gentleman's Department.

Dredging.... $29,300

Mr. ELLIS. What is to be done with the amount of $16,700 for the new dredging plant in the Maritime Provinces?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is for new plant in the dredges and for repairs to the scows.

Mr. ELLIS. I had hoped that the Minister was going to provide a new dredge. None of the dredges are fit for use in the Bay of Fundy.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is quite right. We should have a new dredge for the Maritime Provinces, and one for Ontario, but these cost a great deal of money, and we could not afford to provide them this year.

Mr. GORDON. Referring to the item of $5,000 for British Columbia, I desire to ask if it is the intention to dredge the entrance to the Nanaimo Harbor to a greater depth. I made an application to that effect three years ago. This is only important in regard to the large sea-going ships. The silt from the Nanaimo River is driven across the harbor, and sometimes ships that draw more than 32 feet strike on the deposit. That seems a large draught to hon. gentlemen from the East, but last year 383 ships entered the harbor of Nanaimo and Departure Bay, and they were entered outwards for sea with 463,966 tons of coal and 5,000 tons measurement of other products.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman knows that we have had considerable difficulty in the Nanaimo Harbor because of the Nichol Rock, and we have put an amount in the was the great obstacle to the entrance to the harbor. Vessels were constantly in danger of striking that rock, and they did strike it, and perhaps some were lost. When that is done we will be in a better position to see to what extent we can go with the improvement of the harbor. Of course, this will not be forgotten.

Resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The railway subsidies, where are they?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think notice has been given by the First Minister, and they will appear on the Notice paper on Monday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the railway subsidies, of which notice has been given. comprise all that are to be brought down, or are there further ones to be brought down?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say positively. At all events, if there are any others, they will come down immediately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They ought to be down, in all conscience, on Monday.

Mr. LAURIER. We shall expect on Monday to have all the papers in connection with applications for railway subsidies, and the usual information in regard to them.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 12th May, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE EX-MEMBER FOR LINCOLN.

Mr. GIROUARD moved the adoption of the first report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. He said: As Chairman of this Committee, it is my painful duty to-day to move the adoption of this report with regard to certain charges which have been made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) against Mr. Rykert, the late member for Lincoln and Niagara. The report contains an exhaustive review of the whole case, and is the unanimous finding of the Committee, after a great deal of consideration and deliberation; and I believe it is not necessary for me to offer any remarks. I will. therefore, simply invite the House to adopt the report by a silent, but unanimous vote.

Mr. MULOCK. If I am to understand that there is to be no discussion on the report, I will confine my observations to two matters, which, though not coming within the main subject-matter of the enquiry, are incidental to it. When the of the enquiry, are incidental to it. correspondence, out of which this enquiry grew, appeared in the public press, there was a prominent reference in it by name to a Minister of the Crown, Estimates to enable us to remove that rock. It the hon. Minister of Customs. The charge made, or apparently made, against him in that correspondence, thus incidentally formed part of the enquiry; and it may be said to be completely disposed of by the general statement in the report that there had been no corrupt advance made to any Minister of the Crown, either directly or through any other person; the report finds, and correctly finds, that there is no foundation for any such suggestion. Although in this general way the report acquits all Ministers of the Crown of any charge of wrongdoing, yet I desire to emphasise the finding of the report by expressing, at all events, my individual gratification, not only at the complete exoneration of the Government, but of the individual member who happened to be mentioned by name in the course of the correspondence. It is not only with regard to the Minister of Customs that I desire to express my gratification at the finding of the Committee, but with regard to those who, not being members of this House, have not the same opportunities to defend themselves that public men In the course of that correspondence, it was alleged that corrupt advances were being made through sons of two gentlemen, one the present Premier, the other a former Minister; and now that the Committee have discharged their duties, I desire publicly to offer my testimony in regard to their finding, more especially in the case of Mr. Hugh J. Macdonald. I did not express my individual opinion before the Committee, not desiring to bias the members in any respect; but as the Committee have now thoroughly discharged their duty, and come to a unanimous finding, I desire to express my gratification at their conclusion, which was the only one that could be arrived at, that Mr. Hugh J. Macdonald was not guilty of what was suggested; and I wish to add, from my own knowledge of his character, that he is utterly incapable of having done what was suggested in that correspondence. I have had the advantage of knowing him ever since his boyhood, not only as a university undergraduate, but as an undergraduate in law, and during the time he lived as a practitioner in Toronto; also, socially and privately, I knew him; and from my knowledge of him, I can say, that of all my acquaintances, I know no man less capable of resorting to dishonorable methods, less amenable to sordid influences, or more completely protected by his nature from yielding to corrupt influences, than Hugh J. Macdonald. Therefore, however desirable it might be to allow this report to pass in silence, I cannot refrain from expressing my gratification at the two gentlemen to whom I have especially referred being relieved completely of all suspicion of wrong-doing by the unanimous report of the Committee a committee composed of members of this House having the most widely diverse political views.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before the motion is adopted, I desire to say a few words, not so much with regard to the member who is particularly concerned, but from a different point of view. However much the conduct of this member may be blameable, I think we ought to go further and deprive members of Parliament, for the future, of any temptation to do what this member has done. I believe that this House ought to take this opportunity of stating firmly, once for all, that no member of Parliament should receive, directly or In the first place, I wish to call the attention of the indirectly, any favor from the Government; or if he wants to go into any kind of speculation, either lands, limits, or railway charters, he ought to withdraw from Parliament, and take his chances like anybody else. I say this, and I say it openly. that a member of Parliament cannot serve two He cannot do his duty masters at the same time. as a member of Parliament, and be, at the same time, in receipt from the Government of part of the public domain. If I may be allowed to refer to what has appeared in the public papers, the late member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), in his address to his constituents, asks: "Why should I be selected alone, whilst there are other members like myself. who are reaping from the Government of the day, advantages they should not reap; who are living by the votes they give in Parliament?" As long as the honor of the House is left in the hands of such men, this House ought to be ashamed of its course. For my part, if I could command sufficient support to carry a resolution of mine, I would move the following :—

That the source of all the evil in this case is derived from the practice of allowing members of Parliament to ask and obtain for themselves advantages out of public property.

That such practice is contrary to the well understood rules of Parliament, for the obvious reasons that a mem-the solve of raphament, not be owneds reasons that a member cannot at the same time serve his private interest and the public interest at the same time.

That the position of a member of Parliament is one of trust, that he is a trustee of the public domain, and he ought not to derive any personal benefit from the property confided to his care.

I do not move this amendment, but merely suggest At the beginning of the Session, I introduced a Bill which had for its object the securing of greater independence on the part of members of Parliament. Of course, being on this side of the House, and not having that influence necessary to carry a measure of the kind, I could not hope to succeed in having it adopted, and it was sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where of course it died a natural death. There are many modes of killing a dog without choking him with butter. I am doing what I believe to be my duty in suggesting to the House that we should try to prevent for the future a recurrence of the facts disclosed in this matter.

Mr. GIROUARD. If the hon, gentleman will allow me, I will remind him that the other day, when we got through this investigation, his Bill was called before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and we were sorry he was not there to promote it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Though I was not there at the time, and it may have been my fault, I knew beforehand, and every hon. member knows, that there was not the remotest chance of my carrying the measure through this Session.

Report concurred in.

THE BREMNER FURS.

Mr. McNEILL moved the adoption of the report of the Committee appointed to enquire into state ments made with reference to furs taken from one Charles Bremner

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that there are some very serious questions involved in this affair, and that it ought not to pass without some discussion.

House to the fact that the matter which forms the subject of this report is not new to this House at all; that it was not new this Session, or last Session, or the Session before; that for several years it has been brought up; that for several years statements have been made which have turned out to be substantially true; and that some time ago, the very letter of Mr. Hayter Reed, which forms the essence of the whole question, was read in this House-not the revised letter, but something which purported to be the original letter, and which was substantially the same as the revised letter. I wish, in the second place, to draw attention to the fact that the Government was called upon, from this side of the House, by hon. gentlemen who brought the question up, to act; that the Government had an obvious duty to enquire and to act; that the Government, upon one occasion at least, if not on more than one, acknowledged that duty and undertook to act; and that up to this hour we have not had the slightest indication of the Government having taken the first step towards enquiry into the matters, so circumstantially stated, and so largely proved, as they were, by the letter of Mr. Hayter Reed. I think the Government are called upon to state to the House what steps they took. I think they are called upon to state whether they called upon the General commanding, who was inculpated by these statements, and by that letter, to give any report to them. I think they are called upon to state whether they instituted any enquiry into his conduct, and that of Mr. Hayter Reed and of Mr. Bedson; and if they did, when they did it, how they did it, and with what results. They should state to the House how it happens that this disgraceful matter -for so I call it-was brought to their attention so long ago without their taking any action, if no action was taken; or if action was taken, to what extent it was operative. A serious question arises upon this letter, which, at some time or another, appears to have got into the possession of the Department itself, because, as well as I can gather from the report of the proceedings, the revised letter of Mr. Hayter Reed was ultimately produced from the custody of the Department. When it got there, how it got there, what was done upon its getting there, we know not. But that letter, as revised, read thus:-

" FORT PITT, July, 1885.

"To the officer in charge of the property taken from

To the officer in charge of the property taken from Rebel:

"The General having decided to confiscate the furs now in your care and taken from rebel, desires that you should make up a select bundle of beaver and fisher for him, and a selection also for those of his staff. Have them properly packed and addressed, and keep a memorandum of what is packed.

"HAVTER REED." "HAYTER REED."

It appears that the instruction in the original letter was that the General commanding was to have a double portion—two boxes for himself, and one each for the staff. It appears also that the language used in Mr. Hayter Reed's revised letter, "make up a select bundle," was still stronger in the original letter, in which the words used were "select beaver and fisher"—the two, however, meaning pretty much the same thing. It appears further that the original letter contained instructions to the person to whom it was addressed to keep it private, not to let it be known, and was the reason why it was withdrawn and replaced by the letter I have just read. It was found it seems, that in the interval the party to whom this direction was addressed, one Warden did not keep it private, and it became known; and the object of the direction having become thus thwarted, the fact of the direction, and the impropriety of the direction were at once made manifest, I suppose, and so the direction was withdrawn, as its purpose had not been served. Now, in this whole matter there has been a grievous course of misconduct and impropriety on the part of an official of the Canadian Government. There has been a grievous wrong done to a Canadian subject. It has been a subject of enquiry and discussion here for many Sessions without effective result; and I very well remember that in the end, after the debate had been, at the request of the Government adjourned, when the First Minister announced that the great inquest of the nation should be allowed to make enquiry, it turned out that it was because the General commanding had signified his good-will and pleasure that an enquiry should be made, that an enquiry was vouchsafed. It almost sounded as if the General was still in the North-West, as if he was still monarch of all he surveyed, as if he was still the dictator of the country, the arbiter of the lives and fortunes and property of the people; because Parliament was carefully told that, as the General has been kind enough to say you may enquire, we will grant an enquiry. It was rumored—I know not with what foundation—at an early stage of these proceedings, before the Committee had met, that this matter could be accommodated in some way, and I think $3,500 was suggested as a sum which would satisfy Mr. Bremner; and I think that it was suggested that somebody-no, rather. that everybody-should pay it, so that the matter might be hushed up. My opinion is that this is a matter which should be settled by those who have done the wrong, and not by the Canadian people, who are not responsible for the wrong which has been done; and I believe that we ought not to indemnify. either in reputation or in purse, the man who did the wrong, but I believe that he should bear the consequences of the wrong he did. He has had honors and rewards enough, and he should now pay for his misconduct, and should receive the censure which is his due. I have had some little opportunity of judging of the rules of morality which have been generally applied to the conduct and the honor of British officers; and having some vague idea of what British military conduct and British military honor were, I was overwhelmed with astonishment when I saw the letter which was sent by the General, and, if possible, I was still more astonished when I saw the evidence of the General as to what he considered his rights and his powers, and the doctrines of ethics and morals which he applied to this matter. Thinking that the information available in regard to military duties and military regulations, in what may be said to be analogous cases, might afford in some way a justification for the General's view, if I looked into them a little, I took that trouble, but all I have been able to find or to read of seems to be entirely in condemnation of the course which has been here pursued. The authorities to which we generally look, fortunately, cannot bring bethat the fact that this direction became known fore our view cases of civil war. They are not cases of disturbance on British soil, but they are almost always cases of conflict with a foreign foe and on foreign soil. This case was, of course, entirely different. It was not a conflict on foreign soil or with a foreign foe. It was a conflict on British soil with British subjects-misguided, it is true, in rebellion it is true; but British subjects still—and in this case there could not be any question of prize of war or booty at all. In a case of this kind, different principles are to be applied from those which apply in the ordinary cases of military operations. But, restricted as this case thus was, it was restricted still further by the circumstance that, even when the difficulty was at the extreme height, the Administration—and I commended them at that time, and I renew the commendation now-announced that there was never an idea of proclaiming martial law in that country. The Government asserted that there was no intention to proclaim martial law, and the Government, as I shall show later on, acted upon the view and announced it from the earliest period, that the Queen's civil and criminal courts of justice were open and should remain open, and that the Queen's subjects, whether they were concerned in the rebellion or were actually in the field, should be dealt with by them alone; so that we had no proclamation of martial law in that country. seems, I think, to be clear that there was not the shadow of a claim to confiscate, and if there was even a shadow of a claim for confiscation, or if the incident of prize of war could have arisen, it seems to be perfectly clear that there was not the shade of the shadow of a claim to appropriate on the part of the confiscator; and that appropriation and that confiscation are each of them unlawful and criminal acts, the appropriation being only more improper than the confiscation. In the case of the Monmouth rebellion, it appears that articles of war were for the first time put forth introducing powers for the destruction of rebels' property on the order of the general commanding. That was in connection with the case of what was considered to be a very dangerous revolt. We know that, whether in the case of domestic or foreign war, one painful necessity is to distress the enemy by the destruc-tion of property. In fact, that may be a humane thing to do, as causing others to desist from warfare, and so earlier terminating the war. It was for that purpose alone that this authority was introduced into the Articles of War on that occasion; and accordingly, though the provision was made applicable to the property of civilians engaged in rebellion during the rebellion, the Secretary of War of the day directed Colonel Kirke no longer to use it after the rebellion ceased. a war measure in order to distress the rebels and cause the rebellion to cease. It was a measure for the destruction of property in order to terminate the war. These articles are continued in the general articles of 1872, and, if you take those articles of war in their whole scope, in all the provisions bearing in any way on the conduct of officers and soldiers engaged in military operations, you will find that they are all alike condemnatory of such conduct or of such an action as this. They show a power to take useful stores from the enemy for the service of the State. They show that there is no right to hurt the introduced upon the occasion of the Mos subject in person or property. They show that Rebellion to which I have adverted, says: Mr. BLAKE.

plunder and pillage and destruction of private pro-They show perty are high military crimes. rigorous provisions for prevention and punishment of such offences. Many of them are not applicable in terms to this case, but they are most valuable as teaching the road to be followed and as indicating to any man in the position of General Middleton, with very great plainness, how far he was departing from that road in the course he took. In the Articles of War of 1872, the 11th regulation is this:

"All public stores taken from the enemy, whether of artillery, ammunition, engineer stores, clothing, forage or provisions shall be secured for our service, and the officers commanding in chief are to be answerable to us for any neglect in this respect."

Then the 17th article, which refers to the proceedings on the commission of offences, is:

"Whenever any officer or soldier shall be accused of a capital crime or of violence or any offence against the persons or property of our subjects punishable by the known laws of the land, the commanding officer or officers of his corps are, upon application duly made in behalf of the party injured, to use their utmost endeavors to deliver over such accused person to the civil magistrate, and assist the officers of justice in apprehending and securing him."

The commanding officer is not himself to become the culprit; he is not himself to take the goods. No; he is to see that those below him who do that shameful and criminal act shall be delivered over to the civil magistrate for punishment. article 51, and the following articles deal with "any officer or soldier who shall leave his commanding officer or his post to go in search of plunder, or who being employed in foreign parts shall do violence to any person bringing provisions or other necessaries to the quarters of our forces, or break into any storehouse or cell for plunder." It was not indeed necessary for General Middleton to break into this storehouse, because he could command the storehouse to be opened; so he did not break in, but he commanded the storehouse to be opened in order that he might plunder; and he ordered the plunder to be packed up and delivered to him and his staff. But the Article of War goes on: "Shall on conviction suffer death or penal servitude for not less than five years, or such other punishment as a General Court Martial shall award." Then, under the heading "Disgraceful Conduct," in article 80:

"Any officer or soldier, or other person employed in the War Department, or in any way concerned in the care and distribution of any money, provi-sions, forage, arms, ammunition, clothing or other stores belonging to our army or for our use

And I shall show you before I sit down, that if this could be considered prize of war, it was for Her Majesty's use, it was the property of the Crown and not of the individual.

—"or who shall embezzle, fraudulently misapply, wilfully damage, steal or receive the same, knowing the same to have been stolen, or shall be concerned therein, on conviction before court-martial, shall be sentenced to five years' penal servitude."

And article 81 says:

"Any soldier who shall steal or embezzle Government moneys or property, or shall receive the same, knowing them to have been stolen or embezzled, may be sentenced to such punishment other than death, or penal servitude, as the court may award."

Then article 103, which is one of those, I fancy, introduced upon the occasion of the Monmouth "Any officer or soldier who shall commit any waste or spoil, either in walks of trees, parks, warrens, fish ponds, houses or gardens, vineyards, olive groves, cornfields, enclosures or meadows—or shall maliciously destroy any property—whether belonging to our own subjects or to inhabitants of other countries, unless the destruction of property shall be ordered by the commander in chief of our forces, to annoy rebels or other enemies in arms against us, shall, if an officer, on conviction, be cashiered or suffer such other punishment: &c."

And Article 130 says:

"In addition to any other punishment which the court may award, a court martial may further sentence any offender to be put under stoppage of pay until he shall have made good any loss or destruction of, or damage or injury to, any property whatsoever, occasioned by his wilful or negligent misconduct."

So far with reference to the articles of war, the whole tenor and spirit of which go to show to any man who has read them but for the first time, and much more to a man like the General with whom they ought to be familiar next to his bible-show, I say, to any one familiar or unfamiliar with them, how far this course was a departure from the spirit and doctrine and practice of the British army as so prescribed. Then, Sir, if you look at the Wellington Despatches and General Orders you will find numerous instances of the severest possible course being taken with reference to those who engage in plunder and pillage. I have looked out many of them, and I cite only one that is the most familiar, because it happens to be quoted in the authority upon these subjects. In October, 1810, the Duke of Wellington announced by general order that:

"He was concerned to have been under the necessity of carrying into execution the determination which he has so long announced, of directing the immediate execution of any soldiers caught plundering, and that a British and Portuguese soldier have consequently been hanged this day for plundering in the town of Leiria where they were, contrary to orders, and for other criminal purposes. He trusts this example will deter others from these disgraceful practices in future, and that the troops may depend upon it that no instance of this kind will be depend upon it that no instance of this kind will be passed over.

Then I looked to our great neighbors who were engaged in a gigantic struggle some years ago, to see what course they pursued when they were engaged in that struggle which added to all the horrors of war, the further horror that it was a domestic war upon the most tremendous scale; and the instructions that were given by them in cases where martial law was proclaimed—a class to which this case does not belong—are of importance. The instructions which governed their armies, issued in 1863, are stated in Clode's book as fol-

"Martial law in a hostile country consists in the sus martial law in a hostile country consists in the sus-pension by the occupying military authority, of the civil and of the criminal and domestic administration and government in the occupied place, and in the substitution of military rule and courts for the same, as well as in the dictation of general laws as far as military necessity requires this suspension, substitution or dictation."

There is the rule of war—if martial law be proclaimed it is to abrogate all ordinary conditions so far as, and no further than, military necessity requires:

"As martial law is exercised by military force, it is incumbent on those who administer it to be strictly guided by the principles of justice, honor and humanity; virtues adorning a soldier even more than other men, for the very reason that he possesses the power of his arms against the unarmed. * * 5. Martial law should be less stringent in places and countries fully occupied and fairly conquered, * * 6. All civil and penal law shall continue to take its susual course in the enemy's places under martial law, unless interrupted or stopped by order of the occupying military power."

These rules are founded on just principles which must commend themselves to every man, they are based upon no technical treatment, but upon the obvious principles of justice and mercy. a man made a dictator over the country, and entitled to make laws for the people; and the fundamental principle stated is that he is to act "upon the grounds of justice, honor and humanity," and that all the more strictly because he is all powerful for the moment against the people, who are unarmed. So, in the case of the Canadian rebellion of 1837, a case which comes closer to ourselves, the opinion of Lord Campbell and Lord Cranworth upon the subject of martial law was this:

"For the reason quod necessitas cogit defendit, we are of opinion that the prerogative (of creating martial law) does not extend beyond the cases of persons taken in open does not extend beyond the cases of persons taken in open resistance, and with whom, by reason of the suspension of the ordinary tribunals, it is impossible to deal according to regular course of justice. Where the courts are open so that criminals might be delivered over to them to be dealt with according to law, there is not, as we conceive, any right in the Crown to adopt any other course of proceedings. Such a power can only be conferred by the Legislature."

Once again, I apply that rule and I say, here was no martial law nor any occasion for it. The Administration would have been morally criminal if they had attempted to proclaim it; but they did not proclaim it. The courts of justice were open, the courts of justice were about to be applied, as I shall show presently, to this aggrieved subject; and yet you find martial law-no, not martial law at all; but something quite beyond the rigors of martial law unjustly exercised, beyond the extremest abuse which could be committed under the guise of martial law. The rule is stated by Lord Hale as follows:

"In time of peace the exercise of martial law in poin of death is declared murder."

That is still law.

"A military officer having prisoners taken in the riot, should hand them over to the civil power, if existing; but if not existing, then his responsibility is to execute justice in the best manner that circumstances afford him the opportunity of doing; by civil tribunals if they can be convened, or by courts martial, if those courts only can be summoned."

Then Clode goes on to say :

"Such necessity arising for the trial of civilians by court-martial, the commanding officer will be careful to compose those courts of men (civil or militarry whose experience and character afford to the criminal the best security for the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion in the most solemn functions of judicial administration which they, as judges, are thus unexpectedly called upon to discharge. * * The jurisdiction of the court is to be upheld by the supreme power of the executive Government to administer justice at all times."

I call attention to the fundamental principle that justice is to be administered, and this, if possible, by the civil courts, if not, then by courts erected for the occasion, but still erected to administer justice; and I need only ask the House to apply these principles to the transaction which took place and which forms the subject of this report, and to say whether they have not been, so far as possible, violated instead of observed. Then Clode says, on page 168:

"The result of exceeding powers. Those charged with wrong in the civil or criminal courts are to meet the indictment or suit, upon their own responsibility, either alone, if Governors, or with the aid of the public department, if military officers.  They must be prepared to know that martial law was not only established defacto but dejure; for otherwise, indeed, any usurpation might be tolerated."

"This done his act must be justified as coming within the limits of his authority.

I cite this because it alludes to the principle of British rule, the constitutional principle, which is that the Crown can do no wrong; but that the subject must not be aggrieved without remedy; and, in order that the subject may not be so aggrieved, no person appointed to power by the Crown who exerts that power can go beyond what the Crown can give or the Legislature has given, without personal responsibility to the subject for wrongs done. Upon this topic of martial law and the principles of its administration in those cases in which a commander in chief is clothed with the power and does assume it, no less a person than the Duke of Wellington in April, 1851, in a very important discussion in the House of Lords, which involved some of these questions-I refer to the discussion on the disturbances in the Island of Ceylonmade this statement :

"Martial law was neither more nor less than the will of the General who commanded the army."

That is what General Middleton seems to have supposed he was invested with, and that he had power to do anything he pleased.

-"In fact, martial law meant no law at all. Therefore

What is the sequitur? That you may rob the subject? That you may order and do just what you like? No.

you like? No.

-"Therefore, the general who declared martial law and commanded that it should be carried out into order was bound to lay down distinctly the rules and regulations and limits according to which his will was to be carried out. Now, he (the Duke), in another country, carried out martial law: that was to say, he had governed a large proportion of the people of a country by his own will. But then, what did he do? He declared that the country should be governed according to its own national laws, and he carried into effect that will. He governed the country strictly by the laws of the country, and he governed it with such moderation that political servants and judges who had at first fled or been expelled, afterwards consented to act under his direction. The judges sat in the courts of law conducting their judicial business, and administering the law under his direction."

All this shows that with whatever power you are invested, under the great exigency which makes salus rei publica suprema lex, you are bound to use it as little as you can; and that, in what use you do make of it, your action must be founded on the general principles of eternal and immutable justice. You are to be just, you are not to interfere beyond what is necessary, and your interference is to be based on the principle of justice. And this, when in a foreign country, when martial law has been proclaimed. How much more so when the country is our own, and when there martial law has not been proclaimed. I said the question of prize of war does not ever arise in case of a rebellion. A British subject can be deprived of his property only by judicial or legislative action. By judicial action, based upon the existence of the general law of the land, which gives the result of an escheat of the property of an individual convicted of treason, or by ex post facto legislation by a bill of attainder, in each case corrupting his blood. In these two ways only can a British subject, or his heirs, be deprived of his property, and that is a distinction, a characteristic belonging to the British subject which we ought to sacredly preserve and maintain. You may declare martial law; you may try a man and the Banda-Kirwee booty, in which Dr. Lushington Mr. BLAKE.

execute a man as a rebel taken in arms, by a court. martial, and yet his property is not alienated but it goes to his children. You cannot deprive him or them of his property by that course. In order that forfeiture may result he must be found to be a traitor by the courts, the ordinary courts of the country, in the ordinary course of the administration of justice. He may have fallen in the field itself. he may have fallen by your own artillery in battle against you, and the same result happens. There is no corruption of his blood, and his property cannot be forfeited. Now to turn to another With respect to the case of the spoils of war, when that principle is at all applicable, if this were such a case, it is perfectly plain that no personal right arises to the property in favor of the commander in chief or other person who may happen manually to obtain possession of prize or booty of war. The statement of Clode, "Military Forces of the Crown," is this:

"When the expenses of war were borne by the Crown (possibly before William III) the spoils of war belonged to the Crown as part of the personal rather than the public revenue. Thus the disposition of the prize was made by the articles of war; and Parliament did not interfere." By the 25th section, Articles of War, 1672, there is this provision made:

"In what place soever it shall please God that the enemy shall be subdued and overcome all the ordnance, ammunition and victuals that shall be there found shall be secured for our use, and for the better relief of the army, and one tenth part of the spoil shall be laid apart towards the relief of the sick and lame soldiers."

But after the appropriation Acts, expenses of war were provided by Parliament, the Crown dealt with prize as a trustee for the public. The House of Commons appointed Commissioners of prize and, aided by statutory power, the sanction of Parliament was thus given to the distribu-tion. But the sole right of the Crown has always been allowed. That right was conferred—

"Not for private purposes or personal splendour, but for the public service to answer the great exigencies of the public interest and the claims of public justice." These were the words of Sir William Scott, afterward Lord Stowell. That authority further says:

"Prize is altogether a creation of the Crown: no man has or can have any interest beyond what he takes as the mere gift of the Crown: beyond the extent of that gift he has nothing. Bello parta cedant reipublica." Lord Brougham said:

"The Crown has property in prize and can deal at its pleasure with it. The title of a party claiming prize must therefore in all cases be the act of the Crown, by which the Royal pleasure to grant it is signified."

It is a matter of pure bounty.

"A grant made to the army by the Royal warrant is in certain definite shares and proportions, and it is the only authority given to the Secretary of State to decide these questions."

By the statute of prize, 2nd William IV, chapter 53, it is provided that the officer in chief in command is to appoint agents for the collection and realisation of booty by rule, and within one month afterwards the agents are to transmit the amounts to the Chelsea Hospital. One of the most important cases-having reference to the special conditions of the question which exist in India, where we know the tenure of the land is peculiar, where a condition of the native states and populations existed, from semi-dependence merging into servitude on the one hand, and rising into independence on the other-was that connected with gives valuable information on the general question. He said:

"As to grants of booty made by the authority of the Crown, and grants of money through Parliament made, although no booty or none of the same value has been captured—all booty belongs to the Crown; the Crown disposes of it among the troops engaged as the advisers of the Crown may think fit to recommend. It seems this was always the case and is now regulated by the 2nd William IV, chapter 53, regulating the payment of army prize money, which apparently dealing with the East Indies provides that in all captures of any fortress or possession of Her Majesty's enemies, or any ship or vessel in any road or haven of such fortress; and in all captures, expeditions or actions from which prize money, or bounty money, or grants shall arise, the commanders and other officers and soldiers therein engaged, shall have such right to act as Her Majesty shall think fit to order in all the arms, ammunition, stores of war goods, merchandise, booty prize and treasure belonging to the State or to any public trading company of such enemies which shall be found in such quarter, or possession, or captured, or granted for such expedition or action, to be divided in such proportions and according to such general rule of this division for the army as Her Majesty shall establish, or in default thereof as Her Majesty by sign manual shall direct."

"That decision is arrived at on the advice of the law

"That decision is arrived at on the advice of the law officers. The proposition is clear, that all prize taken in war belongs absolutely to the Crown, and for one and a half centuries the Crown has been in the habit of granting the prize, after condemnation, to the takers."

Another result of the cession of prize, and that by no means unimportant, is, that it restrains pillage, as you will find stated repeatedly. The result of any other course would be to recognise some right in the actual taker by the fact of his taking, and so to have pillage indiscriminately, instead of the first idea being the defeat of the foe and victory for the army. That property captured at sea should be kept intact is to the interests of all parties, of neutral and friendly powers, that if not prize, it may be restored to the captor, and if I have said prize it may be legally distributed. that the Ceylon case was one of great importance. It was the case of a rebellion. It was a case in which martial law was proclaimed; and Colonel Drought, who was commanding the forces, issued a proclamation threatening confiscation or attachment of the land or goods of the disaffected. Lord Torrington, the Governor, later on, threatened further measures of that kind against those who did not within twenty days return to their homes. Now what was done in that case? I tell you what was done in order that you may see, in a case in which exceptional measures were taken, the course that was pursued, though even that course received a rebuke which I shall show you. Martial law, as I say, was proclaimed; then first warnings were given to the people; then second, to a certain extent, they were acted upon; and what was done? The property was sequestrated by the military authorities, taken to the store house, we will say at Battleford, to keep it safe, being so sequestrated. The perishable articles were sold, an account was kept of the receipts, and the goods were ear-marked so that it might be known whose goods they were and what price they fetched. The articles which were lasting were kept intact; and of course the land was left untouched; and in the end what was done was this. The value of the goods which had been sold, and the property in specie which was not sold, were restored to all those who had not been found guilty of high treason by the ordinary courts. Even the goods and property of those who were hanged by courtmartial, were restored to the heirs and next of kin. In the case of those shot to death in arms, $149\frac{1}{3}$ the same rule was pursued. There was no attempt to plunder as there was here. A bill of indemnity was brought in by the legal authorities after peace had been restored, and that Bill was very wide in its terms. It was considered by the Colonial Secretary, Lord Grey, and in his report he points out:

"That the measures taken—"
Those which I have described—

-"did not fall within the ordinary course of martial law"—
The ordinary course even of martial law did not justify the sequestration of the property of the subject, it did not justify the sale of the perishable articles, and did not justify the taking possession of these which were unsold; but Lord Grey adds, that it may have been necessary, and competent for indemnification. The sequestration, the selling of the perishable goods, the keeping of the accounts and the restoring of the property may have been necessary, but it was competent for indemnification. But what does he add?

"If the property of persons sentenced by court-martial for insurrection, but who had in no legal way incurred forfeiture, had been seized and sold for the benefit of the Government, nay, if persons suspected of rebellion had been thus despoiled—"

That is the phrase the Colonial Secretary used with reference to a transaction which was not one of taking and pocketing property by a commander, but one of seizing it and selling it for the use of the Government—

-"had been thus despoiled, the words of the law seem large enough to cover even such arbitrary proceedings. This goes much further even than necessity or justice could warrant."

That is his criticism upon the proceedings on the Ceylon rebellion. Therefore, Sir, if martial law had been proclaimed in the North-West; if the goods of Bremner, suspected of being a rebel, had been seized; if, being perishable goods,-which they were not, for they say that some of them are as good as new, now, and shining upon other backs -if they had been seized and sold for the benefit of the Government, the act would not have been suffered to be the subject of indemnification at all. But in this case there was no martial law, the courts were open, Bremner was at the very time being sent by his confiscator for trial, to ascertain whether he was a rebel or not. The confiscator had himself taken the goods for safe-keeping; the rebellion was over; the General was on his way back, victorious, to be laurelled by the authorities at home, and to be enriched by us, and at that time—yes, at that time—he appropriates the goods to himself. He does not say "they are perishable goods, which will be lost if they are not sold, and I sell them for Government." He does not say "they are lasting goods which will be lost if I do not keep them, and I keep them for Government." But he says: "I take them for myself." The rule then is: that the State has no right to touch the goods of a British subject by the military power or otherwise than by the course of law, and that when, acting through the military power, the State engaged in a foreign war, does take prize or booty, it is for the State and not for the individual, and the State afterwards grants what it pleases to grant, and as it pleases to grant it; and one of the reasons of that rule is to deter as far as possible from pillage and plunder, and to keep within the limits of honor, justice, humanity and legality as far as may be, those who have the power of the armed over the unarmed, as a military force has over the civilian population of a country, whether the war be foreign or domestic. Now, Sir, I want to apply , these general principles to the case in hand, and to ascertain what the general course of the Government, and of the Commander himself was, as to the persons and as to the property of those who were engaged in this rebellion; and also the result of General Middleton's course, in the particular case of Bremner and his furs. Now, Sir, I have nothing but words of commendation on my own part, for the course which the Government pursued-so far as it has been communicated to us—during the rebellion, with reference to the instructions they gave as to dealing with persons and with property. First as to persons, I will read what was stated across the floor of this House at the time, and seems to me, as I say, to merit nothing but words of commendation. Very early in the rebellion, Colonel Crozier, in command of a detachment of the Mounted Police, issued the following proclamation :-

"PROCLAMATION.

"All persons found to take part in the rebellion against Our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, or those retained by the rebels against their will, will receive protection on presenting themselves to the Commanding Officer at Carleton and Prince Albert.

" God Save the Queen.

"L. N. F. CROZIER, "Com't N. W. M. P."

Immediately after Batoche, General Middleton's diarized report as to what he was doing, under date of 13th May, reads as follows:

"The rebels were continually coming in with white flags give themselves and their arms up. * * * I have a list The rebels were continually coming in with white flags to give themselves and their arms up. * * I have a list of the worst of the rebels, and I dismiss those not in it, with a cantion to return to their homes, and a warning that if hereafter any charge is brought against them they are liable to be arrested. I have now three prisoners, two of them being members of Riel's council."

On the 28th May, 1885, I made this enquiry of the Government:

"Whether Government has given any instructions to, or communicated with General Middleton as to the disposi-tion of any of the insurgents who have surrendered?" To which the Minister of Militia replied: '

"No instructions were issued to General Middleton, except in so far as instructing him to send to Regina the persons whom he considered should be committed for the considered should be considered shoul

The House will remember that about that time, or before, a proclamation was issued by General Midleton, with the praiseworthy view of causing those on whom he might prevail, to desist from further rebellion, and to come in and surrender, but this proclamation I do not happen to find in the midst of the voluminous papers. Such a proclamation, the hon. Minister of Militia will agree, was issued, and it was a proper proclamation to issue. On the 16th July the hon. Minister of Public Works, on a question being raised as to the disposition of the arrested men, said this:

"The question is how to distinguish these men-who is a leader, who is not a leader, who has committed an act against the peace of the country, who has committed murder or any other offence, and who have not committed such offences?"

their homes: others fell on the field; others were wounded, and a number of those wounded are in our hospitals. But the question of deciding who is the leader in these troubles, who has committed a grievous offence, the offence of murder for example, and the question whether a man was guilty or not—these are questions which it is not for us to try; it is for the tribunals of the country to decide the question. That is the reason why you did not see the men tried by martial law. The men are to be tried by the civil authorities and under the laws of the country. I do not think it is in the interest of those men who are to be placed on their trial, or in the interest of the peace of the country, or in the interest of anyone, that we should interfere in a matter of this kind. The only interference we should make is this: to see that the men have a fair and impartial trial. That is their right, and it is what the Government intend to secure for them, and what they have intended from the beginning, to see that these men, beginning with Riel down to the last man in custody, have a fair and impartial trial."

Again the hon. gentleman says:

Again the hon. gentleman says:

"The court will first decide whether these men are guilty or not."

Again:

"It is not for the interests of these poor people that such a course should be pursued. I say poor people, for those people, whether guilty or not, are always pitied when they are called upon to stand their trial."

The hon. First Minister, a little later, said this:

" The General discharged at once, on his own responsi-The General discharged at once, on his own responsibility, the great mass of those who were taken, whose offence was rising in arms, who were not leaders or supposed to induce others into the rising, or to have been guilty of special acts of atrocity. We have exercised that discretion very largely; of course, the Government very readily entrusted that discretion to a man—"

That is, General Middleton-

-- "who is equally remarkable for his personal courage, great caution and great humanity."

Again the Minister says:

"Only those in whom there is found decided criminality, on the prima facie evidence laid before the Crown prose cutors, will be put on trial."

Well, Sir, you remember the circumstances—to which I shall have to allude later on—under which General Middleton exercised that high power with which he was at that time entrusted. He was the grand jury; he was to determine who should be sent to be tried for their life, and who should not be; but having exercised that power, in the case of Bremner, and having decided that he and those with him should be sent for trial, what happened? The Sessional papers report what happened. The information was on two counts: first, conspiracy to make war on Her Majesty—the high treason count; and, secondly, conspiracy to seize and take possession by force of goods and merchandise of the Queen, then being carried from Swift Current to Battleford for Her Majesty. When Bremner and the others who were charged with him, were brought before the court, the Crown prosecutor, Mr. Ösler, after some prefatory remarks, made this

"The prisoners were in a very difficult position. "The prisoners were in a very difficult position. They were brought into camp (Poundmaker's) probably without their consent, by a large body of armed Indians; and having got into that camp, they may have been led into the acts complained of without knowing the serious position they were placing themselves in in so doing. We have considered that originally the desire probably of all the prisoners was to stay in their settlement. We have considered also that they had their families and their property to protect against some uncontrollable violence—" to protect against some uncontrollable violence murder or any other offences, and who have not committed such offences?"

And then I condense his words thus:

"Of the men who were battling, all are not under arrest at Regina ready to stand their trials. A large number were placed at liberty at once, and are now at M. Prake.

 $_{\rm obtained}$ by allowing them to be discharged on their own recognisances to appear."

Further on he said:

"Unless evidence implicating them with acts of personal violence appears, they will not be called on-not called on for the offence against allegiance."

I need only refer you to that charitable and careful statement of the Crown officer, acting on the proper and lenient general instructions indicated by the First Minister and the Minister of Public Works, and acting deliberately, I think in the month of September, after having collected all the evidence. I need only refer you, in addition, to the sworn evidence of themen themselves and of Father Cochin, which, I think was the name of the priest, and of others belonging to the country. Such was the situation when the trial came on; the men were without trial discharged. So much with reference to the general course as to persons, and the result as to Bremner individually. Now, let me turn to the discussion on the method of dealing with property by the force. On the 28th of May my hon. friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) asked this question:

"Whether it is true that on the 8th of May soldiers pillaged the houses of Half-breeds, destroyed a quantity of articles belonging to them; demolished Madame Tourand's house, broke her furniture, etc., at Fish Bay; destroyed windows of Vandal's house at Gabriel's Crossing, broke up furniture, and set the bouse on fire; and whether the Government intend to instruct its commanding officers to take the necessary steps to prevent a repetition of such excesses and to punish those who have been guilty of them?"

The hon. Minister of Militia replied:

"It is not true. Strict orders were given by General Middleton to the force not to enter any house or touch any property, under pain of severe punishment."

Is the Commander-in-chief the only person who was exempt from those orders? Could he honestly tell the common soldiers not to do, in the height of battle, with their passions roused against the men with whom they had just been fighting, that which he felt justified in doing himself, in cold blood, for filthy lucre, after the rebellion had ended? He stands self-condemned. The Minister's reply continues:

"Official despatches received mentioned nothing about the details asked for. The intention of the Government is to allow the Commanding officer, who knows his duty as a soldier, to look after the troops under his command."

I quite agree, that having given these instructions, and assuming that they were to be carried out by the Commanding Officer, the Government were right in the position they took. On the 2nd of July, the hon member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) read from a correspondence in the Mail newspaper of the 19th of June, the effect of which was, that the soldiers destroyed much and took away a great deal at St. Laurent and Fish Creek from the Half-breeds' houses, of whom many were loyal, and others were dragged into the insurrection against their will, and that in spite of the strict orders given by General Middleton, the soldiers had robbed and destroyed everything they could lay their hands on; and the hon. member for Hochelaga asked for some report on this state-The hon. Minister of Militia replied:

"As to that part which speaks of the most stringent orders being given by General Middleton to prevent such disorders as those complained of, I have received a communication direct from the General stating that he had given the most absolute orders to that effect. I have even called his attention to the facts mentioned, and 'the General has answered that so far as he had been able to judge of the facts, he did not believe in these reports."

I have read from the hon. Minister's reply only an abstract of that which is material to this part of the case. Now, Sir, there you find rules laid down—rules consistent with military practice, and consistent with the honor of the Canadian militia—rules specially applicable to this case, in which these few unfortunate, misguided men, but, after all, fellow British subjects, were the persons and whose was the property in question. Now I turn to the General's own action, as stated in his evidence before the Committee. He was enquired of with reference to what took place at Batoche, and he said, on the 19th page of the report of the Committee:

"In the middle of hard fighting the men found these things, but the private houses and property of loyal people anywhere near the place was not touched. But I did not consider it was my duty to protect the property of the rebels we had just been fighting hard with."

I ask whether that is in comformity with the statement I have read. Who was to decide? The rebels did not carry their furs on their backs, or deposit them in their rifle pits. They left them in their houses. Who was to decide at that moment whose property any particular furs where, or was the process of confiscation to be performed by the common soldier, with the prize before him, by awarding to himself the property which he confiscated? We were told that strict orders had been given to prevent pillage and destruction of property; but we find General Middleton saying:

"But I did not consider it was my duty to protect the property of the rebels that we had just been fighting with."

He grossly mistook his duty.

At page 20, with reference to the Batoche furs, the General stated that he did not himself take the furs, but was fortunate enough to obtain furs through some one unknown:

"My aide-de-camptold me that somebody had put a box on board the steamer and said it was for me. I asked him what it was, and he said it was furs. I said: Who put it on board; and he said: I have not the slightest idea."

The General was asked who put them up for him, and he replied:

"I have not the slightest idea who put them up for me-I have not the slightest doubt it was done by some men of the force who got them, and they thought it was a nice compliment to pay me, so they put them on board. I did not want to ask about it.

This spontaneous and anonymous present of a bale of furs, known by the General to have been the result of pillage, was placed on board the steamer. He knew, he was satisthat the men of the force had taken the furs, and he thought they were paying him a nice compliment by making him a present of some of them and putting them on board for him. They put them on board unknown to him. So much virtue must blush unseen; and he himself did not want to ask who should get the credit for it. That is the condition of things with reference to the Batoche furs. As to the Bremner furs, General Middleton was not invested with any power whatever; he was not attempted to be invested by the Government with any power; the instructions of the Government merely were to prevent all pillage and destruction of property; and that was his plain and obvious and sole duty. He was invested with this power only, that of deciding whom he would send down to Regina for trial.

At page 13 of the report, his own evidence shows that, after Poundmaker had been taken, some The General half-breeds came from the camp. was told that there was some reason to believe some of the men had been rebels, as some of them had been recognised as having been at Cut Knife; and it was reported to him that people were carrying off some of Bremner's furs, and upon that report he ordered these furs to be taken and put in the police barracks for safe keeping. These furs, I think, would have been there safely kept, if he, himself, had not later on ordered them to be taken out from the place where he had ordered them to be put by. after ordering them to be put in the barracks for safe-keeping, he ordered them to be packed up for himself. But he says that, later on, he got further information that a rifle belonging to one of the men killed at Cut Knife had been found in Bremner's possession. That in itself, was of course, susceptible of satisfactory explanation as to Bremner's innocence, but without seeking such explanation, he ordered all these men, Bremner included, to be sent down to Regina to be tried; and at this same time, when he was reaching this conclusion, Mr. Hayter Reed reminded him of Bremner's furs, and thereupon he ordered them to be confiscated and divided, himself taking the best. The revised letter reads:

"The General having decided to confiscate the furs now in your care and taken from rebel, desires that you should make up a select bundle of beaver and fisher for him and a selection also for those of his staff."

Now, what was this man's situation? He was, he thought, a dictator. He had the awful power of deciding who should be sent for trial and who should be left in peace. He says:

"I thought I was the ruling power up there, owing to the state of war, that I could do pretty much as I liked as long as it was in reason."

He knew, however, that he had no power to try Bremner or to determine his guilt. He determined, therefore, to send him on for trial, as to his person; but, at the same time, he determined to condemn and appropriate his property. determined that there was sufficient evidence against Bremner to warrant his being tried, and he sent him to Regina for that purpose. But as regards the property, the question of innocence or guilt he put in a train of immediate adjudication by himself, and at the same instant that he was ordering the man to be tried by competent authorities as to whether he was innocent or guilty, so far as his person and life were concerned, he judged, without the slightest warrant of authority to be found anywhere, that he was guilty, so far as his property was concerned, and, so judging, he, by one single operation, confiscated and appropriated his goods for himself. He said he fully believed that having directed the confiscation of the furs belonging to a rebel, he was not exceeding his powers in ordering some for himself and some for his staff, his excuses being: "I did not think it was unreasonable to allow a few of those furs to be taken; and again: "I might as well have some too." He directed that Bremner be sent to trial to find out whether he was guilty of being a rebel or not; but, as regards the furs, he tried him in his own mind and adjudged him guilty, and confiscated his property. He could not confiscate Bremner Mr. BLAKE.

tooth for his share of the booty, and so he sent him to Regina to take his chance. But he thought he could confiscate his furs; and that he did without trial or proof or anything else. While he could not find Bremner guilty of being a rebel, so far as his person was concerned, he decided him to be a rebel to the extent of confiscation, and at the same instant decided to divide the spoil, and to take the lion's, or rather the wolf's share. That seems to me utterly disgraceful. I cannot, I con. fess, understand how it is possible that any man in the position of General Middleton could, for an instant, have allowed his moral sense to become so far blunted and confused as to have been guilty of the act he has committed. It is said that the plunderer has been plundered—that what he took from Bremner was taken from himself on the boat. I suppose whoever took it, thought he had as good a right to take it as had General Middleton. But that makes no difference. It is the disgraceful course which was taken by the General which has given rise to the whole loss. I am glad the loss has been ascertained; and I hope the Government will see fit to take steps to see that the General makes good the loss and withdraws from our service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has, in the most interesting manner, given us a treatise upon martial law, and the important questions cognate to that subject, which the hon. gentleman has treated with that knowledge he always displays in discussions of any nature. The question, as I understand it, is perfectly stated in the report which has been submitted to the House. The report goes into the facts proven before the Committee appointed for the purpose of investigating this case. In that report it is stated, and the General, in fact, admits it in his own evidence, that the furs, which had at first been put up for safe-keeping in the police barracks at Battleford, were, upon subsequent orders sent by the General and written by Mr. Hayter Reed, distributed, two packages having been made up for the General's use and the other packages for some of the members of his staff. Now, I wish, in the very few remarks which I mean to make, to state in the most frank and open way possible that I consider the action of General Middleton is the result of a most unfortunate error of judgment on his part. It is stated in the report, and I know that when the General himself, Sir Frederick Middleton, after obtaining the information which, unfortunately for himself, he did not possess at the time, discovered that, through his error of judgment, he had committed an act which he himself to-day admits to be an illegal one, no one more than himself regretted what had been done. I state that because, in the position which I occupy in relation to that gentleman, I had occasion to hear him express the deep regret he experienced at having given the order which was given, and is known to have been given by him. It is right to be just; it is right to be impartial, but, in dealing with a question of this kind, in dealing with a question affecting the position of a man who has rendered services to Canada, I think it is only right and proper that we should consider the attenuating circumstances—if I may so express myself—that can be brought forward. I have admitted that it was due to an unfortunate error of judgment himself, he could not take an eye, or a leg, or a on the part of the General that that order was given; but, at that time, it must be remembered, the General was in the midst of preoccupations which might to a certain extent explain the want of prudence which he showed. was on his return from Fort Pitt that this took place, and I consider that the circumstances of that time had a bearing on the case when the General himself admits that he had forgotten the circumstance—and I claim that his word must be taken on that point—that he had completely forgotten that the order had been given and that the furs had been addressed to him. But, after the order was given, it is perfectly admitted that the General saw nothing more of the furs, that he knew nothing more of them and did not receive them, and, when he returned to Ottawa, I can say, as far as my information goes, and so far as the enquiries which I thought it my duty to make, when hon, gentlemen opposite questioned me in regard to these matters, from the General himself, that he stated to me that from his memory he knew nothing about the furs, and knew nothing of what became of them, to what point they had been addressed, and had not seen them on the boat or after they got there. I admit that this is an unfortunate matter, but the General has tried, so far as he is concerned, to make up for that want of judgment or that error of judgment on his part, and has expressed his willingness to indemnify whoever is entitled to be indemnified. But, before this question is settled, I have no doubt that it will be admitted that it is important for the General to investigate the matter more fully in order to know the value of the furs which are known to have been removed by his order, and to ascertain whether these furs belonged to Mr. Bremner or not. However, I repeat that I cannot forget that the General rendered to Canada important services, and that these services were recognised by both sides of the House, and, if, in considering this matter, we can arrive at the conclusion that this was an error of judgment, and not an intentional wrong, I think we would show all the leniency, which, I consider, under the circumstances, the General would be entitled to. I repeat, from what the General has told me, that he is prepared, after a proper valuation of the furs is arrived at, to indemnify the persons who may be shown to be entitled to that portion of them which he is supposed to have removed, or which is supposed to have been removed on his order.

Mr. LISTER. Having taken upon myself the responsibility of bringing before this House the charges made against General Middleton, upon which charges the report now before the House is made, I feel it incumbent upon me to say a few words in this debate. The Minister of Militia has told the House that General Middleton is now willing to settle. When he first used these words, I took it for granted that he was willing to indemnify Bremner for the total loss he had sustained, because whatever loss he sustained there he sustained on account of the action of General Middleton. Whether General Middleton received one-eighth of the furs, or the whole of the furs, he must be held responsible for the value of the whole of them, because, if he had observed the duty he owed to himself as a General, the duty which he owed to himself as a gentleman and an honest man, he would not have been the first man to despoil Bremner of these furs and to give implied permission to the men in charge to scatter them about among the members of his staff and others who might apply for them. It is no excuse for General Middleton to come here now, and say, through the mouth of the Minister of Militia, that he is to be excused because he is willing to pay for one-eighth of the furs which were taken. My hon, friend tells us that General Middleton is now willing to settle. How is it that he has waited for five long years before saying that he is willing to settle for any portion of the furs which were taken there? For five long years, General Middleton has denied over and over again that he ever took any furs, that he ever authorised the taking of any furs, or that he knew anything of their disposition; and it is only now, when this matter has been investigated by a Committee of the House, that General Middleton is convinced that he does know something about the matter of which he has denied all knowledge for five years past. Within a few months of the close of that rebellion, the attention of the Government was called to the fact that General Middleton had taken possession of some of those furs. Again, in 1886, the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) called attention to the fact that General Middleton had taken pos-session of those furs; and General Middleton must be taken to have known, and I have no hesitation in saying he must have known, that he was charged with this Bremner fur business. Attention was again called to it in 1887, but nothing was done because General Middleton denied that he had any knowledge of this transaction, and the Government remained inactive and took no steps to investigate the charge. Then, in 1888, this matter was brought fully before the attention of the House by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), who went fully into the whole facts. He gave the letters which Hayter Reed had written under the direction of General Middleton; and from that time up to the present, no further steps were taken for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the allegations made by him. The Government, I believe, accepted the statements made by General Middleton, that he knew nothing about the transaction. As for the report itself, it is the unanimous finding of the Committee; but I desire to say that in that report, for the purpose of having it unanimous, General Middleton has been treated with the utmost consideration. The report is mildness and gentleness in itself, and I have no hesitation in saying that, in the light of the evidence given before that Committee, the report might have been much more severe than it is. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia tells us that General Middleton acted through an error of judgment. I need only to recall the fact that the letter written by Mr. Reed contained the words "Do not make this public." Mr. Reed swears that in the letter written by order of General Middleton, he ordered the furs to be put up in cases, of which two were to be for General Middleton, one for Bedson and one for Reed, and the last words of that letter were "Do not make this public." That is sworn to by Reed distinctly and positively, as will be seen by this extract from his evidence:

"Q. The original letter contained the statement that this was not to be made public?—A. Yes.
"Q. You got the original back?—A. Yes.

"Q. Was the original torn up?—A. The original was torn up, and the formal part re-written and given back to Warden.
"Q. Why was it destroyed?—A. Because he had shown

"Q. Why was it destroyed?—A. Because he had shown this about, apparently, and owing to this private part in

Then he goes on:

"Q. Did he give instructions that it should be kept private, and that that should be inserted?—A. Yes."

This is the answer of Hayter Reed. Then he goes on again, in answer to Mr. Weldon (St. John), and

"Q. There was nothing in that letter except what you were ordered to write?—A. No."

Then again:

"Q. Do you think the General intended it should be part of the order?—A. He desired me to send that." So that so far as Reed was concerned he swears positively that the words, "Do not make this public," were in the original order sent to the warden. Now, General Middleton partially denied the statement, and if you take General Middleton's whole evidence you will find it is given in an uncertain way, he appears to have lost his memory entirely as to the transactions which took place. He does not make a positive denial, but he says that he has no recollection of it, and he does not believe that such words were in the order. However, we have the statement of Reed, and if that letter is correct, then I say that General Middleton knew he was guilty of a wrongful act in authorising that order to be given. If it were not so, there was no necessity to put the words in the order, "Do not make this public," because if he thought he had a right to confiscate the property, or to appropriate it, there was no necessity for taking the precaution to have the matter kept from the public, and the fact of these words being in, is proof conclusive to my mind that General Middleton felt that he was doing a wrongful act, an act which he did not wish to see the light of day. Well, Sir, when Reed went down to the Fort he found, as the member for West Durham has stated, that Warden had been making it public, and then for the purpose of protecting themselves, and for the purpose of showing the public that they did not care whether it was public or not, because they had a right to do it, he destroys the letter, and gives him another without those words in it, and in other respects somewhat changed. Now, if this evidence is to be relied upon, there can be no question that General Middleton, when he gave that order, knew that he was doing an illegal act. It is absurd for the Minister of Militia to get up here and say that a gentleman who has served in the British army for over 40 years, can be so ignorant of the regulations of that army as to pretend, for one moment, that he did not know he was violating the army regulations when he appropriated any portion of the property. General Middleton's evidence was not at all evidence that can be relied upon, and he merely says that he thought he had a right to confiscate the property, meaning that he had a right to appropriate the property of a Canadian citizen. Sir, General Middleton now admits, and he has only recently acquired the knowledge, that he had no right to confiscate, much less to appropriate, the property of this man Bremner. For five years Bremner has been pressing for the payment of this claim, for five years he has been asking the country, or some person, to pay for the property of which he was despoiled. His Mr. LISTER.

property was taken, and he was sent to prison and kept there for two months; he was discharged without a trial, and he is now broken in health and living in poverty, and the Minister of Militia asks this House and this country to excuse General Middleton upon that ground. When this matter was brought to his notice, would it not have been becoming on his part to have investigated this matter, and have the wrong done to this wretched man righted, so far as it was possible for him to do? But for five long years, General Middleton has denied all knowledge of this man Bremner, he has denied having taken these furs, and in that way he has kept the Government from acting. In 1885 this claim was presented to the Government. In 1886 the attention of the Government was called to it by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); in 1888 the attention of the Government was again called to it by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), upon which occasion the Minister of Justice used these words:

"I do not, for a moment, put against the claim for furs which may have been deposited with officers of the Gov-ernment, the mere fact that they belonged to persons who were implicated in the rebellion."

He further says:

"I ask the House, therefore, to understand that as regards that claim the enquiry has not been concluded and will be pursued."

The Minister of Justice used these words in the Session of 1888, on the motion of my hon. friend from West Ontario. Since 1888, up to the present Session of Parliament, I am not in a position to know what, if anything, the Government did towards having this claim investigated. I do know, however, that this claim has not been paid, that Bremner has never received any satisfaction from the Government; I do know that in consequence of the want of action on the part of the Government I was induced to take this matter up for this unfortunate man, and present it to this House, and ask that a committee of enquiry be appointed. Sir, I am bound to say that when this matter was first submitted to me, it seemed incredible that a gentleman occupying the high position of General Middleton in the British army, a gentleman occupying the position of Commander of the Canadian forces, could so far have forgotten the Queen's Regulations, could have been so destitute of that ordinary feeling of humanity which animates almost every man, as to have despoiled that miserable individual named Bremner of his property; I am bound to say I felt an hesitation in taking this matter up. I knew well the great responsibility I was assuming in making a charge of that kind against a gentleman in his exalted position. But when the truths were told me, when I had the evidence before me, when I had the opportunity to investigate the matter I found that a great and grievous wrong had been done to a citizen of my country; and I deemed I owed it to myself and to the people at large that I should not hesitate a single moment in laying this matter before Parliament, let the consequences to myself be what they may. I well remember the Montreal Gazette coming out and saying that the charge I made against General Middleton was a serious one, but it was no more serious than the one against a member of Parliament who dared to make it, unless he was able to prove the truth of his charge. I regret, on General Middleton's account, that he should have been guilty of such conduct as this; I rejoice on account of the unfortunate man whose cause I have advocated that he is now within a measurable distance, at all events, of receiving some compensation for the gross wrong done him. He has maintained from the very outset that he was an innocent man, and he contended that he was never guilty of an act of rebellion against the Dominion of Canada; and he has told me that not only did he lose these valuable furs, but at the time of the rebellion he was practically a wealthy man, being the owner of cattle, horses and so on and yet to-day he is living in a condition of abject poverty, his health broken down, and if an immediate settlement of this matter is not insisted on by the Government they will not be doing what we have a right to expect them to do under the circumstances. I charged General Middleton with taking from Bremner a large quantity of furs placed in store at Battleford, with having appropriated and used the furs for his own use; and in making that statement I read the following letter:

"Dear Warden,—General Middleton has instructed and authorised me to send you the present letter desiring that you put up bales of turs for the undermentioned: two bales for General Middleton, one for S. L. Bedson, and one for myself. Please select the best and pack them at once, as we will be down there to-morrow by boat.

"HAYTER REED,
"Assistant Commissioner of Indians."

Upon the strength of that letter, which I satisfied myself was reasonably correct, I made the charge which I did make against General Middleton, and upon the trial of this case it was admitted that the copy of the letter was substantially a copy of the original. General Middleton, on that investigation being made, put in the plea, which he now submits to the House through the Minister of Militia, that he had confiscated the furs, that he believed he had a right to do it, and that it was only recently he learned he had no right. The General admits that he had not, and never had a right to confiscate the furs. The General did not believe, however, that he had the right to confiscate the furs at the time he did so. The letter written by Mr. Hayter Reed, by direction of General Middleton, the contents of which were known to General Middleton, as was sworn to by Mr. Reed, makes it clear that the General knew that at the time that letter was written he had no right to appropriate the furs which belonged to Bremner. Mr. Reed's conduct was not as frank as we had a right to expect from him, because all through the investigation he never gave the Committee to understand that a letter had been substituted for the original letter, the fact being that Mr. Reed wrote a letter containing the words "not to be made public," but that afterwards he got the letter back from Warden and gave Warden an ordinary order as a voucher. This did not come out voluntarily on the part of Mr. Reed. This was forced out in the course of cross-examination, and this fact, sworn to by Mr. Reed, an unwilling witness, one desirous of protecting himself as well as General Middleton, and not distinctly and positively contradicted by General Middleton, must be accepted as a fact; and if we are to accept it, then General Middleton knew as well as Mr. Reed that what they were doing was an illegal act. I say, therefore, that in the report we might well have found that General Middleton. at the time he confiscated those furs, knew he was guilty of an illegal act; and it is inconceivable that an officer of 40 years' service in the British army, one occupying one of the highest positions in the force, should pretend that he was without knowledge as to one of the first army regulations. It is inconceivable and certainly difficult to believe that an officer in the position of General Middleton could have been stating exactly the reverse of what he believed to be true. Taking his large experience, his great knowledge of military matters, and with these letters before the Committee, they might well have found that General Middleton, at the time he appropriated those furs, knew he had no right either to confiscate them or to appropriate them. This transaction from the beginning to the end is a discreditable one in the extreme. It is a discreditable one on the part of General Middleton. It is scarcely to be understood that a man occupying a high official position as he did, should have taken advantage of his position, knowing the wretched, poverty stricken condition of the men whom he was sent to the North-West to put down; it is almost incredible that an officer occupying so high a position should have forgotten the duty he owed to himself, the duty he owed to the Government that employed him, the duty he owed to the people of the country in which he lived, as to have appropriated and looted property from a citizen of this country under such circumstances as I have described. So far as General Middleton is concerned, his usefulness in this country is gone. It is the duty of the Government to intimate to him that his services are no longer required. It cannot be said that in this country that a public officer will be retained in his position after having been guilty of such an act; and no matter what the consequences to him may be, we have our rights to maintain, and absolute and full justice must be meted out to him.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not rise to say one word in justification of General Middleton's conduct in respect of this transaction. I entirely endorse what I must say I conceive to be the very severe strictures expressed in the report in regard to his conduct, that his conduct was unwarrantable, illegal and highly improper. But I must say that I do not like to kick a man when he is down, and I think it would have been better if the hon. gentleman who has just spoken had to-day pursued in this House the same course he pursued during the investigation, which I must say was worthy of all praise. The hon. gentleman has allowed his feelings rather to get the better of him on this occasion, and he has pushed a little too hardly a man who is in a certain sense, in extremis. The statement that has been made with respect to this portion of the letter in which Mr. Hayter Reed stated that it would be well that this matter should be kept secret or quiet-the statement made by the hon member in regard to that, while it may be perfectly true so far as Mr. Reed is concerned, is scarcely true in so far as the General is concerned. This is what General Middleton said in reference to that.

"I would like to say that I perfectly agree with all Mr. Reed has said, with the exception of that part where he intimated that I directed him to say it should be kept quiet. I certainly never directed him to put that in the letter, to the best of my belief; neither did I think it necessary."

Then he goes on to say:

"Had I seen the thing, I certainly should not have let it 20.

He was asked by Mr. Kirkpatrick, again:

"Was it not an ordinary tent?"

To which he replies:

"The Adjutant had a tent there; however, I dare say he did write the letter in my tent."

Mr. Wood asks him:

"The part you would object to would be the private part?—A. I did not instruct him to keep it quiet. Mr. Wood asks:

"You would not have let it go ?-A. No, not that part." There is no question at all that the General's mind seems to have been confused from first to last, with regard to the whole of this transaction. He has not a clear recollection of any part of the matter, so far as we could discover, and he is very cautious in what he says, lest he makes a statement which is not correct. However, General Middleton, when he is brought up to the point, declares more than once, in the most emphatic manner, that if he had known this clause was in the letter, he would not have allowed the letter to go. I think my hon. friend should have given the General credit for that statement, and it was hardly fair, I think, to put it in the way in which he did. We ought also to recollect that orders were given that there should be receipts given for, or a memorandum made, of all the furs that were disposed of. That, at all events, of itself, should go a long way to show that there could be no intention on the part of the General to keep this secret, because he ordered that receipts should be taken and a memorandum made of the furs which were so disposed of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He could not have got them otherwise.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not quite understand what my hon, friend means by that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I mean to say that he could not have got them from Warden without giving a receipt.

Mr. McNEILL. I think if Warden had got the order he would have handed the furs over, whether there was a receipt or not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The order itself would have been a receipt.

Mr. McNEILL. In point of fact, the receipts were not given in all cases, but in this case the order was given that receipts should be taken.

Mr. LISTER. Look at page 17 of the evidence, as to what he says:

"Q. Did you authorise anybody to give a receipt for them?—A. I do not know. I think when I told them they could take the furs, I rather think I told them also they would have to give a receipt."

Mr. McNEILL. Look at page 23 and you will find Mr. Reed says:

"I further requested Warden to take a receipt, or to make a memorandum of who got the furs and the quantity."

If the General is to be held responsible for what Mr. Reed did in the one case, it is only fair he should be held responsible for what he does in the other. Fair play is a jewel. I think the action of the General, on this occasion, was just as we not to strain too far the case which is brought against him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) would have exercised a wiser discretion if he left the matter in the hands of my hon, friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake). That hon, gentlemen took great care to express his views on the matter, and certainly he did so in a spirit of justice, not with any desire to shield General Middleton, and therefore the hon. member for Lambton might well have left the case in his hands. The hon, member for Lambton brought the matter before this House. He had a perfect right to do so, and he was perfectly justified in doing so. He was present at the meetings of the Committee, which was composed of gentlemen in every way competent to deal with a case of this kind, and who went very carefully into the matter. They were unanimous in their finding, and the report therefore comes before this House as a judgment given without regard to political considerations, by gentlemen sitting on both sides of this House, who were animated with the spirit of doing justice to the wronged party, Mr. Bremner, and the accused, Sir Frederick Middleton. I do not think, therefore, the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) was justified in making the statement that the report ought to have been more severe; that it was a judgment of compromise, and was not, therefore, a just judgment.

Mr. LISTER. I did not say that. I said the report might have been more severe.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman said the report was a matter of compromise and might have been more severe, but if it was a matter of compromise, and not the deliberate conviction of every hon, member who agreed to that report, it would not be a report to be relied upon. I think that statement of the hon. member is an aspersion on the Committee. With respect to the case itself, I am inclined to think that the want of judgment as to the confiscation has more weight than would be ordinarily given to it. It is quite true that Sir Frederick Middleton is an officer of great experience, but if you consider the experience that he has had both in China and in India, perhaps looking at the facts as they occurred, and the incidents in these two wars, you will find that there was a good deal of practical confiscation. However, in this case, the General was decidedly in the My hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. wrong. Blake) has proved beyond a doubt, if proof were required, that Sir Frederick Middleton's conduct the verdict which has been passdeserves ed upon it, and passed upon it, I think, in as strong language as could well be used. It is quite clear that the General acted wrongly and illegally and that the strong language of the Committee was perfectly justified. Still, I would be charitable enough to believe that the confiscation of the goods was an error of judgment; but as to the appropriation of the goods, it seems to me, that was not an error of judgment. That was an illegal and improper act, and it cannot be defend-Upon these grounds, I think that the report ought to be unanimously adopted by this House. The whole tenor of the argument of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) was to the effect described it, to be highly improper and quite unjustifiable—but I do think we ought to endeavor should be amended. I think it is very fortunate, in order to give great weight to the judgment of the Committee, that it should be accepted by the House almost without debate.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before this discussion closes, I desire to say one word. I entirely concur in the last remarks made by the hon. First Minister. I think there was a desire on the part of the Committee, not to put the General in a worse position than he occupied, but rather to see that justice was done on both sides. We have to consider not only the General, but Bremner. I am glad to see that there is a disposition on the part of the General to indemnify Bremner for part of his loss; but suppose General Middleton indemnifies him for one-eighth of his loss, what is to become of the balance? I contend that the Government are responsible for the acts of their officers, and should, therefore, be primarily responsible for the loss; and if they can recover one-eighth of the value of the furs from General Middleton, they would be saving so much. The Committee have found that the value of the furs lost was $4,374.66, and taking the statement that was made on behalf of Bremner, they have agreed that $4,500 is a fair valuation of his total loss. Therefore, I conclude that the Government should be bound to reimburse Brenner his loss above the portion which General Middleton is willing to make good. As a matter of equity, I think Bremner ought to be indemnified at once without delay, and the General ought to find means to reimburse him as soon as possible for the furs which he took for himself. If he had come before the Committee and had acknowledged at the beginning that he had done wrong, and was willing to repair the loss, it would have been better; that was the time for him to do so. the contrary, he did not do it; but he comes now at the last moment and offers to do it. But it is better late than never. On the whole, I think the House and the Government ought to see that Bremner is indemnified as soon as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened to the statements made on this subject with a great deal of interest, because I think this is a question that demands the closest scrutiny and attention, and the decided action of Parliament. It is a question in which the honor of the country, the honor of Parliament, and the honor of the Government particularly, is involved. The right hon. First Minister, as well as the hon. Minister of Militia have endeavored to palliate the conduct of General Middleton. It is all very well to say that General Middleton expropriated or looted these furs in ignorance of what his powers and rights were; and the hon. gentleman who has endeavored to make an excuse for him says that he performed very distinguished services in India, where, I understood him to say, the practice of looting prevailed at one time. My hon. friend says that he served his country with honor and credit in India, and that he is a very brave man. The bravery of General Middleton has never been disputed. We do know, however, that the storming of the rifle pits was not done by General Middleton, but that a man who was a member of this House had the honor of storming those pits after General Middleton had lain inactive before them for several days. In this matter I do not think we should make any difference between General Middleton and if we admit any extenuating circumstances, they would apply rather to an uneducated, ignorant private in the army than to a General who ought to know the Articles of War, who ought to know what his powers and duties are, who ought to know, at any rate, what an honest man should do. It is said that General Middleton did not know of that paragraph in the letter which has been referred to. Well, we have the evidence of Mr. Hayter Reed, whatever his evidence is worth, who was particeps criminis in the taking of these furs, but who afterwards, believing he had done wrong, returned them. He says he received instructions from the General that silence should be kept in the matter, and that subsequently the General altered the order when he found that silence was not being kept. What is the meaning of that? Why should he ask that silence should be kept? The fact is that a General commanding the force of this country deliberately appropriated, in defiance of law and the practice of war, the property of a poor unfortunate man, who may or may not have been guilty of rebellion. The fact came out in the evidence, that this man Bremner, instead of having engaged in the rebellion, was forced by the Indian Chief Poundmaker into his camp. One thing is clear, the General got those furs.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say yes. He ordered them to be put on board the steamer on which he himself travelled, and they were put on board. The only evidence we have that he did not get the furs was his simple statement that he did not; and what other evidence have we before us that warrants us in concluding that he did not get them? If a man commits a burglary, and while taking the swag to his own place, finds a policeman in the way, and drops his bag and makes off, is that any excuse for him? No. The General got those furs; they were put on the steamer by his orders. Whether they arrived in Ottawa and were put into the hancs of a furrier here, as alleged, is not for us to enquire. The simple fact is that General Middleton gave orders to Mr. Hayter Reed to take charge of these furs, and that was the crime. There is no evidence but the authority of the General's own statement, which may, under the circumstances, go for what it is worth, that the furs were not in his possession, and that he did not receive the proceeds and the benefits arising from their sale or use. It is no ordinary question. The right hon. the First Minister says that he adopts the report. Yes, that is an absolute necessity. But I go further, and I place upon the responsibility of the Government their positive duty to tell this House what action they are going to take. It is their duty to compel the General to refund the money and to dismiss him from the command of the military force of Canadato report him to the Horse Guards; and if the latter do not give him his dismissal, they will not be doing what is incumbent on them as the guardians of the honor and public faith of Canāda.

had the honor of storming those pits after General Middleton had lain inactive before them for several days. In this matter I do not think we should make any difference between General Middleton and the meanest private, except in this respect: that if

I thought the report, which is a severe condemnation of his conduct, should be adopted. That is a sufficient answer to the hon. gentleman's allegation. It is true I stated I was charitable enough to believe that General Middleton might have supposed he had the right, as an act of war, to confiscate these goods, but that there could be no defence for their appropriation, even if they were legally confiscated, for his own use. Therefore the hon. gentleman did not truly state what I said. The hon. gentleman now wishes to hold the Government responsible for not stating what action will be taken in this matter. The Government could not take any action until this report was passed upon by the House of Commons, and when the House has passed upon it, it will then be the duty of the Government to consider what it is their duty to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon, gentleman has said that I did not truly state his attitude, when I alleged that he extenuated the conduct of the General. The hon, gentleman's own explanation, in answer to my remarks, is an extenuation of General Middleton's conduct. I admitted that he said the report should be adopted by this House unanimously; but has he not just now, as well as before, endeavored to extenuate the conduct of the General? He further has said that I have put upon him the responsibility of saying how General Middleton would be dealt with. Well, I hold that it is the duty of the Government, in so grave a case, when the report is being adopted, to come down at once and state the opinion of the Administration upon it, and the action they intend to take; and in not doing so, they have failed in their duty.

Mr. LAURIER. I would not desire to add to what has been said on this subject, were it not for the statement just made by the Minister of Militia with regard to the intention of the Government. I am quite prepared to believe that General Middleton acted on an error of judgment; but if he is going to do what is suggested by the Minister of Militia, it seems to me he is going to commit another error of judgment. He is answerable for the full measure of the wrong that has been inflicted on Charles Bremner. No other compensation than this will satisfy the end of justice; but I understood the Minister of Militia to state that General Middleton was to hold a sort of enquiry to ascertain what had been packed for him, and when he had found that out, he would tender the money to Bremner. This would be no palliation at all of the offence; it would be no compensation for the great wrong The only satisfaction that Bremner can and must have, is that he shall be restored all the furs taken from him or compensated in money for those which are not returned. I do not intend to press this matter further, but I hope that full justice will be done; and if it be not, I intend to bring the matter up again in another session.

Mr. GIROUARD. I may be allowed, as one of the members of the Committee, to offer a few remarks. The Committee did not at all go into the question as to what course the Government are going to pursue, and I am not going to trouble myself about that question just now. We were instructed to enquire into the facts, and we did so, and reported on them to the best of our knowledge and belief. The only difference of opinion was as to Sir John A. Macdonald.

whether General Middleton knew that the few words "Do not make this public" were put in the first letter. Mr. Hayter Reed says he was directed by the General to put those words in the first order. General Middleton says not. Considering the two contradictory statements, the Committee unanimously came to the conclusion that they could not report that the General had given instructions to put these words in the first order. It is possible Mr. Reed got the first order back, in order to excuse himself, as he had put words in without the knowledge of the General. Having the statement of Mr. Reed on the one side and that of General Middleton on the other, we could not pronounce upon it. I believe it is quite unfair to reject the statement of the General. The hon, member for Northumberland said that General Middleton got the furs, that they were put on the steamer that was going down to Winnipeg, on board of which General Middleton was. There is no proof whatever that General Middleton knew that the furs were on board. Mr. Reed does not say he knew it, and General Middleton says he did not know it. Upon those points I wish to call the attention of the House to the statement of General Middleton:

"I perfectly agree with all that Mr. Reed has said with the exception of that part where he intimated that I directed him to say that it should be kept quiet. * * I did not hear or see what he had written * Had I seen the thing, I certainly would not have let it go." In another passage of his statement, he says that the furs were put on board the steamer without his knowledge.

I do not see that it makes any Mr. CASEY. difference whether General Middleton did get the furs or not. His own statement is, that he did get furs, but he does not know if they were the same or not. However, I do not see that it makes any difference, since the fact is proven, by the General's own admission, that he ordered the furs to be sent to him. And whether he got them or not it does not matter. I cannot help saying, that the conduct of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), and different members of the Government, in trying to make out that General Middleton's crime is something less than it really issomething less than violent theft—is not creditable to them, to this House or to the country. This is not a case at all comparable to a case of private wrong committed by one man against another. The wrong was not done to Bremner merely. The wrong was of such a kind that, if a disturbance unfortunately should arise again in that country, it might be committed over again. The only way to prevent crimes of this nature is to apply sharp and severe punishment in the first instance, and, when the Minister of Militia and the leader of the Government attempt to palliate this conduct by saying that it is only an error of judgment as to the powers of confiscation which he thought he possessed, the criminal is only encouraged in his action. It is an absurd suggestion in regard to a general commanding an army. Either General Middleton did know the articles of war, as probably he did; either he did know that he was committing an illegal act, as probably he did, from his experience in the army; or, if he did not, it is absurd that he should fill the position he does, and it would be worse, it would make the Government that he is to go unpunished. I agree with my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in saying that the man ought not only to be dismissed from his position, but ought to be reported to the Horse Guards and disgraced in every possible way, in the same manner as any other criminal. The House will remember the case of General Luard, another commander-in-chief, who, simply on account of some unfortunate utterances at a mess dinner, when he was inspecting one of our battalions, had steps taken against him which led to his leaving the country practically in dis-That General's successor has now done what we have been talking about, and it is the duty of the Government to see that a measure of actual punishment suitable to his crime shall be applied to him. The leader of the Government claimed that the Government could do nothing until the House had taken action upon this matter. The House took action as far back as the 31st March, 1886, when it ordered a return of "all horses, ponies, cattle, furs, waggons, carts and other property seized by the Mounted Police or Expeditionary Force, while on service in the North-West, between 27th March and 1st August, with the disposition made of the same, the names of persons from whom such seizures were made, and the amount (if any) paid, received, or now payable or receivable, on account of such property." I call the attention of the House to the meagre answer which was given to that return. The Minister of Militia brought down in answer one letter from General Middleton, directed to the officers commanding the North-West Mounted Police, Battleford:

"It would be advisable to take in charge all the property of all those half-breeds now at Battleford, who lately delivered themselves up from rebel camp, until their innocence is proved, there being strong doubts on the loyalty of the whole of them."

He directed the confiscation of all the property of all the Half-breeds until their innocence proved, instead of taking measures to see that their guilt was proved. That is an inversion of English law which is remarkable. That is the only return the Minister of Militia brought down in response to the Order of the House four years ago, and he has not had the ordinary courtesy to answer the Order of the House so far as to bring down what was ordered, or to give any subsequent The Government knew that there explanations. was a feeling for the last four years in regard to the stealing of this property, but it was not until an investigation was forced upon the Government that they took any action in the matter, and they are to blame, first, for appointing this man, and secondly, for not taking action before this, and for their neglect in these respects they will be held responsible by the country.

Mr. McNEILL. On behalf of the Committee, I do not wish the House to suppose that any member of the Committee supposed that the accidental fact that the furs were not received by General Middleton made any difference at all. We found Middleton made any difference at all. that the appropriation had been made, and we condemned the appropriation.

TELEGRAPH LINE ON THE NORTH SHORE OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. FISET asked, Whether the Government are aware of the importance to our fishermen of extending, as soon as may be, to Natashquan the telegraph line now being constructed on the north shore of the St. Lawrence? If so, is it their intention to push on the work this year to that point?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In reply to the hon. member, I will say that the Government are aware of the importance of extending the telegraph line in that direction; but they have not the intention to push on the work this year.

IMPERIAL PENNY POSTAGE.

Mr. COCKBURN asked, Whether the Postmaster General has received any communications from the Imperial Federation League in Canada, from the Boards of Trade of Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, St. Thomas, St. John, N. B., Vancouver, and other corporations, urging the necessity of the adoption of a penny postage system for the British Empire, and what action, if any, has been taken or is contemplated thereon?

Mr. HAGGART. The Postmaster General has received communications from these bodies, and the matter is at present under the consideration of the Government.

MONEY SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, tomorrow, the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the following resolutions:-

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned,

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman state to which resolutions he refers?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Instead of the Oxford Railway Company, for 21 miles between Lawrenceville and Kingsbury, in Quebec, it should be the Orford Mountain Railway Company, 31 miles, from Eastman to Kingsbury. Then there is the Jacques Cartier Union Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway from the Canadian Pacific Railway; it should be the Grand Trunk Railway. appear in this list-from Edmundston to St. Francis River, and the Tobique Valley Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. Are these two additional grants the whole that are to be brought down?

Roads and Bridges—Iron bridge over the Grand River at York..... $20,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By reason of certain works in connection with the Welland Canal, the water has increased in height and has extended on both sides of the river, increasing the width to such a degree as to compel the municipality to build much wider bridges than otherwise would have been necessary. The municipality has at different times petitioned the Government, stating that they had been obliged to build a bridge at double the cost which would otherwise have been necessary. Besides that, it was represented that inasmuch as a new bridge was to be built at another place, the municipality stated, after some correspondence, that they would abandon their claim for the half of the bridge they were building and their claim for damages, if the Government would build a new bridge. An estimate was made on both sides, and it was found that by building a new bridge, the Government would lose nothing, and that, as the municipality was really abandoning a portion of their claim, it was better to build one bridge than to pay half of one bridge and half of another. Under these circumstances, this amount of $20,000 has been put in the Estimates, and it will cover the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long since this claim was first presented to the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was in June, There may have been demands made upon the Government before that time, but that is the information I have.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Welland Canal was constructed a long time ago, and did this backing up of water on the Grand River take place when that canal was first built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This has been a standing grievance to the people, who have complained bitterly about it. A commission was appointed by my Department three years ago, and they reported that evidence showed that since the destruction of the last bridge, population had decreased 50 per cent. for the reason that business had fallen off in the same proportion, that the value of real estate had become merely nominal, and for about three months in the year it was impossible to cross the river, that half the population used to live on the south side of the river at times when it was impossible to carry their mail matter to them without great danger to life. impossible to cross the river, and residents Then there are two more resolutions which do not must drive seventeen miles to get to York. In the spring time, owing to the water backing up, the people were obliged to make a detour of eleven miles, instead of going five miles of the ordinary road. This bridge would enable the people to cross to the south side, where the land is higher and unaffected by the rise of the water, and the distance would be the regular five miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long have the people been affected by the rise of the water?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Several years.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is in the County of Haldimand?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it, that after the people have been in that position several years, this matter has been taken up lately?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The people felt they must have a bridge. They built a bridge two or three years ago, but it was not adequate for the requirements, and another was required for a different part of the municipality.

Mr. McMULLEN. How far above the Welland Canal has the bridge been erected?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The dam is built at Dunnville.

Mr. McMULLEN. Other parts of the county, no doubt, suffered for lack of bridge accommodation. What does the hon, gentleman propose to do in the case of those people?

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that this bridge is to make an easier communication between Dunnville and Ottawa.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If another case of this kind was well founded, I suppose it would have to be decided in the same way; but each case must be decided on its own merits.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has not told us what he proposes to do in these other cases. He says complaints have been made for a number of years; we have not heard of those complaints.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The municipality was obliged to build a bridge at Cayuga. An extra cost on account of the water being raised by the dam was necessary, amounting to $18,000. Other claims were made on account of the banks being flooded, and the Government decided to build a bridge, the municipality abandoning all further claims against the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is a most improvident action on the part of the Government. It is simply asking all the people along the Grand River to apply to the Government to have bridges built, and the Government will be unable to refuse those applications. This principle has been virtually admitted. And the people will secure those bridges provided they elect supporters of the Government. If this particular place had not sent a Government representative, it would still be without a Government bridge. That is the action of the Public Works Department in regard to building bridges, post offices and other works. Are other people suffering by the backing up of water as well as the people of Haldimand?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not heard of others suffering. Sir Hector Langevin.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). The necessity for the building of the bridge has arisen quite recently. The dam thrown across Grand River is at the entrance to the feeder, and this was necessary in order to throw more water into the feeder; and the water not only at Dunnville but all along the line of the river has risen, and claims have been made and settled by the Government for submerged lands. This dam is not at the Welland Canal, but it is built, as I have said, at the entrance to the feeder.

Mr. McMULLEN. How far does it back up? Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I cannot say, as I never was up the river, but the dam is several miles up.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears on account of the dam that the bridge becomes a necessity, and it seems to be more of necessity because the constituency has sent a supporter of the Government here. The water backed up, and then the constituency backed up the Government, and sent them a supporter here, which I suppose accounts for the Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter came up some two or three years ago, and it was discussed last year when the member for Haldimand was Mr. Colter. At that time he presented the matter very strongly, and he called for the papers which were laid before the House. If I am well informed, Mr. Colter being a lawyer, gave his opinion that these people had a right to claim an indemnity from the Government or to have a bridge built, on account of the damage done to the municipality.

Mr. MITCHELL. I might suggest to the hon. the Minister of Public Works, who has been always friendly inclined to myself, that the fact is, because Mr. Colter was opposed to the Government, he could not get the bridge built, but now that a man of the right stripe is in for the constituency, he can have the bridge built. While I am on my feet, I would like to make a few remarks about my own county, On account of the friendship which the hon. Minister of Public Works has shown me, and the friendship I have always felt for him, I have indulged in the vain hope for the last four years that some improvements would be attended to in my county. I asked for a wharf at Baie du Vin, which my hon. friend promised me for three successive years, but I believe he cannot get it, owing to the policy which I indicated the other night; that the Government will not do anything at the request of a man who is opposed to them, and who does not vote for them through thick and thin, right or wrong, on all occasions. Notwithstanding the good intentions of the hon, gentleman to myself, and to the loyal county which I represent. I cannot get this necessary work done. The sent, I cannot get this necessary work done. The hon. Minister was sound enough in lip promises, but he failed me entirely when it came to the Estimates. I also asked for an appropriation to improve a very important section of the river called Neguac, and my hon. friend was kind enough to say that he would have the matter con- $\mathbf{sidered}$ and brought before his colleagues, but when it comes to the Estimates the appropriation is not there. For the last three years, also, I have made a very pressing request to get dredged the bar of the Miramichi River, the second greatest river in our Province. When I supported the Government in old days—as I was about to say I regret I did-I got that bar dredged, but owing to the larger class of steamers which come in there now, we require additional depth of water. My hon, friend has expressed the best intentions in the world towards getting this work done, but we know there is a certain place paved with good intentions. The hon, gentleman always meets me with the courtesy characteristic of the heroic race to which he and I belong at election time, and tells me he believes the work is necessary and that he will get a report from the engineers and lay it before Council. It comes before the Council, but when we get the Estimates I find that Miramichi is left out. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman would carry out these necessary works if it were left to his own action, but he has got so many colleagues adverse to me, who have laid down the principle that they will not vote money for any county which does not support the Government, that his opinion is probably overruled by them. I find that it is an almost hopeless task to get these improvements until we get a change of Government, and I am looking forward to that occurring at an early date. Unless the hon. Minister gives me a public pledge here that these works will be carried out, I have very little hope of getting them until there is a change of Government, which I shall do all in my power to bring about.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the House should be informed why this work, which is said to be so necessary at the present time, was not carried out when there was an appropriation asked for it three years ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government wanted the necessary information before carrying out the work. We had negotiations with the municipality, and finally they stated that they would abandon their claims, and the claims of the people for the flooding of the lands, provided the Government would build the bridge. The matter was under consideration last year, when Mr. Colter was member, and this year as well. I did not know that the then member for Haldimand would not be the member this year, and therefore my good intentions which my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has referred to just now, were put into execution just after the hon. gentleman had left. That was not my fault. It was the fault of the courts and of the election. Besides that, our engineers have reported that it was necessary to carry on this work under the circumstances, and we cannot avoid it. I will reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) when he is in the House, as I see he is absent just now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a little unfortunate that this item did not appear in the main Estimates. Then the disinterestedness and the impartiality of the hon. gentleman would have shone in a much clearer light.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will remember that we do not put new works in the main Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman will find that when I was Minister of Finance they did appear in the main Estimates. I was under the impression, that in the hon.

gentleman's own Estimates this year, there were some votes for new works. The hon, gentleman appears in the present instance to be correct, but my recollection does not accord with his, that the practice has been invariable.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was there not a vote of $10,000 for this bridge some years ago?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was for the first bridge, but we did not expend a cent of it, because in the condition of the banks it could not go on.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the bridge been built for which the first $10,000 was granted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Cayuga.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). There was a vote of $10,000 for the construction of a bridge at York.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; at Cayuga.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to ask the Minister whether the backing of the water extends as far as where this bridge is to be built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am credibly informed by one who has had every opportunity of knowing, that at no time does the water back up to within two or three miles of the point where this bridge is to be constructed. Perhaps my hon. friend from Welland is aware whether the water backs up that far or not?

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). No; I am not.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It strikes me that, as this item was in the Estimates before, if the hon. Minister really wishes to carry out the work in good faith, and there is no question behind it as to who should be elected, a portion of it ought to appear as a revote.

Mr. FOSTER. The vote has lapsed a year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). And why? Because our friend Mr. Colter represented that constituency instead of Mr. Montague. The facts will out if you give them room, and they will state the truth. Last year, when the county was represented by an opponent of the Government, no vote appeared. If it is necessary now, it was equally necessary then. It proves what has been time and again stated here, that we need not expect the Government to vote any money for a county represented by an opponent of the Government, and their statement that they will expend the public money where it is required without regard to the representative, is all a farce; they do not mean it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the city of Ottawa contributed anything towards the construction of this bridge?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is one of the three bridges taken over by the Government, and the chief engineer tells me that it is in a dangerous condition.

Mr. McMULLEN. What kind of a bridge do you intend to build?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. An iron bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will this complete the cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Can the hon. Minister tell me what is proposed to be done with regard to the bridge over the River Thames, at Chatham?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot. I think I shall be able to tell to-morrow.

Bridge across the River Ottawa, at the foot of Lake Temiscamingue: the Governments of Ontario and Quebec contributing each $4,000..... $4,000

Mr. BRYSON. Before this item passes I would like to say one word. I regret exceedingly that the Government have not seen fit to provide a larger sum for this bridge, as I fear the small sum of $4,000 will be insufficient to secure its construction. A year ago a survey was made at this point, and it was found that $16,000 would be required for this work. There is no bridge across that part of the Ottawa River for a distance of ninety miles, and there is great danger in crossing in the spring and the fall, and many serious accidents have occurred. The Governments of Ontario and Quebec have each voted $4,000 on the condition that the Federal Government would vote $8,000, and I hope that the hon. Minister of Finance or the Minister of Public Works will be able to give us some intimation that, in the event of $12,000 not being found sufficient to complete the bridge, another sum will be forthcoming next year.

Mr. McMULLEN. When was this $10,000 voted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was not sufficient, and we did not begin the work until Parliament would say whether it would give us the difference.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will this fully cover the cost of this bridge?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am told that it

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). When was this sum of $10,000 first yoted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it was voted the year before last.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). And again last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it was revoted this year with $5,000 additional, because we had not money enough voted to do the work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not understand why this vote should appear in this manner.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must not find fault with me or the Government. If we have an amount of money voted by Parliament and find it is not enough for the work, we do not expend it without first informing Parliament that it was not enough and asking for the further amount necessary. If it was a work of great and immediate necessity, we would | ing Whitehead Island with Grand Manan Island? take the responsibility of going on with it and asking Parliament to indemnify us.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). because the hon. gentleman did not expend the communication between Grand Manan Island and Sir Hector Langevin.

money. I was merely making a comparison between this and some other items. I would have been better pleased if the Government would not spend quite so much.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At all events, this vote will be sufficient, I hope. With reference to the question of the hon, member for Pontiac, who wished to have $4,000 more voted for the bridge across the Ottawa, the Government thought they would ask Parliament to vote this $4,000, the Governments of Ontario and Quebec contributing each $4,000, making $12,000 altogether. Of course, if it is found that is not sufficient, and that a little additional is required, we will have to come to Parliament and say so, but we thought, perhaps, this might be enough, and, therefore, do not ask for more.

Mr. McMULLEN. When are you going to build the bridge?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The plans will be made, and we will then go on with the work.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who will make the plans when three Governments are interested?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As a rule we make the plans and communicate them to the other Governments, and if they are satisfactory to them, we call on them for their contribution.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the Government draw a plan which will cost more than $12,000, say $20,000, are we to take it for granted that the Government will furnish the extra amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We try to conform to the order of Parliament, and cut our coat according to our cloth.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite plain the hon. gentleman has stated to the member for Pontiac: Go on, try and get what you can from Ontario and Quebec, and if you have not enough to build the work we will say to you: We do not like to be discourteous; come back and we will see what we The hon. Minister has virtually held out can do. the temptation to the hon, gentleman to go to his constituency and tell his people: I have the word of the Minister of Public Works that if the money from the Provinces and the money from the Dominion Parliament is not sufficient, I am encouraged to come back.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Pontiac is above temptation, so that there will be no danger of his doing what the hon, gentleman suggests.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT There is no guarantee for that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will try to build the work out of the money we have, but if we really find we cannot do it, we will ask Parliament for an additional $2,000, $3,000 or $4,000.

To connect Whitehead Island with Grand Manan Island, Bay of Fundy...

Mr. LOVITT. What is the object of connect-

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) can explain that. This I am not complaining is to provide for the establishment of telegraphic Whitehead Island, across Rose and Chain Islands, as proposed by the superintendent of Government telegraphs in his report. It will entail the construction of four and a-half miles of land lines and one and a-half knots of heavy submarine cables, called for on the 8th March, 1889, by the member for Charlotte. The matter was investigated in order to see whether we could and should do it, and we found that we should do it. We cannot do anything else for the people of Grand Manan.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is the continuation of the submarine cable to Grand Manan, where there is a population who require it, and to extend it to Whitehead Island.

Reconstruction of line between Ashcroft and Barkerville, B.C... $13,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the line known as the Cariboo line in British Columbia. It is one of the conditions of the Union between that Province and Canada, that that line should be kept up. The line is worn out and requires to be reconstructed from one end to the other. The whole thing will cost $26,000 or $27,000, but we thought we would divide the work in two and ask only $16,000 this year. The line is in operation now, but it is so often broken and requires such constant repairs that it is really necessary to replace it with a new line.

Amount required to pay for the conveyance of the mails between Canada and the United Kingdom, under contract with Mr. Andrew Allan, at the rate of $125,000 per annum......$ 125,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the first place I desire to enquire of the First Minister, whether, according to promise, he has laid upon the Table the correspondence between himself and the Messrs. Anderson which he was to have done today?

Mr. FOSTER. That is my fault. The First Minister asked me to get the letters prepared and have them brought down. I had them prepared, but unfortunately forgot to lay them on the Table this afternoon. They will be laid upon the Table to-morrow. This vote is in pursuance of the explanation made by the Postmaster General some time ago. It is the temporary arrangement for one year made with Mr. Andrew Allan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want to understand something more than that. We should understand what service the hon, gentleman expects to get for this, what the present position of the matter is, and what is the policy of the Government in regard to it? Hav? they abandoned their 21-knot or 20-knot service, or whatever it is? Are we to have vessels which will take, as one of my hon, friends said, 20 days between Halifax and Liverpool, or what have the Messrs. Allan pledged themselves to with respect to the speed of the vessels they are going to employ during the year?

Mr. FOSTER. When that matter was brought up a few days ago, the Postmaster General gave a full explanation. He also gave the names of the vessels to be employed, and some conversation took place as to their speed and quality. The best vessels on the line are to be used, and, in case of their being disabled, Mr. Allan has the choice of a few other vessels which are specified. As to the other service, as soon as the season closes, the Government intend to take the matter up and pursue it to the end with all possible speed, so that we may have a first-class, well-equipped service between Canada and the British ports. Whether that will be a 20-knot or a 21-knot service, I cannot now say.

Mr. LAURIER. We knew all this before, and the statement is very vague. What we are interested in now, is to know whether the great project of the Government, for a speedy service, equalling the best service on the ocean, has been abandoned or is still maintained. The hon, gentleman gave us at one time very large promises, but, though the authority of his name was coupled with these promises, still they were not altogether implicitly believed in. Now, we want to know whether the hon, gentleman believes in that scheme himself yet. We want to know what is the present policy of the Government in that matter. He says this is only a temporary arrangement. Is it to remain temporary, or is it to bean finality, what is the arrangement to be?

Mr. FOSTER. This temporary arrangement is not to be for a permanent service. It will last for the year for which it has been undertaken.

Mr. LAURIER. And will be replaced by what?

Mr. FOSTER. As I have stated before, we propose, as soon as the Session is over, to take up again the negotiations where we left them in regard to the fast Atlantic service. The hon. member will say that I am giving information which is already in the possession of the House, but $500,000 has been voted for this purpose, and it is the intention of the Government to use that in obtaining a highly equipped service with as high a speed as possible, and the Government hope to obtain a service not less efficient than those between the large seaports of the United States and Great Britain. Further than that I cannot go.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is perfectly clear that the project of the hon. gentleman—as he was told from this side of the House it would—has fallen through, as I suppose it has fallen through in consequence of its inherent absurdity. I say that no more foolish proposal was ever made than that to obtain a fast line to touch at a port on the south of England and at a French port, with any hope of making that line self-sustained. Anything of that kind cannot be done except on the most outrageous terms, and even then I do not believe it would be successful. We ought to know more in reference to this. We ought to know whether the Government have made up their minds to adhere to this foolish proposal. If they have, let them say so like men, and we will understand it; but, if they see now that this is a foolish proposal, they should be prepared to submit to the House an alternative scheme. Everyone who is conversant with the St. Lawrence will agree with me that it is impracticable to suppose that steamers can run twenty knots up the St. Lawrence. It might possibly be done in one voyage out of four, but certainly not more than that, and the hon. gentlemen have committed themselves to a scheme which they must know to be impracticable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that this scheme is impracticable. not know of any scheme, or project, or measure, which emanates from this side of the House, which the hon, gentleman does not compliment by using the same language. The hon, gentleman says this foolish proposition to have a connection with a a French port is the reason why the scheme broke

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One of the reasons.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Why; the Messrs. Anderson made it one of the conditions that they should have the opportunity of having that connection with Cherbourg, or some French port in addition to the English port, so that, in addition to the first class emigration to Canada from England, they would have all Europe as well to supply their ships. It was one of the main features which the Messrs. Anderson thought favorable to the arrangement. The contract was signed. It was agreed that, for the sum of $500,000, this line should be established, but it was said by Mr. Anderson, who was here, that it was a very large scheme, and that it would cost two millions of pounds to build the vessels which were to be built under the contract. Therefore, while he believed they would be able to make the necessary arrangements, he wanted a locum tentiae for two months, and that would bring it up to about the 1st of December, within which time he would be allowed to cancel the arrangement. He went to England, and he wrote before the expiry of the two months that he was sorry to say he would have to surrender the contract. I regret that, in consequence of the culpable negligence of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, the document is not on the Table of the House giving the ipsissima verba of the communication from the Messrs. Anderson. Then we were about to advertise for tenders de noro, or to see if we could find others more plucky than the Messrs. Anderson. At that time, as the hon, gentleman knows, large contracts were given by the Admiralty of the British Government to build ships of war, and there was besides a great rise in the price of building iron ships, so that those who were best advised on the subject, said it was useless for us to go into the market at that time, that we could not get for half a million anybody to contract; the shipyards were busy building ships for the navy, heavy contracts were given. In consequence of the employment of the ships by Her Majesty's Government, the price of building iron ships rose to such an extent that we were advised, and advised by persons strongly interested in seeing a fast line built, that it would be useless to go into the market. Now the contracts have all been made, and are in considerable progress, and the price of ship-building is falling very fast and we intend to try de noro to get a fast line of ships for the $500,000. The hon, gentleman says it would be folly to suppose that a vessel of twenty knots would run twenty knots in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That is not the proposal. It may or may not be in the power of ships to risk a twenty-knot speed in the Gulf, but we want ships capable of running twenty knots, whether to Halifax or to Quebec. Sir Richard Cartwright.

equal to that of ships going into New York, and we hope to succeed.

Mr. BLAKE. 1 do not well understand the Minister of Finance, whether this temporary arrangement is to be exclusively with vessels of the Allan Line, or whether the best ships of the Dominion Line were also to be engaged in the

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Allans will employ, during the coming year as they have during the past year, the Vancouver, which is the best of the Dominion Line.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be extremely unsatisfactory if the temporary service were to be less efficient than it was a while ago under the arrangement by which, I think, the Vancouver and another ship alternated with the faster ships of the Allan Line, so that we really got the benefit of the best ships that were on this particular voyage. Everybody knows that the Allan ships are getting more and more out of date, and slower, and we would be worse off than ever unless such an arrangement as that was made. My own impression is that there may be a great danger of our sacrificing the substance for the shadow in attempting to carry out the proposals of the hon, gentleman. I do not see any great advantage in obtaining ships capable of traversing the ocean at the rate of 20 knots, which is quite a different thing from doing a measured mile in the harbor, and unless we are able to utilise these 20-knot ocean liners at something approximating that speed for the whole voyage, there is great disadvantage in a 20-knot ship. Such a ship requires an enormous expenditure of engine power and fuel, she is very expensive to engine, she is very expensive to run, relatively, and she has but very little relative capacity for freight carrying, because her model and her requirements for storage of coal are such as disables her from extensive freight carrying. She is, therefore, an expensive ship to build, expensive to engine, expensive to run, and not profitable She derives her profits in to carry freight. carrying passengers of the highest class, at the best rate, and from carrying a certain high class of expensive freight up to a limited tonnage. Now, if you cannot take the speed out of her, it is unprofitable to engage in the service a ship of that description. There are two reasons why I fear we cannot expect to take the speed out of the ship. One is the climatic difficulty. I spoke a year or two ago with one of the principal owners of the Dominion Line, and he told me that the fast ship Vancouver, of which the Finance Minister has just spoken, had been two consecutive whole years running, during which she never had one chance, on either the inward or outward voyage, of making her speed. Fog or something else had intervened, and that ship had never been able to make her mark on her voyage. I suppose it is unpatriotic in me to say so, but it is nevertheless true, that our climate presents a difficulty in this respect. The other difficulty is that to which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has alluded. I must confess that although not very nervous, I would not feel particularly happy in trusting my bones in a twenty-knot ship running up the gulf. She is too near the land for that speed. You can do it, of course, in a bright day, but in a great deal We want to get the highest speed, of weather it would be utterly unsafe to do it.

For these reasons I am afraid that it is practically out of the question to expect it. Then you have to enter upon the business of endeavoring to secure—not to keep what we have got, but to secure a high class passenger trade, and you would have to do that with the alternative difficulty, during a large portion of the year, of landing the passengers at Halifax for a long rail journey, through a country exposed to somewhat inclement weather, which circumstance will not attract a high class passenger traffic. These are the difficulties which a twenty-knot service will have to meet. Now, what would be really useful for Canada is a service of somewhere of about seventeen knots. You will get it at much less rate for ships built largely for freight carrying, ships that would be run more economically and which would retain, at any rate, our freight business which we are in danger of losing as years go on. We have given half a million on the statement that we were going to get a twenty-knot service. I hope the result will not be that we shall be asked at some future Session to sanction, or be told that we have sanctioned in advance, a grant of half a million for something entirely different from a twenty-knot service. My opinion is that a seventeen-knot service is something that we could get for much less money, and it will be relatively more advantageous to us. There is no object in telling us that our ships are capable of travelling twenty knots, unless we are going to get something like that speed out of them. I would like to see this contract prescribe, not merely that the vessel should be capable of steaming twenty knots, but what are the limits of the voyage, and what is the length of time that you prescribe from port to port. many days and hours are to be spent from the point of departure till you reach Quebec?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not wish the Committee to understand that we are limiting ourselves to 20 knots. That was the proposition in the contract, and when it was made, it was with the understanding that the vessel should be capable of steaming 20 knots. We understand that a vessel fit to do 20 knots on the measured mile in calm water, could not maintain that average speed across the Atlantic. The steamers running to New York making that average time, are running far under their capability, and, if we succeed in obtaining from a 20-knot vessel an average speed across the Atlantic of 18 knots, or something less, that is what we expect to obtain. All we desire is to have a steam line across the Atlantic so fast that the mails and passengers will not avoid the line and go to New York, but that we will have a firstclass line, which, both as regards passengers and mails, will be sought by the people going across the Atlantic, and a line which will fairly compete with the steamers going to New York, in such a way that it may be considered we are fighting the battle of transportation across the Atlantic on equal terms.

Mr. BLAKE. With the advantages the New York lines now have, and the enormous competition, and the magnificent vessels that have come out within the last two years, if the hon. gentleman proposes to enter into competition for the passenger travel with the New York steamers, the proposition is something wilder than any scheme I have ever heard him propose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I have judged the hon, gentleman too harshly as to the character of this proposal and some other proposals, I may remind him that he has made over and over again promises to the House of a very extravagant character, to the non-fulfilment of which we have adverted more than once. It does not lie within the mouth of the hon. gentleman who made the statement as to the population he would throw into the North-West, as to the results of his land policy in the North-West and a good many other matters I could cite, to become very indignant because we hesitate to believe that his sanguine temperament has not again misled him in the matter of the ocean ser-All who have crossed the a good many times know very well there are very considerable practical difficulties and a most enormous increase of expense in attempting such a fast line as the hon. gentleman has described. I know I am within the mark in saying that in order to get a vessel capable of steaming twenty knots as against seventeen knots if not eighteen knots, you have practically to pay twice as much. I may remark to the hon. gentleman that the New York craft, with which he expects to compete, do maintain over a great part of the voyage an average speed of over twenty knots, as an examination of their records will show. So if he proposes to compete with them, he must not merely obtain vessels capable of doing twenty knots, but vessels capable of maintaining that speed during an ordinary Atlantic passage, at all events during the summer season.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) if his remarks have reference to a seventeen-knot line? He did not state whether his attention at that time was directed to a vessel or a line of vessels of seventeen-knots capacity, or whether he proposed an average voyage of seventeen knots from port to port?

Mr. BLAKE. I think a seventeen-knot voyage is the highest you can talk of on your line.

Mr. McNEILL. I think there is perhaps some little misapprehension on the part of the Committee as to the freight which is carried by these ocean greyhounds. When the subject was up for discussion before, there were a good many conflicting statements made as to this matter. I took occasion to ask the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) early this Session to ascertain for me what was the freight capacity of these vessels. The hon. gentleman wrote to the agents of some of the companies, and he supplied me with the information. I find that in place of those ocean greyhounds not being able to carry more freight than 600 or 700 tons as suggested, the Majestic and Teutonic are capable of carrying something like 2,000 tons of freight.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly; they are vessels of 8,000 or 9,000 tons.

Mr. McNEILL. The impression in the House last Session was that the ocean greyhounds were capable of carrying not more than 500 or 600 tons of freight. It was so stated broadly.

Mr. BLAKE. It depends on the length of your ship.

Mr. McNEILL. There are no other vessels except these two which can carry more than 1,000 tons of freight, but in regard to these two vessels a great advance has been made, so that they are able to carry twice that quantity. And no doubt still greater advances will be made. With respect to the question of steaming at from 17 to 20 knots an hour, I must say for my own part that having been accustomed to the salt water the greater part of my life, and knowing a little for a landsman about the matter, there are very few seamen who will consider it a matter of much difference whether a vessel is steaming 17 or 20 knots if she comes across an iceberg or a rock. we are going to have good vessels at all, if we are going to have a first-class line-and, for my part, I do not see why Canada, as well as any other country, should not have a first-class line let us have a first-class line from every point of view. The vessels crossing between England and Ireland, and Scotland and Ireland, have as intricate a piece of navigation to perform as our Canadian vessels, considering the number of crafts of all kinds that are drifting about in the channel, including colliers, that in calm weather have no steerage way on them; and yet the steamers, running from Holyhead to Ireland, steam 22 knots an hour. These vessels do not decrease their speed in sight of land. I do not see any reason why we should not have a 20-knot service, and I think we are in a position to make good use of such service.

Mr. McMULLEN. Last Session the House was asked to vote $500,000 for the purpose of securing Although the hon. Minister intia fast service. mated that a 20-knot service should be given, we shall do very well if a 17 or 18-knot service is I want to know if this amount will be expended in any case. The country will certainly expect that if the amount is expended, we will obtain a 20-knot service, and for a less speed a proportionately less amount will be expended.

To provide for a new steamer to replace the Sir James Douglas, employed in the lighthouse, buoy, and coast service of British Columbia, which vessel is no longer write the for soming. suitable for service. $70,000

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is the intention of the Government to have this steamer built in British Columbia?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is the intention of the Government to have the steamer built in British Columbia. The Sir James Douglas is barely able to do the work at this season, and the new vessel is required there just as soon as it can possibly be got. Although the Minister is not here, I may say that I think it is the intention of the Department to buy a suitable vessel in the market.

To meet increased expenses of guardianship, owing to proposed changes in system of protection... $25,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the change? Mr. COLBY. This grows out of the change in the substitution of paying officers per diem for actual work, instead of having a large number of under-paid officers. It is to give greater efficiency to the service, without to any considerable extent increasing the expense.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is this remark applied to the Atlantic coast or to the inland waters, or to both ? | cer of the Department came up from Ottawa last Mr. McNeill.

Mr. COLBY. It is for all the Provinces.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the fisheries on the great lakes are not to be destroyed, as they now are rapidly being destroyed, a larger expenditure than hitherto is necessary for their protection. Whether it is done by means of a per diem salary or otherwise, everyone who knows anything about the condition of these fisheries, knows that the present expenditure is altogether inadequate for the service required. Either the Government must incur the necessary expense to protect the fisheries, or these fisheries will be destroyed. At present there is a great deal of money spent, but the object in view is not attained. I do think that the Fishery Department does not realise the service required to protect the fisheries on the inland waters. It is at present altogether insufficient for the protection of these fisheries, which are just as valuable to the country as those in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. McNEILL. I agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman that our inland water fisheries should be sufficiently protected. The revenue derived from the fisheries on the lakes is more than equal to the revenue derived from all the other fisheries in the Dominion added together.

Mr. MASSON. I quite agree with the remarks which fell from the hon. member from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that the importance of the upper lakes fisheries is greatly under-estimated by the Department, and it is to be expected that it should They have been led from year to year to look on the fisheries of the Atlantic coast as the all important fisheries, and it is only within the last few years that any attention whatever has been paid to the fisheries on the upper lakes. few years ago, I was pleased to see that an effort was made to protect these fisheries by the purchase of a small yacht known as the Cruiser which is now to be found on the lakes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. She is to be found in the harbor most of the time; she cannot go out.

Mr. MASSON. As my hon. friend says: she is to be found in the harbor principally. She is no doubt a very good yacht of her kind, but she is entirely unsuited for running on the Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, or Lake Superior. She is no more fit to ply on these waters than she is to go out on the Atlantic Ocean. The consequence is that during the close season, in the month of November, when these waters are often very rough, that vessel is generally to be found, not only in the harbor, but in the more secure harbor in the neighborhood, chiefly at Owen Sound. The result is that during the close season, while she should be visiting the various fishing grounds, she dare not, to use a slang expression, poke her nose outside In that neighborhood, a great deal is the harbor. said about the unseaworthiness of the vessel, and perhaps a little more about the timidity of the cap-It has been urged by many that the steamer could do a great deal more than she does, and perhaps that might be admitted, but I for one am frank to say that if I intended to cross the Georgian Bay or Lake Huron, in rough weather, I would not like to let my wife and family know that I would cross in the Cruiser. I think the captain is perhaps only displaying reasonable forethought when he remains inside the harbor. When an offifall, the yacht went out on the 21st November, and several miles of net were seized then, which showed that during the close season the fishermen were plying their avocation as if there were no such thing as a close season. It is hard for us to estimate the importance of these fishing grounds on the inland waters. The Trade and Navigation Returns show, it is true, that $394,000 worth of fish was exported from Ontario, and I presume the greater part of that was from the lakes. That, however, is no criterion of the value of fish actually exported, and for which we have no means of obtaining data. Right in the centre of the Georgian Bay are vessels plying to the United States, and I know myself that these vessels load from the fishing smacks without giving any reports. It is the same in Lake Huron and Lake Superior, where we have hundreds of miles of coast visited by this same class of American vessels. Therefore, while we have a return of $394,000 worth of fish taken from our Canadian waters, we cannot from that statement place any reliable estimate as to the extent of these fisheries. I think that instead of $3,000 being voted to protect the fisheries of our great lakes, a very much larger sum should be appropriated, and efficient seamen should be appointed to take charge of that service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state what particular vessel he was referring to?

Mr. MASSON. The Cruiser.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the vessel that was formerly Mr. Gilmore's yacht. It was probably not intended to encounter navigation on so great a body of water as Lake Superior. It was a very nice yacht for the purpose for which Mr. Gilmore used it, of going to the salmon rivers, but it appears to be a very unsuitable craft for the service to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to the fisheries of the great lakes, I concur with the remarks of the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson). fisheries of those lakes are becoming depleted very fast, and unless some system is adopted by which fishing with pound nets shall be in some measure restrained, in the course of a few years there will be no fish left in the lakes to dispute about. What I would like to draw the special attention of the Government to is the condition of the fisheries in the small inland lakes and in the waters of Rainy River, which latter are international waters. the banks of that river we have some 4,000 Indians, who at present receive very little aid from the Government—in fact, only $5 a head of treaty money, besides some little presents in the way of nets, &c. That is all they require at present; but unless fishing in those waters is in some way regulated, in the course of a few years these Indians will be coming down to the Government for the means of subsistence. Fishing is all, or nearly all, they have to depend on, now that the game is disappearing, for a living. In the little inland lakes, especially those near the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, people from the United States and elsewhere come and set out pound nets and take out the fish by the ton and send them to the United States markets. These little sheets of water cannot stand fishing of that sort, and the consequence is, that the fish are being swept away and the Indians are becoming deprived of the means of sustenance. Therefore, I would suggest that some strict measures be adopted for the protection of these fisheries, because otherwise the Indians who depend upon them will unquestionably make a demand on the Government for the means of subsistence. They will say: "You promised by treaty to leave to us these fisheries, and you have not done so; the fish have been destroyed by the white man, our means of subsistence are gone, and to the white man we must look for relief."

General LAURIE. I would like to call the attention of the Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the very valuable service rendered last year by an organisation established by Capt. Gordon—a Fishermen's Intelligence Bureau, by which information relating to the fisheries was collected through the various Collectors of Customs and other gentlemen at various points along the coast, and collated and published by Mr. Mc-Lennan under Capt. Gordon's direction. I notice in the Supplementary Estimates for 1889-90 a vote of $125 for Mr. McLennan for his work; but I do not see any amount placed in the Estimates this year for prosecuting it still further. I believe that the intelligence should be sent by telegraph, and not by post card, because when sent by mail it arrives too late to be of value. I hope the Department will, this year, take into consideration the question of improving this service, which is of great value to the fishermen in enabling them to find the fish they are in search of, and thereby to return with fares full instead of empty.

Mr. COLBY. I would call the attention of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) to the fact that this appropriation is not the only appropriation made this Session. We have already voted $20,000 for this service, and this vote only implies that we are going a step futher in the direction he desires. We expect that increased efficiency will result from the employment of men practically fitted for the service, instead of the thirty-four men we have hitherto employed in Ontario at $50 a year, who seem to have felt that they had no responsibility whatever, and were not paid enough to give proper attention to the service. We expect that this new system will give us a greatly improved service in those waters.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Do you propose to superannuate them?

Mr. COLBY. No; we do not. With regard to the Cruiser, she was purchased at a very reasonable price, which was said to be considerably below her actual value, and it was thought that she would be adequate to the important service for which she was detailed. It is true she has not been able, in all weathers, to prove herself entirely adequate, although when Capt. Gordon was in charge of her last autumn she did some excellent work. I believe it is the intention of the Minister, at an early day, to exchange her for a boat of larger capacity, and fortunately there will be no loss from the purchase of the Cruiser, for I am told that the Department has already been offered for her a larger amount than she cost the Department. But I can assure hon, gentlemen who take such an interest in fishery protection in that locality, that the Department feel equally interested in the matter, and the Minister will be able, with the means with which Parliament provides him, to afford greater protection than has been accorded hitherto.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister state what depth of water the Cruiser draws?

Mr. COLBY. I think about seven feet.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the Minister if his scheme includes the transfer of men from one part of the country to the other. It seems to me that it is quite impossible to get men living along the banks of rivers to inform on or prosecute their neighbors for breaches of the fishery laws.

Mr. COLBY. The Department has experienced the very difficulty the hon. gentleman mentions. It has been found that these low paid officers receiving only $50 per annum, are quite unwilling to enforce the law against their friends and neighbors. That is one reason why they are being dispensed with, and why men are being employed who will be compelled to keep a diary and report to the Department precisely where they were and what they were doing every day, in order that the Department may judge by the results of their work, and whether they were actually attending to their duties or not.

Mr. SHANLY. Does this apply to the rivers as well as to the lakes?

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. SHANLY. I would ask the hon. Minister if the greater vigilance promised for protecting the lake fisheries is to be extended to the rivers. poaching carried on close by here, on the St. Lawrence, is notoriously audacious, and the system of inspection entirely insufficient to prevent it. Along the frontier in my own riding the poaching in our waters from the other side of the river is a standing grievance with my people. I took occasion to draw the attention of the Minister to it last year not here in Parliament but in his office. Representations were made to me from the county that systematic night-poaching was being carried on by marauders from the American shore, who use dynamite to destroy the fish. This sort of thing is carried on from Kingston down, and I trust that effective measures will be taken to protect the river fisheries, and put an end to this foreign poaching more particularly.

Mr. COLBY. I believe greater vigilance is exercised this year than formerly.

Mr. TEMPLE. I am glad to see that the Government have adopted during the past couple of years in our Province the plan they are now advocating for the other Provinces, namely, that of hiring men by the day to look after the fisheries, and dispensing with the services of the wardens, who draw their fifty or sixty dollars per year and stayed at home most of the time. The new system has worked very well in the Province of New There is an overseer who keeps Brunswick. continually moving about in order to see that the men attend to their work, and as a consequence poaching is much less practiced than formerly.

To aid the Agricultural Society of the Oneida Indians of the Thames, to enable the society to give prizes at the annual exhibition......

given at the request of parties who took an interest in these exhibitions. Applications were made for a further vote this year by the Indian bands, and I considered it desirable to comply with their request. It is very desirable that the Indians should take an interest in these agricultural shows. The Indians in question are very poor, but I believe they are good farmers and take a great interest in their farms, and it is at the special request of themselves and their friends that this vote is asked.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I agree with the hon. Minister that it is very desirable to give the Indians encouragement, whether out of public funds or not. I think the people living in their neighborhood ought to encourage them any way. But if we are going to give grants of public funds to one band, can we refuse it to others without doing an injustice? The Six Nations, as the hon. Minister knows, have a very creditable exhibition in my county. Would they not be equally entitled to a grant, if the system of giving grants be adopted?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Six Nations are much better off. This band have only $120 to their credit.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Capital?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; they have virtually no

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was going to ask whether, in making those grants, the Department would specify in what way and for what objects the prizes shall be given, or will it be left wholly in their discretion?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the past the Department has left it entirely to the agricultural society. believe there is a society in this band similar to the one I saw last summer in the Six Nations, who appear to manage their affairs vey well.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Six Nations have no grant from the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the hon. Minister not think it would be a good plan, in giving these moneys, the object being to encourage and to develop agriculture, to specify, not in detail, but in classes, what they shall be given for, such as agricultural products, women's work, and so on, so that none of these outside matters, which take place at these shows, such as speeding horses, and which are not really pertinent to agriculture, will not have a share. Would it not be wise to stipulate that so much will be given for agricultural productions, so much for women's work and dairy work, and cattle and horses, and so forth.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I agree with the hon. gentleman in that regard. I do not recollect receiving any reports of the proceeds for the last year. think we ought to give instructions that the money be devoted for the purposes mentioned by the hon.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think the action of the Government in this matter is very creditable. no way can you better encourage industry and enterprise among the Indians than by means such as this. I have some knowledge of these bands on the Thames. I have never been on the property of the Moravians which is in the County of Elgin, but I have met the chief at agricultural meetings and he is a very intelligent man, who has a good idea of what is necessary for an agricultural As far as trusting the money to them is concerned, I say, with knowledge of the subject, that the Government may very safely entrust them with the expenditure of this money. In my own riding there are three bands, the Oneidas, the Chippewas, and the Munceys. The Government have acted on a judicious plan in assisting the band which is most in need of assistance. The Oneidas are rather wealthier than the others. They have show grounds with a high board fence and a big building for their exhibits, and they charge an entry fee to their agricultural show, which is a very good one. In fact, those who were at the Western Fair in 1888 know that there was a department there for the Indians. and that it was very hard to tell whether the samples shown by the Indians or those shown by the white men were the best. They do not need anything, and the Government have not given Then there are the Chippewas. I them anything. do not know whether the Government have given them anything or not, but I understand that they have sufficient means to carry on their own show. The Munceys are in a different position. have no funds worth mentioning of their own. They commenced only about two years ago. They have had exhibitions and they are making progress. They have purchased a piece of land on which they have their school and council house, and they hold their exhibition there, but they wish to enclose their ground so that they may be able to charge a fee for entrance to their show. I think in this matter the Government have done a judicious thing, and I am glad that the Minister of the Interior has seen fit to put this sum in the Estimates.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) makes out that these Indians are in a deplorable condition, but I should like to ask him if they have not expended a sum of money in building an Orange lodge-room there. If that is the case, I should think they might be able to expend money on their own show.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If individual Indians who are Orangemen choose to give their own money to build an Orange lodge, they have a right to do so.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). In that case, they cannot be in such deplorable circumstances, and I think, by a little effort, they would be able to raise a little fund to establish prizes for their agricultural shows.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No one has hinted that they were in a deplorable condition, but the tribe has no fund at its command for this purpose. The hon, gentleman ought to know that an Orange lodge-room is not built out of the tribal fund. The Munceys are not in a deplorable condition, but they are onlychildren compared with the advanced whites. They have started these shows only two years, they are doing well, and they should have encouragement.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the fairs on the Six Nation Reserve are becoming self-sustaining. As to the Munceys, if they have a fair ground, which is not fenced, they will not be very successful as a society. Gradually these societies among the Indians become self-sustaining, and I think the one on the Six Nation Reserve, by the public spirit which has been displayed by those concerned, and by the manner in which it has been managed, have prospered so far that it has funds in hand. Of course this is apart from the funds of the tribe altogether, and I suppose the Minister thinks himself justified in these grants in the hope that the shows will become self-sustaining afterwards.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and they are not only making a very good showing in their own exhibitions, but are making a very good exhibit in comparison with their white neighbors at the shows of the latter. I visited the Six Nations last year in company with my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson), and certainly they had a most creditable show, which would equal anything I saw during the year at any of the agricultural shows. They exhibited the products of their farms, their pickles, their fruits, and products of every kind. I received a letter from the leader of the band of Indians who made this application asking me to visit them this summer. I hope to be able to do so, and then I shall be in a position to give more particulars in relation to this matter if I have to ask for another vote.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not think my hon. friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) should be so touchy. I understand that these shows are supported largely by voluntary subscriptions, and I think that if these Indians can give voluntary subscriptions for other purposes, they should be able to raise $90 for this purpose. It is a new departure for these shows to be kept up by the Dominion Government instead of by the Indians, and I agree with my hcn. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), that, if it is reasonable to grant this amount to this tribe, it is equally fair to make a grant to the Six Nations, though it appears that they have made their society selfsustaining, by private contributions and collecting fees at the gate. The Indians represented by my hon. friend from South Middlesex get assistance from the Dominion Government for this purpose, while those represented by my hon. friend from Brant get none. That is hardly fair; because my hon. friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) has the ear of the Government, he gets aid for his Indians, while the Indians in the constituency of my hon. friend from Brant have to support themselves by their own unaided efforts. As I said, if these Indians can give private contributions to build Orange halls, which are good schools to make Tories out of, I think they should be able to give something to keep up their agricultural societies.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I see that one of these grants is made for a band of Indians in the County of Kent. I think the Government have taken the correct way to deal with this matter, and that is, aid only those who need aid. The Six Nations are a wealthy people who can run their own show. Further, all the bands in my riding are not getting help. It is only one. The Oneidas are not getting any, because they are able to manage their own show, and the chief of the Chippewas told me that they did not want any assistance. As I have said, the Munceys are in poor circumstances, but they are making a beginning and are doing well. All they want is to have their ground fenced in. I have no doubt that, in a year or two, they will be self-sustaining.

To assist schools for Protestant Indian children at White Fish Lake, and Chapleau, Ontario......$40

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). By whom was application made for this grant?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was made last year, and again this spring, by a reverend gentleman whose name I forget at the moment. He was in company with Rev. Mr. Carson, who was then in charge of the Dominion Church, Ottawa. Subsequently Rev. Mr. Carson came again to see me, and asked whether I had forgotten the promise made by my predecessor, Mr. White. I agreed to fulfil the promise, and the same amount was voted last year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon, gentleman is unable to remember who accompanied the Rev. Mr. Carson?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) were here, I dare say he would be able to give the clergyman's name. He is a well known clergyman who has been there for years. I think it was a Rev. Mr. Macpherson, or Mr. Macdonald, or some such name.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Here is a grant for denominational purposes. I believe the "Equal Righters" ought to protest against any such thing, and I am surprised at the hon member for West York (Mr. Wallace) sitting quietly by and allowing grants for sectarian purposes, for denominational schools, Methodist schools, to pass through. It is certainly a fearful outrage. Some hon. gentlemen have been going from one end of the Province of Ontario to the other, protesting against Quebecusing her own money for educational purposes, and yet we have a deliberate grant for Protestant schools. I think it is hardly fair that these "Equal Righters" should allow an item of this kind to pass.

Muncey Indians Agricultural Society.... $90

Mr. LANDERKIN. Last session there was an amount voted for building a barn, or something of that kind, at Mount Elgin, for the Muncey Indians. Who made the application for that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If I recollect aright that was made by the Rev. Mr. Sutherland, on behalf of this society. The barn was burnt down, and the sum of $600 was asked and granted.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Was it by letter? Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did some other clergyman make an application likewise?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not recollect.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where is the Gibson Reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In Algoma. This case was brought to my notice last year by the hon. member others are wholly assisted schools.

Mr. Armstrong.

for West York (Mr. Wallace), and by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt). I enquired into the matter and agreed to give the vote.

Subdividing the Indian Reserves in Ontario and Quebec......$1,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it the intention of the Minister to carry on the work on an Indian reserve unless the Indians themselves ask for it?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Manitoba and North-West Territories, to pay a school teacher at Lac la Rouge, $300; at Lake Montreal, $300; to assist in the construction of a school house at each place, $200, total...............$800

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). To what denomination do these schools belong?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These schools are to be built in the new country that was ceded to us last year, north of Prince Albert. We took 1,100 square miles of territory, and got a surrender of it two years ago. The Indians, although living so far north, are well advanced, and at the first treaty made in the North-West they signed their own names to it. The schools belong to the Church of England. They have had schools there before, and I think the Rev. Mr. McKay had been amongst them for some little time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These are denominational schools, I suppose, also?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These will be Government schools, but the school teachers will be of the Church of England persuasion.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What is the meaning of a third day school in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are already two schools in the reserve. This school is needed, as there are fifty-five other children who are not able to reach these schools already in operation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are all the schools under some religious auspices or some religious body?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This school we propose to establish is a Church of England school. The large industrial school is Roman Catholic; it has been in operation three or four years. It is a wooden building, and we propose to veneer it, as the building has become cracked and is not weather proof.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand that all schools are maintained by or operated by the Government, and that these are simply supplementary grants to schools managed under the different denominations?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are two that may come under the category of being maintained wholly by the Government, and they are these two we are proposing to establish in the Montreal colony. The others are wholly assisted schools.

Metlakahtla Industrial School $1,360

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What does the hon. Minister expect to accomplish by this expenditure? How is the school to be operated? Is it proposed to teach the Indians trades, and to educate them at the same time?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In the previous Estimates there was an amount voted of $1,500 for the erection of an establishment. This amount has been applied for by the agent of the district, who thinks that by erecting an establishment such as is proposed, a great many Indian children may be taught. It is proposed to undertake this work as an experiment, and not to enter upon a very large expenditure. The Indians there are very ingenious and are very good workmen, and we consider that by employing two or three machin ists at the institution much good can be accomplished. We do not propose, I repeat, to enter on a large expenditure, but we intend to ascertain if the Indians take up the work or not. We provide for twenty boys to learn trades.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are these all denominational schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The schools at Kootenay and Kamloops are Roman Catholic schools; the school at Metlakahtla is an undenominational one. It is under the eye of the Bishop of the English Church, but it is under a Presbyterian principal, and the institution is really undenominational.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What services have been rendered by this missioner?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He has given great personal attention to the Indians, and has been a friend to them. His case has been recommended by the hon. member for Colchester. It has been the practice to grant these small amounts to the missionaries for the Indians.

To pay Mr. James Fletcher for services in connection with the entomological collections in the Geological and Natural History Museum.......... $100

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Is this gentleman not now connected with the agricultural farm?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; Mr. Fletcher was formerly assistant librarian of this Parliament. During the time he was librarian he made these collections. He was paid specially for it. $100 was considered fair remuneration for the work he did. This is proposed to be the last payment of this kind.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Unfortunately, we hear that word "last" very often.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You never heard it from me before.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I heard it from you now, and I will probably hear the same thing next year again.

Expenses in connection with Artesian Borings...... $10,000

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is for the purpose of demonstrating, if possible, where artesian water can be obtained. The director of the Survey has not yet decided the exact locality where the operations will be carried on. I am in hopes that the results obtained from this small amount will induce Parliament to give a larger vote in other years. If we can get artesian water it will be of great benefit to the country, and these borings will also assist us in demonstrating the different strata we penetrate, and may develop riches we are at present ignorant of.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister has no idea of where he is going to expend this money, it shows that his Department is very backward. At this period of the year the Department should know where operations are to be carried on.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are boring at Deloraine now, and we expect the results of that boring will guide us with regard to future borings. I should like to sink those wells in a large district of 200 miles square, about six or eight miles from Regina, where, in dry weather, water is scarce.

Mr. CASEY. This is to be expended in Manitoba and the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Purchase of traps for destruction of gophers in the N.W.T........... $1,000

Mr. DEWDNEY. I explained the other night that the settlers complained that the gophers breed on the unoccupied Government lands, and these traps are to kill the gophers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What does each trap cost?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have had several samples of traps sent me since this was mentioned in Parliament, and yesterday I nearly lost my finger experimenting on one of them. I think the most useful is the ordinary muskrat trap.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) should be here to look after the Government for cruelty to animals.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The gophers go for the wheat, the settlers go for the Government, and then the Government go for the treasury.

Mr. WATSON. I think something should be provided to destroy the gophers on the Government lands in Manitoba, as well as in the North-West Territories. The gophers come from the vacant lands which are held by the Canadian Pacific Railway without paying any taxes, and destroy wheat fields in some parts of the country which are not generally cultivated. I have seen myself a large field of wheat destroyed by the gophers in two or three days.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I was not aware that Manitoba was inflicted with gophers to any great extent, but no doubt there are some in very dry places. I may say that this is specially voted at the request of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories.

Mr. WATSON. I believe that in some parts of the North-West gophers' tails have been used as a sort of currency, valued at two cents each, and the Indians have made a good deal of money catching the gophers and depriving them of their tails, and letting them go again. But the people became afraid that they would multiply too rapidly, and now I believe they demand their heads instead of their tails.

Collection and classification of old records of Canada in the Privy Council Office.

$1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is charged with this work?

Mr. COLBY. It is done under the superintendence of the Deputy. He has found that there are some seventy boxes of records in the Privy Council vaults. some of which are, in his judgment, very valuable, and this vote is for their collation and classification.

Mr. CASEY. Is it to be done by officials of the Department already receiving pay?

Mr. COLBY. The work is in excess of that done by the ordinary staff, and that is the reason why we ask for a special vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will any member of the Ministry venture to say that he will read these if we buy them?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but I will say this, that this is the last of this kind of vote that will be asked for. The Library Committee will be supposed to buy what books they require for the Library and as exchanges for this House, and the duty of discriminating will be thrown upon them.

"Le Vieux Lachine," published by the Gebhart-Berthiaume Co., 50 copies at $1.......

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this?
Mr. FOSTER. It is a historical sketch of the history of Lachine.

Mr. LAURIER. I have not read the debates of the Legislative Council, but I have read an account of this work, which I am informed has been prepared by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), and is a valuable work.

"Les Bourgeois du Nord-Ouest," 25 copies at $2 each...... $50

Mr. LAURIER. This book I have had the pleasure of reading through and through, and it is a most valuable contribution to our history.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What salary has he already?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The present salary is the ordinary salary of an excise officer. This officer was brought from another position to take charge of the wood naphtha establishment here. He was granted the usual allowance paid to officers who change their positions; and he has now become a permanent officer. The position is worth about $1,200, which he will eventually receive, but instead of paying him an allowance out of contingencies, on consultation with the Auditor General, I propose to give him this increase. The change will result in a saving to the country.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who is the officer?

Mr. COSTIGAN. His name is Flynn.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What was the salary he was receiving before?

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under $1,000, I think; but I know that he will be receiving now less salary than he was receiving as an excise officer if the extra amount from contingencies be considered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For that division there are two officers. Exciseman Moore is absent from his office for three months getting information in one of the larger divisions with regard to distilleries and breweries, and under ordinary circumstances we employ an extra officer to assist the other exciseman who is left in charge. But the exciseman has volunteered to do the work for three months, and I have thought it reasonable to ask for this amount to pay him instead of employing an extra man at the rate of at least $600 a year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this is a most objectionable item. If that servant is in the employ of the Department and his time will permit him to perform this extra duty, he ought to perform it without any extra pay whatever. It is most objectionable that we should grant double pay in this way, when in reality they are paid for full time in the service of the Department in which they are engaged.

To increase the salary of A. C. Patterson, assistant inspector of weights and measures at Qu'Appelle...... $100

Mr. COSTIGAN. This increase is because that branch of the service, for many reasons, is the poorest paid of any branch. The excise men start at $600 and increase at the rate of $30 a year, and have besides great chances of promotion through the grades of third and second class and collectors. The assistant inspectors of weights and measures cannot go beyond $800, though they may spend all their lives in the service. Where there is a report of the inspector that the officer discharges his duty faithfully, his year's salary should reach $600.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I have called the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue to the circumstances with reference to an individual by the name of Geo. W. Bogg. I have been informed that he has made formal application for a refund of the amount voted and paid into the Government during the term he was acting assistant inspector of weights and measures. He made that application, feeling he was entitled to the amount that he paid into the fund, plus the interest up to the present. I also have the statement of one of the inspectors of weights and measures who had been appointed by the previous Government and was dismissed by this Government. His name is John Campbell, and he was assistant inspector in the county of Elgin. It appears that he was dismissed for no fault of his own, but on account of the change in the Act, and he considers it is only fair that the amount he had paid into the superannuation fund should be refunded to him with interest. It is only fair that the amount of $4 or $5 a year that the Government took out of his salary for the superannuation fund should be returned to him, plus the interest. For what reason he was dismissed he does not know, because he is a good Conservative and did his duty well, and his family need all the assistance he can give them. I hope the Minister will look into the matter during recess and deal fairly by this man, and if he does not do him justice I will have to refer to the matter again at another session.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have told the hon, gentleman that the case of Mr. Boggs would receive my attention. With regard to the assistant inspectors of weights and measures who were not dismissed, but displaced through the repeal of the law and the reduction of the number of districts, in all cases, I think, they did receive the refund of the amounts they paid in. If any one has not received that amount, it must be because he was dismissed for cause, in which case, of course, he would not be entitled to it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I can inform the hon. gentleman, that, as a matter of fact, this man was not dismissed for cause, but was dismissed on account of the repeal of the Act. I have his statement here in which he states the amount he paid in.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the hon, gentleman send me the information and I will look into it?

To additional pay to persons permanently employed "in the Public Service" and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for or in connection with passing vessels through the canals between Lake Erie and Montreal from miduight on Saturdays to 6 a.m. Sundays, and from 9 p.m. Sundays to midnight, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. $6,350

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it the intention of the Government to continue the arrangement, which this vote indicates, with regard to the canal, during the season of navigation, of keeping it open a portion of the Sabbath?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it is the intention of the Government to keep the canal closed from six in the morning until nine in the Between those hours the crews and passengers can have an opportunity of attending divine service. This is absolutely necessary for the usefulness of the canal. There is no restriction of this kind on the Erie Canal or any of the canals in the United States. Only this week, I received a strong remonstrance from the Ogdensburg Transport and Shipping Company who have a large fleet on the lakes, and they pressed especially that the traffic on the Welland Canal should not be interrupted on Sunday, as it is a great injury to their traffic not to have the canal open. However, it was thought that it would be better that the canal should be closed during the hours of public service.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then they are closed from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m.?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are closed from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Mr. AMYOT. While we are upon this item, I would ask if the Minister of Railways has come to any conclusion in regard to the debentures of the North Shore Railway, as it was called—the debentures which the Government hold against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company? The question was asked before by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has not come to any conclusion as yet.

Mr. AMYOT. Do the Government expect to come to any conclusion during this Session?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They expect to discuss it.

Mr. AMYOT. I suppose I would get the same answer as to the assistance to the Quebec bridge?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That matter stands.

Post Office Department.......$3,900

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that the officer in charge of the post office at Rockport, in the county of Leeds, has been dismissed, or has been informed that he would be dismissed. I should be glad if the Postmaster General will state why he is to be dismissed? I understand that this gentleman has been in the service for over 30 years, and, unless there are strong grounds for dismissing him, it would appear to be a rather arbitrary exercise of power.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember the facts, but there must have been very strong grounds or certainly he would not have been dismissed. I think there was an enquiry made by the Inspector, and that the evidence was such that the Department recommended his dismissal to me. I will bring down the papers to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this $1,200 for an additional first-class clerk in the office of the Inspector at Stratford for?

Mr. HAGGART. It is to promote Mr. Yorrick, who has been over 30 years in the service, from a second to a first-class clerkship.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will you have to put another officer in Mr. Yorrick's place?

Mr. HAGGART. The grades move up, and I suppose there will be an additional third-class clerk.

Mr. LOVITT. Why is the item of $200 put in every year to increase Mr. Sydenham Howe's salary to $600? Why is his salary not made $600 at once.

Mr. HAGGART. He is a superannuated civil service employé, and the Auditor General requires this to be put in every year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. His office, I think, was abolished. He was receiving about $2,400 a year, but on the superannuation allowance, got only about $1,200. What I want to know is what work he is doing, because it would be very peculiar for a man who was very nearly at the head of a department to be put to very inferior work for the sake of increasing his superannuation allowance. It would be better to appoint him to some definite office and allow his superannuation allowance to be suspended. I see grave inconveniences in the present course.

Mr. HAGGART. I made enquiries into this case, and ordered the information to be forwarded to the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not quite certain whether some memorandum was not sent to me, but it did not add to the information I received from the Auditor General's Report. I want to ascertain exactly what sort of place Mr. Howe fills, because apparently he is now doing duty as a third-class clerk, and that is an eccentric disposition of a man who has occupied a high place in the service, and would not commend itself to my mind as being a good thing in the interest of the service generally.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Howe was the agent of the Receiver General. The office was abolished. He was employed in the Post Office Inspector's office to do certain clerical work. He is satisfied to do that work, and I do not think his health is such as to allow him to undertake anything like the duties he performed before when he had the more responsible position. I think he was only able to do clerical work of this kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will not press the point just now, but the position is a queer one for a man of Mr. Howe's former status to occupy.

Increase of salary to two first class clerks in the post office at St. John, N.B., $100 each$200

Mr. ELLIS. Might I enquire why this sum was also in the ordinary Estimates of the year? It has appeared twice.

Mr. HAGGART. If so, it is a mistake to put it in again. It was intended to increase the salaries of Messrs. Potter and Reid, first class clerks, from $1,200 to $1,300. Mr. Potter is reported as efficient, and has been in the service 27 years. Mr. Reed is also reported very efficient, and has been in the service over 20 years.

Mr. ELLIS. I have no objection to the increase, I think it is deserved, but it appears in both columns.

Mr. HAGGART. It must be a mistake, then. Strike it out.

Further amount required for Central Experimental Farm................$4,000

The Minister of Agriculture Mr. FOSTER. being absent, the explanation of this item has been given to me. It is to erect a dairy building and a piggery. The use of the dairy building is outlined here by the professor of dairying. Its purpose is to promote live-stock experiments, for the care and treatment of the milk of the different animals, to afford conveniences for carrying on a number of scientific investigations in butter and cheese making, and to demonstrate the suitability of Canadian salt for dairying purposes. For these purposes a building is required which will cost $2,500. Then another building, estimated to cost $1,500, is required for the piggery. The importance of economical methods of swine-feeding is very great to Canadian farmers, and reliable information is necessary bearing upon food experiments, relating to the quantities of different sorts of grain required to produce a pound of pork, the most economical combinations and preparations of grain for swinefeeding, the influence of the different kinds of food upon the quality of the meat, the ages at which swine give the largest return, &c

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). What is the number of hogs to be kept?—because I think this is a very large amount. I know one or two institutions that have put up pig-pens on improved principles, capable of accommodating over 100 pigs, for $600 or $700.

Mr. FOSTER. The idea is to have at least 20 different lots of swine, each pen is to be constructed to accommodate six hogs.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an old claim. It appears that Mr. Macdonald was authorised to get an exhibit of Nova Scotia building stone to be taken to the Philadelphia Exhibition, and this is certified by Mr. Perreault who had charge of the exhibit. Mr. Pelletier was the responsible Minister, and in settling the accounts Mr. Macdonald's claim does not appear to have been paid. Time ran on, and the claim was not made for several years owing to Mr. Macdonald's illness.

To aid in a Canadian representation at Jamaica Exhibition in 1891........$5,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How is this aid to be given?

Mr. FOSTER. This exhibition is to commence on 22nd January next, at Jamaica. It is an exhibition of products, manufactures, works of art and so on, not only from Jamaica and the other West Indian Islands, but also from Great Britain and her colonies, and in that way it is a sort of International Exhibition. It will remain open not less than three months. The Department of Agriculture asks for this vote in order to assist in paying the freight of Canadian exhibits sent there, and the return freight of such articles as will not be sold. Ample space has been applied for, and that already asked reaches 5,000 superficial feet.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the Government defray entire freights of the exhibits?

Mr. FOSTER. No. This amount will be expended in that direction.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it intended to send a representative there?

Mr. FOSTER. That has not been settled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This item is necessary to meet a judgment of the Court of Exchequer. The company made a claim and secured a judgment for $241,866, subject to a deduction of the amount paid by the Government for wages on account of the company, $148,079, leaving a balance of $100,777.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this road now in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a further amount for the Oxford and New Glasgow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There appears to be no limit to the way in which this unfortunate country is mulcted for this road. First we were told that it was in the hands of a first class company, and on this assurance we voted a subsidy.

Then we had to take it off their hands and build it ourselves. Then we were assured that a mileage of 45 miles would be saved, but the saving effected turned out to be 7 miles. I suppose we must pay the claim, as it is a judgment of the Court of Exchequer; otherwise I would oppose it entirely.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the last time application will be made on behalf of this road?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope and believe so.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be remembered that Sir Charles Tupper first stated that the saving would be 45 miles, afterwards 19 miles, still later 15 miles, and the First Minister at length told us the fact that the saving was only 7 miles. What i₃ the total length of the line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report of the Railway Department shows the length of the line. The information furnished to me by the Department was that the reduction will be 7 miles, and I submitted that to Parliament. With respect to the statement as to the 45 miles, Mr. Schreiber informs me that Sir Charles Tupper received the most explicit assurances again and again that 45 miles would be saved.

Mr. McMULLEN. Sir Charles Tupper gave the house his positive assurance that 45 miles would be saved, and he, moreover, assured the House that this was a gigantic scheme which would unite the different Provinces, enable coal to be sent from Nova Scotia to Toronto, Hamilton and western points, and that the light grades on the line would enable the traffic to avoid the heavy grades on the Intercolonial. It, however, appears that the reduction in the length of the line is only 7 miles, and that the grades are up to 110 feet on this line as against 85 or 90 to the mile on the Intercolonial.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I could understand and make allowance, if the length of the road had been considerable, for a very serious percentage of error, but the total length of the road is only 80 miles. To make a mistake in a road of 80 miles to the extent of 45 miles is a too heavy percentage of error for which any Minister of Railways should be responsible.

Further amount required for Immigration. $150,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have the Ministry received new light from any source as to the necessity for this vote for immigration? We have been told that they had determined to keep down the expenses for immigration and to abandon the assisted passages, and all the rest of it. This item looks like a new departure and we would like to hear something about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is confined to his house, by a serious indisposition, or he would be able to enter into this question fully. The Government have, to a certain extent, enlarged their immigration policy. The North-West has now been fully supplied with railway accommodation, and large tracts of country are open there for settlers and waiting for settlement. Emigration from the mother country is drawn everywhere by the large aids which are given. All the Australian colonies are granting this aid, and there is a large flow of emigration to the United States, drawn, principally, by the relatives of the emigrants, who are settled and are prosperous there. Even the Argentine Republic is bidding largely, in England, and in Europe generally, for settlers. Now, there was a very considerable objection, and with a good show of reason, although it was exaggerated, taken in the cities and towns and in older Canada, that artisans were brought out here, perhaps in a season of the year when work was scanty and when the resident artisans were quite sufficient to do the work, and that the residents were, at very inconvenient seasons of the year, pushed off their stools by immigrant artisans, who, from necessity, worked for lower wages. That complaint, as the hon-gentlemen opposite know, has a great appearance of justice, and I think there is a good deal of substance in the complaint, but there can be no objection to assist, in a moderate way, settlers, especially of the agricultural classes, who come from Europe, and go to the North-West Territories and Manitoba and settle there. It is the intention of the Department only to invite and to assist agricultural laborers, and any aid given to them is only to be given after they arrive in the North-West Territories and settle there. In such a case, of course, every one knows that this immigration instead of being an injury to the eastern mechanics, manufacturers and workmen, will be an assistance to them, because these agricultural laborers will be wanting supplies of all kinds, and they will be adding to the purchasers of Canadian goods. As I have already said, assistance is only to be given to far-As I have mers and farm laborers. They are not to get their money in England, or at Quebec, or at Montreal, or at Toronto, or at any other place where they may linger, but it will be given to them by a system to be worked out by the Department, after they have really arrived in the North-West and assumed the position of settlers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it by assisted passages ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be promise of assistance, to be realised only when they arrive in the North-West and Manitoba, and settle there. I am unable to enter fully upon the details of the scheme, and I am sorry to say the Minister of Agriculture is very much indisposed and may not be able to be out for some little time. The Government think it expedient to increase the vote for this purpose, and all safeguards will be used for the purpose of preventing persons who are so aided going to the United States, or lingering in the older Provinces.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand, the hon. gentleman proposes to assist immigrants coming to this country, of a particular class, only upon their reaching the North-West Territories and Manitoba.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And British Columbia.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is that whether they settle on the Dominion lands of British Columbia, or anywhere in the Province?

Sir JOHN A MACDONALD. Anywhere in the Province.

waiting for settlement. Emigration from the mother country is drawn everywhere by the large aids which are given. All the Australian colonies are granting this aid, and there is a large flow of emigration to the United States, drawn, principally, by the relatives of the emigrants, who are that is an intelligent proposition. But if he says that the immigrants may go where they please in British Columbia, but they cannot go where they please in any of the Provinces east of Manitoba I do not think that would be an intelligible course. If there is to be a general policy of aiding immigration to Canada, it does seem to me that no matter where the immigrants settle within the Dominion, they would be entitled to the same aid. If the Government proposes that they shall be aided simply for the occupation and settlement of the Dominion lands, of course that would exclude compensation to those who settle in Ontario, and in British Columbia as well, except they would settle within the belt that was granted to the Dominion Government, as compensation for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If this vote is to be used for the payment of officials and for printing, and advertising, and distributing pamphlets, as it has been largely used heretofore, then I am afraid the greater portion of it will go to other purposes than to aid the immigrants. it were not so late in the Session, I would like to call the right hon. gentleman's attention to the story of Ginx's baby. The hon, gentleman no doubt remembers how Ginx's baby got into a nunnery, and how the windows in the establishment were broken, and the baby taken out, and how the case came before a magistrate, and ultimately before a meeting at Exeter Hall, where upwards of £1,300 were raised at the Protestant meeting for the purpose of maintaining that Protestant child. He remembers how that money was spent. I sent to the Library a few moments ago, and I find that the money which was subscribed for Ginx's baby, was spent as follows :- Payment for rent of committee rooms, £45; two secretaries, £120; agents, carvassing, &c., £88 6s. 3d.; paid for books, "Daily Bulletin of Health," "Life of Ginx's Baby," "Protestant Babyhood," "The Cradle of an Infant Martyr," "A Snatched Brand," &c., £596 13s. 5d.; advertisements of meetings, sermons, &c., £261 ls. ld.; legal expenses, £77; stationery, £35 10s.; postage, &c., £27 19s. 2d. So that there were £1,251 and upwards paid for these various amounts, out of the £1,300 that were subscribed for the maintenance of Ginx's baby, and there was only something like £100 left for the support of the infant. In a very short time that fund was exhausted, and so Ginx's baby was afterwards found on a common on the boundary between two parishes, and there was a tremendous law-suit as to which parish should maintain the child, because its head was in one parish and its heels in the other. The money voted by Parliament for the promotion of immigration has heretofore been spent in very much the same way. I remember the last time we were discussing this question, a few years ago, when I think some $600 was paid for the purchase of the right to publish a certain valuable pamphlet prepared by one Captain Allen for the promotion of immigration to the North-West Territories, a further sum to some one living near the frontier for printing a certain pamphlet in German, and other sums to newspapers; and the amount paid for printing, I think, was somewhat more than the amount actually received by immigrants in the way of assistance in the payment of their passage. I would like to know from the hon. First Minister whether any portion of this $150,000 is to be applied again for the appointment of North-West and British Columbia. The recipients officials, and the publication of advertisements and of aid will not receive anything until it is known Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

pamphlets, for the purpose of inciting people to immigrate to this country, or whether the Government are going to be content with the more modest method of actually paying money to those who undertake to immigrate to this country, exercising a careful supervision over the payment, so as to see that the money does not go to parties who are simply on their way to the United States. I think that is a most desirable precaution. I would not like to see the payment restricted to those who go westward beyond Ontario. There are in the older Provinces large quantities of land to be set. tled, and laborers are more likely to obtain employment in those Provinces than in the newer districts of the west, which are rather for the settler than the laborer. I think that the House, when asked for this appropriation, is entitled to a fuller and more minute statement as to the way in which the money is to be employed. If the Government do not propose to expend money for other purposes than for assisted passages, there will be little reason for complaining; but if it is to go for these various other enterprises, as the money went for Ginx's baby, I think we ought to know it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has far too good a memory, both as regards Ginx's baby and some of the ways in which immigration money has been expended. I can tell him, however, so far as this $150,000 is concerned, that it is not to be expended in any other way than in furnishing, metaphorically, a feeding bottle for Ginx's baby, for it will only be expended in aiding settlers. The reason why I mention that it is for the purpose of encouraging immigration to the North-West is, in the first place, that the expense of going there is much greater than the expense of going to the older Provinces; and, in the next place, the hon. gentleman will remember that there was a very strong opposition offered by the artisans, the trades unions, the Knights of Labor, and the working classes generally, to the expenditure of any money in bringing immigrants into their midst in the older Provinces; and there is no use of our trying to fight against that feeling, although the danger of their being supplanted by foreign labor is in my opinion much exaggerated. Still, that is a fixed feeling in all the towns of the older Provinces, and you cannot resist it. On the other hand, it will please everybody to have the North-West speedily filled up by a class of agriculturists who will be the consumers of our manufactures and the products of the labor of our artisans. Therefore, I can give the most positive pledge that this sum will not be expended either on pamphlets or in appointing agents to go to England and lecture, and all that sort of thing. At the same time I must say that the hon, gentleman under-rates the advantage of pamphlets and the means of information that were scattered over the mother country and the continent of Europe. Canada is better and more favorably known in the older countries than it could otherwise have been, in consequence of the lectures which were delivered by men well acquainted with the country, and still more in consequence of the pamphlets which were distributed. The money, let me repeat once more, will be expended in assisting immigrants to go to Manitoba and the North-West and British Columbia. The recipients that they have arrived in the North-West and have taken up their land, and have, in fact, become settlers in the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is a large vote, and in asking for it the Government are entering upon a new policy, apparently, if we may judge from what the hon. First Minister says. The policy of encouraging immigration has been the policy of the Government of Canada for many years; but this money is to be devoted especially, if I judge from the hon. First Minister's remarks, to the promotion of immigration to the North-West Territories. Well, that whole matter has been so disappointing to the country that it would have been well, I think, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture could have been here—I regret that he is unwell-to have given us an idea of what results he expected from this proposed expenditure. In the first place, I think the hon. First Minister must feel that it is rather hard upon him and upon the House to ask us to vote this money; for I cannot help remembering that, when we were making grants of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to open up that country, one of the statements the right hon. gentleman made to the House was that one of the benefits to be derived from those grants would be that we should be relieved from immigration expenditure altogether -that the railway company would become the means by which the fertile plains of the North-West would be settled. Some years after that promise was made and after the moneys had been expended, I asked for a return showing what the expenditure of the company had been for the promotion of immigration, and to the best of my recollection at present, the report which came down showed that the company had expended in that direction simply nothing at all. The hon. Minister of Public Works, at the same time as the hon. First Minister, dwelt strongly on the same point, holding that one of the greatest benefits to be derived from the construction of this road was that it would lift the burden of immigration expenditure from the country, and that self-interest would compel the company to assume the responsibility of doing that work. The assume the responsibility of doing that work. The hom. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) took the same ground. It was the burden of the song of the Ministry and their supporters at that time. Now, what is the result? The road has been completed, but completed by greater exertions being made on the part of Canada-by further advances being made to that company in order that the road might be thoroughly completed; and yet, after Parliament has voted millions of acres of land more to that company by way of aiding branches and giving them even a greater and more direct interest in the North-West than the vast interest they had before, we hear nothing said about their duty with reference to this matter. We find, however, that the same Ministers who told us that it would be the company's interest, as well as their duty, to make large expenditures for the purpose of immigration and relieve us of that necessity, we find the Government coming down with a proposition to spend $150,000 per annum to bring people to the North-West. We have heard representatives of the North-West urge this policy; we have heard them urge that $1,000,000 should be granted; and there are know how to reconcile them. Sitting, as I do, on a Committee which has to do with this matter, I hear, what I am rejoiced to hear, that we have in the North-West, better lands, better soil, better climate than you can find in the North-Western States. We are told, besides, that there are many Canadians settled in Dakota who desire to leave that State and settle in our North-West; that there is a large immigration expected from there, and that it is already begun. These people would no doubt be the very best class of settlers we could have in the North-West. They are the sons of Ontario, and the other Canadian Provinces, who have located, according to these statements, in the North-Western States only to be disappointed, and who desire to leave there to take up their residence in Canada. With all that, we find the Government coming down with a proposition of this kind in order to bring out people from the old country to settle our It would be well to defer entering on this new policy until next year, when the census will be taken, and we will be able to ascertain what have been the real pratical results of our expenditure in the past. We do not forget that, in 1885, when the last census was taken, the result was most disappointing and disheartening; and when the census is taken in 1891, it is to be hoped better results will be shown by it. But, after all, the promises which were made that the Canadian Pacific Railway would bring settlement to the country, that the company would make every effort, as it was their interest to do, to promote settlement, it was most disappointing to find the Government coming down now and proposing to add $150,000 a year to our expenditure, over and above the millions of acres of land we have voted away every succeeding session including the present. We find the members of the North-West pressing this matter on the Government; we find them calling for an expenditure of $1,000,000, which proves that the immigration to that country has been bitterly disappointing to them as it has been to the rest of the members of this House. It is the duty of the Government to urge upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, when giving them additional grants of land, that they should be more active in promoting immigration. The Government should urge upon them their duty to assume, in a large measure, the expenditure of peopling the North-West from the surplus population of the old country. Certainly they have as great an interest in that country as any one can possibly have, and the arguments used when these railway grants were being given was that the interests of this company would impel them to take this course. I think the Government ought to be in a position to come to the House and say what the Canadian Pacific Railway have done in the way of encouraging immigration, and what expenditure they have made in reference to that matter? When, a few years ago, I asked for a return of the expenditure they had thus made, I received one which amounted to stating, in so many words, that there was no expenditure. I think it is the duty of the Government to take steps in the direction that I have pointed out, before asking us, after all the expenses we have made, to start upon this policy of spending $150,000 a year in order that we may bring over immigrants to settle upon lands that that $1,000,000 should be granted; and there are belong to us and the Canadian Pacific Railway such conflicting statements made that one does not as well, and by the location of these immigrants upon which this corporation shall greatly benefit. If we are to enter upon this scheme of expenditure and if it be true, as it has been reported in the Committee on Immigration, that there are a large number of Ontario farmers settled in Dakota and other North-Western States who are anxious to leave and come to our North-West, I submit that possibly there we might find a field from which we could, with much less expense, draw a more suitable class of settlers for our North-West, than we can get even from the old country. with reference to the assisting of passengers, I would like to know whether the Government have had a conference with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and whether, if this scheme be gone into and we grant assisted passages to immigrants across the ocean, the Canadian Pacific Railway will on their part agree to carry these immigrants to Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and give them free passages to where they may settle. What do they propose to do in the matter? Do they propose to help, and to what extent? I think it is the duty of the Committee to ascertain something with reference to these matters before giving this grant of money, and I do think the time has come when the Government ought to urge, if they have not already done so, the Canadian Pacific Railway to take more active steps and expend more money in promoting immigration to the North-West. We were promised by the First Minister and by the Minister of Public Works, when that scheme was gone into, and by their supporters, that in course of time the Canadian Pacific Railway would relieve us entirely of expenditure upon immigration, and would become the instrument by which these lands would be settled. Well, things have gone on in the past ten years; and certainly the duty devolving upon them and their interests as well, have increased, instead of being minimised, by the extra grants of lands we have given them each succeeding Session, including the present. Yet we have no information from the Government as to what expenditure they have made. I am aware the First Minister is not thoroughly posted in this matter; and I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is unable to be present; but perhaps some member of the Government is in possession of the information I desire; and if so the Committee ought to be favored with it before adopting this, which is, in a measure, a new policy, as explained by the First Minister-not a measure of assisting immigrants to settle in the older Provinces but to bring only those who intend to settle in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway have done a very great deal in the way of assisting immigrants to get to the North-West. Besides spending large sums of money in distributing information in England, they carry in their immigrant trains immigrants at the lowest possible rate. The ordinary rate from Quebec and Montreal to Winnipeg is upwards of $30, and they carry the immigrants from Quebec to Winnipeg for $12. They have, during the summer, weekly or fortnightly immigrant trains. The hon. gentleman will see that it is a substantial advantage to the immigrants; and besides the mode of applying this vote—if it be granted, and I hope it will be-in the case of individual families, will depend upon the arrangement which the Department Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

of Agriculture will make with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The mode of applying it in each individual case, or rather in the case of each individual family, will depend upon the arrangements that the Government or the Department of Agriculture will make with the railways. We shall enter into negotiations, I think—and I have no doubt successfully—to carry the immigrant at the cheapest possible rate over the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other western railways, so that there may be a minimum of expenditure and a maximum of comfort for the intending settler.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to call attention to the necessity and desirability of getting up something of an immigration scheme in connection with the older Provinces. While it may be well to vote $150,000 for immigration to the North-West, I do not think the interests of the old Provinces should be completely overlooked. In the Province of Ontario I know there is a large amount of land which could be bought very reasonably, and those who have been in the North-West would say that the people who go from the Province of Ontario, or the Province of Quebec, are better adapted to the requirements of the North-West than immigrants from the old country. I do not think we should devote our whole attention to immigration to the North-West. An hon, geutleman to-night has given us an account of Ginx's baby. It seems to me that the North-West is going to be a Ginx's baby on our hands. Unfortunately, our experience has been that an enormous number of immigrants have entered that country, and when the last census was taken we found that a great many who were supposed to have gone there were not there, but had left the country. I think it would be a prudent act on the part of the hon. gentleman to erect a wire fence 150 feet high from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, and keep the settlers there when he gets them. While I would be glad to see the North-West filled up with immigrants and to see a large influx of settlers there, still, if you would bring a class of settlers who could spend a few hundred pounds on lands in good agricultural districts in Ontario or Quebec—and the price is now low—and let the present owners of those lands go to the North-West, I think it would be a better system than to get these poor immigrants to go in there and settle. Perhaps one object of the hon. gentleman is to get people in there with a view to the census which is to be taken in 1891. My hon, friend in front has been predicting that the census will not show all the population which we should have, and this vote may be used to hunt up the people in the highways and hedges, and bring in the blind, the lame, the halt and the dumb, so that it may be shown that we are increasing. I hope the money will not be used in that way, and I also earnestly hope that arrangements will be made that, when these immigrants get to the North-West, we will keep them there. I would be glad to endorse the suggestion of my hon. friend from Brant as to some of those who have gone to Dakota, Minnesota and other American States. I believe it would be very desirable that they should be induced to come back. I believe that, if we can fill up the North-West by the sons of Ontario farmers, or by farmers from the older Provinces who have large families and are anxious to go to the North-West to get more land, and can bring here those people who have a few hundred pounds to buy out those Ontario farmers, we will secure the success of the North-West far more than by bringing in these poor, miserable, inexperienced immigrants who will not understand the country to which they go, and will report unfavorably of the North-West, as they have in many cases in the past, and as they have also in regard to the United States, where their experience has been the same as in our own North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I find great difficulty in understanding what the First Minister intends to do. I understood at first that he did not intend to use this money for assisted passages, but that he intended to apply it to people who had actually settled in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now I understand him to say that he is willing to pay the expenses of immigrants on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the exact mode of aiding the immigrants I am not able to point out with sufficient particularity, but whether it be to aid the immigrants in crossing the Atlantic or when they arrive on our shores in passing over our railways, in either case the money must first be raised and advanced in England; the immigrant must be taken to the North-West and settled on his homestead before the party who advances the money to enable the immigrant to cross the Atlantic or to pass along the railway can be recouped. The money must be advanced in some way, and the party advancing it will be recouped after the settlement has been actually made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The problem is a difficult one, and therefore I am not disposed to raise captious objections. For my part, I would be disposed to consider any fair scheme for bringing here a proper class of settlers, though I am certainly of the opinion that our own farmers from Ontario are far better suited to the North-West than any other class that we can put in there, and I would rather see a sum of money voted to divert from the United States to our North-West the tide of emigration from Ontario. I think we should have some memorandum from the Department showing how this sum is to be expended: $150,000 is a considerable sum of money, but it would not go very far towards supplying a number of families with tools or implements, or oxen, or anything else for the purpose of cultivating the soil, that is, if the hon. gentleman intends to do anything of that

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it can be only in the way of supplementing what is done from other sources.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The schemes which we have had suggested from the other side of the Atlantic, from time to time, have been very plausible, but, as the cant phrase goes, they have not materialised. There is a great deal of danger of our having men of an inferior class dumped down here, whom the landlords want to get rid of. Now, I could understand that if it were possible for us to plant little colonies in various places, of a superior class of farmers, we might possibly see our way to advance money to these, and our immigration agents might bring a considerable number of such people to this country. But we have very little light from the First Minister as to how this money is to be used. If he is going to pay to a family here, and a family there, all over a territory of 300,000 or 400,000 square miles, I should say there would be very great difficulty indeed in superintending the operation, or in ensuring any good results from it. Now, I am not at all certain that, so far as Manitoba is concerned, seeing that the Manitoba Government have got an immigration service of their own, and understand the thing tolerably well, it would not be better—as the hon. gentleman is now making a new departure, it is on his responsibility, not on ours—that a portion of this sum should be put, under proper provisions and with proper restrictions, at the disposal of the Manitoba Government. That plan was tried on the part of the older Provinces a good many years ago, but it was not successful; it was abolished, and I think wisely. But, in the very peculiar circumstances of the North-West, I am much disposed to think that we would get better results if the hon. gentleman's immigration service could make some arrangement with the immigration service of Manitoba, than by undertaking to expend it with the agencies at his disposal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are open to consider that plan, and we are also open to the suggestion of the hon. member for Brant(Mr. Paterson) to assist Canadian families in Dakota or elsewhere to come into our own country. I am glad to say they are now coming in; such is the information we get. Beyond a doubt they are coming in to our North-West from the North-Western States—but to what extent, I do not know.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If they do they will be likely to remain?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will. If they come into our North-West it is because they are not satisfied where they are. A good many will come if they are able. They have got little properties there, perhaps invested all they brought with them from the East, and they find difficulty in making the change. These would be the very best kind of settlers we could get. The Government is quite open to assist them to a considerable extent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are giving the hon. gentleman a blank cheque to a very great extent. He has not given us much information as to his modus operandi.

Mr. TROW. I do not expect any great influx of population from Dakota or Minnesota. You may occasionally get a family, because they are a migrating class of people. Many in Minnesota and Dakota have friends and relatives in Manitoba, and some of them may possibly be induced to cross the boundary into our own country. But to expect any considerable immigration from Dakota is entirely out of the question. In the first place their land is equally as good as ours, in the case of Dakota.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Now, I could understand that if it were possible it, and you have not. For a hundred miles from for us to plant little colonies in various places, of a superior class of farmers, we might possibly see it, but I know that in southern Dakota there are very large tracts, particularly along the Northern Pacific, not adapted for successful settlement. You may induce people from that section to go north, but to expect those along the boundary to emigrate is perfectly absurd. In order properly to expend this $150,000 I would suggest that some inducements be given to Icelanders, for various reasons. They are an educated class of people, they are exceedingly thrifty, they are workers. When they were induced to come to Manitoba quite a number of them were placed in a wrong position-I do not know by what means or by whose fault-on the western shore of Lake Winnipeg. They were afflicted with small-pox after they arrived there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They chose their location themselves, so as to have fishing.

Mr. TROW. They are now scattered in various parts of Manitoba and the North-West. If you can get Icelanders to remove to that country by giving them some assistance towards expenses out, I believe they would make the best class of settlers you could get there. They are very poor in Iceland, and they are all anxious to remove-the whole settlement is anxious to remove from Iceland, I understand, and if some means were taken to get them out here I believe we could secure a considerable number of the best class of immigrants. As for getting immigrants from Ontario, you are merely robbing Peter to pay Paul, in a manner. Such a change does not enhance the population of our country. It is very desirable that you should induce tenant farmers to come out from the old country, but you will have to offer them some inducements. They are in just as good circumstances as our own farmers, and probably better just now. They are doing well in the old country, and it would be almost out of the question to try to expect them to remove from the old country, from England, Scotland and Ireland, into Ontario, without offering them some inducements. Could the tenant farmers of England be induced to emigrate, they would better their condition, because they are paying more rent in many parts of the old country, particularly in Wales, than the freehold of their property would cost them here. One could scarcely expect them to remove. Themselves and their forefathers have been tenants on the same farm, probably for a hundred years back, and they are likely to remain there, unless we offer them some inducements, and present to them the superior advantages of our own country. I think the Government would do well to circulate among them information concerning the different farms we have in Ontario and other Provinces for sale, telling them at what figures those farms could be sold per acre, and in this way we might persuade many of those tenant farmers to come out here and purchase, because a great many of our farmers in Ontario are anxious to sell, for the reason that they are heavily encumbered, and it would be better for them to sell and remove to the North-West. do not disapprove of this grant by any means, for the reason that that country is vacant, and every settler that you can plant there will grow up with his family, and will at once begin to contribute to the revenue; he becomes a consumer immediately, and in a few years becomes a producer. If the Government adopted my plan they would do much greater service to the country at large than by expending the public money on such works as whether immigration can be expected from the Mr. Trow.

the Trent Valley Canal, and a scheme for lift. ing vessels out of the sea and carrying them across the land. The thing is perfectly absurd. You could easily save $150,000 in some of these lavish expenditures and use it for immigration purposes. For instance, the Franchise Act costs us $400,000 or $500,000 a year, and with that money you could bring out an immense number of immigrants. I approve of immigration; I always did approve of immigration. A country that is vacant and not inhabited like our North-West is of no use unless you plant settlers there who will improve the lands. I consider this grant a proper and legitimate one, and I shall support it.

Mr. MULOCK. I also agree with my hon. friend that it is most desirable that we should judiciously expend money for the purpose of promoting the settlement of the North-West. That country has been part of Canada over 20 years, at least ever since we took it over. There are many ways in which settlement could be promoted. One way is to make the lot of the settler a satisfactory one to himself. Now, during the past year I observed in the public press various criticisms in regard to the tariff rates in the North-West. I am not prepared to say whether those criticisms were correct or not, but they were stated in such positive language that one can hardly doubt their accuracy. Their general trend was to show that the freight rates from the North-West were higher than the freight rates from the Western States—in other words, among the disadvantages that our western settlers labor under, is that they are handicapped in respect to railway rates. I do not accept that statement as correct, not knowing whether it is correct or not. The effect as announced operates prejudicially to our own interests. The Government might perhaps exercise a beneficial influence in that direction. While having no real power they might exercise their influence to see that no inequalities of that kind happened in the early settlement of the coun-The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is deeply interested in the extension of settlement, and it is unwise in its own interests to kill the hen that will lay the golden egg, by checking settlement in its infancy; rather they might, if they can afford it, and it would be to their own advantage to do so, carry the outgoing freight at almost cost, trusting to the development of settlement as a source of profit. When the last general spurt in immigration was made, a large portion of the money voted by Parliament was expended in salaries, printing, and so on. We established agencies in various parts of Great Britain and spent a vast sum of money in spreading pamphlets broadcast throughout the country, with little or no advan-We had extravagant agents, we had agents unfit for the business, men who had no experience but who were appointed simply because they stood well with the Government, and were good party That is not the principle upon which agents should be selected; and I trust, inasmuch as the Government is taking this vote without any limitation, not having laid before the Committee any scheme of expenditure—having, in fact, a blank cheque—they will be especially careful in exercising the utmost economy in regard to the proper expenditure of the money. With respect to

United States or not, that is a debatable question. There are many reasons why the chances are against any movement of immigrants from the United States into Canada. Nevertheless. must take the country as we find it, and even the institutions as we find them, and we must see to overcome our difficulties as much as possible. When the United States opened the territory of Oklohama for free grant settlement the surplus population of the United States flowed in there by myriads, and before nightfall every acre of available land had been taken up. Statistics show that the free grant lands of the United States are about exhausted, and we may reasonably expect that the surplus population of the United States will flow into our country, provided the life of the settler in Canada is not an unhappy one. The people of the United States are made up of the very same classes we are seeking to attract here—those who have left the old land; and although they may temporarily remain in the United States, there is no reason why, by a wise exercise of policy, we cannot attract them across the border. I would not, therefore, despair of getting settlers even from the United States. It is all fish that comes to our net, whether from Iceland or from other countries of Europe, or from our enterprising cousins to the south. I hope good results will follow from this expenditure, although we cannot reasonably expect much additional immigration this year, owing to the lateness of the vote, but we may expect considerable additional immigration subsequently.

Mr. WATSON. As the Government have not submitted any scheme by which the money is to be expended, the subject should be discussed in Committee, as some light may be thrown on matters in When a similar policy was this connection. adopted a few years ago, the results were only partially satisfactory. I am glad to see the Government disposed to place in the Estimates this increased amount for immigration purposes, and it is very necessary that the Government should devise some scheme for the more rapid settlement of the North-West. Our country has railways, and an abundance of vacant land, and our country must be settled if it is going to amount to anything. There are several ways in which this money may be used. I would approve of the policy suggested by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that a portion of it should be given to the Local Legislature of Manitoba, and I will add to the North-West Council. More good can be done by money controlled by the local authorities for local purposes than by the Dominion Government. The result of spending a few thousand dollars by Manitoba has been to secure a very large number of settlers from Eastern Ontario. Last year the vote was only $10,000, but a great deal of work was done for that sum. This year the vote was only $12,000, and yet their agents throughout Ontario, who are very energetic, are spreading literature, advertising and lecturing to the farmers' institutes and giving information. If reliable information is given to the people who leave Ontario and other Provinces for the United States, they will migrate to our Canadian North-West. There is no doubt we can induce a number of Canadians who are settled in the Western States also to go to Manitoba and the North-West. We have heard distressing reports from sections of Minnesota and Dakota. The country next to ours is similar to our own; but there are large settlements of Canadians who could be induced to go to the Canadian North-West. Instead of the Government employing favorites as agents, they should employ men acquainted with the country, and good and reliable agents can be secured in Manitoba and the North-West, and if reliable information can be given to intending immigrants living in the old country they will no doubt move to the North West. The hon, gentleman who is practically the head of the Department of Agriculture is not a suitable person to carry on an immigra-tion scheme. His day is passed. In order to induce immigrants to come to Canada and settle here we must have a good live man at the head of the Agricultural Department. Speaking of the local authorities, I may say that the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company has done considerable to induce the people to come to the country and settle on the company's lands. They have assisted the people, in a measure, by furnishing them with necessaries after they arrived in the country and settled on their lands, and their agent, Mr. Eadon, who is a very active man, who has studied this immigration scheme very thoroughly, has been the means of inducing a number of people to come from the old country, particularly the Crofters, to settle on the lands of the railway company. Speaking as to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I do not know that they are doing much outside of giving cheap rates to immigrants coming into the North-West.

Mr. DAVIN. They are publishing splendid literature.

Mr. WATSON. So far as their lands are concerned, instead of trying to induce the people to settle on them, I think they are rather trying to bring people to settle on the Dominion lands, with a view of increasing the value of the lands of the company. As I pointed out the other night, they hold their lands at too high a price, as a rule, for any immigrant to purchase. The best way you can encourage the settlement of our Canadian North-West -and it is better than any scheme you can devise, or any amount of money you may spend for immigration—is to make Manitoba and the North-West a cheap country to live in. I regret that the Government, instead of doing that, have, this Session, increased the expenses of living in that country. Any gentleman who is acquainted with the subject will find on making a comparison that it will cost the settler $240 more in Manitoba for the necessaries required to take out his first crop than it will in Dakota or Minnesota. That is a great drawback, for $240 is a large sum to a poor man settling in the country. When you consider the farming implements, the lumber, the canned goods, the green fruits, the fencing wire, and the binding twines he requires, you will find that he has to pay a great deal more for them here than he would have to pay across the line.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). That is the old story.

Mr. WATSON. That is the story which is keeping the people away from that country, and that is what I am here to tell you, and to try and remedy.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I do not believe it. Mr. WATSON. I do, and I know it.

Mr. SPROULE. If you can make the people believe that, you would succeed in keeping them

Mr. WATSON. If I could make this House believe that, it would be all the better for the settlement of that country.

Mr. DALY. Prove it.

Mr. WATSON. I have proved it, but I do not hope to convince the hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly).

Mr. DALY. No; nor anybody else.

Mr. WATSON. Not even his own Tory paper in Manitoba can convince him. I have quoted the prices of the articles needed by the farmers in the two countries, and no gentleman on the other side of the House has attempted to dispute them. They have told us that implements were cheaper before the 35 per cent. duty was imposed, but I ask them to compare the prices in Dakota and in Manitoba to-day. I have compared them, and I have given figures which have been supplied me by reliable settlers in Dakota; the prices in Manitoba I know myself. I will give you one instance : a binder costs \$120 in Dakota, and \$160 in Manitoba. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) quoted here the other night, figures to show that the farmers in Manitoba were paying $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents on binding twine. That information he got from Mr. Massey in Toronto, and it was stated that binding twine in Chicago was sold at 15 cents per pound, whereas in the letter, it was stated that binding twines in Manitoba last year were sold at from 18 to 19 cents per pound, which left a difference of 15 per cent. in favor of Chicago, with a fair profit for Mr. Massey, besides. I do not hope to convince the hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly).

Mr. DALY. Nor nobody else.

Mr. WATSON. I do not suppose anybody else could convince the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DALY. You could not convince me, nor you could not convince anyone else.

Mr. WATSON. I shall never attempt it; but when he returns to his electors I think they will convince him that he is wrong. I would suggest to the hon, the First Minister that the Government should employ men to deliver lectures in the old country, so that in any portion you expect to receive immigrants from you could employ these men who are actually acquainted with the country, and with the locality to which they wish to induce settlers to go. I think the member for Selkirk will agree with me that the great trouble in the past has been the lack of reliable information for settlers. Mr. McMillan, who gave some reliable information before the Agricultural Committee, is doing good work for immigration, under the Local Government in Manitoba. He is a clever young man, who has been engaged in farming in Manitoba, and he is in a position to tell the people exactly how they will find things in that country. Through his work, aided by one assistant, he has induced a number of persons to go from Ontario into Manitoba. Some gentlemen may think that is not of is little encouragement to us to hope for the benefit to the country at large, but I believe to the future of that country, when one of its members Mr. WATSON.

contrary, because a large number of the very best settlers we could get, who went there, were induced to go in preference to going to the United States. I hope that good results will be derived from the expenditure of this money, for it is very necessary that we should have some means adopted for the purpose of settling up our Canadian North-West. I repeat to the Government again, that they will have to make the North-West a cheap country to live in before they can expect people to go there in preference to a country where living is cheaper.

Mr. DALY. I did not intend to occupy the time of the House at this late hour in speaking on this matter, but the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has made some statements which I cannot allow to pass without contradiction. He says that it will cost the farmer $240 more to get out his first crop in Manitoba than it will in Dakota. I say that is not so, and the hon gentleman cannot prove it, nor can he quote any figures to the House which will bear out that assertion.

Mr. WATSON. I quoted the figures last year. Mr. DALY. I say your figures are misleading, and are quoted for the purpose of misleading this

Mr. WATSON. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman has no right to impute motives. My figures are not misleading.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will please withdraw.

Mr. DALY. If the remark I made is unparliamentary I withdraw it, but I have my own views on the matter, and I will state them. I quoted figures to the House, the other evening, which will prove conclusively that binding twine was being sold cheaper in Manitoba than in the United States. I gave a statement of the Massey Manufacturing Company to that effect, and yet the hon-gentleman for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has the hardihood and the cheek to dispute these facts. More than that I showed that the figures he gave as regards the price of binders in Dakota were not correct, and that you can buy a binder cheaper in Manitoba than you can in Dakota. Let us take the article of canned goods which he mentioned. You can buy canned fruit at present just as cheaply as you can buy it on the other side, though you could not do so in 1883, and you can get better weight in Canadian canned goods than you can in American goods. We can buy lumber as cheaply in Manitoba as they can in Dakota.

We import American lumber. Mr. WATSON. Mr. DALY. The bulk of the lumber used in Manitoba is Canadian lumber, and comes from the Rat Portage district, while almost all the shingles used come from British Columbia. I do not understand why the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) should continually rise in this House to decry the country which he his sent here to represent. When we, by our influence - not by his influence - have induced the Government to come down with this increased estimate for immigration, which we think is necessary for the development of our country, it is a most astonishing thing that a representative from that great North-West should make the speech the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has made to-night. It is little encouragement to us to hope for the should speak in that fashion, and when we should have the unanimous support of all the members of Manitoba and the North-West for this vote which we believe will be so much to the advantage of our country.

SirRICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In other words, this vote is given for the purpose of securing votes for the hon. gentleman in Manitoba. That is about the English of it, according to the hon. gentleman's statement. If there is one particle of correctness in the statements made by him, we can see the absurdity of placing a tariff on these agricultural implements. What an outrageous absurdity it is to impose a tariff of 35 per cent. on agricultural implements, if you can buy them as cheaply in Manitoba as you can in the United States. The thing is utterly preposterous. It is because you cannot get them as cheaply in Manitoba, because the Canadian manufacturers would be undersold if the market were thrown open, that this outrageous tariff is kept up.

Mr. DALY. We can buy Canadian implements in Manitoba at the same rate as you can buy American implements in Dakota, and the prices of American implements have been reduced in Manitoba since the duty of 35 per cent. was put on, because the American manufacturer, in competing with the Canadian, has been obliged to reduce his price.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at all. The prices have been reduced because there have been great improvements made in these machines and in the process of their manufacture; and it is preposterous nonsense to keep up this duty of 35 per cent. if the hon, gentleman's statements are correct. But we know that they are not correct; we know that the farmers of Manitoba would get their implements for much less than they do if the country were thrown open to the American market; and the hon, gentleman knows that too.

Mr. WATSON. I am not surprised at the speech of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly); but I expect nothing else from the hon. gentleman, who gets off some very flash ideas, and who does not generally speak until I have spoken, and then finds it necessary to throw out some insinuations across the floor of the House, which he is compelled to withdraw because they are unparliamentary. It does not hurt me, if it does not hurt him. It is only because of improper conduct, I suppose, that an hon, member is called to order by the Chairman. I have said nothing against this vote; I have said that I approve of it, and I have tried to state to the Government my ideas as to the best means of spending a portion of the money. think the result of the expenditure will be good, and some of the arguments I have used in this House may have had something to do with showing the Government the necessity of spending some money for immigration purposes. The hon. gentleman tells us that implements are just as cheap in Manitoba as they are in the United States. I have shown that they are not—that we are actually paying more money on agricultural implements imported into Manitoba than the total amount spent on immigration. I gave the figures the other day from the Trade and Navigation Returns; and Yet the hon. gentleman gets up and tells us that they are as cheap as they would be without the price of binders ten years ago, when they cost $340, with their price at the present time, when they cost $160. Since that time there have been many improvements on them, patents have run out, and the mode of manufacturing is better, so that they have been greatly reduced in price, both in Canada and the United States. But a selfbinder which costs $160 in Manitoba can be got in Dakota for $130 by a Dakota farmer. I got my figures from a Dakota farmer, and I will give his name-Mr. Matthewson, who sat in this press gallery for years as a reporter of the Toronto Mail. It is a McCormack binder, which is equal to any binder made in Canada. I am not going to decry Canadian machines; they are, I believe, as good as the machines made in the United States, but they cost more money, and it is absurd to suppose that they would not cost more. Does the hon. gentleman tell us that we get our fruit as cheap as they do in the United States?

Mr. DALY. Yes; you can get canned fruit as cheap from Ontario as California fruits are sold in the United States.

Mr. WATSON. I agree with the hon gentleman, but I would ask whether California canned fruit is not much better than Ontario canned fruit.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. WATSON. Hon. gentlemen know that it is, and that all who can afford to buy California canned fruit buy it in preference. Apples cost us 40 cents a barrel more than they cost in the United States; and it is natural that it should be so, because we are placed at the disavantage of heavy freight rates owing to the long haul from Ontario. That being the case, the Government should give us some compensating advantage by reducing the tariff to the earlier settler in the country. This would tend to make the people more happy and contended; it would make them active immigration agents, and would do more to promote immigration than all the money you can spend to induce people to go there. The great object is to keep them after you get them. It has been, I regret, too clearly shown to this House that a great many people who went to the country have left it. The report of the Agriculture Department itself shows that 100,000 settlers have been lost to the country. There is no use of bringing them there unless you can keep them, and you can do that more effectually by reducing the tariff on the goods they consume than you can in any other way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should have some explanation of this.

may have had something to do with showing the Government the necessity of spending some money for immigration purposes. The hon. gentleman tells us that implements are just as cheap in Manitoba as they are in the United States. I have shown that they are not—that we are actually paying more money on agricultural implements imported into Manitoba than the total amount spent on immigration. I gave the figures the other day from the Trade and Navigation Returns; and tells us that they are as cheap as they would be without the high tariff upon them. It is absurd to compare the

I have not a complete list of the plant required, but I will see that it is obtained and laid before the House to-morrow before concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this intended for?

Mr. FOSTER. This is a report of the great Labor Congress held in Paris last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had we any delegate there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, Mr. Helbronner was there and prepared this report. I believe it is very valuable. He was one of the Labor Commissioners and is now in Montreal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of what earthly value is a report of the Labor Congress? We can obtain for a few dollars a full report of all that passed. If I understand rightly, this is a sort of a report on a report. What is the use of our paying $2,500 for the preparation of a report, when already a very long and detailed report of the proceedings of the Labor Congress has been published, and can be placed in the library for a small sum.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the report of a man who attended and had cognisance of the proceedings, and embodied in his report what was particularly adapted to our country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot see what this gentleman could do that would warrant you in paying him $2,500. He has not written a book on the Labor Congress, and if he had it would not be as valuable as the proceedings published for the world. It might be worth while to place on the library shelves some copies of the report, or circulate some of them, but I do not see that we should pay this man so much money for a report on a report. Where is the thing?

Mr. FOSTER. It is being prepared.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who gave him leave to incur the expense without the authority of Parliament? Apparently what has been done is to give this man the commission, and then come to Parliament for the money to pay him.

Mr. FOSTER. I will let this item stand.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it proposed to restore the item of $1,000 to the harbors of Prince Edward Island? The First Minister was not here when the discussion took place. The Government recommended His Excellency to ask an appropriation; it was asked for and the House in Committee was disposed to give it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman from Prince Edward Island, who knows more about the wants of the Island than we can possibly know, has convinced my friend (Sir Hector Langevin) that he was wrong. I did not hear what he said, but I understand he spoke in a very strong way, and said it was a job and something like criminality for the Government to bring down such an absurd item. Well, in this case we are repentant sinners.

Resolutions reported.
Mr. FOSTER.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 150) respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company (Sir John A. Macdonald) was read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

ACT RESPECTING RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 151) respecting railways. He said: The first section is to amend the ninetieth clause by adding two paragraphs. The first is that:

"Any company operating a railway from any point in Canada to any point on the International boundary line, may exercise beyond such boundary the powers which it may exercise in Canada, in so far as they are permitted by the laws in force there."

A number of our Canadian railways have formed connections with the railways of the United States. The desire is that as far as we can give them powers, any arrangements that are made by them in that way they shall have power to make.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. The first part of the second sub-section, which declares that a company has, and from the time of obtaining its right from the Crown has had, authority to acquire, &c., appears to have been inserted with reference to some particular case, because it has a retroactive effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It cannot possibly do any harm.

Mr. MULOCK. The second part of this clause is objectionable. I can understand Parliament granting land on certain conditions to one company which it would not grant to another company, but by this provision the company to which the grant is made may sell out to its rival.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The company which holds the land can only convey what it possesses. If it has an absolute title in fee simple, this will give it power to sell the lands in fee simple. If it holds the lands under certain conditions, it can only sell subject to those conditions. So it is with the second part of the clause. If one company makes an arrangement with another for the construction of a branch or a portion of a common line, they can convey whatever title they may have in any land, whether it is in fee simple or other wholesale title, they can convey that to the company undertaking the work. It simply enables the company to work as individuals.

Mr. MULOCK. Has not this legislation in view some particular case? It is quite clear it cannot be suggested by any general requirement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it was suggested by the counsel and solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is quite clear that the object of that company is equally useful for all railways.

Mr. MULOCK. That is just what I object to. Under this clause it may happen that every railway in Canada which is fortunate enough to have a grant, can transfer that grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, so long as the Canadian Pacific Railway is willing to undertake to build the road the grant was set apart for. The first company can assign that grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The grant thus becomes "a chose in action," assignable by the first guarantee to the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that under cover of granting to an independent railway, we are granting through that medium to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It may be right or wrong to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in either case the House ought to know what it is doing when we put on the Statutebook a general power of attorney like this, to enable a company, without further question of Parliament, to assign an interest in a subsidy to another railway. I think we are adopting a very dangerous and objectionable kind of legislation, and if the Government has not fully considered this they would do well to throw in some safe-guards. I submit to the First Minister whether it would not be right that before an assignment took effect Parliament should be consulted about it. Say, if you like, that they shall be at liberty to assign it with the sanction of Parliament. I think it is due to Parliament that there should be further sanction by way of approval of the assignee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think we can show that the approval of Parliament has been given in every case before this proceeding will operate. I will take a case that has lately occurred, the Regina and Long Lake Railway Company, that received a year ago a land subsidy for the construction of a railway from Regina to Long Lake, and to operate it. Let us suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway is willing to assume the obligation of so constructing and operating the road. It can only do so by virtue of power which this Parliament has given to it. This Parliament has then already passed upon the question whether the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be entitled to build and operate that line of railway. If it assumes that obligation, this Parliament enables the Company to receive a portion of these lands. Here Parliament has passed upon three questions. First of all, we gave the land in aid of the construction and operation of that line of railway; in the second place, it has enabled the Regina and Long Lake Railway Company to sell to any person on earth who is able to receive any part of the land; and, in the third place, it has conferred upon the Canadian Pacific Railway power to construct or operate that railway. The effect of this clause is simply to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to take the land which is so earned. It seems to me that Parliament has fully considered the whole policy before it has reached the stage of enabling the railway company to receive this land.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a difference between Parliament aiding in the construction of a railway, and considering the operation of the railway afterwards. The public are interested in the operation of a railway, and that is an interest wholly different from the interest of the Government in seeing the road constructed. Now, we have not yet lost all hope of a certain system of competition in railways, and under the scheme now before us any grant that may for the time being be supposed to be a subsidy to an independent road, may, by the consent of the two railways, be transferred to one of these railways. Let us suppose, by way of tion was to make the section as wide as he seems illustration, that we are giving a grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, direct in land or money, for the construction of a road, and they choose to make a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway whereby the Grand Trunk Railway agrees, for the subsidy, to construct and operate the proposed road. If this proposition becomes law the grant is transferred to the Grand Trunk Railway, and, I presume, the Grand Trunk Railway having undertaken the construction and operation, is authorised to do so by some other legislation. Now, the object of Parliament may be defeated; the object of Parliament in making that grant may have been to secure a branch from the Canadian Pacific Railway to a particular point, which would be a branch in competition with the Grand Trunk Railway. If the Grand Trunk Railway chooses to take the place of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have not benefited the people in that point at all, we have simply enabled the Grand Trunk Railway to control both

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The cure for that is not to authorise the Grand Trunk Railway to construct that railway or to operate it. But if Parliament has decided upon that question, and decided that the Grand Trunk Railway can operate that railway, what harm can be done by allowing it to receive the land grant?

Mr. MULOCK. Why not throw in a safeguard? Is it not prudent that we should have an opportunity to be satisfied that this benefit goes to the proper parties? We should know what use is to be made of it, and endeavor to see that the intention of Parliament is carried out and not defeated. I see no objection to placing a safeguard, such as a provision that a resolution of this House must be adopted before a transfer can be made.

On section 3,

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to point out to the right hon. the Premier that this section will not do the least good to the North-West, that it would not apply to the North-West at all; and I am doubtful if it would apply to a large part of Mani-toba or even to British Columbia. I am now confining my remarks to the North-West. Section 194 says:

"When the municipal corporation of any township has been organised wholly, or any portion of such township has been surveyed and sub-divided for the purposes of settlement, fences shall be erected," and so on.

Then comes sub-section 2. Then sub-section 3 provides that "if the company omits to erect or complete fences as aforesaid," or if "as aforesaid," and so on. I think the right hon. gentleman will see that this section would not at all apply to the North-West Territories, because the railway passes through large tracts that are settled, and yet there is no municipal corporation for the township. Lt could only apply to those townships that had municipal corporations. I suggest that it be changed in this way: "if the company omits in any part of any Province or a territory to erect and complete as aforesaid;" and in the third line after "aforesaid" "up to the standard as aforesaid;" I think that will make the section operative in the North-West Territories.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think the hon, gentleman quite appreciates the reason of the change proposed here. I do not think the inten-to understand it to be. The hon, gentleman seems to understand that this is a change to compel the railway companies to fence throughout the North-West Territories. That was not the intention. The intention was simply to substitute an amendment for the present clause, which provides the circumstances under which the company shall be liable for claims for cattle on the line of railway; and the whole difficulty has arisen from the judicial interpretation of the words in the old section with respect to animals killed on the railway. When the clause was placed in the Act of 1888, there was considerable discussion about the fencing sections, and the section was adopted in view of the series of Ontario decisions, with respect to the relative rights of property owners who had their cattle on property adjoining the railway, and cattle owners who had no property on the line of railway, but had a mere right to pasturage on the railway. It was intended by that provision not to give a remedy for cattle that had no right there at all, either by ownership of the proprietors of the land adjoining the railway, or by reason of the rights of pasturage near the railway. Following in the light of the decisions this clause appeared to be clear; but the courts appear to have misunderstood the intention of the provision, and in two decisions given in the Province of Quebec the clause has been entirely misunderstood. The conclusion arrived at there was that the company was not liable for the destruction of any cattle, as no cattle could have a right to be in the place where killed. It thus became necessary to indicate the circumstances under which the company would be liable, and for that reason the words have been changed.

Mr. DAVIN. If the clause were made to apply to the Territories, it would not injure the railway companies, because it would not impose on them an obligation to build fences along the whole line of the railway, but only in those places where the township was inhabited, where cattle did go at large, and where injury was, therefore, likely to happen. There is a large tract of country where there are no cattle whatever. The railway need not fence there; but it would give an advantage to the North-West, and would not press the railway much if the clause was so framed as to apply to the Territories, and it would not impose on them an obligation to build fences along the whole line, but only where the liability to accidents existed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is merely to alter the old section, and make it clear, and it is in no way intended to provide for any liability, real or supposed, as regards the railway. the hon. gentleman is taking a great deal of interest in the subject of having fire-guards across the prairie, and he knows that the Government took that subject up, but the difficulties of the case have been laid before the Government strongly by the railway companies, especially by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they have made a very reasonable request, that there shall be an examination of the provisions in force for the protection of the people along the lines of the railway in the different Northern and Western States of the Union, that this matter will be postponed. There is a variety of legislation across the border. In some cases the provisions are almost entirely in favor of the railway companies, and others are unreasonably harsh there would be no by-law to produce. Sir John Thompson.

on the companies, and so the Government have made up their minds to allow this subject on which the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has a notice of motion on the paper, to wait over till next Session, and we are to make enquiries in the meantime.

Mr. WATSON. I hope this clause will be framed so as to form a protection to the people whose cattle are killed on the line of railways. In addition to the two decisions in Quebec, a decision has been given in Manitoba against the person whose cattle were destroyed, and as a result of the decision the party could not recover against railway companies. The main question at issue was: whether the cattle were properly on the railway track or not? A few of us met together with Judge Clarke of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and got this clause amended. He assures us that we will be all right in Manitoba. I hope we will be all right. I believe that this will protect us in Manitoba, what ever it may be in the North-West, where there are few municipalities.

Mr. ELLIS. I think the affirmative expression in line 35, sub-section 2, of section 194, which

"And no animal allowed by law to run at large, shall be held to be improperly on a place adjoining the railway."

should be in the negative, and should say:

"And no animal not prevented by law from running at large.

If the object is to favor the railway companies, there is no doubt that the words there are to that effect, but if it is to protect the public it should be the way I suggest.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In all the Provinces there are statutes against cattle running at large, except under by-laws of municipalities which would permit them.

Mr. DAVIN. I had a clause to move to this Bill, with reference to providing against prairie But after the explanation given by the right hon, gentleman that the clause was struck out in the Senate, on account of an understanding with the Government, I suppose there is no use in moving it. If the Government are going to enquire into this matter in the western territories of the United States, there is no use taking the time of the House in moving this clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; we are going to enquire.

Mr. WATSON. I think there is a good deal in the argument of the hon, member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), and that the words used in the Bill should be "and any animal not prevented by law from running at large." I think that would be better than the words at present in the clause

Mr. MASSON. I did not think that would make much difference. Whatever way you put it, it would be on the party making the claim to prove they were running at large. In Ontario the law is that they have no right to run at large, unless there is a by-law of the municipality allowing them. In that case the party making the claim would produce the by-law to show they were allowed to run at large.

Mr. WATSON. The chances are that in new municipalities, where the cattle all run at large, Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the law of a Province allows all the cattle of a Province to run at large, the railway company should not be liable for killing cattle astray. To say that the company is liable for cattle, which should be ten miles distant from the railway, is to make them liable for all the cattle in the country.

Mr. WATSON. The railway companies are supposed to fence the railway track, and if they do not do so they have to take the risk.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon member for Renfrew (Mr. White) took a great deal of pains about this section. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the clause, as it stands in the Bill, is the same as that suggested by the member for Renfrew?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman for Renfrew took a great deal of trouble about it, and this is the clause he agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 13th May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. DALY moved :

That all rules, orders and regulations be suspended in relation to the Bill respecting the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway, and that leave be given to bring in said Bill.

He said: According to the charter, which was amended in 1887, the time for the completion of the main line of railway expires on the 1st June, 1891, and the financial arrangements for the building of the line were made upon the expectation that certain assistance would be given by the Government during this Session. That assistance has not been given, and it is therefore necessary, in order to make new financial arrangements, that the time should be extended for five years from the 1st June, 1891.

Mr. LAURIER. This is an unusual application, and the House would be interested in learning from the First Minister what view he takes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I see no objection to it. The charter expires in June of next year, and, no doubt, if this company had applied for a renewal earlier in the Session, they would have obtained it. No arrangements can be made for building the road if the investors are told that the charter expires in 1891.

Mr. LAURIER. The weak point about this is that it comes very late and no reason has been given why the application had not been given at an earlier date; but, no doubt, if it had been, as the right hon. gentleman has said, it would have been granted. Therefore, if the hon. gentleman is satisfied, he must take the responsibility.

Mr. LISTER. As a member of the Railway Committee, I have this to say about this Bill: that during this Session application was made for a charter which would, to a certain extent, parallel this line, and that application was made by substantial men, but it was refused because, as the right hon, gentleman said in the Committee, we would be granting a charter for a road to come into competition in some sense with the Hudson Bay Railway, and thus embarrass the latter in their financial operations. If this charter is to be extended for five years, is the House to understand that during all that time all applications for other charters must stand in abeyance until it will be seen if financial assistance can be obtained for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway? If that be the case, it will be hard on others who wish to open up railways in that country in sections where there are none at present.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say what Parliament may do.

Mr. LAURIER. You can say pretty well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If this railway does not show any signs of advancing pretty soon, the Committee, being supported by the strong influence of the hon gentleman who has just spoken, may pass another application.

Mr. BLAKE. That part can be easily guarded to some extent by combining with the provision for the extension of the time, very stringent conditions as regard the early commencement and progress of the work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been commenced.

Mr. BLAKE. And stopped.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was no more money.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DALY introduced Bill (No. 155) to amend the Act respecting the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Bill read the first and second times.

WOOD MOUNTAIN AND QU'APPELLE RY.

Mr. HESSON moved:

That all rules, orders and regulations of the House be suspended so far as regards the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway, and that leave be granted to bring in a Bill concerning the said railway.

He said: The object is simply to extend the charter for three years. The charter expires next August. This is in consequence of some expectations with regard to subsidies which have not been realised, but as the company has started under good auspices, and the Government have made the grant of the necessary lands, there seems to be a fair prospect of carrying out the work successfully.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I do not know anything of the merits of either of these particular cases, but from my personal experience, both on the Standing Orders and Railway Committees, it does seem to me we are inaugurating a system we would do better to refuse to countenance. It seems extraordinary that these gentlemen should now ask the House to suspend all the rules after we have been four months in Session, when they knew that their charter expired next season, and when the public have had no notice of their intention. remember, that at previous sittings of the Railway Committee, this Session, after a very animated discussion, two charters were withdrawn which covered a portion of this territory, on the ground that it would interfere with the negotiations which the Hudson Bay Railway Company had entered into for the building of their road; and now, without notice to the public, we are coolly asked to extend one charter for five years and another for three years, when substantial persons were offering to give that country the opportunity of obtaining railway facilities at once. Now it is proposed that those settlers who have gone in there shall be buttoned up for this length of time to enable these parties to see whether they can get better terms or secure greater advantages. I think it is time that the House called a halt in this mode of doing business, and I, for one, protest against our inaugurating a system which will bear bitter fruits for the settlers in the North-West in the future. Only last night the First Minister asked us to vote $150,000 to get immigrants to fill up the lands in the North-West, and now we are asked to enable speculators to lock up the lands in that territory for three years, or five years, as their convenience may be suited. I am speaking without any knowledge of these particular cases, but I say that nothing has been shown to justify us in setting aside our rules, because these promoters knew the time when the charters terminated, and there is no reason why they should not have given proper notice under the provisions of our regulations and so let the public know, three or four months ago, that they intended to make this application.

Mr. HESSON. The memorandum which was placed in my hands four or five minutes ago, states that:

"The only change is in the words 1890 to 1892. A substantial beginning has been made on this section by grading a heavy portion of the line. The extension is asked in order to complete financial arrangements which are now welf advanced, of which the hon. the Minister of the Interior is aware. We did not apply in the regular way, because we were confident of being able to complete within the time, but a hitch has occurred within the last few days which must suspend operations for a short period. few days which must suspend operations for a short period. Without the extension asked our charter rights lapse, and we have already spent a large sum on surveys, explora-tions, &c."

Mr. LISTER. Have they built any portion of the road?

Mr. HESSON. I believe that four miles are practically graded.

Mr. LISTER. The truth of these statements is an important factor in the matter, and would have to be investigated by the Railway Committee.

The hon, gentleman says he Mr. LAURIER. makes this proposition on a statement which he received only four or five minutes ago. Therefore, what he said would not have the same weight with the House as if he had had time to look into the matter, and the reasons do not seem to me to be satisfactory, and I, therefore, raise the point of order, and object to the passage of the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HESSON introduced Bill (No. 156) respecting the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company.

Bill read the first and second times on a division. Mr. BAIN (Wentworth).

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Regularly, I should move that the four items of which I have given notice should be referred to Committee of the Whole to morrow, but, as these should have been in the original notice, perhaps I may move that they should be referred to the Committee at once. Two of them are already on the list, but are erroneous, and this is to correct them. The other two are not on the present list. They were originally on that list, but were postponed in consequence of certain errors. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman will consent to allow them to be attached to the other subsidies.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the hon. gentleman brought down the papers he promised to bring in relation to these subsidies?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Here they are.

Mr. LAURIER. In view of the bulk of those returns, I think, if we said to-morrow we would not have had too much time to examine them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well. I will say to-morrow. I move that the House will, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:

Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governorin Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the Railway Companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the Temiscouata Railway Company, for 16 miles of their railway, from the west end of the 20 miles of their branch railway from Edmundston, subsidied by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, towards the St. Francis River, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $51,200.

For a railway from the north end of the 14 miles for which a subsidy was granted by the Act 50 and 51 Victoria, chapter 24, to the Tobique Valley Railway Company, from Perth Centre towards Plaister Rock Island, 11 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $55,200.

To the Orford Mountain Railway Company, for 31 miles of their railway, between Eastman and Kingsbury, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $99,200.

For arailway from Dorval Station, on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, to a point at or near Rivière des Prairies, a distance of 15 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding $1,200 per mile, nor exceeding $2,200 per mile, nor Conneil, and shall be constructed according to descriptions and specifications, and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specifying an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, and which the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed, in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidised.

3. Resolved, The granting of such subsidies to the companies mentioned respectively shall be subject to such condition for securing running powers or traffic arrangement or other rights, as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connect-ing with those subsidised, as the Governor in Council determines.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, to-morrow, to consider the following resolutions:-

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding 6,400 acres per mile for a line of railway from Portage la Prairie to Lake Winnipegosis, at or near Meadow Portage, a distance of about 125 miles.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Manitoba South-Eastern Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding 6,400 acres per mile for a line of railway from Winnipeg southerly or south-easterly to a point on the west side of the Lake of the Woods, a distance of about 110 miles.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient that the said grants and each of them may be made in aid of the construction of the said railways respectively; in the proportion and upon the conditions fixed by the Orders in Council made in respect thereof, and except as to such conditions the said grants shall be free grants, subject only to the payment by the grantes respectively, of the costs of survey of the lands and incidental expenses at the rate of 10 cents per acre cash, on the issue of the patents therefor.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. BARRON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I think it my duty to bring before the attention of the House, before the attention of the Government, and particularly, before the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works, an editorial article appearing in a newspaper in the city of Quebec, Le Canadien, of the 9th May, relating somewhat to an hon. gentleman who occupies a seat in this House. In that newspaper, on the editorial page, I find the following :-

"We have in our possession the absolute, complete and irrefutable proof of this statement. Does Mr. Mc-Gronver."

Referring, I believe, to the hon member for Quebec West—

"Does Mr. McGreevy remember having written from Ottawa to someone on the 5th May, 1883, a letter in which the said:

"'The tenders for cross-wall only arrived here yesterday and are locked up until Monday, when he will commence his calculations. I will write you Tuesday and let you know the result.'"

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that these words purport to have been written, and I believe them to have been written, by the hon, member for Quebec West to his brother, and if so, they certainly bear a most extraordinary construction.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to conclude with a motion? Otherwise his proceeding is irregular.

Mr. BARRON. I merely ask, as a matter of privilege, to be allowed to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this letter, because it seems to me that it bears a most extraordinary construction, and the public have a right to know what it means. I desire to bring the letter before the attention of the Minister of Public Works, because it puts some of the officers of his Department in a position which they ought not to be in.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the irregularity of raising such a discussion, in such a way, without a motion. I do not think it is a question of privilege.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order that the hon. gentleman may make his statement, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BARRON. It is perfectly clear from that letter that an hon. member of this House had apparently the entree to the office of the Minister of Public Works, to get information which a member of this House ought not to possess. He says: "The tenders for the cross-wall only arrived here yesterday "—that was on a Saturday—"and are locked up until Monday." He was in a position to get the information from the office of the Minister of Public Works that the tenders were "locked up until Monday, when he will commence his calculations." Now, I may ask the question, Who is the individual "he" referred to? Evidently the member to whom I have alluded, must have had some conversation with an officer in the Department of Public Works. Why should the hon, gentleman be aware of the fact that an officer of the Department of Public Works would commence his calculations on the following Monday? Then the hon. gentleman goes on to state: "I will write you Tuesday and let you know the result." It is very apparent from these words that the member for Quebec West was put in possession of information regarding the tenders, the result of which he himself would let his brother know. Further on the article goes on to say:

"Mr. McGreevy wrote this letter with his own hand, and he wrote it to his brother, Mr. Robert McGreevy."

Then it goes on to say:

"Does Mr. McGreevy remember having written two days afterwards, on the 7th May, again from Ottawa, the following lines:—
"I hope to let you know to-morrow about the cross-wall tenders. Have your arrangements right with Beaucage before result is known."

He seems to have been put in possession of facts regarding the tenders, the result of which he would let his brother know. Then he says: "Have your arrangements right with Beaucage before the result is known." How did he know anything about Beaucage? The fact is, I believe, that Beaucage had also tendered regarding these cross-walls, and he seems to have got that information before the tenders were open from the Public Works Department, the result of which he was prepared to state in this letter to his brother. The article goes on to say, regarding that particular letter:

"This was in Mr. McGreevy's own handwriting, and he wrote the letter to his brother, Mr. Robert McGreevy." Still further on the article says:

"Does Mr. McGreevy remember having written, on the 17th May, still from Ottawa, what we here place before him?"

Then follows the letter of the 17th May, a few days later:

"As I told you yesterday-

So he must have seen his brother and conversed with him the day before-

"As I told you yesterday to try and get a good plan and as quick as possible in answer to letters that Gallagher & Beaucage will receive about their tenders to bring them over Larkin & Connolly so as their tenders will be the lowest."

Now, Sir, he was in a position to suggest to his brother, who was in the firm of Larkin & Connolly, "to get a good plan and as quick as possible in answer to letters" which he had been told, apparently—that is the only construction to be put upon these letters—which he had been told, apparently by an officer in the Public Works Department, would be written to Gallagher & Beaucage regarding their tender, and next he suggests to his brother to adopt some good plan and as quick as possible. Therefore Gallagher & Beaucage allowed something in regard to their tender to get into the letters from the Department, whereby their tender would be increased from being the lowest to the highest, in order that Larkin & Connolly's tender might appear to be the lowest. Then the article finishes by saying:

"This was in Mr. McGreevy's own handwriting, and he wrote this letter to his brother, Mr. Robert McGreevy." Now, I think these letters show clearly that somebody, and apparently it was the hon, gentleman himself, the member for Quebec West, was enabled to get out of the Public Works Department certain information, and converse with some of the officers, thereby acquiring this information by which he was in a position to know what a certain tender was, and by which, apparently, he was enabled to bring influence to bear upon some officer to write certain letters to these two gentlemen, Gallagher & Beaucage, requiring them to alter their tender so that the tender put in by Connolly & Larkin would be the lowest, although in point of fact it was higher than either of these two tenders when they were originally put in. Now, Sir, these letters have gone broadcast throughout the country, and have created a very unfortunate impression in the minds of people throughout the country, and I think I am justified in bringing the matter before the attention of the Government and asking them for some satisfactory explanation, in order that these unfortunate letters, if they have any explanation, may receive such.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have followed what the hon. gentleman has stated, and what he read from a telegram published in a newspaper, and I must say this, that I know nothing about it, nothing whatever.

Mr. LAURIER. I will avail myself of the present occasion, also, to refer to a statement which has appeared on two different occasions in Le Canadien in connection with this same matter. I am speaking within the knowledge of every member of this House when I say that a number of articles have appeared of late in the newspaper Le Canadien, directly tending to incriminate the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy). This matter has already been brought once before the House. In connection with this matter, on 6th May, in the course of an article, Le Canadien says:

"The Opposition is held through some of its members in the toils of Mr. McGreevy, and cannot budge."

On 10th May, it says:

"As we have already said, Mr. McGreevy holds in his hands, directly or indirectly, a certain number of members and newspapers in the ranks of the Liberal party, as well as in the Conservative party at Ottawa."

I rise to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, and so far as the statements affect the Liberal party, they are altogether without foundation. Moreover, if it is believed there is any foundation in them as regards the Liberal party, I am here to say that the amplest investigation will be met, and that every member of the party, so far as I know, is prepared to meet it. The impression is here conveyed that upon those allegations which have appeared from time to time in the press, and as to which there is matter for enquiry -the Opposition is not disposed to have such enquiry—there are certain matters for enquiry in the disclosures which have been made, and, if we were not in the dying hours of the Session, I would consider the propriety of calling on the House to further look into these disclosures. But I must say that there appeared in the newspaper, Le Canadien, on 30th April last, a statement signed by O. E. Murphy, purporting to be a member of the firm of Larkin, Connelly & Co., which statement was reprinted on 5th May, in our Votes and Proceedings, and appears at page 600. Some ten days before this statement appeared in Le Canadien, it was placed in my hand with a view to ascertain whether I would act on it. The paper was then more complete than it is now, because it appears from the context that two paragraphs, paragraphs 5 and 7, have been omitted. Paragraph 7, as it was signed and placed in my hand, directly alleged that a large sum of money had been paid by Mr. McGreevy for improper purposes to a person whose name was left in blank. I asked the person who placed the paper in my hands to have the blank filled in with the name of the party who was alleged to have received that money. Though the name was given to me, yet the party refused to put it in writing and to endorse it with his signature, and I said under such circumstances I thought it to be my duty not to have anything further to do with the matter.

The Minister of Public Works Mr. BLAKE. some time ago had his attention called by way of a question to the earlier portion of the interesting revelations which are from time to time enlivening the pages of Le Canadien. On that occasion the hon. Minister acquiesced in the suggestion that it was proper to bring before the House such information as existed in the archives of the Department in respect to the matters which are touched upon and alluded to in these earlier publications. They become more interesting as they proceed, and this last batch of three letters, themselves obviously left incomplete, themselves obviously, from their context, only parts of other correspondence, do afford ample warrant for that view of their meaning attached to them, by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). They do not indeed implicate the Minister, and the Minister has told us, as we might expect and hope a Canadian Minister would always be able to tell a Canadian Parliament, that heknew nothing whatever about it. But they have been public property for several days, and I know not whether any kind friend may not have anticipated the efforts of my hon. friend the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), to put the Minister in possession of the fact that such letters had been published, at an earlier date. Although the Minister knew nothing about the matter, I should have been glad to know from him distinctly if the reading of those letters by my hon. friend the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) happened to be the first communication of the fact that such letters had been published that was received by the hon. Minister. Ill news, it is said, generally travels fast. I am surprised if this information has not reached the hon. Minister earlier than the time at which he received it from the lips of my hon, friend this day. If the information had been received, I hold it was the Minister's duty at once, for the honor of his Department, to have made a thorough enquiry into the matter which lies obviously at the source of that correspondence. I hold it to be his duty, now that it is called to his attention, to pledge himself to make that enquiry. and moreover, to indicate the results to this House. It is perfectly plain that, if the correspondence be genuine, this colleague of ours, the hon member for Quebec West (Mr. McGreevy), was in attendance here at the time that tenders were to be considered for a great public work to be carried on in his own city; that he was here in attendance, not with the view of protecting the public interest by seeing that the lowest tenderer should get the contract, but with the view of acquiring by illegitimate means, through some untrustworthy and corrupt officer of the Department, early information, even in anticipation of the hon. Minister's own information as to the results of the calculations with respect to the different tenders, in order that a job might be put up on the Department and the public, and that some hocus-pocus work might be accomplished with the tenders. It is clear that in pursuance of that scheme, an arrangement was made whereby the moment the calculations were run through, Mr. McGreevy was to have access to them, or information as to the results. It is clear that he acquired, somehow or other, in advance, information of the fact as to who were the lowest tenderers. It is clear that he indicated to those with whom he was conspiring against the public interest, and for the private gain of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., of which his brother appears to have been a member, and in whose business the hon. member is reported to have been interested, the propriety of entering into some arrangement with a person named Beaucage, to whom it was supposed the tender would be allotted, because his tender was believed to be the lowest, and this before Mr. Beaucage could know his position as a tenderer, whereby his position should be secured for Larkin & Connolly. It is clear by the final letter that, just upon the eve of the allotment of the tender, when notice was about to be given to Mr. Beaucage and Mr. Gallagher that they were the lowest tenderers, an arrangement was directed to find out some plan whereby—what? That Larkin & Connolly might be substituted in place of Mr. Beaucage, who was the lowest tenderer? No. But that Mr. Beaucage and Mr. Gallagher, who were the lowest tenderers, might withdraw in some way, might indicate that some mistake had been made by themselves or by the Department with respect to their tenders, so that the higher tender of Larkin & Connolly might become the lowest and so they might be awarded the contract. Such a condition of things could have been effective only by means of the complicity of some officer of the hon. Minister's Department. That it was so seems to be very fairly indicated by the correspondence, and, therefore, even in these last hours of the Session, I call on the hon. Minister to do again with respect to this new development, as he agreed to do with respect to the other development, to repeat at the earliest moment his pledge that he will make an enquiry, and give us the result, so that we may not close this Session with such an apparent stain resting on the hon. gentleman's Department as exists to-day.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, my attention was called to these three letters, I think, two days ago, and I gave orders at once to examine and enquire about the contents of these letters; in so far as my Department is concerned, I intend to take measures to see whether there has been any indiscretion in the Department, if there was any indiscretion.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

PUBLIC WORKS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. WELSH (P.E.I.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask a question of the right hon, the leader of the Government. I hold in my hand the report of the Government Engineer on the harbors of New London, Pinette, and Wood Island, and I would like to know from the right hon, gentleman whether it is the intention of the Government to act on this report. It is very important for the people of Prince Edward Island, that some action should be taken with regard to the breakwater at New London. That is a very important place; perhaps the oldest settlement in Prince Edward Island, and it is very thickly populated. The harbor of New London is the entrance to a large bay and several rivers, and it is very necessary that the Government should proceed with the work there. The small sum of The small sum of $3,500 only, is required for that, and I think it might be expended at once. I wish the right hon. gentleman to give me an answer. Then there is the harbor of Wood Island, on which a large amount was expended by the Local Government before Confederation, and by the Dominion Government after Confederation, but it is like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth. has been commenced but never completed. We are about to vote a large amount for railway subsidies now, and I do hope the right hon. gentleman will be able to give me a favorable answer to this request. I believe the right hon. gentleman stated to the House, last evening, that I knew something about these works, and that my opinion has some weight. If my opinion has any weight, I would like to state that that opinion is, that the work should be proceeded with at once, and that the hon. gentleman should accede to this request.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know why the hon. gentleman calls on me particularly. All I can say is, that, as the Estimates have already shown, it is not the intention of the Government to ask Parliament to vote a sum of money for the purpose mentioned, this Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that if you neglect repairs which the Government's own engineers have recommended, and grievous damage happens to these works, as is frequently the case, the Government will incur a very serious responsibility. I understand that this is a sort of harbor of refuge for a large portion of that coast, and if it be the case that vessels are unable to use it, and that, wrecks and loss of life occur in consequence of the negligence of the Government, all I can say is, that I think their feelings would be certainly unenviable if mischief occurs on account of their refusing to make the requisite repairs.

THE LATE MR. HUDSPETH, M.P.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to ask the attention of the House to another grave loss which we have sustained this Session. The hand of death has been heavy upon the House this year, and in the decease of our colleague, the hon. member for South Victoria, we suffer a real loss. Mr. Hudspeth was not long in Parliament; not long enough to take the position that his great abilities would entitle him to, and would have gained for him had he been spared. Those who gained for him had he been spared. Those who knew the deceased had sincere esteem and affection for him. He was one of the most lovable of men; a high-minded, honorable man, possessing as kind a heart as ever beat in a human bosom. All those who met him, and had the pleasure of knowing him, will join me in that opinion of our hate colleague. As a public man, I believe that if he had lived, he would have taken a very con-siderable, and indeed perhaps a high position in the Government of this country. All we can do now is to regret his early demise. To me personally he is a great loss. I knew Mr. Hudspeth very well for a good many years, and as I have already stated, I do not know that I have ever met in my long experience, a man more worthy of respect and esteem than was Adam Hudspeth.

Mr. BLAKE. In the absence of my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, who has been called out of the House for a moment, I may say that, on this side of the House, we cordially concur in every word that has fallen from the right hon. gentleman. I knew Mr. Hudspeth for a great many years. He was a warm personal friend of mine from his youth; he was, as the right hon. gentleman has said, one of the kindliest and most lovable souls that ever breathed, and a man of the very highest instincts of honor. He was one of those those who, in his personal career, his professional career, and his political career, never, I believe, made an enemy, and who made friends both among his adversaries and supporters wherever he went. He was one of those who very largely conduced to soften the asperities, often too great, which occur in the course of our political antagonisms, and serious as his loss is to us in his other capacities, it is most serious to us in the other element to which I have referred, and in which he stood very high indeed in the ranks of this Parliament.

Mr. BARRON. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that this sad occasion, to which reference has been made in such feeling terms, both by the Premier and by the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), should be allowed to pass without some remarks from myself. The late member for South Victoria was my colleague. Although he and I were opposed politically, I am bound to say that never since I have known him, and since we have been opposed in politics, has he ever allowed his political feelings to interfere to the least extent with that warm friendship which he has always shown me. I was his junior, of course, by many years in our profession and in political life, but still he always acted my friend, although, as I have said, he was politically opposed to me. The circumstances of his death, as we all know, have been most sad. In a letter, which I received from my home to-day, I am informed that on Sunday evening he was as cheerful, as happy and as lovable as follows:-

Sir Richard Cartwright.

he always has been in the midst of and surrounded by his family. I can assure this House and the country that his loss will be felt most keenly, not only by his family, but by everyone in the County of Victoria and the surrounding counties, wherein he was well known and highly respected. In the town of Lindsay, we have all lost a warm personal friend. He was a valued citizen, good and kind to the poor, and to one and all with whom he came in contact; and I feel confident that for many and many a long day the name of Adam Hudspeth will be warmly remembered in the hearts of the people who live after him.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 150) respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved:

That the report of the Committee of the Whole on resolutions granting subsidies in land to certain railway companies in Manitoba and the North-West Territories be now read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. WATSON. Before these resolutions are concurred in, I beg leave to move in amendment:

That the said resolutions be not now read a second timebut be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with power to provide as a condition of the free grants authorised to be made to railways, that the ordinary agricultural lands to be so granted shall be open for sale in suitable areas on condition of actual settlement, at prices not exceeding a fixed maximum.

It will not be necessary for me to occupy much of the time of the House in support of this motion, as I gave my reasons for the principle it embodies the other night. I may say, however, that I can cite precedents for such a motion. Such a condition has been attached to similar grants to railways in the United States. I find that there was an Act of Congress in 1862 to aid in the construction of a railway and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, which provided for a grant of land with the following condition:—

"And all such lands, so granted by this section, which shall not be sold or disposed of by said company within three years after the entire road shall have been completed, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption, like other lands, at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, to be paid to said company." The Act of 1869, being an amendment to the Act granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon, contains this provision:

"And provided further, that the lands granted by the Act aforesaid shall be sold to actual settlers only, in quantities not greater than one quarter section to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre."

The Act of 4th May, 1870, of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, chap. lxix, reads as follows:—

"And be if further enacted, that the said alternate sections of land granted by this Act, excepting only such as are necessary for the company to reserve as depots, stations, side tracks, wood yards, standing ground, and other needful uses in operating the road, shall be sold by the company only to actual settlers, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, or a quarter section, to any one settler, and at a price not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre."

There was also an Act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company in 1871, which reads as follows:— "And provided further, that such lands so granted by this section to said company, which shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of, as provided in this Act, within three years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subjected to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be fixed by and paid to said company, not exceeding an average of two dollars and fifty cents per acre for all the lands herein granted."

Now, these are precedents for the motion I am about to make. These lands were held by railway companies for railway purposes. The official handbook published by this Government clearly, shows that the contention I made in the previous debate was absolutely correct, namely: that these lands were held by railway companies for speculative purposes and were held exempt from taxes, and improved in value by the industry of surrounding settlers. Speaking of Southern Manitoba lands, that being the particular portion of Manitoba to which I referred the other night, I find it stated in this hand-book, which was published about three months ago:

"For those desirous of purchasing, the land grant of the Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Railway Company, only now placed on the market, offers special attractions. It consists of over one million acres of choicest land in America, well adapted for grain-growing and mixed farms, in a belt 21 miles wide, immediately north of the international boundary, and from range 13 westward. That portion of the grant lying between range 13 and the western limit of Manitoba is well settled, the homesteads having been long taken up. Purchasers will at once have all the advantages of this early settlement such as schools, churches, and municipal organisations."

That should be sufficient evidence to show that these railways, which have received these land grants, instead of offering them to intending settlers at low prices, have held them for speculative purposes, and now see fit to offer them for sale when they have derived increased value from the improvements made by the early settlers. As regards the prices of the land, I find in this handbook that the regulations for the sale of lands for the Manitoba North-Western Railway are as follows:—

"The price of land may be obtained from the land commissioner at Winnipeg, Mr. A. F. Eaden. It varies from $2.60 to $6 per acre, the price being regulated by its location and the quality of the soil."

It is in the interests of the settlement of Manitoba and the North-West that a maximum price should be placed on the land owned by those railways. To my personal knowledge, the Canadian Pacific Railway hold, in south-western Manitoba, over a million of acres, and these lands have been enhanced in value by the schools, churches, and municipal organisations established. It is unfair that these lands should be exempt from taxes, while they derive all the benefits to be gained from the industry of the people who have settled in the country, who pay the taxes, and expenditure alone are whose labor due the increased value of the lands. all reasonable construction in the North-West, these subsidies are a very reasonable bonus; for it should not be supposed that we are to give sufficient lands to construct the whole road, or, in other words, make a gift to a company of a railway built out of the public lands of the country. think I have shown that this motion of mine is not without precedent. Similar motions have been made in the United States with regard to several railways in that country, and I have given abundant evidence to show that these land grants are Ferguson (Renfrew), held by the railway company for speculative purposes. It is undoubtedly in the best interest of the settlement of the country that settlers should obtain lands at the lowest possible prices. We voted money last night for the purpose of bringing in settlers, and we have the right to see that they shall be able to secure the lands they intend to cultivate at the lowest possible prices. I do not fix the price, but leave to the House, should my motion be adopted, to decide upon that point. I think a fair maximum valuation would be $3 per acre. That should be the maximum price; and I know of no lands in Manitoba fit for settlement, especially those owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, that would not fairly be worth that amount.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Watson:

Amendment negatived and resolutions concurred in.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for North Victoria has voted, and I will just read the paper placed in my hand:

" 9th May, 1890.

"We, the undersigned, agree to pair during the remainder of the Session.

"ADAM HUDSPETH. "JNO. A. BARRON."

Mr. BARRON. Before voting, I asked the question whether my pair was off by reason of the sad death of Mr. Hudspeth, and I was told it was.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Lambton did not vote.

Mr. LISTER. I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKeen), or I would have voted for the amendment.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 152) to amend the Acts respecting the Harbor of Pictou.—(Mr. Colby.)

Bill (No. 149) to provide for the payment of a Bounty on Pig Iron made from Canadian ore.—(Mr. Foster.)

LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved second reading of Bill (No. 148) to provide for the collection and publishing of labor statistics. He said: This Bill speaks for itself. It is to establish a Bureau or Department of special statistics relating to labor. It is an institution which exists in the neighboring country, in Europe, and in all the large centres, and which has for a long time been asked for here by the different trades and labor organisations. The question of labor and capital is one which has attracted the attention of statesmen of every country; and, more effectually to carry out the different measures which may affect the laboring classes and their relations to capital, it is intended to collect and publish statistics which will enable Parliament better to understand these measures when they are presented. An appropriation of a small sum of money is asked for in order to provide the means of collecting and publishing these sta-tistics, by yearly reports to Parliament, and by quarterly bulletins to be issued by the Bureau of It is understood that the Department Statistics. of Agriculture, to which that bureau will be attached, will have one of its officers specially charged with that duty. That officer will have under his control a certain number of persons, and will communicate with the different provincial and municipal institutions, so as to get the necessary statistics for the preparation of the reports required by the Department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does not the Act in relation to the Department of Agriculture give power to the Minister to establish branches for the collection of statistics?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is not specially provided pay the expenses of certain officers whose services for; but as the measure has been asked for by a will be required, as I have stated before, pro-Mr. Watson.

very important class of the community, the laboring class, we thought it was well to appropriate a certain sum of money for the purpose and charge the Department especially with the duty of collecting these statistics. There is no doubt that the Government could collect those statistics with the organisations now existing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That being so, what is the use of the Bill?—because it appears to me there is no need to encumber our Statute-book with an Act giving us power to do what we have already taken power to do. My own impression is the same as that of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that we have full power to do all the hon. gentleman proposes to take in this Bill. If he were asking for new powers altogether I could understand it, but I am rather inclined to think—I have not the Acts before me—that we have full power to do exactly what he now proposes to do.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No doubt everybody can collect statistics. There is no need to have a statute for that purpose; but the Government intend to create especially a branch in the Department for that special work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My point is, that I do not think any additional legislation is necessary for that purpose. It may be quite necessary that the Government should ask for an additional appropriation especially for this purpose, but I do not understand how we require new legislation.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The scope of that special branch is more especially mentioned in this Act, and that alone, I suppose, would not disgrace a page of the Statute-book.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the following resolution.—

Resolved. That it is expedient to provide that the sum of $10,000 per annum be appropriated for the expenses in connection with the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand the hon. gentleman's explanation, he is going to request the Labor Committees, or the Labor Unions, to furnish him with information. That might be as well gained by a clause in the Gazette, for all that I can see.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Even then it would not be

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman, in asking for this $10,000, ought to explain to the House what scheme he has for appropriating it.

Mr. BLAKE. Probably he will ask for "another ten thousand" before long.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Following the good example that has been set elsewhere, I am trying to escape the danger which has been found to exist elsewhere. We have asked for a sum of $10,000, which will be used for the payment of the salary of the Assistant Commissioner of Labor Statistics, to pay the expenses of certain officers whose services will be required, as I have stated before, provincial officers and municipal officers, and to pay the printing of these bulletins and reports. cannot give any other explanation. Everybody knows what is meant by the collection of statistics. We know that the provincial officers, who have already provided means for obtaining statistics, cannot be expected to furnish us information for nothing; then the municipal officers also can give to the officer charged with the duty of collecting these statistics, information which cannot be expected to be obtained for nothing. The publication of these bulletins cannot be made gratis, and the publication of the reports will also require some expenditure. I must say, that, perhaps, the sum of $10,000 may not be adequate to the requirements of this Act. I know that, in the United States, the Labor Bureau of Statistics has cost a large sum of money; but, as I said before, availing ourselves of the experience of others, and of the information and assistance which a good officer can obtain from the other organisations in this country, we expect this sum will be sufficient to enable us to make the experiment of establishing that Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to object to the devotion of a small sum to the purpose of obtaining labor statistics. The object is good; whether the administration will be equally good or not, time will show. But still it is desirable to know what the hon. gentleman proposes to do. Now, I understand him to say that he is going to defray all the expenses for the printing required out of this vote, as well as the salaries of the officers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I quite agree with my hon. friend beside me that this is the first ten thousand, and that we shall see another call upon us.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman decided what the duties of the assistant commissioner are to be, what his rank and services, and his salary?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We expect that the officer already in charge in the Department of Agriculture, will be able to devote sufficient time to do this work. There is no doubt that a small addition to his salary might be required. Possibly a special officer may be needed to be appointed, whose salary would be that of a chief clerk. The Government has taken special care that it shall not be the deputy head of a Department, but an officer in one of the Departments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some portion of these matters might be very well obtained in the course of collecting the materials and information for the census. When we get into Committee on the measure I will call the hon. gentleman's attention to that matter.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We rely very much on the good offices of the different Provincial Governments. Reciprocity of good feeling, good understanding, will co-operate, I think, largely in rendering the proposed bureau successful and useful to the whole Dominion.

Resolution reported and referred to Committee on Bill (No. 148.)

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 148) to provide for the collection and publishing of Labor Statistics.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. If you add to the high dignity of the Minister of Agriculture by making him also Commissioner of Labor Statistics, and you provide a second commissioner, he will not long serve as a first or second class clerk.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the officer were one who came under my Department, I could give a pledge. It is the intention of the Government that the assistant commissioner shall be no more than he is described in this Bill. We had to use the name, assistant commissioner, for we could not get a better one.

On section 3,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I beg to insert the words: "quarterly bulletins and yearly reports to Parliament."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take this opportunity to renew the suggestion I made to the Minister that he should ascertain the size and number of rooms in each dwelling occupied by a human being in the Dominion, when the census is This subject appears to be covered by one of the schedules. It is a very important matter. Nothing shows the real position of civilisation in a country so much as the number of rooms at the disposal of every family, particularly in the cities; and I commend this subject to the hon. gentleman, in taking the census. This information is obtained in almost every other census taken, and no doubt it is a most valuable item, and one that we ought to secure at the earliest time possible.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The suggestion is worthy not only of consideration but of adoption.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Under the present law the Government has the power to acquire the fullest information with respect to labor statistics, as well as any other kind of statistics that may contribute to more intelligent legislation in Parliament. Already power is conferred on the Minister of Agriculture to take the census, and secure statistics and the registration of statistics. So, under the statute as it now stands, all the information which is now proposed to acquire by the organisation of this new branch of the Department of Agriculture can be acquired under the present law. We are at present obtaining statistics with respect to capital in various forms, statistics with respect to railways and their operations, with respect to persons employed in various pursuits, and I do not know any reason why there should be a special department for this purpose, important as it is, any more than there should be a special department for any other particular branch of statistical information. As to whether there should be a sub-department or not, that is a matter of departmental convenience. It does not improve the position of labor, and it does not supply to the Government any additional information; it is a mere re-arrangement of the Department on which these special duties devolve. That being the case, I confess that, notwithstanding the statements of the Secretary of State, I consider this Bill should be postponed. Why should Parliament give the Minister of Agriculture an additional title? It is true that the Minister of the Interior is called also the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, which I always thought was an unnecessary title, as the duties indicated come within the Department, but the reason the First Minister gave for that title being added was that power was retained to separate that branch of the Department of the Interior and make it a separate and distinct branch if it were thought fit. The Secretary of State does not propose to do this under the present Bill; he does not propose to separate the functions of Commissioner of Labor Statistics from those of Minister of Agriculture. It is, in fact, expressly declared in the Bill that those duties shall devolve on the Minister of Agriculture, and there is no possibility, by Order in Council or otherwise, of separating those particular duties from that, a special Department. So, there is no need that the Minister of Agriculture shall be called the Commissioner of Labor, or of Labor Statistics. This name seems to be given to him for the sole purpose of enabling him to appoint a subordinate officer with the title of assistant commissioner. I do not think this House ought to be troubled as to the question of how a particular Department shall be organised, and what the name of the officers in that Department shall It is for the Minister to organise the Department, as his experience of the actual working of the Department shows to be most necessary. not think that this is intended merely to give to some officer of the Department a particular rank, which he might not otherwise get, and a salary beyond that which, perhaps, the duties of this particular branch may warrant by these provisions of the Bill. I certainly think that this is unnecessary legislation for the most part, because it will not enable the Minister to do anything that he cannot do at the present time, or anything it is not his duty to do. The fifth clause of the Bill, which authorises the Minister to obtain a particular sum of money, for the purpose of discharging the duties which he proposes now to undertake with more care than before, is the only clause of real importance in the Bill.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have stated before, and I wish to repeat again, that the Government did not think it was showing too much consideration for the important class of the community, in favor of which we are legislating now, in giving to the organisation of that Bureau of Statistics, the solemnity, I might say, of an Act of Parliament. It will be signalised throughout the country, and public attention will be drawn to it, by the importance of a statutory enactment. We know very well that the Department of Finance, or the Department of Customs, or of the Secretary of State, could collect statistics, but we thought it was better to do what has been done in other countries, where they had the same power, without a special enactment, to create that branch of the Department. We thought it better to secure the responsibility of the head of a Department, to control that Bureau of Statistics, and to ask the necessary sum to meet the expenditure for that purpose. That is enough, I think, to justify our legislation in this direction. We can collect statistics now, but we cannot do so without the money we are asking, and I think it is necessary, useful, and proper to make known the establishment of this Bureau of Statistics by a solemn statutory enactment. That has been done in other countries, and has been found useful. I believe it will also be found useful here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The explanation of the hon. Minister has shown that he aims at two things: one, to make a special provision to give some officers of the Department a more highsounding title, and, perhaps, a better salary than he at present has; and the second is, to humbug the laboring classes by persuading them that the Government is really doing something for them which it was not doing before.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We are doing for the laboring classes now, what has been asked for a long time in this country, and what has been asked and done in other countries. We intend not only to give a salary to the officer, but we intend to give him also a great deal of work, and a great deal of useful work too.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I was glad to hear the Minister state that he was only doing what had been asked by the labor organisations in connection with this matter. I was pleased to know that his desire was to carry this Bill through, because the labor organisations were desirous that it should be placed upon the Statute-book. The labor organisations, according to his view, do not consider that the law, as at present, embraces all the requirements necessary. Now, the question arises with me is, that this measure has been introduced so late in this Session, that the hon. Minister could hardly have had an opportunity of presenting this Bill to the various branches of the labor organisations throughout the Dominion, so as to ascertain whether the leading members of this organisation are in unison with its provisions; or that they should have an opportunity of carefully examining the Bill and giving their views on it to the hon. Minister. I am inclined to think that if the Secretary of State would stop to consider a little he would find that, perhaps, not all of the labor organisations are desirous that the Bill should be pushed through this Session. He will find that they even desire that the Bill should stand over, until they have an opportunity of meeting together and examining its contents fully, to see whether it will meet their requirements or not. I think my hon, friend the Secretary of State has had representations made to him to this effect; and that he will find, if he desires to meet the views of the labor organisations, that it is better to allow the Bill to remain over for another Session. I hold in my hand a communication from D. J. O'Donoghue, secretary of the Legislative Committee of the Toronto Trades and Labor Council, addressed to the President of the Dominion Trades and Labor Council, in which it is stated by the secretary of one of the most important branches of the Labor Council and Knights of Labor in the Dominion of Canada, that it would be better to allow this Bill to remain over. I have no doubt that the Secretary of State is acquainted with the contents of this communication, and I would ask him whether, taking into consideration the representations made by those interested, he should not allow the measure to stand for this Session? If it be the hongentleman's intention to push the Bill through, the labor organisations request that some very important amendments should be made to it. Let me read from a portion of this letter what is stated by the labor organisations in Toronto, with reference to the passing of this Bill during the present Session:

"I am instructed to write you, as labor representative at Ottawa, to press upon the Government the advisability of leaving the Bill to stand for further consideration, and its passing into law, until next Session of Parliament. This request has no hostility to a measure of the intent of the Bill just quoted, but is made with the object of allowing organised labor, through its labor congress, to pass upon its merits or offer such amendments as their experience, knowledge and necessities may determine essential to the end aimed at. Organised labor has a right to, and expects as much consideration in respect of the business of this character as has been by the Government afforded to bankers and others immediately interested in legislation affecting banking and banks."

They say that the Government allowed a long opportunity for the Banking Bill to be considered by those interested in it, and they claim that they have a right to ask that this Bill should remain over until next Session, so that they may have an opportunity of making known to the Government all the needs and requirements of the labor organisations. My hon, friend says there is reciprocity in the matter between the various local Parliaments and this Parliament. I believe there will be no difficulty in this respect; I have no doubt that the local authorities will render every assistance they possibly can in order to have labor statistics efficiently collected. In Ontario we have an important branch for the collection of labor statistics, which is serving a good purpose. first the various labor organisations were reluctant to supply the information desired, fearing that it might affect their taxation; but that difficulty has been to a great extent removed. However, my object was to read what I have read, showing that this organisation would be better pleased if the Bill were allowed to remain over till next Session. however, the hon. Secretary of State is determined to proceed with the Bill, I have some amendments which they consider to be important, which I shall feel it my duty to press upon the Committee.

Mr. LEPINE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the stand taken in reference to this matter by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) is quite strange. Some weeks ago the hon. gentleman charged the Government with paying very little attention to the report of the Labor Commission. Now, when complaint was laid against the Government for not considering the report of the Labor Commission, why should he now ask that the consideration of this report be postponed to next year? The Bill now before the House was, of course, based on the report made by the Labor Commission. I cannot see any necessity for postponing the consideration of this Bill until next Session. One must not put off to the morrow what one can do on the very day. I am somewhat puzzled by the letter from Mr. O'Donoghue, just read by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson). Mr. O'Donoghue is one of the most ardent advocates of the organisation of a Labor Bureau. and, last year, at the meeting of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, he strongly urged the organisation of these Statistical Bureaus. Why should he now wish to see the carrying of the Bill delayed? For several years past the labor organisations of this country have been asking for a Statistical Bureau, and, if it was not granted sooner, it is, no doubt, owing to the fact that the Government, in 1885, appointed a Labor Commission for ascertaining the condition of the workingmen of the whole Dominion. The Government affirm this Bill organising a Labor Statistical Bureau, and that they be granted a sum of $10,000 to cover the expenses of management of the same. In every country there are institutions of this kind, and they have been very greatly beneficial to the laboring classes. The laboring classes in this Dominion expect to be paid the same attention, and I congratulate the Government for having taken the initiative. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the majority of the members of this House, fully appreciating the importance of the establishment of such a Statistical Bureau and actuated by the best intentions towards the laboring classes, will unanimously adopt this Bill, and later on they will only have to congratulate themselves for having done so. Mr. Chairman, I do not see of what use it would be to put off this Bill until next year, for it has been brought to the notice of the labor organisations. Moreover, the labor organisations of the Dominion were represented here during the whole winter by delegates whom they trust, and who are certainly the best informed men as to labor matters they could send here. So that what these delegates have done was well Mr. Carey, who represents here the Dominion Congress, received from the Hon. Mr. Chapleau a copy of the Bill, and having found it perfectly acceptable, did not deem it his duty to ask for any change in it. Therefore, I might as well trust Mr. Carey, who was here the delegate of the organisations, than trust Mr. O'Donoghue, who must be moved by political considerations. Thus, Mr. Chairman, I conclude by hoping that the House will adopt this Bill creating a Labor Statistical Bureau. The Bill will be well appreciated by the workingmen, for it will enable them, in a few years, to ascertain the improvements made, by a comparison between the wages now paid and those that will then be paid; moreover, it will enable them to compare the prices of commodities, food, &c., and ascertain whether they have truly improved their social condition.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At this late hour of the Session I have avoided entering into a long dissertation on this most important subject, which might have otherwise enlisted the attention of the House in hours of fruitful discussion. I do not want to do it, for the reason the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has mentioned. I have given to the cause of the laboring classes, to their condition and their demands, the closest study and attention. The subject has enlisted my sympathy for many years. I had prepared for this Session two or three different measures—only projects of law, it is true; and I have received in some cases, in a spirit which was perhaps too suspicious, recommendations and advice and demands, and I have been asked to postpone those measures, and the Government have yielded to that request of the labor organisations. I must tell my hon. friend from Elgin that he is mistaken if he believes that the trade and labor organisations are opposed to the passage of the Bill for the creation of a Bureau of Labor Statistics. Not later than about half an hour ago, I was in communication with the President of the Legislative Committee of the Trades and Labor Council of Toronto, Mr. Carey, who suggested to me some modifications and amendments which I am going toask the House to embody in this Bill. keep their promise by now asking the House to that it is not only good, but necessary, that a Labor Bureau should be organised now. The preparation of the census will coincide with the organisation of this bureau, and I am sure that I am not saying anything contrary to the wishes of the labor or-ganisations when I say that this Labor Bureau should be organised at once. It is not a novelty. I had prepared an insurance measure for workingmen, containing dispositions of detail which it was necessary to study for a certain time, and I have been asked to postpone that measure, and the Government have postponed it. Another measure was prepared to protect workingmen against what is commonly called the truck system. I have been asked to postpone that measure for further study of the different objects it embraced; and I have agreed to do so. This measure, however, is not only opportune, but necessary at the present time. I think it right that we should study these labor questions, and the organisation of a Labor Bureau is only the preparation for the study of all labor questions involving such great and important interests in the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am in favor of such a Bill as that now before the House, but I think it is too late in the Session to bring forward a measure of such importance. The House has been in Session for nearly four months, and now, in the closing days of the Session, the hon. Minister asks us to carry through this very important Bill. I think it would be in the interest of all, if this Bill, having been introduced and read the second time, were allowed to remain over until next Session.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It will take nearly a year to organise it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Bill ought to have been introduced in the early part of the Session. We cannot, at this time, give it the consideration it requires, and I do not see that any great harm will be done if it is allowed to remain over until next Session, so that, in the meantime, the labor organisations all over the country, who are specially interested in it, will have a full opportunity to consider it, and next Session we shall be able to put on the Statute-book a more perfect measure than we can possibly do now.

Mr. CURRAN. If the Bill were one of great complication, and if the subject had not already occupied the attention of those most interested and the general public, and if it had not been discussed as it has been by the press, there would be more force in what the hon, gentleman says than there really is. This Bill is one of great simplicity; it is one that has been evolved from the discussions which have taken place in the interest of the laboring classes. Although it has not been introduced earlier in the Session, the hon. gentleman has not shown there is any vicious principle in the Bill, or that there is any particular point to which he takes any special exception; and, therefore, his observations are not of a character to warrant the hon, gentleman in adopting the suggestion that the Bill should stand over until next Session. the Bill should become law, and it is shown between this and next Session to be defective in any respect, we will be in a position next Session to make such amendments as experience will show to be necessary. But, in the meantime, it is well that this measure, which has received the attention of those most deeply interested, should be now placed in our statutes, and we can later introduce Mr. CHAPLEAU.

such amendments to it as time and circumstances may indicate to be necessary. I hope the hon, gentleman will press his measure through, and thus prove to those who have been for sometime asking for such a law, that the Parliament of Canada is anxious to do what it can to meet their just demands. By obtaining the statistics, and the other information for the obtaining of which this Bill provides, we will be enabled to adopt such measures as will be conducive to the interests of both labor and capital.

Mr. McKAY. I cannot see that any good reason has been given why this Bill should be left over for another Session. It is not a Bill which legislates in any way against the workingmen, but will operate to their benefit. It is for the purpose of obtaining data on which Parliament may act next Session. The information, which may be gathered by the Bureau of Statistics, may prove to be data for legislation to be brought forward at a later date, and I do not see, therefore, why it should be held over. It is a step in the direction of progress. I hope the Secretary of State will press this Bill and put us in a position to, at a future time, legislate in the interests of labor organisations. Although representing a constituency where there are many workingmen, I have heard of no protest against this Bill. If they had anything against it, I am sure my colleague and myself would have heard of their protests, but they seem to be well satisfied.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not wish to be understood as opposing the Bill at all. I am just as anxious as the Secretary of State that a Bill meeting the desires of the various labor organisations in the Dominion should be passed. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. McKay) says he has had no protest against this measure and has heard of no complaint in reference to it. I might ask if any representations have been made to pass the Bill this Session?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; and very strong and very pressing representations.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Well, I have had representations equally as strong and pressing to have it held over. The Secretary of State says he has prepared several other measures. I am aware of that. I had an opportunity of looking at one of them, not very much in the interest of organised labor. This is better than that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon, friend cannot know that. If he takes his conclusion from information obtained in the press, he obtained wrong information. My hon, friend does not know what the measure was which I intended to propose to the House.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). All I know is that a Bill purporting to be the measure of my hon. friend was given a limited circulation. A few copies were obtained by some individuals, and, judging from those copies, the measure was not in the interest of organised labor to the extent this one is, and I would, therefore, approve of this as being an improvement upon the previous Bill. My hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has expressed his surprise that such a letter should come from Mr. O'Donoghue. If he considers the matter carefully, he will not be at all surprised. It is only a few days ago this Bill was introduced and received its first reading, and was then printed and circulated; and it is only through the care and watchfulness of Mr. Carey in forwarding this Bill to Toronto, that the labor organisations there had an opportunity of seeing it at all. It may be that my hon. friend, being behind the scenes, had an opportunity of seeing the Bill before it was printed, and of handing it to his friends before it was made generally public; but I am satisfied that the organisation in St. Thomas have not had any opportunity of reporting their views in reference to this subject.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. All the labor organisations know it, and know it better than we do in this House.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). That is a very surprising statement. Did they have an opportunity of reading the Bill before it was printed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). That is very strange, indeed. I thought this measure was fruit of the fertile brain of the Secretary of State; yet he tells us that the organisations all knew of this Bill a long time ago. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, if they did, they have never made known any desire for the passage of this measure to me, and I must, therefore, hold they have not had that opportunity. However, my hon. friend tells me he has received suggestions from Mr. Carey, and has incorporated them in the Bill. that is so, I am quite satisfied to allow the Bill to pass through this Session, but, certainly, unless it is protected in the direction the organisations require, it would be a mistake to allow it to go through this Session.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I stated that the labor organisations knew this Bill better than we, I said so because this Bill has been passed and proclaimed and acted upon in at least twenty or thirty States of the American Union. It is known, word for word, by every workingmen's association, and nobody can say that it is taking the labor organisations by surprise. I do not mean to say that they have read this Bill, but they have read a Bill designed exactly in the way that this is. My hon. friend does not take the responsibility of delaying this measure, and he is right, because the census will be taken concurrently with the statistics required by this Bill.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not intend to have any reflection passed upon me that I am trying to delay the Bill. If the Bill had been introduced earlier in the Session, there would have been no difficulty about it, and I stated that I was willing to withdraw any opposition if the representations made to me by the different organisations were adopted. I have been in favor of this Bill, and I am just as ardent a supporter of it as the hongentleman.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) I do not intend opposing this Bill; I wish, on the contrary, to congratulate the Government for having decided to bring it up. I cannot see on what ground this Bill could be objected to. We cannot too much favor any legislation having for its object to improve the condition of the laboring classes. But this latter must be known in all its details if the end in view is to be attained. My object, presently, is to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to one important point. It is most desirable that he should direct this Bureau, which is about to be organised, to specially examine the condition of the particular laboring class of Quebec known as the ship laborers. The transatlantic companies are gradually leaving the port of Quebec, and they give as their reason for coming no more to Quebec and even transferring their trade to another country, that the ship laborers of that town are requiring so high wages that it is impossible for them to have their ships loaded or unloaded without incurring losses, instead of making profits out of their trade. It is most desirable that this Bureau should enquire as to the rules of these societies, the number of persons employed in the loading and unloading of ships, their salaries, and also the number of persons who are not employed, in order that this House should be fully informed, and that we might know whether these ship laborers' societies are truly a benefit, or whether they should not rather be considered as a public calamity and nuisance. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will give this matter his earnest consideration. It is a well known fact that, on account of the ship laborers, the river police had to be maintained in Quebec, and the Government felt compelled to impose a tax on the ships so as to cover this expenditure. The United States, in order to retaliate, are charging a duty on the ships coming from any port of the Province of Quebec. Such is not the case for Ontario, whose ships are admitted free in the United States. Some time ago—some two years ago, I think-I brought up a Bill providing that the ship laborers, who should try to prevent other laborers from loading ships, should be liable under the criminal law. did not succeed in having the Bill passed; the Government thought there was no necessity for it; and I did not then receive sufficient support to have the Bill become law. But here is a case where the Government will have an opportunity of ascertaining whether the rules and tariffs of the ship laborers' society are really in the interests of the laborers, or whether they are not a source of ruin for themselves as well as for the trade of the city of Quebec, and a considerable impediment to the prosperity of an important section of our country.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

WOOD MOUNTAIN AND QU'APPELLE RAILWAY.

Mr. HESSON. I renew the motion which I made earlier in the day for the suspension of the rules in regard to the Bill in reference to the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. What have the Government to say in regard to this? It is a very unusual application, and some reason must be given for it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The notice was given very late, and the time would be up before next Session. Under these circumstances, I think there should be no objection to allowing the Bill to be read the first and second times and referred to the Railway Committee, which will meet to-morrow morning.

Mr. LAURIER. We have certain rules in regard to private Bills, but they can be dispensed with in case of urgency. In this case I understand that certain works have to be completed before the 1st July or the charter will be forfeited. They have had four months, during which we have been sitting here, within which to make the application. No application has been made, and, as far as I see, no question of urgency has been shown. I have no reason to oppose this measure, personally or politically, and the Government must take the responsibility for it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the leader of the Opposition takes the proper course. I regard it as a dangerous course to pursue, and I shall feel it my duty to adhere to the course taken by the leader of the Opposition, as a follower of his.

Motion agreed to, on a division.

Mr. HESSON introduced Bill (No. 156) respecting the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company.

Bill read the first and second times.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SAVINGS BANKS-PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 154) respecting certain savings banks in the Province of Quebec. He said: This is an Act to extend the charters of the two savings banks in the Province of Quebec, the City and District Savings Bank and the Caisse d'Economie. They follow the general banking legislation of ten years ago, and their charters were at that time extended, and the privileges which they had before were also extended to them for a period of ten years. They expire on the lst of July next year, so it becomes necessary to extend their charters. They are not banks of issue, of course, simply savings banks. The Bill was introduced into the Senate and passed there, and follows almost entirely the lines of the old Bill, without any new privileges, and without curtailing to any extent the privileges which they have heretofore had. The clauses in reference to unclaimed dividends are put in here anew, following the clause of the Bank Act with reference to the same matter. Most of the clauses are changed in sense; some of them are redrafted so as to read better, and I will point out these to the Committee as we pass through.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 6,

Mr. FOSTER. The only change is the addition of the words "and all accumulated profits," giving them the power to invest their accumulated profits.

.On section 18,

Mr. FOSTER. The only change is the omission of the words "on call," after the words "chartered banks." There is a provision afterwards which makes these moneys subject to the agreement which may be entered upon between these banks and the chartered banks with which they deposit.

On section 19,

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that complaints have been made to the Government that these banks were really doing a discount business, a bank business; am I correct in that opinion?

Mr. LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not heard of it.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting subsidies to railways.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These resolutions show the aid the Government propose to ask Parliament to grant in the way of assistance to railway companies by subsidies. Many of these are simply revotes; the amount of the new votes proposed will reach about $3,000,000. We have endeavored to keep the subsidies within very moderate bounds, and they are very moderate, compared with the votes that have previously been granted. We believe that assistance to a moderate extent in certain parts of the Dominion is of great importance to the development of sections of country through which these roads are to be constructed. The policy of the Government is well known and has been fixed for several years, and I need not, therefore, dilate upon that policy. I suggest that we consider the resolutions seriatim.

To the Montreal and Ottawa Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from the western end of the 30 miles subsidised by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, towards Ottawa, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road was formerly known as the Vaudreuil and Prescott Railway. The Act passed during the present Session changed its name to the Montreal and Ottawa Railway. The road was designed to commence at the Grand Trunk at Vaudreuil, and pass through the country near Hawkesbury, a distance of about 90 miles. By 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, a subsidy of $96,000 was voted for 30 miles. Sixteen miles have been constructed and trains have been running over that portion. By this resolution a subsidy is proposed for 30 miles further, leaving 30 miles uncovered by subsidy. The road will pass through a magnificent farming country, which stands very much in need of railway facilities for its development. It has been decided by the Government to ask Parliament for a further subsidy to aid in carrying on the road to Ottawa.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not find any report as to this company in the reports brought down by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon, gentleman will tell us at the outset what amount of subsidies have been applied for, and what amount the Government contemplate giving; that is, what the subsidies will amount to, to the railways incorporated which the Government have thought worthy of being subsidiesd. I notice that a very large number of railway charters have been granted, and I am told by an hon. gentleman who has looked into the matter, that at $3,200 a mile, it would require $70,000,000 to subsidies all these railways. I do not suppose that the Government has formed a favorable opinion of all these enterprises, although they have permitted the charters to be granted; but no doubt a very much larger number of railways.

corporations have applied for aid than those included in the list. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will tell us what amount has been applied for, and to what extent the applications have been set aside.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The fact that a company has been chartered to build a railway in any section of the Dominion, does not at all presume that it is to be aided by parliamentary vote. There are a good many railways which have applied for charters for the purpose of competition. As a general rule, although there may be exceptions, I do not think Parliament will be asked, if any given section has a railway passing through it, to subsidise a competitive railway. Nearly every one of the commercial centres apply for a competitive railway, in order to regulate and coerce the railway already constructed. I think we had 80, or, perhaps, 100, applications for assistance or subsidies this year. The amount applied for was about $14,000,000. The resolutions now before the Committee involves, as I have already stated, about $3,000,000. There are altogether $3,000,000, or thereabout, in the items before the Committee; but there is $1,000,000 of revote, all of which will be explained as we go along.

Mr. LAURIER. The statement made by the First Minister, that applications to the amount of $14,000,000 have been made, shows that we have opened a very wide door in this policy. The hon. gentleman will, I think, agree with me, under such circumstances, that wherever a company which has been already favored with a subsidy, comes again for a subsidy, such as the Montreal and Ottawa Railway Company, we ought to be satisfied as to the manner in which the subsidy already allowed has been applied. I do not find that this company have made any report as to their work, or that they have proceeded to build the section of the road for which they have already received a subsidy. I find from the report of the Minister of Railways, that in the month of February, 1889, a contract was entered into by the company, with the Government, for thirty miles from Vaudreuil towards Hawkesbury. But up to the 1st December, 1889, no payments had been made, and I presume they are not satisfied with the condition of the contract, and did not complete their work in whole or in part. Before we vote any further subsidy to this company, it would be interesting for us to know how far they have proceeded with the subsidy already advanced to them; because, if they have not earned the subsidy granted to them last year, it seems to me they should comply with the terms of the contract entered into with the Government before receiving additional aid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I spoke in too low a tone, and my hon. friend did not exactly catch what I said. The road is designed to run from the Grand Trunk Railway at Vaudreuil, through Rigaud, and the town of Hawkesbury, to Ottawa, a distance of about ninety miles. A subsidy of $96,000 was granted for the first thirty miles, last year, and sixteen miles has been completed and trains are running on it. I believe it has been graded and will be finished immediately to Rigaud, and I have no doubt, in the course of this summer, they will go on with the construction.

Mr. LAURIER. How much have they received already?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell for the moment. They apply and get their money when each ten miles is constructed.

Mr. BLAKE. As the hon, gentleman has intimated to us, that this is only the beginning and not the end of this policy, I think it would be well if he would say what the total liability is that the country is expected to incur, in virtue of this policy, as respects this railway? We have given a subsidy already. We are now asked to grant more, and the hon, gentleman says we will be asked again for another subsidy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A subsidy for thirty miles was granted last year, a subsidy for thirty miles is now applied for, and the thirty miles will finish to Ottawa, altogether ninety miles. Then there will be a route from Vaudreuil to Ottawa, making another route between Montreal and Ottawa.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will, therefore, take $288,000 to build these ninety miles. We have already two roads from Montreal to Ottawa. What is the distance between these sections?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs on the other side of the River Ottawa, and the Canada Atlantic Railway runs from Coteau to Ottawa. The Vaudreuil Railway runs along the south bank of the Ottawa River, and passes through two or three or more counties which have no railway accommodation.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some years ago, when this system of subsidising railways was first introduced, a deputation from the Counties of Bruce, Grey and Wellington came here to urge on the Government the propriety of refunding to those counties the amounts of money they had contributed towards the construction of railways which had never received a single dollar of aid from the Dominion. My opinion is that if the Government wish to vote money for this purpose, it should be voted to open up new sections. I am glad to hear the hon. First Minister announce to-night, that the policy of the Government in the future will be to avoid assisting competing lines. The counties in the section of country I represent, contributed very large amounts of money towards the construction of the Wellington, Grey and Bruce Railway, and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, which is now a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The County of Bruce contributed as much as $400,000; some of the minor municipalities contributed as much as $60,000 and some $80,000; they have been paying taxes on these contributions for fifteen or sixteen years; and I ask the hon. Minister if it is just or fair to ask these municipalities, which have never received a farthing of assistance from the Dominion for railways, to contribute towards the construction of railways in other parts of the country. I admit that the Government did contribute towards the construction of a short line five miles long, from some point on the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway to Wingham, but that is the only railway they have assisted in that part of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that my hon. friend, instead of making any complaint, should be proud of the fact that the counties of Wellington, Grey, Waterloo and Bruce have been wealthy enough to build their own railways without applying to Parliament. This small aid is intended simply to furnish the iron to iron the railways in localities that are not able to build railways for themselves. The hon, gentleman knows that $3,200 a mile will not construct a railway; in addition to that there must either be a subscription of stock by shareholders, of which there is not enough going on in Canada, or the municipalities must come forward and aid the railways by bonuses. In this way a sufficient fund may be obtained to commence the work, and after some progress has been made, they will be in a position to go into the market and issue bonds. But it would be a hopeless task if the Government were obliged to go back and consider the railways that have been built by localities and recoup them for the money they have expended. That would never do at all.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. McMillan) will not thank the hon. First Minister for supposing that the county he represents is not as well able to build its own railways as any county in the Province of Ontario. I think he would protest—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think he would protest very hard.

Mr. LAURIER—that one of the oldest and finest counties in the country is not entitled to be treated in a more beggarly manner than any other county. But wealthy as any section of the country may be, still any aid is welcome to it; and this is why my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is appealing for assistance to his section. He does not see any reason why any section of the country, less favored by nature than the section he represents, should be favored by the Government. Nor do I think the statement of the hon. First Minister altogether applies, for I see that aid is to be given to a railway in the County of Waterloo, in the very section of country my hon. friend adverted to.

Mr. LABROSSE. I think the hon. member for Wellington should not complain of money being granted to the County of Prescott, because it is a county which has not railway communication at present. When this railway was begun, the Province of Quebec voted $5,000 a mile to assist it; and two years ago we applied to the Ontario Government in the hope that they would grant us assistance, but failed. I was desirous that the County of Prescott should have its share of railway assistance as well as the County of Vaudreuil. I cannot say that it is a very poor county, but it should have its share of the money voted for railways, because it has minerals and mills and plenty of natural resources, and it greatly needs railway communication. For this reason, I do not think my hon. friend should complain.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not making any complaint at all. I am making an appeal for consideration for the Counties of Wellington and Grey for the enormous amounts of money they have contributed towards the construction of the Wellington, Grey and Bruce and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railways. They claim that if this policy is to be carried out, the Government should relieve them of some of the debt they neurred for the construction of those lines. Sir John A. Macdonald.

I think that is only fair and reasonable; but that deputation got no encouragement whatever. Why, Sir, the Toronto, Grey and Bruce was one of the most important links in the Canadian Pacific Railway main line, by way of Owen Sound, and then by the lake to Port Arthur right on to Winnipeg, before the North Shore was built. The Canadian Pacific Railway have taken it and made it a portion of their main line. Under those circumstances, these people were entitled to some consideration. Take the case of the Province of Que-When the Government assumed the Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, as it was called, and made it part and parcel of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Dominion Government considered, under the circumstances, it was only just that the Province of Quebec should be recouped for the money they put into that line. This road is in the very same condition. then is it that these people are denied the same consideration as was given to the Province of Quebec? I am not complaining of my hon. friend, who is quite right in obtaining what he can for his county. I have no objections to that, if it is a section of country which ought to be accommodated in this way. It appears to me there are quite a number of roads running south, but I suppose the Government have taken precautions to see that this road is not running directly parallel to lines already built, as the First Minister has laid that down as a principle on which subsidies should be

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only state to my hon. friend that there may have been, some years ago, deputations on this subject from that part of the country, but certainly there have been none of late years; and I have not heard anything about it lately until just now from my hon. friend. All that I can say is that, if the various municipalities have expended their money as the hon. gentleman says they have, let them bring up their case, and we will take it into consideration by next Session.

Mr. BLAKE. They have done all that already. Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad to have that information from the First Minister. I am glad to see that he has expressed his willingness to give their case fair and serious consideration, and I shall convey that opinion to those municipalities, which, I am aware, have labored under great inconvenience.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend may as well read the communication addressed to the First Minister:

"We, the undersigned members of the House of Commons, respectfully recommend, that the Vaudreuil and Prescott Railway be placed on the list of railways to be subsidised this Session, in the event of the Government adopting the policy of subsidising railway companies this Session.

"HUGH McMILLAN,
"J. G. H. BERGERON,
"J. W. BAIN,
"And 110 others.

"House of Commons, "18th March, 1890."

If my hon, friend had his 110 others in force, no doubt the Government would give his application all the attention it deserves.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid the time the Government had to prepare those papers was so limited that the stenographer was not able to give us the names of the 110 others; and I am sure this is rather unjust to them, who would only have been too glad to have their names published to the world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Log rolling in excelsis, you may describe it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The right hon. the First Minister seems to have forgotten that the deputation was largely representative, which waited upon himself and the members of the Government some two or three years ago, to urge the claims the hon. member for North Wellington has referred to. It was a very large and influential deputation. I was there myself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Was I there?

Mr. LANDERKIN. The right hon. gentleman was there also. The matter was brought to his attention and that of his colleagues; and the claims of those municipalities were very properly and ably put before the First Minister. At that time the First Minister could not entertain the proposition which was made; and I did not think at the time he was quite right. I am glad to see he has approached nearer the principles of justice in what he has said to-night, and that he will consider their case. If there ever was a portion of a country entitled to the consideration of the Government, it is this one. They have contributed very largely to the railways they have built; in fact they have built their own railways without the aid of one cent from the Dominion treasury. There is not a single public building built by the Dominion Government, I think, in the County of Grey, although there are flourishing towns there, of which fact my hon. friend, the Min-ister of Public Works, is no doubt aware. We have built our own railways and public buildings, and we have helped to build the railways and public buildings of the rest of the Dominion; and I think the First Minister, the Government, and the House must be convinced that those counties which have not received public aid in any shape or form, which have taxed themselves largely for the purpose of building railways, should be recouped to some extent for their outlay. I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has made a very strong case. I think the case was made very strong before; I think the people are entitled to the consideration of the Government; and I am sorry that consideration should be put off until next Session. It might be attended to this Session. If the First Minister will look into the matter, he will find all they have done. in the case of the Georgian Bay and Wellington Railway, the people in the municipalities there gave in the neighborhood of a million dollars. In the cases of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, and the Wellington, Grey and Bruce Railways the municipalities gave nearly the same amount; and yet these people have had no return in public money for their expenditures, while they have helped to build and equip railways in other portions of the Dominion, as has been pointed out so well by the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). It is high time they should receive some consideration from this Government which claims to be a paternal Government.

To the Waterloo Junction Railway Company, for 11 miles of their railway, from Waterloo to Elmira, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $35,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This subsidy will cover half the way, and it is proposed to continue it next year for another eleven miles.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose this policy of granting a little this year and more next, is not to shock us with the whole amount at once. What is the purpose of splitting up the grants in this way?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because you must cut your garment according to your cloth. We think that various portions of the Dominion deserve consideration in the construction of railways. I hope now this company will set to work vigorously, having got this vote, and build these eleven miles before we meet again. It is impossible to grant these various roads, all of which have merit, the whole extent of the subsidy they require to complete the full extent of each line, be it long or short; and our policy always has been to grant a certain sum to enable them to commence, and then grant additional subsidies year by year, according as the revenue will permit. Some of these lines, hundreds of miles in length, have obtained grants from year to year for many years. We have to consider the claims of other portions of the Dominion. According as the road is gone on with from year to year, it will be assisted until finished.

Mr. LAURIER. That is a section of country as to which the right hon, gentleman stated the people ought to have been proud of being able to build their own railways.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know this section of country pretty well, and I know it requires railway accommodation. I think, within the limits he has laid down, the First Minister is fairly justified in making this grant.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand the statement of the First Minister to be practically a pledge that the remainder of this road will be aided as the commencement of it is aided. It is, therefore, necessary that we should know to what extent we are pledging ourselves. That being done, I think there may be an advantage in adopting the plan which the hon. gentleman is now adopting. In times past, the hon. gentleman has taken grants for a certain mileage, and the following Session he has proposed to apply the gross sum which he had taken for the longer mileage to a shorter mileage. It will be more difficult for him to pursue that iniquitous plan under this system, and, as he has done in the past, to double up the grants. If, therefore, the hon, gentleman states frankly to us, as he has done on these two items, what he intends to do, I think the adoption of this plan may prevent him from putting himself in the way of temptation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Blake) is fond of indulging in a little sarcasm. I do not think, when Parliament grants a subsidy for a portion of a road, that Parliament is under any pledge to grant a further subsidy; but, as long as this policy exists and a railway has shown its worth, it may be assumed that Parliament will grant it further aid. There is no pledge that it will be granted either in a subsequent Session or in a subsequent Parliament. That is altogether within the discretion of Parliament. The hon, gentleman speaks of the doubling up of certain votes. That has occurred very rarely, certainly not more than three or four times, and that has been done under circumstances of difficulty of construction, where it was found a railroad was really required, but that $3,200 would not be sufficient to build it.

To the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company, for a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Act 45 Victoria, chapter 14, and 46 Victoria, chapter 25, nor exceeding in the whole $600.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road is constructed; but before the company was in a position to draw the subsidy, $35,600 had lapsed. It was intended to vote the money, but, by a typographical error, only $35,000 was voted, leaving this balance of $600.

For a railway from Woodstock via London to Chathamin the Province of Ontario, 80 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 10, for a railway from Ingersoll via London to Chatham, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In this case the railway undertook to go to London, and when the road was nearly completed, the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company bought it out and completed the road to Chatham; but as Woodstock was found to be best adapted in the interests of trade for the starting point, Parliament is asked to sanction the change to Woodstock instead of Ingersoll.

To the St. Catharines and Niagara Railway Company, for 14 miles of their railway, from the eastern end of the 20 miles subsidised by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, to Hamilton, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $44,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does not this subsidy violate the principle the hon. gentleman has laid down? Is not this line almost alongside of the Great Western Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway runs from Niagara Falls to St. Catharines, and is intended, I believe, to be extended to Toront. However, we have granted this only for the fourteen miles of straight road connecting the line already completed with Hamilton.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this line subsidised to Hamilton now?

Sir John A. Macdonald.

company that, notwithstanding the advice received by the Government, their charter still had life in it, was still in existence; therefore, instead of asking Parliament to vote this sum specially to the Ottawa and Morrisburg Railway Company, we apply it to a railway from Ottawa to Morrisburg, and the question as to whether the first charter is in existence must be decided before the grant can be given. This is an old grant. The difficulty about the old charter arose in consequence of some quarrel between the shareholders, preventing the road going on as rapidly as it otherwise would.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that the only paper the hon, gentleman has brought down in connection with this road—though some communications I have received have led me to believe there are more papers-is a memorandum signed by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) on the 7th March, and another signed by Mr. J. P. Whitney for the incorporators, both of them relating to the new corporation of this Session. In the first of these documents the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) invites the attention of the Minister to the fact of the subsidy having lapsed, having been unearned by the existing company, which, he says, is now defunct, and he asks that the subsidy should be revived in favor of the new corporation of which, I understand, he is a promoter, as he has been for some time a promoter of Bills to achieve the object which is now embodied in the Act. I gave notice to the hon. gentleman to-day that on the occasion of this vote I should call the attention of the House to the circumstances connected with the vote of which this is a revival, and to his connection with it. Inasmuch as this formed one of those cases to which I thought the attention of Parliament and of the country ought to be directed, with reference to the connection of members with subsidised railway corporations, I had occasion, as in the case of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), before the last general election, to bring under the notice of the Canadian public the relations of the hon. member for Dundas to the former corporation, and I then used these words:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this line subsidised to Hamilton now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; only to St. Catharines. This is to enable them to construct the other fourteen miles into Hamilton, and that is all it is proposed to give them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Should not this be the western end instead of the eastern?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am much obliged to my hon. friend; we will strike out the word "eastern."

To a railway from Ottawa to Morrisburg, 52 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $166,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen may remember that a grant of a similar sum was made to the Ottawa and Waddington Railway Company, and the Government has been advised that the charter has expired, and another company was chartered this Session to build the same line. It is a valuable line, and the Government were prepared to recommend that this subsidy be given to the Ottawa and Morrisburg line, considering that the other charter had expired. However, representations have been made by the former Sir John A. Macdonald.

the president, Dr. Hickey, the member for Dundas, pre-pared a proposal for some New York capitalists to sell the charter in the form of contracting for the construction. the president, Dr. Hickey, the member for Dundas, prepared a proposal for some New York capitalists to sell the charter in the form of contracting for the construction. The very first provision of this proposal was that the company must have $15,000 paid to the order of the president, Dr. Hickey, to pay for bonds and other honorable engagements. Generally that is not the way in which contracts are made. If you were letting a contract to build a barn, or a house, you would expect to pay the contractors something for the work you bound him to do, but these bonus-hunters and charter-sellers demand that the men who are to do the work shall pay them something, and so the very first provision is that the contractors shall pay them $15,000. It would be rather interesting to know what the 'honorable engagements' were. Perhaps at a later day I may communicate to you what they were, but at present I say nothing. The fourth provision is that the existing corporators must retain a majority of the board (which consists ef seven), to protect their interestis, they binding themselves not to interfere with financial arrangements; or, they will bind themselves to give the contractors a majority on all money outlays, respecting the construction of the road and bridges. When the road is built this may lapse, if desired. Then they demand that $50,000 shall be deposited in the banks as a guarantee of good faith, which will be forfeited to the president and board of directors in the name of the president, C. E. Hickey, if the conditions of the agreement are forfeited. In the seventh clause, they agree to give the constructors two-thirds of the entire stock of $1,500,000, so they will still retain $500,000 of stock, the contractors getting $1.000,000. Then they agree to give all the bonds and bonuses, together with any bonuses they may get hereafter, and the balance due on the Morrisburg stock, $9,000. Then comes the tenth, the last provision, which is like unto the first. They want a liberal bonus in bonds of the first issue, or eas

Mr. HICKEY. May I ask the hon. gentleman from what he is reading?

Mr. BLAKE. I am reading from a report of my speech delivered at Kendal.

"The labor expenditure was mainly in getting a subsidy to be paid out of your taxes, and the good-will is in their willingness to get more. So they want $15,000 in cash, $500,000 in stock, and a liberal bonus in first mortgage bonds or cash, as the price of their position. I am not discussing the propriety of promoters of railway charters—though I confess I have not much confidence in the breed—trying to make the best bargain they can. What I do object to is members of Parliament, who are called upon to say whether it is in the public interest that public money should be voted to certain railway companies, who are called on to decide on the general legislation of the country, having private interest in those counties and personal relations with the Government, which must conflict with their public duty. This system is altogether a grand scheme for animating with additional fervor, large numbers of Government supporters by the consideration that they are to make profit by that support through the establishment of improper relations with the treasury.

"And as a matter of fact the result is, that what we give out of your taxes to build a road is very largely diverted to line the pockets of members who become promoters of the work and who build the road or sell out the charters to others. I call to you to judge whether this sort of transaction should be allowed."

Shortly after I made that speech, and it had been reported, the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) addressed to me a letter in rather angry terms. You can judge the kind of letter by the style of speech delivered by the hon, gentleman the other evening.

Mr. HICKEY. I will read the letter presently.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad. I am sorry to say I have not a copy, because I would have enlightened the Committee by reading a copy of it. I am not able to do so, but I am glad the letter is to be read. I answered that letter, and of the answer I kept a copy.

Mr. HICKEY. I have that also.

Mr. BLAKE. It is as follows :-

"POINTE AU PIC, P.Q.,
"August 11th, 1886.

"Points au Pic, P.Q.,
"August 11th, 1886.

"Sir,—On my return to Canada after an absence of several weeks, I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 22nd ultimo, in which you use several strong expressions in reference to certain statements made by me as to your connection with a railway enterprise which, as I conceived, affected your independence as a member of Parliament.

"Did your letter admit the substantial accuracy of my statements. I would be very ready to discuss with you anywhere their bearing and effect on your position as a representative of the people.

"But you deny their accuracy. It must, on reflection, be obvious to you that a public meeting at which we cannot compel the attendance and answer of witnesses, or the production of documents, or carry on an examination, affords perhaps the least satisfactory conceivable opportunity to get at the truth of disputed facts.

"There is another method, which, though not satisfactory, is at any rate better; and should you challenge me to enquiry there, I shall be ready to make a statement in the House of Commons, and to support it by evidence before a Committee.

"I shall be very glad, for your sake and that of the House, if the testimony shall show that I am misinformed; but at present I regret to be unable to withdraw the statements of which you complained, as my information is very positive.

"For example, I have before me a paper which I am but at present I regret to be unable to withdraw the statements of which you complained, as my information is very positive.

"For example, I have before me a paper which I am assured is a copy of a document prepared by you, and from which I extract the following clauses.

"1. We must have $15.000 payable to the order of our president, Charles E. Hickey, to pay bonds and other honorable engagements.

"1. We must retain a majority on the board (which consists of seven) to protect our interests, binding ourselves not to interfere with financial arrangements; or, we will bind ourselves to give you a majority on all money outlays, respecting the construction of the road and bridges. When the road is built this may lapse if desired.

"5. We must have a sum of say $50,000, deposited in the Molson's Bank here at our joint credit, as a guarantee of good faith, which sum must be deposited within ten days after the signing of our agreement, and which sum will be forfeited to the president and board of directors in the name of the president, charles E. Hickey, when the conditions of said agreement have been forfeited.

"7. We will give two-thirds of the entire stock of $1,500,000, to be divided equally on the road and the two bridges, i.e., the St. Lawrence River bridge and the Ottawa River bridge.

"8. We will give all the bonds and bonuses, together with all bonuses we may get hereafter—the stock taken by the yillage of Morrisburg, which is to be paid up in Ottawa River prings.

"8. We will give all the bonds and bonuses, together with all bonuses we may get hereafter—the stock taken by the village of Morrisburg, which is to be paid up in full, 100 shares, 10 per cent. having been paid thereen, leaving $9,000 still due.

"10. We want a liberal bonus in bonds of first issue or cash, for the seven promoters of the road, for labor expended and good-will."

"Unless this be a concocted paper, with which you had no connection, you will see that it contains the substance of that part of my statements which you seem most angrily to deny.

"I believe it to be genuine.

"I am yours, &c.,
"EDWARD BLAKE.

"CHARLES E. HICKEY, M.P., "Morrisburg."

I subsequently became, as the hon. gentleman is aware, possessed of the original of that document, signed by himself. At a subsequent period, as appears by documents which have become public, and which were brought before the other branch of the Legislature, the parties who were concerned in this matter, including the hon. gentleman, held a meeting. The minutes of the meeting are these:

"On the evening of the 11th June, 1886, at a meeting of the board of the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company, held at Morrisburg, the following resolution was passed:—

" '11th June, 1886.

"'Moved by Ira Morgan, seconded by Neil McIntyre, That the undermentioned shares of the capital stock of the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company, be given to the directors for reason, as follows: To W. S. Carman, 200 shares; to Neil Mc-Intyre, 200 shares; to Ira Morgan, 200 shares; to Chas. Odell, 200 shares; to R. C. Carter, 200 shares; to Chas. E. Hickey, 600 shares."

"FRIDAY, 30th July, 1886.

"The Board met this day at Morrisburg, when the resolutions of the last meeting, 11th June, were read over and adopted."

And this statement was read before the other branch:

"8th October, 1886.

"I, Charles Odell, called on Dr. Hickey at his house in Morrisburg, and asked to see the minute book, not having been present at the evening session, 11th June, or at that held 30th July. On looking overthe minute book I saw and became aware for the first time of the above resolution—voting the stock to the directors, without any reason assigned. I asked Dr. Hickey whether it was paid up stock in full. He replied: No, certainly not, but it was to be held merely in trust. This I could not understand, considering we held everything in trust as directors, and it was not only unnecessary to adopt such a resolution, but irregular and fraudulent."

"20th October, 1886.

"Had a meeting of the Board at the Russell House, Ottawa, at 7 p.m., re resolution of 11th June before referred to, stood the same in the book as originally."

" 21st October, 1886.

"21st October, 1886.
"This is the day of the annual meeting of stockholders for the purpose of electing a new board of directors for the ensuing year. The said meeting was called for 3 o'clock p.m.; the board met at 10 a.m.; nothing done; adjourned until 2 p.m.; then met again; no business of importance before them. I looked over the minute book and found that an alteration had been made during the interim in the resolution of the 11th June giving the stock to directors by scoring out the word 'reason' and inserting 'services as full paid up stock.' I at once told the board I repudiated the transaction, and would state so publicly at the general meeting, which I did, explaining all the above circumstances, considering it to be a fraudulent act, and one I would not be a party to."

I believe it was what the right hon, gentleman called the little family difficulties that had arisen in regard to these transactions, which I now bring before the attention of the Committee, that resulted in the formation of the two rival boards of directors, and the attendant commotion and conflict, which, of course, would thwart the efforts of any party and diminish the chances of success. I have only to say that I have taken this opportunity, when for the first time, since the period to which I alluded, a new proposition is being made by the Government to grant a subsidy to this company, and that at the instance of the hon, member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey), to lay before the House these facts, the facts which I stated in the speech which I have read, the proof of which facts are in the clauses of the documents which I have just read, which I myself abstracted from the document, and the subsequent facts with respect to the allocation of paid-up stock to the directors, including $60,000 of paid-up stock to the hon. gentleman himself. I do so, conceiving that it was my duty, as the hon. gentleman did not tender that challenge, which I invited him to tender to me, upon this subject before the last general election or at any time, it was my duty not to omit the occasion on which the hon, gentleman himself was promoting the grant of a lapsed subsidy for this same enterprise, under whatever form it may be promoted, to lay these facts before the Committee and the public.

Mr. HICKEY. I always feel a great deal of diffidence in addressing this House, and I do so hon gentleman to withdraw that. Mr. Blake.

on the present occasion. I must, however, congratulate the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the Committee on having gained a little courage during the last four years, so as to bring this matter up. I suppose he has some recollection of the letter I wrote and a little of the skirmish we had on this matter before, and since then he has been fighting in memory this little battle o'er. I have no doubt that the castigation I felt obliged to give to one of his bosom friends has reminded the hon. gentleman also of the past. I suppose he must have felt the gathering blows of the thongs of outraged and indignant truth when administered to his friend, reminding him of his ignominious retreat in 1886. I know the hon, gentleman is a great man in this country; that he poses as being, and he has been the leader of a great party, and he has been over-ambitious in desiring to be Premier of this country. But his political summersaults have sunk him so far in the mud that his best friends can scarcely reach him by the hair. What are the The hon. gentleman in a speech facts in this case. at Kendal in 1886, hundreds of miles away from my residence, made a speech which I presume is the speech he has read from to this Committee. He based that speech on information derived from a man whose name he did not dare to give to the Committee to night. He says to-night I had since been aware that he had an original document in his possession signed by me. I deny the statement, and I challenge the hon. gentleman here or in any other place to produce the document, or any evidence which will show that his statements in regard to this matter are correct. I denounce it as an untruth, without a syllable of truth in it, as far as the statement is concerned. The history of this railway scheme is just this: The charter for the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway was obtained from this Parliament before I was a member of Parliament. It is true, my name was put in as an incor-porator, but it was afterwards that I became a member of this House; and in 1884 I introduced a Bill amending the original charter. Subsequent to that time, I became part and parcel of this company, and was elected as president in the fall of 1885. You, therefore, see that the charter was obtained without any assistance from me, and the subsidy was given to the road before I had any special connection with it. I acknowledge that I used my best influence to help the company in any way I honestly could, because it was a road which I thought was of great importance to the country, and I did so especially because it went through the middle of my county. If the hon, gentleman supposed that I was going to hold my hands tied and say to strangers: "Help my friends through with this charter," he is mistaken. I had the courage to help my friends, and I did not fear, as the hon. gentleman does, to take an active part in the interests of my people lest some might criticise me for trying to assist them. I do not think the hon. gentleman will ever be accused in that way, because his life has been negative, and will be so to the end. The hon, gentleman is a pretty big blank in this country, and I choose to show that he is a bigger blank and a greater fraud than his greatest enemies have imagined.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the

Mr. HICKEY. If that is unparliamentary, Mr. Chairman, I will take it back, but my meaning is expressed in these words, notwithstanding. Now, the hon. gentleman found a great deal of fault with the strong language that I used. It has been said that there are some occasions when language fails to express the indignation which an honest and decent man must necessarily feel over some transactions. When the hon gentleman made that speech in Kendal, hundreds of miles away from my county, upon evidence which he admits had not my name attached to it, he spoke to strangers and to persons who did not know me. He made this statement far away, and I was properly indignant, and I wrote him the following letter on the 22nd July, 1886, which I am glad to present to him now, as I did on that occasion:--

" MORRISBURG, 22nd July, 1886.

" Hon. EDWARD BLAKE, M.P.

"Hon. Edward Blake, M.P.

"Sir,—In a speech at Kendal on the 15th inst. you made an attack on me which I consider dishonest and unfair. Upon anonymous information you thought proper to tell an audience behind my back that, as president of the O. W. & N. Y. Railway and Bridge Company I have tried to sell out the charter of the company, &c., &c. Your assertions are simply the outcome of a wilful misrepresentation of facts by you or your prompter, or both.

"The board of directors and myself have done all in our power, at the expense of time and money, to effect the carrying out of the enterprise. It is true we have so far failed, but the charter is in our hands and will remain there until we can get able and capable parties to undertake the construction of the road.

take the construction of the road.

"As statements and insinuations made by you could only affect, if at all, the confidence my constituents repose in me as an honorable man, and knowing that my actions as well as those of the board have been influenced by proper motives, I challenge you or your ablest deputy to meet me at any place in the County of Dundas, at your earliest convenience to discuss any proposals made by me or the board at any time to any person. Of course I shall expect your anonymous informer to be present. It will be no excuse for you to say that you referred to this matter as bearing on my independence as a representative of the people, because you labored first to show my acts were venal and therefore to be despised by those whose confidence I possess. confidence I possess.

"In spite of your insinuations as to our 'honorable engagements,' you may perhaps find it difficult to convince the people of this community that the directorsor myself have entered into engagements of any other

"Yours truly, "CHAS. E. HICKEY."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I may be very rough and very obtuse, as to refined or severe language, but I fail to see in that letter the odious language which the hon. gentleman endeavored to have this House believe this letter was couched in. The language is good plain English. Probably it is not like the language which would be used by the hon. gentleman, who has the disease which the French call flux de bouche, and who is able to talk around a great many things and not say anything. I have been blessed with fewer words than he, and if I speak in broad Saxon language, I hope that I am not misunderstood by the hon. gentleman now, or will not be in anything I have to say in the future. The hon, gentleman sent me back a reply to the letter I have quoted, which he has read to you and with which I will not trouble the House again. You will bear in mind that he carefully refuses to meet me, but he does say in one paragraph, that he will bring the matter up in the House if I challenge him. Lest I might forget it, I challenge the hon. gentleman to bring the matter up in this House at any time, with all the particulars and the evidence concerning it. My object, at that time, was to challenge the gentleman before the people who knew all about the circumstances, who knew the individual actors, and who could judge as between me and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) and his informers, or those who are acting with him in this matter. I sent him that challenge, but like that gentleman during all his life, his coat tails are generally seen when a man is required to stand and face the public. In reply to the letter which the hon. gentleman read to you, I wrote him as follows, on 18th August, 1886:

"Morrisburg, 18th August, 1886.

"Sir,-Your letter of the 11th inst. received, and its contents fully ratify my opinion of your dishonesty and contents fully ratify my opinion of your dishonesty and unfairness.

"Since you refuse to accept the challenge to meet me in the County of Dundas and make good the statements of your Kendal speech, I must, of course, submit to your decision. You were delighted to make those statements to a strange audience against me, but you find it to be the least satisfactory conceivable opportunity to prove them before an audience not unacquainted with the actors and their deeds as respects the railway. This is conduct the would-be Premier of Canada may be proud of, and possibly a few of his friends may say well done, but no such conduct can have the approbation of right-minded men. Continue to wallow in the mire if you will to your sweet content, but when you return to the region of fair play, remember that I defy you to show, by respectable evidence, that the board or myself have been venal in our demands or deeds.

demands or deeds.

"As to the 'independence of Parliament,' 'our counsel in Canada' is not at liberty to cast the first stone.

"Yours truly, "CHAS. E. HICKEY.

"Hon. Edward Blake, "Q.C., M.P."

So you see, Mr. Chairman, I was fair to the hon. gentleman; I did not let him off because he wanted I wished him for his own sake, for my sake and for the sake of the public, to face this unhallowed charge which he made against me, and to come before a tribunal of his own friends and my friends, and to decide who had been just in this matter. The hon. gentleman replied to me, on the 25th August, 1886, as follows:

" Pointe au Pic, 25th August, 1886.

"POINTE AU PIC, 25th August, 1880.

"Sir,—I have received your communication of 19th inst. I will not now, any more than in my last letter, attempt to vie with you in abusive language, which I think inflicts disgrace only on its authors.

"As I have already stated, I cannot call witnesses at a meeting; but I purpose, having regard to your letters, to say something on the subject in controversy at the gathering arranged for 1st September next at Winchester Springs; and, if you desire to reply, I am sure the managers and the audience will gladly give you every opportunity. tunity.

"I have, &c., EDWARD BLAKE.

"C. E. HICKEY. Esq., M.P.,
"Morrisburg, Ont."

I wish the House to remember the hon gentle-man's statement that I would get a chance to reply. It gave me some consolation to think that the hon. gentleman was going into my county, where I would have an opportunity to meet him before my friends as well as my foes. So, on the 30th of August, not having had any further information from him or his friends in the county, as the demonstration was to take place on the following day, I wrote this letter to the President of the Reform Association in the County of Dundas :-

"Morrisburg, 30th August, 1886.

JOHN FETTERLY, Esq.,
"President of the Reform Association in "the County of Dundas. "You are aware of the controversy between the Hon. E. Blake and myself regarding certain statements made by him in a speech at Kendal; and that I have challenged him to discuss at a meeting for that purpose any proposition made by me or the board of directors of the Ottawa. Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company,' and that I have accused him of dishonesty unfairness and of wilful misrepresentation; that a copy of his first letter to me was sent to you or your secretary and published in the Herald, last week, and it was also published with my second letter to him in the Courier. In Mr. Blake's letter he refused to accept my challenge to discuss before the people his slanders against me behind my back, because of his inability to, as he claims, to produce proofs and witnesses.

"In a letter from him of the 25th inst., received by me on Friday p.m., of the 27th, he has apparently reconsidered the matter, finding himself in an unfavorable light before the public. Having been urged, I presume, by some of his more manly and fair-play supporters here, he repents, and says: 'I cannot call witnesses at a meeting; but I purpose, having regard to your letters, to say something on the subject in controversy at the gathering arranged for 1st September next, at Winchester Springs; and if you desire to reply, I am sure the managers and the audience will gladly give you every opportunity.' Doubtless you or your secretary have also received a copy of this letter to me, and I have waited until this moment, 4 p.m., to receive an invitation from you as the President of the managers of the gathering on the 1st prox. to have an opportunity to reply to Mr. Blake on the subject of our controversy. His carefully worded letter does not invite me to attend your meeting, you perceive, and, therefore, I appeal to you. This delay is very unfair to me, and my friends, who cannot now be informed of my going to discuss this matter on the 1st with Mr. Blake, as a great many of them would have gone had they received notice. Mr. Blake's proposal is unfair and one-sided in many ways, but I shall waive all disadvantages in this past the el

"Yours very truly,
"CHAS. E. HICKEY."

The reason I mentioned Dr. McIntyre and Mr. Ira Morgan was that they were political friends of the hon. gentleman, and I thought at least their friends would believe them if they would not believe me. But, Sir, in what spirit was I received in these circumstances by that magnanimous party which talks about fair play. Mr. Fetterly, on 30th August, wrote to me as follows—I suppose this was inspired by the hon. gentleman:-

"Morrisburg, 30th August, 1886.

"CHAS. E. HICKEY., Esq., M.P.

"DEAR SIR,—Your letter to me to-day asking permission to reply to the Honorable E. Blake at the meeting to be held at Winchester Springs on Wednesday, the 1st roximo.

"As the controversy in question involves the independence of Parliament, I would consider it entirely a matter for investigation before a committee of the House of Commons. However, as you have supplied me with a copy of a letter from the Hon. E. Blake, saying that in all probability he would refer to the charge he preferred against you at Kendal, and intimating a willingness to grant you a right of reply, I feel it but justly due to you as a public man to extend to you the right of replying to any charge reflecting on your public character. But more especially I do desire to grant you the privilege in this case, as you stand charged by Mr. Blake with offering to sell for private consideration a charter and bonus, which you as the people's representative obtained from the Parliament of Canada, and thereby render yourself liable to censure. proximo. liable to censure.

Mr. HICKEY.

"In view of all the facts involved in this controversy, In view of all the lacts involved in this controversy, the committee of arrangements have decided to grant you 30 minutes to reply to Mr. Blake as soon as he refers to the matter in question, but cannot consent to any further interruption as our programme of arrangements is now complete, and only accede to your request as we believe it is a matter in which the people of Eastern Ontario are particularly interested.

"Your obedient servant,

"JOHN FETTERLY, "President R. A., Co. Dundas."

So you see, Mr. Chairman, that with that magnanimity which the hon, gentleman must have handed down even to the Reform Association of the county of Dundas, they were willing to have me sand-wiched in between Blake and Blake—Blake before me and Blake behind me; and this House knows the kind of fair dealing any man would get from that hon gentleman. They denied me a reasonable time, offering me thirty minutes. But I was not going to be put off in that way, and on 31st August I wrote to Mr. Fetterly:

"Morrisburg, 31st August, 1886.

"JOHN FETTERLY, Esq., "Pres. R. A., Co. Dundas.

"Str.—I have received yours of this morning. Mr-Blake slandered me behind my back. When I struck back at him and dared him to meet me and make good his charges, he waited a month and then shamefully refused to give me an opportunity to defend myself. Afterwards seeing that he made a blunder, and knowing he was coming to Dundas, he suggests that the managers of your demonstration would allow me to reply to him. In thus putting the responsibility as far as possible on your shoulders he is only carrying out the principles of his ordinary conduct. Besides, the cautious wording of his letter betrays the little game intended by him. If I should not appear at the meeting his letter would be read to show I could have done so. If I did appear he could shield himself behind you, and I would have to take your terms as to speaking. No doubt he chuckled heartily to himself as he posted the letter. You now have taken steps to render it impossible for me to defend myself while pretending to offer me a chance. Mr. Blake said I might reply to him. You say I may have thirty minutes in the middle of Blake's speech. i.e., sandwiched by Blake. You also know that limiting me to thirty minutes is practically shutting me out entirely. But evidently that is what you desire. You also positively refuse to allow Dr. McIntyre and Ira Morgan, Esq., co-directors, to utter a word in my justification. And neither your leader nor yourselves appear to be ashamed of such conduct. However, I must brand him as a calumniator and a trickster, and will yet force him to meet me before the people of Dundas or get into his smallest hole.

"There is just one consolation left me in all this. I have been the humble instrument of showing to the people of this county and of Canada what sort of clay the Grit idol if made of.

"Yours very truly,

"Yours very truly, "CHAS. E. HICKEY."

Then, Sir, I thought it my duty to have a parting word with Mr. Blake before he left the County of Having failed in all my plans, and Dundas. desiring to meet the hon. gentleman on the plat-form on a fair footing, I wrote to him as follows:

" Morrisburg, 31st August, 1886.

"Sir,—So far you have persistently dodged my challenge to meet me in this county and make good the statements in your Kendal speech. The managers of your demonstration have, as you are no doubt aware, refused to allow me to reply to you at the meeting to-morrow, as suggested by you. But you shall not escape me.
"You have abandoned your first resolution to refuse me a chance to defend myself, and have asserted your willingness that I should reply to you. Therefore you cannot again refuse me when I again challenge you, as I do now, to meet me in this county at an early day and publicly discuss on equitable terms the matters in controversy between us.

versy between us.

"I shall not ask you to produce any proofs but those you have. You can have no excuse now.

"An early reply will oblige.
"Yours, &c.,
"Your E Brive O.C. M.P." "CHAS. E. HICKEY.

"Hon. E. Blake, Q.C., M.P."

I heard nothing of Mr. Blake, but I had the satisfaction of printing this correspondence and circulating it largely through the audience which Mr, Blake had the honor to address; and I am sure the audience was not very well prepared to listen to any fair proposition from an hon, gentleman who had treated their representative in so cavalier a manner. Now, I have read this correspondence, and I am glad the hon, gentleman has had the courage to bring this matter up, because I have done nothing in it that business men have not done very repeatedly, and would do again. I make this statement before going into particulars. I wish to refer to another point. It is evident, from the speech of the hon. gentleman, from the letter he wrote me, and from the statement he has made in this House, that either he or another hon. gentleman in another Chamber has stated an utter falsehood.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Whilst I am willing to allow the hon. gentleman every latitude, I must ask him to withdraw that expression.

Mr. HICKEY. Mr. HICKEY. I applied it to a statement which was made, and I do not think in that connection it is out of order. I was saying that I intended reading the statement which the hon. gentleman has repeated in this House, and which he wrote to me in this letter, and comparing it with the statement made by another hon, gentleman in another House, but made in a totally different manner. I think that is quite in order. I would be very sorry to step outside the rules of the House.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to refer to a statement.

Mr. HICKEY. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) says I made a proposition in that statement, which, he says, was the first proposition I made. He had not the courtesy to this House to lay that proposition before it, so that hon members could judge for themselves. In the first place, Sir, you will notice that he goes from one to four of the memorandum which, he says, I signed. I challenge the hon, gentleman to produce any such document. I would like to see it. If the hon. gentleman has it, he is in honor and duty bound to this House to lay it before us, and the House see what it is, so that we can tell how far he is correct. He says that he has a paper, which, he is sure, is the copy of a document prepared by me, and from which he extracts the following clause—the first clause :-

"We must have $15,000, payable to the order of our president, C. E. Hickey, to pay bonds and other honorable engagements."

On the face of it, this would not seem to have come from C. E. Hickey alone, but from the board, of which I was president possibly at the time. But that is not the point I want to make. He says it reads:

"We must have $15,000 payable to the order of our president, C. E. Hickey, to pay bonds and other honorable engagements."

Senator Vidal, in another House, makes this first item read as follows:--

"In 1886, he says (referring to me), we must have $15,000 payable to the order of our President, C. E. Hickey, to pay or settle with directors and pay other hon-orable engagements, all of which will be accounted for."

So you see the very essence, the very thing, that ought to be mentioned by an hon. gentleman making a statement to this House, he leaves out, namely, the words "all of which will be accounted for." The hon. gentleman left this out in his statement to this House; he left it out in his Kendal speech; and I challenge him to say that his statement is correct. Here is Senator Vidal making a statement in another shape, and I leave it to the hon, gentlemen and to Senator Vidal to settle as to which one of them is telling the truth. No doubt, if they were fully investigated, the one statement would be found to have just about as much truth as the other; but he holds a blank pack, he holds the cards, and he places them in his own way. I tell him now, however, as I have told him before, that the course he has taken is a cowardly way to proceed, that it is not an honorable way to proceed against another gentleman who stands in this chamber or in any other place. I might go over all these other propositions. He talks about the $50,000 being paid to me. Well, if I had the whole document,—I do not know whether it is mine or whose it is—but I will leave it to any hon. gentleman, who knows anything of the transaction, whether that was not a proposition which it was proper to make to men who were interviewing us with reference to building our railway. I say that, whether that proposition be mine or not, it is a business statement. I say it was a perfectly fair proposition to these men that they should be asked, in order to show their bond fides in this matter, to deposit $50,000 in the Molson Bank at Morrisburg, to be repaid them according as they built the road. It was quite fair to propose to them that if their intention was not to deceive us but to carry out their engagements honorably, if they were honest and sincere, they should deposit this money. If the hon, gentleman will produce the whole statement, if it is mine, I will guarantee that there is not any business man, who loves honor and fair play between man and man, but who will say that the proposition made was a fair business one, to prevent our being humbugged by the individuals who expressed their readiness to undertake the work. A proposition was made to Mr. Alderson, a gentleman who had been a former president of the company. He was the first president, Mr. Odell was the next, and I was the third. I was elected in 1886. The very day of my election Mr. Keefer, who had been the manager of the company and its most active promoter, fell and broke his leg, and I never saw him afterwards. He died from the effects. Then our difficulties arose. I always defended and stood by Mr. Keefer. I did not take any particular interest in the company up to that date, but Mr. Keefer having died, and, a short time afterward, Mr. Imlay, I was obliged to step into the breach and do the best I could with what was left. What did we find? Our bonds were in the possession of Mr. Keefer. It was arranged at a meeting we held that Mr. Keefer would place those bonds in the Merchants Bank for safe-keeping, but he met with an accident and did not do so. After his death I came to Ottawa and asked for the books of the company and the bonds, which had been in Mr. Keefer's possession as secretary of the company, and I found they had been placed with the Hon. Mr. Scott in this city, a lawyer. He told me he had them, and I said to him: That is all right; if you will take a memo. of them, and give that to me, and keep them in your safe, that is all we are concerned in at present. But shortly after that I came with a gentleman from New York, who was anxious to tender for this enterprise, to interview Mr. Scott, and we asked about the bonds. He said they were not there, and he did not know what had become of them, but he thought Mrs. Keefer had sent for them. We went to her and

and that he had given them to that carter. I asked him how it was possible that he would give those bonds to an individual whom he did not know. He replied that he did not want to know anything about it, and that he did not know where the bonds were. You see, therefore, the position in which we were. Our bonds were stolen; they had been spirited away by these people and another gentleman in this city. Mr. Keefer, whom I had backed up, and Mr. Imlay had died, and their wives had been approached by the enemies of Mr. Keefer, men to whom he would not have spoken in his lifetime, and who, by proposing to give these ladies fabulous sums of money out of the road, captured their confidence and the bonds. We were in this unpleasant position, that Mr. Keefer's enemies had slipped in and were about to wrest this enterprise away from those who had an interest in it. That led to this voting of stock which the hon. gentleman deprecates so severely. I want to tell the hon. gentleman, in the first place, that we had a legal right to have that stock to our-asked her if she had them, and she said she did not know anything about them. We went back to Mr.

Scott, and he said that a carter had come for them

porating the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway Company:

"The directors of the company elected by the share-holders may make and issue, as paid-up stock, shares in the company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allot and hand over such stock or the mortgage bonds of the company in payment of right of way, plant, rolling stock, or materials of any kind, and also for the services of contractors, engineers and other persons, whether directors or not, who may have been, are or may be engaged in promoting the undertaking and interests of the company; and such issue and all allotment of stock or bonds shall be binding on the company, and such paid-up stock shall not be assessable for calls."

man I will read the 25th section of the Act incor-selves. Whether it was just or not we shall see. I submit that we had a legal right to do this, and one of the best lawyers in the country said that we had. For the information of the hon. gentle-

I read that to show the hon. gentleman that we had a legal right to vote that stock to ourselves, but I also contend that we had a moral right to do it. The fact that our books and our bonds had been spirited away from us was sufficient to make us feel that we were morally bound to protect our interests and the interests of our friends. We are not ashamed of what we did, and for my part I would do it over again. I can tell the hon. gentleman who has made this charge against me, that my conduct has been endorsed by the most prominent Reformers in the county of Dundas, who knew the character of the men who were endeavoring to manipulate this matter, men who had no interest in the building of the railway and cared nothing Mr. HICKEY.

for it, provided they could accomplish their own ends. The other stockholders might feel sore about it; I do not doubt that. But our books and bonds were stolen, and we would have been very simple to allow these people to defeat us in that way. The hon, gentleman says I was aware that he became possessed of a document with my name attached to it. I challenge him to produce that document

Mr. BLAKE. I may have said that, but what I meant to say was that the document was in the hon. gentleman's writing.

Mr. HICKEY. So the hon gentleman is the big coon, and he comes down from the tree. He now admits that he had not a document with my signature, though he stated that he had. I say that this is altogether a trumped-up charge, and that the hon gentleman should not have been deceived by the people who approached him, but the fact is that he did it from malice against me and in order to make my people distrust me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw that statement.

Mr. HICKEY. I must bow to your ruling, but if an hon. gentleman does an act from malice—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the expression.

Mr. HICKEY. I withdraw the expression very readily; but, if a statement is made which is calculated to do me injury with my people, what expression can I use? I cannot say that it was an act of kindness or an act of flattery. What word in the English language can I apply to such a statement, but whether it be malice, or kindness, or flattery, I will leave the House and the country to judge. The hon. gentleman said in conclusion that he had taken the first opportunity since 1886 of bringing up this matter. Since that date this line of railway has been three times before the House. I have introduced Bills in reference to this line of railway three times, and they received no opposition, and the hon. gentleman allowed them to go without any objection. Possibly it was because of the stings which were administered to a friend of his that he now desires to give a Roland for an Oliver, and to throw a little mud at me in the hope that some will stick, in reply to what I said in this House in reference to that friend of his. He asked what this $15,000 could be for? I have a statement here which was presented to the Senate, and signed by Che-O'Dell, W. J. Anderson, T. B. Alderson, Hon-James Reddington, Grace Keefer and Elizabeth Imlay. These are the people who have been fighting me from the beginning to the end of this matter, and the claim which they put before the Senate as their proposed claim upon the gentlemen who are in the new charter. My name does not appear in the new charter; but I promoted the Bill, and I will do everything possible, in a legitimate way, to assist them, because I believe it to be in the interests of my constituents. The memorandum these people give is that the expenditure and liabilities incurred by the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company amounted to $34,490. I would like the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), to state how I could make any money out of that $15,000 if I had to pay $34,000? He also left out Senator Vidal's statement in regard to accounting for this money. I do not want to weary the House further, but I would remind the hon. gentleman of his peculiar conditions in life. When I first came to this Parliament, the hon. gentleman was known throughout the whole country as "our counsel in Canada." He was then a warm supporter of the Grand Trunk Railway, and was opposed to everything which was in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Afterwards, when he became the subsidised agent-I will not say that in any offensive way-when he was the agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we found him the slavish supporter of everything in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and now he is acting as the solicitor against me. He is the present solicitor of falsehood, slander and crime. He has endeavored to defend the people who, by means of falsehood, slander and crime, have endeavored to injure me. I have shown that, while in Kendal he was playing the political trickster, he was also my calumniator there. Now, I leave the matter with the House and country. I do not think the hon. gentleman has made much more out of this than he has out of many other undertakings in his lifetime. The political The political positions which he has taken in this country have been just about as quickly deserted, as he will be glad to desert this. When his schemes do not succeed, as a rule, as when he failed in 1887 in becoming Premier of Canada, like a sulky boy who scarcely smiled upon his friends, he did not say much in this House until, having been resurrected by something, he has sprung into activity. I congratulate him, and I congratulate the country, which is all the better for such activity as the hon, gentleman displays in this House sometimes. But when he descends to slander and vituperation, it sounds a good deal like slush from the gutter.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that expression.

Mr. HICKEY. I withdraw the expression if it is unparliamentary.

Mr. BLAKE. You take a great deal of unnecessary trouble, Mr. Chairman, because we all know that if you acted rigorously on the rules which you apply to some hon gentlemen, you would strike the hon. member dumb, because he could not speak at all if he did not use these phrases. The hon, gentleman has been good enough to read one of my letters in which I expressed my opinion of the only effect that abusive epithets have, and to whom alone they are injurious. I have long entertained that opinion, which I have expressed before, and which I repeat to night; it happily leaves me in a condition of absolute equanimity under the administration of those epithets both by letter and by word of mouth. He has talked of my being guilty of vituperation. All I did was to read to you a statement which I made some years ago which is, I believe, absolutely true, and a letter which I wrote to the hon. gentleman in response to an offensive communication of his, which letter also I believe is absolutely true. It seems from what the hon. gentleman has said, and he is corroborated by the Minister of Customs, I think, that I used the word "signed" when I spoke of this document. I tleman. I do not personally know the handwriting of the hon. gentleman, but whether the document was in his handwriting or not, the question is whether it is his document. You will observe he has not denied his connection with that document, he has not denied his connection with these clauses, but he professes to defend these clauses. But one of the clauses he has not referred to at all, and it is the one which is the most important of allclause 10:

"We want a liberal bonus in bonds of first issue or cash, for the seven promoters of the road, for labor expended and good-will."

That was really the clause of the clauses; and the hon, gentleman has not, with his absolute certainty that he is able to make the statements of that document consistent with propriety—he has not even alluded to that clause at all. I do not wish to say anything more upon this subject. have thought fit, at the earliest opportunity I thought proper, to bring this up. I did not, as the hon, gentleman assumed, say in my letter to the hon. gentleman that I would bring it up in Parliament. I told him that if he challenged me in Parliament, I would answer him. He says there were earlier opportunities, that there were earlier Sessions—in one of which I was not here, and in another of which I was not able to act-when he propounded Bills for the incorporation of com-These did not create a public relation between him and the Government and Parliament of this country on account of his interest in the subsidy. The subsidy at that time belonged to the other corporation, and I did not conceive that such relation was created, or was proposed to be created, till the hon. gentleman became a promoter of the application for this subsidy, and thus became once more involved in that relation to the Government and the Parliament of this country, which I conceived, having regard to his personal relation to the affairs of the railway company, was a repre-hensible relation, which ought not to subsist. Upon ascertaining that, and finding that the hon. gentleman was promoting a new enterprise, and asking for the old subsidy, it seemed to me that it was fitting I should acquaint the House and the country with the state of facts, which I have brought forward in the extracts from my speech, and in the letter which I have read, and these are not denied.

Mr. HICKEY. I do not object to the hon. gentleman bringing the matter before the House, I am glad he has done so. He speaks of my personal relations with this. Now, my personal relation amounts to this: I introduced a Bill for friends of mine. I wrote a letter to the Minister of Railways urging that this subsidy should be revoted to this company. That is my personal relation to it. Why does the hon. gentleman wish to bring that up? He does not accuse me of a breach of the independence of Parliament, but he hints at it, he wants people to infer that there is some wrong in a member of Parliament asking the Government to aid an enterprise in which he feels an interest, in which his friends are interested, in which his county is interested, and which will greatly help his county. If there is anything wrong in that, then I have done wrong, but I do word "signed" when I spoke of this document. I not think there is. I have done what it was my have already explained that what I meant to say duty to do. Now, he says I did not defend all the was that it was in the handwriting of the hon. gen-clauses. Sir, I distinctly stated that I did not know whether the hon. gentleman was quoting them correctly or not. If the hon. gentleman will favor me with a copy-I have no copy-I will undertake to defend everything that I have written. But he studiously withholds the statement from the House, and from me, and tries to make a bugaboo out of something there is nothing in. I did see some of them once in the County of Dundas; they were produced, not for the purpose of doing me a particular injury, but as being in the interest of the railway; they were produced at a public gathering. That is the last I have seen of gathering. That is the last I have seen of them. Now, I do not undertake to defend any and I challenge the hon. thing I have not seen, and I challenge the hon. gentleman again to bring before the House anything of which I am the author, and I will undertake to defend it before any sensible man, and I will undertake to show that I was not culpable, that it was a business transaction, wholly justifiable from that point of view, that it ought not to affect me as a member of Parliament, and it does not justify him in insinuating that I did it for the sake of making money. Anybody who knows anything about promoting railways, knows that it is money out of pocket, from beginning to end. Now, in this document the hon. gentleman has read, there are some eight or ten clauses, but he does not give them all, either. He skipped from one to four. The hon. gentleman has the document, let him produce it. It is unfair to this House, it is discourteous to this House, for the hon. gentleman to deal with a false document—I will not say a false document, it may be true. If he will produce it, I will undertake, at the risk of any position I have, to defend it, and if it is not mine, I will not undertake to defend it. As to his statement with reference to subsidies to the promoters of the road, if the hon. gentleman came to me and made a proposal to build our road, I would say, yes, if he would hand back the money to us. That may be considered a liberal bonus or it may not. I say it is unfair to ask me to answer to any statement the hon. gentleman has made, because it may be one of which part is mine and part is not mine. I challenge the hon, gentleman to produce the document and lay it before me, and if the House will condemn me on that document, I will accept it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is very much to be regretted that we should have so many exposures of this kind. We have had three cases this Session. We had first, the case of Mr. Rykert, who has been pronounced guilty of conduct improper, scandalous, and unbecoming on the That hon. genpart of a member of this House. tleman has been sent back to his constituents. We have had also the case brought forward by the hon. member for Victoria against another hon. member, who was shown to have been dealing in timber limits and to have made money out of the transaction. We had another case the other night. We have had a case brought to the attention of the Minister of Public Works to-day with respect to trafficking in contracts let by the Department of Public Works. As to how far the allegations may be verified, it is for the future to say. We also had the case of the Caraquet Railway exposed a few evenings ago. So, Session after Session, we have brought before this House acts that are exceedingly unbecoming and certainly discreditable to members of this House. But these acts are the Mr. HICKEY.

consequences of the policy inaugurated and encouraged by the First Minister. The policy of granting bonuses to railways was inaugurated, and accordingly charters were sought in all directions, and members of Parliament secured charters and then inducements were held out to them to apply for subsidies. A similar policy has been pursued with respect to timber limits. These are important questions that it is the duty of the Opposition to place before the people, and it is time these abominations should cease, and the Opposition must try to put an end to them. If hon. gentlemen opposite come to their senses and realise their position before the country, and if the First Minister and his followers have to shed penitential tears for the iniquities they have inaugurated, there will be such an exhibition of tears in this House that each member will require to provide himself with a pair of water-tight boots up to the knees to wade through the flood. These transactions are a disgrace to this House and to the country. First Minister should introduce a Bill to amend the ten commandments. One of those commandments says thou shalt not lie, and another which says that thou shalt not steal. He is bound to seek to amend these commandments in order to protect his followers from the penalties attached to their violation. If he does not, it will go hard with them the last day in the afternoon. The Committee were glad to hear that the First Minister intended to stop granting subsidies to roads which would compete with other lines. The hon gentleman must, however, not forget the importance of amending these commandments in order to bring his followers through these disgraceful transactions.

Mr. BOWELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. I also remember the son-inlaw Jamieson case. I hope this will be an end to these disgraceful cases, and that the fate of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) will be a warning to all hon. gentlemen. What does that gentleman say in his address to his constituents? He says:

"Why I should be singled out for public censure when there are dozens of members in the same House who not only have applied for and obtained limits for themselves but sit there daily voting moneys into their own pockets, I cannot understand."

That is a condition of things which is exceedingly discreditable, but I hope we have got to the end of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is rather unfortunate this subject has been brought up at this late period of the Session, because we cannot get the case before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why was this resolution drawn in this peculiar way? Do we understand it is intended to give this amount to the Ottawa and Morrisburg Railway, of which the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) is president, or to some other railway?

Mr. HICKEY. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman says I am president of or connected with the company. My name does not appear, and I am not associated with either one of the companies at the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that if this subsidy to the railway from Ottawa to Morrisburg is granted, in no respect the hon, gentleman will have any interest, or expect to have any interest, in such subsidy?

Mr. HICKEY. I expect indirectly to reap advantage from it. If it builds up my town I will reap advantage indirectly. But I have no interest in it, any more than has the hon. gentleman. The parties are friends of mine, and the road will go through my county.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad of it for the hon. gentleman's own sake. From the outset, I have always held the strongest possible objection to hon. gentlemen being parties to applications made to the Government for subsidies, in which subsidies they are personally interested. I hold that to be in spirit if not in letter a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, and it is adverse to all possible good government. My views are sufficiently well known on this point. I hope to see them in the course of next Session put into still more emphatic shape. All I wanted to know-and I hope there is no misunderstanding about it--is to whom this subsidy is to be given. If I understood the hon, member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) aright, he proposes to have no part or lot in this, not in any shape or way, except indirectly, which does not matter, and he will not receive berefit from this grant. And I am very glad of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a renewal of the subsidy granted to the Ottawa and Waddington Railway. Parliament this Session has granted a charter to the Ottawa and Morrisburg Railway, which charter covers exactly the same ground. The parties interested in the Ottawa and Waddington Railway have made strong representations that, according to the law, their charter is still alive and has not lapsed or become extinct, and therefore the language has been used that this subsidy is to be given to the railway from Ottawa to Morrisburg, and the Government will fully advise themselves as to the legal status of both railways before they decide to make the grant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this road intended to connect with an American road on the other side, and does it practically involve a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Morrisburg?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have got a charter for the purpose of crossing the St. Lawrence as the Waddington Bridge Company had. I think from what has been stated in Parliament here that we can hardly encourage the building of another bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman declares that he is not prepared, as a eart of the policy of the Government, to allow any bridge to be erected west of Coteau.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To what length does that extend?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It extends across the St. Lawrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The question is one which has an interest for me and for the hon gentleman too, perhaps. For example, is the hon. gentleman prepared to say that this prohibition pro tem. extends all the way to Kingston? If his duty to oppose any construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence in that region?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is my

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even though the American Government would consent on their

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is my present opinion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know that the hon. gentleman's present opinions are qualified under conditions, but I want to know what they are.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understand the hon, gentleman aright, he has not decided whether this subsidy is to go to the new Ottawa and Morrisburg Company or to the old company, the Ottawa, Waddington and New York.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) would tell us if he has retained his interest in the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Company.

Mr. HICKEY. I have claimed for the last three years that the charter of the old company is It is defunct, and I have repeatedly offered to sell my interest for 5 cents to the promoters of the old road. I will sell it to the hon, gentleman for 5 cents if he wishes to have it.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not deal in that.

To the Eric and Huron Railway Company, for 22 miles of their railway from Petrolea via Oil Springs to Dresden, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $70,400.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the Government contemplate subsidising in the future the line extending from Sarnia to Bothwell, because this is only a small section of the line projected by the company?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. to the statement I made, that I do not think it would be any benefit to subsidise a portion of a road and leave the other unbuilt. If things go well and I am here, I shall be glad to have an opportunity of asking a subsidy for the branch from Dresden to Bothwell

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, for a railway from Brockville to Westport, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59, not exceeding in the whole $83,000.

Mr. LAURIER. Is this a renewal of a lapsed subsidy?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is in one sense; the road is built and in running order, but it did not come up to the standard, and the engineer would not certify for the money. These objections, however, have been removed and the road is now finished up to the standard.

To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway from Little Current to the Algoma Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Manitou-lin Islands, which I remember as a boy were occupied only by Indians, now have a population, I am informed, of 14,000. These people from their insular position are cut off from railway communian enterprise is promoted there, would be feel it cation; but by building this railway from Little Current, they will have connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway road. During the winter months they are cut off from the rest of the world, and during summer they have a steamer plying there, which is a means of communication.

To the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company, for 36 miles of their railway, from the north east end of the 20 miles subsidised by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, to Smith's Falls, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $115,200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. tingent on the electors of Kingston doing the correct thing on their part?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We ask for a subsidy for the whole line, instead of a portion of the line, as is done in other cases. The reason of this is that otherwise the bonus would be forfeited. To show the importance which the local authorities attach to this road, I may point out that the city of Kingston gave $150,000; Leeds and Lansdowne, $20,000; Crosby, $10,000; South Elmsley, $4,000; and the town of Smith's Falls, $5,000; in all, $224,000. The promoters of this company want the whole sum voted, so that they may go on at once, and not run the risk of forfeiting this bonus.

To the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Eganville to Barry's Bay, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road commences on the Canadian Pacific Railway near Renfrew, and passes through Eganville. It will open up a valuable timber trade in that section of the country. The first section from the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville was subsidised by 49 Victoria, and this subsidy is to cover a further distance from Eganville to Barry's Bay.

To the Belleville and Lake Nipissing Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Belleville to Bridgewater, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway passes through a partially settled agricultural and mining country, crossing many parts which are well timbered.

To the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from Cobourg to the Ontario and Quebec Railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a very important road to the town of Cobourg and the county of Northumberland, as it will give direct railway communication with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will also be of much value to the region to which it is projected. It is a short line, country tributary to the line and to the mining old Cobourg and Peterborough Railway, owing to its location, had to be abandoned, and it becomes absolutely indispensable that a new road be built in a good location.

To the St. Stephen and Milltown Railway Company, for 3\frac{1}{2} miles of their railway, from the town of St. Stephen to the town of Milltown, a subsidy not exceeding \frac{2}{3},200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole \frac{2}{3}1,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Milltown and St. Stephen are manufacturing centres, having a cotton mill and a lumber mill. Milltown has neither navigation nor railway facilities. The population of Milltown is about 2,500 and St. Stephen 3,000.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

For a railway from a point at or near Fredriction vi4 Oromocto and Gagetown, to a point on the New Brunswick Railway west of Westfield Station, for 30 miles thereof, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road will run through a well settled, fertile district along the St. John Valley, at present unserved by a railway. It will touch several thriving towns, and will be a most serviceable road, which must extend and develop trade through that section of the country.

To the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, for 4½ miles of their railway, the distance which the previous subsidy granted is short of covering, from the head of Grand Lake to the Intercolonial Railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $14,400.

Mr. ELLIS. This railway now connects with the Intercolonial. It appears to me that the resolution does not convey the exact idea.

Mr. FOSTER. It does connect with the Intercolonial, but the whole distance to the head of Grand Lake is not covered by the present subsidy. The head of Grand Lake is the terminus of the road. This is to take them to the head of Grand Lake, the terminus of the road. It will give them a subsidy for an additional 4½ miles beyond the amount for which the subsidy was granted before.

To the Montreal and Western Railway Company, for 70 miles of their railway, from St. Jérôme, northwesterly towards Désert, in the Province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 10, a subsidy not exceeding $5,161 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $361,270.

Provided, that the subsidy hereby granted to the Montreal and Western Railway Company may be paid by installments on the completion of each section of the railway, as follows, that is to say:—

Such instalments to be proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established as aforesaid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. vote. It is provided that the subsidy shall be paid as the road is finished, from station to station, ac-The cording to the value of each portion. Canadian Pacific Railway has agreed to run the line; and the moment a station is reached, that portion will be run.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the First Minister to the last paragraph, which reads as follows :-

"Such instalments to be proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken to be established as aforesaid."

This paragraph is scarcely in accord with the statement the hon. gentleman has just made, because the subsidy is to give $5,161 per mile. If this is to be divided by sections, and the subsidy to be paid on each section according to its length, instead of on the usual section of ten miles, the calculation is easily made. But there is in the last paragraph a source of complication which may land us in the same difficulty as we experienced last year in regard to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, the subsidy for which was all expended and the road not completed. How is the proportion to be estab-lished? First of all, there is the value to be placed on the whole work, and then the relative value to be placed on each section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is an estimate by an engineer of the value of the whole line. When an instalment is asked for a finished portion, its value will be established in proportion to that of the whole line.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is the ordinary clause.

Mr. BLAKE. No, it is not the principle upon which these subsidies are given at all. It is a clause which is sometimes introduced into aids given to railway companies, but the principle on which the subsidies are given is a mileage clause; no matter what the difficulty of the work may be, so much a mile is given. That is the ordinary principle.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, then, do we find a special provision here, because all the difference then would be that, instead of paying by sections of ten miles, we would pay by the sections given here. If that is what is intended, there is no need for this closing paragraph.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole amount of the subsidy is $5,161 per mile. road passes through a very broken country, so that some sections will cost much more than others. One section may cost $5,000 and another only $2,000 per mile. There would, therefore, be sufficient kept back from the less difficult sections for the purpose of adding to the assistance given the more difficult ones.

Mr. BLAKE. That I understand, and that is special, and not as the Secretary of State says, the ordinary arrangement.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This is the ordinary clause, except that it is not by sections of ten miles. The ordinary clause provides for payment by sections of ten miles; but in this case each section will be paid for, per section of ten miles, according to the proportion of value of those ten miles to the whole work undertaken.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend may say no, but I say yes. If my hon. friend will look at the end of all these resolutions, he will find exactly the same provision for each ten miles as for each of these sections. I may tell my hon, friend that the difficult part of this road is between the twentieth and thirtieth mile. This resolution has not been made in this form on purpose to draw subsidies for one section more than for another; but it has been so divided because the Canadian Pacific Railway, in making the agreement which has been ratified by this Parliament, said they would guarantee a loan of $4,000 on each section. The clause is the ordinary clause, and the appropriation is the ordinary appropriation.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be so.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is so.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, there is no reason why there should be a special provision here which we do not find appended to the other resolutions at burne, will be 105 miles, but the subsidy for

In the case of a railway, in which the proposed subsidy is more than half as large again as the ordinary subsidy, it becomes all the more necessary to take care that the subsidy is not disproportionately expended on some portions of the line; and although in principle there can be no objection at all to a proportionate expenditure, yet that necessarily involves a very careful instrumental survey and estimate right up to the end of the whole seventy miles, as otherwise the subsidy may be found to come very short indeed. may be but a perfunctory examination and valuation; the difficult sections may appear to be those which have first to be grappled with, as the difficulties which have to be met a year or two later may appear less than those which are nearest. So it is absolutely necessary, if that is to be done, particularly when the subsidy appears to be larger in proportion to the whole cost of the work than is usual, that the examination and survey should be complete and that we should have an account of how many more rivers we have to cross. So I think it is desirable that we should know the difficulties which may occur. There is another vote later on for the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway. We have already given a large subsidy to that railway, but it is not the Secretary of State who takes a paternal interest in that, but the Minister of Militia, and his turn will come. I see that in that connection we are to be asked to vote a sum for a bridge, which is something altogether new. I simply mention this to show that it is important that we should see that we are not led into further expenditures than Parliament expects to grant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The first eight miles of this road from St. Jérôme to Chambery are very easy, but the 20th or 25th mile will be in the mountains and will be very difficult. These proportions have been very carefully taken by the Government engineer.

Mr. LAURIER. That may be true, but, if the concluding portion of this resolution has no more effect than the ordinary resolution, there is no reason for putting it there. All you need say would be that this should be calculated with a view to the broken sections.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. A loan has been contracted with a company, and that is based on the broken sections. Otherwise there would not be any difficulty.

Mr. GIROUARD. The ordinary resolution states that the money shall be paid on sections of 10 miles, but in this case it is necessary to provide that it shall be paid on sections of 6 or 8 or 7 or 3 miles, and so on, because the road is so different in various parts that the section of 10 miles would hardly apply to it.

For 75 miles of the railway from Shelburne, in the County of Shelburne, and from Liverpool, in the County of Queen's, to Annapolis, in the Province of Nova Scotia, to be so contracted for as to secure the construction to both Shelburne and Liverpool, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $240,000.

Mr. LOVITT. It would appear from this that it is only seventy-five miles to connect these two points with Shelburne.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The whole line from Liverpool to Annapolis, with the branch to Shelseventy-five miles is only in aid of the road. I would ask the First Minister to change the word "to" to the word "towards."

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I desire to make an When the principal promoter of explanation. this company, Mr. Hervey, appeared in Ottawa, he wished to put through a Bill rather hurriedly, and I, with another gentleman from the town I represent, signed a petition for the passage of this Bill. Our names crept into the Bill in that way. I never had any interest in the Bill, it never cost me anything, I never heard of it before, or from that day to this. While not saying that there is anything reprehensible in members of Parliament having an interest in these matters, I desire to say that I have no interest in this project and never

Mr. LOVITT. Does the Minister of Justice know that in the western part of Shelburne meetings have been held and representations made in favor of the railway going the other way?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have been fully informed as to the meetings. This vote is designed to afford railway communication to Shelburne and Queen's, of which they have hitherto been deprived. They are fine counties, and have very considerable resources in the way of agriculture, shipping and lumbering. The development which has gone on heretofore has been principally in connection with maritime pursuits and lumbering, but the capabilities of these counties for agriculture and fruit-growing are very considerable. They have been cut off from the rest of Canada through lack of railway facilities, and they have felt that want very considerably. This is designed to give them railway communication with Annapolis, and in that way they can reach Liverpool in the County of Queen's, which has a very fair harbor, Shelburne, which has a magnificent harbor, and Annapolis, from which steamers ply to the United States and to the adjacent Province of New Brunswick. I know that the western part of Shelburne naturally desires railway connection not in this direction but in the direction of Yarmouth, but that will be a matter for consideration hereafter. I know it is important to that part of the county which trades with Yarmouth, and sends its exports there, but, while that is so, it cannot be expected that one line can accommodate the whole of Shelburne county, nor is that aimed at. The county will receive connection with the general railway system of the Province by the branch which it is intended to extend from Caledonia to the harbor of Shelburne.

General LAURIE. There is a difference of opinion in Shelburne County as to which will be the most desirable method of carrying out this communication. A portion of the western part of the county desires to be connected with the shire town of Shelburne, others desire to be connected with Yar-The charter, to which I assume this subsidy will be given, provides for a branch being made from this line to Barrington and Lockeport. understand that proposals are now being made to connect Barrington with Yarmouth, which will satisfy all the desired conditions. But it would have been unreasonable to ask the Government to do more than has already been proposed to be done at present. This will afford needed facilities to Shel burne County. I may give an idea of the resources of Shelburne and of the business to be done there, from the report of the sub-collector of customs, at the mouth of Shelburne harbor. This year, 378 vessels were entered, between 21st October of last year, and 8th April of this year; of these, no less than 250 were engaged in catching fresh fish for the markets of the Upper Provinces and the United States. The fish caught, according to the reports of the captains, amounted to the large quantity of ten and a quarter million pounds. It is most desir-able that these fish should be sent either by railway or by steamer, not by sailing vessels. I may also mention that the interior of the country is now developing gold mines, and that the wages paid to men working them amount to over $20,000 per month, and that is only the beginning. The interior of the country through which this railway will pass is a very rich fruit-growing and agricultural district; I think, therefore, the opening up of this country will be of great value to the Dominion.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt that that portion of Nova Scotia to which this resolution refers, in common with certain other portions which have received assistance at various late Sessions, has been very much neglected, and its progress retarded for the want of railway communication. I think it is deeply to be regretted in the interest of the whole Province of Nova Scotia that what I must call the profligate railway expenditure which has taken place in other parts of that Province, should have resulted in a failure to meet the real wants of the Province. The expenditure which has taken place in connection with the Oxford and New Glasgow Branch, being constructed at the Dominion expense, and other transactions which have resulted in lines now constructed at the Dominion expense, have produced this result: that the gross sum which the Dominion has paid, and for which it is now liable, shows a very undue disproportion in Nova Scotia relatively to the other Provinces. Take the lines to which I have referred in the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, and take the Cape Breton Railway which is being constructed wholly at the expense of the Dominion; take the line in connection with the Gut of Canso, which has been acquired at the expense of the Dominion, and you find this large mileage of railways, some of them producing hardly any appreciable Dominion result at all, others producing some good result, no doubt. I will repeat what I said on a former occasion in the course of this very lavish expenditure for Nova Scotia, when I found in that region with which we are now dealing, an absence of appropriation altogether-I say this region is deserving of consideraation, and I only wish the enormous expenditure in Nova Scotia, on the part of the Dominion, had been more judiciously made, and then it would not be found necessary to give this grant, which will not answer the whole exigencies of that Province, and may be inadequate to answer this particular purpose. I think we would have found plenty of money, on the general principles which we have applied in aiding railways for local purposes in Nova Scotia, to do everything that ought to been done.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is a line of railway running on the northern side of the Island of Cape Breton. It was fully discussed before the Railway Committee this Session, and the charter of this company was protected from interference by the rejection of another charter. The railway is to connect with the Government railway at Port Hawkesbury and to run along the coast towards Port Hood and Broad Cove. That side of the Island is studded with coal deposits, all of which are recognised as being highly important and extensive. The construction of the road, after it leaves Port Hood, towards Broad Cove, is not very difficult. The company is incorporated by the Provincial Legislature, which will probably subsidise it; the County of Inverness has likewise subsidised it. The information that I have in regard to it is that the construction of the fifty miles along that coast towards Broad Cove, is not a very difficult piece of work, and for that reason we are only asking for a subsidy of $50,000, which is little more than $1,000 per mile. in addition to which it receives a provincial subsidy of $3,200 per mile, and expects to receive a municipal subsidy as well. The line as authorised by the Provincial Legislature, extends beyond that to the northern point of the Island, but the construction there is altogether problematical, and unlikely to take place for many years to come. It likewise includes a branch from Broad Cove to Grand Narrows, which portion of the work we are not asking to subsidise. We are asked to subsidise those portions which, I understand, the Provincial Legislature has subsidised.

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand that $1,000 a mile is all that was asked?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not all that was asked by the company, but it was all that was asked by the friends of the enterprise in the

Mr. BLAKE. I looked hurriedly over the papers and it seemed not only that this amount was asked, but that the Provincial Legislature's agreement to grant a subsidy was dependent on the action of this Parliament, and I was apprehensive that we would find ourselves told next Session that the arrangement had failed, and it was necessary to grant a larger sum. I observe by the Estimates, which we fortunately have in this case, and we have a little more information than usual, that the road is not an expensive one and that the County of Inverness gives $100,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The agreement proyides that the County of Inverness shall give not less than $50,000 spread over these fifty miles.

Mr. BLAKE. That is $1,000 per mile; then there is this $3,200 per mile outside of the Provincial subsidy. Has the hon. Minister of Justice satisfied himself reasonably that the scheme of the company can be carried out as regards the fifty miles for $5,200 per mile?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have, to a reasonable The satisfaction I have had on that point is to this extent: The company, while pressing very strongly its claims for subsidies on the Dominion and the Provincial Government, actually went to work and built and graded a considerable mileage without having any contract with the about twenty-five miles. They have, moreover, entered into contracts for a large supply of ties and so on. The parties making the advances are capitalists, whose means I am assured of; but, in addition, the company have secured the assistance of capitalists in the Province, who have placed a considerable sum in the enterprise, and they have done so without any assurance that it will receive even the ordinary subsidy. Although the portion of the district through which the railway runs is not a very populous one, its indications of strong support from persons connected with that part of the country, some of them are my personal friends, indicate to me that the company has more backing than I would have expected it, as a new enterprise of this kind. The company has gone forward at the risk of no aid being given. not wish the House to understand that this is the total amount asked by the company, but this aid, together with that of the Local Government, will enable the company to carry out the undertaking, I am told. The Government at a future time might think proper, in answer to an application by the company, to subsidise the branch from Broad Cove.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad to hear the statement of the hon. Minister, because those who recollect the first stage through which a little scheme passed, will remember that it was urged that the Cape Breton Railway was to be a simple subsidised road, and that we were to provide the necessary railway communication at very small cost. We recollect that in the end the Dominion Parliament were called on to undertake the building of that railway, certainly not with any view that we should be called to give further aid to Cape Breton. An examination of the route of the railway made it plain that it did not serve any very important railway purposes with respect to the region to which the hon. gentleman is referring, and it was clear that if railway accommodation were required for Cape Breton there would still be a gap to be filled some other day.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Minister of Railways was absent the other day, when I referred to the railway system of this country, by which a length of 9 niles connecting Derby branch with the Northern and Western Railway, one owned by the Government and the other subsidised by the Government, has remained unused during the last two or three years. It is a perfect outrage on the people of my constituency that such a state of things should exist. The hon. First Minister has now the opportunity of stating, inasmuch as one of the proprietors of this link has been here for the last few days, whether any arrangement has been made between the Government and the proprietors of the road for opening out and working this section. It has been constructed between two and three years, but it has never been used, although it forms an important link as regards one section of the County of Northumberland. I ask if any arrangement has been made in regard to this link with one of the proprietors of the road in question. who has been in close communion with the First Minister within the last few weeks. It is no use opposing these grants, enter my protest against the manner in which they are brought before this House, and carried no mat-Government, and they have spent a very consider- ter what the opposition may be. I have looked with able sum of money. I think they have graded deep regret at the enormous amount of money voted, money voted not because of any particular merits of the schemes themselves, but because they happen to be advocated by hon. gentlemen who sit on the Government benches or by influential men throughout the country who happen to have the ear of the Government. It is most immoral and demoralising alike to the counties in which the money is spent and to the representatives who come to this House as the representatives of those counties. I know that any representations I have made have been treated with the utmost neglect. It is useless for me to ask for my county the most When I common justice in regard to any matter. reflect on the items submitted and consider how hon, gentlemen can obtain for their counties consideration when the public money is to be spent, while I for my county can receive no consideration, I feel there is something wrong in the manner in which public affairs are administered and in which public money is appropriated and expended. have already two or three times referred to this same circumstance, and I repeat it again. useless to oppose any measures brought in by the Government because they are bound to be carried. When I look at the counties favored in Nova Scotia and in my own Province, I find that counties extending all along the St. John River and in the western section of the Province have favors, but there is scarcely anything for the group of counties surrounding the county I have the honor to represent, and I feel that a special injustice is done to my section of the country. The effect is, that the people in my county say: "What is the use of you in Parliament? We send you there, but what do you get for our county?" The right hon. gentleman may laugh, but he knows it is true, and we might as well have a little truth about it now as at any other time. The people of my county say: "We send you to Parliament, and while we see money scattered all around the Province, and appropriations made for this county and that county and the other county, Northumberland is utterly neglected. We had better put you out and send one who will support the Government. That is the talk of the people, and that is what the Government aim at. My right hon. friend may smile and smile, but that is the object he has in view. I have been dancing attendance on the right hon. gentleman all this Session and have met him in his office, by his appointment, to try and get just and proper claims settled, but I cannot succeed. I find, that this process of demoralisation and corruption is going on throughout this country, for which the Government is responsible. If this thing continues, the result will be one of two things. Either, there will be an awakening on the part of the people, which will send these men out of power, or else, the people will say: "We will have to choose representatives in Parliament, who will go on their knees to the Administration, and who say 'yea, yea,' and amen, to all their iniquities, and then we will get something done, for independence is of no use," or else—and I take my chances on this platform of independence—the people of the country will say: "This Government does not render justice, and we will put them out of office." I have great hope that the honesty of the people of Canada will induce them to take this latter course.

For completing the Montreal and Sorel Railway Company, from Montreal to Sorel, $40,000.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought this railway was a built railway, and a bonded railway, and a fondled railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was built some years ago and was for a time operated by the Grand Trunk Railway, but they refused to continue to operate it on account of its being so dilapidated. We then granted a subsidy to put it in safe condition for traffic, but through lack of funds it was allowed to get into disrepair and was partially closed. The present subsidy is to give aid to put it in good repair.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he has taken the trouble to obtain a statement from this company as to how this money has been applied? When a company which has been in operation like this one, comes again seeking favor from the Government, it seems to me, that the least they should do is to have their books audited by the Government to see how the money was applied. I believe that if there had been proper management of that road, there is no reason why it should be in a dilapidated condition to-day. This railway is built through an even country, it has been favored, I understand, by grants of right of way, there is no river, between Montreal and Sorel, except the Richelieu, and they have no bridge over the Richelieu, and it seems to me that no railway could be built at a cheaper price than this one. It seems a very extraordinary thing that a road, which has been in operation for not more than eight years, if that long, should be in such a dilapidated condition now.

Mr. BLAKE. This seems to be one of those roads, I think among the earliest of the latter series of roads, which has been the cause of very great discredit to this country, by reason of the operations on the London market, of those who were concerned in it. The most severe reflections have been made upon the persons who were concerned in the issue of the bonds of this road, and Canadian credit generally has suffered very much by it. If a company, after building a road in this way, and after actually opening their road, comes to Parliament and obtains a grant in order to repair it and enable it to be opened again, gets that grant, uses it or misuses it, I know not which, keep the road open for a little while longer, then closes it again, and comes back to Parliament for another grant in order to put the road in repair so that it may be operated where is this to stop? What guarantee in the world have we, if we make this grant, that this sort of thing is not to go on for ever? This condition of things seems to me to be intolerable. A business-like inspection of the affairs of the company should have been made in the first place to see that the management of the road was such that the aid proposed to be given would put it in proper repair, but now we find the road closed again, and we are called upon to pay money to keep it open. Where is this going to

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not at all attempt to defend the Montreal and Sorel Railway Company, as I am not sufficiently acquainted with the facts, either to defend it or to join in any charge against it. I am aware that there were some severe reflections made, as to the manner in which the bonds of this company were floated, and I fear that there has been a good deal of mismanagement in this road. Perhaps the funds were insufficient at first to put the road in a substantial condition, and that the Grand Trunk Railway, by operating it when it was imperfectly finished, injured the road. At all events the Grand Trunk Railway abandoned operating it, and whatever may have been the conduct of the company, this road is a necessity for that part of the country, and it is in the interests of the inhabitants, and not of the company, that this item has been inserted in the Estimates. I can assure the Committee that this money shall be expended under the direct supervision of the Government engineer, and in such a manner that no portion of the money can be diverted from the purpose of putting the road into complete repair.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand, the first subsidy was granted by the Government under exactly the same circumstances, and was expended The railway has been under their supervision. built; it was not in running condition; application was made to this Parliament for aid; and aid was given. Then I presume the aid was expended, as the hon. gentleman proposed it should be expended, under the supervision of the Government, and yet we find the railway in no better condition than it was before. If the motive is to develop this section of the country, that is a laudable motive, but the company have shown themselves such bad husbandmen that they should not be entrusted with the expenditure of this money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Wholly apart from that, even if these people have a right to receive from other portions of the country a contribution to their railway, they have had it once, and it does appear to me an improper act on the part of the Government to grant it twice. There are other sections of the country infinitely more in need of railways which have not received a cent from the Government—railways for which application has been made this Session by hon. members of this House. There is no pretence that this little road of 40 miles in length is for the general benefit of Canada; to call it so is an insult to our intelligence; it is a local road, and the hon. gentleman in contributing to it is defrauding other parts of the country which are applicants for similar favors. I do not approve of the system at all; but if it is adopted, it should be carried out with some regard to equity between one part of the country and another; and in the name of those sections, which are without any advantage from the Government, I protest against this double bonus, for which, in the light of these facts, there does not appear to be the slightest justification.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The first vote was $1,600 a mile, and I suppose that the money raised in addition to that sum by bonds and otherwise was insufficient to make the road a first-class permanent road. There was a great deal of trestle work, which partly accounts for the road getting into disrepair. I dare say that if it had got $3,200 a mile it would have been built as a first-class railway, as it ought to have been built. But when we are informed—I was not aware of the fact until just now—that the road got only half the subsidy given to other railways, I think the hon. gentleman can well allow this road to be put into full and complete repair. The first building of the railway was carried on by the company, and all the Government had to do was to examine 10 miles when built. However, this money will not be given at all to the company. Warned by previous experience, we have decided that the money shall be expended under the direction of the Government officers just as if it were a Government railway.

The hon, gentleman says that Mr. BLAKE. this road would probably be all right if the company had before received $3,200 a mile. on this side of the House knew that it had received only $1,600 a mile, and we knew the reason why. It was because this road was built and running when the system of subsidies was invented, and the amount of $1,600 was to repair it. It was notto build the road; but it was so badly built or was so old, or the company had managed it so badly, that the road had got worn out, and to repair it and make it as good as new, the hon. gentleman made that grant. This time the company are not to be trusted; but we all know that the Government are to be trusted; they never make extravagant expenses; they are economical; and so the hon. gentleman gives us to understand that this economical and wise Government will take charge of the expenditure of this money. But what security have we that the road will be kept in repair after that? First, the company built the road; then they ran it down; we subscribed $1,600 a mile to get it repaired again; then they ran it down again; and now we are to vote $40,000 to repair it again. What certainty have we that the road will not be run down again? There must be something wrong with the road or with the corporators, perhaps with both. If the hon, gentleman had explained to us how this road, after being once built, could not be kept open, and how after having been once repaired, it could not be kept open a second time, and how the same thing was not going to occur after this third grant, we might have some reason for it. We know nothing of the cause of the former failures, and we know not that the same cause may not continue to exist and produce a third failure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to know if we are to understand that it is part of the policy of the Government to repair roads that get out of order, because, if so, I do not think, if this is the first application, it will be the last. The hon. gentleman is establishing a precedent that will give plenty of trouble to himself and his successors.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company for $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles of their railway, from Hull to Aylmer, a subsidy not exceeding \$3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, \$24,000.

Mr. BLAKE. This seems to be another innovation. It is not a subsidy to build a railway or to repair a railway; it is a subsidy with reference to some is miles of a railway which already exists and is in repair; it is to assist the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company to buy that piece of road from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company can either lease it or sell it to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company; but the proposition is that we shall contribute towards the purchase money the sum of $3,200 a mile. What public interest in the way of development is to be served by this subsidy? The road is not going to be sold at more than it is worth, and if the Pontiac Pacific Junction Company buy it at what it is worth, they can afford to pay what it is worth. believe this is not the first time that we have been called on to pay for this road, for I think it is part of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, which was built by the Province of Quebec, and was sold by the Province of Quebec to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at a discount, and in respect of which this Parliament afterwards contributed to the Province of Quebec a large sum, about, I think, $1,000,000, to make up the difference between the cost and the value of the road. The Province of Quebec having on the sale lost a considerable sum, it appealed to us in reference to the general proposition of the extension east-ward of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It appealed to hon, gentlemen opposite in various ways. It appealed by petition; it appealed by memorials; it appealed, not by open representations in Parliament but by the convention in No. 8; and it succeeded in obtaining a large grant from the Dominion revenues to make good its loss on that operation. The Dominion paid the loss to the Province of Quebec, or so much as it was thought equitable to pay, in respect of the whole line which had been sold; the Canadian Pacific Railway had acquired it, and I thought we were quit of it. Then the Pontiac Pacific asked for leave to acquire it, and the Canadian Pacific Railway got leave to dispose of it. Why then should we step in now and pay $24,000 more to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, to enable it to pay a part of the price of the acquisition of this railway. I observe that the application made in this report asks the Government, in making the grant or any other grant to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, to have regard to the creditors of the road, those employed on the road, and also to the interests of the county. Some of us may yet remember the circumstances connected with the earlier agitations for subsidies for this road, a considerable portion of which have been paid, and some of which, I believe, remain as yet unpaid, in which it turned out that an understanding had been reached between the authorities on behalf of the County of Pontiac and the railway itself that, for whatever aid the representatives of the County of Pontiac might be able to acquire from a kindly and paternal Government and a generous people, the County of Pontiac should receive credit, I believe, from time to time. county of Pontiac had given $100,000 in bonds as its contribution to this road; and if Parliament here were to grant $100,000 or $50,000 towards that railway, then Pontiac county was to get the benefit of it; so that the application made to us here, and which was conceded, was in substance, although not in terms, a grant in ease of the county of Pontiac, to save it from the payment of its municipal bonus. I believe this was the arrangement, although it was not signed, sealed, or defined in some formal instrument. I believe it is not yet, but perhaps may be implemented. such it was. I think the hon. the Secretary of State, who, I am glad to say, has just come in, has a good deal to do with this railway. He and Mr. Church and a few others were the board of directors; and during the period of the earlier events of which I have spoken, the hon. gentleman was

do not know if his interest still continues, but I should like to know from the Government how it is that, under these circumstances, it is proposed we should purchase, on behalf of a railway company, an existing railway, which that company is able to acquire at its value, and in respect of which we have already expended quite a considerable

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I had no interest in that road, and I am not interested in defending this vote. A subsidy was voted in 1884 for a line from Hull to Pembroke.

No; it was from Hull or Aylmer. Mr. BLAKE. Mr. CHAPLEAU. From Hull or Aylmer? That is to say, it was from Hull. In 1884, the House voted a subsidy from Hull to Pembroke.

Mr. BLAKE. From Hull or Aylmer?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. From Hull or Aylmer. It is the same vote; nothing added to it; and to-day that company is entitled, as far as I know, to this grant. I am not here to give an explanation of this subsidy, which is voted by Parliament and to which the company is entitled at present.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is quite in error.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am not.

Mr. LAURIER. I will refer the hon. gentleman to the petition with regard to this subsidy. After reciting the advantages, the petition proceeds as

To this end (that is to say, the advantage of the railway) a renewal of the relapsed subsidies is indispensable as well as the granting of a subsidy of $3,200 for the acquisition by the company of the branch line of seven miles in length between Aylmer and Hull, towards which no Dominion subsidy has yet been paid.

Now, it is asked that this Government should pay a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for seven miles of railway. For what object? To aid a railway in need? Not at all. To aid the construction of a railway? Not at all. To confer any public benefit on any section of country? Nothing of the kind. What for, then? Simply to enable the Pacific Junction Railway Company to buy that piece of road from the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is to enable one company to sell and another to buy a piece of railway which is already in existence. Surely that is not at all a thing which can be defended here. Upon what ground can it be defended? I have always understood that the principle which underlies these grants of subsidies to railways it to enable railways to be constructed and to favor public localities. But there is nothing of the kind in this. It is not to favor any section of country, because a railway already exists there. It is simply to enable a company to buy a road from another company.

Mr. BRYSON. I may say at the outset that this subsidy of 7½ miles does not materially inter-I may say at the outset that fere with me, so far as it is not in any portion of my county; but as the representative of the County of Pontiac, I am particularly interested in the people of that county having one line of railway connection with the city of Ottawa instead of having two lines as at present. Therefore, the sooner the Pontiac road should own the portion of the railway from Hull to Aylmer the better. hon, member for West Durham has referred to the interested, to a very large extent, in the road. I subsidy voted in 1884. In 1884, the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway was granted a subsidy for a line of railway from Hull or Aylmer to Pembroke.

Mr. BLAKE. How many miles?

Mr. BRYSON. I think 85 miles; $272,000 in Then a subsidy was voted for a portion of the road between Montreal and Ottawa, a distance of 120 miles, at $12,000 per mile, so that the portion of the road now proposed to be subsidised, from Hull to Aylmer, has not before been subsidised by the Federal Parliament. If you will look, Sir, to the Quebec Statutes, you will find that the Pontiac Pacific Junction received a subsidy to the extent of $6,000 a mile for 85 miles from Hull or Aylmer to Pembroke, and that during the Session of 1888 a subsidy was voted for ten additional miles, or, that is, these seven miles now under discussion, and the three miles subsidised by this Parliament in the Session of 1888. If the Local Government was justified in subsidising additional ten miles, and they were perfectly justified, because the entire distance from Hull to the town of Pembroke, which the company was subsidised to build, is 95 miles; so that the one is quite in keeping with the other, and both are quite

To the Great Eastern Railway Company for a bridge over the Nicolet River, and also a bridge on the St. Francis River, a subsidy of 15 per cent. on the value of the structures, not to exceed $37,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why do the Government assist in the construction of this bridge?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are two new large bridges there, and the policy of the Government is to give 15 per cent. for bridges costing $100,000 or more, and these will cost from $250,009 to $300,000.

To the Drummond County Railway Company, for 24 miles of their railway, from Drummondville to Ste. Rosalie, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $76,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. The First Minister said it was not intended to grant a bonus to any road for a section of country that was already accommodated. In the petition in this case, they complain that the freights they have to pay are excessive and that they want competition.

Mr. COLBY. This road makes a very important cut-off between Montreal and Quebec. By the construction of this road of about 50 miles, there is a saving in distance of about 21 miles between Montreal and Quebec, and of course a corresponding saving in our connection with the Lower Provinces over the Intercolonial Railway.

According to the petition Mr. McMULLEN. it is only a cut-off of 12 miles, and it is asked because the petitioners desire competition in freights.

Mr. COLBY. The only road with which there could be any competition is the Grand Trunk Railway, and that road is not averse to the granting of this assistance.

Mr. LAURIER. This projected road will not interfere with any existing road. It is true that Drummondville is already connected with St. Rosalie, but it is by two sides of a triangle, and this will give the straight connection.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Quebec; we have built a railway on the north shore which the Do- latter part of these resolutions.

minion of Canada has had to buy as a competitive road, and the vote passed just before this for bridges is for another road between Montreal and Quebec. It is useless to talk about the policy of the Government being not to build competitive roads. The policy of the Government is simply to get the votes.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon, member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) ought not to find fault with this line, because it is putting the leader of the Opposition in close communication with his friends at St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. MITCHELL. What have I to do with the leader of the Opposition? I am here as an independent critic of public matters, and nineteen times out of twenty I agree with the leader of the Opposition, because I find him acting in the interests of the public.

Mr. COLBY. It shortens the distance between: the hon. member's present residence and his county.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are already three competitive lines to my county from this section of the country.

To the Maskinongé and Nipissing Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway, from the northern end of the 15 miles subsidised by the Act 52 Victoria, Chapter 3, towards the point of St. Miebel des Saints, on the River Mattawa, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to know who asked for that railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know who the corporators are. It is the railway company that is asking for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the railway company a vote in this House?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am afraid their servant has.

To the Quebec Central Railway Company, for 90 miles of their railway, from St. Francis Station on the Quebec Central Railway to a point on the Atlantic and North-Western Railway, near Moose River, or from a point on the Quebec Central Railway between the Chaudière River and King station, to a point on the International Railway at or near Lake Megantic, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $21,191.34 per annum for twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period, as interest on the bonds of the Company, such annual subsidy for twenty years representing a grant in cash of $288,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object of this resolution is merely to make the subsidy granted by 51 Victoria, chapter 3, apply to an optional route.

Mr. LAURIER. How is that optional route to be determined?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the railway company I take it, with the approbation of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the subsidy formerly granted otherwise than in this shape?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Always, with the guarantee and all.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose we do not guarantee the bonds until construction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman will see that the conditions are set forth in the To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for a railway bridge over the St. Charles River, to give access to the City of Quebec, a subsidy not to exceed in the whole $30,000; also for 12 miles of their railway from Lorette viā Charlesbourg, to Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3.200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $38,400—$68,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road now connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway about five miles out of Quebec; they have found it a roundabout way of reaching Quebec, and the line has to encounter a very heavy grade.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimated cost of the bridge?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Upwards of $200,000. It is a very large bridge, crossing the River St. Charles opposite the gas works.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimated cost of the 12 miles of the road?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is an expensive piece of road. I have not got the estimate, but the right of way is very expensive, as it comes down through one of the best portions of the country. Some of the grades are heavy.

Mr. BLAKE. We all know that it would cost more than $3,200 a mile. That is a heavy piece of road, the right of way is going to be expensive, it is going to include the termini. So this will amount to $240,000 for the railway and $200,000 for the bridge, or $440,000, to which must be added $60,000 for pickings, which is very moderate in that locality, or in all half a million dollars. But the road has already access to the city of Quebec over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is thus proposed to spend half a million dollars to give them better facilities for entering the city. I think that this proposed grant could be very much better expended.

To the St. John Valley and Rivière du Loup Railway Company, for 22 miles of their railway from the village of Prince William towards the town of Woodstock, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $70,400.

Mr. ELLIS. Is this railway really necessary? There is already a railway on each side of the river, and this road, I presume, will run between them. We have already granted a subsidy for a road from Fredericton down to Wellesly, so this is the third railway along the banks of the River St. John.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is no use hon gentlemen opposing this amount, as there is a letter from the Minister of Finance to the Minister of Railways recommending it.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I once again bring before the Minister of Railways the question of taking over some of the branches of the Intercolonial, to which I called the attention of the House, many of which branches can be bought to great advantage to the country. I cannot express the surprise, but I must express regret, that no move has been made in the direction I urged on the attention of the House and the Government the other night. My poor scheme seems to have been buried beneath irrelevant matter. Cold water was thrown on the scheme, which was perhaps not very ably presented, among others by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) from whom I had very good reason to expect better things, resist John A. Macdonald.

membering that he knew much better than did the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), or the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), or the hon. membar for North York (Mr. Mulock), the facts on which my arguments were based. I repeat that I was surprised to find that hon. gentleman throwing cold water on my scheme and not meeting my arguments fairly. I again express not my surprise, but my profound regret, that no movement has been made in this direction. In spite of all the rebuffs I have received, I shall feel it my duty, if I have the good fortune to come back next Session, to press on the Government, at an early hour in the Session, this scheme once more, and to submit it more fully and completely; and if I cannot move the Government in any degree, I shall endeavor to influence opinion outside of this House in favor of what is, in my judgment, a scheme in the interests of the Lower Provinces and of the whole country, namely, the taking over of such branches of the Intercolonial as have commercial value.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope the hon gentleman does not consider any want of respect has been shown to his opinion or suggestions because he does not see any tangible evidence in these resolutions. It is almost impossible when a question is brought before the attention of the Government, especially involving a sum of money, for the Government to come to any conclusion during the Session. So instead of the hon, gentleman waiting until next Session to impress his views on the Government, I shall be exceedingly obliged to him if at an early day during the recess he will lay his views before the Government and they will receive the most respectful attention.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I will certainly do so.

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. gentleman must remember that, although the First Minister may desire to calm the perturbed feelings of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), the First Minister is going to throw the whole community into a state of agitation, for the hon. gentleman has already said that the Intercolonial was burden enough for this country to bear, and that he had no idea of taking over the branches.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did say so; but, unlike the hon. gentleman, I am not infallible.

Mr. TEMPLE. I find the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) does not know the geography of his own country. He does not seem to be aware that while two railways run from Fredericton to Woodstock, they are 20 miles from the river on each side. This grant is a revote made four years ago, and the road will pass through the best country in New Brunswick, and there is no road near the river except the highway.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to endeavor to correct me. He knows very well I am talking of the road on the right bank of the St. John, which is not twenty but often five miles from the river.

Mr. TEMPLE. It is twenty miles from the river all the way.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it intended to cross the hon, gentleman's bridge?

Mr. TEMPLE. I will tell you about that later on.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

HARBOR FEES IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

General LAURIE. Before the House goes into Supply, I would like to call attention to a matter of considerable importance to the Province from which I come. It is in connection with the heavy charge made upon fishing vessels, which are required to pay harbor dues in Newfoundland, every time they call there for bait. Perhaps the House is not aware of the enormous burden this will impose on our fishing industry. There are in Nova Scotia 690 sea going fishing vessels manned by 6,644 men. If they call at any of the harbors of Newfoundland, in order to bait, which is necessary for them to do about five times in the year. five times in the year, it means a tax on our Nova Scotia fishing vessels of $345,000 a year. In the Province of New Brunswick, which has 153 fishing vessels, the tax will amount to about $76,000. In Prince Edward Island with 70 vessels, $25,000, and in the Province of Quebec with 115 fishing vessels if all of them go on the bank, $57,000 a year. Altogether this tax on our fishing vessels will amount to about half a million dollars a year. To show that this is no fanciful idea, I take the following item from a Halifax paper : "Canso, 9th May.

"Ar. schrs. James Ryan, Halifax: Donald Cann, Hines, Grand Banks (400 qtls. cod., 2,000 lbs halibut), baited last at Fortune Bay. Captain Hines declares the Newfoundland bait law is prohibitory and he will be obliged to take his bait in Nova Scotia throughout the season."

This means that these vessels will have to come back from the Grand Banks to Nova Scotia, to obtain bait. This burden as I have just shown, will be so prohibitory as practically to destroy all prospect of carrying on the fishing industry with any profit at all, and it will be a most serious injury to our fishing trade. Considering that the New-foundland delegates have lately come here with a grievance of their own, and have asked the sympathy of Canada in their trouble, it does seem in the very highest degree absurd, that at that very time, they should have taken upon themselves to impose the onerous tax on our vessels going into their ports. I am aware that the matter has already been brought to the attention of the Government and of the House, but considering that this is now the time that fishing will be actively prosecuted, I do trust that every possible effort will be made to have this heavy tax on our fishing industry removed. Should that effort not be successful, I trust that we shall improve the fishing intelligence bureau, as I pointed out last evening, by receiving reports by telegraph, so as to give information, both at the central office and to vessels calling at any port to obtain information from the central office by telegraph, as to where bait can be obtained. If they must come to Nova Scotia to obtain bait, the information as to what port bait can be found at is of equal importance to them as a knowledge of where the fish are to be found. I duties in Newfoundland, greater attention will be paid the fisheries intelligence bureau, and that these two cognate subjects will be considered together. I myself, and our people as well, consider it of more importance that the remission of the Newfoundland harbor fees should be obtained. I trust the Government will recognise the great importance of this matter to our people, and that they will spare no effort to obtain the abolition of this obnoxious tax.

Mr. LOVITT. I am happy to second the remarks of the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie). I sent a communication to the Minister of Justice, from which it appeared that one of our vessels had to leave Newfoundland and come to Canso for bait. I am glad to state that I have been assured by the Minister of Justice that everything that could be done by the Government would be done in this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This matter has been fully attended to, so far as it can be by the Canadian Government. The statute under which the obnoxious tax has been imposed, was passed in Newfoundland, a little more than a year ago, and it then formed the subject of very earnest remonstrances on the part of this Government, directly to the Government of Newfoundland, and also to the Colonial Office, in England, where the propriety of the Act was under consideration, in connection with the whole subject of the sale of bait to foreign vessels. At that time the decision of the Imperial Government was to allow the Act, although a previous Act of the same character had been disallowed. Before that decision was arrived at, there was a very definite and positive assurance given, on the part of the Newfoundland Government, that the Act would never be applied to Canadian fishermen. The Act was subject, however, to a suspending clause, providing that it should not go into operation until it was proclaimed. It has only recently been proclaimed, and since the proclamation was issued-very much to the surprise of those who were aware of the negotiations that had taken place and the promises that had been given-was applied to Canadian vessels; remonstrances were again used, and the Imperial Government was addressed upon the subject. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) wrote me a note on the subject, and called my attention to it, as one of the Ministers from the Province, and it was only to-day I had time to reply to him. I suppose he has not received the letter yet, but I enclosed him an extract from a letter of a member of the late Government of Newfoundland, in which I may say, for the information of the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie). that gentleman stated most distinctly that the policy of the late Government, which secured the passing of the Act, was that it should not apply to Canadian vessels: that these assurances were given in good faith, and that it was a matter of surprise to every one in Newfoundland who was aware of the policy of the Government, and the restrictions upon that policy, and the pledges that were given, that these pledges have been disregarded and the Act made to apply to Canadian vessels.

THAMES RIVER DREDGING.

a knowledge of where the fish are to be found. I Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to ask the Minister trust that if we cannot obtain the remission of the of Public Works if he can give me the information he promised me to-day in reference to the dredging of the River Thames?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The answer to the question put by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) will supply the information which the hon, gentleman asked. Attention having been called to the existence of a bar off the mouth of the River Thames, an examination was made of the same, and in May, 1887, a report thereon was made, estimating the cost of opening a channel to twelve feet depth at $7,500. that date several applications have been received, and during the past summer a dredge was engaged in opening a channel seventy-five feet wide to a depth of three feet, at a cost of $4,179. On the 1st instant a report was transmitted to the Department. It is obvious that the constant use of a dredge will be necessary to keep a channel open through this bar, unless it is made of a permanent character by the construction of protection works of a length of say 5,000 feet, the cost of which, with the dredging required, is estimated at $85,000. Under those circumstances the Government are not ready to expend such a large sum of money. But a careful examination will have to be made, to see what smaller amounts might be required.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. Minister is aware that the cut he speaks of, having been made last year, was only carried two-thirds of the distance through the bar, and all that the people ask now is the appropriation of a small amount to continue that work through the bar. If it is not done, all the money spent last year will have been thrown away.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask leave to withdraw my motion for the time being, as the Minister of Railways wishes to go on with certain matters first.

DISMISSAL OF ROCKPORT DEPUTY POST-MASTER

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will take advantage of this motion to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to the matter which I brought to his notice last night, regarding the intended dismissal of a postmaster at Rockport. The facts, as disclosed in the documents which the hon. Postmaster General was good enough to hand to me, appear to be these: To the postmaster himself, I understand, no blame is attached; but the postmaster's deputy, who was acting as his assistant, was accused by a party of the name of Hunt, of having opened letters addressed to him. addressed to him. An investigation was made, and it appeared that Hunt had authorised the deputy postmaster to open certain correspondence between the legal firm of Britton & Whiting, of Kingston, who are well known to the hon. First Minister, and this man Hunt. After investigation, it appeared that there was really small cause for supposing that the deputy postmaster had done anything improper. Two reports were presented, one by Mr. Macarrow, who was sent down to report the evidence in some detail, and another by the Inspector at Kingston, Mr. Gilbert Griffin. Without detaining the House, I may say that the evidence submitted, and all the circumstances, appear to me hardly to bear out the conclusion attained by Mr. Macarrow, and rather tend to bear which I will read that part which is material. After reciting that he had been instructed to examine into this matter, he says:

4896

into this matter, he says:

"Mr. Dailey is a busy man, reeve and magistrate; keeps a large business, and is looked up to by all. Mr. Hunt lives on an island off the port, and being indifferently educated authorised Mr. Dailey to act for him. This Dailey did for some time without any objection from Hunt until a dispute arose about other matters, when Hunt lodged this complaint, which as you will judge by the evidence, is founded on personal quarrels, not on any breach of post office duties. Mr. Britton, Q. C., who was attending to law business for Hunt, opened his correspondence, and acted as Hunt's agent frequently without reference to Hunt at all. I have seen Mr. Dailey and have had the Rockport office inspected, and you may be satisfied that Mr. Dailey's action towards Hunt was that of a friend, and no complaint would have been made if Hunt had settled his private indebtedness to Mr. Dailey. "I enclose herewith memorial from residents at Rockport expressing their confidence in Mr. Dailey; letters from Dailey himself; letters from B. M. Britton, Esq., Q. C.,; letters from Mr. Cornwall, postmaster, Rockport."

There is a long and highly respectably signed

There is a long and highly respectably signed petition from the residents in favor of this Mr. Dailey. I submit that on the evidence of these papers, there hardly appears to be any ground for dismissing this officer who has been in the service of the Department for 33 years, and against whom the only fault alleged in reality is that by mistake he had opened one or two letters besides those which had been addressed by those legal gentlemen to Mr. Hunt--a mistake which one would say might naturally and easily occur. I think, therefore, that if the hon. Postmaster General would carefully consider the question, he would see that it would be dealing very hardly with this officer to dismiss him summarily under the circumstances.

Motion withdrawn.

FURTHER SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the courtesy of the House, I will now move that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the railway resolutions which are set down for to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

To the Temiscouata Railway Company, for 16 miles of their railway, from the west end of the 20 miles of their branch railway from Edmundston, subsidised by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, towards the St. Francis River, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $51,200.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a branch of the Temiscouata Railway. It springs from the main line at Edmundston, and runs through a country where there is considerable settlement without railway facilities. The first twenty miles have been subsidised to the extent of $5,000 per mile. This resolution proposes a further subsidy for sixteen miles.

For a railway from the north end of the 14 miles for which a subsidy was granted by the Act 50 and 51 Victoria, chapter 24, to the Tobique Valley Railway Company, from Perth Centre towards Plaister Rock Island, 11 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $35,200.

Mr. ELLIS. This line ought not to be opened. Where it is intended to run there are scarcely any inhabitants. In the parishes of Perth and Gordon out the report made by Mr. Griffin in a letter from there are not altogether more than 2,500 souls, and there are not more than 400 people along the line of the railway. The railway runs along the Tobique River from St. John to the Plaister Rock. There is a thin fringe of settlement, not anywhere more than one mile and a-half in depth, along the bank of the Tobique River, and there are no people there outside this fringe of settlement. The Tobique Valley itself is no doubt a very fertile valley, but this road does not serve any number of people. The House in 1886 granted a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for twenty-eight miles of railway; in 1887 that was changed to a subsidy of $6,400 per mile for fourteen miles of railway. In the Hansard I can find no record whatever of any discussion or resolution, but the vote must have passed. The next year, Sir Charles Tupper came down and endeavored to get the subsidy transferred to another company, but there was so much opposition that he was compelled in the end to withdraw the vote. There is no reason whatever for this line

Mr. COSTIGAN. Any one coming from New Brunswick who heard the statement of the hon. gentleman with regard to the subsidy for the road from Fredericton to Westfield Station, will not be surprised at his statement as regards this subsidy. He said then that we were subsidising a third road when there were two roads running along the bank of the St. John River. There is no foundation for such a statement.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. We have passed that grant with a very inadequate discussion, to which the hon. gentleman might have contributed if he pleased.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) is altogether wrong in his remarks concerning this subsidy. I say that from the mouth of the Tobique there is hardly a vacant lot for sixty miles along that river on either side. If you look at the files of the newspaper which is edited so ably by the hon. gentleman, you will find that country described by himself as the garden of New Brunswick, and as one which should be developed by settlement. But beyond all that, the reason for the construction of the road was given to Parliament. A petition was signed by members of Parliament from Quebec, and Ontario, and other Provinces, setting forth, not only that this road should be constructed to accommodate the inhabitants there, but that its real object was, in addition, to give an outlet to one of the most extensive deposits of gypsum there is on this continent. I do not know whether the hon, gentleman has ever been in that country, but I do know from personal knowledge that there is not a vacant lot on either side of the river. It is one of the best portions of New Brunswick for settlement, and it is a new country which has made more rapid progress in a short time than any other part of New Brunswick.

Mr. ELLIS. I have been through that country, and endeavored to write it up. I have been up the Tobique Valley as many times as the hon. gentleman, and I know the country as well as the hon. gentleman does. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman says, he does not contradict my statement that there are not more than 3,000 people in the parishes of Perth and Gordon, and not more than 400 or 500 people along the whole line of railway on the Tobique River. The hon. gentleman says every lot is taken up. There is a narrow strip of fertile land along the valley. It is true there are settlers there and there are wild lands; and if it comes to a question of veracity between myself and the hon. gentleman, I can give him all the figures. I was in the country a short time ago, and I found in the Tilley and Athley settlements, a number of houses closed up. With regard to Plaister Rock, there is a deposit there of gypsum, no doubt very valuable to any one who wants it, but it is not worth while building a railway to get to it.

Mr. TEMPLE. The hon, gentleman says he knows more about that country than the hon, the Minister of Inland Revenue, and probably he may, but I can tell him that I have travelled that country fifty times to his once, and I think I know fully as much about it as the hon, gentleman. It is one of the finest valleys we have on the St. John River.

Mr. ELLIS. I said that.

Mr. TEMPLE. It is a fine farming country, and the object in building this road is to reach Plaister Rock, which is of great value to the whole Province of New Brunswick and the country to the south of it. I have seen no less than fifty to one hundred teams there a day hauling away this plaster to Aroostook County for fertilising purposes.

General LAURIE. I have a brother officer of mine who has lately settled there, and he gives me the most glowing accounts of it. He describes it as a most fertile country, and he says there is every reason to believe that a large number of people will flock into it as soon as its resources are opened up.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) to authorise the granting of subsidies to certain railways and railway companies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the item came up before I was asked to produce some papers. I produce all the papers that could be found in the Department, and I have the statement of the Deputy Minister that some of the papers have been mislaid. He says:

"On examining the docket, I find that some papers in this case are not now on file, having made a most thorough search for these papers and not succeeding in tracing them. The search will, however, be continued, and I hope may be more successful. In the meantime, I send an exhaustive résumé of the case made by Mr. Sulte, who was in charge of the branch at the time."

the parishes of Perth and Gordon, and not more than 400 or 500 people along the whole line of railway on the Tobique River. The hon. gentleman says every lot is taken up. There is a narrow was upon his recommendation that this was the amount to be paid to Major King that the item was put in the Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is only one item. What about the transport of ammunition and stores?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. After taking evidence and examining vouchers for money actually paid, and for the transportation of guns and ammunition, Colonel Otter recommended that this amount should be paid.

Mr. LAURIER. Surely the hon, gentleman cannot expect that we will carry this item this He promised to put the House in possession of the facts upon which he asked this vote. Now, at the fourteenth hour, he places these papers on the Table, and asks us to pass the item. know no more now than we did before, as we have had no opportunity of examining those papers. would, therefore, suggest that the item should

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot agree to The claim is a fair claim, and the item standing. has been thoroughly investigated. I have produced every paper which could be found in the Department, and I am prepared to repeat, if the hon. gentleman desires it, the items of the account which I gave before. It is only a question as to whether proper precautions have been taken or not, and I state that every precaution has been taken in this matter, and that the account should be paid, as it is a fair claim.

Mr. LAURIER. It may be a perfectly fair claim, but how am I, and how is the House to know that? The hon, gentleman says he has investigated it, and has found it right; but if that rule were to prevail, his will would become law. This is a claim twenty years old, and is brought in here without any vouchers; and now the hon. gentleman puts some vouchers on the Table, and it seems to me that the Committee would be stultifying itself if it passed the item without having the opportunity of examining those vouchers.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I have some personal knowledge of this claim, having known the late Col. King and knowing the present Major King.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Were you born then?

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). This claim ought to have been paid years ago. The sum of $200 a year is paid to all field batteries in the Dominion for taking care of the guns and armories and storehouses, but that allowance was not made to this battery. It was formed in 1862, at the time of the Trent affair, under the late Col. King, and in 1866 Col. King went to Fort Erie in order to protect that part of the country against the threatened invasion at that time. There he lost his leg and his health. Major King provided buildings, and continued to care for this battery without any provision being made for them by the Government until 1883, when I prevailed upon the Minister of Militia to do something for this battery. For all these years, the only battery in this country that saw actual service, has not been provided with a building or with the protection which other batteries have been provided with. I have personal knowledge of the buildings that were erected at Port Robinson by the late Col. King, in which this battery was stored. I know from 1863 to 1883. Sir Adolphe Caron.

that in 1866 he had to build a barn in which to store the ammunition when it was sent there during the Fenian raid, for which he never received any. thing. I think it is due to the House, and the respect the House must have for the militia and defence of the country, and especially for a battery of this kind, that has done such noble service for the defence of the country, that he who has sacrificed not only his money but his life, should now obtain recognition. This claim has been fairly investigated by the authorities. I know that Col. Otter made an investigation and a report; it is a misfortune that the report should have been mislaid by the Department, but I know that Col. Otter, after full and careful investigation, taking evidence and examining the buildings, reported that the claim ought to be paid, and it should have been paid years ago. The present Major King is the only surviving heir of the late Col. King, and to him this money ought to be paid. I do not think there ought to be a question about it at all. This battery is one of the most efficient in the Dominion. Every member of this House, every one who has anything to do with militia affairs knows that the commander of the militia battalions, and especially the commander of field batteries, has to keep these batteries in an efficient condition at a very large outlay to himself. I know that the present Major King is one of the most efficient, one of the most trustworthy, and one of the most loyal officers in the Militia of this country, and a man whose character is above reproach, a man who would not make a demand for a dollar that he was not fairly entitled to, a man who is ready at all times to defend his country, and is making large personal sacrifices from year to year to keep that battery in the efficient condition it is now in. I have personal knowledge of the whole matter; I have personal knowledge of the fact that Col. Otter made a careful investigation of the affair; he examined the buildings and made a report, and the fact that the Militia Department unfortunately has lost that report, should be no reason why this gentleman should be deprived of his just dues from the Government of this country. I would urge upon the House to grant to Major King that which he is justly and fairly entitled to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman, if he knows all about the matter, should state to the House why this claim of nearly thirty years standing was not preferred before. I have not heard, in any explanation that has been given. the slightest statement as to the reason which induced Col. King, deceased, to withhold this claim from the year 1862 to 1883. It appears to me that in all conscience, and as a mere matter of precedent, even if we do ultimately pay the claim. we ought to throw it over till a reasonable explanation is given for this apparently inexplicable delay. I cannot see why it is allowed to accumulate for twenty years, nor can I see why, having accrued due in 1883, we are asked to pay it now in 1890. There is another consideration which deserves attention. A considerable portion of this claim was incurred before the Dominion came into existence. If it is to be paid by anybody, it should be paid by the Provinces of Quebec and But we ought undoubtedly to know what the records of the Department show as to whether this claim was preferred during the period

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). There are reasons which, perhaps, I would be justified in giving the House why this claim was not preferred. late Col. King, as everybody knows who knew him, was a man of a very sensitive nature, of the very highest honor, and after the loss of his leg in 1866, and after the treatment which he always said was unjust and unfair on the part of the Govern-ment, he lapsed into a state of despondency and never would prefer any claim-at least, I never heard of any. After 1866, he always was under the impression that he had been unfairly and unjustly treated by the people of this country, in being put off with a paltry pension of $400 a year, after being disqualified and disabled from practising his profession in the defence of his country. I think the House will agree that the treatment Col. King received was not a fair treatment. However, I have no right to question the inaction of the Government in past years. But that was always his belief until he died. His son, who has taken charge of the battery, never preferred a claim till after the death of his father, because he had not the papers; but since 1883 I have been urging an investigation of the claim, and ultimately the present Minister of Militia instructed Col. Otter to investigate the whole thing, which he did, and reported that this claim was just and equitable, and ought to be paid.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) has the advantage over every one of us in this matter, that he knows the facts and we do not. Probably if we had the same knowledge we would come to the same conclusion. only thing I ask is that the Government should allow us to look at these papers before we come to a conclusion. Surely this is a business matter, and under these circumstances, no one, except the hon. gentleman himself having any knowledge of these facts, it is only business-like to allow the House to see the papers before asking us to pass this vote of money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must ask my hon. friend not to be too rigid as a business man, in this case. After the statement made by my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Ferguson), I think the House will feel pleasure in voting this money. I think that after the positive statement made by my hon, friend, who is acquainted with all the facts, we may fairly accept his personal statement in lieu of the papers. The papers would give us no more information than my hon. friend has stated. It is true that, even if there were reasons given why the claim was not made before, that is not the question. The question is whether it is an honest claim, and the Crown pays its debts without pleading the statute of limitation.

Mr. LAURIER. The claim is not less if it is only postponed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The other evening I called attention to the circumstances under which this vote is proposed. If the Minister of Finance was correct, this work was ordered to be done without the authority of the House, and apparently we are asked to pay for work which was done without any authority of ours. I fail to it to be, can possibly be to us. We can obtain all the information as to this Labor Congress, without Mr. Helbronner's assistance. They have been printed in the various newspapers in Europe, and I think in a more compact form, in a sort of book. That is quite sufficient. I think, for us to have, without going to the expense of obtaining a report of this kind.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is mistaken. Not only these documents are not printed, but information concerning 1,116 exhibitors at the Congress of Social Economy in Paris, has been collected with an immense amount of labor. Mr. Helbronner was delegated by the Central Board of Trades Unions in Montreal to go to Paris, and the Government had no right to choose him as an official delegate. But we took advantage of his visit to Paris to ask him to make a collection of these documents, to attend the Congress, and to prepare them and give them to the working classes, as an appendix to the voluminous report of the Labor Commission. This book which has been printed will be distributed to members. The work has been done with the greatest care, and it will prove a most useful acquisition to those who are studying questions connected with the working classes. I have had the pleasure of reading it, and I consider it a most valuable contribution to the literature on these questions. The Government have not paid Mr. Helbronner his expenses in Paris, but this small amount of $2,500 is asked for the preparation of this report. The work performed by the Labor Commission was most useful, but on the whole it was not well digested. This work will, however, appropriately complete the documents submitted to the House. I am sure great service has been done in this preparation. I hope Mr. Helbronner will give to the Library the collection of documents which he has made, and which are not available to members in the Library or elsewhere.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What position did this gentleman occupy? Was he agent of the Government in Paris?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I gave him a letter of introduction to Mr. Fabre, and he was engaged on no official mission whatever. He has not been paid for any work, even for his travelling expenses. He has prepared, under my direction, this report, and he has devoted eight or nine months of his time to the work, and as a recompense I ask the small vote appearing in the Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the Secretaty of State, without the authority of Parliament, pledged himself to this gentleman to pay him a considerable sum of money. That is not a proper way to incur liabilities. We should know something about this work for which we are asked to make this grant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It was laid on the Table of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not seen it. I am contending for the right that we should know how public money will be expended before it is voted. The work is now put into my hands for the first time. I observe it is dedicated to the Secretary of State. I do not object to that even with such a dedication as I have seen in some see what use the synopsis of the report, as I take works. I observe that the writer states that he was instructed to make this report. If the Secretary of State last year intended to have had such a report prepared, an appropriation should have been placed in the Estimates. I affirm that this expenditure is contrary to proper principles, and that it is improper to first incur liability and then to come down to Parliament and ask for money grants.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I arrived last year the exhibition was open in Paris, and I did not know that Mr. Helbronner was going there. I knew the congress was going to be held there, but I did not know that I would have any one present prepared to make a report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Secretary of State seems to take a different view on these matters to that sometimes taken by the Minister of Public Works. It seems that this work had been ordered, and the first we know of it is when we are asked to vote a sum of money for work ordered without the sanction of the House. I do not approve of that course at all, for I think that in all cases a vote should be taken first. I remember that last summer a vote had been taken the previous year for a work in a certain part of the country, but it was found that the sum was not quite sufficient to complete the work, and so careful was the Minister of Public Works that he would not allow one single dollar to be spent, no matter how important the work was, and no matter how much the interests of the country were being served by it, unless the money had been previously voted by Parliament. The Board of Trade, the Town Council and all the principal men in the neighborhood of that work, telegraphed the hon. gentleman, asking him to allow the dredge to stay a few days longer and complete the work which, if not completed, would render all the money expended worthless; yet the hon. gentleman was so very careful not to encroach on the rules of Parliament, that he would not allow a dollar to be spent, unless the vote was approved by this House. That is quite contrary to the course pursued by the Secretary of State in this case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I can promise the hon. gentleman that he will not have a vote to complete in this matter next year.

INDIAN ADVANCEMENT ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 153) to further amend the Indian Act, chapter 43 of the Revised Statutes. He said: For the most part the alterations in this Bill, as compared with the old Act, are only the alteration of a word or two. There is a new clause inserted here which I will explain. I found a few years ago that it was very difficult to get the Indians to settle on their farms in any kind of rectangular shape, or to erect their buildings in any kind of uniformity. I, therefore, suggested to our surveyors that they should sub-divide all the reserves into sections of from 40 to 160 acres. It was some little time before we could induce our Indians to understand the purport of this, but subsequently they got into the idea, and many of them have requested to have their land sub-divided in this way. We are by this means enabled to locate their farms in a rectangular shape, so that they can keep persons from tres-passing on their boundaries. In section 3, it is prohibited for Indians to take away cordwood have him brought before an Indian agent and fined Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

from the reserve. The word "cordwood" is added to the 26th section of the old Act. Section 5 places the power of issuing patents in the hands of the Department of Indian Affairs, and not in the office of the Registrar General, as heretofore. Another section provides that where liquor has been given under medical certificate, the burden of proof is placed on the accused. There was also some difficulty as to whether the progeny of animals given in treaty should come within the meaning of the clause in the old Act, and a clause is provided by which the progeny, as well as the original animal given to the Indian, come under the clause. Clause 11 is put in as a new clause at the suggestion of the Grand Indian Council of Ontario and Quebec; it provides that the punishment of imprisonment may be added to that of a fine against an Indian guilty of deserting his or her family, wife or husband. Clause 12 provides that the Indian agent may try cases of infraction of the Vagrant Act, so as to reach Indians who loiter about towns. Clause 13 gives the Superintendent-General power to put the game laws in force. There is a new clause to provide against any parties, such as Indian officials or missionaries, trading on Indian reserves.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to remark on only one section of this Bill, that is, section 9. If I understood the Minister aright, he says it is introduced at the request of some council of the Indians; but I do not think even that circumstance, extraordinary as it is, is a justification for the introduc-tion of this provision in the Statute-book of Canada. That section provides for the punishment by imprisonment of any Indian proved guilty of deserting his or her family, wife or husband, as the case may be, without just cause, or of living in concubinage. I do not see on what principle we can undertake to apply very much more severe penalties, or a higher standard of morality to Indians, than we propose to enforce among the white population of this country. You say the Indians are less advanced than we are, that they occupy a lower position in morality, that some of them are pagans, that the christianity of some of them is not as high as we boast our own to be; they are to be guarded carefully; but then why in the world should you propose to enforce, by the criminal law, these provisions against them when you do not in the same way enforce such provisions against Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. DAWSON. I do not desire to oppose the Bill, but I wish to draw attention to this clause, which makes a man liable to a fine for cutting, carrying away, or removing trees, &c. In the district which I represent there are large tracts of Indian lands where a voyageur is often obliged to land his canoe, and it is a matter of necessity, the custom of the country, for him immediately to take his axe and clear a place for his camp, and cut some saplings for firewood. He has no intention of destroying or stealing anything from the Indians, and probably only stops for a night; but under this section it would be in the power of any one to $20. I think it is a pity to burden the law with unnecessary details of this kind.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is an old clause of the Act, and I have never heard of any hardship arising under it. It must be strict to protect the property of the Indians.

On section 9,

Mr. DEWDNEY. After the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), we will drop this clause.

On section 11,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This section declares that no persons shall be allowed to barter directly or indirectly with any Indian on a reserve, or sell to him any goods or supplies, cattle or other animals. Is it intended that no one will be allowed to sell on a reserve anything to the Indians? There are Indians on reserves and Indians who are not; or does it mean that no one will be allowed to sell to Indians living on the reserve?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is not the intention.

Mr. BLAKE. The words "an Indian on the reserve" would mean an Indian who lives on a reserve.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This will be circumscribing their liberty very much. You would not be allowed to go on a reserve and have any dealings with the Indians, not even to sell to them for cash.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is to prevent traders from starting stores on a reserve without consent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In absolutely forbidding any trading on a reserve, you would prevent Indians engaging in perfectly legitimate dealings. This, of course, applies to all the bands. Take the reserve in my riding, where the Indians are advanced. They engage in buying horses and cattle, and if they should do so on the reserve it would be illegal.

Mr. BLAKE. You had better apply your law to the locality in which the mischief arises and not anywhere else.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The real object is to keep traders and peddlers from going on the reserves and robbing the Indians.

Mr. McNEILL. Very often traders bring liquor with them on to the reserve to sell to the Indians. In my constituency the Indian agents have complained of men coming on the reserve to trade but really to sell liquor.

Mr. BLAKE. Better amend the clause by making this portion refer only to Manitoba and the North-West.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That would be the better way, it would then suit Manitoba and the North-West.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House ajourned at 2.10 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 14th May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That Bill 155 and Bill 156 be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration immediately after routine proceedings, in accordance with the eighteenth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 155) respecting the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Daly.)

Bill (No. 156) respecting the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company.—(Mr. Hesson.)

DISALLOWANCE OF MANITOBA ACTS.

Mr. O'BRIEN (for Mr. McCarthy) asked, Whether any petitions or remonstrances have been presented to His Excellency the Governor General, or to the Government, asking for the disallowance of the Act of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba respecting Public Schools, and of the Act of the same Legislature abolishing the dual language? If any such petitions or remonstrances have been presented, by whom have they been presented? Has any action been taken by the Government respecting the said Acts? Does the Government propose to bring down such petitions or remonstrances, if any such have been presented?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Petitions or remonstrances have been presented to the Government by a despatch from the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, conveying the remonstrance of the school board; also from the Rev. Mr Bernier, on behalf of the school board; also from Mr. Prendergast of Manitoba. No action has yet been taken by the Government respecting the said Acts. In answer to the fourth question, it is too late to bring down these petitions now, and there has been no request made for them.

ENQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. COOK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish again to ask the Government, and for the last time, if they propose to comply with the Order of the House made on the 10th March, for a return in reference to the expenses in connection with the Dominion License Act. commonly known as the McCarthy Act? I wish to know whether the Government are going to bring down the papers this Session, or whether they propose to repudiate the request made by this House?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The return asked for involves a good deal of labor, and the clerks have been engaged upon it. I will make enquiries.

Mr. COOK. When will it be down? Mr. COSTIGAN. As soon as possible.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As soon as possible.

NEGOTIATIONS AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, the fact that the Session, I presume, is just now drawing to a close, justifies me in asking the Government what position the fishery question is in at Washington? It may be It may be that the Government may not feel inclined to tell us; possibly it may be prejudicial to the interest of the country for them to state it, and in that case I do not press the question. But I have heard rumors from Washington, that for the last three weeks the question of the Atlantic fisheries has been practically agreed upon, and that in reference to the Behring Sea question the mare clausum pretension of the United States has been practically abandoned, that the question of how seals are to be taken by the inhabitants of both countries, or by people at large, has been practically settled. I would like to ask the Government, whether there is any truth in these rumors?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite in a position to answer any of those questions the hon. gentleman puts now. At this moment, all I can say is that the negotiations, so ta as we can learn, have been going on very pleasantly, and I hope with happy results. think I will be able to give a more positive answer on Friday.

INCREASED INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS AND SENATORS.

Mr. LABROSSE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the Government intends to grant an extra allowance to the members of this House and to the senators, on account of the unusual length of the session. It is unreasonable to be kept here thirtydays beyond the ordinary duration of a Session, and receive the same indemnity. The employés and messengers of the House receive an increase of salary, and it seems to me but just that the members and senators should receive $10 extra for each and every day over the ninety days. I know agreat number who desire it, and I think that both sides of the House would be glad to receive that amount. The Government would do the right thing by granting my request.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All I can say is that the Government do not propose to bring down a measure this Session to alter the amount of the indemnity.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works when he will bring down the papers in connection with the McGreevy matter, and if he has any further information than was brought before the House yesterday by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron)?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the last part of the question, that matter is being investigated. I will be able on Friday, I think, to bring down the papers that I promised, at all events, so far as they have been collected.

PRIVILEGE-THE TEMPERANCE COLON-ISATION COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, I have a matter to bring before the attention of the House of considerable moment, a matter that I Mr. MITCHELL.

have gleaned from a return which was brought down to the House a short time ago. It was a return which was asked for by the hon, member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) in reference to the Temperance Colonisation Company and the Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company. In that return was a letter which I think it but right I should bring before the attention of the Government and the House. The contents of this letter, with your permission, I will read:

"22 SWORD STREET, "TORONTO, 13th June, 1887.

"Hon. Thomas White, M. I., "Ottawa, Ont.

"22 Sword Street."
"How. Thomas White, M. I.,
"Ottawa, Ont."
"How. Sir.—I heard reported that it was the intention of the Government to compel the Temperance Colonisation Company to abandon all legal proceedings against scrip holders, otherwise the Government would take away their charter. I trust this is your intention; and let me say in faith that you will be doing an act that God will bless you for. How many homes have been blighted by this curse? But the worst is still to come, and these present directors are just as eager to-day, to collect, in any and every way, exorbitant sums from scrip holders, without the least concern of the injury they are doing. They are a set of men who bave no hearts, and have forgotten that they have souls. Let me beg of you to listen to my own case. I owned a house for which I had nearly paid, when this company came into existence, when I got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of its promoters. To make a long story short, I mortgaged my home, which has since passed out of my possession, to got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of its promoters. To make a long story short, I mortgaged my home, which has since passed out of my possession, to got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of its promoters. To make a long story short, I mortgaged my home, which has since passed out of my possession, to got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of its promoters. To make a long story short, I mortgaged my home, which has since passed out of my possession, to got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of its promoters. To make a long story short, I mortgaged my home, which has since passed out of my possession, to got into the meshes of the Rev. Dr. Hunter, one of the stock and the call that had been made, another $2.000, it would be all right, and I could hold it. After I had the stock about six weeks, I received a post card from him, stating that the call had to be paid. A day or two aftersectiving this card, he called on me himself and offered me, in newspaper advertisements, if they are any use to you. Submitting this to you in confidence,

"I am, yours respectfully, (Sgd.) "JOHN W. CAMPBELL."

I should like to ask what action the Government have taken in regard to this matter? I should like to know if any enquiry has been made into the conduct of the directors of the company, and what the Government have done in regard to the company; also whether Dr. Hunter has been compelled to disgorge the fruits of the misrepresentations and frauds as indicated in the letter I have read? It is the duty of the Government to look into this matter, as this letter shows a heartless piece of rascality perpetrated by the directors of the company on innocent and honest men.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the hon, gentleman had intimated to me the information he required, I would have endeavored to obtain it and given it to him at once. All the negotiations that took place with the directors of this colonisation company occurred before I took charge of the Department. The only communication I have had with them was in regard to an application to extend the time with regard to the selection of their lands. I had been aware, but almost entirely through the newspapers, that a great many complaints have been made against the Temperance Colonisation Company, and in regard to the negotiations they had with different parties to settle on their lands. I have not read the whole of the correspondence which I submitted to the House some time ago. May I ask the date of that letter?

Mr. LANDERKIN. 13th June, 1887.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was before I took charge of the Department. I will look into the matter, and give the hon. gentleman all the information I can obtain between now and prorogation. There has been much litigation; I do not know whether this particular case has been in litigation or not. Within the last few days, several cases have been brought before the courts, and have been settled in favor of the Temperance Colonisation Company. I do not believe the heads of the corporation have knowingly perpetrated any dishonest action, or have knowingly treated any of the settlers who went to their colony harshly.

Mr. WALLACE (York). No doubt a great deal of hardship in connection with the affairs of this company has arisen on account of the representations made by the promoters of the company to takers of stock. Before the Government settles with the company, there should be a distinct understanding with respect to settlement and other matters. Several cases of severe hardship have come under my own notice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior whether this colonisation company has been dissolved or is still in existence?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The colonisation company is still in existence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The charge in the letter is a very serious one and requires the attention of the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many of the colonisation companies remain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think only three—the Temperance Colonisation Company, a company in the I am afraid that is not practicable; and otherwise neighborhood of Red River, and the York Colonisation Company.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion of the net amount of $10,000,000, which was expected to be derived by the Government from the colonisation companies, is now expected?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not the statement at my fingers' ends.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The statement contained in the letter read is such that it is the duty of the Government to make a searching enquiry into the whole matter. If the statements are true, there has been a heartless amount of rascality, which should be exposed by the Government for the benefit of the people.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FOSTER. It is necessary that the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means to rectify an error in item 203 of the Customs Bill passed a few days ago. This is not to make any change in the duties under the old tariff; but by a clerical error the Committee omitted to provide for baking powders and yeast cakes under fifty pounds in bulk. I move the following resolution to rectify this error:—

That item 203 of Bill No. 143, of the present Session, entitled: "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs," be amended so as to read as follows:—

Yeast cakes and baking powders in packages weighing one pound or over, and compressed yeast in packages weighing one pound or over, but not over fifty pounds, six cents per pound—the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

Resolution considered in Committee, reported, and concurred in.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. FOSTER introduced Bill (No. 159) to amend an Act of the present Session entitled an Act to amend the Acts respecting the Duties on Customs.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

To increase salaries of Chaplains at Stony Mountain Penitentiary, on condition of their whole time being given to the prisoners, $200 each.....$400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it possible that two chaplains should be required to give their whole time to the Manitoba Penitentiary? The total number of prisoners, if I recollect aright, averages about eighty, and this seems to be an unduly large provision for their spiritual welfare: one reverend gentleman to forty prisoners.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are pretty hard cases up there.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course, if the chaplains were able to divide the duties between them we would not require the services of two, but I am afraid that is not practicable; and otherwise it is necessary that the chaplains should devote their whole time to the penitentiary, particularly so as it is situated fifteen miles from Winnipeg, and there is no neighboring settlement in which they can have parochial charge. The Protestant chaplain attends the prisoners every day; and besides that, he instructs the children of the officers on the reserve, which has become quite a settlement. I think we ought to allow him enough to live on and to support his family. The other chaplain may devote his whole time.

Besides which, judging from the Mr. BLAKE. efficiency of the admonitions which the Minister himself, and the House indirectly, have addressed to the warden with reference to the scale of expenditure in that penitentiary, I rather think the warden himself would require a pretty large proportion of the services of both chaplains in order to keep him any way near right.

Railways and Canals chargeable to in-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. were in Committee of Supply I took occasion to call the attention of the House to the extraordinary disproportion between the annual charges on income, and the annual receipts of these railways. Now, looking at the whole, I find that, besides the $56,000 here demanded, we spent something like $140,000 in salaries and ordinary maintenance, and about $330,000 are chargeable to income besides, making in all within the merest fraction of $900,-000. Our total receipts are something like three or four hundred thousand dollars, giving us a deficit on that head of close on half a million dollars, which certainly is a matter which requires more attention than the House has yet given to it. It would be idle at this stage of the Session to engage in any prolonged debate on the subject, nor, I am certain, that, without a complete reversal of the policy of the Government in some important respects, much good is likely Still, I take this opportunity, as to accrue. there was some little doubt as to the amount, of calling the attention of the House again, and also of the Minister specially in charge, to the fact that our expenditure is increasing in most enormous proportions. I think we have now to face an annual loss of not very far short of two-thirds of the amount annually charged; and I need not say that is quite irrespective of the fact that a very large portion of our public debt represents the cost of these canals and a large portion of our charge for interest. I trust that between this and next Session, the First Minister will be prepared to come down with some proposals tending to lessen this enormous annual deficit. In view of the fact that the Government are asking for very large sums on capital account for further expenditure on canals, it seems to me more attention should be given than has been to the best mode of reducing this enormous expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite well aware of the justice of the hon. member's remarks with regard to the unfortunate fact that the expense of the canals has been considerably increased, while the earnings of the canals have not correspondingly increased. I do not know that there is any present means of altering that state of water, gives a depth only of twelve or thirteen things. Of course we cannot increase the earnings feet. Steamers have to make a great detour and Sir John Thompson.

unless commerce takes the canals instead of the I believe the rates charged are as low as possible, unless we desire to make them free. That is a question which may arise sometime in Parliament, but it is not a question for this Session. I am not aware that there has been any extravagance in the management of the canals. The person chiefly responsible for that, the Chief Engineer of Canals, is a very prudent and economical Scotchman, who will not knowingly allow any extravagance. However, it is quite true that this state of things should be thoroughly investigated, and I shall, during the recess, do what I can to see if there is any mode of making both ends meet. I have been told that I had been over sanguine in Perhaps I may be over sanguine other matters. in this, but I think, when the canal system is improved and we have a deep water and canal navigation from the west to the seaboard, a very considerable portion of the trade which has been diverted by the railways may return to the canals. I will not make any prognostications; I will not prophesy until I know, being instructed by the continual reminder of the hon. gentleman, that my anticipations have been too sanguine in other matters. But I shall make enquiry as to the best means of reducing the expenditure on the canals without lessening their efficiency and safety. It would be poor economy, by the reduction of the staff, to cause interruption of trade or danger for want of a sufficient number of officers to have the canals efficiently worked.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is quite the custom, whenever anything comes up in the House concerning the Intercolonial Railway, to hear gentlemen from Ontario, not alone on the Government side, but also sitting very near me, occasionally interject remarks about getting rid of it because it costs too much money. They never seem to think of the enormous cost of the canals and the money lost on them. When they talk of getting clear of the Intercolonial Railway, they should consider whether it would be judicious to hand over the canals to a private company too. I think the one is in the same category as the other. What I rose particularly to refer to was the intimation just now by the right hon. gentleman as to what might occur when we had a deep water system from the lakes to the sea. Does my hon. friend propose to deepen the canals and have more enormous expenditure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MITCHELL. You have the system then.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not quite. There is a little more to spend yet before we get to a uniform depth.

Mr. MITCHELL. We would be laying the foundation of a large expenditure in deepening the canals one or two feet more.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no such intention.

Mr. COOK. In deepening the canals it would be necessary to deepen the St. Lawrence in many places where the river is more shallow than the canals. There are heavy shoals running across at a point a little below Morrisburg, which, at high can scarcely get over in low water. If the canals are to be deepened, there must be very large expenditures indeed in deepening the St. Lawrence at various points.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The depth was fourteen feet, I think. I was inclined to have the same suspicion as the hon. gentleman, that it would be useless to deepen the canals to the depth settled long ago, and sanctioned by Parliament, on account of the fact that the interruption to navigation on the St. Lawrence would be very considerable through the shallowness of portions of the river. I am glad to learn, however, after my attention was particularly called to the subject as Minister of Railways, from the information given by the chief engineer, who knows the river thoroughly, that the expense would be very slightly enlarged. There are one or two points where there may be some little use for dynamite, but in very few points in the river as a whole. There is, therefore, less hesitation in finishing the canals according to the plan of Parliament.

Carillon and Grenville Canals-Repairs. $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before this item is put, I want again to call the attention of the First Minister to the facts I brought to his notice a few years ago. Facts which, if confirmed, go to show that there has been constant and systematic fraud with regard to the expenditure on The right hon. gentleman will these canals. remember that I called his attention to the alleged fact that men who had been dead for a considerable number of years figured on the pay-roll, and also men who had been absent from the country. At that time the hon, gentleman said he was prepared to make some enquiry into the matter. should be glad to hear what enquiry he has made and what he proposes to do. Although, I suppose, it is too late now to ask for the papers; I take it for granted that if he has made an enquiry, he will engage that the report shall be laid on the Table when we meet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman called the attention of the Committee and myself to the allegation that there had been frauds committed in paying persons who were absent or dead. On receiving that information, I at once instructed enquiries to be made by the Deputy Minister of Railways, and dispatched an officer to investigate the matter. I have reason to believe, from sundry informations, that there is some truth in what the hon. gentleman stated. The officer sent to make special enquiries has not yet been able to report. I will not only see that the papers are laid before the House, but, if the hon. gentleman requires, I will send the record over to him, or to the leader of the Opposition, if it is made during recess.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What officer is in charge of the examination?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know. I will ascertain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As this is an Ontario matter, perhaps the hon. gentleman had better send the report to me when he receives it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will do so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. Minister was to give definite information as to the total cost of this building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the hon. gentleman asked what had been the estimate of the officers of the Department. I enquired about that, and I had not the report when I came from the Department this morning. However, there is very little difference between the estimate made and the liability of the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Including this $155,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. As I said, I am not sure that all this will be required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister will no doubt remember that a claim for $393,000 was preferred, which he expected to cut down to $200,000. Is that included in this vote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is expected by the chief architect that the whole claim will be reduced to less than $150,000. The $5,000 above that are for paying small amounts.

Mr. COOK. I would like to enquire whether, when the contract was first let, the Department omitted to include a roof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon, gentleman was not here the other day when that question was asked me. The answer was, that it was not forgotten, but we did not know whether the contractor would be able to undertake such a roof as we wanted, in iron or copper; and therefore the chief architect advised that we had better have a separate contract for that, and the contractor for the building would be able to tender for it at a lower rate than others, because he would be already in possession of the building.

Mr. COOK. Did the original contractor get the contract for putting on the roof, and was his tender the lowest?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. COOK. Does the Minister of Public Works intend to go on with the post office at Orillia at once? Why does he make an exception in the case of Orillia, because in all other places the Government furnishes the lot, but in Orillia the people have had to purchase the lot?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is no exception. In very many cases the lot is given by the municipality. They agree as to the site, and there is no squabble about it—if I may use the term—and it is much more pleasant for them and for the Government, that there should be no difficulty about the site. They are also under the impression, which is not a false one, that, if they furnish the site, the money which might be expended on the purchase of the site will be put into the building, and that they will, therefore, have a better building. Of course the Government will go on with this building. I may say that Toronto, and Port Arthur, and Brantford, and a number of other places have provided the lots.

Mr. BLAKE. In the absence of my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer), I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to an arrangement which was made for a public building at Lunenburg. The Government purchased a site for that building as long ago as 1886, and then promised to make a provision for the building, but, since that time, although the site has been purchased and paid for, no progress has been made. In the interval, I am informed that the population, the shipping, and the general business of the port of Lunenburg, has very largely increased. I am informed that the West India trade there is almost equal to that of Halifax, some hundreds of vessels entering and leaving that port each season. I am further informed that the post office and Customs revenues there are much larger than they are in a great number of towns in which buildings of this kind have been erected. The Government having obtained an appropriation in 1886, and having purchased a site which remains unused till this day, it seems to me that they should give some explanation as to why they have not carried out the expressed view of Parliament in this regard.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I answered the hon, member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) on this subject when he was here. I told him that, although the lot had been purchased, we had not been able to appropriate a sum of money for the building this year. That is not the only case in which that has occurred, and I hope that, later on, we may be able to provide a public building in that place and in other places, which we cannot do this year.

Manitoba, Red River Survey...... $2,000

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if it is intended to go on with that survey this coming season?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. whether it was stated, on the occasion of the discussion, whether the Government had fixed a special rate of speed which must be maintained, in the agreement they made with the Allans.

Mr. FOSTER. No special rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That leaves the matter almost entirely at their discretion.

Mr. FOSTER. Certain vessels were to be employed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But you have fixed no special rate?

Mr. FOSTER. No; they may go just as fast as they like.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And as slow as they like.

Additional amount for Immigration .. $150,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. item was last up, I called the attention of the First Minister to the desirability of seeing if an arrangement could be made with the Manitoba Government by which a portion of this sum would be placed at their disposal, inasmuch as they had Mr. BLAKE.

far greater facilities for carrying on a scheme of immigration than the Dominion Government. The right hon. gentleman said he would take that suggestion into his consideration. I desire to enquire whether he has considered the suggestion, and whether he will place a portion-and, if he does so, perhaps he could state what portion-at the disposal of the Manitoba Government for that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was only the other day the hon, gentleman made the suggestion, which I said was worthy of consideration. During the last days of the Session I have been unable to give the subject consideration, and I regret to say the hon. Minister of Agriculture is quite unwell. No time will be lost by the Government in taking the subject up. We cannot place a sum at the disposal of the Manitoba Government until we have communicated with them. We will do so in order that there may be conjoint action. I understand they are doing their work very well, as regards obtaining settlers for Manitoba from the older Provinces. We must think, however, more of getting an annexation from without than of transferring people within the Dominion. However, immediate communication will be made with the Manitoba Government with a view to some concerted action.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware of my own knowledge that the Manitoba Government have been making good use of their limited resources, and the present Premier of that Province has been especially successful in securing a large number of immigrants from Ontario for Manitoba. No doubt it is true that Manitoba is largely engaged in transferring settlers from one part of the Dominion to another; but it is of the first moment that, if settlers are decided to leave Ontario, they should go to Manitoba or the North-West, or they will certainly go to the United States. It is admitted to be more important to keep our own people in the country than to bring in people from outside, and for that reason the co-operation of the Manitoba Government is important. I did not expect a scheme could be prepared in the very short time that has elapsed since I brought this subject to the attention of the First Minister; but if the hon. gentleman feels desirous of adding to the population of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, which is a matter of the first moment to all of us, he will find that, with the assistance of the Manitoba Government, he will secure greater results than by the unaided action of the Dominion Government.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved:

- 1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1890, the sum of $2,038,168,96 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.
- 2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1891, the sum of $25,464,944,95 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) to grant to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for paying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1890, and 30th June, 1891, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hongentleman is here demanding $25,000,000 odd. Does that include any provision for redemption or for a new loan? I presume from the amount it does not, but I should like to know definitely.

Mr. FOSTER. Not for a new loan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What borrowing powers have we still unexhausted?

Mr. FOSTER. I am unable to say just now, but I shall make up a statement and give it to the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first, second and third times, and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 157) to authorise the granting of certain subsidies to certain railways and railway companies.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of land subsidies to certain railways therein mentioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should be obliged to the hon. gentleman for giving us some information as to the meaning of this. Who are the promoters? what the cost of the enterprise is? and a variety of other particulars which ought to be always laid before us, but which, I fear, have not been with regard to a great many other matters.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The line applied for now will extend 125 miles. It commences at the city of Winnipeg, running in a south-easterly direction for about 20 miles, and thence in a direct line as near as the circumstances of the country will allow, to near the north-west angle. It is to be built principally for the purpose of enabling the people of that section of the country to send their timber, of which there is a great quantity about the southern end of the Lake of the Woods-not only timber but firewood-to Winnipeg and southern Manitoba. I may state that already twenty-five miles of this road are located, and six miles, I understand, are graded. It runs through a portion of country which has no railway communication whatever at present; and although the country is not specially attractive, it is thought that the construction of this road will bring into it a large number of settlers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where does the hon, gentleman propose to select the land?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Along the line of the railway, twelve miles on each side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it supposed to be in connection with any extension on the American side of the border?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; it does not go within twenty-four miles of the boundary line. It runs direct to the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. WATSON. I certainly approve of this land grant for the proposed road, which will run through an attractive country as yet entirely undeveloped, and I have no doubt that it will be advantageous, not only to its promoters, but to the country. I regret, however, that the Government have not seen fit to give a land grant to the North-West Junction and Lake of the Woods Railway, which is promoted by gentlemen who have been promoting a railway for that section for several years. They were promoters of the old Emerson and North-Western Railway, of which fifteen miles were graded north-west from Emerson, and which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company afterwards obtained possession of. There is plenty of room in that section for two roads, and I hope the Minister will give that railway some assistance next year.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman knows that the section he speaks of, from Portage la Prairie to Emerson, is not so much in need of railway communication as the section for which we are giving a land grant to-day. The railway he speaks of intersects the Northern Pacific and the South-Western, and in considering the two railways, the Government thought it more necessary to give a land grant to that portion of the country most in need of railway communication.

Mr. WATSON. I refer to the portion between Buffalo Lake and the Manitoba South-Western. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it should not have a land grant for the portion from the South-Western Railway to Portage la Prairie; but from the junction with the South-Western to the Lake of the Woods, I think it is entitled to a land grant. The Government, some years ago, spent $50,000 to aid in the construction of a bridge across the Red River at Emerson, and the people there burdened themselves with taxation for the purpose of raising sufficient additional money to complete the bridge; but there is no railroad running across it, and it is useless to-day. This North-West Junction and useless to-day. This North-West Junction and Lake of the Woods Railway would occupy that bridge, and some return would be made to the people of Emerson for the large amount of money they spent in its construction.

On resolution 3,

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the land granted to the Lake Manitoba and Canal Company's railway will be along the line of that railway?

Mr. DEWDNEY. As far as practicable. In the first place, as the hon. gentleman knows, there are twenty-four miles between Portage la Prairie and the lake which belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The railway will get some lands on the western side of the lake along its own line; but the land grant of the Hudson Bay Railway is on the east side. The question depends a good deal on the location of the road. I am in hope that the location will be made pretty far west, so that the railway will accommodate the Lake Dauphin district, where, as the hon, gentleman knows, there is are two or three townships there pretty well settled a large settlement.

Mr. WATSON. I hope some arrangements will be made by which this railway will accommodate the people who would have been accommodated by the railway which I promoted in this House, but the Bill for the incorporation of which the hon. First Minister had slaughtered in committee, on the ground that it would interfere with the Hudson Bay Railway. I do not think it is fair to the people of Manitoba and the North-West, to be treated in the way they have been treated by this House, because the company were prepared to build that railway if they had got a charter, and we have not received any intimation, and at this hour of the Session are not likely to receive any, that the Government are going to grant assistance to the Hudson Bay Railway. But is that railway going to be made an excuse for preventing all other corporations building railways in that section of the I hope that if the Government are country? going to grant assistance to the Hudson Bay road, they will grant it at an early day. It was hoped by the people of the North-West that it was going to receive some substantial assistance this Session. It was not stated in plain words, but it was intimated by the hon. First Minister, that the Government felt disposed to assist that railway. I regret that has not been done, as I want to see that railway built; but I do not want the Government to make that an excuse for killing off all other railway enterprises running north from There is a large settlement in Portage la Prairie. the Lake Dauphin district which this railway cannot serve as well as a railway running to the west side of the lake; but I hope the Government will induce the company to run the road a sufficient distance to the west to accommodate at least a portion of the settlers in that district.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) authorising the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the first and second times, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman imply when he states that this may possibly interfere with the Hudson Bay line? Has this line been laid out over the territory traversed by the Lake Manitoba and Canal Company?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A small portion of the land on the west of Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis has been reserved for a portion of the land grant selected by the Hudson Bay Company. It extends about eight or ten miles to the west of Lake Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. All along the west side?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; all along the west line, a certain distance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any population there?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, there is quite a large population, and a mill working at Meadow Bridge, Mr. DEWDNEY.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is this called a canal company?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Last year a land subsidy was given for seventeen miles of road from Portage la Prairie to the southern end of Lake Manitoba, and it was proposed then to cut a canal across the Meadow Portage. The canal would cost $600,000, and the difference in level between the two waters being a little over eighteen feet, it was, upon further consideration by the company, found more desirable to build the road direct to Meadow Portage, and thus accommodate the lumber business, which will be very extensive on the north shore of Lake Winnipegosis and the tributaries of the rivers running into the lake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any reliable information as to the navigation of Lake Winnipegosis?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; there is a report this year in the Indian Department from one of our surveyors, who went up in a boat last year. Lake Winnipegosis is fairly fit for navigation by steamers drawing five or six feet of water, and probably more; but it would require a great deal of work to make Lake Manitoba navigable, it being full of boulders and shoals.

Mr. WATSON. The navigation on Lake Winnipegosis is much better than on Lake Manitoba, which is very shoaly. I think the company did well to abandon the canal scheme and ask for power to build a railway, because a railway will be available all the year round and pay much better than a canal. The canal would cost a considerable sum, and the navigation is not good on Lake Manitoba. In several places on that lake you could hardly navigate, drawing four feet of water, and if you drew eight feet out of Lake Manitoba, you would only have a few pond holes left. The road is intended to operate the lumber limits on Lake Winnipegosis and tributaries; and it will also accommodate a large number of settlers. I only regret that the people on the west shore of Lake Dauphin will not be accommodated by this road. hope the Government will do all they can for this company, so as to have the road constructed at the earliest possible date. There are five or six townships pretty well settled there now, and people have been rushing in there all last fall and this spring. Before another year there will be eight or ten townships well settled in that section.

Bill reported.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that the Bill be read the third time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that Bill is read the third time, although I am afraid it is almost a waste of time, I must enter my final protest against the policy of the Government in respect of the land question generally. As to these two last land grants, I am not in a position to say whether or not they will do as much mischief as I believe will ensue from the land grants heretofore made. I took occasion, when this question was up before, to point out to the House and the Minister of Interior substantially additional forms of the substantially additional forms. mitted, if not altogether, the accuracy of my contentions-that we were, if we made allowance and there are other mills along the lake. There for the lands we must reserve to settlers according to our present policy, departing with the entire control of that great belt of territory between parallels 49 and 54, extending from the Red River to the Rocky Mountains. We are now adding to the enormous grants we have already given to railroads, amounting to 33,000,000 acres, a total of 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 acres more; and we are doing that without any consideration, and I have no doubt that in twenty or thirty years hence-perhaps in a much shorter time-the same difficulties will arise in that country, which we know have arisen in various portions of the older Provinces, in consequence of our tying up of huge blocks of lands in the power of various corporations. I think that, bad as it is to delay bringing down the railway subsidies in money until the last day or two of the Session, the policy of delaying these land grants until the Supply Bill is passed is still more reprehensible. I think the House has been acting in almost utter ignorance in regard to these matters. Within the last two or three days we have handed over close upon 6,000,000 of acres to these various companies—that amounts to a territory half as large as the western peninsula of Ontario, taking in the counties of Kent, Essex, Lambton, the Bruces, the Hurons, the Perths and the Middlesexes, some eighteen constituencies, and those among the best in the Province of Ontario. Whether the hon, gentleman is going to be successful in introducing immigration to this country or not, I cannot say, but I think he was wise in not prophesying in regard to that. But, while we are parting with our control over that great territory, we find, at the same time, that our expectations as to the immigration into Manitoba and the North-West have not been fulfilled. We find that our large expenditure from 1880 to 1885 resulted in our putting 7,000 families into Manitoba, and something like 12,000 families into the North-West and Manitoba put together. In order to do that, we have to expend something like $7,000,000 a year—if you put together the interest we have to pay on the amount we incurred for the railway, the annual charge for Indians, the annual charge for the Mounted Police, and the annual charge for immigration, which, to all intents and purposes, is useful only for that country, besides the amount for the management of the Department of the Interior and the miscellaneous expenditures which we There was a little dispute the other evening as to the amount of available land we had in the North-West. I find a few suggestive facts shown in the map which the hon. gentleman has laid on the Table. I find that, in the enormous extent of territory between the 3rd and 4th parallels which was known as the dry or arid region, the Canadian Pacific Railway would only accept about one-third of the 2,000,000 acres of the belt located there. This map shows that of 2,208,-000 acres, they would only accept 830,000 acres, according to the hon. gentleman's statement; and I am told that a large quantity of that was on the north side of the road. I fear it is only too evident that the great proportion of the region south of the Canadian Pacific Railway line and extending to the boundary between the 3rd and 4th parallels, can hardly be deemed fit for settlement. We know that all along the other parallels to the north of the Canadian Pacific Railway line, there is agreat deal of broken land. I believe that the land of better quality to the north has been largely appropriated by the Canadian Pacific Railway and others, and it is clear that, wholly apart from the grants which have been made to the Manitoba and North-Western and other railways, we have been dispossessing ourselves of the greater portion of this land, extending up to the 53rd degree of latitude, and that we will be obliged to hand the balance over free to the settlers, or that, at most, we may have a small portion remaining for pre-emption purposes. I desire to remind the House that we have failed altogether in putting immigrants in that country in the number we had a right to count upon, and in obtaining any return for our expenditure upon it, the fact being that the balance in our land Department is on the wrong side. I also point out that we are now doing a double wrong. In the first place, we are making a mistake in subsidising these railways by grants of land which lie at a distance from the line of railway. We give them large blocks of land far removed from their line, and there is no inducement to them to bring settlers in. If these sections become reasonably populous, the people will be perpetually dependent upon us. In the old Provinces, large resources were derived formerly from the sale of lands, and later, from the timber limits, but these resources will be taken away from the people of the new territories, and we will probably have continual battling for additional subsidies and additional accommodation which those territories will have a right to expect. On all these accounts, I think the policy of making this land grant is much to be deprecated, and my own impression is that we will gain very little by it. We are locking up these lands in the hands of corporations, which, in many cases, depend upon the sale of their bonds to make any headway at all, and we are only placing an obstacle in the way of other companies which might probably at a later date be willing to construct roads through that country. We have an instance of that in the case of the Northern Pacific Railway in the Province of Manitoba, which has been ready, I believe, to construct lines there for the very small bonus of $1,500 to $1,700 per mile. I also believe it is a bad policy to scatter settlement which these grants are calculated to do. I believe it would have been better to devote our attention to the concentration instead of scattering it; I believe we would have had very many thousands more settlers than we have now, and that the whole problem of the North-West would have been solved in a more reasonable way. However, it is all but hopeless to endeavor to control the Government now that they have embarked on this policy. No one can look at this map without perceiving that the chances are immense, that in years to come our successors may be compelled, at great cost and at great inconvenience, to undo the work which we are now so heedlessly accomplishing.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to add one word to the protest I made in regard to this absurd policy of the Government in embarking in these enormous railway enterprises, in a country which has only about a quarter of a million of inhabitants. They are anticipating the wants of the country; they are engaged in the business of building railways under the most unfavorable circumstances, and they are obliged to offer inducements for the construction of railways prematurely, year after year, in advance of the necessities of their being built faster than they would be required by the natural growth of settlement. This whole policy of granting millions upon millions of acres in the North-West to corporations, making grants that will prove eventually to have been unnecessary if we waited till the roads were needed, is one that the country will bitterly regret in the future. I predict it, and I predict it from the experience that has been given in precisely similar cases in the country to the south of us. I regret, furthermore, that the Government have determined, as they seem determined, to pursue this policy of bartering the heritage of the future for the advantage of certain monopolies; and inasmuch as they insist upon doing this, I regret they have even refused that poor boon of fixing the maximum price with regard to these lands, the policy which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) pointed out had been repeatedly pursued in the United States in the interest of the settlers who were to occupy the lands which were granted to railways in various parts of that country. I hold that it is an entirely unjustifiable refusal on the part of the Government, having decided to grant these lands, to refuse to the settler that safeguard he is entitled to demand, that is, the establishment of a maximum price. I now record my protest against the whole policy, against the policy per se of making grants, and against the refusal, having taken that step, of minimising the evil by establishing a maximum rate.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The plan which the hon. gentleman has been looking at shows the lands accepted by the Canadian Pacific Railway, amounting to, I think, 8,340,000 acres. I explained the other day that they had already notified us of having accepted now over 9,000,000, and expect to select 10,000,000 before the selection is completed. We asked last year for an appropriation of $2,500 for the inspection of land; it was for the purpose of paying our inspector for examining the lands which the Canadian Pacific Railway has indicated they were not going to take. Since the inspection was made, Mr. Hamilton, on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Mr. Pierce, on behalf of the Government, have been at work every day making a final selection which, I am satisfied, will reach 10,000,000. The section which has been examined most carefully is that portion in which the smallest selection has been made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister state whether I was correctly informed that the bulk of the selection, in what is known as the arid belt, between the 3rd and 4th parallels, has been made north of the line?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think that is very likely. There is a very large area south of the track in which Old Wives Lake is situated, a lake which is some eighty miles long and ten or fifteen miles wide in some places. There is a great deal of land within the railway belt south of the line. A great deal of land around that lake is dry alkali land, which would not, under any circumstances, be accepted by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.
Mr. CHARLTON.

RESPECTING INTEREST.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 140) to amend chapter 127 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled An Act respecting Interest.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When that Bill was before considered in Committee there was a discussion in which the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies) took part, with regard to the propriety of repealing all the exceptional provisions of the Interest Act. The Bill as passed by the Senate deals with sections 9, 10 and 11, namely, those making special provisions with reference to Ontario and Quebec. The hon, member for St. John gave me notice that he desired to ask for the repeal of sections 18 to 23 with regard to New Brunswick, and the member for Queen's, P. E. I., desired to repeal sections 28, 29 and 30 with regard to Prince Edward Island. I agree to the repeal of all the sections after number nine. The effect will be to remove a number of those enactments which were particularly intended to keep alive the penalties with regard to the then existing contracts, which are now practically run out. Hereafter, in all the Provinces, the rate of interest may be fixed by agreement.

Mr. BLAKE. It leaves still undisturbed, except in so far as specially amended, the provisions as to the power of redemption, or rather limitation of the right to charge interest after a certain period.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not affect

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 161) to amend "The Pilotage Act," chapter eighty of the Revised Statutes.—(Mr. Colby.)

ADJOURNMENT TILL FRIDAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that when this House adjourns to-night it stand adjourned until Friday morning at eleven o'clock, to receive any messages from the other House.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 131) further to amend chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes, The Territories Real Property Act. - (Sir John Thompson.)

Bill (No. 112) authorising the transfer of certain public property to the Provincial Governments.—(Sir John Thompson.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL. The House will have in its recollection that when the Bill was passed in regard to steamboat inspection, a very strong feeling was expressed on this side of the House, and also on the other side of the House, against the provision that an engineer should require to be domiciled here three years before he could be employed. The acting Minister of Marine, with the courtesy which usually characterises him, stated he would strike out the section in accordance with the wish of the House. I believe some error was committed. The hon. gentleman intended to make the alteration, but the original clause went up to the Senate. I think the Minister's intention was to change that particular section, and I regret it has not been done.

Mr. COLBY. The hon, gentleman has stated the case exactly. In deference to the views of my hon. friends from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), Queen's (Mr. Davies), Halifax (Mr. Jones) and some other hon, gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, I announced to the House that, for the present, we would not press that clause. error which was not discovered until the Bill had passed the Senate beyond recall, that clause was retained and another clause was taken out. immediately placed myself in communication with the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. gentle-men from the Maritime Provinces, and stated that if they attached sufficient importance to it, I would endeavor to have another Bill put through to-day that would amend the Act. It was understood, that as the clause had been considerably modified, it might stand for a year.

Mr. MITCHELL. And you will amend it next year.

Mr. COLBY. I probably will not be in the position next year that I now so unworthily occupy; but it will be open for amendment then.

Mr. CHARLTON. The law as it now stands would not allow a person to be an engineer in Canada, unless he was domiciled on a British

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; but if you want to get an engineer from the United States you could not have him.

Mr. LAURIER. I think that clause will be found very inconvenient.

Mr. CHARLTON. Better let the Bill stand for this Session

Mr. COLBY. We cannot do that now, but I can get a small Bill drafted which will change the law to meet the views of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that would be better. Mr. CHARLTON. Better draft a small Bill. As arrangements have now been made by the steamboat owners, this law would be found very inconvenient.

Mr. COOK. I am glad the acting Minister of Marine has decided to give this matter consideration. I introduced a Bill sometime ago, that persons should not be appointed to the Civil Service unless they were residents in the country five years. The second reading of that Bill was moved in my absence, and I understood the First Minister gave a promise that he would consider the question next Session, or that he would not employ any more foreigners, or even persons from Great Britain, in the Civil Service, unless they had a residence in Canada. A large number of our young men are qualified for these positions and they ought to be given a chance.

is to keep Canada for the Canadians, in this respect I shall assist them. I expressed my regrets that a Bill had been introduced in reference to the qualifications of engineers other than those on steamboats. I drew the attention of the House the last few Sessions, to the importance of this matter, and I hope that next year the Government will take it up. I trust they will pass a Bill next Session, by which they will give that honored and respected class of the community the right to pass an examination, so as to put them on an equality with the steamboat engineers.

THE MICMAC INDIANS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have received from the Chief of the Micmac tribe of Indians, a petition in which he asks, among other privileges, that they shall be allowed the privilege of spearing salmon at the distance of three miles, on the north-west branch of the river, in connection with their reserve. The Indians are very poor, and have not the best facilities for catching fish, and they ask what they used to have in former years, the privilege of spearing within a limit of three miles. I would ask the hon. Minister to give the matter his early attention, and see what can be done to meet their wishes.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have read the papers which were handed to me by the hon. gentleman, and which contained the application he has mentioned and other matters. I will give them my immediate attention, and will communicate with the hon. gentleman as soon as I have anything definite to communicate.

NEW BRUNSWICK CAMP GROUND.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like, also, to ask the hon. Minister of Militia whether he can comply with the reasonable request I made on behalf of the Mayor and Council of the city of Moncton?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sorry I cannot give an answer to the hon. gentleman's question, relating to the location of the camp for the annual drill of the militia in the Province of New Brunswick. The question of the selection of the localities for the different camps has not yet been taken up; but I have received several petitions on behalf of the city of Moncton, and the matter will be taken up at an early day, when I shall be glad to consider the recommendation the hon, gentleman has made.

CHRISTIAN ISLAND INDIANS.

Mr. COOK. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the fact that a great deal of distress prevails among the Christian Island Indians. I had the honor and profit of attending a camp meeting on the island last summer, when I discovered that there were a number of indigent persons there, and that they have not organs in their different churches. As the Government have been supplying organs to bands of Indians in other sections, they ought to supply an organ to each denomination of the Indians on Christian Island. I hope they will also attend to the indigent persons who are there, and who are worthy to receive assistance, apart from the So far as the policy of the Government fact that they are wards of the Government.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I was not aware, until the hon. gentleman mentioned it, that it has been usual for the Government to give organs to the Christian bands of Indians, and I cannot promise the hon. gentleman anything in that respect. The only organ which, I think, it might be within the means of the Indian Fund to send them is the Toronto Globe. I will enquire into the case of the indigent persons.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND QUESTION.

Mr. CHARLTON. Have the Government anything to communicate to the country concerning the negotiations with Newfoundland, with regard to its admission into the Dominion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have had no communications from the Government of Newfoundland, except one. On hearing that their Bait Bill was applied to Canadian vessels, we remonstrated by telegraph, and also communicated with the Colonial Office. We received an answer from Newfoundland that the Act was intra vires. have had no answer yet from the Colonial Office, but do not cease to press the matter, because we think it was the original intention of the Newfoundland Government and Legislature not to apply it to Canadian vessels; but it appears, under the terms of the Act, it is applicable to all vessels, either British, Canadian or foreign.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman's answer throws a good deal of light on matters between the Island and the Dominion, so far as it goes. But the question I desire particularly to obtain information upon is, as to whether there were any negotiations on the basis of admitting Newfoundland into Confederation.

Mr. TROW. I see in the papers that the Newfoundlanders are annexing themselves to the Dominion. Over 250 of them have come to Montreal; and if negotiations are kept quiet they will annex themselves.

MAJOR-GENERAL MIDDLETON.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask what action the Government propose taking, in consequence of the report made in reference to the case of General Middleton? Do the Government propose to press General Middleton to pay the amount of money the Committee reported was due to Mr. Bremner, or what action do they propose to take?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have taken no steps on that report, and have had no communication with General Middleton. He is absent at Toronto. We have been too busy to consider what steps should be taken.

Mr. LAURIER. That was not exactly the purport of the question of my hon. friend. He did not suggest that the Government had had any communication with General Middleton, but he asked what the intentions of the Government were in re-It may be premature to ask gard to that report. the Government what their intention is, but, as I understand, the object was to ascertain what was to be done in regard to this man Bremner, who is, I believe, a most deserving man, who was charged with being a rebel though there was no evidence against him, and the evidence shows that he was it also recommends that the Patent Office reports be Mr. Cook.

not guilty of rebellion. The whole of his property was in furs, and I think this matter requires prompt action on the part of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have not had time to consider that point, but I would remind the hon. gentleman that a most solemn protest was entered here by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) against the Government paying a farthing to Bremner.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not pretend that Bremner should be paid by the country, but the Government may have means of persuasion which they could bring to bear on those who should pay this damage.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will consider that matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Bremner is entitled to be recouped in some form, and we should not separate before that is understood. This man's furs were placed in the custody of an officer of the Government, and were handed over on the order of another officer of the Government, and I think we are bound to see that that man is

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be fully considered.

Mr. TROW. I will ask the Minister of Militia if he intends to have battalion drill this year in the city of Stratford? That city has gone to considerable expense in extending waterworks to the old drill field, which I think is the best in the Province, and to have everything prepared for battalion drill.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is, no doubt, a great inducement to send the camp to Stratford that the waterworks there are in perfect order. As far as I am personally concerned, I should be glad to give a definite answer on the subject, but, as I have already stated, the question of the selection of the camps has not yet been considered. It will be one of the first questions to be taken up by the Department after Parliament rises, and I shall be glad to consider the application which the hon. gentleman has made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move the House do now adjourn, to meet again on Friday morning at eleven o'clock.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 9.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 16th May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock. PRAYERS.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. BERGIN moved that the ninth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be concurred in. He said: This recommends the printing of documents reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation; distributed once a year in a bound volume, instead of loose sheets as they are at present, once a fortnight or once a month; also, that instead of the large trunks that are now distributed every Session to members of Parliament, one good trunk be substituted. We find that $4.80 has been paid for each one of the basswood trunks, amounting to $24 a Parliament. They are really of no use, and we recommend that a moderately fair trunk be substituted once in each Parliament.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not know whether it would be in order now to say anything on the subject, but I think it would be a very good thing if it were possible to have enough copies of the bound Hansard printed to supply the mechanics' institutes in the different parts of the country. There is no publication of Parliament that is so interesting to the general public as the Hansard, and they have no opportunity of consulting it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I observe that the seventh report of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament recommends the printing of a number of documents-7,000 copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture, in English and French, in the usual ratio; 10,000 copies of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Colonisation; 50,000 copies of the report of the Dairymen's Association; 25,000 copies of the report of the Fruit Growers' Association, and that the Patent Office reports, instead of being distributed as at present, be bound and distributed once a year, commencing on the 1st of July. Well, probably, this last recommendation is a good one, because we wish to preserve these Patent Office reports. Next, I see that the report recommends that, instead of the large trunks now given to each member every Session, there be substituted one of a much better quality, to be given next Session, and thereafter one at the beginning of each Parliament; also, that the supply of stationery for the use of members be of a better quality, such as was formerly used.

Mr. BERGIN. The quality used this year is very bad.

Motion agreed to, and report concurred in.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking be concurred in. He said: The amendments to the Banking Act are not very important. On page 21, line 25, after the word "person" at the end of the clause, add the following:—

Provided always, that no payment, whether in Dominion notes or back notes, shall be made in bills that are torn or partially defaced by excessive handling.

I am not quite sure that this will not be a somewhat mischievous clause, and if it were earlier in the Session I should ask the Committee to send it back. But at the late hour of the Session, and considering that this Act does not come into force until the first of July, 1891, and that we will have an opportunity to review it next year, for the despatch of business I shall ask the Committee to concur in this amendment with the condition, as I have stated, that we may review it another year.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry to hear that the hongentleman would concur in such an amendment at all. I cannot see that anything but injurious effects will arise from it. It is, of course, too late in the Session to debate it, but if the hon. gentleman carries it we must carry it on division. I think it is a very mischievous law.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What is the effect of it?
Mr. LAURIER. If bills are defaced or torn,
no payment will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. We will be able to amend it next year.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me it ought to be sent back to the Senate. I think that if there is such a strong expression of opinion in this House, they will not insist on it, or they ought not at any rate. I cannot see the object or the reason for this amendment.

Mr. GUILLET. The Act does not come into force until July, 1891. Therefore, it can be amended next year, as it is a mere matter of detail.

Mr. FOSTER. It is with that intention I ask the House to pass it.

Amendments concurred in.

WINNIPEG AND HUDSON'S BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. DALY moved that the amendment made by the Senate to (Bill No. 155) to incorporate the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway be concurred in.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. DALY. It limits the building of the railway to the Saskatchewan River, a distance of 400 miles within four years.

Amendment concurred in.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Mr. BOWELL presented the Annual Report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, for the year ending 30th June, 1889.

Mr. LAURIER. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his punctuality.

Mr. BOWELL. The report was put in my hands by the Queen's Printer, and I should not have had the honor of laying it on the Table, were it not that the Secretary of State is ill. I present the hon. gentleman with a copy which I presume will be interesting to him.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

Mr. MITCHELL. The right hon, gentleman at the head of the Government stated a day or two ago that probably on Friday he would be able to give us some idea as to the position of the fishery question. I only ask him to give what information he is possessed of, if it can be given without detriment to the public service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fully expected to be able to give an answer to-day which, I think, would, to a very considerable extent, have been satisfactory to the House, but we have not got the information fully. In the first place, I may say that a message came from England which was not explicit enough, and we have asked for an explanatory message which has not yet arrived. In the second place, Mr. Tupper, who has been in Washington in connection with this matter, is on his way home. I thought he would have been here by this time, but he is very unwell and has to travel slowly. I thought we would have heard from him before this, and perhaps we may have the information before 3 o'clock. All I can say now is that things are looking very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear that statement, which will so far be satisfactory to the

THE BREMNER FURS.

Mr. TROW. I have been requested to ask the Government whether they have come to any decision as to the payment of the claimants in regard to the Bremner furs, in order to avoid litigation, as I understand they intend immediately to take action.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That question, of course, we cannot answer just now. The Committee very properly made no recommendation on that point, as that was no part of their business. They said that a certain sum of money would be a sufficient compensation for these furs. My hon, friend (Mr. Trow) will remember that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) implored the Government not to pay any portion of it, and said he would be very sorry indeed to see it done. In fact he used as strong language as possible on that subject. He said the compensation must come from another source. Since that report has been discussed we have been altogether too much occupied with parliamentary business to take up the matter. We will take it up next week and see what can be done.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose everything depends upon whether the furs were ever legally in the possession of the Government. If they were improperly taken out of the possession of Bremner so that General Middleton was a trespasser from the beginning, of course, the position taken by the member for West Durham would be unquestionably a sound and legal position. If they were legally in possession of the Crown at any time, and the taking by General Middleton was a taking of possession for the Crown, of course the man would be responsible to Bremner, and then General Middleton would be responsible to the Crown. I have not looked into that point, to see what the taking was originally. The member for West Durham was strongly of the opinion that they never were in the possession of the Crown at all; if that is so, unquestionably he is right, and 1 suppose the responsibility rests on the Government to look after the payment, and to see that the party who was their officer does his duty to the one whom it was his duty to protect. The duty, I suppose, rests on the Government, whether the responsibility does or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question of the liability of the Crown, or the master, in any case, for the acts for his subordinate or servant, is a delicate one. There is a very narrow line be-tween what the liability of the master is, and whether the liability is thrown on the servant alto-Sir John A. Macdonald.

know whether the Crown could be considered liable. Of course, if there is liability, the Crown will acknowledge it at once, and they will also do what they can in order to recover whatever is due to this man.

Mr. MITCHELL. The distinction I take is this: My hon. friend has placed before the House what the member for West Durham states to be the law upon the subject, that is, where the legal liability rests as between master and servant, that is to say, where a servant executes a particular duty and exceeds his power, the master is not liable, but the servant is personally liable. Here there is a broad distinction between a duty performed by a servant to a master, and that existing between a high officer of the Government supposed to hold certain extraordinary powers in a crisis such as that. Now, whether Bremner could bring a personal action against General Middleton is a point I do not pretend to discuss; but there is this clear, that if the commander of the forces of Canada, in subduing an insurrection, chooses to take property away from any man, whether he be innocent or guilty of taking any part in the insurrection, and if he takes that property in possession for the Crown and disposes of it, somebody is responsible to pay that man. If General Middleton is not responsible certainly the Crown is, and if the Crown is not legally liable, then it is the duty of the Government to bring the matter before Parliament with the view of seeing that justice is done to the unfortunate man whose property is taken. I am not one of those who think that General Middleton ought to be permitted to pursue such a high-handed course as that, and appropriate this property for his own use and have the country pay Bremner for it. I would not like to see that done; but I say it is the duty of the Government, and Parliament will expect it of them, to see that General Middleton pays that man for his furs, and if that is not done this Parliament will take means to see that justice is done to Bremner, after proper steps are taken against General Middleton.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is a total misapprehension on the part of hon. gentlemen as to the way these furs came into the possession of the police. This man Bremner had come of the police. This man Bremner had come into Battleford with these furs, and the furs were being pillaged by people there; by whom I do not know; but, at all events, it is stated that an officer of the police came to the General to say that these furs were being taken from him, and he asked for authority to have them handed over to the police for safe-keeping. At that time the General had no idea whatever of giving any order for confiscating the furs, or asking that they be put up for himself. They were handed over to the police for safekeeping, just as Bremner himself was arrested and handed over to the police for sale-keeping. Two months after that, when word was brought to General Middleton that Bremner had gone to Regina as a prisoner, as the reporter states, Mr. Reed then asked the General whether these furs should be confiscated, and what was to be done with them. After he had come back, on the 4th of July, from pursuing Big Bear, he gave that order to confiscate the furs, and then said that some might be given to his staff, and some left for gether. I have not looked into the evidence in himself, and receipts were to be taken for them; this case, personally, at all, and I really do not so that they were really in possession of the Mounted Police, that is, of the Government, and whoever received the furs is the party that should be called upon to pay for them.

Mr. LAURIER. That is an extraordinary state of things, although the statement of the hon. gentleman may be correct in fact. It is an extraordinary state of things that when Bremner was brought to Battleford as a prisoner the day after Poundmaker surrendered, these furs of Bremner should have been pillaged while the Commander of the Forces was there, and that no steps were taken by him to protect them from pillage.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. He did take that step; he told the officer of the police to take them for safe-keeping into the barracks, but not for himself.

Mr. LAURIER. Whether by the police or not, the furs were taken from this man by order of General Middleton. It seems to me that when the commander of the forces was present, the property of any British subject should have been safe, and that the furs of Bremner should have been just as safe in his possession as they would be in the bar-However, for reasons of his own, the furs were taken to the barracks, where they were in the custody of the police and of the Government; but afterwards General Middleton chose to confiscate those furs and appropriate them for himself.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; only a portion.

Mr. LAURIER. No matter.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; it does matter.

Mr. LAURIER. A portion went to the General, another portion to Reed, and another to Bedson. Surely the reparation due to Bremner is that he shall be put into possession of all the furs which were taken away from the police; and if they cannot be accounted for, then their value must be given to him by those who profited from them, and not by the Canadian Government.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Bremner was not examined, therefore we cannot tell whether it was by his consent or not; but my impression is that he was a consenting party that the furs should be taken care of, and that a policeman should be appointed to guard them. Of course, under the circumstances then existing, they could not have had a policeman standing over them all the time, and Rememso they were put into the police barracks. ber Bremner was himself arrested, and if the furs had not been put away into the barracks for safekeeping, there would not have been one of them left upon the prairie among all the Indians and others who were roaming about.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That would be an instance in which the General had neglected his duty to protect property, because he was there for the purpose of protecting both life and property.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. He did so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He took these furs into his possession. The case of Cockburn against the Queen, I think, is a case exactly in point, where a Lieutenant in the Navy committed an act that was held to be illegal, and it was decided that in that case, first, that the lieutenant was not an officer of the Crown at all, but that he was an officer of Parliament, although I do not know whether the same rule would apply to a General in the army; it was also held that having acted beyond his authority, for wrong-doing, he was personally responsible, and that the public was not responsible.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a great distinction between the responsibility existing on the part of every employe of the Government, every tidewaiter, for instance, and a high officer entrusted with almost absolute powers.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The General would have been worthy of all praise for taking care of that property and endeavoring to protect it, if he had not subsequently given orders to confiscate it. We are talking now about how the furs came into the possession of the police. The question was between allowing the furs to lay on the prairie and protecting them by the police, or putting them into the police barracks there to be protected. If nothing more had been done, I think no censure could have been passed upon the General. Now, if nothing more had been done, I think no censure would have been passed upon it. Therefore, for that act of putting the furs in the police barracks there is no blame to be attached to the General.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As the hon, gentleman knows, in law the subsequent act makes him responsible.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The subsequent act is the act of indiscretion which was committed, and it is there the blame comes in. The taking possession of the furs for the Government in order to protect them, was not worthy of blame; but, on the contrary, it was for the protection of Bremner's property.

Mr. MITCHELL. We differ about that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. mem ber for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) draws a distinction between officers in high rank and others. There is no distinction that I am aware of. They have all got the limit of their duties stated, and the Crown is no more responsible for the act of a civil servant who is on the top of the ladder than one who is at the foot of it. If the Crown is responsible for an offence committed against the civil law, it is also responsible for an offence against the criminal law. When General Luard committed an offence the Crown was not responsible; he was punished. Governor Wall, of Gibraltar, was hanged. He was an officer high in rank, and he thought he had a right to flog the people to death, but he was hanged for that. I should not like that—if General Middleton had exercised martial law in the North-West and had hanged anybody-I should be hanged in his place.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think the simile is correct. I do not want to see General Middleton hanged, although as was stated the other day by the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) the penalty for looting, under the Articles of War, is death. I do not want the General killed, but I do want to see him made to pay for the furs which he stole.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They were not stolen; there was a receipt given for them.

Mr. LAURIER. If the Crown is not responsible for the wrong-doing of its employés, high or low, the Crown can at least make this officer atone Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Crown will do anything they can to make him atone.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I told the hon. member for the West Riding of Durham (Mr. Blake) the other day, that I would cause enquiry to be made in my Department in reference to the matter in connection with the Quebecharbor improvements to which he referred. I now submit the papers. The result so far obtained in the enquiry made respecting the tenders of the cross-wall harbor works, Quebec, does not show that any persons connected with the Department was guilty of indiscretion, or that any of them has given information to any person outside of the Department. The officers, who, by the nature of their duties, might have had cognisance of the tenders and who still belong to the Department, declare that they did not give such information to any person. (See attached letters of the Deputy, Mr. Baillairgé, the Chief Engineer, Mr. Perley, the present Secretary, Mr. Corbeil, the Chief Engineer's stenographer, Mr. Lightfoot, and his mail clerk, Mr. O'Brien.) The assistant engineer, Mr. Boyd, in whose handwriting the extension of the tenders was made, Mr. Ennis, who was secretary of the Department in 1883, and Mr. James Walsh, the correspondence clerk, who wrote the letters and reports to Council, presumably under Mr. Ennis' orders and at his dictation, are now dead—but they never gave any reason to suspect their discretion. The enquiry will be continued.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER communicated to the House that he had received the following letter from the Governor General's Secretary:—

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA.

"SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament this afternoon at four o'clock.

"CHARLES COLVILLE, Captain,
"Governor General's Secretary.

"The Honorable "The Speaker of the House of Commons."

. House rose at 11.34 a.m., to meet again at 3.34 p.m.

House resumed at 3.34 p.m.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That the balance of the indemnity of the late Adam Hudspeth, Esquire, be paid to his legal representatives, and that the indemnity of Samuel Burdett, Esquire, be paid to him in full, he having been obliged to leave town on account of illness.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TROW. We have concluded a long and tedious Session, and I presume we are all glad it has come to a close. Elections are going on in various Provinces, and many members will be soon engaged in those elections. I think the Government are a little culpable in not bringing forward important measures earlier in the Session, for we have done a great deal of business during the past few weeks, and especially during the past weeks, we have voted away in the Supplementary Estimates and for railway bonuses over $50,000,

Mr. LAURIER.

000, which is rather a serious amount for a country with such little resources as we have. This is a very difficult country in which to arrange the tariff to suit all circumstances. What will suit one Province will be opposed to the interest of another Province. Therefore, the Minister of Finance and Minister of Customs, notwithstanding all these deputations that came to give them information from time to time, had a very difficult task to perform. I hope that the tariff will be for the benefit of the inhabitants of the various Provinces, but I doubt very much if the imposition of a higher duty on flour will satisfy the Maritime Provinces, and there are various other changes that evidently are not satisfactory to all. However, I presume the Government have done the best they could from the information they have derived, in many instances from interested parties. The Government, no doubt, have a very difficult task to perform. must say that some members of the Government are energetic and fine departmental officers; one of the Ministers in particular, the hon. Minister of Public Works, although he has on various occasions made promises that he has not performedfor my part I never asked him for anything—still, we know very well that a harder working member of the House is not to be found than the Minister of Public Works, and I question very much whether there is a better departmental officer in the Government than that hon, gentleman. During the past Session I think the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have had exceedingly onerous duties to perform in the preparation of the revised tariff, and I think they have done their work very well, notwithstanding the criticisms that have been made by members of the Opposition. The members of the Opposition have criticised almost every item in the Estimates and have done a great deal of good. Then there is the Minister of Agriculture, whom I must mention, and for my part I am satisfied with his work. Having my-self had some experience, not as a practical farmer, but in paying practical farmers for their services, I consider that hon, gentleman has done an extremely good work with his experimental and model farms throughout the country. Their good result will not appear immediately. When you plant a tree it takes some time to bring it to maturity; and so I anticipate in good time that this country will reap a great deal of benefit from these farms in the various Provinces. aware that a great deal has been done in that connection which is not yet apparent to the casual observer, but the good effects of which will appear later on. Of course the expense has been large at the Central Farm, and it could not be otherwise when we see what has been done in laying out streets, planting groves, making fences and erecting buildings. It is not my duty to flatter the Government, but I must say that they have done, in many respects, very creditably. Of course some are dissatisfied, there always will be some dissatisfied people; and I have no doubt that if our friends of the Opposition were siting on the other side of the House, there would be still some dissatisfied people, although I think they give very general satisfaction. I hope our friends, when they get there, will practice rigid economy, instead of spending fifty or sixty million dollars a Session, as this Government has done. I am afraid that hon, gentlemen opposite have become somewhat reckless and lavish in their expenditure. I am very much pleased that the First Minister has enjoyed such good health during this Session, He seems to be as vigorous and as determined as he was ten or fifteen years ago. It is true he is not the hardest worked member of the Administration, but, at the same time, his absence would be, in my estimation, a fatal blow to the whole Conservative party. I hope that in eight or ten months we will all meet here again enjoying our usual health, and that the Government will be better prepared to bring down their measures earlier in the Session. I think it is greatly to be desired that their important measures should be placed before the House within a few weeks of the opening of the Session, in order that the House may be able to give them the needed attention. I would like now to hear from the newly elected hon, member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh).

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Mr. Speaker, I never more fervently prayed for the arrival of the Governor General than I do at the present moment, and am sure you all participate in my sentiments. So far as I am concerned, I sympathise with you and the country in the fact that during this Session, and for the last three Sessions, you have been deprived of my presence in Parliament. I apologise for my absence, upon behalf of the electors who voted against me. I am one of those who believe in always being candid with my friends, and in my friends being candid with me. I, like many others, considered in years gone by that this country had not a Government that met the wishes of the people, but since the accession of the right hon. Sir John Macdonald to power I have realised the fact that the country had a statesman at the head of affairs, and wanted other statesmen to support him. When I was urged by so many people of this constituency to become a candidate for Parliament, I accepted the invitation, and can honestly state that hundreds of votes were given on behalf of the Government of the right hon, gentleman, and thousands given to me as a manifestation of good will and personal regard. I quite appreciate the ability and the geniality of the hon, member for Perth (Mr. Trow), and of the Opposition generally, who, when I was in Parliament before, treated me in the most considerate and courteous manner. In fact, I only remember what good things they said, and allowed the hard words to pass into oblivion. I am glad to get back to the House of Commons again, and to associate with the hon. gentlemen whom I see around me. I shall endeavor, like my friend the leader of the third party, to be independent, with a strong gravitation towards the policy of the Administration. I may venture to say that I came back here mellowed, somewhat, by experience, and prepared to give my right hon, friend the leader of the Government what I call an independent support. I will not trespass upon the time of the House any longer, but trust that next Session I shall be able to take an active part in the proceedings of Parliament. I was slaughtered, so to speak, three years ago, but the general impression appears to be that my resurrection is complete and I hope permanent.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker-

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excel-

In the name of the commons, I present to Tour Excel-lency the following Bill:—
"An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1880, and the 30th June, 1891, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service," to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:-

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fourth Session of the Sixth Parliament of the Dominion with the follow-

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a close this somewhat protracted Session of Parliament, I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the diligence with which you have applied yourselves to your important duties.

The negotiations respecting the Behring Sea question are still in progress at Washington with good prospects of an equitable settlement. Meanwhile the continuance for another year of what is known as the Modus Vivendi, will serve to show our earnest desire to cultivate the most friendly relations with the United States Government and people.

The re-adjustment of the Customs Tariff, intended to promote the development of our agricultural, manufacturing and other industries, will, I have reason to hope. operate for the general benefit of all classes.

I am glad to believe that the Act relating to Banking has been most carefully considered, and will be found to guard the interests of the public and to be sufficiently liberal to those who are more immediately affected by its provisions.

The measure relating to Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes will, doubtless, render more certain and plain the law relating to these instruments, and make the law in that regard uniform in almost all respects throughout Canada.

The amendments to the criminal law include a great number and variety of provisions, all of which will probably be found useful, and several of which were urgently demanded for the public welfare.

The creation of a Bureau of Labor Statistics will promote the investigation and study of the questions which affect the relations of Capital and Labor, and which are now engaging the attention of all great Nations. It will likewise aid the diffusion of information on all that concerns the occupations and well-being of the working classes. In some other measures of the present Session your desire to improve the laws which apply particularly to those engaged in industrial pursuits will be likewise recognised.

The various provisions to amend the laws relating to Railways, Patents, Copyrights, and Trade-Marks and to the Department of Inland Revenne, and, likewise, the enactments to improve the Statutes for the management of our Indian population, are well adapted to promote the efficient administration of the Departments to which they relate, while the large amount of private Railway Legislation indicates a spirit of enterprise throughout the country which, it is to be hoped, will lead to a substantial development of the railway works of the country.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the liberal provision which you made for the requirements of the Public Service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I take leave of you for the present, with the earnest hope that in the coming season our people in every part of Canada may be blessed with an abundant reward for their labors and may witness a marked advance in the prosperity of the Dominion.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate, and

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Monday, the twenty-third day of June next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Monday, the twenty-third day of June next.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 23rd day of June next.

For Lists of other Bills assented to, SEE 26th March (2385), and 24th April (3873).
